COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STATUS OF DISABLED PERSONS—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour this morning to present to the House, in both official languages, the first report of the Standing Committee on the Status of Disabled Persons. This report is entitled "No News is Bad News", et en français, "Pas de nouvelles, mauvaises nouvelles".

In accordance with Standing Order 99(2), our committee requests a comprehensive response from the Government to this report.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the second report of the Standing Committee on National Defence.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-316, an Act to amend the Export Development Act (commercial credits).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) in seconding my motion in the absence of my colleagues.

• (1110)

This is a Bill designed to amend the Export Development Act, to provide for new commercial credits that would be given to Third World countries. The Export Development Corporation would act as a broker for the sale and exchange of commodities from Third World countries. The funds that would be gathered from such sales could then be used for purchases of Canadian products by those Third World countries in Canada. It is an attempt to provide a way of diversifying trade for Canada around the world and to provide direct assistance to Third World and underdeveloped countries in the sale of their commodities.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

POINT OF ORDER

TENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE ON SCRUTINY OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we were anticipating that the House of Commons co-chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations would move concurrence in the committee's tenth report. It is our understanding that it deals with the independence of the judiciary and a decision made by the committee.

I do not know if there is another agent in the Chamber who would like to move that motion, but the Government would certainly be willing to concur in it if someone wanted to move it.

Perhaps we could return, on unanimous consent, if there is difficulty with the Member being present.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that along the lines of usual courtesy the Chair did know something about this. However, I am in the hands of the House.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think the co-chairman, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), would prefer to move the motion himself. It is my understanding that he would like to do it tomorrow. I can check further and we can consult on the most appropriate way to deal with the matter.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, since there seems to be some consultation required, if the consultation takes place and there is a request for unanimous consent to deal with this matter later today, we would certainly be prepared to accommodate that request.

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members. Perhaps some indication could be given to the Chair later. If there is agreement I will make the appropriate accommodations.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize to the House. I have a striking committee report regarding the child care committee to present. I would ask for unanimous consent to revert to presentation of committee reports.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

DESIGNATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, this petition is entitled "Help save the Rouge". It is one of many petitions I have presented to the House concerning the preservation of the Rouge Valley system in Scarborough.

The petitioners join with many thousands of volunteers in stating that the Rouge River Valley in Scarborough is a unique and precious natural area, and that protecting this endangered wildlife and wilderness area is in the national interest.

The petitioners join with the Scarborough City Council, the Federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), the Save the Rouge Valley System and the Coalition of Scarborough Community Associations to have the valley saved as a Canadian heritage land or a provincial park.

OPPOSITION TO PARKING FEES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of the City of Winnipeg, particularly those who are employed by the Agriculture Research Station. They are submitting a petition asking for redress from the Department of Agriculture. They complain of unfair treatment in terms of the application of substantial parking fees for their vehicles at the Agriculture Research Station facilities, when other federal facilities in the same area of Winnipeg, particularly Revenue Canada, are not required to pay those fees.

The petitioners humbly request that their grievance be heard by the House and the Government. I present the petition on their behalf.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents. These constituents are concerned that the fabric of Canadian sovereignty is being seriously threatened by the trade deal. They point out that the federal Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada even to negotiate a trade deal, let alone pass it. They believe that the trade deal would seriously reduce our country's ability to plan the economic, social, and cultural programs Canadians want.

They are asking that a national debate in Canada occur on the issue of the trade deal and that the debate take place during a national general election before the agreement is signed.

Mr. McDermid: The agreement is already signed.

Mr. Riis: Signed by the Government, committing Canada before the election.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition from many British Columbians, pursuant to Standing Order 106. They believe that Canadian families need a high quality, affordable child care service.

They also believe it has been repeatedly recommended, to make these services available for families, that the Government of Canada must introduce legislation containing national objectives and appropriate mechanisms for the development of a comprehensive non-profit child care system which is accessible to all families.

They are concerned that the present legislation regarding child care before the House of Commons is completely, totally, and absolutely inadequate to meet the demands. Therefore, they are saying the legislation should be withdrawn forthwith.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents located in the City of Winnipeg. It deals with the serious and tragic illness of schizophrenia, a major illness affecting about 1 per cent of the Canadian population, causing severe anguish among families and friends and costing Canadian society more than $3 billion a year in direct health cost.

Research findings show that this is a genetic malfunction that can be treated, but research efforts in Canada dedicated to schizophrenia are extremely limited and not commensurate with the degree of the disease.

These petitioners humbly ask the House to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will in the future be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of citizens in my constituency.

Since farmers and fishermen have enjoyed the right to block averaging for years, they call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to retain block averaging for farmers and fishermen, as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in its report on the White Paper on tax reform.

Question No. 369—Mr. Kaplan:

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

In the past three years, has the automobile allocated for the use of the Secretary of State for External Affairs been taken into the United States and, if so, on what dates and, in each case, (a) for what length of time (b) was the automobile used (i) by the Minister (ii) by some other person or persons and, if so, by whom (c) on what government business?

INTERNATIONAL TROPICAL TIMBER ORGANIZATION

Question No. 387—Mr. Caccia:

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On May 21, 1986 Canada acceded to the International Tropical Timber Agreement (ITTA) which is administered by the International Tropical Timber Organization (ITTO). In fiscal year 1986/87 Canada paid C$12,665.68 in assessed contributions to the ITTO administrative budget for the period November-December 1986, the last two months of ITTO fiscal year 1986, and for the period January-June 1987, the first half of ITTO fiscal year 1987. Payment was received by the ITTO in Geneva in late October/early November 1986.

In fiscal year 1987/88 Canada paid C$37,636.30 to cover its contribution to the ITTO administrative budget for the last half of ITTO fiscal year 1987 (July-December) and all of ITTO fiscal year 1988 (January-December). Instructions to affect payment of the assessed contributions were issued in Ottawa, May in 1987 in the first case and on January 8, 1988 in the second.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, August 16, consideration of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy:

That Bill C-130 be amended by adding immediately after line 43 at page 3 the following:

"7. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall be interpreted so as to apply to lands, resources, and waters claims by aboriginal peoples under an aboriginal claim."

That Bill C-130 be amended by adding immediately after line 43 at page 3 the following:

"7. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall affect programs to protect the environment or conservation of land, resources and waters."

That Bill C-130 be amended by adding immediately after line 43 at page 3 the following:

"7. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall be interpreted so as to affect or preclude the continuation of existing or the establishment of new special adjustment programs to help firms or workers adjust to the changes brought about by the implementation of the Agreement."

That Bill C-130 be amended by adding immediately after lines 43 at page 3 the following:

"7. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall be interpreted so as to affect or preclude the continuation of existing or the establishment of new regional development programs."

That Bill C-130 be amended by adding immediately after line 43 at page 3 the following:

"7. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall be interpreted so as to affect the continuation of existing or the establishment of new Canadian social programs, including medicare, unemployment insurance, daycare, pensions, minimum wage laws, labour laws and maternity benefits."

That Bill C-130 be amended by adding immediately after line 43 at page 3 the following:

"7. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall be interpreted so as to affect or preclude the continuation of existing or the establishment of new cultural programs by future Canadian governments."

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a group of motions which in effect challenge the Conservative Government to put its money where its mouth is. Specifically, the Government continues to claim that its trade agreement will not affect vital Canadian characteristics, policies, and programs. However, this set of motions would enable this House to exempt specifically from the Bill aboriginal people's land and resource claims, the environment and environmental protection policy and programs, programs and policies to assist workers and firms in adjusting to the agreement, regional economic development policy, social policy, and cultural industries and programs.

There is no specific mention of environmental protection or environmental issues in the trade deal as such. However, this does not mean that it is entirely clear that there are no valid grounds for concern that the Government's trade deal with the United States will impair existing environmental protection programs, both federal and provincial, or hamper our ability to put new or improved ones in place in future. No environmental impact study of this agreement has been carried out by the Conservative Government before, during, or after the deal was signed.

Canada may well also face pressures to lower Canadian environmental standards to American levels. Canadian business could argue that more stringent Canadian environmental regulations on such things as acid rain emissions, air pollution, liquid waste disposal, and the use of pesticides could place Canadian companies at a competitive disadvantage vis-à-vis their American competitors. Canada may also lose the ability in pricing energy exports to recover financial compensation for environmental damage caused by energy exporters. Furthermore, subsidies given by Canadian federal and provincial Governments to reduce pollution emissions could be attacked by American companies as an unfair subsidy.

The definition of "unfair subsidies" is still to be negotiated by Canada and the United States over the next five years to seven years. Pollution control subsidies and subsidies relating to the environment have not, I repeat, been explicitly excluded from these negotiations.

Environmental groups have sent letters to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asking for assurances on this issue. They have not received a specific reply from the Prime Minister. They only received a reply from the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) stating that the trade deal has nothing to do with the environment. I do not know how one can place any confidence in the words of the Minister for International Trade on what the trade deal has to do with the environment or anything else because he has stated quite categorically—he boasted—that he has not bothered to read the deal. He wants to treat the whole matter in the same way he treated the sale of vacuum cleaners when he was trying to do that years ago as a student, but Canada and its environment is more important than the way one treats the selling of vacuum cleaners.

The Canadian Wildlife Federation has quite clearly denounced the Government's trade deal as a threat to Canada's control over its environment. The executive vice-president of the federation stated that it was "not convinced that Simon Reisman's negotiating team had given any consideration whatsoever to possible environmental impacts of a free trade agreement".

It would be very simple if the Government were sincere in what it says about not wanting environmental programs, present and future, to be affected by this trade deal. All the Government would have to do to show its sincerity would be to agree to accept our amendment and clearly exempt environmental programs, present and future, from being affected in any way by this trade deal. However, if the Government is not willing to do that, and if we continue to have in the trade deal the provision that the issue of subsidies remains to be negotiated over the next five years to seven years, then the protection of our environment now and in the future is clearly put at risk by this trade deal.

Let me say a few words about the trade deal and social policy. The Conservative Government has consistently denied that social programs are affected in any way by the trade deal. However, it is very clear that our safety net is not protected by the absence of references to it in the final text of the agreement. Certainly, there are a number of American politicians and corporate leaders, and some Canadians as well, who clearly view our current Canadian social programs as constraints to achieving the level playing field they believe must come as part of the Government's trade deal with the United States.

What does the American playing field look like? A recent study by the Conference of State Manufacturers Association reported that the quality of a state's business climate was defined by low taxes, low union membership, low workmen's compensation insurance rates, low unemployment benefits, low energy costs, and the fewest days lost because of work stoppages. Implicit in that study is the idea that the less there are social programs to benefit workers and the community at large, the better it is, and this shows why Canadian social programs could and likely will be undermined by the Canada-U.S. free trade deal.

American interests may launch a direct attack by countervail suits similar to the 1986 action of fresh groundfish which named fishermen's unemployment insurance as a subsidy. There is nothing whatsoever in the trade deal that exempts Canada or Canadian programs from being the subject of countervail suits or any other U.S. trade remedy legislation. We are still subject to that kind of harassment. The so-called dispute settlement mechanism does nothing more than enable a panel to say whether or not the American legislation has been properly applied according to its own terms. We are not given any exemption whatsoever.

The second way in which the Canada-U.S. free trade deal creates a threat to our Canadian social programs is far more insidious. It could have a very substantial impact on social programs in general. Under this scenario, an evolutionary process would see a greater harmonization of policy objectives and instruments in order to achieve the level playing field which the corporate sector will be desiring. It will argue that the cost of doing business must be equalized subject only to what they would call some natural comparative advantage.

We only need to look at a background study prepared for the Macdonald Commission, and the Government always cites the Macdonald Commission and its report as evidence that its trade deal is a good thing for the country. I can say as an aside that which the Macdonald Commission did not say a word about the trade deal the Government is trying to force down the throats of Canadians. The report came out well before that trade deal was negotiated and its text was available. In any event, the background report states that Canada would be required to make wage and tax rates and welfare policies conform to American practice and to follow all important changes in the United States with virtually identical changes in Canada. We have already seen some first evidence of this process through Bill C-22 on prescription drugs.

This pressure to harmonize Canadian social policy with the American system will be an inevitable consequence of the Government's trade deal with the United States. Aside from the pressure by big business interests on both sides of the border, we have the situation that will undoubtedly arise because there will be the five-year to seven-year negotiating period to come up with a definition of subsidies pursuant to this deal.

There is nothing in the deal to say that an agreement will not be made over the next five years to seven years, accepting American contentions that our social programs such as medicare are unfair subsidies and that if they are not changed then it will be open to the American Government, on behalf of American business interests, to bring actions for countervailing duties or special duties under not only existing American trade remedy laws but the omnibus trade Bill which has just been passed by the U.S. Congress. This Bill has new forms of investigation of alleged undue Canadian subsidy, and new methods of trade harassment by the American Government and American business interests.

These points have been signalled by Canadian business spokesmen. For example, at an annual meeting of the Auto Parts Manufacturers Association held recently in Toronto, Past Chairman Larry Beganto stated: "Services such as national day care and indexed pensions, universal medicare and others may be laudable but they add to the cost of doing business". This just provides an example of how business interests are already thinking of creating pressure for a forced harmonization of our social programs with the much lower level of social programs in the United States, a country where doctors check a person's pocket-book before they check his pulse, a country where a very high proportion of the population has no adequate retirement pension, a country in which a substantial portion of the population has no adequate unemployment insurance program.

Obviously, if the Conservative Government's trade deal comes into effect, there will be pressure for a realignment of our tax policy and cut-backs in social expenditures in order to answer the pressure of business for tax cuts. Should the federal Government accept this argument, personal income taxes will go up in order to support social programs, or social expenditure will be cut. Either way Canadians lose.

I also want to say again, by way of conclusion, that the most frightening thing in this deal when it comes to social programs is that the whole area of definition of what will be unacceptable subsidies, subject to retaliation by the Americans, remains open in negotiation. The way the Conservative Government has always weakly caved in to American pressure on any issue, the way it has weakly agreed to a thoroughly bad deal with the United States on trade, indicates that if in the unlikely event it continues in office it will cave in on a definition of subsidies which will put our social programs, pensions, unemployment insurance, and medicare in peril.

Only the acceptance of these amendments by the Government will provide at least some partial answers to the concerns I have stated. I do not think the Government will accept these amendments. Therefore this is a powerful reason to defeat this deal here in Parliament but, more important, to defeat this deal through an early election.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I listened to my colleague, the Liberal House Leader, in the last 10 minutes and of course on Tuesday night when we were debating these series of amendments. I listened to all the fearmongering, the scare tactics that have been dug up by members of the Opposition on this particular agreement. In the few minutes allotted to me in this particular section I will attempt to answer some of the concerns that have been expressed.

I chuckled to myself when I heard the Hon. House Leader stand up to say that the Government should put its money where its mouth is. He is the Member of Parliament who in the last Parliament said that he would resign his seat if interest rates went up. They went up to 22 per cent. For him to be telling us to put our money where our mouth is is somewhat amusing when listening to his speech.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I made no such statement in the last Parliament.

Mr. McDermid: The next thing I want to mention is that the series of amendments we are debating would put something into the Act to say that it is not in the agreement. Members opposite want to put something in the Act to say that it is not in the Act. This really boggles my mind. I cannot understand what they are trying to do. The Hon. House Leader talks about his Party's policy on trade—GATT. He said that we will deal with the Americans through GATT. They have negotiated a number of GATT rounds. Did they put anything in about aboriginal rights in those GATT rounds? Did they put anything in about health care? Did they put anything in about regional development? Did they put anything in about social programs? Of course they did not.

Mr. Axworthy: We did not have to because we were not threatening them.

Mr. McDermid: I give an example of an agreement that we all understand because most people, most families, have at one time or another bought themselves a home or have been involved in such an agreement. When one signs an agreement to sell or buy a house, one does not put in the agreement that the wife and kids are not part of the agreement. The point is not put in that the car is not part of the agreement. What one puts in the agreement is what will be affected. It is the same with the trade agreement.

I want to go through the motions because of the scaremongering about this country going to hell in a handbasket. I do not think there is a Canadian who honestly believes that any Government, no matter what its political stripe, would endanger our social programs, our medicare, our education, and so on. It is absolute foolishness to try to frighten the people that way.

Aboriginal peoples are mentioned in these amendments. The rights of aboriginal peoples and their land claim settlements have constitutional protection. The free trade agreement does not supersede the Constitution. The Government's comprehensive land claims policy, which was revised last year, is grandfathered in the free trade agreement. There is no need to put forward an exception.

There is nothing in the free trade agreement that would affect programs to protect the environment. We are working under GATT rules. Under GATT rules the environment is protected. This free trade agreement comes under the GATT rules and that is very clear all through it.

Ms. Copps: That is absolute garbage.

Mr. McDermid: There is the expert from Hamilton East. She is the expert on everything—absolutely everything. She knows everything about everything. She is wonderful.

Existing statutes and policies regarding protection of the environment continue to apply. They have absolutely nothing to do with the agreement—nothing.

Ms. Copps: That is what you said about senior citizens' pensions. Your word is not worth the paper it is written on.

Mr. McDermid: There is nothing in the agreement that would prevent the Government from undertaking appropriate adjustment programs—absolutely nothing.

Ms. Copps: What about the grape growers?

Mr. McDermid: We have announced an adjustment program for the grape growers in British Columbia, and there is a soon to be announced program in Ontario, once the Ontario Government gets its act together.

Ms. Copps: Who introduced the deal?

Mr. McDermid: Who did the unfair, discriminatory pricing, as has been determined by GATT in Ontario and British Columbia? There is a great supporter of GATT. As soon as GATT brings down a decision against Canada all of a sudden GATT is terrible. We are to ignore it and not pay any attention to it. That is the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. She really understands this thing.

Ms. Copps: The trade deal preceded the GATT decision. You do not know anything about it.

Mr. McDermid: We have an excellent advisory committee under the chairmanship of Mr. de Grandpré who will be making recommendations on adjustment procedures that are required, if any—

Ms. Copps: People are going bankrupt today.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member who delivers her best speeches from the seat of her pants should know that and understand that.

• (1140)

Motion No. 12 states:

> "7. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall be interpreted so as to affect or preclude the continuation of existing or the establishment of new regional development programs."

That motion is extremely misleading. Regional development programs are not covered by the Act or the agreement.

Ms. Copps: Come on!

Mr. McDermid: Moreover, it is misleading to state that nothing in this agreement shall affect regional development. The agreement itself will positively affect regional development, since the economic benefits of the free trade agreement will be felt throughout all regions of Canada, and any legitimate study has shown that. The support that we have in western Canada and in Atlantic Canada is ample proof. Therefore, that amendment is not necessary.

I want to talk about the establishment of new Canadian social programs. We have introduced a new Canadian social program since the free trade agreement was signed—the child care legislation which is presently being debated in the House. If we could not introduce new social programs why, in heaven's name, would the United States not object now to the day care program?

The other day I listened to my friend, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), talk about how our health care will be wiped out, education will be wiped out, and all those things will happen. Let us examine the facts. First, provincial Governments have absolutely no obligation to contract out health services, health care management, or education. There is no obligation. Second, even if they chose to do so, they may give preference or exclusivity to Canadians. They are not affected by the procurement obligations. The provincial Government can state that only Canadians can provide services to us here and would absolutely not be in violation of the free trade agreement.

All the free trade agreement states is that if a province decides to allow an American company to come in, as Ontario allowed a management company to come in and try to straighten out the mess at the Hawkesbury hospital, it has to be treated fairly. That is what the free trade agreement states, but it does not say that they have to be allowed in. Americans can be kept out of health care in this country if the province desires. The Hon. Member talks about the blood bank in Montreal. That was a decision permitted by the provincial Government. It has absolutely nothing to do with the free trade agreement, and it has absolutely nothing to do with the federal Government whatsoever.

Ms. Copps: That's totally false. It's the Canadian Blood Committee. It's the federal Government's responsibility.

Mr. McDermid: There she goes again. She's the expert on everything.

Ms. Copps: Do you know anything about the Canadian Blood Committee?

Mr. McDermid: She knows the whole ball of wax, and we love to hear her speak from the seat of her pants.

Mr. Hopkins: You are the greenhorn, John.

Mr. McDermid: Well, I will stack my knowledge on the free trade agreement up against the knowledge of the agreement of the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) any time. I will debate him any time, anywhere, on the free trade agreement, because he has not read further than page 2 yet.

Mr. Hopkins: That's not much of a challenge, John.

Ms. Copps: Eganville.

Mr. McDermid: Great. I love Eganville, and I am well known in Eganville.

Mr. Hopkins: I'll say you are.

Mr. McDermid: I will look forward to going into Eganville any time.

In conclusion, the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Party rose today and told everybody that all our social services add to the cost of the goods and services we buy in this country. That was his first statement. He said that because of that it put us in an unfair advantage and therefore we would have to reduce our social programs. In the next breath he said our social programs would be looked upon by the Americans as unfair trade practice and that they were going to attack them. The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. If it makes our goods more expensive, how can it be an unfair competition? Why would the Americans complain at all? The arguments brought forward are total nonsense. They are scaremongering. These amendments should be rejected out of hand.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few statements on Motion Nos. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14. The Parliamentary Secretary suggested that these were irrelevant. He even suggested that they were improper, and he could not understand why they were in there in any case.

Mr. McDermid: I did not say "improper".

Mr. Hovdebo: That is disrespect for the Chair, Mr. Speaker. These motions were ruled proper and acceptable by the Chair. Therefore, they refer directly to the Bill and can effectively be used to amend it. They do not change the direction of the Bill. Perhaps, when these particular amendments were written, we neglected to put in one clause. Instead of saying "for greater certainty" at the beginning of each of these amendments, we probably should have said "because nobody trusts the Government, for greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall do these things". That is exactly why these particular amendments should be in the Act, for greater certainty, so that we know these things cannot happen. The Parliamentary Secretary made a great to-do about the fact that they are not put in treaties. That might be the case where they can be negotiated at a later date. However, in this particular case we would like to be sure that these things are not going to happen.

The Indians and Inuit have gone through a long, slow process establishing their right to land, their right to self-government, and the rights that came out of the treaties. There is no assurance in this Act that those rights will not be affected by the free trade deal.

Mr. McDermid: The Constitution guarantees it.

Mr. Hovdebo: One of our friends in the Indian community suggested that the free trade deal would put everybody in the same category as the Indians find themselves now, as far as this particular Government is concerned. In negotiations Indians may find themselves defending their self-government against the United States instead of against the Government with which they presently negotiate.

Because nobody trusts this Government or trusts the negotiations with the United States, Motion No. 9 states:

> "7. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall be interpreted so as to apply to lands, resources, and waters claims by aboriginal peoples under an aboriginal claim."

Why should that certainty not be put into the Act? Why should we not agree that aboriginal people need that type of security?

Again, because we do not trust the Government, Motion No. 10 states:

> "7. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall affect programs to protect the environment or conservation of land, resources and waters."

The Parliamentary Secretary suggests that those types of things are not put into an Act. However, in the next few years the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States will be establishing how and what are considered subsidies. There is no certainty, by what is presently contained in the Act, that a subsidy given or made available to a company in order that it can contribute to a cleaner environment, or that it can follow the environmental rules and laws that we put down or may put down in the future, will not be considered a subsidy and put those companies at an unfair advantage, or that it would be accused by the United States of having an unfair advantage because it is receiving support to contribute to clean air or a clean environment. Why should we not put in the Bill a clause saying "for greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall affect programs to protect the environment"? As soon as those programs or that protection, programs which attempt to protect the environment, are considered subsidies they become unfair advantages for Canadian companies.

Turning to Motion No. 11, because nobody really trusts this Government and nobody trusts this agreement, for greater certainty, adjustment programs to help firms or workers adjust to change brought about by the implementation of the agreement should be recognized in the agreement. For instance, areas are already being affected by the agreement. The grape growers of British Columbia and Ontario are being affected by the program. This has been admitted by the Government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has even gone out to British Columbia and said: "We will help you where it hurts". There is no guarantee that the Government will be able to go on helping them after the agreement is in place and after this particular Bill has been passed.

There is no suggestion, no guarantee, that if the Government were to decide in the future to help a victim of this Bill—and there are going to be many—the United States may not take the Government before its panel and say that this is improper. Since we do not trust the Government and since the people of Canada do not trust this agreement, why not include for greater certainty, a guarantee that these things will be carried out?

Motion No. 12 reads: Again, no one trusts this Government or this agreement:

> For greater certainty, nothing in this Act shall be interpreted so as to affect or preclude the continuation of existing or the establishment of new regional developmental programs.

One great fear in more remote areas of the country is the fact that many programs which have done some good in such areas will be considered to be an unfair advantage in the future

Mr. McDermid: Why wouldn't it be now?

Mr. Hovdebo: The Parliamentary Secretary has stood in this House and said that those kinds of programs are in danger, that they are the kinds of programs that we are going to have to look at and withdraw if they affect the ability of companies in the United States to compete with those areas.

Mr. McDermid: When did I say that? Point that out to me. I never said that.

Mr. Hovdebo: That is the basic understanding of this Bill. Anything that is paid to a certain area and affects the production of a product in that area can be recognized as an unfair advantage.

Mr. McDermid: Get your facts right.

Mr. Hovdebo: We have a clause which should be included because the Bill does protect regional development programs now and the need for them in the future. I notice that I am coming to the end of my time, Mr. Speaker, but there are two other motions both for greater certainty, both because the people of Canada do not trust this deal to protect them. These amendments give the kind of protection the people of Canada want. If this deal is to be forced on them, if the Government is to push through this deal without giving the people of Canada an opportunity to decide yes or no, to decide that they want it, this kind of security should be in the Bill. The social, environmental, self-government, and regional development programs which are in place or will be in place should be secured. We should have some security, ensuring that they will be in place after the Bill has been rammed through the House of Commons and has become law.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in listening to some of the speeches that have been made by the coalition on the other side of the House, I am reminded this morning of Chicken Little crying "The sky is falling". I guess that nursery rhyme is as true today as it was whenever it was written. We have people here who are not willing to look at what is really in the agreement or at what the agreement is all about. The FTA, as the Canadian public and all of us know, is an agreement we set out to put together with our neighbours to the south for the lowering of tariffs.

What we have now is both opposition Parties combining to try to put into legislation what is not in the agreement. We do not have anything in the agreement which does anything about our social programs, yet they are trying to scare Canadian people with misrepresentations about things that are not in the agreement. The legislation before us deals with incorporating into law what was agreed to with our neighbours to the south.

They say that "for greater certainty, we want to turn around and make sure that the aboriginal land claims are protected". Well, the agreement does not address aboriginal land claims. If we took all aboriginal land claims that have been enunciated in British Columbia, there would not be enough land in British Columbia to satisfy them: We have heard Members this morning talk about "for greater certainty", as proposed by the Liberals and seconded by the New Democrats, that "for greater certainty," these are the things that we should be including. I do not know how they think a Government can govern when they try to satisfy the whims of the people who talked about these things this morning.

It really behoves the Canadian public to be careful what they listen to. I fear our Loyal Opposition is not telling the truth.

Mr. Hovdebo: No more so than the Government.

Mr. Belsher: They are not telling the people what is in the agreement. They are dealing with half-truths. Nothing is more dangerous than when people deal with half-truths and work up into such a lather that they start believing it themselves as being the truth.

We have before us an agreement which has been carefully worked out. We know that it is not perfect. In the area of agriculture, we already found that people in the grape industry were going to be seriously affected. When we discovered this, we turned around and said to these people: "We want to help you, we want to work with your provincial Governments". We have gone, along with the Province of British Columbia, to the grape growers and said: "Here is how many dollars per acre. We are willing to share with you in either taking out the grapes you now have or changing your grapes and replacing them with varieties that you feel can be secure in as far as what you can produce in the future is concerned". That is one small demonstration. Yet we have the opposition Parties standing up this morning with pompous, righteous indignation saying "for greater certainty, you should put into the law that you are going to do all these things for any person that comes along and says the free trade agreement has seriously affected them and they want the Government to bail them out".

We have an agreement. It is a good agreement, and it is time we got on with passing this legislation and putting it into effect. It is for that reason that I stand here today and say that I support the Bill before us. I will be glad to vote against the motions we are debating this morning. With those few comments, I will sit down so we can get on with business.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, one of these motions deals with regional economic development policy and other items relating to the social fabric of our country. As my House Leader, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) said, the Government is not representing Canada properly in this trade deal. It is not a trade deal; it is a bad deal. We have to ask ourselves who is speaking for Canada in this deal.

The Hon. Member who just spoke said that there was nothing worse than half-truths. I say to him that there is nothing worse than having the whole truth pointed out to you and refusing to recognize it. This is what is happening in this debate. The Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) said that this did not affect regional development. I would not want to misquote him; I am sure that is what he said.

Mr. McDermid: It will positively affect it.

Mr. Hopkins: I want to point out to him that I have a case in my constituency which proves him wrong.

Mr. McDermid: The free trade agreement is not in place yet, how can it?

Mr. Hopkins: The eastern Ontario area was designated for regional development incentives up until June 30 when the Government cut them all off.

Mr. McDermid: What has that got to do with the free trade agreement?

Mr. Hopkins: A group of people who wanted to start a planing and lumber business in my constituency had their application in long before June 30. Everything was in order. They were having trouble getting it through. I took it up with the Department on their behalf and was told that it was not going to approve any subsidy for a milling process dealing with softwood lumber, for example, because it would upset the free trade deal. This is a fact of life, so I do not want any government Member getting up in this House and trying to tell the Canadian people that this trade deal does not affect regional development.

Mr. McDermid: It does not.

Mr. Hopkins: That is a perfect case in point.

There is an old saying that none are so blind as those who will not see. There are none so dangerous as those who will not think. The Government has turned a blind eye to everything pointed out to it. Regional development is definitely affected by this deal.

The experience with the lumber mill that I just spoke about was not a lower level decision. The decision was sent down the line in the form of directives from senior bureaucrats in the Government. As a result, it becomes government policy. The Government cut off regional development incentives long before June 30 in my area of the country, yet Members opposite turn around and say that the trade deal is not affecting regional development.

I also want to talk this morning about small business set-asides. These are contracts coming out of the Pentagon in Washington on which Canadians are sometimes allowed to bid. However, the Americans have had a policy for some time now where they lift a large number of those contracts out of circulation as far as Canada is concerned and set them aside strictly for bidding by American contractors. We had greater free trade on defence contracts with the U.S. in the 1950s and early 1960s than we have today under this deal. On July 5, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) made this statement in the House in answer to a question. He said that the free trade deal was negotiated. That is a terrific statement. He also said:

> We know that there is a U.S. small business set-aside program. It was agreed to have a mutual opening of government procurement which extends the multilateral provisions already signed under the GATT, and estimating the size of the U.S. government procurement market which will be opened to competition from Canadian businesses, including small businesses, the portion excluded under the U.S. set-aside program has been netted out. The estimate is that Canadian businesses will be free under the agreement to compete for a portion of the U.S. government spending, estimated at $3 billion Canadian. That was not possible before, Mr. Speaker.

I took this matter up with Department of Supply and Services senior officials who are in on the trade deal firsthand. They informed me that not a single thing has changed with respect to the small business set-aside program with the U.S. and Canada as a result of this agreement. That means that Canada did not get free access to the American market as the Government is trying to tell Canadians. That simply backs up what our critic, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and our Leader are saying, that Canada did not get free access to American markets. That is absolutely true when it comes to small business set-aside programs.

Every time someone brings out the facts on this and starts talking about it, government back-benchers and the Cabinet get up and say that we are backward looking, that we are not progressive thinkers, and so on. You are not backward thinking if you are trying to protect Canadians from a bad deal that the Government is projecting as a positive thing, when in fact the very openness of the market that they are projecting is in fact not there. We do not want to sell out Canada. They should not project all these things when they are not true.

We know there has always been a building up of infrastructure and transportation facilities in this country on an east-west basis. Always there has been, long before Confederation, a north-south axis as a result of our relationship with the U.S. However, we have always been able to resist that. Now, in one fell swoop in this trade deal, the Government has taken away all the positive things that Canadians have done over more than a century to build a nation on an east-west basis. In one fell swoop it has given in to the north-south axis, and it is now going to be fully influenced by the large economy and culture to the south.

Government Members are talking about people running scared. They are running scared because they say that if we do not get this deal, something terrible will happen to us. They are saying that we will be rejected, but we are saying that Canadians have fantastic relations throughout the world and we should not be putting all our eggs in one basket. All over the world Canada is well known and highly respected. If the effort that had gone into this one basket of eggs had gone into total global trade, we would be in a much better position today and for years to come.

Why did the Government allow Americans to bid freely on Canadian contracts in the small business set-aside program, for example, without gaining free access to the American market for Canadians? Government Members are going around saying that they have that access.

Returning to the issue of the north-south pull, factors in the southern states such as lower labour costs, fewer unions, and lower employee benefits have contributed to an exodus of manufacturers from the northern states. The same pull is occurring in the United States itself. Between 1973 and 1980, employment in the manufacturing sectors of Michigan, New York, and Ohio decreased by 17 per cent, 10 per cent, and 11 per cent respectively. At the same time, manufacturing employment in Texas and California increased by 31 per cent and 21 per cent respectively. This same north-south trend would apply to the Canadian manufacturing sector in the aftermath of the trade deal.

The pull will take Canadian industries south into the United States now that the Government has caved in and given the U.S. the markets of Canada. Our industry will be pulled south, just as the industries of the northern United States are pulled south because of cheaper labour and operating costs in the southern United States. The Government has given up trying to build Canada on an east-west basis, the basis that pioneers for a century and a half have worked to build up to form a Canadian identity and a Canadian national spirit. This Government is destroying that in one fell swoop with this trade deal.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I want to make some general comments, particularly to follow up on some of the misinformation that was put forward by the Hon. Member who just spoke.

The natural flow of trade, and I speak as a western Canadian here, is north-south. There is absolutely no question about that. We have seen that over and over again with the fact that 80 per cent of our trade today is with the United States. The Party represented by the Hon. Member who just spoke is the Party that has been in power for most of the last 100 years that he spoke of. Some of that north-south development came as a result of the Liberals being in government. Are they now saying that it is bad?

Normally and naturally we would trade with the Americans. A large percentage of the population of Canada lives close to the American border, particularly in southern Ontario. The Hon. Member spoke as a Member from Ontario and put forward an argument that the provincial Government of Ontario has been putting forward with some vigour, although it is certainly losing its vigour as we get further into this debate. They argue that if it is good for Ontario, it is good for Canada. That simply is not so.

I have a constituent who manufactures fibreglass truck tops south of Moose Jaw. He sells these truck tops all over western Canada and into the United States. Over 40 per cent of his production is now marketed in the United States. He has absolutely no difficulty selling his product. He makes a very, very good product which is readily accepted in the States. The projection is that with the removal of tariffs, he will get an ever-increasing share of the American market, and he is looking forward to that.

My constituent has told me that Toronto is about the same distance away from him as Los Angeles where there is a much larger market which is much easier to get into. Why would we not trade that way? This is what will result from the Canada-U.S. trade agreement. The cry of the people who are against this agreement that we are losing our sovereignty is codswallop, to quote the Member from Newfoundland. We will see an ever-increasing amount of trade with the Americans, and that is as it should be. We will gain more secure access, and some of these hazards to trade that exist will be removed.

Hon. Members should speak to the red meat producers of western Canada. Saskatchewan pork producers will tell Hon. Members the same thing. There is an ever-increasing market in California—

Mr. Axworthy: Tell us about the Saskatchewan pools. What will they say?

Mr. Gottselig: Listen to the Hon. Member who is just leaving the Chamber talk about Saskatchewan pools.

Mr. Langdon: Answer his question.

Mr. Gottselig: The Canadian Federation of Agriculture does not take a position on this. It does not support it but neither does it go against the agreement.

Mr. Hovdebo: They just did.

Mr. Gottselig: No, they did not. That is the Hon. Member's interpretation. Another problem with this debate is that when people take a very narrow interpretation of it, it is like taking a quote from the Bible. Those people would like to try to rewrite the Bible as well, but that will not work either.

Saskatchewan pork producers have an ever-increasing market for a very, very good product. They will gain a more secure access to that American market through this agreement. The same is true of the beef producers. The Canadian Cattlemen's Association is very strongly supportive of this agreement. These are the people who are producing a commodity that they will sell in the American market.

I welcome the upcoming election for which the Parties that oppose this agreement are calling. I think the Liberal Party would be well advised to refer back to an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press last week that took the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to task for some of the statements he has made. The article referred to how the Leader of the Opposition plucked a section of the agreement out and put it together with other words. The article mentioned that the Liberal Party has been crying: "Let the people decide". The Leader of the Liberal Party should have a look at the closing words of that article which were: "Tell the people the truth".

The people will decide. The people of western Canada who I represent are strongly supportive of this trade agreement. They will return me in the next election as a result of their support for me and for the free trade agreement. I will be very happy to go on the election trail and to debate this agreement, and my people support this agreement and will continue to support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have just debated Motion Nos. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14. A vote on Motion No. 9 will apply to Motions Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14, so the question is on Motion No. 9.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114, the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

We will now deal with Motion Nos. 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, and 25. They will be grouped for debate and will be voted on separately.

• (1220)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry) moved:

That Bill C-130 be amended by deleting Clause 8.

That Bill C-130 be amended in Clause 11 by adding immediately after line 29 at page 5 the following:

"(d) that appointments to such committees, panels, commissions or other bodies ensure representation from consumer groups, labour and business."

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

That Bill C-130 be amended in Clause 11 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 5 the following:

"(3) One such committee that the Governor in Council may establish, under this section, shall monitor and review matters arising out of the Act or the Agreement, including

(a) the adjustment impact on company workers and communities;

(b) the activities, economic viability and ability to compete within a given sector of all companies doing business in Canada and the United States of America; and

(c) agricultural pressures in Canada resulting from the agreement."

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry) moved:

That Bill C-130 be amended by deleting Clause 12.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this grouping of amendments carries with it a number of important presentations which were brought forward during the course of the committee hearings. As much as those committee hearings were restricted, limited, and short-changed, we still managed to hear approximately 50 groups of the several hundred that wanted to be heard. Many of the groups brought forward items very crucial to the wine and grape industry in British Columbia and Ontario.

A number of organizations, consumer associations, and labour groups quite vividly pointed out that during the course of discussion about trade they had never been consulted, never been asked for their opinion, and never been given any opportunity to present their case.

I want to deal specifically with Motion No. 17 which moves to strike out Clause 8. Clause 8 is a very simple clause. It says that we should approve the agreement. I am here to argue that this legislation should not be approved and the agreement should not be ratified until there is an election.

There are some very fundamental and simple rules about democracy. We can get very complicated and bureaucratic, but basically 2,500 years ago people started putting forward the assertion that there was a certain popular will that had to hold Governments accountable and would express itself from time to time in the decisions of a community. The Greeks had a wonderful word for it, civitas, a sense of obligations and responsibilities of the people. At that time people participated directly in government. They were required to show up on a monthly basis at a forum and take over part of the responsibility for making government work.

As this democratic system evolved we came to a representative system. Citizens did not participate directly but elected others to do it for them. In our parliamentary system they elect a Government, and the Government is given a mandate for a certain number of years to exercise that popular will, always subject to the fundamental rules of democracy; the right to fair and open speech, the right of citizens to be heard, and respect for certain liberties.

Throughout each stage of consideration of this trade deal those principles have been compromised. At every step along the way there has been a deliberate design to frustrate the proper role of democratic institutions.

I cite as an example the cabinet document which was revealed about two years ago on communications strategy. It said very clearly that the role of the Government should not be to inform Canadians but to sell them on the trade deal. The document said "don't inform, sell". That document was actually discussed and agreed to by Cabinet. That set the tone.

Since that point in time there has been a very deliberate effort to cut off all avenues of information. The $30 million or $40 million being spent by the Government on brochures and advertising is not for information. It does not detail what is in the Act or what are its consequences or implications; it is a sales job pure and simple. It is propaganda.

The role of Parliament itself has been victimized by this agreement. In the haste to get approval from Parliament every single procedure of open and fair debate has been rejected. Closure has been brought in at every single stage.

Mr. McDermid: Three hundred and fifty days?

Mr. Axworthy: The problem is that the Parliamentary Secretary spends more time in this House haughtily harrumphing than giving any form of information. That is the attitude. They do not want to engage in a fair and honest debate.

They talk about misrepresentation. Well, misrepresentation started with a gentleman named Mr. Mulroney who became Leader of the Opposition and eventually Prime Minister, who said, in 1983, that he would never engage in a free trade agreement with the United States. Then, three or four months after the election, he introduced it. What greater lie could be told to the Canadian public?

In his platform in the election campaign he did not mention or even hint that his Government would bring in the most drastic, radical departure from the historical Canadian tradition that we have ever seen. He did not even talk about it, and now they talk about misrepresentation. Was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) walking around all that time with a secret that he would not tell anyone? I do not know, but under the democratic process it is an absolute requirement that we are accountable to the public who are, after all, what democracy is all about. Democracy does not only involve this institution and Members of Parliament. Democracy is all about the individual voter. How can the Government justify not telling them the truth in the election campaign and now pretending that it has a mandate?

The problem was not only the then Leader of the Opposition; it was his colleagues as well. The gentleman who is now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said that anyone who would sign a free trade agreement with the Americans was naive. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that one would be a fool to sign a free trade agreement.

We can quote the entire front bench with the exception of the present Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) whose family, since 1949, has wanted not only economic union but political union with the United States. I give the Minister for International Trade a small mark for consistency. At least he and his family have made their intentions well known. They want to be American citizens. They said so in 1949, and I do not think the Minister has ever changed his opinion. This Bill will give him the key to open that door.

There is only one way of cleansing this incredible smirch and that is to let the Canadian public have another go at the Prime Minister. He must try to explain to the Canadian public why he thinks this is a good deal and let the opposition Parties explain why we believe it is not. The 18 million or 19 million Canadian voters must be allowed to decide who is right, not a Tory majority which has run out of mandate.

Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that since World War II only three Governments have gone beyond the four-year term? This Government is already an aberration; it has already gone beyond the normal time of office for a Government.

Mr. McDermid: There he goes misleading again. The election was September 4, 1984. The Liberals are misleading again.

Mr. Axworthy: We have the chimpanzees rattling their cages again. There they go climbing on the swings and throwing bananas from their cages.

There is a simple solution. It is interesting that every time we start talking about calling an election Tory Members of Parliament get agitated. It is because they are scared. They are terrified at the prospect of an election. They know that the moment Canadians have in front of them that kind of information about this trade deal, the Tories will go down to defeat. They will not have the kind of support they had in 1984. That is why Allan Gregg is doing polls two or three times a week and rushing to Sussex Drive to say "Not now, Mr. Prime Minister, people still think you are untrustworthy. You still have not been able to convince people that you tell the truth".

The fundamental issue here is that when we talk about telling the truth, the people of Canada do not trust the Prime Minister to tell the truth. Furthermore, they do not trust him to negotiate a good trade deal. They understand full well that the Prime Minister has failed in all his negotiations. As a result, we are faced with the ultimate sell-out.

I suggest that the reason for supporting this motion is that the Bill should not be approved until the Canadian people have had a right to decide.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I moved Motion No. 22 in the list of motions we are debating. I want to make a case to the Conservative majority that this particular amendment is not only something that they should regard positively, but something which they should consider as a helpful and constructive addition to their Bill.

The amendment suggests that one committee that may be established by the Governor in Council, because it is a very useful committee, is one which would have the purpose from the Canadian perspective of monitoring what is happening under the trade deal. It could monitor many things, but three things that we see as especially crucial to monitor in order to assist Canadians to come to terms with this new trade context would be, first, the adjustment impact which has taken place with respect to companies, with respect to workers, and with respect to communities.

Second, we think that monitoring carefully the activities, economic viability, and the ability to compete within given sectors of companies doing business in Canada and the United States would be a very important contribution to companies in our country being able to compete successfully with those in the United States.

Finally, because we heard a great deal of testimony with the message that there would be serious agricultural problems and pressures associated with this trade deal, we felt that too should be something that is monitored carefully by this committee.

I want to expand on a variety of these points. First, let me talk about the adjustment question. It is absolutely clear, wherever we have had a case of a free trade arrangement being established, that very careful attention must be paid to adjustment programs which are generated as a result of that trade situation.

There has been much talk over the years in which we have been debating this trade deal about the Auto Pact. It should be remembered that the Auto Pact, among other things, recommended an important, useful, and very generous adjustment program associated with it. The TAB program, Transitional Assistance Benefits Program, made it clear that any worker who lost a job because of disruption of trade associated with the Auto Pact would get assistance from this TAB program. In fact, that is what made the trade unions in this country enthusiastic in the end about the Auto Pact.

We recognize the Auto Pact as a sectoral agreement with guarantees that protect Canadian jobs, but the adjustment provisions which were associated with it were nevertheless very important.

The same is true of the Tokyo Round of trade liberalization. We had the labour adjustment benefits program, which was brought into effect to offer retirement benefits to workers in affected industries. Again, it is a very important contribution to making that trade liberalization work effectively.

It has been suggested, even by supporters of this trade deal, that the trade disruption in terms of employment that will take place will be considerable. If we take the Economic Council report, for instance, which supported this deal even with its most optimistic scenario, it came up with 188,000 workers whose jobs would be lost. That is what one requires some response to.

I think the response, at the very least, should be a monitoring of what is happening to these workers and therefore the potential to respond quickly if adjustment programs are hitting them, their communities, and the company they work for.

With respect to my own constituency, for instance, it is quite clear that one of the major producers in a medium-sized town in my constituency is almost certain to shut down as a consequence of this deal. That would be 550 jobs in a town of 8,000 people. It would devastate the town. Attention must be paid to the adjustment problems of such workers and communities.

Second, if we talk about the competitiveness issue, which I discuss in the second clause of this amendment, it is especially important. We have, for instance, a detailed survey from the Canadian Manufacturers Association. It indicates, first, that fewer than 12 per cent of the companies surveyed by the CMA had actually analysed the free trade agreement in detail. Therefore, the work has not been done by these companies with respect to competitiveness and what is going to face them as they move into a new trade situation. That same survey indicates that if the value of the Canadian dollar rose to 85 cents, 67 per cent of these companies would feel themselves at a competitive disadvantage with the United States. We can say that the dollar is not likely to do that, but in fact the dollar has risen by close to 6 cents in the last six months. For it to move another 4 cents and put 67 per cent of CMA companies into this uncompetitive situation vis-à-vis the United States is absolutely possible. Therefore, we need a committee to monitor this and be able to prepare responses if this kind of thing begins to happen.

Finally, I want to speak briefly about the agricultural pressures which were brought before us in the committee. There must also be close monitoring to be able to respond to these possibilities. The submission of the prairie pools, which represent a combined membership of over 130,000 farmers in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, states:

> The three Pool organizations are concerned about changes that may occur in the grain marketing system, and the impact which these changes may have on the competitive ability of western Canadian farmers.
> We are concerned about losing the Crow benefit on products moving to the U.S.A. through Pacific ports.
> We are concerned that the U.S.A administration may interpret Article 705(5) as giving the U.S.A. the right to restrict Canadian grain into their market while increasing exports to Canada.
> We are concerned about pressures, originating in the U.S.A., to require the Canadian Wheat Board to make public their actual selling price—

There is also concern expressed by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool that energy commitments to the U.S.A. may on occasion create a shortage of domestic agriculture needs. There is also concern expressed by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool that because of changed investment regulations, Canada may pass control of many institutions important to Canadian agriculture to companies outside of Canada that have no understanding of our industry or recognize its unique requirements.

We see that in all three of these areas there are potential crucial problems which face this country.

I urge Conservatives, in this case, to look honestly at the amendment and recognize that it is a constructive attempt to improve what would face this country if this trade deal in fact goes through. We disagree with this trade deal. Nevertheless, this is a constructive amendment meant to improve our position as a country, if we face serious pressures in agriculture or serious adjustment pressures which are damaging to our communities and our workers, and if we face competitive disadvantages for our industries which the Canadian Manufacturers Association itself says could very well be there if the value of the Canadian dollar continues to rise. Therefore, I ask the Conservatives to tell the truth in this case and recognize that these problems exist, to accept this amendment and in that way improve the legislation which is in front of the House at this particular time.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour at this time to enter into the debate on the amendments put forward by the Liberal Party. I note with interest that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) had some quite unique things to say with respect to the legislation and what may affect it either positively or negatively. I found very interesting his comments about the possible potential problem. That is pretty vague. There is always a possibility of problems with Canada's trade throughout the world, but he warns us of a possible potential problem. What is new? Even if we did not have a free trade agreement, problems would arise from time to time. He should certainly know that. That is what our trade negotiators have to be concerned with. That is natural.

I found his idea of economics interesting. He mentioned the change in our exchange rate with the United States. Before we had a trade agreement with the United States I recall at one time that we had a higher rate. The Canadian dollar was worth more than the American dollar, and no one jumped in to lower it so that we could have some kind of advantage. I believe the New Democratic Party at one time advocated dropping the dollar to a lower level to give us an advantage in our trade. That kind of economics never works. That would mean that the people of Mexico should be flourishing in business activity today because there are over 300 pesos to the dollar. What kind of nonsense economics is that?

What else can one expect but that type of expertise from a person who stands here and advocates that kind of concern? Our dollar relationship with the United States has always had some bearing on our trade, but I might add that as our dollar has been strengthening against the U.S., our trade has been strengthening. As a matter of fact, we had the highest trade surplus in the last month that has been recorded for many, many years. I ask Hon. Members to think about what they are saying and not to make statements that have no bearing at all.

I would return to some quotations with respect to the Hon. Member from Fort Garry who said that Clause 7 should be deleted. A great many of his colleagues and supporters from across Canada say exactly the opposite. I would like to point those out.

The Premier of Quebec made the following statement, as reported in The Toronto Star on January 28, 1987:

> Bourassa took the unusual step of switching to English to hit out at Broadbent for claiming that 'Canada is for sale' under the terms of the proposed free trade deal.
> "Mr. Broadbent should know that we are not talking about the sovereignty of Canada," he said.
> "We are not even talking about a custom's union. We are not talking about a monetary union. We are not talking about a common market. We are talking about enlarging trade between Canada and the U.S.
> "How could you seriously say that Canadian sovereignty is at stake when we want to protect Canadian markets in the U.S.?"

That is the Premier of Quebec lecturing in a very wise way the Leader of the New Democratic Party who needs some lecturing from time to time. As reported in The Toronto Star on November 27, 1987, the Premier of Quebec had this to say:

> What's at stake are dozens and dozens of billions of dollars of potential growth for Canada's resource-based economy. Canada is the only one of 24 developed countries which is not part of some sort of free trade area. Why this isolation?

The New Democratic Party would advocate isolation. The Premier made the following statement in the Assemblée Nationale on March 8, 1988:

> Quebec is supporting this free trade agreement because it wants to make its economy more modern, more efficient and more productive.

What is wrong with the premier of a province wanting to do that? He went on to state:

> This agreement will enable Quebec to be more confident about its economic future.
> Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the free trade agreement will be good for Quebec's energy sector.

Why would anyone in this House, especially members of the two opposition Parties, want to hinder Quebec from reaching its potential and enhancing its economic growth? Therefore the Liberal Leader of this House is in complete disagreement with the Leader of the Liberal Party in the Province of Quebec. In Le Devoir, as reported on August 17, 1987, there appeared this:

> The Premier of Quebec reiterated his total support for free trade between Canada and the United States. "If we perpetuate protectionism, we will, in the medium term, be dooming ourselves to an irreversible economic decline," he said.
> The Quebec Premier wants a minimal agreement dealing with investment, tariff barriers, transitional measures and the creation of an arbitration panel. Other issues, such as trade in services, could be dealt with later.

The Premier of Quebec had this to say, as reported in La Presse on December 15, 1987:

> Finally, Quebec is satisfied with a supplementary appeal procedure to the bi-national panel that will rule on trade disputes.

Mr. Langdon: Are you switching to a Quebec riding?

Mr. Holtmann: Do you have something against Quebec? Stand up in the House and say it.

Let us go to other parts of this country—let us take all of Canada. Let us consider a fellow by the name of John Ciaccia, Quebec's Energy Minister. I probably did not pronounce his name right, and I apologize if I did not.

In The Financial Post of November 23, 1987 he is reported to have said:

> Some Quebec Liberals have begun talking openly about sitting out the next election. Even Bourassa's energy minister, John Ciaccia, has been quoted as saying, "I will have problems supporting a guy who takes such positions," referring primarily to Turner's free trade stand.

Is that not interesting? Let us now move on to Ontario. We will cut across the nation.

Ray Curran, President of the Sarnia—Lambton Riding Association—and I am referring to Liberals, by the way, and I will go on to some New Democrats later—had this to say, as reported in The Gazette of Montreal:

> Liberal Leader John Turner's position on free trade is totally irresponsible. You can't make agreements between two sovereign governments and then just rip them up.

Let us move along to what Allison DeLong said in the New Brunswick Legislative Assembly:

> Mr. Speaker, our Premier and this government have gone on record as endorsing the impending free trade agreement. I believe this is the most significant event for our people since Confederation.

We now have New Brunswick, pretty well 100 per cent, on side; except for a few New Democrats if they could ever be found. They are all saying this openly.

Mr. Langdon: Why don't you run in Selkirk?

Mr. Holtmann: Why does the former premier not run in my riding instead of me running to his? He is quite scared.

I know members of the New Democratic Party have no respect or regard for a Liberal, but in Maclean's on March 28, 1988 Milton Harris, a former chairman of the Liberal National Executive Finance Committee, said:

> I am going to vote for the Conservatives, and if they ask me, I will give them money.

He is putting his money where his mouth is, I will tell you, Mr. Speaker.

What about Don Johnston—I realize I should refer to the Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount since he is still a Member of this House. In a speech in Vancouver, B.C., on November 22, he said:

> If we are unsuccessful and American protectionism grows, I believe the costs of adjustment will be much greater than would be the case if we negotiated a trade agreement. Job losses may not only be larger, they may indeed be more concentrated regionally, leaving little scoop for job creation—

Mr. Langdon: Scope!

Mr. Holtmann: That is right, there is a misspelling here. The point is that those who argue the free trade agreement will cost jobs must also look at the other side of the coin. What will U.S. protectionism cost? I suspect the Member from Essex—Windsor is probably not worrying about what protection might do in his area, taking into consideration where he lives.

Mr. Johnston said some other interesting things as recently as January 20, 1988, as reported in The Ottawa Citizen:

> Our position on free trade is indistinguishable from that of the NDP . . . why would anyone vote Liberal?

Mr. Langdon: Good question.

Mr. Holtmann: That is an unbelievable statement when they are both sitting on the same side of the fence. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount in another statement, as reported in The Ottawa Citizen, said the following:

> Free trade is absolutely vital to Canada's economic health.

I could go on and on. In The Globe and Mail of November 3, 1986, the following was reported:

> In a letter to Lloyd Axworthy, Liberal International Trade Critic, and James de Wilde, a University of Western Ontario Political Scientist, Don Johnston tears to shreds their jointly-written "framework for Liberal trade policy", the third draft of a proposed trade policy.
> The paper calls for a framework for the resolution of disputes between the two countries, for some provision to compensate sectors hurt in the process and for some form of protection for new growth sectors.

Mr. Johnston was quite disturbed. It is no wonder that he had to take the big move across the floor of the House.

The debate on this issue has gone on for hundreds of days now, often in committee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Holtmann: Members opposite sit and laugh about the debate that we have had in this House and across Canada. I think it has added up to about some 190 days.

I see that the Speaker is indicating that my time has run short. I advise some members of the Liberal Party to sit and look at what all their Liberal supporters and some of their former supporters, such as Mr. Lalande who is not with us any more, have to say about the agreement. I do not think that they would like to see it ripped up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

PENSIONS

LOWERING OF ELIGIBILITY AGE URGED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I believe that our pension age should be lowered from 65 to 60 years of age with full benefits. Not only would this represent progressive reform, but it would also recognize the need to provide dignity and comfort to a large segment of Canadian society who are forced to work until 65, despite having to cope with serious physical disabilities and pain.

How many men and women, particularly in the construction trades, and professions requiring extreme physical activity, continue to work despite backs, legs, and arms which have given way to years of hard, physical labour, yet they persist without alternatives because their families must keep up with the expensive cost of life.

While a parliamentary committee has just urged that mandatory retirement should be abolished, I urge that a pension option at 60, in full, be the right of all Canadians. Let us offer a sense of well-earned dignity to those Canadians whose bodies have been badly bruised by their jobs.

It was a Liberal Government in 1966 which lowered the pension age from 70 to 65. After more than 20 years it is now time to lower the age threshold to 60.

COMMUNICATIONS

CANADIAN TECHNOLOGICAL ADVANCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, MSAT, Canada's proposed new "Mobile Communication Satellite" will revolutionize voice and data communication across this vast and sparsely populated country. People, anywhere in Canada with a small terminal the size of today's cellular telephone, will be able to tie themselves into the world communications system.

The advantages to transport companies, construction, forestry, and exploration projects in remote areas, and government agencies, are tremendous, not to mention the commercial opportunities in manufacturing the new equipment.

The Department of Communications and its private sector partners are to be urged to work toward an early launch date and rapid completion of this revolutionary project.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

RULING FAVOURING SPOUSES

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Federal Court of Appeal upheld a human rights ruling that a law denying unemployment insurance to wives or husbands employed by their mates is invalid. New Democrats welcome this ruling as it was an amendment that we have supported for many years.

[Translation]

Canadian women, especially, will benefit by this decision, because their work has so often been done without remuneration, without recognition. The federal Government has discriminated against women by denying them the same social benefits because of their conjugal ties with their employer. We know that this concept arises from an age-old perception of the work done by women. According to this perception, it is normal for a woman who works for her husband to do so without pay, as part of her spousal duties.

I think all Canadians will welcome the Court's decision because it recognizes a fundamental right of all married persons.

We can only hope the Conservative Government will not appeal this ruling.

BROADCASTING

CALL FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, condominium homeowners are understandably most upset and concerned by the provisions of the Broadcasting Bill C-136 which discriminates against them.

A single family detached dwelling with a satellite television receiver is exempt from regulation under the Bill. A large nursing home with a satellite television receiver is exempt from regulation under the Bill. However, a condominium with a satellite television receiver is regulated as if it were a profit-making cable company.

Bill C-136 must be amended to eliminate this discrimination by exempting condominiums as well.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY'S ANSWERS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the answers given to my questions two days ago by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Bradley) do not warrant his receiving extra pay for the job.

The Parliamentary Secretary does not know what is going on around him and he is ill-informed. The Parliamentary Secretary has learned the methods used by other Conservatives in the House of how to abuse and downgrade Question Period by not answering questions, instead using the time for propaganda purposes and making statements that have no relevance to the questions asked.

The Liberal Party has been on record since day one as being opposed to the nuclear submarine program because the $8 billion will rob other programs in the Department. The Parliamentary Secretary did not know that. Where has he been?

During the last election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that he would increase the Canadian Armed Forces to 90,000 within three years. He is not even close after four years, and he has failed once again with his promises.

If it was not for the defence budget put together by the Liberal Party when it was in power, the present Tory Government would not be able to move, because the Government has not kept its own financial commitment to the Canadian Forces, and in its first year in office it failed even to meet the rate of inflation because of its lack of financial commitment. Why do we pay such people extra money to be a Parliamentary Secretary?

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

NEW LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House and pay tribute to the recent appointment of the new Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, Dr. David See-Chai Lam.

Dr. Lam is a self-made man. He immigrated to Canada from Hong Kong in 1967, and came only with his skills, his tenacity, and his ideals. In 20 years he built up his company to a million dollar company, Canadian International Enterprises, right from the ground up, and founded the Hong Kong Merchant's Association which assists new immigrants from Hong Kong to adjust to the Canadian way of life. And more than this, Dr. Lam is a philanthropist. He is the founder and President of the Floribunda Philanthropic Society and the David and Dorothy Lam Foundation which has helped many organizations in our local community.

Dr. Lam is an example of an individual who has immigrated to Canada and has become a success, but he has not turned his back on those less fortunate, and has given much to his new home and community.

As the first Canadian of Chinese origin to achieve the position of a Lieutenant-Governor of a Canadian province we wish Dr. Lam well, and we commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and this Government on this most worthy appointment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BANKS AND BANKING

BANK OF MONTREAL—SEIZURE OF HUMBOLDT AND DISTRICT AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY'S FUNDS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, Humboldt, Saskatchewan, has been treated to an example of corporate insensivity and bank greed and poor citizenship. The Humboldt and District Agricultural Society has been forced into near bankruptcy by the action of the Bank of Montreal.

The Agricultural Society had $15,000 on deposit with the bank, money taken in at the Agricultural Fair last month. The bank, without notice, seized all the funds and applied them to their loan. There was no courteous discussion and no notice. The Agricultural Society had many local bills to pay, but their ability has been pre-empted by the bank action.

This is a fine example of corporate citizenship. It is obvious that the bank has little faith in volunteer community organizations and very little concern for the community. The Humboldt Agricultural Society has been treated in a very cruel and unfair manner.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CITY OF LONGUEUIL—ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, this week I had the pleasure of being received by the Council of the City of Longueuil, the only city in my riding. The council was delighted to hear that their federal Member had been working very hard to make Longueuil the federal government's administrative capital on Montreal's south shore. Since I was elected, most federal offices have located in Longueuil, to give the people of Longueuil and the whole south shore of Montreal easier access to federal services. The council was also delighted to hear that over $200 million has been invested in the private sector, in turn generating investment worth nearly $1 billion in Longueuil alone.

Mr. Speaker, I am very happy with what the federal Government has accomplished in Longueuil, and I am proud I was able to do my share.

TAX REFORM

NATIONAL SALES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, every Canadian from coast to coast should be warned that in 1989 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is going to launch the biggest, most massive tax attack in Canadian history. Do not be fooled, this new national sales tax will not be a two-bit little tax. In Great Britain this tax is 15 per cent, in Denmark it is 22 per cent, in France it is 18 per cent, in Norway it is 20 per cent, in Ireland it is a whopping 25 per cent.

This Conservative tax is going to raise the price of everything that we buy. McDonald's meals will increase by 75 cents, video rentals will increase by 90 cents, movie tickets will increase by 98 cents, cassettes and records will increase by $1.35, baseball tickets will go up $1.80, football tickets will increase by $2.70, hockey tickets will increase by $2.95, a typical oil change will go up $3.75, children's school supplies will go up $6.50, children's running shoes will increase by $7.95, women's winter coats will increase by $19, a set of winter tires will be an additional $30, a Toronto home price will increase by a whopping $20,000.

The jig is up for the Prime Minister and the Government. Canadians will not stand for this tax attack any longer.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

TREATMENT BY JOURNALISTS

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, the news media in Canada examined the role and workings of parliamentary committees. Is turnabout fair play? Today, the Standing Committee on Status of Disabled Persons tabled a report examining the relationship between Canada's working journalists and the needs and aspirations of the 3.3 million Canadians who have varying degrees of mental or physical disability.

It was because of the unevenness of the coverage, the stereotypical portrayal of the disabled, and the need for more attentive and sensitive treatment of the issues affecting this 13 per cent of our population, that this report was entitled "No News is Bad News". We feel the report is a challenge to all thoughtful journalists and news gathering and disseminating organizations in this country to turn some of that acute sense of critical analysis inward for a period of time and, if the shoe fits, wear it.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST THAT QUÉBEC GET ITS FAIR SHARE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I was glad to see that after his meetings with the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and future Prime Minister of Canada, my friend Robert Bourassa admitted, for the first time, that Quebec had been poorly treated under a Conservative Government. On the basis of my figures for regional development, he admitted Quebec had only received $590 million, while Western Canada and the Atlantic Provinces received $2 billion.

Mr. Speaker, there are 10 major issues involving Quebec which demonstrate how unfairly it is being treated by this Tory Government. First of all, there is the space agency, the contracts that should be forthcoming, a genuine banking centre, all the industries relating to railway transportation and shipbuilding, and so forth. We know that with the frigates Quebec got a very raw deal from the Conservative Government. There is also the matter of the east end of Montreal, southwest Montreal and the job creation programs. Mr. Speaker, Quebec got nothing from the Tories and every time we got something, it was because there was a survival committee to defend the interests of Quebecers, and not thanks to Conservative Members.

HOUSING

REINTEGRATION OF ELDERLY IN SOCIETY

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I recently learned that the suggestion I made to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) and the Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of State for Seniors (Mr. Hees) was accepted and put on the agenda for the Canadian seniors' housing options conference to be held in Halifax from October 17 to 20. The purpose of this proposal is to return seniors to society by making it possible for them to play an important role in our development.

S. O. 21

Mr. Speaker, I asked that this conference deal with home-sharing as a serious and effective way to live near one's relatives. This would help young people to know their elders better and help seniors to know young people better. My request was accepted and I would like to thank the Ministers involved for taking my concern seriously. Also, I would like to say that if solutions are found for the seniors' housing problem, again, it will be under a Progressive Conservative Government.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—DISPOSAL OF GARBAGE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had heard everything out of the mouths of Tories, but, lo and behold, yesterday the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) accused the City of Hamilton of creating a potential health hazard at Pearson International Airport because we do not take Toronto's garbage. I cannot believe Hamilton is accused of being self-serving when the responsibility for Pearson International Airport's garbage should fall flat on the face of the federal Government which for years and years has refused to acknowledge the fact that Hamilton Airport needs business, that Hamilton Airport needs airlines. Hamilton Airport is not good enough to fly planes to, but we are good enough to dump your garbage on.

I challenge the Hamilton West Conservative, the Hamilton—Wentworth Conservative, and the Lincoln Conservative to repudiate the comments of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North who suggested Hamilton is not good enough to fly to but we are good enough to take their garbage. I suggest the Hon. Member retract these ridiculous and repugnant statements against the people of the city of Hamilton.

SITUATION OF WOMEN WITH TERMINALLY ILL CHILDREN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, recently in my riding in Manitoba it came to my attention and the attention of others that there is a special class of people who are put in a very difficult position by the current unemployment insurance rules. I am talking about women who have terminally ill children and have to quit their jobs in order to be with their children at the hospital on a day-to-day basis. These people are put in the position, for obvious reasons, of having to quit their jobs and then are sometimes found to be ineligible for unemployment insurance. I do not think I need to say much more in order for everyone to imagine how difficult this whole situation is for these people.

• (1415)

I am calling on the Government to address this problem so that women who find themselves in this dilemma will be able either to collect unemployment insurance or maintain their incomes in another way. Perhaps the Government may choose to address this through parental leave, or whatever the case may be.

The fact is that women who find themselves in this very difficult position should not be penalized in the way they are now being penalized by unemployment insurance regulations.

AIRPORTS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) a few moments ago accused the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) of doing something in relation to Hamilton and the Hamilton municipal government. The words from yesterday's Hansard are: "irresponsible municipal government action has created a potential health hazard". The Hon. Member did not accuse the municipal government of Hamilton of doing anything.

We have been subjected in this Chamber to another example from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East of inventing data and dumping on Members of this Chamber for saying things they did not say. The record says what the Hon. Member said, and that Hon. Member should learn to read before she stands up in this Chamber and dumps on members of this Party. Learn to read, get your facts straight, smarten up!

CHILDREN

GARBAGE PAIL KIDS CARDS—CALL FOR ACTION TO HALT IMPORTATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I call upon the federal Government to put an immediate stop to the importation into Canada of a product known as Garbage Pail Kids. Constituents of mine have seen their children purchasing products which look like bubble gum cards but which, unfortunately, are obscene in every way, shape and form.

This product is printed by Topps Chewing Gum Incorporated of the United States. As an example of some of the material this includes, the product referred to as Garbage Pail Kids contains such things as depictions of small children and dolls being mutilated and decapitated. One particular card has a so-called joke which reads: "What did Charged Marge's dad say when he saw her plug her umbilical cord into the wall?"

This kind of product should not be allowed to come into Canada and should not be sold to our children. I call upon the Government to use the obscenity provisions in the Criminal Code to stop this kind of activity.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

I have in my hand here an article by Gilbert Lavoie in La Presse, according to which the former Minister of the Environment and Member for Rosemont says, and I quote:

"I personally know that patronage goes on and has continued to grow, that there is a pay-off system for contracts."

Mr. Speaker, this is no laughing matter. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the Government intends to do as a result of these revelations in this morning's La Presse?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the details to which the Hon. Member has referred, but if they are anything like what we have been subjected to over the last little while in the House, they are half-truths, falsehoods, distortions of the facts, innuendo, smear, and allegations based on unsubstantiated rumours. If the Hon. Member has a specific allegation, why does he not come forth with it? I would be very glad to look into it.

ALLEGATIONS ATTRIBUTED TO FORMER MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister will know of these revelations made by a colleague of his in the Conservative Caucus, a former Minister who sat for three years at the same cabinet table as he did.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell this House when exactly it was that he and the Prime Minister found out about the allegations made public by one of his own colleagues today? Those allegations are that there is a system of kickbacks in existence. Those allegations were made by a Conservative Member of Parliament and former Cabinet colleague of the Deputy Prime Minister. When did he first find out, and what is he going to do about it?

• (1420)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I answered that in response to the Member's first question. I am not aware of that which the Hon. Member has raised. It is probably based on unsubstantiated rumour and innuendo. If he has something specific to bring forth, let him bring it on and we will look at it.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister may call me what he likes, but one of his colleagues in the Conservative caucus has made an allegation to the media.

Very specifically, when did he first learn of these allegations? Even I refuse to believe that it was two minutes ago. Can he specifically tell the House whether he is willing to refer this matter to a parliamentary committee? There have been a number of such allegations made by very credible sources, this time by one of his colleagues. Isn't that enough?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has specific allegations, why does he not outline them to the House or bring them to me and we will take them into consideration?

The Member is using a broad brush to suggest wrongdoing. If he has some clear examples of wrongdoing, let him bring them forth and we will certainly look at them.

KICKBACK ALLEGATIONS—INVESTIGATION QUERY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, half an hour ago Deputy Commissioner Jensen confirmed to me by telephone that indeed the RCMP has asked the FBI for assistance, through the American Embassy here in Ottawa, in investigations relating to kickback allegations.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is the Government aware of this? Do the allegations and this investigation, which is ongoing, involve any Ministers presently sitting in the Government or Members of the Conservative caucus? If so, what steps will the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister take to ensure the integrity of the Government during this investigation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Hon. Members have some specific allegations to bring forth, they can certainly do that and they will be considered. The Member is making broad and sweeping unfounded allegations, using newspaper and radio reports. I regret that I cannot respond with specific answers to the broad charges the Hon. Member is making.

The Member has been around here for a long time and has served on both sides of the House. If he has specific allegations he knows what he can do, and he knows what the consequences are.

STATEMENT MADE BY DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF RCMP

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about a radio broadcast, I am talking about a statement made to me by the senior official responsible today for the operations of the RCMP, Deputy Commissioner Jensen. I phoned him and asked him to confirm it, and he did.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister, following Question Period, check this very specific statement made by the Deputy Commissioner and then inform the media and the House of Commons what steps will be taken to protect the integrity of the Government during the investigation which the Deputy Commissioner will confirm to him is under way?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course I will take that recommendation and make inquiries as soon as I possibly can. I will report back to the House in the usual way. I think the Hon. Member recognizes that on previous occasions I have taken notice of questions and reported back, and I will do so in this particular case.

BANK OF CANADA

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ISSUE INSTRUCTIONS ON INTEREST RATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance. I am sure the Deputy Prime Minister will have noted that, without exception, the Premiers representing all regions of Canada—Atlantic Canada, western Canada, and central Canada—who addressed the issue on their way into the meetings that are taking place today in Saskatoon, expressed their concern that interest rates in Canada be kept down.

Within the past hour the Bank of Canada announced a further increase in the bank rate. When will the Government of Canada start accepting its responsibility to the regions in this important matter and instruct the Governor of the Bank of Canada to keep interest rates down?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party will recognize that inflation is not only a serious national problem but a serious regional problem which must be dealt with.

• (1425)

He will recall that, as a result of the high inflation and high interest rate policy of the former Government, this country suffered not only nationally but in the respective regions. For example, in 1981 the bank rate was at 21.4 per cent.

Mr. Riis: We are different from the Liberals.

Mr. Mazankowski: Just cool your powder there, Mr. House Leader. I will come to you. In September, 1984, it was 12.3 per cent. Today the bank rate is at 9.8 per cent.

At the same time we had inflation rates which were very serious. It affected the incomes of individuals, it affected the business community.

What is important is to ensure that the fight against inflation continues. It is in that regard that the Bank of Canada has established the policy to maintain in a balanced way the lowest possible interest rates while at the same time containing inflation.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON INTEREST RATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Deputy Prime Minister that inflation is not a problem, except in the Toronto area. In Canada's other regions, in the Maritimes, the West and Quebec, the problem is not inflation but unemployment.

That is why I wish the Deputy Prime Minister would explain to the House why the Government has an interest rate policy aimed at discouraging investment in most of Canada's regions.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, who says that he speaks for ordinary Canadians, would recognize that the people who would be hit the hardest by a resurgence of inflation would be those on fixed incomes, senior citizens, those at the lower end of the income scale, or the ordinary Canadians whom he says he represents. If he is suggesting that we should ignore the war against inflation, then he should say so clearly and categorically.

What we and the Bank of Canada are trying to do is establish a balance to ensure that the interest rate levels remain at a tolerable level while at the same time containing the flames of inflation.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Premier of the Province from where the Deputy Prime Minister comes will be amazed to hear his expression about the flames of inflation in Alberta, or Atlantic Canada or most regions, other than is the case that it is a problem in Metropolitan Toronto where the economy is working flat out.

The rate of inflation even in Toronto has not reached a serious proportion but unemployment remains unacceptably high in most regions. If there is a genuine concern about balanced economic growth over-all, why does the Government not keep interest rates down so it would benefit most regions of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party does not have to pretend to speak for the Premier of the Province of Alberta. He can do so himself. I can tell the Member that what the Premier of Alberta does not want is a recurrence of inflation at 13 per cent, 14 per cent and 15 per cent. He does not want a recurrence of interest rates of 21 per cent to 25 per cent which almost broke the Alberta economy.

What we and the Bank of Canada are doing is striking a reasonable balance so that we can contain inflation and maintain a low level of interest rates.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYED OLDER WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday the Standing Committee on Human Rights tabled a unanimous report urging resolute action to help unemployed older workers, that is, workers from 45 to 65, pointing out that while unemployment had declined for the general population since the recession of 1982, it has increased in a serious way for older workers. Further, the average duration of unemployment for older male workers is 36 per cent greater than for all unemployed male workers.

• (1430)

First the Government cut unemployment insurance benefits for older workers, then in its budget of February, 1986, it cancelled the existing Labour Adjustment Benefits Program and promised a program for older worker adjustment. After two and one-half years that has not see the light of day. Another broken promise by this Tory Government.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Allmand: When is the Government going to start listening to these many unanimous reports and take action to help laid-off older workers in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to remind the House and the Hon. Member that some 1.3 million new jobs have been created as a result of the economic policy of this Government since we came to office.

What is most important is the percentage of those people who have been unemployed for more than one year fell by 38 per cent, and that there were 194,000 new jobs in the economy in the first half of 1988. That is a tremendous achievement, something that has never been achieved in the last 25 years. The Hon. Member should be applauding the Government rather then criticizing it.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT ON REPORT'S FINDINGS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is totally ignoring several unanimous reports which talk about the older workers in this country, not the general population. Not only do we have the report tabled yesterday but we have two reports by the Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, one in 1985 called "Older Workers, An Imminent Crisis in the Labour Market" and a follow up by the same committee in June, 1988. The report yesterday said it is clear that older workers have been hardest hit by long-term unemployment and the consequences for them are exceedingly harsh. Many of them are aware that at this stage—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that the report is available to all Hon. Members and does not need to be quoted in extensive detail. The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Allmand: Two and one-half years ago the Government promised a program for older worker adjustment—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Allmand: When is the Government going to take action on this report? Here we have another broken promise by this Government and nothing being done.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think what this Government has done is bring in a strategy which deals very well with older workers. I said in this House before that the Canadian Jobs Strategy was a new concept. It took a little while to have an impact. It is now having a major impact. The Canadian Jobs Strategy does respond to the needs of the long-term unemployed, and in some sense is dealing particularly with problems of older workers. We have a program specifically for that in terms of the skills training program.

We have seen 129,000 new jobs being filled by older workers in the last 12 months. That is a major improvement. We have seen the decline that was published yesterday by Statistics Canada. What this is saying is that these job programs are starting to bite where they really count, that is, among long-term unemployed workers, many of whom are older. It is the first time we have had a job training program that deals specifically for them.

UNEMPLOYED OLDER WORKERS IN HAMILTON

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. This week marks Hamilton's second Older Workers' Week, a week of community awareness events to draw attention to the plight of the older workers. Older workers are facing a crisis situation in Canada. There are an estimated 15,000 people in Hamilton alone, older workers, who cannot find employment. I think the Minister has a responsibility to tell this House what the Government is willing to do to implement a program that will respond to these older workers.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member just said, the Canadian Jobs Strategy we have implemented is based on a new philosophy and is adapted to all groups in Canada, from older workers down to students. We have also implemented the Canadian Jobs Strategy for women. The unemployment rate among older workers is 5.6 per cent, which is well below the national average. I think we can say that older workers are working, and that within our programs we have components that are appropriate for all groups in this country.

ADVISORY COUNCIL'S RECOMMENDATION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, what I am hearing is that the Canadian Jobs Strategy is responding to older workers. We know by three reports now that older workers are in a crisis situation in Canada. Certainly there have been all sorts of reports that have come out. The Advisory Council of Employment and Immigration has asked the Government to put 100 per cent dollars in it. If it is not going to meet the promises it made to Canadian older workers two years ago, is it at least willing to see that that recommendation is implemented?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, during the past two years, we have spent a major part of our budget on our job strategy. The results are there, and we are proud of what we have accomplished. Of course older workers are part of our new strategy and our new philosophy. We are working to achieve results in the long term, and we are convinced that the political measures we took were the right ones, and we are proud of this.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

PUBLICATION OF COMPLIANCE REPORTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration. It involves the fact that two years ago the Government introduced, and this Parliament passed, the very first ever employment equity legislation in this country. It was aimed, of course, at providing equal opportunity in employment for women, visible minorities, the disabled, and native people.

The legislation provided that businesses regulated federally were required to file compliance reports by the first of June of this year. Will the Minister advise the House when the Government intends to make those compliance reports public, and whether the Government intends to introduce employment targets under this legislation the way it has for visible minorities, women, the disabled, and native people, in the Public Service?

L'Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member who is to be commended for his interest in our employment equity legislation, a social measure this Government introduced. It is a pleasure to be able to announce today that I have received 96 per cent of the first annual reports that companies were supposed to file. This is a remarkable response, and by the end of this fall, I will table my general report in the House.

I am also considering what kind of incentives we can use with respect to the small number of persons who have failed to comply with the legislation. We are analysing these files and will take appropriate steps to deal with the situation.

PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the statements by the Hon. Member for Rosemont. In answer to my colleague from York Centre as to whether an investigation would be conducted of members of the Conservative Party regarding the allegations of a system of contract pay-offs, the Deputy Prime Minister said that he would investigate, that he would check with the Deputy Commissioner of the RCMP and that he would report to the House of Commons.

My question is, further to the statements made by the Hon. Member for Rosemont, a former Cabinet Minister, would the Deputy Prime Minister be prepared to do that, to contact the Hon. Member for Rosemont, to find out about the accusations she made . . . statements she made to the press and report to the House of Commons at the same time as he reports to the Deputy Commissioner?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a perfectly legitimate question. My understanding is there was one short sentence in a very long story that was in the press. Of course, I will make inquiries. She may have said it, she may not have said it. It may have been a misquote. It would not be the first misquote that has occurred in this country, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister a supplementary question.

Should the Deputy Prime Minister not get an answer or should the Opposition not be satisfied with the answers the Deputy Prime Minister gives us, would the Deputy Prime Minister be prepared to allow the Hon. Member for Rosemont to testify before a Committee of the House of Commons so that an investigation can be held and this matter cleared up, because these accusations, following all the patronage of the last four years, affect the credibility of all Members of this House. It is therefore important, before an election campaign, that any suspicion be removed.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister be prepared to allow the Member for Rosemont to testify before a Committee of the House of Commons?

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I made it quite clear to the House that I would look into this matter. The Hon. Member says if I get an answer they may not be satisfied. That may very well be true. They are very seldom satisfied about anything that we do.

It really strikes me very strangely that every time the Liberal Party seems to be slipping in not being able to get its act together, it resorts to getting back into the gutter. Just because members of that Party were the masters of patronage they think everyone else is the same way.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—
GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the Government's free trade ad campaign in this pre-election period. When this question came up previously in the House of Commons under the last Liberal Government one authority said: "The whole purpose of an advertising campaign is to obscure the issues and to put across one simple point of view". He went on to suggest that the Opposition viewpoint should also be presented in the ads.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister take this suggestion, treat this advertising fairly, and see to it that the Opposition is able to design and present half the advertising being put forward in this campaign?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question because it gives me the opportunity to talk about the demands from the Opposition and the demands from the public for more factual information on the agreement.

Our advertising campaign does two things. First, it lists all the information that is available and provides the people an address to write to, or a phone number to call, to receive the factual information on the free trade agreement.

Second, the other series of advertisements is for people in Canada who are preparing for the realities of the 1990s and on into the 21st century, who are going to be on the leading edge of trade not only between Canada and the United States but throughout the world. That is what the advertising is all about. It is to provide more information for the public, exactly what my friend has been demanding for a long time.

TIMING OF CAMPAIGN

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, of course the authority whom I was quoting was the present Minister for International Trade who criticized the last Government so strongly for its advertising campaigns.

I would like now to ask how it can possibly be justified for this Government to be running ads which states "Free trade. We're getting ready now", when in fact this legislation has not even passed the House of Commons, has not passed Parliament, and, if the people of Canada have anything to do with it, will never be put into effect?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the theme "We're getting ready now" is being put forward by the business people. They are saying that. Business people understand that we must have a trade agreement with our largest binational trading partner. They are getting ready for the realities of trade in the 1990s. That is what it is all about.

I forgot to mention one other thing. That is that the advertising is inviting Canadians from all walks of life, ordinary Canadians or whoever, to come to seminars which are being sponsored by the Department for International Trade, to introduce the opportunities at these seminars that this trade agreement will provide.

Because it is important, it should be noted that in the first series of seminars 600 companies which had never exported before have been identified and are looking at the new advantages of this trade agreement. The seminars are very successful.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

GRAIN EXPORTS THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. He is certainly aware that as of today, August 18, the Port of Churchill, which is a very valuable part of the grain shipping system of Canada, has yet to receive any allocation of shipments. Today we had an announcement by the Wheat Board that it will now be rationing exports of grain.

Considering that that rationing program should take into account the traditional 3 per cent of movement through the Port of Churchill, is the Minister prepared to ensure that that kind of fair sharing will be given to the Port of Churchill so that the facilities will continue to be used and its future will not be put in jeopardy by the lack of any shipments at all this year?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the so-called rationing of grain, we face the prospect in Canada this year of having as much as 40 per cent or even more lower than the previous crop year, which means that the Board is not going to be out looking for new customers as it might be with larger exports.

When it comes to the Port of Churchill, Churchill is an important port. It is one of four export spouts out of the country. To date the Canadian Wheat Board has not been able to line up a customer to take grain from Churchill within the Wheat Board's mandate.

I should remind the Hon. Member, since he was once responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, that the Canadian Wheat Board's mandate is to market grains in the best commercial interests of western Canadian farmers. When that happens I assure the Hon. Member that we will market every bushel of grain that we can find a customer for through Churchill that is in the western Canadian producers' best interests.

WHEAT BOARD COMMITMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Minister I would remind him that in the agreement that was signed in 1984 on the development of the Port of Churchill the Canadian Wheat Board made a commitment to follow best efforts to ensure that not only would there be a continuation but an increase in grain shipments through the Port of Churchill. I do not think that zero shipments are what could be called best efforts.

Considering that the Minister would not meet last week with the committee of the Manitoba Legislature that has been established to examine grain shipments through the Port of Churchill, can we get a commitment from the Minister today that he or other Ministers of the Crown will sit down with officials, Ministers of the Government of Manitoba, Members of the Legislature, to work out a proper program for the utilization of the Port of Churchill and for the continued shipment of grain through that very important port?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, last week I met with the provincial Minister of Highways in Manitoba. I met with two members of the NDP in Manitoba. I was in Winnipeg a week ago today. I offered to meet with members of the Official Opposition. They did not want to meet with me.

What the Hon. Member is suggesting is that the 1984 agreement calls for the Wheat Board to make best efforts to see that a minimum of 500,000 tonnes of grain go through the port every year. I am satisfied that the Wheat Board is making its best efforts. What the Member is doing is accusing the Wheat Board of not performing up to its mandate. I reject that totally.

Further, if any Member has any evidence whatsoever that the Wheat Board is not living up to its mandate, I will investigate it to the fullest. In the meantime what the Hon. Member is suggesting I do is interfere with the day-to-day operations of the Canadian Wheat Board. What he is suggesting is that we have political interference with one of the best run Crown corporations in the country. There is no way that under my mandate I want to interfere with the day-to-day operations of the Wheat Board. If I did, it would be political interference and Members opposite would be the first to complain.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF UKRAINIAN REFUGEES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. For the past month and a half a group of more than 200 Ukrainian refugees from Poland have been waiting in Vienna for word on their acceptance by the Canadian Government as sponsored refugees. These Ukrainians want to come to Canada. The Canadian Ukrainian community wants very much for them to come to Canada. I wonder whether the Minister can tell the House now whether she will allow this group in.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my staff and my officials have been working with the Ukrainian Aid Committee on behalf of these refugee claimants. We are willing to look at all the applications as they come to us. Those that we can accept into next year's figures we will quite happily accept. It takes a certain amount of time to process some of these anyway. Those who do not come under the above but pass the medical and security checks will be considered through a joint sponsorship between the federal Government and the Ukrainian Aid Committee.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, there is a question of time involved, and a question of anxiety for those people who might have to return to Poland.

The Minister knows in recent years there have been virtually no Ukrainian refugees from eastern Europe, and in this case a special permit is justified. At the present time because of the lack of action the Ukrainian Immigrant Aid Society is now sponsoring on its own 40 of the most pressing cases of youths aged 16 and under.

Because there is this urgency, and because the Austrian Government cannot guarantee that these persons will not be returned to Poland, where they may be regarded as traitors, will the Minister set a deadline for next week to make absolutely clear what government policy is, and what she intends to do?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have been assured by the Austrian Government that these people will not be sent back to Poland. We are working with the Ukrainian Immigrant Aid Society right now. I am not prepared to put a deadline on when those discussions will end.

We certainly encouraged them in terms of the private sponsorship of the most needy cases, and we have expedited that process through our officials. We will continue to look at it. In respect to the time urgency, it does take a certain amount of time anyway.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—VALUE OF FEDERAL PROCUREMENT CONTRACTS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. I was dismayed and disturbed recently by statements that were made in the House which would allege that federal government procurement from companies in British Columbia has declined since the Government took office.

Mr. Riis: As a percentage, it has.

Mrs. Collins: After 20 years of neglect from the previous Government, it was my impression that in recent years the value of federal government contracts in British Columbia had actually increased.

Mr. Riis: The percentage has gone down every year under a Tory Government.

Mrs. Collins: Could the Minister clarify the situation? Could the Minister also indicate what he is prepared to do to ensure that companies in British Columbia get an even greater share of procurement from the federal Government?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that this would not be the first time that Members from the Opposition, particularly the New Democratic Party, would be selective in their statistics.

As the Member points out, the fact is that British Columbia and the West had been ignored for some 20 years by previous administrations.

Mr. Fulton: Right up until today.

Mr. Jelinek: In the last year alone, in terms of dollar value, an increase of some 12 per cent in procurement went to British Columbia. In the last two years together the increase in terms of dollars was some 20 per cent.

We are still not satisfied with those figures, as I told business people in British Columbia and the West. That is why the Minister of Western Diversification and I last month announced the new western procurement initiatives which will bring an additional $600 million on top of the 20 per cent increase.

We have brought in the small business access which will benefit all small business people, and with the large population of small businesses in British Columbia that will help British Columbia.

Last week I announced the elevation of the status of our Supply and Services office in Vancouver to a Pacific directorate. Now British Columbian businesses can do business with the Government of Canada in British Columbia as opposed to here in Ottawa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RETRAINING AND APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS—USE OF HAMILTON INSTITUTION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and it concerns the damning indictment of this Government's record toward older workers. She actually had the nerve to say earlier in the House today in response to a question from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, that the Canadian Jobs Strategy was the vehicle for retraining that was getting these workers back into the market-place.

If the Canadian Jobs Strategy is working so well, can she explain why the second largest campus for retraining and apprenticeship in the Province of Ontario, that is the Hitac campus in the city of Hamilton, is on the verge of closing because it has had no assistance from the federal Government to keep its operation open, one that serves several thousand Hamilton area older workers?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to attempt to explain the situation to the Hon. Member, because it is an important issue. Early this year the Hamilton—Wentworth Skills Training Advisory Committee determined that 40 per cent of the trainees in this college came from outside the community, and 50 per cent of the graduates found related employment beyond Hamilton—Wentworth.

There are identified by that group other priority training needs. The committee advised Mohawk College that it would be reducing its direct purchase requirement for this year. It recommended to the province that future training be supported under the apprenticeship program, and the province turned it down.

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it may come as some surprise to the Minister that Hamilton serves as a focal point for the Niagara region and should be funded accordingly. It comes as no surprise to members of the Liberal Party who are fighting to keep that campus open.

I remind the Minister that it is the second largest centre for skills training in Ontario. The Minister knows that there is a desperate shortage of trained and skilled workers in the Province of Ontario. Yesterday I met with the board of governors and they are on the verge of closing what has been described by the former Minister as one of the stellar programs in Ontario.

Will the Minister consider increasing the funding which has been frozen over the last three years as a result of her Government's 32 per cent cutback in funds for job retraining across the country?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, there has not been a cutback in funds. As the Hon. Member knows, there has been a change in classification.

One of the things that the Canadian Jobs Strategy does is that it takes the advice of local advisory councils.

Ms. Copps: No, it doesn't.

Mrs. McDougall: That is what we were advised. If the Hon. Member is so concerned about this, I would suggest that she talk to her provincial colleagues. The Province of Ontario turned them down for provincial assistance for post-secondary funds.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—FEDERAL PROCUREMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Would the Minister confirm that, while the West got the short end of the stick year after year under Liberal administrations, under the Conservative Government's administration would he not admit that in terms of the percentage of supply and services contracts that went to British Columbia suppliers, the actual percentage from 1985 went down in 1986, and went down again in 1987? In other words, under the Conservative Government the procurement pattern of Supply and Services got worse every year.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I used to have a lot of respect for the Hon. Member, but because of the type of irresponsible statements that he has been making for the last six months he has not only lost respect from me, but also from his constituents. We will see it in the next election.

Mr. Broadbent: He didn't answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister may want to reply.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Copps: Just ask the shoe workers in Oakville about respect.

Mr. Jelinek: Talking about irresponsibility, the big mouth from Hamilton East is at it again.

Mr. Axworthy: You are ducking the answer.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to respect each other.

PERCENTAGE OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in 1987 the population of British Columbia provided 11.4 per cent of the population of Canada, and British Columbia was receiving 4.1 per cent of Supply and Service contracts.

The Minister misled the House a few moments ago when he said that things were actually improving. I want to ask the Minister of Supply and Services to confirm that—and I request that he not go off on some other tangent—in 1985 the percentage of contracts under Supply and Services to British Columbia went down from 1984, it went down in 1985, it went down in 1986, and went down again in 1987.

Will the Minister simply rise and say that that is correct?

Mr. Axworthy: Because it is.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said in answer to the question from the Hon. Member for Capilano. In terms of dollar value—

Mr. Broadbent: The population has grown.

Mr. Riis: You are misleading the House. B.C. is getting hosed under this Conservative Government year after year.

Mr. Broadbent: Ask another question over there.

Mr. Jelinek: Keep it down, you guys.

I hope the New Democratic Party does not want the numbers up and dollars down in British Columbia. In terms of dollar value—

Mr. Riis: We want our fair share. We only want our fair share. All we are asking for is our fair share for once.

Mr. Jelinek: Why don't you let me answer the question?

Mr. Riis: Because you won't answer the question. You are afraid of the answer. You are afraid to go on the record.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Jelinek: I hope the Hon. Member will let me answer the question. The answer to the question is that for 20 years under the previous Government British Columbia did not get its fair share. It is only in the last two years that we are seeing the pay-off of the efforts of this Government over the past four years. That is why I am saying that the increase in procurement for British Columbia increased by 20 per cent in the last two years. We are still not satisfied, and that is why we elevated the DSS office in Vancouver to a Pacific directorate. The business community and Government of British Columbia applaud this initiative, so that our final objective on procurement is to bring equality of opportunity not only to British Columbia but to every region of the country.

SMALL BUSINESS

DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES AGAINST SMALL BUSINESSES—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ISSUE DIRECTIVE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of State for Finance. Last week, the Canadian Bankers Association and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business met to settle the matter of the charges for bad cheques that banks levy on small businesses. At that meeting, there was no progress and no solution to this problem. Yesterday, the Minister gave the banks high marks and paid them compliments. I would like to know if it is government policy to have small business pay twice for NSF cheques. If not, when will the Government issue an order to stop this discriminatory practice that is unacceptable for small business?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of State for Finance responded to that question in a very general and, indeed, in a specific way yesterday. There has been a great deal of compliance to date. Significant progress has been made with respect to service charges as they relate to small business. There are still discussions going on and further announcements will be made in due course.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, why should small business be penalized for accepting what turns out to be a bad cheque from their customers? Why does the Government not take its responsibilities seriously, like it did for the consumer, and issue the same policy for small business? Isn't small business creating 80 per cent of the jobs? That is why the Minister of State for Small Businesses is travelling around the country announcing his empty Institute of Entrepreneurship. Why not do something concrete and help small business to be relieved of this unjustified charge?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting that in an offhand way the Hon. Member has applauded the Government for its efforts towards improving the climate for small business. That is precisely why 80 per cent of the new jobs have been created by the small business sector. That is part and parcel of the economic policies of this Government which set out in the first place to scale down the regulatory burden and make the climate more attractive for the small business community.

Indeed, as I indicated in my earlier answer, there are ongoing discussions, but significant progress has been made with regard to service charges. As I indicated, discussions are ongoing and there will be further announcements in the future.

It all goes without saying that the small business community is very satisfied with the policies of this Government, and that is reflected in the massive job opportunities which have been created by it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ZIMBABWE—DETENTION OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Last December I asked about Canadian citizen Dick Laban who had been held in a Zimbabwe jail for several months. To date there has been no trial and there are still no charges outstanding, yet Mr. Laban is still in jail.

What are Canadian authorities doing to end this unjust imprisonment?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the situation, namely that Mr. Laban was arrested on September 22, 1987 and that he has been detained since. We were notified on August 4 that the charges were dropped. But Mr. Laban is still in prison under the emergency measures. He is being held on the basis of regulations under an emergency law. Mr. Speaker, I think that Canada cannot ignore this case. Furthermore, the High Commission in Harare is following the situation very closely. Mr. Laban is being represented by a lawyer and we are monitoring the situation very closely.

Mr. Allmand: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East rises on a point of order, but there is a prior question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENTS ASCRIBED TO MEMBER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, in the course of Question Period the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), in commenting on my statement about the City of Hamilton being asked to take garbage from the City of Toronto, claimed that the word "Hamilton" was not used in the statement made by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock). If the Hon. Member took the time to read the statement he will see that Hamilton is described by the Hon. Member as self-serving, and that Hamilton is supposed to take it because of its incinerator capacity. So the statements ascribed to me by the Hon. Member for Calgary West are totally false and I would like him to correct the record.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, talk about falsity. I would invite the House to examine what the Member just said. She started out by talking about my comments in Question Period. I have answered no questions, I have asked no questions, I did not participate in Question Period. I think that exemplifies what I believe to be that Member's reputation for accuracy in the chamber.

If indeed an examination of Hansard shows that I have said anything that is incorrect, I would be very happy to stand in the Chamber and correct it. I have done that on two or three occasions in nine years because I do not like to make inaccurate statements in this Chamber. Yesterday I corrected the Hansard record from the day before; I spoke correctly but Hansard reported it wrongly.

I would be glad to do it, but to accept in this Chamber her assertion about anything I said is something I am not prepared to do until I see the written record, because she is too often inaccurate in this Chamber about what Members say.

Mr. Speaker: I am going to adjourn this matter. I will return if necessary. I will look at the Hansard record and act accordingly.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I want—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East made her point. I am going to examine the Hansard record very carefully. If it is necessary I will hear the Hon. Member further. However, I am going to look at the record before there is any further debate on it.

QUOTATION FROM DOCUMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period you called me to order and suggested that I should not quote a public report, in this case the second report of the Human Rights Committee, which was tabled yesterday. I think your words were that since it was a public report Hon. Members could read it. I would like to know from Your Honour—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can help the Hon. Member. I did not say that it was inappropriate to quote a public report or anything else in the course of a question. I said that the quote was going on unduly long. I am sorry if in my comment I may not have made myself clear. The correction was only because there has to be some limit to the use of extensive quotes in questions. That, of course, applies equally in answers. I will certainly hear the Hon. Member further, but I do not want him to belabour the point that I in any way indicated that a report in this place ought not be referred to, or quoted at least in modest terms. I felt that the Hon. Member had gone on too long.

• (1510)

Mr. Allmand: I am pleased to have your clarification on the first point that I was going to make, Mr. Speaker. Before preparing that quote, I had checked with what has been said often with Ministers in answering questions, and I found that the quote that I made was in fact shorter than many of the quotes that are often made by Ministers in answering our questions. As a matter of fact, a day or two ago the Secretary of State went on for a very long period of time, quoting reports and things that he had done. If that is to be allowed on the ministerial side, I would ask that the same treatment be allowed on the opposition side.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is Thursday and it is the usual time of the day when we ask the Deputy Government House Leader to outline the Business of the House for the next few days.

I wonder if I could make a special request of the Hon. Minister. Since we are all interested in the final vote on third reading of the trade deal, I wonder if he might give some thought to being specific as to the day that we might vote on that, to allow for ample notification of Members who are here today and, perhaps more important, Members who are in their constituencies, so that they can be sure to be here for that very important vote.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome my hon. friend's interest in the vote, and I am sure that his Party will be here. Let me first of all outline exactly where we are headed. Today, we are going to continue with report stage consideration of Bill C-130, the free trade Bill. Tomorrow, we have suggested to the opposition Parties a combination of the following five Bills, whichever we can make the most progress on, and we will take them in the order which would result in the most progress: Bill C-146, the Tax Court of Canada Bill, perhaps at all stages; Bill C-143, the substance abuse centre Bill, at all stages; Bill C-123, the Indian Act amendments, report stage and third reading, that recently came back from committee; Bill C-150, Indian Act amendments on the death rule, at all stages; and Bill C-147, the human rights centre Bill, at all stages.

On Monday we will be resuming report stage consideration of Bill C-130 and, it being a long day, we would go until ten o'clock, pursuant to the House Order. Any divisions which are demanded at report stage, including the concurrence motion, would be deferred by a House Order to Tuesday, August 23, at 6 p.m.

Tuesday, for debate purposes, we would be calling, first of all, Bill C-144, the child care Bill, which we would like to send to committee. If it is in fact back from committee, we would be dealing with Bill C-139, the tax reform Bill at report stage.

I appreciate my hon. colleague's interest in the balance of the third reading debate on Bill C-130.

Mr. Riis: To facilitate Members' travel and to facilitate Members' voting on important matters, I simply want to ask the Deputy Government House Leader once again whether at this point it is impossible to say or to state on what day the actual third reading vote will take place. He does now have the right to set aside any two days for debate, and I would like to suggest that if there is any way that he could indicate on which days that vote would take place, it would certainly facilitate individual Members organizing their own schedules.

Mr. Lewis: I think that at the present time I am stuck with my statement that we would like to give long days, and that would mean Thursday, Monday or Monday, Tuesday. As soon as that gels and I can give the House some idea, I think that it is in the interest of all Members to do that. I will certainly be here. It is either Thursday, Monday or Monday, Tuesday.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I now have confirmation from the distinguished critic on Indian Affairs of the Liberal Party that it would be acceptable to him to begin with Bill C-150. Second, with respect to the comments made by the Deputy Government House Leader about the days for the third reading stage imposed on this House by the Order that was obtained by the Government the other day, I would like to discuss this with him during the course of the afternoon. I may have some suggestions that would assist him in deciding what to do.

Mr. Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills.

MONTREAL RAILWAY COMMUTER SERVICE—CLARIFICATION OF ANSWER

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to clarify my response to a question from the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) during Question Period on Tuesday of this week. While the Member is not present at the moment, I have spoken to him by telephone and he knows that I will be rising on this point of order.

I did not realize that the Member was referring to a commuter service, and I may therefore have inadvertently misled the House. As commuter services are not within the jurisdiction of the federal Government, CN is not required to apply to the NTA for the abandonment of the St. Hilaire service. I have referred to the NTA and to the processes which are required under that Act. This decision is purely a management or an operational one on the part of the railway, and it would be inappropriate for the federal Government to interfere. I would, however, point out to the Hon. Member that CN sustains an annual deficit of some $1.3 million for this underutilized service.

Federal funds were available for the modernization of the Saint-Hilaire service through the Canada-Quebec agreement signed in 1981. The province decided not to modernize the service, as no satisfactory agreement could be reached with the concerned municipalities at that time.

Motions

TENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE ON SCRUTINY OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I was just going to note, Mr. Speaker, that earlier this day there was an indication from all three Parties that if the co-chairman of the Standing Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations appeared later in the day and wanted to move concurrence in the report, there was a general predisposition in the House, by unanimous consent, to admit that motion and to dispose of it in a positive way without debate. I think that it is in the nation's interest and in the committee's interest.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

SCRUTINY OF REGULATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN TENTH REPORT OF THE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move concurrence in the tenth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations. I understand that the unanimous consent is based on no debate. I would simply note that this is a report which was unanimous, which has already been concurred in in the Senate, and which explains to Parliament the reasons for which the committee has decided not to review the regulations issued by courts in certain cases about the procedures that apply in the court. The report is short and self-explanatory. I commend it to all of the Members of this House, and I thank you for the unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 18476). and of Mr. Langdon (p. 18476).

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to address, in the few moments available to each Member to speak, the fourth grouping of amendments including the ones put forward by our trade critic, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I would like to concentrate on Motion No. 19 to delete Clause 9 of the Bill which refers to the Canadian grape and wine industry. I would also like to deal with Motion No. 21 which, if passed, would ensure a true partnership with various consumer, labour and business interests and/or organizations represented on a number of committees and commissions in charge of overseeing the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

If there is any industry that will have a negative fallout from the Mulroney trade agreement, clearly it is the grape and wine industry. This industry is largely focused in the Niagara fruit belt of the Province of Ontario and in the Province of British Columbia. The Canadian wine industry and grape growers will be major losers from this deal.

Every conceivable analysis done by any independent authority predicts widespread job losses in the Provinces of Ontario and British Columbia, because the agreement will remove tariffs over a 10-year period and will affect provincial pricing mechanisms that are in place to try to protect and enhance our own industry. It is very obvious that the wine industry will come to a fatal end. As well, the jobs connected to it through the multiplier effect in other key sectors in both provinces will be at stake.

I had an opportunity, along with other members of the Liberal Party, only two days ago to meet firsthand with a number of grape producers who made the trip to Ottawa. They got up at five o'clock in the morning, got in their cars and came to Ottawa with the intention of making a pitch, a last ditch effort, an eleventh hour plea, for the sensitivity and protection that is needed and justified for their industry. In the face of American and European competition, this industry will no longer be viable.

The pleas of the grape growers were desperate ones. They were real ones. We could tell from the look in their eyes that they were on the threshold of losing their livelihoods and in some cases abandoning generations of grape growing. They came to Ottawa to ask the Government to try to protect this industry. They said that if it was the vision of this Government to enter into a trade arrangement with the United States, if that was its economic answer to the woes we face, then that vision should be put before the Canadian people.

What the grape growers fail to take lying down is the blind attitude of this Government which knows of the consequences of its actions on the wine and grape producers. Those actions would sound the death-knell for those families in that industry of some 1,500 jobs. They fail to accept a Government that will walk into this free trade arrangement blindly when it has those kinds of ramifications.

The Government has said that it will take care of these people by providing adjustment programs so they can grow other kinds of tender fruits. However, the tender fruit industries in the Niagara fruit belt and the Okanagan Valley are at a saturation point. Other fruit growers are already struggling. Not only will this action cause a serious rupture in the grape producing farm belts of Canada, but because it will force these people into producing other fruits it will endanger other fruit farmers who are already operating at saturation points and who just barely make ends meet.

These people are asking themselves, as are we, led by our trade critic, what kind of economic sense this kind of deal makes for the grape producing industry.

Given that there is a very limited growing season in Canada, given that the industry is under a barrage of competition, given that there is some pride in producing our own grapes and wines for domestic consumption, given that there are 1,500 jobs that will evaporate and disappear from the Okanagan Valley and the Niagara fruit belt, and given that there is already enough competition in the other tender fruit markets, what kind of government would not care about all those factors and would simply say: "This is the kind of deal you're going to get, take it or leave it"? That is why the grape producing farmers made the trip to Ottawa on Tuesday morning. They tried to sensitize the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to their problem. I hope they will have an opportunity to do that another time, because it was impossible to do so on that day.

These people want the Government to understand that livelihoods are at stake. That is why the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, the Liberal trade critic, moved Motion No. 19 to delete the clause that would do damage to these people. He did it to protect and respect an industry that has roots in Canada and that has a sense of pride. With some assistance, it might have a viable future.

It is no secret that this industry has had difficulties in the past, but that is not an excuse to trample over it completely. Instead, if it has had difficulties, that would be all the more reason for the Government to be extra sensitive to this industry that is trying to find its legs when entering into this kind of agreement. My colleague's Motion No. 19 provides a viable alternative. It is an amendment that has been put forward with a degree of urgency and with a degree of sensitivity.

Though I only have a few moments remaining in my time, I would like to deal with Motion No. 21 which I believe is a very fair motion. It would provide for an effective mechanism of consultation with Canadians. Motion No. 21 would ensure that various consumer, labour, and business interests would be represented on the various organizing structures that would oversee the application of this agreement.

It is bad enough that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was against free trade in 1983. It is bad enough that the question of free trade was not debated in the last election. It is bad enough that the Government does not want to go to the people before officially ratifying this deal. Because the Government is timid and negligent in those three ways, we have moved Motion No. 21 which would ensure that Canadians who are involved in various interest groups would have a direct and meaningful partnership in deciding on and applying what will become known as the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point or order. It has been the tradition in this House for a considerable length of time that we refer to Members of this House as Hon. Members or, if they hold a position with the Government, by that position. Throughout his speech the Hon. Member has been referring to a "Mulroney-Reagan trade deal". The title is the "Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement"; the other is not. I believe the Chair should draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that there is no such thing as that about which he is speaking.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown is correct in his remarks. The Hon. Member for York West may conclude.

Mr. Marchi: It is very interesting that the Parliamentary Secretary gets on his feet to correct me in how I refer to this deal when he fails day after day to get to his feet to tell the House of Commons and Canadians that he will be reacting to our concern about the farmers in the Niagara fruit belt and the Okanagan Valley. Those are the real issues and the stands the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) ought to be taking rather than pathetically getting to his feet to lament because I called this deal the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. What is wrong with calling it the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West knows that he should not use personal names to refer to Members in the House. I hope the Hon. Member will remember that in future.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 18476), and of Mr. Langdon (p. 18476).

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to enter the debate on these amendments. As one of the number of representatives in this House of the grape growing and wine producing areas of Canada, I am very pleased to give my opinions with respect to this industry.

I heard the previous speaker's remarks. I must categorically disagree with his comments that this industry will not survive because of free trade. That is absolutely incorrect. That is nonsense. An examination of the facts would bear me out on that subject.

I do agree with him that there have been difficulties in this industry which extend back a number of years. For the record, there have been surpluses within the grape industry in 10 of the last 12 years. There are a number of reasons for that, chief among them the competition that we face, which I suggest is in many ways unfair, from the Europeans who, through the years of indirect subsidies, have flooded Canada in the past. That, along with a number of other things, has caused a surplus of grapes. Expanding production within the Niagara and British Columbia regions has contributed to the excess as well.

One of the first things I did as a Member of Parliament after being elected in 1984 was to approach the representatives of the Treasury Board with my request that the Government take up the surplus of grapes that was produced in the fall of 1984. To all those who say that the Government does not or has not supported this industry, I say that the Government has purchased every single grape that could not be sold privately. Every single grape was purchased with the assistance of the federal Government.

It has been recognized for a number of years that there is excess capacity in this important industry. That excess was recognized by the Province of Ontario. There has been tabled in the Ontario Legislature changes to be made in the Wine Content Act which, among other things, acknowledge the fact that with the removal of labrusca grapes from certain types of wines in Ontario there will be excess capacity and a vine removal program will be necessary. That is acknowledged by the Ontario Government.

What is not acknowledged by the critics of this free trade agreement which will be so helpful to the Niagara Peninsula—

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 18476) and of Mr. Langdon (p. 18476).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I was saying how important it is that this agreement be passed for the benefit of the Niagara Peninsula. Many companies have indicated to me how important it is that I and other Members from the Niagara area, as well as members of the Government, get out to support the free trade agreement. Acres International, an employer of over 400 excellent jobs, recently contacted me to let me know that they are firmly behind it. I was at the Norton plant recently, and I got the same message from them. General Motors, B.F. Goodrich, C and C Yachts, T.R.W., Hayes-Dana, Muller's Meats, Brunner Manufacturing, almost all major employers in the City of Niagara Falls have contacted me to indicate their support for it.

I tell them I will do my best, despite the fact that there are so many so-called experts here on the economy of the Niagara Peninsula.

We were talking about the grape and wine industry. Something the critics of this agreement seem to forget, perhaps conveniently because they can sometimes get away with that without being called to task, is that we are also part of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. That is a group of all countries in the world trading together. It is sometimes forgotten that Canada has agreed to remove discriminatory provincial liquor pricing policy within GATT. We agreed to that over 10 years ago, but that is conveniently forgotten.

This free trade agreement is an agreement within GATT. It complies with GATT, so that the critics of this agreement do not realize, will not admit or will not be straightforward enough to admit that if the trade agreement disappeared it would not make one bit of difference to the problems we are having with the grape-wine industry. We have GATT to contend with, an agreement by which we agree to reduce and eliminate provincial liquor pricing policies. The attitude of the Province of Ontario on this matter is very interesting. It knows it has agreed to it. It has acknowledged that in the past. However, when asked about it, it says that any problems with provincial liquor pricing policies is not its concern and that the federal Government has to worry about that. Curiously enough, this is the provincial Government's complete attitude as it relates to this industry.

On the grape surplus program, each year the federal Government has indicated that it will do its share and put up 50 per cent to purchase every surplus crop, and the Province of Ontario is expected to meet the other 50 per cent. The Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin) can tell us that the provincial Government drags its heels every single year to the point where last year we had to give out the cheque. The federal Government gave its money and said that it did not know what was happening in Ontario. It did not know what the problem was with Queen's Park. That has been the rule of thumb with the Ontario Government. I hope some of my colleagues in the Opposition, the next time they talk to Premier Peterson and some of his friends in Queen's Park, will tell them to ante-up and start supporting this industry. This is not my only example.

We almost had a very terrible drought in the Niagara Peninsula. There was a drought in western Canada that caused great damage to agriculture, and we went for a long time without rain in the Niagara Peninsula. I was very concerned. I contacted the Department of Agriculture and asked to have the situation monitored, that we might have a problem, but as soon as it looked like there would be any problem with drought in the Niagara Peninsula, the word came from Queen's Park that it would have nothing to do with it. It said that if there was any problem we had better look to Ottawa, that the drought was Ottawa's problem. However, we were also told that the provincial Government was our best friend. The Ontario Minister of Agriculture came to my area and told us: "We are the best friends the farmers of this area ever had", but he did not bring his cheque-book. He said that if we were looking for any money we had better talk to the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), but that we should not forget the provincial Government was our best friend. That was the attitude of the provincial Government.

Ms. Copps: Bring on the trade agreement.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) must still have a few friends down there at Queen's Park. She should tell them to bring their cheque-book the next time they visit the Niagara Peninsula and quit dragging their feet in supporting this industry.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Right on, brother.

Ms. Copps: That isn't going to wash in the Niagara Peninsula.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): The provincial Government changed the Wine Content Act. It said that we could not use labrusca grapes in certain types of wines, but when the vine removal program which is necessarily attendant upon that is presented to that Government, it says: "We may have helped caused this excess capacity in labrusca grapes by our changes to the wine content, but you had better look to Ottawa if you want help and, remember, we are your friends". People are not going to buy that. Right now there are negotiations going on between the federal Government and the provincial Government to support this industry which will make it a viable, expanding and vital industry for the well-being of Ontario and Canada for years to come. I put the Ontario Government on notice. It has to do its share. It has benefited to the tune of billions of dollars from this industry over the years. It is now its turn to join with us to help make this a viable industry.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity this afternoon to speak on Motion Nos. 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, and 25. You will know, Mr. Speaker, that those motions give a pretty broad latitude.

I would like to start with a few quotations. First, I think it is important that Canadians know the genetics of this deal. Where did it come from and what does it mean? After about August 30, the country will be inundated with taxpayer-paid advertising giving only the view of the Government and big business of the deal. Let us look back to see what the former Minister for International Trade, the present President of the Treasury Board (Ms. Carney), had to say a little while ago. This was just after the deal had been negotiated. It had taken place, of course, in Washington, not in Canada. She was interviewed by a reporter from The Vancouver Sun, and she is quoted as saying:

> The boss has not indicated any interest in moving me, in spite of all your Ottawa rumours to the contrary. He thinks I have done a great job. As a matter of fact, he phoned me up the night we did it and said, "How does it feel to be a mother of confederation?" So I thought, gee. I have never thought of it that way. That is pretty neat.

There we have the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, the former Minister for International Trade, the present President of the Treasury Board, receiving a call from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who, I suppose, was telephoning from 24 Sussex to Vancouver or Hawaii, or wherever she was at that point in time, and asking how it felt to be the mother of Confederation. That is how the Prime Minister looks at this deal and how at least one Conservative Member of Cabinet thinks of it: "Gee, I've never thought of it that way. That's pretty neat".

We hear selective quotations from the government side all the time, including from the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) who just spoke about the grape industry, which will be heavily and negatively impacted both in British Columbia and Ontario by the proposed deal. Headlines read: "Economy will do well with no deal, panel says". People would not wonder who the panel is because the present Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) is always quoting selectively from the Economic Council of Canada. Here is what it had to say:

> The collapse of free trade negotiations "need not be catastrophic" for the nation, the Economic Council of Canada says in its annual review to be released this week.
> With 80 per cent of exports still entering the United States duty free—even without free trade—Canadians' standard of living will continue to rise, the council says.

The government side is always eager to quote selectively from the Economic Council of Canada, but there it is on record as saying that even without the deal Canada would probably be as well off, if not better; certainly from the perspective of sovereignty, we would be better off. A headline from another article in The Globe and Mail reads: "Free trade: a Losing Proposition". It is an article by Marjorie Cohen, author of Free Trade and The future of Women's Work. She teaches economics at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education and represents the National Action Committee on the Status of Women in the Coalition Against Free Trade.

> Mr. Mulroney's grand design to "secure" access to the U.S. market has failed. Unless Canada "harmonizes" its social and economic programs to conform to U.S. notions of what is fair play, it will have no improved access to U.S. markets. And social and economic programs are in greater danger than ever. Why? Because the economy will be tied even more closely to that of the United States, and Canada will have even more to fear from U.S. complaints if its programs aren't sufficiently similar to those south of the border.

I must point out that we cannot forget that the countervailing action taken by the U.S. against our east coast fishing industry found some 50 to 60 Canadian programs which they felt were countervailable. Of course, that is a precedent set for future countervailing actions by anyone in the United States against Canadian social programs such as unemployment insurance, the Canada Pension Plan, and medicare. Marjorie Cohen goes on to say on energy:

> The free trade agreement binds Canada to more than just a pathetic disputes-settlement mechanism. It is bound to give up what is potentially the most effective weapon it has in gaining a competitive advantage with the United States: Control over energy pricing and energy supply.
> This agreement has given the United States something Canada historically has resisted—total access to Canadian energy supplies. The gravity of the problem is indicated by the fact Canada has given up its ability to reserve resources for its own people even when such resources are very scarce. The agreement specifically states that, when energy is in short supply, the United States will have "proportional access to the diminished supply".

She concludes the article under the heading of "The Politics":

> In his speech before Parliament last Monday, Mr. Mulroney boasted about the way his Government "brings Canadians into the decision-making process". This is political double-talk of a high order. Ordinary Canadians have not been involved in this process—it has been an initiative of big business and the Conservative Government.
> The latest polls indicate that more people in Canada are against free trade than are for it. Before he was elected, Mr. Mulroney assured the country that he was against it. He said: "Don't talk to me about free trade. That issue was decided in 1911. Free trade is a danger to Canadian sovereignty. You'll hear no more of it from me".

We see what kind of a flip-flop the Prime Minister can do. He can be absolutely opposed before he is elected, but he comes into office and goes in exactly the opposite direction. We hear from the government side quotations which are never fully verified from certain people and certain groups that are highly supportive of free trade. No doubt. The large multinationals are very much in favour of it, and I will come to the reasons for that in a moment.

Let me quote again from The Gazette of Montreal. The headline reads "Free trade worries computer firms. Pact would mean loss of 150,000 jobs to U.S., association says". That is a story out of Winnipeg.

> The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Deal will ensure that Canadians subsidiaries will lose 150,000 high-paying computer-data jobs to their U.S. parent firms over the next six years, the Canadian Independent Computer Services Association told a parliamentary committee yesterday.

These are the kinds of impacts independent associations feel they will have as a result of the deal.

I have to spend a moment on the obvious hypocrisy of the Liberal Party. Members of that Party speak out of all sides of their mouths on this issue. We have the Liberal Premier of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, publicly stating he is absolutely in favour of it. We have the former Trudeau Liberal Minister of Finance, Donald Macdonald, publicly supporting it. Of course he has to quieten down now a little bit since he has been appointed as the High Commissioner to Great Britain as his just rewards for having promoted free trade along with his Conservative buddy, the former Premier of Alberta.

Even Senator George van Roggen has split from the Liberal caucus and has gone public saying free trade is the greatest deal of all. Let us not forget that on January 30, 1985 in Vancouver he was interviewed and he said: "Agriculture should be excluded from such an agreement, as is the case in nearly all other free trade areas". We will probably find out in a few months or years down the road what his just reward will be for not living up to his own words. As we know now, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture does not support the FTA. It represents the overwhelming majority of farmers and farm groups in the country.

I want to quote now from the briefing paper for Secretary Baker and Ambassador Yeutter, a briefing paper provided to them in relation to the FTA on energy. I think Canadians have a great deal to fear in terms of the lost future when it comes to the kind of control Washington and the U.S. Congress and Senate now have over our oil supplies. This is called "Questions and Answers for Clayton Yeutter". It states:

> Canada is by far our largest supplier of imported energy. In 1986 Canada was our largest supplier of oil (ahead of Mexico, Venezuela and Saudi Arabia) and uranium (about two-thirds of our imports and about one-fourth of total consumption), and accounted for almost all our imports of natural gas and electricity. Canada was also the largest market for U.S. coal exports for the first nine months of 1986.
> The total value of two-way energy trade between the U.S. and Canada has been about $10 billion per year or more in recent years, with the likelihood that it will grow in future years as a result of increasing U.S. import requirements. The U.S./Canada energy trade relationship is the world's largest and the total value of this trade exceeds the value of our total trade (all goods and services) with all but a handful of other countries in the world.

Is it not interesting, Mr. Speaker, that here, even in a situation in which there is diminished supply, we have to continue to provide it to U.S. consumers? Even if they do not have line-ups at gas stations in the U.S. during an oil crisis, Canadians would have to be lining up knowing that at various border crossings our energy was going across into the U.S. to provide fuel to Americans at a time when we were facing shortages.

Mr. McDermid: That has been in effect since 1974.

Mr. Fulton: The Parliamentary Secretary from Brampton—Georgetown thinks that is just right. There are an awful lot of Canadians who do not like that idea.

Let me quote an article written by Marjorie Nichols entitled "Energy pact fuels fears for future" in which she states:

> The energy pact is the Trojan Horse in this trade deal. In fact, it's dishonest to pretend that the energy pact has a logical place in a trade deal dedicated to dismantling the man-made barriers to commerce between Canada and the U.S.
> The energy package is devoted to an entirely different objective. Its purpose is to dismantle the God-given distinctiveness assigned to Canada by its resources.
> Under the section, the U.S. is to be awarded the right for all time to sup as an absolute equal at Canada's resource table.
> There is no other independent country in the history of this world that has voluntarily and peacefully agreed to share its sovereignty with another country.

Let me conclude with another point. She went on to state:

> As troubling as the realization that we have a government that doesn't know what it has proposed giving away rights that other nations would go to war to preserve, is the suspicion that the entire energy section may have been drafted by the Americans.

Marjorie Nichols goes on to point out why. Let us just remember one other thing in terms of history on the question of energy. I refer to the great pipeline debate that went on in this House a few years ago and the great American promise that the construction of the prebuild that goes down from just south of Calgary in California and into the Midwest would be completed from Alaska down to Calgary and provide back to Canada the natural gas that we had sold them through the prebuild. Where is that promise? Of course it was Mitchell Sharp who sat on there drawing down 50 or 100 grand a year all these last years while nothing was going on.

So on a whole variety of fronts I think I have made it clear with quotations from authorities that this deal is bad for Canada. I suppose we can just sleep at night thinking it was the former Member for Vancouver Centre who is so pleased to be the Mother of Confederation with the United States.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to hear the speeches from the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) but I think the Member has already spoken on this set of motions. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) on debate.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): As you know, Mr. Speaker, we are presently debating six amendments to Bill C-130. These amendments have been grouped together for purposes of debate. I particularly want to address three of them.

The first one I want to address is Motion No. 21 which would amend Clause 11 of the Bill. Our amendment would ensure that the committees, panels and commissions which would administer the free trade agreement would have appropriate representation from consumer associations, labour and business. As is usual with a Conservative Government, it looks on this free trade agreement totally in terms of business. There is no attempt to have involved in the administration of the agreement or, as a matter of fact, in consultation leading to the establishment of the agreement, the views of labour and the views of consumers. This amendment is the direct result of the submission made to the legislative committee on Bill C-130 by the Consumers Association of Canada.

When the Consumers Association of Canada was before the legislative committee its principal goal was to make sure that there would be a continuing consumer presence in the administration of this agreement. It pointed out that during the consultations which took place while the trade agreement was being negotiated it was only consulted in a very token way. Over and over again the Government has said that it has done a lot of consultation with respect to the development of this U.S.-Canada free trade agreement. It referred to the work done by what is known as the SAGIT committees. SAGIT means Special Advisory Groups on International Trade—

Mr. Nickerson: Sectoral Advisory Groups—

Mr. Allmand: Sectoral Advisory Groups on International Trade. We have called it by the acronym for so long that it is difficult to remember what it means. In any case, there were SAGIT groups in many sectors. The consumers were in a token way represented on a couple of them, as was pointed out before the legislative committee. But it said that even those recommendations which were made were ignored. It said, as a last resort would we please make an amendment to the Bill which would ensure its presence on these various committees, commissions and panels. For the life of me I cannot understand why the Government would not do that. Even if it is its intention to do it in an administrative sort of way, I think it is worth-while as is done in other legislation to ensure this presence.

So through Motion No. 21 we are suggesting that Clause 11 be amended by adding another subsection which states:

> —that appointments to such committees, panels, commissions or other bodies ensure representation from consumers groups, labour and business.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that we think this is a bad agreement and should be defeated altogether. But if it is to go ahead, at least it should be improved in the best possible way. One of these ways is through such an amendment as we are proposing in Motion No. 21. There is no doubt that as this agreement is administered there will be serious impacts on workers. Therefore, that is why we are asking that labour be represented in the administration of the agreement. There will also be serious impacts on consumers through prices and the quality and safety of products. I urge the Government to give serious consideration to this amendment. It was strongly recommended by the Consumers Association of Canada.

Related to that amendment is one that is suggested in Motion No. 22 which states that one of the committees that should be set up under Clause 11 should be a committee that would monitor and review matters arising out of the act or the agreement, including the adjustment impact on workers and communities, as well as the activities, economic viability, and ability to compete with companies from the United States doing business in Canada, and also the agricultural pressures in Canada resulting from the agreement.

In the speech that I made on Tuesday to another amendment under this Bill, I referred to the serious impacts that this agreement would have on workers and the necessity of having special adjustment provisions to deal with the impacts on workers. I refer again to the report of the Economic Council of Canada published in April of this year in which it assesses the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. At page 21 of that report the Economic Council states: "It indicates clearly that without improvements in Canadian manufacturing productivity, increased U.S. competition could result in a net decline of output and employment in 17 of the 36 industries studied, virtually all of them in manufacturing". It goes on to state: "Some firms will have to merge, others will have to close". Then the report refers to the electrical products industry, which it states will account for 40 per cent of all the job losses in manufacturing.

There is also a table which lists the manufacturing industries that are likely to lose employment as a result of the agreement. For example, the rubber and plastics industry, the leather industry, the textiles industry, the knitting mills industry, furniture and fixtures industry, paper products industry, metal fabricating industry, machinery industry, transportation equipment, electrical products, non-metallic minerals, and the chemical products industry. The Economic Council states that all those industries will be threatened with job loss as a result of the agreement.

The report goes on to point out that there will be job gains, and I quote again from the report which states: "Under the most likely scenario, a number of major occupations in the service sector, clerical, sales and services, managerial and administrative jobs will dominate, accounting for close to 148,000 new jobs". While it seems that we will lose jobs in the manufacturing sector as a result of the agreement, we will gain jobs in the service sector. It is well known that jobs in the manufacturing sector are usually well paid jobs with unions, full-time, and with benefits. On the other hand, many jobs in the service sector for sales and clerical people are part-time, minimum wage, without benefits, and non-unionized.

Under this agreement it appears that we will be exchanging solid, full-time manufacturing jobs for service jobs which do not have the same salaries and benefits. As some of the witnesses who appeared before the committee said, we will be exchanging factories for warehouses; companies will concentrate their manufacturing, research and development in the United States, and they will have warehouses, and sales, distribution, and service people in Canada.

I strongly support this amendment in Motion No. 22 which states that one of the committees to be established for the administration of this agreement should monitor and review the adjustment impact of the agreement on company workers and communities and, in addition, monitor and review the economic viability and ability to compete within a given sector by Canadian companies with the United States companies operating in Canada.

Another amendment under this group of amendments is all-embracing. It simply states that we should delete Clause 8 of the agreement. Clause 8 of the agreement states that the agreement is hereby approved. To knock out that particular section of the Bill is one that we in this Party would like to do with all the ability and force that we could muster. The reason we want to do so is that it is a bad agreement for Canada.

The Conservative Government, in an attempt to lower tariffs and get assured access to the United States, sold out the country. It gave non-discriminatory access to Canadian energy on an assured basis. It gave national standing to American companies operating in Canada. It restricts the use of Crown corporations in Canada. For the first time in the world it has opened free trade for service industries, which is an unknown factor. It has put at risk regional economic development, agriculture, fisheries, and many other sectors.

We point out that, under Liberal policies for freer trade since the end of the Second World War, we now have a situation in Canada where there are no tariffs whatsoever on 80 per cent of all goods and services between Canada and the United States. However, that was done in a multilateral context, and our independence, identity, and sovereignty were not threatened. We eliminated tariffs on 80 per cent of goods and services without selling out the country. Now with this agreement, where the attempt was to ensure access to the United States, it is only eliminating tariffs on the remaining 20 per cent of trade, but the real culprit and barrier to trade in the United States, countervail and anti-dumping, have not been touched at all. We do not approve of this agreement, and we move that Clause 8 stating that the agreement be approved, be struck from the record.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I want to review some of the absolutely atrocious statements made by the Opposition. I listened to my hon. friend, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), who, every time he is on his feet, knocks Canadians. He says that we cannot compete, and everything is going to be American. Remember Trudeau used to say: "Zap, you are frozen". These guys are going around saying: "Zap, you are American".

Mr. Allmand: The Economic Council says that.

Mr. McDermid: I have never met a Canadian who wants to be an American.

Mr. Axworthy: John Crosbie wants to become an American.

Mr. McDermid: I have not met one yet. We are not going to become American any more than fly to the moon, and the Hon. Member knows that. What a dumb thing for him to say, and to stand up time after time making stupid statements like that. What absolute truck!

Opposition Members want to take the clause out of the Bill which reads: "The agreement is hereby approved". If they want to take that out, why are they bringing in all the other amendments? If they want to take that one out, fine, but why bring in all the other amendments?

Mr. Hovdebo: Do you agree?

Mr. McDermid: No, this section is a standard clause, the general approval of an international agreement by Parliament. It is in all international agreements. No, I do not agree. It stays in. We are going to defeat that amendment, because it is a silly amendment. It is nonsense. It is crazy. It was brought by the Liberals. It was not brought by the NDP. I am looking at my hon. friend, but I am talking to the Liberals.

• (1620)

I want to cover the wine situation. I hear time after time Members getting up and talking about the free trade agreement—there is the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). She stands up and says, "The free trade agreement caused the wine industry the problems". I am going to give the chronology of what has gone on in regard to the wine industry in Canada. From 1960 to the mid-1970s, the issue of the discriminatory pricing practices of the provinces was raised by the United Kingdom and France at the Canada-France and the Canada-United Kingdom bilateral meetings. It was in the Tokyo Round, from 1975 to 1979, of the GATT negotiations—and the opposition Parties think that GATT is the only answer—that the issue was pressed by the United States, the European Economic Community, Australia and New Zealand.

At the end of the Tokyo Round, on April 5, 1979, to be exact, a Canadian letter to the Economic Community providing provincial statements of intention—these are the provinces that were involved; British Columbia and Ontario—made a statement of intentions at that time. This is in April, 1979. This letter said that the provinces gave a commitment to end discriminatory pricing practices.

On June 7, 1984—the Liberal leadership convention was going on, as a matter of fact—the European Community requested consultations under GATT, claiming that the provinces had not lived up to their 1979 commitment. On October 5, 1984, consultations were held with the European Community in response to the request. On November 29, 1984, a three-part proposal was put forward by Canada on a possible bilateral solution to their complaint. It was turned down.

On February 12, 1985, the European Community requested the establishment of a GATT panel. I want you to see that date, February 12, 1985. That was before free trade negotiations were ever discussed. That is when the GATT panel was requested and established on March 12, 1985, long before the free trade negotiations got under way. That is the GATT panel that came in in 1987 and said, "Ontario and British Columbia, your discriminatory pricing, marking up foreign wines, is an unfair trade practice". It has nothing to do with the free trade agreement. If we had never discussed the free trade agreement, the grape industries in this country were in trouble. Do you want to know why? Let me tell you why. This is from the wine industry itself in its presentation to our committee, I might say. It is dated a couple of days ago. They said:

> The development of the Canadian wine industry has taken place in an environment dominated by provincial government intervention.

That is their first statement. It continues:

> Provinces have enacted legislation which creates preferences for locally-produced wines, thus ensuring that job-creating wineries are located within their boundaries. These barriers mean that there is no truly Canadian market, but 10 separate provincial markets.

We cannot even trade east-west in the wine that we produce, or in the beer that we produce, for that matter, because of the provincial regulations. We have these 10 little markets all across the country. The presentation further states:

> Regulations have been enacted to maximize the use of Canadian grapes in Ontario and British Columbia - the only provinces where grapes are grown in commercial quantities.
> Due to higher input costs in Canada caused by our scale of production—

Marketing boards have negotiated grape prices which, on average, are double that of comparable grapes in California. It continues:

> Provincial and federal governments have purchased surplus grapes, thereby limiting the need for adjustment in the supply and type of grape produced in Canada.

There is the key to the whole thing. There was no incentive for them to change to the varietal types of grapes. That is what we have been missing. The Governments were buying their surplus grapes, so why change? Who cares? The presentation further states:

> Indeed, because of the annual purchase of surplus grapes by the federal and provincial governments, there is now a chronic surplus of unwanted labrusca grapes; and a shortage of vinifera varietals—in a world that is literally awash in wine and grapes.

They went on to say:

> The result of these government actions and attitudes—

They are talking of provincial Government, not federal Government:

> —has been the development of a commercial wine industry which is often required to produce product from artificially expensive imports in uneconomic facilities.

This is quite a brief that they have presented. If people read this and went on to read it and talk about it, they would find that the wine industry was in trouble in this country for a number of reasons, primarily provincial. Yet, here is the Premier of the Province of Ontario who says—and he is speaking to the grape people:

> At some point or another, you're going to have to make your feelings known to the federal government that created this situation—

The federal Government that created this situation!

> —it takes more than one to dance. We did not cause this problem.

This is Peterson from Ontario who is saying this. The Wine Institute has irrefutable evidence saying that it is the province that is causing this problem.

You cannot have it both ways. Somebody is not telling the truth. I have known David Peterson for years. I knew David Peterson before most people in Ontario knew him. I have worked with him at Queen's Park. I remember the tough leadership battle he had against the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. But here he is saying, "We did not cause the problem". Yet, here is the Canadian Wine Institute that presented us, the committee, with a brief saying that they did cause the problem. So, there are problems. We admit to that.

Our Government has, in the West and in co-operation with the Province of British Columbia, arranged help for the grape growers to change to those varietal grapes that are so important to produce a good quality wine. Our good quality wine in Canada is being sold around the world. It is winning medals around the world. Hillebrand is exporting 4,000 cases of its wine this year to Japan. So our wine industry can survive. Our grape growers need some time and some help to tear out those old vines and bring in the new vines.

Let me just read from this article. There was a woman who met the Premier of Ontario, and here is what she said:

> The Government of Canada has agreed to set aside $70 million for a vine-removal program and to support a surplus buying plan for 1988—

She is talking to Peterson, face to face. This is the quote:

> —(but) we have no commitment from the Ontario Government at this time. We as growers are asking for a commitment from the Ontario Government for these two programs—

That is what she said. He said, "The negotiations are tough. You are not going to like the solution, but hopefully we can give you one that you can live with. But it is not our fault". This is the Premier of Ontario.

Ms. Copps: That is right.

Mr. McDermid: I must tell you that the amendments that are proposed in this grouping are totally unnecessary. If I had more time, I could quote chapter and verse as to why they are unnecessary. For example, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) announced the make-up of the International Trade Advisory Committee, representatives of labour, industry, small business, large business. As a matter of fact, the Minister emphasized that he invited the Canadian Labour Congress to discuss the CLC's participation in the International Trade Advisory Committee. The CLC's views and the multilateral trade negotiations will be important, and I hope that they will accept my invitation. They did not accept my invitation the first time when they were invited. Let us hope that they do this time.

We involve people in the consultative process that we have instituted over the last four years, and we will continue to do so. These amendments are unnecessary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to rise again and to point out to some extent to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister that in his description of the grape growers' problems and their suggestion to both the provincial Government and the grape growers of the involvement of the federal Government and the need of assistance from the federal Government, it is relative to the decision made by this Government that 50 per cent of the differential must be made up at once, or at the beginning of the trade agreement. That in itself puts the federal Government in the driver's seat and makes it responsible for the dilemma the grape growers are faced with in this next year.

• (1630)

Mr. McDermid: No, that is nonsense. Read the GATT panel.

Mr. Hovdebo: These six clauses we are dealing with cover a great deal. The first one suggests that we just not agree with this Act in any way and delete Clause 8. One of the problems in this whole discussion is the fact that government Members are making a great deal out of what they call the truth in interpretation of this agreement. In doing so, they show how arrogant they are. The interpretation of this Bill is exactly what is being disagreed with. We have a different interpretation of many of the terms of the agreement and clauses of the Bill. By saying that the government interpretation is the truth and anyone else's is a lie, government Members are insulting everyone who has given a little bit of thought or study to this Bill and the agreement and come up with any kind of interpretation different from the Government. What arrogance. That does not contribute to understanding of this deal.

The understanding or lack of understanding of this deal will be what will eventually defeat this free trade agreement. A voter faced with making a decision on the deal is being asked to choose between the status quo and something he or she does not understand. If you are faced with that kind of a decision, you are going to choose the status quo. It would seem to be in the best interests of the Government if it were to help voters to understand.

Mr. McDermid: We are.

Mr. Hovdebo: However, there is the rub. The more the voters understand about this agreement, the more they disagree with it, and the Government is caught in a real dilemma.

Mr. McDermid: That is the NDP, accept the status quo or go backwards.

Mr. Hovdebo: I recognize the dilemma that government Members are faced with, and in the process I recognize that the action they are taking is to confuse the issue as much as possible. That is the only alternative they have. It is the only way out. If the people understand it, they will vote against it. If they do not understand it, they vote for the status quo.

I want to speak on Motion Nos. 17, 19 an 21 for just a minute. Motion No. 19 deletes Clause 9. Some day one of the provincial Governments is going to take Clause 9 to the courts and the Government is going to lose. It attempts to impose the will of this agreement on the provinces even if they do not want it. Premier Bourassa, who claims that he and everybody in Québec supports this Bill—although that is very doubtful—has decided that he could not face this elimination of provincial rights. If you cannot beat them, join them. He said he is going to, and has done it to some extent by passing permissive legislation which allows the Government to come in and do that, or he is going to pass it before the federal Government does, say it is already in place and therefore does not affect our rights at all.

Premier Peterson appears to be doing exactly the opposite. He is making sure he has legislation in place which this Bill will confront. We are going to have a confrontation between this Bill and provincial government law which will protect water, the wine industry and other products controlled by the provincial Government.

Ms. Copps: Pretty good Premier.

Mr. Hovdebo: Yes, he is.

That is what will happen as far as Motion No. 19 is concerned, so it makes sense to eliminate Clause 9 by accepting Motion No. 19.

With respect to Motion No. 21, a Liberal motion, although we accept the idea of broader representation on the government board dealing with the agreement, it must be recognized that this amendment does not require that there be farmers' groups, women's groups and multicultural groups on the board as well. We will support the amendment but it does lack a bit in that it does not recognize those groups I just mentioned in addition to the ones it does. It could be broader than it is but we will support it.

Motion No. 22, an NDP motion, aims at setting up a commission that would monitor the problems of community workers, community and worker adjustment, sectoral competitiveness of Canadian and U.S. companies, and agricultural pressures resulting from the agreement. The motion recognizes there are going to be problems in every one of these areas and we should know what those problems are when they happen and be able to do something about them, or do something about them before they happen, if possible.

If the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary wishes to find out what those areas of concern are, what those pressures of competitiveness will be, he should just go back to some of the briefs that were presented to the committee. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture's brief did not take an exact stand on whether it is for or against the agreement, but it pointed out that there are a myriad of concerns that should be dealt with. The prairie pools made representations indicating that there are some concerns over the fact that the whole process is undermining the Canadian Wheat Board. National farmers' unions have listed a great many concerns about agriculture. These are things that the panel should know about before they have a disastrous effect upon the industries with which we are concerned.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in my place to offer a few comments on this important legislation. All of us have listened for some days to many observations and presentations made by many Members.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), in his speech a few moments ago, suggested that any Canadian who criticized the free trade agreement would be condemned by members of my Party. That, of course, is totally untrue. There are a great many Canadians, as we continually find to our sorrow, whose knowledge of the proposal is somewhat less than we would wish it to be. Not everyone has taken the trouble to study the documents or to follow the debates. The people have gained their impressions of what is occurring by reading the newspaper headlines and by hearing little squibs about what is taking place.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert said that anyone who has studied the matter briefly should not be condemned. I agree with him entirely, but the members of his Party and the members of the Liberal Party are expected to have studied this at length. Therefore, they have no excuse for totally misrepresenting a number of the things that are contained in the document.

When my own constituents ask me about free trade, I tell them that the trade proposal does not guarantee a job, it does not deliver a job and it does not promise a job. Therefore, the claims that jobs will be created or lost are just a lot of rhetoric. What the trade proposal does is to create an opportunity. It gives Canadians an opportunity to sell into a market.

If a producer does not produce any goods, quite clearly he will not make any sales. If he makes no attempt to go to the United States or to any other country in this world to market his goods, clearly he will not have any sales. Nothing is guaranteed in this life. If a person makes no effort, he will not get very far.

Our Government, any Government, has an obligation as a part of its job to create opportunities for the people, and that is precisely what this legislation offers. It offers an opportunity. Canadians who choose not to take advantage of the opportunity are quite entitled to make that choice. There are no guarantees in this world. Those who do not choose to take advantage of the market that is available to them will clearly not benefit as much as those who do.

I have listened very patiently to a lot of things said in this House which are complete nonsense. My colleagues might be interested to know, just as an aside, what was said by the person who has been nominated by the New Democratic Party to campaign against me in the next federal election. She will remain anonymous and she certainly deserves to remain anonymous. She stood up at a public meeting and said that free trade was a total, dreadful disaster, there were a thousand and one things wrong with it and, as an illustration of how awful this proposed free trade thing is, she said that the free trade agreement already in place is responsible for our testing the cruise missile. That is exactly what she said to an impressionable high school audience. Either she is the most misinformed person in this country or she is capable of telling a bald-faced lie without even having to blush.

Those are the sorts of things that are being said which do nothing to enhance the reputation of present or would-be Members of this House. Members of this House, in name if not in fact, are supposed to be honourable people. They are presumed to tell the truth when they have the opportunity to speak in public. Therefore, all of us have an obligation to look carefully at documents so that when we represent our Party's position or anyone else's position, we do so truthfully and factually.

Certainly there are many things that we can disagree about in this world. There are many pieces of legislation that are complex and there are different ways of arriving at solutions. Honest debate and honest disagreement is a natural state of affairs. It is healthy and indeed should occur in this place. That is why we are here. We are not here to rubber-stamp things but to look at them carefully, prudently and seriously and to arrive at the best answers we can. Therefore, I enjoin members of the Opposition, when they make speeches on this subject in this House or elsewhere, to use some care to attempt to be factual.

Indiscriminate access to Canada's energy is a phrase that has been used. That is just not true. The energy resources of this country have been and continue to belong to the individual provinces. In 1974, we reached agreement internationally, and that was when the Liberal Government was in office, in time of crisis not to cut off a customer who has a valid contract. We did this voluntarily, not only with the United States but with a number of other countries. That is entirely reasonable, because it works both ways. It is conceivable that Canada can have an energy crisis of its own at some point in time as a result of international activity, and we would be the beneficiaries the same as anyone else in the sharing.

We have seen fit to propose in this trade package to add to oil, gas and hydro-electric power. We make major sales of that power to the United States. Interestingly enough, a suggestion was made by a member of the Liberal Party a few moments ago that we are the only country in history that would ever agree to do this kind of thing. I was under the impression that this trade proposal was a bilateral agreement, that what was sauce for the goose was sauce for the gander, that any advantage that might accrue to the United States as a result of an energy crisis would equally apply to us if the market was a problem for us.

Another matter that is raised fairly regularly is what was said in 1983. In 1983, there was a contest for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party. The candidates at that time were asked what they thought about free trade. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who at that point was seeking the office of Leader of the Party, said that he was opposed to free trade. If he were asked today the same question, in the same context, he would also say that he was opposed to it. What we are proposing here is a form of managed trade. It is a long way from being free trade.

In the summer of 1985, I had the privilege of being a member of a special joint committee of Parliament comprised, as Hon. Members will be aware, of both MPs and Senators. We were asked to do two things that summer. We were asked to travel to all 10 provinces of this country and to hold public hearings into two issues. One was the invitation by the President of the United States to participate in SDI, and the other was to find out what Canadians thought about free trade.

It was very apparent to us, as we travelled across the country, that free trade, pure free trade, was a non-starter. We possess a great many things in this country which we prize and value which are different from the United States. We have no wish to put ourselves in the position of bargaining them away. They include our social programs, our culture, our sovereignty, and various particularly vulnerable parts of our industry.

It was our recommendation to the Government, as a result of our public hearings across the country, that we should indeed carry on with this initiative of trade with the United States. We recommended that we have conversations which should lead to negotiations which may or not arrive at full free trade depending on what was left on the table. If various things were taken off the table we would clearly not have a free trade agreement but a form of managed trade.

That is exactly what we have. Any attempt to represent it as any other thing is untrue. The Prime Minister said then, and would say now, that pure free trade is a non-starter for this country. I agree with that and that is not what we have.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe what I have just heard from the Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton). Has he read the Bill? It says, "An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States". It is a free trade agreement. If I heard the Hon. Member correctly, he said that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is still against free trade. Frankly, I am baffled because this is a free trade agreement. The Government says it is a free trade agreement and the Prime Minister says it is a free trade agreement. It is most certainly not a managed trade agreement. It is a free trade agreement and it says so right in the Bill.

I can understand why the Member for Esquimalt—Saanich is trying to distance himself from his Government's free trade agreement by stating that he is against free trade, which is what he just said.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would appreciate if the Member who is speaking now would make some attempt to describe my constituency properly. She has mispronounced it a series of times.

Ms. Copps: I understood the Speaker introduced the Member as the Member for Esquimalt—Saanich. If he is not the Member for Esquimalt—Saanich I am sure the Speaker can change that nomenclature. I take the correction very seriously but I wish the Member would get back to the main point.

I have just heard a Conservative stand in the House and say that he is against free trade and his Prime Minister is against free trade.

Mr. Crofton: In its purest sense.

Ms. Copps: In its purest sense, yes, that is exactly what he said.

Mr. Crofton: Are you suggesting that this is?

Ms. Copps: This is a free trade agreement. On Bill C-130 it says, "An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States". It is called a free trade agreement and it is a free trade agreement.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Nothing is free.

Ms. Copps: I can understand why the Member for Esquimalt—Saanich and the Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) have to distance themselves because this policy is devastating for their Government. I am also very pleased that a Conservative Government Member has finally admitted what we have said all along, that this agreement will not create a single job. The Member for Esquimalt—Saanich said in his remarks that it would not create a single job. I agree with him totally, but I wonder how he squares that with the Finance Department's report, which was tabled by his own Government, which claimed that the free trade agreement was going to create 250,000 jobs. The Member has admitted here in the House that the free trade agreement will not create a single job. I could not agree with him more. In fact, it is going to cost us jobs.

I would like to spend some time zeroing in on an industry which has been victimized as a result of this deal. There has been much discussion today about the GATT panel. I understand why the Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) was practically apoplectic in his seat, because the whole of the Niagara Peninsula, which was painted Tory blue in the last election, is finished. There is not a single Tory on the Niagara Peninsula who will be re-elected, and that is directly a result of this trade deal.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): We're going to get you, too, Sheila.

Ms. Copps: Oh, you're going to get me. Believe me, I am waiting. I want the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) as my guest speaker because the minute he comes into my riding I will end up with 10,000 more votes.

Specifically with respect to the grape growers, the Member for Niagara Falls stood in his place and tried to blame the signing of the free trade deal on the Ontario Government, one of the few Governments which has consistently spoken out against the deal.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): What about GATT, Sheila?

Ms. Copps: In fact, the decision of this Government to sacrifice the wine industry by implementing a 50 per cent reduction in Canadian content in the first calendar year of the agreement has already written off the grape industry. The grape farmers in the Niagara Peninsula are finished.

The Parliamentary Secretary can talk about going into different kinds of grapes, but the fact is that as a bare minimum in order to survive as an industry one half of the acreage on the Niagara Peninsula will have to be buried. You will probably see 60,000 tonnes of grapes rotting in the ground this year as a direct result of the fact that the wine companies know that they are no longer bound to buy Canadian grapes because of the changes which were wrought and brought upon us, not by the GATT panel, which talked about a 12-year phase-in period, but specifically as a result of the free trade agreement.

Farmers on the Niagara Peninsula have seen the value of their properties and their industry cut by literally, in some cases, hundreds of thousands of dollars. I think of Mr. Danyluk who was here in the House last week.

One thing I will say to the credit of Simon Reisman is that he at least admitted publicly that one of the victims of the trade deal was the grape and wine industry, unlike the Member for Niagara Falls who tries to hide behind the GATT panel which was precipitated by a European community that was afraid of the infiltration of California grapes into the Canadian market-place. At least Simon Reisman has said that the grape farmers will be sacrificed on the altar of free trade.

Two years ago I participated on a panel in Toronto. The American Vice Consul at the time, Mr. Blevins, stated quite categorically that one of the reasons the Americans wanted to sign the trade deal was that they wanted to be able to make inroads into the Canadian wine market. Indeed, inroads they will make. There has been a 50 per cent cut-back in the grape quota which was formerly accorded to the wineries; 25 per cent in January of 1989 and 25 per cent in January of 1990, for a total of a 50 per cent reduction in the first year of production. If anyone knows anything about the industry in the Niagara region they will know that the transfer of grapes—

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Oh, you're an expert now, are you?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Danyluk was here in the gallery yesterday. He wants to transfer his production from grapes to raspberries. In order for him to make that transfer he must have some up-front capital and he needs time to make that change.

Mr. McDermid: He will.

Ms. Copps: The man is going bankrupt and the people on the government side of the House are blaming other governments. Before this free trade deal was introduced Mr. Danyluk had an operation which, including his capital and farm, was worth approximately $500,000. He usually needed an annual operating loan of between $90,000 and $95,000 in order to harvest the grapes and take them through full production or to sell them.

As soon as the free trade deal was announced—not the GATT panel or the European decision—his banker called him up and said that, although he may be sitting on property which was formerly worth $500,000 with a $160,000 mortgage, the bank would lend him as an operating loan this year, because of the free trade deal, $5,000. His operating loan was cut from $95,000 to $5,000.

The federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said, "I'll help out, I'll solve the problem". His office called the bank and was able to get the loan increased by a measly $5,000. Mr. Danyluk is operating his farm this year on a $10,000 operating loan. The only reason he can harvest the grapes is because people are harvesting them on the promise that they will be paid after the harvest.

These are the victims of the trade deal who should be paid by the Government. The Government must stop shirking its responsibility and start paying up to those people whose livelihoods it has destroyed as a result of the trade deal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5 o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

ADVISABILITY OF INFORMING DEPOSITORS WHEN DEPOSITS ARE UNINSURED

The House resumed from Tuesday, July 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Riis:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces in establishing a system whereby those individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter this debate. I think this is a subject that is very important and one that in the past has caused considerable hardship. I think of my own riding of Niagara Falls a number of years ago and the provincially regulated company by the name of Astra Trust. I am sure there are Members in the House who will remember that incident.

The common complaint among a number of the individuals in that case was that they bought certificates, had invested money with the company and thought that they were covered by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and the protection given under that particular Act. They assumed in dealing with this company that there were either federal or provincial regulations and laws in place that would protect their investment. They unfortunately found out that they in fact were not covered. The story did not have a completely unhappy ending since there was government assistance in that case, but it pointed out the need at both levels of government to act in a way that would help protect individuals from that circumstance.

I am pleased that this subject, as well as other issues within the financial sector, has been under review by the Government. I believe there has been substantial progress made in it.

The Government has already implemented a number of measures to enhance consumer protection. As part of the financial sector reform package contained in the December 1986 policy document, Bill C-42 and Bill C-56 received Royal Assent just over a year ago. I think they go a long way to addressing some of the concerns that many of us have in this particular area.

I suggest as well that the federal Government has addressed the problems not only with its jurisdiction, it has encouraged and participated in discussions with its provincial counterparts.

In the area of financial sector change, the Government has met the challenge. Bill C-42 is a good example. The House should reflect for a moment on what measures have been taken by the Government of Canada in this area. Bill C-42 has an extension of the ban on unauthorized presentations of the insurance status of member institutions or of deposits received by them to persons acting as agents of such institutions.

In addition, that Act includes the incorporation in the CDIC Act itself of an existing regulatory requirement that when institutions take deposits which are not insured they must indicate that fact in writing on the deposit in contract. That is a very substantial and important change so that people see on the face of the contract whether or not they are protected.

In addition, there is a new requirement that member institutions who solicit funds for investment on behalf of their investment company subsidiaries or any other non-member of the CDIC give notice to investors that such funds are not covered. These new measures are in addition to the existing prohibition against anyone, other than a member institution, from representing itself or other member institutions as being insured by the CDIC.

As Members are aware, the Government is currently in the process of implementing the remaining measures contained in the December 1986 policy document. Among other things, these measures will grant broader powers to federal financial institutions, enabling them to provide their clients with a much wider range of financial services. The Government views the formation of such groups as a healthy development for Canada's financial markets.

In addition to providing Canadians with more choice and convenience in obtaining financial services, the diversification of financial institutions into new lines of business should enhance their ability to meet the challenge of increasing international competition as well.

The Government is well aware of the potential problems that are entailed in trying to protect the consumer. Consequently, the need for additional measures to address potential problems has been recognized in the draft of the proposed new Trust and Loans Companies Act which was released on December 21, 1987. By expanding the powers of trust and loan companies to provide various sorts of financial services to their clients, the draft legislation would also enable the Governor in Council to make regulations imposing terms and conditions with respect to those activities.

It is important to remember that these measures of consumer protection belong in the context of a major overhaul of the potential Prudential safeguards of our financial system. Bill C-42 has created the office of Superintendent of Financial Institutions, and Bill C-56 gave that office stronger powers than its predecessor organization.

I believe it is fair to say that the CDIC is hard at work at improving public awareness about what it insures. Readable and detailed information brochures are being produced and the corporation is looking into a number of techniques for strenghthening public knowledge of its activities.

The Government is committed to developing legislation that protects the Canadian consumer. I support the Government's efforts in that regard. I suggest as well that as much as the Government of Canada agrees that there must be as much protection as possible, I do not agree with what I think may be implied in this resolution, that somehow we will take over the area and we ourselves will insure provincial lending institutions. That is wrong and would go too far.

I suggest it is typical of the NDP that on every occasion they want to extend the reach of the federal Government to make us responsible for everything. There is a responsibility for us to take leadership in what is in the federal jurisdiction, to protect consumers. We can and should discuss these matters with the provinces, and the provinces themselves should take steps to ensure that those individuals who lend money and deposit money with provincial institutions are protected. But I will not go that one step further and say that we should somehow get into the business ourselves and that we ourselves should become liable for mistakes made within the provincial lending jurisdiction. That is wrong. That is an unwarranted extension of the federal jurisdiction. I would reject that and would hope the Government itself would reject it.

Again, this is an important area of consumer protection, one that I am very pleased to have been able to comment upon.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I also want to take this opportunity to respond to the remarks of my colleague from Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I join my colleagues on both sides of the House in welcoming the opportunity to express the concerns that many of us have on an important consumer protection issue.

The key issue which this motion addressed is, of course: How do we go about ensuring that consumers get the information which they need to make sound saving and investment decisions? This question has been in people's minds a great deal since the failure of the Principal Group in Alberta.

As Members of this House all know, the Principal Group affair falls entirely under provincial juridiction, given that none of the 127 companies that constituted the Principal Group was federally chartered or regulated. In fact, only one of the Principal Group compagnies—Principal Saving and Trust—was even a member institution of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, or CDIC.

Nevertheless, I agree with the mover of this motion that the federal Government has a constructive role to play in preventinig the types of misunderstanding that occurred all too frequently among clients of the Principal Group.

I am pleased to note that the Government has already taken significant steps in the last few years with these issues in mind. Even prior to the Principal Group failure, the Government implemented a number of measures to ensure that clients of CDIC member institutions received better information.

Several of these were implemented through amendments to the CDIC act in July of last year which banned the agents of member institutions from making unauthorized statements regarding the insured status of the institutions or of any deposits received by them; introduced a requirement that when institutions take deposits which are not insured, they must indicate that fact in writing on the deposit contract; and required member institutions who solicit funds for investment on behalf of their investment company subsidiaries or any other non-member to give notice to investors that such funds are not insured.

These new measures are in addition to the existing prohibition against anyone other that a member institution from representing iteslf as being insured by the CDIC.

As Members of this House are aware, the Government is also committed to implementing addidional consumer protection measures as part of its proposed financial sector reforms.

Mr. Speaker, those measures are especially relevant given the growing trend towards the "networking" of financial services that is financial institutions marketing other institutions' products. I agree with the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) when he says, on page 24 of his december 1986 policy paper, that additional measures are needed.

In particular, I agree that rules are needed to ensure that clients of financial institutions are always informed of which financial institution it is that they are actually dealing with and of the presence or absence of deposit insurance coverage on the investments they make.

In conclusion, the measure which the mover of this motion has proposed is one such rule. But it is only one of a number of possible mechanisms for accomplishing this objective. Moreover, it is far from a perfect solution to the problem at hand.

In fact, it could easily create as many new problems as it purports to solve. This is so because, as others have pointed out, it could mislead consumers into believing that there is only one kind of insurance coverage for deposits and deposit-like investments.

In spite of all this, I think that the mover of the motion has the right objective in mind. Therefore, while I cannot support the motion as it currently stands, I support his call for additional efforts on the part of both federal and provincial Governments to take co-ordinated action to prevent the re-emergence of problems similar to those which arose in the Principal Group affair.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that our Government is doing everything so that consumers be better protected than ever before. As a consumer advocate who volunteered to uphold their cause in Quebec, I can assure you that given what has been happening in financial institutions as six of our Conservative colleagues . . . lower credit card interest and lower bank charges, I am more than pleased to see that at long last consumers are beginning to be treated with much more respect. I have always fought for that and I am very proud to be on this side of the House when I see that for once the consumer has been dealt a winning hand.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, this motion presented by the Hon. Member for (Kamloops-Shuswap), (Mr. Riis) raises a concern which is felt by a good many Canadians. Indeed, I believe the record amply shows that it is a concern shared by the Government, one which it has already moved effectively to address.

There can be no question that Canadians expect and deserve the strongest possible reassurance concerning the security of their deposits in our financial institutions. As has been pointed out in this useful debate, not all our individual investment decisions can ever be fully guaranteed. Nevertheless, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation goes a long way in ensuring that our savings will not have disappeared when we go to collect them. It provides an essential level of consumer protection by insuring individual deposits up to $60,000 in our federally chartered banks and most trust and loan companies.

The CDIC certainly provides the cornerstone of our consumer protection system, but it is not the whole structure. The Quebec Insurance Board, for example, offers CDIC-like coverage in that province for deposits in loan and trust companies and caisses populaires under provincial jurisdiction. Other provinces have established a number of corporations offering investment and deposit insurance.

We are not just concerned with protecting what we think of as conventional savings deposits at the bank or trust company. There is the whole business, for instance, of annuities sold by the insurance industry. As we know, the Government is currently working with the industry to determine the most effective means of providing insurance for annuities similar to the coverage the CDIC provides for bank and trust deposits. We must also bear in mind that as a result of the Government's reform of financial institutions legislation, our financial sector can look forward to offering consumers the choice and convenience of a much broader range of products and services. These will be placed on the market through networking arrangements between financial institutions. They are likely to include, to give just one example, deposit-like instruments that are in fact insured, although not necessarily by the same agency that insures the institution that sells them.

In light of all this, I have no quarrel with the general principles underlying this motion. It seeks to improve consumer protection, and none of us are against that. However, the question to be asked is, would it effectively strengthen measures the Government already has in place and is in the process of implementing? Or does it, instead, try to do right things in a wrong way and thus unnecessarily creates new problems?

Other Members have already pointed out some of the motion's deficiencies in this respect and I will not dwell on them. Everyone agrees on the necessity for harmonization and co-operation between the federal Government and the provinces, but this is not likely to be achieved by asking federal regulators to set rules in areas of provincial jurisdiction. There are also technical problems raised by the motion including uncertainty of the precise meaning of the term "insured deposits", bearing in mind the variety of deposit insurance agencies and plans to which I have already referred.

This debate has nonetheless served the useful purpose of highlighting the range of measures the Government has undertaken to improve consumer protection even as financial sector reform allows growth of new and innovative customer services. The Government has strengthened the arm of the CDIC through the new provisions which clarify when deposits are and are not insured. It is now a statutory requirement that deposit contracts issued by CDIC-insured member institutions and their affiliates indicate in writing when deposits are not insured under the CDIC. Non-members of the CDIC and all persons acting as their agents are prohibited from representing themselves as being insured by the CDIC.

The Government's draft trust and loan companies legislation, as well as the new legislation covering banks and insurance companies, will empower the Government to impose strict regulations on the operations of these companies to safeguard consumers. What I believe all this adds up to is that Canadians have every reason for having confidence in the soundness of our financial institutions in the new era of reform, and in the Government's determination to give first priority to the protection of consumer interest.

As you well know, Mr. Speaker, I am from the Province of Alberta. Over the past few years we have had our problems. We have had problems with the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank as well as the Northland Bank. After much discussion and a great many hearings the Government moved to assist the depositors. The opposition Member who is putting forward this motion, as well as members of the Official Opposition, ridiculed the Government. They opposed the Conservative Government when we moved to protect consumers in both these cases. How they have changed their minds. They have done a 180 degree turnaround. Now they are even talking about the federal Government moving on the disastrous Principal Group problem that we have in Edmonton, Alberta.

The Principal Group comes under provincial jurisdiction. It is certainly not under the federal Government's authority. I do not see any reason why the federal Government should step outside its bounds of authority.

Over the past couple of years the Government has taken initiatives through Bill C-42 and Bill C-56. Bill C-42 strengthens the federal supervision of financial institutions. New powers will improve the ability of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to protect the interests of insured depositors and other creditors. Federal regulators will have a stronger and a clearer sense of powers to take control of financial institutions that are insolvent and that violate their regulatory requirements.

We have also passed Bill C-56, a Bill that strengthens legislation governing banks, federally regulated trust, insurance and loan companies. The Government is committed through this Bill to ensuring that federally regulated financial institutions remain sound and are competitive, both domestically and internationally. We have taken steps to support and improve consumers' deposits. We have addressed issues—not to say that there is not more to be done.

In speaking to this motion I am sorry that I cannot support it. I feel very strongly that the Government, through Bill C-42 and Bill C-56, has certainly moved into the area to assure consumers that they have absolutely more legislation governing banks and federally regulated institutions, and that the CDIC has certainly improved its mandate. There is now more supervision in terms of CDIC deposits.

I appreciate having the time to express my views. I am sorry for the problems that Alberta has faced over the past few years. Hopefully, the province can resolve the Principal Group situation. We look forward to consumers being assisted there.

Mrs, Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for bringing this motion before the House. As many of my colleagues have already indicated, the question of consumer protection in this period of financial institution reform is of obvious concern to many people, I am sure that all of us, as Members of Parliament, have heard from constituents who are worried about the stability and safety of Canada's financial institutions, particularly given the high profile failures of certain institutions over the past decade.

These failures have had a high profile, of course largely because the underlying stability and safety of our financial system made them unusual—the exceptions to the rule. While their effect on the system and the economy has been relatively small, they must not be considered unimportant. They are not unimportant to a small investor or depositor who loses money. He or she does not want the two levels of Government to point fingers and assign blame; they want something done about the situation.

These incidents have pointed to flaws in the existing system which must be addressed by both federal and provincial governments. I say federal and provincial governments, Mr. Speaker, because as you know, jurisdiction in this area is shared. As the motion before us indicates by calling for co-operation between levels of governments, neither the federal Government nor provincial governments alone can protect the entire financial system.

The Federal Government has given top priority to protecting the consumer. In fact, it has been one of the most important principles guiding the Government's reform of the financial sector ever since it first came out with its Green Paper in the spring of 1985. Indeed, on the very first page of that discussion document the Government committed itself to nine principles designed to better serve the public interest in the regulation of financial institutions in Canada.

The principles are as follows:

—to improve consumer protection;

—strict control of self-dealing;

—to guard against abuses of conflicts of interest;

—to promote competition, innovation and efficiency;

—to enhance the convenience and options available to consumers in the market place;

—to broaden the sources of credit available to individuals and business;

—to ensure the soundness of financial institutions and the stability of the financial system;

—to promote international competitiveness and domestic economic growth; and —to promote the harmonization of federal and provincial regulatory policies.

The Government re-affirmed its commitment to these principles in its Blue Paper tabled in the House in December 1986. These principles have guided the Government's actions ever since and, as indicated by its position on the list, consumer protection has been given top priority.

Mr. Speaker, a number of my colleagues have already pointed out the many ways in which the Government has strengthened and improved consumer protection. They have set out very well the measures it plans to introduce to further improve protection in the future. I am not going to spend the valuable time of the House in yet another recitation of these measures.

Let me just say about this that I believe the Government has done a lot to protect consumers, and should be congratulated for its work rather than receiving concealed criticism for not going even further. That does not mean that we cannot do more. I know that I am always interested in hearing about new ways to help consumers, as I am sure are most of my colleagues. However, although I can agree with the principles behind the Hon. Member's motion, that reflect in certain ways the principles I outlined earlier, I believe there are a number of problems with the motion.

There would be a number of difficulties involved in drafting a waiver form to take into account all the different kinds of situations facing consumers of financial products today. As the borders between financial institutions become increasingly blurred, the difficulties would worsen. Even now it is difficult for a financial institution to know when a person's deposits exceed $60,000; for example, the client may have many different accounts located in various branches of the same institution.

There is also the difficulty of defining accurately the term "insured deposit". After all, there are many different kinds of deposit-insurance agencies, including: the federally chartered Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, which insures federally chartered banks and most trust and loan companies; the Quebec Insurance Board, which offers similar coverage in Quebec for deposits in loan and trust companies and Quebec-registered caisse populaires; the Corporation du fonds de sécurité de la confédération Desjardins; various provincial "equalization funds" and investment-insurance and deposit-insurance corporations; and, compensation plans for holders of annuities and life and general insurance policies that are presently under discussion.

The situation becomes increasingly complicated when you consider that, in the future, financial institutions will be able to provide their customers with a much broader range of financial products and services. These could include instruments that are insured, but not by the same organization that insures the institution doing the selling. The possible complications along this line are endless.

The points I have made are only a few of the problems I foresee in trying to implement the Hon. Member's motion. But, as I indicated earlier, the general principles behind the motion—strengthening consumer protection and encouraging federal-provincial co-operation—are shared by the Government.

As the NPD House Leader pointed out in his opening remarks in February, his initiative is only one way of dealing with the issue of increasing consumer protection. Indeed, he admitted, and I quote: "There may even be other better ways of dealing with it." I believe this debate has revealed that the government has found better ways of dealing with the problem and has either implemented them or is in the process of implementing them.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, whose motion we are debating this afternoon, for giving me the opportunity to speak on the important and timely issue of better protection for depositors and investors in Canada's financial institutions.

The motion states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces in establishing a system whereby those individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

In slightly less complicated terms the motion simply states that we improve our consumer protection and regulations, and that we co-operate and consult with the provinces in order to do so. This could be described as a motherhood issue. Everyone, particularly members of the Government, is in favour of ensuring that depositors and investors can continue to have a high degree of confidence in our financial institutions. We all want to know that our money is safe and that our banks and other deposit taking institutions will continue to be world class in both their levels of security and in their service to the public.

In these fast moving times, particularly in the financial sector, the issue is even higher in the minds of many. I can certainly understand the concerns of many Canadians when they read about the failure of some of our financial institutions.

Those of us who were elected for the first time in 1984 from the Province of British Columbia had barely been in office when we were approached by people who had invested their life savings in the B.C. Teachers' Investment and Housing Co-operative. It is a tragedy of tremendous dimension for people whose hard earned life savings are invested in any enterprise, whether it is a co-op, a business venture, or a bank. Many of these people were retired and their opportunity to earn was clearly diminished. They were dependent upon the investment that they had made and the deposits that they had in these institutions for their well-being. To lose them, by some freak combination of circumstances beyond their control, was a shattering blow to them. The hurt, harm, and in many cases the ill health that resulted from this failure, was of tragic dimension.

Consequently, federal and provincial Governments must do what is reasonably possible to assure Canadians that the financial sector, whether federal or provincial, is as strong and safe as it can be made.

However, ladies, gentlemen, and colleagues, there is no question that business ventures are exactly that; risks are taken, investments are made, and there is no guarantee in this world that all business investments will be successful. As parliamentarians we have to determine what is the proper role for us in trying to safeguard innocent Canadians without being so heavy-handed in a bureaucratic sense in attempting to indemnify for each and every possible risk that might come that indeed business is stifled itself. That is why debate such as this is important.

It is very clear that the present Government places a high priority on revamping our financial institutions to provide the safety measures that we all believe desirable. I personally feel much more assured by the measures the Government has taken over the past several years. I hope other Canadians will also feel that their money is safe and will continue to be safe in this period of financial sector reform.

No matter how hard we try, it is very difficult to legislate common sense. If an individual is determined to invest money, in the first instance that individual must assume some responsibility for checking out what it is that they are doing with that money. We can pass all the rules we like in Ottawa, but an investor who does not bother to read the big print, never mind the fine print, makes it very difficult for us as parliamentarians to save them harmless from all the things they might choose to do.

I am not going to repeat what a number of my colleagues have already said about the many ways in which the Government has and is strengthening and improving consumer protection. Nor will I reiterate the numerous problems and difficulties in implementing the Hon. Member's motion. Many of my colleagues have also pointed out that the Government has important and far-reaching plans for further improved protection, and they have adequately described those plans. I believe it would be a waste of your time, Mr. Speaker, and that of Members of the House to go over them one more time.

I would like to add my assurance that the Government has always, and will always, put the protection of Canadian consumers uppermost in its financial reform plans. We have also co-operated and consulted extensively with the provinces to better harmonize financial regulations across the country. This is consistent with what the Government has been saying about financial reforms since day one.

In the Agenda for Economic Renewal which was presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) shortly after we came to office, we discussed directions for change for the regulation of financial institutions. We stated: "The Government intends to respond by working with the provinces, the public and the financial community to ensure that legislation reflects the rapidly changing financial sector. Among the objectives must be the efficient delivery of financial services, while maintaining adequate protection for investors and savers, and intergovernmental harmonization of the regulatory framework".

If one reads the Government's original Green Paper on Financial Sector Reform, it is clear that protecting consumers has been a top priority for the Government. Indeed, on page 1 of that document the Government listed nine principles which would guide us in planning new directions for our financial sector. All nine principles were designed to ensure that the public would continue to have confidence in our financial sector while, at the same time, ensuring that the sector would remain strong and competitive internationally and could offer consumers more and better services.

Our number one principle was "To improve consumer protection"; as I said before, we have been consistent.

Our other eight principles were as follows: to strengthen the controls against self-dealing; to guard against abuses of conflict of interest; to design a financial sector policy that promotes competition in the sector, while enhancing innovation and improving efficiency; to ensure that customers in the market-place will be able to choose from a wider array of options and new services and that the trend toward more convenience for consumers would continue; to broaden the sources of credit available to individuals and to businesses; to ensure and enhance the soundness and stability of the financial system; to promote the international competitiveness of our institutions while ensuring that they can continue to aid domestic economic growth; and, finally, to promote the harmonization of federal and provincial regulatory policies.

We have reiterated these principles and reaffirmed our commitment to them in the Blue Paper that we tabled in the House of Commons in December, 1986. We have been guided by these principles since.

It is clear that what the Hon. Member wants to achieve with his motion—and it is a laudable motion, namely better consumer protection and federal-provincial co-operation—is exactly what the Government is already working to achieve. Indeed, when he introduced his motion last February, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pointed out that there may be better ways of dealing with the issue.

That remains to be determined. The Government is working energetically to find those safeguards. I had the privilege very recently of hosting the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) in my constituency of Esquimalt—Saanich. During his visit I arranged meetings for him with the banking community, members of the co-operative institutions and members of the trust companies to review the safeguards that we are discussing here today.

Part of the meeting was spent with my MLA in the Province of British Columbia, who also happens to be the Minister of Finance in the provincial Government. We discussed at some length the various kinds of institutions and the measures that this motion proposes.

I congratulate the Member for bringing forward this idea. It has to be very seriously considered, but as part of an over-all comprehensive review. It is one thing for us to pass rules here; it is another matter to legislate common sense. People have signed documents and have unhappily found, to their sorrow, that they really did not read what they had signed and did not know what they were signing, so it is difficult for us as legislators to indemnify citizens from many of their own actions when they choose to invest their money.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to rise for a few minutes and speak on Motion No. 143 in the name of my friend and colleague from Kamloops—Shuswap. It points out again the importance of the Private Members' Hour. My friend opposite from Kamloops—Shuswap, I am sure, is setting a world record for the number of Bills that have been introduced to the Private Members' Hour. I know that that indicates his extreme personal interest in the Private Members' Hour because he certainly is setting an historic record. I am sure that there will be other Members who might think that it has something to do with the strategy with respect to free trade, in delaying the House—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: —that his interest only lies between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. I know, from my long friendship with him, that it is of great interest, and I think that the House would be interested in some of the more interesting Bills that he has put. It shows the breadth of his interest in the affairs of this nation.

For example, on September 11, 1987, he put forward a Private Member's Motion, "that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of working with the provinces to require houseboats and other large marine craft to be equipped with holding tanks with gray water. I had never heard the phrase "gray water" in my entire life. I look forward to the debate to find out just what that actually includes. But it shows that my friend opposite is interested in gray water.

On April 25 of this year he urged also that the House urge all Members of Parliament to fill out their own annual income tax returns so as to serve as a direct reminder of the increasing length and complexity of these forms. I was under the impression that he was opposed to corporal punishment. Surely, having to fill out our own form is practically a capital punishment, certainly a corporal punishment. I will be interested in following his comments in that debate. It would seem to be rather intrusive.

Here is another one. June 15 of this year, a Private Member's Bill, second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-296, an Act establishing a moratorium on the continuing development of nuclear power in Canada for the purposes of establishing a public inquiry. That takes courage, because the Province of Saskatchewan has enormous resources in uranium and very much wants to exploit it. He has Members from his own Party who may have a different view on it, in view of the fact that there are so many jobs in Saskatchewan.

There is also a cost, I suppose, of burning petroleum products or coal, in terms of the carbon dioxide. But it shows his breadth of interest, that he would ask this Parliament would debate that issue. He should be encouraged to carry on.

Here is another one. July 20, 1988, second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-310, an Act to amend the Criminal Code dealing with cattle rustling and range cattle. Presumably that is to put some degree of stability into the handling of rustlers. I know in my riding what they do with rustlers, and it has to do with tops of tin cans, and there are not very many repeaters when a cattle rustler is caught out on the range in my riding.

Here is another one. July 27. Let us just skip that one. I do want to address the Bill. Here is one on August 10, 1988, second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-313, an Act respecting senior citizens. On the face of it, that might be a licensing provision, a registration provision, it might be to grant them goods. I can hardly wait for it to be called so I can find out just what my friend opposite has in mind with respect to senior citizens. I hope it is not to abolish them or to do something like that. Here is the most interesting of all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is very interesting, but I will please ask that the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills speak on the Private Member's Bill that the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap introduced today. I know that he introduces many, but we are supposed to speak about the one today.

Mr. Thacker: Thank you. I accept your admonition, Mr. Speaker. I will move straight away to Motion No. 143. I certainly share the concern of my friend opposite with respect to the issue of consumer protection in the financial sector. I would think that it is similar to the last motion that he put forth to the House on August 15; second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-315, an Act respecting Magna Carta Day. I thought that that was an interesting Bill because I know his Party as a whole is really opposed to the principle of the Magna Carta, which was the entrenchment of property rights.

Here we have the House Leader of the New Democratic Party having the courage—and it takes courage to stand against that Party, because it did not permit a free vote on capital punishment, that Canadians wanted—

An Hon. Member: Yes, it did. We voted as we wanted to. We voted free on that one.

An Hon. Member: Shame, shame!

Mr. Thacker: It did not permit a free vote on the abortion issue. It would not permit a free vote on the entrenchment of property rights. Here we have the House Leader with courage, standing up and standing against his Party—

An Hon. Member: He is in favour of property rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I always listen with interest to my hon. friend, but I thought I should say for the record that the points he makes about not having a free vote on capital punishment, property rights and abortion, is incorrect. They were all free votes. There was never any indication from the leader or the Party that members were required to vote in a certain way. I know it is surprising but we are a small caucus and it just so happens on certain issues there is a unanimity of feeling. What might have appeared to not have been a free vote was in fact a free vote and Members could dissent if they wished.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, there were in fact dissenters in our caucus who did not vote with the majority of the caucus on the abortion legislation. I wish the Hon. Member who is speaking now would speak to the truth and not misrepresent what has happened in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would certainly like to hear a debate about the motion.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear from the House Leader that there was a free vote for the Members who came. If you were not able to vote along with the rest, you stayed away, as the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) indicated. If you disagree in that Party, you stay away.

As I said earlier, I share the concern with respect to Motion 143 of the Hon. Member with respect to the issue of consumer protection in the financial sector. As he is well aware, however, the Government has given this issue a high priority as part of its financial reform package announced in December of 1986. For well over a year the Government has been dealing with this issue directly.

You will recall that last summer two separate pieces of legislation which strengthened consumer protection in the financial sector were passed and proclaimed. First, Bill C-42 made it a statutory requirement for CDIC insured institutions to indicate in writing on the deposit contract when they take uninsured deposits. That was a very good public policy and Parliament agreed with it.

The legislation cleared up the confusion surrounding the prohibition of non-members of the CDIC from representing themselves as being insured by the CDIC. That prohibition applies to institutions and all persons acting as their agents. The legislation goes further. CDIC insured institutions that solicit funds for investment on behalf of their investment company subsidiaries or non-members of the CDIC must give notice to investors that such companies are non-members and that such funds are not insured by the CDIC.

Second, another Bill, Bill C-56, introduced minimum capital requirements for life insurance companies. That will push the insurance industry to develop new forms of insurance to cover deposit-like instruments in the industry. The work is still in progress but it will result in coverage for insurance company annuities similar to the coverage for deposits provided by the CDIC. I am sure you would agree that the solution coming from the private industry where people work 24 hours a day would be much better than us as Members of Parliament trying to impose something from Ottawa. As we all know, we simply cannot cover that myriad of human relations and interactions that occur out there and it is much better if the protection comes from the field rather than from Ottawa.

I can assure the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that the Government is moving effectively to deal with potential consumer protection issues as they relate to the Government's remaining legislation on financial reform. That legislation will allow federal financial institutions to offer their clients a wider range of financial services. In particular, financial institutions will be able to enter into networking arrangements. This will help financial companies to remain competitive at home and abroad. It will improve services to Canadians.

However, these developments also raise concerns with respect to consumer protection since the companies involved in the networking arrangement may not all be members of the CDIC. In view of this fact, the trust and loan companies legislation that we have drafted will enable the Government to make regulations imposing terms and conditions on the networking activities undertaken by these companies. Similar provisions will apply in the new legislation for banks and insurance companies.

I could go on because I have notes covering it, but I know my time has expired and there is another Member who would like to speak on this important issue.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, there is another Member whose duty it is to speak on this issue.

The House of Commons works in wondrous ways. The idea presented to us this afternoon by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is quite simple. Maybe you would not get that from listening to the debate that has now been going on for something like four and a half hours, I believe. The idea is really simple. Someone walks into a deposit-taking institution, a bank or trust company, and puts his hard cash down on the counter. There is a general assumption there that that money will be covered by CDIC or it will be insured. However, there are certain circumstances when it is not insured and what the Hon. Member wants to make sure of is that a person should be told whether or not that particular deposit is insured. In order for them to know he wants them to have to sign a little form, a little waiver or something like that.

It seems to me like a pretty simple idea and all the pros and cons of that could be debated maybe in half an hour at best and then maybe we could have a vote on it. That is not the way the House of Commons operates, unfortunately. It seems like we must have five hours debate on this. I am sure that certain people within the Department of Finance and the Ministry of State for Finance are rather hoping that this matter will die on the Order Paper and then our friend can resurrect it in the next Parliament in the unlikely event he is re-elected.

Eventually, I think the idea will come to fruition. Certainly a lot of thought has been given to the whole idea of deposit insurance and making sure that people know what they are getting themselves into when they put that money on the counter.

It is evident from things that have happened in the recent past, with the bankruptcy of trust companies—Principal Trust is a good case in point which has been brought to our attention several times already—where people who thought or had every reason to believe that their deposit was insured found out that it was not. The usual reason was because the deposit was for a term of more than five years. Occasionally it might have been when the deposit was for an amount in excess of $60,000. We have been in debate in this House before as to whether or not it might be a good idea to up the $60,000 amount of $100,000, which I believe it is in the U.S. That is something that I personally would favour.

However, when someone walks into a deposit-taking institution, very often there is a big sign up there, or a little sign somewhere, that they can see which says this institution is a member of the Canada Deposit Corporation. It gives everyone the expectation that the deposit is insured. Sometimes I think these signs can be misleading, not deliberately so, but it might be a good idea if on that sign it would specify which deposits are insured and which deposits are not. It would have to be done in not too small a print but a fair size print on that sign so that people know.

It is also surprising the lack of knowledge on the part of many bank or trust employees. When you ask them whether a particular deposit is insured or not, they frequently do not know the details.

Anyway, I see that I have successfully concluded my mission. It is now six o'clock and I look forward to debating the issue again when it next arises.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the Order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 18476) and of Mr. Langdon (p. 18476).

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on this group of motions. The purpose of these motions is to try to reduce some of the harmful effects that will arise from the free trade agreement and Bill C-130 if they become established.

These motions, of course, cannot stop the Bill or reduce it in any way, or they would not have been allowed on the Order Paper. The one I want to speak about particularly is Motion No. 22 which reads:

It refers to the Government's power to establish a committee or committees and it proceeds to say:

> —One such committee that the Governor in Council may establish, under this section, shall monitor and review matters arising out of the Act or the Agreement, including
> (a) the adjustment impact on company workers and communities;
> (b) the activities, economic viability and ability to compete within a given sector of all companies doing business in Canada and the United States of America; and

I want to speak most particularly about part (a), the adjustment impact on company workers and communities, and I will have a few words to say also about part (b), the economic viability and ability to compete.

On part (a), I am concerned with one of the major industries in Spadina and in other parts of Canada, the clothing, textile and footwear industries as a group. This is an industry which has been suffering in recent years from a defective policy of the present and previous Governments on international trade and some tens of thousands of jobs have been lost during the 1980s and are not being, for the most part, recovered.

One reason why this industry is threatened—and in fact, the Chairman of the SAGIT, Mr. Nygard, who took part in the negotiations, says that it is threatened and that it should be withdrawn from the agreement—is that the current tariff levels in these industries are well above the average level of Canadian duties and therefore there is a wide consensus that this industry will suffer severely by the trade deal.

In the clothing industry, there may be a few specialty firms that will do well, but in general, with a tariff of around 23 per cent, the trade deal cuts will have a serious impact, particularly on major employers who are producing standardized, high-volume clothing. Canadian plants working by licence from foreign-owned firms are expected to suffer seriously. In Ontario alone, it is estimated by the industry, by the labour movement and by the Government that there will be 20,000 jobs at serious risk. That is in the clothing industry.

In the textile industry, the tariff averages close to 17 per cent. When these tariffs come down, the industry will suffer serious loss, as it did when the Government removed the import restrictions on leather footwear. Industry estimates show that Canadian producers of man-made fibres and cotton, cotton/polyester yarns and fabrics will not be in a position to compete with American imports. In fact, imports accounted for about 32 per cent of the market in 1986, up from only 26 per cent four years before.

We had a trade deficit in this industry in 1986 of $635 million and it will get worse under the trade deal, especially for Ontario where close to 50 per cent of the firms are located. Many, many of the workers will be out of work.

Mr. McDermid: That isn't where the competition is coming from, it's coming from Third World countries.

Mr. Heap: Much of the competition is coming from Third World countries, but the cut-back produced by this trade deal and by its restriction on Canadian exports regarding the fabrics used will make a difficult situation far more difficult.

The tariff on the footwear products runs close to 21 per cent. This deal would bring the tariff down to zero by 1998. There will be tens of thousands of workers in these three industries displaced, and the majority of the workers in these industries are women.

Mr. McDermid: Do you like keeping women in those ghettos?

Mr. Heap: Of those women, the majority are immigrants, often with no more than grade school education.

Mr. McDermid: Low-paid ghetto. You like keeping people in those positions. You support that.

Mr. Heap: Those are the jobs these women have been able to get in our economy, and they will be forced out of those jobs by the reduction of the tariffs.

Mr. McDermid: And into better jobs, and they deserve better.

Mr. Heap: The Hon. Member says they deserve better jobs, and I agree with him, but the Hon. Member and his colleagues have done nothing to provide them with better jobs. Most of the new jobs created around Toronto and in central Ontario have been low-paid clerical and sales jobs, not better paid manufacturing jobs or professional jobs.

The Hon. Member who generally makes his interventions only when other people have their time to speak is not addressing the situation of these women whose education and language hold them back from these fancy jobs with fancy wages that the Hon. Member is dreaming about. The fact is, these women were brought here to be cheap labour, as the Chinese were brought a century ago by John A. Macdonald, only he was truthful enough to say that as soon as they had done their essential job of building the railway, he would make sure that they were got rid of. It didn't happen that way. Some of their grandchildren are still here with us, but this is the attitude that is being applied now to these women who work in the garment industry. Therefore, there should be a committee to monitor what is happening to the workers in the garment industry and its related industries so that if the Hon. Member survives the next election, he might become educated about the facts of life of people who do not work in the expensive industries in his riding. There are others in his riding that are not expensive, but he is probably not aware of them.

What I am asking for is simply a committee to monitor and follow the fate of what is happening to the people in the garment and textile and footwear industry and in other industries like the computer service industry in which the Chairman of the Canadian Independent Computer Service Association estimates that there are already over 200,000 jobs lost and that the loss could go 300,000 jobs higher than that.

It is worth keeping track of several hundred thousand jobs so that we know what we will have to do to find these better paid jobs for those people who the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary wants us to dream about.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak particularly to Motion No. 19. This motion would delete Clause 9 which would give the federal Government the authority it needs to impose the wine and spirits chapter of the agreement on the provinces. I and my Party believe that Clause 9 should be opposed, in fact that the whole agreement should be opposed, on the grounds that it allows the federal Government to enter unilaterally into provincial jurisdiction.

The Mulroney Government has boasted about how it has created a new era of federal-provincial co-operation and understanding. Yet, through this trade deal with the United States it turns around and unilaterally attempts to intrude in a way the provinces, especially the Province of Ontario, are not willing to accept in an essential area of provincial jurisdiction. This is a strange way to carry out, in a more meaningful and effective way, co-operation between federal and provincial governments. As is the case in so many matters, the Government has been saying one thing but doing another.

In short, Motion 19 not only allows the federal Government to intrude unilaterally into provincial jurisdiction but upsets, as a result, the federal-provincial balance and, above all, sacrifices the Canadian grape and wine industry. It is not only the farmers who grow the grapes who are sacrificed but the thousands of people who work with them during harvest and the thousands of people who manufacture the machinery and supplies they use and sell them to the grape growers of Ontario and British Columbia primarily.

If this deal goes ahead it will, as I have said, sacrifice the Canadian grape and wine industry. It has been estimated that some 20,000 direct and indirect jobs connected with the wine industry will be sacrificed in Ontario alone and thousands more will be sacrificed in British Columbia. That is another case of the Government saying one thing and doing another. The Government has boasted unduly about the jobs that have been created since it came into power. It has not made clear exactly what it has done to create those jobs and I do not think the creation of those jobs has very much to do with the policies of the Government. In fact, we see an example in this trade deal of how the policies of the Government are not creating jobs but destroying them, not by the hundreds but by the thousands.

A spokesperson for Bright's Wines of Canada best summarized the wine provisions of the agreement on the CBC television program Venture last August 15. He said that basically the agreement will allow the United States wine industry to dominate the Canadian market and that once that American domination is established, it is unlikely that Canadian wine consumers will see significant price reductions as a consequence.

In fact, my recollection of that program is that the spokesperson for Bright's Wines said that the price of wines, both Canadian and American, would actually go up as a result of this agreement. That is again a case of the Government saying one thing while its actions bring about quite a different result.

The Government has been boasting that because of its trade agreement with the United States, consumers would be able to purchase cheaper products. With specific reference to the wine industry, the Government said consumers would be able to purchase cheaper wine, both Canadian wine and wine imported from the United States. Yet, one of the most knowledgeable persons in the Canadian wine industry, the head of Bright's Wines of Canada, has said that consumers will have a rude surprise if and when this trade agreement goes into effect because instead of cheaper wines, wines will be more expensive. That is another example of the Conservatives saying one thing and, through their policies, actually bringing about something quite different.

If this deal goes into effect and the tariffs and other provisions which support the Canadian wine industry are eliminated, not only will consumers, according to the President of Bright's Wines, have to pay more for their wine but in the interim Canadian vineyards will have been pulled out and our wine producers will have been lost.

We must recognize that there have been sound reasons for the policies we have to protect our Canadian wine industry. These reasons are not linked with narrow protectionism. Instead, they recognize the higher costs of production in Canada due to the shortness of our growing season and our over-all climatic conditions.

The Tories may say that it is just too bad, that if we do not have the right climatic conditions and the right growing season we should not have a wine industry. However, we have these climatic conditions not only for the wine industry but for our entire agricultural sector. If we apply the Tory reasoning to our agricultural sector right across the board, the Tories are saying goodbye to Canadian agriculture. As far as the Tories are concerned, Canadian agriculture can go down the tubes. As far as they are concerned, Canada can go down the tubes. They say "Goodbye Canada", because this whole country has to live with the shortness of our growing season and our over-all climatic conditions.

The Canadian wine industry is clearly one of the major losers through the Mulroney trade deal. Virtually all analyses made by industry spokesmen predict widespread job losses in Ontario and British Columbia. The trade deal talks about the tariffs being removed over 10 years. However, if I am not mistaken 50 percent of those tariffs are removed in the first two years.

Mr. McDermid: You are mistaken, it is the discriminatory pricing that is removed.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West)): I am sorry, I stand corrected, 50 per cent of the pricing provisions are removed in the first two years. That is still a very sharp blow to the Canadian wine industry. We are not talking here about a thoughtful, caring, compassionate program of adjustment for our grape growers and the thousands of people connected with the industry. Instead, the Conservative Government is ready to deliver a short, sharp blow to the industry irrespective of the effect on the thousands of people connected with it.

Mr. McDermid: What about your friends at GATT?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West)): The Parliamentary Secretary talks about GATT. If I am not mistaken there is not the same requirement in the GATT decision to bring about the changes in the same short, sharp period. This is something which the Tory Government wants to bring into effect and the Tory Government will have to live with the tragic results of its policy.

As the tariffs are removed and provincial pricing policies are phased out, Canadian wine producers and grape growers will find it increasingly difficult to compete. There is little doubt that thousands of jobs will be lost in the wine industry as Canadian producers lose the domestic market to American imports just to pay more for wine than we are paying already.

If so many jobs are going to be lost as a result of these Tory policies expressed in the trade agreement with the United States, does the Government have in effect a fair program of compensation and adjustment? We have asked the Government and it cannot answer as to what it is going to offer to the grape growers of Ontario. It has announced a program for British Columbia and the growers there say it is grossly inadequate.

It is grossly inadequate for one important reason in particular, among others, and that is because the Government cannot say whether the payments for the acreage that will be taken out of production will be taxable. If these payments are taxable their valve will be sharply reduced and will not have any relation to the value of the acreage in question.

Clause 19 is just another reason to oppose this deal here in the House of Commons. It is just another reason for Canadians to believe and agree that this trade deal is a thoroughly bad deal, not only for the wine industry but for the entire country. We must oppose this deal in this House and, as I have said before, through a general election to ensure that it never comes into effect.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to have an opportunity to debate Motion Nos. 17,19, 21, 22, 23, and 25. I rise to address particularly Motion No. 22 which states in part:

> One such committee that the Governor in Council may establish, under this section, shall monitor and review matters arising out of the Act or the agreement, including the adjustment impact on company workers and communities.

I am sure that the House is aware of the all-Party parliamentary committee report on human rights and aging in Canada. That report was adopted by the Human Rights Committee unanimously, without dissent, without quarrel and substantially without debate.

• (1820)

As I am sure you are aware, with the composition of committees in this Parliament, it was composed of a vast majority of Conservative Members of Parliament who must be congratulated for the objectivity, sincerity and concern with which they addressed the problems of the aged and elderly in this country.

They recognized that those who will be most affected in a number of industries that are the targets of closures and rationalization will be older workers who, because of their age, will have extreme difficulty in finding new jobs. The committee was concerned about that.

When one considers the substance of this motion, which is to establish a committee that would consider the adjustment impact on company workers, one is completely befuddled as to why the Government simply does not accept this amendment.

Mr. McDermid: It is totally unnecessary.

Mr. McCurdy: I must say I understand the difficulties attended on raising the question of whether those Members have read the recommendation of the committee. It is unlikely in light of the fact the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has not read the free trade agreement and presumably not the Act. I suppose it is too much to ask if they have read anything that impinges upon the agreement or the Act.

Nevertheless, it is important to note what the committee unanimously recommended, with its majority of Conservative Members, and with the full knowledge of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and its impact on older workers. It is a clear endorsement of the amendment that we are discussing before the House tonight. I will read the recommendation because I know Tories are not inclined to read anything. It states:

> We therefore recommend that the Government of Canada create an interdepartmental task force to explore the multiple impacts of corporate rationalization, plant closures and corporate takeovers on older workers, and seek the co-operation of provincial governments, as needed, in developing relevant measures including a comprehensive safety net including the protection of pensions, adequate notice and severance pay, and special retraining and job-search assistance.

Mr. Nicholson: Get to the point.

Mr. McCurdy: The point is obvious to everyone in the world except a Tory who can neither read the free trade agreement nor the recommendations of a committee with a majority of Tories. It says quite specifically that the amendment being discussed here, Motion No. 22, should be accepted.

If a committee of seven parliamentarians, five of whom are Conservatives, say that there should be a committee as suggested in this amendment, to look at the questions of the displacement and the adjustment impact on company workers, one would have thought that it would have been a rather easy thing for a majority on the Government side to accept that kind of amendment.

My colleague, the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) agrees with me. He is a rational person. I am sure that my colleague, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) agrees with me. He is a rational person. And five Members of the committee agree with me. They are all rational people. They are even more rational than that. I will read further from the report because it is an interesting indictment of some of the provisions of the free trade agreement as it will affect not only older workers but all workers and the interests of Canadians.

Mr. McDermid: You opposed the Auto Pact.

Mr. McCurdy: Let me read for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary what his colleagues said in the committee-

Mr. McDermid: You opposed the Auto Pact.

Mr. McCurdy: It is amazing how we provoke them. We provoke them because they know they are wrong.

Mr. McDermid: Because you are not telling the truth.

Mr. McCurdy: They are provoked because we have spotted an inconsistency here. They are provoked because they know their colleagues support in principle this amendment, and have done so through a parliamentary committee report. That is why they are provoked. They will be provoked even more when they hear what it says further in the report:

> The use of Investment Canada in minimizing any adverse employment impacts of foreign takeovers, and the targeting of regional development spending to assist the growth of new businesses in areas hit by major closures, are possible approaches.

That precedes the recommendation consistent with Motion No. 22.

Mr. McDermid: There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement which prevents that.

Mr. McCurdy: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, who continues to interrupt without substance or logic, seems to have missed the point. A majority of Members of a parliamentary committee, to wit the Conservatives, say that Investment Canada should have a significant role in protecting workers who may be displaced by plant closures and foreign takeovers. Yet he knows that Investment Canada has been emasculated in this free trade agreement and is emasculated by Bill C-130.

Mr. Witer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening very carefully to the remarks of the Hon. Member. I cannot help but come to the conclusion that the Member is misleading the House, perhaps not deliberately, but indeed misleading the House by making Members believe that in fact there is any reference to free trade in the report to which he has just referred. There is no mention of free trade in that report whatsoever. The Member is cleverly trying to mislead the House that there is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. That is a matter of debate. The Member for Windsor—Walkerville has the floor.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, let me thank my hon. colleague for having identified this Member as being clever. It must be by contrast to his colleagues.

However, I never suggested that the report even mentioned free trade. I did say, and I am glad the Hon. Member indicated this, that it mentions Investment Canada. It does prescribe a role for Investment Canada. As a Tory who, like the Minister of Trade, probably has not read anything, he may not know that Investment Canada for all intents and purposes will not exist as a result of this agreement.

Mr. McDermid: That is wrong.

Mr. McCurdy: Canadians ought to know this, Canadians will know this, and the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary knows it, even though he denies it. That is an indictment of his integrity. It is shameful that he should utter the falsehoods he does from across the way.

• (1830)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to say a few words on this group of amendments in my usual calm reasoned way. I want to make Members opposite understand there is still a chance for them to vote down this agreement.

Mr. McDermid: Explain how we can do that.

Mr. Boudria: I will explain it slowly so the Conservatives will understand. Article 8 of the Bill says: "This agreement is hereby approved". One very clever amendment from my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) would delete this clause from the Bill. That is one of the amendments we are now debating. There is still a chance. I say to these Tories who have got themselves into this mess that there is a way out.

Mr. Siddon: What mess?

Mr. Boudria: I say to the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) that he should reconsider his decision. If there is a chance, Mr. Speaker, that you think my comments could be interpreted as partisan, which is probably the furthest thing from your mind, you will be happy to know that I an not the only one who disagrees with this trade deal. I am particularly concerned about the impact of this trade deal on the agricultural sector in my province and in my country as a whole.

Mr. McDermid: Ask your beef farmers. Ask your pork farmers. Ask all the farmers in your riding.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown asks a very good question. He tells me to ask my farmers.

Mr. Siddon: Haven't you asked them yet?

Mr. Boudria: I will ask the farmers of my riding. I will have the opportunity to do so in the next election campaign. I have not run a public opinion poll. I do not have to. I know they are all against it.

The Tory candidate will have some explaining to do to the dairy farmers of my constituency, not to mention the poultry and egg producers which will have 6.2 million kilograms of their production surrendered as part of this trade deal. To pretend that dairy farmers are in favour of this deal is just totally inaccurate. When the Hon. Member opposite pretends that dairy farmers are for this deal, I repeat to him what Winston Churchill said: "The opposite of the truth has never been stated with greater accuracy." I cannot put it any more plainly than that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the grape and wine industry. This is one area of the agricultural industry in my province that has been harmed, I could even say will be wiped out, by the Prime Minister's trade agreement. In his trade agreement, the Prime Minister will abolish measures that have given us our own wine industry, despite a climate that is not very favourable as we well know.

The FTA abolishes customs duty on grapes and wine, and even worse, it will do away with the pricing policies of provincial liquor boards. For instance, in the Province of Ontario the LCBO makes it possible for Ontario producers to sell their wine within a price range that is lower than that for imported wines.

Mr. Speaker, a Conservative caucus seems to be unfolding across the way. I suppose they are trying to clean up the Bill. Maybe they were listening to my representations, and perhaps they intend to support my colleague's measure in order to get rid of the free trade bill. We can always hope, but we can't hope for much, because the odds are against the Conservative understanding what is at stake. In any case, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government, which will be defeated, not just across Canada but especially and rightly so in the Niagara Peninsula, seems to be out to destroy Ontario's wine industry.

First we had the Minister for International Trade claiming in the House that Ontario's wine industry could easily compete with California's, as if she didn't know better.

Subsequently, the Conservative Government changed its mind and, in the case of British Columbia, even offered a program to help grape growers get rid of their vines and switch to another line of work.

Mr. Speaker, if they were able to compete, why are they being offered a program to help them get out of this sector and do something else?

In any case, the Conservative Government now wants the Province of Ontario to do the same and participate in a program for helping people in the wine industry change jobs. As we know, the Province of Ontario has been somewhat reluctant to participate in the program because Ontario and the excellent Government we have here in Ontario want the Conservative Government to change its mind and drop the whole free trade program, which means we would keep our Ontario wine industry, protect the sovereignty of our country, the agri-food sector and the rest.

In any case, we still hope the Government will understand, although I'm not holding my breath—Tories are not always very swift.

[English]

I have here an assessment of the impact of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement on the Ontario agriculture and food sector. This document was prepared by the Ministry of Agriculture and Food of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, yes.

Mr. Boudria: Somehow Tory Members opposite want to discredit the provincial Government which is trying to protect the citizens of its province. All the power to the Province of Ontario when it stands up to those Tories opposite.

Mr. McDermid: Have you read that report, the whole thing?

Mr. Boudria: Of course I have read the report. What kind of nonsense is that?

Mr. McDermid: When was it produced?

Mr. Boudria: I can give the date the report was produced if the Hon. Member is interested. It was produced in January of 1988. It is known as the assessment of the impacts of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Deal, produced by the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture, and it was sent to me by the Minister himself. The Minister of Agriculture and food, through this report, in summary tells us, and I will read selectively from the summary—

Mr. McDermid: Very selectively.

Mr. Boudria: I can read the whole thing if the Hon. Member will give unanimous consent.

> The provisions of the agreement that will have the most impact on Ontario's agriculture and food sector are: tariff elimination; changing liquor board practices on wine; obtaining an exemption from the U.S. Meat Import Act; the expansion of global import quotas for poultry and eggs; and minimizing the trade distortions caused by technical regulations.

Those are the specific areas, just in summary, which have been identified. I say to Hon. Members opposite that if they will join me and my distinguished and honourable colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, in defeating Article 8 of Bill C-130, there is still a chance. Let us vote against the clause that says this agreement is hereby approved. We can then all go out and celebrate. We will have saved Canada.

(10) Within the first five days next after receipt by it of a request pursuant to subsection (9) that the House receiving the request is sitting, that House shall take up and consider the motion that is the subject of the request, and all questions in connection therewith shall be debated in priority to all government orders for not more than five hours and, on the conclusion of such debate, the Speaker of the House of Commons or the Senate, as the case may be, shall forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

(11) Where the motion is adopted, with or without amendments, by the House in which it was introduced and is concurred in by the other House, the particular order to which the motion relates shall stand revoked.

(12) Where a motion is not adopted by the House in which it was introduced or is adopted, with or without amendments, by that House but is not concurred in by the other House, the particular order to which the motion relates comes into force five days after the failure to adopt the motion or concur therein, as the case may be, if no day is provided in the order.

(13) For the purpose of this Act, a "sitting day of Parliament" means a day on which either House of Parliament sits.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I must agree with the Parliamentary Secretary for a change. This has been a long, long debate. It is a debate which started, as the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton) noted, in 1985. It is a debate which has continued with different permutations, different combinations, right up to the present. At each stage it has been a debate which has been characterized by the overbearing arrogance of the executive powers of this Government.

It was clear right from the start that this Government did not wish to debate this issue. It did not wish to develop a consensus in the country on something as crucial as this matter. Instead, it wished to direct its own path and to ram through its own policies. We can trace through the different steps by which this was done.

We can take, for instance, the committee, which the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich referred to earlier this afternoon, the committee which met in 1985, crossed the country and talked to far, far more people than any committee has yet had a chance to talk to. It found tremendous divisions on the issues of the trade deal. It also found some remarkably strong suggestions which were put to us by farmers, by people in the auto sector, by people who had concerns about the cultural sector, a vast range of people. Every single one of those recommendations was ignored. The committee said that the Auto Pact should be exempt entirely from negotiations. That suggestion was ignored. It was suggested that agriculture be left entirely out of the negotiations. That, too, was ignored. It was suggested that cultural industries be completely exempt. That, as well, was ignored.

Despite the fact that the committee said that this is the direction in which to go, that was ignored. It also said: "Don't jump right into a comprehensive trade discussion. Instead, talk about the present disputes which face us. See if we can work some of those out. We can talk, too, about the possibility of a comprehensive trade deal". We opposed that. The Liberals supported it. Nevertheless the point was that the approach was to be a step by step approach. That was rejected by the Government.

That was step number one, the first time in which the Cabinet said: "No, we will do it our way. We will decide. We will not follow what a parliamentary committee has suggested".

Then, we went to a second round of detailed considerations in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. It made some very striking commitments. It said, among other things: "We agree, all of us—New Democrats, Liberals, Conservatives—that if the United States puts through its omnibus trade Bill without exempting Canada, then we should not take part in this trade deal with the United States". It was an absolutely clear-cut, straightforward conclusion.

What happened? The United States this summer passed the omnibus trade Bill, did not exempt Canada and the Cabinet nevertheless said: "Well, so what? A parliamentary committee has said the opposite but despite that we will take the direction that we want to take". The same thing has been true at each stage of debate with respect to this issue.

At each stage of debate, rather than allowing Members of Parliament to debate this issue fully and completely because it is so important to Canadians in every region and occupation, closure has been applied. It was applied at second reading. At the legislative committee stage there was a deadline put on the committee itself and its capacity to work. There was also a motion passed preventing that committee travelling across the country to hear people.

When we returned to the House of Commons for report stage and third reading, once more the Cabinet moved and stated that it would not permit Parliament to debate this fully. Instead it applied time allocation, cut the debate off, stopped the opposition members from making the very valid effective criticisms that they had been making, and forced this Bill through as fast as possible.

What is striking is that when one actually looks at the Bill, there is the same philosophy of the Cabinet knows best, and the Cabinet unilaterally will decide and direct what is best. Despite parliamentary reform, despite new approaches to our role as legislators, throughout this Bill in section after section it is the Governor in Council, i.e. the Cabinet, that will make recommendations, appointments, establish conditions, and that will set up committees. As a consequence, what we have is the worst possible insult to the Parliament of Canada that could possibly be conceived of in a single Bill. There are dozens of places in this Bill in which the Cabinet unilaterally, without Members of Parliament having any say in the matter, will make decisions which will shape what happens to this country in the future. We who represent the people in their millions throughout the country will not have a voice even in the House of Commons to deal with these various decisions which the Cabinet can make unilaterally.

It seems to me that that is simply unacceptable in an age of parliamentary reform, it is unacceptable from any democratic perspective, and it is unacceptable in terms of permitting the participation of people to be fully and completely there in this whole set of crucial areas that the Bill deals with. That is why we have moved this set of motions which attempts to do two things. The first is to see to it that the Governor in Council, i.e. the Cabinet, has to report to and have its regulations, appointments, or establishment of committees approved by a committee of the House of Commons. If it is not approved by a committee of the House of Commons, then it has to come to the full House of Commons and there it has to be debated and approved by all Members of Parliament.

What we are talking about here is something which has become foreign to the Conservative Party ever since it took power, and something which becomes more foreign the longer it is in power. We are talking about the re-establishment of parliamentary democracy in this system. That is what these motions are about. I hope everybody in the House of Commons, with the possible exception of the Cabinet, will see the necessity of voting in favour of amendments that put constraints on the Cabinet's role to unilaterally and undemocratically shape the future of the country.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that our Party will support these motions to amend the trade Bill because they are targeted at a very important and serious trend that has emerged over the years and which the whole trade deal simply exaggerates and emphasizes. Political scientists in this country have called it "executive federalism". It is increasing power that has been taken over by Members who hold executive office, escaping the responsibility to be accountable to Parliament, escaping public exposure and examination of their actions, making decisions behind closed doors, making decisions that do not have to be explained to anybody, and making decisions based on their own arbitrary discretion.

In part that is a natural consequence of a modern government. There is so much going on in so many places, obviously not all things can be examined in the House in a microscopic manner. However, that trend has not been a slow evolution as it was over the years, but it has become a galloping acceleration under the present Government.

The most egregious example is the Meech Lake Accord where executives of the 10 provincial governments and the federal Government met behind closed doors and changed the Constitution without referring it back to the elected representatives of the people. They simply decided that this was good. No one can necessarily argue with that type of decision, but what many people reacted to was not the decision itself, but how it was made. It was the fact that people could assume unto themselves that type of almost unchallengable power to make these decisions.

When one looks at the legislation, the trade agreement substantially expands in all kinds of ways the executive power of the Government to make decisions which affect virtually all aspects of Canadian life, and they do not have to answer to anybody. They can sit inside the cabinet room, pass an Order in Council, get it gazetted about a month later in a whole pile where people have a hard time looking for it. One morning one wakes up and says: "My life has just been changed by the Cabinet and the trade agreement and I did not know anything about it".

Mr. Siddon: That's how you guys made law all the time. That's how you ran the country. That's how the Liberals have always run the country.

Mr. Axworthy: The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) is part of that large group of illiterates in the Cabinet who have neither read the agreement nor the legislation. I suppose after they are defeated in the next election they can all go back and take a remedial reading course, which I would strongly suggest they do. They might find out what they have been doing over the past four years if they actually read what laws they have brought into place. I know it would come as a shock to the Hon. Minister because I know that he does not run his own Department. He should be more concerned about what he is doing. If he had less interest in exercising his lungs and more interest in exercising his intellect, we might be a lot further ahead in this country.

These amendments direct themselves to the issue of parliamentary accountability. I would ask Members opposite, what is wrong with that? If they are going to make a serious judgment as to how this trade agreement should or should not work, surely they have nothing against Parliament at least examining the surrender that is taking place. At least we will know exactly how many times we have given in, in what places, and how many times. Surely it is a legitimate exercise that if one is going to be asked to surrender his or her sovereignty and independence, at least one should know about it and how it has happened. At least the obituaries can be written when required.

As part of the whole procedure from day one of this negotiation when the famous cabinet document was written, and "Don't tell the people what was going on, sell the program", was passed in the Cabinet that has been the whole trend and direction, and now it carries through to the Bill itself.

It is bad enough that they have kept Canadians in the dark for two and a half years, that they have not told people what is really in the Bill, what is in the agreement, how it is going to affect them. They have a lot of nerve. They are going to continue that after they get it through and they are really going to pile it on.

This is the mushroom theory of Government gone crazy. They will grow mushrooms, throw manure on it, and say, "That is the way that we make things grow". That has become the new theory of Government under this regime. They no longer have any respect for this institution. By that kind of disdain and contempt for this institution, they are showing disdain and contempt for the Canadian people. They are showing that kind of repugnance. They should at least be prepared to subject themselves to some kind of honourable accounting from time to time.

An Hon. Member: That is what we are doing right here and now.

Mr. Axworthy: By giving Cabinet through this Bill the power to make appointments, to make decisions on energy, on culture, on investment, behind the closed door, without any kind of recourse, to make all kinds of appointments to commissions and boards—I suppose that is the way that they do things in the corporate boardrooms—

An Hon. Member: That is the way Trudeau ran this country for years.

Mr. Axworthy: The friends that they all associate with, the guys that get together at the Friday night receptions, when they hob-nob and do their fund raisings and talk to their corporate boardroom friends they say: "That is how you do it. Get behind the closed doors. Don't tell anybody".

This is not a corporation; it is the Government of Canada. It is a democratic system. At least I thought it was until these characters came into power.

Have they turned it around? You only have to go through this Bill, all 300 pages of it, to see time after time "Oh, here is a little line, 'Cabinet shall decide'. Here is another line here, 'Cabinet shall appoint'". You look to see the light of day on these important issues. Well, you do not. It is simply not there.

I endorse and support the principle that we should be at least achieving, or trying to achieve, some degree of parliamentary responsibility and accountability, as I said in my speech yesterday when we were trying to argue against closure for the hundredth time in the last couple of months. I think closure has become a way of life here. I think the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) walks around with closure motions in his vest pocket. He spills them out like cards in a deck.

I said that the greatest casualty, perhaps the greatest surrender of independence, is in the damage that is being done to this institution, Parliament. It is a real victim of obsessive and uncontrollable lust to get this legislation through at all costs, without any sense of participation or responsibility. If they had any decency, any respect for this institution, we would not have a debate of two days on third reading. It is two and a half days on report stage. We spent 58 hours on report stage for the Bill dealing with western grain transportation. That is about three times the amount that we will be spending on this Bill, talking about legislation that covers a much wider range than that. We spent over 60 hours on things on third reading. but this is being limited to two days. I suppose we should be grateful for that. I suppose the Government would say: "Well, you should be thankful that we even gave you the opportunity to get to your feet".

Once you become this kind of Juggernaut and once you get used to abusing power and the idea that the majority decides in all cases, and that minority rights, whatever their voices, can be swept aside, well of course it knows no restraints, no limitations.

All we can do in speaking to these amendments is hope that there are some people out there who, when and if and how they get the chance to decide, will remember that this institution that we speak in today, for which people have fought for generations, is being perverted, distorted and destroyed by this Government, by this trade agreement.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak in the House tonight with regard to these amendments that have been grouped dealing with the free trade agreement, Bill C-130. In the free trade agreement, this Bill is exactly what Canada needs. We are a trading nation. Three million jobs depend upon it. Thirty per cent of our revenues come from trade. We have to trade to exist. We have to trade to support our programs. With our programs, be they cultural, be they social programs, be they programs to assist in our agricultural areas, we have to trade. Over the past almost four years this Government has created 1.3 million jobs. We have increased productivity and we have increased efficiency.

Mr. Axworthy: That is the private sector.

Mrs. Sparrow: You bet, the private sector. You need to have a climate that allows the private sector to operate.

An Hon. Member: It did not happen under the Liberals.

Mrs. Sparrow: You must have a fiscal regime that they know and understand, not one that brought in an energy program unilaterally from Ottawa that destroyed western Canada, as you so well did.

Mr. Axworthy: It seems your Premier signed it.

Mrs. Sparrow: You destroyed us. We are going to get free trade. Free trade is not only good for all of Canada, but Alberta in particular.

Canada must have a secure market. Over the past 15 or 16 years, we have lost almost the total market to western Europe. When the EEC was formed, it became stronger and stronger, it became self-sufficient, and indeed, it entered into markets that Canada had. Yes, we have moved out to the Pacific Rim. We certainly have markets there. But our strongest trading partner is obviously the U.S.

Our country is huge geographically. It is also very different, geographically and climate wise. But we only have a population of 25.5 million people. We do not need a domestic market that will support this country. We have to have a tariff-free border with our neighbours south of the 49th, a tariff-free border with our best partners, and a place where 75 to 78 per cent of our exports go today.

This free trade agreement in no way curtails Canada's right to set its own energy policy.

Mr. Langdon: That is not true.

Mrs. Sparrow: It does not. The provinces have the right to control the exploration, the development, the production and the sale of their natural resources.

Mr. Langdon: Read the Act. Read the Bill.

Mrs. Sparrow: The federal Government has the right to set the Canadian energy policy. It has the right to control the resource space as well as the right to control the transportation of energy and the domestic use of energy.

This country has the geological potential of taking conventional oil—that is light and medium crude, proven and unproven—the synthetic crude, which is the heavy oil plus the tar sands and the frontier with a potential of 371 billion barrels, which represents 680 years of oil at 1987's domestic consumption rate.

On the natural gas side, this country has the potential of 167 years supply. The reason that natural gas is not any higher is that over the past eight, ten or twelve years the exploration companies were not looking for natural gas because there was very little market.

We are net exporters of both oil and gas. About 25 per cent of what we produce in oil we export, and about 35 per cent of our natural gas that we produce we export south of the border. Most of this goes tariff-free today, and we want to maintain that. It is extremely important. Energy is the third largest export commodity of this country.

In order for Canada to have security of supply, we have to replace the production. It costs money to replace the production. In order to get the money, we need to have contracts. As I said, we are net exporters. Therefore we must have more secure, long-term contracts. We can get these and sign them with the United States. We shall be reliable producers and suppliers if they will be reliable contract signers, and of course they will.

Through these long-term contracts, a great deal of capital shall be raised, increasing cash flows to the various petroleum companies. This will allow us to develop the heavy oil and the bitumen, the tar sands. The development of these two sectors is extremely expensive. Conventional oil is relatively cheap. It costs $7 to $10 Canadian per barrel in finding and development costs. However, heavy oil and bitumen is extremely expensive in its development, production and upgrading. It almost costs between $20 and $22 U.S. per barrel, depending where it is.

As well, bringing on the frontier in the Beaufort would require a pipeline, be it down the Mackenzie Valley or another route. Building this pipeline represents billions of dollars, and we will not build these pipelines unless we have secure contracts to buy our oil and gas.

Let us go to petrochemicals—

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought we were debating Motion Nos. 24, 33, 42 and 82 in a group. For the last seven minutes, I have been listening to the Hon. Member and she has not been debating those motions at all. She has been discussing the relationship between the agreement and the energy industry which is not relevant at all to the motions under consideration. Those motions have to do with the accountability of the Cabinet to Parliament through the passage of Orders in Council and regulations and the committees to supervise the agreement. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to ask her to be relevant to the motions under consideration.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think this points out very vividly how the Liberal Party really does not pay attention to what is going on in this debate. One of the motions we are debating is Motion No. 82 which deals with the National Energy Board.

We sat here and listened to the critic of the Liberal Party on trade talk about energy. My colleague, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources in this Parliament is speaking to those particular amendments dealing with the National Energy Board. I think it would do the Hon. Member well to sit back, relax and get a darn good education from her. She knows more about the energy industry than the Hon. Member will learn in a lifetime.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary South has one minute left.

Mrs. Sparrow: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciate—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, I have another point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, my apologies to the Hon. Member, but I think it is important to note for the Parliamentary Secretary that there are specific amendments which deal with energy policy later in the amendments we are looking at. This particular group deals with the process of appointments and the process of regulations being set, and I would hope that the Hon. Member would come around at some stage—

Mrs. Sparrow: Why don't you wait and listen?

Mr. Langdon: I have been waiting and waiting.

Mrs. Sparrow: Wait a bit longer.

Mr. Langdon: I was hoping she would give us a sense of where precisely she stands with respect to cabinet autocracy versus parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary South still has one minute left.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board does have the right to review and constantly keep in mind the amount of reserves with regard to oil and gas, and it deals with electricity as well. I can assure Hon. Members that any long-term contracts that are signed will have to be reviewed by the National Energy Board.

I would like to say just a few words with regard to the petrochemical business. When we upgrade or do further processing, we get a tariff of between 9 per cent and 18 per cent. This really does curtail that industry. Alberta has a tremendous petrochemical industry, and when the free trade agreement is in place and the tariffs are removed over five years, you just wait. I want Hon. Members to know that nowhere is energy curtailed in this agreement.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I waited until the end of the speech in this case, and I think—

Mrs. Sparrow: I did, I told you all about the National Energy Board. It has to review contracts.

Mr. Langdon: If the Hon. Member would listen for just a moment, I think the fact that the Hon. Member is the—

Mr. Mantha: That's not a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Perhaps that Hon. Member could listen as well. The point of order is that this is a set of motions about process, and the key points made within it have to do with seeing to it that, for instance, the energy committee has the right—

Mr. McDermid: That's not a point of order. He has already said his piece.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to take part in the debate on some amendments that have been put forward by my hon. colleague, the trade critic for the New Democratic Party caucus, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). These amendments attempt to reduce the damage of the trade agreement.

Certainly we are very opposed to the very principle of the sell-out of our autonomy and the loss of the political power that is the constant theme throughout the trade agreement, Bill C-130. These amendments attempt to bring back a bit of a political review to give the House of Commons and parliamentary committees a chance to look at some of the rules and appointments that will very much affect how different bodies which deal with the free trade deal, should it go through, will operate.

The deal is all about getting rid of political power, getting rid of the power of a community to elect representatives to make decisions on its behalf and to see them implemented. The trade deal binds future Governments, cuts away from the scope of political decision-making and says that it will be determined by market forces, by a dispute-settlement panel and by the United States-Canada trade commission. These bodies of experts or these very diffuse forces will make the decisions that were previously made by Members of Parliament who were responsible to the people, Members who can themselves be thrown out of office by their electors at the next election. This is an opportunity to bring back a bit of political review at least.

Let us look at Motion No. 24 which seeks to limit the vast power of Cabinet to make appointments without any kind of review. Motion No. 24 would make appointments to the Canadian contingent of the Canada-United States Trade Commission reviewable by a parliamentary committee.

This is very important because the United States Trade Commission makes all kinds of extremely important decisions. Its members are, in effect, the trade ministers and other appointees. They decide on things like monopolies. There is a section in the Bill, put there with scarcely any discussion across the country, which uses American terminology such as "monopolies". We do not call them monopolies, we call them social services.

This relates to things like medicare, and whether we are going to have a national child care system. Suppose we want to extend medicare to include denticare or pharmacare. Suppose we want to do some other things as a community. If a company in the United States which is making money in health insurance does not want us to have medicare or does not want it to be extended in some way complains, the matter will go to a dispute settlement panel. The dispute settlement panel has a process to go through and its report goes to the commission, which accepts it or rejects it.

Who is on that commission and who is on those dispute settlement panels? Those are very important questions. Those are the kinds of bodies which will decide whether or not we can have medicare or whether we will be forced to pay compensation in order to have it, which would make it prohibitively expensive.

These are the bodies that will make the crucial decisions which heretofore were made in Parliament or the provincial legislatures. There is terrific interference with the rules of provincial legislatures in the social sector and regional development in their own provinces. Municipalities which want to create jobs or start new social services could also be dealt with as infringing upon the future profitability of American corporations and could be subject to a challenge in the monopoly section.

If we ever have Indian self-government in this country, which I sincerely hope we will, the Indian bands will lose their power under the trade agreement to make all kinds of decisions on job creation, promotion of tourism, and starting their own social services. In effect, it is one of these bodies which we are reviewing in these motions that will decide whether or not they can do that. It is, therefore, very important who will be on these bodies.

In the case of the dispute settlement panel there will be five people; two Americans, two Canadians, and one to be appointed by those four people. Crucial decisions affecting our welfare system and regional development system will be made by supposed technical experts in trade matters. The majority will probably not be Canadians. If the four people have trouble selecting the fifth, that person will be selected by lot from a list. We could have three Americans and two Canadians deciding upon an absolutely crucial principle of Canada's social welfare system. This is an appalling abrogation of responsibility which will bind future governments.

If the present Government does not want to start a national child care scheme or to improve medicare, it is entitled to make those decisions. It was duly elected and for five years we suffer the consequences, then the voters have the chance to throw the rascals out. That's politics, that's parliament. With this agreement it is not enough just to throw the rascals out because the decision-making power has been taken out of parliament and cannot be reinstituted.

In the case of this Government we have the example of foreign investment review. The Government has substantially diminished foreign investment review, and the free trade agreement will diminish it further. Only the very largest corporate takeovers would be subject to investment review under this trade agreement.

If we elect another government on the platform of bringing back foreign investment review as part of the way in which to stimulate job creation in Canada, because of this free trade agreement it would not be able to do that. That political power will be lost and future governments will be bound by this trade agreement.

That is why it is so patently unfair for it to be rushed through against the will of provinces which disagree and with no mandate from the people. This is so flagrantly immoral that I am surprised that the Government has the nerve to proceed. It does not have the nerve to take it to the public in an election.

The provisions in these motions do not make it impossible to have Conservative patronage in these appointments. We know that review by parliamentary committees does not stop Conservative patronage appointments. I have sat on committees. They are dominated by Conservatives who bring in their hack friends. The hack friends are asked token questions by the Conservative members and at the end of the discussion decisions are made by a majority. With government Members making up that majority, the appointment will go through. There is, therefore, nothing in here that will guarantee an end to patronage appointments. It is only when the public throws this Government out of office that we will have an end to that. I hope we will see that very soon.

However, these motions do not guarantee what we would like to have guaranteed. They do not undo the damage of the trade deal, but they do give Parliament a little bit more scrutiny. They do give the elected Members of Parliament, the people who are responsible to the public and could be thrown out at the next election, a bit more of a chance to do their job. The trade experts on the dispute settlement panel cannot be thrown out at the next election. They are appointed experts and are not responsible people. That is a violation of our parliamentary principles. I support these amendments because they at least provide for a bit of review of this corrupting practice although the far more desirable thing would be to get rid of the trade deal entirely.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) could probably be labelled "Alice in Wonderland" or "Lynn in Wonderland". She may have great expertise in getting a Private Member's Bill through the House in order to stop smoking in public places, but she certainly does not understand the free trade agreement signed between Canada and the United States.

She talked about binding municipal and provincial governments and about social programs, all of which are outside of the agreement. The provincial governments can discriminate on health care. The provincial governments can make up the rules on how their hospitals and senior citizens' homes are going to be run. They can insist that they are run only by Canadians and they will not be in violation of the free trade agreement.

The Hon. Member told so many myths in the last 10 minutes that it is very difficult to respond to them all. I am sorry that she was not in the House when I explained that provincial government procurement is totally outside the agreement. It has nothing to do with it. It pertains to health care, education, and so on and so forth. The free trade agreement says that if a province decides to allow American firms into the health care field as consultants, then they have to be treated fairly. That is all it says. They do not have to let them in and opposition Members know that. They are absolutely and totally wrong. Provincial government procurement is totally outside this agreement. Let us get that straight.

Mr. Langdon: Health care is not.

Mr. McDermid: Entirely outside the agreement.

Ms. Copps: Health care is not.

Mr. McDermid: All the free trade agreement says is that if a province decides to allow them to come in they must be treated fairly, but they do not have to allow them in.

Mr. Langdon: They do.

Mr. McDermid: They don't.

Mr. Langdon: I can quote you this section.

Mr. McDermid: They don't have to allow them in.

Then I listened to the Hon. Member who said that we are binding future governments. She knows full well that one Parliament cannot bind another. She knows that full well. She should know it.

• (1930)

Ms. McDonald: It is in the agreement.

Mr. McDermid: I will read her something else in the agreement that she might be very interested in. She probably has not got this far in the agreement because it is the last article.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like it to be very well understood that I, unlike the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), have read every page, paragraph and word of this agreement, and I disagree with it all.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member says that she disagrees with the entire agreement, yet the policy of the NDP is to remove tariffs. Obviously she now disagrees with the section in here that removes tariffs.

She just said she disagrees with everything in here. Does she disagree with Article 2106 which states that "This agreement shall remain in force unless terminated by either Party upon six months' notice". Some bind.

We are discussing amendments which say that Parliament will decide on all these commissions. It will take votes on all these appointments to these various commissions, including the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) who will head the commission. The Minister will be the Canadian representative of the Canada-U.S. Trade Commission. The Opposition wants Parliament to decide whether the Minister for International Trade should be head of the commission. That is what Motion No. 24 states. That is absolutely ridiculous.

The other appointments are order in council appointments which can all be reviewed by the standing committees. They can bring these people before the committee any time to question them and put them under the gun to see if they qualify to serve on these commissions. That is provided for by the new parliamentary rules brought in by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

There have been examples of people coming before the committee who did not have the credentials and therefore did not carry on with their appointments. There are other examples of people who have come before the committee and, regardless of their political stripe, the committee unanimously decided that the person was highly qualified for the appointment.

A former NDP colleague of the House, Ian Deans, was appointed. Does the Member for Broadview—Greenwood think that his appointment should end automatically the day the Government goes to the polls? Is she saying that the appointment of our former colleague from Prince Edward Island to the Pension Review Board, which is a very good appointment, should stop the day the election is called? Should all the boards and commissions and all the work of Government stop automatically? Is that what they are saying with these amendments? That is nonsense and the Hon. Members know it. These are some of the frivolous amendments they are introducing to the House. These are negative resolution procedures.

These amendments would allow the Senate, those unelected people in the other place, to decide who will be on these boards and commissions. The Senate has caused this country enough trouble. We do not want the Senate deciding who will be on boards and commissions. However, that is what these amendments provide.

I can understand the Liberals supporting these amendments, but it is the New Democratic Party which brought them in. The NDP, whose policy it is to abolish the Senate, introduced amendments that would allow the Senate to decide who is on the boards and commissions. They are saying in these amendments that if appointments are created by Governor in Council they have to come before the House, which will then have to go up to the Senate for a decision on whether it is right or wrong. I cannot believe the New Democrats did that.

Mr. Langdon: That is the system we have.

Mr. McDermid: The NDP brought in amendments that would allow the Senate to decide who goes on boards and commissions. What is this world coming to?

When the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party learns of this, I am sure he will do back-flips. I am afraid the Hon. Member may even be removed as critic for international trade. I would hate to see that after having spent so much time with him.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There has been a complete misrepresentation. If you look at Section 2 in each of these motions, it indicates that it is a committee of the House of Commons which has to approve these.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown has one minute to complete his speech.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I will just make a final comment on Motion No. 25 which seeks to delete Clause 12.

Ms. Copps: You are in the wrong group.

Mr. McDermid: This would prevent Canada—

Ms. Copps: You are in the wrong group of amendments.

Mr. McDermid: We already defeated that one. I have more paper here than—

Ms. Copps: Brains.

Mr. McDermid: Another great speech by the Hon. Member from the seat of her pants. The Hon. Member for "right on" is speaking to the House in her usual eloquent style.

These amendments which have been brought forward by the New Democratic Party are totally unacceptable. They are negative resolution procedures and we cannot accept them.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I just heard 10 minutes of absolute non-defence of a Government method for order in council appointments. I know that it is difficult to defend the indefensible, but I think the Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) has a particular knack for trivializing some of the important objections to his Government's trade legislation.

I want to support the amendment by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) which attempts to put some sanity into the Government appointment process and these organizations that will be reviewing this trade legislation.

In order to examine the situation, I think the public should be aware of how the original teams that came up with this trade deal were established. They were the so-called SAGITs. Those organizations were called together supposedly to represent the people of Canada in the negotiating process. Many people may recognize that the agricultural community has really had the proverbial boots put to it by this agreement. Is it any wonder, when one considers the formation of the groups that were appointed to consult with the Government on this issue.

We had a SAGIT in which the head of the Canadian SAGIT dealing with questions relating to agriculture happened to be the president of a Canadian subsidiary of an American company whose president just happened to be sitting on the American side of the negotiating table. When the two equal partners came together to discuss and consult on issues of mutual trade agreement, we actually saw the president of an

The Government asks us to trust it and the people it is going to appoint to sit down and negotiate away the very social fabric of this country. Trust us. That is what the Government said about senior citizens' pensions. Yet if you look at the composition of the individuals who were named by the Government to negotiate this absolute sell-out to the U.S., it does not represent the broad spectrum of the Canadian public. Where were the women on these SAGITs?

Mr. McDermid: There are lots of women on the SAGITs.

Ms. Copps: The trade agreement is going to negatively impact on women more than any other group. More women will lose their jobs as a result of this agreement. Where were they in strong numbers on the SAGITs?

Mr. McDermid: They were there.

Ms. Copps: They were not there. Where were the unions? Where were the members of organized labour sitting at the table with the Americans on the SAGITs?

Mr. McDermid: The Canadian Federation of Labour, the CLC?

Ms. Copps: The Canadian Federation of Labour and the CLC were where on SAGITs?

Mr. McDermid: They were invited but turned it down.

Ms. Copps: They were not there. Where were the steelworkers? Where were the church groups? Where were the people in this country who have a social conscience about our future direction? They were not there because the Government and the Minister are interested only in one point of view, the big business point of view.

If you go into my riding and talk to the President of Proctor and Gamble, he is of course going to say "Great. Free trade is going to be fantastic". He is the plant manager of a 100 per cent American-owned company that would like nothing better than to pull up stakes and move its whole operation south of the border.

Mr. McDermid: Ask Stelco and Dofasco what they think.

Ms. Copps: Heinz Canada, a food production company, 100 per cent American-owned, have already chosen a site for a plant south of the border.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Ms. Copps: They are planning to move if and when this deal sees the light of day. McCain's Food Company, the largest Canadian-owned company in this country—

Mr. McDermid: Who were invited to appear and turned it down.

Ms. Copps: —are against this deal. They said quite specifically that it will destroy the food processing industry in Canada.

Mr. McDermid: No, they did not.

Ms. Copps: Most food processors do not care because of the 25 or 26 major Canadian food processors, 23 are American-owned. You have only two or three Canadian-owned operations. Of course, the 100 per cent American-owned companies do not mind.

Camco, an appliance manufacturer in Hamilton, is scared silly that if and when this deal goes through the appliance industry in this country and in my city will be dead. Talk to the appliance manufacturers.

The wine industry. Gallo Wines in California spills more wine than is produced in the whole of Canada.

Mr. McDermid: So?

Ms. Copps: I am sure you do not care if the Canadian industry is wiped out, which is what will happen as a result of this deal.

Mr. McDermid: We can compete. You are afraid to compete.

Ms. Copps: All this amendment calls for is an opportunity for Parliament to review the appointments of people who sit on these committees that are going to determine what—

Mr. McDermid: You see what they have now.

Ms. Copps: Yes, I saw what they came up with. They came up with a deal for big business which does not respond to the needs and aspirations of ordinary people. The Hon. Member talks about the health care system. I wish he would stop spreading the same kind of fallacy that his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spread when he said he was not going to touch senior citizens pensions. He says health care is not included. The management of health care systems is included right in the annex and commercial blood banks are part of the trade deal. His colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), publicly stated that the trade deal includes commercial blood banks.

Mr. McDermid: If the provinces allow them.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member may laugh but he does not know the composition of the national blood committee. It brings together people from every province. As a matter of fact, it is under the auspices of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. McDermid: Is the committee appointed by the House?

Ms. Copps: The committee regulates the distribution of blood across Canada. I am sorry the Hon. Member does not understand the distribution of blood in this country, but it is done by that committee under the auspices of the federal Minister. It is the Tory Party that will do anything for a buck that for the first time in the history of this country has permitted the opening of a clinic in Montreal where you can buy and sell blood for profit. He laughs, but why is it in the agreement?

Why do you expect us to trust you to appoint competent people representative of the Canadian public to the subsidy groups which will be reviewing this agreement when history shows that the Conservative Party represents big business? That Party has done nothing to secure the needs and aspirations of ordinary Canadian men and women. The only people they truly consulted in this deal were the presidents and chief executive officers of major multinational corporations who do not care where the money goes. Capital knows no national boundaries. They will move to the States.

Do you know what my own community got from the American bosses of Firestone in Akron, Ohio? A three paragraph Telex. After I believe 143 years of continuous operation in that city they got a three paragraph Telex which said "we are closing down". All this amendment calls for, and I think it is quite reasonable, is an opportunity for Parliament, not the privileged, prurient Tory Party which has been involved—I cannot even begin to make the kinds of allegations that were made today by a former cabinet Minister of the Tory Party. However, let us face it, are we going to trust the Tory Party and Government to appoint people who will represent the views of Canadians when it comes to negotiations on things like what constitutes an unfair subsidy? Do you think the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), who does not care about the sale of blood, is going to protect our health care system? Do you think the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister, who has obviously demonstrated over and over again that he does not even understand the blood distribution system in this country, will represent and defend the interests of ordinary Canadians?

Mr. McDermid: You bet.

Ms. Copps: It is clear that we need protection from the Government and a Conservative Party that would consult only the elite, only the moneyed, only the people who really have no vested interest in building the kind of national identity that we have struggled for as Canadians. In fact, the protection brought in with this amendment is the kind we need to make sure that at the very least with this extremely negative deal for Canada, when we go to the negotiating table we will not see pregnancy leave rights or minority rights eroded. I can imagine that if the Member were sitting over there making all these appointments it would look like a who's who of the Fraser Institute. That organization is against the minimum wage. We know it does not believe in affirmative action. We know it does not believe in any kind of support programs for women and minorities. Those are the people we do not want on these committees and that is why we in Parliament need the power of review.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to address a few words regarding these four NDP amendments. I noticed with interest that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) supported them wholeheartedly.

I would like to make a few comments on what the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) said earlier about patronage. She indicates one of her amendments addresses that very subject. She said the Conservative Party would just use this device to put in its friends and neighbours and those who support this Party. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the individual I defeated in 1984 was a member of the NDP and Howard Pawley gave him a $50,000 do-nothing job. If that is not patronage by the NDP I would like to know what the dickens it is. They are very capable of patronage and don't think otherwise. It is this Conservative Party which has appointed New Democrats and Liberals and other people who have no political background at all to do the right kind of job. I would ask her to bite her tongue a little bit when she comes up with statements like that.

Let's get on with these amendments. I also noticed with interest that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East referred to the people who would benefit as the great corporate leaders and presidents. She said they were the only people with whom we consulted. Well, let us look at the facts. The Hon. Member may find this very interesting. How about what D. R. Eastcott of the Canadian Organization of Small Business says. That is not a big corporate giant.

> Small businesses provide the majority of Canada's new jobs, new wealth and new business. Free trade will enhance the potential for growth—competition on even terms, free from tariffs, unfair subsidies and limited markets. It will open up what is already the largest trading partnership in the world.
> Small business will gain a larger, fairer share of the market-place, not only in the U.S. but within Canada as well. Free trade is our future for success.

That is a representation of small business and small businesses create the majority of jobs. This association is steadfastly behind this agreement. That is something the Hon. Member should have taken into consideration.

Let me go back to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood who stood in her place and reflected that everything in this book, that is the free trade document, is what that Party is totally against. She said there was nothing in here that she could support. Yet what did the New Democratic Party do? It could have just taken one clause in the free trade agreement, and I believe it is Article 7, and added only one amendment. Article 7 says: "The agreement is hereby approved". The Opposition could have amended it by stating: "We disapprove of this and, therefore, this agreement should be unapproved". That is all they had to say. They did not have to add all these other amendments to try to improve the free trade agreement because they do not agree with it at all. What nonsense. I suggest that even if these amendments for some silly reason could be passed in this House, those Parties would still defeat the free trade agreement.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The proposal of the Hon. Member would have been ruled out of order because it was contrary to the intent of the Bill.

Mr. Holtmann: That is a very strange point of order. Let me get back to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood. Her Party has a resolution which has not changed, going back to 1961, which the NDP still confirms is its policy on trade. Let me indicate to this House and to the people of Canada what the policy is of the New Democratic Party in terms of trade. It is very clearly spelled out and it is exactly what has happened in this agreement. Let us remind Canadians of this. It states:

> Expansion of our trade with any and all countries willing to trade on a fair and equitable basis will benefit both ourselves and them. Careful planning is needed to adjust our production to the trade requirements of a fully employed economy. Tariffs are outmoded patchwork attempts to protect domestic industry;

That is what this agreement does. It reduces tariffs.

Ms. McDonald: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member is referring to multilateral trade and this agreement is about trade with one country only, bilateral, and it sells out the country and loses our political autonomy at the same time. That is why we are against it.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I am so happy she pointed that out to me because this statement goes on to say: Any direction this country can make to a trade agreement to reduce tariffs with any country, any given country, is what the policy of the New Democratic Party is. Here it is in written colour.

Ms. McDonald: No sell-outs.

Mr. Holtmann: So she ought to be very careful about what she calls a sell-out in her statements in the House with respect to those amendments and how they affect this free trade agreement.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would suggest that if the Member wishes to correctly put forward New Democratic Party policy, he read the policy passed at this year's convention in Montreal, not something which is 27 years old.

Mr. Belsher: When did you last rescind it?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I think all Canadians would like to know in a very open way what the policy of the New Democratic Party is with respect to free trade. Certainly, we have not heard anything but criticism of this Government in its effort to reduce tariffs. It is nothing more than that.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, this very Member in fact stood up one day and tore up the 62 page booklet which dealt with our alternatives to the free trade deal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He should not have done that. The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I know not what he is referring to, but it was probably some nonsense printed in his office and sent to me. I would like to get back to these amendments. How about the president of Dofasco.

Mr. Langdon: That is a good ordinary Canadian.

Mr. Holtmann: I suppose anyone, in the mind of the Member opposite, who becomes a president of a good company which does a great job for Canada is not ordinary anymore, but he has to have some brains and I suspect he is doing a great job. What did he have to say with respect to this free trade agreement?

> We believe the free trade agreement provides a special opportunity for Canadian manufacturers to develop their businesses to fit a more open global trading system during the next decade and into the next century. Our focus at Dofasco now and for the future is to produce top quality steels so as to provide the best materials available to our customers. A commitment toward innovation, modernization and value-added products is essential to thrive.

That is a Canadian talking about value added because of this trade deal. I think that is an essential key element in what he says.

> Better and more assured access to the U.S.A. will provide our customers an excellent opportunity as a first and more familiar step toward world-wide competitiveness.

Sure it is a big company, but we have small businesses which want this agreement to go ahead. We have big business. That is a Canadian business, by the way, which employs people who, perhaps, are represented by Members of this Parliament. Of course, these companies speak for increased economic development as a result of this free trade agreement.

Adding these amendments which have nothing to do with the reduction of tariffs is nothing but a ploy to confuse the public of Canada that because some of these particular irritants to someone is not in there, all havoc will take place. The whole exercise is to reduce the tariffs of trade between Canada and the United States. But what do those Parties do? They suggest it is just a ploy to create more patronage for the Conservative Party. That is what those Members suggest. They suggest that because of this free trade agreement, our sovereignty has gone, it is history.

One has to look at what was said in an article in the Winnipeg Free Press. I see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is here. He must have read this recently with some awe. It was an editorial on August 9. The headline in the Winnipeg Free Press with respect to this free trade agreement reads: "Tell the people the truth". It refers to the Leader of the Liberal Party. The article is so well written that I am sorry Canadians watching tonight cannot get a copy of this editorial. It has been taken up recently in every other paper, even the Ottawa Citizen, which I do not believe has written too many great stories about the Tory Party. On August 18, the Ottawa Citizen put out a pretty dandy little editorial. The headline reads: "Turner trade pitch simply isn't buyable". That is a pretty direct statement.

I would like to refer to the last paragraph of the editorial, although I am sure I do not have time to read it all. It is important for the Hon. Member opposite to listen to this. It states that these proposals for international change are long-term goals beyond the control of any single nation. It goes on to state that the Liberals are intellectually and politically bankrupt, and on free trade, as on many other issues, they offer Canadians no viable option. I think that is pretty significant coming from that paper in the many, many years that it has been pushing the Liberal side of things.

I would like to return to the Winnipeg Free Press article. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry must have had a hair or two turn grey when he read the bottom paragraph.

Mr. Axworthy: I don't have any grey hairs, Felix.

Mr. Holtmann: I am getting a little grey. It states:

> John Turner these days has a liking for slogans. Let the people decide is his latest". Before the people do decide he might direct another slogan to himself: "Tell the people the truth."

Do not try to redirect what the Government has tried to do other than to reduce trade barriers to enhance our ability to enter that market which certainly has to be the objective of all Canadians, taking into consideration that it is not a super perfect document.

Mr. Langdon: You recognize that. You told the truth.

Mr. Holtmann: We said that right from the beginning. From time to time it might need some adjustment; and from time to time it allows that adjustment to take place.

Mr. Langdon: Tell us its problems.

Mr. Holtmann: By introducing the type of amendments that do not relate at all to this matter, or to throw in a scare tactic that the Conservatives are using it for patronage, or that we are going to lose our culture just does not fly. I am just as Canadian as anyone else in this room. I do not intend on losing the culture of Canada. That is not going to happen. I think Canadians are starting to understand that it is not going to happen. We cannot expect every Canadian to read this document from one end to the other.

Mr. Langdon: Especially the Minister.

Mr. Holtmann: There is lots more to it. I can only refer to the many other possibilities by which Canadians can get the information on free trade. For instance, they can write, as the advertisements tell us to do. I am certain that a better understanding all around of how good this trade agreement is will happen.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, we have listened to the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) telling us that the trade deal deals with nothing at all except tariffs. That of course is baloney of the sort for which he is well known. It deals with all kinds of things, including the takeover of Canadian investment businesses and Canadian services such as management health services and so on. Nothing at all of those things relate to tariffs. In fact, for most people who work in the service industry—two-thirds of Canadians—tariffs are of secondary importance. So 80 per cent of trade is without tariffs. We will do away with the other 20 per cent. That will affect some of the manufacturing people. But the takeover of Canadian services will affect far more Canadians than the destruction of our manufacturing industry.

However, as could be expected, what the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake was saying had nothing to do with the subject being debated at this time, namely, certain amendments that have been proposed by our Party. These amendments, roughly speaking, propose to introduce a measure of democracy into the operation of this new law in order to make up for some destruction of democracy.

Motion No. 24 proposes that appointments to the Canadian contingent of the Canada-U.S. Trade Commission should be reviewed by a committee of Parliament. Motion No. 33 proposes regulations regarding the operation of the procurement review board, the board that will decide whether the Government's policy of procuring goods is fair or unfair to the United States and that the implementation of the procurement chapter should be reviewed by a committee of Parliament.

The appointment of the Secretary to the Canadian Secretariat that will administer the dispute settlement panels and committees should be reviewed by a committee of Parliament. Orders and directives to the National Energy Board should also be reviewed by a committee of Parliament.

It seems by the excitement and anger of the Hon. member for Selkirk—Interlake and the Parliamentary Secretary that this proposal for democracy so frightens them that they had to talk about everything and anything else except the motions that are before the House at this time.

The Parliamentary Secretary taunts us not with debating. In fact, he does not debate. He just shouts, generalizes and tries to bulldoze. The point we are making is that government appointees who carry a huge responsibility for the conduct of the political economy of Canada and its relationship with the United States ought to have the approval, the scrutiny and the obligation to report to the elected representatives of the country—Members of Parliament.

Judging by their response to this proposal Members opposite think that this is some crazy, radical proposition; or they think it is something that could only be put forward by people who have no interest in or knowledge of business. I point out to them that what we are proposing is no less than what is done by Constitution in the United States of America.

In the United States of America when the President appoints senior officials in various lines, his appointment must be validated, must be subject to the approval of Congress and Senate. There are a variety of regulations but that is the general principle. There are some times when his appointee is turned down, because the committee of Congress or Senate examine him and find him or her unsatisfactory, and the President must appoint somebody else. He has the power to name but not the power to put the person finally into office. We are suggesting that that development of democracy in the United States is something from which Canadians could learn, particularly if in this trade Bill we are going to have to do business with the United States. If they are good enough to do business with, if they are good enough for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to sing When Irish Eyes are Smiling with the President of the United States, then I think we could at least look at their structure for holding senior powerful officials to account before the elected representatives of the people.

That is what these amendments before us propose. They are absolutely essential if we are not going to lose a great deal of the more informal kind of democracy that we have now. The informal democracy that we have now meant that the executive of the Government, the Prime Minister and those he chooses to have in his Cabinet, ought to lay things before Parliament before final important decisions are made.

One example of that occurred about 30 years ago when the Government of the day under Mr. Diefenbaker negotiated the NORAD Treaty. The Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Pearson, said as a matter of Constitution it ought to be brought before Parliament. Mr. Diefenbaker agreed. It was brought before Parliament and voted upon. Unfortunately, Mr. Pearson and his successor in Liberal office forgot the rule that Mr. Pearson had put forward and this rule of course has been totally forgotten as well by the present Government. In fact, Mr. Pearson was right in 1958, and so was Mr. Diefenbaker, in putting that treaty to a vote of Parliament. There is no written law that says they must, but it was an essential obligation of democracy.

We are asking for essentially the same principle here. As I say we are following a very useful model in the United States of America that, when these officials are appointed, they should first be subject to an examination, a questioning by a committee of Parliament. If the committee does not approve their appointment, then it has to come to the full Parliament. If the Parliament does not approve their appointment, then the Prime Minister has to find somebody else who would be more acceptable.

Mr. Belsher: Is that the way you would run it?

Mr. Heap: That is the way it is being run in the United States which is the country that is so admired and followed by our Prime Minister. We are asking that he be consistent.

We do need to restore to Parliament some of the democracy that was taken away in the past two years. As my colleague from Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has said, not only in the 1985 hearings which were a sham—not a sham carried out by the Members—but in that the Government showed that it had no interest in paying any attention to what hundreds of Canadians said at those hearings.

Also during two years of negotiations when the Prime Minister was asked whether the auto industry was on the table he jeered at the questioners. He made fun of the question, denied it was on, and it has turned out that his denial was totally false because it was on the table through the removal of the tariffs which are the only lever which makes the Auto Pact possible.

Last fall there was the publication of what was called the essence of the agreement. Then a committee was struck in order to cross the county to hold hearings. Any time a person criticized or objected to something in the essence he was jeered by government Members who said: "Wait for the final details". In other words, the hearings were created as a farce. The final details were published in December after the hearings were finished. Since then the Government has refused to allow any hearings across Canada on this subject.

Now we have Bill C-130 which amends 27 Acts including agriculture, banking, income tax, radio broadcasting, and so on. According to the Government it was to be treated as one Bill, not as amendments to 27 major and important Bills. What we have here is the deliberate destruction of the ability of elected representatives to do what the people expect us to do, which is to come to Parliament and vote on matters of importance. They are asking that Parliament should renounce and sign away our responsibility as Members of Parliament to the people who elected us. What I am saying is that the principle of democracy demands that the Government now give consideration to these amendments and that they be adopted.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few comments with respect to Motion Nos. 24, 33, 42, and 82 which were grouped for debate. As I read through them I had mixed feelings. I join with the Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) in finding that it is somewhat amusing to be seeing more responsibility given to the Senate. Coming as these motions do from a member of the New Democratic Party, I am sure there are many dedicated socialists who are turning in their graves tonight at the thought of the NDP proposing even more powers to the Senate. I consider that nothing more than amusing.

I am somewhat heartened when I see amendments brought forward such as the motions we are discussing tonight, because I know that this attempt to gut the Bill by motions such as this, and kill the free trade legislation, does a lot of good for the Progressive Conservative Party, and certainly I am pleased for that. The House will know that the trade agreement is supported in the regions of this country. As a result, I feel good about the fact that every time a member of the NDP rises and attempts to bury this Bill, makes amendments to gut the legislation, and opposes the free trade agreement, I know it will help some people whom I have known and admired these last three years.

I see my colleague, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), and the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher). I am happy for those Members. I know the NDP is helping those Members return to the 34th Parliament to work on family values and some of the things that are important to so many Canadians. I see the Minister of State for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) is present. I am pleased for him and other Members when I see members of the New Democratic Party digging their own graves here in the House of Commons and ensuring that that they will not return to the 34th Parliament.

I stated that I had mixed feelings, and I guess that stems from the fact that when I read through each of these motions for this section of the debate, I noticed they were presented by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). I am very proud to say that a few years ago I was a student at the University of Windsor. Like most students who go away to school, I developed a certain affection for the city in which I resided for that part of my life.

It saddens me to see the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor, joined by other NDP and Liberal colleagues from that area, doing something that I know is diametrically opposed to the best interests of the city of Windsor. I think that all of them would agree, if they were completely honest, that the city of Windsor is very dependent upon trade with the United States. That trade does not hurt the city of Windsor, rather it helps the city of Windsor. In the same manner, my own area of Niagara Falls is very dependent upon trade. If Members were honest, they would know that in the past few years there has been pressure brought to bear within the United States from different elements that would like to tear up the Auto Pact. I believe that the Auto Pact is important to the best interests of Windsor, the Niagara area, the area of Oshawa, and several other parts of the country.

Now we have an agreement which we are discussing this evening, and motions that have been put forward to try and hurt that agreement that enshrine the essential elements of the Auto Pact which is so good for the city of Windsor. It is an agreement that also protects the auto parts industry. The NDP will say that that is not true, that it has nothing to do with that industry, that it hurts it all. The evidence that always does them in is the fact that the auto industry and the auto parts industry support the agreement.

I will use an example in my own area. Many of these companies are also represented in the Windsor area. I know of no auto parts company in the Niagara Peninsula, and I know of no automobile manufacturer in the Niagara Peninsula that opposes the free trade agreement because they know that it is good. They know that the elements of the Auto Pact are enshrined in the free trade agreement. They know it gives protection for auto parts, and that is why they all support it.

I have before me a number of quotes in the notes that I made before I rose, and different comments made by different people from the auto industry. The general manager of General Motors has stated: "The Canada-U.S. free trade agreement signals a major breakthrough in the trading relations between our two great countries. It also sends an important signal to our other trading partners around the world that protectionism is not the way to long-term success. From our perspective this agreement will contribute significantly to making the trade and investment climate in North America more rational, predictable, and fair". Who benefits the most, Mr. Speaker, when trade is rational, predictable, and fair? It is the city of Windsor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: I appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member for the city of Windsor. It would seem to me that what he has spoken about so far has absolutely no relevance to the subject matter of the amendments which are before us which attempt to establish parliamentary democracy in the face of cabinet dominance as established by this Bill. Perhaps on a point of order he should speak to that issue. As a back-bencher he may prefer the Cabinet to decide everything, but I doubt it.

• (2020)

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, my comments are as a direct result of reading the motions put forward by the Member for Essex—Windsor. I do not think that there is anybody in this House who would disagree with me that the intent of these and other amendments are to gut this Bill, to hurt this Bill, and ultimately to destroy it. I think that my comments are properly in order. I can appreciate that the Member is sensitive.

Mr. Langdon: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: I think, if I have read the rules of the House properly, it is not proper to attribute motives, as the Member is doing with respect to my moving of these motions. I certainly moved them with the intention of improving a situation which I saw as most unfortunate in the Bill.

An Hon. Member: Even though misguided?

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): I started my comments by saying that I was delighted to see anything good come from the City of Windsor, and to the extent that the Member may be shifting his position toward coming into agreement with the free trade agreement. That is good, in the over-all context. It is for the well-being of that community and certainly—

An Hon. Member: It is not a point of order, it is debate. He is debating.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: It is important for the Member to recognize that second reading is the debate in which we approve or disapprove of the question of principle. As the Member should know, I voted against this Bill on principle. That does not mean that at report stage one is not permitted by the rules of the House to move motions that are consistent with the intentions of the Bill to try to improve it. That does not mean that one approves of the Bill or of the agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Please get back to the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have always said that half a loaf is better than none at all. If the Member now is trying to attempt to improve the situation, improve the free trade Bill, I am certainly pleased about that, and I would be delighted if now, or perhaps later on in debate or maybe in future intervention, he may come all the way over and support this legislation which is so clearly in the best interests of his area, the Province of Ontario and the whole Dominion of Canada.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, we are presently debating four motions to amend the free trade Bill, C-130. The purpose of these amendments is to put some democracy back in the process and to put some democracy back in the administration with respect to the free trade agreement.

The four amendments require that several of the appointments to the boards and commissions that will administer the free trade agreement come before the House of Commons so that the House of Commons can consider them by 25 Members forcing a debate and perhaps reject them in certain cases. It also requires in some cases that the regulations and Orders in Council passed by the Government and the regulatory bodies be sent to the House of Commons so that it can consider them and have them debated and voted on in certain situations.

The purpose of these amendments is to put some democracy back into an agreement, into a Bill, into a process, which has been very weak on democracy. As a matter of fact, this whole process has been filled with undemocratic instances. We can review them one by one. For example, there has been closure at every stage in this debate. At second reading there was closure after only one day, and second reading debate was limited to five days.

At report stage, after one and a half days of debate, the Government moved closure on the report stage and limited it to four days. It has limited third reading to two days. The entire debate in this House—second reading, report stage and third reading—is limited to 11 days on a Bill that the Government suggests is one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before this Parliament since the Second World War. We on this side agree that it is one of the most devastating pieces of legislation to come before Parliament since the Second World War. Yet, the Government has imposed closure at every stage of the proceedings.

With respect to the legislative committee, as soon as they met, before they could determine how many groups and citizens wanted to appear before the committee to give their views, before that even happened, the Government set a date to close off the committee. It decided that the committee would only hold hearings in Ottawa and would not travel throughout the country, as many other committees have done in the history of this Parliament, to hear the views of Canadians. It has been undemocratic in that part of the process. It has also been undemocratic at every other stage of the procedure.

We all know that the negotiations with respect to this free trade agreement started in 1986, after an election in 1984 at which time there was no mention at all of a possible free trade agreement with the United States. Not only was there no mention at all in the 1984 election campaign, but the only statements on record from leading members of the Government are that they were opposed to a free trade agreement with the United States.

I put these quotes on the record before, but I think that we have to repeat them because Canadians must know what was said by the leading members of the Government, by various cabinet Ministers.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said in 1983: "Unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear".

An Hon. Member: What was the first word?

Mr. Allmand: "Unrestrained free trade with the United States".

An Hon. Member: Ah.

Mr. Allmand: Yes, ah. That is pretty much what is proposed in this agreement. The Canadian public will judge that.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said in 1983, and I quote: "Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to diminish our ability to compete internationally". The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in 1983: "Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade, which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades".

These are the sorts of things that the Prime Minister and his leading Ministers said in 1983. They entered the election campaign of 1984 and they did not suggest in any way at all that there would be a bilateral comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States. Two years later, after the Prime Minister met with President Reagan at the Shamrock Summit, all of a sudden these negotiations are under way. That was undemocratic.

Then we have the process by which the Government consulted with Canadians, the so-called SAGIT process. There were groups on agriculture, textiles and clothing, and various other sectors of industry. However, the Government picked the people to serve on the SAGITs. It swore them to secrecy so they could not tell the public or the media what was going on in these discussions. Here we had for the most part individuals who were friendly to the process in the first place picked by the Government in a phoney process to consult with Canadians.

After one and a half years the elements of an agreement were concluded on October 5, 1987. A 35-page booklet with a lot of principles in it were printed. Some of it was bad enough and a lot of things were not in it. We were told that you cannot judge the whole agreement by this short document. Wait until we get the full agreement.

We got the full agreement on December 11, 1987. It was 1400 pages, including the two annexes, of very complex, technical material. After tabling it in the House, the Prime Minister announced that he was going to sign that agreement with the President of the United States on January 2, 1988, less than a month later. He was giving Canadian labour, consumers, businessmen and Members of Parliament less than a month to examine the details of this very complex 1,400 page agreement. We were allowed three days' debate in this House in the middle of December before the recess for Christmas. That is another example of the undemocratic approach of the Conservative Government—three days on a 1,400-page agreement which took nearly two years to negotiate. "Take your Christmas vacation, we are going to sign it on January 2."

It then took the Government from January until May 24 of this year to put a Bill before the House. Then, as I say, we are given five days on second reading, four days on report stage, and two days on third reading. Compare that with many other Bills which have gone through this House, and which are much less important than this, which will not have a long-range impact on Canada and change it so dramatically; their time has been much longer. I can remember Bills on the Western Grain Transportation Act and other such measures which took an entire year to debate. There were committee hearings in all parts of the country. Yet, for this particular Bill, the Government wants to rush because it does not want Canadians to know what is in it. It has been timed so we would have to debate it in the middle of summer when most people are on vacation.

The whole process has been undemocratic and the purpose of these four amendments is to restore a bit of democracy to the process. The amendments ask that certain appointments to the commissions which will administer the agreement will have to come before Parliament so Parliament can review them and possibly force a vote and debate on them. Why can the Government not accept that? I guess it is because it is either afraid to open up the process to public scrutiny or it just feels it is not good enough to be supported in a long democratic examination.

From time to time in this debate the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister responsible has risen and participated. His theme, every time we disagree with what is in the Bill, when we put forward amendments to change it, is that we do not understand the Bill. In other words, only the Parliamentary Secretary, the Minister and government Members understand it. None of us understand it and therefore we should not attempt to change it. Our motions to amend are based on a total misunderstanding. I guess we are all stupid. We cannot read. Therefore we should totally accept whatever the Government tells us in this $6 million worth of publicity it is putting in the newspapers and television and radio. We should just believe everything the Government says and not question it for a moment. The Canadian people will decide who understands and who does not understand this agreement in an election, and that is the way it should be done. Let us hope it is done soon.

How many minutes do I have left, Mr. Speaker? My time is finished? I will return to the debate later and cover some other points.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have read these four amendments with great interest and, I must say, with enormous disappointment. As I read these amendments and listened to the speeches by NDP Members who put them forward and were supporting them, and I listened to speeches from Liberal Members who were supporting them, I was really disappointed. I could not really believe my ears.

The essence of these amendments is to create more democracy, we are told. They will democracize the Bill and democracize the process. Yet the process which the amendments will apparently make more democratic really repeats an Order in Council appointment review already set out in the Standing Orders of the House. Specifically, it is set out in Standing Order 103 and Standing Order 104 of this House.

As you know, those Standing Orders were changed in the course of this Parliament at the initiative of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who suggested provisions allowing parliamentary committees to review the appointments made by Order in Council. The provisions of those two Standing Orders are in essence the same sort of provisions as those which have been put forward in these amendments by the NDP, with one slight exception. That slight exception is the fact that there would be a power in Parliament to reject the appointment.

Mr. Langdon: A major change.

Mr. Redway: Under their suggestion, Parliament would not just review it or comment on it, but would actually perhaps say no, you cannot make that appointment.

Mr. Langdon: A major change.

Mr. Redway: If the Hon. Member will just calm down for a minute and let me continue my remarks—

Mr. Langdon: Tell them the truth.

Mr. Redway: Exactly. I believe that he and I should be telling the Canadian people the truth and that is what I am doing. As I pointed out, the essence of these amendments is exactly the same as the Standing Orders with that one small exception.

However, Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, the criticism which the Opposition makes of the provisions for review in the Standing Orders is based on the fact that they say the Government of the day has the majority on those committees. It can control the whole situation and do what it wants anyway and so the rule virtually does not matter. We know that in essence the rule really works, but the Opposition criticizes it and says it does not matter because there is such a thing as Party discipline, a parliamentary majority, and for that reason the whole process as set out in the Standing Orders, they claim, does not work.

Now, with this small change—

Mr. Langdon: Major change.

Mr. Redway: —whereby Parliament has to approve or disapprove the appointment itself, what changes are there as far as parliamentary discipline is concerned? What changes are there as far as the majority in Parliament is concerned? I am sure if this were passed, if it were implemented and put in the legislation, we would find the same members of the Opposition standing up and criticizing the process. There is such a thing as a majority Government. Therefore, this process would rubber stamp the appointments just the same as the Standing Orders now rubber stamp them, in their words, even though you and I know that this review process as set out in the Standing Orders, as developed and put forward by the Prime Minister, has proved to be very effective as far as reviewing these appointments is concerned, appointments which some refer to as patronage appointments.

All of that is very disappointing to me. I am disappointed for another reason, and that is that at least one of the NDP Members has suggested that the reason this is such a great improvement is that it is an American method. The American congressional system actually has some right to approve or disapprove certain appointments made by the President of the United States.

Every day, opposition Members tell us that they do not like the American system, that they do not like the way the Americans operate their Government or their country, they do not want to Americanize culture, they do not want American social policy and they do not want anything that is American here. Here they are putting forward an amendment which they are telling us will Americanize our system. It seems to be very strange to me and it is very, very disappointing to me that that is the sort of amendment they would put forward.

If opposition Members truly believed in democracy, if they truly wanted to put forward something that went to the essence of democratizing the process, they would have looked at Private Members' Motions and seen a motion standing under my name, Motion No. 93, which I put forward on January 18, 1987. That motion reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing a new appointments process such that an Appointments Office be established which would, following the first of each year, publish in all Canadian daily newspapers a list of coming vacancies on the various boards and agencies, indicating that those who wish to be considered for such an appointment should contact that office to obtain the information specific to the desired appointment, and such that each application will then be reviewed, short-listed and investigated further, and a final selection made subject to a review by the appropriate House of Commons committee.

If the opposition Members had seriously wanted to create a democratic process, and if they had not simply wanted to delay this Bill by putting up some amendments to cause further debate, they would have incorporated the process I have put forward in Motion No. 93. I would like to take a moment or two to talk about that because that is true democracy and that is the sort of thing that should have been put forward here.

The first step, of course, would be to create an appointments office so that this Order in Council appointment process would be taken out of the political atmosphere altogether and institutionalized. We would then advertise and make sure that all Canadians had an opportunity to apply if they thought they were qualified for this appointment. No one would be shut out of the process. They would all have the opportunity to apply and put their names forward. Their credentials would be examined very carefully. A short list would be made and a certain number of people would be interviewed. Then a selection would be made, and that could then be reviewed by a committee. That would truly make the process democratic, unlike the farce that has been proposed by the NDP.

In fact, members of the NDP are trying to enshrine in legislation something that is in the Standing Orders. They are trying to enshrine in legislation the status quo. That is why it is no wonder that for many people, the initials NDP no longer stand for the New Democratic Party but rather for the New Dinosaur Party.

Because this motion has been supported by the Liberals, papers like The Ottawa Citizen, speaking about the Liberals, are saying that the Liberals are intellectually and politically bankrupt and that on free trade as on many other issues, they offer Canadians no viable option. With amendments like this, it is no wonder that people feel that way about the NDP and the Liberals.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am trying very hard to keep each of these legitimate points of order.

Any Member of Parliament had the right to put forward amendments to this Bill, and I am frankly surprised, after hearing that speech, that the Hon. Member did not in fact put forward amendments as he could have which would have reflected exactly what he was saying.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the same point of order, which is not a point of order.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should be aware, the process that has been the subject of the amendment of this Bill is a very narrow point dealing with a few modest Order in Council appointments. What we need is a general principle applying to all Order in Council appointments, and that in fact is what I put forward in Motion No. 93.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A vote on Motion No. 24 will apply as well to Motions Nos. 33, 42 and 82. Therefore, we will vote on Motion No. 24 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motion No. 31 will be debated and voted on separately.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry) moved:

Motion No. 31.

That Bill C-130 be amended in Clause 14 by adding immediately after line 40 at page 6 the following:

"(3) This section shall not come into force until equivalent and effective bid challenge procedures are available to Canadians in the United States."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in presenting this amendment, I would like to spend a moment, before I get to the substance of the issue, commenting on the debating style of my colleagues in the Conservative caucus. Talking about bankruptcy, I suppose it is interesting that rather than presenting their own case, they seem to be relying upon the editorials of one or two newspapers. Rather than organizing their own thoughts or presenting any kind of analysis based upon their own judgment, they simply use quotes from various newspapers.

One good turn deserves another and I thought I would quote some other newspapers just to show them how silly it is. In order that the Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) and the Member from Toronto do not think that they are the true repositories of opinion, I will first refer to the distinguished newspaper, the Montreal Gazette, which said:

John Turner took the bravest step of his political life yesterday when he asked the Liberal-dominated Senate to block the free trade deal until the people of Canada have a chance to vote on it.

But what Mr. Turner is doing is utterly democratic. He is saying that Parliament—both houses of it—should submit itself to the will of the Canadian people.

The paper with the largest circulation in Canada, The Toronto Star, said:

In his bid to force Prime Minister Brian Mulroney—

Mr. McDermid: That rag.

Mr. Axworthy: The Winnipeg Free Press is not a rag because it happens to agree with the Government, but The Toronto Star is a rag. Is that not an interesting judgment by the Parliamentary Secretary? The article goes on to say:

—Liberal leader John Turner has offered Canadians a fair and democratic deal.

The most interesting article is from the Edmonton Journal, the paper with the widest circulation in the Province of Alberta, the so-called great pro free trade province. It says:

John Turner's extraordinary political gamble dispels any lingering doubt about his ability to lead the Liberal party.

No other leader of his generation has chosen to risk his entire political career on one issue, with a singular act that breaks radically with Canadian parliamentary tradition.

Such political courage is rare.

I notice that that has not been said about the present Prime Minister. It seems that every time the Winnipeg Free Press writes an editorial our popularity goes up and that of the Tory Party goes down. According to the polls they printed last weekend we were at 45 per cent and the Tories were at 29. I am prepared to trade the editorials of the Winnipeg Free Press for the opinion of the people of the Province of Manitoba who obviously support the Liberal Party in far greater numbers than they support our colleagues in the Conservative Party. I hope the Winnipeg Free Press will keep writing those editorials, because every time they write our vote goes up.

I will give the Member for Selkirk—Interlake one small piece of advice. He should stop reading the editorials in the Winnipeg Free Press and start talking to the people in his constituency because they are the ones who will decide, not the editorial writers, and they will decide that he will not be at the next Christmas party.

I thought I would provide the Conservatives with that small interlude of their own kind of medicine, which they obviously do not like. Isn't it interesting that they do not like their own kind of medicine very much? The characteristic of the bully is that he likes to insult other people, but when he gets a little bit in return he backs off. Of course, they take their cue from the Minister who simply can't take the heat. We have noticed that he has not taken much heat in the House during report stage. In fact, he has not been here at all.

I want to raise the question of procurement.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. international trade critic of the Liberal Party knows that we do not talk about attendance in the House. As well, I remember that when he was Minister he did not show up in the House either when some of his Bills went through. His Parliamentary Secretary was there. That is part of the responsibility of the Parliamentary Secretary. Quit misleading the people. The Minister attended committee twice. He gave a lot of time to the committee on this issue. Please, do not mislead the House like that.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, when we brought in the Western Grain Transportation Act I was in this House every single night at second reading and report stages. I defy the Member to check the record on that. I wanted to know what was happening to my legislation. His Minister not only did not read the agreement, he has not even bothered to read the legislation or the debate at report stage. God forbid that he should try to understand the Bill. Why would we expect any Minister who is so derelict as not to read the agreement to read the legislation? However, I would expect him to be here in order to know what the amendments are.

We know where the Minister stands from his own admission. He did not think it was too important. He says that he listens to his bureaucrats. He gets all his information from his bureaucrats. There is the judgment of a real Minister, someone who cannot rely upon his own wit or intelligence but has to borrow it from other people.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) introduced the trade agreement he promised Canadians a bonanza on national television. He said that we would get access to the great cornucopia of $400 billion or $500 billion of U.S. procurement. That was his promise. Well, we know what the Prime Minister's promises are like. They evaporate in the wind the moment they are spoken. They disappear into the vapours as soon as they appear. They are part of the great ozone layer that we are all destroying. They simply no longer exist.

One of the primary reasons the Government gave for starting the negotiations was access to that procurement. Of course they did not get that, they did not get anything they wanted. They were not even able to get the security of access they talked about.

When you look at the legislation it is interesting to note not only what they did not get but what they gave up. We once again have a clear example of an imbalance between what the Americans are writing into their legislation and what we have in ours. We have an elaborate section setting up a procurement review board to make sure that all the challenges to procurement that American firms can make on Canadian government contracts will be properly administered. In fact, we are prepared to administer huge fines if they do not do it. We provide for all kinds of penalties if they do not do it.

Do you find similar initiatives in the U.S. legislation, Mr. Speaker? Of course not. The Americans say that they do not need it, that they do not have to provide us with a review board.

Mr. McDermid: It is already set up.

Mr. Axworthy: The Parliamentary Secretary, the great fount of wisdom, says it is already set up, except it does not work. Even the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the friends of the Member for Selkirk—Interlake, have said a number of times that because of the way in which the American law works they get around those requirements.

I bring to your attention the fact that in 1959 we signed the Defence Production Sharing Agreement which was supposed to provide free trade in defence production between the two countries, yet we get access to less than 30 per cent of it because over the years 11 different Congressional Acts have created set-asides for American business. Every time they bring in a defence appropriation Bill they write in another little exemption for someone getting a piece of the action, and no one has ever been able to challenge that.

We have a system under which we will provide open, unfettered access to procurement but the Americans say that they already have a system in place and do not have to do what we are going to do. It is a system which has clearly operated with an unmistakable bias. They have set-asides based upon security, set-asides based upon small business, set-asides based upon minority rights, and set-asides based upon whether or not you are in an urban area. There are more exemptions than there are rules.

Yet, our negotiator and the invisible Minister did not have the wit to insist that our requirements in the Bill for a procurement review board would only come into effect when the Americans did the same. Once again, as we did with softwood lumber, prescription drugs, and all the other sell-outs, we are going to impose penalties upon Canadians and put more restrictions and restraints upon ourselves, with no similar obligations or requirements on the part of the United States under this agreement.

Does that make sense, Mr. Speaker? It is symptomatic of the whole agreement. This obsessive ambition to get any kind of deal at any price means that the Government is prepared to sacrifice once again the protection of Canadian interests. It is prepared to respond to American demands that we live up to the terms of the agreement. However, when it comes to insisting upon equal obligations on the part of the United States Government we do not say a word, we just clam up. The Minister goes into a fetal crouch, the position in which he is most comfortable. He gets his intellectual stimulus when he is in a fetal crouch.

We have moved this amendment to demonstrate once again that the Government is a failure when it comes to standing up and protecting Canadian interests in this agreement. It is up to the Opposition to point out the problems, present the amendments, and see whether someone in this House is prepared to defend Canadians for a change.

• (2100)

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 31 that we are debating states that:

> This section shall not come into force until equivalent and effective bid challenge procedures are available to Canadians in the United States,

It is a situation in which the Conservative Government and its weakling negotiators gave away an advantage to American corporations in Canada without getting an equivalent procedure for Canadians in the United States. One of the basic ideas behind a trade agreement is that we would have access. The reason the Conservative Government gave for pursuing this bilateral trade agreement with the Americans was new business opportunities for Canadian corporations in the United States. It was for access to markets, the reduction of tariffs, the elimination of retaliation through tariffs, quotas, countervail measures, as well as a dispute settlement mechanism. All of these were supposed to give advantages to Canadians that we did not heretofore have.

When we read the fine print we find out that there is no equivalency. Americans get advantages in Canada for which there is nothing remotely comparable, even on paper to what was given away.

In other clauses of the Bill, as in other parts of the agreement, there is all kinds of equivalency on paper. There is the level playing field on which the Americans have the same access to our energy resources as we will have to their energy resources. We will be able to get water from Arizona on the same basis as Americans will be able to get water from us. There is this theoretical, very abstract equivalence in many respects in the trade agreement. Yet it is not at all an equivalence in reality. This deal is entirely skewed to the United States. The Americans had their list of objectives with which they did very well. The Conservative Government got precious little on its modest list of objectives. It did not even get some of the most important items on its very reduced list.

There is phoney equality on questions of energy security and things like culture. Either party can retaliate if the other party wants to use certain measures to promote culture for that party.

The United States does not need any particular measures to promote and protect its culture. It has vast markets which spill over into Canada. There are these so-called equivalent measures by which either party can do what it wants to protect its own culture, and the other party can retaliate. If Canada takes any steps forward to promote independent Canadian culture, the United States will retaliate. It will not work any other way.

The American Government does not need a CBC, a Canada Council or a National Film Board. It has a private sector in such vast markets that it does not need state institutions to do those things. We do not have any choice in Canada. If we are going to develop our Canadian culture we need to develop our own institutions. Our population is not large enough. We have two major language groups and a population that is spread across the country, with a greater cost of communication. We could not have done it any other way.

Therefore, there is this phoney equivalence in the area of culture and energy, so that the United States can protect its culture and Canada can retaliate, and Canada can protect its culture and the United States can retaliate. But we know how it will operate.

The Government does not care because it is so keen to link up with the neo-Conservative trends in the United States and to take advantage of them for its own gains in Canada that it is prepared to sell out. Where equivalency is provided, it is a phoney equivalency. The clause that is the subject of the motion before us does not even provide phoney equivalency as we have in culture, energy, or even monopolies where Canadian corporations dominating the health care system in the United States may threaten retaliation if the Americans brought in a medicare scheme. It is not very likely that the U.S. will bring in medicare. Canadian corporations do not dominate health insurance. That type of occurrence would not take place.

Where there is equivalency on paper, it is phoney. In this area, the Conservative Government did not even get paper equivalency. That is how callow it is at defending Canadian interests. It did not even get the same advantages for Canadians as the American negotiators obtained for Americans and their corporations.

This is a timid Government that wanted this agreement for the crassest of reasons. The Government was oriented to the sell-out. The Americans had tough negotiators with a very strong list. They sought and achieved what they had on their list.

They also managed to protect the areas that they wanted to keep to themselves. They did not want Canadians to get into American shipping, so shipping was wiped out.

The Americans use the arms industry as a major means of regional development. They have a very large military industry and arms production industry in the United States. It is a major way of producing jobs in particular disadvantaged areas. Such an area is provided with a new arms plant, which produces jobs and spin-off effects in that community. Arms plants are entirely excluded from the agreement.

While I am not arguing that they should be in the agreement, or that we want to be in that business, it is an example of the American way of promoting regional development which has been protected. Yet the Canadian way of promoting regional development has not been protected. We do not promote regional development by establishing arms plants in certain areas. We do it with regional development plans, which are in trouble. They are unfair subsidies and may be thrown out of the window now or in the first five to seven years of negotiations about what constitutes subsidies.

A local government or provincial government that wanted to create jobs in a way that would fall under a monopoly category would be in trouble. The Canadian way of doing things has not been protected, yet the American way has been protected. There is no equivalency.

Mrs. Browes: Nonsense!

Ms. McDonald: The Hon. Member says it is nonsense. It is reality. The American way of job creation is well known.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood that we are currently debating Motion No. 31 which reads:

> "(3) This section shall not come into force until equivalent and effective bid challenge procedures are available to Canadians in the United States".

I have not been able to grasp the relevancy of the remarks of the Hon. Member to that particular amendment. Perhaps you could draw that to her attention.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood has approximately 30 seconds in which to complete her speech.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have said it once and I will say it again. In some areas there has been a phoney equivalency. It will not work in practice. The Americans manage to get what they want.

In the area with which we are concerned here, there is not even a paper equivalency. There is no semblance of Canadians having the same advantage in the United States as American corporations will have in Canada. There are two situations and we are disadvantaged in both. This is the more flagrant of that kind of giveaway and bad negotiation.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are just discussing one amendment, Motion No. 31, with respect to procurement review. I just want to cover a couple of points my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), talked about. He talked about the small business set-aside in the United States and that there is nothing equivalent to that in Canada. The $3 billion to $4 billion for procurement that will be available for Canadian entrepreneurs to bid on, is not a guarantee they will receive $3 billion or $4 billion worth of work, but it opens up $3 billion or $4 billion to bid on. That figure was reached after the small business set aside in the United States was factored in. That is the first point I want to make.

The second point I want to make is that we have the equivalent in the agreement for Canada. That is one of the things not mentioned by any of the opposition Parties tonight. Under Annex 1304.3, Entities Covered, the very last part found at the bottom of page 187, it says: "Notwithstanding the above, this agreement does not apply to contracts set aside for small businesses". That is purely Canadian. That permits us to set up a small business contract set-aside program, or whatever program we wish to set up.

Mrs. Finestone: You don't have it.

Mr. McDermid: No, we do not have it, but this allows us to set those types of programs up. What we do have is a Western Diversification Fund which helps small businesses. What we have are regional purchasing plans set up by the Department of Supply and Services about which the Minister talked so eloquently in the House today. He talked about how successful those plans are becoming. I could go on and on. However, suffice it to say that we are covered on that end of things which were raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, and touched upon by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

There is a quid pro quo here. We have looked after the small businesses, and the procurement that has opened up for the United States entrepreneurs to bid for Canadian contracts comes to a total of about $600 million. In the United States, for Canadian entrepreneurs, there is about $3 billion or $4 billion. So we negotiated, I think, a very good deal when it came to procurement.

Let me read this amendment to Clause 14 into the record. Motion No. 31 states:

> That Bill C-130 be amended in Clause 14 by adding immediately after line 40 at page 6 the following:
> "(3) this section shall not come into force until equivalent and effective bid challenge procedures are available to Canadians in the United States."

There is already in the United States an equally effective bid challenge procedure. It is in place now. It is there. It is open to Canadian firms and entrepreneurs. They have equal access to it, as do American entrepreneurs. It is already in place in the United States. It is something new for us. The procurement provision of the section about which we are talking will not come into force until the Governor in Council is satisfied that the United States has taken satisfactory steps to implement the free trade agreement, including Chapter 13, which is the procurement section. If Members want to refer to Section 153(2) of Bill C-130, they will find that the approval procedure is already there.

Furthermore, if for some reason the Americans deny benefits to Canadian entrepreneurs under this agreement, we would have every right to take it to the bi-national dispute settlement mechanism, and in fact, take actions which would come out of those hearings that are open to Canadian entrepreneurs and to the Canadian Government. Therefore, this amendment is totally irrelevant. It is not required because it is fully covered in the free trade agreement. Therefore, I am recommending to my colleagues that they defeat this amendment.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to speak in this debate because motion no. 31, to amend Clause 14, touches on the crux of the debate which is: "Access to the U.S. market." Since the beginning of this debate, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all those who support the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, claimed that even if we lost our political and cultural sovereignty, even with all the inherent risks for Canada, the fact that we would have access to the U.S. market was worth it.

And now, Mr. Speaker, we have just . . . my colleague just gave a demonstration and despite what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) just quoted, he forgot that the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses said the exact opposite of what he said a few moments ago in the House.

Of course the Americans are protecting all their industries! For instance, the garment industry will not be able to sell, to export to the United States under free trade, as the agreement claims. Manufactured goods must have a certain material content and a certain percentage, so that not all Canadian garment manufacturers will qualify to enter the United States. So in fact, we are restricting access.

Mr. Speaker, the big surprise came after analysing the Bill and the entire document. Hardly a month ago, everyone thought small business was well protected and that a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States was a good thing to have. Now the Canadian Federation, which was actually advocating this agreement, has just said, and I will give you the direct quote later on Mr. Speaker, that there was no provision for allowing Canadian small business to bid on U.S. contracts. A thorough analysis of both the Canadian Government's policy, announced wiht great fanfare not long ago, and the U.S. policy shows that we lose on both fronts.

[English]

A lot of people were surprised to hear criticism from the Canadian Federation of Small Business in The Financial Post of July 5, 1988, and I quote:

> Canadian small businesses are unlikely to benefit from the $4 billion in U.S. Government spending available to Canadian enterprises under the free trade pact, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business says.

That is exactly opposite to what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) said a few moments ago. The article continues:

> American small businesses will receive preferred status over their Canadian counterparts when Washington allocates the portion of U.S. spending set aside for this category of business, CFIB Research Director Catherine Swift said in an interview.
> Meanwhile, American small businesses can bid up to $400 million in annual Canadian Government spending provided for in the agreement without any Canadian preference as to nationality or size of enterprise.

We do not have any of these things to protect Canadian small businesses. Why do Americans protect their small businesses? If it is free trade, then why are we not treated equally? Why is there this difference? In the same article it is stated:

> "We're not delighted with the government procurement provisions in the agreement," Swift said. "There's no advantage to small firms. It's likely to benefit large companies."
> Swift's remarks came in the wake of news conferences yesterday in Toronto by Supply and Services Minister Otto Jelinek and Montreal by Bernard Valcourt, Minister of State for Small Business & Tourism.
> They were trumpeting changes in federal procurement policies aimed at increasing the share of federal spending awarded to small business.
> Jelinek pointed out that the free trade agreement allows up to $4 billion of U.S. government spending to be awarded to Canadian enterprises. That compares with a total of $8.7 billion allocated by Ottawa in contracts to all firms last year.
> But Swift noted that U.S. law requires a certain portion of U.S. federal contracts must be set aside for American small businesses, leaving little—if any—for their Canadian counterparts.

It is very clear that what the Parliamentary Secretary told us a few minutes ago really does not make sense. Since July 5 the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has defended the free trade accord as a bonanza for small business. This article is clear. It says that the procurement policy of the Canadian Government and the American Government in the free trade accord does not protect Canadian small business. It does not give anything to help that sector of our economy.

Last Tuesday the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) announced in a press conference, along with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), that they were creating an institute of entrepreneurship. They have sold the shop in terms of defence of small business. That is what happened to small business. The institute of entrepreneurship has nothing. It has no budget and no mandate. That is how the Government is telling people that it will do something. when we look at the facts and read the fine print we see that there is nothing for small business.

Mr. Speaker, this is unfortunate, because we are talking about a sector that creates most of the jobs in this country. Ninety-two per cent of Canadian businesses are small businesses. When an agreement of this magnitude penalizes this sector, that is something we cannot accept. This sector, even during the recession, created more jobs than any other sector. How will the Government be able to protect small businesses in its negotiations with the Unites States? The Americans have protected their small business sector, but we did not protect ours, and that is unacceptable.

I strongly support the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who proposed this amendment which is aimed at protecting small business, and I urge all Members of this House to support the amendment as well because it is so important. If we can't protect small business now . . . How can the Canadian Government go off on a tour, which is what the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) (Mr. Valcourt) is doing, and tell people triumphantly that it is going to announce programs without budgets or funding or a mandate, when at the same time, in a free trade agreement of this kind, they completely overlooked small businesses in the section on government contracts and services, and many more sectors like the garment industry which, in fact, affects a large segment of small business?

I think it is clear, Mr. Speaker, that we must reject this agreement and support the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it has been, I suspect, for some of the people who are watching this debate a difficult one to follow because there have been charges, countercharges and insults and counter-insults. It is important in the context of this particular amendment to start with the point which the Parliamentary Secretary made to all of us in the Chamber earlier with respect to this particular amendment which looks at systems being set up to establish effective fairness for foreign firms bidding for contracts under these new procurement areas which are open to each country.

It is crucial in this debate that we set out precisely what we see in the agreement, what therefore to us appears to be true and what therefore is something that the people of Canada should be concerned about as they consider the questions that are going to be discussed and debated in the election which is coming up and, of course, in the evaluation of this debate itself. The Parliamentary Secretary said that we do not have to worry about the United States because it already has effective bid challenge systems for procurement purposes which are in place.

I put the question to people who are watching this debate: If that is the case, if that is the reality, then why it is that Article 1305.3 states:

> Each Party shall introduce and maintain, in accordance with the principles contained in Annex 1305.3, equitable, timely, transparent and effective bid challenge procedures for potential suppliers of eligible goods.

Why would it be necessary to have a commitment from the United States that it will introduce such an equitable, timely, transparent and effective system if in fact it already has such a system? Clearly, the people watching are going to realize that in this, as in other areas, the Government is trying to paint a picture which is not a true picture of reality, but a picture which in its implications for Canadians does not convey what is accurate.

For instance, if we look at a number of other points with respect to this whole exercise besides the procurement area, the Government said it would seek this trade deal in order to get an exemption from countervail. It said that specifically. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in New York said specifically: "We want an exemption from countervail". It was also stated that we had to have a subsidy code on which we agreed as a key objective of the trade negotiation. Neither of those crucial and absolutely fundamental goals that the Government stated it wanted was achieved. That is one reason we are so dead set against the deal.

The other reason is that when one looks at the immense losses that this country gave up in the trade deal one realizes that we gave up the power to review takeovers of virtually any Canadian firm by American companies. It is now possible for an American company to take over a Canadian firm, shut it down, lose those jobs, and as a country we can do nothing about it. That is one loss.

A second loss is that it is no longer possible for us, when we have a shortage in energy in the future in natural gas, or electricity to redirect exports which we were sending to the United States. We can cut back, but we can only do so to the degree that we let the Americans have access to the same proportion of energy as they had previously. That is the second loss.

The third loss is in cultural policy. We have given in print to the Americans something that they never have had before, the right to retaliate against us if we take action to protect our culture. Never in the past has a Canadian Government given that right in writing to the United States, yet this Government has done it.

Fourth, we have given up major concessions in health care. Under the agreement we have reached with the United States it is now possible for an American company to establish a hospital for profit in this country, and we cannot stop them. It is also possible for the United States to operate that hospital because it is a covered service. Therefore, it becomes possible for our health care system to be taken in a for-profit direction.

Chapters 16 and 14 of the agreement establish those conditions. Those are facts, those are realities, and they are a fourth area which we have lost.

We have lost major concessions with respect to the Auto Pact. It used to be protected by tariffs which would have to be paid.

Mr. Redway: I am striving to understand how this is relevant to effective bid challenge procedures, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps you can help me, Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor has the floor.

Mr. Langdon: I am sure my hon. friend will remember that I started my speech by talking about that as one area in which we had lost already. As I say, another area is the Auto Pact. We have given up the right to protect Canadian jobs with tariffs in the future. That is the fifth loss.

A sixth loss is with respect to monopolies. As a country, in the future we will be stopped from establishing, for instance, dental care, pharmaceutical care, or auto insurance programs in Ontario, because it will require a certain cost to American companies that already provide such insurance services. We will have to pay compensation to those companies for that service.

Therefore, we have a totally unbalanced deal, which is why we reject it. That is the truth, and that is what the Government is not telling people. At least in one small area this amendment establishes, as a condition for bid challenge procedures on our side with a procurement board, that the United States demonstrate clearly that it has established precisely the same thing for the new procurement areas to which we will have access. That will not give us a completely fair balance by any means, but it is at least one small correction.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, one of the joys of being here on an August evening is listening to speakers such as the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). In his normal fashion of addressing the Chamber he has featured a very reasonable analysis in tempered tones and clear logic. It is the type of speech when one hears it, if one accepts the step taken by the following step and the successive step, in which one can feel that there is a logic unfolding, the analysis is pristine and it is taking one to a new height of understanding, a new level of insight as to what is before us.

The true and profound pity is that this logic and fine thinking is misdirected because it begins with a false premise. It is like the rocket ship that is aimed for the moon. It may just be the slightest bit off as it leaves, but, by the time it gets there, it misses its target entirely. That is what I fear I have to report to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor. Although it is a true joy to listen to him, by the time he reaches his conclusion one realizes that he has gone far astray. He ended off by saying that what we have in the free trade agreement negotiated between Canada and the United States is "a totally unbalanced deal".

In the context of the amendment that we are debating here dealing with procurement review, there is a small example of the general thesis of how the New Democratic Party, of which the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor is a spokesman, through its efforts to continually misinterpret so many of the facts that relate to this treaty between our two countries, has rendered such a gross distortion that members of the New Democratic Party may even have persuaded themselves that it is a totally unbalanced deal, but here is the fact and let us bring it into sharp focus on the amendment before us.

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to impose a condition on the implementation of the procurement review board. Motion No. 31 specifically states:

> "(3) This section shall not come into force until equivalent and effective bid challenge procedures are available to Canadians in the United States."

In spite of what the Member has said on this issue a few moments go, as I say, step by step in his logical unfolding of the issue, he has overlooked the fundamental starting point, that there is already an equally effective bid challenge procedure in place in the United States to which Canadian firms and entrepreneurs have equal access. However, that is not all. There are sufficient safeguards in place in Bill C-130, and in the free trade agreement itself, to ensure that the United States will live up to its obligations under the procurement chapter. Specifically, the procurement provisions will not come into force until the Governor in Council—that is the Canadian Government, our Cabinet—is satisfied that the United States has taken satisfactory steps to implement the free trade agreement, including Chapter 13. Those are the Canadians who have the final say on this; the Government and the Cabinet of Canada.

• (2140)

For the Member to say that this is a totally unbalanced deal is to fly in the very face of the fact that the decision to be taken on this is the decision of the Canadian Government.

Mr. Langdon: The Conservative Government.

Mr. Boyer: He adds the Conservative Government. Well, I do not have to defend to the Member for Essex—Windsor a Party with the record of our Party, standing for the national interest in this country. The Conservative Party in this country—although he tries to cast aspersions on our history—from the time of Borden, in establishing an independent role for this country in foreign policy right down to the present day, has never stood second to anyone in terms of defining and defending the Canadian national interest.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boyer: I would say that there are still many examples today in this Parliament of a Government that is now leading the country to a new plateau of Canadian nationalism and a strong position, recognizing that this country has come to maturity.

The Hon. Member, speaking from the lofty heights where he sits, one row even more removed from the back than that which I currently occupy, says, "What about selling off Air Canada?" He gives a few other examples of some changes in national policy. Well, when you are talking, as he does, about the Conservative Party in our history, it was Sir John A. Macdonald who proposed a series of customs duties to establish those protective barriers behind which Canadian industries could grow and expand and come to prosperity.

Are we to deny the meaning of our own Canadian history and the intrinsic unworking of those policies, to say that as a century has gone by and Canada has grown to maturity, our industries have become strong, we are an exporting nation and we have seen the wealth that has been generated as a result of those prosperities, we are today not to proceed to the ultimate fulfilment of Sir John A. Macdonald's national policy, and say, yes, those tariffs were there for a temporary period to see the building in this country of a strong economy in this country? That is now happening. The time has come to move to the next stage.

How much longer will those people, such as this Member from Montreal and that Member from Windsor representing as they do industrial areas, who still find something wrong with what we are doing, deny to western Canada and to the hinterlands of this country, the resource-based areas and other parts of this country, that put up for decades with those high tariffs in order to foster the development of a strong industrial sector in this country? It is high time that we got on to some fair play for all of Canada and saw the full unfolding of the natural logic of Sir John A. Macdonald's vision for this country, realized in our present times right here under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in this thirty-third Parliament. That is the logic, not the kind of logic that led the Member for Essex-Windsor to say that this is a totally unbalanced deal. Totally unbalanced! Get out the dictionary, examine the meaning of those words. You would find that to have a totally unbalanced deal it would have been necessary to have people who had no sense of this country, no knowledge of what we are doing, and that is simply not the case.

I have read statements by the Member and I must say that I agree with the analysis of Mr. Douglas Fisher, who once sat in this Chamber as a member of the New Democratic Party and who has analysed a lot of the positions taken by that Party, under its current leadership, in relation to the free trade agreement, and he finds, running throughout, a strong anti-American streak that goes beyond the basis of rational analysis. It becomes almost a knee-jerk reaction. That is where the flaw begins in the otherwise excellent thinking and the logic that that Member brings. It is fine, except that it begins from a flawed premise.

Anyone with a serious intent and with a straight face who can stand in the House of Commons and describe the free trade treaty negotiated between the sovereign country of Canada and the United States as a totally unbalanced deal, is engaging in unreasonable hyperbole.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, we are presently debating an amendment to Bill C-130, the Canada-U.S. trade legislation, an amendment which deals with government procurement. If we look at the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, in Chapter 13, which is the chapter that deals with government procurement, we will see that it provides that Canadian businesses will have access in bidding to certain types of government contract in the United States, and that American businesses will have the right to bid on certain types of government contracts in Canada. The provisions of Chapter 13 provide for a slight improvement with respect to access in bidding on government contracts than has existed up until now. I say a slight improvement. This chapter provides for this access to bid on these government contracts in both countries.

As you read through the chapter it states that each party, meaning Canada and the United States, shall introduce and maintain, in accordance with the principles contained in Annex 1305.3, equitable, timely, transparent and effective bid challenge procedures for potential suppliers of eligible goods. So it is saying in that article that both Canada and the United States should introduce and maintain bid challenge procedures for suppliers, that is, businesses which have complaints against the system of either country, complaints that they are not being treated fairly in accordance with the agreement.

What has happened as a result of that provision in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement? As a result, Canada, in drafting its legislation, provided a Part II, entitled "Procurement Review Board", and they did just what was required in Article 1305.3 of the agreement. They did set up bid challenge procedures in accordance with that article. They set up a board to deal with the complaints of businesses, American businesses, which feel that they are not being fairly treated in accordance with the agreement in Canada.

Here is the Canadian Bill. It has Part II, dealing with this matter. Here is the American Bill, and if you look through it, there is no such provision. The Parliamentary Secretary and other government Members have said that there is no need for the Americans to provide a similar procedure in the United States because they already have similar procedures which existed long before this Canada-U.S. trade agreement was negotiated and agreed upon. That is what the Conservative Minister and the Conservative Members said.

When Canadian businesses look at this, they do not agree. This is not Liberals or Conservatives who do not agree with the Government on this; this is Catherine Swift, the Research Director of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

Catherine Swift disputes whether the provisions on government procurement will benefit Canadian small business. She has grave doubts whether the long-standing procedures in the U.S. really satisfy the requirements of the agreement as set out in Article 1305.3. This is reported in an article in the Financial Post of July 5, 1988, only a month or so ago. The article reports that Canadian small businesses are unlikely to benefit from the $4 billion in U.S. government spending available to Canadian enterprises under the free trade pact. American small businesses will receive preferred status over their Canadian counterparts when Washington allocates the portion of U.S. spending set aside for this category of business.

It goes on to deal with these particular matters and refers to the inadequacy of the American system to meet the needs of Canadian small businesses as opposed to the rights of American businesses when they are in Canada. As I say, that is because if you look at the American legislation it does not have the same provisions as the Canadian legislation. What they had in the past is open to doubt, not just by the Liberals and NDP but by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

In responding to us, the Parliamentary Secretary says we Liberals and New Democrats do not understand. We are not very smart. I guess he has to direct that allegation at the Research Director of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business as well. I think Canadians want to judge for themselves.

This is another example of the inconsistency or imbalance between the Canadian legislation and the American legislation. There are other things in the Canadian legislation to benefit Americans doing business in Canada which are not in the American legislation to benefit Canadian businesses in the U.S. If we in the Opposition had not campaigned for weeks and weeks against the former Article 8 which said that everything in this Bill and the free trade agreement would prevail over every other piece of legislation in Canada, we would have had a second Constitution. The American legislation had exactly the opposite. For months and months we tried to convince the Government that this was a very imbalanced approach. It was wrong. The Minister said week after week, no, it was not, and he would not do anything about it. Finally, I guess, he came to his senses and withdrew that article.

Of course, he took the same approach on water. He resisted and resisted, said it did not mean anything, and finally he put an amendment in the Bill to deal with export of water to the U.S.

One of the things that concerns Canadians is that when you put the American Bill and the Canadian Bill together, you do not find exactly the same provisions. Canadians are right in saying that if this is an agreement, surely the laws in both countries should be the same and have the same provisions.

Before I sit down I want to deal with a point raised in the debate by government Members. They said that if we oppose this agreement in principle, and if we oppose it in its entirety, why are we making amendments to different sections? They are accusing us of simple obstruction in doing that and of wasting time. The reason we are making amendments to many clauses of the Bill is to show how inadequate, how faulty, how completely wanting this piece of legislation and this agreement is. The only way we can do it is to go through it part by part, section by section, chapter by chapter, moving amendments, debating them, and thereby informing the Canadian public just how bad this free trade agreement is and why it should be rejected in its entirety.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on Motion No. 31 in group six. I think we should be disappointed, and Canadians should be disappointed, that there have not been representatives of the Government getting up to reply. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has expressed some very important and trenchant concerns. The points he made cry out for an answer.

Mr. McDermid: Read my speech. I answered everything he said.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): How did you answer everything he said? Are you a mind reader? You spoke an hour and a half before he got to his feet.

Mr. McDermid: Because he did not say anything new, Herb.

Mr. Mayer: Because the Parliamentary Secretary is very astute.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Very astute? I can think of some other adjective, but I am not sure it would be parliamentary. I heard the Parliamentary Secretary's speech but unless the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East sent him a copy of his notes about an hour and a half ago, I do not see how the Parliamentary Secretary's speech could be taken to be answering in any way the remarks of the Hon. Member.

The Parliamentary Secretary attempted to answer the concerns we expressed that because of the various set-asides built into American legislation there were not in fact $4 billion in potential procurement benefits for Canadian small business as a result of the Government's trade deal. It is interesting that an organization which is supposed to support the Government's trade deal, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, does not agree at all with the explanation given by the Parliamentary Secretary with respect to the degree of access that Canadians will have to American government procurement in light of the American set-aside programs.

Mr. McDermid: That is factored out, and they did not know that.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): There are many set-asides, not only the small business set-asides. There are also minority set-asides. It is not enough for the Parliamentary Secretary to say the Canadian Federation of Independent Business did not know all these things. One has to assume that an organization, whether or not we always agree with it, which is one of the principal spokesmen for Canadian small business, has a research staff capable of coming up with some sound analysis of government programs and how equivalent programs work in the U.S.

We cannot overlook the fact that the Director of Research, Catherine Swift of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, told The Financial Post that they were not delighted with the government procurement provisions in the agreement. She is speaking of the trade deal. She says there is no advantage to small firms. It is likely to benefit large companies. That was in The Financial Post of July 5, 1988. If the Government had not choked off committee hearings on the trade deal as quickly as it did, we might be able to call Miss Swift before the committee and deal with this contradiction between the Government and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

It looks as thought it is almost ten o'clock and I think we ought to call for the vote. However, whichever way the vote may turn out on this particular amendment, I am sure that when the real vote comes, the general election, it will go against this agreement and it will go against the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 31 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

It being ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

INDIAN ACT

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Valcourt, for Mr. McKnight, seconded by Mr. Jelinek, moves that Bill C-150, an Act to amend the Indian Act (death rules), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: From a procedural point of view, I do not want to anticipate what Hon. Members may want to do,

• (1010)

Neither do I want to plunge ahead of the wishes of some Members. Is the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary seeking the floor?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think you would find unanimous consent in the House to move from second reading to Committee of the Whole and perhaps complete this Bill in all stages relatively quickly.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I am not not aware of any such discussions that have gone on leading to that kind of agreement. It is customary, Sir, to have the Government explain why it is bringing in such a Bill, and it is usual for the Opposition Parties to take the opportunity to make a few comments. That is the normal practice.

It is true that we want this Bill to pass quickly. It is an important piece of legislation which corrects a mistake we made. However, we do want a few minutes of House time to deal with it.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly my understanding that we are going to go through all stages of Bill C-150, the death rule, but there is one amendment in relation to the Bill which I believe will have all-Party support in a moment. Perhaps we could make our remarks at third reading.

Mr. Hawkes: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there are two suggestions. Remarks at third reading comes from one Party. I think, if I can translate what came from the Official Opposition, he would like some explanation of the Bill at the second reading level or at the beginning of Committee of the Whole stage. The Government is very flexible on this. If Members would like the Minister to introduce the Bill and make a few remarks with respect to it, I am sure there will be no problem.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear to my colleagues in the House that we want to facilitate the passage of this Bill. The only point I was making on behalf of the Official Opposition was that there were some points my Party, the Liberal Party, want to put on the record with respect to Bill C-150. That can be done at the second reading stage or it can be done at the third reading stage, as suggested by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). The only point I make is that we want some remarks on the record.

Mr. Hawkes: I think there is a consensus in the House, Mr. Speaker, to move through second reading, Committee of the Whole, and the three Parties would make appropriate remarks at the third reading stage.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that while I am often called upon to read minds here, it is not always easy.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification) moved that Bill C-150, an Act to amend the Indian Act (death rules), be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Redway in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Redway): Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-150, an Act to amend the Indian Act (death rules).

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—

Mr. Penner: Mr. Chairman, we think we can move through this stage quite quickly. The Opposition has one main concern with respect to Bill C-150, and that is simply: Do we have it right this time? The Assembly of First Nations has looked at it and my office has looked at it and we think we do. However, we were fooled before. Therefore, we are seeking your guidance, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend and colleague from the New Democratic Party has consulted with the Law and Government Division in the Research Branch of the Library of Parliament and we think that if there were a small improvement made to the accompanying note, we might both then be satisfied.

I will not try to intrude on his territory in this respect because he has done the background work, but I would like your advice, Mr. Chairman. Can we now, under Clause 1, make a modest clarifying amendment to the accompanying note. If so, I will yield to my hon. friend to make the appropriate motion.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Redway): Subject to whether or not the motion is in order, most certainly the Member can proceed to introduce that amendment at the present time.

Mr. Fulton: The difficulty there has been is well known across the country. The Bill, as it was originally drafted, under Clauses 6 and 11, inhibited certain people whose parents died prior to April 17, 1985, and another case is in relation to entitlement from 1987. The intention of the amendment which has been drafted by a legal counsel to our committee, Bruce Carson, has been shown to the Minister and to my hon. friend from Cochrane—Superior. I believe it is in order and acceptable to the Government and to the two opposition Parties.

> This amendment, which adds the underlined words, would modify the rules respecting entitlement of persons to registration so that the date of death of a parent or other ancestor would not be a factor in determining such entitlement.

To ensure that we do not run into the problem with justice or departmental interpretation, as we have found over the past more than a year, which affected many women and their children, we would add these words following the word "entitlement":

> —as it is not the purpose of this Act to erect barriers to entitlement to registration.

That simply adds clarification in terms of departmental officials and others interpreting what our intentions are in adding the words "(f) or subsection (2)" and "provision". It will make it abundantly clear, for interpretation, that it was not the intention of Parliament previously to bring in a death rule and that it is certainly not the intention of Parliament now, nor of any of the Parties in this House, to prolong or carry on with the death rule. Therefore, I would so move, and I believe my friend from Cochrane—Superior would second this amendment. The Minister has a copy, as does my friend.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Redway): As I understand it, the Table Officers will be checking the amendment to see that it is in order. However, they do advise me that if this is an amendment to the explanatory notes as opposed to the Bill, it will create some problems.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Chairman, I understand the approach. There is always some problem. There is always something in the way, some reason that one cannot do something. We get so weary of living with that.

However, there is a way in Parliament in which we can get around that. That is simply if you, Mr. Chairman, will seek unanimous consent to proceed to modify the explanatory note as suggested by my hon. friend, we could then proceed with dispatch. We do not need to search, then, through Beauchesne's and all manner of precedents. I think that we can do this, provided that the Government is willing and there is no Member of Parliament who objects. I think in this way we can proceed expeditiously.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Redway): I do want to hear from the Minister. Perhaps, just before he comments, I can say that my advice is that what we are doing and what Parliament always does is adopt the various clauses of the Bill and adopt the Bill itself but not adopt the explanatory notes. Therefore perhaps counsel can make some modifications in them, but this House does not adopt the explanatory notes themselves. With that, perhaps the Minister has some comment.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Chairman, I am no expert on procedure. I do know one thing. When the courts have to interpret the statute they do not look at explanatory notes. However, I understand the position of both my colleagues. We have no objection to giving unanimous consent to agree with this amendment to the explanatory notes, because what it purports to do is exactly what this Bill attempts to do. We have no objection. If in order to avoid the problems of the Table we have to give unanimous consent, I am sure that Members on this side of the House will give that consent.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Redway): Once more, if I might just comment, my advice is that the explanatory notes are not printed in the Bill which is passed by the House and sent on to the Senate. In interpreting the Bill it may be that the judge will look back at some of the comments that have been made here, or whatever. My advice is that at best what we might be able to do is, by unanimous consent, recommend this to the parliamentary counsel and that perhaps in some way they might be included in some fashion.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Chairman, the fact remains that for the purposes of the record it will be shown that when this Bill was sent back for third reading the explanatory note had been amended to incorporate that change. It will be a matter of record. I guess that is all my hon. colleagues are looking for. Hence, I do not see any problem for the House in adopting this amendment, with unanimous consent, and when we go to third reading we all know very well that we do not incorporate the explanatory into the final Bill but that it will be a matter of record.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Redway): If that is agreed, then, we will carry on on that basis. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Redway): When shall the Bill be read a third time? By unanimous consent, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt, Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved, for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today, and my comments will be brief, to ask the House to consider and provide quick passage of Bill C-150, an Act to amend the Indian Act. It is understood that with the consent of the two Opposition Parties, we shall proceed with all stages of Bill today.

This Bill will eliminate from the present Act a number of provisions that would otherwise unfairly deprive certain persons of their entitlement to registration as Indians.

The proposed amendments are directly connected with major progressive changes introcuced by this Government in 1985 with respect to the Indian Act, changes that were subsequently adopted by Parliament. These changes, known as Bill C-31, were aimed at bringing the provisions of the Indian Act into line with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, by eliminating discriminatory provisions, restoring Indian status and band membership and increasing control of Indians over their own affairs.

As a result, we have ensured that men and women receive equal treatment, that children are treated fairly, whether or not they were born out of wedlock, that people who lost their Indian status as a result of discriminatory measures or enfranchisement could recover their status, and finally, that the direct descendants of such persons would also have registration entitlement.

[English]

Bill C-31 was a major step forward in the history and progress of Canada's Indian people. The response to the opportunities afforded by these amendments has been heavy.

To date, more than 45,000 Indians have been registered under the new provisions, and applications are still being received at the rate of some 35 per day. In the initial stages, some backlog in processing applications occurred, but this backlog is now being eliminated.

The Government, of course, is committed to provide additional funding to Indian bands as a consequence of the increase in membership and the social and other needs these increases engender. The commitment has been met, although some say partially. Funding for the implementation of Bill C-31 has nearly doubled in the past 12 months, from $40 million in 1987-88 to some $72 million in the current year.

In general, the provisions of Bill C-31 are working well and have been well received by native Canadians.

However, although this Bill was carefully drafted, after thorough consultation with the groups concerned, the Government was advised that a provision of the present Act might have the effect of excluding certain persons we had no intention of excluding.

This technical error arises basically from the so-called "death rule" which adversely affects requests for registration based on the initial right of the person's granparents. More specifically, it affects applicants if one or both parents were deceades before April 17, 1985. This was clearly a mistake, and we acted as quickly as possible to draft the requisite amendment.

In the process, we received the positive and unanimous support of the Assembly of First Nations, the Native Council of Canada, the Native Women's Association and other native groups.

Members of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs, on both sides of the House, also agreed this matter should be dealt with as soon as possible.

The changes proposed today will correct the situation.

• (1030)

They have been made retroactive to April 17, 1985, to ensure justice and fairness, not only to future applicants but to those whose applications are now before us.

The total number of individuals directly affected by this measure is relatively small. However, that is not the main point. The entire purpose behind Bill C-31 was to eliminate discrimination and ensure fairness in the Indian Act. Even if only one person was unjustly denied status, it would be one too many. It is for that reason that I urge all Members in all Parties, and we have their co-operation, to give speedy passage to the Bill in order that it may be enacted into law at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I will be as brief as possible in order to facilitate quick passage of Bill C-150. However, I need to take a few moments because some of the things the Minister has said, as my hon. friend from Skeena has noted in side-long glances to me, have been, to say the least, provocative.

What the House is doing with Bill C-150 is once more amending the Indian Act. We are amending the Indian Act this time to correct a drafting error, or what the Minister called a "technical error", from a previous set of amendments to the same Act, a series of amendments presented by the Government in a Bill known as Bill C-31. That is a rather famous Bill among the Indian people of Canada. That Bill provided that persons who had lost their Indian status because of marriage or some other antiquated reason could now apply to have that status restored, and in some cases they could also have their membership in a band returned to them.

For a very long time in Canada the aspirations of governments was that somehow we do away with this special status that has been ascribed to Indian persons. We wanted to assimilate them and make them part of the nation in a way that ran counter to their own cultural aspirations, to their own view of themselves as nations who had entered into a treaty relationship with the Government of Canada. For at least 20 years that idea has been abandoned, although it keeps cropping up again. We are always nervous about this attempt to fail to recognize the special place that Indian people have in the Canadian nation.

In response to what the Minister said on Bill C-31, I want to say to the House that almost everything connected with Bill C-31 could be described as a litany of bungling. There has been goof-up after goof-up like a parade of clowns. First, the commitment from the Minister of the day, the predecessor to the current Minister, was that as a result of Bill C-31 "no band would be worse off". Despite what the Minister said this morning, that commitment has not been lived up to. It has hardly been partially lived up to. There has been a monumental failure on the part of the Government to live up to its obligations under Bill C-31.

The costs that the Minister mentioned this morning that have gone to Indian people as a result of Bill C-31 have meant that there has been a curtailment in other areas. For example, the housing programs on Indian reserves have not been touched at all. The backlog has not been dented at all since 1984, not at all.

In addition, the Government has decided to put a cap on educational assistance for Indian young persons who are seeking entrance into universities and colleges. As of last September, because of the Government's action, 1,000 of these young people who qualified and had a place at a college or university ready for them were denied access because the Government refused to fund them.

Despite pressure from the opposition Parties, an obligation in Bill C-31 for a parliamentary committee to review the impact of Bill C-31 was delayed and delayed and delayed. Now, Sir, at long last we have a report that is ready for the printer. However, why has that report not been presented to Parliament? It is because it is locked up in the chairman's office. Repeated telephone calls to the chairman's office have not brought any response at all. We do not even know where he is. Presumably he is out campaigning for re-election, which raises an interesting question: "Why would you want to seek re-election when you have not yet completed the job from the last time you were elected?"

When the legislative drafters put together Bill C-31 they erred in Clause 6(3) and Clause 11(3). Under those clauses it became possible in some cases to deny registration to an Indian person where an applicant's parents had died before April 17, 1985, or to deny band membership where an applicant's parents has died before June 28, 1987.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), in speaking at the committee stage, indicated to the House that that never ever was the intent. It was not the intent of the Government. It was not the intent of the committee which examined the Bill that that restriction should be there, but that is exactly what happened. In fact, the provisions of the Bill were to ensure that no applicant would be disadvantaged by parental death. That was the real purpose. It was meant to be inclusive and not to be exclusive. What went wrong?

What went wrong, Sir, was that someone in the Department of Justice—and one can only imagine what went on, whether the cribbage tournament had come to an end or all the crossword puzzles had been completed—picked up Bill C-31 and said: "Here is a way in which we can create a new obstacle to the registration of Indian persons". I am sure there must have been glee and jubilation in many of the burrows, hollows, and cubby-holes of the bureaucracy because a new obstacle had been discovered.

That always reminds me of the classic description of the difference between a bureaucrat and a public servant. A bureaucrat will always give a hundred reasons plus why something absolutely cannot be done, and a public servant will search diligently for a way to solve a problem and improve the life of a citizen.

However it happened, the death rule created an obstacle. Cooler heads realized that this had to be corrected. It was an injustice against Indian people. It was an interpretation of the Act that was never intended.

I want the House to know, both the government side and the opposition side, that there is a lesson here for all of us to learn. We should never, ever have blind faith or total trust in those who draft the Government's Bills. There is a tendency around here to think that anything that arrives out of the dens, burrows, and hollows of the bureaucracy has to be letter perfect. There is a tendency to believe that. There is also a tendency to believe that parliamentarians are just a bunch of amateur lawmakers, and how could they ever conceivably correct something that has come out of the Department of Justice. Why, it is insulting and arrogant of parliamentarians to think that they could ever do that! Well, if that were so, I wonder why there are so many times in which we have to amend Bills in this House. It so often happens, Sir, because in many cases the law is in fact an ass. The law is an ass because it has been badly drafted. It has been drafted in a confusing way so that it creates enormous problems for some of our citizens or all of them, as the case may be.

We now have Bill C-150, and it is taking up important time of the House. Why? It is because there was careless drafting in the first place, and then, to add insult to injury, Justice decided to put its own twisted interpretation upon the drafting that it had done. It is causing a lot of difficulty for the House, but leave the House aside. I want you to know how much hurt has resulted from this for many Indian persons who have been seeking reinstatement, seeking to have their status restored, and have run up against this particular brick wall.

I thank you, Sir, and I thank the House for allowing me to get that grievance off my chest. I feel a little bit better for having done so. I want to say that we want this Bill to proceed quickly. My only concern is: Have we now got it right? My confidence obviously has been shaken. Have we now got it right, or will my hon. friend from Skeena and myself be told some time next year that as a result of Bill C-150 no one at all can apply to be reinstated, or of all those who have been reinstated, all those reinstatements are null and void? I know, Sir, that that is unlikely, and I am expressing my concerns in an extreme way. We have had our fingers burned here. I say to my friends in the House that we have to be cautious.

As a general rule, almost all Indian legislation that has been passed by this and successive Parliaments has been bad legislation, and most agreements that this Government and previous Governments have negotiated with Indian Nations have always been subject to those kinds of interpretations in which the Government of Canada comes out the winner and the Indian nation or the group of Indian nations that have involved themselves in that agreement have come out the losers. That is why Indian people have so much suspicion about the whole legislative process. That is why they pause and hesitate and delay when they sign agreements. They are always looking for that hook which will pull them down. They are always looking for the trick, for the con. There has been too much of that by Governments of the past.

Recently, a document came to my desk which contained a check list to be followed by those negotiators who wish to see issues resolved between the Government of Canada and Indian nations. There is no time for me to review that list and I do not intend to do it, but I want to make the point, briefly and simply, that if Government-Indian relations in Canada are ever to improve, it is absolutely essential that we begin with a change in attitude, particularly on the part of those on the government side who are in face-to-face contact with Indian leaders, whether it is at the negotiating table or elsewhere. The so-called trust responsibility, which is so often referred to, has a variety of meanings and a variety of implications, but an elemental aspect of that is that we establish a climate of trust. Only in that climate can there be good and progressive and helpful work which can be done to improve Government-Indian relations.

I will conclude by saying that Bill C-150 has been examined—and the Minister mentioned this—by the Assembly of First Nations, by the Native Council of Canada, by my office, by our parliamentary counsel to the committee, and by my hon. friend from Skeena. It appears to be satisfactory, but, as that line goes in a play by G. B. Shaw by the very same title, "You never can tell, Sir. You never can tell".

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to put a few remarks on the record in relation to Bill C-150. As the Minister said, it is true that the Assembly of First Nations, the Native Council of Canada, and the Native Women's Association had a chance to look at the draft of this Bill, but not because of anything the Government had done. I sent a copy of the draft over to them on Monday so that they would have an opportunity to have a look at it before it came before the House this morning.

It is true, as my friend from Cochrane—Superior and the Minister have said, that it appears to meet the test of allowing those who have been denied the opportunity to be reinstated to have that done now. I was pleased to hear the Minister say that it is fully retroactive to April 17, 1985. Those who are now allowed to have their registration process go forward here in Ottawa will have all those benefits and entitlements that they have been denied these past three years given to them in one lump, once they are registered and have their status returned.

The registration entitlement was first consolidated in the Indian Act in 1876, and here we stand, 112 years later, adding one more chip to the pile of problems and complex rules that are very, very technical. My friend from Cochrane—Superior and I, heard evidence on Bill C-31 for many months, beginning last September until June, indicating that there are probably very few, perhaps only a handful, of Canadians who actually understand all the highly technical and complex rules that apply to women and to those who have different blood quantum, those second generations rules and all those things the Government of Canada has seen fit to bring in over the last 112 years.

I hope that this is a stepping stone, that Parliament will soon listen to what the First Nations have been saying and give serious and determined consideration to the concept of self-government and self-determination, so that it is the First Nations that decide citizenship, status, and band membership, rather than Parliament continuing to bring forward ever more complex, highly technical, legal language.

Those applying for reinstatement or first time registration face an unbelievable bureaucratic nightmare, as we have heard from the witnesses who came before our standing committee in relation to Bill C-31. Everyone recognizes that the death rule that we are amending today is a legal defect, that it was not the intention of this House or of any Party to bring it forward. As my friend from Cochrane—Superior stated so well, there is a distinct difference between bureaucrats and public servants and between interpretation by the Department of Justice and the interests of those who want to see Parliament act. First, Clause 6(3) results in a denial of registration for an applicant whose parents died before April 17, 1985, or, second, Clause 11(3) results in a denial of band membership for an applicant whose parents died before June 28, 1987.

We must keep in mind that these amendments came into force in 1985 in order to ensure compliance with international human rights standards and the equality provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to a great extent thanks to the work of Miss Lovelace who took this matter all the way to the United Nations. Bill C-31 did not come in of its own volition. It was only under international pressure that Canada brought it into compliance with international human rights standards.

The Government originally estimated 65,000 applicants for reinstatement between 1985 and 1990. Now, 118,000 are expected, according to government estimates, and we have heard evidence before the committee that it may run far higher than that, up to 130,000 or more.

We do not know how many individuals are blocked by the death rule, but we do know that the Minister and the Government have known for more than a year and have done nothing. Bill C-150 should have been before this House a year ago. Applications have been simply held in limbo, kept on ice across the river in Hull.

By May of 1988, over 100,000 applications had come in. Some 54 per cent were from adults and some 46 per cent were from minors. Likely hundreds are held up by the death rule because only 52 per cent of the over 100,000 applications have been completed by the Government. Some 74 per cent of completions have resulted in new registrations with 26 per cent disallowance. The applications by region were the highest from Ontario with 29,000. British Columbia was second with 18,000 and Alberta was third with 13,000; then came Manitoba with 12,000, Québec with 11,000, Saskatchewan with 10,000, the Atlantic region with 4,000, the Northwest Territories with 2,000, and Yukon with 2,500.

Registration delay has had far-reaching impacts on thousands of individuals in terms of health care, education, housing, residents taxation, and, in particular, participation in culture and membership in their home communities and nations. This amendment has been a long time in coming, and it is shameful that once again the First Nations are treated to such second-class treatment by any Government.

I want to touch briefly on a comment made by my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). He quoted David Crombie when he was the Minister responsible who said: "No band would be worse off". We have heard evidence from across the country, including both Yukon and the N.W.T., and we have been unable to find a band of the close to 600 bands in Canada that is not worse off. It is a tragedy that a promise in relation to something which came about because of the good work of the United Nations could not be lived up to by a Government of Canada.

I want to conclude by referring to the Bill C-31 report of the standing committee which relates directly to the death rules. We have the draft, as my hon. friend pointed out, and it has been locked up in the chairman's office for two months now. The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior, myself, and two members from the government side have now taken the extraordinary measure of invoking Standing Order 92(2) of this Chamber to order the chairman to come back to Ottawa to do what he is paid to do. Beyond his pay as a Member of Parliament, he is paid to chair the committee.

I have been trying to get a return call for a long time, as I know has my friend from Cochrane—Superior. I would hope that the chairman of the committee would find some way, either with a road-map, on an aircraft, or some other way, to get back to Ottawa and make the report which is required by statute.

As of June, 1987, our standing committee was required to report to Parliament forthwith under a statutory requirement. How many Canadians have been dragged before the courts for not living up to a law? Here we have a standing committee with seven Members of Parliament including five government Members, one Liberal Member, and one New Democrat, who have been unable, in 14 months, to live up to a statutory requirement to report forthwith on the impact of Bill C-31 on the First Nations of Canada.

I would hope that as a result of this debate, and perhaps with the assistance of the Minister who is here today, a call might be made to the chairman of that committee to return to Ottawa. If he does not comply, he will be dragged here pursuant to Standing Order 92(2), being in flagrant violation of the wishes of the standing committee, to report on Bill C-31 which has extensive technical information on the death rules and on the over-all impact of Bill C-31 on the First Nations.

In the interests of the more than one million first citizens of Canada and members of the First Nations, I would hope that the Minister would take just such action today to ensure that the Member from Cape Breton returns to Ottawa and does what he should with regard to the death rules and Bill C-31, that is, report on that Bill to Parliament and the people of Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

INDIAN ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-123, an Act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share), as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point or order. I think you would find a predisposition in the Chamber to attempt, in relatively expeditious fashion, to finish report stage of this Bill and then to go immediately to third reading stage.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point or order. We agree that Bill C-123 can be dealt with expeditiously. Speaking for this Party, it is not even necessary for there to be any speeches at the third reading stage. The Bill was extensively debated at second reading and has been before the committee.

I will be satisfied if I have at least the opportunity to submit for consideration one of two amendments. I understand that my first amendment was ruled out of order, and I understand that the second one has been ruled in order. If there can be consideration by the House of this amendment and an explanation by myself about why I introduced it, that will suffice and I think we could conclude consideration of this Bill very quickly.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would like just a few moments to put some remarks on the record in relation to Bill C-123. It does involve trust accounts that are being held in the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada involving over $900 million. I think it is important that some concluding remarks in relation to Bill C-123 be put on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Redway): I assume that those remarks would be put at third reading. I have a ruling by the Speaker with respect to Bill C-123, an Act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share).

There are two motions in amendment set down on the Notice Paper in relation to Bill C-123. Motion No. 1 causes the Chair some difficulty because it seeks to amend the original Act, contrary to Citation 773(8) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads as follows:

> (8)(a) An amendment may not amend a statute which is not before the committee. Journals, March 28, 1969, p. 862. Journals, June 11, 1970, p. 993.
> (b) An amendment may not amend sections from the original Act unless they are specifically being amended in a clause of the bill before the committee. Debates, December 15, 1977, p. 1909.

Therefore, I must rule that Motion No. 1 is out of order, as the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior indicated.

Motion No. 2 is in order and I will now put Motion No. 2 to the House.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior) moved:

Motion No. 2

> That Bill C-123 be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 13 to 15 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:
> "and who the council determined to be the parent or person to whom the payment is to be made or, if so requested by the council on giving its consent to that distribution, to the council to be held in trust and paid for the maintenance, advancement or other benefit of the child to a parent or person who is responsible for the care and custody of the child and who the council determines to be the parent or person to whom the payment is to be made."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment moves to delete certain lines in Bill C-123 and replace them with the motion before you. The purpose of this is simple, that is, to provide for the exclusion of provincial social services in the distribution of minors' trust funds.

My hon. friends in the House ought to be aware that there is a very deep and abiding resentment on the part of Indian nations toward direct interference by a provincial jurisdiction in their affairs. At every opportunity they attempt to make it clear that their relationship is a special relationship with the Government of Canada, a relationship underscored by treaties which have been entered into and by the fact of our Constitution itself, namely, Section 91(24) which says that Indians and lands reserved for Indians are an exclusive federal responsibility.

This amendment simply says that minors' trust funds which now go to parents, guardians of Indian children, or band councils, may not be grabbed by provincial agencies. That is the purpose, Sir, and I would like the House to give serious consideration to that motion to improve Bill C-123.

• (1100)

Mr. Speaker: I think I should tell the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) that while we now have to move on to Statements by Members and Question Period, if the Hon. Member would wish to speak further, of course I would recognize him after Routine Proceedings, and that would also apply to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and others.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION PROGRAM—SPENDING PRIORITIES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has peculiar ideas on the environment and the economy. Its priority actually seems to be pollution. Look, for example, at the way in which the Western Diversification Fund is spent.

From a memo released by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) summarizing projects funded so far, we learn that Vicell Canada Tissue Limited in Delta, British Columbia, receives $4.6 million of taxpayers' money "to manufacture dry formed tissue for sale to paper converters who will produce end products such as wipes, disposable towelling, and serviettes". From the same memo we learn that ISCA Management of Vancouver gets $21,000 "to market a proposal to the U.S. Department of Energy for a $1-million research and development project on acid rain control systems".

What a strange sense of priorities for this Government, spending 200 times more on the production of more litter than on the prevention of acid rain. Would you not agree, Mr. Speaker?

HISTORIC EVENTS

CZECHOSLOVAKIA—TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF PRAGUE SPRING

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on August 20, 1968, Czechoslovakia's hopes for freedom and independence were crushed when Soviet troops invaded the city of Prague. The invaders came to crush the Prague Spring, a brave experiment in independence. Soviet troops occupy Czechoslovakia to this day.

Canada was the beneficiary of this sad episode. Thousands of Czechs and Slovaks emigrated here and have since made enormous contributions to their new home. Let us not forget the terrible price that the people of Czechoslovakia paid for the attempts to reform their society.

Today, when so many of the rights and freedoms Canadians enjoy are denied to the Czechoslovakian people by a Soviet puppet regime, let us join together with Czechoslovakians in commemorating the twentieth anniversary of their brave attempt to restore freedom and justice in Czechoslovakia.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

HAMILTON—PROPOSED DEMOLITION OF HISTORICAL BUILDING

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, Hamilton has one more example of the disastrous corporate plans that are so characteristic of Canada Post. Not only is this government corporation jeopardizing Canadian jobs and cutting back essential services, it is also potentially responsible for the demolition of an historical building in downtown Hamilton.

Canada Post announced plans earlier this month for a new postal plant to replace the present antiquated facilities. It plans to do this by demolishing a building of historical importance. The local architectural conservation advisory committee cannot give the building historical designation without Canada Post's approval. This just shows how little this corporation cares about the communities it serves.

There is unfortunately little hope that Canada Post will listen to the concerns of Hamiltonians. After all, it has not cared about the women and men who have lost a decent living wage because of privatization. It has not listened to the citizens of rural Canada who have fewer and fewer postal services, and it certainly has not listened to the seniors and the disabled people who no longer get door-to-door service.

ENTREPRENEURSHIP

NATIONAL POLICY—CREATION OF JOBS BY SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, "as a nation we rely upon the ability of Canadian entrepreneurs to identify new business opportunities, to respond to them, and to convert a creative idea into a prosperous business".

These were the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in introducing the new national policy on entrepreneurship on August 16, just three days ago. Of the 1.25 million new jobs created since 1984, 80 per cent have been in the small business sector. This only goes to prove that in Canada, small business is big business.

The new national policy will create the right climate so that Canadian entrepreneurs can be even more successful in the future.

AIRPORTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, when will Conservatives realize that Hamilton is not just the receptacle of the country's garbage? The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) actually accused Hamilton of "holding the country to ransom" yesterday.

Meanwhile, where are the Conservative Members from Hamilton? I have not heard the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Peterson), the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin), the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) or the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott) speak out to defend Hamilton. Why elect Conservatives in the city of Hamilton when they will not defend the interests of the people of Hamilton when the federal Government tries to use us as a receptacle for their garbage?

The odyssey of the garbage is not over. They are now planning to send it off to Gatineau. I guess Quebec is good enough for their garbage. What is good enough for Hamilton and Gatineau is not good enough for the city of Toronto or the garbage facilities at the airport.

The federal Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) is responsible. He created this situation and he should resolve it. The Hamilton Members should speak up for Hamilton.

ENERGY

REVIEW OF NATIONAL POLICY

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, recently the Government received a long-awaited report entitled "Energy and Canadians into the 21st Century". This is the first thorough review of national energy policy in 30 years.

The report indicates that by virtually any measure one might wish to apply, Canada is rich in energy. However, energy wealth does not guarantee a secure future. The luxury of having options carries the need to make difficult choices.

The report recommends that Canada's energy should be used to its economic potential, that environmental goals should have the same importance as economic and social goals, that energy resources should be developed because of market mechanisms, and that commitment to research, development and management of technology is critical to enhancing Canada's energy choices and environmental quality into the next century.

The report paints a future that is challenging and optimistic. It also concludes that Canadians will receive substantive national economic and regional development opportunities through enhanced energy trade. Furthermore, the report concludes that the proportional access clause in the trade agreement can be implemented in a way which does not prejudice Canada's energy security interests.

PORTS

PORT OF CHURCHILL—IMPORTANCE FOR EXPORTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, once again the Port of Churchill's fate is before the federal Government. Rarely has a shipping season gone by when Manitobans have not had a fight on their hands to see that the port remains alive as a shipping centre and a vital part of our nation's sea port system. This year is no exception.

My letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in June calling for a full commitment to the port has yet to be answered, even though it was written some two months ago. Almost one month ago the Prime Minister gave Manitoba's Premier a commitment that he would personally look into the matter of the Port of Churchill and provide action. What is the Prime Minister waiting for? Even his promises of fast action to the Premier of Manitoba seem to be meaningless.

Manitobans want fairness. The Port of Churchill is crucial for farmers in its catchment area, and it represents substantial savings for those who use it. The potential for a longer season grows as the port is used, not only for the products of other western producers but for other products such as lumber from Manfor in The Pas.

It is a shame that politics is ruining Churchill. The one thing that is required to keep Churchill's potential alive is political will, and I call upon the Prime Minister to keep his promises to the people of Churchill.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, while speaking to a group of people in my riding, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) made some erroneous statements regarding the free trade agreement with the United States. The fact is that he failed to tell the people that Canadian control of unprocessed fish is fully protected by the binational dispute settlement process. He failed to tell the people that the tariff elimination for crab products over 10 years will allow Canadian crab processors to remain price competitive in the U.S. market should the significant Alaska crab fishery become a factor in the U.S. market.

We respect the Hon. Member's right to be opposed to free trade, but we also expect him to have the decency to tell the people the truth.

CHILD CARE

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT PLAN

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, there is disappointment for Canadian families with the proposed, poorly conceived Tory child care plan. It fails to understand that adequate child care is not a luxury, it is a necessity.

Canadians now know all too well the market driven Tory philosophy that promotes profits first and policy charades next,

For what you see is not what you get. The old shell game is how they play the policy game. While the Tory plan talks about 200,000 spaces, it forgets the need for fully accessible and affordable child care for one million Canadian children awaiting spaces.

• (1110)

How can Tories defend their child care plan? It says nothing about lower or middle income families being helped. It forgets latchkey children. It makes less spaces available, compared to the old plan. It fails to ensure quality standards across all provinces. It is silent on workplace standards, workplace child care, and extending parental leave. It is a closed program.

What happens after seven years? The Conservatives expect Canadians to be pleased about the increased child care expense deduction. It gives a larger tax break to the well-to-do while costing millions to the Treasury. It does nothing for lower income families who cannot afford to pay taxes.

This tax break is no help to those who need it. Tax credits would have been a fairer way. Canadians will not forgive the Tories for their four-year, too poor, too short plan for children. Liberals consider child care a basic building block.

TRANSPORT

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT OF MONTREAL SOUTH SHORE

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on July 14, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) gave a very important press conference in Beauharnois. In front of more than more than 400 people, he announced that the federal Government, in particular the Department of Transport, would take part in the regional development of the South Shore of Montreal, called "Montérégie" in French.

The federal Government made it clear that Highway 30, like other expressways, is a provincial responsibility, but that since this highway crosses federal property, the federal Government will connect the two shores with no mechanical hindrance. This commitment from the Minister is worth nearly $100 million.

This positive initiative has been demanded for 25 years and the South Shore of Montreal is very proud of this announcement. The mayors have understood that it is the result of the cooperation of the South Shore mayors with their provincial MNAs and federal MPs, the leadership of the Beauharnois-Salaberry Regional Municipality at the Montérégie Summit and of the Committee to Complete Highway 30 chaired by Beauharnois Mayor Claude Haineault.

At last, Sorel will be connected to Valleyfield and to Highway 20, which passes it, via the Trans-Canada Highway, the Eastern Townships Autoroute and the highway to Saint-Jean.

On the eve of the election, there is much talk about election promises. We are accused of merely making election promises. As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, we are not in an election campaign; this is a commitment by the Minister and it is worth at least as much as the written promise or letter that the Leader of the Opposition is supposed to make public during the election campaign for the same thing. This is only an election promise while ours is a commitment.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE REDUCTION URGED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are aware that yesterday the Bank of Canada increased interest rates to some 9.8 per cent. In Saskatoon, all the Premiers condemned the Government's high interest policy, including the Premier of Ontario, the province that has benefited most from economic growth in the last year.

In addition, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool has condemned the high interest rate policy of the Government, saying that it is hurting the farmers of the country. In addition, the National Farmers Union has condemned this high interest policy. As well, Roger Phillips, President of IPSCO, has made the same kind of statement.

On behalf of Canadians, particularly farmers from western Canada, I want to plead with the Government to come to its senses and bring down interest rates before it throws a lot of people out of work and hurts exporters, hurts western Canadian farmers, and indeed farmers across the country.

CHILD CARE

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, almost four years have passed since the Government came to office. During those four years many very exciting things have happened. We have the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. During each of those four years we had the greatest economic growth of any country in the world. We had the greatest job creation of any country in the world.

On top of that, we have the first ever agreement with respect to reducing acid rain emissions in this country. We have the first ever employment equity legislation. Now before Parliament we have the first ever national child care legislation.

Many of my constituents believe that the child care program is the most important thing Parliament has dealt with and should be dealing with. In fact, contrary to the assertion by the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), many of my constituents are telling me not to hold an election until we have passed that child care legislation.

CHILDREN

GARBAGE PAIL KIDS CARDS—BAN ON IMPORTATION URGED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I brought to the attention of Parliament that obscene bubble gum cards were being sold to the children of Canada. These are known as Garbage Pail Kids cards. As I indicated previously, they depict babies and small children in the form of dolls being mutilated.

The American company involved, trying to justify this grotesque sale of products to children, is reported as saying to the Canadian Press:

"Kids have always liked gross", said Norman Liss of The Topps Company. "And this is a gross product."

Mr. Liss is certainly correct in his last statement. This is a gross product. To be selling us this kind of garbage is a gross abuse of their privilege of being able to sell in this country.

Again I call upon the Government to utilize the provisions of Section 159 and Section 160 of the Criminal Code of Canada to stop the importation and sale of these kinds of products. For my part, I have referred the matter to the Crown Attorney here in Ottawa and have asked him to look at the situation with a view to laying charges, so that our children are not polluted by this kind of nonsense.

THE SENATE

CALL FOR PASSAGE OF FREE TRADE LEGISLATION

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, today in Saskatoon at the annual Premiers' meeting, Premiers will discuss Senate reform once again. At least eight of the Premiers will be concerned about the suggestion that the Upper House might adopt the request of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to block the free trade Bill.

That is an insult to all Canadians. That request is a desperate act by a desperate man seeking publicity. It is harmful to western Canada and all Canadians.

I call on the Upper House to carry out its responsibility, exercise its independent judgment and pass the Bill, until such time as we are able to reform the Senate and have an elected Senate rather than a bunch of unelected people from the Liberal Party.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS ATTRIBUTED TO FORMER MINISTER—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY RCMP

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns a very serious matter.

For the first time, a Conservative Member of Parliament, a member of the Privy Council and former member of the Prime Minister's Cabinet, has stated that the Conservative Government is involved in a kickback scheme.

The Conservative Member acuses the Conservative Government of routinely resorting to a system that according to her, violates the Criminal Code of Canada.

Yesterday in the House, the Deputy Prime Minister stated that his colleague's statements were, to use his own words, half-truths, falsehoods, innuendo, distortions of facts and smear.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister make such a statement? Was there an investigation by the RCMP? The Deputy Commissioner said there was none.

In the circumstances, will the Deputy Prime Minister ensure that the RCMP will conduct an investigation to clarify the statements made by Conservative Member for Rosemont?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the House that we as a Government have no information whatsoever to substantiate the allegations made by the Hon. Member for Rosemont. I am also advised by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police that at no time has the Hon. Member for Rosemont ever spoken to the RCMP with respect to those allegations.

Notwithstanding that, I can advise the Right Hon. Member that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will be interviewing the Member for Rosemont with respect to those allegations.

• (1120)

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. On February 3 of this year the Prime Minister said, and I use the Prime Minister's words: "The integrity of this Government and all its members is the responsibility of the Prime Minister".

Yesterday when the Prime Minister was in Waterloo, Ontario, when he was asked about the statement made about criminal activity by his own Member of Parliament for Rosemont—whom the Prime Minister once had in his Cabinet—the Prime Minister said: "I have no idea. What do you think?" That flippant remark by a Prime Minister is a dereliction of duty in the face of an allegation, a statement made by one of his own Members, relating to criminal activity.

This does not come from our side of the House. This comes from one of the Prime Minister's own Members. What is the Prime Minister actively going to do to deal with this situation in accordance with his statement made in this House on February 3?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman would agree that the Government of Canada, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, has moved very quickly with respect to various charges of wrongdoing, such as the establishment of the Commission of Inquiry, ministerial dismissal, and investigations, and where there has been clear evidence that there might be wrongdoing or contraventions of the Criminal Code, immediate action was taken.

What we have here is a broad statement which is not substantiated—and I think the Hon. Member for Rosemont referred to that—vague charges which really cast an unfortunate shadow upon all elected Members of this House and that, I submit, does very little to enhance the integrity of public office holders.

I would also ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition what he intends to do with his justice critic who yesterday made a statement, and I will quote from this morning's Ottawa Citizen:

> Jensen confirmed that the FBI had asked the RCMP for assistance in investigating whether payments had been made by an American corporation to Canadian politicians or Conservative Party officials considered to be lobbyists but not registered as such as required by U.S. law.

I am advised by the Assistant Commissioner, through the Solicitor General, that at no time did he ever state, confirm or imply that the FBI had asked the RCMP for assistance as stated by the Hon. Member. What we have here is this Member attempting to use the RCMP for political partisan gain, and it is a tactic I abhor and one which all members of this House should abhor. He should have the decency and fortitude to stand up and apologize and withdraw.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: I will get up at twelve o'clock.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I intend to deal with that in just a second. Just for the moment I will conclude the exchange I had with the Hon. Solicitor General and the Deputy Prime Minister on the statements made by the Conservative Member for Rosemont. I suggest that an interview by the RCMP with the Member is not sufficient. They should follow the Member's own suggestion and have a Royal Commission to investigate the whole course of conduct of the Government.

METROPOLITAN LIFE BUILDING—ALLEGED RENTAL KICKBACKS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Deputy Prime Minister referred to my colleague, the Member for York Centre. Yesterday, in response to that Member, inside the House of Commons the Deputy Prime Minister denied he had any knowledge of an FBI investigation, but outside the House of Commons he stated in an off-hand way that there had been an ongoing two year investigation relating to the Metropolitan Life Building. Right?

Mr. Mazankowski: That's right.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That's right. Then I asked—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): All right.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Garneau: They are very nervous out there.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Now we are getting down to the question posed by the Hon. Member for York Centre. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister what is the nature of the FBI investigation, presumably in co-ordination with the RCMP, relating to the Metropolitan Life Building? Does that investigation relate to allegations of kickbacks for rental space? And does that investigation involve any Conservative Member of Parliament?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Question Period I had difficulty in connecting the two situations, the FBI connection with respect to the investigation that was going on with respect to the Met Life Building. My understanding is that because the headquarters of Met Life are in New York, in order to complete the investigation, it was necessary to obtain documents from the head office in New York. That is why the FBI were brought into the act. But I was not aware of that at the time of Question Period yesterday. I was informed during the course of Question Period and I tried to make that clarification, as I always try to do. I try to provide the information as I receive it. I regret I did not have it at the time the questions were asked. I received it during the course of Question Period and I responded to a specific question at that time.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Can you respond to the question I am putting now?

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR ROSEMONT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister as well. It concerns the issue that won't go away. The Member for Rosemont is quoted in today's Toronto Star as saying:

> Look, there are people who told me at a certain time they were aware that when you receive a government contract from Ottawa, you have to return a certain amount to the kitty.

Did the Deputy Prime Minister ask the Member of Parliament for Rosemont how she found out about these alleged kickbacks? If he has not done so yet, when does he intend to do so? And has the Prime Minister contacted the Member for Rosemont? It has been two days now since the Government has known about this.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I advised the House earlier, we as a Government have no information whatsoever to substantiate those allegations. At no time, I am advised, did the Hon. Member for Rosemont ever go to the RCMP with any allegations or complaints. Third, I think the proper course of action is the action that is presently being undertaken. The RCMP are going to interview her to see if in fact there is any substance to the allegations which have been made, and the RCMP will then do what is necessary following that interview. But I do not think that we should attempt to condemn people, ask for Royal Commission investigations or anything of this nature, until we find out whether or not there is any substance to the allegations.

PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don. Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has told Members of this House at least twice that the responsibility for public morality rested on his shoulders. I didn't say that, he did. Considering the fact that public morality rests on his shoulders, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he contacted the Hon. Member for Rosemont, and if he has not done so, will he do so today? And if not, why not? After all, it's his responsibility!

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I considered that course of action. However, having considered the allegations as being of such a serious nature, I thought it would be improper for me to intervene, given the fact that we had been advised that the RCMP were going to conduct an interview with her, as the Solicitor General has indicated. I did not want to be seen as intervening in the process. I considered it on that basis. So the course of action which has been outlined by the Solicitor General, as far as I am concerned, is the proper course of action.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR DUVERNAY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday we heard of the serious allegation made by the Member for Rosemont and it was reassuring to hear that the Solicitor General has indicated that that is going to be pursued, if I understood him correctly, by the RCMP. But what is perhaps even more or at least equally serious is another contention made by another Member of Parliament on the Conservative side, this time the Member for Duvernay, who is also at present a Parliamentary Secretary. He has been quoted as saying the following: "What has been the most difficult thing in four years? It's been to stay clean". He then went on to say the following, which is truly alarming, if accurate: "I could put a dozen people in prison."

• (1130)

Those are the words of a Parliamentary Secretary of the Government of Canada saying that. It is an extremely serious allegation. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if the Hon. Member for Duvernay has been consulted this morning as to what he meant.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is no, but I will.

QUERY WHETHER MEMBER PROVIDED INFORMATION TO RCMP

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed either to the Deputy Prime Minister—and I appreciate his answer—or to the Solicitor General.

Given the very serious legal implications of what has been said and, indeed, the moral implications of a Member who has been aware, according to his understanding if he is accurately quoted, of criminal wrong-doing, I would ask the Solicitor General if he would inquire of the Member to find out if he has already informed the RCMP of what he believes to be clearly criminal wrong-doing on the part of a number of citizens which he says could amount to at least a dozen people. Would he find out if the Hon. Member has talked to the RCMP? If not, would he as Solicitor General request the RCMP to have a serious discussion with this Member as well?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a reasonable suggestion. I do not have personal knowledge of what he has stated. But as a result of what the hon. gentleman has requested in the House, certainly I will look into it and pursue the matter. I think it is a reasonable course of action.

PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT TO HOUSE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister of Canada refused to comment on this very serious situation yesterday. However, I understand that on the weekend, he intends to have a discussion with the members of his Quebec Caucus and with the Hon. Member for Duvernay and the Hon. Member for Rosemont who are members of that caucus. Would the Deputy Prime Minister care to give the House the assurance that after the weekend the Prime Minister plans to rise in the House and explain clearly what is going on?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my earlier response, the Government in these cases has reacted with dispatch where there have been clear founded allegations of wrong-doing, by the establishment of commissions of inquiry, investigations, ministerial dismissal, and various other things.

When there is the kind of unsubstantiated blanket charges which have been referred to by the Hon. Member for Rosemont it is very, very difficult to find out. As a matter of fact, I think in her own comments, at least as reported in the press, she is not very specific in terms of this particular issue.

Mr. Broadbent: The Hon. Member for Duvernay is saying the same thing.

Mr. Mazankowski: I suspect that this will probably come up at the Québec caucus—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: They now think it is a laughing matter.

The Solicitor General has acted on this. I have acted on it. I undertook yesterday in the House to bring forth to the Chamber the information that I had. I assure the Hon. Member that this will continue. I will report to the House on any new information that I have.

I see the Hon. Member nodding his head in the affirmative. I hope he would give me that opportunity.

PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the situation is quite serious, and I intend to pursue the matter.

Yesterday, we had the Hon. Member for Rosemont, a former member of Cabinet and still a member of the Conservative Caucus, who mentioned the existence of a kickback system as part of the way Government contracts were awarded to various entrepreneurs.

Now we have the Hon. Member for Duvernay who says that if he talked, he could send a dozen people to jail.

Mr. Speaker, I have been in politics for many years, but I have never heard anything like these statements made by Government Members. We in the Opposition are accused of proceeding by innuendo. Now, the Prime Minister's own colleagues are doing just that.

I want to ask the Prime Minister this: Considering that a few months ago, a new Member was elected to the House—he is the Minister, referred to as Mr. Clean, who was supposed to clean up the Augean stables—what has the Secretary of State done to shed some light on the very ambiguous matters being raised and accusations being made by a former member of the Conservative Cabinet and a current Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Duvernay?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange that Members opposite, particularly the Hon. Member who has just posed the question, prompted by the justice critic of the Liberal Party, have conveniently ignored the profound error that he made yesterday. He is not prepared to stand up in the House and withdraw or apologize.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Wait until the proper time.

Mr. Mazankowski: As a matter of fact, he raised the issue—

Mr. Kaplan: I will stand up at twelve o'clock.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You know the rules.

Mr. Mazankowski: He raised the issue yesterday and now he is running for cover.

Mr. Allmand: Give unanimous consent and he will do it right now.

Mr. Mazankowski: If Hon. Members are so interested in preserving the morality and integrity of Parliament—

Ms. Copps: It's not possible in your caucus.

Mr. Mazankowski: —might I ask the Hon. Member to ask his Leader what he is going to do about the Liberal Senator in the other place who has been ripping off the system? Is he going to take any kind of action to clean up that mess and that rot in his own Party?

POSITION OF SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows perfectly well that according to our Standing Orders, a Member may rise after Question Period to raise a question of privilege. That is what my colleague intends to do later on, and he can stay and listen. I think he would find it useful.

Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister evaded the issue and side-stepped my question. He did not answer my question at all and tried to attack my colleague, although he is aware my colleague can rise on a question of privilege later on, and he intends to do so to set the record straight. Mr. Speaker, once again I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, who failed to answer my question: Since the Prime Minister of Canada stated that his new Cabinet colleague, the present Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, the Secretary of State, was appointed to clean the Conservative Party's house, has the Prime Minister of Canada given the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean and Secretary of State, has he give the Hon. Member and Minister the responsibility for clarifying the charges by Conservative Members, by a former Conservative Minister, that a kickback system exists in the Conservative Party? And what about the other Conservative Member who said that he could send twelve people to jail if he talked? What is Lucien Bouchard supposed to do about all this?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is getting carried away. I have tried to respond to the questions that have been legitimately raised. He is now trying to broaden the scope of this in such a way that he wants to accuse everybody.

What the Solicitor General has indicated is that he has been advised by the RCMP that an interview will be conducted. He has also indicated to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that further action will be taken with regard to the revelations that have been quoted in the newspaper this morning. Certainly, these matters will be followed up.

The fact of the matter is, and I repeat once again, the Prime Minister carries ultimate responsibility for these kinds of matters. I think the record clearly shows that he has moved very quickly and with dispatch in terms of dismissal of Ministers, where there have been clear indications of violations, where there have been commissions of inquiry, and where there have been investigations. Where there is clear evidence that can be substantiated, and if the RCMP finds it is necessary to follow through, I am sure that that action will be proceeded with, and certainly not interfered with in any way, shape or form by this Government.

REQUEST FOR PASSAGE OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST LEGISLATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. We have heard the questions this morning about the alleged statement of the Hon. Member for Rosemont and also about the article in the newspaper this morning wherein the Parliamentary Secretary is reported to have said: "I could put a dozen people in prison." That is a very serious allegation.

• (1140)

In light of that, and in light of the promise made by the Prime Minister some time ago that there would be a morality package before the next election campaign, I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister whether he can give us a guarantee that that morality package will pass through Parliament before the next election is called?

It was a promise made by the Prime Minister. Can we have that morality package now before the election?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if that is an indication from members of the New Democratic Party that they would proceed with dispatch with regard to the conflict of interest legislation to bring it into committee very quickly, we would be very glad to call it. Hopefully, it can be done with one speaker from each Party, and we can get on with it. We would be glad to set aside a day next week.

PUBLIC MORALITY—REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE ADOPTED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, we want the public morality Bill, and I am going to talk to my Party about adopting this Bill. Mr. Speaker, that also includes the bill on the Canada Elections Act.

The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State of Canada, the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, made a political commitment to have the public morality bill ready before the next federal election.

Mr. Speaker, I want to know whether the Prime Minister opf Canada intends to break this public commitment. Are we going to have the Bill on the Canada Elections Act and the Bill on public morality before the federal election? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member states that he wants to see the legislation. It has been before the House since February. I am sure that there has been enough time to study it.

Mr. Broadbent: Election expenses are not in there.

Mr. Mazankowski: We have dealt with the lobbyist Bill. I am prepared to sit down with the opposition Parties on the election expenses. As a matter of fact, there has been correspondence back and forth.

If we can get a deal to get the election expenses into committee where there can be good study, and deal with those issues, we would be very happy to do it. We are prepared to sit down and negotiate some time frames, Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, before the election.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ADJUSTMENT POLICIES—PREMIERS' REQUEST

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday Canada's premiers asked Ottawa to do what we have been asking for two years, and that is to reveal the plans for adjustment for industries suffering losses as a result of free trade. Both Premiers Devine and Bourassa stated that they wanted to see this strategy as soon as possible.

In its April report the Economic Council stated that 17 industrial sectors would suffer losses as a result of free trade, and that adjustment policies were necessary. This was also recommended by the Macdonald Commission, the Standing Committee on International Trade, the Canada-U.S. Committee, and many others.

When will the Government reveal its strategies for adjustment, as the Premiers requested yesterday?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Premiers know and this House knows that Mr. de Grandpré is heading up an independent committee examining industries that could need adjustment, and examining programs of the Government to see if they are complete enough to fulfil the obligations of the adjustment that may be required. We feel very confident that there will not be a great deal of adjustment required.

I might remind the Hon. Member that New Zealand and Australia signed a free trade agreement. They speeded up the process of removing tariffs. One of the questions that was asked was: "What happened in adjustment?" It was stated that New Zealand felt it would be swamped by Australian competition. In the event that has not been the way it has turned out, and I believe also in Australia it has worked out extremely well. Trade both ways has expanded. In other words, New Zealand is sending more goods in absolute terms to Australia.

The same thing will happen between Canada and the United States.

ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Government states that it does not think that special adjustment programs are necessary, but all the experts that have studied this, including a standing committee in a unanimous report to this House, have stated that special adjustment policies are necessary. The 10 Premiers say that they are necessary, and they want to see those plans now. The de Grandpré committee is only supposed to report in June, 1989. That is too late.

What is the Government doing to ensure that special adjustment programs are not countervailable or in contradiction to the free trade agreement? Will it amend the free trade agreement and the legislation to make sure that whatever adjustment programs we bring in will be legitimate in terms of the agreement?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I find it passing strange that the Hon. Member would mention the Premiers talking about adjustment policies when eight of the ten Premiers support the free trade agreement. The Hon. Member forgot to mention that in his question.

Mr. Allmand: They were unanimous on this one. Answer the question.

Mr. McDermid: I will answer the question.

Adjustment programs that are brought in to help those industries needing a period of adjustment will not be countervailable. The Hon. Member likes to put things in the agreement that are not in the agreement. I would like to see him draw up an offer of purchase for someone to buy a house. He would probably put in there that the wife and the kids are not for sale, and the car is not for sale. He would put all the things into the agreement that do not belong in the agreement. Neither does adjustment belong in the agreement. It is not there. Adjustment programs are outside the agreement. We have already proven with the adjustment program for the B.C. grape growers that this Government is prepared to help where help is necessary.

RISING INTEREST RATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it concerns the rising interest rates which are a policy of the Government which has endorsed the actions of the Bank of Canada in taking the bank rate up to almost 10 per cent at the fixing that took place yesterday.

Yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister implied that my Leader was not speaking on behalf of the Premier of Alberta when he complained about the rising interest rates. We saw on television last night that the Premier of Alberta was concerned about the impact of those interest rates on homes, on businesses, and on agriculture, and stated that now is exactly the wrong time to have that growth slowed down by increasing interest rates.

After the unanimous resolution of the Premiers meeting in the west, will the Government give a clear signal to the Bank of Canada that now is not the time to have rising interest rates, and those interest rates should come down?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think what the Premiers want is not a repetition of what had occurred during the late 1970s and early 1980s where there was high inflation and high interest rates. Interest rates hit 24 and 25 per cent. There was high unemployment, and high inflation. That was the result of a mismanaged economy.

What is occurring here is the necessity to strike a balance. As I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, the Minister of Finance meets with his provincial counterparts on numerous occasions. My understanding is that there is as meeting set up for later this year. I am sure that he would be very happy to deal with this particular issue with the Premiers at that particular time.

BANK OF CANADA—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE TO REDUCE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Government rejects the demands of the Premier of Alberta and if the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government reject the requests of all the Premiers together, does it also reject the judgement of the Premier of Quebec, who notes that it is now time to reduce interest rates for excellent reasons: The federal reserves are at $16 billion, inflation is under control, the price of oil is low enough and lower interest rates would discourage speculation and improve the investment climate. For all these reasons, the Premier of Quebec says that now is the time to lower interest rates. Is the Government ready to give the Bank of Canada such instructions?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must not lose sight of the fact that our over-all economic policy was enunciated back in November and was complemented with various budget actions taken by the Government in terms of scaling down the regulatory burden, improving the competitiveness of industries, allowing an investment policy that would encourage jobs, and encouraging the small business sector to create the type of jobs that it has created. This is all part and parcel of the over-all economic policy of the Government. Incidentally, it has produced one of the best job creation rates, one of the best growth rates of the OECD group of countries, and one of the best trade records in some seven years.

The economy is strong, and it is strong because it has been properly managed by a government that is in control.

FORESTRY

CANADA-BRITISH COLUMBIA FOREST RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines. There was a report in the Vancouver Sun yesterday suggesting that the renewal of the Canada-B.C. Forest Resources Development Agreement may be in some difficulty. As a Member from British Columbia I am most aware of the very great importance of the forest industry in B.C. I would ask the Minister if he could advise this House what difficulties, if any, are being experienced in this regard.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister is not here.

Mr. Crofton: I would like to know through you, Mr. Speaker, from the Minister, exactly what the nature is of the negotiation and is the Government of Canada intending to pursue with vigour this renewed agreement.

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): I can only hope that the answer is worthy of that applause.

As the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich may be aware, earlier this week, during his visit to British Columbia, the Minister of State for Forestry announced a $12 million forest replacement fund under the South Moresby Park agreement. That funding will be used for planting and research and spacing in the coastal forest regions of B.C., outside the park area.

As well, the FRDA agreements over the past five years under this Government—they expire in 1990—are worth some $300 million in British Columbia and some $1.2 billion across Canada. So the track record is there. Renewal of those agreements, most of which expire in 1990, are under Cabinet consideration right now. You can be assured that when this Government has returned in a few weeks' time we will again renew our commitment to the forests of British Columbia and indeed all of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HEALTH

REDUCTION OF LEAD IN GASOLINE—REQUEST THAT TIMETABLE BE ADVANCED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has to do with lead in gasoline and its impact on health. In view of the fact that the previous Liberal Government launched a program whereby lead was cut by 62 per cent, and in view of the fact that the present Government is in the process of moving ahead with further cuts in lead by 1993, and in view of the fact that the Minister himself a few days ago recognized that the evidence is quite clear that lead is damaging to human health, will the Minister indicate to this House when he will stop using the Department as an excuse and find the courage to make a political decision, and indicate that he is prepared to advance to 1990 the deadline for further cuts in lead in gasoline? When will he do that?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated to the Hon. Member and to the House earlier on this issue, the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I as Minister of National Health and Welfare are re-examining some of the evidence that we have received in the last period of time. That answer does not change from the answers that I have given the Member this last week. As I have indicated to him, if there is a change in policy, I will announce it at that time.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the evidence that has emerged in recent weeks is accentuating the necessity for urgent action on the part of the Minister. This is purely a political decision that must be made, not a departmental one. When will the Minister stop hiding behind the Department?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am not hiding behind the Department at all. It is not a purely "political" decision.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He is the Department.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The fact of the matter is I have not disputed the health evidence that has been presented. I have not disputed it in this House today, I have not disputed it when I received that evidence, nor has the the Minister of the Environment disputed it, nor has any member of Cabinet disputed it. As well, we have asked our respective Departments if in fact changes can be made to the present policy. If they can and there are conditions, we will announce those conditions at the appropriate time.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ATLANTIC FISH PROCESSING INDUSTRY

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I am prompted to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries because of an article appearing in today's Globe and Mail pertaining to remarks made yesterday by the Leader of the Official Opposition. Yesterday, while in my riding, the Hon. Member stated that the Atlantic fish processing industry could be threatened by the U.S. interpretation of the trade agreement. I would like the Minister of Fisheries to tell us if there is any validity to the remarks made by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition regarding that agreement.

Ms. Copps: Issue a press release.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Leader of the Opposition was in Newfoundland earlier this week. Unfortunately, that is the only truth associated with his visit. The Leader of the Opposition untruthfully attempted to arouse the fishermen—

Ms. Copps: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The question is a legitimate one and the Hon. Minister can deal with it. The Hon. Minister is going to have to put his answer in such a way that he is not accusing the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition of intentionally saying something that is not so.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the truth of the situation is, as I have discovered in my travels throughout fishery communities all across Canada this year, that the free trade agreement is very positively welcomed and 100 per cent beneficial to the fishing industry.

The truth of the matter is that the free trade agreement in no way jeopardizes the processing regulations applying at present in Atlantic Canada. The U.S. statement of administrative action confirms not only that the free trade agreement grandfathers existing Atlantic processing regulations, but that the U.S. administration will not take these regulations before the GATT.

The truth of the situation is that there are not 7,500 fish processing workers unemployed in British Columbia this summer; there is full employment in that processing sector and they are having a very abundant year.

The truth of the situation is that crab plant operators in Atlantic Canada will not be jeopardized by the free trade agreement. They will win the benefit of a lowering and ultimate removal of tariffs up to 10 per cent on the processing of crab, which is a very productive and very beneficial industry in Atlantic Canada.

We are seeing a desperate, disorganized Party as it slips in the polls, stooping to the depths of deceit to mislead Canadians. I think it is reprehensible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

OPERATION OF FOREIGN SHIPS IN CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. I have a document here from the Cape Breton Development Corporation, sent to me this month, to the National Transportation Agency. In the letter, DEVCO asked that foreign flagships be allowed to operate strictly within Canadian waters, from Sydney to the Canso ports, and use foreign crews and not pay Canadian taxes. The names of the ships involved are the MV Ambassador, the MV Pioneer, the MV Innovator, the MV Hon. Paul Martin and the MV Atlantic Superior. Why is it Canadian Government practice for a Crown corporation to allow these foreign flag groups deny Canadian jobs? Why are we not having Canadian ships, Canadian flags, Canadian staff operating in Canadian waters?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my friend opposite. I am not able to give him a detailed answer to that. Had he let me know the question before, I would have made every effort to have the information for him. In any event, I will have the officials take it up immediately and we will get a response to him early next week.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): It is not a matter of the specifics in this case; it is a matter of the general government policy. Why are we allowing Canada Steamship Lines Inc. and U.L.S. International, both Canadian companies, to flag their ships offshore, hire foreigners, avoid Canadian taxes and have a Crown corporation have those ships operating in Canadian waters?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it relates to the fact that the general law is determined by the Canada Shipping Act. We have a Coasting Trade Act. There are laws set down by Parliament. Until this Parliament changes those laws, they will remain the law and should be interpreted and acted upon accordingly. If the Member wants the law changed so that Government has the power to dictate that type of detailed thinking, he would have had the privilege to put forth a Private Member's Bill and indeed could still do it.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—DISPOSAL OF GARBAGE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Transport. The Acting Minister will no doubt be aware that the Member for Etobicoke North has accused the citizens of Hamilton of holding the country to ransom because we refused to accept garbage from the Toronto International Airport. Will the Acting Minister repudiate the comments of the Member for Etobicoke North and demand an immediate retraction?

• (1200)

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as was explained during the course of Question Period some days ago in this House, the federal Government, particularly the Department of Agriculture, is concerned about the manner in which garbage coming into Canada on international flights is dealt with in order to guarantee that there is absolutely no risk whatsoever to the agricultural industry in Canada, whether that be livestock or plants.

Our primary concern is to ensure that the airline companies work out an agreement with some appropriate municipal body to ensure that that garbage is dealt with in such a risk-free manner.

As was indicated earlier to the House, there was a proposal by the airlines that the garbage would be moved out of the Metropolitan Toronto area, in fact outside the province. I understand that that proposal has not been approved by the relevant municipal authority in the Province of Quebec. We are left, therefore, encouraging the airlines and the provincial Government of Ontario to exercise their responsibilities to ensure that this garbage is dealt with in as efficient and risk-free a manner as possible.

COMMENTS MADE BY MEMBER FOR ETOBICOKE NORTH

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Province of Ontario is not responsible for enforcing a federal Act dealing with federal garbage coming off international flights.

Will the Member repudiate the comments made by his colleague that Hamilton was holding the country to ransom because we would not accept garbage from Toronto? Gatineau does not want Toronto International Airport's garbage either. Will any Conservative please stand up and repudiate the statements by that Party that Hamilton is only fit for Toronto's garbage?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if I recall correctly, the other day in the House an Hon. Member indicated that he personally had a suggestion as to how this problem might be dealt with. As I indicated earlier, however, the Government is concerned that the garbage coming in on international flights be handled in such a manner that it not be a threat to Canadian agriculture.

If I understand correctly, it is a provincial responsibility to direct, if necessary, some municipal authority to accept that garbage and to deal with it as necessary.

We have a couple of things to consider now. First, the garbage is being separated as between garbage resulting from international flights and garbage resulting from domestic activities. As a result of that the volume is being reduced. We are also looking in the long term at the installation of a heat sterilizer on site which would effectively deal with the garbage. I hope that in the meantime, however, the airlines will be able to find a resolution to this problem. I hope some municipality will assist them in that.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. One of the things upon which interest rate policy impacts is, of course, the exchange rate on the dollar. Some weeks ago I pointed out to the Minister of Finance that in Windsor a number of parts manufacturers have indicated that they may move to Michigan if the value of the dollar continues to increase.

Now steel analyst J. Gordon of McLean McCarthy Limited has said that if the dollar goes to 90 cents it will wipe out a major portion of Ontario's auto industry.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. What action is the Government going to take to prevent that eventuality which poses such a threat to the automobile industry in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite as speculative as the Hon. Member. I would not want to be associated with the suggestion of that sort of hypothesis.

I have indicated here before that the exchange rate, interest rates, and inflation are all very important components of economic policy. The fact of the matter is that our economic policy has produced very credible results. We have the second best job creation rate and second best growth rate of all the OECD countries. We have the best trading surplus.

I know that the Hon. Member does not like success. He and his colleagues simply want to preach doom and gloom. What really bothers me is that they think they are so dead right on everything. Once in a while they are wrong.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, one of the things that this Member does not like is stupidity. Moe Closs, President of Chrysler Canada, says that the Government's auto policy is stupid and needs to be changed or the domestic manufacturers will be severely threatened. The fact of the matter is that the inflation rate has gone down, yet the Government persists in a high interest rate policy which impacts on the exchange rate and the dollar.

What action is the Government posed to take in the eventuality of an increase in value of the Canadian dollar which threatens the automobile industry and so many other Canadian manufacturing sectors, particularly in the context of a free trade agreement which assumes a lower level for the Canadian dollar?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we will not establish a policy which will bring back inflation rates of from 13 to 15 per cent accompanied with interest rates of 23, 24, and 25 per cent, which were part and parcel of the former Government's policy supported by the New Democrats in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO PAGE STAFF

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very brief point of order with which I am sure all Members of the House will agree. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, today is the last day that the pages, with the exception of two or three, will be with us. I think this is an opportune time to thank them for their work here over what was an unusually long session. I would like to thank them for all they have done and to wish them well. I hope that, despite us, they have learned a lot about the parliamentary system and the political system of our country.

[Translation]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to wish everyone good luck. Most of them will be students, and I want to wish them success in their careers. I am sure that we have some future Members of Parliament among this group of pages. Good luck!

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am proud and very happy to say that we are very pleased with the work of this group of pages, given the length of the current session. We want to salute them and wish this group of pages good luck for the future.

[English]

The Official Opposition wishes to extend sincere thanks to the current group of pages, especially because of the extra work they have had to do as a result of the extension of the session. We hope they have had a useful and enlightening experience which will lead them to continue to have a positive attitude toward the public life of this country. We wish them the best for the future and again extend our warm thanks to them for their help over the past months.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Prime Minister, the Government, and all colleagues on the government side, I want to associate myself with the words of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

I think it is fair to say that we have been treated by a group of outstanding young Canadians who have served us very well. I know that we have enjoyed their fellowship and companionship. I join with my colleagues in thanking them for all their efforts and also in extending, on behalf of all Members, our appreciation for their devotion and skill. We wish them well in their further duties and hope they will find the opportunity to come back here on frequent occasions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given you notice. During Question Period it was alleged by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) that I had misrepresented information given to me yesterday by Deputy Commissioner Jensen of the RCMP. I would like to take this opportunity to put on the record exactly what happened, because I did not misrepresent the discussion I had with the Deputy Commissioner and I think I can make that clear.

At 12.30 p.m. yesterday the CJOH midday news report broadcast statements attributing certain confirmations to the RCMP. A member of the staff of one of the Liberal Members of Parliament took down what was said, transcribed it, and presented it to me at around a quarter to one. I would like to read into the record, and would ask for unanimous consent to table, that transcript. This is the broadcast:

> The RCMP confirmed that it made an official request for FBI assistance through the US Embassy in Ottawa. The investigation follows allegations that politicians and PC party officials may have personally benefited from the awarding of federal contracts. It also said that the FBI is trying to determine if the US firm broke any American laws by not returning payments paid to lobbyists from another country, mainly in Canada.
> There is confirmation that an FBI probe comes in the wake of the statement in today's LA PRESSE which quotes former Tory Cabinet Minister, Suzanne Blais-Grenier as saying "She knows personally that there exists a system of kickbacks on Federal contracts."

When I received this, I was surprised because it is not usual for the RCMP to confirm ongoing investigations. There are circumstances and reasons why this is sometimes done by police, but I was surprised so I telephoned Deputy Commissioner Jensen. I read him the entire piece and I asked him if in fact the RCMP had confirmed that. He said: "I confirm the first part but not the last", and I said: "The part about Suzanne Blais-Grenier". That was the end of the discussion dealing with that.

I took from that discussion that in this case, the RCMP was prepared to confirm and had and that the CJOH midday news report was accurate so far as it referred to the RCMP, but there was nothing in that report in which the RCMP confirmed anything to do with Suzanne Blais-Grenier. I understood that and I indicated that in my press conference in the scrum outside following Question Period. I think that that clears the air.

Mr. Mazankowski: It does not. It certainly does not.

An Hon. Member: It certainly does. You are distorting the truth.

Mr. Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member not to give rise to another point of privilege, quite unnecessarily? I was not referring, by the way, to the Hon. Member for York Centre. I was referring to another Hon. Member who knows who he is, and I will spare him the publicity.

The Hon. Member for York Centre has made a statement. I would think that he is rising on a question of privilege. I have heard the statement, and unless other Hon. Members feel it absolutely essential to make a further comment—the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the statement that was made in The Ottawa Citizen today which I quote:

> Kaplan also said that Jensen confirmed that the FBI had asked the RCMP for assistance in investigating whether payments had been made by an American corporation to Canadian politicians or Conservative Party officials considered to be lobbyists but not registered as such as required by U.S. law.

I think that my information and the information that has been supplied by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) is that that is categorically wrong, and the Hon. Member has not commented on that at all. Here the Hon. Member is dragging the RCMP into a political issue, something which as a former Solicitor General he should know better than to do.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I believe that is an accurate quotation in The Ottawa Citizen of what I said. I was explaining to Canadian journalists my understanding of the meaning of this sentence—

Mr. Mazankowski: Is it right or wrong?

Mr. Kaplan: It is correct, the statement the FBI is trying to determine if a U.S. firm broke any American laws. I have a certain understanding of what those laws are relating to foreign lobbyists, and I explained that to the media. I thought that was exactly what Deputy Commissioner Jensen was confirming. In other words, this was not the part about the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), which I understood it was not confirming, and I was explaining the part as best I could.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, he has not explained it. As a matter of fact, he has confirmed the point that I made earlier in Question Period. I am advised by the Deputy Commissioner, through the Solicitor General, that at no time did he ever state, confirm, or imply that the FBI had asked the RCMP for assistance as was stated by the Hon. Member, and as he just now confirmed, in The Ottawa Citizen. I would rather take the words of the Deputy Commissioner of the RCMP than the Hon. Member. If that is right, he should withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre has risen on what I would take as a personal question of privilege, and I, as have other Hon. Members, have listened to him. There has been a further exchange. There has been some disagreement on facts. However, I think both sides have had a chance to express their points of view, and I will go on to other matters.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Government's response to fifty-four petitions numbered as follows: 332-5039 and 332-5042 to 332-5094, inclusive.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During my intervention I sought unanimous consent in order to table the transcript so that the House could see exactly what I read to Deputy Commissioner Jensen—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I have to inform the Hon. Member for York Centre, as I am sure he well knows, being an experienced Member, that without unanimous consent he cannot table the document. I think he, of course, has other ways to bring it to the attention of Hon. Members.

PRESENTATION OF TWENTIETH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the honour to present, in both official languages, the twentieth report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in relation to Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, with amendments.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present to the House petitions certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners are concerned that families throughout Canada need high quality, available, affordable child care services.

Whereas it has been repeatedly recommended that to make these services available for families the Government of Canada must introduce legislation containing national objectives and appropriate mechanisms for the development of a comprehensive, non-profit child care system accessible to all families throughout Canada, the petitioners suggest to the House that the child care Act is not in the best interests of young children, women or families in Canada, and therefore they pray that Parliament withdraw the child care Act forthwith.

ACTIONS OF ROMANIAN GOVERNMENT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, the attached petitions are certified correct as to form and content.

• (1220)

The petitioners, of which there are many hundreds, wish to bring the following to the attention of the Government and the House. Whereas the Romanian Government is presently engaging in certain acts which violate basic human and minority rights, such as destroying more than one-half of the 13,000 villages in Romania to build agro-industrial centres resulting in the loss of a culture and historic heritage which will deprive not only Romania but also future generations of a priceless heritage by annihilating magnificent examples of Roman, Gothic, and Reform period architecture; whereas the same government has decreed that all geographic designations be changed from the Hungarian and Saxon languages to Romanian, thereby seriously violating minority rights; whereas the Romanian Government's current harassment through interrogation and house searches of the clergy will result in the destruction of both Protestant and Catholic religions, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to direct the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to express the concern of the Canadian people over the aforementioned actions.

I hope this matter will be taken seriously. We in Canada are most fortunate not to have to live under these kinds of regimes. We are fortunate that these hundreds of people have brought this very serious matter to our attention.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to present a petition to the House with regard to child care. I recognize, with the diverse communities in my riding, the need for national standards to help areas, especially communities like those of Indian bands and so on in remote areas, to be able to provide non-profit child care systems.

This petition specifically calls for a comprehensive non-profit child care system that is accessible to all Canadians, therefore I am proud to present it. I hope that the Government will withdraw the legislation it presently has before the House and provide a child care Bill forthwith which would have those national objectives and would provide standards for all Canadian children.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and responsibility, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to file the attached petition concerning child care.

Whereas the Canada Child Care Act proposed by the Government of Canada contains neither national objectives nor necessary funding arrangements and will not ensure that families have access to high quality child care, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to withdraw the Child Care Act forthwith. In duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

GRANTS AND/OR LOANS—METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Question No. 395—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Canada Harbour Place Corporation make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, to which ones and, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transport): The Canada Harbour Place Corporation advises as follows: no.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 362 could be made an Order for Return, this return would be tabled immediately.

I think it exemplifies some of the difficulty in responding on time. It is a single answer and, as Members can see, it is quite large in terms of its response.

If questions were more targeted to Departments, I do not think we would get into the problem of delay in answering.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 3612 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN ACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-123, an Act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share), as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and on the amendment of Mr. Penner (p. 18559).

Hon. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, when we moved to Question Period I was in the midst of explaining to the House why an amendment which I have proposed to Bill C-123 should merit the consideration of the House and inclusion into this statute.

I want to explain to the Minister that this particular amendment, which has behind it the consent, authority, and wishes of the Indian Association of Alberta, was not introduced before the legislative committee at the appropriate time simply because there had been a communications gap; that is to say, legal counsel for the Indian Association of Alberta, Mr. Mandamin, had indicated in his appearance before the committee that he had such an amendment and felt that it was an amendment that was in keeping with the intent of the statute but would deal with one flaw that they regarded as being serious.

On the day the amendment was to be received, the committee delayed its proceedings, hoping to receive it by fax, but as a result of a misunderstanding about when the committee was to sit that particular day, we never did receive the amendment. However, I made a commitment to Mr. Mandamin that I would introduce this amendment at report stage.

Therefore, I want the House to know that this is not a matter that has been dealt with at the committee stage. It was part of the brief presented by the Vice-Chief of the Assembly of First Nations who represents the Province of Alberta.

The purpose of the amendment is to exclude any right of provincial authorities to the trust moneys that are now going to be under the authority of the band or of the parents or guardians, up to the limit of $3,000 or more if that is agreed to by Order in Council.

The Indian Association of Alberta takes the position that the authority of the province into matters of First Nations is an unwarranted authority. I believe that when they make that assertion they are on very sound constitutional ground.

I believe the Government of Canada would probably lean in the direction of that kind of interpretation. I do not need to quote to the House Section 91(24), the first part of our Constitution under the British North America Act. Certainly that federal authority was reasserted again in Section 35 of the most recent changes to the Canadian Constitution.

There is clearly a federal authority and clearly a relationship between the Government of Canada and the First Nations. In other words, the relationship that was described in treaties is a relationship between the First Nations and the Crown. The interpretation is that the Crown is resident in the Government of Canada and has not been distributed widely across the country, so there are Crown rights giving authority to provinces or territorial Governments over Indian people.

That is exactly the rationale for establishing what we call Indian child welfare agencies. This has been done in the Province of Manitoba. Quite properly, the Indian leaders in Manitoba recognized at the outset that in establishing child welfare agencies it was very advisable to receive as much expertise as they could from the provincial authorities because child welfare as such is not an area that belongs to the federal Government. Therefore, we do not have the depository of expertise.

In the Province of Manitoba, a tripartite agreement was the first step toward establishing a child welfare agency. That was done more than five years ago by an agreement that was negotiated between Canada, Manitoba, and the Indian leaders in that province.

During the five to six year period that has intervened up to the present, a body of expertise has developed in Manitoba for child welfare agencies. They are now seeking a new bilateral agreement, with the transfer of funds, so that they can entirely take over this responsibility.

There has been a problem. This new agreement has not been reached. The Government of Canada is delaying. There are a number of difficulties. I will leave it to the Minister who was present in the House today to explain exactly why that is happening. However, I do not want to make that the point of my argument.

The point of my argument is that we are moving in the direction of establishing child welfare agencies for Indian people. The reason for that is that Indian leaders find it abhorrent that provincial agencies, using provincial Child Care Acts, should move in under the provisions of those Acts, take children out of Indian homes, and place them in non-Indian foster homes. In some cases they were adopted by non-Indian people. These youngsters, therefore, lost their culture, tradition, background, and heritage. In fact, there were a great many cases where these children were not only adopted into non-Indian homes but were adopted right out of the country altogether. They were adopted into American homes and only discovered many years later, in some cases, that in fact they came from Canada and that their heritage and ancestry was Indian. This caused enormous distress, psychological, spiritual, and personal. That is why we are moving away from that kind of situation. The Government is sympathetic and accepts that premise, but we are just moving much too slowly.

That is the background for the amendment. The amendments I am proposing to the House will simply say that in transferring to bands the authority over minor trust funds, the band wants to be in the position of saying with authority who can have access to those funds. Of course, the statute with which we are dealing says that authority can be with the parent or with the guardian. The statute is of particular interest in the Province of Alberta where there are large amounts of money in the trust funds because of the oil and gas revenue. Mr. Mandamin, legal counsel for the Indian Association of Alberta, argues that where a child is taken into custody by provincial authorities, that custodian should not have the authority to cease the trust funds. The amendment I am proposing will simple make it clear in law that it cannot be done.

I want to repeat again that we have to understand in approving this amendment that the provincial authority, vis-à-vis Indian people, is at best ambiguous and uncertain. It is an area in which we still have a great deal of work to do. It is part of what those First Ministers' conferences were about, to try to define and clarify aboriginal rights, to describe with some degree of accuracy what is the status of Indian people within Canada. This still remains an uncertain area, an area in which academics and learned legal counsel become involved, but we cannot leave it to those people. It is in the political arena, the realm of politics, that we can solve this problem. We can solve it at the negotiating table.

We cannot bite off all that today when dealing with Bill C-123. I ask the forgiveness of the Minister in reaching rather far with a matter that will have to be faced some day. Meanwhile, here is a small gesture, a small movement in the right direction.

I understand the Government's opposition to the amendment because it has already looked at it. I have a memo from the special assistant to the Minister in charge of legislation. The argument is one that I simply cannot accept. The argument, very briefly stated, is that it is imperative that Indian children be treated in a manner consistent with the law affecting all other children in Canada. That is precisely the point. The Indian leaders are saying that their status is a special status, confirmed now in the Constitution. They have a relationship to Canada. Therefore, this equality of treatment which would involve a provincial jurisdiction on First Nations is not acceptable.

Therefore, I ask the Minister to take a look at the amendment. Unless he finds it exceedingly offensive in some other way I have failed to take due note of, I ask, speaking on behalf of the Indian Association of Alberta and its legal counsel, him to give serious consideration to incorporating this modest amendment into Bill C-123. It would still not make the Bill entirely and completely satisfactory to the Assembly of First Nations or to the Indian Association of Alberta because there are a few other flaws, that I will mention at third reading. However, by and large we accept the Bill. It moves in the right direction. We are not in any way raising obstacles to the Bill. Here is one gesture, one movement, which will go a long way in recognizing what ought to be done in Canada; that is to say, First Nations have a particular kind of relationship with Canada and that has been gone into at great length in other forums. Certainly, it is demonstrated in no other way better than by the fact that these people have treaties with the Crown in the name of the Government of Canada. That is not a claim that can be made by any other group of Canadians of which I am aware.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly to the motion presently before the House. I think the Minister has to give it very serious consideration. Frankly, I can think of no reason why in good faith the Minister would not agree to have this amendment brought forward.

To give a bit of coverage as to what has happened to date, I think it is necessary to expand on the remarks of my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). As the Minister will know, on July 28, the legislative committee hurried that morning to go through Bill C-123 while we were waiting for Mr. Mandamin's amendments to arrive. They were coming from Alberta to the AFN offices, and then they were going to be brought by some kind of messenger service to the committee. Through a series of unfortunate delays, they did not actually get to the committee. If the Minister or any member of this House would like to review the public record of the legislative committee, they will find that while we were examining Bill C-123, members who were there from all three Parties gave a commitment to look at Mr. Mandamin's amendments as soon as we could obtain them. We were going to get together and do that. I know the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior and I and our offices have attempted to get government Members who were on the legislative committee at that time together right up until today, and that has not been possible.

We promised on the record in the absence of Mr. Mandamin, who appeared as witness with the Vice-Chief of the Assembly of First Nations on this very important Bill, that we would look at those proposed amendments. The Speaker has already ruled out the first amendment since it touches on another piece of legislation, but I think there is a responsibility of the Minister to accept this proposed amendment. If he looks carefully at the words to be added, he will see that is a very small part of self-government. It is a very small part of determining the future of many children.

My friend touched upon the severe problem that has plagued aboriginal people in Canada for more than a century, and there have been the more recent developments of provincial apprehension laws. We know that not just hundreds and thousands but tens of thousands of the children of first citizen have been apprehended. I know from personal knowledge, having been a probation officer, that in many cases they have been apprehended on the flimsiest of grounds and not just put into another home or adopted but, as my friend pointed out, many have been taken into the United States and elsewhere.

We encourage the Minister to look very carefully at the wording of the amendment wherein it states:

> "and who the council determined to be the parent or person to whom the payment is to be made"—

That refers directly in most situations to the superintendent of child welfare in most of the provinces or territories. The amendment goes on to state:

> "—to be held in trust and paid for the maintenance, advancement or other benefit of the child to a parent or person who is responsible for the care and custody of the child and who the council determines to be the parent or person to whom the payment is to be made."

What that does is very clear, and I think the Minister should understand it. It is an attempt to provide back to the council some greater potential for protection and for the benefit and future of the child. I think the Government would be remiss in terms of the promise of the legislative committee to deal with this in report stage. We are doing now what the committee proposed could and should be done. I think it is very important that this proposal be in the legislation because just as Mr. Goodwin, who appeared before the committee pointed out, there is extensive study being done within the Department on how to provide for mechanisms to return a large amount of funds.

I remind the Minister that in terms of minors' trusts there is over $135 million, and in terms of estates and minors' trusts combined there is over $900 million presently under the control of the Minister of Indian Affairs and the Minister of Finance. Surely, if we are moving toward what I think Mr. Goodwin in good faith said the Government was doing, which is returning complete jurisdiction and control of those type of trust accounts to first nations, then it is extremely important.

Let us be frank with respect to how long it has taken this Bill to get here. It required investigations two years in a row by the Auditor General. It required all kinds of other investigation. In fact, we know from officials of the Department that there has been widespread lawbreaking going on in the Department in relation to minors' trusts and to estates for many years.

I think this small step at least in terms of children in relation to the bands and the parents having more direct guardianship control and trust control of those funds is what Mr. Mandamin is suggesting. He has canvassed the working group. I confirmed that with him again yesterday. This is a very important amendment for more than just the moment 20,000 children who are directly affected at the present moment.

I urge the Minister to be flexible and to agree, as I do for my Party and I know the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior does for his Party, to have this rather small but important protective amendment included in Bill C-123.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I listened with attention to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I want them to know that we have looked carefully at the proposed amendment.

As I was listening to the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior talk about child welfare and explain in a few words how difficult it was, how big an issue it was and how much more work was required to be done, he said, and I quote: "We can't buy that off in this Bill"; that is to say, resolving the whole question of aboriginal rights and constitutional protection of those rights and recognition as to what they are.

The Hon. Member for Skeena says that this amendment would be a gesture of good will, a first element of self-government. I have a great deal of sympathy for that argument because I believe that aboriginal Canadians should have the right of self-government. However, if we accept this amendment today, without these other issues being resolved, it will mean that we allow a band council at its discretion to refuse to make the payment of moneys belonging to a minor. That is what we would do. Until these other important questions are settled, I do not think it would be prudent to give that power to the band council to achieve this other objective with which I have sympathy. Then we would allow a band council the power to refuse the payment of money to a minor or to the person who is in fact responsible for that minor. That is what could happen.

For that reason and that reason alone—and it is a good enough reason because I believe that an independent child is entitled to expect that money to be paid to the person who is responsible for his care and custody—I do not think that this Indian child should be prevented from getting payment because the band council would prefer it or does not like the fact that the person actually having care and custody is not a person of their liking.

For that very good reason we cannot accept the amendment. We have given it serious consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fulton: On division.

Motion (Mr. Penner) negatived.

Mr. Valcourt (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification) moved that Bill C-123, an Act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share), as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Valcourt (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because we want this legislation to go forward. There are a couple of things that I do want to point out to the House and a few things I want to mention to the Minister because there are still some actions that he can take that would help immensely in what has transpired with respect to Bill C-123.

The first point I want to make is that when Bill C-123 was being contemplated, and here the Government was looking for legislative authority to pass over minors' trust funds to parents or guardians, or to bands, without putting themselves in the position of liability—in other words they do not want at some later time to be brought before the courts—it had been in fact giving these moneys to parents and guardians but there was always the threat, the concern, the danger that there could be some liability against the Minister or the Government. I understand why they wanted to proceed in a proper way. I can only commend them for that.

I can also commend them in the fact that in developing Bill C-123 they established a working group. That is always the right way to go. The Indian Association of Alberta, a number of bands, and the Department of Indian Affairs were involved in this working group. From the Indian point of view there was some really outstanding legal counsel that the Indian Association of Alberta engaged to assist. That was in the person of Mr. Mandamin.

One of the difficulties was that the Department of Indian Affairs encouraged this working group activity. The Indian Association of Alberta co-operated. It got legal counsel and, obviously, the Minister will see in a moment that this was not without costs.

The Indian Association of Alberta which is not flush with revenue and which is not well off incurred extensive costs. It was working to help the Government because Bill C-123 really, if one wants to be very frank about it, does more for the Minister than it does for any minors, guardians, parents, or band councils. It really does more to help the Minister.

In the presentation of the Indian Association of Alberta before the legislative committee, it reminded the committee that no compensation at all had been received as a result of being involved in this working group. I think the Minister will want to examine that and find out if there is still not some way to help out in allaying those legal costs that were involved.

The other points that I want to make are brief and only three in number. The first is that the Government still resists in allowing Indian bands to establish independent trust funds. In saying why the Government could not accept the amendment that I proposed, the Minister used the word that I think describes exactly why this further bolder step of allowing independent trust funds in the name of first nation Governments cannot be taken. The Minister states that it would not at this time be prudent. Large revenues are involved that come from resources on Indian lands, but we are not yet at the stage where we can say with confidence: "Yes, we can trust these first nation Governments to be responsible for their own revenues"'. In the Minister's words, it would not be prudent.

I would like to debate that point at some length with the Minister, and perhaps we could find another occasion and another forum in which to do it. However, I am troubled by the charge that it would not be prudent. It leaves the impression in the minds of people who hear it that while we can extend authority to non-Indian business people to establish large independent trusts and it is prudent to do so, when First Nations people are involved there is some imprudence in doing so. In other words, in one case the confidence factor is there and we can have all sorts of trust companies in Canada either under provincial authority, or in some cases under federal authority or charter, but it would not be prudent to allow First Nations to have similar trusts.

I do not think anyone in the House needs to be reminded that some of those non-Indian trusts have hardly shown that they were in a position to look after other people's moneys properly. The evidence given in the hearings regarding the Principal Group is shocking in the extreme. If ever there was an example of imprudent behaviour, to put it mildly, in dealing with other peoples' moneys then there is a good case.

I hope that somehow the Minister will be able to leap this hurdle of saying that it is not prudent at this time and begin to exercise what is a trust responsibility, which means that we establish a climate or atmosphere of trust in which responsibilities that properly belong to First Nations can be removed from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in the name of the Minister, and go to the authority where they belong.

My second point is simply to repeat how much I regret the provincial authority could not be excluded from a call upon these trust moneys, but that argument has been exhausted for the moment and the House has made its decision, and so it will be.

My final point is that the Indian Association of Alberta, and many bands in Alberta still regret that there has to be a limit prescribed in the legislation. There is a $3,000 limit which they find to be very restrictive. The Minister will be quick to point out that that amount can be increased by Order in Council, but he will also recognize at the same time that that is an awkward and cumbersome way, and it still means that all of the strings are attached. In Government-Indian relations we must start cutting those strings. I do not believe at all, as the Minister seems to think, that it would be imprudent to do so. If we believe in self-determination for our First Nations, if we believe in self-government, as we repeatedly say in all our rhetoric, then when are we going to begin to demonstrate it by cutting some of those strings and saying that, yes, within the context of our federal system our First Nations do have status, they do have authority, and that authority is unencumbered by obstacles, monitoring devices, and means and methods to keep a watchful eye, all because we say if it were otherwise it would not be prudent.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make in relation to Bill C-123, a Bill of considerable importance to minors, families, and surviving spouses of First Nations.

In the Consolidated Revenue Fund there is presently between $900 million and $1 billion held by the Minister under discretionary authority for (a) minors under Section 52 of the Indian Act, and (b) estates for surviving spouses' preferential share in the estate under Subsection 48(1) and 48(2) of the Act.

Paragraph 64(1)(a) provides that the Minister with the consent of the band may authorize a per capita distribution to the members of a band of an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the band's capital moneys derived from the sale of surrendered lands which, according to interpretations by the Government of Canada, includes oil and gas revenues.

In 1986-87, 13 bands all in Alberta made distributions. Sadly, the Government and the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) refused to accept the proposals put forward by the working group on Indian minors' funds as presented by Tony Mandamin and moved earlier today by my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). In my view, those amendments are entirely proper and evidently related to self-government. My friend tabled these for consideration and we heard from the Minister why we have to wait for some more global breakthrough in self-government before any of the smaller things can be done. It seems to me at every opportunity every Member of the House should be supporting those incremental moves toward self-government, rather than waiting for panaceatic move which may or may not come in the next few months or years.

We have certainly seen the failure of the First Ministers' approach to attempt to get some type of better definition of self-government and some movement on the evolution and implementation of the full box of Section 35 of the Constitution. Frankly, I find the response of the Minister on the amendment, and the response in relation to self-government, albeit he believes in it, somewhat shallow and hollow when an amendment such as that put before the House could not be accepted.

The amendment we were considering that the legislative committee had promised to look at seriously and deal with at report stage would, first, permit a band to name a person or corporation to act as a trustee for the funds of Indian minors. Second, it would allow a band to set by regulation distribution for an infant child for maintenance and benefit of the child. That wording is very clear in the motion we have just disposed of on division. Third, it would give band councils the right to determine who is the parent or guardian to whom a payment is to be made something we covered in debate on the amendment, or for the council to hold such distribution in trust. That is a very important point when one thinks of the degree of funds, close to $1 billion between the minors and the surviving spouses estate trusts.

On these principles First Nations are told that they must wait. I am advised that the Department, in fact the federal Government, is and for sometime has been involved in widespread lawbreaking in this area. The amendments found in Bill C-123 patch up a few legal holes and complications but fall far short of allowing First Nations the responsibility and authority of self-government.

This legislation should allow First Nations the right to establish trusts independent of government, to manage Indian minors' trust funds, but we are told again today by the Government that they must wait. These hundreds of millions could provide the base capital for leverage on myriad developments for First Nations.

First Nations should not in any way have to deal with provincial legislation in this field. That was made abundantly clear by the witnesses in the evidence they put before us. First Nations should be provided the authority to determine to whom the distributions are to be made. In no other sector, in the provinces or where trusts are set up for families, or in any other way, is there this type of intervention.

Fortunately, on both the $3,000 per annum ceiling on minors' trusts, and on the amendment to raise from $2,000 to $75,000, the surviving spouse's preferential share is also given some room to be increased without having to return to Parliament. This is a principle for which I wish there had been another way to do it, but at least that window was opened by amendments moved in the legislative committee so that this Bill would not have to be amended a year or two down the road and actually brought back to the floor of the House to do so.

There are presently approximately 1,000 estates awaiting settlement. For example, there is one in Ontario where a widow has been waiting some 20 years for the Department to settle. I think that various Ministers and bureaucrats should make the commitment with the passage of Bill C-123 to clear up those types of situations, not within a matter of months, but within a matter of weeks. I hope to hear from the Minister with a commitment that that kind of authorization will be sent to the Department to get cracking, particularly on surviving spouses' preferential share.

Once again, it is sad to see that what actually brought about the movement on Bill C-123 was the pressure of the 1984 Supreme Court ruling on fiduciary responsibility, and the 1985 and 1986 reports of the Auditor General which have forced the Government to move—rather than any kind of serious goodwill—jurisdiction and authority to First Nations. Perhaps the Minister could direct some of his remarks to the matter of trusts. What is the breakdown on those trusts? We have rather scanty information. We know that it is somewhere between $900 million and $1 billion. We know that around $135 million of that is in minors' trusts, but if the Minister has the information, perhaps he could touch on how the rate of interest is paid on the trust funds, what the size of those trust funds are and what kinds of special efforts will be made to settle the surviving spouses' estates. Can he give the House some idea as to how quickly the proposal touched on by Mr. Goodwin in committee to actually establish those trusts under the control, administration and jurisdiction of First Nations will actually get under way? We might hear some kind of an announcement on that.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest to the Hon. Member that I would be pleased to attend before the committee to answer all those questions, if we can find the chairman.

Mr. Valcourt: I think that would be the proper forum. I will be brief because we want this to be passed rapidly. I do not mind people disagreeing with my opinions. I believe in the right of every individual Member of Parliament and, indeed, of every Canadian to have the right to his own opinion. I do not like, however, having people put words in my mouth or imputing motives or other things to me. When I said that it would not be prudent, it was portrayed as if I consider aboriginal Canadians or Indians as people who cannot take care of their own business.

It is significant because I believe that the Department of Indian Affairs, or even matters affecting aboriginal Canadians should not be in the realm of politics, and we should try, as Members of Parliament, to address them without partisanship. It is significant in that regard that this Government is being accused of all sorts of things.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) refer to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada of 1984 that led to this. Obviously, the problem had surfaced before. I do not think that this Government was in office. So I do not think that assigning partisanship or motives to these important issues solves anything. When I said it was not prudent, it was because of the unsettled state of law and provincial and aboriginal opinions in the Department and in this Government on the issue of child welfare. I said it is not prudent—given the unsettled state of that—to allow a band council to refuse a minor or the guardian of that minor, because of the present state and the unsettled questions that are there. It would not be prudent for the kids. If I could be assured that by exercising that power I would have no responsibility left as a Minister of the Crown for those Indian children, I would not hesitate. But the law is not such. I guess in the end that both Members will acknowledge that this is not a major step but it is an important step and one which is welcomed by those Indians who are concerned by this.

The Government has moved. I want to thank both Members for their work in the committee. They have made a significant contribution. This being said, I invite my colleagues to give approval to this Bill at third reading.

Mr. Penner: We certainly will give approval. I just noted in the Minister's remarks that he did not comment on the question of compensation to those who were involved in the working group. The costs were large and it was the Minister's Department, of which he is the Minister of State, which encouraged this activity. Did he purposely neglect to comment on that or was it just an oversight?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)): The Minister may wish to respond.

Mr. Valcourt: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I always stay as far away as possible from making commitments that I cannot keep. I will look into the suggestions of the Hon. Member. I will want to know how the group was brought about and what kind of arrangements have been discussed, if this has been discussed at all, and I will get back to the Member on his question.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN CENTRE ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE ACT

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-143, an Act to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, there have been prior consultations among the Parties. Our Projected Order of Business today included five Bills. The next one is Bill C-143. In the remaining three cases, the motion read: "Second reading and reference to a legislative committee". I think that we would find a general predisposition in the House, through unanimous consent, to change the wording of the motion to, "reference to Committee of the Whole". At the appropriate times I think we would also find willingness in the House, through unanimous consent, to continue to move through all stages. I point out to Members that we have about 52 minutes left. There was a general feeling that these are three important pieces of legislation that help in terms of substance abuse, human rights and taxpayers in the country. Members might discipline themselves to make sure that we try to get as much of this accomplished as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)): The House has heard the suggestion by the Parliamentary Secretary. Is that agreed?

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, certainly, there has been agreement to move as quickly as possible on all Bills, but there has been no agreement to have them all go through three stages today. In fact, I have a number of people who want to speak to the issue of drug abuse.

Mr. Hawkes: The Government simply suggests that we move as rapidly as possible. I did not say that there was an agreement to move through all of them. If several Members want to speak to the issue of drug abuse, perhaps they could speak as briefly as possible, for five minutes, and three-minute speeches sometimes are adequate and serve to get the principle out, and then we could get on to the human rights and to the help for the taxpayers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)): Following that explanation, can I assume that there is consent to move to Committee of the Whole by the House today?

An Hon. Member: On this particular Bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)): On this particular Bill. Yes.

Ms. Copps: We have to see how many people want to speak to it. I will not be governed by the time. We will have speakers who will speak as long as they so choose.

Mr. Hawkes: Just on the point of order, I would like to have clarity. I thought that there was agreement among the three Parties to change the motion. Let us just deal with Bill C-143, the Bill before us at this point. There is unanimous agreement to change the motion to read second reading and reference to Committee of the Whole. That was going to be done on the understanding that it would get through all stages today. If Members opposite are not prepared to agree to a change in the motion, if we do not have unanimous consent to finish at least this Bill today, perhaps we would be well advised to move to the next Bill on which there might indeed be unanimous consent to do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)): I believe the Parliamentary Secretary is inquiring whether, if we complete second reading of the Bill today, there will be unanimous consent to go to Committee of the Whole and third reading today.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the undertaking was to move as quickly as possible. There was no agreement to move to Committee of the Whole and complete this Bill today. I therefore leave it to the discretion of the Government. If it intends to withdraw this Bill and introduce another one, so be it, but we have a number of Members who want to speak to the government strategy on drug and alcohol abuse.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)): I might suggest to the government side that negotiations could take place in the next few minutes, but I think we should proceed. Is that agreed?

Mr. Hawkes: I think we should then proceed with the motion as contained in the Order Paper and at some later time, by unanimous consent, we may want to move to Committee of the Whole. We will have to see what is being produced.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the House for this opportunity to speak on second reading of Bill C-143. With respect to proceeding through various stages of the Bill today, I was under the impression that we would be able to conclude the Bill today, and I have constructed my remarks in reference to that understanding which I believe had been reached.

I will not go through the various aspects of the national drug strategy, even in light of the discussion which just took place, in the hope that we can move forward with the legislation in the time remaining today prior to the adjournment of Government Business. I would like Members opposite to note that I will restrict my comments on the Bill to that very specific issue rather than giving an over-all view on the national drug strategy as I would do if a greater amount of time had been provided for.

Bill C-143, an Act to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse, was introduced on July 21, 1988, and will establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse. The purpose of the centre will be to promote increased awareness and participation of Canadians in matters concerning substance abuse and to support the better use and effectiveness of the programs of excellence that exist both within and outside of government in this country.

Introduction of the Bill followed a commitment which I made in May, 1987, when I launched, on behalf of the Government and under the direction of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the national drug strategy. "Action on Drug Abuse", as it is called, was designed as a $210 million initiative through 1991-92 to reduce the harm to individuals, families, and communities from abuse of alcohol and drugs through a balanced approach to the problem.

I need not remind Members of the House of how correct the Prime Minister was when he made the statement in Vancouver that we had a drug epidemic. There were many who said at the time that the Prime Minister had exaggerated. Surely events since that have affirmed the veracity of his words. One has only to think of the recent and tragic death of young people and, in particular, Benji Hayward to know how serious the problem of drug abuse in our society really is. Benji was a 14-year-old North York boy who drowned in Lake Ontario in the early hours of May 14, reportedly after taking marijuana, LSD, and alcohol.

This Bill and the creation of the centre will provide a national focus for these efforts and reinforce emerging partnerships at the community, provincial, and national levels of the country. The concept of the centre precedes the national drug strategy although, clearly, it has been in the process of consultations over the past year that the idea has actually taken shape.

Let me elaborate very briefly on three of the processes as each has shaped the concept of the centre and this Bill which is now before us.

First, in the course of developing the national drug strategy it became clear that there exists a wealth of experience and expertise in the alcohol and drug abuse field, both within and outside of government, that could be used for the betterment of all Canadians. I called, therefore, on one of Canada's most respected addiction professionals, Mr. David Archibald, the founder of the Addiction Research Foundation and past president of the International Council on Alcohol and Addictions to examine this matter and to recommend how these disparate resources might better serve the country as a whole.

Second, in a related development my Department launched a national consultation on substance abuse in the workplace last February to gain some insight into appropriate policy and program direction in this area for the future. These consultations, which involved a representative and impressive cross-section of Canadians, confirmed the desirability of an independent, federally funded and regionally responsive national centre on substance abuse.

Third, I am indebted as well to the valuable contribution of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare in this area. That committee, in late 1986, undertook a study of alcohol and drug abuse in Canada and reported its findings in a report entitled "Booze, Pills and Dope: Reducing Substance Abuse in Canada". One of the major recommendations of that committee was for the creation of a national centre on substance abuse to promote and facilitate the development and exchange of information on alcohol and drug abuse and to engage in public education and prevention activities.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are not only a member of that committee but one of the chief architects of that report. I am pleased that you are in the chair today to observe that from time to time committee reports do find fruition in legislation.

The legislation provides for the establishment of a separate corporation to operate at arm's length from the Government and to provide analysis and informed comment on alcohol and drug abuse matters, promote the development and exchange of information, encourage improved standards of service and professional training and education, undertake research, and co-operate with Governments and others in developing improved programs in such areas as alcohol and drug abuse prevention, public education and treatment, and rehabilitation.

The legislation provides that the management of the affairs of the centre be vested in a board of directors consisting of up to 15 members. These persons will be chosen from Government, the business community, labour, and the voluntary sector—effectively all walks of Canadian life. Their leadership qualities and sensitivity to regional, ethnic, cultural, social, and health issues associated with substance abuse will be critical to the success of the centre. The legislation provides that the work of the centre will be directed by a chief executive officer who will be appointed by the board. He or she will be assisted by a small staff of professionals, some of whom might be seconded from the provinces, the business community, and/or labour for a specified duration or assignment.

I am reminded of a businessman who approached me not many months ago and told me of the tragic occurrences in his family. Instead of hiding the information or trying to live with the reality behind closed doors, he told me that if we ever have a centre, drug strategy program or project we should count him in as a volunteer because of his experience, that he would like to help. He said that although he may not have a lot of professional experience or training, he had a lot of personal involvement. It is also that type of person that we are looking for to sit on the board of the centre.

Finally, the legislation provides for a degree of accountability by the centre to Parliament and the people of Canada. While the centre is neither an agent of Her Majesty nor is its staff members agents of the Public Service of Canada, the corporation will be financed at the outset exclusively by public funds. Accordingly, the corporation is to report annually to the public and the Minister of National Health and Welfare in turn shall table such report in Parliament. A more comprehensive evaluation of the centre will be taken in its fifth year.

On the matter of funding, I would add that the Bill is structured to facilitate and accommodate the centre's receipt of financial support from sources other than the federal Government. The Government has committed up to $2 million each year for this centre, to be paid out of moneys appropriated annually by Parliament. The committee also looked at the amount of funding. At that time, we had in mind a figure of approximately $1.4 million per year. The committee thought that a little more should be considered, though the report indicated that the amount should be excessive. We believe that this figure is very much in keeping with that recommendation as well.

In summary, I believe that Bill C-143, an Act to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse, represents a very important step in Canada's action on drug abuse. It will contribute to improved awareness and knowledge of substance abuse while building on current expertise. It will point to new directions for action while reinforcing co-operation. I would therefore urge all Hon. Members to support the initiative and to move this legislation ahead as quickly as possible so that the centre can become operational at the earliest opportunity.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am extremely glad that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) raised the issue of the committee's report entitled "Booze, Pills and Dope". He is quite correct in suggesting that one of the recommendations of the report was to seek the establishment of a national centre on substance abuse. What the Minister fails to say and what should be part and parcel of the discussion today is that there were 31 recommendations in that report tabled unanimously by all members of the committee and the Minister rejected 29 of them. Out of 31 substantive recommendations, the only one he has seen fit to move on is the recommendation to create a national centre.

There were many, many other extremely serious concerns elucidated in the report, concerns that the Minister has either ignored, failed to act on or is afraid to act on. I would like to spend some moments outlining the over-all thrust of the Minister's so-called drugs strategy as well as the findings of the committee.

The Minister began this afternoon by reiterating the statement which was made by his leader, the day after a similar statement was made by the President of the United States, that there is a drug epidemic in Canada. In fact, the committee that studied the so-called drug epidemic determined quite substantively that the problem in Canada was quite significantly related to the abuse of legal drugs like alcohol more than to illegal drugs. The Minister of National Health and Welfare himself, in a press release he issued on December 30, 1986, after the statement of the so-called epidemic, said that there was a 12 per cent decrease in the number of convictions under all federally related legislation in 1985.

We heard time and again that the overwhelming majority of Canadians who abuse drugs abuse alcohol and prescription drugs, legal drugs that are available to be purchased at pharmacies or at liquor stores, most of which are government run. While the use of illegal drugs is certainly still of concern to every Canadian, particularly the use among teenagers as we learned in the very tragic case that occurred in the City of Toronto, in actual fact the number of people using illegal drugs in Canada has been on the decline when it comes to marijuana. The number has been holding level for drugs like cocaine and crack. The overwhelming message of the report tabled in the House was that we had to develop a strategy to deal with legal drugs.

I would like to take a moment to quote an article which appeared in The Vancouver Sun which is headlined "Lame excuses from Mr. Epp". The article reads:

> So much for the great Canadian Drug Epidemic.
> It was of immense concern to Prime Minister Brian Mulroney in September 1986, when he declared in Vancouver that "drug abuse has become an epidemic that undermines our economic and social fabric".
> By coincidence, it was on the same day that his good friend, President Ronald Reagan, launched a crusade against drugs in the United States.
> A House of Commons committee was given the task of drawing up a plan of attack on alcohol and drug abuse. It held 11 months of hearings and delivered a report to Parliament last November with 31 recommendations, including prevention and treatment programs, tougher drinking-driving laws, warning labels on alcoholic beverages, and mandatory educational messages in liquor advertising.
> But it seems the Government no longer considers the problem an urgent one.
> Health Minister Jake Epp has delivered a response to the committee's report that accepts only two of the recommendations: establishment of a clearing house on information on drugs and alcohol and a treatment program for young drug abusers. Total cost to Ottawa in the first year of operation: $22 million.
> Mr. Epp offered some pretty lame excuses for rejecting the other recommendations.

On the question of warning labels, the Minister said that he had asked the producers of alcoholic beverages to carry them voluntarily and they had said no. As a result of that, the Minister backed down in the same way he backed down on the food labelling issue. If the industry says no, the Minister jumps. Besides, the Minister said that there is no consensus that labels will help, and they might violate international trade rules.

In California, as of October 1 of this year, all alcoholic beverages will have to carry warnings including the message that they can cause birth defects, and in Massachusetts, the State House of Representatives has passed a similar law. Obviously the much-touted Americans who will be entering into the trade agreement think they can carry warning labels without violating any international agreement.

This recommendation would not have cost the taxpayers one penny. A variety of warning labels could have been affixed to alcoholic beverages. One could warn pregnant women that consumption of alcohol during the period of pregnancy can lead to birth defects. Another could warn that excessive consumption of alcohol can lead to cirrhosis of the liver and other extremely damaging illnesses. However, the Minister decided not to follow that recommendation.

As Hon. Members know, the advertisement of spirits is forbidden on Canadian television as a result of CRTC regulations, some legislation and a voluntary ban. At the same time, the television advertising of so-called soft alcohol like beer and wine is permitted. The committee heard suggestions that all advertising for all alcoholic beverages should be banned. The committee considered that recommendation but determined that in the shorter term, it would be more effective if these companies which spend literally millions of dollars advertising their various brands be required to set aside 15 per cent of their advertising budgets to promotional health advertisements relating to the sale of alcohol. That could include messages like the don't drink and drive message we see from time to time in various magazines.

Again, since spirits are not allowed to be advertised on television, the brewing industry is in a somewhat unique position along with the wine industry in so far as advertising requirements are concerned. We did not want to ban advertising but felt that a 15 per cent set-aside for positive advertising would be sufficient. I am advised by the Brewers Association of Canada that it has voluntarily moved on a set-aside of 10 per cent for positive health-related advertising in the area of alcohol abuse. However, the Minister ignored that recommendation.

There were a number of recommendations relating to specific target groups. The Minister mentioned Benji whose name has become synonymous with the need of families and society to deal with the issue of drug and alcohol abuse, not only by older citizens but also by young people.

One of the problems that was repeatedly cited in this report was the fact that treatment centres are not available for young people who seek help. In most cases, treatment centres are targeted toward older citizens. Even in the cases where there are very positive programs working to get people off illegal drugs or legal drugs, those centres are struggling simply to survive.

When the Minister announced his famous drug strategy, I think many organizations that are specifically delivering treatment programs, like the Stonehenge Rehabilitation Centre in Guelph, Ontario, felt they would be able to benefit from the Government's program. Unfortunately, we discovered very soon after the drug strategy was announced that, according to the Minister's own interpretation: "The federal drug strategy funds cannot be used to pay per diems or any other form of billing for client costs in existing treatment centres". Therefore, a place like Stonehenge, which was in dire straits and appealed to the area Member of Parliament for assistance, was on the verge of a real financial crisis and could not get the help that was required through this so-called $210 million program to combat drugs.

One of the points made by the committee was that we have tried over the generations to inhibit the supply of illicit drugs being made available. In other words, there was an effort to get the pushers, traffickers, and the people coming in by the ports. We heard from the RCMP that this is a never-ending battle because of the line of drugs coming from the Bermuda Triangle and the Middle East.

We must take the approach of encouraging people to take control of their own lives and turn away from the use of drugs. That includes the use of treatment programs and prevention programs. Therefore, another of the extremely important recommendations we made, but was ignored by the Government, dealt with the issue of federal Government and federal Crown corporations offering employee assistance programs. Presently, if someone working for a federally regulated company comes forward to admit they have a drinking problem, or it becomes evident that their performance shows they have a drinking problem, and that person would like to deal with it, it may cause a situation where they may face firing or retribution.

Our committee recommended that the federal Government do everything possible to encourage federal Government employees and employees of federally-regulated agencies to have access to employee assistance programs. We thought that was a reasonable request, yet it was refused by the Minister. Therefore, a federal Government employee who is having serious problems relating to the consumption of alcohol or other drugs and may even be threatened by the loss of his or her job, is not afforded the opportunity of participating in an employee assistance program.

That contrasts very poorly with the record of companies like Dofasco in my community which, in fact, works very closely with employees. When a problem is identified, that employee can voluntarily enter a drug rehabilitation program that is funded by the employer. The employee can take leave from work under the employee assistance program that is available take control of his or her life and deal with the problem, and come back to the job without facing a possible firing or demotion. We thought that recommendation was reasonable, but it was ignored.

We also recommended that the federal Government make available assistance programs in the case of spouses and family members of federal employees who are specifically located in remote areas. I think of some of our military members whose families may be stationed in very remote parts of the country and may be subject to undue pressure of isolation and find themselves in a situation where their consumption of alcohol increases as a result of that isolation, frustration and lack of back-up. We recommended that the federal Government make available to the spouses and family members of employees who are located in remote areas the opportunity to benefit from employee assistance programs offered under the auspices of the federal Government. That recommendation was refused.

There are a number of other recommendations that the Minister of National Health and Welfare chose to ignore. I hesitate to say it, but I think one of the reasons is that his Department's record of expenditures in the area of alcohol and drug abuse generally has been abominable.

I have been studying this issue for a number of months, and the vast majority of federal Government funds that have been funnelled into the so-called national drug strategy have been funnelled toward the so-called area of interdiction, whether it be through the Solicitor General's office or improved staffing requirements of the RCMP. The funds have been funnelled toward the area of preventing the drugs from getting into the country, but even the RCMP told our committee that any strategy should deal with education in the schools and on cutting down on the demand side. The supply side will always exist. If it does not come from the Far East, it will come from the south and elsewhere.

Let us look at the figures. The most recent figures that were made available to us about specific spending by the Department of National Health and Welfare services and promotion branch reveal some rather staggering negative statistics about the amount of money the federal Government has been spending in the area of alcohol and other drugs, specifically in the health and welfare branch.

The figures speak louder than words. In 1984-85, the last year for which the Liberal Government was responsible for the funding of alcohol and drug treatment programs under the Ministry of Health and Welfare, the total amount spent was $2.322 billion. That included approximately $1.114 billion in the Department of National Health and Welfare in the area of alcohol abuse, and $816 million to deal with programs relating to the abuse of other drugs. There was a subsequent total package of $390 million, for a total of $2.322 billion. These are figures from the Assistant Deputy Minister of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Let me cite the figures for 1986-87 for the same Ministry. In 1986, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said we had a drug crisis and the Minister said it was an epidemic. The actual spending in the Department of National Health and Welfare, excluding the other Departments that deal with the interdiction and cutting down on the supply side, was $1.529 billion. That was a decrease in spending of $800 million over that three-year period in the Department of National Health and Welfare on the question of drug and alcohol abuse.

I certainly agree with the Minister and applaud him for moving forward with one recommendation, a Canadian centre on substance abuse. It is a centre which was endorsed by all three Parties. I am sure all Parties will support the legislation. However, I must ask the Minister to put the facts on the table as they relate to the whole area of substance abuse. Given that this is the only Bill we have seen in the House as a result of the work done by the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare, I could not permit this opportunity to go by without putting the Government and the Minister on notice that we do not see a Bill representing one recommendation out of the 31 brought before us as a positive response to the crisis in the abuse of legal drugs in this country. We certainly feel there are a number of other areas where the Minister could move expeditiously. He would certainly receive our full support and I believe he would receive the full support of members on the government side of the House, to move on labelling, to move on employee assistance programs.

Mr. Hawkes: If we could trust your word.

Ms. Copps: I am sure the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) does not support employee assistance programs for federal government employees, but it was an all-Party unanimous recommendation of the Standing Committee. We are going into the private sector and telling federally regulated companies to give their employees a chance to come forward and acknowledge a drinking or drug problem and to deal with it in the context of treatment rather than dealing with it in the context of being thrown out of their job and being another unproductive Canadian. We think the federal Government could show the lead in the area of employee assistance programs. We feel that the federal Government should also show the lead in employee assistance programs when it relates to the Armed Forces and to the RCMP. Those are areas where family members, in many instances, are required to live in far-flung places.

There was another very great shortcoming in the Minister's recommendation, or lack of recommendation, as it relates to the native population. I think the Member, who sat with us on the unanimous committee which looked at the issue, was well aware of the fact that we have a very difficult situation in relation to illegal substance abuse in the native community. There has been a government program brought forward to deal with it under NAADAP. That is fine for those natives who happen to live in an area where they qualify for a NAADAP program, specifically those Indians or aboriginal people who are living on reserves.

In my riding of Hamilton East I happen to have a very large population of native people who would like to benefit from time to time from the programs being offered. We heard representations from Thunder Bay and many areas in Saskatchewan and Manitoba where the native person who seeks some help from the federal Government by way of a treatment program is told: "Well, you do not live on a reserve. That is a provincial problem".

They go to the provincial Government and ask for help for a problem—perhaps the community would like to launch a program in an urban area—and the provincial Government says: "I am sorry, that is a federal problem. You are covered under NAADAP". So we have a situation where these individuals and community groups are seeking solutions to problems which have resulted in the destruction of some of the social fabric of their communities and they are essentially caught between a rock and a hard place, if I can use a colloquial expression. The provinces say it is the federal Government's responsibility and the federal Government says it is up to the provinces. Meanwhile, people are hurting. People are reaching the point of suicide because they cannot get the answers they need when it comes to specific treatment programs.

Unfortunately, the Minister did not deal with that when he launched his national drug strategy. In fact, when the national drug strategy was originally announced, it did not even mention the word "alcohol" until some of us on the committee rose up and said that while we can talk about cocaine and crack, which makes a lot of headlines, the reality is that the most serious and pressing problem that touches every family and every community is one of alcohol abuse and we have to address some very specific recommendations.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief. Our committee made 31 recommendations, good recommendations that would not cost Canadian taxpayers a cent, including a decision to put warning labels on bottles, indicating, as is already being done in California and Masscachusetts, that continued use of alcohol by pregnant women may cause deformations in the fetus. The research is not very specific, but in any case, we know that if a mother drinks too much alcohol, there is a certain syndrome called the alcohol syndrome which affects the fetus.

All we wanted was a warning label, indicating the kind of problems that might occur. The Minister said no. It wouldn't cost a cent, but he refused just the same.

We made another recommendation. It is a fact, and the Speaker knows better than anyone else, that today, although alcohol manufacturers may not advertise on television, beer and wine producers do have that right. We asked, and there were even witnesses who asked, to prohibit all advertising. The committee said no. We don't think all advertising should be prohibited right now, but we want to ask companies to set aside 15 per cent of their advertising budget for advertisements on health and alcohol problems. I think this is already being done by the National Canadian Brewers Association, up to 10 per cent. So we asked the Government to ask companies to set aside 15 per cent of their advertising budget. The Minister refused.

We support this Bill which would establish a centre on substance abuse, but we challenge the Minister's right to say, as he just did, that he followed very closely the recommendations made by our committee, because in the final instance, he rejected 29 out of 31 recommendations. He accepted only 2, one of which we are considering today in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) should realize that, as our committee concluded, federal funding should focus first and foremost on the issue of treatment. Even representatives of the RCMP who appeared before our committee told us: If we try to spend all our money and effort on prohibition, in other words, on preventing drugs from entering the country, if we cut off one route, they will find another one. It's up to the federal Government, through education . . . Even the RCMP said that, for instance, they were starting to visit elementary schools to explain, to educate people so they don't get involved in drugs, whether legal or illegal. And that is where the federal Government should put the emphasis when it launches a so-called drug strategy.

The Minister announced a program worth hundreds of millions of dollars to deal with drugs, but if we look at his Department's figures, there has been a drop of almost 30 per cent in spending in the area of treatment for alcohol and drug abuse since he took over the Department.

I said earlier, and I find it somewhat surprising, that since the Conservative Government came to power, that part of the Department's budget that deals with alcohol and drug issues dropped from $2,322,000 in 1984-85 (the last period for which the Liberals were responsible) to $1,529,000 in 1986-87. So when the Minister refers to a so-called drug epidemic, we first have to realize that he is not referring to an epidemic of illegal drugs, because the Minister himself said the use of illegal drugs was decreasing in Canada. In any case, the Department must focus its spending on treatment, on programs and on the problems of Native people and youth. Unfortunately, the Minister turned down 29 of the committee's 31 recommendations. So it is easy for him to say: Fine, we are going to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse. That will make a nice headline just before the election. As for a realistic approach to dealing with the problem of legal and illegal drugs, he didn't even mention the issue of prescription drugs, because this is another area, Mr. Speaker, where there is incredible abuse. We suggested, for instance . . .

Another recommendation which was rejected by the Government was that the Canadian Government could take a page from the book of the Alberta Government, which has introduced a method of controlling by computerization the distribution of legal prescription drugs across the province. The pharmacare program of that province is computerized in such a way that it eliminates the practice that we have seen in many provinces where a patient moves from one doctor to another to obtain multiple prescriptions. We made a recommendation in that regard which was ignored by the Government as well.

We do not have time today to get into the whole area of prescription drugs. One of the frustrations that we felt in the committee was that the whole area of legal and illegal drug abuse and substance abuse is so widespread as to make it extremely difficult to zero in on the key areas. However, we agreed unanimously that the very key area was in the area of alcohol abuse. Unfortunately, the reaction of the Minister to date to the committee report has been to ignore almost every single recommendation dealing with abuse of alcohol.

While we intend to support the specific legislation dealing with the creation of the national centre, we would also like the Minister to come forward with some specific legislation before the election. We would certainly give him our support if he could move in the areas of publicity and labelling, two areas which would not require the expenditure of a single cent of the taxpayers' money. We would give him our support if he would also move in the area of employee assistance programs for federal government employees so that we would actually be in a position to start attacking the problem at the root.

Unless we can do that, we will continue to see people turned away from treatment programs as they have been at Stonehenge in the Guelph region. We will continue to see young people who do not get the message early enough to save lives. We will continue to see the escalating difficulty faced by a society that is bombarded by all kinds of advertisements illustrating the glamour of the beach beer party. We have all seen it and probably we have all participated in it. Unless we can counterbalance that with a responsible, reasonable message about a mature way of integrating alcohol into one's life as one is growing up, we will see a continuing escalation in the problem of legal drug abuse, not illegal drug abuse.

My Party and I will certainly support the legislation. However, we would like to see a response from the Minister to the 29 other recommendations that have thus far been ignored, in particular on the issue of funding for specific treatment programs and for native populations and our young people.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to have an opportunity to rise in support of Bill C-143. I am sure that you, too, Mr. Speaker, feel a sense of gratitude that at least one of our recommendations has been attended by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). On that basis we welcome it. We will do what we can to facilitate and expedite the passage of this legislation. It does not seem to me to be in the interests of what we intended in our recommendations, or in the interests of doing something about the substance abuse problem to delay this Bill simply because we see failures on the part of the Government to adopt all our recommendations, although we take seriously on this side of the House the failure to deal in an explicit and productive way with the entirety of the 31 recommendations that we made.

I know that you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that the investigation by our committee, the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare, was precipitated by a series of events, culminating in the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicating that there was a drug crisis in Canada. This of course was motivated by the statement in the United States by his close buddy and confidant, Ronald Reagan, that there was a drug crisis in the United States as there indeed is in a certain sense. It is my view and continues to be my view that there is not a drug crisis in the United States. There is a social crisis in the United States, a crisis of great disparities in income, great deprivation on the basis of racism, great problems on the basis of emphasis on market philosophy that moves in the direction of sloganeering and easy solutions to complex problems which will not be solved simply by confiscating cars at the border because they have single cigarette papers detected in them.

It was an unfortunate thing that the Prime Minister would have become a copycat in those circumstances because it was misleading in a number of respects. First, it was misleading because Canada is not comparable to the United States. It is true that in certain parts of the country, particularly in Toronto and Vancouver, the appearance of crack concerns us. We are concerned about the fate of Benji. That is certainly true. But even there one can draw certain relationships between social circumstances and social conditions and the appearance of the more dangerous drugs of abuse.

I am saying that the social problems in the United States that have made hard drug abuse such a concern there have not attained in Canada. I thought it was misleading and an unfit description of our country to say that there is a drug crisis of the nature that exists in the United States.

However, this is not to say that there is not a crisis of substance abuse in the country. The only difference between what we found and what was alleged or implied by the Prime Minister is that while there is a problem and, indeed, perhaps in a certain sense, a crisis with respect to substance abuse, the dimensions of this consist in a large part of the abuse of alcohol and in an additional large part the abuse of prescription drugs. Of course, one could not fail to be conscious of the serious conditions on Indian reserves, native reserves, caused by the abuse of substances such as propane and glue and there, too, the tremendous level of alcohol abuse to the extent that in some reserves the level of phenylalcohol syndrome reaches 50 per cent.

There is a problem of substance abuse in Canada. The failure to address it properly does indeed make it a matter of critical dimensions. Whether or not it is an epidemic is difficult to say. I think we would be more inclined to say that it is endemic, that it is a situation in which we have a large—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton)): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. It being 2 p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

The House resumed from Thursday, July 7, consideration of the motion of Ms. Copps that Bill C-289, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act (list of ingredients), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my remarks to Bill C-289, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act. This Bill has drawn the attention of the House to problems faced by many Canadians who suffer from various food allergies. Bill C-289 would require the mandatory listing of ingredients used in restaurant food.

It is important to make the Canadian public more aware of this issue. I want to mention one fact that is very important as a first step in this area. Recently the Searle Drug Company of Canada announced that it was going to be listing non-medicinal ingredients in its drug products, both over the counter and prescription. This has never been done before, and it has been a problem to people who suffer from allergies from non-medicinal ingredients. I believe that that is a very important step in the similar problem that we face today.

Many Members of the House have spoken to constituents who suffer from food allergies and who say it is very important to list food ingredients in restaurants. I believe that the Government and the House of Commons can find a solution to this problem.

The statistics are quite frightening to anyone with a serious food allergy. In the past two years 24 Canadians have died, and 25,000 others are at risk every day. These numbers indicate quite clearly that food sensitivity is a real and serious problem, and one that we as legislators cannot ignore. Similar problems in the areas of food allergies and adverse reactions have been successfully addressed in the recent past.

In the early 1980s sulphites, which are a group of substances that have been widely used as preservatives for years, received a good deal of public attention as a possible cause of a number of allergic reactions suffered by persons eating in restaurants. In some cases, the allergic reactions were severe enough that people were required to seek medical attention or even hospitalization.

Health and Welfare Canada's health protection branch held consultations with many experts on the issue, including groups such as the Allergy Information Association, the Canadian Society of Allergy and Clinical Immunology, the medical community, regulatory agencies from other countries, and the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association. A much clearer picture of the problem resulted.

The most common source of problems was narrowed down to the use of sulphites on fresh fruits and vegetables in salad bars in restaurants. Further meetings with the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association resulted in that organization taking voluntary steps to discourage the use of sulphites by its members. In addition to the voluntary measures, the health protection branch enacted regulations prohibiting the use of sulphites. Consumer education programs were also carried out. Based on all the available information these measures have been effective, and the problems with sulphites have been minimized.

I have discussed sulphites at some length because there are many similarities between the way that issue is handled and the manner in which a solution is emerging to food allergies in restaurants. There have been a number of unfortunate and even tragic incidents, and the various media have given this issue their attention.

Members of the House know that we are now in a period of consultation and discussion. Bill C-289 presently before the House is in some measure responsible for that. The Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare of which I am a member, has held extensive hearings on the subject, during which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) indicated very clearly his resolve to go forward on the issue. Officials of both Health and Welfare Canada, and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, are actively seeking an effective solution to the problem. Extensive consultations are being held with the allergy associations, the medical community, and the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association. Bill C-289 is a commendable effort aimed at eliminating severe allergic reactions to food in restaurants. It is a step in the right direction, but the Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) can certainly be improved.

Bill C-289 could better address the realities of the food restaurant business. Large chains may use highly standardized menus and even centralized food preparation, but the Bill is aimed at all restaurants. Restaurants, in particular non-chain restaurants, must be flexible. Various ingredients may be available to a chef today, but not tomorrow. Some restaurants change their menus on a daily basis. It would be next to impossible for a restaurant, even an establishment with its own printing facilities, to provide clients with a full list of ingredients used to prepare daily menus. For example, let us think of the main ingredients that go into a complex sauce. Menus could become bulky and impossible to read. Ethnic restaurants would have to translate the names of exotic ingredients, and still would not be able to guarantee that an allergy prone customer would be protected against unknown ingredients.

Furthermore, it is conceivable that customers with food allergies may get a false sense of security from such a list. One single lapse in concentration on the part of the restaurant and an additional ingredient in a recipe could have an unfortunate result. Under Bill C-289 not even a minimal substitution or change would be allowed. In view of the very nature of the restaurant business, Bill C-289 is not completely realistic. However, it is an attempt to deal with the problem that should and must be addressed. We must ask ourselves if it represents the very best way to solve the problem.

For example, some people believe that restaurant owners should be required to provide a verbal list of all ingredients used in food preparation, upon request, to customers suffering from food allergies. This method would be effective. It would relieve restaurant owners of the obligation and expense of a printed ingredient list, and could be more responsive to day to day changes.

I also understand that the food industry itself has come up with voluntary proposals for quick service food chains to provide lists of their ingredients in their food. Although these proposals are promising, they would not conform to Bill C-289. Something must be done to afford better protection to Canadians who suffer from food allergies when they dine out in restaurants. There can be no disputing that they need better information so as to avoid substances that are problematic for them. The question is how best to convey that information.

What is the proper vehicle for the job? Promising suggestions have been made by the food industry, the allergy associations, and others. Our task is to take Bill C-289 and improve it in order that Canadians with food sensitivities will receive the type of protection that they deserve.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate this afternoon. I believe that this is the third day we have had the opportunity to speak to Bill C-289 presented to us by my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East has proposed this Bill to us for very good and proper reasons. As our colleague from the Conservative Party stated moments ago, we know that there are a number of people in Canada who suffer from drug and food allergies. Sometimes these allergies can range from a minor inconvenience, and on other occasions they can be deadly.

I have a daughter who has allergies. In her case it is something that could be considered minor. She is allergic to cats. However, if she is beside a cat for any longer than five or ten minutes, her face swells to such a point that she is almost unrecognizable. It only takes a matter of a few minutes, but obviously it does something to her system that makes it such that she cannot be near that type of animal.

We understand that for a little girl it is sometimes difficult for her to understand why she cannot go near an animal, especially when it is an animal that kids generally like. I have had to deal with that myself. However, the parallel is not totally just, of course, because in the case of my child, I do not think that what she has could be deadly. Mind you, if she were in the presence of such an animal for a long time, it could have probably more serious consequences, but it is avoidable because it is not an allergy to something that she physically ingests. In the case of people who are allergic to certain foods, of course, the matter is even more serious.

When I was a member of the legislature some years ago, one of my colleagues had a secretary whose daughter was allergic to peanuts. I remember seeing the young lady. She was 16 years old. She otherwise felt fine, and she was fine. She went for dinner at someone's house one day and unfortunately consumed a dessert or something that contained peanuts. She died at about 16 years of age.

I heard last night a television report of similar incidence where a young man of 17 or 18 years old died. He was allergic to nuts. In his case, he ate an apple turnover which contained ground hazel nuts, ground walnuts, or something like that, at a fast food restaurant. It was enough that it killed him. So foods that certainly would not do any harm to most of us can be deadly if ingested by some people, if those people are allergic.

My colleague is asking that restaurants label the food that they serve. I must say that there are provisions of the Bill that I am not totally comfortable with. The main thrust of the Bill, particularly as it pertains to legislating the fast food chains—and I am speaking here of McDonalds, Burger King, Harvey's and Arby's and other such restaurants—to put on their packages the products that are inside. It surely is not all that complicated. If someone can put the word "Whopper" on a cardboard box, one should also be able to put underneath the word "Whopper", "this package contains—" and then describe the contents. Surely that is not unreasonable because those foods do come in packages and there would be very little additional cost.

In the case of smaller restaurants, of course, that would be an onerous task. One cannot ask the local mom and pop restaurant to start giving a list of what is contained in their bacon and eggs and this sort of thing when you buy breakfast there. Under this Bill proposed by my colleague, the way that I interpret it, particularly as it pertains to the franchise restaurants, the Minister would have the authority under regulation to designate which chains would have to comply with the regulations. For instance, the Minister could state, well, chain X, McDonalds—that is a very large chain—can obviously afford to do this, so that one shall be designated as one of the chains that will have to comply with this rule, and so on, and describe the other restaurants which prepare packaged hot food, have a limited menu and sell food in large quantities.

That does not seem to be very complicated. There may be provisions of the Bill which would have to be deleted as they pertain to smaller stores. We can do that in the parliamentary committee. I would suggest that my colleague from Hamilton East, who is a very reasonable Member of Parliament, would probably be most co-operative if another Hon. Member proposed that kind of an initiative.

The Member for Hamilton East has a very good idea here. We should not think that she is the only person who feels that way. We know of Canadians who have had the misfortune of losing family members, we know of people who have died tragically and needlessly as a result of eating foods to which they were allergic.

Over recent months my colleague has received petitions, which I have in front of me in this folder and which she intends to table in this House in the days to come. She now has 4,000 signatures of people wanting this kind of legislation. They are coming in at the rate of hundreds every single day from people supporting this kind of initiative.

I trust that Members will not use up much more time in this House and that at the end of today, or before, they will allow this Bill to go to a parliamentary committee, where we will amend it if that is necessary in order to ensure that it does not create any hardship for small business and so on. I do not want that to happen either. But let us do it now. Let us send it to a parliamentary committee today. If we could protect the life of only one young person in this country—and I know that there are a lot more than that who can be protected by this measure—then let's do it.

[Translation]

So, Madam Speaker, I ask my colleagues, Hon. Members on both sides of this House, to let this Bill go forward, to let it be studied by a Parliamentary Committee so that it can be considered in detail and that a final version can be passed, after certain amendments are made.

[English]

I trust that my colleagues on all sides of the House will co-operate, send this Bill to a parliamentary committee and ensure that it is adopted for the benefit of many, many Canadians.

I said moments ago that there were something like 4,000 signatures here. That was an understatement, I am afraid. I am told that the actual number of Canadians who have signed these petitions is 20,000. I ask my colleagues to bear that in mind, and I ask for the co-operation of all Members of the House.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Madam Speaker, I recognize that this is the final hour of a long, extended week of work in the House of Commons. It is the first opportunity that I have had to speak while you have been in the chair, so I hope that you will find the comments and the subject interesting until the final hour is reached.

I would like to comment on Bill C-289, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act, which has been introduced by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). Bill C-289 is concerned with the problems of Canadians who unknowingly consume restaurant foods containing ingredients to which they are allergic. The Bill before the House would require all restaurants to make available to the public a list, in French and English, of all ingredients used in the food that they sell. The Bill would also require every restaurant chain and every branch restaurant, or any food services facility—

Mr. Boudria: That is not what it says. It says either language, not both.

Mr. Minaker: —in either language. I would think, because of the seriousness of this, that this would be in both languages because of our country and the travelling of citizens across our country.

It would require that all restaurants or services would provide a packaging, a list of the ingredients used in the food that they sell. Bill C-289 seeks to deal with a problem that has become acute in Canada. Many people suffer allergic reactions to food and food products or ingredients within food. Tragically, some even die from severe allergic reactions to the food that they eat.

I might point out that the CBC has reported that some 24 Canadians have died from allergic reactions to food eaten in restaurants during the past two years. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East has identified a very real problem and should be thanked for bringing it to the attention of the House of Commons for debate so that we can get opinions and the public attention to this problem that exists not only in this country but in all parts of the world.

As I have indicated, many Canadians are at risk because of food allergies. The numbers have been estimated in the tens of thousands, although it is very difficult to say with certainty just how many Canadians suffer from this problem. However, by being extremely careful when shopping and cooking, these Canadians can be reasonably sure of controlling what they eat at home and can, therefore, dine at home with some security.

I attended a restaurant equipment show in Las Vegas in 1975 where it was stated that in the United States two of every five meals consumed by the average American were consumed in restaurants or otherwise out of their own home. I would think that by now in Canada at least half of the meals of the average Canadian are consumed outside of the home. This increases the threat to people who may suffer from allergies without necessarily being aware of it.

I can understand that it is very difficult for restaurants to guarantee all the ingredients they include in their foods. As the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White) indicated earlier, there are many ways that that could fall asunder when people have come to feel fully confident that the list on the wall contains all the ingredients in a meal.

This is a very complex situation. A person may be allergic to the flour in a particular sauce on a meal without being aware of it because the ingredients of the flour had not been listed. To what degree would restaurants be responsible for identifying all the ingredients in the foods they serve?

Without particular reference to the subject, I would like to commend the Searle drug company which announced last week that all of the non-medical ingredients in the products it sells will be identified. This is a step in the right direction. Some of the drug companies are doing this on their own. I foresee that companies supplying food will also do this voluntarily for the public interest. Discussions are now taking place between the Department of Health and suppliers of food, preservatives, and ingredients.

This is a very complex problem, and I would not want this Bill to be passed in its present form. While it attempts to deal with this problem, I do not believe it goes far enough. They have not studied all the implications which would result if this Bill did become law. However, I very strongly support continued discussions with the proper authorities and the bringing forward of a proper Bill to the House of Commons as quickly as possible to try to cover all the areas which I believe this Bill has not covered.

I commend the Member for Hamilton Copps) for bringing forward this first initiative through a Private Members' Bill in order to bring it to the attention of the public and before this House for discussion. After proper discussions have taken place, the Government will bring forward a Bill which will encompass in a more complete fashion the problems which exist.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as we are all aware, it is the official mandate of certain Departments to be concerned with the health of Canadians. Together, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs work to ensure the development and adoption of legislation designed to protect the Canadian consumer, keep Canadians informed, and ensure their fundamental well-being. It is in that same spirit that the Food and Drug Act regulates the labelling of drugs to ensure that users are aware of the quantities of all medicinal ingredients in those products.

Similar rules are also applied to the packaging and labelling of numerous consumer products that Canadians purchase in grocery stores and put on the dinner table every day. It is not only a matter of ensuring that Canadians eat well and take safe and effective medical products when they are needed, but of respecting their right to be well and properly informed about what they consume. Further, it is a matter of making it possible for those who suffer from allergies to know precisely what substances and ingredients make up the drugs they take and the foods they eat.

Bill C-289 directly addresses the concerns of those Canadians who may unwittingly consume foods containing specific ingredients to which they are allergic or whole foods that bring on allergic reactions.

Under the provisions of this legislation restaurateurs would have to make available to their clientele a list of all ingredients used in the preparation of the foods offered on their menus. Similarly, restaurant franchises and chains would have to list the ingredients they use on their product packaging. Of course, Madam Speaker, this should be done in both official languages.

Let me expand upon this matter further in order to show clearly that the problem addressed by Bill C-289 is of real and pressing concern. For example, diabetics and those suffering from celiac disease must exercise great care in finding out the ingredients of all foods which they themselves have not prepared. If in doubt, these people must simply avoid the food product.

The same holds true for those who suffer from food-related allergies. They must be ever cautious in asking restaurants for complete details on the ingredients and makeup of the food in the meals being offered. For people in both these categories, as well as for many others too numerous to mention here today, it often comes down to their very survival, a matter of life and death.

Since October, 1986, at least three people have died as a result of allergic reactions brought on by foods eaten in restaurants where the ingredients were not known to them. Of those, two were teenagers. Had better and more complete information been available, these tragedies might not have occurred.

It is true that the concept of allergic reaction and its relationship to food is, in most cases, poorly defined. We are all aware that certain foods and certain drinks may lead to upset digestion or allergic reactions and that these reactions, although fortunately mild for the most part, are nonetheless unpleasant.

We also know that the effects of these same irritants can be exacerbated when we are worried, over-tired, ill, or subject to great stress. Finally, we know that in facing all these allergic reactions the medical community seems singularly perplexed and at a loss when it comes to quantifying the incidence, gravity, and growth of these problems. Certainly science is evolving rapidly along with new and improved techniques and we remain hopeful that effective solutions will be found.

However, we must take steps to avoid the death of other children who may suffer for simply having a snack after a hockey game, a swim meet, or a general get together. So, too, we must act on behalf of those consumers who, for reasons medical, religious, or personal, must avoid certain foods or ingredients and be made aware of their presence. We can no longer remain indifferent.

It should also be noted that the foods we eat today undergo complex processing and are made up of numerous ingredients. Most restaurants make use of an incredible number of ingredients in preparing their products. Even those establishments with limited menus and fast food outlets can use up to 1,000 ingredients. In the vast majority of cases these restaurants are at the mercy of suppliers who themselves can alter and substitute ingredients without notice.

Faced with the complexity of this situation, something must be done. We must determine the nature of the problem from a medical standpoint; identify the allergies, the foods involved, the groups exposed, and the treatment for those who suffer; and carry out the necessary research. We must increase awareness within the restaurant industry in order that its members can fulfil their duty to advise the public as to the ingredients they employ. Finally, we must protect the health of all Canadians who are vulnerable and who need not take chances when dining in restaurants.

As a result of Bill C-289 we have the chance to take a step in the right direction by proposing a solution, however imperfect it may be. I am convinced that the authorities within the Departments of National Health and Welfare and Consumer and Corporate Affairs will undertake a detailed examination of all that it entails and continue to ensure the safety of Canadians so that they will be able to enjoy eating outside the home without fear of allergic reaction.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to participate in private Members' hour and in the consideration of Bill C-289 which is a proposed Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act and concerns the listing of ingredients contained in restaurant food. The Bill would compel every restaurant to make available to the public a list, in English or in French, of all the ingredients in any food it sells.

This is certainly a sensitive issue that has received a great deal of attention from health professionals, food regulators, the media and the public at large. Certainly this attention is well justified. Tragic deaths have resulted from allergic reactions to restaurant food, particularly in so-called fast-food restaurants. According to various news reports, some 25,000 Canadians are at risk every day because of their food allergies, and some 24 people have died in Canada over the past two years alone because of allergic reactions to food eaten in restaurants.

It is heartening to note that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is well aware of this problem. I had the pleasure of attending a committee meeting at which he was present and at which this issue was discussed. The Minister is also very concerned about this problem. He has already issued instructions to his Department to determine how much if any of an increase in food sensitivity reactions there has been, whether a perceived increase might be due to the availability of better instrumentation and diagnosis and whether the population as a whole is becoming more sensitive for one reason or another. Certainly the media attention that has focused on this issue in the last year or so could be a factor in that.

In addition, the House of Commons Standing Committee on Health and Welfare has held hearings, one of which I was present at, on the feasibility of mandatory labelling for food products sold in restaurants and fast food outlets. The Government is determined to find the best solution to the problem. It is likely that a large proportion of food sensitivity reactions are linked to relatively few foods or food components. On the other hand, almost any food has the potential to trigger a serious allergic reaction in a particular individual who is perhaps more than generally sensitive.

This problem is complex, and it is vital, therefore, to solicit input from all parties concerned. Officials from Health and Welfare Canada and from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs have consulted with both the Canadian Food and Restaurant Association and the Allergy Information Association. Consensus has been reached that a chart identifying foods served in an establishment and an indication as to whether or not they contain substances for listing on a so-called priority list was perhaps the most suitable mechanism for providing the information required by consumers with food sensitivities.

In this context, I think it is appropriate to quote from a letter from Mr. Douglas Needham, Executive Vice President of the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association. Mr. Needham writes that his association:

> —supports the consumer's right to know the ingredients used in restaurant meals, and that his Association continues to work with all concerned groups to identify and implement measures that will decrease the likelihood of more tragic deaths.

I think Mr. Needham and his association should be applauded for that stand.

In fact, according to a recent report by the Canadian Press, the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association is strongly encouraging a voluntary program among its 6,800 members. Industry spokespeople such as Mr. Needham have said that restaurant menus should warn consumers of ingredients that could lead to allergic reactions before they order meals. The association has suggested a system of warning charts that could be introduced in quick service restaurant chains because these establishments have a highly centralized control over ingredients.

The consistency of the menus in chain restaurants combined with the limited choices that are normally available make the charts a manageable idea. According to the same report by Canadian Press, the association has talked with 24 quick service or fast food restaurant chains, and of those 24, 22 have voluntarily agreed to take part in such a plan. This is good news. It shows that the food industry is well aware of the problem and is more than willing to take some steps to resolve it. It further shows that the idea of an ingredients list, if it can be adequately fine tuned and made manageable and practical, is indeed a good one.

It is quite possible that the best way to protect Canadians with food allergies as they dine out is through the use of an ingredients list. If this is the case, then every effort should be made to adopt the very best listing system possible. In this light, it seems quite probable that Bill C-289, effective as it has been in focusing attention on the problem, can be improved. It is essential that consumers get the information they need to protect themselves in the market-place and to make intelligent choices. This applies as much to allergy sufferers who dine in restaurants as it does to anyone else.

The Government is determined to bring about an effective solution to this issue. If that solution is found to centre upon ingredient disclosure lists, then the House can be assured that the listing requirements will be applied in a manner that is effective, fair and as cost-efficient as possible.

Fast food and quick service restaurants are popular among Canadians for a variety of reasons. One of the reasons is that in large measure, quality control is strict, consumers know what they are getting with a great deal of certainty when they buy a product and the prices are reasonable and generally affordable. We want to make sure that it stays this way.

We must adopt a system that affords the best possible protection to the Canadian consumer and at the same time allows greater freedom and safety for those who suffer from food allergies. Thank you, Madam Speaker, for permitting me to have the opportunity to speak on what is obviously a very important issue.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words with respect to Bill C-289, a Bill to amend the Food and Drug Act put forward by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

This is a very topical Bill. It is topical because of some of the incidents that have occurred recently, one of which occurred right here in the City of Ottawa. It is because of those incidents that the spotlight has focused on this situation and has brought to our attention this health concern, a health concern which relates particularly to those who suffer from allergies to various foods and who have a problem when they eat out and are not able to identify the ingredients in the food they eat. This problem was highlighted by an incident which occurred a short time ago here in the City of Ottawa, and it is a problem that also relates to many, many people.

A week ago today, I believe, I had the opportunity to raise in the House the concerns of those who suffer from environmental hypersensitivity, which is a similar kind of problem to the one we are discussing here. In fact, many of those who have this problem could be put in one category, that of those with environmental hypersensitivity.

Constituents of mine, the Black family, came to me a few months ago with this problem as it relates to another aspect, the whole issue of the tax deductibility of the medical expenses that people suffering from this kind of problem have to incur.

I am interested to see the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in the House. He will know that I had correspondence with him, his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and their colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) on this very topic of the deductibility of prescriptions to treat people with environmentally hypersensitive health problems.

For instance, the Black family pointed out to me their great difficulty in having to actually modify and change their entire way of living. They had to make drastic changes in their household and, in doing so, incurred enormous expenses in making actual physical changes to their house. This included removing the rugs and making changes to the rooms. They incurred $15,000 to $20,000 in expenses that related to environmental health problems.

They tried to deduct these expenses from their income tax as prescription health expenses. They were successful in their first year. The Department of National Revenue allowed them to deduct these expenses from their income. However, the next year, when they submitted a similar tax return, the same kind of expenses were disallowed. When they appealed their income tax assessment on the basis of what had occurred the year before, the Department went back and reassessed them from the year before and, in fact, found that all of those expenses were not deductible under the Income Tax Act because they related to environmental health problems, not the average health problem.

Consequently, I have made representations on their behalf to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue. I am hopeful that eventually they will see the light of day and understand that there are many people in this country who suffer from environmental health problems.

It is interesting to note as well that there is a lobbyist on behalf of people with environmental health problems, Mr. Chris Brown, who is making representations in Ottawa all the time. He is trying to get some changes in this regard. It is another example of what is being dealt with in this Bill.

This Bill is aimed particularly at restaurants. By virtue of this Bill, restaurants would be obligated to make available to the public a list, in both official languages, of all the ingredients contained in the foods they sell. The Bill would obligate suppliers to print in French and English the list of all ingredients that are used in the preparation of those meals. Today, the number of Canadians who are eating in restaurants is increasing by leaps and bounds.

Madam Speaker, if you were to cast your mind back a few years to think about the number of times you and your family ate in restaurants, it would probably have been rather minimal. Today, all of us are spending more and more time in local restaurants or fancy restaurants rather than preparing our own meals. This trend seems to be on the increase. I know that in our household we seldom seem to use the stove. We may use the microwave oven or barbecue, but seldom do we use the traditional stove.

Families are getting away from eating meals that are prepared over a long period of time at home and are concentrating more on quick meals. If they want to have a more leisurely meal, it is done as part of an entertainment package. Rather than going to a movie, they will spend the evening at a restaurant, as a form of recreation. This may even have replaced a visit to the shopping plaza as a form of recreation.

The point is that an increasing number of people are eating at restaurants and it is becoming a more significant problem because there is more opportunity for exposure to these problems as Canadians eat out more.

The objective of this Bill is to protect consumers who are affected by food-related allergies, while protecting all Canadians whose right it is to be made aware of the contents of meals served to them in restaurants. Just as they have the right to know the contents of a prescription and over the counter drugs they purchase, they should have a right to know the ingredients of these foods, particularly if they are in any way sensitive to some of these ingredients.

Consumers are faced with the same problem when they purchase foods in stores, but in this case the problem is at least partially solved by the fact that the Food and Drugs Act has certain requirements for spelling out on the package, in both official languages, a list of ingredients in those foods that we buy off the shelf in food stores. That is not so with respect to restaurants.

I have much more to say on this subject because it is as important and one that I feel strongly about. I know my constituents feel very strongly about it, particularly those who suffer from problems of food sensitivity or other environmental food sensitivity. Having said that, I know there are others who are anxious to speak in relation to this legislation and I know that they, as I, want to urge passage of this legislation to ensure that we have some action for all the people who need it. I certainly commend the legislation to the House and when the time comes I know that you will support it very vigorously yourself, Madam Speaker.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the Private Members' debate this afternoon on Bill C-289.

Madam Speaker, I would like to talk to you about Bill C-289, which requires Canadian restaurants to list, in either official language, the ingredients used in the food they serve their customers.

Highly complex, to be sure, and difficult to apply, such a law nevertheless satisfies Canadians' rights to be informed accurately and effectively about the nature of the food they eat in a restaurant. I refer more particularly here to the many Canadians with food allergies who cannot take any food without knowing what is in it.

But to get an overview of the problem, let us first try to put it in a larger context. This is not the first time that the question of food has arisen. Our laws and institutions already seek to ensure the protection, welfare and health of Canadians. The Food and Drugs Act, for which Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada is partly responsible, has prudently set a whole series of regulations with which all suppliers who sell their food products in stores, whether a corner grocery, specialty shops or major food chains, must comply.

Madam Speaker, the regulations that I am talking about here apply to any food product, foreign or Canadian. On the package must be shown information in both official languages concerning the nature of the product, its usual name, the name and address of the company responsible, the net quantity, the ingredients used, the last date for storage and how to keep the food.

Since Canadians regularly eat most of their meals at home, the measures of which I speak here give them reassuring protection. Also, many foods are prepared in large quantities with unchanging recipes, and this gives us a further assurance. This law, Madam Speaker, has already been in effect for many years and experience shows us that suppliers have in general learned to comply with it strictly.

But more and more Canadians are eating away from home, from children who eat in school cafeterias and the snack bars of community centres to patients served on a tray in their hospital room and Members of this House who often eat on the run as they go about their business.

And not only restaurants are involved in this matter, Madam Speaker. People also eat in hotels and on board planes and ships. They pick up all kinds of food from carts and vans in the street, from fast food outlets and from caterers.

• (1450)

[English]

In fact, in Canada there are 72,000 commercial establishments in which one can procure food, which sell hundreds and hundreds of meals every day composed of over a thousand ingredients.

How can we resolve this situation effectively without violating anyone's rights, Madam Speaker? Well, I believe that it must be done in an orderly way, with a concern for fairness for the whole community.

In the vast empire of fast food, the answer to dealing with the problem of allergic reactions would seem to be more straightforward. Why? Because in most cases, these enterprises have built their reputation on a limited, specific and uniform recipe, so much so that what you eat tomorrow at the Royal Burger in Montreal is what you ate last week at the Royal Burger in Vancouver. That is typical of the franchise system. We know that some of these huge enterprises have already drawn up a list of allergens and are preparing to deal with the situation on a regular basis.

The problem is more acute in conventional restaurants. In this case, we are dealing with establishments that are much smaller and with a kind of cooking that depends on the personality of the cook. The cook or chef makes up the menu according to the preferences of the customers, according to what is in season, or to meet special requests, and may change the menu or modify a recipe if he runs out of one of the ingredients he usually uses. His cooking basically depends on his creativity and inspiration, which forms the basis for his gastronomic and financial success.

We must be careful not to frustrate thousands of Canadian, restaurateurs who would be hard pressed to provide a daily list of the ingredients they used that day, attached to the menu. In that case, their menu would become rigid, and every time they changed the menu they would have to publish comprehensible lists in French or English, when many seasonings have no equivalent in those languages?

But on the other hand, how can we respond to the complaints and apprehensions, which are justified, of thousands of other Canadians who have allergic reactions and, every time they go to a restaurant, run the risk of going home with an upset stomach or becoming very ill? So far, Madam Speaker, the wisest approach has been to ask the restaurant owner, to warn him and to trust him. However, this approach has not always had the desired effect, and there have been some tragic incidents, Madam Speaker.

In the modern and open world we live in, we can no longer expect Canadians with serious allergies to eat only and always the food they themselves have prepared. These people also live active lives, and I think they have a right to participate in all the various activities that make life enjoyable. We must also ensure that they do not run any undue risks when they decide to eat food they are convinced not do them any harm.

If my time has expired, Madam Speaker, I will accept your injunction and call it three o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Cossitt): The period provided for Private Members' Business has now expired. Accordingly, the item has been dropped from the order of precedence.

It being three o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday morning at eleven o'clock.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petitions Nos. 332-5098 and 332-5103.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition signed by several of my constituents from the federal riding of Brant under Standing Order 106. These petitioners call upon the Government to call an election immediately over the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States which they feel will help to destroy our country and our independence.

TRANSFER OF PFRA JURISDICTION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions on two separate matters. The first petition is signed by approximately 130 people from the southeast corner of Saskatchewan in Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Area 3. The petitioners are concerned about the possibility of PFRA turning over the jurisdiction of their irrigation works to the Saskatchewan Water Corporation. They call upon the House of Commons to stop that transfer of the administration to the Saskatchewan Water Corporation and retain the PFRA in its present form.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I also have a series of petitions from people in various parts of the country who request the Government of Canada to introduce legislation containing national objectives and appropriate mechanisms for the development of a comprehensive non-profit child care system accessible to all families throughout Canada. The petitioners believe that the proposed Child Care Act is not in the best interest of young children, women or the families of Canada.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a series of petitions from groups of Canadians in different parts of the country who are strongly opposed to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. They believe that Canadian industries will not be protected by U.S. trade laws and that there are serious giveaways in areas of agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment. They, therefore, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement. I present these petitions on behalf of these Canadians.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present, both dealing with the question of child care. They come from Victoria and Vancouver, British Columbia, and indicate that in the view of the people presenting the petitions, families throughout Canada need high quality, available and affordable child care services. There have been repeated recommendations to have legislation introduced to establish such services as national objectives.

The Child Care Act proposed by the Government of Canada in the view of the petitioners, contains neither national objectives nor the necessary funding arrangements. The petitioners say this will not ensure that families have access to such high quality child care. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to withdraw the Child Care Act forthwith.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions under the provisions of Standing Order 106 in which the petitioners state that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States; and that the proposed free trade agreement not only denies Canadians a secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective of the negotiations, but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DELLA NOCE—ARTICLE PUBLISHED IN OTTAWA CITIZEN

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I want to take the first opportunity available to me today to raise a question of privilege and clarify the false impression some may have got from the comments reported in the Ottawa Citizen of August 19, 1988.

Some may have got the impression that I witnessed certain questionable incidents. I wish to state categorically that I have no knowledge of any illegal or dishonest acts. The article gives an unfortunate interpretation of what I wanted to say about the need for politicians to maintain high moral standards.

If my comments resulted in some confusion, it is because I did not make myself understood clearly. The interview in question was conducted over the telephone, alternately in French and in English, and English is my third language. I deeply regret any inconvenience this may have caused or the negative impression it may have unfairly cast on others, including my colleagues in the House. For this reason, it was important that I clear up the matter in this House, out of respect for this institution and my colleagues. I ask them to accept my most sincere and profound apologies.

The House resumed from Thursday, August 18, consideration of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: It is now my responsibility to put forward further motions. They are Motions Nos. 30, 32, 38, 41, 43, 44, 50, 56 and 58.

That Bill C-130 be amended in Clause 57 by striking out line 20 at page 47 and substituting the following therefor:

"(4) The Governor in Council, subject to approval by a committee of the House of Commons, may make".

He said: Mr. Speaker, over the weeks we have seen a process throughout this development and furthering of a trade deal with the United States which, as I said to the House on Thursday, was very much directed by the Cabinet, very much kept within the secrecy of Cabinet itself. I suspect in fact that it was kept within the secret context of the committee of Cabinet which was responsible for these negotiations.

As a consequence we have reached a trade agreement with the United States which is unbalanced and, which, frankly, is unfair to Canadians, and which provides to the United States far more in the way of benefits than it provides to Canada. With that as a background it is important to learn some lessons, to draw some conclusions out of that process which tell us that Members of Parliament, individual Members of Parliament and those who have developed expertise as part of the standing committee, could and should be deeply involved in any further steps that are taken with respect to this trade deal. It is for this reason that this whole set of amendments has been brought before the House.

I will very quickly indicate the different areas with which the motions deal. Motion No. 30 suggests that the appointment of the chairman of the procurement review board should be an appointment which is subject to the approval of the appropriate Commons committee.

Motion No. 32 deals with the powers, duties and functions of the procurement review board which is a very important board within the Bill. Yet the regulations which establish how this board will operate are set forth as being very much the controlled purview of the Cabinet itself. Again, it seems to me that it makes eminent good sense in this period of parliamentary reform for those regulations to be subject to review and approval by the appropriate parliamentary committee.

Motion No. 38 is an attempt to see to it that the Canadian International Import Tribunal reports not only to Cabinet and to a Minister, but to a Commons committee with respect to the questions of whether, as a result of tariff reductions, U.S. imports are causing serious injury to Canadian producers. I think that industries and workers have to be able to petition the tribunal directly when they experience injury resulting from U.S. competition. That is not a part of the Bill either, but at least in this context there will be a parliamentary committee which will play an important role in overseeing the work of the Canadian International Import Tribunal. That will give a possibility for testimony from groups outside the bureaucracy and outside the Cabinet itself.

Motion No. 41 would, in the same way, increase the role that a parliamentary committee would have by giving it the necessity to approve the establishment of dispute settlement panels and committees, and their operation within the agreement itself.

Motion No. 43 would give the same committee the chance to review and approve the appointment of the secretary of the Canadian secretariat that will administer the dispute settlement panels and committees. Again, this is a crucial role that is going to be played within the agreement which has been signed, if it goes ahead, and this parliamentary committee should be able to have some say in this appointment.

Motion No. 44 deals with the question of regulations with respect to a number of powers of the dispute settlement panels and committees established by the Cabinet and states that these too must be subject to approval by the appropriate parliamentary committee.

Motion No. 50 makes the same point with respect to regulations regarding agricultural standards which are related to the standards harmonization provisions of the agricultural chapter of the agreement.

Finally, Motions Nos. 56 and 58 follow the same direction. Motion No. 56 gives the appropriate parliamentary committee the capacity to approve and review decisions regarding the manner in which the CRTC should interpret the television retransmission provisions of the agreement, which is Article 2006. Motion No. 58 gives that same committee power to approve and review the question of regulations defining distance signals and local signals for the purpose of copyright payment on television retransmissions.

Throughout this entire set of amendments there is an attempt to see to it that instead of Cabinet autocracy we recognize the principle of parliamentary democracy through its various committees. We see to it that these committees have the opportunity to carefully review and hear testimony from people about regulations and appointments with respect to this agreement, and consequently we give the Member of Parliament the chance to speak out with reference to these very important decisions which otherwise will be subject only to discussion and debate within the cabinet room itself.

I suspect that the Orders in Council which establish these various regulations, appointments, and committees, will not be subject to any detailed scrutiny from the Cabinet, but will simply be taken through in some very rushed manner without that scrutiny. These committees will permit scrutiny. They will permit the input of Members of Parliament. They will make for a much more democratic system should this agreement ultimately go forward.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this occasion to speak to this grouping of amendments. Last Thursday in speaking to a similar set of proposals concerning the increasing power of Cabinet and the expansion of the whole authority of the executive branch, I took note of the increasing trend of executive federalism and the attempt to make the decisions of government less and less accountable. The general tenor of these amendments further demonstrates how the trade agreement will distance and separate the question of accountability and the ability of elected Members trying to hold to account the decisions of Government on this issue more limited.

This morning I want to talk to Motion No. 41. Primarily it deals with the dispute settlement panel and the proposal that is in the Bill. In many ways this is the heart of the agreement. It was certainly put forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as being the primary reason for undertaking a negotiation with the United States.

In 1987 the Prime Minister stated: "Our highest priority is to have an agreement that ends the threat to Canadian industry from U.S. protectionists who harass and restrict our exports through misuse of trade. Let me leave no doubt that first a new regime on trade remedy laws must be part of the agreement".

I have poured through Bill C-130 and looked at it extensively. I did not follow the example of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), and I actually read the documents and the agreement line by line. Nowhere in Bill C-130 or in the agreement itself do I see a new regime on trade remedy laws. In other words, the fundamental priority that the Prime Minister announced in 1987 somehow did not make it into the legislation or into the agreement. In other words there is no new regime. The agreement and the application of the dispute settlement mechanism will continue to apply existing trade law on both the Canadian and the U.S. side.

There are no limitations on United States industries taking their existing law and using it to continue the harassment of Canadian industry. That has not changed. In fact, as I have gone through the Bill and looked carefully at the whole section dealing with the dispute settlement mechanism, I found that we may end up with a worse regime than we started out with, a regime that will take longer to settle disputes and provide more cost to the Canadian businessman, simply because the way in which the dispute settlement mechanism works does not come into play until a final decision is made by the U.S. trade commission Department of Commerce. It may sound like a technical point, but let me remind you of this. Under present circumstances, as soon as there is a preliminary ruling by the International Trade Commission in the United States on their law, we can immediately ask for a GATT panel to review that.

Furthermore, under the existing circumstance, we can challenge the basic law itself. We can go to the GATT panel and say that this U.S. law is against international trade rules, that it confronts the rights and obligations under international trade requirements. But under the panel that is being established here in this clause of the Bill, we cannot do that. We cannot challenge U.S. trade law. We have to accept U.S. trade law as being the standard which has to be applied. All that this review panel will do is determine whether the law has been judiciously applied in a way that is fair and impartial. But the fact is that we can already do that. With the International Court of Trade in New York, we can already ask for a review that is based upon a fair, impartial adjudication.

For those who try to make out that that review system is unfair—and I have heard the Minister for International Trade and the Parliamentary Secretary and others claim that to be—I put in evidence in the House a statement made by Gordon Ritchie, the Ambassador for Trade Negotiation, a public servant who, when asked in committee, whether the International Court of Trade is a fair, impartial forum, said yes. He agreed. So we have a refutation of the Minister of trade through the senior civil servant who negotiated the agreement.

I have to scratch my head a little and say, what did we get? We did not get any new U.S. trade laws. In fact, the same trade laws are there. Indeed, the trade laws are now tougher than they were when the negotiations started. The United States has written into its implementing legislation new powers for the trade negotiations office to review and monitor Canadian exports in order to determine if there are Canadian subsidies. That was not there before. The reason why it is important is because the U.S. industry no longer has to pay to do its own research on Canadian subsidies. The Government of the United States will do it for them.

One of the great results for which I am sure the Conservatives will take great credit is that the negotiation has resulted in tougher trade laws being applied to Canada than when we started out.

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Axworthy: Once again we see the superior negotiating ability of our Prime Minister. On the weekend he gave an interview to Le Devoir. He promised to negotiate an agreement on acid rain based upon what he did at Meech Lake and the trade agreement. God forbid! Stop him before he goes ahead. Please, Mr. Prime Minister, do not negotiate an agreement on acid rain similar to what you did in Meech Lake and similar to what we got on free trade. Please, for the sake of Canada, don't do it. My goodness, if he negotiates on the same basis, we will end up drinking acid rain in our coffee cups every morning. He will provide that kind of wholesale giveaway on acid rain that he gave on the other kinds of agreements.

An Hon. Member: The U.S. will get the rain; we will get the acid.

Mr. Axworthy: That is right. I say if that is what we are asking for, goodness gracious, let's watch out. Please restrain the Prime Minister. Use your good offices to hold him in check. This country cannot afford another agreement so totally one-sided against us.

Miss MacDonald: So he is against Meech Lake?

Mr. Axworthy: We come back to the review panel and what do we have? We have tougher U.S. trade law and we have made it more difficult to go to GATT. It will take longer to have a review undertaken because under existing rules we can ask for a GATT panel 20 days after a preliminary decision. Under this section of the Bill we have to wait until the final decision, which may take a year or two, and that could cost Canadian industry one, two, two and a half, three million dollars. It goes back to the historic words of the Prime Minister: "Let me leave no doubt that the first of the new regime of trade remedy laws must be part of the agreement". Now we know what he meant. Now we know what the new regime is. It is tougher laws, it takes longer, it costs more. That is the new regime. I wish he had spelled it out then. I wish he told us that in fact what we are asking for is a regime that will work less in our interest, be tougher for us to implement, be more discriminatory against Canada and will provide for greater harassment for our exports.

We should have guessed that because we know what the record is of the Prime Minister in his negotiation. I suppose if we really looked at it carefully, we would say that now we end up in the glue. While I approve of the amendment, I think the mover of the amendment, the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), will admit that the amendment does not deal with what is really the problem, and that is the dispute settlement mechanism entrenched in this Bill. It is a disaster and a serious mistake. It does not deal with the problem. In fact, it makes it even worse.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am going to get in on the debate of these amendments early because some of the statements that have been made this morning are totally outlandish.

Miss MacDonald: It is not surprising.

Mr. McDermid: They must be—

An Hon. Member: Challenged.

Mr. McDermid: —challenged. Thank you. That is the word that I was looking for. On the dispute settlement mechanism, we had testimony at the committee from a Mr. Pinard. Mr. Pinard is the chairman and executive vice-president and the chief operating officer for Domtar. He appeared with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. I will not quote him verbatim because his language was rather colourful. He was asked about the dispute settlement mechanism by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). He commented on the tariff reduction. I will not use his words, but he said that it was not the important matter on this. As far as he was concerned, as a manufacturer, the important thing was the dispute settlement mechanism. I quote:

> This agreement allows Canada to have a special arrangement for disputes and countervailing duty. We now have a bilateral tribunal, and that should make a hell of a difference. I know what I am talking about because I have been in the court in the U.S. several times for my company and this tribunal in the States is worth nothing; it is very biased. If you challenge a decision, it takes five years to get an answer. You go back to square one for a rehearing. The U.S. found it very difficult to agree to this tribunal because this puts them under the spotlight.
> They do not like this bilateral tribunal. There is certainly a body of expert opinion that says if we had had this bilateral tribunal we would probably not be stuck with this . . . duty on lumber. So we have something there.

That is the testimony from Mr. Pinard, who was at our committee. He made it very clear that this was a very, very important part of the agreement. Almost all the amendments that have been brought forward are from the New Democratic Party. There is a quite a list of them. There is one from the Liberals and the balance are from the New Democratic Party.

What these amendments basically say is that the House of Commons is going to start administering this legislation, as well as being parliamentarians and creating the legislation.

• (1140)

The NDP now wants the House of Commons to start administering all the boards and commissions involved in the free trade agreement and probably any other agreement that comes along or any organization that is set up through legislation. That really is the job of the bureaucracy through Order in Council. We hire the bureaucracy to administer legislation that we bring in. The whole purpose of delegating power to the Governor in Council is to remove from Parliament the burden of dealing with administrative detail. If we got involved in administrative detail in every piece of legislation that has been passed by this House of Commons, the House would be at a complete standstill. We could not operate. These proposals will basically do that. It would be an exceptional departure from normal practice to make administrative actions of this type subject to approval of a committee of the House.

We are talking about Governor in Council appointments. By virtue of Standing Orders 103 and 104 they are now automatically referred to the appropriate standing committee for review. Its members can call up these appointees and question them at the committee hearings to find out if they qualify for the positions.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What happens when we say no?

Mr. McDermid: That has happened. The qualifications of an individual suggested for an appointment were found not appropriate and the appointment was not made. I believe the standing committees have an important role to play. Appointments to the CRTC are subject to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting. The members of the Standing Committee met these appointees, put them through the grill, ensured that they qualified and had the necessary experience for those positions and approved them. Very little opposition has been raised by the New Democratic Party and the Liberals, if any, in these hearings. Members have all the time in the world at these meetings to question appointees on their qualifications.

We have found that the appointments made by the Government by and large have been of people well qualified.

Mr. Keeper: It is a rubber stamp.

Mr. McDermid: Was it a rubber stamp when Ian Deans' appointment was made? He was questioned before the committee. He was qualified. He had good experience in labour relations. He was in that field before serving here. He served provincially as well as federally and is fully conversant with those things. What about the latest appointments to the CRTC?

Miss MacDonald: Absolutely.

Mr. McDermid: The statement was made that the appointments to the CRTC were of very high quality.

The Opposition is putting forth requirements that will double the work of parliamentarians, which is typical of the New Democrats. They will bog everything down with this proposed administrative cloak of the House of Commons. It is totally irresponsible. I might also point out that all regulations brought forward by Order in Council are referred to the Joint Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations. I have been involved in regulations where the Government had carried out a program incorrectly. The Joint Committee found that the regulations were wanting and reported that to the House of Commons. Those matters were changed. Why do we want to duplicate things that are already in place? That is what the Opposition is suggesting with this series of amendments Nos. 30, 32, 38, 41, 43, 44, 50, 56 and 58.

An Hon. Member: Jackpot!

Mr. McDermid: That is right, it is like a bingo game. The Opposition talks about this House making regulations. If we start getting into the House making regulations, we will never get anything accomplished.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We may be able to understand it.

Mr. McDermid: My hon. friend from Brantford says that the public and we would probably understand better.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Right.

Mr. McDermid: I would be willing to wager that we would not. I think the system we have in place now is fully adequate and will protect any of the Opposition's concerns that they have brought forward today in the House of Commons.

I will recommend to my colleagues that they defeat this series of amendments because they are totally unnecessary and it is duplication of what is already in effect.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I support these amendments. Unfortunately, this is not the place where we can demonstrate how bad the proposed Bill is. At this time the amendments go part way to deal with some major difficulties.

I remind Members of Parliament that when the Conservative Government started to promote this deal and when questioned and challenged about it, we were promised that there would be no deal unless its dispute settlement provisions were so specific and clear that when any segment of Canadian industry, agriculture or the service sector believed that the Americans were being unfair in their competition that a tribunal would be able to make a finding which would be binding on both Canadians and Americans. What we find now is that this so-called tribunal will have to deal with any challenges brought to it but deal with them under the provisions of U.S. law. Where U.S. law is different from Canadian law, the tribunal will have to find in favour of the Americans.

I want to deal with two facets of the Manitoba economy which will be adversely affected by what this Bill does. First, the clothing and textile industry. In my City of Winnipeg we have about 10,000 workers involved in the industry, most of whom are women. Many of them are new immigrants from the Philippines, Hong Kong and Vietnam. The industry in Canada has been and is under tremendous pressure from imports from Third World countries where the wage rate is a fraction of what it is in North America. Now, as a result of this agreement, the Canadian industry and its workers will have to compete not only with imports from the Third World but with imports from the United States.

What do people who work in the industry say about this agreement? Let me begin by putting on the record an article which appeared in March this year in the Winnipeg Free Press. The heading is: "Clothing factories threaten to close". The article begins by saying:

> Two Winnipeg clothing manufacturers are threatening to close their operations if the federal Government does not go ahead with a package to shelter them from the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement.
> Peter Nygard, President of Nygard International, and Gary Steiman, of Gemini Fashions of Canada Ltd., said yesterday the industry needs a minimum bridge of $200 million to help it compete with larger American companies.
> Without the aid, they say their businesses will be destroyed by American competition under free trade and they will be forced to close domestic operations and relocate in the United States.

I remind Hon. Members that Peter Nygard was the Chairman of the Advisory Committee this Government set up to examine the effects of the agreement on the clothing and textile industry. Peter Nygard, despite some changes in details which went a small way toward meeting his objections, has made it very clear and has been quoted in the Financial Post as saying that he opposes this agreement. Mr. Nygard speaks for the industry.

Let me put on the record the views of the unions. I will quote from a pamphlet put out by the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union. The opposition expressed by that union is the same as the opposition expressed by the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers and by other unions in the industry. This is a pamphlet which the union's Toronto office put out, but that office certainly speaks for the members in Winnipeg who have the same views. The pamphlet reads:

> ILGWU and Ontario New Democrats are fighting the Mulroney trade deal.
> Lower wages. Layoffs. Fewer benefits. Cutbacks on your medical care. Fewer health and social services. This is what free trade will bring to garment workers. This is why your union, ILGWU . . . say "NO" to free trade.
> Prime Minister Mulroney is spending $12 million to convince Canadians that the deal he signed with Ronald Reagan is good for us. But Mulroney isn't telling the truth about this bad deal.
> The Liberals are no better. They're confused. Federal Liberal leader John Turner says he'd rip up the deal and David Peterson says he wouldn't.
> It was the Liberals that opened our shoe market to more imports in 1981 and cost thousands of Canadian workers their jobs. Look what happened. Orders for Canadian-made shoes dropped, the level of imports went up and prices went up too.

Now, Mulroney's deal will hit even more jobs in the garment industry, and in textiles, footwear and food processing.

Under the Mulroney trade deal we will have to compete directly with larger U.S. companies which pay their workers lower wages and fewer benefits. This means that Canadian companies will be demanding lower wages from us in order to compete. Many companies won't survive.

Women, immigrants and older workers will lose the most. The industries that are most threatened by this deal are where they work.

ILGWU and New Democrats have always fought for better wages and working conditions for these workers. We will continue to fight for these jobs and industries but it'll be much tougher under the Mulroney deal.

Mulroney promised that health and social services would not be included in the deal. He lied.

The Mulroney deal will let American companies run our hospitals, ambulance services, homes for physically disabled and mentally handicapped, home care services and many other health and social services.

In the United States health care is more expensive, employs fewer staff and provides worse care. And it is run for big profits by private companies. Forty million Americans have no health care protection at all.

If they get sick they have to pay out of their own pocket for their medical treatment.

No matter how you look at it, this deal is a bad deal for women, for immigrants and for all working people and their families. It's good for big business, bad employers and the Americans.

I have heard some Hon. Members say that this is nonsense. Let us just look at one aspect of this deal. This deal provides that Canadians companies will be able to compete in the much larger American market. This also means that the American companies will be able to compete in Canada. In Canada, corporations—

Mr. McDermid: Eighty per cent is free trade now.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary would sit back in his seat. He can speak again if he wants to.

In Canada, Canadian corporations pay, as part of their corporate taxes, part of the cost of hospital insurance and medical insurance plans, the Old Age Security system and the unemployment insurance plan, all of which are far superior to those that are in the United States. If we are to continue these programs, those taxes will have to be higher than the taxes American companies pay. This alone will give the American companies a tremendous advantage in producing and selling their products cheaper than the Canadian industry. That is just one illustration of what is wrong with this Bill, and that is one of the many reasons we oppose this Bill. That is also why we have moved these amendments.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested, in listening to the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary, to hear that he somehow seems less favourable to the idea of elected Members of Parliament having a role in scrutinizing appointments to boards by the Government than appears to be the official Party policy. The Conservative Government always pats itself on the back when reference is made to reform of the rules of Parliament which allowed parliamentary committees to question appointees to a number of Order in Council positions, positions which are within the executive discretion of the Cabinet.

We now have before us a set of motions which would extend this concept to appointments to various key panels and committees required to implement the dispute settlement mechanism provided for by this crucial trade deal the Government has negotiated with the United States. It was interesting to hear that the Parliamentary Secretary now seems to feel that the whole concept of parliamentary scrutiny of Order in Council appointments is somehow open to question and is on the verge of going too far.

I do not recall seeing the Parliamentary Secretary get to his feet to question the proposals which were not initiatives of the Conservative Government but which were rather a matter of all-Party agreement on reform of the rules to allow Parliamentarians through Standing Committees to question the qualifications of various Governor in Council appointments. This approach was very sound and very acceptable. Changing the rules of Parliament was a matter of all-Party agreement, but now, when it comes to the Government's trade deal with the United States, this is a concept that should not apply. According to the Parliamentary Secretary, it would mean too much work for parliamentarians. All of a sudden, what was once acceptable and in fact desirable has in fact become less acceptable and desirable when it comes to the trade deal with the United States.

I am wondering if this hesitancy on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary is not linked to a very clear fact connected with the Government's trade deal with the United States, and that is that this deal does not achieve what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said was the key objective for a trade deal with the United States. That is, the complete exemption of Canada and Canadian business and Canadian exports to the U.S. from the impact of American trade legislation.

We must remember that while the negotiations were under way, the Prime Minister said there was one condition, a bedrock condition, which had to be met. If it was not, there would be no trade deal between his Government and the U.S. The words that come to mind are those the Prime Minister used in an interview with the Wall Street Journal in which he said that Canada has to be exempted from American trade remedy laws, period. I am pretty sure that is the exact quotation. He did not qualify the condition in any way. He did not say that a partial exemption would be satisfactory. He said that Canadians would have to be exempted from American trade remedy laws, period.

Mr. McDermid: He did not say that at all.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): We know the deal the Prime Minister and the Government negotiated with the U.S. does not in any way exempt Canadians from American trade remedy laws.

Mr. McDermid: Nor does it exempt Americans from Canadian trade remedy laws.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): In fact, what the deal does, now that we realize that grandfathered by it is the American omnibus trade legislation that just passed the Congress, now that we see the way the Americans intend to apply and interpret the trade deal from their side, is actually to expose us even more than we were before the trade deal was negotiated to harassment by American trade remedy legislation. They have added to what was already on the books a new form of investigation by the American Government in response to the slightest pressure of concern from American business.

There has to be a new, immediate type of investigation. There is no discretion, as I understand it, on the part of the U.S. Government to reject the investigation. Therefore, right away, under the American omnibus trade legislation, right away under the legislation the Americans have adopted or are on the verge of adopting to implement the trade deal in their country, Canadian business will have to take time, make effort and spend money to begin responding to additional forms of trade harassment by investigation which did not exist before the current Conservative Government began to negotiate its trade deal with the U.S.

The Government will boast about the dispute settlement mechanism provided for in its trade deal with the U.S., but let's make something very clear: that mechanism does not exempt us in any way, shape or form from American trade remedy legislation. All it does is enable a panel to say whether or not that American legislation was properly applied according to its own language. This panel cannot be called upon at the beginning of an effort to apply American trade remedy legislation. It comes in at the end of the existing process. It just adds another level of bureaucracy to what exists already.

One of the claims by the current Conservative Government in support of a trade deal with the U.S. is that what was going on under the American law took too long. They said that the length of time taken in applying the American trade remedy legislation was itself a form of harassment. Yet the deal the Government negotiated with the U.S. did not cut by one day the length of time that process was taking. Instead, it has made it even longer by adding at the end of that process this new dispute settlement mechanism set out in the Government's deal with the U.S. We do not find that Canadian exporters will spend less time than before dealing with American trade remedy legislation. On top of that, we do not find any exemption whatsoever from the current American trade remedy law. Instead, there is a panel which will do nothing more than confirm whether or not American law has been properly applied according to its language.

This is a far worse situation than was available to Canadian exporters and the Canadian Government under the dispute settlement approach made available through GATT. Under that approach, the panels that were set up could rule whether the American law as such was proper or whether it should be overturned and not applied. The GATT dispute settlement mechanism did not look only at the language of the American law to see whether the decision was consistent with the language. Instead under the GATT the panel set up to look into disputes about the proper application of American law or other member countries' laws could say whether those laws were proper in light of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade itself. If the panel said they were not, then those laws could not be applied.

This treaty takes away the right of the Canadian Government to go to GATT on behalf of Canadian exporters to the United States. This deal, instead of helping Canadian supporters get greater access, without harassment, to the American market, exposes them to more harassment and takes away rights that Canadians had under GATT.

We certainly should look at the points being made by these amendments, but the real point linked with the amendments we are now discussing is that the dispute settlement mechanism set up under the Government's trade deal with the U.S. does not help and will not help Canadian exporters. This is still another reason why this deal should be defeated in this House and in the country during the next election.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the group of motions we have before us at the moment. It consists of some nine motions proposed to be debated together because they all have a number of things in common. Most of them seek to some extent to limit the power of Cabinet to make far-ranging decisions with regard to many areas of the agreement. This is, I think, in keeping with the concept of open government which the Party now in power has been espousing for many years but dropped on coming in to power.

These amendments are not perfect. They do not portray with very much accuracy the kind of agreement we would have preferred to have seen with regard to our relations with another country. What we are left with is the kind of dilemma that building contractors are left with when they are asked to repair a faulty building. All we can do as opposition Members is to propose amendments, short fixes, that would try to make it more usable with some repairs, although it will still be a faulty building. We find the procedure cumbersome, certainly less than ideal, and it will not result in the kind of structure that Canadians ought to have had in the first place, although it will be somewhat better than it is now.

For example, Motion No. 38 requires that the Canadian Import Tribunal make its report to a Commons committee as well as to Cabinet. That is in the interests of more openness. It is not going to necessarily result in more work for members of committees. It will perhaps make their work more efficient because they will be as informed as members of Cabinet. I have great difficulty believing the proposition that a few members of Cabinet, albeit the biggest Cabinet the country has ever had, will be able to find time to handle this workload while the 240 or 250 remaining of us are too busy doing other things to be able to understand or comprehend something as vital as recommendations of the Canadian Import Tribunal.

I do not think there is any harm in allowing those reports to be available to the committee members who may or may not decide to do something with the information. The process would certainly be more open and available to the public if they knew what the recommendations were.

A few moments ago the Parliamentary Secretary was telling us that the ideal behind these amendments, namely, that the parliamentary committee have an opportunity to review appointments and regulations before they come into effect, is unnecessary because we have an opportunity now to call before committees, for questioning and scrutiny, proposed appointees. Those committees do not have the power to stop the appointment, they simply have the power to make inquiries. The Government and Cabinet are still in control of whether or not that appointment proceeds.

With regard to the issue of regulations already being fully observed, I think the Parliamentary Secretary was referring to the Standing Joint Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations. That committee has gone through some name changes over the past few years, but its function has basically been one of looking at regulations as they come about and determining whether or not the Cabinet or Government complied with the laws of the land when they struck the regulations. That is all they can do. They cannot make comments on the appropriateness of the regulations and as long as the regulation is within the purview of the law of the land, there can be very little public discussion of the regulations prior to their coming into effect. This proposed amendment would permit that kind of comment and public disclosure to occur.

The regulations regarding agricultural standards are mentioned in Motion No. 50, which would require the committee to look at those prior to their coming into effect. This is especially pertinent because of the actions of the Joint Standing Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations or its immediate predecessor which found, after regulations had been in effect for quite a number of years, that in fact the regulations we were using to regulate the importation of certain fruits, vegetables, and agricultural products did, in the opinion of the joint standing committee, go beyond the powers which Parliament had granted the Government to use in the Acts concerning Canadian agricultural products standards. Parliament therefore had to amend those Acts to provide the Government with the powers it had need of and which the industry was convinced it should use in order to make those regulations legal.

The process takes a number of years. We have gone on with this process for eight or ten years. I believe we may have avoided that had there been a more open procedure, and had the committee been able to look at it prior to the regulations coming into effect and had the opportunity to discuss whether or not this was in fact a legal way to proceed. It could have questioned the objectives of the regulations and would have made Canadians who are in the business of trading back and forth across the border more aware of the thinking of the Government and of the process under which they would have to live.

I believe these proposals would go some way toward creating more open government and a more open understanding of what our trading arrangements are under this new agreement with the United States and would put us on a more equal footing with some of our counterparts across the border who have the opportunity to involve their politicians much more closely in trading decisions and trading relations than is the case in this country. Under our constitutional monarchy we have always attempted to keep such decision making within the Cabinet. When we get into a trading dispute, it is very difficult to find that political action is being taken almost immediately and in almost every case on the other side of the border, regardless of what is stated in the trading arrangement, whether in the current trading arrangement or the new one which we are now debating.

The Americans have a great advantage over Canadians in that they are always able, as exporters or importers, to call on their politicians in Congress to interfere on their behalf. We in this Parliament are not given the same kind of ability to interfere because we do not have the kind of constitutional arrangement which they have. These motions are moved in order to highlight the differences between the two systems and to try to make this very shabbily-built structure a little better. If we are going to be stuck with it, we would like to improve it in order that it might be of some use to Canadians.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to re-enter the free trade debate. We have debated the legislation in the House before, but it goes without saying that we ought to continue to debate this legislation until the public is aware of the full implications of it and until the Government comes to its senses and decides that it is not in the best interests of Canadians and will therefore not proceed with it.

I would like to refer specifically to the nine amendments before the House at the present time. The first motion refers to the appointment of chairmen of the procurement review board. The next one refers to the regulations regarding the powers, duties, and functions of the procurement review board. The third requires that the Canadian Import Tribunal report to a Commons committee as well as Cabinet as to whether, as a result of tariff reductions, U.S. imports are causing serious injury to Canadian producers. The next motion requires committee approval for the establishment of dispute settlement panels and committees in the agreement. The next motion requires the appointment of the secretary of the Canadian secretariat that will administer the dispute settlement panels and committees. A further motion makes reference to the powers of such dispute settlement panels. The next motion refers to the regulation of agricultural standards, and the final two motions refer to the retransmission of TV signals.

I will use the first motion as an example to illustrate what this is about. The first motion requires that the appointment of chairmen of the procurement review board be approved by a Commons committee. The procurement review board will consider the fairness with which companies are being treated when they seek to get contracts with the Canadian Government or other levels of government in Canada. So this affects a very important area of the economy. What this Government is doing, and we want to make this clear to the people, is giving to Cabinet the privilege of appointing the chairman of this board. It is also giving Cabinet the privilege of making the regulations with respect to this board, that is, the powers, the duties and responsibilities of this board.

• (1220)

The same thing is being done with respect to the Canadian Import Tribunal and the other aspects I have already mentioned. What we have here is the introduction of a notion of cabinet legislation. This Commons is being asked to approve a piece of legislation so broad in its nature that it outlines legislative authority for Cabinet. Cabinet will determine just what are the powers, duties and functions of the procurement review board. In other words, when we set up a board that will determine whether or not the competition for contracts with the federal Government are being distributed fairly among Canadian and American companies, Cabinet will be able to outline the criteria and rules under which this will take place. Cabinet will also appoint the czar, the chief, the boss, who will determine whether or not this is being carried out in a fair way. What we have is a Government which is substituting cabinet rules for parliamentary democracy.

What the Government is saying is that it wants Cabinet to have the capacity to set the rules, to draft the regulations and it does not want to define legislation in such a precise manner that Parliament will know what the rules will be so that it has an opportunity to speak on these issues, and so that the representatives of the people will have an opportunity to be involved in debate. It does not want public opinion to affect the outcome of the debate. The Government wants to do all of this behind closed doors. That is what it is saying.

That is, of course, not surprising given what the Government has done until now. If we consider what the Government has said about a commitment to openness and democracy, we are shocked by these provisions. But if we measure these provisions against the Government's behaviour, particularly as it affects this trade deal, then, of course, we are not particularly surprised.

When the Government ran for office four years ago, it made no mention of a comprehensive free trade deal with the United States. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ran for leadership of his Party, he said that such a deal would be destructive to Canadian society. The Government cooked up the idea of a trade deal with the United States behind closed doors and if the truth be known, it was the Business Council on National Issues, the leaders of the major corporate enterprises of this country, that hatched this idea.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): And the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Keeper: Along with the Chamber of Commerce, as my colleagues points out. They then took their pet project to the Government and behind closed doors said: "This is what we want. Do not pay any attention to public opinion. This is what we think is good for the country". That is what this set of regulations reflects. It reflects a closed and manipulative approach to Government. It reflects the idea that all Cabinet has to do is read public opinion polls in order to devise its regulations, strategies and policies behind closed doors and thus manipulate public opinion. That is what is distasteful about this aspect of the trade deal with which we are now dealing.

If the outcome was beneficial to Canadians, perhaps we could hold our noses and go along with it. However, if we examine the outcome of the trade negotiations, the deal that Canada is entering into with the United States under the leadership of the Prime Minister, we cannot in any way see it as beneficial.

I would like to read into the record some of the comments of people who have been excluded from this debate. The garment workers in my riding are some of the lowest paid workers in our country. These people live in the greatest of insecurity and their voices should be heard. The International Ladies Garment Workers' Union is one of the unions in that industry, and I would like to read its assessment of this trade deal with the United States. It indicates that this deal is going to lead to lower wages, lay-offs, to fewer benefits, to cut-backs in medical care, and to fewer health and social services. This is what will happen to garment workers because of free trade. That is why the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union says no to the free trade deal.

These workers, of course, know that the Liberal Party in this House and its Leader are opposing the free trade deal. I would like to read its assessment of the Liberal stand in this respect. The Union says: "It was the Liberals who opened our shoe market to more imports in 1981", which shows it is paying more attention to the behaviour of past Liberal Governments rather than to the words of the present Liberal Leader. The International Ladies Garment Workers' Union says that the trade agreement will be detrimental to the garment industry and to Canada. I am sure it would agree with me that it would be far better if this agreement had been negotiated in an open fashion rather than behind closed doors.

Mr. McDermid: It's all public information. Don't be silly.

Mr. Keeper: If the Conservatives believe in open Government, why do they want us to pass legislation that will give arbitrary power to Cabinet to make regulations and appointments, and to be able to do this without public input, without the Canadian people having an opportunity to have a real impact on the decisions Cabinet makes? I call upon this Government to withdraw this legislation and take an open approach to Government.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments with respect to this debate on free trade, particularly as it relates to the wage factor. Not only the New Democratic Party but the Liberal Party have continued to drag a red herring across the floor of the House of Commons with respect to wages and how the wages of employees will be affected by the free trade deal. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) went so far as to ask on June 29 of this year: "Do they want us to harmonize our minimum wage rates with Texas where the rate is $1.40 an hour, or the nine other States in the American Republic which have no minimum wage rate?" I guess the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) wanted to get into the act because he thought perhaps he was being outdone by the Leader of the Liberal Party.

On July 5, 1988, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said: "Eight states in the U.S. have absolutely no minimum wage whatsoever, and three are set at less at $1.60 an hour." This is a real red herring. While in Canada the provinces primarily look after minimum wage legislation, in the United States the Americans have both state and federal legislation dealing with minimum wages. In fact, whichever is the larger will prevail in the states. In other words, if a state does not have a minimum wage, then the federal minimum wage law is in regulation.

To give Hon. Members an idea of comparisons of the minimum wages in the two countries, in the United States virtually all workers are protected by federal or state minimum wage laws, whichever is the greater. Most workers in the states where there is no minimum wage protection are in fact covered by the U.S. federal minimum wage, $3.35 U.S. per hour. If we translate that figure into Canadian dollars it is equivalent to about $4 Canadian. This is in line with the minimum wage that applies in five out of ten of our Canadian provinces.

Further, the state minimum wage prevails when it is higher than the federal standard. Thus, for example, most workers in California have an hourly minimum wage of $4.25 U.S. per hour which, when translated into Canadian funds, is equivalent to $5 per hour.

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us about Georgia and South Carolina.

Mr. Minaker: If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) had been in his chair when I was opening my remarks, he would have heard me say that where there is no state minimum wage the federal minimum wage prevails.

Mr. Orlikow: They have minimum wages—they are low.

Mr. Minaker: The greater of the two standards apply in instances in which materials are purchased from another state, or when the product is shipped outside one state. The competitive advantages to trade arising from low minimum wage laws in the U.S. are virtually nil. Yet members of the Opposition would try to create a situation in which there was an extreme difference. It is interesting because the NDP concern about the U.S. minimum wage laws is curious, given the foreign aid policy of dropping barriers to manufactured imports from countries in the Third World, where wages often average less than $1 per hour. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition has never read the NDP policy bible entitled "Resolutions Reference". We see that these people are trying to create a red herring on the wage situation.

Further to that, I received a very interesting letter in July of this year from the President of the C. D. Howe Institute, Maureen Farrow. The letter was written to me as a Member of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Langdon: Who finances them?

Mr. Minaker: The letter states:

Dear Mr. Minaker:

I am pleased to enclose an advance copy of the C. D. Howe Institute's latest publication, Evaluating the Free Trade Deal: A Guided Tour through the Canada-U.S. Agreement, which will be released on July 19, 1988. In this study, authors Richard G. Lipsey and Robert C. York analyse and interpret the contents of the bilateral treaty.

The authors' main conclusion is that the Agreement represents a win/win situation for both countries. From Canada's perspective, the Agreement will increase access to the U.S. market significantly and make that access more secure.

The Agreement goes most of the way toward completing the policy of trade liberalization that Canada has been pursuing since 1935. It also represents a complementary strategy to Canada's active participation in the Uruguay Round of GATT negotiations.

The next paragraph in the letter is very important. I quote:

The authors work through the Agreement chapter by chapter, reviewing the content of each chapter, analyzing the significance of that content, and examining the major concerns that have been voiced with respect to the chapter. Altogether, they examine over 50 such concerns, making the text an invaluable handbook for all those interested in the public debate on free trade.

They show that Canada has not relinquished its sovereign right to pursue independent policies on energy, social services, cultural industries, investment, and public ownership—assertions to the contrary notwithstanding.

That is from a letter signed by the President of the C. D. Howe Institute, Maureen Farrow.

Mr. Langdon: Who finances them?

Mr. Minaker: It is an independent study. I suggest to members of the Opposition that they read that book. They would find that the myths they are trying to create are completely wrong. They are trying to put falsities into the minds of the people of Canada. The people will recognize that as they come to understand that the C. D. Howe Institute supports the trade Bill. The Economic Council of Canada has made recommendations that this deal is good for the country.

The people of Canada will recognize what the Opposition is trying to do to this good treaty that has been negotiated between our two countries.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I join in the debate this morning on motions put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), with pleasure. Before the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) leaves the Chamber, perhaps I should take a moment to deal with one or two of the things that—

Mr. Minaker: I am not leaving the Chamber. I am going across the way to talk to someone.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)): He is going to the other side to listen. I am pleased to see that.

I would like to make a couple of points. First, the C. D. Howe Institute is always of some interest for me as a Member for the constituency represented once upon a time by the Hon. C. D. Howe, the old riding of Port Arthur, now Thunder Bay—Nipigon. The C. D. Howe Institute began life as the Private Planning Association of Canada Operations, an affiliate of an American organization in Canada. It was latterly turned into the C. D. Howe Institute. It has always had that American connection. As my colleague was trying to point out a few minutes ago, it has been abundantly funded by the large corporate interests of Canada which have their own interests to support. They find the C. D. Howe Institute perfectly useful in supporting those interests.

Mr. McDermid: Just like the CLC does with the NDP Party.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Perhaps in regard to that I should read from a copy of an advertisement which I have in my hand published by Georgia, "The International State". It is entitled: "138 Reasons To Do Business In Georgia." I take it from the content of the ad that there are 138 companies operating in Georgia, with no less than $950 million U.S. of Canadian investment in that state. Why are so many Canadian corporations operating in Georgia? For a number of reasons. It points out the productivity growth of the labour force is 36 per cent higher than the U.S. average. It focuses on the fact that the costs of labour in Georgia are among the lowest in the U.S. It observes that fewer than two in ten workers belong to a labour union.

The Parliamentary Secretary just moments ago was evincing his own anti-union, anti-labour attitudes in the House by his jibes across the floor.

Mr. McDermid: I used to be a union member.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I am not surprised that he would be a proponent of this trade deal which will encourage more investment in the U.S., investment in states such as Georgia where everything that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James has been trying to assert about good incomes resulting from economic investment would seem not to be particularly true.

I note among the 138 reasons for Canadians to look to Georgia, the international state to invest, the firm Dominion Textile is mentioned. Anyone who has been observing Dominion Textile—this great corporation put together in 1905 by a union of other companies to try to achieve a dominant position in certain lines of the Canadian textile industry—will see that it has been moving out of Canada at a pretty tidy rate over the last while. It has been putting its investment into the U.S., and hiring labour in America states where it can produce much more cheaply, and reducing the employment in Canada in a process which one of these days could very well see Domtex producing nothing in the province of Québec.

Mr. McDermid: Why have they not all moved down there if it is so good?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): They will after free trade.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I wonder about support of the trade deal by members of the Conservative caucus from the Province of Québec, and those who represent textile workers employed by Domtex in Québec City, in Montreal, and in other cities in Québec. This trade deal will encourage Dominion Textile, a great enterprise built up behind tariff barriers in Canada, to do its producing in the United States and importing into Canada to meet the demand here. That is Canadian prosperity under the trade deal.

The focus in these motions is on some particular matters of accountability to Parliament on the part of the Government when it appoints persons to boards and when it establishes regulations. In the last months in certain parliamentary committees, and in the legislative committee on Bill C-72, in dealing with the Official Languages Bill, we saw some interesting developments. I witnessed this development in the regulatory functions of the federal Government in ways that seemed to me to coincide exactly with what my friend, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor is putting forward in these motions.

In the Official Languages Bill there is a measure that is essential to national unity. Here we have an elaboration of official languages provisions dating back to 1969. In those provisions there was an elaboration which was repugnant to some members of the Conservative caucus, one or two of them being present in the House at the moment. Those persons resisted those provisions. It was a drawn out process that was fought by Conservative back-benchers against Bill C-72 which was just about worthy of comparison with the valiant struggle which my colleague has been fighting in the legislative committee, in the House, and on the hustings against this trade deal. Conservatives put up quite a fight. In watching the response of the Government, what was interesting was the manner in which it finally came forth with some proposals on regulation.

The provisions are now in the Official Languages Act which has passed both Houses of Parliament and been given Royal assent. We were assured that, when the Government published regulations under the Act providing for recognition and provision of services to the official language minorities in various parts of the country, those regulations would not simply be published as they had been in the past, but there would be a complex and carefully developed process during which they would be given to the world in the sense of notice being given. Members of Parliament would be informed that the Government planned to put regulations forth on these matters. After some weeks of digesting the fact that regulations were coming, the regulations would then be published in draft form. There would then be time for Members of Parliament and committees to consider whether these were desirable regulations. After they had been given proper scrutiny by Members of Parliament, then finally these regulations would be published in the Canada Gazette, proclaimed, and be in force.

That particular process of responding to anxieties in various parts of Canada, anxiety about the extension of our official bilingualism in federal government institutions into other parts of the country where they are not so operative now, struck me and other members of the committee as an impressive elaboration of the regulatory function of the federal Government. One might be somewhat of two minds about why it was happening, but it is a democratic country and we want it to remain that way. When Canadians, who may be a minority in some regions and not in other regions, expressed concerns about what the Government of Canada planned to do, then it was right and proper for the law of the land to provide opportunity for additional consideration. Now under the Official Languages Act we have precisely that.

That is largely what my colleague wanted to do with the motions. Given the anxiety that exists across the country, which is perhaps stronger in some regions than in others but which exists everywhere about the impact of the trade deal on Canada, and the impact of Bill C-130 on Canadians, it seems to me the proposals made in this series of motions are eminently sensible ones.

In addition, where these motions provide for consideration in committee of the House of Commons of persons to be appointed to head boards, surely parliamentary reform envisioned movement in that direction. Particularly in a debate on a trade deal with the United States that certain patterns of activity of congressional review of appointees of the President to the executive branch in the United States, that style of congressional review which very often is a fairly ready acceptance of the appointee, and in other cases where there are serious questions to be asked when it is a dubious appointee that is before the American citizens, surely this particular activity of the U.S. Congress is one that we might easily emulate in Canada.

It is shameful that the Government, which has spoken so much of parliamentary reform, and which had before it proposals for some development of a tradition of parliamentary review of appointees in committees, has neglected and has failed to follow through on those initiatives. I am anticipating the attitude of rejection of opposition efforts that we have had time and again, and presumably there will be a decline of accepting the motions put forward to achieve that goal in this very important matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. King): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. King): The question is on Motion No. 30. The vote on Motion No. 30 will be deemed to apply to Motion Nos. 30, 32, 38, 41, 43, 44, 50, 56, and 58. Therefore, we will vote on Motion No. 30 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. King): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. King): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. King): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. King): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry) moved:

Motion No. 39

That Bill C-130 be amended by adding immediately after line 37 at page 21 the following:

""48.2. That the Tribunal be empowered to oversee the agreement; in particular it shall;

(A) 1. Report to Parliament to include;

(a) quantity and nature of Canada-United States trade;

(b) United States federal and state programs which affect Canada-United States trade;

(c) determine whether the rights and benefits to which Canada is entitled under the agreement are being denied;

(d) if the determination of the tribunal is affirmative under paragraph (c), then the Tribunal shall also determine and report what corrective action is necessary.

2. (a) The Tribunal shall be empowered to receive petitions from any entity, including a trade association, firm, union or group of workers who represents a Canadian industry and who has reason to believe that

(i) the industry is likely to face, as a result of the Canada-United States trade agreement, increased competition from subsidized American imports, including those supported through the United States defense programs; and

(ii) the industry is likely to experience a deterioration in its competitive position during the time negotiations occur between Canada and the United States on subsidies

(b) Upon receipt of a petition under paragraph (a) the Tribunal shall:

(i) compile and make available to the industry, information on the amount of subsidization to the American industry, the increase in market share since the agreement came into effect, and the impact of those imports on the Canadian industry.

(ii) update this information annually or as requested by the industry;

(iii) provide to Parliament a copy of any reports undertaken as a result of subparagraphs (i) or (ii).

(c) (i) The tribunal shall review information obtained under paragraph (2) and consult with the industry to decide whether action may be appropriate under section 59(2) of the Customs Tariff Act, and recommend such action be taken by the Minister of Finance in conjunction with the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

(ii) The Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs shall, upon receipt of any recommendation under subparagraph (i) determine whether to take action and shall on determination that action be taken, give preference to actions that most directly affect the products benefitting from governmental subsidies unless the application of action under section 59(2) of the Customs Tariff Act to other products would be more effective.

(B) Be empowered to implement and oversee adjustment programs for those firms and workers who will be dislocated as a result of the agreement including:

(a) specific programs for groups most disadvantaged; older workers, new immigrants, women, aboriginal workers;

(b) procedures for application by firms to be designated dislocated and apply for adjustment assistance;

(c) generalized programs for workers to insure that they are retrained for jobs that become available.

(C) Monitor and report to Parliament the extent to which United States exports are subsidized by U.S. defense expenditures and the impact such products have on Canadian industry.

That Bill C-130 be amended in Clause 146 by adding immediately after line 26 at page 113 the following:

""(5) Implementation through section (4) of this Act is conditional on:

(a) the Tribunal's report to Parliament on United States Defense Department subsidization of transportation

(b) proof that the United States government does not assist the transportation of agricultural exports to Canada.""

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to present these amendments, I want to underline why I consider that in the context of this Bill it is one of the most important set of amendments that we can present because of two things: First, it substantially improves the Bill; second, it points out the serious, glaring inadequacy in the entire trade negotiation and the trade agreement. What the motions in fact do is provide additional powers to the Canadian International Trade Tribunal to monitor United States exports in this country, to present a report on those exports to determine whether in fact they meet the so-called benefits that are supposed to accrue to Canada as a result of the agreement. They provide for the ability of Canadian industry to petition the Canadian International Trade Tribunal where they believe that Canadian-U.S. exports are being unduly subsidized. They provide for the Canadian International Trade Tribunal to initiate action to ensure adjustment for workers, and they specifically require the trade tribunal to monitor U.S. exports to deal specifically with the question of defence-related subsidies.

One would want to ask why you would apply additional new powers on an agreement dealing with free trade. The answer is very simple and obvious. This is what the Americans are doing. The United States has taken advantage of the trade negotiations to strengthen their own powers and procedures to apply actions against Canadian trade. It is a paradox, a joke, an irony. However you want to describe it, the fact of the matter is that it is contrary, in fact totally opposite to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in a statement back in 1987 when he said that there would be a new regime against U.S. protectionism. We have in fact ended up with the United States, in both the implementing legislation and the omnibus trade Bill having tougher trade laws against Canada. That in itself should be sufficient to tell Canadians what a hoax this whole thing really is. All the efforts of government propaganda, the $30 billion or $40 billion of taxpayers' money that they are spending to sell the trade agreement, cannot avoid that one fundamental fact, that the United States Congress has written into new trade laws tougher laws against Canada.

All that I am proposing in this amendment is that we mirror the legislation, that we at least acquire similar powers to provide a balance, some kind of parallel with the U.S. legislation so that we will not be at a severe disadvantage. I do it to point out just how singularly ludicrous the situation is and how deceptive the statements are by government spokespeople when they go across this country and say: "We have won a free trade deal". In fact, they have won a pyrrhic victory. They have acquired new U.S. trade legislation where, rather than giving Canada exemption, an easier ride, some kind of special preference, we have been singled out for tougher laws.

The Baucus-Danforth amendment that was introduced has given what I consider to be a very important new advantage to U.S. industry. Under the present laws, if a U.S. industry, whether it is potash or pork or uranium or steel, thinks that it is being affected by a new Canadian export, it has to undertake the research, develop documentation, and provide for the kind of inquiry that is necessary to make their case. Then it can go to the International Trade Commission and ask for countervail or an anti-dumping on that. Now it can petition the U.S. Government to do it for them. The trade office will now undertake to do all that research and investigation, which will give an open sesame, open invitation for U.S. industry to provide enormous harassment of our exports.

Furthermore, if you read the so-called Baucus-Danforth amendment, they have changed the reading so that it does not say that there has to be injury; it only has to be affected by a Canadian import. Then you can bring in the new provisions under the omnibus trade Bill, which will apply as part of this agreement and be part of the U.S. trade law, the new Section 301, which will give the President expanded powers and changes the definition of a subsidy. They substantially narrow what they expect a country like Canada can provide for its natural resource industries. Put together all these things and you end up with a package of U.S. procedures and laws that are much tougher than we had before.

In committee, when I raised this point and brought forward this amendment, the Parliamentary Secretary and officials said: "Yes, but we could do almost the same thing under existing law". They pointed to the Special Import Measures Act and the Customs Tariff Act. I went back to check those things out. It is not the same. Under the Special Import Measures Act it has to be the Governor in Council that requires the trade tribunal to undertake an investigation. There is a big difference in having a government decide to take that investigation, with all the kinds of pressures it is subjected to by its counterpart, the United States, as opposed to giving the industry that right.

Then they point to Section 59 of the Customs Tariff Act, which gives the right to Canada to respond. But it has never been used. There are not even any regulations determining how it will be used. It is a dead letter.

I say: "Well, let me call your bluff, put it into the Bill". At least this Government, for all its surrenders that have gone on, should be prepared to give Canadians the same rights that our American partners are acquiring under the trade agreement. I suspect that they might not. The reason they will not is because they would not want to provoke our powerful American partner, the powerful American Congress, into further action. So they are going to quietly sneak into the darkness once again, with a smoke screen behind them, trying to cover up, saying that it has been watered down.

We phoned around. We asked the Canadian Embassy in Washington and the Department of External Affairs and the trade office if they could analyse for us the impact of the omnibus trade Bill upon Canada. There is no analysis, they said. They have not bothered to do it yet. Or, if they have done it, they are not going to have it public, they are not going to give it proper exposure. They are well aware of the statements that were made last March by our Ambassador, Mr. Gotlieb, who said that the specific measures in the omnibus trade Bill that were contrary to the obligations of international trade law and were damaging to Canada have not been changed. They are still in that Bill. We are now incorporating those very laws into the trade agreement that we will have to administer on behalf of the United States.

The case must be made that the one thing that the Prime Minister achieved with his negotiations is a tougher protectionist law against Canada. I ask him if he is going to tell all those people out there in the hustings that that is what he achieved. If he is not, he is not going to be telling the truth, because that is the truth as it is written in the U.S. legislation.

I will make one final point, if I may, before you rise to your feet, Mr. Speaker. The important amendment 93 deals with the U.S. Defense Department subsidies. The Americans claim that that is national security. In fact, it is a massive form of subsidy to their industries, which should be examined and we should be prepared to apply our trade laws to them. This amendment would do it. I say to you that these amendments will certainly tell us the real tale as to how prepared the Conservative Government is to protect Canadian interest.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. King): It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

HEALTH

GASOLINE—CALL FOR ACCELERATION OF LEAD REDUCTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, studies by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services indicate that lead is dangerous at levels far lower than those considered dangerous so far.

Until recently the presence of 25 micrograms of lead in a decalitre of blood marked the danger level. The new report says that 10 to 15 micrograms are enough to retard mental development. Lead pollution has been a suspect in that area and others for more than 20 years. It is believed to interfere with the synthesis of key substances in the blood, and is considered especially harmful to children. Lead has been held responsible in some instances for premature birth, hearing loss, and low birth weight.

Public health impacts should convince the Government to accelerate the lead reduction policy initiated in 1984 and achieve by December, 1990, the standard of 0.02 grams per litre of gasoline already enforced in the United States.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF—PROPOSED NEW CHAIR LIFTS FOR SKI RUNS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, if a business is going to be viable it must be competitive, and that is just as true for business in the national parks as elsewhere.

Two ski businesses in the Banff National Park were authorized and are in operation but are rapidly becoming non-competitive because Parks Canada will not permit the operators to run their business like owners elsewhere in Canada. Both the Lake Louise and Sunshine Ski Companies want to erect a quad chair lift and to make other improvements in order to be competitive with other ski areas, but Parks Canada says "no dice!".

Canadians invested their money in these ski areas on the understanding that they could manage their businesses, and if Parks Canada is going to interfere and stop these businesses from being competitive it will bankrupt the businesses and be a betrayal of these investors.

We need these chair lifts, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, a curious thing has happened. The Government's nuclear submarine program has submerged.

For months the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) proudly proclaimed that his flagship program was going full speed ahead. But the long overdue decision on a final design seems to have been put into the dry dock for the fall. Perhaps the nuclear submarines have run into rough weather. The U.S. may not have given the Minister blanket permission to use their nuclear technology. His own Cabinet and caucus colleagues seem doubtful that the Minister can deliver them for $8 billion. Perhaps others aren't exactly sure why we need them. But one thing they are sure about. They don't want the nuclear submarine issue floating around during an election campaign.

Meanwhile, the Minister is making a flurry of announcements on much lower priority items. He seems to think that throwing around a lot of money will keep people from noticing that his pet project has taken a dive. But the people of Canada will soon have the chance to remind him that the whole nuclear submarine project was a bad idea from the beginning. And when they finally speak, the nuclear submarines will be sunk for good.

CONSERVATIVE PARTY

PEOPLE'S VERDICT

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out the efforts made on the weekend by all Hon. Members from Quebec in the Conservative Party caucus meeting in Saint-Hyacinthe, to confirm and reassert our unity and our intention to continue to work all together for the betterment of all Canadians, especially Quebecers who put their trust in our integrity and our dynamism, in order to put Canada back on the road to prosperity by trying in every way to strengthen our economy and thus improve life for all Canadians. Mr. Speaker, that is our ultimate goal.

Further to the talks and discussions of the weekend, I am quite hopeful that Canadians have realized that the Conservative Government is on the right track and that they will trust us again in the next general election, because they are convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Government is the only one that can lead our beautiful country Canada to its proper destiny.

AIR TRANSPORT

YORK WEST—NOISE CAUSED BY NIGHT FLIGHTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, despite the repeated reassurances of Transport Canada officials, aircraft continue to fly over the homes of my constituents well after midnight until the early hours of the morning. This ongoing problem has not reached a satisfactory solution despite meetings with transport officials, and petitions and letters to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard).

Passenger aircraft that violate the midnight curfew are often fined only $500 of the maximum $5,000 penalty and view this imposition as only a landing fee. Other aircraft not restricted to the curfew, such as courier jets and non-passenger flights, continue at all hours, to the displeasure and discomfort of awakened York West residents.

I ask again that the Minister of Transport eradicate this annoying situation by imposing harsher fines on violating airlines. As well, noise and air pollution should not be a burden solely on our community. Rather, all runways should be equally utilized so as to minimize the difficulties on any one community. The Minister of State for Transport (Mr. St. Germain) vowed in the House on June 29 to lessen run-up noise of engine testing.

My constituents would sleep and live a lot better if the Minister would also act on the unfair and unacceptable levels of overhead aircraft noise.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TOXIC POLLUTION OF GREAT LAKES—REMEDIAL ACTIONS

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, this Government recognizes the toxic chemical problems of the Great Lakes and has devoted considerable resources to their resolution. Specific actions include amendments to the 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement in November, 1987, as well as a number of provisions dealing with toxic substances; substantial research, monitoring and surveillance effort on the lakes which has been undertaken to identify and assess toxic problems and appropriate remedial strategies; development of remedial action plans for 12 longstanding Canadian areas of concern where water quality is impaired, and development of studies and management plans with the United States on interconnecting channels of the lakes where toxic chemical problems are highlighted.

In a broader context the Canadian Environmental Protection Act passed earlier this summer will provide comprehensive management of chemicals so that Canada will not in the future be confronted with the kinds of problems which are prevalent today due to the neglect of the previous Government.

TECHNOLOGY

PENALTIES URGED FOR DESTRUCTION OF COMPUTERIZED DATA

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, computers have become an integral part of all aspects of Canadian society. Governments, industry, and individuals rely on computers to cover the entire spectrum of usages. However, this very efficient means of information storage and transfer can be brought to an abrupt halt by viruses.

Computer viruses have the same effects as biological ones have on humans. A computer virus can reproduce, mutate, lie dormant, attack at a set time resulting in the shutdown of systems, modification or destruction of data. The ramifications are mind boggling. Just think of the crimes which could be performed. An example would be money transfers from banks and then having systems crash. Terrorists, organized crime, disgruntled employees can wreck havoc with our computer systems.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) must enact legislation which will impose harsh penalties on those who deliberately set out to manipulate or destroy data which actions can have a detrimental effect on Canadians.

POLITICAL PARTIES

MEETING OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S QUÉBEC WING

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): There is nothing like a deathbed repentance, Mr. Speaker. It amazes me how a vision of Heaven will so concentrate the mind.

This weekend the Pearly Gates parted in St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, and the Conservative Party glimpsed the Heavens beyond. The Tories repented, Mr. Speaker, and they swore to follow a new morality. After four long years of marching through the desert, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) claimed to discover that elixir of life—honesty and integrity. No more corporate contributions, he proclaimed from the mount. "Political Parties have to go out and get their money from ordinary citizens, in limited amounts".

But while the scent of death and corruption lingers, we smell a more earthy odour arising from St. Hyacinthe. Can we really believe that Quebec's Conservatives will refuse the $6.7 million of corporate donations raised in 1987? Will the Prime Minister renounce the $260,000 donated by the big banks, or the $10,000 given by Inco in 1987? And will Tory MPs outside Quebec turn as pure as the driven snow? No, Mr. Speaker, it is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle.

DEVELOPMENT OF PROJECTS IN BONAVENTURE—ÎLES-DE-LA-MADELEINE

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, recently I announced federal contributions in my riding of Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine regarding the development of aquaculture industries.

Since my election in 1984, this Progressive Conservative Government has emphasized new technology regarding the fishing industry in our area. In the riding of Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine we now have substantial private investments in the area of raising blue mussels, Atlantic salmon, and giant scallops.

I thank the Government for its interest in developing these new industries.

And also, Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure all consumers wishing to buy products from Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine that these are of the best quality. Good eating, everyone!

AGRICULTURE

ESSEX COUNTY, ONT.—EFFECT OF DROUGHT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend I took a disaster tour through the drought stricken areas of Essex County and I saw devastation which I have never seen before on the farms of that county. I saw cuts in normal production of as much as 40 per cent on farms which were fortunate and as much as 85 per cent on farms which were not fortunate. I saw seed corn which had been totally devastated because of the drought.

I saw examples of all sorts of crops of every kind that demonstrated that there must be in Essex County, just as in western Canada, urgent action on drought. It must come fast so that farmers can make decisions and predictions and be in a position to be able to plan for the future.

ALLEGED LIBERAL-SOCIALIST MARRIAGE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, having been away from the House of Commons for a few days, I noticed upon my return this morning an official, formal statement that the socialists and Liberals intend to live together. For a long time, the two leaders had been exchanging compromising winks, but it was not official. On August 15, 1988, the socialist and Liberal love-birds signed their marriage contract. A marriage of love! A marriage of self-interest!

I wish this new couple, this embryonic socialist-Liberal family, as few children as possible and a golden wedding anniversary in the Opposition, with pleasure.

FEDERAL FUNDING SOUGHT BY INVENTOR TO PROTECT MAPLE TREES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, over the weekend Canadians listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who pretended to be concerned about the environment. In my own constituency there is an inventor by the name of Bill Haines, of Vankleek Hill, Ontario. Eleven years ago he developed a formula to save Canada's sugar-maple trees. Some three or four years ago he approached the present federal Government to get assistance to further develop and to test this new product made of silica which would assist in the protection of our forests.

Much to his chagrin, and even with the help not only of myself but of the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling), Mr. Haines has been unable to obtain federal government funding for the project in question. I call upon the Government to listen to the good advice offered to it by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka and by me, and to assist with this project which could go a long way toward reducing the damage done by acid rain to our sugar-maple trees.

INDUSTRY

REBOUND OF PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my riding is heavily dependent on the petrochemical industry. Unfortunately, as the rest of my province was booming, the Lambton County and Sarnia area was suffering high unemployment rates and a very depressed economy.

The industry has finally recovered from the disastrous results of the National Energy Program. Never was there a program so ill-conceived. It ravaged the entire industry: the primary sector in the West and the refining and petrochemical industry in the East.

I have good news. The industry is finally rebounding, buoyed not only by the abolition of the National Energy Program but also by the very positive aspects of the free trade agreement for that industry.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CZECHOSLOVAKIA AND POLAND—STRUGGLE FOR FREEDOM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, 20 years ago on August 20 the tanks of the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact countries rolled into Czechoslovakia to put down one of the most courageous, determined struggles for genuine freedom that this century has witnessed. Today in Czechoslovakia there are courageous civil libertarians who want the same basic human rights that we take for granted in this country, civil rights, the right to organize trade unions, and the right to participate in a full and humane way in society.

The neighbouring country of Poland participated, under a communist Government, in the invasion by the Warsaw Pact countries of Czechoslovakia in 1968. In Poland today there are men and women struggling democratically to form a free trade union.

I say as a parliamentary leader of a Party in this House, joining with all other Members of this House—

An Hon. Member: You're a bunch of socialists.

Mr. Broadbent: If the central European—what profound ignorance has just been uttered from the other side of the House. I leave that to him. I say to him that it was Social Democrats who were put down in Czechoslovakia who fought for freedom like we are calling for here. I call upon the leadership, both in Poland and in Czechoslovakia, and particularly in the Soviet Union, to live up to the commitments to freedom and allow freedom to flourish both in Czechoslovakia and in Poland.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: You are so ignorant, you're despicable. Where was your Party on the War Measures Act, on the Japanese-Canadians? Tell me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I'll tell you who stands up for freedom in this place, it's not you guys.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, boloney.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS—RCMP INVESTIGATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it concerns the Prime Minister's apparent double standard of political morality shown over the weekend. The Member of Parliament for Rosemont is kicked out of the Tory Caucus for what the Prime Minister called irresponsible and unacceptable behaviour. She is on the side of—

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment. The Hon. Member may be rising on a matter of considerable political interest, and there certainly may be other places to pursue it, but I am having some difficulty here because, as Hon. Members know, a question directed to the administration has to deal with the administration of government. So far the Hon. Member is not persuading me that that question does involve the administration of government. Perhaps the Hon. Member can help the Chair.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I believe the question I will ask does comply with the rules of the House, but in the preamble I wanted to raise circumstances which have been much in the news over the weekend and which reflect on the political morality of this Government as a Government.

I contrast the treatment of the Member for Rosemont with the Member of Parliament for Gamelin who faces 50 charges of influence peddling, and yet he remains in caucus.

Mr. Speaker: I have asked the Hon. Member, who is an experienced Member, to assist the Chair and stay within the bounds. I do not want to interrupt a lead question, and I do so with great hesitancy. However, I do ask the Hon. Member's co-operation.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I wanted also to contrast that with the Member for York—Peel who, after having 14 violations—

Mr. Speaker: The difficulty the Chair is in is that the rules by which we are bound are designed ultimately and primarily so that questions do not create disorder and, second, that they be pertinent to the administration of the Government. The Hon. Member, I know, understands this, and I would ask him to put his question. Otherwise, I may have to move on to another Member.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's condemnation of the MP for Rosemont is based on an RCMP press release which I have here which says simply that she had no evidence to justify initiating a criminal investigation. Whether she had anything new to add on that day, August 19, we all know she has evidence of alleged kick-backs because she is a key witness for the prosecution against the MP for Gamelin.

• (1420)

Mr. Gormley: Kangaroo court!

Mr. Speaker: I will exercise considerable patience and allow the Hon. Member to put his question, but the preambles are going too far.

Mr. Kaplan: Then to come right to the question—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: —the Deputy Prime Minister accused the Hon. Member for Rosemont of irresponsible and unacceptable behaviour. Will he acknowledge what RCMP Constable Trevor Edwards is quoted as saying, namely, that there is an ongoing investigation? As well, why is the Prime Minister trying to undermine the credibility of the Hon. Member for Rosemont who will shortly be a witness in a criminal proceeding?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is taking the lead question for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and, as I said, I do not like interrupting, but we are now treading into another even more difficult situation because there is an ongoing criminal investigation. I do not know where all this is leading but I have an obligation to ensure that the questions are within the rules. If the Hon. Member can put his question—

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Speaker: —and keep it within the rules, I will hear him.

Mr. Kaplan: If I can repeat my first question, it was simply to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why the Prime Minister is making adverse statements about the Hon. Member for Rosemont. Exactly what has she said that he objects to?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised a lot of allegations. One he noted is that the Hon. Member for Rosemont has evidence of kick-backs. That is totally contrary to the report issued by the RCMP. I find it very strange that a former Solicitor General, who was a spokesman in this House on behalf of the Government for the RCMP, would second guess the RCMP. I find that totally unacceptable.

Mr. Kaplan: They said no such thing, Mr. Speaker. They simply observed they had no information from her to initiate a criminal investigation. There was already one ongoing.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR DUVERNAY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister about the statement we all heard this morning made by the Hon. Member for Duvernay, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State. He is in the House and perhaps he would like to answer the question because his statement was far from enlightening.

Did anyone on behalf of the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State ask that Hon. Member exactly what he meant when he said "I could put a dozen people in prison"? What does that mean?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member was in the House—

Mr. Kaplan: I was in the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: —when the Hon. Member made his statement, but perhaps I can just refer to it because I think it explains what was said and the unfortunate interpretation placed upon this. Referring to the article in question, he said: "This article presents an unfortunate interpretation of what I wanted to say concerning the necessity of maintaining the highest moral standards in political life. If my thoughts brought about confusion it is because I did not clearly express myself. This was done through a telephone interview, alternately in English and French, with English being my third language".

I think we have all been misquoted and misinterpreted. I think the Hon. Member admits the fact there was a misinterpretation. He has apologized to the House. He rose at the earliest opportunity. In his opening comments he said: "I rise today at the first available opportunity on a question of privilege to clarify an erroneous perception which may have arisen from the comments of mine reported in The Ottawa Citizen on August 19". Just the other day the Hon. Member for York Centre himself was misinterpreted and we gave him an opportunity to make a clarification. What is good for him should be good for Members on this side of the House as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the problem is that he did not qualify or clarify the statement he made to the media.

STATEMENT REPORTED IN LE DEVOIR—CLEAN-UP OF POLITICAL MORALS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Third, I would like to ask why the Prime Minister is so angry with the Hon. Member for Rosemont, when in his statements as reported in Le Devoir, he admitted that even after four years as Prime Minister, it was still necessary to clean up political morality here in Ottawa.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member wants to blame the Prime Minister. My understanding is that the decision taken was a Quebec caucus decision. There are certain decisions that are taken in the Liberal caucus and in other caucuses. I do not know why the Hon. Member would take offence at that.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR LASALLE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the Prime Minister's role in protecting ethics in government and his role as administrator of the conflict of interest rules.

Over the weekend another Conservative Member, this time the Hon. Member for LaSalle, said, referring to political contributions to his Party:

> "What goes into (the party coffers) is public", he says. "It's what falls off to the side, the crumbs that drop off the table" that bother him.

When did the Prime Minister find out about these new allegations of a diversion of funds and what does he intend to do about it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, here we have another allegation with regard to the—

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, from another one of your Members.

Mr. Mazankowski: —comments that appeared in The Globe and Mail today. I am advised by the Solicitor General that the RCMP is today conducting an interview with the Hon. Member. I would hope that for the time being it may rest there until such time as information is provided.

When the Hon. Member talks about the Prime Minister and his responsibility with regards to ethics and morality, I think the answer is very clear. He has acted decisively on many occasions where there has been inappropriate conduct. Conflict of interest legislation has been brought before the House. We have dealt with lobbyists legislation. We have brought in reform with regard to the appointment process, reform with regard to the appointment of judges. There have been reforms in the contracting process. We are trying to get changes to the Elections Act. This is the first Government that has had to operate under the full supervision of the Access to Information Act, so indeed there have been many, many improvements.

The fact of the matter is that what is evident today is that the system has improved considerably over what it was in previous years.

ALLEGATIONS REPORTED IN MEDIA—GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I would like to remind the Deputy Prime Minister that he did not answer my question. I would like to put it to him a second time: When was the first time the Prime Minister heard of the allegations made by the Hon. Member for LaSalle, as reported in the media on the weekend? Did the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister know about these allegations before the weekend? If so, what specific action did the Government take and when?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I was certainly not aware of it. My first information with reference to what the Hon. Member said was that which was included in the report in The Globe and Mail this morning. I will check with the Prime Minister to make sure, but I am not aware of his being advised of this. I would suspect that would not be the case. I am sure he got his information the same way I did.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

FUNDING OF POLITICAL PARTIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister on the same subject. We have just had reference to another Conservative Member making what could be euphemistically described as perhaps bizarre statements about financing and how it is being handled in the Conservative Party. At the same time on the weekend the Québec wing of the federal Conservatives said that it will go into the election campaign without relying on corporate donations—

Some Hon. Members: NDP and the Unions.

Mr. Broadbent: —and union donations. They would rely only on donations from individuals.

Some 18 months ago the NDP called for federal legislation in this House not once, not twice, but three times. Therefore, why has the Government of Canada not proceeded with this legislation up until now? Will it give us assurances that it will put into place, not simply moral persuasion legislation but effective law, before the next election, for all of Canada?

• (1430)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course this is an important matter which I believe all Hon. Members want to address. Obviously the Quebec caucus has come up with an interesting approach which I think—

Mr. Broadbent: For the next election.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member thinks it's a joke.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Oshawa has asked a question which, of course, is completely within the rules. I ask Hon. Members to respect the Minister's right to reply.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to answer the question as best I can. I know the Hon. Member posed it in a very serious vein. This is an experiment which the Quebec caucus wishes to adopt on a voluntary basis.

With due respect, these are the kinds of things we could have studied had we been able to move Bill C-79 into committee. The Member's spokesman behind him shakes his head in the negative. I realize that the present Bill does not suit all the needs of the New Democratic Party. We acknowledge that. However, we wanted this Bill brought into committee in order that we could study it fully and consider some of the suggestions which have been advanced by the Quebec caucus.

The Hon. Member also suggests that this should be adopted before the next election. The Hon. Member's Party is calling for an election immediately. According to the Chief Electoral Officer, if we were to make these changes by mid-September it would take three to four months for them to be implemented. I ask them to consider that.

As I said on Friday, I think discussions have already started between the Deputy Government House Leader and the Acting House Leader of the New Democratic Party in an attempt to advance this particular piece of legislation.

There is more to it than only the matter of corporate contributions. There is the definition of election expenses, the issue of third party advertising, the extension of voting rights to people abroad, and the structure of the enforcement commission. We had hoped that we would be able to deal with all of these things and are still prepared to do so.

Oral Questions

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S EXPENDITURES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows that the Bill in question does not deal with election expenses and does not deal with party financing. He knows that a year and a half ago I asked the Government to bring in such a measure at that time. Apart from repeated promises to do so, he knows that the Government has stalled ever since and has refused to bring it forward.

The Conservative Party in Quebec has said that it will impose a moratorium on itself on collecting money from corporations during the campaign. The national campaign of the Conservative Party pays the expenses for Leader's travels, all the television coverage in English and in French, and newspaper ads. Corporations in the Province of Quebec as well as corporations on Bay Street gave a total of over $6 million to the Conservatives last year. Will the Minister admit that this money will be spent in Québec just as it will be spent elsewhere in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member was posing his questions in a very serious vein and was not going to go to the bottom of the sink-hole on a question which I take very seriously.

First, the Member is absolutely wrong when he says that we were not prepared to deal with the election expenses Bill. There have been letters. Just because there is a disagreement between his Party and our Party with regard to the definition of election expenses is no reason it should not go forward into committee for further study. We have advanced a definition and are prepared to meet again and advance another one. We are prepared to deal with this.

The Hon. Member also suggests that there is something fundamentally wrong with the proposal which has been advanced by the Province of Quebec. I am not going to get into specifics on this particular issue right now, but I can assure him that this would be an issue more appropriately discussed in committee where all Parties could sit down with their representatives to deal with it. As I said on Friday, Mr. Speaker, we stand ready to do that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows that the New Democratic Party, to our knowledge, is the only Party that has submitted a definition of the kind he has requested. There has been no such definition proposed by the governing Party. We have been consistent and we want reform.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF LARGE CORPORATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question is just this: The Conservative Caucus in the province of Quebec promised that as a Party, it will not accept contributions from corporations or unions. It only wants private donations. My question is quite simply: Is it true that during the next campaign, in the province of Quebec, the Conservatives' national compaign will use money donated by the big corporations on Bay Street in Toronto and on St. James Street in Montreal? Is it true that the big corporations will pay for the national campaign in the province of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question. I regret that I did not get the full thrust of the question and I would like to hear it before I respond to it.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will repeat the question very clearly, and if he can get his colleagues to shut up maybe he will hear it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Will the Deputy Prime Minister acknowledge that in the forthcoming election campaign, notwithstanding what the Quebec Conservative caucus has had to say, money collected from corporations on Bay Street and on St. Jacques Street in Montreal, which totalled over $6 million last year, will be spent in the national campaign coming up in the Province of Quebec to finance the Leader's tour, newspaper advertising, and television ads? Will he answer yes or no to that question?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the specifics but my understanding is that the Québec caucus has decided to run its local associations on the basis of the new funding rules which could put ceilings of $5,000 on individuals and would not allow for corporate, association, or union contributions. That is my understanding.

PORTS

THUNDER BAY—DECLINE IN GRAIN TRAFFIC

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Government's policies with regard to the Port of Thunder Bay are having a devastating impact. Some 700 grain handlers and port workers have been laid off, four of the 13 grain elevators are shut down, and 20 of the 64 grain handling ships in the Great Lakes are lying idle.

What is the Government doing to correct this situation and to try to ensure that this port gets its fair share of grain handling and the employment of those workers in Thunder Bay is preserved?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we certainly are in a very difficult situation. This shows once again just how interdependent we are. When there are tough times on the Prairies there are tough times along the entire St. Lawrence Seaway. If we stick together we can pull through it.

On this specific issue I can tell the Member that the Ministers are meeting at a high level. They are trying to come up with a proposal as a result of representations made by a grain coalition. I am sure the resolution will be satisfactory to the Member and all Members in the House.

• (1440)

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could confirm that the Government has a secret report that indicates that over 1,150 workers will be laid off by this time next year. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could say exactly what action the Government is going to take to equalize opportunity for the Thunder Bay port and whether the Government is going to take other action to ensure that a reasonable share of these jobs is maintained.

For instance, the Prime Minister announced a couple of months ago in the Lac-Saint-Jean by-election that he was going to provide $164 million. Is there going to be specific action taken to help the port of Thunder Bay to ensure it continues to operate and employment is maintained?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are dozens of situations which have arisen over the last four years where a certain sector of our population found itself in deep trouble and the federal Government has been there. It will be there in this situation in the appropriate way.

LAID-OFF WORKERS—GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns the devastating impact on the Port of Thunder Bay and on seafarers and grain handlers throughout the eastern system. The Minister is one of the Members of the Cabinet who have been meeting to discuss remedial action to be taken in the short and long-term. I wonder if she is prepared to advise those people who are already laid off, and those who are about to be laid off, what specific action the Government of Canada is going to take to protect their interests.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, like my hon. colleague, we recognize and sympathize with the local difficulties. The Industrial Adjustment Advisory Service has been working with groups in Thunder Bay. It will continue to work with these groups and we will try to come up with appropriate solutions, but it will take some time to work these things out.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, as every day passes, more and more men and women are being laid off. Their families are wondering what is going to happen to them. I am wondering if someone in the Government can at least tell us when the Government is going to announce what kind of plan of action it has been able to come up with. The Government has being working on it now for nearly six weeks. It has known the problem was going to happen for three years. When will there be some action taken for these people?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the people most familiar with this, and who are working the hardest on it, aside from my own Department, are the Minister of Labour and the Minister for Grains and Oilseeds. They have been actively engaged in seeking solutions to this problem and seeking the help of their colleagues. We will come up with a solution as soon as we can. We have the co-operation of a number of parties as we try to work out what can be done.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Over the weekend the Prime Minister was quoted in an interview with Le Devoir as saying that the ratification of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement could be delayed beyond the January 1 deadline. In fact, he would be unconcerned whether the implementing legislation was to be considered beyond that.

Considering that the Prime Minister is unconcerned, that he is prepared to delay the ratification of the Bill, and considering that a large majority of Canadians want an election before that ratification takes place, I wonder if, on behalf of the Government, the Deputy Prime Minister can give us the assurance today that the Government will call an election before the ratification of the trade agreement so that Canadians will have what is their right, that is, to decide whether they agree with this terrible agreement or not.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are proceeding with our free trade legislation. It has not passed third reading in the House of Commons as yet. When it does so, it will go to the Senate. Then, of course, Senators will be put to the test. Are they the house of sober second thought, or are the Liberal majority merely automatons, to respond to any hint or direction given to them by the Liberal Party?

In other words, is this country governed by the Liberal Party when it is elected? And is it also governed by the Liberal Party when the Liberal Party is not elected but their majority in the Senate governs for them? That is the question we are going to be interested in seeing, and that is the question the people of Canada might have to decide later this year or next year.

Mr. Axworthy: I just say to the Hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker, that he has it wrong. The real question is will the people be given the right to decide. It is a very simple question. That is what it is all about.

UNITED STATES OMNIBUS TRADE BILL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): I would like to ask the Minister this question, if he is now prepared to answer questions on trade. We have now had public statements by the French Government, the Japanese Government, and representatives of the European Economic Community, condemning the United States omnibus Trade Bill as being contrary to the rules of GATT and contrary to the rules of international trade. Yet we have had this Government in full retreat from its March 1 statement on that legislation. The Government has not provided any full statement as to the impacts of the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill on Canadian exports or Canadian business. In fact it is beginning to sound as if once again it is caving in.

Why will the Government not issue a statement and full analysis of the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill, condemning its actions, condemning its impact upon Canada, and asking the President of the United States to veto that Bill because it is contrary to the spirit of international trade rights and agreements?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's Leader seems to have a slogan and I think it is "leave it to the people". I suggest to him that we should leave it to the people when the Leader of the hon. gentleman's Party starts telling the truth. When is he going to tell the truth on his trips around this country? I would be more worried about my Leader than I would be about the omnibus Trade Bill which is passed by the U.S. Congress and which neither this country, nor any country, can do anything about, just the U.S. Congress.

Ask your Leader to start telling the truth so we can have an honest—

Mr. Axworthy: Tell your Leader to stand up for this country for a change. That's what I am asking.

INDUSTRY

SITUATION OF FORMER EMPLOYEES OF MASSEY COMBINES CORPORATION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the plight of former employees of Massey Combines Corporation in Brantford. Exactly four months ago today I asked the Deputy Prime Minister in a letter if the Government would sell its holdings in Varity Corporation and use the money to help the workers who lost their jobs at Massey Combines Corporation of Brantford. Why is the Government still sitting on over $30 million worth of shares that serve no public policy purpose, and continuing to ignore the needs of workers who have lost their jobs and benefits, particularly the retirees?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that this unfunded liability falls within the jurisdiction of the province. I may be wrong, but that is my recollection. I have to advise the Hon. Member that I have not fully apprised myself of the latest developments in this respect, but that is my sense of it. In so far as the Government of Canada is concerned, whatever funding is required by the federal Government has in fact been provided. I stand to be corrected on it, certainly, and I will get back to the Hon. Member, if I might.

VARITY CORPORATION—GOVERNMENT SHARE HOLDINGS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): No, what I am talking about is the fact that the Canadian Government and the Province of Ontario both hold about $54 million in common shares in Varity as part of the restructuring for Massey Combines Corporation a couple of years ago. What I have been asking for the past four months is for this Government and the provincial Government to sell their common stock and put it in a trust fund, the proceeds of which could be used to fund the benefits for the retirees. In addition, there would be money left over annually to assist the workers. There is a precedent for this already established by the federal Government with respect to its help to the workers who were laid off and terminated at Hawker-Siddley in Central Nova.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what covenants, if any, may apply to this particular fund to which the Hon. Member refers, but I will check into it and get back to him.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PRESERVATION OF ROUGE VALLEY

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Nothing is more important to the people, especially those in eastern Metro, than saving the Rouge Valley. Affordable housing is also important but not in the Rouge Valley. Taking into consideration the massive lands that are now owned by the federal Government which were put together for the Pickering Airport, would the Minister consider attempting to negotiate a trade of some of these lands with the Ontario Government for the Rouge Valley lands, thus assuring preservation of the Rouge area for our children and their children?

• (1450)

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish to acknowledge that the Hon. Member has been making continued representations to express his concern about the Rouge Valley. It is a very complex matter. There are very substantial lands held by the federal Government at Pickering Airport. There is a process now under way to see how the Government might dispossess itself of those lands. I will certainly take the Hon. Member's representations and pursue discussions perhaps with the provincial Government and those interested.

NATURAL RESOURCES

FEDERAL WATER POLICY—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. As he probably knows, it is now three years since the Government received a report on federal water policy. That was in September, 1985.

In that time we have heard in the House on many occasions the Government promising legislation, particularly on water exports and diversions. Most recently, as the Deputy Prime Minister will recall, six weeks ago a promise of that kind was made. Is this another empty promise by the Government? Does the Minister have the intention to introduce this piece of legislation? If so, can we know when legislation on federal water policy will be introduced in this House? Canadians are expecting it.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, no, it is not another empty promise, as the Hon. Member has said. It is indeed a very positive initiative that the Government is taking. It should have been taken by previous Governments which failed to do so, particularly when the Hon. Member himself was the Minister of the Environment.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the legislation is in its final drafting stage and will be introduced soon.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, that is very much like the Prime Minister promising action soon on acid rain. The fact is that if the Government has had this report in its hands for three years it is because the previous Government initiated the report itself.

We now want to know whether we can expect to have it this month, next month, or next year. When is this legislation going to be introduced?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I said, it is in its final stages of drafting. I think the Hon. Member will recognize that there can always be drafting glitches. If I might just modify my answer from soon to very soon, perhaps that might make him satisfied.

REVENUE CANADA

REASSESSMENT OF FARM MACHINERY CONTRACTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. About 10 days ago I raised a question in the House concerning Revenue Canada's reassessment of farmers who have traded in used farm equipment and the propensity of Revenue Canada officials to try to rewrite those contracts which had been arrived at competitively.

The farmer goes to where he can get the best deal. After the fact Revenue Canada says: "Oh, no, that was too good a deal. Your trade-in was not worth that much", and then begins to reassess the farmer for more taxes.

Now that the Minister has had a chance to review this practice, has he stopped it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, this is a responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue. He is the more appropriate individual to whom the Hon. Member should put his question.

I have not reviewed the particular question since the Hon. Member put it to me because that has been done by my hon. friend, the Minister of National Revenue.

COMPUTATION OF TAXES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue would the Minister tell the House just why the Government chose to permit the redrafting of the procedures that are to be used in computing these taxes and the liability that the farmer has to pay in tax on these kinds of contracts? Why was it that this procedure was not made clear until last December on contracts that were written in 1984 and 1985?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to bring that particular question to the attention of my colleague. However, I think the Hon. Member is aware of the approach that the Government has taken here whereby the Department of National Revenue has reviewed those cases in which there has been some suggestion of an excessive write-up in the value of the particular asset being traded in. It is those particular transactions which are under review. I am sure that the Hon. Member will understand the reason why.

Oral Questions

HOUSING

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—USE OF FEDERAL LANDS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for housing. While the crisis of affordable housing in Metropolitan Toronto is reaching alarming proportions, the federal Government has refused to offer any leadership or action with a view toward easing the housing burden facing average and middle-class Canadians in Metro.

I would therefore like to ask the Minister this question. Given that the federal Government is an extensive owner of real estate property in Metro—some 25,000 acres in all—why does the Government continue to refuse to utilize its surplus federal properties for the construction of affordable housing units on a first priority basis so that we can attempt collectively to put on the brakes to a city that is speeding toward becoming an exclusive backyard for only the well-to-do?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we know that the McLaughlin report identified certain federal lands that might be made surplus for certain purposes in the Toronto area. We have been examining that report in some detail. I am happy to advise the Hon. Member that I think in the next reasonable period of time we will be able to indicate what position we might take.

I know that there is pressure on housing in Toronto. We are aware of it. Many representations have been made by members of the Conservative caucus to the Government. We are taking them very seriously.

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, not only has the federal Government failed to use its real estate arm to try to ease the pressures but, in addition, it has also failed to introduce any new or innovative programs in the housing area that might help Canadians.

Given that the dream of young Canadian couples to own their own home is quickly evaporating and, indeed, becoming a nightmare, why has the Government not re-established a RHOSP-like program, which it cut several years ago, or a mortgage deductibility program or initiative so that first-time home buyers can have an opportunity of making Toronto their home rather than Toronto only becoming their place of work and forcing them to become commuters from longer and longer distances away? Will the Government at least initiate programs, financially speaking, so that young Canadian couples can stay in Toronto to live rather than forcing them to leave the city of their choice?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am able to advise the Hon. Member that one-fifth of the social housing units in Canada, that is, 100,000, are situated in Toronto. Last year, Toronto received 18 per cent of the housing portfolio. Pursuant to a very substantial consultative process undertaken by the Government three years ago, the decision, on the advice of all concerned, was to dedicate all our funds to those most in need. That is what is being done in co-operation with the provinces so that more people than ever before are receiving assistance in Canada.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

DEFINITION OF ELECTION EXPENSES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Earlier in Question Period he said that if the Government tried to move now to provide a definition of election expenses that it cannot do it because it would take three or months before it could come into force. My question is this. Since it was over six months ago that the all-Party Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, after investigating the affairs of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, said that that loophole with regard to election expenses must be closed, why has the Government not acted?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we have always been prepared to deal with this particular issue. Just because the NDP does not get its way all the time does not mean to say that there are other people in this Chamber who do not have some ideas that are legitimate and workable. The NDP considers itself to be dead right on every issue.

Mr. Angus: Let's see your ideas.

Mr. Mazankowski: We are prepared to put forward—

Mr. Broadbent: You haven't put forward anything.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have. The legislation has been introduced in the House. I have written about three or four letters to Members opposite indicating the changes that we are prepared to make. We have indicated our willingness to deal with the election expenses issue. I do not know what more we can do.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well, and I am asking him to confirm this, that he has not made one proposal, given one definition or one procedure with which to resolve the issue of election expenses. He has not made one proposal. We have. We have asked him any number of times for a definite definition of election expenses. It is not a matter of wanting our way. We want him to make at least one offer.

• (1500)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in an exchange of letters we have even gone so far, because we want this piece of legislation to move forward, to suggest, if we could not agree on a definition before hand, to move the legislation ahead and debate this issue at the committee stage. There has been an exchange of correspondence on a number of occasions where we have outlined the intended areas with which we were prepared to deal, which were in addition to what is contained in the Bill at the present time.

Mr. Broadbent: But not election expenses.

Mr. Mazankowski: In a letter that I sent to the Leaders on May 3, I went through the whole list of changes that we were prepared to advance, including No. 8, "a new definition of election expenses which would be incorporated". I have the letter here and I would be prepared to table it.

Mr. Broadbent: Where is the definition? It is not there. Classic hypocrites. Union Nationale rides again in the Tory Party. Give me the PQ any day; at least they were honest.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

SITUATION IN ONTARIO AREA

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Industry and Science. The Industrial and Regional Development Program expired on June 30. The Government has proposed replacement programs for every part of Canada except for the Province of Ontario south of Parry Sound. This means that communities in eastern Ontario that qualified for relatively high levels of industrial development assistance have no program available to them, and communities such as Windsor that want assistance for economic diversification also have no equivalent program to the IRDP.

Why has the Government not proposed a program to replace the IRDP for the Province of Ontario south of Parry Sound? Does the Government intend to do so? If so, when will it bring forward this type of program?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has already indicated in the House that the new programming under the Department of Science and Technology would be announced as soon as it is approved at all levels of government.

In regard to that area of Ontario, the Member seems to imply that there are no government programs.

Mr. Boudria: No, there are not any.

Mr. Valcourt: That is completely false. There are programs still applicable in that part of Ontario. We have received applications under IRDP up to June 30. They are in the process of being evaluated.

Mr. Boudria: It's expired.

Mr. Valcourt: The Defence Industry Productivity Program is in full swing in that part of Ontario. As a matter of fact, tens of millions of dollars—

Mr. Boudria: Name one program in my riding.

Mr. Valcourt: —are given to companies in that part of Ontario. As for the general programming of the Department of Science and Technology, as soon as they are ready to be announced, they will be announced.

REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of State (Small Business and Tourism) is it not true that the only applications that can be considered under the IRDP are those that were received before June 30, and it is impossible to submit new applications for assistance for establishing new plants, modernization of existing plants, and for studies of diversification that were possible under IRDP before June 30?

If that is true, why has the Government not proposed a replacement program for all of Ontario south of Parry Sound, as the Government has done for every other part of Canada? Why this neglect?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should speak to his colleagues. His colleagues from Quebec are complaining that all of Quebec has no program as of today. Even though the program expired June 30, the answer is the same. As soon as the programming is ready under the new Department of Industry Science and Technology, they will be announced.

Mr. Speaker: That concludes Question Period. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

CLARIFICATION OF REMARKS

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to attempt to correct an improper impression left by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) related to an issue I raised in the House last Wednesday concerning a potential health hazard to all Canadians. Canadians have a right to know that a health hazard exists because of a waste disposal problem at Pearson International Airport.

In her statement to the House on Thursday, August 18, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East jumped to the conclusion that I had accused the City of Hamilton of creating a potential health hazard at Pearson International Airport. An examination of my comments in Hansard will prove otherwise.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East attempted to turn this into a "we versus they" or a "Toronto versus Hamilton" issue, which it is not. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East attempted to turn it into a garbage issue, which it is not. It is a health issue. We are dealing with a potentially serious health hazard which could have ramifications for the people of Canada and animals, particularly cattle, if it is not dealt with expeditiously.

I would like to state for the record that Pearson International Airport is not within the boundaries of the City of Toronto, as the Hon. Member suggested. It is an international airport in the great city of Mississauga and one, if not the major, gateway to Canada.

I have concern when an issue involving public health and safety in Canada is attempted to be brought down to the level of partisan politics. International garbage is coming into Canada from countries where foot and mouth disease is a very serious concern. In 1952, a foot and mouth epidemic was started by a single piece of sausage. Today a sea-gull could pick up a similarly tainted piece of meat and fly to the City of Hamilton.

Unlike the Hon. Member, I have taken the time to research the background and—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member asked for a point of order to clarify some comment that he made at some other time. I do not think that it can trespass into an attack on another Hon. Member, even though it may only be by implication. The Hon. Member has probably corrected the record, and I will hear him very briefly.

Mr. Pennock: May I say that at no time did I suggest that Hamilton takes Toronto's garbage but recommended that, on a short-term basis, Hamilton could play a major role in alleviating a temporary crisis. I would encourage the Hon. Member to research this issue, and after she has done so, she will find that a very serious health condition exists in Canada that we could all work together and help to alleviate. If Hamilton would take the garbage on a temporary basis, I would be first to rise in the House and congratulate it.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy (p. 18609)

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to indicate our strong support for these two amendments. I would like to focus on one of the questions which is stressed in the last part of the motion, the suggestion that the Canadian import tribunal would have the power to monitor subsidies to U.S. industries to see the effect of those subsidies on Canadian competitiveness.

One of the most ridiculous things about the discussions between the United States and Canada has been the suggestion from the United States that Canada massively subsidizes its industry, while the United States is completely guiltless with respect to that type of support. I want to put on the record some realities as opposed to some myths put forward by the United States. I start with an article quoting Robert Reich, a prominent American economist who has looked very carefully at this question of subsidization. He said, with respect to the United States:

> When you add in all the (U.S.) government subsidized loans, loan guarantees, tax rebates and other subsidies, you get total government aid to the private sector that makes Canadians look like pikers by comparison—even as a percentage of GNP (gross national product).

The article continues:

> Reich noted that in the U.S., 35 per cent of all research and development undertaken by the private sector "is, in fact, financed by the federal government. So when the U.S. points a finger at Canadians and says you unfairly subsidize your economy, why not point to that figure?"

Why not especially do that when, over the next five to seven years, this Government is going to have to face the fact of its failure in this negotiation so far? It went into this negotiation committed—and we have heard this from Minister after Minister—to see to it that a common subsidy code would be agreed between the two countries. We got the agreement back and I looked carefully through it to find the common subsidy code which would establish the level playing field between the two countries, and it was not achieved. This Government failed to achieve what it set out to do. It failed to establish that common subsidy code.

What does this mean for Canadians and for Canadian workers? It means, for instance, if we take just the auto industry as an example, that the Mazda plant which has been built in the United States received $184 million U.S. in terms of subsidies. Most of it was in tax abatement, some of it in infrastructure, some of it in training. It means that Chrysler and its Mitsubishi plants in the United States and of which it has an interest, received $175 million in subsidies. It means that the Honda plant in Ohio received $130 million in subsidies, of which $124 million was in terms of infrastructure. In the case of Toyota in Kentucky, there is a further example of this Government's failure, with $269 million received, and this Government did not even achieve a common code of subsidies for our two countries. In the case of the Chrysler plant on Jefferson Avenue in Detroit, right across from my constituency, $366 million in subsidies were received.

Much of this comes from state and local Governments in the United States, so it does not appear when we look at federal grants and subsidies. Much of the rest comes from the Pentagon, in the form of support from defence contracts.

I will give you another quote from the careful analysis of prominent United States economist Robert Reich:

> —the Pentagon and its sister agencies have become the source of America's high-technology industrial policy—a policy that is more costly, complex and intrusive upon the private sector than any ever imagined by our trading partners. The problem is not that they do it and we don't. The real problem for us is that we do it under the aegis of national defense.

Yet, what do we find when we look at the free trade agreement? We find that the United States can do anything in the name of national defence, and we cannot do anything about it. Even with subsidies with respect to national defence that come from the Pentagon, it will not be part of this five years to seven years of negotiation. They certainly should be if this deal ever goes through, but the United States has already won an exemption in this trade deal for that crucial part of its support to industry.

It is not just big plants. I could take us through dozens of subsidies to small Japanese parts producers from different states, from different communities. In virtually every case Japanese supplier satellite plants, which are shaping themselves up around most of the Japanese auto parts producers in the United States, are receiving massive amounts of support from local and state Governments. I predict that, having lost once in trying to get at the subsidy question through this trade deal, we are not going to be able to succeed, if this thing ever did go through, in the next five years to seven years.

It is not just industry. There are subsidies to fishermen in the United States. They get tax deferrals under the fishing vessel capital construction fund. The Fishermen's Protective Act provides funds for fishing vessel and gear damage. The Nicholson Act forbids foreign vessels from landing directly in U.S. ports, thus forcing Canadian boats to land in Canada and ship overland by truck, thereby increasing Canadians costs and making the Canadian fish less fresh than U.S. product. We also failed to get that changed as part of this trade deal. We let shipping and all associated connections slip away from us, as the United States shipping lobbies got themselves into high gear and stopped us from being able to get fairness in that area.

We can deal with agriculture. There are huge subsidies in the United States to agriculture. There are preferential procurements to small business. There are state subsidies right across the board in coal producing states to coal producers, so much so that I wrote earlier this year to the then Minister for International Trade, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), and suggested that if we were ever going to get western coal brought to eastern Canada on a fair basis we would have to attack those massive state subsidies to coal producers.

In 1986 the U.S. lumber industry received $1 billion in government assistance through special capital gains treatment, below cost sales of some federally owned timberlands, reforestation, and forest management assistance. All that shows that the United States has been the country which has put its Government behind every sector of its economy, subsidized it across the board, and that we failed to tackle, that we failed to win, and that is part of the biggest hole in this trade agreement.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will try to reply to both my colleagues, the critics in the opposition Parties. First, my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), in his remarks which I was pleased to hear, spoke about American subsidies. All we hear normally from the Opposition is that we cannot subsidize any more in Canada; we cannot provide regional disparities any more; we cannot have health care any more; and we cannot have unemployment insurance any more.

When speaking about subsidy programs, the Americans said: "You guys up there in Canada, in the wild and woolly North, subsidize quite a bit." With that, Ambassador Reisman brought out a lot of the information my colleague mentioned today and much more. Had my friend from Essex—Windsor had two hours, he could have probably filled them very easily speaking about the subsidization that goes on in the United States. The Americans fast came to reality after the Canadian negotiators said: "Wait a minute. You subsidize down here as well. Let us sit down and talk about this." The Americans said: "We didn't know you had all that information. Let us sit down over a period of time and try to come to a conclusion about what a subsidy is, when a subsidy is a subsidy, when does it become an unfair trade practice, and when is a regional development, just that", and so on.

Both sides have agreed to sit down for a five-year period and, if they have not reached a conclusion at that time, they will sit down for a further two years to discuss the subsidy programs of both countries, including state subsidies and municipal subsidies about which the Hon. Member spoke about and all subsidies within our respective Governments in Canada and the United States. There are certain items, as was the case in the negotiations on the free trade agreement, that will be the policy of this Government not to negotiate away.

There is a wish list from the United States that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and his Leader like to read around the country as if it were gospel. One minute they are knocking the Americans, and the next minute they are quoting the Americans as being gospel and saying "this is what will happen to us". It is a wish list and it takes two to negotiate. I think people understand that.

The Hon. Member spoke about the defence programs in the United States as being a form of regional development and subsidy. That is true. It is in Canada as well. It was treated that way by the Liberal Government. It is treated that way with the frigate programs.

Mr. Langdon: Smaller, much smaller.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member refers to a smaller size. It certainly is. We are dealing with the largest country in the world that is, on many fronts, protecting the rights of shipping in the Persian Gulf and so on in which Canada does not participate. To compare the two defence initiatives is like comparing David and Goliath. It is not the same thing at all. I agree.

I want now to get on to the first amendment about which my friend from Winnipeg—Fort Garry spoke. This is the Baucus-Danforth amendment that everybody speaks about as being such a terrible thing. I will provide evidence today, Mr. Speaker, that the Baucus-Danforth amendment is nothing but puffery. It is smoke and mirrors, I believe. The U.S. Government already had the powers which Baucus-Danforth gave. This was more for the folks back home than it was to do anything effective. I will also read into the record why we believe we have the answer. This is what I said in committee when giving testimony:

> The Baucus-Danforth amendment does not extend new powers to the United States administration; it only spells out a process for gathering of information on subsidies and the possible use of this information in the context of existing United States trade law.

Canada currently has the ability to gather information on subsidy practices, to examine the competitive position of an industry, and to take countervail or other trade actions as appropriate. Let me quote the section to which I am referring in the Trade Act of 1974 in the United States. This is found on page 23:85 of the testimony as found in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-130, dated August 4, 1988. I was speaking at that time to my friend from Essex—Windsor. Here is what section 305 of the U.S. Trade Act says:

> The Trade Representative is required to make certain information available to any person requesting it. If information is not available from the Trade Representative or other federal agencies, the Trade Representative must, within 30 days, collect the information.

That was section 305 from 1974. The power was already there to collect the information and to do with it what one would. The Baucus-Danforth amendment is really puffery. It does not do anything new within the Act. It has different wording, but the Americans have always been allowed to do the same thing.

In Canada the process is as follows, as I stated in committee:

> If a Canadian producer is facing increased competition from subsidized imports and that competition is likely to cause deterioration in its competitive position, it can raise its concerns with the Minister of Finance.

In the United States it is raised with the trade representative. I went on to say:

> He will talk to the Minister of International Trade.

In the United States it is with the Secretary of Commerce. The Minister of Finance, following consultations with the Minister for International Trade, will forward all reasonable requests to the Canadian Import Tribunal for an inquiry. Let me read some more of what I said:

> Any decision by the Minister of Finance in forwarding the request does not prejudice or substitute for any action subsequently taken under the Special Import Measures Act or other trade legislation.

Here is the important part, Mr. Speaker:

> The tribunal's reports will be available to the industry—

Free of charge. It will be collected by the Department and provided to the industry. It continues:

> —and the industry will be able to request annual updates.

We have a comparable situation in Canada to this Baucus-Danforth amendment to the legislation in the United States. For the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry to stand up, again twisting the facts on this situation and saying that we have nothing comparable in Canada for our producers, is totally wrong. When he says that this Baucus-Danforth amendment kind of corners Canada and that we are the only one to be treated this way, it is total nonsense and the Hon. Member knows that. He fails to mention all this evidence that was presented at committee. He might not have been there at the particular time when it was presented. I do not know, but he could have read it afterward.

Mr. Axworthy: It was my amendment that was being debated.

Mr. McDermid: Those are the facts on this instance. These two amendments that have been brought forward by the Liberal Party are totally unnecessary in this legislation because we already have them in our Canadian import tribunal legislation which protects Canadian producers from subsidized imports that are adversely affecting their industry. I will recommend to my colleagues that these two amendments be defeated.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): That is sad news, Mr. Speaker. If the Parliamentary Secretary had understood the point being made on this side of the House, he would have recommended support. He missed the point entirely in his exposé this afternoon. He did not inform the House about how the United States will proceed in its legislation when it comes to a report on Canadian practices.

• (1530)

Within 60 days after the date of the enactment of the Act the U.S. is now advancing, but not later than December 18, 1988, the United States trade representative shall submit to Congress a report identifying, to the maximum extent practicable, major current Canadian practices and the legal authority for such practices that, in the opinion of the United States trade representatives, are not in conformity with the agreement and require a change of Canadian law and regulation, policy, or practice to enable Canada to conform with its international obligations under the agreement. This is sufficient not only to make us worried but to have us see the absolute necessity of taking an action to provide a balance to what the United States legislation is developing. This is why, when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) spoke this morning about counterbalancing the U.S. legislation, he put forward a very convincing case.

We see something developing on two fronts. The United States domestic trade legislation developing in 1988 is stronger than any legislation it has ever had before. Second, U.S. legislation is becoming much stronger in relation to Canadian legislation.

For instance—and I regret very much that the Parliamentary Secretary had to leave—the United States legislation contains paragraph 409(b)(3) which requests annual reports on Canadian practices in any particular sector. It is quite true that this matter was debated in committee on August 4, 1988. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) raised it with the Parliamentary Secretary, and the discussion established the fact that the legislation available to the United States would permit it to offer information and valuable information to American industry.

This point was made on the same day by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry when he put to the committee the fact that the investigation will be carried out in the United States upon the request of the industry affected, at the expense of the administration and not at the expense of the industry. It will no longer be required that injury be proven, as apparently was the case until now, but simply that deterioration in the competitive position of the United States is proven. I do not need to explain the difference between injury and deterioration. We in Canada must prove serious injury caused by imports.

If the United States petition were unsuccessful in this procedure, then the U.S. industry could go through any other trade remedy or law on the same issue because we do not have the same guarantees in Bill C-130. Very clearly, industry in the U.S. can petition the United States trade representative to do its work for it. This means the representative will do all the investigation into Canadian imports and whether they are subsidized. That provides an enormous opportunity for possible harassment because it will be cost-free to U.S. industry. It does not have to spend the money developing the research or putting together the information. It gets the Government to do it for it.

The purpose of Motion No. 39, as proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, is in a way to reply to this piece of U.S. law. It provides that we in Canada would have an arrangement that would be similar and would put our industry in a position that would be parallel or at least comparative to the position the American industry will be in as a result of that legislation.

With respect to any Act, policy, or practice in Canada that is identified in the annual report submitted under this section in U.S. law, the United States representative has the power to include a number of measures, all related to information, it is true, though we know how important information is in trade matters and in competition. For instance, information with respect to the action taken regarding such Act, policy, or practice including but not limited to any action under Section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974, any action under Section 307 of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 and negotiations or consultations, whether on a bilateral or multilateral basis, can be included.

The combined effect of these two amendments would be to give us a chance to compete with the legislation south of the border which will give American competitors a very strong position with respect to knowledge about us. I would be very surprised to see government Members not taking into account the importance of these two amendments. I fail to understand why the Parliamentary Secretary, with his rather superficial analysis of the amendments, would simply slough it off as though it were something of secondary importance. It is of basic importance, in the light of legislative momentum that is being developed south of the border, that we equip ourselves with the legislative teeth that are essential in order to function.

Let me give some examples of what the legislation south of the border will provide the U.S. industry. There will be a working group to write a report within two years on the nature of the subsidies in Canada. Hon. Members will recall that the Parliamentary Secretary informed us that subsidies will be the subject of discussion in the next five years. There is a provision for a working group to write these kinds of reports on Canadian subsidies. In the Canadian legislation, there is nothing on this subject. There are no such provisions.

On the American side, industry can petition the United States trade representatives to carry out investigations on Canadian industry. On the Canadian side, all we have is Cabinet petitioning a tribunal. In other words, industry in Canada will have to undertake a political action rather than administrative action. It will have to initiate political pressures which, as we know, are time consuming and not as speedy as the petitioners may like them to be. Again, there is another advantage on the U.S. side.

Third, the U.S. industry would not have to prove injury, as we have already heard from the intervention of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. I see you are giving me a signal that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for your indulgence.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, since the proposal for this so-called free trade agreement was brought forward, Members of Parliament and the people of Canada have been deluged with a barrage of so-called factual information from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), from cabinet Ministers, from that great negotiator, Mr. Simon Reisman, and from innumerable editorials in newspapers like The Globe and Mail of Toronto. The information was, first of all, about all the advantages that will accrue to the people of this country if we go ahead and complete the deal. Second, they warned us of all the things we Canadians will have to do to get our act together to get rid of practices incompatible with the way we will be required to do things after this agreement is signed. No mention is made by Mr. Reisman or cabinet Ministers or editorial writers about the things we are being lectured on, things we will have to do, ways we will have to change with respect to our economic life, things which are going on and will continue to go on in the U.S.

For example, we have had meetings of provincial premiers to discuss what we need to do to eliminate some of the ways in which provincial Governments, particularly some of the "have not" provinces, give advantage to companies in their own province doing business with the provincial Government or any of its agencies. Yet we find, according to information supplied to us by our own Department of International Trade, that 48 of the 50 states in the U.S. have legislation which ensures that when the State is making a purchase of goods or services, an advantage of up to 5 per cent will be given to any company located in the state making the purchase. If they impose a 5 per cent penalty against every other state in the U.S., can anyone really believe that they will not impose the same kind of penalty on Canadian companies wanting to do business with those states, regardless of this agreement? Of course there is nothing in this agreement to prevent that.

How many times have we been told that many, if not all our regional development programs, will have to be set aside when we finalize this trade agreement? The Hon. Member across the way shakes his head. I remember not so long ago when the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec, through some very substantial financing, helped with the modernization of the GM plant in Quebec. We were told that once we had this free trade agreement we could not do that kind of thing because it would constitute an unfair practice. I am sure that if the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia were to propose to help financially in the opening of a new coal mine in Nova Scotia, the coal mining interests in the U.S. would say that was illegal and improper because it would be contrary to the provisions of the free trade agreement. There is talk now about major investment by the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba in upgrading and modernizing the pulp and paper plant at The Pas in that province.

This country, particularly the "have not" areas, have been helped immeasurably by regional development programs which will be endangered if and when this agreement is passed. The reason I raise this is that we have not heard a word publicly from our negotiators, from the editorial writers, from Mr. Reisman, or anyone else about the fact that the Americans do exactly the same thing. I have here a document entitled "U.S. Incentives for Construction of Foreign-Owned Vehicle and Satellite Parts Plants", prepared in the Department of International Trade. It was prepared by Mr. J. D. Miller, Planning and Analysis Division, Automotive, Marine and Rail Section, dated April 25, 1986. In the few minutes I have I am going to put on the record not my version of the facts but the facts contained in this document prepared by a senior public servant working for the Government of Canada. Let me try to summarize some of what he reports.

U.S. incentives for construction of foreign owned vehicle and satellite parts plants have included the Honda plant in Ohio and the Japanese supplier plants to Honda. For the motorcycle plant, incentives such as state grant number one, $5.2 million; state grant number two, $11.1 million. Union country tax abatement, present value of $1.004 million.

For their car engine plant, Shelby County tax abatement, $850,000. State training grant arrangements not yet made. For the car assembly plant, state grants, $74 million. City waste treatment plant, $7.5 million. Union County tax abatement, present value $4.259 million.

I do not have the time to go on with all the details, but let me turn now to what they have done for the Volkswagen plant in Pennsylvania. Loan from the State of Pennsylvania, present value of $25 million based on an interest rate of 8.5 per cent, a very favourable rate. Road construction, $20 million federal exempt tax bond. Railway construction, $10 million bond, likely federal tax exempt. Employee training grants, $3.8 million.

We can turn to the Mazda plant in Flatrock, Michigan. Tax abatement worth $101 million. To upgrade the roads, sewers, and water lines, $25 million. For the Nissan plant in Tennessee, according to a study done by the University of Tennessee, the estimated value of the subsidy, $70 million. Assistance for building the natural gas line, sewer improvements, water improvements, $20 million.

In the State of Illinois, the Diamond Star motor plant, a joint Mitsubishi-Chrysler project, the state acquired the land for $11 million. Pollution control state subsidy just less than $10 million. They classified it as a foreign trade sub-zone facility which will mean a subsidy of between $29 million and $60 million over the next ten years. Job training paid for by the state, $40 million over the next three to five years; most of that, incidentally, coming from the federal Government of the United States.

Toyota Motor Company in Georgetown, Kentucky: the state paid $30 million to acquire and prepare the site. Again they classed it as a foreign trade sub-zone facility and that is worth $35 million to $70 million over the next ten years.

A very valid question could be asked of the people of Canada or the people of the U.S: Why is it necessary for the people, through their federal, state, provincial, or local Governments, to subsidize automobile companies which are among the most profitable corporations in the world? That is a very legitimate question.

• (1550)

Of course these multinational corporations have no loyalty to any particular country. They are interested in maximizing their profits as best they can and playing one country off against the other. If Canada or the United States will not help the construction of new plants through subsidies, the plants will not be built in Canada or the United States but rather in Taiwan, Brazil, the Philippines, or anywhere where the wages are lower and the taxes paid by the corporations are lower. One cannot blame the companies. Their main purpose is to make as big a profit on their investment as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the debate this afternoon and particularly to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). It seems to me that my colleague has done a lot of hard work in this area. As far as subsidies are concerned, he is really catching on to the real situation. I congratulate him. He has given us figures this afternoon which should ease the fear of all those people who have been saying that Canadian subsidies are going to be attacked by the United States and we are going to be in great difficulty.

A few months ago the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade travelled across Canada to hear the concerns of people about the preliminary agreement. As it turned out, the final agreement was very little different. It was certainly not different in any major way from the preliminary agreement which the committee studied.

As we travelled the country we heard that we would not be able to subsidize any more and that our regional development programs would have to go, that those things would not be allowed under the free trade agreement. We heard that the Americans would challenge us and destroy Canada. It mattered not that the numbers involved did not in any way bear that out.

The committee took a quick look—quick because some members of the committee were not interested in studying it in depth—at the fishing case. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that the American industry challenged us on 52 to 57 federal-provincial and provincial programs which they charged were subsidies. Unemployment insurance was among those. Everyone made a big fuss about that. It did not take long for the Americans to throw that out. They knew that that was not a subsidy in the sense that anyone has used it.

Of the 57 some 5.6 per cent might have been charged to offset that subsidy. Of course, none of the 57 were in any way a subsidy because, as the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor said, the Americans subsidize far more than do we. At last we are getting some perspective in this debate. It is about time.

We heard that our social programs would be challenged because of these subsidies. As we travelled across the country we heard that we would lose our industry because we would not be able to have these subsidies and would not be able to have regional development. That was spreading fear, as much of this debate has been. I am delighted that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor is now beginning to put proper things on the record. He has said that the Americans subsidize far more than do we. We tried in vein for weeks to tell the people the real truth but were not getting very far. At last, the Member has said that it is the Americans who subsidize. Canada does too, of course.

The Member who spoke before me said that we would not be able to subsidize certain things in the Maritimes. I want to remind all Members of this House that the value of the subsidy that would be charged is based on the total life of the subsidy, the total life of the plant, and the total amount of production over that period. When we consider those figures we will find that the subsidy is very small and would probably run at 1 per cent or 2 per cent. The Americans, of course, subsidize far more extensively than that.

We have no concerns about regional development programs because, as we heard the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor say today, the Americans do it in a different way. They make no bones about the fact that they subsidize. Why then are we Canadians so fearful? Why are we backing away from a real study over a five to seven year period of what subsidies really are? I have heard opposition Members say that when these definitions are complete Canada would be the loser. At last today we heard who the loser may well be. It is likely, Sir, to be the United States of America rather than Canada.

Why would the United States want to challenge us any more extensively after the free trade agreement is in operation than they do now? They have the right to challenge us now and they do challenge us now. We have the right to challenge them and we do challenge them now. The free trade agreement does not change the right to challenge. It changes the rules of the challenge and what comes out of it. We have nothing to fear from that.

I would like to conclude by emphasizing that the last two speakers have done us a great service in this House by resolving some of the fear which has been spread in the debate over the last few months. The standing committee heard it and tried to put it down. Perhaps now we can set it to rest.

The Americans subsidize more than do we. Canada is on the good end of this. If we look at the numbers we will see that we have nothing to fear. The free trade agreement makes it better for us because at least the rules of the challenge will be clearer. Sometimes debate in this House indeed clarifies things. Again I congratulate my colleague from Essex—Windsor for at last getting it straight.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) has just concluded his remarks by saying there is nothing to fear on the part of Canada and Canadians in entering into the agreement which was recently signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States. Yet there is an extraordinary amount of fear in the communities and on the streets across this country. One of the reasons for that fear is being tested today.

Motions Nos. 39 and 93, standing in the name of the Liberal trade critic, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), are important amendments. The failure of this Government and this administration to embrace these amendments is a classic example of why Canadians are very leery about the negotiating stance taken with the Americans by our Canadian officials.

If one was to check every public poll which has been taken in the last number of years, particularly public opinion surveys which asked Canadians who received the best end of the deal, the results would unfortunately show overwhelmingly that the United States is the winner and Canadians are the losers. Motions Nos. 39 and 93 recognize whose interests we should be protecting and promoting. Clearly, we in this Parliament should be defending and promoting the interests of our own society first. When it comes to economics, we should advance the cause of our own Canadian industries in any talks we have, whether it be with the Americans or with other members of the international community.

Therefore, when we see in the American enabling legislation with respect to this trade agreement that the United States requires the U.S. trade representative to submit a report to Congress outlining the major practices in Canada which are not in conformity with the agreement, when we see Section 303 which creates the authority on the American side to have this done on an ongoing and permanent basis, and when we see that Section 303 in fact provides for regular and annual reporting and in addition requires the U.S. trade representative to undertake corrective countervailing action, we say that if the Canadian Government wants to proceed with this agreement, we either have to match the American clauses within the FDA or, if we are not going to allow the same protection to our own Canadian interests, we must negotiate with the Americans to remove it. What we are saying is that not to do either would be very irresponsible. We should not sit back while the Americans protect themselves, while the Americans try to provide that window with respect to looking at Canadian exports and harassing Canadian exports because they are a detriment to American industry.

Do Canadians not have the right to expect their Government to include in our enabling legislation the same vehicles by which American industry can trigger their elected representatives? Of course, every Canadian expects his or her own Government to stand up for our national interests and concerns, but this Government does not. This Government is prepared to yield to the Americans. It is prepared to stand idly by while the American elected representatives put in place a mechanism whereby safeguards will be offered to their American industries which we will not have.

The Government is not willing to enter into these like-minded clauses on our own side of the trade agreement. It does not have the fortitude of its convictions to try to sit down with the Americans and make it that equal playing field to which so many government members allude.

What we are talking about is giving Canadian industries the same rights, the same mechanisms, the same opportunities that American industries were granted by the foresight of their negotiators around the negotiating table some months ago. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry moved Motions Nos. 39 and 93, to create those very like-minded clauses in our enabling legislation which would allow Canadian officials to monitor regularly U.S. policies and practices with a view to determining whether they deny benefits that should accrue to Canada and to report these findings to the Parliament of Canada. It would also permit Canadian businesses and workers to petition the trade tribunal in investigating U.S. policies and practices and allow us to get into the countervailing positions the Americans will no doubt, without any hesitation, exercise if they believe their interests are being underminded by some aspect of the trade agreement.

We are saying that the status quo as written in the trade agreement surrounding these particular issues is not good enough. We are asking, as we have asked repeatedly and repeatedly it has been denied for the Government to sit down again with the Americans and negotiate those areas which appear to us to be very lopsided in favour of the Americans. If the Government does not have the fortitude to sit down at the table with the American negotiators, then at the very least let us try to equalize the balance. We are not saying to tilt it in favour of Canadians.

We are not suggesting that we take the Americans to the cleaners or to be anti-American. All we are saying is that we are one of two negotiators, and the other negotiating side has seen fit to offer some safeguard whereby their American interests can be maximized in the face of their opinion about Canadian exports. What is so wrong in asking for reciprocal legislation on our side in order to equalize the balance and to send a message to the Americans that we are not going to take their aggression on any Canadian exports lying down. They have the vehicle, they have the ammunition, but so should we.

I believe that is very important in negotiating any treaty or any agreement with any international partner to send them a clear message that we are prepared to act and that we have the means with which to act. That is to what Motions Nos. 39 and 93 are speaking. I believe they are fundamentally important. I also believe that the principle at stake is that we should be protecting our territory and our country just as well as the Americans have protected theirs. That is a principle about which all Canadians, I believe, will be completely unanimous. In fact, it is an expectation and demand that Canadian citizens place on their Government when negotiating treaties, that Canada gets a fair shake and that we are not put in the position of being subservient to any other country.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we just heard a rather impassioned and eloquent statement about the need for protection. We have been told that these two amendments deal with protection and equity. I have a different explanation.

I think the two amendments are on the table today for what that Party believes to be good political reason. The definition of good political reason seems to me to be simply the utilization of propaganda techniques. Propaganda somehow or other to the Liberal Party and the NDP as it concerns the free trade arrangement seems to be their definition of good.

What is the essence of propaganda? It is to create fear, to create a smear. Disinformation lies at its heart. The reason the two amendments are on the table is to create a climate and an opportunity in the House to create disinformation. To stand up to say that these amendments provide protection which does not already exist is disinformation. It is simply not true. The first amendment is totally unnecessary. In a few minutes I think I can explain why. The second amendment runs against the agreement itself. It has nothing to do with protection.

The second amendment, Motion No. 93, simply violates the agreement. Then we hear: "We do not stand up for the national interest. Therefore we should do exactly what the Americans have done. We do not have the courage to stand in this Chamber. We as a Government do not represent Canadian interests. Therefore, we should do what the Americans do".

This is a different country. This is Canada. This is not the United States of America. We have a different system of governing. We have a different Constitution. We have a different set-up for our courts. We do not elect our judges. We appoint our judges, either for life or until the age of 75. We do that because we separate our judiciary in a different way. This is Canada. The legislation should be Canadian legislation to implement an international agreement, an agreement that we have reached with another country. We should inspect the agreement. If we do not like it, then we should vote against it, but we should not unilaterally violate it.

I lived in the City of Calgary when a federal Government unilaterally changed the policies that affected my city and my province, throwing people out of work. It created suicides and turmoil because a federal Government broke agreements that existed over a long period of time, without negotiation.

What the second amendment invites us to do is to break an agreement, part of a whole, part of a package that was arrived at. How was it arrived at? It was with the use of sectoral advisory groups. The most knowledgeable people in the country advised the Government every step of the way. If the area dealt with manufacturing, we had manufacturing advice. The same was true with respect to agriculture. They advised what would be good for Canada, what would be acceptable, and what would not be good for Canada.

To propose in the House that we violate the agreement is insanity. We worked hard at arranging an agreement that would be good for Canada. It will also be good for the United States of America, otherwise it would not have entered into it. Both countries see it as good, but it is a step into some unknown territory in some ways. We had the wisdom to insist on mechanisms that allow the agreement to evolve and develop, to be changed. We have processes in place such as the Canada-U.S. Trade Tribunal. On a daily basis it looks at how the agreement is evolving. Is it good for Canada? Is it good for the United States of America? Is there some little glitch in it that should be changed?

What we have done is put a process in place—and the Opposition never speaks about this. We have a six-month cancellation clause. If it is bad for Canada, we can get out of it unilaterally on six months notice. Members of the Opposition do not talk about that.

What they do is bring forward an amendment and do not tell Canadians that Chapter 18 in the agreement puts in place a Canada-U.S. Trade Commission to supervise on a daily basis the implementation of the agreement. If there are problems, they will surface and be worked out. That is the over-all sense of what is going on here.

Let us come to the next piece of legislation which already exists in Canada. We have a Special Imports Measures Act. We are not dealing with that today because it already exists. Section 48 of that Act gives inquiry powers to the Canadian Import Tribunal.

The NDP Member who spoke a few moments ago spoke about subsidies in the United States to automobile plants and whatever. This Government is so far ahead of the Opposition. If that is happening today, it can be complained about today. The tribunal can inquire into it today. The same will be true tomorrow. The same will be true the minute the new legislation is put in place. That does not change as a consequence of the legislation before us today. This Government has in place an inquiry mechanism, the Canadian Import Tribunal, to look into complaints about subsidies and unfair practices. It does not need an amendment. It is there.

I bring to the attention of the House the Tariff Board Act which is in place today. It is the law of the land. It has broad inquiry powers related to tariffs and tariff imposition. I refer in particular to Section 4 of that Act.

Before the House is Bill C-110 which has been on our plate for quite some time now. It has been filibustered by the Opposition. What does it do? It provides an even better mechanism than the Canadian Import Tribunal. That is what it does. We are trying to improve and we are out ahead. We started months ahead of time. With a little co-operation from the Opposition, getting away from propaganda, Canadians will understand. They go across the line and on many items in many places prices are lower.

A senior citizen can exist in comfort on a fixed income with a higher standard of living because prices are lower. This agreement and the enabling legislation is about lower prices in Canada, less costs to raise a child, less costs for a single mother, less costs for a senior citizen. That is what we are trying to do for Canadians—trying to reduce their costs.

At the same time reputable economic groups in the country tell us that there will be more jobs. The Government has created a million and a quarter jobs in four years. Here is another chunk with 100,000, 200,000, 300,000. No one knows for sure. But we know for sure that prices will be lower. We know for sure that there will be more jobs.

If we look at the history of all smaller nations which have entered into arrangements with larger nations, arrangements of this kind since the Second World War, we see that in every single case there are lower prices, more jobs, better paying jobs for the smaller nation. It is good for a less populous nation to enter into a trading arrangement with a larger nation.

If Canadians care about Canada, if Canadians are worried about dependence on the United States, then they should look at history. Today approximately 80 per cent of what we export, representing approximately three million jobs in this country, goes to the United States of America. If it sneezes, gets a cold, or rolls over, we feel it.

• (1620)

By entering into this trading arrangement we are doing something that other countries did, for example, the European Economic Community. That is what we are engaged in. What happens is that the trading dependence on the larger nation goes down. We will not end up more dependent on that larger nation; we will end up less dependent. Why, Mr. Speaker? When we can sell what it is we produce into a market that is ten times as large as the one available today, on a guaranteed basis, the cost of production in Canada goes down. The things we make and use go down, and they become more competitive on the international market-place. We can sell to Europe, to South America, and to Japan, because we can make enough of something, whatever it is, to get the cost per unit down and increase the market. In 20 years from today, instead of being dependent upon the U.S. for 80 per cent of our exports, perhaps it will be 70 per cent or 65 per cent. Our ability to trade and to sell in world markets gets better because our costs are lower.

I urge Members of the Chamber to defeat these amendments. They are here on our table for propaganda reasons, not protection reasons. In the case of the first amendment, it is not necessary. In the case of the second amendment, it breaks the agreement. This Chamber should not pass an amendment which breaks the agreement.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join again in the debate on some of the motions. As the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) pointed out a few moments ago, a debate in the House serves to clarify things. It is important that it be a full and open debate. In response to the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary a few moments ago, opening great hopes for Canadians, there should be some close consideration of the industrial history of this country, and recognition of what is happening these days in the pre-trade deal climate with more and more consolidation of control of advertising companies, admittedly not manufacturing companies, but this deal opens the door to trade and services. At a time when that is happening, what can one say about having two great Canadian advertising agencies, ironically enough with political connections, one to the Liberal Party and the other to the Conservative Party, falling into close alignment with American companies.

In the globalization of business, one does not have stronger Canadian activities and enterprises being created in this context, instead one has companies being taken captive by American companies so that they will presumably never do anything outside Canada's borders and will recognize very clearly what is their territory.

The Parliamentary Secretary did not think carefully about the history of far too much of the manufacturing that has been carried on in this country over the years by subsidiaries of American companies. The fact is that these companies have been restricted in their trade policies so that they deal only with a parent or sell in Canada and are deliberately prevented from involving themselves in any other export trade. Surely that is a good part of the problem with Canadian industry. The closer tie to the United States represented by the trade deal will not bring us any gains at all.

The most important considerations this afternoon are a recognition of the Canadian situation in North America and in the world, what Americans do, what Canadians do, what Canadian and American industries do, how Governments deal with industries, and how our Government should have dealt with the situation that faced it over the last three years in arriving at this deal.

The motions before us, particularly Motion No. 39, will provide, if passed, for evidence on the subsidization of American industries to be made available to the Canadian tribunal that deals with these matters. On both sides of the House it has been suggested that there is a great deal of subsidization of economic activity in the United States. Over the past three years that has not always been clear in the activities of the Conservative Government.

There has been a failure to recognize the extent to which American industry is driven by U.S. Government activities, particularly by what President Eisenhower called almost 30 years go "the military industrial complex", spending on research and development which strengthens American industry and which we all recognize spills into various areas of production, and recognition that that is as important as any element in the American industrial setting was surely necessary for any Canadian Government that wanted to deal with American activities. I mention that point very deliberately because if anything drove the Government on it was fear about American protectionism, and the particular actions undertaken by American Governments against Canadian industry.

We all know, some more keenly than others, and we in northern Ontario are keenly aware of American attacks twice in this decade on softwood lumber exports. Those in other parts of northern and southern Ontario are keenly aware of American attacks on Canadian steel exports to the United States. What did we have a Canadian Government do, the previous Minister for International Trade when the U.S. industry focused on softwood lumber? We did not see the Canadian Government fight the battle for Canadian producers all the way through, focusing on the realities of the Canadian industry and making it very clear to Americans that there was absolutely no basis for subsidies to be charged against the Canadian industry and for Canadian industry to be found to be unfairly subsidized against American producers. It would have been well worth saying to Americans that their crazy policy on driving the U.S. dollar up to very high levels against other currencies might make U.S. lumber producers uneconomic in comparison to Canadians. However, the Government did not fight the battle in 1986-87 through the U.S. courts and through the mechanisms that existed. Now, having created other mechanisms that are supposed to do the job, does one believe that is the case? I am not convinced that it will work.

The Government did not fight it through those means. Instead, it turned to the negotiations that led to a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber.

Whatever may be true in some other jurisdictions, we in Ontario have never regarded the timber that goes into the mills which is cut into lumber and exported to the United States as subsidized in the way the Americans charged us. In turning to the negotiations that produced this trade deal, this sell-out of Canadian interests on which the Government is now trying to put the best coloration with the paint that the Parliamentary Secretary was applying a few moments ago, he was not talking about U.S. subsidies at the time. In recognition of the importance of softwood lumber as a Canadian resource industry, the Government could have recognized that one area where there is massive subsidies of American production in the American southwest is in the use of water at very low rates of cost. That water is charged to the growers at something under one fifth of what the water should actually be valued at.

I mention that advisedly, as I have before in the House, because if the American growers of vegetables, and particularly fruit, were charged a fair price for the water that they used, they would be much more careful in using it. If they were more careful in using water, they would be less tempted to turn to the possibility of getting water from Canada, and we in northern Ontario would not feel the same concern we do now about a massive sell-out of water resources through the deal, a sell-out which has been controversial in the House for months past and for which the Government has recognized there may be some danger and has responded to it.

In focusing on these particular instances of a failure on the part of the Government to fight the battle fairly for Canadian industry, by pointing out to the Americans where they subsidize, and by demonstrating in the American courts that we do not subsidize the Government in those particular instances demonstrated its failure to defend Canadian interests properly. So, recognizing those failures, we have every reason for supporting amendments of this sort. I am speaking now about my colleagues in the New Democratic caucus. We have every reason for supporting these amendments, particularly Motion No. 39, which would ensure that the evidence for subsidization is available to the board and provides a fair basis for determining what kinds of adjustment policies shall be followed. It may not be easy for those in an industry or for individuals even in a business association or a union to gather this evidence, but government could dedicate the resources to finding it.

In relating to subsidies for adjustment policies, I will deal with one of the most difficult points of this whole matter. The Government recognizes that there will be massive dislocations resulting from the trade deal. There are various estimates. One of the Government's own estimates has been a dislocation of 800,000 persons from jobs. As far as justifying that, we have been given a net gain of 125,000 jobs over 10 years as the amount of new jobs that we would have over and above all of those lost. Eight hundred thousand jobs involves a lot of people. These are full-time jobs. When these are good jobs that Canadians have lost, what is the Government going to do to ensure that those who lose their jobs have some kind of assistance in obtaining the new jobs that are wanted?

It is very nice, and the easiest thing in the world is to denigrate some of these jobs, to depreciate them, and to say that the people who are doing this work will be able to find new and exciting jobs in that high-tech future that the trade deal involves. Will that sort of thing read very well in the Spadina riding of downtown Toronto five years from now? What about the people who have lost their jobs in the clothing industry and are not able to get in on this high-tech future that has been promised? It is without any provision for adjustments, with no promises made, with a very real danger because of mishandling of the subsidy issue, that any kind of action that the federal Government takes, that conceivably a provincial Government takes, is going to be regarded as one more unfair subsidy. What do Canadian workers have to look forward to in that kind of situation but a disaster that has been brought to them by the Mulroney Government?

So, recognizing the depths of disaster that could strike us, there is good reason to support this amendment, particularly Motion No. 39, get it into the Bill, as long as the Act is going to survive, and someone has noted the six-month termination clause. The Parliamentary Secretary was quite right. That is one that, at worst, we expect to see used. Let us get rid of the thing, if it ever passes, and get ourselves back to focusing on Canadian interests, building up Canadian strengths, as the Parliamentary Secretary has suggested we should do. He thinks that the deal will do it. I do not think that it will, but a Canadian Government certainly should be about those objectives. A New Democratic Government would do so.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have a chance to speak on Motion No. 39, because I think it is the report of the joint Senate and House of Representatives committee which first alerted us to what was being planned for the surveillance and monitoring of Canadian industry. This ultimately resulted with the United States legislation passed as the Baucus-Danforth amendment, which provides for a whole new regime to intimidate and to monitor Canadian industry. This is a very significant development because there has always been that situation where we had to have a coalition of groups and companies and so on to petition against an industry in Canada and to be willing to put up the money to do it. Certainly, in the free trade deal and the Baucus-Danforth amendment that whole situation changes.

In the softwood lumber case, for instance, we had the American Coalition for Fair Lumber Pricing that had to hire lawyers and assemble a group to petition the United States Government and to carry that petition through the Department of International Trade Commission to the Department of Commerce and so on. On the Canadian side, we had to do the same thing. The Canadian Forestry Association spent as high as $5 million or $6 million on reports to fight it through the courts, under this United States amendment, the Baucus-Danforth amendment. Now they will not have to go to all that expense, and it is very expensive. They will simply have an industry petition the United States trade representative to carry out an investigation, so there will be constant harassment regardless of how much injury there is or how much difficulty there is for the Canadian industry concerned. This is really the problem with the free trade deal. It is a bad deal as far as Canadian exporters are concerned.

At the present time with the GATT provisions, if an industry is going to be assaulted with a countervail or a dumping duty, if the case is strong against it, two weeks after the petition has been filed one can go to the GATT and get a ruling, sometimes within four or five months. Many of our petitions have been very successful to the GATT over the last few years. Yet, with the free trade deal, we sort of set that option aside. I know that the Government will argue that it is still possible to go to the GATT. In the instances of the GATT ever hearing a case where there are two consenting partners in a free trade deal hearing a case, it just does not happen, and it will never happen. The difference for the Canadian industry is that when one goes to the GATT, the Government pays the shot.

When one fights it through the United States International Trade Commission, the Department of Commerce, to the International Trade Court, one pays the shot. It is any forest product that operates in my riding or the softwood lumber companies that operate in your riding, Mr. Speaker, that paid the shot in 1985 and 1986 on the softwood lumber case. They were shot down by their own Government about a month before the deal was consummated, by withdrawing the petition and the complaint to GATT. That is the way that the deal is going to be in the future.

If a Canadian industry has a countervail or dumping duty against it, what it has to do is get all other sectors of the industry to put together the money to fight it through the United States trade dispute mechanism and ultimately to the binational commission, which will have no power to rule on the law itself but just to see if the law was applied regularly and whether they were in conformity with the precedents and the practices in the case.

Members of the Reagan administration, which practically privatized the whole system of government in Washington by increasing the number of lawyers from something like 20,000 to 45,000, are just rubbing their hands in glee. They know that never again will a Canadian group be taking something to the GATT, paid for by the Government and Canada and accompanied by its lawyers. They will be going through the whole legal rigmarole in Washington at tremendous expense, for a longer period of time. Besides going through all the steps of the International Trade Commission and the Department of Commerce, there is up to a year beyond that for the binational commission.

What the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is attempting to do is say: "Look, if you guys in the United States are going to set up a deal where any industry can just petition the U.S. Trade Representative's office and start a harassment of the Canadian industry, if that is sauce for the goose then it is sauce for the gander, and we will have the same thing for Canada." That is what the amendment before us today does.

I cannot imagine why the Government would not want to give our industries in Canada the same powers. They would not be used very often because most of the harassment is by the United States. It was an historical event when we got a countervail duty on corn. We need to have the power so that if the softwood lumber industry, the raspberry industry, the steel industry, or the fishing industry started an investigation of Canada, we would have the power to do the same thing and doing it without costing our industry a lot of money. The Parliamentary Secretary argued that the powers are already there.

Let us do a comparison. Under the Baucus-Danforth amendment the U.S. industry can petition the United States Trade Representative for an investigation of the Canadian industry. Under the existing Canadian legislation only Cabinet can petition the tribunal. Governments do not do this often, but clearly industry likes to. If this U.S. legislation is implemented, and if we think we have had a lot of harassment in the past, we will have to face the fact that we will have an infinite amount in the future. What happened with the dumping duty on potash? Canadian potash producers did not appeal to the International Trade Court in Washington or New York. They did not take the matter to the GATT. They just sawed off a deal with the Department of Commerce in Washington or the International Trade Commission. Now potash which normally used to sell for $50 or $60 a tonne goes into the United States, but it goes in only if it is above $92 a tonne, which is a percentage of the dumping duty applied in that decision by the ITC in the United States. We should give our Canadian industry the same powers to ask for an investigation of a U.S. industry; in other words, level the playing field.

As well, the U.S. industry does not have to prove injury, only deterioration in its competitive position. Under Canadian legislation the industry must prove serious injury caused specifically by the imports.

Surely this is a reasonable amendment to be a mirror image or an approximate mirror image of the legislation which has already been agreed to in Washington for their side of the deal.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I believe the amendments in Motions Nos. 39 and 93 deserve the support of this House. These amendments would add new authority, especially Motion No. 39, to the Special Import Measures Act. This Motion is key because it would mirror the type of authority that exists in both the United States free trade agreement implementing legislation and the omnibus trade Bill. If the Conservatives are not willing to accept the amendments that put into place the type of authority envisaged in these amendments, they are admitting, in effect, that they are unwilling to stand up to the United States by employing the same strategy the United States has and will employ if the Government's trade deal with the United States should ever go into effect.

What is the strategy, Mr. Speaker? It seems very clear if we look at Section 101 and Section 303 of the American implementing legislation. Section 101 requires the U.S. Trade Representative to submit a report to Congress outlining major Canadian practices which are not in conformity with the free trade agreement by no later than December 15, 1988. Section 303 of the U.S. legislation creates authority to continue this monitoring and reporting function permanently, so there is a continuous surveillance, subtle and perhaps not so subtle form of harassment of Canadian exports to the United States that would be in effect if the trade legislation implementing the trade deal ever becomes law.

We have to look at Section 409 of the American legislation, the Baucus-Danforth amendment also. It is clear looking at Section 409 of the American trade legislation that the United States has developed a whole new process of trade harassment for Canadian exporters. Under Section 409, American industries may petition the U.S. Trade Representative to investigate any Canadian industry and retaliate against that industry or any other Canadian exports if the U.S. industry deteriorates in its competitive position. I use the words "deteriorate" and "competitive position" because these are exact quotes from the Baucus-Danforth amendment. The Canadian industry is defined by the U.S. administration as being "subsidized".

In other words, any American industry which is not competitive for whatever reason with a Canadian industry, and which is considered subsidized by the American administration according to its definition, can be identified under the Baucus-Danforth amendment, Section 409 of the U.S. implementing legislation and, therefore, apply for retaliation against Canadian industry. By the way, Mr. Speaker, there is no injury test. It is not necessary for the complaining American industry to demonstrate that it has in any way been injured by Canadian competition. Moreover, even if the American industry is unsuccessful in its petition under this amendment, it can still harass Canadian exporters through all the current American trade laws.

Canadian legislation in this Bill C-130 does not mirror in any way the American legislation. This Conservative Government has, as a result, put Canadian industry at a great disadvantage, vis-à-vis the Americans, assuming this trade deal should ever go into effect. Once again the Government is willing to put into effect a trade deal which is tilted toward the United States and against the interests of Canada.

The amendments we are proposing would mirror and match what the Americans are intending to do by their legislation. Motion No. 39 would create two basic types of Canadian legislative authority. The first would have Canadian officials regularly monitor American policies and practices with a view to determining whether they deny benefits that should accrue to Canada and to report regularly these findings to Parliament so that they can receive a public airing. This motion would go further by requiring Canadian officials to initiate countervailing action should they determine that Canadian benefits are in fact being denied by American policies and practices.

Motion No. 39 would also permit Canadian businesses and workers to petition our trade tribunal into investigating American policies and practices which are unfairly causing a deterioration in Canadian business. Should investigation determine that the American policies and practices are in fact creating unfair trading conditions, then our Government would be required to take corrective action.

Surely the Government should be willing to accept an amendment giving Canadian authorities these kinds of powers if it is sincere in saying that it wants a balance in benefits and responsibilities between Canada and the United States under this trade deal. If it is not willing to accept this amendment, it is admitting that it is quite ready to sell out Canadian interests in a desperate desire to get this trade Bill through and the deal connected with it put into law and implemented, even though it means allowing the United States to pass laws giving American businesses and exporters to Canada the authority to compel the American Government to harass Canadian exports for which there is no counterpart on the Canadian side.

Motion No. 39 would also allow Canada to introduce adjustment assistance for those workers and firms dislocated as a result of the free trade agreement. Every time we have said that if the Government is to go ahead with this deal which we think is bad for Canada, it should at least put into place measures which would help workers, firms, and communities that are dislocated as a result of this deal, the Government has backed away and said: "No, these measures are not necessary". Just last week, however, the provincial premiers met for their annual meeting and they unanimously said that Canada had to have an adjustment program for its workers before the free trade deal went into effect.

Even the Conservative premiers who are most committed to this deal said that there had to be an adjustment program. They do not agree with the Government when it claims that existing programs under unemployment insurance and retraining are enough. In this, the premiers are obviously correct. Even those premiers who are strong supporters of the deal see that there is bound to be very substantial dislocation if this deal goes into effect.

The Government has said that the Economic Council has forecast an additional 250,000 jobs. However, this is the net result over 10 years. The Economic Council also confirms that tens of thousands of workers will either lose their jobs completely or will lose their jobs if they do not get training to do jobs which will be very different or totally new. There is also the prospect that because of this deal, there will be no alternative jobs whatsoever in the regions where thousands of workers are now employed.

Premier Getty and Premier Devine have joined with all the other leaders of the provincial Governments in saying unanimously that the Government is wrong when it says that no adjustment program is required to account for the dislocation, the harm, and the damage that will be done to tens of thousands of workers when the Government's trade deal is implemented. We want to make sure that the deal and the legislation implementing it would allow Canada to introduce adjustment assistance for workers or firms dislocated as a result of the Government's agreement with the United States. There has been no satisfactory explanation from the Government as to why, in a heartless and blind way, it is refusing to bring forward measures of adjustment to add to the programs already in place to help workers who, even in the opinion of the most committed supporters of the deal, will be dislocated and harmed if this deal goes into effect.

I also want to say a word about Motion No. 93 which would add to Motion No. 39—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired and there will not be any time for discussion of Motion No. 93.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Motions Nos. 39 and 93. I would like to begin by congratulating my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry for bringing forward these motions. I am sure that any reasonable Member of Parliament would want to have this kind of change made to the Bill.

If the Government refuses to entertain this type of change, I think that would constitute an admission on the part of the Government that it is unwilling to stand up to the United States and is unwilling to avail itself of the same tools the United States has in dealing with issues involving trade disputes.

We should remember that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that the key objective of this trade deal we are talking about, as bad as it is, was to secure access to the United States market. I remind Hon. Members of the March 16, 1987 statement of the Prime Minister in which he said:

> Our highest priority is to have an agreement that ends the threat to Canadian industry from U.S. protectionists who harass and restrict our exports through the misuse of trade remedy laws. Let me leave no doubt that first, a new regime on trade remedy laws must be part of the agreement.

Did you hear that, Mr. Speaker? He said that it must be part of the agreement. On April 2, 1987, the Prime Minister said to The Wall Street Journal:

> (U.S.) trade remedy laws can't apply to Canada. Period.

That seems pretty definite. If one did not know better, one would almost believe that the Prime Minister meant what he said on that day.

Mr. Foster: Oh, no.

Mr. Boudria: Well, maybe not quite that far, but almost. The Prime Minister made that commitment to the people of Canada. He said that the trade remedy laws with the United States could not apply to this country, that we had to be protected from that.

My colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry, the other Liberal Members of Parliament, and I are trying to ensure that Canada has tools available to it that will not go as far as what the Prime Minister has suggested, but will at least go a fair distance toward having an agreement which is even on both sides, or to use the American expression, will create a level playing field.

I know you are far too knowledgeable, Mr. Speaker, to be so naive as to believe that we did get guaranteed access to the U.S. market. Even if you did believe that, let me tell you what Clayton Yeutter, President Reagan's U.S. Trade Representative, said. He said:

> The U.S. countervailing duty and anti-dumping laws, defined as U.S. statutes, legislative history, regulations, administrative practice, and court decisions—will remain intact and unchanged.

That is quite a bit different from what the Prime Minister told us in this House. He went on to say:

> Hence U.S. petitioners will retain all their rights under existing U.S. laws as Canadian industries will keep their rights under Canadian law.

When we do not have the same remedies to start with, it does not matter that we both keep what we had when we started. The fact is that one party is far bigger and stronger than the other and has far stronger trade remedy laws in any event. What we gained is little more than nothing. We say that even with this amendment the deal would be objectionable, but at least it would be somewhat improved. If the Government listened to us in this House and adopted a number of the amendments we are proposing, at least we would have better legislation, and then the deal would not be as offensive to Canadians as it otherwise is.

• (1700)

I know the time given to me is somewhat limited as Private Members' Hour will be starting shortly. I want to say in conclusion that all of my colleagues in this House should be supporting Amendment No. No 39 proposed by my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry. With that, I will end my remarks and continue after Private Members' Hour is finished.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North) moved that Bill C-264, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (instruments and literature for illicit drug use) be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in debate on third reading of this Bill. You know from your experience that Private Members' Bills do not very often pass through this House. As a matter of fact, I believe that of about 300 Private Members' Bills submitted in this Parliament, probably only three have passed third reading.

I do not know what more can be said about this Bill. It is very small in content but extremely large and important in what it does for the youth of our nation. I have been working on it for approximately two and a half years. I have had assistance from the Association of Chiefs of Police, the RCMP, Parents Against Drugs, PRIDE, indeed all the organizations that feel this legislation is necessary.

The present situation is a contradiction in terms. We have outlawed cocaine, and rightly so. Yet in a thousand stores across Canada you can walk in and buy a cocaine free-basing system to make crack. This sends a contradictory message to the youth of this continent. Heroin, hashish and marijuana are all outlawed but you can walk in and buy a pipe to smoke them in any of those stores.

In dealing with the literature part of the Bill some Hon. Members of the Opposition have said that Alice in Wonderland would have to be banned because Alice was on a trip. Sherlock Holmes would have to be banned because he used cocaine or something like that. What we are talking about are magazines like High Times which promote drug use and tell young people life will be better if they use drugs. I have seen on store shelves books which tell you how to cheat your drug dealer, how to grow marijuana in your home, how to make money selling drugs.

People who sell drug paraphernalia and magazines are not all criminals. A lot of them are merchants who sell clothing, posters, souvenirs and many other different things. However, because there is a space in their store and there is a demand for this type of product, they have put in a supply. Assistant Commissioner Heaton of the RCMP, when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare, stated that if we really want to attack illicit drug use in Canada today, we should stop the sale of this drug paraphernalia.

I was in Washington recently speaking to the ombudsman involved with their program and she told me that 40 states have passed drug paraphernalia legislation. Some 400 American youths have come across to Canada on a visit, purchased drug paraphernalia and because of the American's zero tolerance program at the border, those young people have returned home with criminal records.

I have heard the horror stories that every Member of this House has heard. I have had constituents come up to me and say their daughter is 18 years old and she is in jail for a drug offence. I had a father come to me the other day and say he is worried about sending his son to camp, a ten-year-old boy, in case he was given drugs. The Peel Board of Education in my riding, the largest board of education in Ontario, did a survey which showed that 35 per cent of all young people over the age of 14 have tried drugs. I do not think we are going to stop illicit drugs by the passage of this Bill. I do not think we are going to get the kingpins. I do not think we are going to see any significant effect. However, I would urge every Member of this House who is thinking about himself and his family, as well as his country, to stand and vote in favour of passage of this legislation. It can do nothing but good, and the people of Canada want it.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate this afternoon. This is the second time in two weeks that I have had that opportunity. I must say that had things gone my way and the way, presumably, of the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner), this Bill would have been completely dealt with two weeks ago when it was debated in the House. On April 12, 1988, I remember asking for unanimous consent to move immediately to third reading and pass the Bill that day. Unfortunately, the NDP decided not to give that unanimous consent and they also chose to speak against the Bill we have before us. I regret that very much and I hope they have had a change of heart over recent days.

Before going any further I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for proposing this Bill to us in this House. It is not often that we can deal with issues that cross party lines, good constructive issues involving our young people, and do so in a way which will benefit Canadians, all that without the partisan tone we have in this House from time to time. This is one of those happy occasions, and I am pleased to offer my support to the Bill.

I had the opportunity to meet earlier today with Professor Peter Appleton and his associate, Mr. Jacques Perras, of Carleton University. They spoke to me about some of this drug paraphernalia. Like many other Members in this House, I had heard of some of these products but was not too familiar with how so-called head shops operate.

• (1710)

Believe it or not, at a head shop within a 10-minute walk of this building one can actually buy baking soda with a little kit which explains how to free-base cocaine. Within a 10-minute walk of the Parliament Buildings here in Ottawa one can buy books and manuals on how to grow your own marijuana, how to use cocaine, how to use heroin, and how to use LSD.

This is not happening only in some out-of-the-way area, some rough and tough neighborhood of certain cities of the United States such as Detroit, Chicago, or downtown Miami. I am talking about Ottawa.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I met some experts today who came to tell me more about the subject. They confirmed a number of things I knew already, but I must say they also made me realize even more the importance of the Bill tabled by the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner).

A Carleton University study tells us, Mr. Speaker, that 2 to 2.5 million Canadians use drugs on a regular basis, and that of this number, between 300,000 and 500,000 Canadians could be described as drug addicts. These statistics are very disturbing to all of us as parliamentarians and to the entire Canadian population.

[English]

I hope and trust that we will pass this Bill today. I hope that we will do that with the unanimous support of the House, with a change of heart of some Hon. Members who did not feel that they could support this Bill the other day. If we do that collectively, we will have made a small contribution to the war against drugs. We will not win the war this afternoon by passing this Bill. It would be nothing short of naive to believe that. However, we will at least have sent out a message that as citizens and a legislative body we parliamentarians believe that something wrong is happening and that we can assist our young people and other citizens by making a statement and passing this Bill.

As I was saying a while ago, we are not the only Canadians who are concerned. Carleton University is establishing a Council for Drug Awareness. A number of corporate entities will be participating in it. This is a group completely outside government establishing a Council for Drug Awareness. The membership list includes some very distinguished Canadians such as Mr. James J. Leto, President of AT&T Canada; Sharon Paul, Vice-President, Corporate and Public Affairs of Abitibi Price; William Lomax of the Bank of Nova Scotia; David Clark of Bristol-Myers, and General P. D. Manson, Chief of the Defence Staff of the Canadian Armed Forces. Many distinguished Canadians will be participating in this endeavour of Carleton University.

I want to congratulate Professor Appleton, Mr. Perras, and the others who are working so hard to assist our young people. We ask today that Members of this House do likewise.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what we as parliamentarians should do is make this positive gesture. It is not impressive as gestures go, but it will have an impact, and it will help show our fellow Canadians that we want a drug-free society, and I hope that some day we will achieve that goal.

Meanwhile, I would ask all Members of the House to support Bill C-264, as tabled by our colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North.

[English]

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to rise to second the motion for third reading of Bill C-264 and to say a few brief words on this very important piece of legislation.

Bill C-264 is very important because it will close an important loophole in our fight against drug abuse. In addition, it shows that once again, as has been the case in the last four years, private Members can and do contribute with legislation and motions which can be passed.

At the moment it is legal for head shops and drug paraphernalia outlets to sell their wares to the public. In fact, this activity serves to encourage drug usage in our society. We cannot have laws against the usage of illegal drugs while, on the other hand, allowing the sale of utensils which are used in their consumption.

Drug abuse among our citizens is a national tragedy which must be brought under control and eliminated before any more of our citizens are affected. Just recently in Toronto an inquest was held into the death of a young boy who attended a rock concert and, after indulging in drugs, committed suicide. His death was a tragedy.

I believe that we, as parliamentarians, have a responsibility to do whatever is necessary to eradicate the use of illicit drugs. Those responsible for trafficking should be shown no mercy. All assets which have been amassed by profits of illicit drugs or the sale of drug paraphernalia should be frozen by the estate whenever these individuals are charged and they should be seized if they are convicted. The message must be clear to all that those who participate in bringing human misery will be severely punished.

In addition, we must ensure that our law enforcement agencies are given every legal means by which to bring these individuals to justice. The RCMP believes that this legislation will stop the promotion of the usage of illicit drugs in Canada.

We owe an enormous vote of thanks to the Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) for bringing this Bill before the House. I urge all Members of the House to support Bill C-264, a piece of legislation that I hope will contribute to sparing some lives from the usage of illicit drugs.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in connection with this Bill and to congratulate the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner).

We all feel sad when we see people on crutches and we try to help them. Many times those who are on crutches are so as a result of something which happened beyond their control. However I remember speaking to a coal miner in the Drumheller Valley who told me that a particular fellow on crutches deserved every sympathy in the world and every help available to him. He asked that I go to the compensation board on his behalf. He said, however, that he had a son who was using a crutch thinking it would bring him happiness. I asked what he meant. He told me that his son was on drugs and thought that using that crutch would bring happiness to his life.

When I was the Minister of Youth in the Province of Alberta I attended a conference in Vancouver. We were tied up all day in meetings but about nine o'clock at night we were through and I put on a windbreaker and went out to stand beside the fountain which used to be beside the Hotel Vancouver. A young man about 17 or 18 came up to me and asked if he could sell me some grass. I was on the verge of saying "No" and asked instead: "Why are you selling grass?" He told me that he had been kicked out of his home in Saskatchewan, had not had a decent place to sleep for the last several nights and had not had anything to eat that day. He said: "I will give you a special bargain on grass". I replied: "For my information, how much would a special bargain be?" He said: "I will give it to you for $14".

I told him I did not use grass and I do not use drugs, but I would take him over to the hotel and buy him a dinner. I told him he could order anything he liked. He asked me if I was serious and I said yes, I was serious, so he said all right. We went to the hotel across the street from the fountain and he very reasonably ordered a bacon and tomato sandwich. I asked him if that was all he wanted and he said he did not want to take advantage of my kindness. However, I told him to order anything he liked and he ordered a cup of coffee and later on he had a piece of pie. I could see he was hungry because he was taking big bites out of that sandwich, and I felt sorry for the young man. He had a nice appearance.

I asked him how he got into a mess like this. He told me he started to use drugs when he was in high school. He said his father kicked him out of the house and he came to Vancouver. He said he had taken drugs here and had a wonderful trip. I asked him what it was like and he said: "Well, it just seemed like the whole world opened in beauty, a type of sunshine, a beauty beyond description. It was so wonderful it just made me feel like a different person". That was about a month ago, he said. A couple of weeks later, he said, he had another trip and almost died. They took him to the hospital and he did not think he was going to live. He said he was okay now and trying to make a living. I said to him: "I guess you are through with drugs now, are you? He replied: "Oh, no, no". I asked: "You are going to take more drugs now after you had that terrible experience?" He answered: "Yes, because the next one might be a beautiful trip". I said "Young man, the next one might mean your death, but whether it does or not, you are using a crutch". I told him he had no need to use a crutch, that he had a good brain and a good body. I asked him why he wanted to abuse himself with drugs. I do not think I persuaded the young man.

I heard about a young man in Vancouver two or three weeks later. I do not know whether he was the same young man or not. A lad who had been sleeping in doorways and eating wherever he could was found dead. I do not know if it was the same boy or not. I wish the young people of today could just see some of those people who thought they had to have a crutch to be happy. After the period in San Francisco when drugs were very, very prominent, I was down visiting a friend from Edmonton and decided to spend part of the afternoon visiting a hospital which was still full of many people in their twenties and early thirties.

The visit to that hospital, if it did not do anything else, made a person feel that they would never want drugs again. Fine young men were now worn out just like old, old men. Girls who once were beautiful girls were dilapidated with weariness and bad living. I wish the young people of today could see that picture. I wish they could realize that they do not need that kind of crutch to be happy and that by using that kind of crutch they are imitating someone with poor legs who must use a crutch and for whom we should have every pity and to whom we should give all our help.

There is one other thing I would like to say. I wish we could find the kingpins. I wish we could find the people who go out on the streets and persuade young people to use drugs, these people who are making a fortune by destroying young lives. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Mississauga North because he is trying to save human lives. I hope this Bill will pass unanimously. I want to tell the youth of Canada that they do not have to use drugs to be happy and if they use drugs as a crutch, they may well destroy a life that could be beautiful.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, since my colleague, the Hon. Member from Mississauga North, has just received third reading on his Private Member's Bill—and the House congratulates him on the fine work he did—and the hour being 27 minutes past the hour of five o'clock, we are now prepared to carry on with the debate on the report stage of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade Bill.

We have heard complaints from members of the Opposition that they do not have enough time to debate this Bill and here we are offering them an extra 35 minutes to debate this very excellent piece of legislation the Government has brought before the House.

I am seeking unanimous consent that this House do now move to Orders of the Day with respect to Bill C-130.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, as the Parliamentary Secretary has indicated, this is important legislation in terms of changing the course of Canada's future. As the Parliamentary Secretary will recall, the New Democrats felt that approximately two more years of debate would probably be sufficient to cover all the implications this Bill means for Canada's future, so I do not believe 30 minutes will make much of a dent in the two-year request.

Mr. McDermid: You couldn't fill the speaking engagements. You do not have enough Members.

Mr. Riis: I would ask that the hyenas just shut down for a moment and the sloths and armadillos just hold off for a second. Our critic on this issue was anticipating that Private Members' Hour would go until six o'clock and that we would probably have a standing vote. Since things have moved more expeditiously than we had thought, and our critic will be back in his place at six o'clock, I suggest that we recess until six o'clock and then resume debate on Bill C-130.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues, I must decline the Government's offer as well. However, I do accept the offer for an extra 30 minutes. If the Government wants to give us an extra 30 minutes for debate, it can tack it on to the end of the day. Our critic is scheduled to be back for the debate at six o'clock. So if there is an offer to extend time to give us more debating time on the part of the Government, I would gladly accept that offer starting at ten o'clock tonight.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the Opposition requested an agreement from the Government on this debate about which the public should be aware, that is that the Government would not call extension of hours.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): As there is obviously not unanimous consent, we will suspend the sitting until six o'clock.

At 5.31 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 18609).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Continuing debate with the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, just before Private Members' Hour I explained to my colleagues in the House all the good reasons why they should support Motions Nos. 39 and 93 as proposed to us by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that I went briefly over the fact that the Prime Minister had made a promise to us and that he has not lived up to it. That may surprise you, Mr. Speaker, but I suspect that it does not. Your Honour is a very knowledgeable person and non-partisan as Speakers always are. Thus Your Honour would know that the Prime Minister has let Canadians down before.

Notwithstanding that the Prime Minister made a promise here to Canadians that it was his priority to have an agreement that would end the threat of U.S. protectionism. Right after the deal was signed Clayton Yeutter said that that did not happen. He said that this deal in no way stops Americans from retaliating against Canadian policies if they felt in their view that they were protectionist.

We have to remember in the few moments that are left to me that the binational panels which we have under the trade deal will not be insulated from political pressure in the United States, or in Canada for that matter. Of course, we have more to lose because of our relative size. I see that the Minister responsible for the trade deal is across the way. I want to say to him that we are not pleased at all with his performance in defending the trade deal. He was at committee a few weeks ago. I must say he went on in a partisan diatribe accusing opposition Members of everything under the sun. He accused my distinguished and learned colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry of a number of things. He accused him of trying to manipulate people and of saying things which were not true. I cannot repeat the exact words he said because it would not be parliamentary. He accused me of being a Nazi, and so on. Those were the comments that were made right in parliamentary committee by the Minister responsible for the trade deal.

Be that as it may, perhaps the Minister responsible for the trade deal can listen to our remarks in the lobby, or perhaps he could read Hansard or have somebody read it to him. That would even be better. He could have someone read it to him tomorrow and then be apprised of our views regarding Motions Nos. 39 and 93.

We have to remember as well—and I go back to the binational panels—that the anti-dumping and countervail panels will only have judicial review powers. That is to say that the panels will be limited to ensuring that the final anti-dumping and countervailing orders are made fairly. They will have no authority to hear new evidence.

The binational panels will also be based only on domestic law, which leaves Canada open to future protectionist sentiments on the part of the Americans. The United States can change its laws to Canada's disadvantage. One good instance of that is the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill which threatens to do just that.

The Government has said that the previous procedures that we had to solve trade disputes with the United States were ineffective. In other words, according to the Tories, GATT mechanisms were not effective. I disagree with that. We won most cases when we brought issues before the GATT.

What they say is that this new procedure will be really quick—really quick. First, we know that the binational panels cannot be struck before final order is made. That, of course, has an appellant paying the high cost of litigation in the interim. The entire process, including appeals, could take several years to complete, so what we may end up having is a system that is even slower than the one we have now.

Finally, the panel decisions are not even binding. With the exception of the safeguards, decisions will not be binding unless both parties agree beforehand to comply with the decision. In other words, if the United States figures that it will not win in a particular issue, all it has to do is say beforehand that it will not agree with the decision once it is rendered and that seemingly absolves it of everything.

With that I think I have given enough information to convince my colleagues across the way that they should be supporting Motions Nos. 39 and 93. I hope that all the Conservative Members have had time over the last hour or so to have a change of heart and to see things in a new and fresh way, and that they will vote the proper way, the way of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): The question is on Motion No. 39, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): All those opposed will please nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry) moved:

Motion No. 45

That Bill C-130 be amended by deleting Clause 44.

Motion No. 46

That Bill C-130 be amended by deleting Clause 45.

Motion No. 47

That Bill C-130 be amended by deleting Clause 46.

Motion No. 48

That Bill C-130 be amended by deleting Clause 47.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when the Government first proposed negotiating with the United States on the trade agreement, there were two basis objectives set. One was to gain substantial economic benefits, and the other was to gain so-called security of access. We know how minimal the economic benefits are. The Government's own agencies, the Department of Finance, the Economic Council, and others have measured that the maximum, the best possible scenario might be a quarter of 1 per cent growth per year. That is hardly the type of expansion and acceleration in the economy that one would suggest would require this enormous change in Canadian life to achieve.

• (1810)

Mr. McDermid: What change in Canadian life?

Mr. Axworthy: In fact, someone pointed out that we could achieve a much higher level of growth if interest rates were reduced by half of 1 per cent. The so-called economic bonanza time has simply not been borne out or carried through, and therefore the whole rationale and raison d'être of the trade negotiation rests on the argument that somehow it will give more secure access for Canadian exports into the United States, based on the fact that it is our largest market, that businesses are concerned, and that the spectre of U.S. protectionism has been raised.

If that security of access is not there, then obviously the rationale, the raison d'être, and the reason for all this disappears. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it does not exist. I challenge all those Conservative spokespersons who have been running around the country saying "let's deal with all the distortions", to show that they have achieved their objective in getting any further security of access than what they had before.

For example, let me put in front of the House the omnibus Trade Bill that the Government is now acting weak-kneed on and has backed away from. On March 1, the Canadian Ambassador to Washington stated that this was diametrically opposed to the international trade rules, and that it was going to damage Canada-U.S. relations. Those articles mentioned by Ambassador Gotlieb have not been changed. The definition of subsidy still exists. It is still there. The type of reorganization and redefinition of subsidy is still in the U.S. Bill. Section 301 of the U.S. Trade Act on unfair trade practices that Ambassador Gotlieb said was contrary to GATT is still there. Section 201 on import relief is still there. In other words, all the items that Ambassador Gotlieb put forward are still there. Did we get an exemption? No, we did not. Yet a Commons committee composed of a majority of Tory members unanimously reported that unless we received an exemption the Government of Canada should not go ahead with the U.S. Trade Bill.

Mr. McDermid: That's not what the report says at all.

Mr. Axworthy: That is exactly what the report said. I was on the committee.

Mr. McDermid: Quote from it.

Mr. Axworthy: Did we get an exemption? No, Mr. Speaker, we did not get an exemption. The omnibus Trade Bill will still apply to Canada. We will still be subject to those much tougher, much stronger trade rules than we had before. Did we gain that security of access? I do not think so. That omnibus Trade Bill will become part of the U.S. trade law that we will have to apply under the trade agreement. That becomes a catch-22. One of the clear changes in trade policy that we will face is that we will now have to rely upon a review mechanism based upon a bilateral system, as opposed to being able to use the GATT system.

In its own statement GATT clearly states that where there is a bilateral dispute settlement mechanism, it will not interfere, and it has not since 1948. By putting in the bilateral system we forgo the protection that Canadians used to receive under GATT. There we could challenge the U.S. law itself. We could say that this new definition of a subsidy is wrong. We could say that the Americans are contradicting their international obligations. However, under the system that the Government is introducing, we cannot challenge those assertions. We cannot even begin to say that the U.S. Congress has gone too far, that it is over-exceeding its rights under GATT, under the international trade rules. All we can adjudicate is whether or not American law was fairly applied. That is all. We are stuck. We are giving up a recourse that Canadians have successfully used over the years to challenge U.S. actions, as well as those of others. Now we are putting ourselves in the position where we cannot challenge the law itself. All we can challenge is whether it is fairly applied.

Let us go to the next question. Is a bilateral review mechanism a better way of doing that? First, it will take longer. It will cost more money. Under existing systems, one could ask for a GATT panel immediately after a preliminary decision in 20 days. There could be a ruling in five or six months, and before one knows it there is the ability to respond or retaliate that we had before. Under this proposed scheme for dispute settlement mechanism we must wait for a final decision. We must wait until it is gone from the International Trade Commission to the Department of Commerce and back to the International Trade Commission for a final ruling. Then there are 365 days to wait for a final review. All the time our Canadian businesses are spending money for high priced Washington lawyers and lobbyists. They have stated that the lumber industry costs $2.5 million.

Because of the other Acts written into the U.S. implementing legislation, U.S. industries will have their bills paid for them by the Government. Their work will be done for them by the U.S. trade office. We have put ourselves in an incredibly strong cul de sac that we cannot escape from. We have agreed to stronger U.S. trade law. We have a dispute settlement mechanism which is weaker and less effective than what we have been able to utilize in the past. And, to what end?

We say that we think we may get an impartial reading, an impartial adjudication. It is not on the trade law itself. It is on whether it has been fairly applied. According to Clayton Yeutter of the U.S. trade offices, it is not only a law but it is the practices, the precedents, the rules and regulations, and the procedures. All those are legitimate grounds for making a decision.

Under this dispute settlement mechanism all we are doing is replacing one review system with another. In addition to going to GATT to challenge U.S. law, we can also take it to the International Court of Trade in New York. Government spokesmen say that that is all influenced by political buys and interference. That is not what Gordon Ritchie has stated. That is not what was stated by the Canadian Ambassador in the trade negotiations. In front of the committee he stated quite clearly that the International Court of Trade is impartial and does give a fair rendering of decisions based upon the law.

What did we achieve? We gave up recourse to other forms of solution for Canadian industry, and what did we get? We replaced one review mechanism with another review mechanism. We replaced the International Court of Trade with the so-called binational panel which will be composed of an equal number of Canadians and Americans. I am not so sure that that will be any more impartial.

If one looks at the history of the IJC, one can quickly find out that it is subject to political influence and that from time to time it is subject to the influence of Governments, as we saw on the Columbia River Treaty settlement decision. I would submit to the House that not only are we replacing one review system with another, but in fact we are getting a review system which itself is more vulnerable and susceptible to governmental influence. If it comes to the crunch, one knows which government has the biggest muscle and will push the hardest.

The reason that we moved these amendments was to say that there is no security of access. Any time the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), or members of the Cabinet rise and say that, they are not telling the truth. They are fooling the Canadian people because it is simply not the case. They have not achieved what the Prime Minister said was the reason for negotiating in the first place. He stated that it was for a new regime of trade remedy laws. There may be a new regime, but the new regime is tougher on us. It cuts off recourse to the international trade tribunals. It would be more costly for Canadian business, and we will end up with a decision that may be more biased politically than what we have at the present time.

Is that what we call a successful negotiation? Is that why we are going to give up control of our energy resources? Is that why we are going to give up control of our investment? Is that why we are going to give up control of our service industry, to get this? This is the crown jewel in the trade agreement, the dispute settlement mechanism for which we have surrendered all these other rights of decision by Canadians, and we have this? Surely there must be some shame and embarrassment on the other side if they say that this is what they are going to present as being the ultimate great accomplishment of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement when in fact it is a machine that is weak, reduced, and, in fact I submit to you, far less effective and far less capable of protecting Canadian trade interests than what we have up to now. I am not saying that we cannot approve upon the system. I think that we can improve upon the existing international system. We have already presented a number of proposals on how we would want to see things negotiated in the GATT. I see again that you are on your feet, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): I regret to advise that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Is the House ready for the question? The Hon Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, just before we take a vote on this, I cannot let the Hon. Member get away with the nonsense that he just talked about. It is Mr. Hon. Huff and Puff. He gets up and tells us that we no longer have the GATT available to us. What nonsense! The free trade agreement was negotiated under the GATT rules, for heaven's sake, and the GATT rules still pertain.

Mr. Axworthy: Read 1801. You better read the agreement yourself.

Mr. McDermid: That is what the agreement is all about. For the Hon. Member to stand up here and say that GATT is not available, what absolute nonsense. He asked that question at committee and he got an answer at committee.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, and it was the wrong answer.

Mr. McDermid: GATT is available.

Mr. Axworthy: No, it isn't.

Mr. McDermid: That was the evidence that was given by the experts. The Hon. Member tells us about the dispute settlement mechanism. By the way, these four amendments that he brings abolish the dispute settlement mechanism. That is what he wants to do. He wants to abolish one of the best achievements that Canada got in this agreement.

That is what he wants to do. Evidence was presented at committee by those people who have been harassed, who have been taken to commerce, who have appealed through their court systems in the United States. I read some of their evidence into the record earlier today. What did Mr. Pinard from Domtar, who is also with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, say about it? He said: Thank goodness, tariff reduction is important. That probably would have come later on under the GATT negotiations, but the crowning glory of this agreement is the binational dispute settlement". That is what he said. That was his evidence. That Hon. Member has the nerve to stand up, he is such an expert in manufacturing; he has been out there in the workforce and knows how it works and everything. These are the people who are out there. These are the people who are putting their money on the line.

These are the people who are creating the jobs. These are the people who have been harassed by unfair protectionist attitudes in the United States. These are the people who are supporting this agreement and supporting the binational dispute settlement mechanism. The Hon. Member stands up and says with four amendments "wipe it out". What nonsense! Then he stands up and he says—and he was very careful not to quote—that the report of the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade said that the committee is very concerned that the passage of the omnibus trade Bill, prior to the date in which the proposed agreement would become effective, would impair benefits to Canada under the free trade agreement. Well, it does not impair the benefits to Canada under the free trade agreement, not at all.

Mr. Axworthy: Your nose is growing, John. Your nose is growing.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member stands up and says that there are parts of the omnibus Trade Bill that go against GATT. That is absolutely right. We said that right from the beginning. Our trading partners have also said that right from the beginning. Do you know what? We can go and complain to GATT about that. We have not given that up in the free trade agreement, not one iota. We are still under GATT. We still play by the rules of GATT. This trade negotiation was under the rules of GATT. It says that the rules of GATT apply. The Hon. Member knows that. For him to stand up in this House and say it that does not is imitating his Leader who is going around the country misrepresenting the agreement. In his local paper in Manitoba—it is not the only paper that we are noticing by the editorials that are coming in these days on the Right Hon. Gentleman's representations around this country—

Mr. Axworthy: The people agree with them.

Mr. McDermid: —they are saying "Tell the truth". That is what they are saying to the Leader of the Opposition: "Tell the truth". I am not sure if the Right Hon. Gentleman is coaching my hon. friend from Winnipeg—Fort Garry or vice versa. I have a sneaking suspicion that it is vice versa. I have a sneaking suspicion that it is Mr. Fudge-It over there, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), giving advice to the Right Hon. Gentleman, who is going around this country quoting the Americans and saying, "This is what is going to happen to Canada. We are going to disappear. We are going to become the fifty-first state". What nonsense. There is not a person in here, there is not a person in this country, that wants us to become American, and we are not going to become American.

Mr. Axworthy: There he is, right there. Since 1949 he wanted to become American. The Minister of trade.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): I regret to advise that the time allotted to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has expired. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is remarkable to see the level of rhetoric start to escalate just as the Minister appears in the House. I am not sure if this is a special performance put on for him or if his very presence here somehow heightens the sense of outrage that those of us on the opposition side see when we look at this agreement. These four amendments, as the Parliamentary Secretary has made clear, pass a judgment, and it is a harsh judgment with respect to this so-called great achievement which the trade deal is supposed to have brought us.

I always think, when I think of this deal, of the days when my younger child used to be 15 or 16 years old and I would send him to the store for milk. I would give him some change. If I did not have change, I would give him $10 to go and you would tell him to be sure to bring change back. He would go to the store, he would forget the milk, he would come back with chocolate bars, and he would have lost $5 on the way. Because of the fact that he was a kid that I loved a lot, I forgave him, but one does not forgive a Government that goes off to Washington and says: "We want to get, above all, exemption from countervail and anti-dumping systems that the United States is running".

An Hon. Member: Are you prepared to exempt the Americans?

Mr. Langdon: I do not want this deal.

Mr. Crosbie: What is your alternative, you turkey?

• (1830)

Mr. Langdon: The Government said what it wanted was an exemption from countervail and anti-dumping. So clear was its message to the manufacturing community across this country that Mr. Phillips from Ipsco testified, after the original details of the arrangement were announced, that we were not exempted from the anti-dumping provisions—

Mr. McDermid: What does he say now, Steven?

Mr. Langdon: And the basis of that, he said this is not a deal which has achieved its objectives.

Mr. McDermid: What does he say now?

Mr. Langdon: That is the basic truth, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McDermid: He supports it.

Mr. Langdon: This is a deal which has not achieved its objectives. It has not achieved its fundamental objectives. If it had achieved, say, 90 per cent of a set of objectives which it had laid out at the start of negotiation, we might possibly be able to say: "Well, you have managed to blow a few but you have done a reasonably good job".

With its typical hyperbole and exaggeration, the Government set itself two objectives above all at the heart of the negotiations. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said in this House, we have got to get an exemption from countervail and anti-dumping, and we have to get a subsidy code which both countries agree to. If we get those two objectives, we will have succeeded in getting fair access for Canadian companies to the United States. The fact is—and it is sad to have to say that the Government has so completely failed to obtain both of those objectives—that it is now in a position where instead of using logic and argument it has to use blatant advertising to try to propagandize the benefits of this deal.

As the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said in 1980, the purpose of advertising is to obscure the truth. That is the purpose of the advertising which this Government has done in newspapers and on the radio over the last few weeks. What we find as a consequence is that we have in front of us a deal which does not even come close to achieving the two basic goals which the Government set out to get. Not only that, the Government gives away a tremendous amount in the process of failing to achieve its goals, but we will talk about that later on. At this stage I think these amendments, which would strike out the mythology that we have actually managed to achieve anything with this dispute settlement mechanism so far as countervail and anti-dumping is concerned, put truth into this Bill instead of pretending that these clauses actually achieve anything for us and are something that we have to prefer.

When we look at the details of Chapter 19, it is clear that there is no exemption from countervail and anti-dumping. That is clear to the hog farmers in my constituency who are still paying countervail duty. It is clear to machinists in my constituency who have had to fight fights in Washington with no government help against countervail.

Mr. McDermid: That is not true.

Mr. Langdon: That is absolutely true. The mouldmakers of Canada have had to do precisely that. They have, as a consequence of this deal, absolutely no better position than they had before this deal was dreamed up as the public relations gesture it is.

I think this House should pass judgment on this dispute settlement mechanism. It is true that it may cut down somewhat the time span through which appeals have to be dealt, but it is also possible because of the extra challenge provisions within it that it will take longer. It is also possible that the United States courts will find that it is unconstitutional to prevent an American corporation from going to the courts in the United States, saying that it wants to appeal anything which this dispute settlement mechanism does.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): I regret that the time for the Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Edmonton South.

Mr. Langdon: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It has been usual for a final sentence to be permitted for an Hon. Member to wind up his remarks. I think it might make sense to follow that precedent which throughout this debate has been applied both to the Government and to the Opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): That is hardly a point of order. I did indicate to the Hon. Member that he had one minute left. The Hon. Member for Edmonton South.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I have some sympathy for the Chair because I too had thought that the Hon. Member had consummated his peroration.

I appreciate the opportunity to address some of the issues that have been raised during this debate and particularly to deal with the difficulties presented by those who embrace fantasy, fear, and fabrication when participating in the free trade debate. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) referred a few moments ago to mythology. Listening to him in this debate reminds me of the 15th Century cartographers who, when they were at some doubt as to what was contained in terra incognita, simply wrote in "Here be dragons". I think that, Sir, is what is happening tonight. This canard—I understand that canard à l'orange is available not far from here—here tonight of the unconstitutionality of submitting the trade agreement to the tribunal is something new. I honour the Member for his creativity, but the record shows that we have in the arbitration decision process a great many good resources at our disposal now. The legislation is there in both countries on anti-dumping and on countervail and is approximately identical. It is not precisely mirror legislation, but it is approximately the same.

What we have objected to as a nation over the last few years is that frequently the process is perversely delayed in the U.S., and the process frustrates implementation. Under the free trade agreement and the attendant legislation, that of course will be remedied in the sense that appeals will be dealt with expeditiously by a panel composed of an appointee from our country, an appointee from the U.S., and a neutral chair.

Mr. Langdon: Two and two.

Mr. Edwards: Yes, the Hon. Member is correct. I appreciate the correction. Two and two and one. I was thinking of equilibrium. He is an economist and he does point out that two and two counterbalances as readily as one and one. I thank him for the help.

I would like to point out to Hon. Members that of the last ten anti-dumping cases we won eight. I do not believe that we should get rid of that kind of law. I believe it appropriate that we have a proper avenue of appeal to which we can go.

Members opposite are demanding that there be an election before this legislation is passed through both Houses of Parliament and proclaimed as the law of the land. The only assurance I can give, since these matters are out of my hands, is that there will be indeed some day an election with free trade among the issues. I welcome that, because the soundings I have done in my own area show approximately 69 per cent approval of this free trade deal. I know that support is very high in many other parts of the country, particularly in Québec where I have spoken a few times lately and consulted with the population, rural and urban. Indeed, from Doyles, Newfoundland, to Old Crow, Yukon, I find that people in this country are looking forward with great anticipation to implementation of this agreement.

They also crave information. They do not crave fear, fantasy, and fabrication. I believe we have shipped out of my own constituency office, in response to constituent inquiries and demands, something in excess of half a tonne of information on free trade.

Mr. Langdon: Propaganda.

Mr. Edwards: Propaganda? If the text of the free trade agreement is propaganda, then it is propaganda, Sir. What is propaganda? It is that which is disseminated, that which is propagated. Those of us who do our duty, Sir, do disseminate information as well and as efficiently as we can.

I have had many demands for information from ridings held by opposition Members in other parts of the country because people say they are getting only opinion rather than solid information from those opposition Members. They appeal to me and other colleagues of mine on this side for solid information: The text of the agreement; the tariff schedules; the text of the Bill. We supply those, Sir. When people ask my opinion, I give it. Otherwise, we are honest seekers after truth.

The Hon. Member who is doing the interjecting on the other side served very faithfully as a member of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-130. I listened with great care to his interventions and questioning of witnesses. I must say that he shows a good knowledge of the text of the agreement and the Bill, but I find Members opposite tend to let their ideology conflict with the practical facts of the case.

As I said a few moments ago, there will be a vote and it is my belief that the people of Canada, when they vote on this issue and others, will try to decide before they go behind the curtain which side served them with the facts, which side strove to do the better thing for Canada. I think for those of us looking for better economic opportunity for our country, and this is nothing more or less than that opportunity, this Bill and the agreement it puts into force is neither a panacea, nor a disaster. It is an opportunity which, if we take proper advantage of it, will benefit our country in some measure.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) referred to a 1 per cent decline in the interest rate being legislated. I believe that is the policy of the NDP. It was interesting to see the Hon. Member so readily embrace the policies of the NDP, but it did not surprise me in the least. I wonder if members of the Liberal Party or the NDP have consulted any reputable individuals in the field of economics, other than themselves, about to the effect upon the fiscal system of that kind of arbitrary intervention. Have they considered the confusion and confused signals that would send to the international community? Have they considered the flight of investment capital that it would cause? I think not. They are not concerned about that because they are the gang that want to close down investment. They are the gang that want to have a little Canada, an isolated Canada, an Albania of the Americas. That is what they advocate.

We have been advised that the omnibus Bill has changed the entire atmosphere under which this agreement will be implemented. There have been a number of statements about the danger of the omnibus Bill to our trading relationship to the U.S. There are two Bills involved. The first was the original Bill and then the so-called son of omnibus, which is now before the President for his consideration. I would urge Hon. Members opposite to go back and look at that Bill in the context of the testimony given to the Legislative Committee on Bill C-130, particularly that of Ambassador Ritchie having to do with implementation of the omnibus Bill vis-à-vis the current agreement before us and the Bill to implement it. If they are truly seekers after truth they will see the danger is minimized and put to rest.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): I wish I could quickly put my fingers on Ambassador Ritchie's testimony before the committee in order to rebut what the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) just said, Mr. Speaker.

There is an interesting theology emerging here tonight on the Conservative side of the House. I am sure the Hon. Member does not want to offend Canadians of Albanian origin with his speech, but I found it very revealing that he would inform the House that we would be having an election one day. That is a recognition of the democratic system which is at our base, which is very revealing. However, more revealing than that was the fact that all of a sudden the debate on why this deal is necessary seemed to be shifting from what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been saying over the past four years to the notion that the U.S. process was too slow and frustrating and, therefore, Canada saw the necessity to pursue this agreement in Washington in order to accelerate it or make it less cumbersome and less difficult.

If that is going to be the official position of the Conservative Party during the next election campaign, it will be quite a revelation of the difficulties the Conservatives have had in defending the deal because it was never launched as an initiative to improve on the process.

We heard from the government benches about substance. The Prime Minister of Canada launched this initiative with Washington on substance. It is interesting to notice that in this debate the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) very carefully avoid the question of whether or not Canada obtained an exemption from the U.S. trade remedy laws as a result of this agreement.

The fact is that after all this debate, all the negotiations, and all the claims by the government benches, it is clear that the main objective which the Government set out to achieve, mainly to secure access to the U.S. market, was not achieved. Despite the claims, promises, and attempts that were made, U.S. trade laws still apply to Canada. That is why we are here struggling with these two amendments.

As recently as 18 months ago, in the spring of 1987, in an interview with The Wall Street Journal, the Prime Minister of Canada said that "U.S. trade remedy laws can't apply to Canada, period." The Prime Minister made quite a commitment when speaking in Washington on behalf of Canadians. However, this objective was not achieved. The laws of the United States do apply to Canada. Through our amendment we are saying that there is a better system of dispute settlement, that is, the GATT system which will not be applied as a result of a very elaborate mechanism.

Mr. McDermid: It's in place. Obviously you haven't read the agreement.

Mr. Caccia: The Parliamentary Secretary doesn't seem to know that there is a dispute settlement mechanism in the agreement which consists of a variety of steps. Before the Parliamentary Secretary interjects he should know what he is talking about. There is going to be a binational panel to monitor changes, a binational panel to replace judicial review, and a Canada-U.S. trade commission to supervise. That is not GATT material; that is the stuff which comes out of this particular agreement.

Mr. McDermid: It was negotiated under GATT.

Mr. Caccia: You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that when the Government suddenly came up with the idea that we should have a trade deal with the Americans, the most compelling reason the Prime Minister had for entering the trade negotiations was that we needed to obtain secure access to the U.S. market. That was the main reason. We hear nothing from the government benches as to what extent we secured free access to the United States market for Canadian exports. The initial position of the Prime Minister was that any agreement which did not contain a binding dispute settlement mechanism and would exempt Canada from harassment from U.S. trade remedy laws or legislation would not be worth the paper it was written on.

Mr. McDermid: No, no.

Mr. Caccia: Not even the Parliamentary Secretary can deny that. That was the basic motive for entering these negotiations, and we did not achieve it. We are not hearing a peep on this, as other speakers have already indicated, because we are at the mercy of a dispute settlement mechanism in which the laws of the U.S. will apply. The Canadian legislation will attempt to apply too, of course, but you know which of the two will prevail at the end of the day.

Mr. McDermid: What nonsense.

Mr. Caccia: It may annoy the Parliamentary Secretary to hear the truth and that is why he is getting upset. No one likes to hear of having failed a mission.

Mr. McDermid: I only get upset when you don't tell the truth.

Mr. Caccia: The mission was not accomplished and that is why the Tory benches do not like to hear about this.

United States countervailing duty and United States anti-dumping laws, defined as United States statutes, legislative history or regulations, or administrative practices and court decisions, will remain intact and unchanged. I challenge the Parliamentary Secretary to dispute that point.

Mr. McDermid: No, you're right.

Mr. Caccia: Exactly, that is the whole point. The Government set out to obtain a situation in which Canada would get an exemption from U.S. trade remedy laws, and it did not get it. Having not obtained it, the Government is now asking us to approve a piece of legislation which does not contain the assurance that Canada will have secure access to the United States market and does not contain an exemption for Canada from United States trade remedy law. That is quite clear. That is a fact and, if the Minister for International Trade does not agree with what I said, I urge him to get up and repudiate these two points which politically, economically, and in the interests of Canadians are extremely important.

These are the points which we will be debating during the election campaign, not the phoney point advanced by the Hon. Member for Edmonton South that we were unhappy about and frustrated by a slow U.S. process. That is a phoney issue.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to join in this debate. This is my first opportunity to speak on the trade Bill which is before the House. This evening we are dealing with those amendments pertaining the dispute settlement mechanism.

Most of my constituents feel quite uncomfortable about the process which the Government has initiated. I believe that is true for most Canadians. They are still very confused about this issue. They know that it is important. They know that the nature of what Canada is and what Canada will become is at stake in these debates. Yet they are confused because they still do not know what it all means. To be fair, most Members of Parliament here today are really not quite certain what it all means. There are many parts that will not be defined until future negotiations. Other parts will not be defined until decisions are made and the shape and form of future U.S.-Canada relations have become effected. What my constituents are concerned about, and what they feel extremely uncomfortable with, is how the Government has handled the debate.

• (1900)

To begin with, we know, and the Canadian public knows, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) were some of the leading spokespersons for the Government who, in the past, have denounced a free trade agreement with the United States. The Prime Minister on June 2, 1983, stated: "It affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it, not during the leadership campaign or at any other time". So the Prime Minister was concerned in 1983 that a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States would affect Canadian sovereignty. Those are the concerns we in the Opposition have. When we express those concerns, we are denounced as being Fascists, small minded and misguided. Yet those are the very concerns the Prime Minister expressed in 1983.

As we enter into this historic debate, we find the Government's initiative in this area has surely not been one of enlightened debate. Rather, one of the first things this Government did after signing the agreement was to appoint the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) to stickhandle it through the House of Commons and to the nation, and all we get from the Minister is a thick blanket of fog without any real intelligence or any statements which would lend some understanding to this debate.

It is not a funny matter. It is very important to the Canadian people and to our future. What kind of country are we and what kind of country will we become? That is really what is at stake here. To have a Government that deals with this crucial issue the way in which this Government does is to do a disservice to the Canadian people. I, for one, am not against increasing trade with the United States or with many of our other neighbours. In fact, I welcome all initiatives which would allow more global trade to occur. However, what is involved in this agreement is much more than trade.

What is involved in this agreement, which bothers me the most, and I know it bothers most of my colleagues, are those items that really do not deal directly with trade at all. The concern I have is that what this agreement between our Prime Minister and President Reagan does is cast into stone a certain economic philosophy that is in vogue with this Government and with the Reagan Government of the United States. It attempts to shut the door on another vision of Canada, a vision that sees that the public sector and the co-operative sector have roles to play as well as the private sector.

What this agreement does is cast into stone the market force economy, the notions of Margaret Thatcher, Ronald Reagan and the neo-Conservatives across the way. They are attempting to fool the Canadian people with the performances of the Minister in handling the debate so far.

As other Members, especially those of the Opposition, have pointed out, the justification for this agreement in the end was to ensure that Canadian products would have special treatment in the United States, that we would have some protection against the countervail and anti-dumping actions that were becoming prevalent in the United States. There was a fear that the Americans were losing their position as a global trader, that there would be a stronger incentive toward protectionist policies and that Canada needed to negotiate a special agreement with them in order to protect our exporters.

I remember the Premier of Saskatchewan stating on numerous occasions that if Canada did not achieve an exemption from the countervail and the anti-dumping provisions, there was no sense in signing an agreement with the United States. All those who were in favour of this agreement went up and down the breadth of this country stating we needed this special protection. That was the justification for signing the agreement. Yet we could not achieve that special protection. We did not achieve the protection from the countervail and the anti-dumping. There are hog producers in my constituency who will still have to deal with the countervail duties of the United States in attempting to get their products into the United States, and this agreement will not give them that protection. It will not allow the hog producers of my district unlimited and free access into the United States.

Mr. McDermid: Why are they supporting it then?

Mr. de Jong: The Parliamentary Secretary, ever so anxious to have his voice heard in this House, is asking me why they are supporting it. Let me inform him that the people in my constituency are not in favour of it. In fact, well over 65 per cent are against this agreement. I would suggest as well that the vast majority of the people in the Province of Saskatchewan are against this agreement.

Mr. McDermid: Ask your pork producers.

Mr. de Jong: If the Hon. Member continues to ask his dumb questions, the answers he will get will continue to embarrass him. The polls across this country, not just in Regina East and not just in Saskatchewan, clearly show that the Canadian public is not happy with this agreement. Support for this agreement continues to decline. The more the Canadian people begin to understand the implications of this agreement, the more they are against it. The more they hear the answers from the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister for International Trade the more scared they become and the more they insist that an election be held on this issue so that the people of Canada can decide and not the fools across the way. That is the sentiment, not just in my district or in my province, but across this country.

The people want to decide on this issue and not the fools across the way because they do not trust them. The people do not trust this Government. They do not trust the Prime Minister who in 1983, and during the last election campaign—

Mr. McDermid: Wrong, wrong. Be honest.

Mr. de Jong; On June 2, 1983, the Prime Minister stated, and I will quote again: "It affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it, not during the leadership campaign or at any other time". When the Prime Minister can change his mind so radically on such a basic fundamental issue as this agreement that will shape the future and destiny of our country, when a person leading the Government can change his position so radically, the Canadian public can only come to one conclusion, and that is they do not trust him and they do not trust his Minister.

• (1910)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as you know, we are presently debating four amendments which would strike out four clauses of Bill C-130, the Bill to implement the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Those clauses that we wish to delete from the legislation are clauses dealing with the dispute settlement mechanism. The reason we want to delete those clauses from the Bill is because they are totally inadequate. They fall far short of what was pursued by the Government when it started its negotiations with the United States.

As a matter of fact, not only are they inadequate, but in some respects they give Canada less than we had under the GATT arrangements. Under the GATT arrangements in certain instances we were able to challenge the fairness of U.S. trade laws such as certain types of anti-dumping and countervailing laws. We were able to challenge the very fairness of those laws.

However, under this agreement and this dispute settlement mechanism we cannot challenge the fairness of those American trade laws. We can only challenge whether or not those laws are being administered fairly, whether the administration has been done correctly and whether the correct procedures have been followed. The laws themselves cannot be challenged.

When the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was discussing this, he provoked a response from the Parliamentary Secretary who attempted to contradict him and said that we were not prevented from using GATT remedies under the agreement and under the legislation. That is not so.

Article 1801.2 of Chapter 18 states:

> Disputes arising under both this Agreement and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and agreements negotiated thereunder, may be settled in either forum, according to the rules of that forum—

Article 1801.1 states:

> Except for the matters covered in Chapter Seventeen (Financial Services) and Chapter Nineteen (Binational Dispute Settlement in Antidumping and Countervailing Duty Cases), the provisions of this Part shall apply—

This part should only apply to those matters which do not fall under Chapter Seventeen and Chapter Nineteen. Chapter Nineteen deals with countervail and anti-dumping.

If we look at Chapter Nineteen we see that it states:

> Each Party reserves the right to apply its antidumping law and countervailing duty law to goods imported from the territory of the other Party.

It then goes on to state that the review of final anti-dumping and countervailing duty determination shall be determined by the process as set out in Chapter Nineteen.

With respect to countervail and anti-dumping, we cannot use the dispute settlement mechanism under GATT. That is exempted by Article 1 of 1801. The Parliamentary Secretary should pay close attention to that.

In addition, and more important, there was a GATT decision in 1949 which stated: "The determination of rights and obligations between Governments arising under a bilateral agreement is not a matter within the competence of the contracting parties", meaning under GATT. During the intervening 39 years since that decision, a dispute arising from a bilateral agreement has not been heard.

By adopting these dispute settlement procedures we lose our right to question countervailing laws and anti-dumping laws under the GATT. With respect to the fairness of those laws under GATT, we are restricted to the dispute settlement mechanism in this legislation. The dispute settlement mechanism under this legislation only deals with how the laws are administered, not with the fairness of the laws themselves.

Mr. McDermid: Read Article 1902.2.

Mr. Allmand: Read the decision of the GATT in 1949 and see what the result of that was. I would be pleased to hear a further response from the Parliamentary Secretary. He refers to his experts. We refer to ours. The Canadian people will decide on this. This is an important point.

The goal of the Government when it started negotiating this trade agreement with the United States was to obtain an exemption for Canada from the countervail and anti-dumping laws of the United States. That was the principal goal. Let us hear what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said on March 16, 1987. He said: "Our highest priority is to have an agreement that ends the threat to Canadian industry from U.S. protectionists who harass and restrict our exports through the misuse of trade remedy laws. Let me leave no doubt that, first, a new regime on trade remedy laws must be part of the agreement".

Later, the Prime Minister in an interview with The Wall Street Journal on April 2, 1987 stated: "U.S. trade remedy laws can't apply to Canada, period". That was the attitude of the Government when it started the negotiations. But it did not get the Americans to agree to eliminate the application of trade remedy laws to Canada. As a matter of fact, and I just quoted the article a few minutes ago, American countervail and anti-dumping laws apply fully to Canada. Those are the barriers to the United States which have really been troubling Canadian business.

All Canadians are familiar with the softwood lumber case, the shakes and shingles case, the East Coast fish case, the potash case and the steel case. All those were cases of countervail and anti-dumping. They were not cases of tariff duties.

Since 1979 until the beginning of this year there have been 300 countervail cases in the United States directed at Canadian business. In 70 per cent of those cases the American tribunals found injury against Canadian businesses. This means that a countervail duty was added in 70 per cent of those 300 cases.

That is the principal problem with trade between Canada and the United States. It is a non-tariff barrier. It has not been dealt with in this agreement. These dispute settlement mechanisms do not provide the sort of relief from those laws that we would like and that the Canadian people would like. As a matter of fact, that is what the Prime Minister wanted when he started the whole business.

I was amused when the Hon. Member from Edmonton—and I forget what part of Edmonton he is from—spoke just a few moments ago. He made fun of the point that we were trying to strike out this inadequate dispute settlement mechanism. He said: "Well, it is obvious that the Opposition Parties want to make Canada a sort of Albania. They want to isolate Canada from the rest of the world". What utter nonsense. Anybody who has lived in Canada for the last 20 or 30 years knows that the Liberal Party has pursued a policy of freer trade. As a matter of fact, at this very moment 80 per cent of all trade in goods and services in Canada and the United States are without tariff. That is brought down from a point after the Second World War when a high percentage of the goods and services exchanged between Canada and the United States were subject to tariff. Not only have we eliminated tariffs on 80 per cent of all goods and services, but the average rate of tariff has come down from about 30 per cent to about 5 per cent on that remaining 20 per cent.

Because we are opposing this agreement, and because we are opposing this dispute settlement mechanism, it does not mean that we are opposed to freer trade. We are saying that the system that was in place before this agreement was a better system, and we did not give up our independence, our identity, and our sovereignty to get a few trifles thrown at us by the United States Government.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, sitting here again this evening, one comes to the conclusion that the myth-makers are at it again. One of the comments that we have heard is that there has not been an adequate debate on this issue. I do not know where some Members have been. There certainly has been a lot of debate. Two parliamentary committees have looked at this issue. There have been a countless number of hours spent in debate in the House, and of course across the country. To say that there has not been debate is stretching the case just a little.

In terms of the debate, and in terms of getting information out, how many hundreds of copies of the agreement itself have each of us distributed to our constituents? I tell people: "Read the agreement. Don't take anybody else's word for it. Don't take mine. Don't take theirs. Read the agreement and you will be satisfied that there are too many myths floating around here".

What we have is a case, once again, where the talkers do not like it, but the traders do. Those people who make their living trading, and those people who make their living manufacturing are reasonably satisfied with the agreement. They are the ones who are producing the jobs that drives the economy of this country forward. The opposition Parties do not like the fact that the people of Canada themselves have created almost 1.3 million jobs in the last four years—

Mr. Rodriguez: Without free trade.

Mr. Winegard: —because we got rid of the protectionist, government-oriented policies that were heretofore.

Thomas d'Aquino, President and Chief Executive Officer of the Business Council on National Issues, stated on August 8, 1988: "The pact is worthless without trade law exemptions". This was one of the myths that he was trying to destroy.

> Of all the myths, perhaps this one has been the source of greatest confusion. It is true that Canadian negotiators would have wished to enter into much more substantial reciprocal commitments on the application of trade law remedies, and that the United States balked at the prospect. The result was a qualified success with dispute settlement provisions that can be resorted to where there are alleged changes in the law and in the application of existing laws. While these provisions provide greater security and predictability in the conduct of bilateral business, it is left to future negotiation to establish a common set of rules to deal with cross-border price discrimination and countervail procedures.
> Many critics of the Agreement argue that this is unacceptable and that without a clear exemption from the application of United States trade law, the Agreement "is not worth the paper it is written on". Their arguments make little sense. First, they apparently do not realize that it is normal for sovereign—

We have heard a lot about sovereignty. Yet the two opposition Parties would have us give it up.

> —powers to possess trade remedy laws aimed at preventing foreign exporters from dumping their products or resorting to subsidies to undercut their prices. Such laws are sanctioned by the GATT, are commonplace in Canada, and are considered essential by Canadian producers. An exemption—

Here is the point, Sir, and one that we have repeated over and over:

—from United States laws would require, of course, a reciprocal lifting of Canadian laws.

If we had dared to suggest that in this agreement Canada was going to give up its trade laws and its right to countervail and dump, can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the huff and the puff that would have come from members of the two protectionist Parties? They would have said, and this time rightly, that we had sold Canada out. We did not. The Canadian manufacturers did not want us to do that. The Canadian farmers did not want us to do that. The Canadian traders did not want us to do that. They wanted us to keep our ability to countervail and dump, because that is important to the progress of exports in Canada. Therefore, another myth. If we had done what they are suggesting here today, Mr. Speaker, you would have heard the cries all the way from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Victoria.

While I am here let me explode another myth. We are told that we went into this and we sought an exemption. We sought a complete—

Mr. Langdon: That's what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said.

Mr. Winegard: Just a moment. We sought a complete and total exemption from the United States trade law. That is wrong.

Mr. Langdon: From countervail.

Mr. Winegard: At no time did we seek a complete exemption because that would have implied exactly what I have said previously here this evening. That would have implied that we would have no trade remedy laws available to offset those of the United States. We wanted to put an end to the fact that the United States could take unilateral action against us, and we had no comeback whatsoever.

Mr. Rodriguez: You haven't.

Mr. Winegard: We have. We have the dispute settlement mechanism, which the Opposition is attempting to put down in the course of these amendments. Is it not interesting. The Opposition wants to throw out the dispute settlement mechanisms.

Mr. McDermid: They would rather go to the American courts.

Mr. Winegard: They want to do everything with the courts of the United States of America.

Mr. McDermid: That's right.

Mr. Winegard: Those people who worry about Canadian sovereignty now want to say to the Americans: "We will follow your laws only, and you can do what you want. We will have no appeal from those whatsoever".

While I am at it, let me also take up the point made by my Liberal friend a moment ago. The Hon. Member mentioned Article 1902 in the agreement which is "Retention of Domestic Antidumping Law and Countervailing Duty Law." I believe that the Hon. Member's words were: "We had given up our GATT rights". Perhaps the Hon. Member and others should read the agreement again. Perhaps it is worth while putting it on the record. Sometimes I think that we should read the whole thing into the record and then people might know what it is all about. It states:

> Each Party reserves the right to apply its antidumping law and countervailing duty law to goods imported from the territory of the other Party . . .

Article 1902, paragraph 2 states:

> Each Party reserves the right to change or modify its antidumping law or countervailing duty law, provided that in the case of an amendment to a Party's antidumping or countervailing duty statute . . .

I will not read all the paragraphs, Mr. Speaker. However, I do wish to read the paragraph that really matters and puts the boots to what has been stated here today, which states:

> d) such amendment, as applicable to the other Party, is not inconsistent with
> i) the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) . . .

It seems to me that people had better start reading the agreement instead of The Toronto Star. It would do the whole country a lot of good.

In closing, if we had dared to put into this agreement that we had given up all our rights for countervail, anti-dumping in terms of Canadian law, Mr. Speaker, you would have heard the squealing from one end of the country to the other. We did not do that because we respect the desires of Canadian manufacturers, exporters, and those who make this country go and provide the wealth to give them some protection against anti-dumping against us at any time. I think it would be worth while, Mr. Speaker, for some of our colleagues to actually read the agreement and avoid the myths that have become so common in Canada over the last two or three months.

• (1930)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: There is another myth getting on his feet now.

An Hon. Member: There is another purveyor of myth.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes. Myth Rodriguez.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, followed by the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in this debate—

Mr. Crosbie: Why?

Mr. Rodriguez: —on these amendments. Well, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), the great promoter of economic union with the United States from Newfoundland, is at least consistent on this question of free trade. In the great debate as to whether Newfoundland should enter into economic union with the United States or whether should join Canada, the man who is now the Minister for International Trade was promoting this deal. At least he was consistent then. During the leadership race, where he failed in his attempt to become the Leader of the Conservative Party, he supported free trade with the United States. He is at least consistent. He is about the only one over there who is consistent.

I want to raise a very important question about this whole debate. It is surrealistic to really understand what is going on here. Here is a Government that has lost favour with the Canadian people. The majority of Canadians have no confidence in this Government.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: They would not trust this Government to negotiate the care and welfare of their pet animals. Here is a Government that according to all of the polls the sampling of Canadian public opinion, has lost credibility. We cannot believe this Government. We cannot believe this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). In terms of honesty and integrity, he is way down the scale. He is only exceeded in the depths of honesty and integrity by the Leader of the Liberal Party. This Government in literally the dying hours of this Parliament, when an election is expected, is ramming through this House of Commons a Bill which has been described by the Prime Minister as the most important Bill in the history of this country and probably, he says, of the world. One knows that he is given to hyperbole.

Given that, how did ordinary Canadians have an opportunity to express an opinion about this Bill which is more than about trade, which goes beyond trade, which deals away in the minds of many, many Canadians, myself included, the heritage of Canadians. That alone ought to require that the Government go to the people of Canada and let them decide.

An Hon. Member: They will.

Mr. Rodriguez: If Canadians feel that this is the greatest deal and it is a benefit to Canada, they will return this Government with a majority.

Mr. McDermid: They will have the opportunity.

Mr. Rodriguez: Obviously, if they agree with the Opposition that in fact this deal is wrong and is a bad deal for Canada, they will obliterate them and put them into the opposition benches where they can join the Liberals in being a rump.

We have a trade deal that was worked out by a lame duck President and a Prime Minister who is issuing a swan song. We have a lame duck and a swan song. What is happening here is that they are selling off the birthright of Canadians.

An Hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is exactly what is happening. When we look at those who are opposed to the deal it is not just New Democrats. The President of the Bank of Nova Scotia is supposed to be one of those boys over there—

Mr. Crosbie: He is a real pal of yours.

Mr. Rodriguez: —but obviously he has moved away from that. He is hardly a pal of mine.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes. You are in bed with him.

Mr. Rodriguez: Secondly, we have the printers of this country who are gravely concerned about this deal. Gravely concerned. We have farm groups right across this country which are gravely concerned about this deal. We had a Government that was so intent on ramming this Bill through that it sequestered itself here in Ottawa to hold hearings in a committee. At what point do we invite ordinary Canadians to participate in the democratic process? There were 350 witnesses when it would not allow.

An Hon. Member: Why did Bob White not show up?

Mr. Rodriguez: National groups were grouped on the same day. There were four or five of them. I am talking about ordinary Canadians. The Regional Municipality of Sudbury passed a resolution, sent it to the Government and said: "Why doesn't the committee come here?" In that community they want to speak on the free trade deal—

Mr. McDermid: The CLC walked away.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Parliamentary Secretary said that they walked away. The Government apportioned an hour for each group to speak. It is the most important deal in the century for this country and it limits national groups like the Canadian Labour Congress, the CAW, to an hour, an hour and a half.

Mr. McDermid: They all walked away. They did not even speak.

Mr. Rodriguez: It was in protest of what this Government was doing.

An Hon. Member: It was a farce.

Mr. McDermid: They could not handle the tough questions.

Mr. Rodriguez: It was a farce. It was a charade. That is exactly what they were protesting. I ask the Government that talks about a new wave, a new era of democracy. "Where would ordinary Canadians be able to go to express their opinions; to the committee? Where?" In fact, this Government was fast-tracked by the Congress. They were fast-tracked. They want to get it sealed, signed and delivered and out of the way. That is not another myth. I say to the Government in all honesty: "Why don't you go to the people?" Let us do that.

An Hon. Member: Yes. They are afraid.

Mr. Rodriguez: Let's put an end to this process, to this charade. Let's go to the country and present the positions fairly and squarely.

An Hon. Member: You never presented anything fairly and squarely.

Mr. Rodriguez: If you think you have better rhetoric, present your rhetoric. If you think it is such a good deal, surely you can sell it.

An Hon. Member: You bet.

Mr. Langdon: Let them have their propaganda—

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes. They are taking millions upon millions of tax dollars and pumping out their position, their propaganda. They are pumping it out with taxpayers' money when this Bill has not even been passed. The Government is promoting this Bill, spending money on it. Why don't you spend your own money, the money that you have collected from all of the corporations, that you have in your kitty? Let's have an election, spend your money out of your electoral funds and have the election based on that.

Mr. McDermid: Please bring home a quart of milk.

Mr. Rodriguez: It says here that the Prime Minister is afraid. It says that Brian Mulroney is afraid to face the Canadian people, an ordinary Canadian in the gallery. I want to say to you, ordinary Canadians have spoken. This Government is running for cover. One only has to see what happened during the last weekend.

Now, when they are starting to shoot themselves in their foot, their head and their arms, they are not prepared to face the Canadian people. They are talking now about an election possibly next year.

Mr. Langdon: They will pay for it.

• (1940)

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would not be at all surprised if they trying to work a deal with the American Congress to somehow or other put off this arrangement and the passing of this Bill so they can get it done in the new year, 1989. I say to this Government in all honesty: "Look, you owe it to the Canadian people to present this matter in an election to them. Get a mandate before it is passed because I think that Canadians have to speak on this issue." I think the whole process should be stopped right now and an election called. The Prime Minister can go to the Governor General, dissolve Parliament and off we can go. It is as simple as that. If the Government wins a majority, fine, then the Tories can have it. Until that is done, the Government has no right to have this deal. If the Government wins a majority, it will have the will of the people for something that has been put to the people. But if the Government has not taken the issue to the people—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if we consider all the attacks on the free trade agreement, it is clear that ignorance, not understanding, is gaining ground, and that is why we have to get involved in this debate because of the way the facts are being misrepresented.

Basically, the FTA is a deal. A deal is an agreement signed by two consenting parties, and it is often a comprehensive whole. The various components, what we call the package, are all part of the deal or agreement. It's like going to a store, Mr. Speaker, and buying a dozen eggs. We don't buy a dozen yolks one day, a dozen whites the next and the shells the day after. They are all part of the same package!

A deal is exactly the same, but let me explain. As a Government, we have every right to stop letting our neighbours push us around and to establish—because basically, the FTA is mainly that—a tribunal to arbitrate any trade disputes that may exist between our two countries, because already 85 per cent of our goods cross our borders unrestricted. There is thus the remaining 15 per cent. What we are doing, Mr. Speaker, is establish an impartial tribunal.

What was the situation like before? We had our problems with cedar shakes, softwood lumber, pork, mustard seed and lobster, all goods that were protected by our neighbours to the south. When we went before the courts, we sent a battery of lawyers to Washington to defend our interests before U.S. tribunals under U.S. law. Mr. Speaker, we will have an impartial tribunal that will hand down decisions, that will have its own rules and conduct its own investigations, and that is what sovereignty and autonomy are all about.

I was talking to one of my colleagues on the weekend about acid rain, and this person said: Sure, but we can force the Americans to do something about acid rain. So I said: Aren't you satisfied with what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told the U.S. Congress? He was the first Prime Minister to do that. He said: Sure, but that doesn't help! So I said: It will help eventually, and what are we supposed to do when our neighbours to the south who are individualists and have their own parliamentary system and their own political and intellectual way of doing things, what do we do if they won't budge? Do we shoot down one of their planes? Do we shoot down the first plane that crosses the border? No. This is a democratic country, and so we pass legislation that will enable both countries to reach an agreement.

I repeat, 85 per cent of our goods cross the border without any customs interference because . . . Now look at the free trade agreement. I explained about the tribunal. The agreement is concerned with four specific points in particular. It concerns tariffs on about 15 per cent of the goods that now cross our borders; it concerns export and import quotas; it concerns laws, so-called malicious laws that while ostensibly protecting one product, prevent others from entering the country; and it concerns incentives. But basically, how much trade is there between Canada and the United States? Our trade is worth $169 billion annually, and 80 to 85 per cent is with our neighbours to the south.

So we set up a free trade agreement, and all of a sudden some people get terribly upset. That's it, we will have to start exporting. Not any more than we used to. We are an exporting country. We were before the free trade agreement. Mr. Speaker, we export 33 to 34 per cent of our Gross National Product. For instance, the Japanese export about 10 per cent of their GNP. We have to export because we have a small population, 25, 26 or 27 million. But we always had a problem because our markets were not stable.

Remember in 1984 or early 1985, when hog producers in the riding of Beauharnois—Salaberry came to my office because the United States had levied a tariff on pork carcases which were exported by the pound, 5 cents a pound, I think it was $1 per head? So what was the result? It meant that hog producers were stuck with their pigs, and they couldn't sell them anymore. Why? For the simple reason that producers in the U.S. went to see their lobbyists, their politicians and they said: Listen, Canadian pork producers with their Canadian laws and their provincial legislation can produce more cheaply. So you have to stop this, it doesn't make sense. So we had another outburst! There was a problem with lobster and with softwood lumber. It took so long with the softwood lumber dispute, Mr. Speaker—every time we had to go to the United States and defend our case before the U. S. courts. The free trade agreement will establish an international court, and we have every right to do that.

Earlier, some people said we were "shafted" by U.S. protectionist legislation. Certainly not! That particular legislation does not abolish the tribunal set up under the FTA. We are talking about leadership, Mr. Speaker. Just now they were saying, "Call an election and you will see. Campaign on it!" Talk about leadership. We will talk about leadership right now with the NDP.

Mr. Speaker, a by-election was held about a month ago in Lac-Saint-Jean. The NDP had great figures—they are perfect, so perfect they are almost unassailable—but they did not even get 9 per cent of the vote in a riding where normally they should have had more, according to the opinion polls. So let's have an election! The president of the Quebec wing of the NDP did not even get 2 per cent of the vote in the riding of Johnson. They were not even able to put up with Toupin besides, and now they want to go to the people, Mr. Speaker! Let us have an election. We will call an election on that, because the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Speaker, has shown leadership with the Free Trade Agreement, the Meech Lake Agreement and the various tough issues he has had to negotiate! And that is what people will have to judge, leadership and nothing else!

I remember the day after . . . Where does the Free Trade Agreement come from? You remember that the Liberal Party set up a Royal Commission chaired by Mr. Macdonald; the President of the Liberal Party of Canada, lawyer Michel Robert, was on it. They presented a report. I remember the journalists' reaction when this report was tabled in the House. Do you know what they said? They said that Mr. Mulroney would have to stop eating Big Macs and have a real meal. My God, here is a Government that has had a real meal . . . For once a Royal Commission report was not shelved, $20 million was not spent for nothing . . . ! The Prime Minister digested it and moved the negotiations forward, because he asserted the leadership he should as Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in the next election campaign, despite all the trickery, half-truths and ignorance which are having an impact, as I said at the beginning, Canadians will still believe that Canada was built on trade, because we already export 32 or 33 per cent of our gross national product. That is important! We built on that and now we will have an agreement to stabilize it. People who want to attack free trade wrap themselves in the flag and masquerade as true nationalists. Mr. Speaker, they say our culture is at risk. Our culture is not at risk because of free trade. Our culture is at risk because of what we see on television every day. Every day we see American culture, and that is much worse than the free trade agreement. We don't care about that. Of course I don't want to stop magazines and journals at the border. But those are the vehicles of cultural change, not the changes in our trade rules. Certainly not! In fact, those rules may enhance our culture because we are going to be able to defend ourselves under Canadian law before a tribunal that will be recognized by both countries. That may do a lot more to enhance our Canadian identity, our Canadian culture and our Canadian heritage.

Mr. Speaker, the short tempers of our friends opposite have often led to stormy debates here in the House. I will always remember when we had the softwood lumber affair and the pork exports. So what did the Government do? Instead of taking to our guns and settling accounts with our neighbours, we introduced legislation that would provide for economic and trade stability. Mr. Speaker, that is FTA. It is no more than that because when it comes down to it, 85 per cent of our goods already cross the border free of customs duty.

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise again in my place to debate the amendments in group nine put forward by our trade critic, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). In this group of amendments we are addressing the question of the settlement dispute mechanism.

In 1983, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ran for the Tory leadership, he put aside any fears that a party led by him would enter free trade negotiations with the U.S. That was very clear and categorical. In 1984, during the last federal election, there was no national debate on a bilateral trade agreement with the U.S. Notwithstanding those facts, the Prime Minister's most compelling reason for entering into these negotiations with the U.S. was the need to obtain secure access to the American market for Canadian goods.

Then it was the Prime Minister who suggested that an agreement that would not have a binding dispute settlement mechanism, one which would exempt Canada from harassment by American trade remedy laws, would not be worth the paper it was written on. Those are the Prime Minister's words. That is not something the Opposition is saying. It was an undertaking to this country by the Prime Minister of Canada. In fact, on March 16, 1987, the Prime Minister said in this House, and I quote:

> Our highest priority is to have an agreement that ends the threat to Canadian industry from U.S. protectionists who harass and restrict our exports through the misuse of trade remedy laws. Let me leave no doubt that first, a new regime on trade remedy laws must be part of the agreement.

Later, in an interview with The Wall Street Journal on April 2, he said:

> The U.S. trade remedy laws cannot apply to Canada.

What have we got now? It seems very clear to one and all that after months and months of discussions the Canadian negotiators were not able to secure access to American markets for Canadian goods. Second, Canada did not obtain an exemption from U.S. trade remedy laws. If one needs to have that point made clearly, one does not have to go beyond the words of the U.S. trade representative, Clayton Yeutter, who, in reviewing the so-called free trade agreement, had this to say:

> The United States countervailing duty and anti-dumping laws, defined as U.S. statutes, legislative history, regulation, administrative practice and court decisions, will remain intact and unchanged. Hence, U.S. petitioners will retain all their rights under existing U.S. laws as Canadian industries will keep their rights under Canadian law.

What did Canada obtain after months of negotiations and jetting back and forth between the two capitals? The Government said the priority was a binding dispute settlement mechanism. Yet what we have come up with is a mechanism void of any real protection for Canadian interests. First, we have a panel that can arbitrate and simply determine whether the process was followed, without looking at the fact that the process is very seriously and rigidly flawed. The panels will not be insulated from political pressure. There will be two representatives from both the U.S. and Canada and a fifth member chosen by some unknown procedure. That will not produce an objective result such as we see in GATT where most if not all of the members on the various panels who have to render dispute decisions are taken from countries not involved in the dispute.

Second, the national panels involved in anti-dumping and countervailing duty cases will have only judicial review power. They will have to look at whether the process was followed as opposed to looking at the facts underlying the dispute in the first place.

Third, anti-dumping and countervailing duty decisions by national panels will be based only on domestic law. That again leaves Canada open to future protectionist sentiments in the U.S.

Fourth, the panel procedures will be long and costly.

Fifth, panel decisions will not be binding and therefore, with the exception of safeguards, decisions will not be binding unless both parties agree beforehand to comply with the decision.

Canada's retaliatory capacity against the U.S. is weakened in the face of overwhelming harassment from a country that is much larger than ours, much more powerful economically. Who would win that war is quite obvious from the outset.

Perhaps the most important point is that our ability to dispute arrangements in trade with the Americans vis-à-vis GATT will in effect be closed off because GATT will not get into a position of rendering a decision taken between countries in a bilateral agreement. A number of government Members suggested that we are still living under GATT rules and we will be able to access GATT with respect to any harassment by the U.S. Yet a 1949 GATT decision held that the determination of rights and obligations between Governments arising under a bilateral agreement, such as the one we have now, is a matter within the competence of the contracting parties.

Therefore, we have the various components of the Canadian economy added to the cultural and communications industries which are under pressure in this agreement on the one hand.

On the other hand, we do not have a dispute settlement mechanism which can enforce and defend our own interests. Canadians are obviously worried about entering into an arrangement which seems to be lopsided, one way, and doomed in terms of advancing and enhancing our trade numbers vis-à-vis the Americans.

We have moved these two amendments in order to draw the attention of Canadians to the ills of this dispute settling system which has been put in place by the negotiators of the Canadian Government. They have not realized the first objective of the Prime Minister and are trying to cover that up with various other aspects and colourful language. However, when you remove the rhetoric, you are left with a fragile agreement and a dispute settlement mechanism which certainly does not build the confidence which our industries and our country and its people require and deserve.

It is with that interest in mind that we are trying to get the Government to focus honestly and competently on trying to provide a dispute settlement mechanism which will not only talk about equity and defence but will deliver on both those fronts.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to enter the debate at this time in light of some of the comments which have been put on the record by Members opposite, specifically as they relate to Canada's social programs and the reporting which must be done to Parliament.

The Economic Council of Canada has called the agreement "a timely, historic and mutually beneficial treaty that goes a long way towards achieving Canada's major objectives". The council stated that it was an extension, not an alternative, to Canada's multilateral commitments, an agreement that provides a valuable example for the current global negotiations.

More specific to my responsibilities, the council could find "no reason to think that free trade can be used to alter or undermine Canada's unemployment insurance system, medicare or other programs fundamental to the social safety net". On the contrary, the council believed that "by strengthening economic growth and employment the agreement will increase government revenues and improve the ability of governments to address social issues".

Regrettably, in this debate there has been more heat than light. Opponents have been ignoring the facts and independent analyses. In fact, if one were to believe the recent speech of the Leader of the NDP, you would think that this agreement would lead Canada to a Rambo-like, dog-eat-dog society of street crime, pornography, and sweat shops, that widows and orphans will be out on the street, that our resources will be raped and plundered, and that only the fittest will survive. I think even Members opposite would know that that rhetoric defies both logic and belief.

Where does the Opposition stand? Are we too competitive, which we hear from them, or are we not competitive enough, which argument we hear as well? The Opposition would have us believe that certain very specific provisions of the agreement are the thin edge of the wedge toward the commercialization of our health care system.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not certain but perhaps the Minister has chosen the wrong clauses to speak on. These clauses deal with the dispute settlement procedures and so far nothing that the Minister has talked about would seem to be relevant to those particular amendments. Given the time constraints, I request the Speaker, if possible, to suggest to the Minister that it would be best to make a speech which deals with the dispute settlement issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I thank the Member for his interjection. I am sure the Minister for National Health and Welfare was about to get to the meat of the amendments.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I was speaking to the amendments. I know that you like to invoke the rule of relevancy. I noticed that the same kind of thing was happening when the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) was speaking. If I am pulling the Hon. Member's chain, I am sorry, but he has been doing some pretty desperate things around here.

There have been comments made in this House that Canadian blood will be for sale. Canadian blood is not for sale and will not be for sale.

Mr. Langdon: It is.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will try to enlighten the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). The only reason I am pleased that he is in this House is that he is not teaching at the University of Windsor polluting kids' minds with the kinds of things he has been saying here.

We do buy blood products because we are not self-sufficient. If the Member looks at what the agreement says rather than what he thinks the agreement says, he will find that that is the issue. In fact, in some provinces we buy up to 70 per cent of our blood products from the United States. He should be careful in his use of the wood "blood" as opposed to "blood products".

It is also important that members of the Opposition say that we will "commercialize" our health care system. If you look again at the agreement you will find that if a province so desires it can commercialize the management side but not the health care delivery system. The Canada Health Act received unanimous approval in this House.

It is interesting to note that the Province of Ontario from where the Members come, is the one province which has tried such a management approach. Before Members say that this is going to change health care or that we are going to lose benefits of our health care system, they should look very carefully at what the agreement says and, more important, where that kind of a system has been tried, namely, in one hospital in Hawkesbury.

If you have followed this debate you will know that the Liberals and the NDP have used two totally contradictory arguments to raise doubts about this agreement. First, they have told Canadians that our social programs make us too competitive, that they are subsidies which the Americans will countervail, and that the Americans will somehow force us to change our policies. This argument is simply not true. Why would these programs, developed under GATT rules, now be countervailable subsidies when the free trade agreement does not change the GATT rules on subsidies? The Hon. Member knows that, as does the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry should simply follow the advice of the Winnipeg Free Press, that is, that the Leader of the Liberal Party, and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry should tell the truth.

With regard to competitiveness one can read what the Government of Ontario said in its economic outlook and fiscal review. It said that the costs of production in Canadian manufacturing now compare favourably with the United States and Japan in terms of total hourly compensation, that is, both money, wages, and fringe benefits. It goes on to say that wage rates in Ontario are generally lower than those in immediately adjacent states in the U.S., i.e., Michigan, and competitive with lower wage states such as Georgia. Ontario companies enjoy other competitive advantages including lower health costs and lower energy costs.

As they say themselves, our social programs are not countervailable subsidies and the relevant rules are not changing. I do not generally follow Mr. David Peterson's logic, but I will accept it for today in order to make the point to Members opposite who may prefer to listen to him than to us.

Additionally, they say that we will not be able to bring in new programs. As an example, we are presently bringing forward child care, a $6.4 billion program which the Liberals say is too small. They say that they are going to bring in an expanded child care program in those years when the deficit goes down. However, from 1969 to 1979, or even to 1984, the deficit went down in only one year, in 1979, after they had been in office for three years. I asked the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) about that issue the other day. He said: "Well, we would have to change that. We would have to rethink it", because the Liberal Party wants a universal program but it is only going to do it when its deficits go down. The point is simply that it is not countervailable. It does not affect health care. It does not affect pensions. It does not affect blood banks. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) said that we are going to start selling babies. What nonsense. What absolute pap those Members raise.

It is time these amendments were dealt with tonight, that they be voted on, and that the free trade agreement gets passed because Canada needs the prosperity so that we can develop the social programs we have in place at present and the social programs we want in the future. That is our agenda and that is what we are going to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The question is on Motion No. 45. The vote on Motion No. 45 will also apply to Motions Nos. 46, 47 and 48. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 49, which will be voted on separately.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry) moved:

Motion No. 49

That Bill C-130 be amended by adding immediately after line 8 at page 41 the following:

"48. Notwithstanding all the provisions of this agreement on a bilateral dispute settlement mechanism, Canada reaffirms its commitment to the superior GATT dispute settlement mechanism which allows Canada to challenge the law itself as well as its application.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak to the amendment and to follow my colleague from Manitoba, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who has just spoken. He is known in Manitoba as the Minister responsible for the CF-18. I am always glad when he provides admonitions that we tell the truth because he is the Minister who sat on the truth for six to eight months while decisions were made that deeply affected our province in a way from which we will never recover. He did not quite have the guts or the courage to tell the truth to the people of Manitoba during that period of time. It is too bad he did not follow his own advice at that time. It is too bad his preachments were not followed by himself. It is too bad he did not at least have the honour to put his own seat on the line in terms of dealing with an honest Government and a dishonest decision that was made during that period of time, and the political interference.

There is only one way the problem of who is really telling the truth can be resolved, and that is to let the people decide. Of course, the Conservatives are afraid of doing that. They prefer to act like kids in a school yard, throwing stones and insults, as opposed to dealing with the debate. They are afraid to get out where it really counts, on the hustings, where the democratic process makes a judgment not based upon editorials in various newspapers which are owned by large corporate concentrations. I think that is the difference.

Mr. McDermid: You hate anyone who has done well, don't you?

Mr. Axworthy: I will tell the Parliamentary Secretary that people who abuse power, and the Member belongs to a Party which is a clear example of that, is what I fight against.

Mr. Crosbie: What about yourself?

Mr. Axworthy: That is why we are against this agreement. Because this agreement will give more power and more influence to those large concentrations—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I listened carefully to the two gentlemen from Manitoba, and I think they are about even now and perhaps we can get back to the Bill.

Mr. Axworthy: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, the amendment we are bringing forward is an important corollary to those amendments we have just debated. It is a very important amendment because it establishes a very distinct difference in the way in which we view trade policy in this country. It is very simple. The Conservative Party of Canada, the Republican Party of the north, the Party that believes in all those great fond dreams of Ronald Reagan, has a very simple principle. It is going to abandon the time tested and effective procedures we used in the past to protect Canadian trading interests both in negotiating with the GATT and at the same time using the dispute settlement mechanism. We, on the other hand, believe that Canada has prospered, our trade has expanded, and our opportunities abroad have been developed by relying upon the international trading system. It is a very clear difference between the two. It is not a matter of who is for or against more trade. It is a question of how do we do it.

How do we ensure security of access? How do we open access up? How do we diversify trade? The Conservative Party, the Republican Party of the north, has clearly adopted the position that they are going to plight their troth and sign the marriage certificate with the United States. We have heard them talk about it: we have to join a market of 100 million people, we have to get behind these walls because those Europeans are after us and the Japanese are after us, and we have to sort of sign up with Uncle Sam. That was the position taken by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and his family 30 years ago. I suppose if consistency is a virtue, he has one virtue at least. He has been consistent on that. Unfortunately, it is now an argument that has been adopted by the Conservative Party of Canada.

We are saying that our position is very different. We want to establish a trading vision that has a much broader base than that, one that looks at it on a global basis and recognizes that in negotiating an agreement one never gets oneself in a position as Mr. Reisman, who was the chief negotiator said, where one has to put on the table far more benefits than the other side is prepared to offer because they have a larger market. Mr. Reisman said that. He said that was the reason we had to put water on the table. He said in his famous speech in front of the Ontario Economic Council: "When you are asking for a change and you are negotiating with a power that is 10 times your size and you are trying to get some similarity in trade benefits, you have to put chips on the table that are non-trade chips". So we put on investment, we put on energy, we put on resources, and we put on water, in order to get some changes in the trade area.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong!

Mr. Axworthy: That is exactly what Mr. Reisman said in his speech.

Mr. McDermid: Give us the quote. Where is the speech?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Reisman's analysis was right. Unfortunately, the Government carried through.

Some Hon. Members: Where? Where?

Mr. Axworthy: In front of the Ontario Economic Council.

Mr. McDermid: You are putting words in somebody else's mouth. Read us the speech.

Mr. Axworthy: If these illiterates in the Conservative Party would read these things, they might find out what is going on. They might find out in fact what is in place. The fact is that we are faced with a situation where, because we rely on a bilateral negotiation as opposed to a multilateral negotiation, we end up having to give up far more than we get. That is the clear record and the clear history of this negotiation.

Let us talk about another so-called distortion. The Parliamentary Secretary got to his feet in full dudgeon and said: "We can go to GATT. We still have our rights". He stomped his feet and he blew smoke out of his ears and what other kind of aperture he has. He demonstrated that we are going to be loyal and true and blue to the GATT. Except he and his so-called experts on the government side forgot to mention one small item, that is, that the GATT itself in 1949 made a clear decision which stated that when there was a binational dispute settlement mechanism it would not touch the case. It has not ever since then. It has not gotten close to them. That is its rule.

We are now introducing under this agreement an alternative system which, as was pointed out in a previous speech, is weaker, will be more costly, and will provide for less protection for Canadian industry. It is also more political. As a result, because of that type of convention under the GATT, we will not have that access about which the Parliamentary Secretary spoke.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Axworthy: This is the gentleman who was so insistent that we get the facts straight. Those are the facts.

The GATT decision in 1949 states: "The determination of rights and obligations between Governments arising under a bilateral agreement is not a matter within the competence of the contracting parties," meaning the GATT. What does the Parliamentary Secretary have to say about that?

Mr. McDermid: I will be up.

Mr. Axworthy: Sure, he will be up. Once more we will have the dance of the seven veils. Once more we will have all the gobbledegook. Once again we will have the same kind of thing that we get in all this propaganda from the Government, that is, they do not tell it straight; they do not tell it as it is.

Let us put the Government to the test. It is simple. We do not have to argue about it any more. If the Government is prepared to accept the principle that the GATT agreement is predominant, superior and provides the basis, then all Members opposite have to do is vote for this amendment. But if they do not vote for the amendment, then we have a clear admission and confession of guilt. They will be saying to the Canadian people, and we will remind them of course, that they voted against a simple clause that establishes a superior precedence to the GATT international system. It is a test. We will find out tomorrow night when we vote. When we come to Motion No. 49 we will see how government Members vote. In Parliament we have one clear way of showing what we mean, that is, we stand up on our feet. We get up on our feet to say yes or no.

The test is here. If the clause does not do damage to the agreement, if it is as the Government says that we will still honour all these GATT obligations, if we are going to overturn the 1949 decision by some miracle, okay, then members of the Government can vote for that motion. That is very simple. But tomorrow night when we see them vote on Motion No. 49 we will mark how they vote. You will see, Mr. Speaker, that what in fact they will be admitting is that this binational panel, this dispute settlement mechanism, this whole system supersedes that clause. It provides an alternative which provides exclusion. It does cut off recourse to those mechanisms. It does weaken our ability. Thereby, it cuts off from Canadians one of the most important and effective measures and remedies that we have had for protecting ourselves not only against the Americans but other very large and powerful trading interests. That is why we are defending it.

We believe that the most important way to defend Canadian trading interests is to have an international rule of law, to have rules apply to large and small. We believe that the same rules should apply whether one is the United States of America or Thailand or Nicaragua. The only way we can get that is if countries like Canada stand up for that international rule of law, whether it is in trade, human rights or disarmament. We will find out tomorrow night just where the Government is prepared to put its commitment, whether it is prepared to put its commitment into this new machinery that it is always talking about, or whether it will be put into one that really works to protect our interests.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I get a very big kick out of listening to the Hon. Member who puts his own interpretation on the agreement that we have signed.

In the overview of the agreement it is laid out very well. It states that the agreement sets a new standard for trade agreements concluded under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. If we were dismissing the GATT would we conclude this agreement under the GATT? Of course we would not. What this agreement does, and it says here, is that it takes various GATT commitments, bilateral arrangements, and ad hoc understandings and transforms them into a treaty based relationship between Canada and the United States which should govern the trade and economic relationship for the foreseeable future. The agreement meets the test of fairness and of mutual advantage.

It also states that this accord sends a powerful signal against protectionism and trade liberalization. It reflects the commitment of both Governments to liberalize trade on a global basis through multilateral trade negotiations under the GATT. All the way through this agreement the GATT rules are mentioned in chapter after chapter.

Let us talk about Article 1902 in the agreement which considers anti-dumping and countervail duty law. It considers the right of either party to amend its anti-dumping or countervail law and to bring in amendments to its anti-dumping or countervail duty law provided that in the case of amendment to a party's anti-dumping or countervailing duty statute—and it goes through a list of requirements, one being such amendments shall apply to goods from the other party only if such application is specified in the amending statute. It goes on and on. Under Section 2(d) of Article 1902 it is stated:

> d) such amendment, as applicable to the other Party, is not inconsistent with
> i) the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—

For the Hon. Member to stand up here to say that this Government has dismissed the GATT, that we have ignored the GATT, that we are not paying any attention to it, is totally wrong. The Hon. Member knows that full well. He knows that the Government has been on a two-track process on trade, both on a bilateral basis with our largest trading partner and on a multilateral basis with the GATT. As a matter of fact, we Canadians can be very proud in the leading role that we have been taking in the negotiations, the Uruguay Round of the GATT negotiations which are ongoing at the present time and which are almost at the half-way point. However, as we know, these negotiations can go on for a number of years. It is interesting to listen to the Hon. Member talk about us not being committed to GATT. Of course we are committed to GATT.

I listened to him say that Manitoba is in such financial bad shape that it will never recover. Manitoba has the second lowest unemployment rate in Canada. The Hon. Member should be proud of that. With this free trade agreement it will accomplish a lot more. There is no question about it. Let me read for the record an editorial from The Financial Post entitled "Hardly a sell-out". It reads:

> As Trade Minister John Crosbie noted in the House the other day, it's curious that the Opposition wants to move about 100 amendments to a trade bill they say they will tear up if elected.
> Does the effort to improve the bill mean that in an amended form it would be acceptable? We'll never know because the amendments won't make it. But if the Liberals are elected, we'll look for a new Canada-U.S. trade bill incorporating the proposed changes.
> (If such a bill didn't materialize under a Liberal government, it would suggest the amendments being proposed now are merely a stalling tactic. but we know a responsible party wouldn't stoop to wasting Parliament's time in that fashion. Don't we?)

Meanwhile, the general criticism of the Free Trade Agreement continues. The Government "doesn't have a mandate to take this country into the U.S.," the NDP's Steven Langdon says. Liberal Leader John Turner still uses that wonderfully original line about making Canada "the 51st state." (As we have said before, we wish he could accord the whole of Canada more equivalency than Rhode Island, but he's stuck on 51.)

As trade lawyer Christopher Thomas notes on the page opposite, Turner also characterizes the FTA as the "Sale of Canada Act." The problem is, as Thomas says, the agreement offers no evidence of a sellout. The critics give the impression that Canada simply signed away the store, and the Americans committed to nothing. But, as Thomas says, "the vast majority of the agreement's terms are mutually binding."

For the most part, exceptions to the mutually binding terms arise from terms of the General Agreement on Tariffs & Trade, to which both Canada and the U.S. are parties, or from particular legislative or regulatory provisions in each country. For example, under the FTA, obligations affecting wine and spirits apply mainly to Canada.

That's because, of the two parties, only Canada is breaching its GATT obligations by discriminating against foreign alcoholic beverages.

That refers to the discriminatory pricing of the provinces. It continues:

In the area of financial services, different obligations are imposed on the two countries because of the different regulatory regimes and the different paces of deregulation.

If the free trade critics would view the agreement in the light of our GATT obligations and the legislative and regulatory provisions in each country, it becomes a less ominous piece of work. Hardly, in other words, the "bill of sale" Turner thinks it is.

That was an editorial in The Financial Post on August 22, 1988. It points out very well that this agreement is GATT consistent, that it was negotiated under the GATT rules, that this Government fully supports GATT, works with it, and as a matter of fact is playing a very leading role in the GATT negotiations that are going on now. This country can be extremely proud of the leadership role that it has taken in the agricultural end of things where there are major problems throughout the world.

It is evident to anyone who understands and who has read the free trade agreement, and it is understood that it is consistent under the GATT regulations. Under that section we can challenge a decision of the United States that it made pursuant to such anti-dumping or countervailing duty law before the binational dispute panel.

Mr. Orlikow: Which would deal with it under American law.

Mr. McDermid: Under Chapter 19 on the basis that the law is being unfairly applied. That is what this is all about.

Mr. Orlikow: It has to be dealt with under American law.

Mr. McDermid: Listen to the Opposition moan and groan.

Mr. Benjamin: Under American law. Why don't you take our your citizenship down there?

Mr. McDermid: And also under Canadian law.

The final point I want to make as I sit here and listen to my friends in opposition is that they talked about wanting to get exempted from American countervail and anti-dumping law.

Mr. Benjamin: There are no exceptions.

Mr. McDermid: Never have they said that they were prepared to exempt the Americans from Canadian countervail or anti-dumping law. They have never said that in all their criticism of this agreement. In Canada what we complain of is the fair application of the law. Generally the anti-dumping and countervail laws on both sides are basically the same. They are done under GATT rules. It is the application of those laws that has caused us the problem. Earlier in one of his previous incarnations the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) mentioned that the application of the law in the United States for the protectionist attitude in the United States was what we were fighting. This binational dispute settlement mechanism will help us with that.

In conclusion, the Government is committed to GATT. This agreement was negotiated under GATT. We will be voting against this frivolous Motion No. 49 not only tonight, but also tomorrow night.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as I was pointing out earlier this evening, the most serious trade barrier between the United States and Canada are the American laws on countervail and anti-dumping.

Mr. McDermid: It's the application.

Mr. Allmand: It has not been tariffs for several years now. The most serious and harassing trade barriers have been countervail and anti-dumping. As a matter of fact, I will put the following figures on the record. Since 1979 the Americans have launched 300 countervail cases against Canadians doing business in the United States. In 70 per cent of those 300 cases they found injury against these Canadian business. That means that American tribunals found that the Canadian products being sold in the United States were in some way or another subsidized, according to their laws, and therefore they added a countervail duty on to the price of the Canadian product and set up that type of barrier. The Americans awarded a countervail duty against those Canadian products in 70 per cent of 300 cases.

I also pointed out that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) started the free trade negotiations with the United States he stated that his highest priority was to get rid of American trade laws, such as countervail and anti-dumping. That was his highest priority on March 6, 1987. He did not accomplish that because after the negotiations were finished and the agreement was signed, Clayton Yeutter, the President's trade representative in the negotiations stated: "The U.S. countervailing duty and anti-dumping laws, defined as U.S. statutes, legislative history, regulations, administrative practice, and court decisions—will remain intact and unchanged. Hence U.S. petitioners will retain all their rights under existing U.S. laws as Canadian industries will keep their rights under Canadian law".

The United States laws on countervail and anti-dumping remain, despite the wish of the Prime Minister that this should be done away with in the negotiations.

With respect to the dispute settlement mechanism that was set up to deal with these things, P. W. Slayton, a trade lawyer with the Toronto law firm of Blake, Cassels and Graydon stated: "Anti-dumping and countervailing duty laws remain the same in both countries. This is disappointing. Relief from United States application of its anti-dumping and countervailing duty laws was thought to be one of Canada's objectives".

That did not take place. We have moved that the dispute settlement mechanism set up in the legislation be disposed of, taken out of the legislation, and replaced with the GATT procedures.

Under GATT procedures one is allowed to question the fairness of the laws themselves, whereas under the dispute settlement mechanism that is provided for in the agreement and in the legislation, one can only question the fairness of the application of the law, and whether American law is applied fairly in accordance with its own procedures. One cannot question whether or not the law itself is fair. When I attempted to point out to government Members that this was provided for in the agreement, they attempted to rebut what I said by pointing out that each country is allowed to amend its countervail laws, but any amendment to countervail laws must be consistent with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

• (2040)

They referred to Article 1902 of the agreement. Well, to establish that you will have a separate dispute settlement mechanism is not inconsistent with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. They tried to imply that it would be inconsistent. Well, it is not inconsistent. As a matter of fact, my hon. colleague and I have both referred to a decision of GATT in 1949. The 1949 GATT decision read: "The determination of rights and obligations between Governments arising under a bilateral agreement is not a matter within the competence of the contracting parties; i.e. to GATT". Since 1949, GATT has not established one panel to examine a dispute arising from a bilateral agreement. Where countries have got together and had a bilateral agreement to deal with disputes between them, GATT says: "From that point on, we do not deal with it".

What is wrong with this agreement is that the dispute settlement mechanism under the bilateral agreement says that you cannot question the fairness of the countervail and anti-dumping law. You can only question the fairness of its application.

It is interesting to note that the Parliamentary Secretary did not answer me nor did he answer the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) with respect to that GATT decision in 1949. We asked him to explain his position with respect to that GATT decision in 1949, but he never mentioned one word with respect to it, and he cannot. There has not been one panel under GATT to deal with countries that have a bilateral dispute mechanism between them since 1949, and that is 39 years now.

Maybe the Parliamentary Secretary is listening to this somewhere else. How is it that in the softwood lumber case, when we had the problem with the United States, they did not refer it to the GATT tribunal for a resolution? They ignored the procedures under GATT. It is possible, if they had gone to GATT, they would have got a much better decision in favour of Canada than they finally worked out with the United States in the agreement they signed with them. They might have been able to get a ruling through GATT which declared the American countervail duty against our softwood lumber to be an unfair ruling. They did not go that way. We just had the Parliamentary Secretary say a few minutes ago that the Conservative Government believes very strongly in GATT. They support GATT all along the line. Well, their actions speak louder than words. When it came time to go to GATT on the softwood lumber case, they did not go to GATT.

I repeat, the dispute settlement mechanism in this agreement is not acceptable. It is not acceptable because it does not allow us to question unfair American laws relating to countervail and anti-dumping. That is why we want the dispute settlement mechanism in this agreement replaced by the GATT procedures which allow us to question not only the application of the unfair laws but the unfair laws themselves.

As my hon. colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry said, if the Conservative Government really believes in the provisions of GATT, really believes that we should be able to question the fairness of anti-dumping laws and countervail laws, then let it vote for this amendment tomorrow when the votes take place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I recognize the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this must be a very confusing debate for people who are watching the debate, people who are listening, because we are dealing with a series of technical issues. There are counter charges and counter interpretations. I want to try to suggest two or three things. I want to say first that contrary to what the Parliamentary Secretary suggested to the House a few minutes ago, it has never been the Opposition which said that we should seek an exemption from United States countervail and anti-dumping law. What we have said is that it is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of this country who started on the quest for the great trade agreement which was to emerge. He said that what would be achieved would be an exemption from U.S. countervail law, the law that puts up those special tariffs against our hogs, our fish, our stainless steel, our various vegetable products. That has been what we have been attacking, because the Government said that it would achieve this goal, and it failed to achieve the goal. It is that failure of the Government which is at the heart of the judgment that we have to make about this deal.

I think that the crucial issues with respect to this debate are not in fact being talked about. Though we support this amendment, I think the present GATT framework of dispute settlement is not really very satisfactory. It takes a great deal of time and it is something which we as a country, for instance, could actually win in a dispute but cannot be certain that the other country will be bound by the decision which is made. There are problems with the GATT dispute system.

The point about GATT is that GATT is and was the superior form in which to try to deal with our problems with the United States. GATT gave us the possibility of being able, through negotiation in the present round in which all the GATT countries are taking part, to have the chance to put in some disciplines on the way that the United States is using its countervail system against smaller countries like Canada to block out the products from this country when they become too competitive, too readily able to out-compete the United States products against which they are being sold.

At the present stage, the Americans have a system of countervail which is totally laughable when one thinks about it. They say that if Canada is guilty of putting a subsidy on a factory when it is established, like the Michelin Tire factory in Nova Scotia, it is possible for the United States to put a countervailing duty against tires coming into the United States. It is possible for the Americans to do so because we have put a subsidy into the building of the factory. They do not look at the question of whether they subsidize their tire factories. They do not look at the question of whether fishermen in the United States are subsidized when there are subsidy and countervail actions taken against our fishermen. Those questions are not looked at because American law says that it does not have to look at those questions.

All the U.S. has to look at is whether there are subsidies used in Canada, in Germany, or in Japan. If that is the case, then the United States using its countervail system can put up a special barrier to block profits from countries being able to get access easily into the United States for their products. That is what has to change, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McDermid: Only if the Americans win their case.

Mr. Langdon: The only way things will change is if we get a change in GATT whereby the countervail systems of all countries, including our own, have to take into account not just the subsidies that have been put on foreign products coming into the country but the subsidies which go into supporting domestic industry at home. If there is a difference between the two, an unfairness between the two, then a countervail system can fairly and sensibly be applied. For instance, the United States has far higher subsidies on a product than we have provided here in Canada yet still puts countervail duties against our fish or our hogs. As is almost certainly the case support in the United States for hog and fish production is significantly higher than in Canada, yet the Americans still put countervails against our products coming into that country.

Mr. McDermid: We can countervail them.

Mr. Langdon: In this case we have a system whereby we are badly hurt by a pattern of law which is itself in its very basis unfair. That is what has to be changed and can only be changed through GATT. It can only be changed through an agreement among countries throughout the world.

Mr. Shields: That is not true.

Mr. Langdon: That is what has to happen. That is the only way in which it can happen. If it is not agreed upon by GATT, you get a crazy quilt system that simply will not work. Therefore, instead of working our way through these crazy negotiations with the United States that have worked out so badly and have left Canada so unequally used, so unbalanced and unfairly dealt with in the way things have worked out, we should have worked through GATT where we have influence and where we have a say. We should have concentrated on that and not sold out this country through the various energy concessions, the investment concessions, and the concessions in the health area despite the Minister's suggestions about concessions in the Auto Pact area and the concessions on agriculture which have hurt this country so very badly.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it would be so refreshing if those who oppose free trade for ideological, philosophical, and political reasons would stand up and be frank enough to say that is why they oppose the free trade agreement.

Mr. Caccia: That is what we did.

Mr. Shields: There is nothing wrong with opposing free trade because you are a socialist, you want to socialize Canada, and you realize that this deal will be more difficult if we enter into a free trade agreement with a country that has economic ties which remain committed to competitive enterprise in the market system.

We will hear in this House time after time that they are all opposed on principle and for philosophical reasons if we lump free trade, privatization and de-regulation together because they are socialists. I have no problem with that. It is a logical position to take if you happen to believe in that philosophy. However, let me quote for a moment from a submission that was made to the standing committee by Mr. John Crispo, Professor of Political Economy, Faculty of Management, University of Toronto. He said:

> U.S. laws with respect to countervail and dumping cases have not been the problem—

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I might be wrong but I have the impression that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Shields), as did the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) earlier, is conducting a speech for third reading and not addressing the motion before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I thank the Hon. Member for his interjection. The Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I was polite enough to listen to that Hon. Member and I hope he will give me the same courtesy.

I would like to address countervail, dumping, and the dispute settlement mechanism. I start first with a quote, as I said, of Mr. John Crispo, Professor of Political Economy, Faculty of Management, University of Toronto. He said:

> U.S. laws with respect to countervail and dumping cases have not been the problem since they are about the same as Canada's laws in these areas.

In other words, Professor Crispo is saying that our laws on countervail are generally the same as the laws in the United States on countervail. Let me continue with what he said:

> Rather the problem has arisen from the unfair administration and interpretation of these U.S. laws over the last half dozen years. Exhibit A of this transformation is represented by the softwood lumber case which Canada won on essentially the same evidence only three years before it lost it before the same U.S. tribunal. In the interval the U.S. switched over from basically economic to essentially political criteria in its countervail and dumping decisions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): If it is necessary to have meetings during the course of the evening, I wish Hon. Members would hold them elsewhere so the debate can go on here. The Parliamentary Secretary is giving an interesting speech and I would like to hear the rest of it.

Mr. Shields: Let me continue with my quote of Professor Crispo:

> Under the free trade dispute settlement mechanism Canada has the means to "objectify" once again the U.S. decision-making processes in these types of cases.
> This is because Canada can appeal the U.S. decisions—

As can the United States appeal Canadian decisions. He continued:

> —on the basis of the administrative record in the case involved which includes all the evidence, information and even hearsay introduced in the earlier proceedings in which Canadian representatives participate.
> Had Canada been enabled to appeal the softwood lumber case on its merits it probably would have been reversed. Having the ability to do so in the future will avoid other similar cases, compel the applicable U.S. tribunals to be more objective in their future deliberations, and thus, in all likelihood, eliminate all manner of capricious and frivolous cases ever coming forward in the first place.

I would like to refer to Article 1906 which deals with "duration". That provision of the agreement says:

> The provisions of this Chapter shall be in effect for five years pending the development of a substitute system of rules in both countries for anti-dumping and countervailing duties as applied to their bilateral trade. If no such system of rules is agreed and implemented at the end of five years, the provisions of this Chapter shall be extended for a further two years. Failure to agree to implement a new regime at the end of the two-year extension shall allow either party to terminate the Agreement on six month's notice.

I think that makes it very clear that we have addressed anti-dumping and countervailing duties as they exist in both countries. We in Canada can implement countervailing duties just as the U.S. can, but we have a dispute settlement mechanism that now makes it more objective. That is a very clear indication that we have moved in the proper direction.

• (2100)

Why do we constantly hear, as we do from the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), the refrain that we have sold out Canada? What he is really saying is that the premiers and governments of eight provinces, not to mention a ninth premier who says he will not put any barriers in the way if a free trade agreement goes through, are traitors to Canada. Is he really accusing them of that? Is he really saying they are not concerned about their country?

Mr. Foster: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes.

Mr. Shields: I hear an NDP Member saying yes.

Mr. Benjamin: They will do anything for a buck.

Mr. Shields: I was here when the premiers of the western provinces fought long and hard about ownership of resources. Does the Hon. Member seriously believe that those premiers would work so hard to control their resources and then turn around and hand them on a silver platter to the Americans?

Mr. Foster: That is right.

Mr. Shields: We are now hearing this nonsense from both the Liberals and the NDP. We know now that the only people who know the truth are the 70-odd people sitting in opposition. They, along with the labour unions headed by Shirley Carr and Bob White are the only ones who are protecting Canada or who care about this country. I most thoroughly resent that. I resent those people saying to me that because I support the free trade agreement, I am selling out my country. I resent it on behalf of former Premier Lougheed. I resent it on behalf of former Premier Manning. I resent it on behalf of the Premier of British Columbia, Bill Vander Zalm. I resent it on behalf of the Government of Saskatchewan and the Government of Manitoba, and the Government of Quebec. They are now saying that the Premier of Quebec and his Legislative Assembly are traitors to Canada. Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Benjamin: Exactly.

Mr. Shields: That is exactly what the NDP are saying. That is what the Liberals are getting to. Have the courage to stand up and say why you are against this. You are against it for political and ideological reasons and that is all.

Mr. Benjamin: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Shields: You will never be able to implement a National Energy Program against western Canada ever again if this free trade agreement goes through and that is the bug in your ear. That is the problem they have on that side of the House. I resent the fact that about 40 Liberal Members of Parliament and 30-odd members of the socialist party, the NDP—

Mr. McDermid: Well, they are not all odd.

Mr. Shields: —are attempting to hijack this House and the people of Canada, using all sorts of innuendo and misleading statements when they talk to the people. We hear it all the time.

Mr. Foster: Let the people decide, Jack.

Mr. Shields: The people will decide if you tell the truth. That is the key. Tell the truth. The Liberals want power in this country because they have been out of office for four years. They want to get back in and centralize control in Canada. It is as plain as the nose on your face exactly what they want. I most thoroughly resent what they are saying in the Opposition about me selling out Canada. I am working damn hard for Canada, I am proud of it, and will continue to work for Canada. This is one of the best deals we could ever get with the U.S. and it will become better over the years.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we invite the Government to send in more Parliamentary Secretaries to participate in the debate. They will help our cause enormously, just like the intervention by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Shields).

Mr. Shields: Call us all traitors again.

Mr. Caccia: He just gave us a gem of an interpretation of what this place is all about. He seems to believe that we in the House of Commons should not be motivated by ideology and political philosophy. That is exactly what this debate is all about. There is a big difference between that side and this side.

Mr. Benjamin: What is wrong with it being political?

Mr. Caccia: There is nothing wrong with developing debate and disagreeing.

Mr. Shields: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Hon. Member will look at the "blues" because I said exactly that. Why do they not stand up and say that they are against the free trade agreement for ideological or political or philosophical reasons? That is the whole point. They are not doing that. They are using all sorts of other tactics.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, because we are driven by ideology, we are speaking in this debate on every amendment. That is why we are in it. We profoundly disagree with the things the Parliamentary Secretary and others have said.

The debate on this motion is on the question of fairness in the application of the law versus the fairness of the law itself. In this amendment we are saying it is wrong to pass a Bill that will not address the unfairness of the U.S. law when it comes to the settlement of disputes. We are saying that the law we are passing here should address the unfairness of the law, not just its application. To do otherwise means whenever we disagree we will deal only with the symptoms of the disease.

Mr. McDermid: Read Article 1906.

Mr. Caccia: I am just dealing with what the Parliamentary Secretary said earlier. We will deal with the application of U.S. law, not with the cause of the problem, which is the U.S. law. As a result of the Bill we are passing and the clause we are addressing right now, we will be able to deal only with the application of the law and we will not be able to say what is wrong with it, what is unfair and what ought to be changed, as we have done up until now through the system provided by the organization called GATT.

• (2110)

On the one hand the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) went to New York in April of last year and, in an interview with The Wall Street Journal, said that U.S. trade remedy laws cannot apply to Canada. On the other hand Clayton Yeutter, the chief U.S. trade representative, when he revised the summary of the agreement which we are debating here tonight, said that U.S. countervailing duty and anti-dumping law will remain intact and unchanged. This is a complete contradiction of what our Prime Minister said 18 months earlier in New York when interviewed by The Wall Street Journal.

Under the proposed Bill we will no longer be able to dispute the fairness of the law, we will only be able to dispute the application of the law. I submit that that is a very serious departure and that it can be very dangerous for future Canadian interest in the legislation.

We have many amendments still to come and only 48 minutes before closure will be imposed on debate on this Bill. I will, therefore, yield the floor to my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry to proceed with the next group of amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague has said, we are under closure rules and will not have time to debate all the amendments. Therefore, as important as the next grouping of four amendments is, I would like to defer moving those particular amendments in order that we can move on to the next grouping.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): That is in order. The next motions are Motion Nos. 52 and 70 which will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 52 will also apply to Motion No. 70.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry) moved:

Motion No. 52

That Bill C-130 be amended by adding immediately after line 28 at page 41 the following:

"49. All processed agricultural products containing the sum of 10 percent or more by weight of farm products defined by the (National) Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act shall be placed on the import control list effective January 1, 1989."

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

Motion No. 70.

That Bill C-130 be amended in Clause 112 by adding immediately after line 19 at page 85 the following:

"(3) Where it appears at any time to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that agricultural processed products entering Canada from the United States contain 10 per cent by weight of supply or price managed ingredients, those products shall be placed on the Import Control List."

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in examining the very complex and sometimes very technical issues surrounding the trade debate, it is important that at times we bring it back to the basics of people's livelihoods, their jobs, their income, their industry and their commitment across the country. The amendments we have presented focus very clearly on a matter of concern to people in the agricultural community.

If I might, I will quote a statement which appeared in the Portage paper in the riding held by the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer). The article reports a statement made by Mr. Archie McLean, Vice-President of McCain Food, the largest Canadian-owned food processing industry. The article reads:

McLean said the agreement, which would eliminate most trade barriers between the two countries over 10 years, is a disaster for Canadian farmers and for workers in factories that process farm produce.

"We're going to survive and thrive as a corporation," he said. "We can pick up our factories and go south, but our farmers cannot do that and our factory workers cannot do that."

Under free trade, processing companies will want to buy cheaper U.S. potatoes, McLean said. And they won't want to pay the shipping costs to move them from American farms to plants in Canada, he added.

"If you look around the world, you will find most french fry factories are near growers."

McLean said about 720,000 Canadians work on farms and in food processing and one-quarter of those jobs could disappear as a result of the trade deal.

He said Canada's geography and climate make it impossible for it to compete with the United States in the food industry and he suggested agriculture be exempt from the agreement.

The article continues with further statements by Mr. McLean. Mr. McLean was a member of the advisory group which we were told was closely consulted. I have in my possession a letter which he wrote to the former Minister for International Trade, the Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), in which he declared that he was a hard-core Tory. He did not say he was a New Democrat, a Socialist, a Liberal, or a Grit. He was a Tory. He said that as a Tory he could say that the trade deal is a disaster. One must assume that he is not speaking from a partisan point of view but from a concern about his industry.

The town of Portage la Prairie, a nice community in the central part of Manitoba, is going to lose its largest industry, and not because Canadians cannot compete, are not entrepreneurs, or are not adventuresome, but because of a thing called climate. Portage la Prairie has temperatures of 20 and 30 degrees below in the winter. We have to put big bins up and pump heat into them in order to keep things warm. Due to our geography we do not grow a couple of crops a year. We have transportation costs.

As a result, if you buy your potatoes further south you can get them for about $90 a tonne. In Portage la Prairie they cost $120 a tonne and in New Brunswick they cost $140 a tonne. The food processing companies which make the frozen French fries, the chicken pot pie dinners, and all the rest are simply saying that they will survive because capital can move. That is the story of the trade deal. This is a deal for big capital which can move and need not worry about boundaries. Mr. McLean put his finger on it. The workers cannot move, nor can the farmers. They have to stay on the land in their communities.

We admit that this deal favours corporate capital but it does not favour farmers or workers because they do not have that flexibility. They cannot push a button and move money around in seconds. This deal clearly discriminates and does not take into account that Canada is on the northern part of the continent, has a harsh winter climate, and must move things long distances, which involves transportation costs which must be paid for.

Over the years we have learned that if we want to be even close to self-sufficient in food, we must provide protection for the farmers and industries which provide that self-sufficiency in food. With one swoop under this agreement the Government, which totally disregards the reality of geography and climate, is going to eliminate those jobs and that procedure. It has nothing to do with the question of whether we are competitive or not or whether Canadians are innovative or not. It simply comes down to reality, a hard sort of reality, but that is what has made us different. We have fought the elements and conquered them. We have found ways of dealing with them and we have used the public sector to do it. We have used the public economy to provide for the means and instruments and policies to ensure we can survive and prosper on the northern part of the continent, and we have always done it in our own judicious way. The fact is that we are changing the right to make those decisions.

Mr. Benjamin: This is incredible. Why did you not say that when you were Minister of Transport?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I will tell you why. It is because our Government retained the right to make choices that modernized the entire transportation system of western Canada, but not according to the Neanderthal from Regina East who did not want us to do anything about it. That is what we mean by being an independent Government with the right to make decisions in this Parliament for Canadians and by Canadians. As a result, we have preserved the great economy of western Canada.

Mr. Shields: That is right, with the national energy policy.

Mr. Axworthy: That is what we are fighting for today. We are fighting to retain the right of Canadians to make those kind of choices. We say that very clearly to all the loud mouths opposite who are now embarrassed. I can tell the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) is embarrassed because he knows that his own Province of Saskatchewan, a year or two ago when the surveys were done, was in favour of free trade but is now overwhelmingly against it because the farmers of Saskatchewan, just like the farmers of Manitoba and the farmers in southwestern Ontario, realize that it is a bad deal for farmers and a bad deal for the food industry and that it will open up for destruction the supply management system in Canada.

We can put this to a test. We brought in an amendment which will test once again the fate of the Government. The Government says there are no problems. All right, put it on the import control list. Make sure that any produce that faces us can go on the import control list.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is talking about something about which he knows absolutely nothing. What he should be aware of is that the Government of Canada, this Government of Canada, has placed on the import control list all dairy products that have been requested by the industry.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Benjamin: Sit down!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I am very tempted to make an aside, about what up until now has not been a point of order, that you must know something about the subject you are speaking about. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Axworthy: The Member will have a chance to debate if he is still with us by 9.45. I would say as well that Winnipeg is in Manitoba. Just because the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has forgotten where Winnipeg, Manitoba is in the last four years is no reason why that Member should.

Manitobans in the next election are going to remember this Government. They will put this Government out of business because it tried to put Manitoba out of business. The fact is that we are moving amendments which clearly address the concerns of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Canadian Food Processors. In fact they were raised by the representatives of the largest industry in Canada. In some cases, this goes to the heart of the debate. I think we all basically know that agriculture, the use of the land, is the base of this country. We are not going to stand by and watch this Government ruin it. We are not going to stand by and watch this Government dismantle and undermine and erode the principles, programs, and policies we have built up over the years to ensure that Canadian agriculture can survive and prosper and be maintained in a stable way.

We have done it our own way. If one reads the agreement, one can see that it is not only what is in the agreement which undermines the country; it is the new American legislation which puts on the table for new negotiations, the next round of free trade negotiations, the supply and management system, the standards relating to grain, and all the various programs the Americans do not like. That is on the next hit list.

What kind of leverage will this Government have to deal with that? Is it going to back away and not deal any more? Is it going to say "no"? The Government has said "yes" to every single demand the United States Government has made in the last four years, whether it be steel, pharmaceuticals, or softwood lumber. Every time the American Government says "jump", our Government asks "how high?" That is the problem with this kind of agreement.

This agreement takes away the power of the Canadian Governments, federal and provincial, to ensure that we have the freedom to choose the kind of industry we want and the kind of economy we want. As Mr. McLean, that hard core, true blue Tory from New Brunswick who also happens to be the Executive Vice-President of the largest Canadian food processing firm and speaks for that industry, said, "this trade deal is a disaster for farmers and workers". That is why the farmers and workers are for it, and they can have all the support of editorialists and corporate presidents because they do not have the kind of will and interest and commitment the people of Canada have. That is the difference between them and us. We represent the people of Canada, not the Government's powerful friends.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief, lucky for all of you. I want to say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), who was the architect of the destruction of the Crow's Nest Pass rate and who has the unmitigated gall to get up and talk about the problems of distance and geography for Canadian agriculture producers, that his speech has to be the worst kind of hypocrisy I have ever heard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: If the hon. gentleman has had a change of heart, if he has changed his mind, I wish he would have the heart to get up and admit it. What he did to Canadian agriculture producers from 1981 to 1983 was unforgivable then and it is unforgivable now.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Benjamin: I want to say some things about agricultural producers in my part of Canada and in every other part of Canada with respect to the free trade agreement, and I do not want to hear anymore hypocritical remarks from Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: They have been all over the map, in and out of government. Let us now talk about the Tories who all agreed we have to keep the Crow. Did they bring it back? No. Let us look at the free trade agreement. Let us talk about egg producers. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to look at the trade agreement.

Mr. McDermid: Which page?

Mr. Benjamin: Let me find the page number. It is page 701, paragraph 3. I want the Parliamentary Secretary to look at it while I am reminding him of a few things. The Canadian Egg Marketing Agency requested to appear before the House of Commons committee. Its request was never even acknowledged.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Benjamin: It is a worried public entity.

Mr. McDermid: They are not one.

Mr. Benjamin: All right. The U.S. egg industry has attempted to bend the text of the free trade agreement to undermine the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency. I have some large egg producers near Regina.

Mr. McDermid: Show me where it is undermined?

Mr. Benjamin: Just wait for it. There were four items isolated: harmonized standards, tariff removal, allocation of the new global imports, and Article 701.3 of the treaty. The Government has satisfied CEMA, the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, harmonized standards and tariff removal. CEMA states that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has guaranteed those two areas and that the other two issues remain unresolved. I want the Parliamentary Secretary who has the same hairdo as I have—and that is about the only thing that we have in common—to listen carefully.

• (2130)

Mr. Boudria: They have the same barber.

Mr. Benjamin: Grass does not grow on a busy street.

"The FTA increases the amount of imports Canada is obliged to accept—" and I want my friend to pay attention "—to approximately the level of global and supplemental import permits—".

When CEMA proposed to the Government elaborating the solution the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of Agriculture, to quote CEMA, "will continue to work with us to find a solution". The Minister of Agriculture assured the agency: "—we are not captured by this wording 'under the current definition of a public entity.' In fact, the Minister and his officials have repeatedly assured us that a dispute panel reviewing this issue would like to rule in Canada's favour." That is what the Minister of Agriculture said.

However, when we get down to what the U.S. of A. is doing, CEMA states:

> In the considered view of our Washington counsel "it seems to be beyond a reasonable doubt, now, that once the FTA takes effect, the United States government, with the energetic help of the domestic industry, will closely scrutinize virtually every aspect of CEMA's removal program. It is equally certain that the purpose of this scrutiny is to prepare an action against the removal program under Article 701.3"

In other words, the U.S. Government, the U.S. administration, dictates and butts in with respect to what the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency can do. In fact, they are allowed to do that under everything. Even CEMA cautions the Government against these trade talks and that it holds great risk for Canadian egg producers. Today, states CEMA, it takes the same position. In fact, it goes on to state that the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency holds the same view as it pertains to a threat to the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Everything the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister for International Trade have said to us in this House and outside this House has been categorically denied or opposed by the membership of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and by the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency. My hon. friend from Alberta—

Mr. Shields: Athabasca.

Mr. Benjamin: —ought to look at what the delegates of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool did last month. They voted 80 per cent against this deal.

Mr. Shields: Because they were listening to uninformed rhetoric.

Mr. Benjamin: No. They split 50-50 in December of last year. In July of this year they voted 80 per cent against the deal. My hon. friend from Alberta should go to talk to some of his Tory friends who are members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and he will get an earful, provided that he can listen.

What the Minister of Agriculture told us and what the Minister for International Trade told us has been denied and rebutted by the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, by legal counsel in Washington and by a congressional committee. In fact, the United States administration has clearly accepted and promised to act upon an interpretation of Article 701.3 which would severely undermine Canada's egg marketing-egg supply management system.

The egg industry, let alone poultry, grain or a host of other agricultural producers, including raspberries—and we are sure going to give the Government the raspberry on this one—state that the position is undermined and opposed by the very people that this Government claims it is going to create a market for. The United States has already made it perfectly clear that it will not hold still for any increase in the Canadian ability to market agricultural products in the United States. The Government is wrong on this one, as it is wrong on most of the other ones.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I regret to inform the Hon. Member but his time has expired. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on debate.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just spoke was right on two counts. First, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) speaks out of both sides of his mouth, or with forked tongue. The other thing that he says which is accurate is that we have the same style of haircut. Other than that, he was way off base tonight.

Let me cover the amendment that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is attempting to bring in. I do not pretend to be an expert on agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I know what the agreement says about agriculture. I watched the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry who says that they represent the people and that he knows all about the agricultural industry and so on and so forth. He waxed eloquent here on it tonight. He is the only Liberal on the Prairies and he says: "We represent the people". Who is going to believe that?

He has been going around the country for the last I do not know how long quoting Mr. Archie McLean, Vice-President of McCain Foods. Mr. McLean wrote this letter. We invited him to appear before the committee. We had a time slot for him and everything else. We were going to ask him where he got all his figures from, these wild exaggerated figures that he was producing. Do you know what, Mr. Speaker? He did not show up. He cancelled out at the last minute because he knew that he could not substantiate the figures that he was throwing around. The Food Processors Association does not back him up on what he is saying. The only person they have been able to quote over the last period of time is Archie McLean, Vice-President of McCain Foods.

Do you want to know what his bottom line is, Mr. Speaker? I will tell you. It is: "Get rid of marketing boards". That is his bottom line. That is what he wants to do. It has nothing to do with the free trade agreement—not a thing. Archie—and he was afraid to come before committee because that is the first question I would have asked him—did not have the guts to show up. He is against marketing boards. He wants marketing boards done away with. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry sitting there smirking knows that full well.

The amendment that the Hon. Member proposes is totally unnecessary. Article XI of the GATT allows countries to restrict imports to the extent necessary to allow the operation of the supply management programs. There are some supply management programs here. As a matter of fact, since the free trade agreement was signed, as my hon. friend pointed out earlier, we have added some products to the import control list. The way the opposition Members talk it sounds as if they have not read the agreement.

• (2140)

Mr. Axworthy: No, it's your Minister who has not read the agreement.

Mr. McDermid: Article 710, International Obligations, states:

> Unless otherwise specifically provided for in this Chapter, the Parties retain their rights and obligations with respect to agricultural, food, beverage and certain related goods under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and agreements negotiated under the GATT, including their rights and obligations under GATT Article XI.

GATT Article XI gives us the right to impose quotas in the future. The authority to do so is found in the Export and Import Permits Act. If the importation of an agricultural product undermines the effectiveness of a supply management program we can, in accordance with our GATT rights and Article 710 of the agreement, place that produce on the import control list. We have done it already.

Mr. Benjamin: Now go to Article 701.

Mr. McDermid: We have done it already in the dairy end. For the Hon. Member to stand up here and say "listen, we are going to watch how you vote tomorrow night on this particular amendment, you guys, because if you do not support this amendment, then you are against management boards, and farmers" is nonsense.

Mr. Benjamin: That's true.

Mr. McDermid: What nonsense. Farmers know full well that, in this agreement, we have protected the marketing boards. That is why the dairy farmers of Canada support the free trade agreement.

Mr. Benjamin: Go to Article 701.

Mr. McDermid: They came out and supported it. Would the farmers have supported the agreement if we had destroyed their supply management system? Of course they would not.

Then I hear about the chicken producers.

Mr. Benjamin: Eggs this time. It was chickens last time.

Mr. Foster: And they are coming home to roost, too.

Mr. McDermid: I probably have one of the largest chicken processing plants in Canada in my constituency. Since the free trade agreement was signed that plant is putting in a $14 million addition and hiring 300 more people. This is a food processing industry in this country. Two young entrepreneurs started selling eggs door to door. Today they have brought forward one of the finest food processing operations in Canada. Are they shying away from the free trade agreement? Not on your life. They are accepting the challenge, expanding, hiring people, and exporting their products into the United States. I hear this doom and gloom about how Portage la Prairie will disappear, and all these terrible things will happen. The doom and gloom boys are at it again tonight. They love to try and convince the Canadian public that, because of this very excellent free trade agreement which was signed between the two sovereign nations that are the best allies and friends in the world, Canada will somehow magically disappear off the face of the earth. There is nothing further from the truth. When the election campaign comes along, and we are looking forward to it—

Mr. Axworthy: Hurry, let's go.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry will be ducking for cover, I guarantee. We recommend defeat of this superfluous amendment that does not mean a thing, because our farmers and marketing systems are protected under the agreement.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary believed what he was talking about, and if he believed that the SAGITS that were appointed by the Government were meaningful and were going to do anything, the amendment before the House would have been contained in the free trade deal. Mr. Archie McLean, who is a member of the agriculture and food processing industry was a member of SAGITS, and the SAGITS recommended that this be in the deal. However, the Government did not put it in the deal because the Americans did not want it in the deal. They want to take over the whole Canadian food processing industry.

If anyone looks at Mr. McLean's letter, he or she will see that 22 of the 26 largest food processing companies in Canada are American owned, for example, Proctor and Gamble, Nabisco, and so on. They do not want to process food in this country. They want to process it in the United States and ship into the Canadian market.

The Parliamentary Secretary talks about who is in favour of the deal. He should go down and talk to the UPA in Quebec. It is not in favour of the deal. He should talk to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. It is not in favour of the deal. He should talk to the advisory board to the Canadian Wheat Board. On July 17 it passed a resolution in which it opposed the free trade agreement because it would undermine the ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to be an effective marketing agency on behalf of all Canadian grain growers.

There is a large number of Canadian agricultural groups extremely opposed to the agreement, but nobody is more concerned than the supply management sectors of the Canadian agriculture, the dairy producers and the poultry producers that operate in this country by an administered price. We have in place import and production controls, and we have the most healthy agricultural sector anywhere in western Europe or in North America because of our supply management system. Knowledgeable people who have looked at this deal believe that in the long run it will destroy our marketing board and supply management system.

There are two factors involved. First, there is a provision in the GATT agreement, Article 711, which provides the umbrella that allows us to have import controls. The Americans are going to GATT, as are the Cairns Group and others, stating that they want to get rid of that provision of the GATT. We say in this agreement that we are going to GATT, agreeing to get rid of all agricultural subsidies. Canadian farmers do not think of supply management as being a subsidy, but American farmers and the American Government believe that something like 50 per cent of the income of Canadian dairy farmers is considered a subsidy because it results from the supply management system. That is one aspect. When GATT sees us giving in on many of these things with the import controls and so on, that will be the next thing to fall in the GATT negotiations.

More important is the whole food processing industry. It believes if the tariff is removed on highly processed foods, such as Mr. McLean is stating, then it is much cheaper to process the food in the United States and bring it into Canada, because it is much cheaper to buy it in the United States. For instance, when he made a presentation to our caucus task force in February, 1988, in Fredericton, he stated that their plant which produces pizza at Grand Falls in New Brunswick employed some 250 people. Because of the cost of the cheese used in that pizza production—and they are the largest producer in Canada of frozen pizza—they will simply have to move to the United States. There we lose 250 jobs.

That is typical of the whole system, unless a mechanism is put in place, as was recommended by the SAGITS and as is recommended in this amendment before us tonight, so that all highly processed food that has more than 10 per cent by weight of supply management products such as milk, cheese, butter, eggs, poultry, or turkey, is put on the import control list.

• (2150)

The Parliamentary Secretary talks about putting things on the import control list, such as the Government did for yoghurt and ice-cream. He did not say that they have ever negotiated any limit. They have put them on the import control list but there has been no limit applied. The United States has already appealed that to GATT. If we look at the drafting instructions which came out of the United States Congress, they have a hit list that says: "First of all, we think that you have made fairly good progress in this free trade deal, in knocking down the whole supply management system for poultry and eggs and turkeys and so on, but we want all those tariffs removed in the long haul".

There is no question about what the United States position is going to be at the MTN in Geneva. There is no question of how successful they were and how the Europeans were at the GATT on the wine industry.

This Government is going to GATT, supporting the United States, and saying: "We are going to GATT to get rid of all the subsidies". The United States has a mechanism called the PSM, the producer subsidy equivalent, which applies to our supply management. They are going there and saying: "We are getting rid of all subsidies in this negotiation of the GATT round". This very simple amendment did not come simply from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). It came from the Government's own advisory group. It is a small chink in the armour to try to maintain that supply management system. I do not believe that anybody can honestly look at what the Government is doing, first of all, by removing all tariffs on highly processed food, going to the GATT, saying that it is supporting the American position on Article XI, and really believing that it wants to maintain the supply management system. We are pretty sure that it does not. If we listen to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), he says: "Yes, we want to get rid of it". If we listen to what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) says at the OECD meetings, he says: "Yes, we want to get rid of supply management".

There is no question that if this Government were ever to implement this deal, if it were ever to be re-elected—and hopefully, for the benefit of Canadians farmers, neither one of those things will ever occur—that the supply management system would be destroyed in Canada, because that is its policy. It is not honest enough to say it publicly, but that is clearly the direction it is taking.

It is very interesting to note that so many of the agricultural groups, in spite of all their tricks and so on, are on to them. I was very, very interested in the decision by the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee to oppose it. I was interested in the Saskatchewan Pool voting 120 to 24 to reject supporting this free trade deal. People in the horticulture industry in British Columbia and Ontario are extremely concerned that their industry will be destroyed.

This is a good amendment. The Government should be accepting it.

Mr. McDermid: Why?

Mr. Foster: It is the minimum type of thing that was recommended by the Special Advisory Group on International Trade which the Government appointed and, of course, swore to secrecy. Thank heaven there was one who was willing to stand up and say what was going on because, otherwise, this recommendation would not have even been made. It is not only supported by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry; it is supported by practically every agricultural group in the country.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Foster: The Canadian Federation of Agriculture supported it. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture supported it. The UPA supported it. Practically every responsible group involved in the dairy and poultry industry, plus those industries themselves, supported this recommendation.

When we were going through that very serious downturn in the agricultural economy in the last couple of years, the sectors that were surviving better than any other were the dairy and poultry producers. They had an administered price relating to the cost of production. That is going to be thrown away in this free trade deal. We do not have to look very far through the recommendations of Mr. McLean to see that this deal not only changes the whole situation with regard to supply management but puts the United States into the driver's seat. As we remove those tariffs, those 80 per cent of multinationals that are now the food processors of this country could easily move back across the border, get their supplies and their produce there, process it and ship it into Canada, and we lose hundreds of thousands of jobs in the deal.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think that there is probably no sector more volatile to international trade actions than agriculture. I think that all of my colleagues would probably agree with that. We on this side of the House know that our farmers can compete on an equal footing with anyone in the world. We know that.

An Hon. Member: Including supply management commodities?

Mr. Shields: We are convinced of that. This is evidenced by the fact that we export almost $4 billion in agricultural products to the United States alone. We export almost $5 billion to 60 other countries in the world. This is at a time when there has been a trade war in agricultural products between the United States and the European Common Market. Our farmers can compete.

Mr. McDermid: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: What we need for our farmers and for the agricultural industry is more access and more secure access to the huge U.S. market. This agreement achieves that, while at the same time it preserves our right to maintain existing marketing boards and our right to implement new ones if we see fit. It is in the agreement. That is what our hon. friends across the way fail to grasp, to express, and to understand.

The agreement also maintains our farm income stabilization and price support programs, not to mention the impact of reduced input cost that this Government has brought in the past.

By the end of the next decade agriculture and food products such as meat, livestock, grain, oilseeds, and all other products we have produced in abundance in this country, will be able to compete on an equal footing in the American market without the burden of tariffs and other barriers at the border. This is important because in 1986 over $1 billion worth of beef and pork and their products were exported to the U.S. by Canadians. This will secure that market and provide the framework to expand. That is what the free trade agreement does for agriculture.

Speaking for the beef industry, Stan Wilson, President of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association had this to say: "For the beef industry, it would mean that processors and wholesalers could develop more permanent markets for finished products, since we would exempt each other from the provisions of our respective meat import laws. Instead of exporting live cattle we would employ many Canadians in processing and adding value to these animals. Our packing industry would become more competitive because of the economies of scale that additional cattle would provide".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The Hon. Member on a point of order.

Mr. Allmand: I wish to point out that this debate is ending now because the Government has imposed closure on—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I hope that it will come closer to being a point of order than the last one. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Shields: I wonder if I could have the indulgence of the House, Mr. Speaker, to finish my remarks.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Obviously, there is not unanimous consent.

• (2200)

The first question is on Motion No. 52 standing in the name of Mr. Axworthy.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The second question is on Motion No. 70 standing in the name of Mr. Langdon.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not have my full 10 minutes. Could I be first in the debate tomorrow?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, we would be glad to give consent for the Hon. Member to continue tomorrow if the Government agrees to give us a full day of debate tomorrow at report stage.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that if Hon. Members discuss the matter perhaps agreements would be worked out. I, of course, would be very pleased to hear representations at another time.

It being ten o'clock, pursuant to Order made Wednesday, August 17, 1988, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the report stage motions in amendment to the Bill now before the House.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Thank you for bringing to our attention the arduous task for the evening. Because of discussions between the three Parties we have worked out a procedure that we think will save the time of the Chair and certainly the House. There are a number of motions still on the Order Paper to be dealt with but if each of the remaining motions that were presented in my name and presented by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) would be deemed to be put and that all recorded divisions be deferred until tomorrow at 6 p.m., I think you would find there is unanimous consent to do that.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the proposal of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry supported by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor. Is there agreement?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and we agree with the proposal.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare all of the motions in the name of Mr. Axworthy moved and seconded by Mr. Caccia, and a recorded division on each motion deferred until tomorrow evening at six o'clock pursuant to a Special Order.

I also declare all of the motions in the name of Mr. Langdon moved and seconded by Mr. Angus and a recorded division on each motion deferred until tomorrow evening at six o'clock pursuant to Special Order.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, persuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to the two petitions numbered as follows: 332-5112 and 332-5153.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

CANADIAN HERITAGE LANGUAGES INSTITUTE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Secretary of State of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-152, intituled An Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL CAPITAL ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Public Works) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-153, an Act to amend the National Capital Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-317, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (severance pay).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, the intention of this Bill is to provide some protection, especially for middle-aged and older workers who find themselves increasingly vulnerable to plant closures.

The provisions of this Bill would be that anyone who has worked 20 years or more for an employer with 50 employees or more would receive at least six months' severance in the case of a plant closure. I do not assume that this would mean the worker concerned would be without suffering at all, but at least this would provide some protection in the face of circumstances that he or she cannot control, and provide some opportunity for re-adjusting himself or herself to new circumstances and new challenges.

I hope that this Bill can be considered by the House before long and that it can be given the approval that so many middle-aged and older workers seek.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege this morning to rise in my place under Standing Order 106 to present a petition signed by several constituents urging the Government to call an election on the free trade deal, in that they feel that the people of Canada should be the ultimate judge and jury on this matter.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table two petitions signed by residents of the city of Winnipeg in which the petitioners state that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The petitioners believe that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the United States market, which was a key objective in these negotiations, but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of people from Toronto which states that whereas families throughout Canada need high quality, available, and affordable child care, the Government has repeatedly recommended that it would make services available; and whereas the child care Act has neither national objectives nor necessary funding arrangements and will not ensure that families have access to high quality child care, the child care Act is not in the best interests of young children, women, or families. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to withdraw the child care Act forthwith.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF TEN WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is also my duty to present to you these petitions from some of my constituents, in particular residents of the communities of Acadieville, Saint-Ignace, Richibouctou and Saint-Louis.

The petitioners deplore Employment and Immigration's decision to increase the period of eligibility for unemployment insurance from 10 to 16 weeks. This decision fails to take into account the high rate of unemployment in the rural regions of my riding. The petitioners request that Parliament take corrective action and reinstate the 10- week eligibility period.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present this morning. The first petition is from residents of the city of Thunder Bay, and some other communities, who note that schizophrenia is a major illness in Canada affecting approximately 1 per cent of the population. It causes severe mental anguish and suffering to the patients and to their relatives. It costs Canadian society more than $3 billion annually in direct health care and in other support costs. The petitioners note research findings about the biochemical nature of this disorder, and the hope for a cure. The petitioners note that there is limited support for this research.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will in the future be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is from residents of the cities of Toronto, Oshawa, and some other primarily southern Ontario communities. The petitioners note that Canadian families need high quality, available, and affordable child care services. It has been repeatedly recommended that in order to make these services available to families, the Government of Canada must introduce legislation containing national objectives and appropriate mechanisms for the development of a comprehensive, non-profit child care system accessible to all families. The child care Act proposed by the Government contains neither national objectives nor necessary funding arrangements. Consequently, it is not in the best interests of young children, women, or families in Canada. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to withdraw the proposed child care Act forthwith.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the third petition is from residents of the city of Thunder Bay who note that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. In the course of the bilateral trade negotiations the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. However, the petitioners assert that the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Given this attack on Canadian policy freedom in the free trade agreement, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the supposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have one petition from a number of Canadians. The petitioners indicate that families throughout Canada need high quality, available, and affordable child care services. To make those services available for families, the Government of Canada must introduce legislation containing national objectives and appropriate mechanisms for the development of a comprehensive, non-profit child care system which is accessible to all families throughout Canada. The child care Act proposed by the Government of Canada contains neither national objectives nor necessary funding arrangements. It will not ensure that families have access to high quality day care. The proposed child care Act is not in the best interests of young Canadians or children.

The undersigned petitioners call upon Parliament to withdraw the proposed child care Act forthwith.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition on the issue of child care. The undersigned petition that Parliament withdraw the proposed child care Act forthwith. The petitioners feel that the proposed child care Act contains neither national objectives nor necessary funding arrangements, and will not ensure that families have access to high quality child care. The petition is signed by some 30 Canadians, a number of whom reside in my constituency.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 361 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 361 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES IN THUNDER BAY AREA

Question No. 361—Mr. Angus:

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Parliamentary Secretary will know that I have stood in my place on a number of occasions regarding a question on the Order Paper standing in my name which has been there since March 15, 1988. It is a question which is designated for a 45-day response. As you know, Mr. Speaker, that means that the Government has no choice but to give the answer within the period of 45 days.

As I indicated previously, I put that question on the Order Paper on March 15. Today is August 23. I understand that it is a complicated question, however, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could advise if the Government is making some headway toward answering this question concerning the funds received from the Government of Canada by an individual named Jean Sirois.

Mr. Hawkes: The Hon. Member raised this only a few days ago.

Mr. Boudria: No, approximately two weeks ago.

Mr. Hawkes: At that point I undertook to look into the matter. Members will remember that this is a question which is asked of all Departments, agencies, and Crown corporations.

I previously advised the House that questions that are in series rather than a single question require the Government to respond from every single Department, agency, and Crown corporation. The Hon. Member could receive answers much more quickly to a large part of this issue with a somewhat simpler question. The inquiries I have made indicate that there is at least one, and perhaps a couple more Departments or agencies that have not responded. We have the answer to 99 per cent of the question, but until we have a 100 per cent answer it is not appropriate for me to bring it to the House.

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to make the usual preliminary ruling on some of the amendments that have been submitted. There are 17 motions in amendment set down on the Notice Paper in relation to Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Acts, 1977 and certain related Acts.

[Translation]

I am now ready to make a preliminary ruling on some of the motions that are admissible. I will return later today to make a complete and final ruling on the remaining motions.

[English]

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 7, 14, 15, and 17 are in order and each of them will be debated and voted upon separately.

Mr. Cassidy: Would you repeat that, Mr. Speaker, please?

Mr. Speaker: I will go slowly. I am sorry.

Mr. Cassidy: Just the numbers.

Mr. Speaker: The Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: On your final judgment, it is not to be anticipated that you will rule in order any of the other motions that are on the Order Paper, is that correct?

Mr. Speaker: I do not know that it is appropriate to necessarily get into what I am going to come back to the Chamber on, but there is no problem with these.

Mr. Cassidy: All right. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may have had some constructive discussion with the Table. If the Hon. Member would like to speak with the Chair after—

Mr. Cassidy: That is not a problem, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What I am going to do now is proceed with these motions when debate will commence.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides) moved:

Motion No 1

That Bill C-139 be amended in clause 6

(a) by striking out line 37 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"a taxpayer in excess of $20,000 (plus the provincial retail sales tax, if any) or such"

(b) by striking out line 41 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"passenger vehicle exceeds $20,000 (plus the provincial retail sales tax, if any) or"

(c) by striking out line 45 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"$20,000 (plus the provincial retail sales tax, if any) or that other prescribed"

(d) by striking out line 9 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"(iii) $20,000 (plus the provincial retail sales tax, if any) or such amount as".

M. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on Motion No. 1 because I understand that each motion ruled admissible by the Chair will be debated and voted upon separately. Consequently, on the basis of my understanding of the Speaker's ruling, I would like to speak on Motion No. 1.

Mr. Speaker, tax reform has given rise to all kinds of amendments, and I would say that the entire issue of whether or not to tax the automobile expenses of people who use their vehicules for business purposes has created an incredible amount of confusion.

The House of Commons Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has received a number of representations from various associations and accountant groups, and as a Committee we have made recommendations to this House to the effect that the reform proposed by the Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) regarding taxation of the automobile expenses of entrepreneurs, small businesses and others who use their own vehicles for business purposes made no sense.

I could quote all the evidence received by the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee. First, the Conservative government's proposal was astonishingly complex; on the other hand, it went against one of the objectives we on this side of the House have—and I imagine that is true of the other side as well—to encourage entrepreneurship and assist small and medium-sized business.

In achieving this objective, we must try to simplify our tax laws as much as possible, so that taxation, the many reports and all the complications, do not make it still more difficult for a man or a woman to get started in business, to be an entrepreneur, to open a small business, et cetera.

I don't need to tell you that the way the government is proposing to tax cars as well—and it intends to tax personal cars used for business purposes—will create complications and nightmares for independent workers. I am thinking, for example, of insurance agents and real-estate agents, who have to use their car to get around, of accountants who have to go and see their clients, and so on.

Mr. Speaker, by making recommendations, by exerting pressure, we have I believe partially succeeded in getting the Minister of Finance to accept certain changes. He has dropped most of the complications that he had introduced, keeping only two major changes. One of those is a limit of $20,000 per car, that is to say, if a taxpayer using his car for business purposes pays more than $20,000 for that car, he can claim capital cost allowance (CCA) on only the first $20,000 of the cost. Even if his car cost him $25,000 or $30,000, he will not be able to use a CCA rate applicable to an amount higher than $20,000.

We have no difficulty with this approach. There have of course been all sorts of representations made. At the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee we have looked at those representations, and we have analysed the average costs of cars normally purchased by companies. It seems fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that when the car in question is a company car, purchased for the use of salaried representatives, the problem isn't particularly serious.

It becomes serious, I believe, for agents, for independent workers, who don't have two cars. Most have only one: their family car is their business car, and now they are limited to a maximum of $20,000 for purposes of depreciation. I'm thinking of lawyers, accountants, insurance agents, sales reps, real-estate agents. Those people will certainly be penalized because of this maximum.

Furthermore I don't quite see the logic, because this same agent or lawyer could have a very luxurious office, which might cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, and he could depreciate from his income the value of that law office, that accounting office, even if the walls are made of gold and the doorknobs of silver. But when it comes to his automobile, he is told, "You can't buy yourself a car that costs more than $20,000. If you do, you won't be able to claim a CCA of more than $20,000."

Mr. Speaker, obviously, given the limitations on the receivable amendments at this stage of our debate—and the Standing Orders set strict limits—we can't move all sorts of amendments, and what we would like to do is try to make the Minister's proposal at least mean the same all across the country, because obviouly if you buy a $20,000 car you're going to pay $20,000 plus provincial sales tax. In some provinces there is no sales tax. In others, the sales tax is 8 per cent, 10 per cent, perhaps 12 per cent, so that the same car purchased by a taxpayer in Newfoundland, Quebec or Alberta would lead to different tax exemptions in each case because of the level of the provincial sales tax.

And the objective that Motion No. 1 aims at achieving is respect for the $20,000 limit that minister has set as the depreciable maximum on a car for which expenses are being claimed for tax purposes. We are suggesting that this ceiling be modified by adding to it the provincial sales tax, so that the same amount would be depreciable for all taxpayers, whether they be Albertans, Quebecers or Newfoundlanders.

I hope, Mr Speaker, that this measure, designed to ensure that all taxpayers are treated fairly, will be acceptable to the Government and that this House will approve the amendment, which is perhaps more technical than anything else but which would bring put Canadian taxpayers on a somewhat more equal footing, whichever province they live in.

• (1130)

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to my hon. friend. His motion is premised on two arguments and I want to make sure I have them accurately. The first is that provincial sales tax should be included in the limit because provincial sales taxes vary from region to region in Canada.

The second part of his argument is more interesting. He seems to be kicking against the whole notion of a limit or a limit set at $20,000.

Let me deal first with the second point. The Liberals are often called Limousine Liberals and I think I understand why. What the Member wants here is to have cars that cost over $20,000 to be fully deductible with the taxpayer footing the bill. What about a Chevrolet Corvette Coupe at $41,000, Mr. Speaker? Here I see a BMW 528E at $40,400, a Lincoln Mark VII at $36,000 and on and on it goes. The public, the taxpayer, should not have to foot the bill for those kinds of cars.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Hockin: This is crazy. A Cadillac Sedan de Ville I see here in December, 1987, cost $32,950. These prices all include federal sales tax. And we have a Toyota Camry LE wagon. All these are wonderful and very expensive cars, but why should the taxpayers have to foot the bill for them?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Most of them are junk.

Mr. Hockin: The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) knows cars well and I am sure he would agree that the taxpayer should not be carrying the bill.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Agreed.

Mr. Hockin: I want the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) to understand that a Dodge Charger, a Ford Tempo, a Hyundai Stellar are inexpensive cars, but there are other more expensive cars that still cost less than $20,000. For example, a Chevrolet Celebrity Eurosport and my car, a Chevrolet Caprice Classic four-door, is $17,500. What about a Buick Somerset and a Volkswagen Golf? These are fine cars and cost under $20,000.

Mr. Boudria: Why don't you drive one?

Mr. Hockin: There is no need to change the limit, Mr. Speaker. You can find a very fine car for less than $20,000. Why does the Liberal Party want us to move to the Liberal approach to things and have all cars, no matter how expensive they are, deductible? That is not our position. We believe in fairness. Our notion of fairness is to stop at $20,000.

I am very proud of the stand of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on this position because he has taken a basic position of fairness. The Liberal Party would rub that out, erase the distinction and we would find that every taxpayer—I do not think the NDP would like this either—paying for BMWs, Cadillacs and so on. It just does not make sense.

The second point is to add the provincial sales tax into the limit. For example, if provincial sales tax is 7 per cent in one province then that amount should be added to the $20,000 and the whole thing considered as the limitation on the cost of an automobile to be deducted for tax purposes. It is quite true in this country that different provinces have different sales taxes. There are many different factors that go into the price of a car from region to region, not just provincial sales tax. For instance, transportation costs are a major cost of a car in different regions of Canada. We all know that.

Mr. Boudria: They have equalized the cost of them now.

Mr. Hockin: I suppose if you could buy a car in Oshawa or in St. Thomas beside Talbotville where Fords are made, or in Oakville, they would be somewhat cheaper than buying cars in Newfoundland or in the Yukon. Transportation is a major part of the differential in costs.

Mr. Boudria: No. They have equalized them.

Mr. Hockin: We also have different retail margins in different parts of the country. Those retail margins have to do not just with volume but with real estate taxes, how expensive it is to have a property in some parts of Canada compared to others. All of these factors mean that it would be silly for the Government to identify one particular factor, namely, the provincial sales tax and add that to the $20,000 limit.

Let us keep the limit at $20,000. It is clear for everybody. You can get a very fine car for that amount of money and I ask the House to defeat the motion and stay with the sanity and the fairness that is inherent in the tax reform proposal.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of taking part over the course of the past year in the deliberations of the Finance Committee on tax reform. On the side of the New Democratic Party, we were in a somewhat unusual and at times difficult position because we disagreed fundamentally with the tax reform because of the lack of fairness, the rates, and that the Conservatives had chosen to continue to allow special privileges for people and corporations of wealth for capital gains, et cetera, et cetera. At the same time we had to deal with a lot more specific concerns from people who have to work with the tax system on a day-to-day basis.

One of the most difficult issues was the question of automobile expenses. We heard many submissions. Perhaps it is because so many people can get their teeth around auto expenses. That was an issue which provoked probably more comment and contributions than any other single issue. It is partly because people who use their automobiles for business and have to do so felt that they should not be singled out when the Government of Canada moved—and I believe legitimately—to try to prevent the taxpayer from having to subsidize BMWs, Jaguars and the Lincoln the Minister used to drive before he became a Minister. He traded down, I think that is what he said.

Mr. Hockin: I have always had a Chevrolet.

Mr. Cassidy: I have just been reading about the Minister, who was allegedly one of the brighter lights hired for the founding of York University. In 1961 only Ed Broadbent emerged as the next Prime Minister of Canada according to Judy Steed's book.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: However, that is not relevant. Let me come back to the question at issue.

An Hon. Member: Is Broadbent irrelevant?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: For the record, the Minister still has the car that Ed told him to buy. I hope it is a sporty model because everyone knows not to drive with the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) if he is at the wheel. It is a very scary experience, not for reasons of ideology but for other reasons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: And they are now giving an award to John Crosbie. That is very scary to me.

We will support this amendment. This issue came up in the committee on a number of occasions. As the Minister and the Government know, the committee in the end decided to take away the double pro-rationing of the capital cost, depreciation cost, of having an automobile because we felt it was so complicated that it should just be taken away. We tried to put other means in and we recognized in so doing that it is not an easy issue to handle.

The issue here is one of regional fairness. While it is not possible perhaps to compute exactly what the shipping costs are of a motor car to Newfoundland or to British Columbia if it is produced in central Canada—

Mr. Boudria: They are equalized.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) says they are equalized.

Mr. Boudria: Yes. They have been for three years.

Mr. Cassidy: But someone who purchases an automobile in Newfoundland may get an automobile which is shipped indirectly by sea from Europe or Japan and will not have to pay shipping costs in the way that person would have to pay shipping costs if that car were shipped from California or Oshawa. However, the sales tax that is paid differs from province to province. The result of the Government's action is that a certain minor privilege, but a privilege nonetheless, is given to individuals or companies that purchase cares for business use in Alberta while individuals or companies that purchase cars in New Brunswick or Newfoundland will not have that privilege.

• (1140)

In Alberta, there is no provincial sales tax. Therefore, if the capital cost that is entered into the depreciation schedules for the automobile is $20,000, that is the total purchase price of the car. In Newfoundland where there is an 11 per cent or 12 per cent sales tax, that has to be taken off the top. As a consequence, the maximum value of the motor car that can be allowed for depreciation purposes is about $18,000, or $2,000 less. That is what is really unfair.

Effectively, the Government is saying that those in Alberta and provinces with low sales taxes will get luxury models, and those in eastern Canada where the sales taxes tend to be quite high will have to do with standard models, without automatic transmissions or without air conditioning or some of the other extras that make a business automobile more comfortable to travel in for someone who is constantly in his car on business. This is not a major issue, but it is an amendment that is appropriate to bring before the House.

In this case, we should listen to what the people were telling us, particularly those from down east, when they said that it was unfair and that this unfairness was something that could be fixed. The cost of fixing it is very modest to the treasury, and of course, if people feel that the system they are being asked to conform to is not particularly fair, then voluntary compliance will weaken. The Government will therefore lose on voluntary compliance what it might gain in additional revenues through the unfairness enshrined in this clause which the amendment seeks to change.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the motion offered to the House by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). I just heard a new expression coming from a Tory. The Minister said that they believe in fairness. That is profound, and it is certainly a brand new concept for the Conservatives to believe in fairness.

We are glad to see this new initiative. I hope that initiative is applied when the Conservative Party chooses candidates, that it will apply when qualifying or disqualifying candidates in the riding of York—Peel, for instance, not to name anyone.

In his response, the Minister said that he was not willing to entertain the proposal offered to us by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. He said that the provincial sales taxes were not the only major expenditures involved in buying a car which differs from one part of the country to the other. He used as an example transportation costs for North American automobiles which are different in one part of the country than they are in another. I would suggest that the Minister ask his officials to prepare better briefing notes.

[Translation]

The report on tax reform by the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee, Mr. Speaker, says on page 59, and I would like to draw to the Minister's attention the second paragraph, where it says,

> The average "non-fleet price" for the . . .
> . . . Canadian Automobile Leasing Association . . .
> . . . was $21,157, . . .

So we see that first of all the amount is too low, because . . .

> The average . . . price [is in fact] $21,157 . . .

. . . at the time we are speaking. And I would ask the Minister to listen carefully to the sentence that follows:

> . . . a price that included freight, pre-delivery inspection, dealer mark-up, sales tax and licence fee.

Good! A little further along we find the following sentence:

> The issue of freight is not considered a problem, however, given the equalization policy followed by most automobile manufacturers in Canada.

About three years ago, Mr. Speaker, North American automobile manufacturers equalized freight charges throughout the continent.

[English]

If a person buys a North American car, whether in Newfoundland, in Toronto or in Hawkesbury in the great constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, the transport fees are the same. I bring this to the attention of the Minister. The defence that he utilized only moments ago is completely groundless and ill informed.

I want to bring something else to the attention of the Minister as well. The committee, in its report, recommended the following:—

[Translation]

> That the $20,000 limit on the cost of a passenger vehicle for claiming capital cost allowance or lease costs be increased by the amount of the relevant provincial sales tax on a $20,000 vehicle and that there be regular review of the limit.

So, Mr. Speaker, we see that it was a recommendation by a Parliamentary Committee, that the Minister's defence had no validity because he was using a comparision with freight costs. And freight costs are the same everywhere in Canada.

What my colleague from Laval-des-rapides (Mr. Garneau) wants is to have provincial sales taxes in effect equalized, to some extent—not completely, because the tax will always be higher is some provinces than in others, unfortunately, but it could be taken into account nonetheless, and the cost of that tax could at least be deductible.

My honourable colleague for Westmorland—Kent (Mr Robichaud) pointed out to me just a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, that the provincial sales tax in his province is 11 per cent. That means that if someone buys a $20, 000 car in Alberta, for example, he would be able to buy $2,200 worth of options on his car before ha lost the deduction, whereas someone in Westmorland—Kent, in Moncton, let's say, or that region, a constituent of my colleague the Honourable Member for Westmorland—Kent, would have to pay $2,200 in sales tax and would not be able to deduct that part of the cost of operating a car.

[English]

The Minister said he believed in fairness. If that is so, how is it fair for the corporate president of a large manufacturing company to be allowed to deduct the cost of having oak panelling on the walls of his office, a golden doorknob, fancy sinks and a padded toilet seat while the vacuum cleaner salesman working for the same company is not able to deduct the cost of the air-conditioner in his or her station wagon? What is fair about that?

The Minister said he is in favour of fairness. If he is in favour of fairness, he should do two things. First, I would suggest that he increase the amount that is made available for the purchase of new cars. I do not want people to be driving Saabs and to be able to deduct the full cost of those cars or any of the other expensive cars worth $75,000 or whatever. However, a person who buys a station wagon with air-conditioning cannot buy it for $20,000. Why does the Minister not at least make the amount reasonable so that people can afford reasonable cars.

Second, why is he in favour of a totally discriminatory policy whereby the provincial tax is not deductible? He is basing this policy on the fact that there are other discriminatory features such as uneven costs of transportation. He should know, or his officials should have told him that that is not true. A number of years ago, the North American automobile manufacturers moved to equalize those costs because they had a hard time competing, particularly on the west coast, with the manufacturers of Japanese vehicles. Given that the manufacturers did that in order to make the system fairer, why can the Minister not do the same with his own policies? There is nothing wrong with the employee of a company being able to deduct the cost of an automobile which is reasonable.

I suggest to him that for a Ford Taurus station wagon, which I certainly consider to be an ordinary full-size car, with air-conditioning, you should be able to deduct the full cost. If the Minister says he does not need the air-conditioning, then I say he should not make air-conditioners deductible for corporate bosses in their high office towers either. What is good for an employee on the road selling Electrolux vacuum cleaners should be good for the President of Electrolux. If he wants to make it fair, that is what he should be doing. To be telling sales people, people who work for a living travelling around this country, that they cannot deduct automobile expenses because the Minister has decided the salesman has to have a car that is a foot shorter instead of a foot longer, or has decided he cannot have a radio, is easy for him to say. If he wants to do that, he should apply the same kinds of rules to the big corporate bosses. Until such time as he is willing to do that, I suggest that he make the deductions reasonable, and make provisions whereby the provincial sales tax is not counted in the arbitrary measure he wants to impose today.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member opposite for making the case for free trade.

Mr. Boudria: What?

Mr. Hawkes: For making the case for free trade.

Mr. Boudria: Are you out of your mind?

Mr. Hawkes: Am I out of my mind?

Mr. Orlikow: We know you are.

Mr. Boudria: I retract that. I already know the answer.

Mr. Hawkes: Having listened to them, we know Members opposite often do not read the briefing notes prepared by their researchers before they stand in the House. He very carefully explained why the cost of automobiles was roughly equal across the country all of a sudden. It is because of the competition from imports on the west coast. All of a sudden we in Alberta and British Columbia and so on are paying roughly the same. In the old days we got zonked on cars and trucks because we did not have competition. He made the case eloquently that costs for Canadians will go down because of the trade arrangement. That is the message we have been trying to give people, and he stands up in the House and supports it and we thank him for it.

Mr. Boudria: Point of order. The Consumer's Association of Canada said the average family of four would save $32 with free trade because of lower tariffs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: He helps us even more because he just admitted there will be a saving. We have made progress. People are going to save money because of free trade and he just admitted it. If only he could go one step further and admit that people buying a home are going to save $8,000, then we would really make progress.

Then we come to the motion which he defends so eloquently. That is an example of the Liberals, historically speaking. They say let us not treat all Canadians the same. That is what this motion says. Let us have advantages for people from some provinces which do not exist for people in other provinces. This motion applies to people who live in some provinces but not in others. It is time Members opposite learn something about the Province of Alberta. How does this motion help someone in the Province of Alberta? Why should we have a tax system which is not equitable for all taxpayers everywhere?

Mr. Boudria: That is exactly what we want.

Mr. Hawkes: Under the National Energy Program we had a resource grab from the taxpayers of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. It ruined our industry, threw people out of work, created wife beating, child beating and suicides, all kinds of social chaos. Why? Because the Liberal Party of Canada, supported by the NDP, said there shall be special taxes on some Canadians but they will not apply to all Canadians. That is what the NEP was about. Here we are debating a tax reform Bill and the very first motion proposed by the Liberals involves lack of equity for all Canadians, a tax break which applies to people in Ontario but not to people in Alberta. That is the Liberal view of Canada but it is not this Party's view. We reject it.

Taxation policy should be equitable for all Canadians wherever they come from, whatever province. We have worked hard for four years to restore to this country a sense of equity. We should all be first class Canadians whether we live in the Yukon, in Calgary, Baie Comeau, Toronto, Atlantic Canada or Newfoundland. We should all be treated the same by the Canadian Government that taxes us.

If those two Parties vote for this motion, they are voting for what they voted for before with respect to the NEP. They are voting to provide an advantage to some taxpayers in some provinces but not in other provinces, and that is wrong. I urge Members of this House to defeat the motion.

Mr. Keeper: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the Hon. Member does not want to mislead the House. He just said that the two Opposition Parties, including the NDP, voted for the NEP. That is a complete falsehood and I hope he stands up and corrects it immediately.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we have had two examples of Conservatives talking about fairness. First the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) and then the Parliamentary Secretary. Let me deal for a moment with the Parliamentary Secretary. He says in voting for this amendment we are displaying again our refusal to treat all Canadians fairly. I remind the Hon. Member that his Province of Alberta has no sales tax. The Province of Newfoundland has a 12 per cent sales tax. It is for that kind of reason that this amendment is moved.

Mr. Boudria: The committee approved it unanimously.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, and he wants us to vote against it. He accused some Members on the opposition side of not reading their briefing notes. He should read his because he cannot possibly have had briefing notes which led him to make the comments he did.

I want to raise a point regarding the unfairness of the deduction for automobile expenses with the Minister, since he talked about his belief in fairness. This matter has been raised with me for a number of years by some of my constituents, particularly those in the construction industry, and it has been raised in an official way in a presentation made to the Government by the President of the Canadian Federation of Labour, a federation of labour unions which do not, at least publicly, support the NDP. Lawyers, doctors, self-employed businessmen are permitted, under the provisions of our Income Tax Act, to deduct a certain percentage of the expenses they incur in operating their car.

• (1200)

I do not disagree with that right because in doing some of their work they are required to use their cars. I do not object to that. However, I point out to the Minister that there are construction workers in Winnipeg, for example, who, in order to work, have spent months and sometimes years on construction of a big power project or a mine. For example, there is one now being built in the constituency of the Premier of Saskatchewan. These workers have gone to that construction project in Saskatchewan in order to earn a living for themselves and their families.

They have driven hundreds of miles from Winnipeg to the job site. Because they want to maintain a family life, because they want to avoid a breakdown of their marriage, and because they want to avoid a possible divorce, every two or three weeks on the weekend they make that drive back from the project near Weyburn, Saskatchewan, to Winnipeg and then a few days later they go back to the job site. They are not permitted under our law to deduct a five cent piece from their income tax for the expenses they have incurred in order to keep their job.

I also point out to the Minister that while the living expenses for their families in Winnipeg continue, these workers have to pay for room and board on the job site, and they are not permitted to deduct anything from their income tax for that expense.

If the Minister believes in fairness, it is time to listen to the request made by the President of the Canadian Federation of Labour on this question, the same request that has been made by myself, and I am sure many other Members of Parliament from all Parties on behalf of constituents over the years. I urge the Minister, if he cannot do it now, to keep it in mind. If he is still the Minister the next time the Budget is brought down, which I doubt, I hope he, or whoever is Minister of Finance, will take this proposal, which is made not just by myself but by the President of the Canadian Federation of Labour, James McCambly, into consideration. If the Minister believes in fairness, as he says he does, I cannot think of any change to the Income Tax Act which would move more people to feel they are being dealt with fairly.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) who stood in his place and went into great elaboration about how unfair the Government was. I really wondered what he was talking about when he referred to increasing the limitation costs of an automobile. He never mentioned what or how much his Party would want, but he thought the limitation should go up from $20,000.

I have in front of me the Canadian Car Price Guide which sets prices for a good number of automobiles in Canada. These prices are for new 1987 models and I do not know if there have been any increases since then. I do not know what the Member is so worried about because if one includes a 7 per cent provincial sales tax in some of the prices of these automobiles such as a Chevrolet Camaro, it still runs at $19,000. That is with the typical options.

How about a Chevrolet Caprice Classic for $17,000? This is a pretty nice car with a lot of options, and it is under $20,000.

Mr. Boudria: What options?

Mr. Holtmann: There are $3,500 worth of options. That is not a bad buy. This is the total final price. What is wrong with a car like that? How about a Pontiac Fiero or a Buick LeSabre, all under $20,000? Has the Member a problem with cars like this? Perhaps he does not like the cars listed here, but that is his problem. How about a Ford Bronco? These cars are driven by Members of Parliament.

Mr. Boudria: You drive a Lincoln Continental.

Mr. Holtmann: And an old Lincoln Continental like mine. So one really has to wonder what the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell is so concerned about. He talked about air-conditioners in his office that can be deducted.

Mr. Boudria: That's right.

Mr. Holtmann: But does anybody use the office for pleasure in the House? He cannot answer that. He is not sure. Members cannot use their offices for pleasure if they write the expenses off. Where is the fairness? The Member is suggesting that everyone should be allowed to put an air-conditioner in their car and write it off. Where is the fairness? One can buy a car for under $20,000. What does the Member want the threshold to be?

The Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and his Party must have been studying this Bill and had some real options they wanted to present, but for some reason what they want to do is increase the threshold. That is pretty vague. What does he mean by that? I am not certain if he knows what he is talking about.

The Member talks about fairness. He does not realize that different provinces have a different sales tax. Some provinces have sales tax and some do not. The idea is to have it included. I have a lot of difficulties with the statements made by the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and the motion. In fact, they have an option, withdraw this silly motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to support my colleague's motion, which reflects the Committee's recommendation, "That the $20,000 limit on the cost of a passenger vehicle for claiming capital cost allowance or lease costs be increased by the amount of the relevant provincial sales tax on a $20,000 vehicle, and that there be a regular review of the limit."

Mr. Speaker, it always astounds me when I hear the Conservative MPs talk, especially when they talk about justice and fairness, and that's what the Minister was saying. He said he wanted this Bill to contain just and equitable measures for all Canadians.

The Honourable Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) got up and said the same thing, that he too wanted justice and fairness for all Canadians, and when you speak of all Canadians, it means Canadians from one end of the country to the other.

When you look at the sales tax rates in the various provinces, it is obvious there are differences: they go from zero to 12 percent. Now if we want to be just and fair to all Canadians, shouldn't we allow for these tax differences from one province to another?

Mr. Boudria: Of course!

Mr. Robichaud: Then how do we explain to the people of New Brunswick that if they pay 11 per cent they do so at their own expense, while the people of Alberta, where there is no sales tax, scoop the pot? But I see more and more clearly when I listen to Government Members and Ministers, because they always talk about justice and about being fair and equitable.

Mr. Boudria: Fair for the rich!

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak about the changes made in the unemployment insurance qualifying period. In some parts of New Brunswick, the qualifying period has been increased from 10 to 16 weeks, and then we are told that all Canadians are to be treated fairly. We have seen that this Government has made changes applying to a particular region of Canada, the Capital region, Hull-Gatineau, because the unemployment rate for the city of Hull did not give an accurate picture of the situation in the rural parts of the region. The problem is exactly the same in New Brunswick. The cities are in a different situation from the rural areas. They talk about fairness and equity. They made the change for this region, yet while wanting to be fair and equitable, they are taking their time reviewing the changes for the people of New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker, the more I hear the Ministers and Members of the Conservative Party speak, the better I understand the meaning of the words they use. I understand that the words fairness and equity mean something different when applied to people in outlying regions.

For that reason, I wish to support my colleague's motion. I urge all Government Members to support this motion if they are really sincere when they say they want a little fairness and equity for all Canadians, no matter where they live.

I should also say, Mr. Speaker, that when one lives in an outlying region, it costs more to do business, for the simple reason that the distances to cover are greater and taxes are higher in some areas—in New Brunswick, for example, the sales tax is 11 per cent. It costs more to do business in New Brunswick than in other provinces.

The motion made by my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides would take these disparities into account. That is why I support it and I call on all Members in this House to do likewise.

• (1210)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

[Translation]

Motion No. 2 will be debated and voted upon separately.

[English]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-139 be amended in Clause 19

(a) by striking out line 7 at page 70 and substituting the following therefor:

"any property is 2/3 of his capital gain"

(b) by striking out line 12 at page 70 and substituting the following therefor:

"of any property is 2/3 of his capital loss"

(c) by striking out line 17 at page 70 and substituting the following therefor:

"the disposition of any property is 2/3 of"

"years and fiscal periods ending after 1987."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the objective of Motion No. 2 is to limit to two-thirds the rate of inclusion of the capital gain to the personal income tax schedule.

[Translation]

The object of this motion is to limit the capital gains inclusion rate to two thirds of the taxpayer's taxable income.

[English]

The reason is that with the rate of inclusion of three-quarters, as suggested by the Minister, the capital gain would be taxed by the federal Government at a higher rate than the dividend.

That is completely unfair and totally out of order because those people who invest in the long term take a risk and expect to have a capital gain or maybe a capital loss. If they take the risk they should be taxed at the lower rate than the people who get the dividend.

Furthermore, this approach by the Tory Government will mean that corporations will have more benefit in paying dividends than in accumulating capital in the corporation for future expansion.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the approach taken by the Minister of Finance seems to me to be completely at odds with the Government's objective of ensuring that we have a fairer, more equitable tax system, as well as a tax system designed to assist those who take investment risks and thus create businesses and enhance job creation.

Mr. Speaker, during that review, we received a lengthy study prepared by the House of Commons Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, which had spent weeks listening to the testimony of various experts, groups and associations that had carried out in-depth analyses of the Finance Minister's proposals. We had a number of recommendations, as well as some technical analyses.

For example, the accounting firm Clarkson Gordon submitted a table showing the dividend and capital gains taxation rates that would result from the Finance Minister's recommendations, which are included in the bill we have before us. In 1988 in Ontario, dividends would be taxed at a rate of 30.26 per cent, while capital gains would eventually, when tax reform was implemented and the three quarters of the gains that were included in the taxpayer's income were taxed, which would be in 1990, be 33.60 per cent. That is, the capital gains taxation rate will be 3 per cent higher than the dividend taxation rate.

That goes against capital formation. It goes against economic growth. It is contrary to the idea that has always prevailed until this bill was introduced—that people who take investment risks, who may make capital gains, but who also may suffer capital losses, that that risk should be recognized in the tax system and should at least not be taxed at a higher rate. The opposite was proper. I think it was the rule. Before this, the capital gains taxation rate was lower than the dividend taxation rate.

In Ontario, for example, before tax reform, dividends were taxed at a rate of 35.7 per cent and capital gains at a rate of 26.7 per cent.

In Quebec, the difference was even greater. In 1987, the dividend taxation rate was 41 per cent, compared with 28 per cent for capital gains, the idea being to give Canadian men and women who are willing to take investment risks some degree of compensation. The policy proposed by the Minister of Finance, by raising the inclusion rate to three quarters, defeats the objective that was always pursued and was, in my view, economically sound. That is, the policy is now reversed and dividends will be taxed at a lower rate than capital gains.

In British Columbia, there will be a difference—dividends will be taxed at a rate of 30.6 per cent and capital gains at 33.6 per cent. In British Columbia, 31.2 per cent for dividends and 34 per cent for capital gains. In Saskatchewan, 33 per cent for dividends and 35 per cent for capital gains. And so on for all provinces where dividends will be taxed at a lower rate than capital gains.

Mr. Speaker, the motion I have put before this House is intended to limit the inclusion rate to two-thirds, which we feel will restore equity, since dividends will be taxed at the same rate as capital gains. The document drawn up by the firm of Clarkson Gordon and tabled to the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee gives this interpretation, since in Ontario, when phase one of the inclusion rate is fully implemented, dividends would be taxed at 30 per cent and capital gains at 29.8 per cent. In Quebec, the rate would be 38 per cent for dividends and 34 per cent for capital gains, while in British Columbia, it would be about 30 per cent for both, and so forth.

We believe this would ensure greater equity. At least, those who risk investing in businesses would not be penalized by the Finance Minister's proposal.

I am surprised to see a government act in such an unfair, economically unsound manner. Such behaviour, goes against the very interests of workers whose jobs were often created as a result of the business risks taken by men and women.

Mr. Speaker, also as a result of this legislation, businesses will be urged by their shareholders to pay dividends rather than to accumulate capital with which to upgrade their business and invest in research and technology. Shareholders will prefer to receive dividends which are paid immediately, because they are taxed at a lower rate than if they were to wait three, four or five years and sell their shares, since this will result in capital gains in view of the accumulation of business capital. They would then be penalized, from a tax standpoint.

I appeal to the members of this House, and in particular to those who believe that an investment risk is a risk worthy of recognition. At the very least, the inclusion rate should be limited to two-thirds, so that those incurring these risks are not penalized. I would have preferred to see a different tax structure for businesses. Business and corporations must, of course, pay their fair share. We could do away with certain exemptions or increase the rate of taxation. However, to tax capital gains at a higher rate than dividends is illogical, Mr. Speaker, and goes against everything this Government has said.

Obviously I am concerned about fairness and it is for the sake of fairness that I propose this amendment. I do, however, have a question for the Conservatives who always jump the the defence of risk takers, entrepreneurs and the like. Have the Conservatives fallen asleep at the switch as the saying goes? It makes no sense. Is the Government prepared to give serious consideration to this amendment?

The members of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee have draw a certain number of unanimous conclusions. They recommended "that as an interim measure only, the proportion of a capital gain or capital loss required to be included in computing an individual's taxable capital gain or allowable capital loss be increased from one-half to two-thirds for gains and losses realized in 1988 and 1989."

That is what we recommended to the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee, Mr. Speaker. This recommendation was unanimously endorsed by the Conservatives Member on the Committee as well as by the NDP and Liberal committee Member. The three parties that examined this issue made a unanimous recommendation. The Minister of Finance should, in my opinion, at least acknowledge this unanimous position.

We also recommended "that in 1990, following a review of the subject of indexation of capital gains, the full amount of capital gains be included in income and the full amount of capital losses be deductible, provided such gains and losses are adjusted for inflation from the latter of the date of ownership or January 1."

Mr. Speaker, what we are saying here—and this is another unanimous recommendation—is that we should go ahead with the two-thirds inclusion rate. At least it will mean that individuals share the tax burden equally, whether they are taxed on capital gains or on dividends. We should continue to look into this subject and do as certain other countries have done, that is opt for the total inclusion of capital gains and take into account depreciation for inflation. If a person invested $100 in 1980 and then decides to sell off his investment in 1995, inflation will have eaten up a portion of his capital gains.

If we want to tax capital gains, we should tax the real gains, not the imaginary ones. It would likely be fairer that way. Great Britain proceeds in this manner, and the United States have moved to include 100 per cent of capital gains. I have no objection to following their lead. We would have to find a way to take inflation into account. However, the motion I am introducing ties in with a unanimous recommendation made by the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee, one that calls for limiting the inclusion rate to two thirds for the time being and for examining the situation at greater length before proceeding any further. The proposal as it now stands is totally unjust and unfair.

• (1220)

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I find it extremely interesting that the Liberal Party is proposing to reduce taxes on capital gains as it is going into an election campaign in which members of that Party intend to present themselves as the friends of average Canadians and ask for support against a Conservative Government which has been too much allied with big business and too much allied with wealthy Canadians. But that is precisely what is happening here.

The Liberal amendment is designed to reduce the rate of capital gains by reducing the amount of gains that will be brought into income. As tax reform stands, and tax reform is flawed, the Government is proposing that three-quarters of capital gains be brought into income. The Liberals say that that should be limited to two-thirds of capital gains being brought into income.

The Conservatives have proposed to allow $100,000 of capital gains to be tax-free. But, after that, they are moving to this three-quarter taxation of remaining capital gains. The Liberals have not spoken about that particular question. They have not indicated that they want to do away with the $100,000 exemption, as New Democrats have said. What they are saying quite specifically is that Liberal policy in the past to give special treatment to income from property and income from capital gains should be allowed to continue. Therefore they are saying that no more than two-thirds of capital gains should be taxed.

I have calculated that according to the Government's figures this means that the Liberal Party wants to give something in the order of $110 million per year to corporations and to wealthy Canadians by reducing the amount of tax that they will have to pay on capital gains.

Mr. Hockin: It is $200 million.

Mr. Cassidy: According to the Minister of State it is probably $200 million. It is a very substantial amount. I ask myself what the devil is going on.

[Translation]

The Liberal Party finance critic states that dividends would be taxed at a lower rate than capital gains and that companies would thus be discouraged from reinvesting their profits into their business. What he did not say, however, was that if the capital gains tax is higher than the tax on dividends, perhaps the tax on dividends should be adjusted then to ensure greater equity with respect to the capital gains tax. What he failed to state was that it is impossible to accept that about 14 per cent of the population still lives below the poverty line. Tax reform is supposed to lower the taxes of low-income earners. Here we have the Liberal Party that wants to lower the taxes of those realizing capital gains . . . and who is going to pay? In the final analysis the ordinary taxpayer is going to pay.

Mr. Speaker, I see that only 1 per cent of the Canadian population realized 38 per cent of all capital gains in 1983. Who are these individuals? They are people who earn in excess of $100,000 a year. The mesure proposed by the Liberal Party finance critic would also affect large corporations. Instead of ensuring that corporations will pay their fair share of taxes, the Liberal Party wants the capital gains tax to be even lower than that proposed by the Conservative Party. The New Democratic Party believes that the other two parties are wrong. The Liberals are wrong in wanting to favour individuals and corporations realizing capital gains. The Conservatives are also wrong in trying to retain certain privileges for the wealthy and for corporations, in so far as capital gains are concerned.

• (1230)

I do not understand what the devil is going on. However, I noticed that, according to Statistics Canada, the poverty line in 1988 for a family of four in a major Canadian city is approximately $23,400. The Conservative tax reform will tax that family when its income exceeds $18,500, or $5,000 below the poverty line. The Conservative tax reform gives tax cuts of over $4,000 to the largest number of people with incomes of over $100,000 a year. It is essentially unfair because it taxes people in poverty and gives big returns and big reductions in tax to people with high incomes.

What did the Liberals do about it? Did they try to ensure that the tax not be paid by people living below the poverty line? No. Did they try to ensure that tax be paid at least at current levels by people earning big incomes? No. What the Liberals tried to do is bring down the tax even further on wealthy Canadians, and bring down the tax even further on wealthy corporations, and not do a thing for ordinary taxpayers living below the poverty line.

As things presently stand under the outgoing tax system, the maximum rate for an individual of tax on capital gains is 17 per cent. At two-thirds inclusion under the new system it will be raised to 19 per cent. That is pretty dramatic, and a really substantial tax reform. The Liberals are saying that capital gains are so acceptable that they should continue to be privileged and only have a tax rate of 2 per cent more than was being paid under the old system, while at the same time a technician working for Bell Canada will pay a tax rate only two or three points below the tax rate paid by Jean de Grandpré who has a million dollar income as a CEO and President of Bell Canada. There is something wrong with that.

A wealthy Canadian will pay 19 per cent of the value of his or her capital gains, according to the Liberal amendment, whereas the average Canadian, who is struggling to pay a mortgage, struggling to pay high interest rates, and struggling to support his or her family, will wind up paying 8 per cent more in tax on a marginal income of over $27,000 a year.

I cannot accept that type of Liberal tax reform. It reminds me that over the last year while the finance committee has been working on this particular issue, we have been trying to clean up problems and loopholes in the tax system which were put there first by the Liberals, particularly when the present Leader of the Liberal Party was the Minister of Finance, and also by the Progressive Conservatives in the rare periods of time when they had a chance to put loopholes into the tax system. If a certain company wanted a privilege, of course that was available; if wealthy Canadians wanted capital gains to be treated differently, of course it was available. That was the Liberal policy, and that was the Conservative policy.

Canadian voters who look at the two Parties in the forthcoming election campaign should remember precisely that. The Liberals take their marching orders from wealthy Canadians and corporations, just as the Progressive Conservatives take their marching orders from the same sources. If the Royal Bank gives $50,000 to the Conservatives, it gives $50,000 to the Liberals. Who will benefit from the new treatment of capital gains? The Royal Bank will be one of the beneficiaries. If Alcan Aluminum wants to go for years without paying any tax at all, then it supports the Liberal Party. Alcan was allowed to go for years paying no tax at all. Now its favours turn over to the Progressive Conservatives, because who failed to put a minimum tax on corporations? Why, the Progressive Conservatives. Under the Reagan tax reform in the United States a minimum tax exists. It cannot be that progressive a measure if it was brought in by the Reaganites in Washington. However, the Tories did not bring that in here. The Liberals allowed Alcan, and many other companies, to go without paying tax at all.

Now on the side of capital gains, the Liberals are standing up to be counted. When you stand up to be counted on this issue, Mr. Speaker, you stand with ordinary Canadians, or you stand with corporations and wealthy Canadians.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) stands with wealthy Canadians and corporations because his Party is going to continue to treat capital gains favourably. Right at the side of the Minister of State for Finance stands the finance critic for the Liberal Party, and all of his Party. That Party is attempting to outdo the Conservatives in seeking support from the corporate sector by saying: "Look, we are not going to tax your capital gains the way those nasty Conservatives were going to do it. We are going to tax them less".

It reminds me of the marketing battles between Steinberg's and Loblaw's. Those stores kept having to reduce their prices in order to bring customers into the stores. We all know that the Liberals have been having trouble raising corporate donations over the last three or four years, and that is why that Party is $5 million in debt. It seems to me that what the Liberals are saying is: "Here is a bargain sale. Can you afford not to support us? We will do what you want us to do for you, just make sure that you do what we want you to do for us". The Liberals are saying: "If you support the Liberals, if a corporation makes donations to the Liberal Party, then the Liberal Party will return the favour by ensuring that the days of loopholes and tax exemptions will be here again if the Liberals get a chance to get back in power".

On behalf of my Party, I stand with ordinary Canadians who say that we need a fair tax system which does away with privileges to wealthy Canadians and to corporations.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the House must not allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to get away with what he has been saying in the last seven or eight minutes. The purpose of tax reform, and indeed the very purpose of the provision in tax reform to which this motion refers, is the exact opposite of what the Hon. Member claims is going on.

First, under tax reform, we now have a $100,000 capital gain exemption for everybody in the country.

Mr. Cassidy: Shame.

Mr. Hockin: We also have a $500,000 capital gain exemption for small businesses and farmers. The Hon. Member states that he is against capital gains. Is the Hon. Member against this capital gains exemption for farmers?

Mr. Cassidy: No.

Mr. Hockin: Is the Hon. Member against this capital gains exemption for small business?

Mr. Cassidy: No.

Mr. Hockin: What is the difference? I hope anyone who is watching the debate has not missed the Hon. Member's contradiction. The Hon. Member is for capital gains sometimes, and not for it at other times.

The Government has democratized capital gains. It has brought it in in order that it is available to everyone. It has been done in such a way that it renders quite unnecessary the motion of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

The motion of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides is, quite frankly, reminiscent of the Liberal Government's national energy policy for two reasons. First, it is highly unfair. Second, it is retroactive. First, let me speak to the retroactivity. The motion itself is to change the inclusion rate, and it is to apply to years and fiscal periods ending after 1987. This means that a corporation with a fiscal year that ended January 31, 1988, would find that capital gains would apply for most of 1987, and it would apply retroactively.

That is what the members of the Liberal Party did in the national energy policy, and this is what they would do as a government. We certainly are not going to do that today. The Hon. Member wants to increase the inclusion rate for 1987 with this motion. If the Hon. Member misdrafted the motion, which I hope is true, because this is an incredible mistake—

Mr. Garneau: That is not what it says.

Mr. Hockin: —then perhaps he can respond to me. However, more profound is the long-term implication of the motion of the Hon. Member which is to take the inclusion rate from three-quarters to two-thirds and leave it at two-thirds. For the average Canadian that would do nothing. For fairness in Canada that would do nothing. In fact, it would set it back. Who would take advantage of capital gains at a two-thirds rate instead of a three-quarters rate? The same large corporations that take advantage of capital gains today.

We want to encourage risk-taking, that is why we have a capital gains tax at a lower rate than the ordinary income tax. However, this motion overdoes it. It would include real estate companies, banks, insurance companies, and people and companies with appreciating assets. They are the ones that would be the winners, and the Hon. Member knows it. It would not be the average or the ordinary Canadian, it would be the big corporations.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is quite accurate when he points out that this is an argument for the more privileged corporations to move the inclusion rate to two-thirds from three-quarters. We are attempting to make it fairer and more democratic.

Let us not forget that the Government of Canada, in bringing forth tax reform, has brought forth this very important $100,000 capital gain exemption for all Canadians. There is a $500,000 capital gains exemption for farmers and small businesses. This is our contribution to encouraging the real risk-takers, not the big corporations. The big corporations have enough of an incentive. He read the incentive himself. It is effectively a 30 per cent rate. We do not have to go where he wants to go in order to encourage risk-taking by large corporations.

I am very, very proud of this particular facet of tax reform, because it encourages risk-taking but does not overdo it; it encourages people to take chances—the ordinary Canadian—not just the large corporations.

Finally, I must say that the mistake in his motion to apply to the 1987 year would in effect move the capital gain rate, which is now 50 per cent, to two-thirds for a large part of 1987, if I read his motion clearly. So it is a badly drafted motion, or, if it is not badly drafted, it is retroactive.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides on a point of order.

Mr. Garneau: On a point of order, the Minister should have read the motion correctly. It applies for the fiscal period ending after 1987. It is not before, as he has just said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not sure that they are points of order, but the Hon. Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Hockin: I do not want to debate it. I wanted clarification on a point of order. If you had a fiscal year that ended, for example, on January 31, 1988, then 11 months of 1987 would be caught by his motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous consent, the Member for Laval-des-Rapides may answer for one minute.

Mr. Garneau: That is exactly what he is going to do for the three-quarters of the regular inclusion of the capital gain. What I did here is exactly the same as the piece of legislation, except it excluded the three-quarters. If he is correct in what he just said, he should immediately contact his official and change the law. Otherwise, it will have exactly the effect that he just explained for every taxpayer. I think that he should be more accurate when he is talking about the corporate capital gain. He should talk about the personal capital gain, because this is where they are hidden. The rate of taxation will be higher for capital gains than for a dividend. I do not understand the NDP. They voted for that in committee and now they are trying to change their minds. It is not the first time that the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) will have changed his mind.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: First, on a point of order, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: I would just point out to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) that in the minority report submitted by the New Democratic Party we advocated full taxation of capital gains. We made our disagreement with that part of the committee's report entirely clear and obvious and certainly at no time would we have supported his proposal, which is to reduce the rate of taxation of capital gains back down to two-thirds, and give that kind of special privilege to corporations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the position taken by my colleague, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), in opposition to this amendment. One of the most important studies made of the tax system in Canada was done by the Royal Commission appointed by Prime Minister Diefenbaker when he was the Leader of the Conservative Party. That commission was chaired by a very distinguished member of the chartered accountant profession in Canada. It made a very important recommendation. It was put before the people and the Government and the Parliament of Canada, Kenneth Carter. It was a very important principle which they believed should be adopted, and that was that a dollar of income is a dollar regardless of how the income is obtained, and every dollar of income should be taxed in the same way, whether it was earned by somebody working for wages or salary, whether it was earned by somebody who was clipping coupons from the bonds or the stocks which he or she earned, or whether it was earned in the form of rents on property which people or corporations owned.

Liberal and Conservative Governments from that day on have ignored and hidden from the public that recommendation made by the Royal Commission headed by Mr. Carter. Let me put on the record what we have seen in the last 35 or more years. In 1954, the federal Government collected in income tax from individuals $1.17 billion. That is eleven thousand million dollars. It got just under that, $1 billion from corporations. That is, it got almost equal amounts of revenue from individual taxpayers and from corporations.

If you look down the road, in 1982 the Liberals had been in office for almost two-thirds of the time from 1952, which I used as a starting point, to 1982. In 1982, the federal Government collected $26 billion in personal income tax and only $8 billion in corporate income tax. We have heard a great deal from the Liberal and Conservative Parties about their desire to move to a fairer tax system. We have heard the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) talking today about what the Conservatives have accomplished in the way of a fairer tax system, tax reform in reality. What kind of tax reform have we had? The fact is that the average family is now paying somewhere between $1,000 and $1,200 more in taxes. If you include income tax, sales tax, excise tax and certain other taxes, they are paying $1,000 to $1,200 more in 1988 than they paid in 1984 when the Conservative Government was elected.

We talked about corporation taxes. My colleague, the Member for Ottawa Centre, has already pointed out that an employee of Bell Canada earning between $20,000 and $30,000 a year will pay income tax at a rate only a few percentage points lower than the rate paid by the head of Bell Canada, Mr. de Grandpré, whose salary is over $1 million a year. That is how this Government looks at the tax system. That is what this Government means when it talks about its tax reform bases.

Let us just look at what has happened to corporation taxes. We know that small businesses—most of them individually owned—are paying a pretty healthy amount in the form of corporation taxes. When we look at the record for the last fiscal year for which we have information supplied to us by Revenue Canada, we see that in the year 1986 some of the most profitable, largest corporations in Canada somehow paid no tax at all.

Alcan Aluminum, whose pre-tax income was over $306 million, paid not one cent in corporation tax. Brascan had profits of $186 million and paid no tax at all. Power Financial which had profits of $131 million paid no tax at all. Hees International had profits of $117 million and paid not one penny in tax. Xerox Canada had $115 million in profits and paid not one cent in income tax. Cadillac Fairview, one of the most successful real estate developers in this country, had profits of $95 million in 1986 and paid not one cent in tax. Bramalea, another real estate developer, had profits of over $50 million and paid not one cent in taxes.

We have to ask ourselves from where is this Government coming? What has happened to its promises about tax reform? What has happened to the promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the debates held just before the election that he agreed individuals and corporations should pay a minimum tax? As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre pointed out a few moments ago, the United States with the most conservative President, the most conservative right-wing administration it has had in the last 50 or more years has imposed a minimum tax on corporations. But this Conservative Government of Canada which talks about tax reform and fairness has not in four years tightened up the tax system so that every corporation, particularly the larger corporations, will be required to pay taxes.

They are only following the example set for them by previous Liberal governments. There was no one more generous to corporations and wealthy individuals in the Liberal government years than the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he was its Minister of Finance. In his first budget he gave a 9 per cent corporate tax reduction to manufacturing and processing companies. He also allowed these companies overly generous depreciation tax deductions on their equipment.

We will oppose this motion. Although we have become accustomed to the Liberals becoming quite progressive when in opposition and being very conservative when in government, here is a case where the Liberals are being very conservative and generous to their big business friends even while in the opposition. Lord only knows what they will do if they ever have a chance to form the government again. They would continue the process this Government has followed of giving more and more concessions to those individuals and corporations which have the most.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to try to throw a little light onto this debate by reminding those viewing and listening to what we have to say in Parliament of the measure that is before us. What we have under the rubric of tax reform is a Liberal amendment designed to reduce the rate of tax on capital gains.

Mr. Boudria: It was supported in committee by the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Keeper: That is the amendment and the concrete proposal we are dealing with here. What may cause some confusion as people examine the proposal is the rhetoric of each of the parties. Let us examine it. The Liberals and their spokesmen talked about equity and taxation. The Conservative spokesperson talked about democracy in taxation. Our Party is concerned about fairness in the taxation for the ordinary Canadian family.

I want to look behind the rhetoric to see whether or not the actions of each of these Parties stand up to their rhetorical flourishes. Let me begin by looking at the Liberals. When they talk about equity in taxation and we examine their amendment before us today, what are they saying? Equity to me means one person or one group will be treated with equal fairness as another group of people. When it comes to equity, the Liberal definition of equity is pretty narrow. Their spokesman was concerned about whether those who receive income from stocks and bonds, other investments, and dividends be treated equally with those who receive capital gains. That was the narrow definition of equity. At no time when they spoke for equity did they raise the concerns of the ordinary Canadian family.

For those who earn their income from the sweat on their brow, at no time did the Liberals say that person who gets a pay cheque ought to be treated with equity. They said: "We want to take care of those who have stocks, bonds and get dividends and see that they are treated the same as those who have capital gains." I did not hear that spokesperson say we have to be concerned that taxes on the ordinary family have gone up by $1,500 under the Tory Government in the last three or four years and there ought to be some equity for the ordinary Canadian family and for the person who earns his or her income from a salary. While the Liberal Party is calling for taxation on capital gains to be reduced from three-quarters of that gain to two-thirds, the Liberals did not say that the ordinary family, except for a few small deductions, has to pay taxes on the vast majority of its income.

Mr. Cassidy: 100 per cent.

Mr. Keeper: Yes, 100 per cent. The Liberals did not call for a reduction in that area. Why did the amendment not call for that? That is the Liberal definition of equity. It is narrow, limited and shows no concern for the ordinary Canadian family.

What about the Conservative definition of democracy in taxation? The Conservatives say that to forgive taxes on capital gains is okay. It is okay to say that if your capital goes up in value by $100,000 you do not have to pay any taxes on it because that privilege is available to every single Canadian. There are very few taxpayers in my riding who have capital gains of that order. Who are the Conservatives talking for when they speak of democracy and capital gains and taxation? They are talking about giving a loaf to the wealthy while asking the ordinary middle-class Canadian to be satisfied with a few crumbs that fall off the table. In other words, if middle-class Canadians benefit in some small measure from capital gains exemption, they should not be concerned that others gain handsomely from it.

What about fairness for the ordinary Canadian family in the taxation system? How can you possibly give tax relief to the ordinary Canadian family if you are going to allow the very wealthy to get away with paying no tax on capital gains? Why is the Liberal Party asking for the measure to go even further than the Conservative Party is presently moving? This is not fair. This is not equity. This is not democracy.

Mr. Boudria: Why did the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) support that in committee?

Mr. Keeper: We need to take into account the financial situation of the ordinary Canadian family. If the Canadian family has dollars in its pockets to spend, the economy will be strong. If Canadian families are not overburdened by taxes, they can buy the products of the companies of this land and we will have a strong economy.

I think I see an indication from you that my time has run out, Mr. Speaker. I think I have made my point. Let me make it once more. It is shocking that when the Liberals talk about equity, they are only talking about dividends and the very wealthy. They have forgotten the ordinary Canadian family.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

BELUGA WHALES

DEATHS IN CAPTIVITY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, since 1967 Canada has issued free permits for the live capture of beluga whales in Hudson Bay for display by aquariums in North America, Germany and Japan. A survey conducted by the Winnipeg Free Press shows that of the 59 whales captured, 20 have died.

The U.S. Navy took six belugas to a research centre in San Diego where three died. The Sea World chain has taken 18 or 19 of the belugas. Only 10 are still alive, including four that were taken one month ago.

Dan Goodman, federal adviser for marine mammals, says there is little the Government can do to ensure the safety of the whales once out of the country. Consequently, Canada should get out of the beluga business, be it for entertainment or for military purposes.

We urge the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to stop issuing live capture permits. Lately, whale watching has grown in popularity on both coasts of Canada. That is the way to go: to view such magnificent mammals in their habitat.

BLACK RIBBON DAY—ANNIVERSARY OF HITLER-STALIN PACT

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, August 23, commemorating the Ribbentrop-Molotov Treaty of 1939, is celebrated as Black Ribbon Day in many communities across Canada including my own constituency of Kitchener. On August 23, 1939, Hitler and Stalin divided eastern Europe between themselves with the final outcome being that some 300 million Europeans became enslaved by communism.

I call upon all Hon. Members to wear a Black Ribbon Day ribbon or button proudly to demonstrate that the millions of people imprisoned behind the Iron Curtain are not forgotten. I call upon the Government of Canada to make strong representations to the Soviet Union welcoming the new attitudes behind the words glasnost and perestroika, and to prove that these words are not mere rhetoric.

I call upon Mr. Gorbachev to admit the Soviet guilt at Katyn Forest, to return Eastern Poland, Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia to their rightful self-determination, and to honour the Soviet Union's undertaking at Yalta 44 years ago to allow free, democratic and unfettered elections in all of Soviet occupied Europe.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—HYDRO DISCOUNTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, what New Democrats have been saying for months has now been confirmed by the Minister of State for Science and Technology, the MP for Prince George Peace River (Mr. Oberle). Some mines and northern industries may never open and some may shut down if the Mulroney-Reagan deal on trade is implemented.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology confirmed last week that the trade deal would outlaw energy agreements such as B.C. Hydro discounts that have re-opened mines such as Endako and Granisle, and attracted operations like the hydrogen peroxide plant to Prince George. The Minister told the City Council of Prince George that such subsidies are "not permissible" under the pact. These are the same Conservatives who cut a deal with Alcan on Nechako River water-flows on the promise of new aluminum expansion in B.C and new industry for the Bulkley Valley or Vanderhoof, developments now promised for Québec, not B.C. These are the Conservatives who promised a full Minister of Forests in 1984 and we still do not have one in 1988.

What you hear from the Tories is not what you get. Prior to the election the Prime Minister said, in opposing free trade, "it affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it". Northern workers, industry and small business have had four years of the largest Tory majority in history and want no more of it.

HISTORIC EVENTS

INTERNATIONAL BLACK RIBBON DAY—ANNIVERSARY OF NAZI-SOVIET PACT

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, today Canadians in 14 cities across the country and over 30 cities around the world will gather together to commemorate International Black Ribbon Day. International Black Ribbon Day symbolizes the quest for peace with freedom. The Black Ribbon is worn to show mourning for those who lost their lives in the defence of freedom and sorrow for those who still suffer.

The significance of the date on which Black Ribbon Day is commemorated is a reminder of the 1939 Nazi-Soviet Pact which linked the Nazis and Soviets as partners in terror, genocide, and enslavement. The Nazis were defeated and brought to justice at Nuremberg, but the Soviets continue their reign of tyranny to this day.

The new Soviet policy of glasnost has proposed certain reforms, and in the spirit of that policy I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Government of Canada to press the Soviet Government to honour its pledge of free and fair elections in the Soviet and all countries under its sphere of influence.

PORTS

THUNDER BAY—EFFECT OF REDUCED GRAIN EXPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Port of Thunder Bay faces a very bleak future in the year ahead due to the Government's approach to the shipment of grain through this port. Already 700 grain workers, railway workers and sailors have been laid off in the port. A confidential report indicates that by this time next year, over 1,150 will be laid off as well as those in the Great Lakes ports in the Lower St. Lawrence.

Four of the 13 elevators are shut down. Twenty of the 64 grain ships are idle. Of course, if they are idle for over a year many of them will move out of the Great Lakes system. Projections show as low as four million tonnes being shipped from the port in this crop year, whereas in the past year over 14 million tonnes were shipped. The viability of the port is in question when shipments go below seven million tonnes.

The Government has refused to give any commitment to maintain a reasonable share of shipments through this port. Yet only two months ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a commitment of $164 million for one constituency during the Saint-Jean by-election. I call on the Government to take action to maintain the viability of the Port of Thunder Bay which is an essential and important port in the Great Lakes system.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EAST AND WEST BERLIN—A TALE OF FREEDOM

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on The National last night we saw a bold escape from East Berlin. Four people swam across the River Spree to freedom in West Berlin expecting to be shot at any moment. These brave individuals were helped on shore by some equally brave West Berliners while an East German patrol boat was rapidly approaching.

I have been to Berlin, both Berlins, East and West. The difference between them is like the difference between night and day. The feeling in the air in East Berlin is a cold feeling of oppression. The feeling in West Berlin is one we all know well. That feeling is freedom.

This is the feeling that those four brave people will enjoy today and from now on. They were prepared to die for their freedom, a freedom we as Canadians take for granted.

NATIONAL CITIZENS COALITION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AWARD TO MINISTER FOR INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the National Citizens Coalition has awarded $10,000 to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). This is the best example I have seen of birds of a feather flocking together.

The National Citizens Coalition claims to stand for freedom yet is a big business instrument to attack the freedom of trade unions to exercise their rights. The Minister for International Trade shows the same lack of consistency. In October of 1980 he called government advertising a very dangerous practice meant to obscure the issues and a Liberal piece of hypocrisy. Now, while in government, he continues to run his free trade ad campaign with the latest advertisement appearing in today's Globe and Mail.

These two birds deserve each other, but our country deserves neither of them.

AGRICULTURE

AG-WEST BIO-TECH INC.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, at a time when farmers are going through a difficult period brought on by severe drought and international trade wars, the federal and Saskatchewan Governments are responding by laying the foundation for a stable future in Saskatchewan. This week, Ag-West Bio-Tech Inc. received $306,000 under the Canada-Saskatchewan Advanced Technology Agreement to further develop agricultural biotechnology in Saskatchewan.

By aiding both short and long-term research projects which will diversify the agricultural industry, this newly created institute will improve the competitive ability of Saskatchewan farmers. As a not-for-profit institute, Ag-West will focus on and support biotechnology research and development. This will lead to the commercialization of products necessary for the diversification of the Saskatchewan economy. This will allow Saskatchewan to meet the continuing challenges of a highly competitive international market-place.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—CALL FOR RECOGNITION OF SOLIDARITY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we were reminded by my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), of the courageous struggle for freedom that was crushed in Czechoslovakia 20 years ago. Today we continue to be appalled that in neighbouring country, Poland, free trade unions must still be threatened with the spectre of military force for representing the legitimate demands of Polish workers. My NDP colleagues and I call on the Polish Government to recognize Solidarity and to get on with the task of building a freer Poland.

Today is also a day known to many as International Black Ribbon Day, marking the anniversary of August 23, 1939, the beginning of so much of the oppression that is still being suffered by the peoples of eastern Europe and the Baltic. The signing of the Ribbentrop-Molotov Treaty, a treaty between Hitler and Stalin, on that date proved to be a dark day for all the world, not just for eastern Europe, in so far as it helped set the stage for World War II.

One of the true tests of glasnost and perestroika will be whether the new winds of freedom are allowed to blow in countries which for too long have been under Soviet domination. It has been suggested that Chairman Gorbachev show good faith by allowing free and open elections at the municipal level throughout Soviet occupied Europe as a first step. We in the NDP urge that this be done.

ABORTION

POSITION OF CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I congratulate the Canadian Medical Association and the thousands of physicians it represents on the courageous and sensible guidelines it adopted on abortion during its annual meeting in Vancouver recently. Physicians know, perhaps as well or better than most, the trauma and tragedy often associated with situations which lead women to seek an abortion. Yet they realize that such a decision is a medical one, best made by the woman and her physician.

The CMA's guidelines also provide that abortions could be performed in provincially approved facilities other than hospitals. They emphasize the importance of counselling for women facing such a decision, and the provision of proper family planning and contraceptive services. They also establish 20 weeks as the limit for abortion except in exceptional circumstances.

These are all reasonable guidelines which I believe are consistent with the views of the majority of Canadians who, while they may not approve of abortion or consider it for themselves, recognize that women along with their physicians should have the freedom to make their own decisions and accept the responsibility for them.

HOUSING

SITUATION IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in response to my request yesterday that the Minister responsible for housing involve himself and his Government in easing the affordable housing crisis in Metropolitan Toronto, he was quoted today in the Toronto Star as saying: "We are going to let the free market forces dictate". That Tory answer is simply not good enough. These market forces are the same market forces which have pushed up the average price of a home in Metropolitan Toronto to over $230,000.

Young couples starting out with the dream of owning a home cannot do realize their dream. Couples who want to move perhaps from a semi-detached to a bungalow and then to a split level cannot do so. Senior citizens are having a hard time trying to maintain their homes on their pensions. It is time that the federal Government etched out a partnership with both the municipal and provincial Governments to the benefit of the housing crisis in Toronto.

The RHOSP program was cut. We have a Government which is not giving over 15 acres to the new $1.2 billion St. Lawrence housing project for 12,000 Canadians. We have no programs for first time home buyers. Therefore, I urge the Government to assume its leadership role and help the municipal and provincial Governments bring housing prices back to reality in the city of Toronto.

ELECTIONS EXPENSES

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, at the end of their annual regional meeting, the Quebec Conservative caucus decided to implement public financing. We accept political contributions only from individuals. The Liberals and PQ have been doing so successfully in Quebec since 1976. Will the socialists do the same? Will they continue to use the major unions as their base of operations? Will they continue to use the premises of the Quebec teachers' union and telephones and stamps provided by unions? Will they still use union employees and supplies and money from the big unions? Will they illegally continue to use union dues for political purposes?

I challenge the socialist leader to comply with Quebec's standard of political morality, which we Conservatives share with the PQ and the provincial Liberals.

I say to the socialist leader, "Show yourself distinctly to Quebecers!" That is what we expect.

BANKS AND BANKING

SERVICE CHARGES IMPOSED ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is about time small business people got a fair deal. Almost two months ago the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) huffed and puffed about "objectionable" service charges and negotiated with the banks a deal which would eliminate some service charges for consumers. However, small businesses continue to get dinged by the banks without notice, and continue to pay NSF charge-back fees which have been eliminated for consumers. While the pussycat Minister fiddles, small business people get burned.

Just yesterday the Royal Bank announced its intention to raise some of its service charges, including a 12 per cent increase for NSF cheques. While that fee is offset by the elimination of the charge-back to consumers, small business people pay both the increased fee for writing NSF cheques and a charge for cashing NSF cheques. This is unfair.

It is time the Minister paid attention to the concerns of small businesses which are often at the mercy of the big banks and are in no position to change banks. He found some charges "objectionable" for consumers and removed them. He should now do the same for small business.

HISTORIC EVENTS

INTERNATIONAL BLACK RIBBON DAY—ANNIVERSARY OF STALIN—HITLER PACT

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, on August 23, 1939, 49 years ago today, a few days before the start of World War II, Stalin and Hitler signed a pact which divided Eastern Europe between them. As a result, 300 million Europeans became enslaved by Soviet communism. The International Black Ribbon Day Committee marks this day to push for fundamental freedoms behind the Iron Curtain.

The ABN credo is freedom for nations, freedom for individuals. ABORTION

POSITION OF CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise to condemn the policy statement by the Canadian Medical Association which was released yesterday. The CMA said on abortion:

> The decision to perform an abortion is a medical one, made privately between the patient and her physician—

For one thing, medical doctors should know better. They should know when you are talking about abortion and the patient and her physician, you are forgetting at least one person.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR ROSEMONT—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, as the person responsible for administering the Government's code of ethics. Last week, three Conservative Members, the Hon. Member for Rosemont, the Hon. Member for Duvernay and, more recently, the Hon. Member for LaSalle, said there was a kickback system in the Government.

Mr. Speaker, this morning at a press conference, the Hon. Member for Rosemont repeated her statement, and I quote from her press release, in which she said the following in referring to kickbacks and contracts: "I am convinced that this exists on an organized level, and that it can be brought to light. However, I am also sure that a criminal investigation, considering the methods that are customary in such instances and the kind of evidence that is required, would not be able to expose the existence of such a network. I think the best instrument, in this case, would be royal commission of inquiry".

My question for the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Considering the fact that the Hon. Member for Rosemont, a Conservative Member and a former Member of Cabinet, repeated her charges about the existence of a kickback system within our federal public administration, and that she is asking for a royal commission of inquiry, could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House today whether he agrees with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Rosemont, and whether he will accede to her request for a royal commission of inquiry to substantiate the allegations she has made with respect to her Government?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member for Rosemont has alleged is a very serious violation of the Criminal Code. She has not been able to substantiate it. The responsibility for enforcing the Criminal Code lies with the police and the justice system. That process has been followed. An interview was undertaken by the RCMP. No specific evidence was forthcoming. So what we have here is an allegation of criminal wrongdoing without any evidence whatsoever. I do not know what a Royal commission would undertake to do when there is no basis in fact for the allegations.

ACCUSATIONS CONCERNING EXISTENCE OF KICK-BACK SYSTEM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister has just arrived, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister as the person responsible for the code of ethics.

The Hon. Member for Rosemont indicated in her press release this morning that patronage and kickbacks are nothing new and should not be considered a taboo subject in this day and age. In fact, the subject was brought up several times at the Quebec Members' Caucus, even in the presence of the Prime Minister himself. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the allegations of the Hon. Member for Rosemont regarding the existence of a kickback system were mentioned several times in his presence at the Quebec Caucus. If that was the case, it would indicate that a number of Members were concerned about these allegations. I want to ask the Prime Minister what he has done about the allegations with respect to the existence of a kickback system that were mentioned at the Conservative Caucus.

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: I have a problem with the question because discussions among Members in Caucus are not really a matter of Government administration.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to draw the attention of the Hon. Member to two other statements made today by the Member in question, and I quote: "I did not bring this information to the attention of the RCMP because I was not personally a witness to what happened, so that if I were asked to testify, my testimony would have no legal value."

COMMUNICATION WITH MEMBER—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I don't intend to venture on the kind of slippery terrain the Prime Minister is walking on and accuse his former colleague of lying to Canadians. In fact, I would now like to put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister and perhaps to the Prime Minister himself.

Last Friday, around 11.30 a.m., during Oral Question Period, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, asked the Deputy Prime Minister, and I quote:

> . . . when he contacted the Hon. Member for Rosemont, and if he has not done so, will he do so today? And if not, why not? After all, it's his responsibility!

And the Deputy Prime Minister's answer was:

> Mr. Speaker, I considered that course of action. However, having considered the allegations as being of such a serious nature, I thought it would be improper for me to intervene, given the fact that we had been advised that the RCMP were going to conduct an interview with her, as the Solicitor General has indicated. I did not want to be seen as intervening in the process.

Mr. Speaker, this morning we heard the Hon. Member for Rosemont said it would be unworthy or against the code of ethics for the Deputy Prime Minister to intervene, as it was for the Prime Minister's chief of staff, who at 8.45 this very morning, contacted the Hon. Member for Rosemont, and as she said in her press release, asked her to retract or say her statements had been misquoted. This the Hon. Member refused to do.

I want to ask the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister why it was improper for the Deputy Prime Minister to communicate with the Hon. Member for Rosemont and why it was perfectly proper for the Prime Minister's chief of staff, Mr. Peter White, to put pressure on the Hon. Member and threaten her with expulsion from the Caucus if she did not retract.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Rosemont said, and I quote: "I know personally that patronage exists, that it continues to grow and that there is a kickback system for contracts", and she said this to La Presse on August 18. It is perfectly proper for a senior member of my staff to call the Hon. Member to find out if she intends to substantiate her claims and whether she intends to discuss the matter with the Prime Minister and her caucus colleagues. The fact remains that the same day, and I quote from an English text:

[English]

"An RCMP spokesman reading from a prepared statement issued late yesterday afternoon in Ottawa said: 'She had no details of any activity that would justify an RCMP investigation' ".

What we have here is a Member of Parliament who has made charges that would have the effect of tarnishing the reputation of all members of a Party and, by implication, the charge was made in respect to previous Governments. I felt that blanket charge was unfair and any evidence that she had should be brought forward. That has been my position. I invited her to come forward to the caucus and explain her point of view. As it happened, the RCMP visited with her and she told the RCMP that she had no information at all. That to me is a very sad and irresponsible situation for a Member of Parliament to place herself in.

QUERY CONCERNING SPOKESPERSON FOR GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister.

I would like him to explain the contradiction for me. The Prime Minister has just told the House that it was quite normal to intervene politically to get information from the Hon. Member for Rosemont. However, the Deputy Prime Minister, who is seated next to him, says that it would be ill-advised to intervene.

I would like to know who speaks on behalf of the Government. Is it the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister? The Prime Minister says that it is quite normal and the Deputy Prime Minister said on Friday, "However, having considered the allegations as being of such a serious nature, I thought it would be improper for me to intervene, given the fact that we had been advised that the RCMP were going to conduct an interview with her, as the Solicitor General has indicated."

Is that right or wrong? Is it improper or quite normal? What is the answer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I find it quite normal that if an allegation is made in a general way, for example, if someone made a general statement about all the Liberal Members in the House, it would seem quite normal to me that the Liberal Members would immediately demand further information, some evidence, or that the accusations be withdrawn.

It seems quite normal to me that my chief of staff asked one of our Members to follow such a logical procedure. If the Hon. Member is offended, too bad for him. It seems quite normal to me to proceed in that way when people's reputations are involved, whether they are Members of the New Democratic Party, Liberals or Progressive Conservatives; everyone is entitled to the benefit of the doubt and to be treated fairly.

REQUEST FOR RETRACTION FROM MEMBER FOR ROSEMONT—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says that everyone is entitled to fair treatment, but his chief of staff did not ask the Hon. Member for Rosemont for information politely. He threatened to throw her out of the Conservative Caucus. There is quite a difference between asking for information and blackmail and arm-twisting!

I ask the Prime Minister whether it is quite normal to ask a Member to retract, even to say the opposite of what is true; is it quite normal to say, "If you don't retract, you'll be thrown out of the Conservative Caucus"?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I will let the Right Hon. Prime Minister answer, but I am a little concerned about a preamble that gets awfully close to an allegation.

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was no threat.

Mr. Lapierre: Oh, no!

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member says, "Oh, no!" The same person who said that there were threats said on August 18:

> I personally know that patronage exists and has continued to grow, that there is a contract kickback system.

Today, the same person says, "I did not bring this information to the RCMP because I personally was not a witness to these situations. If I were called as a witness, my contribution would have no legal value."

The same person who said that she had no evidence for the accusations made against people's reputations has no evidence for such a statement.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—HYDRO DISCOUNTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed the Minister for International Trade. He may be aware that last Monday, in an appearance before the City Council in Prince George, British Columbia, the Minister of State for Science and Technology stated that the trade deal with the United States would prohibit hydro discounts that have re-opened mines all across the Province of British Columbia and other parts of Canada.

The Minister was asked if the trade deal would allow subsidized energy rates that have allowed mines like those at Endako and Granisle to reopen. The Minister replied very precisely: "No, it is not possible".

• (1430)

The Minister knows how important subsidized energy rates have been to allow mines and plants across Canada to re-open. The Minister of State for Science and Technology has said that under the trade deal this kind of discounted rate, if you like, would not be permissible. Who is telling the truth? On a number of occasions the Minister has indicated that communities would not be placed at risk. The Minister of State for Science and Technology said whole numbers of single industry towns would now be placed at risk. Who is it that we are to believe?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I believe my hon. colleague said no such thing as the hon. gentleman is quoting him as saying. Second, we can subsidize whatever we like. We can subsidize whatever we wish in this country.

There is no international agreement that prevents us from subsidizing whatever goods we want to subsidize or whatever services we want to subsidize. However, if we do subsidize, if it is a trade related subsidy, we have to consider whether or not, if we export that product, another country might challenge it as being subsidized in an objectionable way so that it is no longer free trade or fair trade, and may attempt to bring an action against it.

That has always been the case. That is the case this year. That was the case five years ago. That will be the case in the future. There is nothing in the U.S.-Canada agreement that prevents us from subsidizing hydro rates if we wish, or anything else we wish to subsidize.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF STATE FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, both in the newspaper and on radio tape, the Minister of State for Science and Technology has said that under the trade deal any effort to provide subsidized energy rates that have allowed mines like Endako and Granisle to re-open would not be permissible.

Who is that we are to believe? The Minister of State says that this kind of subsidized energy, if you like, would not be allowed under the trade deal. The Minister for International Trade says that it would be allowed under the trade deal. I am not sure what the Prime Minister has said. He closed down Schefferville, so we will stick with the two Ministers.

Mr. Masse: Cheap shot.

Mr. Riis: The Minister spends millions of dollars on propaganda for this deal.

Mr. Andre: Cheap shot Riis.

Mr. Riis: His colleague, who I assume has read the deal, says to his constituents and to single industry towns across the country that that kind of subsidized energy will not be permissible. Who is it that we are to believe?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the people of Canada will believe those who constantly cry wolf, those who constantly make false statements about the effects of the U.S.-Canada trade arrangement, such as the hon. gentleman opposite.

Schefferville voted 85 per cent for the Prime Minister, so they must have understood what the Prime Minister was attempting to do. They understood that for years jobs had been created in Schefferville, that the resources had been developed, and that the hon. gentleman opposite has never created a job, or developed anything in his life. All he has done is mal-mouth in the House of Commons.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, if he is looking for wolves, there is a wolf in his Cabinet.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade will well know that from Newfoundland to British Columbia there are hundreds of communities that exist because a mine, a plant, or a mill was receiving subsidized low energy feedstocks. That was one of the reasons why those plants, those mines and those mills were created in those communities.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology has stated on tape, and is quoted in the newspapers as saying that this kind of subsidy would not be permitted in the future. I think that is serious. Who is that the people of Canada are to believe? Whom do we trust? Do we trust the Minister of State for Science and Technology or the Minister for International Trade?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as anyone who follows trade matters will realize, many countries in the world subsidize services or subsidize products, or help in the establishment of industries. Every country has this kind of program, and other countries to which they export challenge the subsidies if they think that they are trade related and unfair subsidies causing them to compete unfairly with domestic industries. That happens in the United States vis-à-vis Canada, and the United States vis-à-vis other countries. Here in Canada we challenge the exports of other countries to Canada on the same basis.

That is why, under the free trade agreement, we will work out with the Americans over the next five years an agreed definition of what is a trade related subsidy that could properly invite countervailing duties.

In the meantime, the U.S.-Canada agreement does not rule out subsidies in any way, shape or form. The position on subsidies is completely unchanged, except we will have a better chance to challenge U.S. action because we will have a dispute settlement method to which we can revert.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the Prime Minister and challenge his suggestion that in cases like this it is good enough simply to call in the RCMP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Who would you call in? The CIA? You never called anyone in, that is for sure.

Mr. Kaplan: We set up Royal commissions.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask that the Hon. Member for York Centre use his experience and perhaps some of the help that was intended for him yesterday in the exchange between myself and himself, and be very careful to keep within the rules.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Government to establish a Royal commission. I think that is in order.

I want to ask it to establish a Royal commission in light of the fact that there has already been a conviction for kickbacks during the life of this Government.

Mr. Mazankowski: Where?

Mr. Kaplan: There is a case under investigation—

Mr. Mulroney: Withdraw.

Mr. Boudria: Have you forgotten already? Hypocrites.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. I do not know where the Hon. Member is leading. I am moving on to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

KICK-BACK ALLEGATIONS—PMO OFFICIAL'S CONTACT WITH MEMBER FOR ROSEMONT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the allegations which the Hon. Member for Rosemont has made with respect to kick-backs. Last Friday, August 19, in the House, one of the opposition Members asked the Deputy Prime Minister a question as to whether the Deputy Prime Minister would speak to the Hon. Member for Rosemont and, if he had not done so, would he do so "today". The Deputy Prime Minister replied, as reported at page 18565 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I considered that course of action. However, having considered the allegations as being of such a serious nature, I thought it would be improper for me to intervene, given the fact that we had been advised that the RCMP were going to conduct an interview with her . . .

Today, the Member for Rosemont said that on Friday Mr. Peter White, chief of staff of the Prime Minister's Office, contacted her and told her to withdraw the remarks or run the risk of being kicked out of the Tory Caucus. Why is it that what is improper for the Deputy Prime Minister to do becomes proper for the Prime Minister's henchman to do?

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member quoted exactly precisely what I stated. That occurred at about 11.30. My understanding at the time that we were made aware, as the Solicitor General indicated, was that in fact the RCMP were going to interview the Hon. Member for Rosemont. That was one of the considerations.

My understanding, and I may be wrong in this, is that the Prime Minister's chief of staff contacted her in the morning seeking clarification and reminding her of her obligation that if she had evidence she should produce that evidence and report to the police. My understanding is that was, essentially, the thrust of the conversation.

NOMINATION PAPERS OF MEMBER FOR YORK—PEEL

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Prime Minister.

In light of the fact that the Hon. Member for Rosemont has now been put out of the Tory caucus as of last weekend, can the Prime Minister tell the House if he intends to refuse to sign the nomination papers for the Hon. Member for York—Peel who broke the conflict of interest guidelines not once, not twice, but 14 times?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Mazankowski: That is a Party matter.

Mr. Speaker: I am having great difficulty in accepting that that is a question that has to do with the administration of government. Perhaps the Hon. Member could rephrase his question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the conflict of interest guidelines are indeed the administration of justice—indeed, they are the handiwork of the Prime Minister himself—and in view of the fact that a member of his caucus, of his Government, was found to have breached those guidelines 14 times, and in light of the fact that he has kicked out one Member, the Hon. Member for Rosemont—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

NATIONAL CITIZENS COALITION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AWARD TO MINISTER FOR INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister as well. It concerns a totally different subject, that of the $10,000 prize that the Minister for International Trade has been awarded and has accepted, according to the media, from the National Citizens Coalition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I hope that the record will show that Conservative Members were applauding.

Given that the National Citizens Coalition is in favour of apartheid, pro-capital punishment, anti-bilingualism, against medicare, against immigration, and against social programs, will the Prime Minister order his colleague to refuse to accept the prize?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It is very scary.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this comes within my Department or not. However, I can see the hon. gentleman is displaying a tremendous amount of jealousy at the news that I have received this award. Perhaps I could be induced to share the proceeds with him—

Mr. Boudria: I want no part of dirty money.

Mr. Crosbie: —if his hurt feelings continue.

As to the National Citizens Coalition itself, I only know from what I see in the paper. It is an organized group with a conservative philosophy. I may agree with some of its views and policies and not with others, just the same as the hon. gentlemen across may agree with some of the views of the CLC and not with others, or perhaps they may agree with them all totally.

In any event, I am glad to be recognized as having made a contribution to the cause of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

COALITION'S POSITION ON APARTHEID

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want no part of the Minister's blood money.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I want to ask him a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is asked of the Minister for International Trade who is also at the present time the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In its newsletter "Consensus" of February, 1987, the National Citizens Coalition said about the Government's policy on South Africa: "Expediency, not principle; pragmatism, not morality. These are the models for Canada's foreign policy." How can the Minister accept this reward and remain in Cabinet?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, I suppose, has never received an award before in his life.

Mr. Axworthy: Don't laugh it off, John, it's a serious issue.

Mr. Crosbie: He therefore believes that the recipient of any reward from any group must agree with every statement of the group that gives the award. Is this true of the Oscars? Is it true of the Nobel Peace Prize? If one accepts the Nobel Peace Prize does that mean that one agrees with using dynamite to blow up one's opponents or enemies? How ridiculous this is getting.

Mr. Axworthy: You don't have a bit of integrity. What a dishonourable man.

Mr. Foster: Tory blood money.

Mr. Crosbie: If this is what you are down to it is pretty bad.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PARALLEL JUSTICE SYSTEM RECOMMENDED FOR NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. A special committee of the Canadian Bar Association has recommended a parallel justice system for Canada's first citizens. The report reveals that in Saskatchewan a treaty Indian woman is 131 times more likely to end up in jail than a white woman, and that 60 per cent of prison admissions are native, while only 6 per cent of Saskatchewan's population is native.

Would the Minister confirm that across Canada 10 per cent of federal inmates are native even though they make up only 2 per cent of the population, and that this Parliament and this Government have the authority and the responsibility to implement a parallel justice system for Canada's first citizens?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very serious question. I am pleased to try to address it in a serious way.

The Hon. Member will know that this is a preliminary report to the Canadian Bar Association. I have instructed my officials to examine thoroughly and analyse the report and the statements and recommendations made therein.

I should say that we have tried as a Government, and I think with some success, to move forward in an examination of some of the difficulties faced by aboriginal populations in our country in the justice system. As a matter of fact at the present time my Department is undertaking a very extensive review of a number of initiatives. I think this report will be very closely examined. I thank the Hon. Member for raising the matter in the House.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same Minister. Since Canada clearly has the constitutional authority to implement aboriginal courts and correctional systems, and since Section 35 of the Constitution Act is a full box of rights, including self-government, will the Minister commit the Government to immediate action based on the CBA report, because many native Canadians are being prosecuted and incarcerated for practising their constitutional rights, making them, dare we say it here on the floor of the House of Commons, political prisoners in their own land, a situation which can no longer be allowed to continue?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, we want to look at the question in a very serious and comprehensive way as a Government.

I can only say to the Hon. Member that the report itself and the Canadian Bar Association appreciate that there is no easy or facile solution to the problem. It is one that will require a number of initiatives.

I can tell the Hon. Member, and I hope he will accept my commitment on behalf of the Government, that we regard this as a very serious question. Tomorrow I will have the opportunity to address the Canadian Bar Association. It just so happens that one of the aspects I will be dealing with is the whole question of sentencing vis-à-vis our native population. We are in fact, and have been, considering this matter. We will continue to do that. I will welcome any suggestions made by Members of Parliament and the Parties in this House.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the same Minister, the Minister of Justice. It is with regard to the report from the Canadian Bar Association.

The report strongly supports what aboriginal leaders have been telling the country for a very long while now, that is, that the present justice system under which they suffer has not served their people at all well.

I would like to ask the Minister, as the report recommends, if he is willing to work along with aboriginal leaders toward the development of a contemporary aboriginal or native justice system in Canada. The Minister knows that there is nothing shocking or radical in such a suggestion since it works well elsewhere in North America. For example, the Pueblo and Navajo have worked out such an arrangement with the American Government.

• (1450)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, there have been a number of initiatives and studies undertaken on the issue of sentencing and parole. The Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General has given very serious consideration, if I understand the proceedings well, to this whole issue. I expect that its report, which is anticipated some time next week, will try to deal with some of those complex issues.

This is something where we will have to consult widely, where there is no simple answer. It is a commitment which we have on behalf of the aboriginal people of Canada to make sure that justice does apply equally to all Canadians, including aboriginal Canadians.

Mr. Penner: The Minister talks about sentencing and parole. He knows that the question went well beyond that. We are talking about a contemporary aboriginal or native justice system developed in Canada, which is far beyond the matters to which the Minister referred.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR RENEWAL

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): For my supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to the Minister of Indian Affairs. The report cites poverty as being a major factor in the excessively high levels of incarceration among aboriginal peoples.

I would like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether, this week or perhaps next week, the Government will announce that the Native Economic Development Program will be renewed. As the Minister knows, that program will expire at the end of this fiscal year. Can native people expect to see a renewal of this ambitious effort to help them find their own feet, get off the welfare system and dependency on the Government of Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Native Economic Development Program has known quite a bit of activity. There have been 1,687 requests totalling some $1.2 billion. Fully 94 per cent of all requests have been dealt with.

The program was extended last year so that we could have, as a Government, the opportunity to review, with the people concerned, and the Assembly of First Nations, modifications that could be brought to a new version of the program to be introduced. It was extended until March 31 of next year. Those consultations have been going on very well.

I expect that we will be in a position very shortly to announce modifications or a new version of the program that could be put in place as of April 1, 1989.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

WHITEHORSE—FUTURE OF CENTRAL POST OFFICE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. The residents of Whitehorse in the Yukon are beginning to wonder if the Minister is attempting to add a northern question to the game of Trivial Pursuit, to wit: "What is the only capital city in Canada without a federally run post office?" Answer: "It looks like it's going to be Whitehorse".

In two months the current Post Office building will be demolished. For some reason Canada Post has continued to be secretive about its intentions for this retail facility.

Will the Minister now tell the taxpayers of Whitehorse what plans he has for the central post office?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member and her constituents that the mail receiving and sending public of the Yukon will continue to receive and be able to send mail.

As to specific details as to what and where the post office will be operating, that is a question that I will of course have the Post Office reply to, if the Hon. Member would prefer to have me ask the Post Office rather than ask herself.

COST OF POST OFFICE BOXES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his offer, because we have continually asked Canada Post, and it has continually failed to respond.

The Minister states that we will continue to be able to send and receive mail. Does the Minister realize that under his privatization scheme the cost of a post office box in a privately run post office has increased in Whitehorse anywhere from 400 per cent to 1,700 per cent from that in the federal post office, and that is what I call a "super box".

What does the Minister intend to do about this?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member states that she has made inquiries and has not been able to receive an answer. If the Hon. Member will send me a copy of those inquiries, I will get an explanation as to why. I would like to see evidence that the Hon. Member has asked and not received replies.

Lock box fees are set by regulation. The types of changes the Hon. Member talks about are impossible. If the Hon. Member will wait for four or five days I think that she will hear some very good news in terms of lock box fees.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND INSHORE FISHERY—REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION PROGRAM

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard the Member for St. John's West, the Acting Minister of Fisheries, boast about a $10,000 award that he has received from—in my view—a questionable organization called the National Citizens Coalition.

That is the same Minister who, last week, denied there was any crisis in the inshore fishery in Newfoundland. Last Saturday night in St. Anthony, Newfoundland, some 700 fishermen turned out at a public meeting in response to the Minister to tell him that he is wrong, that there is a crisis, that they are hungry, and that they are without incomes.

They asked me to present the Minister with an award of their own. One David Mugford, who has earned less than $1,000 since May, asked me to send the Minister his pay cheque for that week, which is $9.45. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I send that across the floor to the Acting Minister of Fisheries.

I wish to ask the Prime Minister, since the Acting Minister of Fisheries, the Member for St. John's West, refuses to acknowledge the crisis atmosphere in the inshore fishery in Newfoundland, the hunger that exists among fishing families in the inshore of Newfoundland, if the Prime Minister will establish, on an emergency basis, a compensation program to assist fishermen, primary producers, in exactly the same manner that this Government and previous Governments assisted farmers who are also primary producers? Can that be done quickly to assist hungry families today?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, last week the Hon. Member who asked this question claimed that there was a disastrous inshore fishery in Newfoundland and Labrador this year. That is an untrue and unfactual statement.

This year, up to July, the inshore cod landings and values were 90,000 metric tonnes caught, and $40 million in value, compared to 59,000 metric tonnes having a value of $28 million in the inshore fishery last year in the same period of time. How can the Hon. Member say that there is a disastrous failure in the Newfoundland fishery?

However, Mr. Speaker, this year, as happens every year on certain sections of the coast, which is thousands of miles in length, some areas have not had fish in the inshore fishery. One of those areas is the St. Anthony area in White Bay. Another area is that of Lawn and St. Lawrence on the south coast of Newfoundland, as I said last week.

Mr. Tobin: Oh, he's finally catching on.

Mr. Crosbie: If there is need for assistance in those particular areas, in the past there have been certain employment programs for areas like that and that will certainly be considered, but there is no disaster in the Newfoundland inshore fishery. Over much of the province it has been very good. For example, capelin landings are up to $28 million in value this year as compared to $7 million last year. To date, crab landings are also up in value.

The hon. gentleman's statement is simply untrue, except with respect to certain areas.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Spadina.

Mr. Tobin: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, with all those boring statistics that ignore human beings, it is no wonder that the Speaker nearly fell asleep, as did most of the House while listening to that dispassionate, callous, cruel, and thoughtless answer from the Acting Minister of Fisheries.

Landings may be up, but the price of fish is only half of what it was last year. While the value to the companies may have risen, the fishermen who catch the fish by the sweat of their brow are hungry this year. That is the lesson that the Minister is only now beginning to acknowledge. I tell the Minister that fishermen do not want an 8, 9, or 10 week program—

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the fishermen of Newfoundland want the same consideration in times of natural disaster as the farmers of this country rightly received. They are in a desperate situation now.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to set up a task force on an emergency basis because the crisis is now, Prime Minister—they are hungry now—to look at the situation of inshore fishermen all over Newfoundland and to provide financial compensation to those people who have earned pay cheques of $9.45 for a week, or who have earned less than $500 or $1,000 for the year?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, as we all know, is grandstanding, or he is trying to imitate the big-mouth bass or doing some kind of fish impersonation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The position is that, despite a drop in prices this year of something like 40 per cent, the landed value of fish caught in the inshore fishery of Newfoundland is up considerably. I have given you the figures, Mr. Speaker. I have given you the landings of the capelin, crab, and cod.

Mr. Tobin: Their take-home pay is down.

Mr. Crosbie: In areas where there is a local disaster as there is in some areas, then we will do the usual careful survey and if help is needed-

Mr. Tobin: It is needed.

Mr. Crosbie: —as always with this Government, the fishermen in those areas will get the necessary help, but they will not be helped by this kind of an exhibition in the House.

HOUSING

SITUATION IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL TAX ON LAND SPECULATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance.

As the Minister knows, there is a very desperate housing situation faced by the people of Toronto. People find it impossible to buy a home or often even to rent a home. Periodicals like Time magazine or The Financial Times have pointed to Toronto as a situation in which part of the reason for this housing shortage is that speculators are driving up the price of housing.

Would the Minister be willing to take steps to cool down this speculation in real estate and housing in Toronto? Will he consider a special tax on land speculation, which is what is bidding up the price of housing in Toronto?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Diversification): Mr. Speaker, the responsibility of the Government of Canada through Canada Mortgage and Housing has been recognized. There are expenditures on assisted housing in Canada of some $1.5 billion a year. In Toronto, the fair share of that amount is being put forward. There are more people in need at this time because of the housing policies that have been developed co-operatively with the provinces and the Government of Canada receiving assisted need in housing.

The Minister responsible has had discussions and informed the House as late as yesterday as to actions that he has taken that will provide more land after consultation with other Departments, and try to assist in putting forward land that is presently held by the Government, for the use of housing in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

FUNDING OF MUNICIPAL INFRASTRUCTURE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question about a tax on land speculation although his colleague Government in Ontario has done that in the past decade. It is also within the responsibility of the federal Government. I would point out that in the past municipal infrastructure, such as roads, sewers and water systems, has been aided by federal public works programs.

Would the Minister consider a tax on land speculation in order to contribute to funding to the necessary renovation of the municipal infrastructure such as roads, sewers, and water systems?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, may I answer that question. The Government is not considering any such tax.

What the Government is considering is its firm approach to monetary expansion to make sure that inflation does not get out of hand, to make sure that we do not have 21 per cent interest rates as we had in 1981 and to make sure that we do not have 13 per cent unemployment rates as we had in 1982. That is our approach.

In addition, we have brought in a capital gains tax which cuts particularly heavily into real estate companies that are speculating.

CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, August 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-144, an Act to authorize payments by Canada toward the provision of child care services, and to amend the Canada Assistance Plan in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mrs. Martin:

That this question be now put.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in terms of social policy at the national level, there is no need more urgent nor claim more legitimate than a call for a comprehensive child care policy. That is what the people of Canada need. That is what they require and that is precisely what the Conservative Government has failed to deliver.

In my youth, to put it in perspective, the large majority of mothers, wherever they were in our country, whether in the East, central Canada, on the plains of our Prairies or beyond the mountains in British Columbia, worked exclusively within the household. Today not only a majority but a growing majority of mothers work outside the home. It is folly to assume, as the Government seems to be, that history will suddenly reverse itself. The conclusion that we reach for those who care for children, for those who believe and believe genuinely in equality between the sexes, for those who prefer reality to mythology as a guide to public policy, is that we need to be launching in Canada a comprehensive child care program, and we need to be doing it now from coast to coast.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Today, fully 60 per cent of the mothers of pre-school children are working outside the home, with no access available to quality child care services for almost two million children of such families. The Government in the face of this reality has presented us not with a national program but a national fraud. The Government has done so not in ignorance of the facts for which some matters of policy might be excusable, but it has done so with full knowledge of the contemporary Canadian reality.

The evidence is all around us. For Members of Parliament of each Party in the House of Commons, from any part of our country, whether we speak to our friends, our neighbours or acquaintances we all understand that the family has changed. We have conventional families, unconventional families, women and men reversing conventional roles. Sometimes the man stays at home to rear the child or children while the woman works out in the market-place. More often than not, as I have just indicated, both partners in the family structure are working outside the home. We know it from our personal experience, but beyond our personal experience we have the evidence, and that too was presented to all Members of the House as a result of the special committee established to look into this question.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) for our Party was an active and caring member of that committee and reported back to our caucus on that committee's findings.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1510)

Mr. Broadbent: I want to cite some of the instances that she has drawn to our attention and to the attention of all members of that committee. Again, I repeat, regardless of their Party they became aware of it during the course of their travels throughout Canada.

What are some of the important and salient matters of fact that this Government ought to have been considering that were drawn to our attention by this report? First, that parents overwhelmingly were saying, wherever they were in Canada, whatever their financial circumstance, that it was almost impossible to still find in Canada, in the latter part of the 1980s, reliable and consistent child care service. Second, some mothers actually reported that they had 10 or more different services for care provided before their child was out of the diaper stage. Third, that it is common—not the exception—to take six months or more to be able to find a child care space for one of your children.

It was reported to this committee in a number of instances that parents have had to resort to finding a name posted somewhere, in a local Becker's store or in a grocery store, with a phone number attached which indicated that they would be willing to provide child care service. We should keep in mind that for many families in our country both members are still working outside the home, in part as a matter of choice and also as a matter of economic necessity. If they were not working outside of the home—both partners—the percentage of Canadian families living at the poverty level would rise dramatically.

It is very easy for people in upper-income positions, like Members of Parliament, to be able to say: "Why is it that a family would turn to a local grocery store to obtain the name of a child care service and perhaps check it out in the most rudimentary kind of way?" The evidence is that for most families, certainly for a great many families, it is not a matter of choice; it is a matter of economic necessity. A majority of families find the cost of quality day care prohibitive.

These are just some of the facts, I repeat, that became available to members of all Parties in the House, including members of the Cabinet, who have to assume responsibility for drafting this abomination which they call a child care policy.

I was a Member of the House in 1970 when a Royal Commission reported that the needs for child care required "immediate action". That was in 1970. Today, as the whole country knows, the situation has got worse, not better.

In responding to this worsening situation, in terms of the need, the Government has almost acted perversely. Refusing to see or to respond to reality, the Conservatives cling instead to mythology. They hurl abuse at experts and they are ignoring the modern family in all its diversity.

One of the things that has struck me in observing Conservatives, whether here in Canada or in the country to the south of us, is the amount of lip service that they pay to the family, as if they had some kind of exclusive—and I am tempted to say property—right to the notion of the family. Time after time one hears in Canadian politics and on this continent Conservatives talking about the importance of the family. I want to say, with considerable passion, if they really understand the Canadian family as it exists not in the 1930s but in the 1980s, if there is one group that is ignoring the contemporary family and all of its needs, it is the Conservative Party of Canada. That is the reality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Conservatives' so-called National Strategy on Child Care—that is the name that they gave to it—is a strategy right out of George Orwell. It is "double speak" of the worst kind. It is saying one thing, paying lip service to one idea, but moving quite clearly in the opposite direction.

Conservatives clearly have disappointed the people of Canada in many ways since the election of 1984, but there is no greater disappointment in terms of the legitimate claims of the majority of Canadian families than what the Conservatives have offered in this so-called child care policy.

Canadian parents and their children need more rapid access to child care spaces and they need better quality child care. The Conservative Government with this program has delivered neither, but they have taken credit for both.

What is the evidence for what I regard as the severe indictment that I have just made about the Conservative program? I want to point out exactly why I say that. First, the number of spaces without this program has been growing in recent years at the rate of some 15 per cent a year, doubling every five years.

The Conservative promise to add 200,000 non-profit spaces by 1995 might sound impressive on the surface, if one hears just the numbers, until you realize that this actually constitutes a reduction in the rate of growth, from 15 per cent annually to 10 per cent, and instead of requiring only five years to double the number of spaces, with this program that the Conservatives have brought in it will take seven years.

Second, not only have the Conservatives brought in a program which will result in a reduction in the rate of increase in the number of spaces but they have actually put a cap on the growth in these spaces to make sure that by the end of the seven-year program no more spaces will be created than they themselves intended to have created.

Third, there is no requirement in this Bill at all for the provinces, which will be getting federal funds, to offer guarantees that they will actually be providing quality child care spaces as a result of those federal funds.

The conclusion is that the Conservatives have reduced the rate of growth, have put a ceiling on that growth, have ignored quality day care, and then have had the effrontery to describe this as "an effective national child care system". This is a fraud and typical Conservative hypocrisy, that is what it is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: When George Orwell was writing his masterpiece 1984, I am tempted to add that he was blissfully unaware at the time that the people of Canada would be electing a government in that very year which would turn out to be the most ardent practitioners of the black art of propaganda that he so vividly described in that master work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We in this Party say that now is the time to embark on a truly national program based on real but varying needs in all of our regions and provinces, and we say that such action would be fully consistent with the kind of federalism that we have decided to renew at the national level of former co-operative federalism that finds itself embedded in the Meech Lake Accord.

• (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the setting of national objectives would be quite compatible with the Meech Lake Accord, but the Government refuses to shoulder its responsibilities. It is not asserting the leadership required to create a Canadian child care program. We can even go so far as to say that there is no program. Although the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) said that their goal is to provide sufficient accessible and affordable quality services, none of this is in the Bill. This Bill attains none of these four objectives.

Let us talk about availability. The normal increase in the number of available places will go down.

Let us talk about cost. There is no national objective and the federal Government has even imposed a budget restriction.

Let us talk about quality and ease of access. Here again there is no national objective. In his speech of August 11, the Prime Minister said, and I quote, "They are the actions of a Government determined to lead in implementing coherent national programs. These actions clearly illustrate that this Government is committed to social justice for all Canadians. Child care is the centrepiece of that commitment." That is what he said!

The Prime Minister has come up with an incoherent program that will create fewer spaces in seven years than will be created by normal growth.

He refused to use the Meech Lake Accord as a tool to develop a Canadian policy for quality child care from coast to coast, a quality program that could very well be implemented by the provincial Governments according to their specific needs. Instead of that, the Prime Minister set no objective. This means that he is overlooking the Meech Lake Agreement. Indeed, he has chosen to ignore this Agreement. That means that the Prime Minister is not showing leadership. On the contrary, he has abandoned his leadership role. He has forgotten Canadian children.

[English]

The Conservatives are all so great at talking about the need for choice, as if they had a monopoly on the idea of freedom of choice. Again this has been applied to the program they have brought in. They claim that they will give parents choices by spending $2.4 billion through the tax system.

In the first place, more than half of this money is not new. It was already in the system. In the second place, most of the new money will go to a program which gives parents a maximum of $200 per child per year. As my colleague behind me has said, big deal, and as another child care advocate has said about this sum of money, it will hardly be sufficient to pay for two children's snowsuits. Indeed, if we think of what the Conservatives have done for the average family since they came to power, we can see the kind of shell game they are up to.

Since 1984, the Conservatives have increased taxes on an annual basis. Income and other taxes have been increased by some $1,000 per year for the average family. Here the Conservatives think they will con people into thinking they are doing something effective for children by giving some $200 of that back to parents.

We in this Party say that we should not be playing shell games with the tax system but we should be building an effective and accessible child care system.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my Party is opposing this Conservative scheme because we do believe Canada's children deserve the best and that that should be our goal. We should now be putting in place a comprehensive system of child care. We should be laying down a foundation for such a universal system and we should be doing it now. I regret that the Conservatives have not seized the opportunity to support the modern family in the carrying out of its most fundamental role, the caring and raising of children.

Evidence shows that the first priority of an adequate policy must aim at providing a sufficient amount of money to provide an adequate number of licensed, quality child care spaces that will be universally accessible and affordable for all the families of Canada. Our experience with medicare and public education ought to have been some kind of guide to the Conservatives in drafting this policy.

We would not today have medicare if the Government that first launched that system in Canada, the then NDP Government of Saskatchewan, subsequently followed up on a national basis, had used the tax system and simply gave the money to the people and encouraged them to act as consumers in the market-place and thereby create a universal medicare system. It was simply the failure of the market-place to meet this human need that caused thinking people in Canada and in western Europe to recognize the need for government involvement to create a system that was outside the market. The Conservatives, as is so often the case, learned nothing from history.

As was the case when medicare was first launched, so too now we hear the propaganda from the Conservatives, from the Minister who brought in the Bill and from Conservative spokespersons who write columns in newspapers. They are saying about the New Democratic Party what they said in the early 1960s when we fought to get medicare established. They are saying: "Oh, there they are, those people who want the state to meddle in the affairs of individuals. There they are, they want the heavy hand of the state determining in a day-to-day way the lives of Canadian citizens, taking away flexibility, taking away variety, imposing uniformity".

These are the clichés we heard in the Conservative opposition to the medicare system in the early 1960s, a system which they now defend. They are repeating those clichés now. They were wrong in the early 1960s about medicare and they are wrong in the 1980s about child care.

The truth is, just as we said that comprehensive medicare in the 1960s would provide freedom for doctors and for patients and particularly freedom from worry about medical bills, so too we are saying about a national child care system that we do not want uniformity. Quite the contrary. I have already said that this measure is compatible with the Meech Lake Accord in terms of its national objectives by acknowledging the differing needs of our different provinces. In that context, some parents in some parts of Canada will want a different kind of child care system for their children, and we want to make sure it is available to them.

We have said that we want diversity, not uniformity. We want a range of options including child care centres, parent co-operatives, after school care, family home child care and neighbourhood drop-ins for parents and children. In short, it is the Tories who are denying flexible, imaginative, variable child care services. It is the New Democrats once again who are arguing for just such diversity to meet the needs of contemporary families.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I understand that I am about to reach the time limit imposed on me in participating in this debate. I would like to ask for the permission of the House for a few moments to continues.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As is the custom, I am sure the House will agree.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: I thank Hon. Members opposite and on this side for their courtesy.

I want to conclude with a positive assertion of the basic elements of what the New Democratic Party is advocating. I have tried to make clear what we find objectionable about the Conservative approach. I want now to say what we would put in its place.

First, we would introduce a Bill that would include an outline of national objectives including a set of principles that would be pertinent to the distribution of federal funds to the provinces with the objective of assuring quality child care. Legislation should require a provincial child care program to conform to the following national objectives: non-profit, comprehensive, quality, affordable and accessible. Each province would, within its own domain, pass legislation within this framework setting out its own definitions of these concepts. That would then be assessed according to the national objectives laid down by the Parliament of Canada which would be providing federal funding.

These principles which I have described with respect to the criteria that ought to be spelled out to provinces if they are going to get federal funds are modelled on the Canada Health Act and, as I have already indicated, are fully consistent with the Meech Lake Accord. With these principles in place we would provide the necessary federal leadership but also permit the details of the program delivery to vary to meet the differing needs of families and communities in Newfoundland, Toronto, Moose Jaw and Whitehorse.

Contrary to the assertion of the Conservatives that putting objectives in the legislation would trample on provincial jurisdiction, we assert that this is totally consistent with the model of co-operative federalism that existed in the early 1960s, and totally consistent with the Meech Lake Accord. When we were debating the Meech Lake Accord, if I remember correctly, and I am sure I do, both the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said we could lay down such objectives for a national child care program. They said that when they brought in the Meech Lake legislation. They failed to do it. They ought to have done it.

Second, we would have as a priority the creation of additional child care spaces. We would not only set out a program that would increase the number of spaces in all the variety that I have already alluded to, but make sure they would be quality spaces. Our plan would provide some 50,000 new child care spaces per year on average over the next four years so that we would have 200,000 new non-profit spaces by 1992.

I want to be explicit about this. In the first year we would be spending $330 million in new money. New spending in 1992 would be as high as $560 million. Including a portion of Canada Assistance Plan spending, which we would keep in place to continue to provide subsidies for low-income parents, we would be spending about $800 million a year in 1992. At the end of the four years there would be about 450,000 child care spaces in Canada at a cumulative cost of approximately $2.3 billion.

During the same period of time the Conservatives would be using up over $1 billion in federal spending additional to what we have advocated, but they would be creating far fewer child care spaces. This is precisely because they prefer to tinker with the tax system and we prefer to get on with the job of providing additional child care spaces.

The third point I would like to make is that child care for us has to be affordable. No one is talking about a free system of child care. We do not have free medicare or free elementary schools. We have services that we pay for in our society either in the market-place or as taxpayers through collected tax revenue. What we see as a need right now is a mixture of the two in meeting a real human and family child need in providing affordable child care. By maintaining Canada Assistance Plan subsidies and by maintaining affordability as a national objective, we can ensure a progressive cost structure for child care services.

In the years ahead we believe that paying for child care should be based on the same principles as our progressive tax system. The higher your income is, the greater your capacity to pay, the more you would have to pay. The lower your income is, the less your capacity to pay, the less you would have to pay. Surely we ought to recognize the real need and real and differing capacities to pay for it and get on with the job and make sure it is available.

I want to conclude by referring to what I said at the very outset of my speech this afternoon. The family structure and family life in this magnificent country of ours has changed profoundly in the last three or four decades. From this it follows for us that if we really mean what we say when we say we care for Canada's families and for Canada's children, we have to put in place a child care policy that does not deny this reality but recognizes this reality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, I want to have the opportunity to ask the Leader of the NDP a few questions about his comments on this very important issue.

He will know, as the Vice-Chairman on the Task Force on Child Care, I had the opportunity of travelling across the country to some 37 cities, along with the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), to deal with the problem of defining child care. In 1970 there was a report dealing with the status of women which laid out all these problems. Yet we found in 1987 and 1988 a remarkable dearth of information about the true nature of the problem.

I know the Hon. Member for Vancouver East must have had some difficulty in her chair when she heard her Leader talk about Orwell and fraud and hyprocrisy of the Conservatives. That certainly was not the spirit of the committee. We had very little difficulty in agreeing on the nature of the problem. Being as respectful as I can, I would accept that there might be different alternatives and solutions. However, I reject categorically the Leader of the NDP's assertion that we are wasting money on tax expenditures. Hundreds of Canadians have been writing me the last two or three months telling me that although the $200 per child is really not enough, and we all know that, try telling them it is nothing when it amounts to $2.3 billion.

I wonder if the Leader of the NDP might answer at least a couple of questions based on this principle. Yes, it is true there are two million Canadians requiring child care. However, 85 per cent of those are currently being looked after in an informal system. A lot of Canadians told us they like that informal system. Some Canadians said they had a great deal of difficulty. Some wanted access to day care and could not find spaces. However, not every single Canadian of that 2 million viewed that situation as a crisis.

Three very quick questions. What does the Leader of the Opposition have to say about his approach to child care, which abandons all those people, fully 85 per cent, who use informal child care and like it? He has not said much today in his speech but in assertions outside he talked a lot about the ideology of the not-for-profit centre. Fully 40 per cent of Canadians in day care, that is the small group that is in formal day care, have their children in the private sector. Would we abandon those in his formula?

The Hon. Member talked about relations with the provinces. Where on earth does he get the information that they can create 50,000 spaces next year? Why do you think you can tell the provinces what to do in an area exclusively under their jurisdiction? It seems to me you are not going to get very far, Mr. Leader of the Opposition, by saying to people like we Conservatives who care as much about the family as you do that our attempt to solve this problem is a fraud. I do not like it and Canadians will not like it, either.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I do want to reply to what I take to be the Member's serious questions. First, I want to be clear, I did not say about the Hon. Member or any other member of his committee that he or they constituted a fraud. I described the Government's policy, brought in by the Cabinet as such, and I took care to say why I thought it was a fraud, and nothing the Hon. Member has just said has deterred me from thinking so. In fact, the Member has confirmed my thinking that what Cabinet brought in was a fraud. If the Hon. Member had understood wrongly what I said about the intentions or the work that was done by members of his committee, I want to tell him I was describing the Government's policy.

There were three specific questions, as I understand, and, by the way, the Hon. Member was asking the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to answer. I would like to hear what the Leader of the Opposition has to say in this matter also, but as Leader of the New Democratic Party, I will be happy to reply. The first question was what are we offering the family which the Member said was using the informal system, which is very often a euphemism for using a baby-sitter who stays at home. The Member was on the committee and heard a lot of testimony to this effect. The baby-sitter sits before a television set all day long with a small child or small children. Very often that is the situation. I am sure the Hon. Member would not like that anymore than I would. But if the Hon. Member is asking what we are offering to those families, we are not offering anything directly because we want to put it out there so we can have quality child care service outside the home for those who want to have a viable option outside the home.

Like the Hon. Member's Government, we are facing a priority question. Where is the real need? We have listened to the experts, as did the Hon. Member when he was travelling across the country, and we have our experience as parents and Members of Parliament and in talking to people. It is clear that we need new quality spaces made available. That is what we are saying.

Second, I was asked about profit day care. If I understood the legislation correctly, the Government itself finally accepted in its approach for new child care spaces all the best evidence on this, which is that financing will only go for capital grants, starting up a new system should go only to non-profit child care. This is the way we got other social systems under way in this country. The Government itself acknowledges the legitimacy of the point we are making. If we are going to put public expenditures out there for a social service, the general rule should be, and we have applied it here, that it should go for non-profit service for children.

Third, the Member makes reference to the Canadian Constitution and the principles of Canadian federalism. He repeats the Conservative line by asking how we can tell the provinces what to do. I can say very easily that if you, Sir, as a Member of the federal Parliament, were going to allocate federal funds to the provinces for a child care system consistent with what your Leader and your Prime Minister said about the Meech Lake Accord, if you want to set out such a national program with national objectives, flexibly applied according to different provincial needs, then there is a requirement, I say to you, Sir, that the provinces live up to those obligations, that we just do not throw the money out there and pray. We must make sure they live up to their commitments.

Mrs. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I heard the comments about the possibility of giving the provinces instructions. I would like to ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party a question. We all know that Manitoba had an NDP Government from 1982 to 1987. The statistics for this period show that this province had the lowest rate of growth for permits granted to spaces provided by non-profit organizations. Only 3,000 spaces were added in Manitoba throughout this five-year period. The NDP was in power and could have done more. Why did it not do more for the children of Manitoba? Why did it not use the money available from the Canada Assistance Plan, which was prepared to share the costs of these available spaces? This would have benefited the children and families who needed it.

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to say that the Manitoba Government during this period had the lowest tax rate for the citizens of this province of Canada and it set a record for job creation—it was second of all Canadian provinces. That is also a fact!

Concerning the specific question, I have no information here, but I would like to get the information for the Hon. Member, after discussing it with the former Premier of Manitoba. But the Government had its priorities and set an excellent record, in general, for the middle class and poor in Manitoba. But I would like to obtain a more specific answer for the Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall continue the debate now with speeches of at most 10 minutes each. The Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) has the floor.

Mr. Léo Duguay (Saint-Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in a debate on a subject that is of vital importance to our society.

When we look at the day-care situation across the country, we must consider how the situation has evolved in the last ten or fifteen years. When our committee was studying this subject, we found that for 85 per cent of Canadians, day-care is provided in an informal setting. Parents find their own solutions. They often ask relatives or friends to help them or they hire a sitter.

Of course, the Leader of the New Democratic Party doesn't realize that quite often, parents who provide day-care for their children in an informal setting prefer that arrangement because their children feel more secure with one person who takes care of them instead of being in a large group.

[English]

We have heard people talk about child care in Canada as a crisis. Well, in some parts of the country it may be a crisis. In other parts of the country it is a problem. In other parts of the country services are available and are being provided. The system of child care without this massive infusion provided for by the federal Government was growing at a rate of nearly 2 per cent a year. People talk about waiting lists as measurements of whether or not there are spaces required in the country. You know how it is with waiting lists, Mr. Speaker, people put their name on one, then another, then another. We found there were Canadians whose names were on 20 waiting lists. There is no doubt that airplanes overbook by 10 per cent or 15 per cent because people put their names on lists.

It seems very clear to me that the word "crisis" is important in child care in some parts of the country, but not everywhere.

In any case, what is more important than whether we define the problem as just a problem or a crisis, is the fact that all we Canadians care more about our children than we care about anything else. We want our children to grow up and be better citizens than we are. We want our country to grow and be better than it is now. Therefore, we are prepared to devote all of our resources as parents and as a Government to ensure that our children receive the proper care they deserve. This is not for me a question of ideology as it is for the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I do not get up every morning and say: "I am a Conservative. I am for profit centres. They are New Democrats. They are not for profit centres". I care more about the quality of care children receive than I care about who is providing it.

What we have tried to do in this legislation is find a mechanism to respond to all of those things that parents want from their Government.

• (1550)

The Leader of the New Democratic Party has often bragged about the quality of service provided for child care in Manitoba. Let me give him an example. Ideologically, they would not support profit centres. I can document examples in my province of very wealthy parents having their children in subsidized centres while poor parents had to go down the street to the profit centre and pay more. The reason is that not enough spaces are provided. This matter does not deal with ideology, it is a question of doing what is right for young people.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party talked about the relationship with the provinces. My view is consistent with the attitude that in order to work things out in Canada one must work with people. A government cannot sit in its ivory tower in Ottawa and dictate what is good for everybody and decide that every province will do exactly the same thing. The Leader of the NDP gave the examples of medicare and post-secondary education. We have federal legislation in those areas in order to provide funds, but they do not contain minimum national standards in the area of program delivery compared to those he was suggesting. None of the Bills contain such things as doctor-patient ratios or bed-ratios.

Who do we think we are in Ottawa, that we have all the wisdom in the country and that we can tell the provinces what to do because we know better? I will support the right of provinces to make decisions in this area because, very often, the provinces are closer than us to the scene. They know the needs of their own provinces better than we do. Our responsibility as a Canadian Government is to help the provinces and help the parents so that children get the best support we can possibly provide them.

In summary, Canadians care a lot about the children in this country. Even Canadians who do not have children care a lot about the future of this country. It is our responsibility to help the provinces. We are doing that with this legislation.

It is our responsibility to help the parents. We are doing that with this legislation through tax relief. Do not let anyone say, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party said last week in Vancouver, that $2.3 billion in tax relief for Canadians is irrelevant. While it may not be enough, and we would like to do more, we are doing everything we can for the moment. I reject and resent considerably the Member's implication that this policy is a fraud. I think he should go back and read Orwell again. He has obviously missed a few lessons about what it truly means.

This Bill helps Canadians help children. I think it is the greatest piece of legislation we have introduced in this Parliament.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate on Bill C-144 which concerns day-care, since the previous speaker said this was the most important piece of legislation tabled in Parliament in the last four years. I would not go that far, but I would say it is a subject that should have received Parliament's attention well before this Government was getting towards the end of its mandate.

Mr. Speaker, I agree that the need for day-care services in this country has become particularly urgent. We know that a tremendous change has taken place in the very structure of the average Canadian family and that in 50 per cent of families with children, both spouses work, so that some form of day-care is necessary, either through day-care centres, home day-care or the help of relatives or friends.

Mr. Speaker, since I am in the same situation myself—we have a seven-year old and a five-year old—I can tell you that for most parents it is a real headache. I am rather disappointed to see that this Bill, which has the full backing of the Government, will do practically nothing about the increasing problems of families where both parents work. Mr. Speaker, today, only 20 per cent of Canadian children have access to day-care and 57 per cent of children between the ages of 6 and 14 are alone after school.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is supposed to provide about 200,000 spaces, at a time when we would need something like one million spaces. Mr. Speaker, the Government is talking about 200,000 spaces over the next seven years. In other words, it won't do my children any good, although maybe my grandchildren will get something out of it, and all because the Government is nickeling and diming to deal with an urgent problem. The Conservative Government has failed to recognize the changes that are taking place in our society, and the truly pressing need that exists in our cities and in rural areas as well in this country. Take for instance l'Ange Gardien de Rouville, where women fought for this cause and managed to convince the municipal council in a small rural area to set up a day-care centre, and now the demand is increasing. They started with 25 spaces and they think they will get up to 50, and I can tell you this is a success story. But the problem is that this program will not solve the problems that exist across Canada, and the whole undertaking is so fragile, you would think the federal Government tabled Bill C-144 just to pretend it was doing something about the situation.

I advise mothers who are listening to us today and who plan to go back to work in the next six months or the next year not to get their hopes up. Bill C-144 certainly will not solve your problems. Don't count on this legislation to provide day-care spaces. Don't go out and apply for a job right away!

Mr. Speaker, usually, once you get the job you make arrangements for day-care. I think the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) is so nervous about the fact that she is probably going to be beaten in a matter of weeks or months that she fails to realize what the situation is. She may have to go out there and get a job herself. But the truth is that one of the reasons why mothers don't go out and look for a job is that they don't have access to day-care. When parents decide, and this is a choice they both have to make, they both want to go to work, what are they going to do with the children? Can they get a sitter? Can they find a space? I know. We had the same experience. We applied for spaces in day-care centres, and we had to wait for up to a year or a year and a half for an opening.

This is an urgent problem, and I think the Government is just paying lip service, because it should have introduced measures that are far more energetic than the ones it has tabled.

Mr. Speaker, when I look at the figures, the Government said it wants to help families and it says that families without any taxable income will be entitled to a measly increase of $200 annually in the child tax credit, for each child under six.

Mr. Speaker, you have children too and $200 a year doesn't go very far. I am sure that on $200 a year, if you feed them Similac and buy Pampers, you won't last six months.

I am sure that poor families won't be able to say this program is doing them any good. This is peanuts, when we know how much it costs to raise a family, Mr. Speaker.

And another thing: I think it is clear that this Bill is not very specific about standards and objectives. One wonders exactly what this Government wants to accomplish. One wonders whether it is not just an another example of so-called election goodies. One wonders whether this Government is really serious about what it is doing and if it has any goals, any real family policy that favours a rising birth rate.

Mr. Speaker, the truth is that the Minister is a member of the national impro league, because this is a perfect example of total improvisation. There are no guarantees for universal access. There are no guarantees like . . . No other steps have been taken to make it possible for families . . . to allow for parental leave or things like that. No consideration was given such measures at all, and no consideration was given to the quality of services that will be available under this program.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed unfortunate that the Government has failed to do its homework better and really focus on modern family problems in Canada. What can you expect, Mr. Speaker, most Government Members believe that the Canadian family is still structured along the line of the old traditional model. For instance, they do not recognize the reality of single parent families which are among the poorest in Canada and which, under this program, will have no new services made available to them.

Mr. Speaker, I think that if the tax measures are inadequate, so are the parents' benefits . . . They ask for instance for maternity leave to be increased to 26 weeks, parental leave for each of the spouses, top quality services guaranteed, as well as improved accessibility and cost sharing. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this Bill does not meet the expectations of even the most interested groups.

The great many witnesses who came forward to express their views on this Bill have all criticized its inadequacy and lack of generosity.

Mr. Speaker, we need to think only of the issue of day-care in the workplace. We know that we are taking the very first steps in this direction. There are a few high profile examples, including the Lavalin firm and here in the House of Commons. There are others, but we know that they are unique cases, and the Government should have helped set up daycare centres in the workplace by allowing an over 100 per cent amortization deduction over a five year period to encourage the rapid growth of quality daycare services in the workplace.

Mr. Speaker, you indicate to me that I have only a few minutes left. I am sorry to hear that, because I could tell you about the problems which Canadian families trying to raise children are faced with today, especially the younger ones where both the father and mother went to school and started a career only to find themselves in this predicament . . . It is not that they do not want to provide their children with the best of care, but none is available. You can visit just about any region in Quebec or the rest of Canada: You better have very good contacts with the day-care centres, or be very affluent; otherwise, you will have to wait years and years for a space. The worst thing is that, generally, it is the wife who has to sacrifice her career and decide to stay home for a year or two while the children are very young. So she suffers a set back in the development of her career. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that 200,000 spaces are just not enough. If you told me that this program would apply only to Quebec, I would say that these 200,000 spaces would make sense.

But since this program will apply to Canada as a whole, Mr. Speaker, we will have to wait seven or eight years. You can imagine that by the time these 200,000 spaces are available, the children who are now 10 years old will be able to exercise their right to vote and be themselves in need for day-care spaces.

Therefore, it is far from beeing enough. I feel also that it is much too late, because this debate should have taken place a long time ago. The Government is trying to pressure us into adopting this Bill quickly. We have only ten minutes at our disposal to express our view on an issue of such tremendous importance for the future of our society.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that Bill C-144 is quite inadequate, that the Liberal Party over the next few months will propose a valide alternative to this Bill, and that we mean to discuss the issue with all the interested Parties, because the Government is showing neither great courage nor leadership on this issue.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to make just a brief comment on the question that my colleague from across the way raised with regard to my Leader's speech on day care. She tried to portray the record of the Manitoba Government as being a weak record in terms of day care. I suppose she did that in order to try to indicate that the NDP as a federal Government would not have a strong record in this area. Thus she made the statement, as I understood it, that between the years 1982 and 1987 the lowest rate of increase in day care was in the Province of Manitoba.

I am seeking information with regard to this matter. However, in the meantime I want to make note of one thing, that is, if we compare the number of spaces in a province such as Manitoba which has had two NDP Governments, one under Howard Pawley and one under Ed Schreyer, and then compare that with Saskatchewan which has a similar population base, one will see that Manitoba has some 8,771 spaces. Saskatchewan has some 3,698 spaces. There is a Conservative Government in that province, the Government of Mr. Devine. That puts the Manitoba record in a very good light.

The only point I want to make is that we have to look closely at statistics that are being quoted in the House in order to form impressions. I say that because it depends on what statistics one looks at as to what impression one forms. I suggest that it just might be that the Hon. Member across the way selected her statistics in order to put the Manitoba NDP Government in the worst possible light. She did that rather than seeking to provide some objective indication of what the situation is in Manitoba, in which there are far more day care spaces than there are in Saskatchewan which has a Conservative Government.

I have a little more information in this regard. Manitoba has the highest per capita expenditures of all provinces on day care. Why did the Conservative Member not mention that statistic? It reminds me of a book that I read a number of years ago. The title of the book stands out in my mind. It is: How to Lie with Statistics. Rather than using statistics to shed light on a situation, to provide some objective criteria so that we can get a handle on reality, some people use statistics in order to create false impressions, in order to score political points. I am not saying that this is the case here, but one begins to wonder why the Hon. Member quoted one statistic which was the rate of increase statistics rather than pointing out that at the same time Manitoba has the highest per capita expenditures of all provinces on day care.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would have wanted to point out at the same time that there are more spaces per capita in Manitoba, and that Manitoba has the most comprehensive standards in Canada with regard to the quality of care. Not only do we have numbers, a measure of quantity, but there is a measure of quality. Manitoba has the most comprehensive standards with regard to the quality of day care.

As well, I would like to point out that we have increased funding for day care spaces to 11,200 from 6,500. That is a 72 per cent increase from fiscal year 1981-82 to 1986-87. What do you think of that, Mr. Speaker?

My friend across the way, if I remember what she said, said that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I just realized that the Hon. Member has already spoken on this matter on Thursday, August 11. As he knows, he cannot speak twice.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Is this not an amendment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: To answer the comment of the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), the Hon. Member has spoken on the amendment we are debating now.

• (1610)

Mr. Keeper: I spoke earlier in this debate on what I thought was the main motion. However, I thought we were on another procedure which allowed me to speak again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has spoken on the motion of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works (Mrs. Martin), which is the motion that we are presently debating. The Hon. Member may also have spoken on the main motion. We will proceed with the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate regarding the Government's national strategy on child care. It is one that I am very proud of. I want to focus on the strategies and benefits for Canadian women, and on the impact it will have on women's over-all potential as equal contributors to our country's growth and prosperity.

The national strategy on child care is a very important element of our Government's efforts to help women achieve full equality. It is one of the initiatives that we have undertaken to create an environment that supports and encourages workers of both genders in fulfilling both their employment and family responsibilities.

[Translation]

Our government recognizes that child care is the key to economic equality—that it is a needed and essential social program.

We are committing substantial amounts of money through the strategy to support existing child care services, and to provide incentives for the creation of new quality child care spaces. We have honoured the commitment we made to Canadian men and women to improve the child care system in this country. Moreover, I believe we have done so in a way which respects the choices of parents.

In the last twenty years, the social fabric of our society has been profoundly changed as more and more women with children enter the paid workforce and find themselves balancing their combined responsibilities in the workplace and in the home.

In the past two decades we have seen the traditional Canadian family—consisting of a breadwinner father and a mother at home with one or more children—become the exception rather than the rule.

Today 54 per cent of all Canadian women are in the paid labour force. Of women between the ages of 20 and 64, 65 per cent are working outside the home. A full 62 per cent of Canadian mothers with children under 16 are currently in the paid labour force.

[English]

An increasing number of Canadian women are raising families on their own. In fact, 83 per cent of single-parent families in Canada today are headed by women.

In some cases, two incomes are needed to keep a family above the poverty line. The National Council on Welfare has estimated that 62 per cent more Canadian families would be poor, if both partners did not work outside the home.

It comes down to the following: Women work for the same reasons that most men work; they work for personal fulfillment, economic fulfillment and, in many cases, out of necessity. The same economic, social, and psychological factors related to employment apply to women as they do to men, and the right to the same choices should also exist for women.

However, women's choices have been constrained in the struggle for equality, whether it is in the workplace, the professions, the business world, at home, or at school; whether they live in rural communities or urban centres. They have been constrained in terms of bringing increased fulfillment to themselves and economic stability to their families by the lack of child care.

It has been a major barrier to women's participation in the labour force. I believe there can be no greater stress on a mother than worrying about the well-being of her child. Not allowing women the opportunity to achieve their full potential means that, as a nation, we are not making the best use of the glorious skills and talents of half our population. That is a situation that we as a society cannot afford, and our future competitiveness and ability to finance ourselves is at stake.

Our child care strategy acknowledges that there is no single solution which can respond completely to the diverse and changing child care needs of Canadian families. For this reason we have offered Canadians a balanced choice of initiatives. The national strategy goes far beyond any child care program ever offered or even contemplated by any government in Canada.

First, the Canada Child Care Act will provide funding to create 200,000 new, quality, subsidized child care spaces through new cost sharing arrangements with the provinces. This will go a long way to assure parents not only of the availability of child care, but of care which is professional, safe, and developmentally healthy for their children.

Because we recognize that people are different and want to make different choices, the second part of the strategy consists of two new tax measures which will benefit almost three-quarters of Canadian families with pre-school age children. As a Government we recognize the unfairness of a system that has allowed the bulk of working families incomes to be eaten up by child care expenses. This strategy aims to ease the situation by doubling the child care expense deduction from $2,000 to $4,000 a year for each child under six years of age, and in addition, removing the limit of $8,000 on allowable deductions.

As well, lower income parents and many families without child care receipts will benefit, beginning this year, from the supplement to the child tax credit, amounting to $100 this year, and $200 next year.

In addition, the strategy creates a $100 million child care initiatives fund which will give priority to practical proposals designed to meet child care needs and innovative approaches to providing services.

In total, the Government is committing $6.4 billion to the strategy, including special amounts for native children over the next seven years, and another $1 billion annually after that to support child care in this country.

This strategy goes far beyond anything ever offered. Certainly, for many years the Liberals sat on the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women from 1970 without doing anything about what was looked at then as an urgent problem. The NDP seems to believe that all Canadian families are the same, that all children are the same, and everyone has the same needs.

Crafting our strategy was difficult because the needs of Canadian families are not the same and one solution will not do. A walk down a street in downtown Toronto versus a walk down a street in a small community in Newfoundland, or a drive 40 miles from the nearest community to a farm in Saskatchewan, will tell one that. We heard from people about those problems, and we are determined to resolve them.

The reason that I am happy with this strategy, and the reason that I am very proud of it, is that the fundamental position of the Government is that women have the capacity and the ability to contribute so much to our society. The structures that have existed from the beginning of time where men work outside the home and women work inside the home are changing, and they are changing fast because of economic needs, and because of that great capacity that women have to contribute more fully if they are given the choices. The major constraint on that at the moment is child care, and we are absolutely determined to celebrate those differences that women have, and altering the structures of our society in a way that is positive for them, for their children, and for family life however it may be formed in Canada.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak on the subject of child care. It is one that I have met on many occasions much more personally than politically. In the raising of our seven children we had many occasions not only to make use of child care, such as was available, but also at times to give child care. A number of my adult children have also done the same.

I agree with the previous speaker that there are many varieties of child care. However, I would also tell the previous speaker that, from my experience as a father and grandfather, the variety that is most needed is non-profit, publicly funded, affordable child care spaces. There will always be other arrangements for those who need them or prefer them, but the great bulk of what is needed is of the type the previous speaker made fun of because it is what the NDP advocates. The problem with Bill C-144, Mr. Speaker, is that rather than building and expanding the child care provision in Canada it limits it. It will provide fewer spaces in six years than would have been provided had the growth of child care places continued as it was under the Canada Assistance Plan.

In 1974, there were 55,181 places. Six years later, in 1980, it had virtually doubled to 109,141 places. In 1986, it doubled again to 220,517 places. Currently, it is up around the level of 243,000 in 1987.

My point is that the Canada Assistance Plan did not set a ceiling, a lid, a limit, and it did not cause the day care providers and managers of the money to set ceilings and limits, all the way down the line. At that rate, by 1994 we would have 480,000 or more places for child care under the Canada Assistance Plan. But the Bill C-144 plan would not allow us to reach that figure until a year later. In other words, it is slowing down the provisions of places for child care. That is bad enough in itself. If it were only that there was to be some shortfall under this Government's plan compared to the plan that we have had previously, but it is worse than that, because the uncertainty created by the nature of this program has caused chaos in at least one major centre of Canada, that is, Toronto, in the provision of child care.

I refer to what was noticed in The Globe and Mail on July 12, in the story entitled "Federal day-care strategy called inadequate". It described the case of a mother who had searched for a year for proper child care for her daughter while she worked. It says:

> After weeks on a waiting list, she finally won a space for (her 18-month-old child) in the University Settlement House centre in downtown Toronto.
> She then discovered that she could not get a subsidy from Metro Toronto, although she qualified under a means test, because the municipal government has recently resorted to what amounts to a freeze in subsidized spaces.

That is a strange new practice for Metro Toronto social services. It is explained here as follows:

> Although it has expanded the number of subsidies, Metro cannot keep up with the demand.

In other words, they are worried about the ceiling being imposed by Bill C-144. The story goes on:

> Part of the problem, child-care lobbyists say, is that the federal child-care strategy, which promised 200,000 new subsidized spaces, has given families the impression that the spaces already are available . . .
> At the same time, the accompanying child-care legislation, widely rumored to be destined for first reading in the House of Commons this week or next, will limit what is now open-ended cost-sharing between Ottawa and the provinces.

Therefore, it explains further down:

> The provinces do not want to get caught spending money that may not be matched by Ottawa.

So we have chaos and cut-backs introduced into the whole system by this legislation, even before it is passed. It is simply the news and the confusion of it.

Although that is the worst fault of this legislation, it is not by any means the only one. There is also the serious fault relating to quality, that for the first time federal spending will not be diverted in part to day care centres established for profit.

The Ontario Government has done a study to compare, according to the standards of the Province of Ontario, day care centres run for profit and day care centres not run for profit. On every criterion considered, the profit-oriented day care centres treat the children—not to mention the staff—worse. This confirms what many of us have observed around Metro Toronto, that it is done as a careful study. They point out in a Toronto Star article of May 14, entitled "Non-profit day-care does the best job study shows":

> Almost 54 per cent of commercial centres failed to have enough qualified staff as required by the act, compared to 15 per cent of parent- or community-run non-profit centres.

The story also goes on to point out:

> Commercial centres took longer than other centres to correct staffing problems. Ninety-five per cent of non-profit centres with parent or community boards solved staff shortages within six months, compared to 77 per cent of commercial centres. In fact, 11 per cent of commercial centres still had a staff shortage after 10 months.

They just do not care as much. If they are running for profit, they will squeeze the money even if they are violating provincial standards.

Given that this Government has refused, contrary to what was implied by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he preached Meech Lake, to put national objectives into the legislation—that is with teeth—it is there in the preamble, perhaps, and in the PR, but not as laws—we can therefore expect provinces to get even slacker than some of them now are, by enforcing their standards.

The story goes on:

> Commercial centres more often than non-profit centres had restricted licences because of Act violations.

Violations of the Standards Act. Furthermore, commercial centres more often had more spaces than the Act entitled them to have, that is, they were taking children, that they were not authorized to have, much more often than non-profit centres.

My point is that this spending program as proposed by the Government will not get as many day care spaces as we would have under the existing program, and the quality of the care will be worse than it is now. This opens the government funding to commercial outfits, some of whom have demonstrated their complete contempt for any kind of standards of child care, let alone the well-being and good pre-school education of the children.

This law is really a fraud. It pretends to do something that it does not even attempt to do, and if it goes into action it will gravely undermine even what is being done now, to provide day care. If this law is passed, the public, understanding the need of day care for the 60 per cent of families where both parents work, will simply have to throw this Government out and put a Government in that will repeal this law and put in a real child care Act that will meet the need.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): I am pleased to take part in this debate on child care. I would like first to commend my colleague for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) for the quality of the work she has done on this matter on behalf of the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Speaker, under the Governement child care strategy 200,000 spaces are proposed for 1.8 million children aged 0 to 13 years. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, that proposal, that strategy will be implemented over seven years. Can you visualize that, 200,000 spaces over seven years when more than one million are needed now!

There you have the nature of the problem. I heard the suggestion made earlier from Governement benches that they would like to do more but this is all they can afford!

How come then they can afford some $12 billion for nuclear submarines? When it comes to this very important need, they stop at 200,000 spaces. Truly, this is a drop of water in the ocean!

[English]

Society has changed dramatically in the past 20 years. Today, less than one in six Canadian families fit the traditional family pattern, the wife at home with the children and the husband out working. Many families are headed by single parents, most of whom are young mothers. And while more than half of all women with pre-school children work outside the home, only about 20 per cent of those children are served by accredited day care centres.

What is more disturbing, only about 2 per cent of every school-age child of working parents, the so-called latchkey child, has access to after-school care. Raising children is expensive whether one or both parents work, and providing child care is one of the highest costs.

Inadequate child care is not just a women's issue. It is not just an issue for parents. It is an issue for all of us, parents, employers and governments, every Canadian. I believe that all of us have a responsibility, a duty, to be part of the solution.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, let us refer to accessibility. Of course, there are people who, under this Government's proposal, can get a tax credit, and a hefty one at that because of their high income and they can afford child care. But what about needy families, those that cannot afford that, especially in my constituency of Saint-Léonard—Anjou, where in the majority of cases, they are single parent families, or families where both husband and wife work because they need the extra salary. Both work because they need the money to maintain their homes, or to pay the rent, or to send the children to school, in order to be part of that new society.

And if we have no strategy, no policy, no Act that can help those families, Mr. Speaker, we will have failed as Members of Parliament. We are not here to help those who are rich, those who have money. We are here indeed to help improve society for people in need. And this Government's legislation, this Tory Government's strategy does not exactly address those problems.

Mr. Speaker, the other problem today is that one only has to walk through our streets, our cities, our towns to realize the number of children, and in a few weeks chidren will be back to school. And how many children will there be? There will be thousands and thousands of "latchkey kids", and that is unacceptable!

Although in our society there is an elementary or high school in every area or district. There is a school! There is a school, Mr. Speaker, and the children go there.

But why can't there be a program, a piece of legislation which would help the provinces to put to use these buildings and facilities which have been paid for by their very taxpayers? Why can't we turn them into day care centres, where children could go during the lunch hour or after school until their parents can come and get them.

Mr. Speaker, that is also a major problem which must be addressed in a child care policy or strategy.

Today, as I was saying, women, whether married or single mothers, don't go to work for pleasure or for sport, they need the money. We must therefore devise policies and laws which help them find quality day care centres for their children while giving them the assurance that their children will be well looked after.

In fact, I think we could look at the school system for a solution. Think about the number of teachers who have been laid off. Before I was elected to this House, I lectured teachers who were retrained and encouraged to switch to a business career, because their jobs had become redundant. Mr. Speaker, why don't we retrain those teachers so that we can provide quality child care services at school? In summer, students are out of school for two months, while most parents only have a two-week holiday. What happens during the balance of six weeks? Couldn't we have summer camps? Mr. Speaker, I speak from experience having taken part in a program put together by a community agency from my constituency, where we were able, for the first time, to use the facilities of four different schools for summer camps. Children living near those schools can go to summer camp and their parents can go to work knowing that their children are being supervised by counsellors.

Mr. Speaker, it is not enough for the government to allow tax credits while letting recipients choose where their children will be cared for while they are at work. It is not enough because some couples have to work to make ends meet and their tax credit is insufficient to solve their problems!

I think that we must first have a policy for all those in need and then reach an agreement with the provinces to create quality child care centres in schools. That would solve a big part of the problem. Finally, the Government must guarantee a certain number of spaces, establish standards of quality and ensure that all Canadian citizens have access to child care services.

You are telling me, Mr. Speaker, that my time is up. There is still the whole issue of flexibility to talk about but I hope I will have other opportunities to do so.

• (1640)

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak in support of this bill, the Canada Child Care Act.

The process has been demanding, Mr. Speaker, but we always proceeded with the knowledge that what was going to be presented to Parliament would represent what Canadian parents wanted, and would affect the well-being of children and of family life for decades to come.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the process may have seemed long, for the issues were complex, but it was a deliberate course, thoughtfully examined and re-examined, until the Government was sure that its child care plan was right for children.

Canadians deeply value their children and hold the family unit as a cornerstone of society. Yet, at the same time, Canada is a pluralistic society occupying a vast land filled with diversity of views and needs. The contrasts between rural and urban life, and between different regions of the country, offer up a rich mosaic making Canada unique among nations. It is no wonder that Canadians hold differing views as to how to best meet child care needs.

In respecting these different parent preferences and situations, it was necessary to proceed intentionally and thoughtfully. This was not a task that could be done unilaterally in isolation from families and children. It was a task that required consultation with parents, with deeply concerned citizens, with professional and lay associations, with front line child care workers, and with other levels of government.

We sought a policy which reflected the caring nature of Canadians to which governements would commit their support and resources.

Mr, Speaker, I would like to review with you the process and milestones along the way which resulted in this bill now before the House.

During the summer of 1984, at a debate hosted by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, involving the leaders of the three political Parties, child care emerged as a key issue. As leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Mulroney firmly committed his Party to a strong leadership response to address this pressing and urgent issue.

Following the election, this commitment was underscored in the Speech from the Throne, and I quote: "My Government has as a high priority measures to support and strengthen the Canadian family, which is the cornerstone of our society. The need for accessible and affordable child care has in recent years come to the forefront of the social agenda facing Canada. In an effort to reach a national consensus on options in this area, you will be asked to establish a parliamentary task force on the future of child care in Canada."

In proceeding with this commitment it was most important to consult with the Canadian public. To this end, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin), was asked to chair the special committee on child care. The parliamentary task force was established in February of 1986. It was given a broad mandate to go beyond the traditional child care issues and study all aspects of child care. In order to ensure that all Canadians had an opportunity to express their views on this important subject, the task force travelled across the country from coast to coast holding public hearings and receiving submissions.

There was an overwhelming response from individuals and organizations which reflected the importance Canadians attach to their children. While there was great diversity in the views presented to the task force, there were presented many imaginative and innovative ideas.

Between March and June 1986, the special committee on child care heard 1,047 presentations, welcomed 1,632 witnesses, and received 944 written submissions. Canadians who wanted to be heard were heard!

The task force heard from families with special needs. It also heard from native people who felt that culturally appropriate child care services would help them retain their identity and provide an important support to families. Parents of disabled children expressed their concerns about the integration of their children in Canadian society and their own need for support and respite from time to time. Of course, for many members of ethnic minorities, the search for linguistic and culturally sensitive child care services was outlined as a major concern.

Although, as would be expected, the views were remarkably diverse, three common themes were expressed repeatedly: The affordability, availability, and quality of day care.

In October of 1986 child care was reaffirmed by the Government as a high priority in the Speech from the Throne. The Government also indicated, at that time, that discussions with the provinces would begin once the report of the task force had been received.

During this same period of time, Canadians also contacted the Government directly to share their views. Mr. Epp met with a range of national groups, including the Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association.

Through public opinion polls, the federal Government received additional evidence that the views being received by the special committee on child care and through direct contact with citizens, was indeed representative of the views of the country. The polls indicated that while Canadians believed that there were serious problems with the day care system, they were still prepared to assume a considerable degree of the financial responsibility for child care, and wanted the system to offer flexibility.

More than six in ten Canadians indicate a preference for government support for a lot of different day care options and 77 per cent of Canadians with children using day care hold this view.

More than seven in ten Canadians—73 per cent—believe that there are not enough spaces to meet current needs. Parents in general—76.9 per cent—and those parents with children using day care, 78 per cent, are even more likely than average to believe that there are not enough spaces at present.

Almost eight in ten Canadian women, 79 per cent, feel that there are not enough day care spaces available to meet current needs. Women are more likely—76 per cent—to agree that day care is too expensive for the average Canadian. Seventy-two per cent of women believe that the problem of "single parents who are unemployed who could be able to get a job if day care spaces were available for their children", affects a large number of parents.

When asked how governments could best ensure that quality, affordable day care is available to those who need it, the public supported a flexible approach. In this regard, while most believed that the best method was to provide financial assistance directly to day care centres, direct assistance to parents—29 per cent—and employers—30 per cent—also met with support.

Mr. Speaker, the federal government recognized that in order to have a national child care program, the provinces would have to be collaborators and partners. Much of the child care system does and will continue to come under provincial jurisdiction. Therefore it was essential that the federal Government not only enter into dialogue with Canadian citizens, but that they also consult closely with their governments.

To this end, at the First Minister's Conference held in November of 1986, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) reiterated the federal Government's intention to allocate substantial resources to child care.

During that meeting the Prime Minister also announced that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) would be meeting with provincial Ministers to assist the Government to develop a child care system of the very highest order for Canada. This commitment was honoured in January 1987 when the Minister of National Health and Welfare convened a federal-provincial/territorial meeting of social service Ministers. During that meeting, a target date was established by Minister Epp for confirmation of the federal strategy.

Indeed, most provinces clearly affirmed the federal Government's position that child care, although coming under provincial jurisdiction, was a national issue that would have to be resolved in federal-provincial/territorial partnership.

Of course, the views expressed by different provinces reflected the diversity that exists across the country. However most shared the view expressed by the general public that flexibility, choice, availability, affordability, and quality were essential ingredients to be included in a national program.

In March of 1987 the federal Government received the report of the parliamentary task force on child care, "Sharing the Responsibility". Two minority reports were also received. Having consulted with parents and Canadian citizens; having consulted with the provinces and territories; and now having the recommendations of the task force, the federal Government carefully studied and scrutinized all the data, recommendations, and viewpoints it had received to finalize the federal strategy.

Mr. Speaker, it was an exciting moment, on December 3 of 1987, when the National Strategy on Child Care was announced. A new social program was being offered to Canadians!

The National Strategy offered $3 billion for a new federal-provincial/territorial program, $2,3 billion for tax initiatives, and $100 million for the Child Care Initiatives Funds.

The next two months were hectic indeed. Government officials travelled to every province and territory to discuss the federal offer in detail and to ascertain preliminary reactions of those who would have the responsibility of implementing the program.

Following this round of discussion and consultation with the provinces and territories, a meeting of federal/provincial/territorial deputy ministers was convened. During this meeting the provinces were asked to submit their projected expenditure plans and space targets for the next seven years. These plans would provide the federal Government with a firm overview as to the level and degree of provincial and territorial commitment to expansion of the number and quality of affordable child care services in Canada.

Indeed, most provinces responded with enthusiasm and clearly affirmed the information previously obtained by the federal Government, that the child care issue was indeed a high priority for provinces. In fact, the provincial and territorial response went beyond that which was earlier anticipated. The expenditure plans went well beyond the $3 billion announced earlier in December by the federal Government.

This is of course presented an interesting quandary to the Government in that we were delighted that the provinces were responding to our leadership but also very concerned about being fiscally responsible and not committing ourselves to spending more resources than we could afford.

The provincial and territorial plans were carefully studied. The solution reflected the sensitive balance between fiscal responsibility and the desire to make a fully adequate and caring response to the needs of Canadian children and families.

The result was the annoucement this past month that the federal Government was adding an additional $1 billion to the package, $940 million for the enhanced federal-provincial program and $60 million for child care programs for Indians on reserves.

Consequently, we now have before us this Bill which represents an historic milestone in Canadian history. As I have shown, it is a product of broad consultation with interest groups and citizens across the country. Their views and preferences have been subjected to the most careful study and scrutiny, and, I suggest to you, represents a balance of the various perspectives. It involves support to the formal day care sector, to parents using informal child care arrangements, support to the family, extends flexibility to the provinces and territories so they can develop a system best suited for their situation, and it addresses the issues of availability, affordability, and quality.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to raise my voice in support of the Canada Child Care Act, a truly historic milestone for improved child care services in Canada.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have an opportunity to take part in this debate on child care. As a former teacher I recognize how important it is that we look after children at an early age. I am sure the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), a former teacher himself, would agree with me that this is the most important time and it should be a government priority.

One of the things I find despicable is that at the end of four years in government, the Conservatives are just starting to come to grips with something they made an election priority in 1984. They said they were going to move quickly on child care. Yet here we are, one week short of four full years of Conservative Government, and they are only now bringing the Bill forward.

I also find it deplorable that this Bill does not really meet the number one problem facing parents looking for child care spaces, that is, a lack of availability of spaces. Earlier today my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), spoke about what the NDP believes must happen. He criticized the legislation in front of us. In response to his speech, one of the Conservatives got up and tried to indicate that the Province of Manitoba had a poor record under Howard Pawley on child care spaces. I am going to use part of the few minutes I have to set the record straight.

The NDP Government in Manitoba in fact had a very good record of providing spaces and standards for child care. Despite the figures the Government tried to read into the record based on whatever inaccuracies, let us talk about what really happened in Manitoba from 1981 to 1987. Manitoba had the highest per capita expenditure of all provinces on child car, not second, not third, not fourth or fifth, but the highest per capita expenditure on child care. Remember that Manitoba is not a rich province. Remember that Manitoba was also suffering cut-backs in the money it was receiving from the federal Government during that same time. Manitoba did not get the money from the federal Government it was entitled to because of the new formulae originally devised by the Liberal Government under A. J. MacEachen, which was further reduced by the Conservatives when they came into power. Yet Manitoba found the money for that number one priority, our young children.

During that same time period we had the most comprehensive standards with respect to the quality of child care. Again that shows the emphasis that the Pawley New Democratic Government placed on young children in our province. Funding for day care spaces was increased to $11,200 from $6,500, a 72 per cent increase. Some people may say that this is not enough, but over that five or six year period it is a fairly large increase. Obviously more could have been done. Obviously some of us would have liked more to have been done. However, the point is that money was going into that program. The funds earmarked for grants for day care spaces and subsidies to parents increased by 225 per cent during that same time, from $8.5 million in 1981-82, when the Government changed, to $27.5 million. As I said earlier, a 225 per cent increase.

I would like to see the Province of British Columbia match that record. I would like to see the Liberal Government of Ontario match that record, with all the riches it has. I would like to see the Conservative Governments in Saskatchewan and Alberta match that record. Incidentally, the last time I checked, Alberta was not one of the poorest provinces in this country. I would like to see them match the record of the NDP when it was in government. That is why I know, when we look at the speech made by Ed Broadbent in Vancouver last week on child care—

Mr. Boudria: Ed Broadbent?

Mr. Murphy: The Hon. Member for Oshawa, the Hon. Leader of the NDP. The most popular leader in the country.

Mr. Boudria: Who? I have told you a million times not to exaggerate.

Mr. Murphy: They laugh. There are people in this country who are afraid of Mr. Broadbent because he tells the truth. When he was telling the truth on child care, when he talked about the policies and priorities we believe in, the national standards we believe are necessary for child care, people know he means it and that our Party means to bring it about.

It is a comprehensive program because it recognizes the needs of the various provinces. It also recognizes the need for national objectives. That is what is so sadly lacking in the program we have before us today. Despite the fact that the Meech Lake Accord allows the federal Government to call for national objectives when it moves on new programs, the federal Government, on its first important measure after initialling the Meech Lake Accord, failed to set national objectives. I cannot understand why a government that negotiated the Meech Lake Accord would refuse to provide leadership in setting national objectives for so important a program as child care.

We all accept now that medicare had to have national objectives. When we renegotiated the Canada Health Act and introduced legislation on that a few years ago, all Parties in the House agreed there must be national objectives for health care. Why not for child care? To be told that each province is different, that each province has different circumstances and priorities, is not really to answer the problem. We recognize the differences in financing and salaries. We recognize the differences that exist because of regional disparities. However, in my riding we have remote reserves which are setting up child care facilities. If they can live up to provincial standards in Manitoba, obviously the regions of this country can live up to national standards. It is a real shame the Government did not have the political courage to bring those standards into the legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

BROADCASTING

CRTC DECISION TO AWARD ALL-NEWS CHANNEL TO CBC

On the Order: Private Members' Business

December 11, 1987—Mr. Shields:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should set aside the decision by the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) to award the national all-news channel to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC).

Mr. Shields: Speaking on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the members of the Opposition would like to have more time to debate the child care legislation. Indeed, they have asked for more time for that purpose. Therefore, in the spirit of generosity of this House, I withdraw my motion.

• (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) have unanimous consent of the House to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, just to set the record straight, although I am prepared to give our colleague unanimous consent to withdraw his Bill, the House should be aware that he must withdraw his Bill because, under the traditions of this House, Parliamentary Secretaries do not participate in Private Members' hour. It is not because the Member has a surge of generosity flowing through his system at the moment that he wants to afford the opposition Members of this House the opportunity to debate any particular initiatives.

I just want to set the record straight, but I am prepared, on behalf of my colleagues in the Liberal Party, to provide unanimous consent so he can withdraw his motion.

Mr. Shields: Just to clear up any misunderstanding, Mr. Speaker, it is not a Private Member's Bill, it is a motion. Indeed, there is nothing in the rules of the House to stop a Parliamentary Secretary from putting forth a motion in this House. I want to reiterate that, in the spirit of co-operation and generosity, I would really like to give the Opposition more time to debate the child care legislation. The Opposition has asked for it, and with that thought in mind, I am withdrawing my motion.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Government is trying to play another fast one. We certainly want to debate child care but we are not going to be forced into meeting some government objective, some timetable it has. We do not appreciate the idea of having to rush legislation through where obviously the public does not have a chance to really participate, but when the Government has already indicated that it is going to try to ram this legislation through committee, we are not co-operating.

Mr. Horner: When did you ever co-operate?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it would seem that there is unanimous consent for the Member not to put his motion, therefore, to withdraw it. We had really hoped that members of the New Democratic Party, and we see eight of them in the House now, would want to go ahead and debate child care. However, if they do not want to, I would suggest we suspend the sittings until six o'clock. I wish to advise the House that after the vote, we will return to the child care legislation and I would expect that none of the eight Members who are in the Chamber now will speak thereafter.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, there was consultation among the Parties approximately an hour ago. What the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) is offering now, to withdraw the motion and suspend the sitting, is in fact what was agreed to, not what was stated before.

Mr. Murphy: Yes, Mr. Speaker, despite the, shall we say, rhetoric we heard from the Deputy House Leader, it is my understanding that what he is now saying is what they were saying an hour ago.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Now we are back on track.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Athabasca have unanimous consent to withdraw his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. I also declare Motions Nos. 61 and 65 lost.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I think if you were to seek unanimous consent you would possibly find, through an arrangement made earlier today, that Members would be favourably disposed to applying the result of this vote to all other remaining votes, and possibly to having the same vote in reverse for the concurrence motion.

Mr. Riis: Considering that there are 46 votes to go, I think that is an excellent idea, and certainly we would support that.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House agreed that the division just taken be recorded as applying to all of the remaining motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it also agreed that the division just taken be applied in reverse to the motion for concurrence in the Bill at report stage?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

(A) 1. Report to Parliament to include;

(a) quantity and nature of Canada-United States trade;

(b) United States federal and state programs which affect Canada-United States trade;

(c) determine whether the rights and benefits to which Canada is entitled under the agreement are being denied;

(d) if the determination of the tribunal is affirmative under paragraph (c), then the Tribunal shall also determine and report what corrective action is necessary.

2. (a) The Tribunal shall be empowered to receive petitions from any entity, including a trade association, firm, union or group of workers who represents a Canadian industry and who has reason to believe that

(i) the industry is likely to face, as a result of the Canada-United States trade agreement, increased competition from subsidized American imports, including those supported through the United States defense programs; and

(ii) the industry is likely to experience a deterioration in its competitive position during the time negotiations occur between Canada and the United States on subsidies

(b) Upon receipt of a petition under paragraph (a) the Tribunal shall:

(i) compile and make available to the industry, information on the amount of subsidization to the American industry, the increase in market share since the agreement came into effect, and the impact of those imports on the Canadian industry.

(ii) update this information annually or as requested by the industry;

(iii) provide to Parliament a copy of any reports undertaken as a result of subparagraphs (i) or (ii).

(c) (i) The tribunal shall review information obtained under paragraph (2) and consult with the industry to decide whether action may be appropriate under section 59(2) of the Customs Tariff Act, and recommend such action be taken by the Minister of Finance in conjunction with the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

(ii) The Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs shall, upon receipt of any recommendation under subparagraph (i) determine whether to take action and shall on determination that action be taken, give preference to actions that most directly affect the products benefitting from governmental subsidies unless the application of action under section 59(2) of the Customs Tariff Act to other products would be more effective.

(B) Be empowered to implement and oversee adjustment programs for those firms and workers who will be dislocated as a result of the agreement including:

(a) specific programs for groups most disadvantaged; older workers, new immigrants, women, aboriginal workers;

(b) procedures for application by firms to be designated dislocated and apply for adjustment assistance;

(c) generalized programs for workers to insure that they are retrained for jobs that become available.

(C) Monitor and report to Parliament the extent to which United States exports are subsidized by U.S. defense expenditures and the impact such products have on Canadian industry.

Motion No. 93

That Bill C-130 be amended in Clause 146 by adding immediately after line 26 at page 113 the following:

""(5) Implementation through section (4) of this Act is conditional on:

(a) the Tribunal's report to Parliament on United States Defense Department subsidization of transportation

(b) proof that the United States government does not assist the transportation of agricultural exports to Canada.""

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-144, an Act to authorize payments by Canada toward the provision of child care services, and to amend the Canada Assistance Plan in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mrs. Martin (p. 18222).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments tonight to speak to the Government's proposed child care legislation and to offer my Party's response to the same issue. The major social challenge facing Canada today is the urgent need of average Canadians and their families for reliable care for our children. Over 1.8 million children whose parents are in the labour force do not have access to quality child care services. The inadequate number of child care spaces is failing our children and makes it even more difficult for women to participate equally in the workplace. Canadian men and women want government action that responds to the real needs of their families. The Conservative Government of Canada has put forward a charade.

Mr. Speaker: I presume the Hon. Member would like the House to hear the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan. The Hon. Member from Thunder Bay—Atikokan has the floor.

Mr. Angus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank my colleague for her intervention drawing the attention of the House to child care. It is a very important issue in Canada today and one that is not being dealt with appropriately by the Conservative Government. This Government's so-called national strategy on child care is an excellent example of Conservative broken promises to Canadian families. After waiting four full years for this Government to keep its promise, or for the Conservative Party to keep the promise of the 1984 campaign to introduce an effective national system of child care, Canadian families have been disappointed once again. Canadian parents and their children need greater access to quality care at lower costs. This Government's scheme will create fewer child care spaces after seven years than would have resulted without it.

The Conservatives have promised to add 200,000 non-profit child care spaces to Canada's existing 240,000 spaces by 1995. That is a growth rate of less than 10 per cent annually. In fact, child care spaces in Canada are already doubling every five years. The average rate of growth over the last four years was 15 per cent.

What is happening under this Conservative smoke and mirrors in child care is that we are actually going to have less child care spaces created throughout Canada—urban Canada, rural Canada, northern Canada, native Canada—than would have been created under the existing Canada Assistance Plan. That is very regrettable. The Government had the opportunity to take a very progressive step to ensure that those families, whether they be mother-led families or father-led families or two-parent families, had the opportunity to have their children looked after in a quality manner by staff who are appropriately trained and appropriately reimbursed for their education and their labours while the parents went out, whether it was one parent or both parents, to work outside the home in order to meet the economic realities of today.

For those of us who come from the larger urban centres of this country, child care is a norm, and there are child care centres in our communities. Some are profit, some are non-profit, some are municipally run, but there are other communities, particularly in the distant locations, rural locations and the North, where there is no formal child care at all. In the community of Atikokan, one of the communities that I represent in this House, there is not a child care centre or a day care centre; there is only informal care giving through babysitting. While there is every good intention by those care givers, the reality is that most often or not they do not have the skills to provide the kind of quality experience that one can obtain in a municipally operated or a non-profit child care centre that is child focused and family focused.

There is a need to expand the programs. There is a need to ensure that child care is provided not as a means to make profit but as a means to provide services, much needed services to the families of this generation.

I mentioned earlier that the Government's child care program is less than what the current program offers. In fact, it actually puts a ceiling on the amount of child care spaces that the Government will support. Even worse, the Conservatives are asking the provinces for any commitments as to quality in return for federal funding.

Would you, Mr. Speaker, if you were in private business, give money to a subsidiary company and not ask what it is going to do and not require that it do certain things? Would you, as a banker, give money to a company without having strings attached? Of course not.

What we have been saying and what was provided for in the Meech Lake round of amendments to the Constitution was that national standards be included in the legislation, not standards that would say that you would have to have a child care centre that is 300,000 square feet and employs five staff, but one that would say that if you are going to get federal funds, you must create spaces, you must create new spaces and fund new spaces. We need to develop in rural Canada the kind of spaces that are needed to meet the variations of lifestyle, to reflect the seasonal kind of economy on the farm when children need to be away from the farm so that both parents could work on complicated and dangerous machinery and to keep the young children from underfoot and out of danger. It also applies to a small northern community that has a single industry to function with, to survive with, that operates around the clock, for example, a pulp and paper mill in a community like Terrace Bay where there is need for more than just eight o'clock in the morning until five o'clock in the afternoon kind of child care and a need for overnight services.

There was an opportunity to develop national standards that every province would have to adhere to in order to get federal tax dollars returned to their taxpayers, but they chose not to do that. They chose to be wimpish about it and leave it to the province to say "we cannot interfere". We on this side of the House reject that kind of mentality.

The Conservatives also claim that they are going to give parents choices by spending $2.4 billion through the tax system. In the first place, more than half of this goes to existing tax measures. In the second place, most of that new money will go into a program which gives parents a maximum of $200 per child per year. As a parent I know that in this day and age $200 does not go very far. One child care advocate appearing before the committee reviewing this legislation indicated that a parent would be lucky to buy two snowsuits with that money. If you think about the growth rates of young children, you know that two snowsuits a year is not unheard of. Children grow quickly and put a great deal of wear and tear on their clothes. So this amount is a pittance. The money would have been better used to provide child care spaces in quality and affordable child care centres for the young children of Canada.

There is a better way, Mr. Speaker. I realize my time is running out so I will be brief. We want a program that will meet the real child care needs of Canadians and give Canadian men and women real choices. Priority on child care spaces means a good child care program to establish a base on which we can build good quality child care in Canada, not the ceiling in the government plan. The New Democrat's plan would provide 50,000 new child care spaces per year, on average, resulting in 200,000 new non-profit spaces by 1992. I emphasize non-profit. We would establish a set of national principles in the federal funding legislation which would guarantee quality child care. The legislation should require a provincial child care program and conform to the following national objectives: comprehensive, quality, affordable, accessible, flexible, non-profit, and accountable child care.

These principles are modelled on the principles in the Canada Health Act and are consistent with the Meech Lake Accord. Enhanced maternity and parental benefits are policies which give parents real choices. The Government does nothing about paid parental leave. New Democrats would increase opportunities for parents to stay at home with an infant child by providing enhanced and extended maternity and parental leave benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Finally, we propose 10 days paid family responsibility leave through the Canada Labour Code. These proposals are all designed to spend more time with our children, but when we cannot, it will ensure that children have quality child care available whether they are in Toronto, Thunder Bay, Atikokan, or wherever.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment—

An Hon. Member: There are no questions or comments.

Mr. Holtmann: There are no questions or comments?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No questions or comments.

Mr. Holtmann: I will make a short speech which will all add up to the same sensible argument that we have put forward on behalf of our Party on child care.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the day the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) rose and said that the program announced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) was a fraud.

Mr. Angus: That is right.

Mr. Holtmann: He also indicated that the Tories have no concern and are not interested in the welfare of families of Canadians. I want to point out to Members opposite, particularly members of the New Democratic Party, that it was this Government which has created so many jobs in the workforce. If the Members opposite would realize how jobs really help families in their ability to cope, they would know how significant the Government's program under its new economic growth for Canada was able to come up with a child care program for children.

In any event, the Leader of the NDP also said that the people who look after young children today, the baby-sitters, sit home and watch television. That is what he said this afternoon in his speech to the Canadian public. Baby-sitters sit and watch television. What a slam against the women of Canada, Mr. Speaker. The New Democrats think that anyone who stays home and looks after children sits and watches television. In other words, they are not providing any quality day care. I do not know who will vote for the New Democrats in the next federal election if the Leader of the New Democratic Party thinks that people who look after children do nothing but watch television.

Mr. Althouse: When did he say that?

Mr. Holtmann: He said it this afternoon in the House. I have some difficulty with the New Democratic Party's new proposed child care program. I understand that the Leader and his Party will pay every person who has a child to stay home, someone to give quality day care. It will not be television watching time any more under the New Democrats. That will not happen, but the New Democrats will take the wealth which the Tory Government has created with its growing economy and throw it in every nook and cranny and claim that that will help Canadian families. That is the way the New Democrats will do things. The people who are now looking after young children, as far as the Leader of the New Democratic Party and his Party are concerned, just stay home and watch TV. There is no quality health care there at all. I thought he took a pretty big slam at a lot of women in Canada who I think are doing a tremendous job.

We want more health care for Canadians and we want to invest quite a bit of money. There is a debate still going on in many parts. Some of my constituents say that in certain areas they really do not necessarily need more but they need some assistance.

I am sure many Canadian women were quite surprised to hear the Leader of the New Democratic Party claiming that the Tories are not great people and that we have no concern for family life. I think the Tories demonstrated in this House not long ago on the issue of abortion that we are very concerned about family life. It is the New Democratic Party which collectively believes in abortion on demand. That is the philosophy of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Without wanting to engage in debate, I would ask that the Member, if he is going to state policy of another Party, do it correctly. Our policy is that the issue is between the woman and her doctor. They are the ones who will decide.

Mr. Holtmann: Once again, I have riled up the New Democrats. Why is the Hon. Member's Leader deciding what the Tory Government thinks about families? The Member should stick to the subject. This New Democratic Party has no handle or exclusivity on who represents Canadians and families.

Mr. Angus: Ask your spouse.

Mr. Holtmann: Even the Liberals have to admit that this was a very bold policy that our Minister brought forward—

Mr. Angus: They wouldn't lie as much.

Mr. Holtmann: The Liberals are prepared to accept it. I am sure many of the New Democrats, when they get out on the hustings, will be told not to throw money away recklessly. They are going to be asked to put a price tag on what they propose to do and will be told to make sure the money is used in a very effective and efficient way. Obviously Canadians are not prepared to give that Party an opportunity to start spending Canadian dollars. Never will they do that.

When their Leader announced this great day care policy, I believe a couple of weeks ago, I did not read any editorials about how great it was. The policy seems to have finally died. It will be comical during the next federal election to know where the New Democrats will get all the money for their day care promises and all the things they have proposed. They have not figured how to keep people working or how to create more jobs. They will just borrow money like the former Government did.

Canadians will never give the New Democrats the opportunity to implement some of these wild, woolly, witchy, wacky ideas which they scheme up, I guess in their caucus rooms, and whoever else schemes them up. Their policies are not sound and they probably never will be sound. Their Leader basically condemned most of the women in this country for staying home to look after their own children, saying that all they do is watch TV and that is not day care. That is the New Democratic Party policy of the way they think of women in this country. A mother does not look after her own child well enough. She is considered a poor person in the provision of quality day care. That is the attitude of New Democrats. They are going to get somebody else to do it.

• (1850)

The Government will spend the money and provide this new, wonderful, quality day care. Probably New Democrats are not capable of looking after their own children. They need a lot of assistance. They cannot do it on their own. They need help from the Government. They need some expert to tell them how to change diapers and what their children should eat. That is what the New Democrats want.

I think we know now where New Democrats stand. We know their game. It is just fuddle-duddle promises and that is all it will end up being.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to the child care program the Government says it is putting in place. I find it rather sad that from a Government that is supposed to be trying to put a new face on its activities and to keep its promises, we have a Bill that is full of puffery. It is window-dressing and trickery with figures. It will not meet our present needs, and it puts a cap on the natural growth that was already in place.

Under the Canada Assistance Plan, without this new program, the federal Government would have spent, assuming an inflationary factor of only 5 per cent a year, $17 billion over the next seven years. The total federal spending over that same period of time could now be slightly more than $22 billion or 4 per cent per year more than we now have without this new program.

On top of all that, there is a catch. We do not know if even one nickel will be spent in each of the provinces. It takes a federal-provincial agreement with each province to put this into place. As Marjorie Nichols points out, we have to use a conditional tense when talking about child care anywhere within Canada. Certainly we will not have a national child care system with national standards and objectives which must be met.

We talk about the low birth rate in Canada. We talk about our concern for the family and the family structure. We talk about children as being our future. One of the most important building blocks in our society is the child care system, whether it is for pre-school children or for school children with two working parents, children called latchkey children.

I become dreadfully sad when I recall going before the royal commission on the status of women, chaired by Senator Florence Bird. We brought the concern over latch key children into the public view, and we discussed how important it was to ensure that these children had good supervision after school hours so that their parents could work with free minds. Their parents needed two salaries to make ends meet. At that time, we were talking about the working poor but now we are talking about all families. The traditional family with the mother staying home is only one out of every ten families. We are not facing the reality of the society in which we live.

We will not end up with a national program; we will end up with 10 separate agreements with 10 different standards. According to the Meech Lake Accord, we were supposed to have national objectives. This new look at the Constitution would provide for good cost-shared programs with the thought that across Canada there would be equivalent programs. There is no dazzling multi-billion program for day care across this land.

The spending increases will be absolutely minimal. In fact, they are paltry, to use the word of Marjorie Nichols. About $570,000 a year would be made available beyond what is already available under the Canada Assistance Plan. Further, the provinces that want to enter into the national day care program have to opt out of the Canada Assistance Plan. A cap has been put on the growth of this very key sector in society.

I believe that when Conservatives are out on the hustings and have to face the electorate, they will be very embarrassed by the fact that no one will be tricked into thinking that saying that they have put in a great national child care system means that they have really done so, because they have not. In reality, this let's pretend child care program is supposed to provide $6.4 billion over seven years, but $2.3 billion of that total is in the form of new tax deductions on credits announced in the February Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I am not against that, but those are certainly not new dollars for new child care spaces.

The child care legislation we are addressing today contains exactly $4 billion. However, we have forgotten that $1.9 billion of that $4 billion is already being spent annually by the federal Government through the Canada Assistance Plan on child care items. We have in reality a provision for $2.6 billion in new federal funds for direct spending, from which the $1.9 billion that is already being spent annually is subtracted, ending up with that marvellous amount of $560,000 a year being made available for new programs. That new money will certainly be sufficient for the much needed 200,000 spaces, but that will not answer the needs of another one million children who need this service.

Our Party feels that parents should have the right to choose, but they should also have the right to choose child care services that will be of quality, that will be affordable, and that will have standards for the teachers who will be paid commensurately as they provide the loving care that is needed for young children, and they should have programs in which they will have a say. None of those things have been articulated in this Bill, and I regret the sleight of hand, the use of language which is not reflected in reality in this Bill.

The unvarnished facts are embarrassing to the Government. I hope that each and every government Member will feel the discomfort as their constituents ask them about this not-national, not-good, poorly-conceived child care plan which they think will help the development of Canada and its future. I would suggest that when this Bill goes into legislative committee, government Members carefully consider the kinds of amendments that will truly reflect the needs of our children and their futures in Canada.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having the opportunity to say a few words on the child care Bill, Bill C-144. I will take my allotted time to speak particularly about rural Canada.

This time of year in rural Canada should be time of rejoicing and abundance while in the process of harvesting the crops. Right now, however, the farm community is not a happy community, and there are good reasons for this.

For the last five or six years, the impact of the economy has been building up to the point where farm communities are in a very bad state. Prices have risen considerably in the last little while, but that is not having the impact it should on the farm community.

• (1900)

Rural Canada is made up of something over 200,000 farms and the villages and towns with their schools, churches, and medical facilities which serve those farms. For the last several years an average of eight farmers per day have been leaving the farm for reasons such as bankruptcy, foreclosure, and so on. That has not slowed down. In fact, the number is increasing each year. Consequently, farming communities are becoming more isolated. It is because of this situation that farming has become one of the most stressful occupations in the country. The farm suicide rate has tripled since 1981 and now stands at double the national average. There are many cases of rural family violence, much more than we ever thought would happen on the farm.

The bulk of farmers having financial problems are those between the ages of 30 and 45 years. They are highly productive farmers who have committed themselves to farming and they produce a great deal, but they are unable to keep up. It is those same families who have young children that need care.

Those farmers who are staying on the farm and those people in the small communities surrounding the farms are the people we are concerned about right now. A lot of the people leaving their farms are just moving into the surrounding towns or the nearest city. However, a lot of them are attempting to hang on, and they are the ones we need to talk about specifically.

There are probably three categories that we can point to of people who are attempting to stay on the farm and need some assistance with child care. There is the family where one or two members go to the nearest town or city to work. At the same time they attempt to keep the farm going.

There are farm families who move to the city so that the man, in most cases, can drive out to the farm and keep it going. There is a third group which has to be recognized as well. This group stays on the farm but attempts to eliminate all outside help. They try to keep the farm going with the family alone. Every member of the family has to take some responsibility for keeping the farm going.

Right now some farm men and women, in fact perhaps more women than men, are actually doing three jobs at the same time. They are working at a store or office in town, teaching school or driving a school bus to bring in some cash. They also take a certain amount of responsibility to keep the farm going. They do regular farm work and assist in keeping it going. They also take care of the children, raise the family.

Right now child care is a very unpopular concept in rural Canada because there is nothing in this Bill that indicates that rural Canada will be taken care of. There is nothing to indicate that they will have child care in those areas. As one lady told me yesterday, this is another federal program which we in rural Canada will not be able to access. In most cases this involves small towns and villages of 50 to 75 people.

That is one of the things wrong with this approach to child care. We need to look at the specific requirements of rural Canada and make sure that either child care spaces or other arrangements can be made to make sure that the family is able to stay together and keep the farm going.

The federal Government spends huge amounts of money on things which are far less important to Canada than the raising of a family. We should not hesitate to pay people to assist the parents in raising their children. Doing that is a good investment for Canada. We should do it in such a way that it reaches out to those areas and those people who need it most.

Right now many people in rural Canada need assistance in raising their families. They need child care. Consequently, we should provide the spaces or provide the people or the money so that they are able to do a good job of raising a family. This Bill does not indicate to the rural community that any real care has been taken with respect to child care in rural Canada.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in the debate on this legislation, the Canada Child Care Act. I believe it is an initiative which will enable our Government to implement a major part of our new national child care strategy, which includes not only the provisions of this Act but the creation of 200,000 additional child care spaces. As well, there is the tax assistance to families which will be of great benefit to many men and women across this country, and the child initiatives fund.

It is interesting to look at the whole issue of child care and who should be responsible. I am pleased to see a change in attitude across the country on this issue. Recently the Vancouver Board of Trade, the largest business organization in Vancouver, issued a copy of its report making a case for quality child care services in British Columbia. It notes in its report that by the year 2000, 80 per cent of all new workforce members will be women, minorities, or immigrants, and that one-half of all women employees will have babies while they are employed. These facts translate into a need for employers of all types and sizes to deal with child care issues for their own self-interest. In fact, the Board of Trade quotes from some studies done by Fortune Magazine which report that 41 per cent of parents surveyed lost at least one day's work in the three months prior to the poll in order to care for sick children, and nearly 10 per cent took three to five days off for such purposes. Child care problems were also a major cause of unproductive time at work or the production of lower than normal quality work. Obviously, by addressing the child care issue, businesses can achieve greater stability and productivity in their workforces.

It is very interesting to note that the Vancouver Board of Trade goes on in its brief to suggest certain initiatives that the provincial Government should take to respond to our new federal child care strategy and it went on to outline what it believes employers should be doing. The whole issue of child care is a relationship of four parts: the family, the parents, the employer, and the federal and provincial Governments. Each has a role to play in order for us to address the situation.

I am pleased that the legislation before us provides for the implementation of the goal which was announced last December, "an additional 200,000 new subsidized spaces which will require a federal commitment of some $3 billion". However, on the basis of the plans submitted by the provincial Governments over the last six months, it has become clear that additional financial assistance would be required if we were to meet the goal of 200,000 spaces, as well as ensure the quality of the system as a whole and that the existing spaces continue to improve.

We are aware that just last month the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) announced on behalf of the Government that we were committing an additional $1 billion to the child care program. We are not prepared to sacrifice quality for quantity. Both are equally important to parents whose children will be utilizing the child care system.

Just to share some information about how this new system will work, during the next seven years, which we are calling the "boost period", we intend to support the creation of 200,000 additional subsidized child care spaces. In effect, this will double the size of the current subsidized system. It has taken about 15 years for us to reach the level of 200,000 spaces and in seven years we will double that.

To assist the provinces, because delivery of the services is a provincial responsibility, we will provide 75 per cent of the capital costs involved in the development of new spaces in non-profit child care agencies during the seven year period. As well, we will provide for 50 per cent of ongoing operating costs for both non-profit and commercial agencies. There have been a lot of questions of why "both", and certain groups have said only non-profit agencies should be eligible for the subsidies. However, we made the decision to include commercial agencies under the terms of the legislation. We recognize that we cannot ignore the basic fact that a full 40 per cent of subsidized child care spaces now being provided are being provided by the commercial sector. The reason our national policy on child care is a workable policy is that it builds upon a system that currently exists and adapts to the regional diversity of this country.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, from my involvement with child care, there is obviously some agencies that are better than others, but I have found excellent child care facilities operating in the commercial sector and excellent facilities working in the non-profit area. I do not believe that either side should be penalized, and I am pleased to see we have included both in our strategy.

This legislation will also permit the Government to increase the rate of cost sharing for certain provinces based upon a national average entitlement per child formula. We have included this special provision to assist parents and children who reside in provinces which are attempting to catch up to other parts of Canada in what they spend on child care. This is a national strategy. We believe that child care facilities and services should be more available in all parts of the country.

I might point out that Clause 4 of the legislation sets out the various terms and conditions which will form part of a negotiated agreement between the federal Government and each province. These will include the annual federal commitment to the province, the number of spaces to be created during the seven-year period, and the basis for subsequent cost sharing agreements with respect to child care services.

I wanted to respond as well to some comments made earlier by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) who indicated that the current provisions under the Canada Assistance Plan would have resulted in $3 billion a year being spent on child care services. She is wrong. That is not the reality. The reality is that at the moment, between the federal and provincial Governments, we are spending about $480 million of which $160 million is federal money. Therefore, the provinces are spending $320 million a year. There is no way the provinces are going to be able to increase their expenditures, so they could theoretically take advantage of the maximum CAP funding. That is just not the real world.

In fact, the present CAP provisions do not include funding for the capital cost for the building or renovating, so there is no assistance there. There is no incentive for the creation of new spaces. Even in the operating area where it is 50 per cent of eligible costs, there are many costs which are not eligible. What actually occurs is that the federal Government ends up subsidizing only about 35 per cent of the total costs. The changes in the new child care strategy in the legislation we have before us, as I mentioned, are 75 per cent on capital cost and 50 per cent on operating and new criteria for establishing that 50 per cent. In the first year alone our contribution will double, and by the end of the seven years it is estimated that the federal contribution will be in the order of $800 million a year.

We will have spent, then, the estimated $4 billion for the creation of those spaces. This legislation is important to the women, to the parents, and to the children of this country. I would ask my colleagues on all sides of the House to give it early consideration so that the system can go into effect, the provinces can complete their negotiations, and those who are involved in establishing a child care agency and child care spaces can get on with the job of creating the spaces and the opportunities for families to have child care available to them.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to participate in this debate. I would like to preface my comments by thanking my Liberal colleagues who have allowed me to speak first so I can go home and spend some time with my daughter. We talk about Parliament and the opportunities for women being equal with men, but the reality is that when we are having sitting sessions until ten o'clock every night, week upon week, to try to shove some government Bills through, that is simply not happening. That is just a practical note, Mr. Speaker.

I would also like to spend some time outlining what I consider the giant fraud being perpetrated on the people of Canada in the over-all area of child policy. Let us not forget that this so-called child care policy is coming from a Government that has done everything in its power to cut back the purchasing power of the ordinary family. It has cut back on the child tax deductions from about $370 to about $60 over the course of its time in office. It has cut back on family allowances. What we should really be seeing here tonight is an over-all policy for children which really does permit parents to make real choices.

Government Members tried to deindex senior citizens' pensions and they were not successful, but they were successful in doing it with the family allowances because families with children are not necessarily the most powerful voices in our society.

I only have 10 minutes so I would like to focus on what I consider to be the glaring contradictions in this so-called national policy for children. When parents are put in a position, either by choice or by economic necessity, of working outside the home and having to put their child in care other than their own, they want to be sure their child is safe.

• (1920)

I think that is the paramount concern of every parent. That is why the Government must include some national standards in announcing a policy. Yet, it has failed miserably in doing so because the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is introducing a Bill that permits the provinces to set whatever standards they want. There is no national level of care whereby parents in Corner Brook, Newfoundland, should have the same level of care for their child as a child in Toronto. That is not the case because there are no national standards.

According to the preamble of the Bill, the Government caps the amount of spending. Rather than indicate that the program will expand, it is putting a lid on it.

The previous Liberal Government established a program of subsidized child care spaces that was geared toward low-income earners. There was no limit on that program. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) was wrong when she said that the only difference between the previous Liberal program, which was instituted at a time when we were not even sure about the so-called child care crisis, was spending an amount of about 4 per cent per year.

There are no national standards in the Tory child care plan. There are rather generous tax deductions. The tax deductions are being doubled from $2,000 to $4,000 a year per child. As a parent who is earning a salary that is significantly above the national average, I stand to benefit much more directly from the Government's child tax deduction than a woman in my riding who is working at the Hamilton General Hospital and may be earning $6 an hour.

If I am in the 50 per cent tax bracket and I get a $4,000 tax deduction, that is money in my pocket. However, a woman who is earning $6 an hour and is paying only 15 per cent or 20 per cent in income tax, her benefit is cut by two-thirds. We believe that the tax deduction system is wrong and should be replaced by a tax credit system which would see direct payments to parents, but would start by giving the most money to those parents who are at the lowest end of the income scale.

When one considers the lack of national standards and the fact that the child tax deduction will benefit the rich, it provides a rather clear picture of what policy the Tories want to establish. It has no national objectives.

What have we seen from the New Democratic Party? Its Leader announced that he would like to cut child care spending by about 30 per cent. He wants to spend about 30 per cent less than the Conservative Government, and will do that by eliminating any direct payments to families. A steelworker in my riding who gets a $2,000 tax deduction would lose that under an NDP Government.

Under an NDP Government, the Liberal initiative of a tax credit which would be more beneficial to the low and middle income earners would also be gone. The NDP does not believe in the right of the individual to make choices for themselves. It believes that everything should be run by the Government in an institutionalized fashion.

Ms. Mitchell: Wrong, and you know it.

Ms. Copps: Let me speak from personal experience. I have a terrific child care giver in my neighbourhood in Ottawa. Her name is Clotilde Keklikian. She has just given birth to another child of her own and now has three children. I probably could not have found a better care giver than her under any circumstances. She happens to have voluntarily associated herself with a licensing service. She would meet the need for national standards, but because she receives payment in her home, according to the NDP definition she is part of the massive profit-making conspiracy that would, of necessity, not be allowed under their policy.

Ms. Mitchell: Is that making a profit?

Ms. Copps: I am very happy to hear the NDP defend its policy because I am rather shocked that it would introduce a situation in which a woman like Clotilde Keklikian would not be able to qualify under its system.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member knows full well that the NDP supports family home day care. The woman to whom she is referring sounds like an excellent care giver. There is no reason why she should not be licensed. In fact, she would have many advantages with extra subsidies under our plan if she were licensed as a family day care giver.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Vancouver East will make a few comments on this matter later tonight. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East has the floor.

Ms. Copps: The NDP has not answered the basic question. Why is it cutting $3 billion from a child care program? There are parents who are currently spending thousands of dollars. Certainly it is very difficult for a steelworker in my riding to come up with the money that is necessary, yet under an NDP Government, that steelworker would probably see a reduction in his disposable income by some $1,000 to $3,000, depending on the number of children. The NDP is wiping out any direct tax credits or tax deductions to families. If that is the case, I would like the NDP to explain why its Leader said last week that he would be spending about one-third less of what is being spent under the Government's program.

There are some fundamental differences. The Liberal Party wants national standards. We also want tax credits as opposed to tax deductions. I have not heard the NDP speak out on this. According to the NDP definition, those who are in family care, who meet national standards and may be making a small profit, would be out of the picture. We believe that those people can also give good care.

Most important, the Liberal Party would introduce a child policy that supports all families and that offers women real opportunity and real choice, not simply a government program, which, over seven years, will result in a near 4 per cent annual increase in spending.

We want to see a program directed not only toward women and families who are working outside the home, but also toward women working in the home because we believe their contribution is just as valuable.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-144, an Act to authorize payments by Canada toward the provision of child care services, and to amend the Canada Assistance Plan in consequence thereof.

I think we can conclude after what has been said so far, Mr. Speaker, that all three Parties agree on the substance of this Bill. We all agree that today, day-care is becoming an increasingly essential service. However, we do not agree on how funding should be allocated and made available to the public.

Mr. Speaker, I think that first of all, and this is very important, it is a matter of philosophy. I heard my colleague speak earlier about deductions and tax credits. We have opted for tax measures. Other political parties, groups and individuals who made their positions known across this country told us we should focus on establishing a national service paid for by the State, to ensure the availability of such services and provide a number of guarantees. That is more or less the position taken by the NDP. However, in the first place, it is a matter of philosophy, a matter of how we look at the services to be offered to the customer and how we react to an increasingly pressing need.

Mr. Speaker, we can either provide the money or provide the opportunity to spend that money. We have opted for the former.

I remember, and I think we have lived long enough with a Liberal Government to understand the Liberal approach, when we had an economic problem. The Government invented the Canada Works projects, so-called winter works, in the belief that by creating temporary jobs, it would be able to deal with economic problems, and so billions of dollars were spent every year. The Government spent enormous amounts of money on Canada Works projects which tended to come back every year, with a few new ones. That was one way of looking at the problem.

The Conservative Government and its Prime Minister, Brian Mulroney, decided to opt for another solution, more in line with the philosophy of the Conservative Party, which is a philosophy of free enterprise, a philosophy of supporting developers. It provides Canadian decision makers with the economic conditions that tend to attract investors. That is the big difference. Our opponents however, would set up a program and then they would decide to index it . . . all of a sudden they discovered indexation. That was a wonderful discovery. After sliced bread, indexation is just about the best thing ever invented in Canada. Indexing means that starting today, tomorrow will be like yesterday, but indexed, a little better than yesterday. We cannot build an economy that way! I have never bought clothes from a tailor by saying that I would pay last year's price, indexed. I never bought a car that way, but we have built an economy that way. My colleague was just talking about it. He talked about family allowance, old age security pensions, the MPs' pension fund. It covers everything!

But in my opinion, it is not the right way to develop the economy because it does not teach individuals how to fish—it gives them fish. If in one year they needed a certain amount and the next year the economy has grown by 3 per cent, automatically they are given a 3 per cent increase—that is indexation. We, for our part, give people the opportunity to choose. And in doing so, Mr. Speaker—our program was so popular, we wanted to add about 200,000 spaces and we will have to give out money; we have to give out more money because of the very positive response from the provinces.

We must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that child care is a provincial responsibility. And so on . . . We could not stick our nose in a field of provincial jurisdiction even if we wanted to. We can set up a national program that the provinces could join, that the federal Government could participate in and that would gradually bring people up to the national standards.

The Liberals suggest directly administering a program in a field of provincial jurisdiction. They are telling the provinces that they are incapable of running day care facilities, just as they are unable to read the Free Trade Agreement, so the Liberals would do all that for them. They tell the provinces not to worry, that they will decide for them and run the day care centres, even if it is a provincial responsibility, and they will force the provinces to accept national standards.

We too, Mr. Speaker, would like to have national standards of quality, and they are being developed, but this necessarily involves each of the ten Canadian provinces and each of the territories. This means that we will end up one day with quality standards that already exist in many provinces, but we will reach them at different rates. That is another foundation of the policy put forward by the Party, that we respect the rate at which each province progresses.

It is clear that Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland have different rates of growth for a social product or program. One only has to look at a province's wealth and existing services, how developed its education services are, what work opportunities there are. Because of all that, the rate and support . . . support at that rate will start for a national program, and that is important for federal programs. All the policies we put forward, that sometimes lay in a grey area between federal and provincial jurisdictions, always led us to respect provincial rates of action, and this is what makes this Government different.

In my first year here, Mr. Speaker, I was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Hon. Flora MacDonald, with whom I worked more closely at that time. We opened negotiations with the Province of Quebec, among others, on training programs. You are fully aware training programs are a long-standing contending issue between federal and provincial Governments, training being a provincial matter. Our greatest difficulty was to somewhat make up for the past because we were dealing with provinces that had been irked to the limit by standards that had always been forced upon them by the Canadian Government, because it had the spending power, it was at the top, it knew about all the needs, and had the means.

We succeeded in harmonizing and setting up new programs, a new job strategy ensuring that instead of having programs strictly to distribute the money to the people, we put forward programs that still sent the money to the people but that led the people to better themselves. Such has been the new job strategy, and the same job strategy was developed among students where the priority is to favour jobs that suit the student's career profile.

But the same thing applies to child care services. Ontario and Quebec will develop their own quality standards. They will not be all that different, but basically different. And what makes this country great is the fact that we have ten provinces and two territories each one as important as the other, each one having its priorities and its standards. There will be fundamental differences between them but they will remain consistent with the general principles we care to set. And they will be encouraged.

We therefore support a system which will give parents the opportunity to help others, to tell them: Listen, in the field of child care, we are experts. Come and see us. We will take care of everything because we know what you really want.

That is the big difference and, as far as I am concerned, I am all for it. We could even pass it tonight. I am speaking, of course, of Bill C-144.

• (1930)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the second reading debate on Bill C-144, an Act to provide child care to Canada. This is one of those Bills on which we have had an indication with respect to which form outweighs substance.

The Minister has portrayed the Bill as a bold new initiative. He has said that he is making great forays into assisting the families of Canada. As we looked at what he is proposing and as we looked at the kind of family assistance that his Government has provided we began to form quite a different opinion of what the Government is doing for families.

Over the years we have watched the previous Liberal Government and then this Conservative Government continue the practice of reducing the proportion of the family deductions on the income tax form. At one time those deductions would feed and clothe a child. That is what their original intention was. As the years went by that was eroded to the point now where, for most families, the child deduction barely provides the clothing that they need each year. This is the same group of people who are in the defence of the Canadian family.

In my home province of Saskatchewan they fought medicare, one of the programs that probably did as much as anything to provide equal access to full medical care for young people, old people, members of families, whether they could afford to see a doctor, be hospitalized or have a serious expensive operation. Medicare made that possible. It was both Liberals and Conservatives in our province who fought the introduction of that program.

During the past four years we have watched this Government attempt successfully—211 outvote 70—to deindex family allowances, further eroding the spending power of families. The provisions of family allowance have been in place since 1948-49. They were introduced as an attempt to equalize incomes and make poorer families more equal, give them access to goods and services on a more equal basis with the rest of the country's families. This is the Government that deindexed family allowances. It is also the Government that has gone a long way in increasing taxes on ordinary families, particularly those families who find it necessary for both mom and dad to work.

The other day I did some quick calculations. A family with mom, dad, two kids, and both parents working most of the time, earning in the neighbourhood of $35,000, and a great many of our population are earning that type of salary and less, with the discovery by the Government of the ease with which it can extract taxes from ordinary people by increasing sales tax, that family is now paying more than $1,000 per year more in taxes than four years ago before the Government came to power. This Government purports to be the Government that stands up for families, yet it is taking more than $100 a month from the average working family with two children.

It is an unfortunate reality that a great many of our population is in the position where both mother and father have to work for wages. When we look at the statistics it can be seen that there are 856,000 two-parent families where both parents work. If either of those parents stopped working to stay home to devote all their time to child care and raising the family, the family income would go below the poverty line. Working mothers and fathers are not only a reality, but in most families they are also a necessity.

I wish to spend a little time talking about the special needs of the farm families that I know best, many of whom I represent in a rural riding such as I have. They will find any federal or provincial program suspicious, because they are not certain that their needs for child care will be recognized in any program that has been proposed. These farm families may be described by some people as traditional families, and to the untrained observer it may appear that the mother is not working. However, I assure you Mr. Speaker, that all farm wives probably have the equivalent of two or three jobs. They contribute not only to the income and the labour force required on the farm, but they are also required to look after the children. The main child-rearing role still falls on farm mothers. Farm fathers help as much as they can, but they are engaged in what are generally too dangerous pursuits in which to include children.

While farms are great places to raise children, and I would not have chosen to raise mine anywhere else, they can also be very dangerous places to raise children. Every season I hear of terrible accidents where young children, sometimes as old as 10 years old, but usually 10 and younger, are killed in the most horrible farm accidents that occurred largely because there was no supervision for them, or no one to help look after them. The parents were too busy trying to earn a living to keep full track of the children, or they were trying to involve them in some of the farm activities where an accident resulted.

We all know of instances where children have been inadvertently run over by a tractor. There are also combine or baler accidents where they become entangled in power shafts. Not too many years ago in my neighbourhood there was an incident where a fairly old child of nine or ten fell into a load of flax as it was being unloaded out of a 10-inch auger. He was immediately drowned. Flax flows like water and it was impossible to extract him. We also know of unfortunate incidents with manure pits around hog barns. There are sewage lagoons in some farm yards where open pits are still used for disposal of sewage. Most farms have ponds, dug-outs, or dams where it is possible for children to get into trouble. It is especially worrisome to parents in the busy times of the year when there is seeding or harvest time when mother and father are involved, as well as the older children, in trying to get the harvest in. Sometimes the children are on their own.

Any program proposed under a day care system, and I do not see any reference to it in this particular proposal, has to be flexible, accessible, affordable, and available in those small rural communities. The type of day care system that will fit those needs has not been attacked by this program or, I submit, most of the programs that I have seen. I do admit that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Collins), does have a section in her policy where she is at least prepared to put some money, study, and action into experiments in the rural areas to establish the workable day care and child care system that can work in those outlying, scattered rural communities where the population is scattered, but where the need is very great.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-144, the so-called day care Bill. I say the "so-called day care Bill" because this Bill is not a day care Bill. It is a "promise" care Bill. It is an attempt to care for the promises made by the Government four years ago when it first sought office as a governing Party, and when it promised a comprehensive, adequate, and accessible day care program for Canada.

Anyone who understands the need for day care today, accessible, quality day care, or anyone who has any idea of what is required and who is able to read this Bill, in either official language, will quickly discover that there is no relationship between the need that continues to grow as the nature of our economy evolves, and what is delivered in this Bill.

The country needs, and is going to need, some 2 million day care spaces. The Bill delivers 200,000 day care spaces over the next seven years. The requirement is for 2 million. The Bill delivers at best 200,000. The Bill does not recognize that society has dramatically changed in the past 20 years. Today less than one in six Canadian families fit the traditional view and pattern of the wife at home with the children and the husband off working. Many families today are headed by single parents, and most of those parents are single young mothers. While more than half of all women with pre-school children work outside the home, only about 20 per cent, two in ten, of those children are served by an accredited day care centre. Raising children is more expensive than ever before, whether one or both parents work, and providing child care is one of the highest costs.

This Bill fails to recognize the tremendous need in the country today. Indeed, there is an excellent editorial in The Ottawa Citizen by Marjorie Nichols. The headline was "Epp"—referring to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp)—"at last decides his figures for child care program". It is an excellent article. It points out that one should get past the flimflammery. Once you have shattered the mirrors, once you have blown away the smoke, once you have seen through the orchestrated series of press events and numbers, you can see that the country does not have a child care program.

In 1966 medicare was established in this country. It worked because the national Government of the day, I am pleased to say a Liberal Government, established a set of national standards, established the principle that whether you are a Canadian living in British Columbia, Toronto, Montréal, Quebec City, Saskatoon or in St. Anthony, Newfoundland, your access to medical care, the kind of standard that you could expect as a Canadian, one of the qualifiers, one of the things that we held in common no matter where we lived, was a level of medical care that would be consistent right across this land. We set national standards. It was a national social program.

Nowhere in Bill C-144, the so-called day care Bill, is there anything establishing any national standard whatever across this country. Nowhere is there any guarantee that if you live in St. Anthony, Newfoundland, to the extent that you look to your federal Government because you are a citizen of Canada and your access to day care will be equivalent to the access of someone who lives in Toronto, Ontario, by comparison a much wealthier province, you will have those standards. They are not there, Mr. Speaker.

What is more shocking and what most Canadians do not realize is that there is absolutely nothing in this Bill to ensure that if you live in St. Anthony, Newfoundland, in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia or in Manitoba or, for that matter if you live in Ontario, your province will even participate in a national day care program. Indeed, this Bill makes it not only possible but I would submit plausible, if not likely, that we will see those provinces with the fiscal capacity to participate in the program to the extent it meets any of the needs, but will do so only at a level of about 10 per cent, and we will see those without a fiscal capacity to participate not sign on board. Some provinces will determine that their fiscal capacity and priorities are in other directions and Canadians in some provinces of Canada will not be participating in this day care program.

We in this Party insist upon national, enforceable standards, similar to what we have in medicare. I heard my colleague in the New Democratic Party who just spoke, a Member from western Canada, refer to his own Party's day care proposal. He said with respect to rural Canada—I represent a rural constituency—that his own Party's program makes some attempt and shows some willingness to experiment to see whether or not we can provide some services to rural Canadians. He said quite rightly that rural Canadians are very suspicious about day care policies no matter from which Party they come. They have this notion that we are talking about young, upwardly mobile professional working couples who can afford things like day care.

Mr. Harris: Like the Member from Hamilton East.

Mr. Tobin: There is really nothing for rural Canadians because in rural Canada the vast majority of day care in rural Newfoundland, almost all day care, is provided in home by people who open their homes and establish, in almost all cases that I know of, a quality level of day care for couples who are working or for a single mother who requires day care. The New Democratic Party's proposal makes no provision for that kind of day care.

The NDP proposal does not have the flexibility to develop that kind of day care. The NDP proposal wants to institutionalize right across this country a model based on a model that works perfectly in Toronto—God bless Toronto.

Rural Canadians need access—not to tax deductions because if your income is low you cannot claim it anyway—to tax credits. That has to be part of the proposal. While I fundamentally do not disagree with my friends in the New Democratic Party, who share many of the concerns the Liberal Party feels about this Bill and who recognize many of its gaping flaws, we must deal with the reality of Canada as we find it. We cannot afford the luxury as we develop laws and social policy for this nation of living in a false Utopia concocted by some pollster or academic living in an ivory tower in some fabled urban setting. We must recognize—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): I regret to advise that the time for the Hon. Member has expired.

Mr. Tobin: I regret it too, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): The Hon. Member for St. John's East.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to join in the debate on this important issue of child care for Canadian families. It is my pleasure to participate because I do have some very important things to say which I think will outline the total inadequacy of the Government's approach to this issue. In doing so I want to talk about the kind of families that we mean when we talk about families in Canada.

I am sure this Government has no idea what most people in this country need because it probably did not ask the families themselves what kinds of needs they have. There are approximately 16,000 families in my riding of St. John's East with children living at home. That is comparable to other ridings across this country. In my riding of 16,000 families, 3,600 of them are single parent families. Over 20 per cent are single parent families who are living in a situation where there is not a Mom and a Pop and two kids and two incomes and all those things that a lot of people take for granted when they talk about child care. We have to look at a program that meets the needs of single parent families, of two parent families, of situations where everything is not straightforward and even where two parents are working and where those kinds of choices which the Minister keeps talking about may or may not be available.

What we need to recognize is that for families who have children to look after and who need to work the biggest issue in their lives is how to find affordable quality child care. I know that from contact with people in those kinds of situations who have to struggle from one situation to the next who cannot find quality child care, who cannot find care they can afford and with which they can be satisfied and comfortable.

We heard the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who spoke about what a wonderful situation she had as an upper middle-class Canadian in a two-parent working family. She was able to find this caregiver who was adequate and provided quality care. That is a marvellous and a wonderful thing. It is a situation which could adequately operate under a New Democratic Party child care proposal. It is a situation where an individual, a caregiver, can associate with a licensed facility, be given assistance to provide quality care in terms of facilities and equipment for caregiving, and in terms of ensuring that that caregiver is given an adequate income.

• (2000)

That is the kind of flexibility that our Party would support and has proposed. It would provide quality and would be affordable, not only to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mrs. Dewar), who has indicated that she makes an income quite substantially higher than that of the vast majority of Canadians, but for average working men and women who have to look after their children. They too should be able to afford quality care, and should be able to exercise a choice. The situation of a woman who is at home and is already looking after one or two children would quite adequately be met by providing assistance to the care giver at that level to ensure quality care giving as well as an adequate income for the care giver. Those are the kinds of choices our policy represents.

The Government suggests that one of the choices available to this mythical family composed of mom, pop and the kids is whether to work or not to work. The choice goes something like this: "We will give you a child tax credit of $200 per year if you decide to stay at home and look after your own children at home". Of course, that amounts to $16.66 a month. This is a real choice. I can see the women of Canada for the next three weeks mulling over whether or not to quit their jobs, stay at home and look after their children for the sake of $16.66 a month. Those are the kinds of choices that are in the proposal the Government has put forward.

We would provide a national child care system which has a number of essential characteristics including accountability to parents. The child care system would be established on a non-profit basis. Those who are already involved in profit-making centres would agree to a transition period for setting up non-profit centres with control by parents and the care givers themselves. That would be desirable because this is a basic and fundamental service which meets a basic social need. It should be met on a non-profit basis. Most of the people who are now involved in child-care giving on a for-profit basis would do better in terms of personal income under a non-profit system based on the proposal of the New Democratic Party.

The essential features of such a system would be the requirement of minimum standard applicable all across Canada, specifically training standards and parent and community ownership and control of non-profit services. This would provide quality, affordable services. The next requirement would be that the system be accessible, that it would be available to those in St. Anthony, Newfoundland, as well as to those in Toronto. Parents need access to the kind of care that is standardized, provided that care givers are licensed so that parents will have some assurance that the people providing the service do adhere to training standards and are trustworthy and acceptable people.

Those elements are essential to a proper child care program. They are all missing from the Government's program. There is an absence of national objectives. There is no vision in the offering of child care choices that are needed. In fact, it imposes restrictions on the increases in child care spaces. It does not allow for an expanding and developing market, and for the first time has imposed restrictions on the amount of government assistance that will be offered to child care workers. This makes it impossible for us to support the Government's Bill. It does not do anything to enhance the position of child care workers, positions which are at best marginalized by the policies which allow for individuals to use the tax system to pay people minimum wages or less to look after children across Canada. That itself speaks for low standards and does not do anything to increase the quality of training and care.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, truth comes in strange ways and at strange moments. I think my colleague across the way just laid a little truth on the table. I think he said that they are against the Bill because it does nothing for child care workers. Does he mean all child care workers? Does he mean babysitters, the teenagers who sit for other people's children, the friends and neighbours? Are these child care workers? Are mothers child care workers?

I suspect that the NDP definition of a child care worker is someone who works in an institution and belongs to some kind of association which verges on being a union. Whether it is free trade or child care, the NDP represents a leadership element in Canadian society. It represents people with pretty big salaries, union leaders, who drive pretty big cars and travel to pretty good hotels. The behaviour of Members across the way is conditioned on behalf of those people, the union leaders who belong to their political Party. It is time for them to join the rest of us in speaking out on behalf of all Canadians, not just a small portion of Canadians who happen to be in that fortunate position but on behalf of all Canadians.

The child care policy of this Government is a policy on behalf of all children, children who are cared for in their homes by their mothers or fathers. We are offering some help for them to raise their children. This legislation deals with the provisions of child care services in a more formal sense. The basic philosophy of this piece of legislation is that Parliament will provide money to the provinces to set up the services which the provinces need for the people who live in those provinces.

Living in Tuktoyaktuk is not the same as living in downtown Toronto. Living in Barrhead, Alberta, is not the same as living in the City of Calgary. What the NDP and Liberal Members are asking for when they talk about national standards is some kind of minimum qualification for the workers in the system, not for the good of the children. Children are well cared for by parents, no formal schooling required. They give love, care and attention. Children are well cared for by teenagers. Children are well cared for by relatives, by friends, by neighbours—

Ms. Mitchell: Not always, they aren't.

Mr. Hawkes: "Not always", she shouts across. They are not always well cared for by licensed, accredited child care workers or teachers or university professors. She knows that and I know that. We belong to that profession, and some of our colleagues go wrong. Some of them do terrible things. Some of them end up in jail. There is nothing legislation can do to ensure the quality of people, but we can tell the parents of Canada that they must accept some responsibility for determining whether the care their children are about to receive is the kind of care that they value. Is it consistent with your personal attitude and philosophy? This Bill encourages that kind of choice. This Bill says that we will enter into an agreement with the provinces to provide money to meet the child care needs in those provinces. This will be done in a way that fits.

• (2010)

What the NDP is saying is, let us let the population centres of the country decide, the areas with the most MPs, Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, places with high density apartment buildings, lots of jobs in manufacturing, and a certain kind of lifestyle. They produce the most MPs because most people live in those kinds of centres, and the bulk of those MPs shall decide on a standard for the rest of the nation; for a fishing village in Newfoundland; a prairie agricultural community; a northern mining town. Let us have a standard that fits the cities. It may not fit the children but it fits workers because you can control the supply and raise the wages of those who are lucky enough to be inside the system.

That is what the NDP represents. NDP Members would have you believe that they can produce a day care program which meets the same goals of this program for less money in virtually half the time. That proposition is an absolute joke. First, because the federal Government has no business in the day care business. It has no jurisdiction under Canadian law and the Canadian Constitution to run a day care system. In the same way it has no jurisdiction to run the public education system. Our forefathers gave that jurisdiction to the provinces so the politicians would be closer to the people when dealing with human and health services.

As a federal Government we can contribute. We can recognize a need and provide money. How can the NDP propose to do, for less money in a shorter period of time, more than what is proposed in this legislation? Have they had a single consultation with a single province? Have they been out there discussing with the provinces their needs, their priorities, their capacity? The NDP intends to provide all the money because this Bill does not provide all the money. The people of a province put up some of the money and the federal Government puts up some of the money. It is a partnership so that the program remains sensitive to the needs of the people in the province.

That is a long, slow process. We lived through 17 years of government where the Parliament of Canada thought it could intrude on provincial jurisdiction and do what it liked. We brought a different spirit to this land. We said we will come to office in a spirit of co-operation. Let the federal Government be the helpmate of the provinces. Let us discuss, let us work it out, let us avoid duplication, let us save taxpayers' dollars by co-operating and building together.

If the results of all those consultations and this legislation is to produce 200,000 new day care spaces for this dollar amount over a period of seven years, it does so because the consultation process has produced information from the provinces about their capacity, their needs and their willingness to proceed. Without that consultation with respect to doing something in an area of provincial jurisdiction you are simply saying to the Canadian people: "I have an idea. It is a pie in the sky idea but hopefully some of it will stick. It is not based on facts. It is not based on reality. Hopefully Canadians will believe me".

I think Canadians have their feet on the ground. I think Canadians know how much time and effort it takes to set up a new organization, a collection of parents, to create a new day care centre with a good board, good constitution, good facilities and adequate staff. Those things take months. You cannot stand in Parliament, decree it to happen and expect it to be there the next day. These are community endeavours of some complexity requiring participation on a voluntary basis by a lot of people.

The organizations that exist today to help are provincial Governments and the departments of those provincial Governments. They have the staff on a daily basis working with these kinds of groups. They know how long it takes. They know how expensive it is. I say to Canadians: When it comes to child care you really have a choice. In the next election you can vote for the Party who cares about their child care workers and their union bosses, or you can vote for the Party who cares about children and parental choice.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have a chance to speak on Bill C-144, the Canada Child Care Act. There is no question that this is a very important subject to literally millions of young couples who have children of school age or pre-school children. We learn as we look across the statistics that 44 per cent of families have two careers. Some 63 per cent of all mothers who work today, two million women, have children under 16 years of age. Almost half of all the women with pre-school children require day care.

What we need is an accessible, high quality, affordable day care system. Although we have some 250,000 licensed day care spaces today, the actual need approaches some two million across the country. There are lots of problems with the present system under CAP which is operated through the provinces. It is not very satisfactory for those in the middle income group because it is a welfare system. If you are above a certain level of income you cannot utilize it. Of course, other private day care systems are just too expensive for those middle income families.

The whole system today is not adequate to deal with the situation as we see it in rural Canada. Farming communities and resource areas certainly do not have an adequate day care system. The shortages are growing worse every year.

The plan before us today is an interesting one because when it was announced last December it was $1 billion less. There was a famous cabinet Minister who said: "What's a million"? In this case the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who has probably at his disposal more computers, more technical back up, than any other Department of government, erred by $1 billion. He announced a program of $5.3 billion. He discovered four or five months later that he was $1 billion short. The interesting part of that is that if we read the article written just a couple days ago in The Ottawa Citizen by Marjorie Nichols, the program put forward by the Government, involving some $4 billion for actual day care service itself, if you extrapolate it out over the seven year period, actually amounts to $570,000 per year above what is being paid out by the Government now under the Canada Assistance Plan. That takes into account inflation over the seven years. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, how much less it was before he added the $1 billion.

So we really have a proposal before us which probably will not do anything different from what we have under the present system. Of course, provinces that opt into this new proposal will have to opt out of the Canada Assistance Program permanently. So we have a very questionable system which has already proven it is $1 billion short. The whole proposal is based on the provinces picking up this $4 billion. If the provinces do not have their share, then, of course, the $4 billion will not be spent.

There are a lot of problems with this proposal. First, there is no proposal to have national standards. So even if one has a rinky-dink system, one still receives the money because there are no national standards established by this program. There is very little help for the mother who stays at home. In fact, in this fiscal year, as I understand the proposal, they receive exactly a $100 refundable tax credit. Next year it will be $200. The Hon. Member opposite, who is shaking his head and who raves every day about the socialists, may think $200 is enough to allow a homemaker to stay at home and take care of the children, but anyone who stops to think about it can see it is obviously not enough. That is why our distinguished critic, who served on the committee, proposed refundable spousal deduction. It is not only a tax credit but it is a refundable tax credit. If the deduction for a spouse is now, say, $4,000, and the tax credit basis is at 30 per cent or 40 per cent, they would receive that as a refundable tax credit in their own hands. If the spouse is not working or does not have any other income, she still receives the income. So there is an incentive there for homemakers and mothers to stay at home and raise their children, especially during the pre-school years.

The present system, which is going through the tax reform now in the Bill before the House, increases the exemption from $2,000 to $4,000 per year. Of course, it is a very regressive system. It is much more advantageous if one is in a high-income bracket. The New Democratic Party wants to cut that out. The NDP thinks it should only be maintained at the $2,000 limit. That is even more regressive because it does not provide the assistance for those who want to stay home.

What is more important, the proposal before the House does not carry enough new spaces. We need at least a million spaces. This proposal only creates 200,000 new spaces over a period of seven years. The system does not equitably share the burden. There should be more assistance for those low-income families.

We believe that this proposal, although it may have some useful features to it, it is not adequate. It simply does not meet the need. It is regressive. It is unfair and, most of all, it does not really provide a great deal of new money. According to Marjorie Nichols, who writes a column for The Citizen, over the life of the seven year program only $570,000 per year of new money is added. I think we have a very inadequate proposal before us tonight. It may be $570,000 better per year than the present system, but surely that is not a massive new national day care program. We know it is not. It does not provide much extra money and it does not provide any national standards. It is simply inadequate to deal with the massive responsibility which is before the country. It just does not adequately meet the needs of young families who cannot afford proper day care when, because of economic necessity, both members of the family, both parents, have to work outside the home.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the question of providing an adequate day care system is of crucial importance to the people of Canada. The fact is that 60 per cent of the mothers of children under the age of three are now in the workforce. Most of these mothers are not just single parent mothers, but mothers in families with a joint income where both the husband and wife are working and mothers in families where both mother and father are middle-income earners who are working.

Why is that happening, Mr. Speaker? Well, to a large extent it is because it is almost impossible for a young couple to buy their own home and meet the mortgage payments with only one member of the family working. This is true even in the City of Winnipeg where the price of a home is probably just one-half of what it is in Ottawa, or a third of the cost of a home in Vancouver and probably a quarter of the cost of a home in Toronto. In the newer parts of my constituency the people who live there are almost entirely young couples between the ages of 25 and 40 years. One could shoot off a cannon during the middle of the day and there would not be a single person come out of the house to see what was happening because there is no one home. Both husband and wife are out working so they can meet the mortgage payments.

So Members of Parliament or people out in the community who believe and talk about really having a choice should realize that the choice for most parents is some system of day care or home care. They just do not realize what is happening. The choice is no longer between day care, public or private, adequate or inadequate, and home care, because home care is no longer a viable, possible choice. The alternative to day care is some kind of arrangement, leaving the child with a neighbour or getting some high school student in to look after the children or getting someone from the Philippines or some other country to come and look after the child, and these parents have no knowledge at all about the adequacy or ability of that person to give careful care and supervision of the children.

These are the facts. What are the needs? Health and Welfare Canada, which is not a preserve of wild-eyed radicals by any stretch of the imagination, states that the number of children with parents working more than 20 hours a week is over two million. According to Health and Welfare Canada, there are presently only 250,000 child care spaces. That means there are 1.75 million children of working parents for whom there are no child care spaces.

I find it amazing that Conservative Members of Parliament who talk so glibly and often about the family and how much they care about the family are prepared to ignore the problem or bring forth a proposal to deal with the problem that is completely inadequate. It simply does not meet the needs of the people.

If one listens to the Parliamentary Secretary who spoke a few moments ago, one would think that the proposals put forward by members of the NDP are impractical, unaffordable and were somehow pulled out of thin air.

I want to put on the record the principles of a national day care policy as enunciated, not by the New Democratic Party, but by the Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association. They say about universality:

> All children should have access to high quality child care services regardless of family income or parent's employment status. Parents should determine the nature and extent of their children's participation.

They say about quality:

> To ensure high quality, child care services should be licensed and regulated, reflecting the best current knowledge about early childhood development as well as the varied cultural and linguistic backgrounds of Canadian families.

One need only drive through the core areas of the major cities in Canada to see that the days when the population of the cities was 95 per cent white are long gone. In some of the core areas in the City of Winnipeg, for example, 95 per cent of the children attending elementary school are either immigrant children from Caribbean countries and South America or native children. They must have a care system that meets their needs, not one that is dictated to them by a government from Ottawa. They need a system that is developed in consultation with the local community and parents.

The Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association discusses affordability. It states:

> Cost should not be a barrier to access for any family. User fees should diminish over a realistic time frame, with a small parent fee to remain. Assistance with this fee should be provided to low-income families.

We know that there are many low income families in the cities. Unfortunately, there is an increasing number of low income families in rural areas.

The Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association says about working conditions:

> Child care staff should receive salaries and benefits commensurate with the value of their work and educational qualifications.

Let us deal with the question of cost and how we will pay for it.

We believe the federal Conservative Government has rejected the principles of organizations such as the one I just referred to, and has rejected the very fundamental principles it advocated when it urged Canadians to support the Meech Lake Accord.

Let us consider how these programs will be financed. Of the almost $5.5 billion being committed by the federal Government to the program, almost $2.5 billion will be spent through the tax system. Day care advocates and the former Manitoba Government estimated that if this had been committed to creating new services, another 170,000 spaces could have been created for day care.

A large percentage of the almost $5.5 billion that the Government says it proposes to allocate to day care facilities is not new money. The federal Government presently spends $170 million every year through the child care expense deduction. Thus this would come to approximately $1 billion in new money.

Furthermore, the larger percentage of the money being proposed by the Government is going into a doubling of the child tax deduction. The Government's program already gives the greatest benefit to well-to-do families and gives nothing to low income families. That should be of no surprise because since day one, after its election, the Government has demonstrated quite clearly that it believes in the trickle-down theory of economics, that if you only give enough to people at the top through large salaries and tax breaks on investments or capital gains, the money spent by those with high income will somehow trickle down to those in the lower income brackets. That has not worked before and it will not work now.

Less well-off families will be given an increase of $100 for the first year for the child tax credit and a further $100 in the second year for baby-sitting or parents at home. A $200 increase is absolutely meaningless in terms of giving women real choices. If they are wealthy, $200 means nothing. Those who are in the lower income bracket need a great deal more than $200.

We have made it very clear that the Government's proposals are simply inadequate. We have proposed an alternative that meets the criteria and principles enunciated by organizations such as the one I have mentioned and by people who work in the existing day care centres who know the needs of the children who are in their care.

I, along with my colleagues, intend to oppose this legislation and do everything I can to see a much better system in place that will meet the needs of Canadian children.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity tonight to take part in this debate and to try to convince my colleagues from the Progressive Conservative Party that we should reject the Government's Bill and draft one that will be better and fairer for all Canadian families.

Mr. Speaker, the day care system has existed in Canada since about the Second World War, when then-Prime Minister Mackenzie King decided to establish a system of "day nurseries", as they were called at the time, to encourage women to find work, because there was a labour shortage, particularly during the Second World War.

When thing returned to "normal" after the war, or at least after the Armistice, when people resumed their more traditional roles, the day nurseries were closed because it was then believed that there was less need for them; the day nurseries were closed. But gradually, as women entered the labour force in much larger numbers, the need for day care arose again. And again, the Liberal Party, which was in power, helped set up a system, in co-operation with the provinces, to encourage the development of day care facilities. That is the system which exists to this day.

Mr. Speaker, these days, in 1988, in 44 per cent of families, both parents work outside the home; I am informed that 63.8 per cent of women with children under 16 have a job, which means that two million women with children work outside the home.

• (2040)

[English]

Those two million people who are working outside the home require day care spaces for their children. In the large majority of those cases both parents work outside the home. That is actually the case wherever there is a traditional family with both spouses in the home type of unit.

In the cases of sole support parents the decision there is even more crucial. The mother has to work in order to be gainfully employed. As we know, apart from everything else, the cost of living is very high. The traditional system of obtaining funding from the parent who has left in the case of a sole support parent is not functioning. Maintenance orders are not being enforced as they should be enforced. Thus mothers are left without income.

We have a situation in which most women in the country who have children work, either by choice or where there is no choice. Whether it is a case of choice or not, whether they need to work outside the home or not, it is their decision. That is one thing. It is time that we accepted as a society that if a woman wants to work outside the home, or any one of the two parents, they should be able to do so with an established system of offering child care for their children. In the 1850s in Canada under the leadership of Edgerton Ryerson a school system for children aged six and older was established. Society took care of the children for a portion of the day. The children were taught the necessary academic knowledge they required from that age on. In the few years afterwards the system became compulsory. No one questions today whether or not we need a publicly-funded established educational system.

In the case of day care the debate, unfortunately, is still raging on. It deals with whether or not we need day care. I think the answer is fairly obvious with just the statistics that I gave moments ago. We do need a day care system.

But we need a day care system quite different from our educational system. It must be very flexible in order to accommodate the largest number of Canadian families possible. I totally disagree with those who think for one minute that the only way to have a day care system is to have a system in which the state runs it totally from one end of the spectrum to the other similar to our school system. I think it should be funded in a way that permits as many families as possible to participate. But it should be flexible to accommodate a large number of Canadians. I would like to elaborate on that.

A day care system should be able to accommodate families in rural settings. That would not necessarily be the same system as one designed to accommodate civil servants who always work the same specified hours of the day. The Liberal Party has recognized that by the tremendous leadership and initiative demonstrated by my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Outremont, (Mrs. Pépin), who proposed to us the establishment of a foundation which would oversee the establishment of day care centres in the various regions of our country and which would take into consideration local needs.

I was describing a while ago a potential day care kind of situation in the civil service setting, say in the west end of my constituency where a large number of my electors work here in the city. Perhaps they would require a day care system which would be structured in such a way as to bring their children there at 7.30 or 8 a.m. in the morning and pick them up at 4.30 in the afternoon. In the case of my rural constituents in the farming community that system could be totally different.

First, the traditional farm family cannot be stereotyped the way we are able to do with some families. Sometimes one of the two parents works full time on the farm. Sometimes the other parent works either in the village, town or elsewhere. However, even in the cases in which both parents work on the farm their role on the farm is far different from what it was a number of years ago, with the women often participating directly in the operation of the farm machinery, the actual management of the farm and so on, and not always available in the home as they would have been at some point in the past.

In the agricultural community the system must be able to accommodate the seasonal needs when both parents sometimes work very long hours during a certain period of the year, whether it is at seeding time or harvest time, and then the system would accommodate the fact that during certain periods of the year the need for day care would be less because it would be required for fewer hours.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, just in the examples I have given, a totally structured system designed to be the same for everyone would not be appropriate. Let me give Hon. Members another instance in the constituency which I represent. In the eastern end of my riding there are a number of textile mills. Some of those mills operate in the daytime. Some operate evening shifts. I also have a steel mill in my riding in L'Orignal. It works 24 hours a day with three shifts. Therefore we can see that the child care needs have to be structured in such a way as to accommodate the needs of the various kinds of communities that I have described.

Our caucus has disagreed through our spokesperson on this issue with the proposal of the Government simply because the Government's program fails in many respects. First, we have to remember that the Government is not re-inventing the wheel. It has not discovered the universe. It has not discovered brand new way of providing child care. What the Government has done is to package an announcement, make a Bill around it and do so in a manner that is not totally filled with substance. As a matter of fact, I would say that it is largely devoid of substance. Then it decided that it would make this announcement, pretending that all the funding that it would provide toward day care is something brand new that did not exist in the past.

As my colleague from Outremont, I am sure, would want me to say, that is not the case. The Canada Assistance Plan assists now. It has no capping in terms of maximum funding. Whatever funding the province gives is matched at the present time by the federal Government under this program. What the Conservative program, apart from everything else, fails to do is to provide adequacy in terms of funding. Because of the caps that have been provided, my own Province of Ontario will be losing 12,000 child care spaces. That is far from being an adequate program. Who would think from reading the Government's literature, junk mail and everything else that it produces, that we would end up with fewer child care spaces? The Government does not brag about that.

Unfortunately, the time accorded to me has expired. I want to tell my colleagues in the House that we need more child care spaces. The program must be flexible, but it must be meaningful, and not an empty announcement such as the one we have had.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak this evening on Bill C-144, the Canada Child Care Act. The debate this evening is certainly a hallmark in history when Members of Parliament rise to see who can outdo whom, and who loves children and mothers the most. Surely this must be great news to many children and many mothers and fathers who are seeking child care, and who seem to be the people I meet in my constituency with many concerns.

I rise this evening to speak against the Canada Child Care Act proposed by the Government. Despite the fact that we have heard from other Hon. Members that opposing this Bill seems to be against motherhood, against children, and against choice, I seem to be in very good company. The Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association, which represents day care associations across Canada, and I am proud to say also from the Yukon, has raised very serious concerns about this Bill, which they have relayed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

This association, many of whom are women, but who are a cross-section of people, have stated that this Bill ignores the child care needs of Canadian families, and does not encourage the development of a national child care system. They also acknowledge that child care is an issue of national importance and deserves the full public scrutiny available through the legislative process. Organizations that have joined in this letter to the Prime Minister include the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the National Anti-Poverty Organization, the Ontario Coalition for Better Childcare, the Ontario Federation of Labour, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, the National Federation of Nurses Union, and others.

As I reflected on the comments that I would like to make on this issue, having been involved in the child care issue for many years, first with my own children, now with my grandchildren, and certainly as a community advocate, the debate in a sense reminded me of something that Groucho Marx once said. He stated: "This would be a better world for children if parents had to eat the spinach".

I would suggest that if the Prime Minister and his colleagues had to utilize low-quality child care, deal with constantly revolving child caregivers, inadequate child care spaces and facilities, and be forced to pay high child care costs, we may have a very different child care Act before us, and indeed a better world for children.

Other speakers today have stated that, in their constituency, 85 per cent of their constituents are happy with the choices which they have to utilize the child care of their choice. Obviously, we live in very different worlds. It is true that there can be a range of options: Home care, family assistance, neighbours, family day homes, and child care centres. Every one is a possibility, but not all of them are real choices.

I do not need to reiterate that there is a child care crisis in Canada today. The very fact that the Government has brought forth this Bill acknowledges that there is a crisis. I do not think it is very fruitful to debate who cares most about whom, but rather to look at the Bill and see if it will address this crisis. In reviewing how far this Bill will take us in addressing the real crisis, I have to say that in sum this Bill is simply an articulate voice of the past.

Approximately one year ago I had an occasion to read a history of the development of public education in Canada. Many of the arguments put forth tonight about child care in general were arguments that were raised in those debates about public education. As the previous speaker so aptly said, we are not exactly saying that child care will be analogous to the public education system, but there are certain principles which are being advocated, just as were done in the public education system. Those are principles of national standards in order that Canadians and their children from coast to coast will have affordable, accessible child care.

Situations do indeed vary in communities. However, under this Bill there will be 12 different agreements. Again, that is not in and of itself a bad focus, because situations do differ between rural, urban, and appropriate cultural situations. However, covering those separate agreements there must be some type of national focus and standards, as we have very appropriately in other areas, which does not necessarily spell out every factor that will appear in those agreements, but will at least give a framework for a national objective in child care.

Situations do vary in communities. For example, in my own constituency of the Yukon, 12 per cent of Yukon families are single parents; 16 per cent of the families in the Yukon operate on the traditional male breadwinner with the female at home full-time model. This is not to denigrate in any way that model. Again, it is the choice that people make, or that they choose to make. It is a valid choice.

However, the problem is that the tax breaks offered in this Bill for a homemaker who stays at home, whether it is a man or a woman, will not benefit those with lower incomes. Obviously, it will be of greater benefit to those with a higher income. Those with a middle income will not benefit nearly as much, as other speakers have pointed out, from this particular tax concession. A tax credit would make more sense if we are to equalize the benefit.

The Bill illustrates that support for the family under this Bill means that there will be no substantive national standards, and that there will be a cap on federal spending. It is important to point out that, in this particular Bill, under the Canada Assistance Plan, as it presently is, jurisdictions must opt out of the Canada Assistance Plan if they are to participate in this Bill. For some jurisdictions this will mean that they have less ability to provide child care rather than more ability.

There is one very important area I would like to bring to the attention of the Government, and I hope it will be discussed thoroughly in committee. It is the provision for native services for individual Indian bands. In an analysis prepared by the legislative library several important concerns are pointed out in that area. That is an area that must be very closely examined and analysed when the Bill is in committee.

This Bill has many inadequacies which have been reiterated many times tonight. It must not be supported in its present form. It must have very full and adequate amendments that will be discussed in committee. Therefore, I cannot support this Bill, as my Party does not, and request that the Government listen to those people in the field who have called this totally unacceptable in meeting child care needs in Canada today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), who always likes to wind up the debate, has the floor.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): I listened with great interest to all the speeches, since I make a habit of listening very carefully, when we are considering an important matter, to what Members on both sides of the House have to say.

An Hon. Member: You wanted to wind up the debate.

Mr. Prud'homme: Of course, I could . . . No, I am not going to wind up the debate. But I could of course quote all the figures that were given. Some people say: Too much, while others say: Not enough. The statistics . . . I wonder, considering the little time we have left, whether we should not reflect together on the important subject of day care today.

Instead of dwelling on statistics, on the number of children attending day care centres and how many parents work, I would rather draw the attention of the population and Quebecers who are listening, and of course of Canadians, to the importance of this new phenomenon. Day-care is a new phenomenon. It is a whole new philosophy of life, because Canada is changing. Society changes and we must be prepared to meet the needs of the people. Perhaps I may give you an example. I see my colleague from Quebec who is listening carefully, as usual . . . Only a few years ago here in the House of Commons, a disabled person could not visit Parliament. Why not? Because we didn't realize that the disabled also had the right to visit Parliament and to have complete access. Why? Because there were stairs all over the place, because there was no way . . .

[English]

It was impossible to attend as so many people did tonight. We were not against the handicapped. We did not think of it. We were not prepared for a changing society. Who would have thought that big builders must now provide easy access to buildings? We did not think of it. We were not against people having easy access to any federal, provincial, or municipal building. It did not come to mind that a group of people could not do that. Now people who build must be prepared to provide easy access. In Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, and every other city there are sidewalks. Why did we not have easy sidewalk access for people with wheelchairs? We were not against it; we just did not think of it. That was not part of our society then. It was not part of life not to have someone to assist those who were not easily mobile.

Society is changing, Mr. Speaker. I am not against what is being put to the House, but I am not for it. It does not provide for easy access to those who need it. They have a right to expect services from their Government.

[Translation]

So I wonder why this debate is dragging on. It is just because some people still refuse to realize that society has changed. It isn't what it used to be. I come from a family of twelve children. At that time, in my family, we were raised by our parents. And there were people in our family to look after the kids. My father was very busy. He was a doctor. He delivered over 9,000 babies. He was busy, and my mother was involved in all kinds of activities, but there were always people to take care of us at home. Things are different today. Things have changed. Society is different. This means that the federal Government has a duty to provide equal services to all Canadians.

[English]

Canada is not made up only of Toronto, Montreal, and Vancouver. Canada is made up of Foam Lake, Saskatchewan;

North Kapuskasing, Ontario; Thompson, Manitoba; and, my God, name me places that I love to visit in my country. People should expect equal access to services if they are to be comfortable and happy to call themselves Canadians. Otherwise we will hear them say that others are better treated. When people feel that another group is better treated, they start thinking that Canada is not what it should be and it is not equal in all parts of the country. This is a philosophical debate. I know that many Members of this House do not yet have the openness to express what they feel, but that does not mean they are not good Members. They are not yet ready to accept that the good old society to which they were accustomed is not the society that exists today. We must have a program that gives easy and equal access to people and treats those who need it most better than those who can afford certain projects or programs.

People talk about natural resources. Is there a greater resource than our young people? We must be ready to invest in the future of this country. What is better than to invest in our children? They will make this country better known in the world. It will be more open and more generous. Many are not ready to accept that the country is changing. Many are not yet ready, we know here in the House, to accept that more people from other countries will come to this country. The best way to integrate them into Canadian society will be to help them. They should understand that you can have black skin, yellow skin, come from a different culture or follow a different religion. You usually cannot do that when you are past 50. You have to start when you are very young. That is why it is capital—

[Translation]

We must realize that soon we will have to invest a lot of money in what we prize most in our society, our young people.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I hope this debate will soon come to an end, so that we can take this important Bill and consider the details in committee.

[English]

We must not have a closed mind. We must be prepared to change, if necessary, in committee. I will conclude because I know my time has expired, but if I may I will just take the 30 seconds left to say that I hope for once that all Members of Parliament start accepting that committee work is not an exercise in frustration. You do not arrive with a Bill, discuss it for three months, and come back to the House with the same Bill. I love doing committee work. I love to listen to my colleagues in every Party who can come up with better proposals than the ones I put forward. If democracy is to listen to people, it is also not to have a closed mind. One must be ready when this project goes to committee to change it.

I see an hon. friend, Mr. Stevens—I like to call Members by their names. We were together on the foreign affairs and national defence committee. We were always ready to listen to good ideas coming from other Members. It seems now that people have closed minds. They are not ready to go to committee and give up on an old idea by saying that this one is better and therefore that is what I recommend to the House of Commons so that at report stage and third reading there will be a better Bill.

I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to put forward these thoughts, thoughts that are connected with the Bill but that do not deal with exactly how many dollars are involved. God knows you have listened to that for quite some time, and I think you will listen to some more.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to join in the debate on Bill C-144. It would be appropriate for me to observe at this hour on a Tuesday night that it appears it is only members of the opposition Parties who are joining in the debate. The Tories have given up on it. It is rather a shame, because if they wanted to do something that would be significant, the best thing they could do is to continue making speeches on the importance of child care.

The Bill that is before us does not deserve to be passed if Conservative Members take the principles and the fine words of their speeches seriously. If they want the people of Canada to know how committed they are to all these fine principles of support for the family, they should keep on making speeches. If they continued to make speeches, this Bill, that is designed to damage child care rather than expand it as it needs to be expanded, would be talked out, as it deserves to be. I would encourage all of my Conservative colleagues to get back into the debate, keep it going and talk the Bill out so that it dies the death it so well deserves.

We in the New Democratic Party are profoundly opposed to Bill C-144 and will do all we can to prevent it from becoming law. We are opposed to it because we recognize the very great need for good quality child care that exists and we are convinced that the proposals the Government has put forward in its so-called national strategy on child care will actually produce fewer spaces over the next five or seven years than we will have if we continue with the Canada Assistance Plan arrangements.

The experience of the last four years has shown a growth, on average, of 15 per cent in the number of child care spaces created year by year. The proposal of the Government will limit that to 10 per cent. Surely any plan that purports to meet the needs of families but limits the growth to a lower rate than we have known over the past four years and caps it at that rate is not a plan nor is it a national strategy for child care.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has claimed, as the press has informed us, that he is determined to put this into effect. This indicates to me that this is a Minister with very limited concerns for the children of Canada. He is more concerned about saving the federal Government money. He is quite prepared to write off the enormous need that exists for child care spaces, over and above the limited additions the plan will make. He is more concerned about providing some additional tax breaks, though those are very limited, to middle-class families who manage by one means or another to find some kind of care for their children.

Again, this Minister speaks fine words about the family. However, when it comes to the crunch, it is his responsibility to provide the arrangements that are needed in every province, city, town, and rural area. For all of this talk about $6 billion plus over seven years, that need will not be met. The tragedy of this is surely the enormous need that has developed for child care.

A dozen years ago, perhaps 30 per cent of families with children under three had both parents at work. It is conventional, and I suppose acceptable, to put this in more sexist terms; that is to say, a dozen years ago, only 30 per cent of the mothers and families with children under three were in the workforce. What do we find a dozen years later? We find a doubling of that figure to 60 per cent of mothers who are getting back into the workforce very soon after the births of their children and are looking for care for babies, never mind for children who are two, three, four or are in kindergarten. There are also needs beyond those ages when children are in school. Children who go home from school at 3.30 are alone for an hour or two hours before their parents arrive. This need runs to hundreds of thousands of children.

Let us consider the statistics. There are perhaps 240,000 spaces and 1.6 million children who are under the age of 13. I recognize here that the older children, those who are 10, 11, or 12, should not be left on their own. One worries about them when they are left by themselves for lengthy periods of time.

One can make all the fine speeches in the world about the desirability of mothers being home with their children, and Tories are past masters at making those speeches. However, they have done absolutely nothing positive to encourage or to enable mothers to do that. In fact, the tax increases of $1,000 per year per family of four that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has laid on Canadian families in the three and a half years plus that he has been responsible for the finances of this country, is surely an additional economic pressure that keeps both spouses working. Now a tax break will be added to the existing arrangements of a maximum of $200 per child. How far does $200 per child go toward covering that $1,000 in additional taxation that has been laid on families?

All the fine speeches that Conservatives make have done nothing to assist mothers who wish to stay with their children, to say it in that gender-oriented way again. That is an enormous social tragedy, but the Tories have done nothing about it except to make speeches. Then, when they bring a strategy forward that is designed to deal with it, they produce a plan that over seven years envisions another 200,000 spaces. If the Canada Assistance Plan arrangements continue over that period of time, without the Government's strategy, we might actually have over 300,000 spaces brought into existence. The existing arrangements could produce more than 50 per cent more than the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been boasting about as being his strategy for child care.

Those are the reasons why we in the NDP, recognizing what all concerned about the child care have said, oppose the Bill. One needs a real strategy for providing relief of various sorts just to meet those objectives that Conservatives like to talk about so often but which they have done nothing about. Obviously we need a plan that uses money far more carefully, does not squander it in tax expenditures but creates the spaces. We New Democrats think it should be possible to add 50,000 spaces a year to achieve in only four years what the Minister is going to be proud of doing over a seven year period. That is what the people of Canada have to contemplate, a program that will really meet the need and do it in a far more imaginative and creative way than the Minister has laid before this country.

[Translation]

Ms. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the second time on this legislation because of my conviction this is one of the most important pieces of legislation, Bill C-144, and also because the majority of Canadian and Quebec families feel this is one of the most significant pieces of legislation that is now before us.

Of course, the more I look at it, the more its flaws stand out. One of the most apparent flaws in the Bill has been the perception that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in July added $1 billion because people thought the Minister was adding more money in order to get still more child care spaces. And when we know that in fact, he was adding that kind of money to make the program he tabled in December complete because there had been an error—the original additions were wrong.

So at the start, the expectations were very high and if you look at the legislation, you realize as the majority of people do, and we have been hearing this for a number of days, that over one million children have no child care places. Currently, the Government is offering to create only 200,000 spaces over seven years.

In 1988, we currently have 240,000 licensed day care or unlicensed home care spaces. That the Government is adding 200,000 new spaces over seven years will not help solve the problem in my view, because after seven years we will end up with twice as big a gap as before. And above all, those new spaces will not be created with low- and middle-income family children as a priority.

As we know—and this has been substantiated by a number of studies—a child from a low-income, less educated family that is put into a good day care centre will be motivated, will go to school without being side-tracked, and probably will also be taken off the social welfare ghetto. Therefore, child care is also preventive care.

Currently, the priority that used to be with low- and middle-income families is removed by the legislation. Of course, once that priority is removed it will be a matter of first come, first served.

My concern is that a number of companies intend to set up commercial child care centres, and what can come out of that? We will end up with child care chains, as we have McDonald chains—commercial child care centre chains. We know that currently, proposals to that effect have been submitted to provincial Governments.

And when we know, looking at the legislation, that no quality standards are required from provinces, I am somewhat amazed because when we set up health care, objectives were established. In this case no objectives exist, although this is an important piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker.

Looking at senior citizens, we realize that currently, according to their financial means, they either have good senior homes or they have homes where they are ill-treated, where the food is bad and where our senior citizens lead a very sad life.

With such a Bill which does not set any standards, we run the risk of having two kinds of day care centres, one for the children of affluent families, and one of poor quality for the children of have-not families. Because no priority is given to low and middle income families, we will be faced again with the same situation as with our senior citizens. As for standards, I insist again that they should be written in the Bill, in the agreement between the Federal and Provincial Governments, because the quality of services may vary from one day care centre to the next in the very same province. I suggest that the Bill should provide for standards because of the money the federal Government is investing in this day care project.

However, glances at this new Bill realizes its significant lack of flexibility. The Government has stated that it wants to create 200,000 spaces over the next seven years. Yet, if you read this Bill carefully, you will realize that part of the money which was not spent on any given year cannot be spent the following year. I choose a number arbitrarily. Suppose, for instance, that a province which had agreed to create 200 day care spaces the first year, could create only 150 and told the federal Government: "Next year, I am going to create 250, because the program will operate better . . . ". They will not be able to use us the second year that part of the money which was not spent during the first year, with the result that at the end of seven years, the objective of 200,000 day care spaces might very well not be met. I suggest, therefore, that the federal Government should demonstrate more flexibility, consistent with the provinces' wishes.

I wish to emphasize the fact that this Bill is quite silent about latchkey children. I was here when the Prime Minister told us how important it was to have programs to fight drug abuse and deliquency which start, when the children are left unattended, right between the ages of 6 and 14. In fact, 57 per cent of all children are left alone and without supervision after school hours. The Province of Quebec was the only province which allowed school principals to keep their facilities open after school hours to offer these children shelter. In fact, clause 2 of this Bill clearly states that there will be cutbacks in education funding, wich means that in a given province, there will be simply 30,000 spaces which will no longer be operational. When I heard the Prime Minister's statement, I felt that the first thing we had to do, as a preventive measure, was to look after these kids, and I just do not see why we could not do it. All the studies and task force reports initiated by both Liberal and Conservative Governments over the years have come up with similar recommendations.

I was a member of the special committee on day care services where representatives of the three political Parties made significant recommendations which the Government did not even consider. Its Bill reflects none of our recommendations. On the contrary, our children are deprived of what they have. After that, what will happen to them? Putting a delinquent child in a foster home costs $40,000 a year. Since the Government realizes that it is a lot of money, we feel that an ounce of prevention would go a long way. It would cost a lot less if we had programs to supervise these children until the age of 14. And it would cost the Government a lot less.

And further on we can see that parental leave has been recommended by a number of commissions. Not a word of this, nothing at all about parental leave. People are being urged to have more children, but the Bill does not even mention parental leave. Like the Rosalie Abella Commission, the Katie Cooke Commission, and the commission made up of Members from all three Parties, we all recommended the same leave extension from 17 to 26 weeks. Instead of maternity leave this would be parental leave so that either parent can remain with the child for 26 weeks after birth. Unfortunately the Government did not see this as a priority and did not even mention it.

Others who have been left out are native children. Indeed, native people made a number of representations when the committee was travelling. They asked for day care centres where, particularly in the case of pre-school children, their culture would not be ignored. Of course, we know they have very particular problems, and there was a time when native children would be taken from their families to be looked after by white non-native people, with the result that they were completely cut off from their own cultural environment.

Mr. Speaker, nor has there been a word about day care centres in the workplace, yet we know the absenteeism rate would be reduced to a minimum and both parents would be able to look after the child. We know that in some provinces, particularly in certain cities in Nova Scotia where the fishing industry is a major employer, both parents have to work during the summer and some of them came to tell the committee that their 11-year-old child had to look after a 2-year-old infant because there is no day care centre. They cannot even get someone to look after them at home. Nothing was said about that either. I am sure you have heard of companies—Lavalin, Bell Canada, Canadian National Bank, to name a few—providing day care centres at work. Why did the federal Government not think of allowing tax deductions for day care facilities in the workplace? I think that is another very important aspect which the new Bill has missed completely.

• (2130)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): I regret to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Two minutes then. I simply want to say that when I ran in 1984 my platform was day care centres and the environment. I will just have to run on the same platform at the next election because I feel that the Conservative Government simply fails to meet the needs of Canadian families with this Bill.

[English]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): It may seem odd to you, Mr. Speaker, and to other Members of this House that I should have appeared this evening to speak to Bill C-144, but I simply could not resist the temptation. It is well known that I have had major objections to the constitutional proposal, and the Meech Lake Accord, which Members of this House have supported in vast numbers and which is designed to limit the federal spending power in areas of provincial jurisdiction. It seems to me that I should get into this debate about child care. The federal Government, through its taxing and spending power, has the opportunity to establish effective standards and criteria to ensure that child care becomes a reality and responds to the needs to which so many Members of this House have spoken.

I have heard people like my colleague from Saint-Denis and others who would not be expected normally to be involved in these issues recognize the significance of child care, as we all do.

However, some Members are indulging in what I would call intellectual schizophrenia. On the one hand, they support the Meech Lake Accord which tells us that the federal Government will no longer have a role to play in establishing national standards attached to the spending power. On the other hand, they say that we should be telling the provinces that they should be applying standards which meet the demand of Canadian families. Sadly, we cannot have it both ways.

It is perfectly clear to me, as I look at Bill C-144 and at the position taken by the Conservatives, that this is very much in the spirit of Meech Lake. I thought I might have to wait many years to turn to Members of this House with whom I have had many arguments and be able to say: "Obviously, I was right". I did not realize it would be handed to me immediately with Bill C-144.

Bill C-144 is totally in keeping with the spirit of Meech Lake. The federal Government is to tax. The federal Government is to state broad objectives. The federal Government is going to leave it to the provinces to meet the needs of Canadians. It may be different in every province. There will be no national vision. There is a total absence of a national will, about which our former Prime Minister spoke both before the joint committee of the two Houses and the Senate. There is a total absence of a national will to establish effective criteria from coast to coast to ensure that the obvious child care needs of Canadian families are met. This is the spirit of Meech Lake.

I raise this because Meech Lake is not yet a reality. A Senator from the other place said: "This is a seamless web and, if one pulls on one of the strands, the whole thing will unravel". That may be his view, but it should not be the view of Canadians who witness this debate and see for the first time that the federal power, the right in fact of Members of this House of Commons to discuss the social needs of Canadians, is going to become totally academic. Almost no aspect of Canadian life which touches individuals on a daily basis is not within the exclusive jurisdiction under the existing Constitution and by virtue of the judicial interpretation that has been given to that Constitution over many, many years.

Education is totally within provincial jurisdiction. Child care is totally within provincial jurisdiction. The granting councils of which we are so proud that do matching grants with the provinces are totally within provincial jurisdiction. It is only the spending power of the federal Government which has permitted the Government of Canada to establish standards and to provide funds that have protected Canadians, that have helped Canadians, that have reached down to Canadian individuals and provided that balance which is so essential in a federation. However, all of a sudden we are looking at a child care Bill, and we are all concerned. We are transferring billions of dollars to the provinces and as long as it meets some vaguely defined national objectives, agreements yet to be established, we will be satisfied. Well, I am not satisfied, and from the debate in this House I do not think Members are satisfied, either.

I know that Canadians would not be satisfied if they realized the extent to which our capacity as a Government, a federal Government, and this place, to reach into the households of Canadians to help them where they need help with some kind of national standards, is being gutted and destroyed by the constitutional amendment which is moving like a Juggernaut through the process at the present time.

I think it is fortunate that this debate has arisen because we should recognize that we cannot have it both ways. We are going to have a country where we will tax and they will spend, where we will make suggestions but they will decide what the national objectives are to be and what standards are to be applied, and I should say apropos that:

• (2140)

[Translation]

In the speech he made at the National Assembly, Mr. Robert Bourassa, the Premier of Québec, said without hesitation that national objectives will be set in consultation with the provinces.

[English]

He made it perfectly clear. He hid nothing.

Why are we deluding ourselves? Mr. Bourassa believes that national objectives will not be established in this place. The program will be established by the Parliament of Canada out of the provisions of the Meech Lake Accord, after the provinces have decided what those national objectives are to be. That is the way of the future. Let us not fool ourselves. I think it is wrong.

Many here may think it is right, and I know many who do. That is a legitimate decision and I accept that. If Canadians from coast to coast want the provinces to assume entire exclusive jurisdiction in all matters that affect the daily lives of Canadians in terms of education, research, health, unemployment insurance which never would have been under federal jurisdiction had Meech Lake been in effect in 1940, then they are entitled to it if they want that. However, my concern is that they are unaware of the implications of the constitutional amendment.

This particular legislation with which we are dealing underlines those implications. There are many others. Those who wish to challenge my interpretation of Meech Lake on this subject are perfectly free to do so. However, I can assure you that there are many authorities who would support me, including the Premier of the Province of Quebec himself, according to his words, and others with whom I have had conversations at the provincial level regarding Meech Lake.

Let us go into this with our eyes open. Either we accept that this is the way of the future or, for those who say I am wrong, let us urge the Government once again to make a reference to the Supreme Court to find out what the full implications of the limitations on the federal spending power are—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter this debate. While my children are well beyond the stage when we might be using child care facilities, I have grandchildren on the way.

I have listened to members of the opposition Parties criticize the Government's proposal. It is a proposal that will increase the amount of spending for child care from some $170 million a year to $800 million a year. That is a significant increase in spending in this particular area.

The New Democratic Party suggests a program that would be almost like another school system, providing a place for every child up to the age of 14, including latchkey children. While I agree that it is a major problem, it appears from their approach that New Democrats do not want parents to make their own decisions about how their children are handled. Perhaps they believe that every child must attend in order to be properly developed.

I have great confidence in the ability of parents to decide. I do not want a Government that implements a system in the belief that every child should go to day care and should not stay in a home environment.

Our Party has already done a great deal in the area of child care. For instance, we have increased the refundable child tax credit to parents. This is paid before Christmas, an important time of the year.

Another benefit is the great economic turn-around we have achieved since we became the Government in September, 1984. I am sure the Opposition will want to be reminded that 1.25 million jobs have been created in that time. I remind them that some 800,000 less people are on the poverty list. I remind them of the great confidence Canadians have in Canada, and their willingness to invest and proceed to plan for a strong future. This Bill caps off what we have accomplished in those four years.

One Member suggested that we should push standards on the provinces and that there should not be any services that do not have national standards.

I am a graduate of a university on which Governments have spent moneys for its support. No federal standards were applied to my education, nor to that of doctors or of nurses. There are no standards in the Canada Health Act under which we spend a lot of money. This legislation is no change. It is an example of programs that have been put into our system for many years.

The Liberal Party has proposed alternatives to the Bill but has not really suggested how it would derive the funds or encourage the provinces to co-operate. It has not said how much money it they would have to pay the provinces to produce more of these day care spaces.

I am sure that my colleagues in the Opposition are very eager to have this Bill go to committee where it can be studied properly. Therefore, in accordance with Standing Order 9, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon):

> That this House continue to sit beyond the normal hour of adjournment for the purpose of completion of second reading stage of Bill C-144.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair must rule the motion out of order. The reason is that the mover of the motion said at the end of the motion: "for the purpose of completion of second reading". That is what the Chair finds out of order. He may propose the continuation but not the completion.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member from Saint-Denis (M. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I submit to you with the utmost respect and to the House Leader in a friendly manner that if he has something to say, he should remain in his seat. The same thing goes for the distinguished Parliamentary Secretary. If he has recommendations to make to the Chairman, who knows quite well how to run things, he should know that under our Standing Orders require he should remain in his seat.He has no instruction to give to the Speaker who at this time might want to make a ruling. This applies particularly to the House Leader who has no business going up to the Speaker in order to influence his decision. If he has representations to make, he should make them from his seat. I repeat, I say this in a friendly manner.

Now, since the Hon. Member who spoke before me did not present his motion as he should have, I submit to you respectfully that the Hon. Member who rose now has the right to speak since the Hon. Member who made the proposal, which by the way is not in order, has lost his right to vote by out talking. Any Hon. Member who would like to speak now should be recognized.

• (2150)

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Surely to goodness it is appropriate that the Speaker recognize the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) who wishes to speak without the intervention of the Government Minister attempting to tell the Table what to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will decide who the Chair recognizes. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 9, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member from Haileybury:

> That this House continue to sit beyond the normal hour of adjournment for the purpose of consideration of the second reading stage of Bill C-144.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It was moved by Mr. O'Neil, seconded by Mr. Gagnon, in accordance with Standing Order 9:

> That this House continue to sit beyond the normal hour of adjournment for the purposes of consideration of the second reading stage of Bill C-144.

That motion is in order. Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places.

And fewer than 15 Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Fewer than 15 Members having risen, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b) the motion is adopted.

Motion (Mr. O'Neil) agreed to.

Mr. Gagnon: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Calgary North on a point of order.

Mr. Gagnon: Can you repeat who the seconder was, please?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yourself.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I think you should check with the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well.

Is the House ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, I strongly recommend that my colleagues from both parties leave the House to protest this mockery of the Standing Orders.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to my hon. colleague. I think this is perfectly within the rules. It is an obligation on the part of the Government. What we are dealing with here is the case of children. There has been ample time to debate at second reading. It is time for it to go to committee where there can be consideration of all of the details of the program. If there are problems and flaws, they can be corrected.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, it is the middle of the summer. We have put up with so much stalling for so many months. That is why the rule is there. That is why we have moved the rule.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Regina East.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, certainly my impulse is to walk out in protest at the abuse, I feel, of the parliamentary tradition and what this House is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Go ahead.

An Hon. Member: No one will miss you.

Mr. de Jong: Rather, Mr. Speaker, we hear the jackasses braying across the way on an extremely important matter. We have seen a cabinet Minister address and scold the Chair not from his proper place. We have seen a Member stand up and move a motion which was ruled out of order. I was standing in my place. I was not recognized. Instead, another government Member was recognized in order to repeat the motion in a proper form.

I suggest that what is happening with the institution of Parliament and particularly what is happening tonight shows how the erosion of this institution has occurred particularly during these past summer months. The rule book has been torn up because the Government insisted that Parliament sit through the summer. Normally, Parliament would not have sat through the summer because none of the pieces of legislation can surely be considered as crucial. Normally, the rule book would have allowed Parliament to be called back in cases of emergencies. The Government is now insisting that we deal with this legislation tonight. We see this continual erosion of what Parliament is all about. I suggest that it is not surprising coming from the Tories.

We are dealing with an extremely important piece of legislation. It is the child care legislation. I have been a single parent, one of the few male single parents I must say who has had to deal with carrying on with my employment as well as ensuring that there was proper care given to my twin boys when they were younger. I had to deal with the various types of day care that were available to me. I have had my children in private day care, the name of which I picked up from a laundromat. I have had to wait several months before my children could gain access to a co-operative, non-profit day care centre where there was some quality of day care. I had to be concerned with what happens to my children while I had to be off earning an income.

What I experienced as a parent, a single parent, is repeated by hundreds and thousands of parents across the country. We are raising a generation of children whose life patterns and life training is so radically different from anything that has preceded it. Statistics show that some 60 per cent of families in the workforce have two income earners in them, whereas in 1976 that figure was only 30 per cent. We have seen the social and economic and industrial changes all the way starting from the industrial age and that broke up the traditional tribe and the traditional grouping in which children were raised in a sense of community.

We have seen the progression to where, now, even the nuclear family is in many ways threatened. Vast numbers of children are being raised in a single parent situation. As well, those families where there are still two parents in many, many cases, both incomes are needed in order to put the basic roof over their heads and food on the table.

It used to be that one income earner was enough to be able to afford the mortgage and to be able to put food on the table, but in this day and age it is necessary—it is essential—for vast numbers of Canadian families that there be two income earners. If there were only one income earner, hundreds of thousands of families would slip below the poverty line. It is not an easy life. It is not an easy life for working parents. Many of them work in hard jobs where they are on their feet. Very often they work boring, long, gruelling hours, then they must go home and prepare supper for their children, and be able to provide the love and attention and the warmth, the type of emotional nourishment that a child so desperately needs. It is not an easy life.

I am afraid that we are raising thousands of children who will not have had the opportunity to experience the human love and warmth that is so essential for the growth of a human being. I warn that as a country we will pay the price. The lack of the experience of human love creates psychotic behaviour. A psychopath is a person who has not had the experience of human love, and who does not know the difference between right and wrong. They have never had an opportunity to learn that. A human tragedy is in the making. Thousands and thousands of our children are dropped off at centres where there is no licensing and no guarantee of any quality care whatsoever.

I am sure many people who provide private day care facilities are well meaning. I have met many who love the children. Very often there are a dozen or so children in a home and one person cannot deal with all the emotional needs of those 12 children for a working day. It is too much to expect from individual people. That is why it is so essential that we provide quality day care in order that those parents who, through economic necessity have to go out and earn an income, at least know the children are being looked after by caring and qualified people, that the children will not be physically, emotionally, sexually abused or mishandled, and that there is a guarantee that the children will receive quality care while the parents are at work.

I find it unfortunate the manner in which the Government has dealt with this legislation tonight and the very legislation itself. Surely the Government must recognize the need. At least politically perhaps it recognized the need because perhaps the polls indicated it, but the Government's approach to the problem certainly shows that it does not understand what is needed out there. The Government does not understand the terrible hardships that both parents and children are going through. If the Government understood the problem, we would not get this type of legislation in front of us, we would not hear the type of speeches we have heard from government Members, and we would not hear the jackasses braying as they have done tonight.

A society shall be judged on how it treats its old and its young. The Government will be judged on how it treats its old and its young. This is the Government that tried to deindex old age pensions. This is the Government that is passing off a phoney piece of legislation as child care legislation. This is a Government that dares to introduce a motion and suggest that it is doing all those grandiose things for children, while at the same time it actually reduces the number of child care spaces that it will be providing. Under this legislation it will take some seven years to double the number of day care facilities and spaces available. Under the existing system it would take five years to double the number of spaces.

It is with cynicism that the Government has approached a very serious problem that is facing us in a post-industrial society. I believe that Members of the Conservative Party in their Conservative thinking feel that we must revert to a traditional society. Even if that could be so, out of choice many of them would question that.

The reality is that most people, not out of conscious choice but out of necessity, find themselves in that situation today because of the social and economic forces of the industrial society. Those same forces started with the industrial revolution, and broke up the community and the tribe. It sent families to live in isolation from each other. It has further eroded families so that aunts and uncles are now spread from coast to coast, and there is not the familial support system that would allow children to be raised in warmth and love from the family. A vacuum has been created in society that must be filled by our collective society as a whole. Unfortunately, what we have in front of us today not only fails to do so, but in a cynical way attempts to take political advantage of the tremendous need that Canadians have, and pretends to do something about a problem, whereas in reality it is doing a disservice rather than a service to the children of our nation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Epp (Provencher), seconded by Mr. Wise, moved that Bill C-144, an Act to authorize payments by Canada toward the provision of child care services, and to amend the Canada Assistance Plan in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Canada Child Care Act

Mrs. Martin, seconded by Mrs. Sparrow, moved:

That this question be now put.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

During the ringing of the bells:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have been asked by the Acting Whip of the Official Opposition to defer the vote until tomorrow at 3 p.m., and the request has been granted.

It being 10.10 p.m. the House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 10.10 p.m.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF TREMBLAY-BRASSARD COUPLE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, last night a big family party was held in Lafontaine Park to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the Tremblay-Brassard team. As reported by Jocelyne Lepage in today's La Presse, the family turned out in large numbers and brought together the whole Quebec theatre community.

Mr. Speaker, it must be said that the play Les belles-soeurs, first presented 20 years ago, in August 1968, marked a major turning point in the history of Quebec theatre. It was a decisive turning point, as actress Rita Lafontaine said, and she added, "We did not know it would become such a historic monument."

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that when Les belles-soeurs came out, many of us were shocked by the language. But since then, that play and all the plays by Tremblay and Brassard are part of our culture and our heritage.

So I say to them, "Congratulations and thanks!" Many of us will go to the Outremont Theatre on September 6 to see Le vrai monde.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION PROGRAM—EXPANSION OF CROP COVERAGE

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, following final passage of amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Program, I wish to recognize the successful efforts of the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) and many members of our western caucus. The stabilization program changes will expand and improve the safety net for prairie farmers by adding nine new crops to the list of eligible crops, by authorizing a $750 million debt write-down, and by increasing the level of payments for rejoiners, new farmers and conditional participants.

Under the new legislation a producer joining the program will now receive a 70 per cent payment. Next year it will increase to 85 per cent. The stabilization program is an important source of income support for western producers. This Government has provided comprehensive, long-term support and leadership in this type of income program.

I want to recognize the efforts of all Members in acknowledging the hard work that this Government has put in on prairie agriculture and the fact that we have worked with and stood beside the farm families of western Canada in a time of need.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONDITIONS IN NORTHERN ONTARIO COMMUNITIES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I recently received a letter from the newly elected Grand Chief of the Nishnawbe Aski Nation, Mr. Bentley Cheechoo. This letter details some $11.4 billion in government expenditures proposed for the Defence Department. Grand Chief Cheechoo then points out that the 44 Nishnawbe-Aski communities across northern Ontario are forced to live in inadequate housing, with unhealthy water supplies and unsanitary sewage disposal. That is the situation for the "lucky" communities formally recognized by the Department of Indian Affairs.

For the six so-called new bands in the region, they cannot even get funding for schools, housing, or community infrastructure of any kind, which has led to scores of children receiving no schooling for the last two years.

To quote Grand Chief Cheechoo: "This is a national disgrace and the priorities of the federal Government should be realigned to demonstrate a caring and concern for those citizens in the greatest need . . . " In the meantime, in spite of the Government's declared $40 million for family violence initiatives, four communities, three of which belong to Grand Council Treaty 3, have had funding for their highly successful crisis intervention programs summarily terminated.

Quoting Grand Chief Cheechoo again: "The best defence is a healthy, educated and informed population capable of handling international relations without the need to resort to war and weaponry".

The Government would be well advised to heed that advice.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ARBITRATION AS DISPUTE SETTLING MECHANISM

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the notion of arbitration is not a new concept for dispute settlement. Many societies, since the earliest of recorded times, have used this procedure as a quick and less costly dispute resolution mechanism. For example, the Hebrew Law of Judges required a judge to ask litigants at the outset of a trial whether they would submit to arbitration to settle their dispute.

Here in Canada arbitration has been recognized as a legitimate and significant part of our legal system. Every province and territory in Canada has an Arbitration Act, and the Parliament of Canada has approved legislation such as the Commercial Arbitration Act which permits the use of binding arbitration as a dispute settling mechanism.

I strongly urge the federal Government and those under federal jurisdiction to consider sourcing the Arbitrators Institute of Canada in all matters where a satisfactory resolution can be achieved through arbitration.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—DISPOSAL OF GARBAGE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it may come as some surprise to the Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock), but garbage stinks. When I was travelling in my riding on Monday night, in the neighbourhood of Swaru, it became increasingly clear to me that the people of Hamilton are very prepared to deal with their own garbage. They do not want to deal with garbage from other municipalities.

• (1410)

The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North, instead of trying to place the garbage problem on the shoulders of other municipalities, in what I consider to be a form of garbage blackmail, should place the blame for the situation squarely where it belongs, that is on the federal Government, the federal Department of Transport and, in fact, the Minister who continued, over our loud objections, to license international airlines to fly into Pearson International Airport knowing full well that he did not have the facilities to deal with garbage.

We in the Liberal Party believe in one principle. We should be responsible for the garbage that we create.

I would like to ask the federal Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) why he does not ask the airlines to take the garbage back—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) had the floor. I would ask that she be allowed to continue her remarks. Perhaps the Hon. Member could finish off her remarks.

Ms. Copps: We believe it is a problem created by the federal Tories. It is one they have to clean up and we do not intend to be responsible for the garbage at Toronto International Airport, Mr. Speaker.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

OPPORTUNITY TO INCREASE PROTECTIVE MEASURES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, after La Tabatière and Smithville, we again have another PCB alert. A serious fire in a PCB storage facility last night required the evacuation of more than 3,000 residents of Saint-Basile-le-Grand on the south shore of Montreal.

It was total confusion this morning. It is only after a disaster that Governments seem to become aware of the seriousness of the PCB situation in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, where is public safety? Today, we have had enough; we must all know where PCB's are stored in Quebec and Governments must require that existing storage sites be guarded 24 hours a day.

Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why, in 1988, people's health should be threatened.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

FUNDING OF ABORIGINAL FRIENDSHIP CENTRES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, a committee of the Canadian Bar Association has brought to the attention of all Canadians just how badly our justice system deals with aboriginal peoples. Extreme poverty, high unemployment, poor housing, and cultural conflict all combine to bring, in far too many cases, aboriginal people in urban settings into confrontation with the law. One of the few agencies trying to prevent and respond to this crisis in the cities is the Aboriginal Friendship Centre.

These centres are doing a most commendable job under extremely difficult circumstances. The Government, however, is making their work even more difficult. Five months into this fiscal year, the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) has yet to finalize their funding arrangements. This financial uncertainty is placing the centres under great stress and must not be allowed to continue.

I urge the new Secretary of State to turn his attention to this situation without delay and clarify the funding question immediately.

CHILD CARE

WHITEHORSE—INCLUSION OF FACILITIES IN NEW FEDERAL BUILDING URGED

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Government has said it has a serious commitment to creating quality child care and claims to be making advances in that direction. In the Yukon this issue is very close to our hearts. We have a very young population. Not only do we have the second highest birth rate in Canada but we also have the highest percentage of working mothers.

There is a golden opportunity for the Government to demonstrate that it is willing to be innovative in creating solutions to the child care crisis. The new federal building being constructed in Whitehorse will house federal government offices as well as provide office space for private business. Employees have been unsuccessfully petitioning the Government to include child care space in that new building for well over a year. Numerous studies have shown that in the workplace child care facilities help to reduce employee absenteeism and generally improve the health and happiness of the employees and their children.

I strongly urge the Government to ensure that child care space is made available in this new federal building. It can only make the quality of life better for everyone.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

GROSSE ISLE, MAN.—SUPPORT FOR NEW RETAIL POSTAL OUTLET

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, last night about 90 concerned residents of Grosse Isle, Manitoba, gathered in the community hall to discuss proposed changes to postal services in their community. The current postmaster is soon to leave the village.

The residents listened to Canada Post officials describe the options. They heard that they would be offered a retail postal outlet in their community. They heard that there would return all of the current postal services available to them. They heard that they would be able to choose postal lock boxes if they desired, that their addresses would not change, and that delivery would be the same as always. They heard that the new postal outlet would be open for a full 70 hours a week compared to the 21 hours it is now open.

• (1415)

They liked what they heard. With a unanimous show of hands, the residents of Gross Isle gave Canada Post Corporation the authority to implement a retail postal outlet prior to the end of the 90-day consultation period.

Gross Isle residents are joining the majority of rural Canadians who know that our Government has a commitment to improve postal service, and do not listen to the fears of NDP Members.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, on August 23, 1988, yesterday to be exact, votes on report stage of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal took place. Some Members of Parliament were present, others were absent. That is not unusual, but one Member of Parliament was conspicuous by his absence.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Rodriguez: There was one Member of Parliament who said he would use any means to fight the trade deal. He would fight it in the Commons, he would fight it in the streets, he would fight it in the Senate, but when the opportunity arose to strike down this deal in the Commons, where was John?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The question of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt will rest eternally in the annals of Hansard.

FREE TRADE

THE POWER OF BOB WHITE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, almost all the socialists, except one, were here in the House to take a negative stand—to vote against free trade. Their chief fund-raiser Bob White, leader of the United Auto Workers' union and vice-president of the socialist party, must be strong! He must have a lot of clout! With the socialists, as we saw yesterday, money talks—it gives the orders. Bob White's money comes from the free trade in automobiles that has been going on between Canada and the United States for 23 years. The money comes from the union dues paid by the 840,000 Canadians who already benefit from free trade. The socialists have forgotten that 12 million other Canadians want to share in it too. That is why we have free trade. All Canadian workers should enjoy a better life, not only the auto workers of Bob White and Broadbent, Mr. Speaker!

HOUSING

CALL FOR FEDERAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, a coalition of representatives from Canadian housing groups today visited the three political caucuses in Ottawa and outlined in startling terms how the federal Government is abdicating its federal responsibility for the provision of affordable housing for all Canadians.

Over 500,000 people across Canada do not have adequate housing. Over 100,000 people do not have any housing at all and are forced to live on the streets, in shelters, and in church basements.

The Government now provides 19,000 units of non-profit housing in all of Canada when estimates show that approximately 14,000 units are needed in the metropolitan area of Toronto alone. In the urban centres the Government is not releasing federal surplus lands to ease the pressure on housing and on the cost of land. There is no RHOSP-like program to encourage first-time home buyers among young married couples. There are no municipal incentives to encourage developments that facilitate progressive housing policies.

It is time that the federal Government picked up its federal responsibilities in the area of housing and delivered, because there is a social cost of not doing so.

PARLIAMENT HILL

DEMONSTRATORS' EPITHETS

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, freedom is great and we in Canada enjoy that freedom. As an example, there have been two characters parading just outside this House yelling at MPs for the past few weeks. I am sure you have noticed them, Mr. Speaker, wearing a U.S. flag as a cape and a plastic pig nose, hurling insults at one and all.

Yesterday, one called me a Fascist, yes, a Fascist. Then he asked me what my name was. How he could deduce that I was a Fascist without knowing my name, let alone my beliefs, is totally astounding. Obviously he is one of the many on Parliament Hill who do not let the facts confuse their convictions.

Yes, Canada's freedom is great. Even to the extent of allowing an individual to make a complete ass of himself.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

BLAIS-GRENIER AFFAIR—PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is of course directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Mr. Speaker, the fratricidal battle in the Conservative ranks rages on!

Yesterday in the House, the Right Hon. Prime Minister said in referring to the call made by his chief of staff to the Hon. Member for Rosemont, and I quote at page 18697 in Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, there was no threat.

The Deputy Prime Minister himself told me that the purpose of the conversation was to remind the Hon. Member of her duty to hand over any evidence she might have to the police.

Mr. Speaker, this morning we read in the press that this was not the interpretation put on the matter by the Hon. Member for Rosemont, since she said, and I quote:

[English]

> Mr. White said if I don't issue a public retraction I'll be expelled from the caucus.

[Translation]

And the Hon. Member for Rosemont went on to say at her press conference: "The Prime Minister's chief of staff asked me whether what I told the press was accurate. I said yes, but just the same he asked me to state publicly I had been misquoted."

My question for the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Does he maintain that the Prime Minister's chief of staff, Mr. Peter White, simply called to get some information? Does he still maintain no threats were made? Does he still maintain it was simply a courtesy call, considering the circumstances?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I want to make something very clear here before we go any further. The question is in order and I want Hon. Members and others who are watching to know why.

The question is addressed to responses made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister yesterday. It might otherwise not be in order. However, it is in order and I want Hon. Members to co-operate with the Chair in my ruling. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think that question was answered yesterday. As I indicated, and as the Prime Minister indicated, the Principal Secretary did call the Hon. Member. That was before he was made aware of the fact there was a police interview. I was advised about that interview before entering Question Period. If I recall correctly, that was somewhere between ten and eleven o'clock in the morning. My understanding is that the call took place at roughly 8.45 or nine o'clock in the morning.

The thrust of it was whether in fact she was accurately quoted when she said there exists a system of kick-backs on contracts. If she was not quoted properly, she should seek a withdrawal. If she was quoted properly, then she had a responsibility to report it to the RCMP and to substantiate the allegations. If that were not the case, then it would be very embarrassing to all Members to make an allegation without foundation, and particularly would cast a very bad reflection on the Quebec members of caucus. I assume that he indicated clearly that the Quebec caucus would want to deal with that.

Surely the Hon. Member would not want any Member to allege with a broad brush incidents of wrongdoing without having some evidence, or some statements or some concrete proof to back it up. I think that is really what was done, and that was explained to her.

REQUEST THAT PETER WHITE APPEAR BEFORE PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in response to one of my questions, the Prime Minister said in referring to the Hon. Member for Rosemont:

> The same person who said that she had no evidence for the accusations made against people's reputations has no evidence for such a statement.

This was a reference to the allegation that threats had been made by Mr. Peter White. This morning we read in the press that the Hon. Member for Rosemont recorded her conversation with Mr. White. If the Deputy Prime Minister is sure of the facts he gave the House this morning, considering that another Member contradicts those facts and, in fact, did so several times yesterday during her press conference, is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to appear and to have Mr. White appear before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, to see whether there was any attempt at arm twisting and to find out whether all the rules of ethics were followed? Mr. Speaker, my question is quite simple: Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to have Mr. White appear before the Committee, at which time we could listen to the conversation on the recording made by the Hon. Member for Rosemont, which would certainly be a practical way to get at the truth?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a recording of the conversation. If the Hon. Member has, that is fine. He says he has it. I do not know whether it is appropriate and proper for any individual to record a conversation which takes place between two individuals on a telephone. That may very well be a legal question.

It is quite obvious that the Hon. Member would rather believe the Hon. Member for Rosemont whose allegations have been unfounded, who has been discredited, and who still wishes to stick to her original allegation without providing proof or evidence. The police have looked into this and found that there was absolutely no evidence.

As a matter of fact, it is rather strange that she has also charged that public servants, lobbyists, and Ministers and members of former Governments are involved in this. Is the Hon. Member of such certainty right now that he confirms that the Government of which he was a member was involved in wrongdoing? If he is accepting her word, that is precisely what he is accepting, the fact that former Governments were involved in kickbacks and wrongdoing. He may want to come clean and give us his evidence about past Governments.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister should listen to his own rhetoric and look at his own contradictions. We asked for a royal commission of inquiry on the whole patronage issue, including past allegations. We in the Liberal Party are not afraid of a royal commission of inquiry.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my third question for the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Since the Hon. Member for Rosemont claims that . . . She said the same thing happened to another colleague, in referring to threats of expulsion, and she said: "I am not unduly surprised or troubled", did, for instance, the Hon. Member for Duvernay or the Hon. Member for LaSalle get the same kind of courtesy call from the Prime Minister's principal secretary? Did Mr. White, for instance, translate the English word "prison" for the Hon. Member for Duvernay? Was this approach used in the case of all three Members who were visited by the RCMP, prior to those visits? What was the attitude of the Prime Minister's chief of staff? Is that the way you deal with your problems, trying to put out the fire before the RCMP gets there and the investigation is finished?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Minister to wait for a moment. I am not going to stop the Hon. Minister from responding if he wishes. However, I do want it clearly understood that as long as I am Speaker questions on matters of great importance to this country will be asked in this chamber. I am, however, bound by the rules. As I clearly indicated, the Hon. Member's first two questions were completely in accord with the rules. His last question is getting once again into an area which may go well beyond the administration of government. I will certainly hear the Hon. Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that which has been circulating in the last couple of days is pretty well described by Mr. Bill Johnson of The Gazette when he wrote: "We have not often seen her likes before in this country but her style is familiar from a well-known figure in the United States, the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member is the epitome of high morality and high integrity. If that is the case, I wonder why he and his colleagues are so silent about what is going on in the other place with regard to a Senator who happens to be a member of their Party.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ALLEGED CONTRIBUTION OF ELECTIONS PRESIDENT TO CONSERVATIVE MEMBER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my questions are also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Today the Journal de Québec reports that a few days after the Prime Minister apppointed the returning officer for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve, the latter gave $4,000 in cash, without a receipt or acceptable justification, to the Conservative Member for the riding, as part of the money raised at a political fund raising dinner for the Party and the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister aware of this fact? What have they done or what do they intend to do about this?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what this has to do with government business.

Mr. Andre: Nothing.

Ms. Copps: What about ethics?

Mr. Speaker: I listened carefully to the question. I have some doubt as to whether it has anything to do with the administration of government at all, but of course the Hon. Minister is quite entitled to reply if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I can respond to every news story and allegation that is trumpeted by the Liberals and their friends, any acts of wrongdoing, without first obtaining the facts. I do not think credence should be given to any of these stories until they are properly analyzed and until the facts are brought forth.

It is my understanding that in the same article the Member confirmed that the funds in question were in fact deposited in the association account and that receipts were issued. I know as well that the Hon. Member appeared on a radio station talk show this morning, on CJMS, where he denounced the whole story. I am also advised that the Hon. Member will want to clarify this, as the Hon. Member opposite saw fit to do just a few days ago, because he too is not always dead right.

We are not sure whether these allegations are founded. He says they are not. I think he has the right, and deserves the opportunity to make a clarification if he so desires, as a Member of this House.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, other than the statement that the Deputy Prime Minister is making right now, has the Government, the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, or Peter White—have the RCMP been alerted and brought in on this case—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Order, order.

Mr. Kaplan: What steps has the Government taken in the light of this allegation?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Please, please! Order!

[English]

I interrupted the Hon. Member for York Centre two days ago on a number of occasions. I was exercising what I thought was the obligation of the Chair. I interrupted him yesterday. The Hon. Member accepted those interruptions.

The Hon. Member just asked a question which is in order. I would ask Hon. Members to exercise as much self control as they can when we are discussing issues which are as difficult as these issues are for your Speaker.

They involve matters of public importance. They also involve matters of people's reputations. As I have said before on appropriate occasions, I am going to try to conduct the questions in such a way that the Opposition has a right to ask, but that nobody is unduly slandered. It is not an easy line to find in a House of Commons which traditionally has the right of privilege, which is the right to say anything Hon. Members want no matter what the consequences may be.

I am trying to put some rational constraint on that, but I have to say to Hon. Members that the Hon. Member, who has been admonished by the Chair and has accepted that admonition, has just asked a question which in my view can be asked in the House. I would ask Hon. Members to accept that. The Hon. Member for York Centre.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I had concluded my question. To put it again more clearly, and to come right to the heart of it, in the case of the Member for Rosemont the Government indicated that after seeing her statements it called the police, and that Peter White had called. I am asking in connection with this case, nothing more or less, what steps has the Government taken in relation to this apparent—

Mr. McKnight: Apparent what?

Mr. Kaplan: —in relation to this matter? I will leave it at that.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the admonition, I find the Hon. Member's comments rather cheap and sleazy, I must say.

Mr. Nunziata: That describes your Government.

Mr. Mazankowski: To accuse an Hon. Member without the facts, when the Hon. Member has already issued a clarifying statement, and I believe wants to come to the House to respond and clarify the article, surely to accuse the Hon. Member, a fellow Member of the House, as the former Solicitor General has just done, without facts, is not fair, is not just, and it is not in keeping with the traditions and practices of this House.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

EXPLOSION IN PCB WAREHOUSE—REQUEST THAT HOUSE BE INFORMED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Last night, at Saint-Basile-le-Grand, there was a very serious explosion in a storage depot for PBCs, which are very toxic substances. Three thousand people in the region were evacuated. Could the Minister inform the House today about the present situation in the area?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question because it affords me the opportunity both to express to the House the Government's deep-seated concern, which I believe is also shared by the Opposition, about what has happened, and to bring the House up to date.

The fire itself has been extinguished. The clean-up has begun. A sampling has been taken and analytical work is being conducted by the Government of Canada in concert with the Government of Québec.

Water run-off from the fire collected for analysis and treatment and has been studied. As the Hon. Member will know, people have been evacuated. I am assured by my health experts and environmental advisers that the people themselves are not thought to be at risk. The firemen who were on the scene last night were the most vulnerable. We are following the case with a great deal of care and scrutiny.

The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party and the House in general can be assured that everything possible is being done both by the Government of Canada and by the Government of Quebec.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO EVACUEES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is clear there are some serious problems for the evacuees and also for farmers in the area. Does the federal Government intend to provide financial assistance to both evacuees and farmers in the area?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP will know that the Government of Canada is already assisting in a fairly major way, albeit indirectly. For example, the resources of the Department of National Defence have been made available for those people who have had to be evacuated, to ensure that they have a comfortable and secure place to live until they can return to their homes.

There is a federal program under which, in certain circumstances, the province in question, in this case Quebec, can apply to the federal Government for emergency assistance, in which instance there is a formula that either applies or does not, depending upon the extent of the damage and the hardship on the individuals concerned.

• (1440)

I have asked my most senior people to inquire whether there has been any overture from the Province of Quebec in that connection and, if so, whether such assistance would be possible under the relevant program.

Oral Questions

PCB STORAGE SITE LOCATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer. My last question is also directed to the same Minister.

Would he confirm the following information that was given to me this morning when my office checked to see if the federal Government has an inventory of all PCB storage sites in Canada? I was told that there is no such inventory. I want to ask the Minister if it is true that the federal Government is not aware of where these very dangerous substances are being stored.

If there is no such inventory at the present, will the Minister assure us that the federal Government will undertake to obtain the precise location of the storage of such dangerous substances? Once we have that inventory, will the minister also ensure that all such substances have the maximum safety requirements to protect the public?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the NDP probably knows that the storage of PCBs is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. However, because of the strong national interest, and in particular the interest of the federal Government, in the matter, we have provided a lot of leadership through the Canadian Council of Resource and Environmental Ministers, CCREM, both to assess the needs for PCB storage facilities across the country and to arrange for the technology needed for the disposal of the PCB materials themselves.

At present, an installation has been built in Alberta, a site has been chosen in Ontario, and one is in the process of being chosen in Quebec as part of a Canada-wide effort, again with the involvement of the federal Government.

As for an inventory in each province, that is the responsibility of the province concerned. I will take the particular representations of the Leader of the NDP under advisement, and see, together with my colleagues at the provincial level, whether the inventory is complete, and whether there might not be a particular role for the federal Government in that connection, beyond what has already been done, which is significant.

EXPLOSION AT SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND—DESTRUCTION OF PCBS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): My question is also directed to the Minister of the Environment. As was said earlier, more than 3,500 people at Saint-Basile-le-Grand were evacuated yesterday because of a fire in a storage depot containing PBCs. I would like to remind the Minister that on May 31, 1985, at a federal-provincial conference of Environment ministers in Montreal, the federal Government made a commitment to speed up the development of facilities for the destruction of these highly toxic substances. I can inform the Minister that today in Montreal and in the general area, there are 350 storage sites for PBCs similar to the one at Saint-Basile-le-Grand. What does the Minister intend to do to speed up the destruction of PBCs, now that we have seen what happened at Saint-Basile-le-Grand, which may be due to the federal Government's failure to act as it promised in 1985?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Hon. Member, I do not think that this is an occasion for grandstanding. There is no basis upon which to make the sort of charge that she has made.

The federal Government and every one of the provinces, irrespective of political stripe, have been working together hand in glove for many months on the question of PCB storage. It is a most difficult question. It is not an easy one technologically.

For example, it is very difficult to get communities to accept a PCB storage facility. Even given all the restrictions and confinements, much has been done. For example, a major installation has been completed in the Province of Alberta. It is now pretty well on stream. The Ontario Waste Management Corporation has advanced its work within the Province of Ontario. Now Québec has gone a long way to following suit in the context of a Canada-wide effort in which the federal Government is one partner, but only one.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): I would just like to tell the Minister that I got my information from a press release issued by the Department of the Environment in May 1985.

I would also like to know from the Minister what the federal Government intends to do for the 3,500 people whose health was endangered last night and who were forced from their homes. What does the federal Government intend to do as well to help people if Saint-Basile-le-Grand and the neighboring towns are contaminated? What will you do for the health of the people who have been contaminated?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we will do what we have been doing. We have been treating it as a prime priority. It was the Government of Canada that was on site within minutes of the accident, of the fire, and of the explosion. It was the Department of National Defence that provided the equipment and the foam to make it possible to extinguish the fire in the first place. There were several Departments, including my own, that made it possible, in concert with the Quebec Government, to evacuate the people, to monitor the situation, to provide up-to-date reports on the situation, and to keep everybody fully informed with every relevant piece of information.

The two Governments—that of Quebec and the Government of Canada—could not be acting more harmoniously than they now are to ensure that the interests of the people who have been so disadvantaged in this case are uppermost in the minds of Government and of the public of Canada in general.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS—ALLEGED TELEPHONE CONVERSATION RECORDED BY MEMBER FOR ROSEMONT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the contradiction between the version of the Hon. Member for Rosemont and Mr. Peter White of the Prime Minister's Office regarding the conversation that took place last Friday. Mr. Speaker, the Member said, and I quote, "He then ordered me to retract or to resign, and when I refused, he told me that I would be expelled from the caucus by my fellow Members."

Mr. Speaker, my question is: Since this conversation was recorded by Mrs. Blais-Grenier, the Member for Rosemont, would the Deputy Prime Minister be prepared to ask Peter White to agree to make the tape recording of this conversation public so that everyone can know exactly what the Prime Minister's representative said?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that Mr. White is not in the habit of recording conversations that go on between him and anyone else. I note that the Hon. Member is being prompted by the Member for Shefford. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member who has put the question has enough talent to rely on rather than relying upon an expert in patronage and the kind of allegations that he would refer to.

An Hon. Member: That's out of order.

Mr. Benjamin: You can do better than that.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Not from a Deputy Prime Minister, surely.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Burnaby would put his second question.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, given the record of this Government in the last four years, that Minister is the last person to speak about someone being an expert—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: There are many different ways in this place to say things that one would not otherwise say. I hope that Hon. Members understand that the Chair is also pretty acute when it comes to these matters.

I know the Hon. Member has a serious question, and I would ask him to put his question.

ALLEGATIONS OF MEMBER FOR LASALLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. The first question has still not been answered, but I will try again! Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether or not the RCMP has concluded its investigation into the allegations made by Mr. Lanthier, the Member for LaSalle, concerning the crumbs that fall from the table, the funds used for just what purpose we do not know; has the RCMP completed its investigation into these very serious allegations and if so, what was the result of this investigation?

• (1450)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the RCMP interviewed Mr. Lanthier regarding his allegations and that he had no information of any activity which would justify the RCMP initiating an investigation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MISSION IN IRAN AND IRAQ—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INFORM CANADIANS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence and concerns the Iran-Iraq conflict.

We know that for about ten days now, Canadian troops have been on the Iran-Iraq border to help bring about a more lasting peace.

Does the Minister believe it might be appropriate to inform Canadians on developments in this matter?

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that Canada has responded to the request of the United Nations. We are the only country which has provided two groups, first, the 15 observers who were the first of any of the 24 countries to be in the observer position and, second, we have provided 495 communications experts and 148 vehicles which are being shuffled in by 10 Hercules Transports. That is now in the process of being completed and they are now taking up their positions.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

ALLEGATIONS OF MEMBER FOR ROSEMONT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns his job as the Minister responsible for ethics in government. On August 19 the Deputy Prime Minister said in this House: "The Government of Canada under the leadership of the Prime Minister has moved very quickly with respect to various charges of wrongdoing".

Given that I have in hand an article by Pierre O'Neil of Le Devoir of February 6, 1988, in which the Conservative Member of Parliament for Rosemont said she met the Prime Minister on September 21, 1987, to make similar charges to the ones she made last week, if it was warranted this week to investigate those allegations, why was it not warranted when the Prime Minister found out on September 21, 1987, or when it was reported on February 6, 1988? Was it not because Members of Parliament asked questions in this House that the issue was brought to the attention of the RCMP as opposed to the interest of correcting what was wrong?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the meeting to which the Hon. Member refers, but I suspect that, if she was unable to provide any evidence today as a result of the interview the police had with her, no specific charges—no names, no dates, no places—nor is she willing to be a witness or tell her story to a Royal Commission, if she is not able to provide any evidence today I can only assume she was not able to provide evidence then.

[Translation]

PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS—REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister told us in the House last week that the accusations were so serious that they required RCMP intervention.

What I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister, since the same allegations were made a year ago, is why he did not choose to refer the matter to the RCMP at that time. Furthermore, why did the Government not mandate a royal commission of inquiry, as I asked it to do five times in the past, during this Parliament, and as the Hon. Member for Rosemont asked twice, on September 21, 1987 and again last week? Why did they not do what was asked and why did they act only after the matter was raised in the House?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think, if I recall correctly, she said, as recorded in the newspaper, that she had personal knowledge of a system of kickbacks for contracts in government. She also said that it involved interactions among—

Ms. Copps: She said that last year to the Prime Minister.

An Hon. Member: Come on, Sheila.

Mr. Mazankowski: She also said it involved interactions among government representatives, of public sector, lobbyists, politicians and other people close to decision-making processes. When she was asked to substantiate or give evidence, she was unable to do so.

Mr. Boudria: That's what I am asking.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, what he was asking, Mr. Speaker, is simply the same question in French as he asked in English and it is the same answer.

Mr. Boudria: You replied to neither.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—NUCLEAR NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to either the Deputy Prime Minister or the Associate Minister of National Defence. The Minister will be aware that a study released at the University of Southampton in England has added another voice to those who think that this Government's scheme to spend $8 billion plus on nuclear submarines is a threat to nuclear non-proliferation. Will the Government investigate all the consequences of opening a loophole in the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty before deciding on the final design for its submarines?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I understand there is a group in the United Kingdom known as the British Base Program for Promoting Nuclear Non-Proliferation, which has come out with such a statement. We have looked at and know that the non-proliferation treaty deals with munitions and explosives. For engines there is no requirement in the non-proliferation treaty, although there is a requirement in the International Atomic Energy Agency and we have indicated we are setting up a system with the International Atomic Energy Agency to comply, and it will monitor how we receive and dispose of the nuclear waste that would result from the engines used in nuclear powered submarines.

INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF NUCLEAR MATERIAL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the Associate Minister of Defence knows that what the Government is proposing in buying these submarines flies in the face of the spirit and regimen of the non-proliferation treaty. It is because of this loophole we are placing that treaty in jeopardy. Canada is already lumped in with India and Brazil as threats to nuclear non-proliferation. How many other countries will have to use this Canadian loophole, as it is now called, in the non-proliferation treaty before this Government realizes that its nuclear submarine program poses a real threat to international control of nuclear material?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Brant is a reasonably responsible Member and always has been, but right now he is trying to be rather sensational. We do have a number of nuclear power plants in this country and around the world. We do have to dispose of that waste. We are not breaking the non-proliferation treaty which deals with explosives and ammunition.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): For military purposes.

Mr. Dick: We are talking about dealing with an engine—

Mr. Broadbent: For military purposes.

Mr. Dick: —something that powers a boat. It could be an engine that powers a truck or an aircraft, if they had invented those yet.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant: You are not turning on a light bulb.

Mr. Dick: This is 30-year old technology and it is known as the "submarine clause" in the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, you're right, a submarine clause. It's a loophole!

Mr. Dick: We will be complying with the International Atomic Energy Program and we have already stated that. There is nothing we are doing that is not allowed by law.

PENITENTIARIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—SITE OF PROPOSED PENITENTIARY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the 1984-85 Estimates, money was allocated for the construction of a federal penitentiary in Buchans, Newfoundland. Buchans was announced as the site by the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada.

I want to ask whatever Minister has the courage to answer this question why did the Government of Canada at nine o'clock this morning at a press conference in the largest hotel in St. John's, Newfoundland, announce a $30 million penitentiary, not for Buchans, Newfoundland, but for a riding presently held by a Tory Member, close to St. John's—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: —with no site acquired, in fact, no land acquired, no site even decided exactly? Why has the Government of Canada defied the Government of Newfoundland and betrayed the people of Buchans?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly easy to see why the Hon. Member has a new found interest in Buchans. I understand that is the area in which he plans to run in the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: That's it, George, you fight for your constituents.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure we are all sympathetic with the Hon. Member's desire to serve the country.

Mr. Cardiff: The people of Newfoundland are very happy to have a federal prison. We have waited many, many years—

Mr. Foster: Yes, for four years.

Mr. Cardiff: —with previous Governments. Since 1949 we wanted to have a prison institution in that province. It has not happened. It is now going to happen and the people of that province are ecstatic about having that location there.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, both Governments decided in 1984 to put that prison in Buchans, and even this afternoon, following the announcement by this Government, the provincial Government said it wanted the prison to go in Buchans. The people there, some of them, stayed there following the closure of the mines, on the commitment of both Governments, waiting for construction to start.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if the Government does not realize that this is a very poor way to treat the peoples' lives and the future of a community, and will the Deputy Prime Minister not admit that this announcement today is just a patent political ploy for votes? It is blatant politics and it is an insult to all fair-minded Newfoundlanders.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I cannot always answer with the eloquence of some of the Member's colleagues from that province but I will do my best. I would like read a quote of what was said by his Leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Liberal Party: "I am not going to take sides as to where it ought to be put. I think I will leave that to the local Members of Parliament", which I think was an excellent statement to make.

• (1500)

ECONOMIC NEEDS OF COMMUNITIES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it concerns the Government's decision to build a federal penitentiary in Harbour Grace, Newfoundland. I contrast it with the earlier decision to build a penitentiary in Port Cartier, Québec, in the riding of the Prime Minister.

Why are the economic needs of communities an overriding consideration in the Prime Minister's riding despite the objections of the Correctional Service and yet in Newfoundland the desperate economic needs of a community such as Belle Isle, with over 60 per cent unemployment are ignored even though it meets all the requirements of the Correctional Service?

Why is there one rule in the Prime Minister's riding and one other rule in Newfoundland?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it does not matter where that institution is built whether it be in Port Cartier, Harbour Grace, or any other location. It is necessary for the development of those regions. That is the basis for institutions being built in those places.

QUERY ON ACCESSIBILITY OF LOCATION

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The only concern expressed by the Correctional Service regarding Belle Isle was accessibility due to a ferry service. The Newfoundland Government is building two new ferries to provide more efficient service and Belle Island is closer to needed services than Harbour Grace.

If commuting daily between Belle Island and St. John's is good enough for Belle Islanders, why is it not good enough for correctional workers, inmates, or visitors to that institution?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we are working very hard to equalize all opportunities for all Canadians. We feel that the location of Harbour Grace Penitentiary in the vicinity of Harbour Grace is the proper location.

Mr. Speaker: A single question for the Hon. Member for Abitibi, followed by the Hon. Member for Trinity.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

SAFETY STANDARDS FOR WAREHOUSING OF PCBS—REQUEST FOR CONTINUOUS SURVEILLANCE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. After the incidents in La Tabatière, Quebec and Smithville, Ontario, here we have another PCB alert. Last night, a serious fire in a PCB storage facility forced the evacuation of more than 3,000 residents of Saint-Basile-le-Grand. My question is: Can the Minister tell us whether governmental safety standards for PCB storage require surveillance 24 hours a day at existing PCB storage sites, because there is no reason why, in 1988, people's health should be threatened?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the representation made by the Hon. Member is a solid one. It is worthy of consideration both by myself and by other Ministers of the Environment across the country at the provincial level.

The Hon. Member will know that PCB storage is first and foremost the responsibility of the provinces, but because of the legitimate national interest in this question, there has been much co-operation between the two levels of government. In that connection, I will raise the Hon. Member's suggestion at an early opportunity through the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers and ensure it is given the careful attention it richly deserves.

TAX REFORM

SALES TAX CHANGES—IMPLEMENTATION DATE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On July 5 the Minister announced that he would be introducing changes to the sales tax effective in November. Now he has put the date of implementation back to April, 1989, and he has not yet said exactly what these changes will be.

When will the Minister make a clear statement of his intentions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before responding to the Hon. Member's question, might I, on behalf of my colleague from St. Paul's, congratulate the Hon. Member on her victory last evening.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I understand it was by a reasonable margin. I do hope that all the energy she put into that campaign will not get her exhausted for things that might be happening in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member is asking a question on the change to the manufacturers' sales tax. We have had considerable discussions with the private sector. We have had discussions with members of the committee during the course of the committee hearings and it was felt, because the changes that we feel are important to amend the proposal as it now stands are reasonably extensive, that we should delay the implementation.

As to when we will be reintroducing this I cannot give the Member a precise date now, but some time in the not too distant future we will be able to come back with a revised proposal.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT BEFORE GENERAL ELECTION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his concern about my energy and, in the same spirit, may I point out that Canadian consumers and manufacturers really do need to know what the Conservative Government has in store for them.

Will the Minister reveal exactly what he is planning in the sales tax before the election?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is a very difficult question to which to respond. I have a timetable as to when I might want to reveal my thoughts on that particular subject, but someone else has a better idea as to what his ideas might be on the timing of his thoughts on that second subject.

We understand the concern which the Hon. Member is expressing. We want to move ahead as quickly as we can and make our views known.

POINT OF ORDER

MOTIONS TO CONTINUE SITTING ON BILL C-144

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the events that took place in this House last night at the conclusion of second reading debate on the child care legislation.

Following the speech of the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Brightwell), he moved a motion concerning an extension of the hours of the House for sitting, which motion was ruled out of order by the Deputy Speaker following an examination of the motion.

Immediately following the placing of this motion before the House by the Hon. Member for Perth, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) stood in his place seeking to be recognized for purposes of debate. He stood in his place immediately and for some time was the only Member who rose in the House seeking to be recognized for the purposes of debate. Following the decision of the Deputy Speaker to rule out of order the motion by the Hon. Member for Perth, the Government House Leader proceeded to the front of this Chamber in a manner that I certainly found quite offensive, apparently to lecture the Officers at the Table with respect to the rules of the House. In my view that does no credit whatever to this House or to the Member involved.

I hope there will be some recognition of the importance of Members on all sides of this House recognizing the role and the responsibility of the Officers at the Table and of not proceeding to lecture, harangue and harass them after a ruling has been made by the Deputy Speaker in good faith following consultation with those same officers.

I raised a point of order at that time and said:

> I rise on the same point of order. Surely to goodness it is appropriate that the Speaker recognize the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) who wishes to speak without the intervention of the Government Minister attempting to tell the Table what to do.

At that point the Deputy Speaker then turned and recognized a Member of the Government side. Had both the Member for Regina East and the Member from the Government side been standing at the same time, there would have been no difficulty with that whatever because a number of Opposition speakers had spoken to that point in the debate.

In this case, the Member for Regina East was standing. He was the only member who sought to be recognized for some considerable time. It was only after the ruling by the Deputy Speaker that the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) then stood, motion in hand, and without making any speech, moved to extend the hours of the House.

In my view that very clearly constitutes a breach of the orders and practices of this House. I would have hoped that the Hon. Member for Regina East would have been recognized as he was standing for some time, not to raise a point of order, but for purposes of debate. I hope that we might get some guidance from the Chair with respect to the question of conduct, particularly of Government Ministers and particularly the Minister responsible for government business as to their dealings with the Officers at the Table.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I was here as well last night.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State, who is the subject of the comment of the Hon. Member for Burnaby has risen to be recognized. Perhaps, in fairness, I ought to recognize him at this time. The Hon. Minister of State indicates that he would courteously ask the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell to continue.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was here as well last night in my capacity as acting opposition whip for the next few weeks or so. I was in my chair at the time of the incident in question. It is true to say that with Parliament sitting long hours we sometimes all get a little hot under the collar and impatient. That probably happens not just to the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis), as it obviously did, but to a number of us.

In defence of the position taken by the Deputy Speaker last night, it should be noted that no government Member had spoken for approximately an hour before. Obviously, the Deputy Speaker is quite in order to recognize whomever he wishes because, of course, it is his prerogative at any time.

Given the fact that no government Member had spoken for quite some time before that, he could have recognized another Member. It must also be appreciated by the Chair that in the cut and thrust of the activities at the time Members were rising on points of order and so on, which is distracting to the Chair at the best of times, as I am sure that you, Sir, will know.

The point that I am making, to assist the Chair, is that it could be said, of course, that the Deputy Government House Leader was upset with a ruling which was not in his favour. However, it would not be correct to say that the Deputy Speaker did not act properly by recognizing an Hon. Member from the Conservative Party because, of course, one had not been recognized for some time before that.

Mr. Speaker: I think that I probably ought to hear the Hon. Minister of State.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that at the time that the question of the acceptability of a motion under Standing Order 9(4)(a) arose in the Chamber, I found myself in the awkward position of not being in my seat. I addressed some remarks to the Chair and to the Table, indicating that I had a great deal of difficulty understanding the difference between the words "consideration" and "completion".

The Chair will know that Standing Order 9(4)(a) uses the word "consideration", and I took the position that since there was a motion to put the question on the floor, the only interpretation that could be taken from the wording was that the words "completion" and "consideration" were the same. I submit and I have always felt that the essence of Standing Order 9(4)(a) is: "Do you have 15 Members to prevent completion of that stage?" That is the point that I was trying to make at the time.

I was making it informally and I was making it reasonably directly. I want to say that I took the precaution of checking Hansard to see if there was anything offensive recorded that I might wish, in the cool, hard light of the dawn, I had not said in the heat of the evening. In any event, if there was anything said by myself which was out of order, whether recorded in Hansard or not recorded in Hansard, I would regret that very much and I would apologize to any person who took offence to what was said. There was certainly no offence intended, because we were well served by the Chair and by the Table. I have had previous correspondence over Standing Order 9(4)(a), and one of these days I will get it worded to the satisfaction of my impatience and perhaps the whole House.

Mr. Speaker: With great regard to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, I would intimate to him that I think the Chair has probably heard enough to deal with the matter. However, if it is very important, I will hear him. It does not always happen.

The matter that has been raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) of course troubled me last night. As Hon. Members will know, our very excellent Deputy Speaker was in the chair. He is skilful, experienced and is an absolutely superb servant of this place. I know that all Hon. Members would agree with me on that. As is the obligation upon me, of course, I was here and when this matter was brought to my attention, I immediately came into the Chamber. There was no need for me to take the chair because the Deputy Speaker was completely in control of the House. I would point out it was with the co-operation of Hon. Members that he was completely in control of the House. However, I knew some Hon. Members were upset. I want Hon. Members to know that that concerns me, as I think it should. I was here for some minutes in the House during part of what has been alluded to. I was not in the chair, as I say. My hon. colleague was in the chair, but I was here.

I have reviewed the tapes very carefully. I might say to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), and I say this in a sympathetic way, that I listened most carefully this morning to the video tape of the Hon. Member's speech, and I say to him that I understand his feelings that were expressed last night. I say this because I think the Hon. Member should know that I understand those feelings.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby has raised a matter, and there are two parts to that matter. First, what happened here is that an Hon. Member from the government side rose on a motion. I will not go into the numbers, but I will try to simplify this for Hon. Members and for the public. Under the rules, within one hour of the time of adjournment an Hon. Member on either side can rise and move that the debate continue—if I can put it in colloquial terms—not that the debate be terminated or that it be completed. If there are 15 Members rising in opposition to that motion, that motion will not be accepted and the debate will end at the appointed hour, which was ten o'clock last night.

An Hon. Member from the government side rose and did not correctly put the motion. As I understand it, the Hon. Member did not carefully repeat the words of the Order and said that the matter be completed, which would mean, if one took those words seriously—and I am sure that it was an error on the part of the Hon. Member, and quite an innocent one—that all matters would have to be completed. That kind of closure is not anticipated by the rules of time allocation or closure that we have.

• (1520)

Mr. Prud'homme: But the Deputy House Leader did not—

Mr. Speaker: The Deputy House Leader, as the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) is pointing out to me, and I always, as Hon. Members well know, defer with great respect to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis because, quite frankly, he has been a great amount of strength to me as Speaker and he usually has something of good sense to say, not just to the House but also to the Speaker, and he correctly points out that the Deputy Speaker quite correctly rejected the motion that was put by the Member from the government side because it was incorrect. What followed then was that a number of Members rose to be recognized, including the Hon. Member for Regina East. I am instructed, because I inquired, that there had been seven opposition Members in a row speaking on debate. The Hon. Deputy Speaker, having rejected the motion that came from the government side, then went to the Government and recognized a Member on debate. I know that this has upset some Hon. Members and that is why I am referring to it.

I have to ask Hon. Members to exercise some sympathy for the position of the Speaker. The Speaker is not supposed to be able to divine what will be in the mouth of the Hon. Member that he in fact recognized. The Hon. Member may very well have been rising to continue debate, and it is quite true that the Hon. Member for Regina East and I think others were on their feet. The difficulty the Speaker has is that one has to select someone. In this event, the Hon. Deputy Speaker, for whom everyone in the House has great respect, recognized a Member from the government side. This time, the Government got it right and put the motion to extend debate. It is not for me to say one way or the other as to why these things happen, but I suppose it is not altogether untoward for the Chair to comment that this time, the Government got it right and put the motion that the debate be continued.

First, we have a very strong tradition here that the Speaker does not overrule the Deputy Speaker. Under the circumstances, I think Hon. Members would agree with me that fault cannot be found with the Deputy Speaker. As it happened, debate did continue for a little while and then it concluded.

There is another matter, and that refers to what happened with the Deputy House Leader, as happens with Whips of all Parties and perhaps occasionally some other House Leaders. The responsibility of a House Leader is extraordinary at times, and the public should know this. This place does not function without responsible people in all three Parties working long, long hours to take responsibility for what their own Parties do and for the arrangements that are made intra-Party continually. We have been sitting a long time, and I am not getting into a discussion as to whether we should have or should not have. I am just saying that we have been sitting for a long time. The Hon. Minister of State has admitted that he made statements which the Hon. Member for Burnaby properly brought to the attention of the Chair and the House, statements which he admits he should not have made.

I do not think that I can take it any further except to say that most of the time, most of us, and some of you upon occasion recently have been assisting me, the Deputy Speaker and Acting Speakers, by taking the chair because we have had to call on some help, know that it is a great comfort to the Chair if Hon. Members will refrain from making comments except when they are in their places and they are recognized to be heard. The Hon. Member for Regina East can say that last night he was rising to be heard as were others, and sometimes when there is a lot of people up, it is very difficult for the Speaker to choose. I think the Hon. Minister of State has quite gallantly and quite properly expressed to the House his regret. The Hon. Member for Burnaby, I have to say, had every right to raise the matter and I thank him for the moderation with which he expressed it.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) made some very interesting comments to the Chair, but he has preferred to remain silent . . . However, I see that may not be the case. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

[English]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, on a slightly different point of order. I would not like to challenge Your Honour's ruling in any way, shape or form. It is an excellent ruling, of course, as usual. However, I would like to put something to you, Sir, for reflection, and we may get an answer on some other day. I would be afraid that comments arising from what you have just said to us could lead us to some dangerous precedents. I would like to put this to you, and then I too will reflect on it, but I would not like to finish the day without putting it to you openly.

Perhaps in the future, the Government or any political Party might decide not to put up any speakers for a long time and therefore whoever is in the chair would recognize those who rise and would try to alternate between two of the three political Parties. I hope that I will not conclude, after what you said, that in the future, if such were to be the case again, if the Government or political Party would suddenly decide to put up speakers for debate, the Chair would decide that because the Government has not participated and that there were seven Members in a row from a political Party participating, the Chair would recognize six or seven Members of the Government in a row. That is a bit like what happened last night when two government Members in a row spoke because they had not participated for quite a while before. I would hope that we could try to clear that up, not today, but I would not like it to be a precedent because it could be a very dangerous precedent for future tactics for any of the three political Parties.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his remarks. Of course I have no intention of letting a precedent be created as a result of the situation we had last night. I also would like to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis for his comments, and I can assure the Hon. Member that his remarks will of course be given careful consideration.

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the comments made last evening, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) said that a Parliamentary Secretary was approaching the Table to tell the Table what to do. He indicated that the Parliamentary Secretary should remain in his chair if he wants to say something. I just want the Chamber to understand that upon the ruling, I was going to the Table to seek information on the ruling. I was not approaching the Chair and I was not intending to tell the Chair what to do. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) did try to tell the Chair what to do publicly, but that was not my intention.

I would remind Hon. Members that in the first 15 minutes of proceedings today during Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21, there was a bit of a mix-up and two opposition Members in a row were recognized and then later on, two government Members in a row were recognized as a consequence of that. That is a very familiar pattern in this Chamber. The idea is that we do alternate in a general way, but recognizing two speakers in a row from the Opposition or from the Government is not a practice that is discrepant with past practice.

• (1530)

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis was just expressing the wish of all of us, and this is not always an easy place to conduct our affairs, that decisions must be made, trying as hard as possible to be fair and to do things in an appropriate way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

The next question is as follows: Mr. Epp (Provencher) seconded by Mr. Wise, moved that Bill C-144, an Act to authorize payments by Canada toward the provision of child care services, and to amend the Canada Assistance Plan in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If you were to ask for unanimous consent, I think you would find that the House would be favourably disposed to having the result of the previous vote applied to this vote.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, could I have my name added to the Government vote? I was absent for the first vote.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, let the record show that I was present and did not vote.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to indicate to the House that I abstained on these two votes simply because the Speaker has asked me to serve as chairman of the legislative committee which will examine clause-by-clause study of Bill C-144, and I have agreed to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to apply the result of the first vote to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Epp) (Provencher)), which was agreed to on the following division:

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions Nos. 332-5173 to 332-5183 inclusive.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

PRESENTATION OF SEVENTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the seventeenth report of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, in both official languages.

In accordance with Standing Order 36(1)(a), your committee recommends that the following items of Private Members' Business be designated as votable items: Motion No. 113 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell):

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Canada Post Corporation Act so as to make Canada Post an essential public service which would render illegal any strikes affecting postal delivery.

The second item is Motion No. 151 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Constitution of Canada so as to require the government to submit a balanced budget except:
> (a) in times of a declared national emergency or disaster, or
> (b) if the deficit receives parliamentary approval by a two-thirds majority.

I note that pursuant to Standing Order 36(1)(b), this seventeenth report is deemed adopted when laid upon the table.

PETITIONS

WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the privilege to present a petition signed by a number of citizens from the Ottawa—Hull area who call upon Parliament to withdraw the Child Care Act forthwith because the Bill contains neither national objectives nor necessary funding arrangements, and will not ensure that families have access to high quality child care. The child care Bill is not in the best interests of young children, women or families in Canada.

• (1600)

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present three petitions under Standing Order 106 on different subjects. The first petition is signed by a number of residents of Toronto and concerns immigration. It refers to the need to allow unmarried sons and daughters of all ages to enter as family class and specifically points out that in 1986 the then Minister of Justice promised that the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents of three years or more would be eliminated so that both groups would have equal rights to sponsor parents of any age, and that this promise has not yet been fulfilled. The petitioners call upon this House to ensure that the Government will fulfil that promise.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-55

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): My next petition is again signed by a number of residents of Toronto and other cities in Ontario. The petitioners point out that whereas Bill C-55 threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees and sets out measures designed to keep most refugees out of the country as opposed to ensuring that genuine refugees are given protection, therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government will withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, as well as universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my last petition is signed by a number of residents of Ontario who point out that the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal which was not mandated in the last election and would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs we need, and would integrate us further into the North American defence industrial base. The petitioners therefore urge that Parliament ensure that a national debate takes place on this Mulroney-Reagan trade deal before such an agreement is finalized.

LABELLING OF FOOD INGREDIENTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by some 40 residents of the communities of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Kenora, Dryden and Redditt, Ontario. This petition calls upon Parliament to enact legislation and regulations to ensure the thorough and comprehensive labelling of foods served in restaurants and take-out shops in order to ensure that those who suffer from severe allergies, which indeed can be life threatening, have the information available to protect themselves.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present this afternoon. The first petition is signed by residents of Thunder Bay. It concerns the very serious problem of the illness, schizophrenia, which affects about 1 per cent of the population causing severe mental anguish and suffering to the patients and their relatives and costing Canadian society more than $3 billion annually in direct health care and other support costs.

The petitioners note that recent research findings, including those obtained in Canada, show the illness to be a biochemical brain disorder in part caused by genetic malfunction. They are concerned that there is not enough research being done in Canada to determine what possibilities there are of treatment. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will in future be commensurate with the very serious impact of this illness in Canada.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my second petition is also signed by residents in northwestern Ontario and persons in Thunder Bay and outlying parts of the constituency of Thunder Bay—Nipigon. These are persons who note that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, but the petitioners assert that the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians, and equalize opportunities between the regions.

Since Canada would be denied this policy freedom by the agreement, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Orders of the Day.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, on the Order Paper today there is a motion that stands in the name of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty). PARTICIPATION IN UNITED NATIONS IRAN-IRAQ MILITARY OBSERVERS GROUP

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence) moved:

That this House supports Canadian participation in the United Nations Iran/Iraq Military Observers Group (UNIIMOG) to observe the ceasefire between Iran and Iraq and hopes that Canada's contribution to this international initiative will result in an end to hostilities and a lasting peace.

He said: Mr. Speaker, 10 days ago I stood with the Chief of Defence Staff on the tarmac of the Canadian Forces Base, Trenton, to wish Godspeed to the first of our troops who were leaving for Iran and Iraq as part of the United Nations force in that region. I wish every Canadian could have been with us. The range of emotions present at that time is not surprising.

There was pride because Canada was trying to help to end a war that has cost a million lives. There was sadness at leaving families and friends behind for a foreign tour of duty which could last up to six months or longer. There was apprehension because Canadians know from bitter experience that trying to keep the peace could be hazardous. There was enthusiasm because all of the soldier's training was suddenly made relevant at that moment. And there was hope because it appeared that peace, although far from certain, was now more possible than ever before in a bloody eight-year conflict.

No one should underestimate the sacrifices these troops and their families have been asked to make. Some of them have had to postpone weddings or interrupt honeymoons as the soldiers do their duty outside of Canada. Others will have children born while they are away or will have family crises arise and they will not be able to be there to attend to them. For their families, the burden of a lengthy separation will be compounded by a concern for the safety of the troops. For each of these soldiers, these were sacrifices they were prepared to make to serve Canada and to promote peace. As they take on their heavy new responsibilities, the hopes and prayers of every Canadian go with them.

I have placed this motion before the House today, not to fulfil a legal obligation but because I believe that when such a major new undertaking is given, I have a moral responsibility to report to the peoples' representatives to ask for their support. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and with the consent of our colleagues, I would like to table in both official languages, the Orders in Council authorizing our troops to be sent in support of the United Nations Forces. If there would be unanimous consent, perhaps I could table those Orders in Council at this time.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1610)

What is at issue here? Why did Canada agree to send troops on this mission? Let me, first, report on how events have developed.

On July 21, an informal approach was made to Canada by the Secretary General of the United Nations, Perez de Cuéllar. He wanted to determine our willingness to participate in a peacekeeping operation, if it was possible to negotiate a cease- fire. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and I responded that, if Canada were approached formally, we hoped that a positive response could be made.

On August 9, during the recent parliamentary recess, following the most commendable and successful efforts of the Secretary General, we were indeed approached formally. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and I responded on behalf of the Government that, in keeping with Canada's long established traditions, we would participate in the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group, or UNIIMOG, and provide, on a temporary basis, sufficient military signals personnel to satisfy the total requirement of the United Nations force. These signals experts will take up the total signals responsibilities along a 1,200 kilometre frontier. It is a heavy responsibility, but it is one that will be done exceptionally well.

Last Saturday the Iranian and Iraqi armed forces implemented a cease-fire ending eight years of bloody fighting between those two countries. Great losses were sustained, not only among the opposing forces, but also among the civilian population. Our best estimate is that over one million people have been killed in what must surely have been one of the longest and bloodiest conflicts of this century. In the course of this war, peaceful navigation and trade were disrupted in the Persian Gulf, leading to the intervention of western naval forces. This, in turn, gave rise to fears of a possible superpower conflict. Now finally an opportunity exists to resolve this conflict by peaceful means.

Between those two hostile armies, in what was only recently a battlefield, the unarmed United Nations observers will interpose themselves and monitor the pullback operations and the cease-fire. Negotiation of a comprehensive settlement of the underlying issues in the conflict will begin in Geneva tomorrow.

In response to the United Nations request we immediately selected 15 Canadian Forces officers to join a total observation force of 330 from 24 countries, including NATO, Warsaw Pact, neutral, and non-aligned states. The Security Council approved the mandate of the observer group for a six-month period with the option of renewal. If observers are still required beyond that time, a further request would have to be made to the participating countries.

Because of Canada's recognized experience and expertise in supplying communications support to peacekeeping operations, we have sent 500 officers and men, in addition to our 15 observers, to take up positions in both Iran and Iraq. The United Nations has committed itself to replacing our signallers and their equipment with United Nations civilians as soon as an appropriate force can be raised and trained. We expect that the civilianization of the communications elements can be accomplished well within the next year. We will press for the replacement of these troops, who form by far the largest portion of our contingent, at the earliest possible moment, so that they can return to their regular duties.

I am proud to tell the House that our contingent includes Reservists who will be working alongside the regular force members. Indeed, it is the first time that Reservists have been sent into a peacekeeping operation as part of the first wave. The House will know that last year I authorized the posting of an additional 60 Reservists to our peacekeeping forces in Cyprus, and they have acquitted themselves exceptionally well in this theatre. Our increasing use of Reservists in the mainstream activities of the Canadian Forces underscores the vital role they play, and demonstrates that the total force concept, which will give us a fully-integrated military, is proceeding well.

We recognize that this deployment entails risks for members of the Canadian Forces. We have carefully weighed those risks. Our soldiers who have accepted this challenge understand the danger. We believe, as do our military authorities, that they are acceptable in light of what is at stake. As I have already stated, the cease-fire is holding. Should hostilities recommence, however, our troops will be withdrawn at the earliest opportunity.

[Translation]

According to United Nations guidelines, officers acting as observers are unarmed. However, for the purposes of self-protection, the signals experts are provided with the new Canadian rifle. To avoid hazardous situations, such as land mines, our troops will take the usual precautions and, as far as possible, travel only on the main roads. When they do not, they will be guided by a vehicle from the host country. As a rule, the Canadian signals experts will be posted behind the front lines, and only officers acting as observers will patrol the front. The host countries will provide liaison officers and will look after the safety of our troops.

[English]

I want to turn to an issue that often arises when we undertake peacekeeping activities. The Department of National Defence is proud of its policy against discrimination on the basis of religious beliefs, colour, creed, and sex. This has been clearly demonstrated by the Government's policy toward women in the Canadian forces. Since I have been Minister, I have expanded employment opportunities for women both in the variety of occupations and in the type of units in which they may work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: At this time we have female Canadian Armed Forces members serving in the Sinai in Cyprus. However, we face a difficult choice when agreeing to participate in a peacekeeping operation such as the one in Iran and Iraq. The acceptability of Canada, together with the 23 other nations, to the peacekeeping mission is contingent upon being seen as completely impartial, and as being seen as not in contradiction with local customs.

United Nations practice is to respect the traditions, customs, and religious practices and beliefs of host countries where United Nations peacekeeping forces are deployed.

The U.N. expects countries participating in its operations to respect this position. While we will abide by United Nations practice, we will also make it clear that Canadian policy is to ensure that our Canadian Armed Forces reflect the social fabric of Canada. The goal of Canadian observers is to assist in any way possible to end the senseless killing and to help to promote peace. Our choice in this case is very simple. It is either to respect the host country's views regarding the make-up of the peacekeeping forces or refuse to participate and allow the killing to continue. I stressed this fact when the United Nations first approached us, particularly with regard to our signals experts. The United Nations said that Canada was the only country it knew of capable of fulfilling this function. Had we not been prepared to send our troops we might very well have seen hostilities continue. We believe that, if we can help to end a war that has taken a million lives, that must be our priority.

I want to mention another issue that is of great importance to us. You will recall that the Department of National Defence has recently been criticized for its work to improve devices used by our forces to protect themselves against chemical and biological warfare. That work is strictly defensive in nature, and we continue to press for a complete ban world-wide on chemical and biological weapons. But, until that day arrives, sending Canadian peacekeepers into an area where chemical agents have been used underscores the need for the Canadian Forces to be prepared to work in a chemical warfare environment and, in particular, it underscores the need for our research establishments to develop even more effective devices to protect our personnel.

Putting this in the simplest possible terms, if we did not have adequate training for our Canadian Forces personnel, and if we did not have adequate equipment of a defensive nature for our Canadian Forces personnel, we would not have been able to deploy our troops to this region where chemical agents have been used. It would not further the cause of peace to have us unable to send Canadian troops to this region. That is why this work is so important for Canada. I can report to the House that we have issued chemical detection devices, gas masks, and protective clothing to our troops.

[Translation]

As announced, the deployment of our forces was without incident. Occasionally deployment in the border zone raised some problems, for instance with respect to the carrying of weapons, and all military peace-keeping personnel were required to carry passports issued by their country of origin. These problems have now been dealt with, and we expect our peace-keeping forces will soon be in place throughout the region. Between now and August 28, we expect all our troops to be at their post, as planned.

[English]

Let me underscore this fact for the House. We expect that in any case where peacekeeping troops are being asked to move into a region on very short notice there will obviously be transitional difficulties. I am informed by the Chief of the Defence Staff that our ability to get our troops and equipment in place and operating effectively has been as good in this instance as ever before in any Canadian peacekeeping operation that we have participated in. It is a credit to the Canadian troops and to all of those in the United Nations and to the host countries, that such success has been realized.

• (1620)

Our target of our troops in place and operational is August 28. We expect that our troops will be in place and that the vast bulk of our equipment will be there and functioning at that time.

I might also indicate that while there have been problems—and I have indicated that earlier—we expected that there would be problems from time to time as such an operation took place.

We see a willingness on the part of both Iran and Iraq to see the cease-fire work. We have received co-operation from both sides, which has facilitated our work, and we are grateful for that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, those were the salient points. As such, they do not give us a very accurate picture of the magnitude and importance of the enterprise in which we have become engaged.

[English]

Why is it important that Canadian troops participate? Why do we send Canadians abroad for extended periods to serve in situations which clearly entail some risk? In the White Paper which I tabled in this House a little over a year ago, I pointed out that regional instability and conflict have caused enormous human suffering and posed serious risks to the world community.

What better example could we find in the conflict that is raised between Iran and Iraq for over eight years at a cost of more than a million dead?

Could we ever find a better example of a conflict crying out for peacekeeping and resolving disputes by peaceful means?

There are, I know, those who do not share this view. Iran and Iraq have been dismissed as "lunatic countries" and it has been suggested that we should be staying at home, safe and sound, far from danger. I do not share that view and I believe that neither this House nor the Canadian people as a whole would have us shrink from a challenge so worth accepting. We in Canada are not among those who would write off peoples and nations less favoured than ourselves.

The House will recall that White Paper identified the peaceful settlement of disputes as one of the three pillars of Canadian security policy. We described peacekeeping as the vehicle by which the Canadian Forces contribute to that objective. It is an area in which Canada is uniquely positioned to make a contribution. We are not a superpower, but we operate sophisticated military equipment and our forces are highly professional. We are not a colonial power and are, therefore, acceptable throughout the world. We have no vested interest. Our goal is simply to save lives and end human suffering.

This Government is intent on rebuilding the Canadians Forces. We are resolved, and it bears repeating here today, to increase our contribution to peacekeeping.

Last October, for example, we increased our contingent in Cyprus to offset the withdrawal of Swedish troops. More recently, we agreed to take part in the Observer Group in Afghanistan and Pakistan and increased the personnel assigned to the Multinational Force and Observers in the Sinai. With the commitment which we are discussing today, we are at a high-water mark in the history of Canadian peacekeeping. Only once before, in Korea, did we do more.

These efforts in UN peacekeeping are in addition to a wide range of Canadian Forces humanitarian activities which take us throughout the world. Whether it is delivering school supplies, clothing or food aid, in the Caribbean or elsewhere, or the airlift that is currently under way by Canadian Forces Hercules aircraft in Ethiopia, the Canadian Forces have dedicated their equipment and skills and training in their efforts to eliminate human suffering. It is a contribution for which all Canadians should be tremendously proud.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Moving over 500 men, their vehicles and other related equipment across the world into what was only recently a battlefield is certainly no easy task. It is being carried out with the skill and professionalism that we take for granted in the Canadian Forces. We can but admire the way this operation has been conducted.

I am confident that the members of the Canadian Forces that we have committed to this endeavour will acquit themselves with credit, as they have done so often before in other peacekeeping operations. I am also certain that they will contribute greatly to the peace process which began in Iran and Iraq with the cease-fire of August 20.

As I mentioned earlier, there is another important group that is also making sacrifices for the success of this mission. I refer, of course, to the families and loved ones of our peacekeepers. I know that sacrifices have already been made and many more will be made by service families. To them I promise three things: first, we will do everything that we can to ensure the safety of the troops. Second, we will work to bring them home as soon as possible, and, third, we will do everything that we can to assist the families of those serving abroad.

I have asked the Chief of the Defence Staff to join us today, both to represent the determination of all of the members of the Canadian Forces to see this mission through and also so that he can relay to our troops the wholehearted support and the best wishes of the House as they meet that challenge.

There is no higher calling that any soldier can receive than to be asked to promote peace and to end the suffering of those who have suffered for far too long. Our troops have answered the call, and Canadians stand united in offering them our admiration and respect in sending them our prayers for a safe return from a successful mission.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition support the Canadian participation in this fine initiative on the part of the United Nations. Reaching back to former Prime Minister Lester Pearson, we find ample evidence that Canadians believe in the United Nations, support initiatives in the defence of peace and are proud of Canada's involvement.

We welcome also the efforts and the continuation of Canada's effort in pressing hard for a ban on chemical warfare, a front on which Canada has been active for several decades.

In the case of the Iran-Iraq mission, our Canadian contingent consists of 498 individuals, including 370 communications personnel, 113 support personnel and 15 observers who will serve on the front. Considering the fact that the United Nations mission is of 850 people, drawn from 24 nations, Canada's contribution represents almost two-thirds of the total force.

This is Canada's sixteenth participation in a United Nations peacekeeping mission, and the task is to patrol a frontier 1,200 kilometres long and to observe that the two parties maintain the cease-fire agreed upon on August 8.

The Minister made reference to the one million casualties on both sides, and he also made reference to the disruption in the movement of ships and air traffic in the Persian Gulf. We regret, on this side of the House, that he made no reference to the recent and very tragic event of the U.S. navy shooting down a civilian passenger plane carrying the Iranian flag, which somehow represented a turning point for international global outrage as to what was happening in this area, and perhaps it was significant in bringing about the negotiations at the United Nations.

If we look to the past, we see that over the past 39 years Canada has participated in 15 peacekeeping missions involving 77,000 military personnel. Over the past 39 years, Canadian personnel went to Kashmir, Korea, Jerusalem, Lebanon, Zaire, New Guinea, Yemen, India, Pakistan, Egypt, the Dominican Republic, Cyprus, the Golan Heights and Afghanistan.

It is important to remember that in the performance of our international peacekeeping duty 78 Canadians have lost their lives and, in addition to that, 312 died in Korea. That represents our contribution until now. As to the future, it is anticipated that as many as 1,000 Canadian troops may be requested next year to oversee the cease-fire in Namibia. Other requests may follow, possibly to serve in Nicaragua, Kampuchea and in the western Sahara.

• (1630)

The Minister made a reference to the White Paper which, if looked at close range, merely affirms Canada's current commitment to international peacekeeping. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) proposes that future peacekeeping requests be judged on a case by case basis. While doing that he confirms the mechanics of peacekeeping but does not address the policy of peacekeeping. The White Paper, in other words, fails to recognize the need for developing a more coherent and effective framework for United Nations intervention in regional conflicts so that peacekeeping forces are utilized effectively but not as an indefinite substitute to negotiated peace.

It is interesting to note as an over-all assessment to the White Paper what Professor Keating of the University of Alberta wrote through his following observation:

> The Conservative Government's White Paper is guided by a cold war image of the Soviet threat, a concentration on the instruments of warfare and a rather benign view of American military interests in the Arctic.

What is the Liberal approach? We believe that peacekeeping must be discussed in relation to peacemaking. Canada in this process, of course, could play a pivotal role as a founding member of the United Nations and a leading force behind the creation of the peacekeeping idea. From the very beginning and under the constant and passionate leadership of Canadians in our foreign service and subsequently that of former Prime Minister Lester Pearson, Canada has a special responsibility to reflect on this role and how it could be improved. A Liberal Government would play an active role in encouraging the United Nations to review its peacekeeping strategies with the objective of making them more effective, aware of the change also in the position taken recently by the Soviet Union which is now actively willing to support United Nations peacekeeping activities for the first time.

The Liberal Party has called for Canada to seek re-election to a seat on the Security Council in part as a means to facilitate this initiative. In addition, a Liberal Government will review its own peacekeeping policies in order to give them a better framework of principles and goals which are sensitive to current and emerging trends in regional conflict and the possibilities for resolving them.

Some 20 years ago in his book Peace in the Family of Man former Prime Minister Pearson concluded in a manner still relevant today:

> We must apply the science and art of politics to the affairs of the international community with the intensity of personal involvement that we give to domestic affairs.

That is an interesting linkage. He continued:

> In the past, conflicts have led to wars within national boundaries. But normally we don't go to war over such disputes. If we do, we call it civil war. We must reach the point where we consider war between countries as civil war.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Pearson was right then as he is right today because we are just beginning to consider war between two countries as a form of civil war affecting the global community, the entire international community.

This debate, which we welcome today, would be incomplete without looking at the United Nations in perspective. The late John Holmes, the former Under Secretary for External Affairs, in his lucid and incisive analysis of the United Nations entitled The United Nations in Perspective and published in the series Behind the Headlines wrote the following interesting thoughts:

> A new United Nations, if we could possibly build one, could not be very different in shape from the present one. In the meantime, however, the alternative would be anarchy, the naked clash of national wills, without institutions or rules in place to avert conflict. That was the situation that the great Hague peace conferences at the beginning of the century were intended to correct. The efforts at The Hague came too late to prevent the disaster of 1914, but the lesson was learned.
> Out of the First World War came the first try. Although the League was regarded as a failure, it was taken for granted throughout the Second World War that we would try again. The second effort is broader and deeper and has already lasted twice as long. There is no fast track to peace; it requires constant vigilance and invention.

In conclusion, we in the Liberal Party support Canadian participation in the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observers Group to observe the ceasefire between Iran and Iraq and hope that Canada's contribution to this international initiative will result in an end to hostilities and a lasting peace. This motion is consistent with the tradition and the history of the Liberal Party of Canada.

We wish our military group well and we hope that their mission will be crowned with success.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to participate in this debate with rather mixed emotions. On the one hand I and my Party are totally in agreement with the move the Government has made with respect to sending peacekeepers to that war-torn area of the world, Iran and Iraq. We support the Government's initiative and we also send our best wishes for a safe and speedy return to the Canadian soldiers serving there. We know they will acquit themselves with both confidence and distinction, but that goes without saying. That is the motherhood aspect of this motion today.

What confuses me or makes me somewhat angry is that we are here today debating a motion with which all three Parties are in agreement. There is no need really for a vote later on today and probably there will not be one when this same Government—I am not directing my anger at the Minister in this case but at the Government itself—closed down debate on the free trade Bill yesterday at report stage by using closure. It has on its plate right now the child care Bill, the broadcasting Bill and tax reform, all very major, contentious issues. All we hear on radio and television and read in the media these days is that the Opposition is somehow dragging out this session and preventing the Government from getting on with its legislative timetable. Yet, here this afternoon, the Government has seen fit to spend several hours, or what was supposed to have been several hours had we gotten started at three o'clock, debating this issue that is not contentious.

I think quite strongly that there is a deep reason for debating this matter this afternoon and that is to deflect public attention away from the very contentious issues in the Government's White Paper, the cold war rhetoric contained in it which relates more to the early 1950s than the to the 1980s and 1990s, and instead bring on a new, refreshing emphasis on the peace aspects of defence.

I agree with the Minister and with the spokesperson for the Liberal Party that Canada has indeed an enviable record in peacekeeping. I also want to stress that the New Democratic Party and its predecessor, the CCF, were very staunch supporters of peacekeeping long, long before Suez, going back to the late 1940s and the early 1950s. That is another reason why we do not quarrel at all with this initiative on the part of the Government.

We know that it would have been a terrible waste had we decided not to send our troops to the Iran-Iraq area, considering how well trained they are, considering the fact that they are experts in communications, and considering the fact that Canadian troops and Canada are highly regarded throughout the world. I will not say it is refreshing, because no one really likes the idea of sending troops to a potentially dangerous area of the world, although we know it is a duty and a responsibility to do so, but I think it is particularly gratifying that Canada was called upon and that Canada has responded in a positive fashion. Had we not, we would have been letting down not only ourselves but, more important, the United Nations.

It is nice to see a revitalization, and I hope it is a genuine one, in respect for the United Nations, respect which has been sadly lacking for the last 10 or 15 years during which superpower politics have dominated the world stage. Here is a golden opportunity for middle powers such as Canada, with the United Nations, to re-enter the international field and to declare to the world that the future of mankind does not and should not depend on decisions taken in Moscow and Washington alone but that we are all members of the world community and we all have a contribution to make toward world peace and keeping world peace.

I mentioned a moment ago that I suspect very strongly that the real impetus behind debating this motion today was to deflect public opinion away from the more controversial aspect of the government White Paper. For a long time now, the nuclear-powered submarine program has been at the forefront of criticism. There are those who are very strongly for it, such as government Members, and there are those who are very strongly opposed to it, such as members of the two opposition Parties, and there is also a split in the academic community and in the general community.

I have another regret. Today we are discussing a motherhood issue dealing with the Canadian military and its capabilities, but we have never had an opportunity to debate fully in the House the government White Paper. That White Paper was introduced some 14 months ago and we have yet to have a full-fledged debate on a Canadian defence policy. I think that is regrettable. I suspect one of the reasons we have not debated it is that, in addition to the nuclear-powered submarine issue, there is another major issue in the White Paper, namely, the total force concept or total force approach to increasing and expanding the Canadian Armed Forces.

Very few people in Canada fully appreciate that according to some experts who have done some arithmetic, it would cost the Canadian taxpayers, to complete that total force concept and put it into practice, not $8 billion as the Government alleges the nuclear-powered submarines will cost, but $27 billion over 15 years. I would hope that the Minister would someday give us an opportunity to debate in full the government White Paper so that the people of Canada will have an opportunity to know what the three Parties think about that White Paper.

The motion before us reads:

> That this House supports Canadian participation in the United Nations Iran/Iraq Military Observers Group (UNIIMOG) to observe the ceasefire between Iran and Iraq and hopes that Canada's contribution to this international initiative will result in an end to hostilities and a lasting peace.

I have already risen in the House briefly to put on the record my Party's thoughts on this issue, so today we are just a little bit late in debating the peacekeeping force. I want to reiterate right now what I said the other day to put in context my remarks of this afternoon. A few days ago, I said:

> Mr. Speaker, this party has always been a strong advocate of the United Nations and its peacekeeping role. That's why I'm very happy that Canada is taking part in the peacekeeping force that's on its way to the Persian Gulf. And I'd like to offer my party's official support for this action. We can only enhance Canada's international reputation as a peaceful nation by helping to supervise the ceasefire between Iran and Iraq. We all hope this will also contribute to the final resolution of this conflict. It might even show other troubled nations that there is a way to resolve their differences peacefully. And it will surely strengthen the role of the United Nations in resolving international disputes.
> I wish our troops well. May they have a safe trip and, more importantly, a speedy return. Of course, that depends on Iran and Iraq. They must show the world that they are willing to resolve their differences peacefully. A ceasefire is better than war. But it's not enough. The world needs a lasting peace in this troubled region.

There is no doubt, as far as the New Democratic Party is concerned, that the move made by the Minister and the Government is completely acceptable to us. I suppose I could add one proviso, and that is that I sincerely hope that our presence there will not, if it is extended too long, become a part of the problem rather than the resolution of the problem. That is always a danger involved in peacekeeping, although I am not blaming anyone at this point.

For example, I firmly believe that we should remain in Cyprus. It is an extremely volatile island. I do not know if they will ever resolve their problems, quite frankly. However, it would appear that our presence there along with that of the other U.N. units has, over the years, become part of the problem. We have been responsible, unwittingly, for extending the problem without really having an opportunity to put pressure on the two sides to come to a resolution. As long as we are there, the two sides in Cyprus can say: "Well, at least we are safe, we are not shooting at each other, so let us continue, disunited, and at each other's throats figuratively speaking".

I might add that I was the only representative of the three Parties in the House to make the statement that I just quoted that day. One wonders why, if the Government thought the matter was so important, we did not have this debate two weeks ago when the peacekeeping force was being put into place.

• (1650)

We should also consider what happened yesterday in the House, and I have already alluded to that. The Government just rammed its omnibus trade Bill through report stage. In fact, it used time allocation, commonly referred to as closure, to limit debate. It plans to give us just two more days to speak on the most controversial issue facing Canadians. By the Prime Minister's own admission, it is the most important single piece of legislation ever to come before any Canadian Parliament. The Government says it cannot afford to give us any more time. Yet it has a whole day to devote to this motion. One has to ask why, although I think in my opening remarks I addressed that issue, or at least gave my opinion on it. I also mentioned child care and other Bills such as the Broadcasting Act and so on which are being held up and which I think deserve immediate attention.

For days in advance everyone knew Canada was going to participate in the Iran-Iraq peacekeeping force. It was on every news broadcast and in every newspaper in the country. Yet the Minister had to schedule a big press conference to get his face on television. In fact, he interrupted his vacation to fly back and get in on the act. He even arranged to fly the press corps to Petawawa to get the right visual backdrop for the TV cameras. However, he did not count on the weather. That cancelled his flying circus. Instead of just releasing the details, he rescheduled the whole event in Ottawa and kept his officials and the media waiting until he arrived. Then he told everyone what they already knew: Mission accomplished. It sounds like a Keystone Cops farce but it shows how desperate the Government is becoming.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Do you never take the high road?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): As politicians in this House we like to get on television as much as anyone.

Mr. Mayer: We are looking at the farce right now standing up in the House.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): On an issue like this could it not have been left up to the military to handle the public relations?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): You are a joke.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Would it not have been acceptable to the people of Canada to have senior military personnel make the announcement and officially wish the troops good luck and Godspeed without making a big television extravaganza out of the whole thing?

The Government is desperate to get out of the hole it dug with its White Paper on national defence. Canadians were embarrassed by the White Paper's cold war rhetoric and expensive schemes like the nuclear powered submarine program. It looks as though the subs have been put on the back-burner, at least for the time being, and maybe forever. We do not know. However, I want to take this opportunity to underline the Government's philosophy and show how far out of touch it is with the reality of the thinking in this country today.

The Conservative White Paper said "Canadian security policy must respond to an international environment dominated by the rivalry between East and West. These two groups of nations, each led by a superpower, are in conflict". It went on from there, but I will not quote at length. The Conservatives are still locked in the cold war. Meanwhile, Canadians have left the Conservatives behind in their thinking. They realize the world is constantly changing. For instance, a poll just released the other day shows that most Canadians see the conflict between the superpowers as the greatest threat to their security. The Conservative philosophy does not fit.

Neither does the Conservative cold war have any relevance to peacekeeping. I am tempted to ask: Which side of the cold war are we on in Iran and Iraq? The fact is that Canadians do not want their Government to choose sides and heighten international conflict. They want Canada to be the honest broker working for international peace. That clearly is not a priority with the Government. In fact, if you look at the Government's White Paper you will see that the Conservatives devoted just four paragraphs out of an 89-page document to peacekeeping. That shows you that support for the UN and peacekeeping really is not important to the Government, at least not at the time the White Paper was put together.

Canadians have rejected the Conservative cold war vision of the world, and the Minister knows it. Now he is on his own little media campaign to try to tie his Government's image to peacekeeping. Otherwise, why are we not debating the submarine program here in the House? Why are we not debating the total force structure program here in the House? Both of those issues are contentious. I am not saying the programs are totally wrong. I am not saying they are totally right. I am asking why we are not having a Commons debate so Members can stand up and express their views on these very contentious aspects of the Government's White Paper? Canadians are not going to buy this kind of smoke-screen. They know what the Government believes and this little debate is not going to change their minds.

I would like to point out that my Party has been consistent in its support for peacekeeping and the UN. I would like to contrast our position with that of the Conservative Party by quoting from our policy document Canada's Stake in Common Security. It reads: "Canada's primary responsibility in its own defence is to contribute to the development of a just international order. The role of the United Nations is central to this process".

It is in that spirit that I am proud to repeat my Party's support for Canada's participation in the observer force being set up between Iran and Iraq. I would like to see this country doing more of this kind of operation. In fact, I have called for Canada to have forces which might be better structured to respond to international calls for assistance. Some people do not like that idea, but I think Canada's participation in this force shows there is an important role for it to play. There is a need for a highly mobile force which can quickly deploy to trouble spots around the world. It helps the cause of peace. It also strengthens the role of the United Nations. I firmly believe that if the world is ever going to pull back from the brink of destruction it will take a concerted international effort. That is a multinational effort, not just a superpower effort. The mechanism to co-ordinate this effort should be the UN.

I might add that all member nations of the UN, including Canada, are going to have to push for this development. They are going to have to get away from the bi-polar cold war mentality that the Government's White Paper exemplifies. In order to take on an expanded role, the UN is going to have to demonstrate that it can be effective in resolving conflicts between nations. Peacekeeping demonstrates effectiveness. That is why I am pleased to support this motion on its substance, not as a public relations exercise. My Party has supported peacekeeping in the past. It supports the effort in Iran and Iraq. I hope we will have the opportunity to support more of these types of contributions in the future if, when and where they are needed. Peacekeeping is really one of the most important contributions Canada can make in the world today.

I would much rather see our defence dollars spent in a much more cost effective way for peace rather than structuring this total force program which the Minister introduced through his White Paper. It will be extremely costly and it is not geared for peacekeeping. The total force concept is tied into our commitment, I think a very unwise commitment, to the central flank in Europe. That is what is driving the cost. If we were not committed to establishing and maintaining a miniaturized German army or French army or British army on the central flank in Europe, we would not need the vast expenditures for new armour to replace the Leopard I tanks, or for new or better or more motorized artillery and all the other big ticket items that go into the total package of $27 billion.

Why not redirect our energy and our resources, both human and material, toward highly specialized and very effective defensive postures such as peacekeeping and the northern flank and our connection to Norway? To me that is much more credible than what we are trying to do here. Under the White Paper we are trying, quite frankly, to take on too many commitments and spread ourselves too thin at a tremendous cost.

• (1700)

In conclusion, we wish the Canadian troops safety. We know they will be effective. We know they will do us proud. We hope they will be back home as soon as is practically possible.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, in light of the Hon. Member's strong support of the work of the peacekeeping force, have he and his Party reconsidered their decision to pull out of NATO?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I fail to see either the logic or the substantive relationship between NATO and peacekeeping. We are in Cyprus—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): You don't understand one thing about defence.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Just cool it. We know you are in trouble in your constituency here in Ottawa, so just cool it.

We are in Cyprus and we are in the Middle East. As far as I know, the Golan Heights is not in NATO, and as far as I know, Syria and Israel are not part of NATO. We are there to keep the peace. What that has to do with being in or out of NATO boggles the imagination.

I thank the Member for drawing this point to my attention. If some day we could disengage from these secret military alliances and their tremendously heavy expenditures we could afford to do more peacekeeping, perhaps in southern Africa, Central America, and so on. We would be freer to act with dispatch. We would have the resources and would not be tied down to any secret entangling military alliance. I do not see the logical relationship in that question.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment. I have been in the House for nine years and have had occasion in the past to spend some time with the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). I have always regarded him as one of the better parliamentarians in the House. I listen to his speeches with a considerable amount of interest because I believe, as does everyone who has had an opportunity to listen to him in the past, that many of the things he has had to say are well thought out and contain a lot of reason and common sense.

I therefore find it very strange today that he uses such vindictive tones and is so mean-spirited in his comments in the House today. I find that totally out of character for the Hon. Member for Brant that I have come to know, especially on such a non-partisan issue. As he said in his speech, we all wish the very best for our troops. They are performing a function which is very desirable in the world and I find it very unfortunate that the Hon. Member should use such a nasty tone in his remarks and impute motives to the Government and the Minister which are totally out of the context of what we are discussing and, above all, out of context with the Hon. Member that I have come to know.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am angry because we have been waiting for over a year to have a full-fledged debate on the Department of National Defence in the House—not in committee, but here in the House. We have been waiting for that for 14 months now. That White Paper is fraught with all kinds of contentious, argumentative issues.

After waiting 14 months, we have a motion before the House with which no one could disagree. We have a motherhood issue, as I have repeated many times, with which we are all in agreement. In fact, earlier today the Government wanted a vote on this motion in order to dress up its image. The Government suddenly realizes that peace is breaking out and it wants to bury the cold war jargon and rhetoric which was in that paper. The Members of the New Democratic Party are not going to let the people forget that. There is no question in my mind that that is the motive for this motion today. Why wouldn't I be angry?

Incidentally, I take the Minister's earlier statements to heart and I thank him for them. I will respond in kind. I have a great deal of respect for him. I have a great deal of respect for the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty). I only wish that we could have a real debate in this House on the whole defence issue. We are coming close to an election and I think the people of Canada are entitled to that kind of debate.

Today is the only opportunity I have had with the Minister in the House, since the initial response to the introduction of the White Paper, to put some of these criticisms on the record. That is why I am hot under the collar. I am not very pleased with the way in which this motion has been brought forward as if it were the only defence policy on the Government's books at this time.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to intervene on questions and comments, but I think that it may be appropriate that I do so briefly in order to explain again the motive of the Government in moving this motion.

The Government has committed some 500 troops to service outside of Canada, service which is potentially hazardous.

Mr. Benjamin: So?

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member says "so?".

Mr. Benjamin: Everybody agrees.

Mr. Beatty: I think it is of interest to Members of Parliament when a commitment like that is made. Indeed, dating back to the time of Louis St. Laurent when a commitment was made to send troops, under the auspices of the United Nations, to Korea, an undertaking was given that when major commitments of this nature were made the House of Commons would be informed and would have a chance to give its approval.

Frankly, I am astonished that all Members of Parliament would not have welcomed an opportunity to be consulted with regard to an engagement such this which involves the commitment of Canadian troops abroad. I am also surprised that they have not approached this discussion on a level considerably higher than that which we have heard.

We have been accused by the hon. gentleman of being partisan. The only mean-spiritedness and partisanship which we have heard today has not come from this side of the House. I counsel other Hon. Members in their interventions today to get back to the subject. We have a major new commitment which will enable us to promote peace in an area of the world which has been racked by war. We have an obligation as Members of Parliament to examine the commitment, to express ourselves fully and openly on this issue and to eschew partisanship for a change.

I do not find it disturbing that this is a partisan forum. However, there are some issues which should be above partisanship and above exploitation. I hope that all Members of this House who participate in this debate today will avail themselves of the opportunity to put their views on the record in a way which brings credit to this institution.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in debate the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) indicated that he was looking for a real debate on the White Paper. Yet, when asked by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), he refused to elaborate on his Party's position on NATO. I find that somewhat inconsistent with his statement that he wanted a full and complete debate. He was critical of the Government for not providing the opportunity to debate defence policy, yet when asked about his Party's own defence policy he seemed to shy away. Very simply, why is the Member so ashamed of his Party's position on defence?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I did answer the question, as a matter of fact, but I will respond again. It is the policy of my Party, which policy was introduced, debated, and passed by a series of conventions, not hatched in the back rooms as the policy of the Liberal Party is so often written, to eventually, if we form the Government, withdraw from NATO. No one has hidden that. In fact, we are very proud of that policy.

We have said that if we form the next Government we will not discuss or negotiate a withdrawal from NATO in the first Parliament. If we are re-elected in a subsequent—not the subsequent but a subsequent—Parliament—and that is right there in black and white, all one need do is read it, it's been out there since April in our policy paper—we would begin discussions and then negotiations for the ultimate withdrawal of Canada from NATO provided that at the time of the discussions we would not be upsetting the military balance between NATO and the Warsaw Pact. We would hope that our example would encourage others. That is the one track.

The other track is that we would maintain a strong and viable defence. In fact, whenever it has the opportunity the Government accuses the NDP of promoting a defence policy that is more expensive than theirs, which is absolutely wrong.

• (1710)

We are not soft on defence. We are simply saying that eventually, in order to maintain peace in Europe, we will have to develop a better system than simply massive retaliation. That is why we call upon the nations of Europe to begin to work toward the implementation and application of a co-operative and common security.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to support the motion now before the House. First of all, I would like to expand on what was said by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) regarding my Government's desire to unreservedly support this peace keeping mission, namely that this exercise is in line with the many recommendations contained in the White Paper on Defence published in 1987.

Mr. Speaker, according to the White Paper, we feel that the deployment of our armed forces under the auspices of the United Nations or other international organizations, for the purpose of peacekeeping or cease-fire surveillance, serves our own national interests as well as those of the world as a whole. I am sure that my colleagues share this view. That is why on October 1987, we agreed to reinforce our contingent in Cyprus to compensate for the withdrawal of Swedish troops. For the same reason we more recently agreed to join the group of military observers in Afghanistan and Pakistan. And for that very same reason, we did not hesitate to accede to the request of the Secretary General of the United Nations that we participate in the UN Iran-Iraq operation.

We are certainly not rushing blindly into this undertaking. In fact, every operation is considered very objectively. Before the Government agrees to participate, it must establish that the operation is in line with the policies set forth in the White Paper. In this case as in others, the Government made its decision after considering to what extent the Iran-Iraq situation met the following criteria:

First of all, is there a clear and feasible mandate? It is obvious that the two warring factions agreed with the Secretary General on the UN's mandate, which is to supervise the cease-fire so that negotiations can be initiated with a view to a final settlement.

Second, will the principal adversaries, having agreed to a cease-fire, also agree to have Canada take part in the operation? Here again, Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

Third, is this operation likely to serve the cause of peace and to lead to a long-term political settlement? Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that violent, bitter and costly massacres and battles have ceased, and we hope for good. Furthermore, negotiations between the two countries are to start tomorrow, August 25, in Geneva. We cannot, of course, anticipate the outcome of these negotiations, but we can only hope that the outcome will be positive.

Fourth, we try to find out whether the size and international structure of the Force are appropriate to fulfil the mandate it has been given, and whether our participation in peacekeeping forces will in any way harm Canada's relations with other countries. Having heard what the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) said on this subject, Mr. Speaker, the House will not doubt that this condition has also been met.

Fifth, what we must keep in mind is whether our participation in a particular peacekeeping mission could hurt possible future commitments by Canada. Some of you may be wondering whether we would still be able to fulfil other commitments, given that such a large number of our communications specialists are taking part in this United Nations operation. The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, we have made a very great effort and we also participate in other peacekeeping missions. However, these efforts might limit our ability to accede in the immediate future to a request for peacekeeping forces on the same scale.

Therefore, to meet additional requests, we will have to ensure that United Nations requests for our assistance are as varied as possible. Furthermore, the Government has been careful to make sure that our considerable effort for peace between Iran and Iraq will not prevent us from meeting our other peacetime commitments.

The sixth point that the Government considered before deciding to participate is whether there is an identifiable authority that can support the operation and influence the opponents. In this case, of course, the United Nations is such an authority and it has the support of the Security Council and almost all member countries.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we must know whether our participation will be adequately and fairly funded and whether the necessary logistic support will be provided. I believe that I can tell the House that the United Nations is seriously attending to this. In addition, Canadian troops will have all the logistic support that my Government is able to provide them.

I believe that I have shown you, Mr. Speaker, that the support given by Members of this House to Canada's participation in this United Nations mission is justified. This participation is based on an objective analysis of the situation and of the results that will likely flow from our efforts.

So, Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in supporting the resolution before the House and in urging Hon. Members to do the same without reservation.

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Canadians that today we are dealing with a resolution which states:

> That this House supports Canadian participation in the United Nations Iran/Iraq Military Observers Group (UNIIMOG) to observe the ceasefire between Iran and Iraq and hopes that Canada's contribution to this international initiative will result in an end to hostilities and a lasting peace.

I am sure all Members of the House applaud that resolution and the fact that there are discussions taking place in that area of the world. I am sure all Members applaud the fact that Canada can play a constructive part in this endeavour.

One of the sad facts about being a member of the human race is that so much of the resources of nations go toward military activity when these resources are so badly needed for human development and greater justice between the poor nations of this world and the rich nations, of which we are one.

This peacekeeping activity on behalf of Canada is a sign of hope. It is a light in the darkness, showing that there is a possibility to transform the way in which we deal with conflicts in the world. Rather than having to deal with conflicts through violence, we can do it through diplomatic means. Soldiers, who are very necessary in the kind of world we live in today, can be changed into policemen so we can have a world in which people, metaphorically speaking, can walk the streets of this planet with a sense of safety.

• (1720)

I just want to indicate that I think we all should applaud the fact that we have an opportunity as a nation to put some of our resources into a peacekeeping function which can bring some hope that there is a better way of doing things. I must note at this time that it was at the initiative of a Canadian Government and a Canadian Prime Minister that the whole process of peacekeeping on this planet was started. That was, of course, the initiative of former Prime Minister Lester Pearson. He was a Liberal, and I must acknowledge that in the past the Liberal Party has done a number of good things, and that is one of them. I do not want to be partisan about this. I just want to say that this is a beacon of hope for mankind, for the human race. There was a conflict in which we could see no possibility of resolution, but now Canadians are playing their part to help bring about stability and peace to the area.

[Translation]

Mrs. Landry: Mr. Speaker, in response to the comments of my colleague I might say that the general feeling is that the people of Canada, the Government and all Members of the House are proud of our country's peacekeeping role. Indeed, ever since our Government took office, we have been firmly committed to promote worldwide peace.

Of course the Hon. Member has indicated that we should also make a concerted effort to foster development. In that respect, as Minister responsible for CIDA I am proud of the commitments made by our Government to support the development of third-world nations. I would suggest that our positions have something in common, in the sense that we all seek to restore peace and stability throughout the world and come to the assistance of poorer nations.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, during his speech, the Minister indicated that not only would the troops be taken care of but that the families of the troops would be taken care of. I find that statement somewhat strange. On June 20 of this year six military personnel were killed in an accident at CFB Chilliwack. Members will recall there was a premature explosion of plastic explosives. One of those who were killed was Lieutenant Dennis Aucoin. His parents lived in New Brunswick and requested the military to pay their airfare so they could attend their son's funeral. The military refused to pay the airfare of the parents so that they could go to the funeral of their son. My constituent happens to be the sister of one of the deceased. So I find it somewhat odd that the Minister could stand and say he would take care of the families of the troops when not so long ago—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The questions and comments, as the Hon. Member knows, must be on the speech of the Minister of External Relations (Mrs. Landry), not the first Minister who spoke.

Mr. Nunziata: Can she explain why her Government refused to pay airfare for the parents to attend—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe that question is not in order. Resuming debate.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I rise with a great deal of pride as a Canadian, one who has always supported very sincerely the efforts of the Canadian Armed Forces, along with my own Party, in the useful role they play not only nationally but internationally. I think that quite often the image of the Armed Forces is misconstrued. When we talk about the Canadian military community, people have a tendency to think only of getting ready for a war or getting ready for combat of some kind in some part of the world. It is looked upon as having serious rules and regulations that do not always apply in other areas of society. However, that is the reality of any defence community.

Any armed forces must have the solid backing of the Government and the people of the country they serve. They must have strong backing on issues such as the peacekeeping role they are presently playing in Iraq and Iran. That should be in keeping with the role, I would think, of all political Parties in this country and every Canadian citizen.

Through our Armed Forces, we as a nation, are playing an important role in bringing about peace in a war-torn part of the world. Sometimes people ask why we should be involved over there, why not let them go to it? That is an old fashioned way of looking at wars today. Battles going on anywhere in the world must be subdued. Every attempt must be made to keep them under control. Indeed, this battle in Iraq and Iran has not been a small one, particularly in the eyes of the people involved, and it is very important that we do our utmost to bring peace to that war-torn part of the world. By doing so, we will be preventing any spread of that war through accident.

When we review the wars that have started over the years of world history, we can see that many, many accidents have occurred which have been the cause of world wars even though the combatants have been prepared for war. It takes one incident to trigger the whole event.

I would like to say a word about this motion today simply because this is one of many important roles the Canadian Armed Forces have played in peacekeeping around the world. As has already been stated in this debate, peacekeeping on the part of the Canadian Armed Forces was introduced by the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, and one of its greatest proponents in international affairs was the late Hon. Lester B. Pearson who became a world renowned diplomat as a Canadian.

I must say something at this time in debate on behalf of the actual participants. I want to say that, living as I do three miles from the Canadian forces base gate at CFB Petawawa, I have a deep sense of pride in the way this whole operation has been put together. A number of dedicated officers formed a committee under a commanding officer and simply started putting certain roles into play. The Minister is in the House today and I am sure he would agree with me that an operation such as this is almost a miniature mobilization plan. A number of people came in from Calgary to join the group. There were approximately 350 personnel to start with at the base at Petawawa. Some 20 personnel came in from the Signals Corps at CFB Kingston. About 40 reserves came in from all across Canada, registered and were assimilated into the force.

There were others from many centres across Canada. In a matter of days these professional people in our Armed Forces put a number of troops together to be sent to a very important task in the Middle East, to observe the lines and the agreement that was laid down by the United Nations and signed by both Iraq and Iran. As observers and communications people on the scene, it is their job to report any infractions of the U.N. mandate as it has been laid down.

That says a great deal for the members of our Armed Forces and our communications role, that they should be chosen to communicate all those messages back to the U.N. and to co-ordinate the efforts of our Canadian peacekeeping troops as they go ahead in their role, working with other internationals. Only approximately 15 of our own Canadian troops are playing the role as observers. The rest are heavily involved in the communications side. Certainly, in an area of the world where communications are practically non-existent, it is an extremely important role for the Canadian Forces to take over.

When this whole operation was started, the manner in which those vehicles were put through a routine was almost like a major automobile company producing cars. A large number of trucks and jeeps were sent to the Middle East. Those vehicles were taken out of training action. They were put through a long building. In the first room they were screened and made ready for painting. They went into the next room to be painted, and when they came out at the far end of the building they were all painted white with the U.N. sign on them. It was a mass production job, and this was part of it.

Then there is the transportation of these vehicles. This does not only involve sending a number of people off to the Middle East. It involves other people here transporting those vehicles and putting them on to aircraft. In this case, many of the drivers went to the Middle East with the vehicle that they would be driving when they got there. All their papers had to be cleared and in order.

I want to say a word or two about publicity. Members of the Armed Forces were seen signing their wills before they left. I believe that that was very crass publicity. It was terrible, and I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker. Quite often when the military community have soldiers leave on military schemes, the CO has the right at any time to ask them if their personal effects are in order. They can check their wills when they leave the country on active duty, and they can check their wills when they go for active duty on peacekeeping. It is a normal routine.

The fact that this was a special move on peacekeeping in the Middle East, that so many media personnel zeroed in on this issue, added to the fear and concern felt by the families of the Armed Forces personnel that those families did not need. The head of the household is going off for a peacekeeping mission for a six-month period and at the end of that period we will see what happens then because it is a very important mission. However, it is important that those families also receive support.

That is another thing that has been put together by the administration on the bases. Mothers who are left at home with families and who do not have a means of going to the grocery store are being looked after. I believe that that story should be told. It is normal procedure for a military community to support its own people. Any questions that are raised in an opportunistic manner about that should be discredited. Those people are not only doing a job for this nation, they are also doing a job for many peoples in the world in their role as peacekeepers.

Many people will talk about the Koreas, Cyprus, and Suez in 1956, which was another very successful venture. There was another operation in the Middle East in 1974 and 1975 when 1,037 peacekeeping troops were in the Middle East. Most of those troops were stationed in Egypt at the time, but many were scattered throughout the Middle East.

In May, 1975, I had the opportunity of travelling to the Middle East. I spent approximately six days with the commanding officer of our Middle East forces. One thing that struck me as we travelled throughout the Middle East at that time was the respect shown to the Canadian forces by people of all nations.

We must remember when members of the Canadian Forces are abroad, they are among the best diplomats that we have in our government service. The Armed Forces are not supposed to be political. However, when members of the Armed Forces go abroad they are totally capable of dealing with nationals on an equal basis, because they learn the system before they go. They are always well briefed. They are also diplomats because they know how to deal with people. They relate to those people. Why? Because they are well briefed on the local situation, and they are well briefed on members of the other nations of the world with whom they will be serving.

As a communications group in the Middle East at the present time, our forces are sending the messages back to the United Nations, back to the national Governments of Iraq and Iran, and back to the commanding officers of the Iraqi and Iranian forces, on behalf of all the military personnel who are serving in the Middle East.

I have mentioned the roles of members of the Canadian Armed Forces politically, diplomatically. Their third role is as professional soldiers. Indeed, they are professional soldiers, and they can play their role well. They can make decisions when decisions have to be made. For this reason they are respected.

I observed our U.N. General go into peacekeeping headquarters in the Middle East. He was totally listened to and totally respected because he knew what he was doing and he knew his business. One morning when we were leaving Beirut at 4.30 a.m. to go to the airport we were stopped in the street by individuals who stuck a sub-machine gun in each car window. The general talked to the individuals, and they backed off and let us through. What a good relationship our troops have with other countries. It was as if nothing had happened; it was just part of their role and part of their duty.

On behalf of our people serving in the Middle East, and certainly on behalf of the people here at home who helped them get to the Middle East and who put this peacekeeping corps together, I want to say that our troops today are playing a traditional role for the Canadian nation that has been going on for several decades.

When we talk about the expenses of peacekeeping, there is one thing about which I am not clear. If the Minister is going to make a closing statement, maybe he could comment on it. I know that when we serviced our own troops in the beginning, we were not given credit for funds spent on the United Nations ledger. It is a good thing that we are serving our own troops in the Middle East because otherwise there would be too much bureaucracy, it would take too long to get the supplies to them, vehicles would be sitting there for weeks or months on end because supplies were not forthcoming as a result of the red tape they have to go through in the United Nations. However, I hope that Canada is receiving full credit in terms of the ledger books of the United Nations for the money spent on maintaining our force while it is there, because I think that is very important. That is really part of our realistic contribution as well.

I think that the key thing that we must all remember on an occasion such as this is that peacekeeping will cost us money. The United Nations will cost us money. But what is the price that the world may pay and that we may pay otherwise? We have been through several major wars in the world, and we know what price we had to pay. Peacekeeping is worth the price. As a nation that is looked upon as a middle power in the world, as one who has many friends all over the world, I do not think that there is a greater tribute that can be paid to our Canadian Armed Forces than for the Parliament of Canada to say, "Thank you for your efforts and we wish you well", and to prove to them that we are solidly behind them in their mission.

Last week, I make a statement in this House, commenting on that very thing and saying that we all wish them well as they go about this very important task. Let us start looking at these people as being constructive. Let us look upon our Armed Forces not in the image of war or combat, but as having all the other qualities that they possess and put into practice.

Speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party—and I am sure at this time, remembering the efforts of previous Governments of Louis St. Laurent, Lester B. Pearson and so on—let us remember our forces in the Middle East and wish them every success and Godspeed. We know that they will do a good job on behalf of Canada, on behalf of the United Nations and, indeed, be a tremendous tribute to the world.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member who has just spoken and other Hon. Members. I want to begin my comment by saying that the Bible says, "Blessed is the peacemaker". I submit, and I think that this House would agree, that equally blessed is the peacekeeper.

I want to ask my hon. friend if he would care to comment, and I hope so will the next speaker, probably the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), on the continuing readiness of Canada in a peacekeeping and peacemaking role in our Armed Forces. I think there are 76 pages in the White Paper with four paragraphs about peacekeeping. It is a matter of the full-time maintenance of current equipment and the re-equipping of our Armed Forces in the area of communications and transport capacity. I have heard no dispute from the Minister or anybody else about the accuracy of news reports, that our people did not have their equipment, did not even have licence plates, in Iraq or Baghdad.

An Hon. Member: It has to be issued by the host country.

Mr. Benjamin: I hope that the Minister gave each of our personnel a pocketful of change to use the public telephone system, which they had to use in order to report back in the first couple of days on what it was that they were fighting. That just tells me that if the Minister, instead of sitting in his bathtub playing with model toy nuclear submarines, had spent as much time and attention on transport capacity and re-equipping our Armed Forces with the kind of communications expertise that we already have, those kinds of problems would not have occurred in the last few days. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he would care to comment on that and also on whether or not, as one who walked the green line in Nicosia in 1973, with Greek and Turkish people on each side 20 feet away with fully loaded automatic weapons, the Canadian Forces were fully trusted and respected because we were perceived to be impartial peacekeepers.

It is a role that we can play in a big way. It is not with nuclear submarines. It is the kind of role that Canada can play because of the first-class reputation that we have had. I am proud of people like Tommy Douglas and Stanley Knowles, who, back in the 1950s and 1960s, supported those kinds of peacekeeping operations that we have been involved in.

It is overwhelming. Canadians have always supported our peacekeeping role. They do now and they will continue to do so. I would like my hon. friend to comment about our capacity in that role and whether or not it has been kept up. I would hope that my hon. friend from Victoria would comment on that as well.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I do not buy the idea that communications and UN vehicles and so on were never in place for the Canadian Forces. As I mentioned in my own speech—

Mr. Benjamin: We did not have them ourselves.

Mr. Hopkins: —the ones that were not in place were the ones being maintained by the United Nations, because it took them about nine months to get repairs. That is why they were not in place.

To answer the Hon. Member's question, as I say, I do not buy the idea that everything was bad in the Armed Forces before this Government took over.

Mr. Benjamin: Who said that?

Mr. Hopkins: The modern communications system will allow the Canadian Armed Forces to communicate back home. They can communicate with the two Governments in Iraq and Iran. They can communicate with defence headquarters of those two countries. They can get back to the UN. That is why they are there, because they are good at communications and they can do the job.

As far as vehicles are concerned, I do not know whether it has been mentioned in this debate or not, but some of the vehicles that are going to be used could very well come from the Iraqian Armed Forces and some could come from the Iranian Armed Forces, because they were willing to give some of their vehicles over to the peacekeeping troops.

I think that says one solid thing. I would like to point this out to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. Benjamin). These two countries are fed up with war. They had to get out of this war by saving face on both sides.

Canadians, having the qualities that I have just described, are ideal to be sent there, because they have to be seen to be putting the same emphasis on Tehran as they are putting on Baghdad, they are supposed to be seen as putting the same emphasis on Iranian problems as they do on Iraqian problems,and this is part of the diplomatic role. I think that as far as peacekeeping in general is concerned we are not all perfect. I think that we as Canadians should support more transport facilities to assist our Armed Forces in their peacekeeping duties. We should not be too hesitant in accepting help from other nations. After all that helps us out in getting our forces there.

• (1750)

Mr. Benjamin: I didn't ask that.

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member asked me about modern communications.

Mr. Benjamin: Getting the equipment we need to have.

Mr. Hopkins: They have the equipment to operate, otherwise they would not be there. To me that is a very elementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member asks: "Should we upgrade our communications?" Any Canadian Government or any parliament of any country worth its salt would say that we should always be trying to keep our communications in the Armed Forces up to date. If we are going to be serious about peacekeeping, we should put some emphasis on transport to get them there. We should be learning from our mobilization plans and, as I mentioned in my speech, this is a miniature mobilization plan.

Mr. Benjamin: You don't buy submarines, you buy transport.

Mr. Hopkins: I think we all have a great deal to learn from this. Far be it from me to defend the Government in this case, but a Liberal Government would never be seen to be sending troops abroad and giving them a role to play if they did not have the communication system, the vehicles, with which to work.

With that I think I have answered the questions of my hon. friend. Things will fall into place as the Canadian Forces are there for a few days. Everything will be running smoothly. One must appreciate that it does take a little while to settle in and get things working the way they want them to work.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have available, first let me compliment the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) on his speech. It was in the proper form and stuck to the subject quite well.

As for the Member for whom I have always had a great deal of respect, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), the kindest thing I can say about his speech is that it was disappointing. If he feels so keenly that he wants a debate on the White Paper, then I would suggest he speak to the other Member who participated in this debate today and wanted to talk about the White Paper and use one of the opposition days for that purpose. Alternatively, they might have talked their House Leader out of spending five or six days of the time of the House in answering bells he insisted on ringing to ensure that Private Members' Bills which were unanimously supported by the House were voted on.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House Canada's long-standing tradition in peacekeeping. We have been an active and committed member of the United Nations since its inception. We have made an important contribution to world stability by participating in virtually every one of these peacekeeping efforts. It is the manner in which the Canadian Forces have operated that has given Canada a reputation that is worldwide. We have really no competitors when it comes to our very good peacekeeping activities.

Peacekeeping should not be confused with peacemaking, but frequently people do confuse the two. Incidentally, while I enjoyed most of the speech of the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke, a few remarks about his peacekeeping equipment brought back a memory of the time when I first visited Cyprus, which was 14 years ago. I went on from there to the Sinai Desert where we had another peacekeeping force. The Ghanains were next door to us on the line out in the middle of the Sinai Desert. I noticed that they were better equipped than the Canadian troops of that day, which makes you think that Idi Amin must have been better with his defence budgets than was the Liberal Government of the day.

We are no stranger to intervening between conflicting parties in this peacekeeping role of ours. I would like to mention particularly this one, which I consider to be a more delicate operation than most of the ones in which we have participated. The first thing that must happen about a peacekeeping mission is that both sides must wish to have peace. If one side only wants peace and the other side is still quarrelsome, Canada would run into the danger of being one of the antagonists in the operation, and we cannot afford to do that.

I was very pleased the Minister brought this motion to the House because I have always thought, as many parliamentarians do, that important resolutions such as this should be brought before us as quickly as possible and should always come before Parliament to get the feel of Members as to whether we should or should not participate in certain activities.

I would like to mention one operation in which we took part that was not under the aegis of the United Nations. I am speaking of the time we went into Vietnam in a peacekeeping role in 1973. The then Secretary of State for External Affairs had this to say:

> —peace "depends upon the parties to the peace agreement and not upon the International Commission of Control and Supervision. It is only if the parties are co-operating in a strict observance of the agreement—that the Commission can perform its function with any hope of success".

We went in to Vietnam "to supervise a peace, not to umpire a war". The same thing must apply here. We went there for 60 days and then gave another 60 days' warning that we did not like the way things were going and that we might pull out, and we did.

I want to take just one more minute to relate something about the Middle East and why I consider it to be a more delicate situation than most. There is a story that Field Marshall Slim liked to tell about becoming Chief of the General Staff in the days when Britain had an empire of considerable magnitude. When they appointed a new Chief of the General Staff they claimed there was a book of secret directions to which he should pay attention, a book he would get when he assumed the office. He finally assumed the office and went into the Chief's office, found the secret box, opened it up and there was a piece of paper with two items on it. It said: "Number One: Never invade Mainland China. Number Two: Never take for granted anything that happens in the Middle East." I trust the Minister will do the same.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, certainly we absolutely and unequivocally support the motion that has come forward. I think our defence critic has articulated the reasons.

I want to speak very briefly on the issue of the composition because I believe the Minister for National Defence (Mr. Beatty) in his press conference left the erroneous impression that the decision to bar women and people of Jewish and Arabic background from serving was a directive from the United Nations. In fact, I was in touch through my office with the United Nations and no such directive had been issued. Unfortunately, it seems to be endemic of this Government that when delicate questions like this come up it tends to go ahead without any kind of UN directive. Frankly, there have been occasions in the past when previous Liberal Governments have been asked to send contingents which excluded people on the basis of religious extraction and they refused.

I would suggest that the Minister either listen to the wisdom on this issue from the United Nations and not parade the fact that it was the United Nations that prevented women, Arabs and Jews from participating in this peacekeeping force because that was a decision taken by the Minister directly and by the Government. We feel that, as an over-all strategy, the United Nations may make that decision, but it should not have been made by the Canadian Government. It is typical of the attitude shown toward Captain Woodley. We think discrimination is something that should be addressed. Unfortunately, the Minister lost the opportunity to do so in this particular case.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

RETRACTION OF COMMENTS AND APOLOGY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I thank the Chair for giving me the opportunity to raise this question and I will be brief because I know it is now six o'clock.

This morning I attended at a panel session of the Canadian Bar Association in Montréal, Quebec. The panel included the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard), Barbara Frumm and Michel Roy. There was a discussion on a variety of aspects of politics and the media and the private lives of members of the public.

• (1800)

During the course of that panel discussion this morning, I made references to certain actions of the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) during the evening of Wednesday, July 27, and into the wee hours of the morning of Thursday, July 28. I understand that that Member has in fact taken offence to the references that I made to his conduct at that time, and in the circumstances, I certainly wish to take this first opportunity to retract in full and without hesitation the comments that I made with respect to the conduct of that Hon. Member, and further, to apologize to the Hon. Member for the offence he has taken.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CENTENNIAL FLAME RESEARCH AWARD ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-318, an Act respecting the establishment of the Centennial Flame Research Award, to publicize the contributions to Canadian public life of persons with disabilities.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member under the rules is now given the occasion to make a brief explanation of the Bill. I am sure he will have the attention of all Members.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, my enthusiasm to proceed I am glad to see is matched by the willingness of the House to hear me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boyer: Briefly, this Bill relates to the Centennial Flame fountain on Parliament Hill into which fountain tourists each year throw coins. Over $1,000 is gathered from that fountain. I was amazed to learn that the coins go into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The purpose of this Bill is to do something a little more special with those coins. In effect, a fellowship is to be established with the money obtained from the Centennial Flame fountain on Parliament Hill and each year the amount will be awarded to a Canadian with disabilities to do research on the contributions to Canadian public life and to the Parliament of Canada of individuals with disabilities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has had some expression of the feeling among all Parties for the support of the initiative that he and others are taking in this Bill.

It may be an opportunity for the Speaker to say that what we are trying to do here is in the cause of fellow Canadians who are disabled. I appreciate more than I can say the amount of support that I have received from all Hon. Members from the committee on which the Hon. Member serves, especially some Hon. Members who have put exceptional effort into the cause in which I know we all join. I hope this reflects the kind of leadership that is expected of us in this place.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to start these remarks by asking whether or not it is Saturday today, but I will not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: There have been discussions among the Parties and I appreciate the co-operation of the Opposition Members in coming to the following agreement which I think will meet the acceptance of the Members of the House. Before reading the motion, I should say that there is an understanding among the Parties that the items on the projected Order of Business for today, namely Bill C-148 and Bill C-153 will be dealt with in all stages by one o'clock p.m. today.

The motion I have to put to the House is this. I move:

That the House shall complete its consideration of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, by Friday, August 26, 1988, but with any division or divisions deferred until six o'clock p.m. Monday, August 29, 1988;

That Monday, August 29, 1988 and Tuesday, August 30, 1988, shall be designated as the two days allotted for third reading stage of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, pursuant to the order made August 16, 1988;

That any division requested on Bill C-130 shall be deferred until three o'clock p.m. on Wednesday, August 31, 1988;

That, following any such deferred division, or as the first order of Government business on Wednesday, August 31, 1988, as the case may be, Bill C-114, an Act to provide for greater certainty in the reconciliation of the personal interests and duties of office of Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, to establish a Conflict of Interest Commission and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, shall be called for second reading;

That second reading of Bill C-114 and voting on any question related thereto shall be completed not later than 5.45 o'clock p.m., Thursday, September 1, 1988.

That on that day, immediately following such proceedings, the House shall stand adjourned until 11 o'clock a.m. Tuesday, September 13, 1988, provided that (a) the provision of Standing Orders 5 and 68(3) and 68(4) shall remain in effect during such adjournment; (b) if necessary, at the request of the Government during such adjournment, Mr. Speaker shall fix a time for the purpose of the giving of Royal Assent to any Bills which have not been given Royal Assent, and that after the giving of Royal Assent to any such Bills, the House shall stand adjourned to the time and the day stated in this order; and

That, the reports of the legislative committees on Bill C-144, an Act to authorize payments by Canada toward the provision of child care services, and to amend the Canada Assistance Plan in consequence thereof, and Bill C-136, an Act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto and in relation to radio communication, (if they have not been tabled) shall be receivable by the Clerk of the House during such adjournment and shall be deemed to have been reported and stand on the Order Paper for report stage consideration on or after Tuesday, September 13, 1988, provided, that, the Notice Paper shall remain open until six o'clock p.m. on Monday, September 12, 1988, for the sole purpose of receiving report stage motions to either of these Bills.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that on behalf of our colleagues, we have been made aware of this proposal by the Government and we have agreed to the provisions contained in the motion. We are prepared, on our side of the House, to give the unanimous consent for its introduction and its passage.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to indicate the support of my Party for the orderly progression of events between now and next Thursday at 5.45 p.m. I appreciate the opportunity to have worked with the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) in developing this, but I do have some questions.

It is my understanding that following dealing with Bills C-148 and C-153 this morning, we will deal with Bill C-139 after 3 p.m. today with the anticipation that report stage will be completed this evening. In the first paragraph of the Government motion, it provides that the House will complete its consideration of Bill C-139 by Friday, August 26, but with any division or divisions deferred until 6 p.m., Monday, August 29. Is it the intention that votes on report stage amendments also be deferred, if any are called tonight, until Monday, or would we go through the normal procedure of having report stage votes dealt with this evening in order to move on to third reading tomorrow?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this procedure will work if the report stage amendment upon which a standing vote has been requested is dealt with this evening and the motion to concur in report stage immediately thereafter. That is the way it would have to work.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of other questions. There is nothing in the order that refers to a quorum call. I wonder if it is the Government's intention not to prolong hours after the normal time of adjournment because of this procedure we have developed, and the flip side of that would be that we would not endeavour to call quorum.

Perhaps the Deputy Government House Leader could indicate what legislation he anticipates we would be dealing with commencing September 13. Second, will we go back to regular hours as provided for under the Standing Orders? Perhaps he could give us an indication of the intention, once we return on the thirteenth, assuming we are not interrupted by an election call, with regard to standing committees of the House.

Mr. Lewis: There is an informal understanding among the Parties that during the period covered by the order, there would be no extension of hours under 9(4)(a), nor would there be any quorum calls. I did not feel we had to put that in the order, but it is a very legitimate question and I am pleased that this has been clarified.

Second, pending the completion of the legislative committee report and the tabling thereof with the Table up until September 12, it would be the Government's intention to call report stage of the broadcasting Bill on September 13.

With respect to the question of regular hours, the hours effective September 13 will be the normal hours of the House, but I am sure we can accommodate my friend if he in fact wishes to revert to the scintillating and stimulating long hours we have had over the past seven or eight weeks.

Mr. Angus: What about committees?

Mr. Lewis: I will be quite honest with my hon. friend. I have not got my head around what the standing committees will do. That is something we could think about, as to whether or not they want to start regular hours. I think that is basically in the hands of the standing committee chairmen and the members of the committee.

Mr. Cassidy: When's the election?

Mr. Lewis: Ask Nicolas.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before this fragile accommodation falls apart, I had better put the matter to the House. Does the Hon. Minister of State for the Treasury Board have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TRIBUTES TO STAFF

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this would be a good time, given that we have now adopted this motion to end these, shall we say, difficult hours next Thursday, to recognize the very special work of our staff, some of whom have been up all night for a number of nights. I am thinking of Hansard reporters and so many other people who are sometimes invisible to us here in the House but nevertheless work so hard. Having seen them over the last few days in, shall we say, a tired state, I think we should acknowledge, recognize and thank all of those people who have worked so long for us during hours which have been so lengthy.

We know, of course, that we as Members of Parliament get danger pay for doing this but many of them of course do not. They have had to sacrifice personal time and summer holidays and have generally had to put up with very difficult working conditions, conditions which I am sure they would not like to work under on a permanent basis. I would like, on behalf of my colleagues, to offer a vote of thanks to the staff for their very hard work, and I hope that the House would join me in expressing that gratitude.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I, too, on behalf of my caucus colleagues, want to express my thanks to all of the staff who have given yeoman's service this summer. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has expressed it very well, and I do not want to duplicate what he has said, but I do want to add one thing, without being partisan.

I think that when future governments make decisions to keep the House open during the summer, they should take into consideration the ramifications of this on our staff. We cannot function without them. Particularly some of the groups like the Hansard reporters are stretched extremely thin, and I think we do them a grave injustice by forcing them to remain here throughout an extended period of time without ensuring that they have adequate resources with which to fulfil the services we require of them.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, as the one who is the ultimate employer of the staff on the Hill, that the next time a government comes to you to ask for extended hours, that that be the first thing you consider before you consider the rationale the government gives you.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I had intended to make the same comments but to make them next Thursday as we rise for a short recess. However, that does not mean to say that I would not join, on behalf of government Members, in the remarks of my colleagues opposite, and state that in this business of government, one cannot always plan what one wants to do and how much one has to do.

We on the Government side are indebted, as are opposition Members, to the efforts of our staff. I think the record will show when this Parliament is compared to other Parliaments, in terms of the number of Bills passed, that this Parliament is some 30 per cent ahead of the last two four-year Parliaments in terms of the amount of work that has been churned through the House and committees.

• (1130)

Mr. Boudria: That shows the result of the tremendous co-operation by the Opposition.

Mr. Lewis: There are two views here. One view, held by the majority of Members of the House, is that it is the result of hard work by Government Members. There is a second view shared by a small minority of the House that it is due to the co-operation of the Opposition. Some days there is a heck of a lot more co-operation than others.

In any event, I want to join with my colleagues in thanking the staff of all Members who have assisted us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It is appropriate for the Chair to join with Hon. Members in extending my appreciation and thanks to all who have worked so hard to make this place function. That is said most sincerely. I want to assure all of our staff that we are very conscious of the contribution they make to this House of Commons and our country.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 106 I have two petitions signed by residents of Winnipeg. One says that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the U.S. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that in the course of bilateral trade negotiations Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

The other petition, on the same subject, points out that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermines our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon the Parliament of Canada to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement through a national general election.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the questions stand?

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Given the motion we adopted earlier today whereby Parliament will adjourn next week, I wonder if I could get a commitment at least from the Government to answer Question No. 289 which, according to our rules, was supposed to have been answered on May 1, 1988, but remains unanswered.

I have raised this on several occasions and I do not want to belabour the point. Perhaps we can get a commitment from the Government that if it cannot answer it today, at least it will answer it, pursuant to our rules, on or before the adjournment date next week.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I have taken note of the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and will get back to him with the necessary information.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

RECTIFICATION REGARDING ARTICLE IN LE JOURNAL DE MONTRÉAL

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a question of privilege, to clarify something that was reported in an article in the Journal de Montréal on August 24, 1988.

The article implies that I personally pocketed money raised by a benefit dinner on October 23, 1987. Mr. Speaker, I have never taken money raised by a benefit dinner.

Mr. Nolan Buteau, who was in charge of organizing the event, assures me that he handed the money raised by the dinner over to my riding office, so that it could be passed along to the Riding Association by my staff.

Mr. Speaker, I deny the allegations in that article, and I bitterly deplore the fact that certain Members, contrary to the Parliamentary tradition of this House, have allowed themselves to make defamatory accusations based on unverified assertions in a newspaper article.

Out of respect for this House and for my colleagues I wanted to clarify this regrettable situation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

RECTIFICATION REGARDING ARTICLE IN THE GLOBE AND MAIL

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise this august House, in connection with an article published in the August 22 edition of The Globe and Mail, that I consider it my duty to state that what I said was misquoted, misinterpreted, misunderstood, misrepresented and mistranslated.

Mr. Speaker, I assure you that at no time did I refer even indirectly to any Member of this august House. It is unfortunate that this incident, over which I had no control, may have caused some inconvenience to my esteemed colleagues in the House of Commons.

CANADIAN CENTRE FOR MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Otto Jelinek (for the President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-148, An Act to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to introduce Bill C-148, a bill to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development.

This bill embodies the principles first set out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and reinforced by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) in announcing the establishment of the Centre in a speech to the public policy forum in Toronto, April 14, 1988. In that speech, the Hon. Don Mazankowski noted that:

"The Centre's principal purpose will be to enhance public sector management capacities and to develop and promote a strong corporate culture in the federal Public Service. Our vision is a credible national, world-class centre of excellence in teaching and research into public sector management.

"The six objects of the Centre address the need for our senior managers to equip themselves with new knowledge, skills and managerial techniques consistent with the requirements of the rapidly changing government environment. Daily, senior managers face such challenges as improving productivity while exercising fiscal restraint, dismantling bureaucratic rules and procedures while adapting to increased managerial accountability."

[English]

Given the need to reduce public spending for the foreseeable future, Public Service managers are and will be expected to provide more services of a higher quality with fewer human and fiscal resources. We are proud of the quality of our public service, and I believe that in establishing this centre we are building our strength and building for tomorrow. All governments and the Canadian public will be better served by Public Service managers who are trained and equipped for the challenges of the future as well of those of today.

[Translation]

The objectives of the management training programs, courses, seminars and research conducted by the Centre, which are set out in the bill, are very important. I am sure they will be strongly supported by all Members of this House. Some of the most important themes include: encouraging pride and excellence in the management of the Public Service; fostering a sense of the purposes, values and traditions of the Public Service; providing the hard skills and knowledge to respond to change and manage government programs and services efficiently and effectively; encouraging the attraction of persons of high calibre to the Public Service, and support their growth and development; encouraging a greater awareness in Canada of issues related to public sector management and the process of governance and involving a broad range of individuals and institutions in the Centre's pursuit of excellence in public administration.

The Centre will be advised by an independent advisory council made up of outstanding Canadians from the Public Service, private sector and academic community.

This bill is designed to ensure that the Canadian Centre for Management Development, with the guidance of its advisory council and leadership of its principal, will have substantial independence in managing the intellectual aspects of its own affairs. Through this independence, the Centre is guaranteed the flexibility and opportunities to consult widely in the development of world-class management programs consistent with the requirements of a highly qualified Public Service.

The centre will be advised by an independent advisory council made up of outstanding Canadians from the Public Service, private sector, and academic community. The centre will be located in the historic LaSalle Academy in the National Capital Region. In addition, the centre will continue to operate in Touraine, Quebec, and will operate programs through existing federal facilities in western and Atlantic Canada. The centre will consult with individuals, institutions, and organizations concerned with management training in all regions of Canada to ensure that its programs, courses, seminars, and research benefit from the diversity of specific regional requirements in all parts of Canada.

I am confident that this Bill addresses the need for change in the way in which our senior public servants are prepared for management roles. I am also confident that all Members recognize the importance of a well-qualified professional management cadre in the Public Service. I hope that all Members can support this Bill and expedite its passage through all stages today in order that it may be sent to the Senate as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity to introduce a piece of legislation that marks a turning point in the history of the Public Service of Canada. This Bill is an expression of the Government's commitment to the continued excellence of the Public Service and faith in the continuing contribution of the Public Service to the good governance of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by thanking the Opposition parties for agreeing to pass this Bill today.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take part today, on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), in this debate on second reading of Bill C-148.

First, I would like to correct an error made by our friend opposite when he said that the school of advanced studies in Government administration, or Canadian Centre for Management Development, as it is called in the Bill, was initiated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It is important to set the record straight and give to Caesar what is his due, Mr. Speaker, for it was the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier who first put forward this idea in 1974. So it should not be thought that the Prime Minister invented the wheel in this matter, as that is clearly not the case. Although we are grateful to the Government for having finally introduced the Bill at last, it must not be given the credit for the original idea. That would be a mistake, I think, and I am sure Canadians would not want to be misled, even if inadvertently.

Then, Mr. Speaker, on October 31, 1977, the Honourable Member for Ottawa—Vanier introduced in the House his Bill C-304. I have a copy of that Bill before me, and it attests to the fact that it was really and truly he who proposed this initiative. In 1977 my colleague moved two motions in the House for discussion of this matter, one on May 6 and the other on October 31, 1977. In 1981, he moved a new motion, which this time was debated in the House. Finally, in 1987, he once again had a motion put on the Order Paper to establish a national school of government administration.

So I hardly need to say, Mr. Speaker, that we of the Liberal Party are in complete agreement on this Bill, because it represents a Liberal initiative. We are proud of it, and we are happy to see that the present Government has adopted this good idea of my colleague's, the Honourable Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

The need for such a Centre is clear, since it arises in part from the study of the merit principle within the Public Service, known as the D'Avignon Report, which was launched by the Liberal government of the day.

I shall keep my comments very brief, Mr. Speaker. I would be happy if in Committee of the Whole House we could discuss clause 4 and see, for example, how the whole matter of centralization of copyright and so forth will operate, under the Centre's direction. I would also like the Parliamentary Secretary to give us details about this matter, but I will not take up the House's time at this point. Perhaps it could be clarified in a few minutes' time, in Committee of the Whole.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like on behalf of my colleagues in the Liberal Party to express once again, to reiterate, our support for this initiative, an initiative that was first brought before this House, as I said just now, in 1974, by the Honourable Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have had a chance to look at the Bill and to read some of the statements made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and by Jack Manion, a distinguished public servant who is the principal designate for the proposed Canadian centre for management studies. The New Democrats will support this Bill, but I must make a few comments on it. If we were in government we would perhaps do it a little differently than is being proposed by the Conservatives. Perhaps that is because they are Conservatives and we are not.

There are some general problems in terms of access to management positions in the Government of Canada which are not being resolved by the present Government and I believe they should be addressed by the centre for management studies. The question of interface and co-operation between the proposed centre and public administration programs across the country is one which needs to be addressed in a rather serious way. We are talking about a substantial new management education facility. There are probably a dozen programs in public administration in different universities across the country including Carleton University, Queen's, and York, of which I am a graduate. I am sure there are many others across the country.

Mr. Manion suggests that those centres of public administration have been devoted far too much to policy analysis and not really to public sector management. It seems to me that one of the priorities ought to be to try to work with various programs of public administration to get to the questions of management and not only to the questions of policy analysis, program evaluation, and that kind of thing.

The board of the centre has been announced. I am afraid I do not have the names before me. However, I suspect the list is short in terms of the number of women who have been appointed. I believe that one of the priorities for the centre should be to facilitate and accelerate the movement of women into management positions in the Government of Canada.

The recent announcement made by the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) was more than disappointing. It suggested that by 1991 the representation of women in the management category of the Government of Canada stands to be increased by about 200 from 1987, up to 678. That is 50 a year, which is not very many. We know that most of those women are likely to be at the junior, rather than the senior management levels. They would be about 15 per cent of the employees in that category. That is not good enough, if there is a real commitment to equality and affirmative action by the government of the day. Certainly we hope to see that greatly improved.

• (1150)

The other area of preferred positions on which employment equity was meant to apply was in the scientific and professional areas, where the Government in fact anticipates not an increase but a reduction in the number of women in those positions by some 200 in the course of the next three or four years.

A number of the people who should be considered for management positions are now in bargaining unit positions.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the rules of the House there is a rule of relevancy. With all due respect, the Member is not focusing on this Bill but on management practices within the Public Service itself. I would like you to reflect on those rules, Mr. Speaker, and ask the Member to focus specifically on Bill C-148, which is the creation of a new management study centre for managers in the Public Service. It has nothing to do with quotas in the Public Service itself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has the floor. He may continue.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, thank you for ignoring that irrelevant point of order.

The point I am making is that the centre for management development which is being set up and intends to be a centre for excellence has a specific role with respect to management in the Government of Canada. I believe one of those roles is to ensure that women managers and women intending to be managers should be facilitated and encouraged. One way to do that would be to ensure that there is a substantial number of women on the advisory board of the council of the centre in order that that priority is not forgotten.

I would like to have seen representatives of the Public Service unions on the advisory board. I would like to have a commitment from the Government that that will be its intention, should it have a chance to form a government after the forthcoming election.

While it may be somewhat surprising to Mr. Manion, since the centre will be moving its activities to the vicinity of Parliament Hill, I believe there may be value in having some direct involvement of Members of Parliament who may be interested in some of the courses and work which is carried out in the centre.

When public servants' jobs bring them in close contact with the Hill, they learn a great deal. I know that when the work of Members of Parliament brings them in closer contact with the Public Service, they generally are struck with the capacity and responsibility carried by people in the Public Service.

Part of the ongoing commitment to excellence of the centre should include some access for Members of Parliament who may be interested in learning more about the problems and prospects for Public Service management. Perhaps some special courses might be designed that would bring students in the centres and Members of Parliament together. Perhaps courses could be designed which might be directed specifically at Members of Parliament and take into account the difficulties they have with not being able to focus on these matters just prior to elections and so on. It could help them to learn a bit more about the current thinking of management in the Government of Canada.

The principal elect, Mr. Manion, has already indicated his priorities and preferences. In an article in Dialogue he spoke about what he calls a big campaign to decentralize, deregulate, deburden and debureaucratize. He suggests that the centre will be heading in that particular direction.

I believe a great deal of thought must be given to the question of how to combine accountability with effective management in a public sector environment. Much thought should be given to ways of increasing access to information about what happens within Government. Some of the hierarchal management structures which have been traditional in the Public Service must be broken down. The idea that a department can only talk to the public or to elected Members of Parliament through the elected minister at the top of the department is an outdated one. The suspicion, which unfortunately exists between departments and both the public and elected representatives of the public in Parliament, is a barrier which must be broken down.

Public Service managers should understand that they can be more open and, in turn, should be given an assurance that they will not be squashed by a superior or a minister for being more open. That is an attitude which leads to the present patterns of secrecy, lack of knowledge and lack of understanding about what happens within the Public Service.

Mr. Manion has also spoken about the desire to continue to encourage a corporate culture in the senior leadership of the Government of Canada. I do not think people could have many problems with that.

He has spoken about trying to build a fairly homogenized group of managers. That causes me some difficulty because it suggests that a general management cadre is capable of going into all areas of government. I am not sure whether that is still the case as it was perhaps 10 or 20 years ago. I suspect that the policy of moving people from one management position to another at the senior level may be too generous. At the same time we constrain too tightly the ability of people in the more junior levels of government to broaden their experience by moving from one department to another. That is increasingly difficult and people are stuck into one pattern of career growth.

For example, a student who happens to join the Department of Fisheries and Oceans may be stuck in that Department all his or her life, with almost no chance of moving out. There are only a couple of departments, such as the Department of Finance, which provide entrées for people to go into other areas. It has been suggested that the centre will work with a case study approach. I believe that approach, along with the desire to have more cases written up and available, is valuable.

I want to conclude with a couple of suggestions that I hope the centre, in its research function and its dealing with people in the backrooms of politics and elected representatives, will take into consideration. One concerns the problem the present Government faced but did not solve particularly well. Due to the increasing complexity of government, even if the number of employees is not larger, the way a new government provides direction to the Public Service in implementing the programs and policies of that government and party is very difficult. The present Government put in chiefs of staff and increased very substantially the money that used to be paid to executive assistants to ministers under the Liberals in the hope that it would give greater clout to ministers' offices in order to ensure that there was a more effective means of translating into action what ministers in the government want. I am not sure whether that has been wholly successful.

According to the American model, after the forthcoming election, some 3,000 or 4,000 senior positions will be replaced, affecting the top levels of major U.S. government departments. That is not a very good model. We should look for a model which would provide means by which there could be effective political direction without compromising the need for professional management while at the same time being responsive to government.

Both Mr. Manion and I have been involved with the question of political rights. It is quite obvious that the senior Public Service and senior departments have interests of their own and must be acknowledged as having almost a political presence in the Government of Canada. That is a problem which at least has to be identified and which calls for some solution.

Let me conclude by expressing on behalf of many very hard-working public servants their resentment and concern over a decision that has been made by the Government. There is an elitism that is taking place in the Government of Canada in the differing treatment between the management employees and the rank and file. It is expressed in the fact that the Government has decided to give pay increases of between 8 per cent and 12 per cent to senior managers, deputy ministers and so on in the Government of Canada at a time when it has pay standards for other employees in the order of 3.5 per cent to 4 per cent per annum.

I do not think that helps morale at all. There is a real sense of unfairness and injustice among people living in my constituency and in the constituencies of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Glengarry— Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), people living in the capital region and elsewhere who are working for the Government of Canada because the Government decided to sock it to average civil servants at the same time it was giving raises of as much as $12,000, $13,000 or $15,000 to people earning over $100,000 in very senior management positions.

The Member for Ottawa—Carleton, who is going back to the private sector after this election, is about to leap to his feet to suggest that this is not very relevant. Perhaps it is not entirely in order with respect to this particular Bill, but I have been wanting to make this point for some time. I would hope as well that Mr. Manion, who I can see just behind him, would also be conscious of the fact that the perceived injustice is a very real one. After the tax bite is taken, those people working in average jobs in the Public Service are looking at a decline in their real incomes year after year, but the present Government has seen fit to give substantial increases to people in senior management categories. I think there is injustice and inequity there and I am sorry it occurs.

With those comments, I wish Mr. Manion well. If he wants me to lecture occasionally to his students at the centre, I will be happy to oblige. If he wants to offer some courses which would be available for Members of Parliament to participate in, and I am not in Government, I would be happy to try to take part.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is a time for political partisanship, and I am sorry to see that is indeed what is happening.

I am delighted to see this Bill tabled during my Government's mandate, because it comes as the culmination of the work done by many Members and by the D'Avignon Commission.

As was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr.Boudria), the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) worked very hard for this happy ending. Another Member of this House also worked very hard toward the same goal, and I am referring to the late Walter Baker who, as a Member and later as Minister, showed a keen interest in the cause of professionalism and especially the merit principle in the Public Service.

We are very proud of the Public Service of Canada, which consists of men and women who daily demonstrate how professionals can and should behave in some very difficult situations where they must provide solutions that are both objective and helpful to a Government that is trying to solve some very complex problems.

I would like to take this opportunity on second reading to say that this morning, I met John Manion, the Director of the new Centre for which the enabling legislation was introduced today, and he gave me the assurance that contrary to rumors and also to certain representations that were made to me by public servants involved in this area, the Centre for Executive Development in Touraine, which was mentioned by the Parliamentary Secrertary in his speech, will not be closed. In fact, it will be a focal point in the centre for excellence we are creating officially today. Furthermore, Mr. Manion would like to see the Centre expanded to respond to the needs and expectations expressed in this Bill.

The public servants who made their representations and the journalists who said that the Centre would be closed, may rest assured that will not be the case. The Centre will continue to function. Its purpose has been confirmed, and I am delighted because it happens to be in my riding, and not just because it is physically present, but because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, we have trouble convincing certain people in politics that the Quebec side of the National Capital is an integral part of the National Capital. Later today, we will have the privilege of considering the NCC bill, which will once again confirm the bilingual and bi-cultural calling of our National Capital.

Again, I am delighted the Centre is in my riding and that, in its own way, it reflects the role played by the Quebec side in the National Capital region and in the work done by the Canadian Government in this country.

[English]

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few comments as well during debate on this very important Bill. At this very moment there is a seminar taking place at the Chateau Laurier by the Public Policy Forum, an organization based here in Ottawa. It is focusing on the actual future management practices of the centre itself. The Deputy Secretary to the Cabinet, and designated principal of the future Centre, and, I should add, a constituent of mine, spoke there yesterday and outlined some of the priorities he would like to see the management centre pursue. I would like to just give some brief comments about what he said.

I think he focused very briefly on the fact that the time has now come for the need to develop a set of programs and find the best people to administer them in the management centre. It is important to train our Public Service managers with new techniques and skills to allow them to deal with, as he said humorously yesterday, the "unexpected" which seems to be happening more and more frequently in our daily lives in dealing with public matters.

He talked about the importance of learning from other institutions, particularly those in the United States and the United Kingdom. Yesterday as well at the Centre, Dr. Loretta Flanders, who is the special assistant to the director of the Office of Executive Personnel Management, Office of Personnel Management, Government of the United States, focused on what she called a Framework for Management Excellence: The American Experience. The new centre in Canada will hope to benefit from these practices which have been going on in the United States and Great Britain over the last eight or ten years. One thing the centre can and should do is help managers relate more closely to the role of Members of Parliament, with enhanced reform in Parliament and a greater role for us to play in the legislative practice and creation of public policy.

Dealing with interest groups will be a very important aspect of the management training centre as well as the results of the impact of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which we are now seeing as having wide repercussions throughout not only public, but private life. Indeed, one could add the aftermath of the introduction of the free trade agreement which will have significant impact on the operations of so many government Departments.

The centre will hopefully publish the results of its work and work very closely with private sector experiences in having seminars and bringing in researchers from the private sector to allow our public servant managers to benefit from the great amount of experience there is in the private sector. The need for this Bill is important. It is timely and will give the centre what has been called its intellectual independence. It will lead, I hope, to a better management and therefore a much stronger Public Service of Canada. It will ultimately benefit all Canadians.

[Translation]

I am very proud to support the creation of the Canadian Centre for Management Development.

[English]

The Bill is timely. It is important. It will help our Public Service immensely to train our managers to be better managers, and we look forward to the passage of this Bill in all stages today.

• (1210)

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in my remarks in welcoming this initiative. I congratulate the Government on taking an initiative which is long overdue.

We have a good Public Service in Canada. It has been said for years that it is one of the best in the world. I certainly agree with that. I am proud to have been a member of the Public Service. I am proud to represent tens of thousands of public servants in the House of Commons of Canada. However, I recognize that there is a need for a management centre such as that which will be created in this Bill today.

I refer to some of the objects found in Clause 4 of the Bill, particularly subclause (a) which states:

> "(a) to encourage pride and excellence in the management of the Public Service and to foster among its managers a sense of the purposes, values and traditions of the Public Service".

I have some sense as a former public servant and a resident of this community of those traditions. My great grandfather was a public servant in Ottawa. I have on my wall in my Parliament Hill office a framed copy of a certificate, certifying that he passed the civil service examination in 1883.

We have a long tradition of very fine individuals who have leadership roles in the Public Service of Canada. I refer to people such as Bob Bryce, Gordon Robertson, O. D. Skelton and Dr. John Deutsch, former inhabitants of my university at Queens in Kingston who were very much a part of the relationship between the university sector and the federal Public Service. This is an important initiative. It is very much in the tradition of that excellence.

I wish to be bold enough to make one recommendation, if I may, on the curriculum that might be considered in the many courses that will be offered at the management centre. I make it as a former officer of the Department of Justice, if I may suggest it to the principal designate, Jack Manion, who I wish well in his new duties. I refer to the importance of ensuring that Public Service managers are made aware of and have an opportunity to learn more about the legal process and the legal nature of decision-making in the federal Public Service. This is becoming a complex matter. It always really has been when one considers statutes such as the Financial Administration Act and the many onerous responsibilities that are placed upon Public Service managers under that Act, as well as under the Public Service Employment Act and so many others.

In light of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the increasing role of private Members of Parliament, for example, under parliamentary reform, it is important that Public Service managers focus on issues such as the legal aspects of the structure of government and the legal aspects of government operations in terms of the policy process, the program process, its administrative and, certainly, the financial control process.

The whole notion of law reform, institutional and procedural reform and constitutional reform are all matters that would prudently be the subject matter of courses at the management centre.

Having made that brief suggestion, may I once again congratulate the Government on this important and historic initiative. I wish all Public Service managers who will be enrolled from time to time at courses at the centre the very best.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that there is unanimous consent to send this matter to the Committee of the Whole. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am in the hands of my colleagues. We do have officials available to answer any questions that may come up during the Committee of the Whole proceedings. If my friends wish to have the officials brought in, fine; if not, we can proceed.

Mr. Cassidy: I prefer to let it go. I have made my comments.

Mr. Boudria: It is not necessary.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-148, an Act to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

On Clause 3—Establishment

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I want to be very brief. I am wondering why the language in this clause is a little different than what we are accustomed to in terms of the phraseology such as "is hereby established". The conventional way of referring to that in Bills is "there shall be" or something to that effect. This seems to be just a modernized form of writing the Bill as opposed to the manner to which we are accustomed. Is there any significance in the fact that it is stated that way in Clause 3, and also in other clauses which I have noted, for instance, Clause 12?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I wish to advise my friend, after consultation, that it is simply a matter of drafting. To the best of our knowledge there is no untoward reason why the words—

Mr. Boudria: I am not suggesting it is untoward.

Mr. Lewis: "is hereby established" are used rather than "there shall be". I think it is completely in order and should stand as written.

Mr. Boudria: I just want to be assured that it has the same effect. Can the Minister confirm that?

Mr. Lewis: It is my understanding that it has the same effect, yes.

Clause 3 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 4 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 4 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 5 carry?

On Clause 5—Powers

Mr. Boudria: I raise a point with respect to Clause 5(f). The Minister has given me an explanation informally. However, since I put my concern on the record at second reading, I was trying to identify the meaning of Clause 5(f) which deals with trade mark, copyright, and so on. I want to know whether it is the intention of the Government to centralize copyright which the Government owns in the centre. I am not necessarily against that. But I want to know whether that is what the Government intends to do, or does it merely intend to centralize copyrights and so on that the centre itself will develop under Clause 5(f)?

Mr. Lewis: The latter part of my friend's comments are correct. It is intended that as the management centre progresses, if courses are produced and material is produced in connection with those courses, the management centre will have the right in some cases to sell those at cost and, in other cases, for example, in the case of libraries or other institutions where there is a working arrangement, to provide them free. The idea is to protect the copyright of the management centre to those particular materials.

Clause 5 agreed to.

• (1220)

Clauses 6 to 24 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 25 carry?

On Clause 25—Deemed appointment

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I am letting the clauses go through, but perhaps, since I made comments about the board, the Minister could say a word or two about the composition of the board, and particularly who the non-public servants are, since half the board are meant to be outsiders. This is probably not relevant to this particular clause, but it was a question which I had raised in debate on second reading.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that with respect to the composition of the board, one-half would be from the private sector and one-half would be from universities and other learning institutions. I am sorry. Half the outsiders would be private sector people and the other half from institutions of higher learning.

Mr. Cassidy: Are there any women on the board and, if so, who are they? Madam Labelle presumably is on, but apart from her.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend will know that the Government has made great progress in increasing the number of women who are appointed to positions. It is the wish of the Prime Minister that wherever possible the representation of women on all boards and judicial levels, commissions, et cetera, be increased. My hon. friend will know that this increase has been from 15 per cent to 31 per cent during the past four years. I am sure that this intention, as evidenced by action, will continue in the course of the appointments to this board and commission.

Clause 25 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 26 carry?

On Clause 26—Coming into force

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering if the Minister could tell us approximately what time schedule the Government has in mind for the coming into force of this particular Bill and what time schedule it has in mind for the actual opening of the facility.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am please to advise that the Government intends to move as quickly as possible to institute the management centre and the courses, and that the training centre will be in the new premises by the end of the calendar year.

Clause 26 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Short title

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, given that we are discussing Clause 1, perhaps I should take the opportunity to do now what I should have done in my initial remarks, which I have intentionally made rather brief in order to have a fuller discussion at this stage. I merely wanted to add my own words of congratulations to Mr. Manion and those who will be chosen to be members of the board of the new centre, and I want to extend to the centre, its staff, its board and, most of all, its students and participants my very best wishes.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

NATIONAL CAPITAL ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works) moved that Bill C-153, an Act to amend the National Capital Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill allows the Government to carry through on a promise which was made during the Speech from the Throne on October 1.

Mr. Boudria: Must you put it that way?

Mr. McInnes: Thank you, Hon. Member. We are trying to crystalize and focus our attention more formally on activities carried out by the NCC, which indeed have been part of their unofficial mandate for a long period of time. Perhaps the mandate as expressed in the Bill, in the legislation now existing, is too restrictive, too concerned with bricks and mortar. We want to amplify and embellish and expand the powers of the NCC to undertake the promotion, as it has done so very well during the past number of years, with respect to giving more focus and new direction on Ottawa and the National Capital Region, as Canada's meeting place, to ensure that it communicates Canada to Canadians and to safeguard and preserve the capital. So the amendments are of a very simple nature and they are necessary for the efficient functioning of the NCC.

There are several proposals with respect to land use changes, demolitions, and land sales, and to give it authority concerning these particular matters it will prevent the demolition of heritage buildings, the inappropriate use of federal lands and will better provide tools to realize the principles of the federal land use plan to the benefit of both the NCR and the long-term interest of all Canadians.

With the passage of this legislation, this Government will be seen as being the first Government to live up to its commitment of strengthening the symbolic significance of the capital.

Mr. Boudria: Yes. Sure.

An Hon. Member: When are we going to become a province?

Mr. McInnes: I suggest that this Bill will enable the NCC to improve its co-operation with other levels of government in the capital, by providing quick responses to the giving of easements and co-ordinating the effort with respect to all matters involving land owned by the Government in the NCR.

I want to thank Members, in anticipation of their positions today, who have been very co-operative in allowing us to advance this Bill which I think is in the national interest.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the first thing that I would like to do today is to offer my words of congratulations to the Minister, who became a father only a few days ago. I am sure that I speak on behalf of all of my colleagues in offering the Minister and Mrs. McInnes my very best words of congratulations, which I sent to him in writing a few days ago.

I should correct the Minister when he refers to Bill C-153 and his Government being the first Government to improve the symbolic significance of the National Capital Region. Far be it from me to try to correct the Minister, but let me try anyway to remind the Minister that in 1899 the federal Government created the Ottawa Improvement Commission. In 1913, the then Borden Government established the Federal Plan Commission. In 1927, the Government established the Federal District Commission. In 1945, under the Federal District Commission Act, Mr. Gréber, the noted French planner, was appointed to prepare the Gréber Plan. In 1949, the first Master Plan of the National Capital Region was commissioned in the House of Commons. In 1951 that plan was tabled in Parliament. In 1956, a joint parliamentary committee endorsed the continued implementation of the plan. In 1969 the First Ministers endorsed the Gréber plan as a vision for a unified capital, extending it across both sides of the Ottawa River.

Do you know where I got that information, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): From the NCC.

Mr. Boudria: From the Minister's briefing notes that were supplied to us.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I know the Minister has come back from his constituency lately for obvious reasons, but I remind him that he has perhaps overstated somewhat the involvement of his Government in terms of the National Capital Region.

I have here a copy of the National Capital Region report which was the work of a committee of this House for two years, which report was tabled in this House in 1976. The Minister and his Government certainly have not re-invented the wheel in terms of commitment to the National Capital Region. Indeed, there have been 85 years of planning, according to the Minister's own briefing notes, in the National Capital Region by the National Capital Commission and predecessor organizations. That is some of the history of the National Capital Commission and the development of that Commission and its predecessors in the development of our area.

I am sure that I speak on behalf of all Members of the House when I say that through the organization we now know of as the NCC this city is far more beautiful than it otherwise would have been. The National Capital Commission is upon occasion everyone's favorite whipping boy, including mine when it does something that I dislike. I usually raise the matter when I dislike what it does, but I also raise matters publicly when I like what it does. Sometimes the subjects are controversial. I remember last year the National Capital Commission came up with the idea that we should have coloured pavement in front of Parliament and other buildings such as exists in Boston and in London, England in front of Buckingham Palace. That red pavement was not particularly well liked by some Government back-benchers and they convinced the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to kibosh to the plan.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Which one?

Mr. Boudria: The same Deputy Prime Minister we have now.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Which back-benchers?

Mr. Boudria: I could name them individually if the Member wants me to but I will avoid that embarrassment for the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) who like myself liked the idea proposed at that time by the National Capital Commission. I said on the floor of this House that I thought the plan should proceed. I still think it should proceed because I think it is a good idea. I say to the Member from Winnipeg—undoubtedly he has travelled and seen that kind of decoration in front of other legislative buildings and in other downtown areas—it is a good idea into which a lot of thought went but that plan was scuttled.

On behalf of my Party, I want to speak in favour of the Bill. There are a few questions I will want to ask in Committee of the Whole. I hope the Minister will have the officials available to us to answer questions, particularly as to the authority the NCC will have over private lands under the Bill. I am particularly concerned about that because in no way do I want to interfere with the powers that municipalities have at the present time.

I for one am pleased that we are recognizing in statute what the NCC is doing already in terms of its role in the programming area. I think of Winterlude, the very successful winter carnival that we have in Ottawa, which I believe is now the second-largest winter carnival in the country. That is a tremendous endeavour. Our Canada Day celebrations are something of which all Canadians are proud. Tourists come here not only from our country but from around the world and have remarked about the marvellous job done in organizing the Canada Day celebrations. Those celebrations are in part the responsibility of the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard), but the NCC, of course, plays a leading role in the organization of the activities.

The NCC has also provided such things as bicycle paths and set up skating on the canal, et cetera. I want to take this occasion to say that I hope the winter and summer outdoor activities continue to be offered on a no-charge basis in the National Capital Region, whether for local people or for people coming from the Minister's riding in Halifax. The last thing people want to be doing after paying considerable money to travel to our capital is to go through a toll booth on the Rideau Canal. I hope that never happens, but it is an idea brought to our attention.

I congratulate the Chairman of the National Capital Commission. She brings a lot of thought provoking ideas to us, some of which I disagree with but the majority I do agree with. It does not matter that I disagree with them from time to time. The Chairman is thought-provoking in that she brings forth matters for public discussion and has the fortitude to do so. That is good in its own way because it causes us to pause and reflect on various ideas.

The Government in the Throne Speech of September, 1986, said it would bring this Bill forward. We are glad to see, nearly two years later, that the Government has done so. On behalf of my Party, as the Official Opposition spokesman, I agreed that the Bill should proceed forthwith.

I want to take a few moments though to discuss something about the National Capital Commission that involves my constituency and invite the Minister in that regard to pay very close attention. I think that the boundaries of the National Capital Commission are not appropriately divided right now and I am looking for the Minister's co-operation. Presently the National Capital designated region under the schedule of the Act extends some 70 or 80 kilometres westward from the Parliament Buildings, which I believe is the focus of the whole area. Conversely, if you were to go in an easterly direction toward my constituency, the National Capital Region extends only some 20 or 25 kilometres. I do not feel that is appropriate. Land, particularly the islands on the Ottawa River east of Cumberland, and land in the area of Rockland, Clarence and Plantaganet should be protected. There is no better tool as far as I am concerned than the National Capital Commission to preserve and protect those lands east of the city in a manner consistent with the protection given on the western side of the city.

I have suggested to the National Capital Commission that that should be done. The Minister is probably aware that I have raised this publicly as something I would support. I wish I could take credit for the idea myself, Mr. Speaker, but it is not mine. The idea was brought to my attention by the Mayor of Rockland, His Worship Jean-Marc Lalonde, who suggested extending the National Capital Region eastward.

We are presently having meetings. I thank the Minister and the Chairman of the National Capital Commission for providing the staff to brief the local mayors on the advantages of having the area designated in terms of the National Capital Region, and we are having meetings with the other local mayors in the vicinity to obtain their concurrence for this kind of initiative. With this concurrence, which I hope will come shortly, I would then like to propose a Private Member's Bill to this House to change the boundaries of the National Capital Region. I hope the Government will give the same kind of co-operation to that as we are giving today to the Government's own Bill.

I want to speak to a few items in the Bill. I agree with the part of the Bill that suggests the head office of the National Capital Commission could be located in an area other than Ottawa. All parts of the national capital district should be treated equally, whether those parts are Gatineau, Hull, Orleans or Carp. They are all equal parts of the national capital area, and if the NCC wants to have an office located in one part rather than the other, that should be permitted. In all likelihood, the head office will remain where it is now. Nevertheless, the whole district should be treated in an equal and consistent manner. I congratulate the Government for putting that particular provision in the Bill.

Under this Bill, the NCC will now have the power to get into the area of programming, in which it was already involved. I want to make it clear that we should in no way send the NCC a message that we want it to move away from dealing with bricks and mortar because there is much of that to be done yet. The parkway system is not complete. There is work to be done in the field of bricks and mortar which the NCC has traditionally done and which should be continued.

Of course, the NCC will be doing other things such as programming, but I hope we get the Minister's assurance that those two things will continue in tandem as opposed to having one cancelled in favour of the other. I am confident that that is not what the NCC or the Minister wants to do, but I think it should be restated.

With these few remarks, I will end my debate on second reading. I hope we will have some time for a discussion of the different clauses of the Bill at Committee of the Whole stage which I understand we will agree unanimously to go to later, and if we do extend past one o'clock, I hope that we could not see the clock in order to assist all Members, particularly Members from the national capital area in discussing the Bill in a thorough manner. We all want to have it passed today, but we do not want to curtail debate in any way.

Again, I indicate the support of my colleagues for this Bill and for the continuing good operation of a National Capital Commission.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will support this Bill and my Party supports it. As a Member from the National Capital Region, I support the Bill because its major purpose is to put into legislation in the National Capital Act effectively what the National Capital Commission has been doing increasingly over the past few years. Rather than dealing just with hard services and with putting into place parkways and beautifying the National Capital Region, the NCC is increasingly promoting various kinds of public activities and events which are worthy of a national capital and which enable Canadians from this area and from across Canada to sense a celebration of a country when they are here in the national capital or when they see events in the national capital via the media.

The existing Section 10 of the National Capital Act provides that most of the powers that are given to the Commission are related to the physical appearance of the National Capital Region. According to that section, the Commission has the power to acquire and administer property, to lease or dispose of property, to build parks and squares, highways and parkways, bridges and buildings and other works, to improve its own property or other property managed by government departments, to co-operate with local municipalities or authorities to improve or develop or to maintain property and to construct places of entertainment, amusement, recreation or refreshment upon property owned by the Commission. It is all related to property.

I have been a resident of the Ottawa area for some 22 years, and I know there is no question that the National Capital Commission has done an excellent job in implementing the dream of various planners, including the dream of the Gréber Commission which was held just after the war and has given us the parkways along the canal. It has opened up the canal in the downtown core between Sandy Hill and Centretown where there used to be train traffic to the Union Station. It has given us the parkways along the Ottawa River and now the new parkway out toward the aviation museum. It has given us the development of the Gatineau and the rest of it. However, a country is people and a capital is about people. That is why the National Capital Commission's efforts have been redirected.

There has been a slowing down of the emphasis on the physical appearance of the national capital and from time to time, the Commission has been putting extra pressure on the local municipalities, suggesting that they should not expect to get all parks and recreation projects developed for them by the National Capital Commission. Sometimes the NCC acted a bit like a sugar daddy to local municipalities, and having once been an alderman in the City of Ottawa, I feel that that is a perfectly natural reaction. Sometimes the NCC is forced to say no.

The Bill proposes that the objects and purposes of the Commission be expanded to allow the Commission to organize or to sponsor or to promote public activities in events in the National Capital Region that will enrich the cultural and social fabric of Canada, taking into account the federal and bilingual character of Canada and the heritage of the people of Canada. That sounds like some of the language that touches all bases in the Constitution of Canada, but I suppose that also reflects the nature of the country.

There is also a new power of co-ordination for the Commission. That is an important power. However, the drafting of this is confusing, to put it mildly. I would challenge the Minister to explain what it actually means once it gets past the word "co-ordinate".

The NCC is being given the power to co-ordinate the policies and the programs of the Government of Canada respecting the organization, sponsorship or promotion by departments of public activities and events related to the National Capital Region. If the National Gallery, in its wonderful new premises, proposes to put on a blockbuster exhibition next summer, that presumably would be an activity or event, but would it be related to the National Capital Region. Would the NCC have the right to co-ordinate that particular program or not? I do not know. I will not move an amendment to the clause because I am prepared to take this on faith. I think its major purpose is to put into legislation enough power so that the NCC can do what it has been doing, such things as co-ordinating the Destination '88 tourism program, pulling together the two regional municipalities, the private sector and the tourist industry in order to make the region an increasingly important place for Canadians and for foreigners to put on their itineraries when they decide to travel to this part of the country.

As I have wandered through restaurants and public squares within my constituency of Ottawa Centre this summer, I have found that there is no question of the increasing interest this capital holds for tourists, including many tourists from the United States. I believe that Ottawa is an undiscovered treasure for many Canadians and certainly for many foreigners. They really like our city, and one of the reasons they like our city is because of its appearance. Another is because of the extraordinary variety of activities that take place.

We have come to the middle of August, and some of my friends are saying that they are almost festivalled out by now because of the number of festivals and public events which have taken place. There have been drummers, the Franco-Ontarian Festival, rock concerts, the jazz festival, the buskers festival and the multicultural festival. Those have been good events. We residents of Ottawa have learned and our visitors learn to be constantly surprised because there will be dancers, musicians and street performers and wonderful events taking place in many parts of the capital. There was opera in the Arts Centre again this summer after a long interval, and I would point out to the Minister that it was extremely popular to the point where it was almost impossible to get a ticket because there were not very many performances.

I think the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) may have left us, but since the Minister has had a child recently, perhaps he would join with me in wishing a happy anniversary to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott Russell. I understand he intends to take his wife out to dinner, perhaps to reintroduce himself to her, this evening rather than be here for the debate.

• (1250)

Mr. McInnes: Are we invited?

Mr. Cassidy: I am not sure about that.

The Bill also gives the NCC a certain flexibility in entering into easements, and more authority with respect to proposals for demolition of or major changes to Government of Canada buildings. That is, any buildings in the National Capital Region. The reason is because of the scandalous activity by the Mint which pushed ahead with its proposals. In fact, half the Mint was torn down before anyone was able to stop it and ensure there was more serious consideration of the heritage value of that building. The NCC was caught short because of a weakness in its powers.

I want to talk more generally for a minute about the National Capital Commission. I have not had this chance before and I want to suggest, among other things, to all of my colleagues, particularly those from the National Capital Region, that the NCC has now produced both a plan and what is called a capital orientation plan. That is a discussion of the activities to take place and the kind of soft services they intend to offer in helping to make the region into a national symbol. I hope that in the fall, particularly if there is a new Parliament at that time, that the standing committee could take that plan and hold some hearings in order to give the NCC a chance to defend what it proposes and give local Members of Parliament and other interested parties a chance to comment on what the NCC is doing.

There are changes taking place within the Commission. They are generally positive, although they still have a fair way to go. That is one reason why I think we need some of that dialogue somewhere here, not just a half hour or two or three hour presentation by the Chairman of the NCC on its estimates which takes place once a year.

I think the weakness in the capital orientation plan and the weakness in the NCC as a whole, and the weakness in this Bill if you will, is that the emphasis on the NCC having a national mandate ignores the fact that it exercises a mandate in the National Capital Region. It does so by providing services and so on for people in this region. It is important that the NCC understand that, and I do not believe it does adequately understand it now.

I have proposed on a number of occasions, both in meetings with Mrs. Pigott and also in hearings of the committee when we were considering the NCC's estimates, that there should be an advisory committee to the Commission made up of representatives from the region itself; people from the municipalities, people from community associations and the general public, people from ethnocultural organizations, women's groups, groups representing poor people, the Labour Council, the Board of Trade, people from cultural, sporting and artistic groups. That kind of parliament of the NCC would only be advisory. It would not have the power to make decisions. I do not question the fact that the NCC has a national responsibility and mandate. However, having four or five local representatives on the 20 person board is not good enough to ensure that local concerns are adequately reflected. It is better now than it was two years ago, but even today the NCC tends to operate like a black box in its consultation and communication with people in this area who, after all, are the ones most affected by its decisions.

I say black box in the sense that there is input and later on something may or may not happen. It is argued that local Members of Parliament can perhaps substitute a bit, but I was not elected to be an alderman for the NCC even though I have had to play that role from time to time. I think if you were to have an advisory committee it might make sense to make local Members of Parliament ex officio members so that if something came up like the pink pavement, for example, which I opposed and which the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell supported, it could be discussed with the local advisory committee to see whether it was defensible or not.

This group should be a sounding board that would meet at regular intervals, maybe every couple of months, with the chairman and perhaps senior staff, and perhaps a couple of times a year with the board. That does not mean they would have to sit in on every board meeting, but at least they would have the opportunity to raise concerns and perhaps sensitize people on the board, who come from across Canada, to some of the concerns and ideas of people in the region.

I have been suggesting for years that the wonderful bicycle network which allows visitors to and residents of Ottawa-Hull to travel around the region needs to be completed toward the foot of the locks just below Parliament Hill. You could then go from west Ottawa all the way through to the aviation museum virtually without having to cross a road. That is an idea that goes into the black box and then just sits there and nothing happens. There needs to be a vehicle by which ideas like that from the local area can be responded to by the NCC better than just having a two hour session in the committee and letters and correspondence, or meetings with the chairman.

Given the desire of the NCC to really change things a bit, the ideas which, according to the new plan, say that the capital will be Canada's meeting place, bringing Canadians together through the democratic process, surely some greater input locally would be a great idea, not just a better public consultation process. The NCC has learned from the Mile Circle fiasco and some other problems it had early in 1985, that something more than that is needed.

The second purpose of the new mandate is to communicate Canada to Canadians with the capital demonstrating those principles which are common to all Canadians. There, too, some form of consultation is required, and I am suggesting a vehicle which I think would be a way of opening up the NCC. It would also safeguard and preserve those national treasures which are unique in their influence on all Canadians. Even there I think local people who know this area can have valuable input into safeguarding those national treasures.

Mrs. Mailly: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I see it is now one o'clock and I would like us to agree to not see the clock so we can have a chance to say a few short words on this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have to leave because I have a lunch date with the Chairman of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council which unfortunately I had to delay because of this debate. However, if Hon. Members wish to go on after that to committee stage, or take a bit of time out of the tax Bill and do it at three o'clock, I and my Party are open to whatever is most convenient to Members. I chose to make my comments on second reading and I do not have any specific comments to make at committee stage except to say to the Minister that I really do not think the new Section 10(2) is particularly well drafted. I make that point for the record.

I want to conclude by saying that it is time the Minister stepped in and stopped the secretiveness of the board of the NCC. Certain decisions made by the Commission which touch on personnel should probably be kept in camera. However, for the rest, the efforts which the The Ottawa Citizen and my friend, Ken Rubin, have been making for years, to have the minutes of the board made public and to provide greater public access to what the commission is doing, seem to me to be entirely well taken. We need to democratize, to open up, and to assure vehicles of communication for the National Capital Commission with people from this area where its services are carried out. That is the point I wanted to make in this particular debate in supporting this Bill.

I know from the record that the National Capital Act is amended every year or two. It is not as though the Bill is closed for eternity, or even for the next 10 years. I hope that we might have some discussion, after the election, of this discussion paper on Canada's capital and the capital orientation plan and that after such discussion we could, among other things, establish the kind of local consultative mechanism which Mrs. Pigott has unfortunately rejected and which the Government has, unfortunately, been unreceptive to in the past.

In conclusion, two years ago I sent a questionnaire to 75 organizations including municipalities, community organizations, ethnic associations, and aldermen asking for feedback on that proposal. I got 29 responses and all but four of those responses were positive. There is, therefore, general support for that in the region. I know we can work something out that does not challenge the national mandate of the NCC but ensures that it is carried out more responsibly and more sensitively for those of us who live here in the National Capital Region.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased with Clause 2 of the Bill. This clause repeals Section 5 of the Act that created the National Capital Commission and reads as follows:

"5. (1) The head office of the Commission shall be in the National Capital Region.

(2) The Commission shall meet at least three times a year in the National Capital Region."

That may seem very simple, Mr. Speaker, but when you see what it replaces, you realize how big this change is. Previously, the Act said: "The Commission shall meet at least three times a year in the city of Ottawa, and it may meet at such other times in the National Capital Region as the Commission deems necessary."

So, Mr. Speaker, here in this Bill, we officially confirm that the National Capital Region is not just the City of Ottawa. This is a very important point, because, Mr. Speaker, the 1867 Statute which made Ottawa the capital of Canada simply mentioned Ottawa, which in 1867 meant about a dozen streets on the Ontario side of the capital.

This statute was not amended. I myself tried to present a Private Member's Bill to say that the seat of the Government of Canada is the National Capital Region, in order to confirm the fact that our capital is on both sides of the Ottawa River and naturally takes in the Quebec part. Unfortunately, or fortunately, I was made a Parliamentary Secretary and I could not pursue this Bill.

So the Bill before us goes in the same direction. Just now, my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) objected that the Minister said it was the first time that a Government confirmed the symbolic role of the NCC. But the Minister was absolutely right. It is the first time that the NCC's symbolic role on both sides of the Ottawa River has been confirmed; it confirms for the first time that the capital is not only Ottawa, a few streets in Ottawa, but the region, which includes the Quebec side.

[English]

What we are talking about here is nation building, as our very beloved Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) often says. We have an anglophone Minister from Nova Scotia and a chairman of the Commission, who is an anglophone from the Ontario side of our capital, who have understood the aspirations of French-speaking people and how important this is, not only symbolically, that this is enshrined in law that the capital of our country is in the region which covers both sides of the Ottawa River, including the Quebec side where the majority of the people are French speaking. They will now know that the NCC has officially recognized that our capital is a bilingual and bicultural capital just as is our country. To me this is a very great day because this has been accomplished after years of effort and is accomplished under our administration.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I will just take a minute, because I know that time is precious and we are overtime, to say that I support the Bill and support much of the commentary which has been made so far today. Those of us who represent this area are fortunate to live in a very special part of Canada. That is made all the more special by the presence and activities of the National Capital Commission and its predecessors over the years. The Bill improves and, as the Minister indicated, recognizes the nature of the expanded duties which the Commission has taken on over the years and has given them statutory authority. I welcome that.

I would like to say a word about consultation as well. I think there has been a significant improvement in the consultative process which has taken place between the Commission, local MPs, and the population of the National Capital Region. I applaud that but emphasize again the need to do more than has been done to date. It is very important, given the impact and the role of the NCC in the National Capital Region, that there be processes put in place which will ensure that there is adequate consultation and discussion with the local municipalities and residents in this region to ensure that activities and proposed activities of the NCC, particularly as they relate to changes in the use of public lands, be full, complete, and frank.

I would like to comment upon the remarks of my friend from Gatineau. I support the Bill and, as I said, I support the clause which recognizes that meetings of the Commission and the offices of the Commission can be located anywhere in the National Capital Region. I think that is sensible. It is logical given the fact that the National Capital Region includes not only the City of Ottawa but municipalities on the Ontario and Quebec sides of the Ottawa River. However, I do think that that is a different matter than saying that the capital of Canada is not Ottawa.

I am the only government Member who represents a riding entirely in the City of Ottawa and Ottawa is the capital of Canada. The clause in the Bill dealing with the location of the headquarters is supportable, as I have said, given the purpose and objects of the Bill and of the National Capital Commission. However, that does not go so far, I would suggest, as to say that we should take from that any notion that the Government of Canada is suggesting that the capital is not the City of Ottawa.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is my understanding correct that we are going to complete this Bill in all stages today correct?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid): Is it the understanding of the House that we will complete this Bill in all stages before we see the clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

• (1310)

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Reid in the Chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Reid): Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-153, an Act to amend the National Capital Act.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Reid): Shall Clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in spite of what has been said already today with respect to this Bill, which I support entirely in principle, I have concerns about Clause 2. I wish to propose an amendment, of which I gave notice to the Chair as well as the Minister. I move:

> "That Bill C-153, an Act to amend the National Capital Act, be amended in Clause 2, Section 5(1) by deleting the word "Region"."

The Bill proposes to change the requirement that the head office of the Commission be in the City of Ottawa and the Commission meetings be held in the City of Ottawa. It is suggested that the substitution of the words "City of Ottawa" by the words National Capital Region would correct an inconsistency.

I do not question where the Commission might wish to meet, but I do question the issue of inconsistency. I do not believe it is inconsistent at all that one would suggest that the headquarters be located in the national capital, namely the City of Ottawa.

I want to underline the fact that the location of the headquarters has nothing to do with the mandate of the National Capital Commission. In fact, the Government has approved what has been called an enhanced mandate of the National Capital Commission, which deals with safeguarding and preserving the capital. It does not deal with safeguarding and preserving the National Capital Region.

I do not believe that the NCC can safeguard and preserve the capital from a headquarters outside of the capital. I stress the word "capital" because the capital of Canada is the City of Ottawa. I personally believe that the NCC headquarters should be located in the national capital.

I want to make it clear to all Members that I am not questioning the mandate of the NCC to enhance the National Capital Region and do its work within the region on both sides of the river. That is not my point. In fact, I can substantiate that quite clearly by a motion that I put before the House on December 16, 1987, that deals with designating Confederation Boulevard that will run between Hull, the Outaouais and Ottawa on the Ottawa side. I am not questioning the mandate at all. My concern is the location of the headquarters.

With respect to Confederation Boulevard, that motion was unanimously supported by the City of Ottawa Council. I am waiting for and hoping that the City of Hull Council will also support that motion unanimously. I have asked the House to endorse it afterward.

By virtue of its name, National Capital Commission, I strongly believe that the headquarters of that agency should be within the national capital only. My amendment would remove the word "region", which would then indicate that the headquarters would be in the national capital. I ask Members of the House to support the amendment.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I have to disagree with that suggestion. In fact, the Hon. Member is suggesting that Clause 2, proposed by the Government, should be deleted. His amendment would have that same effect.

If we were to remove the word "region", we are left with national capital, hence the City of Ottawa. I have here the original Act, which says that the head office of the Commission shall be in the City of Ottawa. The Member is asking us to delete Clause 2 of the Bill.

It is quite clear that Ottawa is the capital of Canada, not the National Capital Region. We are not disputing that. We are saying that the National Capital Commission has a mandate to act in a territory from Cumberland, Ontario, to just short of Arnprior; from Buckingham, Quebec, to a city west of Hull, near Quyon. That is the territory of the National Capital Commission. Surely, the office of that Commission should be some place within that territory, but not restricted to one specific spot within the territory. That is what the Government is trying to do, and I support it.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Chairman, I have to agree with the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

I just indicated in my speech on second reading that I rejoiced in this wonderful symbolic gesture that was being made in the Bill because it would state precisely that the NCC would look after the total territory it is supposed to represent. The fact that the Bill states it can have its headquarters anywhere in that territory recognizes that it will intervene on the whole territory.

I do not understand why my colleague would feel threatened by the fact that we are finally putting into law what the National Capital Commission has been doing since it was created in the late 1960s. It is looking after the whole territory of the National Capital Region.

I find it very sad that my colleague feels threatened by this. I mentioned that we were talking about nation-building. Surely he is not fearful of building a strong and united nation.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Chairman, for the reasons stated by the last two Members who spoke, I also oppose the amendment.

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Chairman, I believe I made my thinking clear in my remarks at second reading. I cannot agree with the amendment.

We have all agreed that the City of Ottawa is the capital of Canada. However, it seems to me illogical to suggest that in a Bill dealing with the National Capital Region, the National Capital Commission cannot meet and cannot have offices located anywhere in the National Capital Region. I remind the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton that it is not as though we are creating a precedent with head offices of federal institutions being created outside the City of Ottawa. Last week, I believe, a Bill was passed in this place dealing with a new human rights institute, the head office of which will be in the City of Montreal. I believe there is an institute in Halifax, in the riding of the Hon. Minister of Public Works. There are other examples.

I do not view this in any way as a dangerous precedent. I believe it is just a logical step to have the head office located anywhere in the National Capital Region.

Having said that, in light of my discussions with the commission, I suspect that the head office will continue to remain in the downtown Ottawa area.

The Acting Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

• (1320)

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Reid): Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)) negatived: Yeas 2; nays 9.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Reid): I declare the amendment lost.

Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Reid): Shall Clause 3 carry?

On Clause 3—Objects and purposes of Commission

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I am looking here for reassurance from the Minister with respect to something I stated in my remarks at second reading with respect to the National Capital Commission's role in organizing and co-ordinating and promoting programs in the National Capital Region. We know, of course, it has been doing some of this in the past very successfully, and we encourage it to continue.

I do, however, want to make two things clear and, hopefully, the Minister can clarify them. First, we are not giving a brand new role and mandate to undertake a whole series of programs totally different than what we are doing now and, second, the traditional role of the National Capital Commission, the bricks and mortar role, referred to in that way by the Minister, will in fact continue.

Mr. McInnes: I can give the Member the assurance requested.

Clause 3 agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Reid): Shall Clause 4 carry?

On Clause 4—Coordination of Development.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I am looking for clarification here from the Minister on the role of the NCC under the proposed amendment to Clause 4. I believe I raised this as well in my second reading remarks and, hopefully, the officials of the National Capital Commission can advise the Minister in terms of obtaining a response.

The original Act, and I have a copy before me, gives a mandate to the National Capital Commission to develop and co-ordinate the development of public lands in the National Capital Region. That is fine. It gives a role to the NCC as well to review the proposals for the location, erection, alteration or extension of buildings and so on on public lands in the National Capital Region. If we look at the amendment before us, we see it refers to public lands in certain areas but also refers to private lands where the private land is leased by the federal Government, as I understand it.

I am just asking why the NCC wants that particular role of having an ability to in fact overview changes in private lands. I say to the Minister that I personally do not know if it is constitutionally possible because, of course, the role belongs to the provinces and we have property and civil rights in our Constitution. I am not sure the NCC could do that even it wanted to and even if this Bill were passed. I am asking the Minister, perhaps, to explain to the Committee of the Whole why in fact the NCC is looking for that and what purpose it will serve and, in fact, whether it has ascertained it has the authority to do that in any case.

Mr. McInnes: In reply to the Hon. Member, this is a planning function that is envisaged by this particular section. If a federal department leases land from the private sector and wishes to put up a building, then it seems appropriate that the NCC should have some co-ordinating power or be in a position to control that particular development. What we are concerned with is utilization of lands by any federal Department, whether they are owned by the federal Government or the private sector.

Mr. Boudria: I think we need a further explanation on this. I want to know what happens in a case where the Government leases a building from the private sector. I will use the example of a building, say in downtown Ottawa. The Government may in fact lease the usage of office space within the building. Is it envisaged that in those cases the Government would in fact have authority over the exterior of that building when it is leased by the Government? If the Government leases the land and builds its own building, well, fair game. That I accept. But I want to make sure what the legislation is intending to do in the case of the Government leasing a building as opposed to leasing the land to construct its own building.

I want to make sure that we do not interfere with the provincial powers in this case, which are usually conferred to the municipality under, for instance, in my Province of Ontario, the Planning Act. The municipalities have the privileges of zoning, and so on, and they are given that power by the provincial government. It worries me that that was not in the original Act and this amendment in fact confers a power there that could lead us into problems if it says what I think it does. I hope the Minister can provide the reassurance I am looking for.

Mr. McInnes: Section 11(1) says where any department proposes to erect, alter, extend or demolish a building. We are dealing with Departments of Government, not what the private sector would do. I would suggest the fears of the Hon. Member, perhaps, are unfounded, with respect.

Clause 4 agreed to.

Clauses 5 and 6 agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Reid): Shall the title carry?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, before we adopt the Bill in its final stage, we are dealing with the title, which is usually a general clause which permits general kinds of questions, and I will take a minute to just do that. I am not attempting to delay the Bill. I am sure we both would like to have a few minutes for lunch prior to Question Period. With respect to the potential of changing the territory of the National Capital Commission in the future, I think the Minister will know, although, for understandable reasons he has been absent around Parliament Hill for a while lately, that I have proposed, or actually the mayor of one of the communities in my riding which is not presently designated by the NCC, has proposed that the territory be extended eastward from the City of Ottawa in a manner which is consistent with the distance west of the city.

The Minister will know that west of the city, the NCC territory extends some 40 or 50 miles. East of the city, it is only a very short distance and barely goes beyond the Greenbelt. A number of municipalities are interested in extending that territory. I am presently having consultations with them, together with the NCC, which has kindly offered to assist the municipalities in providing briefings and so on.

There is an interest simply because there are islands on the Ottawa River that merit protection. That is true, I think on the side of the river I represent and well as the other side of the river which is represented by the Hon. Member for Gatineau. There are islands east of Masson, between Masson and Papineauville. There is a territory beside the Ottawa River which would warrant protection further eastward on both sides of the Ottawa River, that is on the south side which I represent, and, presumably, the same—although I cannot speak for the Hon. Member for Gatineau—in the area that she represents, in a manner, as I said, consistent with what we are doing west from the city.

Perhaps the Minister could take this occasion to indicate to us whether or not the Government would be favourably disposed to entertain such a proposition were it to come forward from the municipalities of that area, as I expect it will very shortly.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Chairman, may I say that the geography is not in stone. We are prepared to entertain discussions with the Hon. Member and any constituency. I would invite him to do that. I will not make any commitments but we will certainly entertain dialogue.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. I want to caution the Hon. Member. I come from the west coast. Looking at the National Capital and the National Capital Region, I am proud of our capital. I do not want the capital region to grow in size. It is a very costly venture as it is. Members here are trying judicially to look after what taxpayers' money is spent on. Just how large a region do we need? That is a debatable point.

I caution the Hon. Member not to tell his people at home that their area will be put into the National Capital Region so that suddenly the NCC will start looking after a great deal of his riding. Coming from British Columbia, I am not sure I want to see the national capital grow too much larger than the region it already occupies.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on this particular clause in order to avoid speaking on third reading, perhaps in response to the Hon. Member as well as to the Minister.

I thank the Minister for his response, which provides me with cautious optimism. I want to indicate to the Hon. Member who has expressed concern that I as well share his concern. I appreciate the position which he brings forward.

What I am asking is that the National Capital Region be permitted to exist in an equal distance east of Ottawa as it does west of Ottawa. We are not asking for anything to be changed that is not consistent with the present policy. Surely, if it warrants reserving an area of protection some 50 miles on one side of the city then it should be consistent on the other side. That is merely what I was stating today.

The Hon. Member should realize that just because an area is designated by the National Capital Commission, it does not necessarily mean that the Commission will have to spend funds on it. We know that the NCC only has authority over lands that it owns and not over other lands. If the owner of one of the islands which I mentioned earlier in the Ottawa River wanted to give the land to the National Capital Commission, the NCC could not accept it because it is not within that territory, something which I believe it should be. Even if the NCC could get the land for nothing it could not accept it. That is why I am looking for those changes.

With those remarks I will conclude by adding the following. My colleague from Ottawa—Vanier has suggested to the National Capital Commission in the area of programs for some time that the NCC should develop a system of what he calls visitors' passports which would permit a visitor from out of town coming to the city to buy at a discount rate a ticket to the National Arts Centre, the National Gallery and the Museum of Civilization, and so on. By buying the tickets all together, one would receive a discount. Also, this would be in the form of a passport book which could be stamped as the person visits the facilities and brought back home as a souvenir. I think that the idea is novel. It is an interesting one. I want to take this opportunity to restate it and invite the NCC to look at the proposal suggested by my colleague. I do not necessarily need a response to it immediately. However, I want to restate it for the benefit of the House.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Chairman, I made a mistake when I spoke earlier. I mentioned that the NCC was founded in 1968. It has been beavering away since 1958. I would like that error corrected since I might not be here this afternoon when the "blues" come around.

I also wish to say to the Minister that I appreciate the work that the NCC is doing in my area. However, I would like to underline the fact that perhaps the NCC has been intervening on the Quebec side only recently, in the last 10 years, and that we in the Municipality of Gatineau, which is the main city in my riding, are a little bit worried about the 10-year plan which has been introduced by the NCC. There does not seem to be too much that the NCC will be doing in our territory. I would like the Minister to again take a look at that plan to ensure that we are not blocked from development for the next 10 years because it is not in that 10-year plan. It is very important for the citizens in my area to feel that they are indeed part of the National Capital Region, which they are.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could just ask one final question of the Minister which I omitted to ask him earlier. It pertains to the change in the Bill with regard to the Financial Administration Act whereby the NCC is looking for a mandate so that it would not be required to go to Treasury Board when approving contracts. We did that in a clause that is already accepted but under the general heading of the title clause. Of course, I think you would find, Mr. Chairman, that the question would be in order nevertheless. I want to be assured that in fact we will be having rules and regulations under the Financial Administration Act until such time as a completely different set of rules is established for the NCC which would permit it to entertain the construction of a piece of roadway, for instance, and not have to go to Treasury Board, which is a sometimes awkward and lengthy process in order to complete the construction of a project, say, before winter comes. I understand that that is a problem now. I want to be assured that the rules will be in effect until the new rules are designed for the NCC in such a way so as to preserve the tendering process and so on of the Government.

I also want to make sure that the new rules that are adopted by the National Capital Commission will be done in such a manner so as to preserve in the long term the tendering process while assuring that something speedier is there than the present rules which I recognize are cumbersome.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Chairman, I give the assurance to the Hon. Member that we are making this Crown corporation perform as all other Crown corporations perform. A set of rules and a tendering process like other Crown corporations will be put in place.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid): It being after 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.40 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

RESEARCH REQUIRED ON NEUTRALIZING PCBS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the grave accident at Saint-Basile-le-Grand points to the urgent necessity of accelerating research to render PCBs harmless by way of a neutralizing process.

Across Canada there are hundreds, perhaps thousands of locations where PCBs are stored, posing a potential risk to the population. It becomes, therefore, imperative to intensify research so as to arrive very soon at a technological breakthrough that would greatly benefit Canadians.

Unfortunately, this Government weakened the research capability of the National Research Council when in November, 1984, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) cut the NRC budget by over $60 million. Once again we call on the Government to reverse that decision and provide the NRC with the funds necessary for accelerated research on ways and means to neutralize PCBs. This is a matter of urgent public interest.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF—RENTS CHARGED CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the monthly rents being charged civil servants and the RCMP who live in Government owned houses in Banff National Park are excessive. A three-bedroom single family detached home in Banff rents for $800 to $1,100, while a similar home in Jasper National Park is $300 lower, and in other national parks the rents are up to $600 lower.

When compared with monthly rents in similar Alberta towns Banff is higher by more than $400. In addition, Parks Canada has been reluctant to set aside areas for single family homes and so renters have no choice. No wonder the Banff civil servants are enraged. I ask the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) to lower the Banff rates so they are, at least, at the same level as rents charged in Jasper. When Government is a landlord it should be an example of fairness and should never act as an oppressive tyrant.

SPORTS

UNNECESSARY VIOLENCE IN NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, in a few short weeks from now hundreds of thousands of Canadian young people from coast to coast will be getting ready for another season of amateur hockey. Many will spend long hours on the hockey rinks practising and honing their skills, and dreaming of one day playing in the National Hockey League.

Unfortunately, the NHL continues to turn a blind eye to unnecessary violence that all too often rears its ugly head. The inevitable result was what we witnessed yesterday—the spectacle of a handcuffed Dino Ciccarelli being led out of a courtroom and into a jail, all as a result of an unnecessary assault during a hockey game last season.

Hockey is a tough, rugged game that combines skill, strength, speed, and determination. But hockey is not a game for goons or a game where unnecessary violence should be tolerated at any level—and that includes the NHL.

Hockey is Canada's greatest contribution to the world of international sport. Hockey is our game, a Canadian game, and we should not let ugly, squalid scenes of blood and violence make it less than what it is—one of the world's greatest sports.

Perhaps the federal Government could help by developing an anti-violence poster, comparing Ciccarelli in handcuffs on one hand with the non-violent superstar Wayne Gretzky on the other, and posting it in the arenas of this land.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

WAREHOUSING SITES FOR PCBS IN ABITIBI-TÉMISCAMINGUE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, no one in Quebec wanted the PCB disposal plant. What is dangerous in other places will also be dangerous where we live, in Abitibi.

The greatest concentration of PCBs is in Montreal and on the banks of the St. Lawrence, where the greatest concentration of population is too. It is very costly to remove the danger from these people by choosing Abitibi-Témiscamingue as a dump site. What will happen to us?

Bringing PCBs to Senneterre is only one step. Once they are all disposed of, other toxic wastes will follow. Opening the door to PCBs means opening the door to all toxic wastes. The region is big and we are few. However, we are very much alive and we love our environment. It is unacceptable for the Government of Quebec to use us as the garbage dump of North America.

I would like to quote (Quebec Environment) Minister Lincoln: "The issue of PCBs is very emotional; I do not judge these people in Senneterre. If there were a dump in Beaconsfield tomorrow, perhaps I would react the same way."

Mr. Speaker, no PCBs in Abitibi-Témiscamingue!

THE PRIME MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, is there no low to which our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will not stoop in his attempt to keep quiet on issues of pressing national importance? I would like to read into the record a statement made by his former press aide, Michel Gratton.

When Mr. Gratton decided that he was going to write a book, no less than the Prime Minister went after him in a desperate attempt to try to stop him from telling the truth. "They got to me emotionally, using people I like to make me feel guilty. First they tried to stop me from writing the book, and when that did not work they tried to rattle me so I would be nicer. When that didn't work, they spread rumours about my personal life. All this comes from Mulroney himself".

That is is not a statement of a Liberal Member or an opposition Member. That is a statement of the former press aide to the Prime Minister. My mother always said, "You are judged by the company that you keep". I think that the reason that the Prime Minister is in the mess that he is in today is because dirt starts from the top down.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened carefully to the Hon. Member's statement, and I just want to remind Members that statements are not meant for personal attacks on other Hon. Members. I have accepted the statement, but I just wanted to mention that.

RAILWAYS

MONTREAL SOUTH SHORE—SUBURBAN TRAINS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, we were glad to learn yesterday that the Government of Quebec is extending the moratorium on the Montreal—Saint-Hilaire suburban train until June 1989. However, we are sorry about two things in this matter: first, the complete absence of the Conservative Government in the search for a solution to the suburban transportation problem; second, the fact that the small municipalities in this region will have to cover a deficit that CN rejects. The reason there is a deficit, Mr. Speaker, is that CN and the federal Transport Minister never invested in improving suburban passenger service in this region. Again, Mr. Speaker, we are pleased with the initiative taken by the provincial Government and the municipalities to save their suburban trains, but we also deplore the absence of the federal Government, which should also contribute to the development of suburban train transportation in all regions of the country.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—RESUMPTION OF PEACE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, formal negotiations aimed at bringing about a peaceful settlement in Cyprus will resume at long last on September 15, after some three and a half years of interruption.

The key issues in these negotiations will be the guarantee of minority rights and the possible establishment of a federal system of government.

Canada has maintained a peacekeeping force on Cyprus since 1963. We have an international reputation as a peace negotiator. We have experience with both minority rights guarantees and with a federal system of government.

Because of this I would urge our Government to take and to play an active role in these Cyprus peace negotiations.

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

PRONUNCIATION OF ITALIAN NAMES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are one and a half million Canadians of Italian origin living among us. They speak one of the most beautiful languages in the world. It is also one of the simplest languages of the world. It is very easy to pronounce for French and English speakers, and yet, in general, their fellow Canadians make very little effort to pronounce Italian names as they are pronounced by the people who hold those names.

The rules are so simple that they can be learned in less than a minute, and yet many Italian Canadian families are changing their own pronunciation of their names to correspond with the way that their fellow Canadians wrongfully pronounce them.

The rules are simple. Final e is pronounced, ch is pronounced like a k, c followed by e or i is pronounced like ch, and g followed by e or i is pronounced like j. What could be simpler?

Let us stop murdering the Italian language when we use these names, and start pronouncing them properly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

CITY OF LACHINE—UNVEILING OF MONUMENT COMMEMORATING RENÉ LÉVESQUE

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add my most cordial greetings to all those who attended the unveiling of a monument by Robert Roussil in memory of René Lévesque in Lachine on Monday evening.

As our Prime Minister wrote in his congratulatory message:

> "Robert Roussil has created a strong, original work which not only reveals the talent of a great artist but also well expresses his deep understanding and admiration for René Lévesque.
> Whether or not one agrees with the ideal that guided René Lévesque's commitment, he was one of that province's great political personalities for all Quebecers."

The presence of thousands of residents of Lachine at the unveiling shows attachment and recognition for this great democrat.

On behalf of all, I wish to congratulate Mayor Guy Descary, the members of his Council and the citizens of Lachine for this initiative.

MEDICAL CARE

POSITION OF CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, we agree with the President of the Canadian Medical Association that the emergence of a two-tier medical system, which favours the rich, and the lack of recognition of nurses are two serious problems facing Canada's medical system. We do not share his solutions. User-fees would undermine one of the best health care systems in the world, which must be accessible regardless of incomes.

With the rapidly growing aging population we must give much greater priority to community support, rather than costly institutionalization, and to preventive measures that promote health rather than having an obsession with expensive high technologies.

Despite the Health Minister's declared policy, only about 10 per cent of our health dollar goes into community health services and health promotion. The federal Government's overall contribution to health care has been reduced by $5.6 billion over the past five years.

Nurses must be recognized with decent pay and not privatized as in Alberta. Services of all health care practitioners should be covered directly under medicare. Governments must develop community health clinics with flexible outreach services.

We urge the federal Government to restore 50 per cent funding provided that provinces agree to much greater emphasis on prevention and health promotion.

REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

CALL FOR CHANGE TO OUTDATED REGULATION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, according to current registered retirement savings plan regulations we should all be dead by age 90, or if we are hardy enough to live that long we should be able to live without any money.

At age 71 an RRSP can be converted into a registered retirement income fund but the user must take out all the money by the age of 90. That may have been all right when the regulations were written, but now more and more Canadians are living into their nineties and the question arises what are they going to live on unless this outdated regulation is changed?

They cannot all be like my mother-in-law, Mr. Speaker, who is alive and well at age 93 and is still winning money at cards three nights a week.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF ELENA KEIS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in June Callwood's column which appeared in The Globe and Mail yesterday she reported on the tragic plight of Elena Keis, a desperate, frightened woman living in Leningrad who applied for permission to emigrate to Israel eight years ago. Time is running out.

On September 9, her only son becomes 18 years old and will be conscripted into the Soviet Army. Elena Keis has been adopted by the Jewish community of Toronto. Michael Dukakis and his wife sent a cable recently to Mr. Gorbachev urging him to approve her application to leave.

Her mother, father, and older sister were permitted to leave the Soviet Union. She and her husband have not worked in sensitive jobs for more than five years. In this last year her physical and mental health has deteriorated drastically.

I am certain that all Members of Parliament will join with me when I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to make representations to Mr. Gorbachev on Elena Keis' behalf.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF TAX REFORM

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture recently endorsed the Government's tax reform package as it relates to farmers.

Under tax reform farmers will still be able to use cash accounting rather than accrual accounting. Moreover, when it sorts people out for tax purposes the Government will not use either the profit test, to distinguish between farmers and non-farmers, or the gross revenue test, to distinguish between full-time and part-time farmers. Part-time farmers will now be able to claim farm losses of up to $8,750 against their other income. Full-time farmers will be able to claim all of their farm losses against other income.

The Government will also extend the flexible livestock inventory provision to all commodities, which will enable farmers to average their income over a number of years.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture's endorsement of tax reform indicates how this Government achieves just and equitable results through consultation with those who will be affected by laws it contemplates making.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BROCKVILLE—NON-RECEPTION OF SIGNALS

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, three weeks ago the new FM station CHXL in Brockville began transmitting, and complaints regarding interference with telephones, TV reception, and other radio station reception have been flooding into my office.

I have called upon the Department of Communications to work closely with the broadcaster to resolve these complaints quickly and to bring about a solution to the problem.

In addition, area residents can now no longer receive the CBC signal from Kingston or Ottawa. CBC for 12 years has had a licence to transmit from its Maitland tower but because of technical difficulties has not fulfilled its responsibilities. As repeated strong representations have resulted in no action taken by the CBC, I therefore call upon the CBC to stop dragging its feet and meet its obligations immediately. If not, CRTC should revoke its licence.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

COMMITTEE REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I had the honour of presenting a report entitled Nuclear Energy: Unmasking the Mystery.

This report has 14 recommendations which come from the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources. Five out of the seven members represent areas of fossil fuel production, not the nuclear industry. Yet this report is very supportive of nuclear energy in Canada because of its environmental benefits, economic advantages in parts of Canada, and its security and flexibility.

Given today's increasing concerns of acid rain, dying maple trees, fishless lakes, and the greenhouse effect, nuclear energy must, and I emphasize must, have a role in meeting Canada's energy needs.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

PATRONAGE ALLEGATIONS—ALLEGED TELEPHONE CONVERSATION RECORDED BY MEMBER FOR ROSEMONT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I know they are talking about a strike at Canada Post, but I did not know the Government was on strike as well. At last, here comes the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, during the last few days, we have tried to obtain clarification regarding the actions of the Prime Minister's chief of staff, especially in his conversations with the Hon. Member for Rosemont.

During that time, we have had four different versions from the Government.

In the first version the Prime Minister told us there was no threat. In the second version, the Deputy Prime Minister told us the purpose was to ask the Hon. Member for further details and to remind her of her duty to hand over any evidence she had to the police. The third version came from the Deputy Prime Minister: "We warned her of the way her Quebec colleagues might react." And finally, yesterday, after being advised that a recording existed of this conversation, the Prime Minister's Office said: "She should be prepared to suffer the consequences of her actions."

Consequently, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister what was actually said during that conversation. Was the Hon. Member for Rosemont right when she said an attempt was made to force her to retract a statement she said was true? Was the approach taken by the Prime Minister's Office an attempt to hide the truth from Canadians? What is the Government's real version this morning?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I responded to that question yesterday, Mr. Speaker, and my answer remains the same.

ALLEGED REMARKS OF MEMBERS FOR LASALLE AND DUVERNAY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Government is sticking to the same version for two days.

However, this morning, Michel Gratton, a friend and confidante of the Prime Minister, gave The Globe and Mail a few details about the way the Prime Minister had acted in the past, and he is convinced that here again, all the arm twisting that was done to get Members to retract their statements came directly from the Prime Minister.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the other Members who did retract their statements today, the Hon. Member for LaSalle and the Hon. Member for Duvernay last week, whether they were also contacted by the Prime Minister's spokesperson or whether they retracted spontaneously?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am having some difficulty with the question. As I understood it, the Hon. Member is referring now to something that somebody has said as reported in a newspaper. The Hon. Member's first question was, I think, in order because he was referring—and I know the Hon. Member would want to hear me carefully—to statements made by Ministers and the Prime Minister in the House. I, of course, allowed it. However, this question, I think, is getting into a different situation. Of course, if the Hon. Minister wishes to reply, he can, but I have to advise the House that I think it is out of order.

• (1420)

Certainly the Hon. Member is always helpful to the Chair and to the House. I would give him a chance to reconstruct his question.

ALLEGED STATEMENTS OF MEMBERS FOR DUVERNAY AND LASALLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I thank the Chair for its advice. In fact, I was referring to statements made by two Members here in the House, the Members for Duvernay and LaSalle, when both Members had trouble remembering, had a few translation problems and, in the process, were at a loss for words. Consequently, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister: Was the Peter White approach used in the other two cases? Did these Members retract spontaneously or was it a case of arm twisting?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can choose to draw whatever conclusions he wants out of stories in the newspaper. I am not going to engage in the interpreting of speculative journalism, particularly on the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, of course, has another question, and I know that he will be as careful as he has been to keep the question within the bounds. I let that question go and I appreciate his co-operation.

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE CONTACTED MEMBERS FOR LASALLE AND DUVERNAY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I could quote directly from the article by Mr. Gratton, the Prime Minister's friend and confidante, who gave a very good description of the kind of action taken by the Prime Minister in the past. He says: "I am surprised he still does it".

Mr. Speaker, what I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister once again is this: I know that for the last few days, spokespersons at the Prime Minister's Office, headed by Marc Lortie, have said how furious, enraged and upset the Prime Minister was, but did this have any effect on the retractions that took place? Were those retractions spontaneous?

To get back to my question: Was the Hon. Member for Duvernay contacted by the Prime Minister's Office? Was the Hon. Member for LaSalle contacted by the Prime Minister's Office? Would that explain their decision to rise in the House and say they were misinterpreted and misquoted and blame it all on the media?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is really reaching now. I know that he is trying to get his former colleague, Mr. Serge Joyal, elected to the House of Commons, so I suppose he is getting prompted from him. I have tried to answer all the pertinent questions relative to this matter as accurately as I possibly can. I have given the information to the House that has been made available to me.

The Hon. Member chooses to malign and accuse people on the basis of unfounded allegations. If he wants to do that, based on speculation and inaccurate statements in news stories, he can go right ahead. May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that that is part of the process which has undermined the integrity of this House and has a reflection on all Members of the House. I wish the Hon. Member would start ceasing and desisting from this practice.

HEALTH

RESIDENTS OF SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND AND AREA—REQUEST THAT SPECIAL HEALTH PROGRAM BE INSTITUTED

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in his absence, I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the explosion of 20,000 gallons of PCBs forced the evacuation of 3,500 people from their homes. We know that PCBs are highly toxic substances and that several experts are concerned about the likely consequences on the health of the people of Saint-Basile-le-Grand and the surrounding area.

Can the Minister assure the residents of Saint-Basile-le-Grand and the vicinity that the federal Government will implement a special health research and follow-up program in order to determine both short and medium term, impact on all those affected by this accident?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member for Outremont and all Members of this House of the Government's extreme concern for the well-being of the citizens of Saint-Basile-le-Grand and the surrounding areas as a result of this tragic fire.

I am sorry some Hon. Members opposite are not as concerned about this issue as the House should be. We are extremely concerned about the combustion of some 5,000 gallons of PCBs in a warehouse site in Saint-Basile-le-Grand. I can give the House a status report.

As we know, the fire has been extinguished and a cleanup is commencing. A fire investigation is under way as to the cause of this tragic event, and sampling and analytical work is ongoing. In fact, officials from the Department of the Environment were on site within half an hour of the first alarm and a full scientific team was on site first thing yesterday morning. They have been working with a committee of experts who were on the scene scientifically measuring the extent of contamination and any possible hazards that may result from this tragedy. The team includes a principal toxicologist, an expert in the matters of PCB contamination and its combustion, Dr. Albert Nantel, and Dr. Carriere, a local medical adviser who is familiar with these problems.

I can assure the House that the Government and the Minister of the Environment, who is at this very moment travelling to the site and will make a statement later today, are taking every necessary precaution to ensure the health of and the orderly reoccupation by the citizens when it is safe to do so.

RESEARCH INTO NEUTRALIZATION OF PCBS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my suplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The grave accident at Saint-Basile-le-Grand points to the urgent need for PCB research. Across Canada there are hundreds and perhaps thousands of locations where PCBs are stored, posing risk to the population. It therefore becomes imperative to intensify research. Unfortunately, the Government cut our research capability at the National Research Council when in November, 1984, the Minister of Finance cut the NRC budget by over $60 million.

Will the Government reverse its decision and provide the NRC with the funds it needs to accelerate research on ways and means to neutralize PCBs? It is a matter of urgent public interest.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer this question. The Hon. Member made some erroneous utterings in her preamble.

There has not been the cut to the National Research Council she has alleged, nor has this particular program of PCB research been targeted for any cuts. In fact, research is going on, not just at the NRC but in government laboratories and universities, in ways to handle, dispose of, and store this dangerous substance. The Hon. Member's assertion is wrong. The Government is acting and research institutes are dealing with the problem.

MONTREAL REGION—PROPOSED PCB WAREHOUSING SITES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister and it deals with the serious situation that prevails in the Montreal area because of PCB storage sites. Yesterday when I asked the Minister if the federal Government had a list of those storage sites in the country, the answer was a very clear no. However, would the Minister confirm today that 20,000 liters of PCB's are warehoused on the roof of The Bay Department Store in the heart of downtown Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm the accuracy of the suggestion offered by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party. As he knows, as part of the policy of eliminating PCBs from transformer systems across Canada, it is not legal to use and install such transformers. In fact, it could well be that there are some transformers still in operation, perhaps on the roofs of buildings, but this would not, I would imagine, be a storage situation.

Department of Environment officials have provided me with an assurance that the full inventory of PCB storage locations is available and regularly updated. As well, the Minister of the Environment, working with provincial Environment Ministers through the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, has established specific storage sites outside urban areas, and there is, as the Hon. Member knows, a plan to remove all of these concentrations of stored PCBs to these safe sites. It is part of a federal-provincial initiative and an action plan which has been developed in consultation with provincial environment officials who have the legal and final authority within their provinces to ensure that these measures are fully complied with.

SITUATION IN MONTREAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I had confirmed for me just a while ago that there are indeed located on the roof of The Bay store in downtown Montreal some 20,000 litres of PCBs. This is a very dangerous substance and it strikes one as dangerously serious in its implications if there should be a fire.

I am also told PCBs are stored in The Gazette building in downtown Montreal, perhaps on the roof again. I have also learned that until very recently, and we do not know when, there were 60,000 litres of PCBs stored by Air Canada at Dorval International Airport. I am told they were just moved recently and I would like the Minister to find out just how recently that was.

More concretely, with respect to the existing sites in the heart of Montreal, would the Minister confirm that the federal Department had a list of sites where these substances were stored? Will he also find out when the Government first learned of them being stored on the roof of The Bay store? In addition, could he tell us why the federal Government did not take action to have these PCBs removed from what was obviously an unsafe site in the centre of Montreal?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Leader of the NDP that the Government and the Minister will certainly be doing everything within their power and jurisdiction to see that such dangerous storage sites are eliminated from all urban areas of Canada. I am not able to confirm whether or not there are quantities of PCB coolant fluids on The Bay store in Montreal. I do not think he would expect me to assure him of that today.

However, I can assure him that the Minister of the Environment, who is on his way to Montreal at this moment with the Minister of Transport, will be making a full statement after his arrival and inspection of the site, and should be able to clarify the extent to which there might be other similar storage sites in the Greater Montreal area. I certainly share the concern of all Members of this House over any such storage of PCBs in any of our cities.

REQUEST THAT LIST OF STORAGE SITES BE MADE PUBLIC

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am told that the Quebec Department of the Environment prepared a list of some 50 such sites in that province some time ago. There are known to be some 500 in the province of Ontario. I am also told that a former employee of the federal Department of the Environment, Mr. Marc Levy, lost his job not too long ago because of a conflict of interest in this respect, and he has since been involved in doing work for private gain in the storage of PCBs.

Given that, will the Minister assure us that the Minister of the Environment will make public tomorrow a complete list of the storage sites of this very dangerous substance so the people of Canada will know whether they are living in close proximity to such a site? Will he also assure us that the Government will take steps to make sure that all protective measures have been put in place, and that the Minister will make a comprehensive statement on federal government policy dealing with the present serious situation in Quebec, as well as outlining a policy for all of Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I cannot make undertakings on behalf of the Hon. Minister of the Environment in the House this afternoon. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that all of the available information, that is to say the inventory of PCB storage sites in Canada, is available to the Department of the Environment. Working with provincial environment officials through the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, an action plan is being developed to do exactly what the Hon. Member has asked for.

At the same time I understand his concern and that of all Members, and in particular the residents of Saint-Basile-le-Grand, that something more urgent and immediate must be done. There is indeed an investigation under way into the circumstances of the fire and the necessary measures which must be taken to provide a measure of confidence to the displaced residents of this part of Montreal.

EMPLOYMENT

FREE TRADE—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Employment categorically rejected the proposal to set up special adjustment programs for workers displaced by free trade. How can the Government support that position when the provinces, the Macdonald Commission, the C. D. Howe Institute, and others, along with two Standing Committees of this House, all recommended special adjustment programs? Is the Government going to let these workers fend for themselves after free trade?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows but refuses to accept, we have within the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program the flexibility to deal with labour adjustment in all of its categories. Five million workers a year are affected by changes in their jobs, in the workplace or in their work description now. There are going to be 251,000 new jobs created under free trade and it is our job to ensure that programs are in place to ensure workers can take advantage of those opportunities. I can assure the Hon. Member that no one has their interest at heart more than this Government and this Minister.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, is everyone else wrong and the Minister right? The present programs are not working. They are not adequate. Since 1984, the programs have been cut by 32 per cent, from $2.2 billion to $1.5 billion. They are not working and the proof lies in the fact that we have over 10 per cent unemployment in five of our provinces, yet we have a shortage of skilled workers in Ontario. If the programs are working why are we left with a situation like this? Why is the Government content to have that sort of program with the introduction of free trade?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that regional differences in unemployment rates were not invented by this Government. Quite the reverse. Unemployment in all regions of Canada has come down since this Government came into office. If our training programs are so terribly bad, then why is unemployment at its lowest level in so many years?

The programs we have put in place are sufficient to deal not only with any adjustments that come with free trade, but also to prepare the Canadian people in the 1990s for a fast changing workforce. We are creating real jobs, not paint-the-fence jobs.

DISASTERS

QUÉBEC PCB FIRE—EFFECT ON LIVESTOCK

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and concerns the fire in Saint-Basile-le-Grand and its impact on the agricultural community.

It is our understanding that the Government of Quebec has quarantined animals from that area. Can he advise the House what action the federal Government is taking in its jurisdiction dealing with livestock in particular?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position at this moment to supply details other than to say that, immediately upon recognition of the incident, our people were on the scene and have been there since. They are working in full co-operation with the environmental and health and welfare people. From Canada's point of view, we have developed an action plan. When additional, detailed and accurate information is received from the environmental and health authorities, we will implement whatever action is necessary to ensure the health and safety of the Canadian consumer. We will also be involved if the area is designated a disaster area. If sufficient funds are provided to trigger the federal-provincial agreement, then Agriculture Canada will be fully involved on behalf of farmers and consumers.

COMPENSATION SOUGHT FOR AREA RESIDENTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and is with regard to the compensation question. The Minister of Agriculture just indicated that the area could possibly be declared an emergency area under the normal rules of the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec.

Will the Government indicate whether it is prepared to work with the Government of Quebec to provide compensation to those individuals who, through no fault of their own, have had personal effects, livestock, et cetera, destroyed, as well as a disruption of their lifestyle? Is the Government prepared to enter into an agreement with the Province of Quebec for compensation?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think the question is slightly premature. Not to in any way trivialize the nature of the event that has occurred, it is important, first, to have scientific teams on the site and to do a careful assessment of the extent of possible damage to the surrounding areas, the homes, the properties, the gardens, and the health of the individuals who must return to live in their community.

That assessment is under way. As I have indicated, there is a team of scientists taking and analyzing samples which are being reviewed on site by a committee of experts. Until we have a full report at the end of that process it would be premature to speculate on a particular level of compensation.

However, the Hon. Member and the House can be assured that the Government, as it always has, will meet its full measure of responsibility to live up to the genuine needs of people which arise from this tragic and unforeseen event.

EMPLOYMENT

SITUATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND INSHORE FISHERMEN

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday I spoke to the Minister regarding the plight of plant workers at Brig Bay, Newfoundland, and I thank the Minister for promising to investigate that situation.

Today I want to bring to the Minister's attention the crisis in the inshore fishery on the Northern and Burin Peninsulas of Newfoundland. In both these areas fishermen have not had enough earnings in the last 15 weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance this winter. They need either direct financial compensation, such as that given to farmers, or a job development program which will pay them a wage equivalent to what they would earn as fishermen during a normal fishing season.

Is the Minister prepared to direct her officials to investigate the situation in both the Burin and Great Northern Peninsulas of Newfoundland? Will she ask those officials to devise, on an emergency basis, an appropriate response to the needs of these fishermen in Newfoundland and Labrador?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member. We are watching the situation in Newfoundland and Labrador very carefully. As the Hon. Member knows, when there was a hardship of this nature in 1985 the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, were very involved in coming up with a solution, which solution was not an extension of UI benefits.

In answer to the question about investigating the situation, my officials will be meeting with his and he and I will be discussing the situation further.

REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY ASSESSMENT OF SITUATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the Minister that there is very little resemblance between this situation and that in 1985. In 1985 we were talking about workers who had had a season which ended short of the 10 weeks required to qualify for unemployment insurance. This year we are talking about workers who have had only one or two weeks of earnings in the last 15.

It is not only a matter of having income this winter, it is a matter of having the funds to put bread and butter on the table now. It is a real crisis, in particular on the Burin and Great Northern Peninsulas of Newfoundland.

I ask the Minister not to wait until November 15 to do an assessment but to direct her officials to do an emergency assessment now and to find a way to assist fishermen and their families now, many of whom have children going back to school in a few weeks, to put bread and butter on the table and to do all the things that any Canadian has to do to prepare their families for school in the fall and to get through the coming winter months.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration, has said, her officials and mine are examining the circumstances which could lead to the necessity of such an emergency program. I am pleased to have been a part of the decision making which led to the program in 1986 which my colleague mentioned. I believe there was a smaller program in 1987 in other parts of Newfoundland.

However, it has never been our policy to announce assistance, which could well be more greatly needed later in the year, when the fishing season is still under way.

Mr. Tobin: They are hungry now.

Mr. Siddon: There are still fishermen from the Labrador Straits and the Great Northern Peninsula fishing off the coast of Labrador. As the Hon. Member for St. John's West pointed out in this House last week, the Newfoundland fishery has produced much higher financial benefits and landings in total than it did last year. We will certainly give very serious consideration to the needs in the areas to which he has referred, the Burin Peninsula and the Labrador Straits region of Newfoundland.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASED INTEREST RATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance about the increase in interest rates. Despite the pleas of Canada's Premiers last week, the Bank of Canada has today raised the bank rate again and three of Canada's chartered banks have raised their prime rate by one-half of a per cent to 11.25 per cent.

Does the Government intend to take any action to roll back these increases in bank interest rates, or has the Government told its friends in the banks that they can jack up their interest rates because there will not be an election this fall?
