I can tell Hon. Members, and the statistics will bear me out on this, that it is a pretty disappointing story here. I know that members of the NDP will agree with me when I say that. If there were a perfect system of day care, surely it would have been created in Manitoba with all those years of socialist government.

Unfortunately, the facts are these. The annual growth rate in licensed, non-profit spaces in Manitoba between 1982 and 1987 was not, as a matter of fact, among the highest in Canada. It was not even close. In fact, the growth rate was 8 per cent per year—barely half the national average for that period of time, putting socialist Manitoba number eight in growth rate in this country behind three of the four Atlantic provinces and behind the other two prairie provinces. While members of the NDP rant about increasing the growth rate, I wish they could have said something like that to the members of their own Party and done something about it when they had the opportunity.

Getting back to the speech read by the member of the New Democratic Party from Kamloops—Shuswap, he referred to the $3.94 billion in federal money committed in this Bill over the next years. He said: "What is worse is the Government is putting a cap on it. It is saying that this is it, that it will inadequately fund child care only for the next seven years".

There are two points that should be made in response to that comment. First, while there is an over-all cap and an annual cap on federal spending over the first seven years, that cap is set at such a level that it will permit a much larger financial commitment from the federal Government than would have been spent under the Canada Assistance Plan. Members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party know that that is the case.

As well, I would like to make this analogy before I leave this cap of the federal Government. We have heard it a number of times. I will put it in terms I think Members opposite can understand. Let us consider a union which had been negotiating 5 per cent increases each year under a collective agreement and the employers came to members of the union and said this: "Instead of that 5 per cent agreement that you have been getting and negotiating each year we will give you 10 per cent and guarantee it every year". Would any union turn that down? Would the NDP turn that down? No. That is why the provinces will be co-operating with us in the implementation of Bill C-144.

Second, since the purpose of this Bill is to improve the availability and affordability of quality licensed child care in Canada, it proposes a seven-year boost period in which the number of licensed spaces will more than double. After that, our Government, again under the leadership of the Prime Minister, will see to it that we continue with our commitment. We will all be here to do that. Members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party will not be. They will have an even narrower corridor in this House. But I know the Prime Minister will continue beyond that to assess the situation and take care of the needs of all Canadian children.

I see that my time is just about up. I am very pleased to have been able to make some comments. This is a great step forward. This is an historic document for Canada's children, and one that if the NDP and the Liberals or their friends down the hall block is one with respect to which they will have to pay the price and answer some tough questions from Canadians in the next general election.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I certainly listened with interest to my friend's remarks. It is a good thing that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) made a speech, otherwise I do not think that the Hon. Member would have had anything to say today. He certainly used that speech as his background.

Since the Hon. Member was on the Special Committee on Child Care and also on the legislative committee and must have been very involved in the government planning for child care, why did the Government decide to put a seven-year limit on this program? Why are capital funds only going to be available for seven years? Why are they grandfathered at that point?

There is a great need for child care across Canada. Every indication is that that need will increase and not decrease, particularly if employment remains up—and members of the Government have been bragging about employment which means many more jobs for women. It goes without saying that the need and demand for child care will increase. I want to ask the Hon. Member this question. Why has the Government limited the amount of money that it will provide to only 200,000 spaces over seven years? That really is not very much. Why did the Government just pluck an arbitrary figure out of the sky?

If members of the Government were to look at the information from the Day Care Information Centre, which is a branch of Government, they would see that the figures that were provided show that this would not even meet 25 per cent of the need for child care in Canada. Children are not going to go away. We are going to have more and more children of working mothers, fathers, and single parents who will need child care.

When there is such a need and when that need is going to increase, I am wondering why the Government has put these two limits on—the seven-year limit and the 200,000 spaces. There is another limit in the Bill which is very subtle. The poorer provinces, the Atlantic region in particular, had no representation at committee to speak about this matter, nor did the two territories. Yet we know that they are very undeveloped as far as child care services are concerned. There are many caring people in those communities, but there exists mainly an informal type of baby-sitting arrangements. The people we heard from when we toured those areas indicated they wanted to have training programs. Some provinces do not even have a basic training program for child care workers. They certainly need to get decent wages and need to get licensed centres and licensed family day care homes so that they will be able to have good quality, affordable care and pay decent wages.

Why also is the Government at the end of this seven-year program saying that it will reduce the top-up in the variable cost sharing for the poorer provinces and territories? Again, that seems quite unrealistic. Many of them will just get organized about half-way through this period and will not be able to have reached anywhere near meeting their needs by the end of seven years.

The questions are three. Why just seven years? Why is there this arbitrary figure of just 200,000 spaces? Why is there a reduction in cost sharing for poorer provinces at the end of seven years?

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): There is a lot there, Madam Speaker, and I see I do not have much time.

Let me pick up on one of the points I would like to clarify for the House. I refer to the the Hon. Member's comments which would leave the impression that somehow people from all areas of the country were not heard on this particular subject. That is nonsense. As a member of the Special Committee on Child Care, of which she was a member, I think that committee heard more witnesses, had more briefs, and we did more research on this—

Ms. Mitchell: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I think the Hon. Member should be factual. This was a legislative committee with experts who were here on this Bill. This Bill was not before us when we had the Special Committee on Child Care. There were no Members from the Atlantic regions or the North, and only one from most of the other provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I realize the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls may want to continue to respond to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East, which could be done after Question Period. There are five minutes left in the period for questions and comments.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

AIR CANADA

TRANSPORTATION OF PCBS ON PASSENGER FLIGHTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this weekend it was revealed that Air Canada transported 27 tonnes of PCB wastes to Great Britain on three different commercial flights. In doing so, Air Canada complied with international and federal laws and regulations.

While legal, this action raises serious questions. Should toxic wastes be transported with passengers? Are we fully aware and willing to accept, should a flight crash, the consequences of the burning of PCBs, perhaps in a densely populated area near the airports where the flight takes off and lands?

So far, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has not announced in his PCB policy that he would ban the export of PCB wastes from Canada. He has the power to do so, through the Environmental Protection Act.

We urge the Minister to adopt a policy whereby we manage our toxic wastes at home instead of shipping them to other nations. The Minister should use the power that he has and ban PCB exports from now on.

SPORTS

OLYMPIC GAMES—BEN JOHNSON, 100 METRE WINNER

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, some people complain that Canada is giving too much to the Third World. But often that world gives much to Canada, such as our first 1988 Olympic Gold Medal.

All Canada is bursting with pride today because of Ben Johnson, and especially so is the City of Scarborough, where he grew up. But if his mother, Gloria, had not brought Ben and her other children from Jamaica less than 20 years ago, Canada would be less proud as a nation and Scarborough less proud as a city.

When anyone says that Canada is admitting too many immigrants—and I have heard many say that—let him ask himself if he would like the number to have been one less the year that Ben Johnson came here as a young child.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OLYMPIC GAMES—BEN JOHNSON, 100 METRE WINNER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it was a difficult week for those of us who dared dissent from the professional pessimism of Canadian sports journalists. But not for Ben, who was carefully and quietly maintaining his own counsel, seemingly expending, sometimes dangerously, little of his talented reserves, and sowing deliberate doubt, mostly, though it was not noticed, among the competition.

Finally, the gun went off, and as Ben promised, the race was over. At that moment, among Canadians throughout the world a brilliant flash of ecstatic joy drowned the shadows of doubt.

There remains a euphoric glow as we remember, as we will always remember, the explosive flight from the blocks, the arm raised not only in victory but in a promise of victories yet to come, and the flag—the Canadian flag—flashing red, the colour of passion, and of passionate pride.

We salute you, Ben, and we thank you not only for a victory of historic and incomparable magnificence, but as well we thank you for a lesson in the persistent pursuit of excellence provided for our youth, for our nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

MANITOBA FARMERS—COMPENSATION FOR WET WEATHER CROP LOSSES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for the last three months has been announcing billions and billions of dollars' worth of promises to Canadians. Over a year ago the then Minister of Agriculture announced that farmers who are farming in the Interlake area of Manitoba would receive a special payment of some $1.5 million in co-operation with the provincial Government. This would be a special payment for the loss of crops in the fall of 1985 and 1986, due to the damp and wet weather during those two seasons in which they lost their crops. Over 400 farmers are still waiting for these payments promised by this Government.

I call on the new part-time Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) to make good on this promise by the former Minister of Agriculture, and not renege on this promise to these hard-pressed farmers, as the Prime Minister has on many of his other promises.

PIPELINES

VANCOUVER ISLAND NATURAL GAS PIPELINE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, the announcement last Thursday that the federal Government would contribute $150 million towards the construction of the Vancouver Island gas pipeline is not only the fulfilment of a project which the members of the B.C. caucus have worked towards for many years, but it will bring real, tangible benefits to thousands of British Columbians on Vancouver Island.

Often missed in the discussion are the opportunities which it will bring to residents on the Sunshine Coast, and particularly to the wonderful community of Squamish on the Howe Sound.

Now the people of Squamish will be able to look forward to a cheaper source for domestic heating, but even more important, to the possibility of attracting new industry to their community.

With an economy based on forestry, Squamish is well situated on tide water. Now, with the possibility of natural gas—a clean and efficient fuel—it is a logical location for development of new industries to add value to the forest resources and to diversify the economy.

The Vancouver Island gas pipeline is not only good news for Vancouver Island, it is very good news for Squamish.

FOOD

SUSPENSION OF FINANCING FOR THIRD WORLD FOOD IRRADIATION PROJECTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, funding of food irradiation projects in developing countries has been put on hold by the International Finance Corporation, an affiliate of the World Bank. The corporation claims that it would be inappropriate to finance food irradiation projects in developing countries until the technology gains wider consumer acceptance and commercialization in Canada and the United States.

It concluded: "Issues related to the environment, consumer acceptance and operating safety of food irradiation projects are so complex that it is unlikely that such projects in developing countries will meet our stringent standards".

Canada, a member, investor, and shareholder in the IFC, is involved in many food irradiation projects abroad. The Canadian Government has declared the technology safe, and this summer it introduced regulations that permit the widespread use of the technology on Canadian foods.

When the only way that Canada can get food irradiation technology into Third World countries is by giving it away through CIDA, we certainly question the wisdom of imposing it on the Canadian public.

Once again I call on the Government to abandon its ill-considered plans for food irradiation, both in Canada and in the developing world.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—GARBAGE DISPOSAL—FEDERAL ROLE SUGGESTED

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, next to the housing crisis and the ever present danger of dioxin seeping into drinking water from the chemical dumps on the American side of the Niagara River, garbage disposal is the greatest problem facing the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Every Metro resident creates one kilogram—2.2 pounds—of garbage each day. Fifty per cent of all garbage comes from packaging. Individuals can help to reduce the amount of garbage by recycling and by using environment-friendly biodegradable shopping and garbage bags.

Just as the federal Government has a role to play in solving the housing crisis and in cleaning up toxic waste, it also has a role to play in reducing the amount of garbage generated by packaging. So let us get on with it.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT 10-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR BENEFITS BE RETAINED

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, in New Brunswick on the weekend, I heard things that trouble me. I heard angry words from people affected by the changes to the qualifying period for unemployment insurance. In many cases in New Brunswick, it is difficult to find 16 weeks of employment when under the best conditions, it is hard enough to find 10.

The workers' anger is a result of the Government's lack of concern for the problem. Although this Government changed the unemployment insurance regulations to accommodate people in a region of Quebec, it has done nothing for the people in New Brunswick.

This injustice cannot continue any longer. The Government is provoking the workers. The Government's inaction could have unfortunate consequences. The Government cannot threaten the income security of families and expect people to take it lying down. The Government must act now. It is urgent!

THE ECONOMY

FOURTH QUARTER JOB CREATION PROSPECTS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, a poll reported by the Montreal Daily News on September 22 found that jobs are being created at an unprecedented rate in the fourth quarter, which is traditionally a slow growth period. There were 1,500 companies polled across Canada. About 26 per cent said that they plan staff increases, and 13 per cent said that they plan to reduce staff. Job creation in the fourth quarter is the highest for any year in the 1980s.

Take construction, for example, which faces lay-offs at this time of the year. It is reported that 23 per cent will be seeking to increase their hirings.

This trend is concrete proof of our Government's economic policies which have seen the creation of 1,295,000 jobs, lower interest rates, price stability, low inflation, and an improved investment climate.

PLANNED PARENTHOOD WEEK

NEED FOR EDUCATION AND COUNSELLING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, since this week is Planned Parenthood Week I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada for its excellent work in the field of healthy sexuality.

Planned Parenthood is calling upon government to move quickly to formulate and adopt a comprehensive reproductive health policy which provides sex education in schools and homes, access to birth control information and services, as well as counselling and research.

Canadians are incurring extremely high health care costs, both social and personal, because of the lack of information and services in the field of sexuality.

We urgently need a co-ordinated approach to provide education and counselling services. At present various Departments at all levels of government deal with only parts of this problem. This completely fails to provide adequate information or reproductive health services for Canadians.

In today's world, especially with the pressure of AIDS, other sexually transmitted diseases, and unintended pregnancies, such a policy is desperately required.

I urge the Government to develop a comprehensive reproductive health care policy immediately in consultation with the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada.

POLITICAL PARTIES

GOVERNMENT'S INITIATIVES—POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Leader of the Liberal Party for having circulated to the press a list of 69 initiatives our Government took between May 30 and September 9. However, he does not seem to agree with many of those initiatives.

Am I to understand he is against the $110 million for cleaning up the St. Lawrence River; the $515 million for Quebec regional development; the $25 million for the establishment of a geoscience research center in Quebec; the $30 million for the upgrading of the airport in Montreal; the $600 million Mr. Masse announced in Montreal for research and development of new energy sources and energy conservation?

Am I to understand that if the Liberal Leader were elected, he would tear up those agreements?

OLYMPIC GAMES—BEN JOHNSON, 100 METRE WINNER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Ben Johnson for his remarkable and heroic achievement which has brought so much glory and honour to his adopted country of Canada.

More than glory and honour, I can report that benefits are already abounding. On Sunday I attended a rally in the Jane-Finch area of my riding called "Say No to Drugs". Of course Ben Johnson's flying start was much admired. There were hundreds of kids around the field showing, like Ben Johnson, that people can fly, or try to fly, without the benefit of drugs.

PUBLIC SERVICE

WAGES OF EAST COAST NAVAL DOCKYARD WORKERS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I was shocked last week, and I am sure that some of my Nova Scotia colleagues share my concern, when we heard the Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) indicate that regional wage rates would continue to be paid with respect to members of the ship repair unit at CFB Halifax.

The reason for our concern is that we on the East and West Coasts are asked to share in other elements of the nation's economy, in particular high interest rates generated from the Province of Ontario. I was especially concerned that a Member from the Province of Ontario saw fit to raise this particular point in the House of Commons and say that he certainly did not want people on the East Coast to share in the revenues of Canada to the extent of having parity.

I am sure that westerners will agree with me that wage parity is an essential element of our parliamentary situation. We pay ourselves on an equal basis. We pay the Armed Forces on an equal basis. If we are going to pay public servants on a different basis, then we better have a very good reason for it. I would like the Minister of State for the Treasury Board to tell me very exactly what that reason is.

EMPLOYMENT

CALL FOR OLDER WORKERS PROGRAM

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, for two and a half years the Government has announced that it would have a program for older workers, and it still has not delivered. I am very concerned that there are many resourceful people in our community who cannot find work because this program will not be implemented.

The Hamilton Help Centre went around the program and found one that the Government could deliver. For two years it has been operating with an 86 per cent success rate. Now the Government is about to cancel that and not give it any other options. This is a disgrace for older workers.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. William C. Winegard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, last weekend on a national television show the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) spoke about the free trade agreement with the United States.

Unfortunately, rather than shedding light on the agreement he perpetuated many of the myths. For example, he insists that we cannot continue our policy of helping the various regions of Canada. We know that is simply not true. There is nothing in the agreement with respect to regional development. Nothing has changed and nothing will be changed in 1990 over what it is in 1988. The people of the West know that, the people of Québec know that, and the people of the East know that.

Mr. Speaker, is it not time that we began to look at the specifics of the agreement rather than perpetuate the myths? We owe the people of Canada that.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SALE OF MOISIE BASE—MUNICIPAL EVALUATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, further to our discussions last Friday, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works.

Saturday, the Minister issued a press release in which he confirmed that the sole assessment made of the property in question amounted to $28,000 and that the property was being sold for $187,500.

Mr. Speaker, on Saturday the Minister informed us that according to him this property, which includes 93 houses, a community. centre, an Economat store, an electric power station and 733 acres of land on one of the ten best salmon rivers of the world, was worth $28,000.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister went even further. This year, he went so far as to send an initial payment of $50,000 to the Town of Moisie, in lieu of taxes, and the town says the total tax bill will be $113,454.51 for a municipal assessment of $6.2 million.

My question to the Minister is this: How can he send a cheque for $53,000 as an advance payment in lieu of taxes on a property whose value he assesses at $28,000? How can a ratepayer pay more in taxes than his property is worth? How is that for incompetence! Could the Minister explain this discrepancy to the House?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I confirm the information in my statement released during the weekend that there is only one appraisal outstanding for this property by a competent appraiser. It states that the value is $28,000.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McInnes: In response to the tender call, 19 firms submitted a quotation of the value of the property; 17 of those were under $12,000, one was $50,000, and the other was $100,000. I suggest that that is the best indication of the value of that property.

LETTER SENT TO MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct another question to the Minister. As we know, his valuation is not reliable, because even the Prime Minister's friend says the asking price is $30,000 for one house only. Therefore, I feel the Hon. Minister should check his figures and see what is going on in Moisie, because that property is worth much more than the $28,000 referred to by the Minister, as he himself acknowledged when he paid municipal taxes based on a $6.2-odd million valuation, unless of course the Minister is utterly incompetent.

But I would like to deal with another aspect of his press release, in which the Minister confirmed having provided the RCMP with the letter he received on August 8, 1988, from Mr. H.D. Hyland.

What he failed to say is at what point in time that letter was provided to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. And I know Mr. Hyland has not yet been questioned by the RCMP. Therefore, what has the Minister been doing with that letter between August 5 and last weekend?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious to make a comment on the whole of this case, but unfortunately, because of the RCMP investigation, I am precluded from doing so.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: I would remind Hon. Members that, while I understand their interest in this case, the Hon. Minister is trying to respond to a question asked by one of their colleagues and they should extend him the courtesy of being able to do so. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members cry "shame". If I did try to pre-judge this case the Hon. Member would be the very first person in this House saying that I improperly interfered with an RCMP investigation.

PUBLIC WORKS

MINISTER'S HANDLING OF OFFICIAL'S LETTER—SALE OF MOISIE LANDS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are not asking questions having to do with the affair that the Minister tells us the RCMP is now investigating. The simple question put to him is about his conduct as a Minister. That question is: having acknowledged that he received the letter on or before August 5, when did he do something with it and what did he do with it?

It is his conduct we are questioning, not the conduct involving the sale of the land.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, and I will continue to repeat, that while I am very anxious to comment fully on this file, of which I have and have had total knowledge, the matter is the subject of an investigation by the RCMP. They will report soon enough and then the Hon. Member can ask me any question he wishes.

BIDDING PROCEDURE—LEGAL OPINIONS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to turn to another aspect of the matter, the bidding procedure. In the questioning last week Mr. Hylands was quoted accurately from his tape as indicating that the Department had legal opinions condemning the bidding procedure followed. I want to ask the Minister about those legal opinions.

Does he have them? Has he reviewed them? If the procedures did not meet government standards or the standards they should have, what is the Minister going to do about it?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, no legal opinions were ever given to me at any time during the course of this particular matter. Legal opinions have now been brought to my attention. Nevertheless, I reiterate and confirm that we must and should, in the interests of all those people who may or may not be prejudiced as a result of the investigation, and in fairness, let the RCMP continue and finish its investigation.

MOISIE AFFAIR—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works and concerns his conduct as a Minister of the Crown upon receipt of the letter from Mr. Hyland about August 5, which is some seven weeks ago.

Can the Minister indicate . . . The questions do not concern the conduct of the RCMP, but of the Minister before the RCMP investigation was launched. The RCMP received the letter from the Minister.

How long did the Minister take to decide to give the letter to the RCMP after he received it? Did the Minister turn over the letter right away, because of the very serious allegations made by Mr. Hyland, or did he delay for some time, perhaps until this week? If there were delays, why?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the Hon. Member might temper his remarks if he knew what was in the letter. I have indicated that I had the letter. It is now in the hands of the RCMP. I will refrain from making further comment until they have completed their inquiry.

APPARENT DELAY IN FORWARDING LETTER TO RCMP—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have not seen the letter, but we have heard the tape recording by Mr. Hyland that apparently contains the same allegations as were made in the letter that the Minister received in early August.

If the Minister did nothing with the letter, if the letter contains serious allegations and the Minister did nothing for six or seven weeks, we must ask the Minister to resign for failing to do his duty.

So my question is: When did the Minister submit the letter to the RCMP and why did he defer giving the letter to the RCMP once he had read it?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and others are making and have made many erroneous statements of fact. Some of their statements are based on conversations on a tape, some on a letter which they have not seen. People up there are making error after error. I would like to try to clarify it but I must await the report of the RCMP investigation.

CONTENTS OF LETTER

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the conduct of the Minister prior to his passing this letter on to the RCMP and the commencement of their investigation. We are talking about whether or not the Minister acted appropriately and properly. He knows the letter will sooner or later be made public. In not indicating when he passed it to the RCMP he is indicating that he must have failed in his duty as a Minister to pass that letter on if it contained serious allegations.

Did it contain serious allegations? If it did, how long did the Minister have it and why did he not pass it on to the RCMP immediately?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to have patience.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister and I have been following this issue and I would like to put a question or two to him relating to the sale of the radar base in the Prime Minister's riding.

Quite apart from the issue of any criminal responsibility or any investigation by the RCMP, there is the issue of political responsibility and competence. I would have thought that the Government by now, particularly after the multimillion dollar Parker inquiry, would have understood the difference. We are talking here about ministerial responsibility and ministerial competence. I will try to stay within the facts as they have been presented to the House.

Speaking to the Prime Minister through the Deputy Prime Minister, does he think it right for a Conservative organizer to have interfered actively in the bidding process and sale of the radar base? Was it right for the former Conservative candidate from Hull, now on the staff of the Minister of Public Works, to intervene in the process?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in some difficulty. These seem to be very direct charges.

Some Hon. Members: Exactly!

Mr. Speaker: I have had to say in past cases like this that it is not appropriate to use a preamble to make a charge. If a charge is to be made, there are of course formal ways to do it. I know the right hon. gentleman would understand that.

At the same time I am repeating what I have said in the past, that on issues like this the Opposition not only has a right to ask questions, it has a duty. At the same time I have to ask Hon. Members to make sure that the preambles to the questions do not amount in effect to a charge in lieu of a charge put in a formal way.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I will stay within the parameters you have laid down. My questions are also within the parameters of the issues discussed here Thursday, Friday, and today.

Was it competent for the Minister of National Defence to say there had been no intervention by the Prime Minister's Office when we learned there was a phone call from that office? Was it right for the Minister of Public Works to be meeting only this weekend with his staff on this issue when he received a registered letter from a senior official of his Department on August 5?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, and President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is a distinguished Member of this Chamber and has served here for a long time. He is also a lawyer and I think he knows something about basic and fundamental justice. I believe he is indeed making allegations which I am not sure he can substantiate. Perhaps it is time for me to remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition of the four criteria that he set out to govern the conduct of his own members in dealing with these kinds of issues.

I am reading from the Toronto Star and an article by Joe O'Donnell where the right hon. gentleman said that strict rules of conduct for MPs should be applied. Number one, unless you know the facts and really know the facts, don't say them. Number two, know when you have made your case. Number three, remember that this is not only affecting government but an institution called Parliament, and affecting us as Members of Parliament.

Mr. Rossi: Number four, answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: The fourth one is to remember that we have unemployed out there and farmers and fishermen and other people who are in desperate difficulty. Perhaps the Right

Hon. Member might be of more value to the country in addressing those issues. I suggest he heed his own advice.

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will not only do my best to stay within your parameters but also within the criteria that I set for myself. Nothing is more important in this House, and the Deputy Prime Minister knows it, than political responsibility and the accountability of Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let us deal with some further facts. We are told that the Department of National Defence valued the radar base at $4.5 million but it was sold for $187,500.

Mr. Beatty: Who told you that?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Over 700 acres in the Prime Minister's riding—that is a fact—

Mr. Beatty: Who told you that?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —93 homes on that property—that is a fact—were sold by the federal Government for a total of $187,500.

We are also told, and the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) has produced the assessment list, that the municipal property taxes on that land this year were $113,000.

Mr. Fennell: It is a radar station.

An Hon. Member: A year?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): A year, for which the Minister's own Department sent an interim cheque for $53,000. The property is assessed by the Town of Moisie at over $6 million. Those happen to be facts.

Wouldn't the Deputy Prime Minister feel in the circumstances that the Prime Minister ought to authorize a parliamentary inquiry relating to political responsibility here to ensure that the property sold in the Prime Minister's riding, owned by the federal Government, was sold at an unbelievably low price against all the available facts?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Right Hon. Member how much he would pay for one slightly used radar base? The proof of the pudding is that 19 firms, people knowledgeable in that particular area, people knowledgeable in real estate, people knowledgeable about the future, made bids. Seventeen of them were under $12,000, one was $50,000 and one was $100,000. Isn't that the fairest indication of the value of this property, Mr. Speaker?

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the July 12 issue Le Nord-Est, a newspaper published in the Prime Minister's ridding, reports that Mayor Bernard Saint-Laurent has denounced the politicization of this case and the newspaper refers to political interference in the sale of this property. What did the Prime Minister do when he read this paper, a paper published in his own riding?

On August 5 the Minister of Public Works got a letter from one of his senior Quebec officials claiming there had been interference. What did the Minister do before the weekend? Absolutely nothing! Will the Prime Minister give Canadians a public parliamentary inquiry to uncover the real objectives and reasons why the property was sold at such a ridiculously low price?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works has tried to answer the questions—

Some Hon. Members: He never did.

Mr. Mazankowski: —within the limitations that are placed upon him as a result of the RCMP review.

Mr. Cassidy: Not true.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member talks about facts and then he quotes from a newspaper. I am not sure whether he can substantiate them but if he wants to quote from a newspaper, maybe we should quote The Montreal Gazette for September 24, from an article by Bill Johnson which really puts this whole thing in perspective.

Referring to the Liberal Party, he wrote:

> The Commons way is to smear, to rush to judgment, to condemn before hearing, to demand instant answers to complex questions and to shout "coverup" if the answers are not instantly supplied—as they cannot be.
> There is no concern for people's reputations, no respect for the presumption of innocence until guilt is established, no sensitivity to fairness in the manner of raising questions and in allowing people properly to defend themselves.

Where is the fairness in this institution, Mr. Speaker?

FORWARDING OF LETTER BY MINISTER TO RCMP

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Minister is quite right. What we are concerned about here are facts.

I want to ask the Minister of Public Works to answer a specific question with respect to the facts surrounding this case. How long did it take him to pass on the letter that he received from Hugh Hylands to the RCMP? How much time elapsed between the time he received that letter and the time that he passed it on to the RCMP?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): As soon as I knew there was an investigation into this matter, I immediately gave the letter to the RCMP, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

QUERY WHY MR. HYLAND'S LETTER WAS NOT FORWARDED IMMEDIATELY TO RCMP

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, for the first time, the Minister has admitted that he handed over Mr. Hyland's letter to the RCMP six or seven weeks after he received it. The people of Canada are fed up with a government which spends public money on gifts to Conservative friends.

My question is very straightforward, Mr. Speaker. Why did the Minister wait some six or seven weeks before handing over to the RCMP such an important and incriminating letter? Why didn't he hand it over immediately?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the basis of that question, the basis of all the reports is that there are some facts of which they have knowledge which were not indicated in the letter.

I have indicated to the RCMP they can have all the material. I have given them all the material germane to this particular issue. If the Hon. Member has knowledge of some particular fact or correspondence, he should give it to the RCMP. The Hon. Member assumes there are incriminating facts in the letter.

Mr. Robinson: You have the correspondence.

Mr. McInnes: Let the RCMP make that decision.

LICENSING OF RAFFERTY DAM—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question concerning the integrity, veracity and credibility of the Minister of the Environment.

We have put questions in this House previously about the resignation from his staff of Miss Elizabeth May, senior policy adviser, in which she alleged there had been a political deal by which the Minister of the Environment would sign off a licence for the Souris Rafferty Dam project on the Souris River in exchange for the Grasslands Park project in Saskatchewan without undertaking any environmental impact studies or reviews on how it would impact upon the Province of Manitoba. These allegations have been said by the Minister to have no foundation.

We now have a secret briefing paper prepared by officials of the Department of the Environment given to the Minister before his meetings with the Premier and Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan in May in which it clearly states:

> The Deputy Premier might offer a compromise linking an agreement on the creation of the Park to the early issuance of the IRIA license for the Rafferty/Alameda Dam.

This is a clear and direct refutation of the statements made by the Minister in this House and made by the Premier and Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan, and supports the allegations made by Miss May.

In light of this kind of evidence, is the Minister prepared to retract his previous statements and try to explain to the people of Manitoba why he went ahead and sold away their environmental concerns and responsibilities, to say nothing of his own responsibilities, for the sake of the kind of political deal that his Prime Minister wanted him to sign?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that he has in his hands some leaked secret briefing notes to the Minister of the Environment documenting that the Minister of the Environment traded a park for a dam or a dam for a park. I invite the Member to read those briefing notes.

Prior to my meeting in May with the Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan, a meeting was scheduled between myself and him for December 16. Those are the briefing notes he has and the meeting never occurred. It was impossible for the two of us to mesh our respective schedules and arrangements. The briefing notes have no import. What is more, they were prepared by my officials in light of some conjecture, some speculation, by environmental groups in the west that the Province of Saskatchewan might—I stress might—link the Rafferty Dam with the formation of a Grasslands National Park. In light of that conjecture, the officials rightly advised me that the matter might be raised by the Province of Saskatchewan and in the unlikely event that it were, that the Minister of the Environment might respond accordingly.

The meeting never took place, Sir. Second, Saskatchewan never raised the issue. Third, I would not have acquiesced even if it had.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I just simply point out to the House that the real answer to the question now is that the licence was issued without an impact study, and a deal was made on the Grasslands Park.

What better evidence do you need that this Minister is implicated in the most scurrilous sell-out of Manitoba environmental interests in the history of this country?

• (1440)

ADVICE OFFERED BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): I will ask the Minister another question about documents. In this House the Minister said again that his officials had advised him to issue the licence, that it was the best move. Documents prepared by the departmental officials said that there were two options, either issue the licence or don't issue the licence, and the officials would recommend: "That it would be desirable to resolve the apportionment in the Manitoba matter before the licence is issued".

Considering that it was the advice of the officials of the Department of the Environment that the licence not be issued until the matters with Manitoba had been resolved, why did the Minister issue the licence without having those matters resolved? Is it not simply once again because he was party to a deal?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just made one of the great classic fallacies in logic. Because something happens after something else, ergo, it happens as a result of it. I think nothing would be further from the truth. In any event, the officials advised me to issue the permit only after Manitoba's interests were fully taken into account. I acquiesced in that advice, first, by weaving into the fabric of the permit 13 environmental conditions among which the conditions stipulated that Saskatchewan would have to honour all relevant international obligations with respect to the effect of the Souris River on Manitoba, second, that the boundary waters agreement signed in 1909, which protects Manitoba, would apply to the Rafferty Dam.

Mr. Axworthy: After it is all finished.

Mr. McMillan: Third, that the 1959 apportionment agreement that protects Manitoba's quantity of water from the Souris River through North Dakota would apply. So every single relevant provision apropos of Manitoba, and the effect of that dam on Manitoba, applied in spades.

Mr. Axworthy: After it's done.

Mr. McMillan: And only after I was assured by my officials, the top hydrologists in the country, that those conditions attached to the permit would protect Manitoba did I agree to it, and I did.

AIR CANADA

MAINTENANCE CONTRACT AWARDED IN BRITAIN

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who, I assume, still has some responsibilities for Air Canada. We learned on Friday that 8,000 person-hours of maintenance work for Air Canada are being subcontracted to a company in England. Could the Minister explain to the House and to the workers at Air Canada why maintenance work is being done not in Canada where it should be done, but in Great Britain?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was indeed informed, if I have understood my hon. colleague's question, that such a transfer was made by Air Canada. I would like him to repeat his question because I have not quite grasped its meaning.

EFFECT ON JOBS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada on Friday sent Aircraft No. 512, a Lockheed 1011, to Marshalls of Cambridge in England for approximately 8,000 person-hours of work over a one-month period. According to the documents provided to the union, the IAM, the nature and volume of the work is such that undesirable fluctuations in employment would automatically result. Obviously, there would be an increase in employment for a short period of time here in Canada, yet they decided to take those jobs over to Great Britain instead of putting Canadians to work here. Could the Minister explain why Air Canada is allowed to do that, or is it all because of privatization?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer the question of my friend. As long as he is talking about privatization, I think it has nothing to do with that, but in terms of the operations of Air Canada I think he would agree with me that I should have more information from the company because this is the first time this question is raised in front of me.

Mr. Angus: The Prime Minister got a telegram on Friday.

Mr. Bouchard: I listened to your question. You could listen to my answer. As soon as I have a good explanation, or any explanation, I will give it to my friend.

TRANSPORTATION OF PCBS ON AIR CANADA PASSENGER FLIGHTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that by transporting some 27 tonnes of PCBs on commercial flights, Air Canada put at risk the passengers and residents near airports where Air Canada takes off and lands—understanding, of course, this was done within existing regulations—and in view of the fact that the Port of Montreal is still being used for the export of PCBs, I would like to ask the Minister whether he would use the power he now has under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act and immediately ban the export of PCBs from Canada.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the representation made by the Hon. Member for Davenport is not an unreasonable one. The priority of the Government of Canada is, of course, first, to ensure the safe storage of PCBs everywhere in the country under federal jurisdiction and provincial jurisdiction alike and, second, to ensure their expeditious incineration or destruction, for which purpose the Member knows I have announced a major funding project and also a set of regulations that will apply across the land. Obviously, if we can get PCBs out of use and destroyed, the need for the kind of transport of PCBs to which he makes reference will be mitigated.

In the meantime we do have the problem at hand and I think the suggestion the Member has made is both reasonable and a recommendation that the Government should take seriously, and it will.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Davenport on a short supplemental.

REQUEST THAT EXPORT OF PCBS BE OUTLAWED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will realize that this is an important element missing in his Government's recently announced PCB policy. Therefore, in the light of his answer I would like to ask when the Minister thinks he will be in a position to announce that the export of PCBs will be effectively made illegal out of Canada. What date, approximately?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Davenport will appreciate that it is a very complex issue. This is the first time, I think, he has himself or his Party made the recommendation he now has put on record. In any event, if it were done through the normal course, through regulation, it would probably take several months to take effect. It is possible it could be accomplished under Section 35 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act through an interim order which would, to some extent, short-circuit the process in favour of the environment.

I will consult with my officials and scientists to see if that would be a commendable course. If it is, the Member can be assured it will be done with some dispatch. Again, it is an issue about which I have to consult my colleagues, the Minister of Transport, and my federal colleagues, generally.

STATUS OF WOMEN

QUERY WHETHER MINISTER CONSULTS IMMIGRANT WOMEN'S GROUPS AND ASSOCIATIONS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Department responsible for the status of women is preparing an interdepartmental report on immigrant women. This document is certainly intended as a tool for developing policies on immigrant women and visible minorities.

Can the Minister tell us if he is presently consulting with immigrant women's groups and associations to ensure that the report benefits from their expertise and experience?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot reply specifically to that question. I will take it on notice for the particular Minister. I just want to remind the Hon. Member that a number of proposals and programs especially for immigrant women, for their health and second language education, have been in place, but the specifics of the question I will take back to the Minister.

REQUEST FOR CONSULTATIONS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this is an interdepartmental report that has been commissioned. We know in the past this Government has not consulted with immigrant women and visible minorities. I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he could assure this House that immigrant women and visible minority women would be consulted before the report is sent to the printers.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member has said is simply not the fact.

Ms. Dewar: It is.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It is not the fact. I have met with them on various issues. I know that the Minister of Multiculturalism has met with them as has the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

• (1450)

I will take the specifics of the exact question back to the Minister, but the Member should not make a blanket statement saying we have not consulted when in fact that has been the case. She would have more credibility if she stuck with the facts rather than using the kind of preamble that she did.

MOISIE LAND SALE—FORMER OFFICIAL'S LETTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Public Works whose office has refused to give information on the Moisie land deal to my office since July of this year. I remind him that I wrote to him at that time.

The sub judice rule which he invoked earlier today in the House does not apply, according to Beauchesne's, until trial stage. Given that this is the case, will the Minister here and now stand—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I know the Hon. Member would want the Chair to make the rulings on procedure. It may well be that the question is out of order once a criminal prosecution has begun. The Hon. Member quotes Beauchesne's. It is, nonetheless, always within the prerogative of a Minister not to answer a question. If the Minister responds and says that in the opinion of the Crown, the Minister, or the Government, because of an investigation it would be inappropriate to answer, one can argue as to whether the Minister is right or wrong, but that is the position that the Minister has taken and I cannot force the Minister to answer that question no matter what citations may exist in Beauchesne's.

I only say this because, in view of the subject matter and the vigorous questioning, all Hon. Members, and the public who are watching, should understand the procedural laws of which I have to remind Members from time to time.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a very specific question of the Minister of Public Works. The letter was sent to him on August 5, 1988. When did he receive the letter? Was it that date, was it shortly thereafter? What did he do with the letter? Did it give it to the RCMP at that time or did he wait until last weekend to give it after it was raised in this House and it became a public issue?

Did the Government act to do what was proper or did it only act once it got to the attention of the media? Is that what the Minister waited for?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that he wrote to me on July 4. The records of my Department indicate that we have never received such a letter.

Further, when I did—

Mr. Boudria: Harvie, you should consider that an insult.

Mr. McInnes: Would the Hon. Member like an answer to his question?

When I received the letter some time in August I immediately reviewed it. There was nothing in there that indicated to me that it should be turned over to the RCMP. Subsequently other oral statements by people have suggested that it would be appropriate to send it to the RCMP. There is nothing in the letter indicating that I should have put it to the RCMP or anything of that kind.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE LETTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has partially answered by telling us that he originally did not give the letter to the RCMP. He has now told us that he did not do it at that time.

Is he prepared to do two things; one, tell us the exact date on which he chose to give it to the RCMP—we now know it was not at the beginning—and, second, will he undertake to ask for the consent of the House immediately after Question Period to table the letter here today?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member was absent for the first part of Question Period. I indicated that because there was an ongoing inquiry by the RCMP, and that this was part of the record, it was difficult for me to comment.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASED DRUG DISPENSING FEES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Many consumers are concerned by rising prescription costs which seem to be due to dramatic increases, not in the costs of drugs but in the dispensing fees.

For example, one constituent in Scarborough West reports that the prescription cost was so divided that the drugs represented only 22 per cent of the total cost while 78 per cent was for the fee alone.

In view of so many consumers being of limited means but having no choice but to purchase prescriptions, what action can be taken to protect consumers against these impossible fees for service?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is not very much action available to us at the federal level in that prescription fees and the cost of dispensing, indeed the retail sale of drugs, are totally within provincial government jurisdiction. My advice to this Member and other Members is to refer this matter to the appropriate provincial Government.

The wholesale manufactured cost of patent drugs is now under the purview of the Drug Prices Review Board and, as indicated, those prices will be kept at less than the cost of living unless there are other circumstances which dictate a higher price in a specific case. We can control or examine the manufacture price of drugs although retail price is under provincial jurisdiction.

PUBLIC WORKS

SALE OF MOISIE RADAR BASE—REQUEST THAT OFFICIAL'S LETTER BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. John. R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works and has to do with this latest Tory scandal at the Canadian Forces radar base in Moisie, Québec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have said repeatedly that it is the duty of the Chair not only to make sure that the Opposition has the right to ask questions but that, in the general interests of decorum in this place and in fairness to others, those questions must be asked carefully.

At the moment there are vigorous questions being asked about something and I am asking Hon. Members not to use words in the preamble that take the questions way beyond at least what we have heard so far in the Chamber, and attribute a lot of conclusions, to what we have heard. The Hon. Member will ask his question. I ask him to be careful.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will take your admonition very seriously and I will rephrase my question.

My question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and has to do with certain alleged land sales raised previously today in this House.

The Minister of Public Works said that he received the letter from Mr. Hylands sometime in August. He also said that there was nothing in the letter that would lead him to consider turning it over to the RCMP. Is the Minister now prepared to make this letter public, if it is so innocuous, so that all Members of Parliament and the Canadian public can judge whether or not he made the right decision?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, that Member and other Members are alleging that there is fraud, that there is scam, that there is incriminating evidence. It seems to me that they cannot have it both ways. If there are those things then they are the subject of an RCMP investigation and we should let the investigation proceed and conclude. I will then be happy to answer all the Hon. Member's questions.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE LETTER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to make a suggestion to this Conservative Cabinet Minister as to how he could slay the Opposition in one fell swoop. He could put all of this to rest by simply tabling the letter.

Will the Minister do what is right, will he do what is fair, will he do what is demanded to clear up the so-called rumours and innuendoes of the Opposition? Will he table the letter in this House so that we can decide whether he made the right decision or not?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I have done a little better than turning it over to the House. I have turned it over to the RCMP. Let them complete their investigation.

TRANSPORT

TRANSPORT ROUTE CANADA—PAYMENT OF GASOLINE BILLS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On September 12, Route Canada ceased operations. Yet in July of this year its revenues were $10,747,729. In August of this year, just days before it ceased operations, its revenues were $6,961,012, yet it stopped operations. During that period of time it did not pay its bills yet it was able to get gas. It was able to get gas because, as the invoices of Ten Wheels Truck Plaza in Kingston, Ontario, show, the gas bills were sent to CN.

Will the Minister confirm that Canadian National paid for the gasoline of Transport Route Canada during the period it was making millions of dollars but not paying its bills? Why would CN pay the gas of a company it sold two years ago, which was going to buy an American trucking company, put the Canadian trucking company out of business and lay off over 2,500 employees?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I stated repeatedly last week that the Minister of Transport does not have the power to look into the operations of Route Canada as a private company. My hon. friend brings forward some information today about the payment of gas bills by Canadian National. It may or may not be true. It is the first time I have heard it. I hope that he will give me the time to check with Canadian National to see if it was done, and, if so, if there is any good reason for it. I will come back to him with more information as soon as I have it.

COMPANY'S REVENUES—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INVESTIGATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, in July and August, Transport Route Canada made millions of dollars. Where did that money go?

Will the Minister table all of the agreements between CN and the Government of Canada on the one hand, and Transport Route Canada on the other? Will the Minister initiate a public investigation into this company? Millions of dollars were taken in, yet no bills were paid. Thousands of workers are laid off and are owed thousands of dollars. Will the Minister initiate an investigation?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said last week. I met the truckers myself. The Department of Labour and the Department of Finance have worked on their side in terms of all the operations of the company. But it is not yet in bankruptcy or even receivership. I repeat for the tenth or fifteenth time that, as long as there is no official declaration of that kind, we cannot get into the operations of the company.

The Hon. Member says that it does not pay its people but makes profits. Again, it is a private sector operation. If there is any reference to bankruptcy and so on, I said last week and told the truckers that I will make all the investigations I can. Again, this is a private sector operation. I will not do that and cannot do that at the present time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions among the Parties and, notwithstanding any Standing Order, I think you will find unanimous consent to defer the recorded division at 4.45 p.m., presuming that one will be called for on third reading of Bill C-144, until 6 p.m. this evening. At that time we will have the vote on the report stage amendments to the Broadcasting Act. It makes more sense to call the Members together to vote at one time. We would then suspend the sitting from 4.45 p.m. until 5 p.m., and commence Private Members' Hour at that time.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I hope that will be made an order of the House. In the interest of having more Members speak, could we not agree to debate Bill C-144 until five o'clock, then proceed to Private Members' Hour as agreed? Members could then vote on Bills C-144 and C-136.

Mr. Lewis: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. In fact, in my remarks during debate on time allocation, I offered to sit through lunch today. When that was not taken up, I naturally did not think my hon. friend wanted the 15 minutes from 4.45 p.m. until 5 p.m. However, before he rises again, let me say that we naturally agree to go until five o'clock. Any recorded division requested at that time would be taken at 6 p.m.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, we are in agreement to the changes in the proceedings today. Also with respect to the House business question—

Mr. Lewis: There is no House business question.

Mr. Angus: —could I ask the Hon. Minister if there will be any response to our request for proceeding with the Election Expenses Act.

Mr. Speaker: I think I must respond to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan and indicate that there does not seem to be any response, at least at this moment.

I am obliged to give precedence to a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

PRIVILEGE

CADIN-PINETREE SITE DISPOSALS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) is still in the House and I would like to raise this point while he is still here. The Minister responded to a question I asked concerning a letter that was sent by my office on July 7, 1988, regarding the cases of all CADIN-Pinetree site disposals.

I remind the Minister that not only did he receive my letter of July 7, 1988, the letter was even answered by the Department of Public Works. I have a copy of the reply of August 23, 1988, which I would be willing to table. The Minister seemingly answered a letter that he did not receive.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether it is a question of privilege, but it is an assertion of fact. I think we will take it as a representation and leave it there. It is not a question of privilege.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-144, and Act to authorize payments by Canada toward the provision of child care services, and to amend the Canada Assistance Plan in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed; and on the amendment of Ms. Mitchell (p. 19454).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at one o'clock, there were five minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech by the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). The Hon. Member had the floor.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I want to comment on the subject of witnesses before the legislative committee on Bill C-144. The New Democratic Party cannot have it both ways on this issue. During the hearings of the special committee on child care, a committee which visited 31 cities and received representations from over 1,000 individuals, the NDP said the same thing at every city we visited and at every meeting here in Ottawa. They said that there had been enough talk on this subject. They said there had been enough discussion and enough study. The NDP said: "We want to cut this out. We want to see legislation".

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) responded to the recommendations of the special committee on child care and came forward with legislation. Immediately the NDP said that this should be taken across the country because it needs more discussion, more study and more witnesses.

The people of this country are too smart for that kind of thinking. The NDP cannot say one thing in the House of Commons and something else in the cities across Canada.

As well, I want to comment on the suggestion and the implications that I think arise from the comments of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), that somehow there is no funding available after the seven year period. That is absolutely incorrect.

There is a clause in the Bill which lays out minimum guarantees to the provinces of the level of funding which they will receive in year eight, which amounts to at least $800 million per year. I recommend that the Members of the Opposition Parties read Clause 4(3) of the Bill which says, among other things, that an agreement will not be less than the contribution payable to the province in respect of the year ending March 31, 1995, the difference being adjusted to the national rate of inflation. There is provision beyond the seven-year period of time.

With respect to the 200,000 spaces, you will note in the preamble to Bill C-144, Madam Speaker, that it refers to at least "200,000 spaces". We have 160,000 subsidized day care spaces now in Canada.

Looking at the development in this particular area and assessing the need as we have found it across the country, as outlined in our own studies, it seems to me that 200,000 spaces is reasonable, but it is the minimum. We have said at least that. If the provinces can create more, we would of course support that. But we think it is a good start for developing in an orderly way a child care system that will meet the needs of Canadian families. I think that is a good thing.

I hope that the members of the NDP and the Liberal Party, instead of spreading improper misrepresentations with respect to this Bill, will get behind it. Canadians are going to be watching. They will be watching to see how they will vote on this important historic document, this historic piece of legislation brought forward by the Minister of Health in co-operation with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all the Members on this side of the House. I will be interested to see which way they will vote when it comes up for a vote later on today.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, Canadians certainly want and need a national program for the effective delivery of affordable and universally accessible quality child care. Unfortunately, the Conservative Government's Bill C-144 does not do that. It fails to recognize the changing realities in our society. It fails to address the fundamental issues connected with the needs for child care of Canadians and their families.

The rhetoric of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the rhetoric of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have been aimed at cultivating a pre-election impression that the Conservative child care strategy will meet the needs of parents and children across the country as soon as it is passed. The Government's public relations campaign conducted over the past two months both inside and outside this House, however, can do no more than generate false hopes, to be followed by dashed expectations on the part of Canadians.

Contrary to what the Prime Minister said a few days ago, Bill C-144, if and when it ever becomes law, will not add one more child care space to the quantity existing in the country at the very point in time at which it is passed. For the Bill to have any effect there must first be the negotiation and the signature of agreements with the provinces pursuant to the Bill, likely a lengthy process. In any event, it would appear, and I will say something about this in a few minutes, the Bill will provide fewer child care spaces than would have been the case under the existing Canada Assistance Plan.

The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, the Government's own advisory body, concluded in its brief which it presented to the legislative committee studying this Bill with the reasoned judgment that, and I quote: "Bill C-144 raises but does not resolve the essential questions of child care. Its most important features are left for clarification by regulation are open to conjecture. It is a legislative shell".

The child care needs of Canadian parents and their children will not be met by the passage of a hollow legislative shell rammed through the House of Commons by time allocation, another form of closure, because the Conservatives want to try to put something over on Canadians during a general election, something I say, Madam Speaker, they will not accomplish.

Let me refer, Madam Speaker, to the legislative committee which studied Bill C-144. It is very significant that not only the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women but also not one of the 40 groups that appeared before that committee as witnesses could support the passage of Bill C-144. We are talking about the most knowledgeable, the most informed, the most representative child care advocacy groups in the country.

Currently there are almost one million women in the workforce with pre-school children who require all-day care. There are two million women in the workforce with children under 16 years of age, many of whom require some form of care just before or for a few hours after the school day is over—the latchkey children.

In 1986 when this Conservative Government was dithering on this matter and doing nothing, when 52 per cent of Canadian women with children under the age of three were working outside the home and nearly two million children under 13 likely needed full-time care, there were fewer than 200,000 spaces. In fact, there were only some 172,000 spaces provided for quality day care. Presently it is estimated that licensed care in family homes or centres is available for less than 10 per cent of the children under 13 whose parents work or study more than 20 hours per week. This Conservative Bill covers only pre-school children. It ignores completely the problem of the latchkey children, the children who are left alone with nothing more than the key to their home or apartment on a string or chain around their necks waiting for their parent or parents to complete their work, work they have to do to maintain their standard of living.

This so-called national child care strategy announced by the Conservative Government consists of two parts. The first part set out in the February, 1988 Budget purported to assist parents through an increase in the tax deduction for child care expenses and an increase in the refundable child tax credit, something that would involve a tax expenditure of $2.4 billion. The second part of the Conservative approach to be implemented by this Bill involves cost-sharing agreements for child care funding with the provinces.

This Bill, as the Advisory Council on the Status of Women said, leaves a lot of important questions unanswered. For example, it is not yet known how the child care services eligible for cost sharing will be defined, or how exactly profit making child care agencies will be distinguished from non-profit agencies. No regulations have been drafted. One would think that with a piece of legislation like this the draft regulations would have been available, they would have been made public, they would have been presented to the legislative committee so we could have in mind and assess what they say about the Government's real intentions in carrying out this legislation which, as the Advisory Council on the Status of Women said, is nothing more than a hollow shell.

With questions like the ones I mentioned left dangling, the Government has said that its approach will cost $6.4 billion over the next seven years, of which $2.3 billion are the tax provisions for parents in the 1988 Budget I have mentioned. These tax expenditures for parents over the next seven years have a special ring of absurdity about them when it is recalled that the cumulative impacts of the Conservative Government's first three Budgets over the four years of its mandate means that the personal income tax portion of Government revenues has increased by $28 billion, such that parents with two children earning $15,000 annually have been hit with a tax increase of 53 per cent, and that parents earning $30,000 have been hit with a tax increase of at least 18 per cent.

If we set aside this grand scale fiscal absurdity and unfairness for just a moment and consider the possible impact of the $2.3 billion tax expenditure in the 1988 Budget in the narrower terms of the Conservative child care strategy, we see that the increased child care tax deduction will provide real financial benefit only for the higher income earners who likely already have and can pay for unsubsidized licensed child care or paid domestic help. This deduction will not be of any real help to lower income families. But what about the increase in the child tax credit? Increasing the child tax credit by $100 in 1988 and by $200 in each subsequent year will not provide an adequate amount of urgently needed help for those families who cannot get receipts for their child care expenses, or whose incomes are too low to qualify for the much greater tax deduction. Two hundred dollars per child per year goes nowhere in the real world, where the present cost of licensed care for one child averages from $3,000 to $4,000 per year across the country, and in some cities licensed infant care can run as high as $10,000 per child.

It is painfully obvious that these tax measures will not stimulate the construction of new spaces, the renovation and improvement of existing child care centres, and the upgrading of salaries and training for child care workers.

The Government claims that under its strategy Bill C-144 will set aside some $3.94 billion for cost-sharing child care services. Under the current Canada Assistance Plan arrangements, the Government would have spent approximately $2.6 billion over the next seven years. In reality, the new money provided through March, 1995, is $1.3 billion or $200 million a year.

It is clear from the Bill that it will create only 200,000 new spaces over the next seven years, for a total of approximately 400,000. Surely this will not serve the needs of the approximately 1.8 million children in need of child care facilities. Over 70 per cent of the children who need child care spaces will not get them under this Conservative approach to child care.

What is even more disturbing about this legislation is the fact that existing tax measures and arrangements for federal-provincial cost sharing under the Canada Assistance Plan—a plan, by the way, created by past Liberal Governments—could provide more new child care spaces than the fixed target of 200,000 adopted by this Conservative Government over the next seven years. This is confirmed by research carried out by the Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association. This research shows that we can have an increase of 293,903 spaces at the end of 1995 simply by continuing the present and previously existing Canada Assistance Plan program.

The Conservative Government's estimate of 200,000 new spaces to be created by its child care strategy falls 93,903 spaces short of what we could likely have by sticking with the status quo, based on the very lowest annual increase that we have had over the past five years.

I am not saying, by the way, that the status quo is enough. Obviously it is not enough and more has to be done, but what we need is not going to be provided by this inadequate Conservative approach to child care as set out in Bill C-144.

The preamble of this Bill refers, and I quote, to the need to "improve the availability, the affordability, the quality, and the accessibility of child care services". At the same time, it commits the Government to limit federal payments under the cost sharing program to payments not exceeding $4 billion during the life of the program.

This Government's actual promise to Canadians, through Bill C-144, is to refuse to spend more money, even if its ineffectual target of 200,000 new spaces is not met within the next seven years. The Bill in effect runs out after seven years.

Furthermore, the legislation says that the federal Government, as I understand it, will not be responsible, necessarily, for sharing the capital expenditures or operating costs of child care after the seven-year period ends on March 31, 1995. This Bill will bring about an uneven checker board regime of child care. I say this because the legislation contains no national standards or objectives to establish criteria for quality child care providing a minimum, a basis for quality child care for children in every part of our country, in every province.

The Conservative Government has had four all-too-long years to work with the provinces on national standards and objectives, but in spite of this, Bill C-144 is silent on what should be contained in national standards and objectives; issues like the ratios between children and child care workers in child care centres, the size of child care groups, the training of care givers, the mechanisms for parental and community input, health, safety and nutritional conditions, and employee wages and working conditions.

I believe that Canadians expect child care to be a shared responsibility, one involving parents, their Governments and, yes, their employers. I believe that Canadians expect the federal Government to provide the leadership required to put in place basic national standards with the greatest emphasis on developing a licensed system to meet present and future needs, and directing its resources toward services for low and moderate income families. The emphasis should surely be on using an educational child development model rather than a commercial model of child care delivery in the developing of our Canadian system of child care.

I believe that there must be an emphasis on and a priority for non-profit and public care, recognizing the models that we have developed in our well established programs of health care and education in Canada. I also say that there should be increased parental leave provisions under our unemployment insurance system within the scope of child care legislation. Furthermore, there should be stronger incentives in our tax system for employers to establish employer subsidized child care services.

We have reached the final stage of debate on Bill C-144. Actually, it would be more accurate to say that we have been forced to conclude the debate by the heavy-handed approach of the Conservatives in shutting it off through time allocation after only a handful of days of debate in this House and in committee hearings outside this House.

We have reached the final stage of the Conservative Government's mandate. It has failed to produce the program that it promised to Canadians, who so urgently need and want it, for the effective delivery of affordable and universally accessible quality child care. We are confronted only with this piece of legislation that may well provide fewer new spaces for child care than could be established under the existing programs. We are confronted with a piece of legislation that is devoid of national standards and objectives.

A national child care program was promised as a high priority item on its agenda by the Conservative Party during the 1984 election campaign, and yet it took nearly four years for the Government to get around to introducing this flawed and regressive Bill.

It is obvious that Canadians are not receiving the child care program promised by the Conservatives during the last election, and it is just as obvious that this Conservative Government is trying to concoct a soothing script for an election masquerade.

In spite of the efforts of the Government to limit debate and shut off criticism of Bill C-144, I believe that Canadians will see through the fundamental inadequacies of the Bill and reject this masquerade.

I hope that very soon the Prime Minister will summon his courage to call a general election and allow Canadians an overdue opportunity to exercise their good judgment, not only on Bill C-144, but on the overall conduct of the Government. Bill C-144 is another example of the incompetence of the Government and its lack of credibility. I believe, in this election, in exercising their judgment, the Canadian people will get rid of the Conservative Government so that a new Government, one, I believe, that will be a Liberal Government, will be able to put in place a truly effective national program for accessible, affordable, and quality child care.

Our children are this country's greatest treasure and its future. They deserve no less. They are not getting what they deserve from the Conservative Government. We want Canadians to have a chance to exercise their judgment to give Canadians, their families, and the children now and in the future what they need and deserve for our country's future.

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Madam Speaker, I was astonished to hear what the Hon. Member said in his speech. Decades of Liberal Government never gave us child care. After four years of Conservative Government, we have child care.

The Hon. Member referred earlier to the regulations, expressing disappointment that the regulations had not yet been published. I may remind the Hon. Member that the Conservative Government has also introduced improvements in this respect.

Before this Government came to power, regulations were not published until they came into effect. However, the Conservative Government requested publication of the regulations six months in advance, to let interested groups and Members of the House of Commons know exactly what was coming. I am surprised to see the Hon. Member did not do his homework.

I would also like to refer to the title of the legislation before the House today. The title of the Act, and I will read it, Madam Speaker, in case the Hon. Member forgot to do so: An Act to authorize payments by Canada toward the provision of child care services, and to amend the Canada Assistance Plan in consequence thereof.

Madam Speaker, amendments to our tax legislation concerning child care were approved by the House and the Senate and they are now in effect. We are talking here about legislation enabling the federal Government to transfer money to the provinces.

I wonder whether the Hon. Member can read, because I would refer him to Section 3. Perhaps I may read the section, Madam Speaker, because I think the Hon. Member is not aware of what Section 3 contains.

> 3. (1) The Minister and the Minister of Finance may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, enter into an agreement with any province to provide for the payment of contributions by Canada, subject to the provisions of this Act, toward the cost to the province and municipalities in the province.

And this is followed by the program's two components:

> (a) of the provision of child care services in respect of a period beginning on April 1, 1988 or on April 1 of a subsequent year and ending on March 31, 1995 and of capital assets that were first used for the provision of child care services during that period; or
> (b) of the provision of child care services in respect of any period of years beginning after March 31, 1995.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member where he got his information on the Canada Child Care Act.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to read the preamble of the Bill which says, and I will quote it in English:

[English]

> AND WHEREAS for such purposes the Parliament of Canada is prepared to make payments in an amount not exceeding four billion dollars over the said seven-year period;

And in French:

> for such purposes, it is prepared to pay up to four billion dollars over this period,

So, Madam Speaker, what is the purpose of this statement that seems to authorize agreements after March 31, 1995, if it is impossible under this Bill to spend more than the allowable sum of money, except for the seven-year period beginning with the passage of this Bill.

The Preamble is authoritative and as I see it, this preamble says the federal Government has no power to enter into agreements with the provinces after 1995.

And I conclude by saying also, Madam Speaker, that the Hon. Member said that there was no plan or legislation to help provide day care for the population before Bill C-144, but obviously we had the Canada Assistance Plan, which created some child care spaces. I do not claim that these spaces are adequate, but it is a beginning. We also set up the commission chaired by Katie Cooke before the last elections. This was a starting point, but the Conservative Government did not use it. It just set up another Parliamentary Committee and the Government waited until the last minute, until the end of July, to table its Bill.

So the Government wasted at least two years, maybe three, by resisting these fairly recent changes that families in the country have undergone.

[English]

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to bring to the attention of the House that we have not been receiving any translation from French. I hope that is now corrected. I believe it is important for all Members to be able to listen to the debate in both official languages.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thank the Hon. Member for bringing this to my attention. I am sure that the necessary arrangements will be made. I believe it is now working. As I was not using the translation myself, I was not aware. I thank the Hon. Member for bringing it to my attention.

There are two minutes left in the question and answer period.

[Translation]

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, I am sorry that there was no simultaneous translation. Perhaps I can repeat some of what I said.

[English]

I was saying that I very much doubt the value of the clause that states the Government can enter into agreements with the provinces on child care after 1995. The preamble very clearly states that this law permits the expenditure of only $4 billion over the seven-year period ending March 31, 1995.

I also was saying that I believe the Hon. Member was incorrect in saying that before this Bill there was nothing on the books at the federal level to help create child care spaces. There was the Canada Assistance Plan. I am not suggesting that the Canada Assistance Plan has done everything that we need. In recent years there has certainly been a major change in the composition of the Canadian family. Certainly, it was a start.

Recognizing the dramatic changes in the Canadian family in recent years, as I was attempting to say in French, the previous Liberal Government created the Dr. Katie Cooke commission which reported after the election. Instead of using that report as a starting point to deal with the needs for child care, the Government threw it aside and set up a parliamentary committee that travelled around the country. It presented a report, which certainly was not publicly approved, however the Government did not act immediately on the report of the parliamentary committee even though it was dominated by its own members. It waited until the last minute in a fit of deathbed repentance and tabled the Bill we are debating now, after wasting two or three years when it could have acted on this matter.

I am sorry that the translation was not working. I wanted to be of assistance to my colleagues and to give a summary of what I was attempting to say in the other official language.

• (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time allowed for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manley) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-144. First, in response to the Liberals who referred to a Dr. Katie Cooke and her report, it is true that while they commissioned that report, they have not used it as the basis for their own policy. In fact, they talk about a comprehensive policy only after the deficit has been brought down. They are also in favour of commercial child care.

I would like to begin by paying tribute to the work of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) over the last four years. She has been the outstanding spokesperson for child care in this House over those four years. She travelled with the earlier committee, raised questions in the House of Commons, and acted as advocate, pushing, trying to get the Government to act on this issue. Then, when it brought in this travesty of a Bill, she led the fight to criticize its shortcomings. I think all Canadians interested in a real child care program owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to Margaret Mitchell and the kind of work she has done over the last four years.

The importance of this subject matter cannot be underestimated because we are talking about the future of our children, and therefore the future of our country. It is on that basis that I regret the Government's move to limit debate on this important subject. The first social program of any note brought in by a government since medicare, and we are rushing it through the House without adequate debate. First reading was given on July 25.

It is a shoddy Bill, and I think most Members know the meaning of that word. It comes from the old textile trade. Shoddy is a kind of cloth in which inferior goods are used and it will not stand up. When you put shoddy into the wash, it falls apart. It is flimsy and you cannot hold it up to the light because you see through it. You cannot hold this shoddy Bill up to the light because the people will see through it, and that is why the Government is insisting on closure. It does not want the people of Canada to investigate the Bill. It figures this is not really going to go into the wash until after the next election and the people will not realize how they have been hoaxed.

When it comes right down to it, Bill C-144 is a $4 billion buy-out program which the federal Government is using over the next seven years to divest itself of further responsibility in the field of child care. There will be a limited amount of money available over that time to provide up to 75 per cent capital cost sharing for new non-profit child care spaces, but after seven years there will be nothing. The Government is once again reneging on promises it made during the last campaign. It is astute enough to recognize the public need for child care. It is clever enough to recognize that there is a growing public demand for child care, a groundswell of support equivalent to that for medicare in the early 1960s. However, it is not really answering the need. Instead, it is offering a palliative.

Most of us who are or have been parents recall that when we had very young children we would sometimes give them what you call the plug. When they were crying to be fed, instead of giving them a bottle or the breast you would take a dummy and plug that in its mouth and hope the child would quit crying. That is what we have in this Bill, a plug being given to the Canadian public in the hope they will not be crying for action for a little while. However, it fails to satisfy. Jesus said in the Sermon on the Mount: If your child asks for bread, will you give him a stone? That is what we have here in Bill C-144, a stone.

There is still an ideological argument over day care. It has not surfaced very much in the House, but there is still that ideological strata in the Conservative Party that believes real mothers stay at home and make muffins and look after the children 24 hours a day while daddy is away at work. They neglect the social reality of Canada in the last part of the 20th century.

I believe children from the most privileged of nuclear families can benefit from quality early childhood care. The experiences of socialization, of developing motor skills and creativity in company with other children, are invaluable in the life of any child. It is something that Canada needs to develop on a comprehensive basis from one end of the country to another, but we are not doing it.

At the same time we in our Party, and I am sure all Members, recognize that bad child care is a disaster. You get a number of children who are in essence baby-sat for a number of hours during the day. They are regimented, sat down to watch television, because that is the easiest thing that can be done for them. They do not develop socially. They do not develop physically. Their creativity is killed. Bad child care is a disaster for our children and it is a disaster for the future of Canada.

Good child care is something from which every child from however privileged a home can benefit.

Given the abominable wages for child care workers, it is a surprise that there are even as good child care centres in Canada as there are. I recall a few years ago, when my wife, a qualified child care worker, was interested in some part-time work at one of the better day care institutions in Ottawa. She made inquiries and found out she would be paid less than what our daughter, just out of high school, was receiving as a part-time clerk at the liquor store. It says something about our priorities as a nation when child care workers are relegated to the very bottom of the wage scale. This is not an argument against decent wages for clerks. It is an argument for recognizing the importance of someone with responsibility for child care.

The Minister recognized there was a problem last spring when he said he kind of miscalculated and there was going to be an extra $1 billion in the pot. He said this was going to be used to improve wages for child care workers. Yet there is absolutely nothing in this legislation that sets any standards for wages. There is nothing that sets any objectives for anything whatever dealing with child care across the country.

We have some 1.8 million children whose parents are in the labour force and who do not have access to quality child care. We need to recognize that many of those who need child care are single parents or two-parent families where the one partner has a comparatively low wage job and they are unable to gain any kind of real toehold in the labour market. So they remain marginalized. The lack of adequate child care means that a great many parents, families and children are, therefore, condemned to poverty. There is a direct relationship. By not having a decent child care program in place, the Government is continuing to condemn a large number of Canadian children to poverty who would not be in poverty if we had a decent program.

The Tory policy will create fewer child care spaces over the next seven years than the present system, inadequate as that present system is. Today, there are approximately 240,000 child care spaces. The Tories plan to add 200,000 spaces by the year 1995. Under the present situation, inadequate as it is as I have said, the number of spaces doubles every five years, so we would have reached that doubling by the year 1993. The Tories have planned to add an extra 200,000 spaces by the year 1995. This Bill puts a ceiling on the number of new spaces which the federal Government is prepared to support. It makes funding available to the provinces but with no national objectives to ensure that money is used to provide quality accessible care.

There has been some debate today about the question of witnesses coming before the committee. We say that the whole committee process taking only 2.5 days to hear witnesses neglected whole areas of Canada. Nobody was heard from the Atlantic provinces. There were only two witnesses from east of the Ottawa River. That is a travesty of what our committee process is supposed to be about. The Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) said that the New Democratic Party is trying to have it both ways, that the New Democrats had been demanding action following the earlier task force. He is quite right. We have been demanding action. Then he said that we wanted to study the Bill after it was tabled. Of course, when such an inadequate Bill was tabled, it was important that witnesses should appear who could point out the inadequacies with the hope the Government would listen.

Unfortunately, the Government did not choose to listen but regarded the committee process as simply a stage that had to be gone through. Instead of having credible witnesses on the Government side, if the Government had any who would have been prepared to reason with the committee—the committee process is to hear witnesses and to try to reach some balance as to what is needed—the Government simply said: "We are not even interested in talking with Opposition Members about what our position is. You can call a few witnesses of your own. We will not listen to them nor will we change anything. We will ram this legislation through because we want it in place for the election". That is a travesty. In committee there is supposed to be an opportunity for both sides to be heard and for committee members to be able to weigh and reason among themselves.

Over the last eight years of good committees in this House of Commons, both under the present Government and under the previous Liberal Government, it has been my experience that that is what committees have done. But when you have a Government that says it does not matter what witnesses say, that it will simply follow its own legislation and ideological bent, telling the Opposition to call witnesses and that the Government will call none, that is a travesty, Madam Speaker.

When New Democrats look at child care needs across Canada, we see seven key principles which have to be established. First, a program for child care should be comprehensive. It should include a broad range of services to serve infants, pre-schoolers, school-age children and those with special needs. Second, quality should be established. Services should be licensed and regulated and should incorporate the best current information about early childhood development. This is an area where scholars are working and developing their knowledge all the time. We need people who have been trained in this area rather than simply saying that so-and-so has always liked children, and why shouldn't he or she have the opportunity to have some kind of day care facility. We need people who have been trained in what early childhood development is all about.

Third, the program should be affordable. Cost should not be a barrier to access. Over a period of time, parental fees should diminish until they are ultimately phased out. There is absolutely nothing in Bill C-144 to make that possible. Fourth, day care facilities should be accessible. Services should be universally accessible to all families seeking care regardless of income, employment status and geographic location. Fifth, day care programs should be flexible. Needs have to be accommodated for those who require care on a variety of schedules. People have strange schedules of work today.

Part-time, full-time, seasonal, shift or on a drop-in basis. Sixth—this is most important and something which the Government does not recognize—services should be non-profit to ensure the maximum, optimum use of public funds. Services should not be devoted to the profit-seeking motive. We should not be seeking to make fast bucks out of the needs of our children. As a Government, the Conservatives have the responsibility to get the optimal value for the taxpayer's dollar. We are not doing that when we fund day care centres that are oriented to profit. Finally, these services should be accountable. There should be regular monitoring and financial accountability provided to parents and to Government.

The witnesses who appeared before the committee were universal in their condemnation of Bill C-144 as failing to meet the real needs of Canada's children and the parents of those children. They were not just negative. They came before the committee and tried to make reasonable suggestions which they hoped the Government would adopt. A number of groups pointed out that more than 200,000 spaces should be targeted by the program which the Bill creates, for instance, the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Daycare Advocacy Association, the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the National Federation of Nurses' Unions, the Canadian Association of Social Workers, the Ottawa-Carleton Daycare Association, the Manitoba Federation of Labour, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women.

As I looked through their comments and the comments made by other groups which appeared before the committee, I noticed a lot of the people coming before the committee were from unions. There were day care advocacy groups and a lot of union people appeared, which made a lot of sense to me. These are the people who need child care. Naturally the unions were trying to represent their members' interests. Unfortunately, the Conservative Government was not interested in hearing this.

The Alberta Union of Provincial Employees talked about the principle of national objectives for day care and the need to incorporate the necessary provisions to enforce national standards. The Canadian Jewish Congress on the same subject said that for such a vital program as child care, the Government must establish national programs which set the parameters for provincial programs so that families may be assured of finding services of reasonably comparable quality no matter where they live. This is consistent with the tradition of other national cost shared programs.

The National Anti Poverty Organization recommends the establishment of national objectives at least and some federal standards if possible. We do not have that in Bill C-144. The Alberta Federation of Labour points out that Bill C-144 provides no national goals nor objectives. It says that provincial Governments such as Alberta—and they could speak just as well of the British Columbia Government or a number of regressive Governments across Canada—must clearly understand the obligations of participation in the program. The National Union of Provincial Government Employees said the welfare of children must supersede the jurisdictional sensitivities of provincial Governments.

The witnesses who appeared before the committee had a lot of concern with this Bill. As I said at the beginning, it is shoddy. It is the sort of thing that will not stand up to the light. It is the sort of thing that when it is put in the wash, it is going to fall apart. It is flimsy and not something that we in this Party, caring as we do about Canada's children and the future of Canada, can support.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. colleague the same question, really, that I asked the Conservative Member who spoke this morning. Why does the Member think the Conservative Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who promised major action on behalf of Canada's children, and certainly this as a response to Canadian women as well, waited four years? And why did they give such high priority, first of all, to bringing in tax measures which are regressive and which give double the amount of reduction for higher-income families and do nothing for lower-income families? There was very little delay in that part of the strategy. Why does the Member think the Conservative Government is putting a seven-year cap on everything?

The Member tells us his wife has been very active in child care. I am sure he knows it often takes two or three years to get a new child care centre going. In many provinces which are underdeveloped, it will take quite a while before they begin to use this program. At the end of seven years there will be no more capital funds, there will be reduced variable cost sharing for the poorer provinces and the program in effect will be finished. We know that during those seven years, if we are lucky, we will only see 25 per cent of the need met. That is quite a generous estimate at that. It is not nearly the amount of child care that most bodies, including the Day Care Information Centre, says is needed. I would like to ask the Member to comment on the very restrictive type of policy the Conservatives introduced.

Mr. Manly: I would like to begin, Madam Speaker, by telling a story about another country far away from Canada. A Cabinet Minister was visiting an area in his riding in this foreign country. He went into a pre-school situation and he could see it was very inadequate. There were no facilities. They did not have furniture. The children were not properly looked after. The Cabinet Minister regarded the situation for a while and realized it was a bad situation, so he promised $100 would be made available to help that day care centre. A little later he toured a prison and saw that the facilities were not great, but were not bad as prisons go. The Cabinet Minister looked around and decided that the prison needed a new gymnasium, a new television room and new facilities for visiting. So he ordered there should be $3 million made available to help that new prison. His assistant was with him and he did not understand this. He said to the Cabinet Minister: "We just finished visiting a day care centre which was really in need and you gave them $100. We visit a prison and you give $3 million. Why the discrepancy?" The Cabinet Minister shrugged and said: "Well, I am not likely to end up in a day care centre".

The Conservatives promised there would be a day care program put in place, but they promised under the pressure of an election campaign. I do not think the Prime Minister's heart was really in that program. It was one of those things he felt compelled to do, the same as he felt compelled to say there was not going to be any patronage. Do you remember that, Madam Speaker? He said there was not going to be any patronage under the Conservative Government, that it was going to be a different kind of situation. In the same way he promised there was going to be an adequate child care package brought in, but the Government has not really had its heart in it. There is still that ideological strata in the Conservative Party that regards child care as being somehow second rate, that what we really should have are parents who will stay home 24 hours a day and look after their children. Somehow child care is not really what the Government wants for Canada's children, so I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), regardless of what he might think, has some difficulty with his own caucus.

I also think there was a desire not to bring this legislation forward too quickly because the Conservatives did not want it to see the light of day. They did not want it exposed. They knew it would not stand up to criticism. So they delayed, delayed and delayed to the last possible moment and they are now trying to rush it through in the waning days of Babylon, hoping they can get it in the public eye and be able to say they fulfilled their promise. They hope that the people will not realize what a shoddy piece of work it is until after the election.

I do not think the people of Canada are going to be deceived by this shoddy Bill. All the witnesses who appeared before the committee pointed to its inadequacies, pointed out ways in which it should be improved. The Canadian public will also look at this legislation and, as The Ottawa Citizen reported on Saturday, they will reject it as being completely inadequate, in some places wasteful, in other places, mean, and in fact nothing more than an attempted election bribe.

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, on the last point raised by my colleague, whether or not people would be fooled by this piece of legislation, I have received several letters from constituents over the last several days. They talk about the present crisis in day care. They certainly are not fooled. They have analysed what this Government has had to say and have concluded that at the end of the seven-year period, there will be no additional day care spaces. In fact, there will probably be less day care spaces available than what there would otherwise be under the present arrangement. I want to ask the Hon. Member if he sees it in exactly the same way as my constituents.

Mr. Manly: Absolutely, Madam Speaker. We pointed out time and again, and I think the message is getting through to everyone except the Conservatives—although perhaps they understand it and just do not want to act on it—that at the end of this seven year period under this new Act, Bill C-144, there will be fewer child care spaces in Canada than if we had left the present situation in place, inadequate as it is. We know that action needs to be taken. There are hundreds of thousands of Canadian children who could benefit from child care. We see it as a need. The Conservative Government seems to see it as a burden. It sees only the cost. It does not see the investment. Individual parents are concerned that the Government invest something in the future of their children. The Government is not doing it. As a Parliament we should be concerned about the Government not only investing in individual children but investing in the future of Canada's children as a whole. We are not doing it. We are failing. The Government has failed.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take part in the third reading debate on Bill C-144. Allow me first, Madam Speaker, to go back to the reply I was given earlier by my colleague the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) about the federal contribution toward the maintenance of child care services after 1995. I referred my colleague to clause 3 of the Bill and he referred me to its preamble. I would like to put on record, Madam Speaker, that the first paragraph of the preamble says that after 1995 the Government will contribute to the maintenance of the expanded child care system. It should be obvious to anyone who can read and understand legislation that that is not only included in the preamble but also in clause 3, and it has always been agreed that after 1995 the federal Government will continue to contribute 50 per cent of the maintenance cost of child care services.

My colleague also mentioned what the former Liberal Government did for child care services. I wish to remind him that in 1984 the Canada Assistance Plan provided $25 million for all Canadian children who needed care services. It is estimated that under the Bill introduced, according to our objectives of doubling the number of day care spaces in the next seven years, by then, in 1995, the federal Government should be contributing $800 million per year for child care services.

I also had, Madam Speaker, the opportunity to hear the leader of the official Opposition this morning and I would like to express my astonishment. Where was he this summer? What does he know of the day care Bill? How can his speechwriters tackle issues they know nothing about? Why haven't they at least consulted with the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) who was one of those sitting on the legislative committee this summer? I am convinced that my colleague from Outremont could have told them a few things, including the date of the Bill's first reading in the House. But I would particularly like to emphasize certain aspects of this issue. I I am thinking of a change suggested by the Hon. Member for Outremont during the legislative committee to clarify whether the 200 000 extra spaces were meant as a minimum or a maximum. At her request, the two little words "at least" were added before the number 200 000 in the preamble. Not only is this what we wanted but it is in fact something which we have added to the Bill at his request to make sure that Members opposite understood that it was certainly not a maximum but rather a minimum.

There were also other changes made, Madam Speaker, at the committee stage, which were totally ignored by the leader of the official Opposition this morning. I would like to stress among others the issue of children. What is a child? He spoke to us about a child under six. Section 2 of the Bill, a definitional section, describes a child as a person under 15 of age. So there is no problem and this is something everyone can understand; according to the child care legislation, a child is under 15. That seems simple enough. It is there in the legislation. The issue of rolling over expenses from one year to the next was also raised, Madam Speaker. Yes, there was a change in committee in that case as well to ensure that part of the monies not spent as forecasted by the provinces could be rolled over to the subsequent year.

Yes, that is a change which was made in the legislative committee.

Madam Speaker, there was also an amendment dealing with linguistic minorities. There was an amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Outremont which was accepted. There was another amendment dealing with the needs of low income families which was added to the legislation.

I suggest that we have carried out a fair examination of the issue, that we have listened to the legitimate representations, even from the Opposition, and we have been able to incoporate them in the legislation, so that I feel we have an excellent Bill, Madam Speaker.

I should like to emphasize something which I noticed this morning, Madam Speaker. As I was listening to the Leader of the Official Opposition, I was absolutetly flabbergasted to realize that not a single woman supported what he was saying. Having heard what he had to say, I suggest I would have done the same thing and I feel that on an issue as important as this one for the women, families and children in Canada, we have to thoroughly examine the Bill before us.

Madam Speaker, last Wednesday, the Leader of the NDP made a number of statements in the House. I had the opportunity to read them and I should like to address especially his comments dealing with issues of national objectives and standards, as well as the availability of Federal funds for daycare services under this legislation.

As a result of this debate, I have come to the realization that several Members of the Opposition sitting in the House know nothing about the sharing of powers between the Federal and Provincial Governments in Canada, nor about the Federal assistance made available through Federal programs in such areas of Provincial jurisdiction as health services, post-secondary education, social assistance and services. They do not seem to understand the difference between cost sharing programs under which the Federal Government reimburse the provinces part of the expenses incurred under Federaly sponsored programs and global financing, and where the Federal Government's contribution is determined by a formula and is not directly tied to Provincial expenditures.

In an unfair attack against the Premier and the Government of his province, the NDP House Leader said this last Wednesday: "The Government of Canada gives British Columbia money for post-secondary education . . . The British Columbia Government does not match any of it. It does not spend any money on post-secondary education, and I am saying it will do the same for child care."

Madam Speaker, this is a cost sharing Bill. Any province seeking federal funding under the provisions of this legislation will first have to contribute money to increase the number of spaces in its qualified child care centres and provide regular financial assistance with respect to new and existing spaces by paying direct grants or subsidizing the expenses of low and middle income families. The provinces must contribute money for child care and spend that money for nothing else before we will pay back some of these expenditures. It is not a matter of payments which must be matched by the provinces. They must contribute first and then apply to the federal Government for partial repayment of their expenses.

By contrast, federal contributions for post-secondary education are figured out every year on the basis of a formula which has nothing to do with provincial expenditures. The provinces are not expected to match the federal contribution nor to add a preset amount.

Madam Speaker, allow me to say a few words about the issue of national standards and objectives. Apparently a number of Opposition Members believe that there are national standards concerning new programs and that these standards are the same in all sectors where the federal Government contributes money. Since the federal Government shares the cost connected with social assistance, the Members in question assume that social welfare rates are the same in each province. Since a federal contribution is paid for insured health services, these Members assume that the number of doctors per capita in New Brunswick is the same as in Ontario and that since there are hospitals in Toronto, there should be hospitals in every little fishing village in Newfoundland. Since the federal Government provides funding for post-secondary education, these Members assume that the professor/student ratio at Laval University should be identical to that at the University of British Columbia and that admission criteria, competence of staff and student assistance programs should be the same at both institutions.

Madam Speaker, these assumptions are of course false. Like many others, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said indignantly in his speech last Wednesday that we would have a very uneven system because different provinces would have different standards of child care. In an area that falls purely under provincial jurisdiction, there may be variations from province to province to reflect the different needs that exist across the country.

Today, we have this divergence in health care because certain services which are fully insured in some provinces are only partially insured in other provinces or not at all. We have the same kind of situation in social assistance, because different provinces provide different rates of assistance to different categories of recipients. The same applies to post-secondary education, where admission criteria and student assistance programs vary from province to province and from university to university.

In fact, even if that may surprise the Hon. Member and others who share his views, there is no standard for establishing these programs. None are recommended for this Bill, any more than standards exist in legislation authorizing federal financial assistance to programs that fall under provincial jurisdiction.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, when witnesses for the FTQ informed the New Democratic spokesperson for the Bill at the hearings of the legislative committee that standards should be left entirely up to the provinces, she approved that position, stating that the NDP only wanted the Bill to set national objectives.

Madam Speaker, I may add that the next day, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) did a clause-by-clause analysis, proposing a series of amendments regarding so-called national objectives, most of which were just program standards, under a different name. Nevertheless, she at least recognized in principle that those who claim that imposing uniform minimum standards regarding child/staff ratios, program contents and personnel qualifications on every province is not a violation of provincial jurisdiction are dreaming!

Far from giving up our responsibility to encourage the provinces to improve their minimum standards for accredited child care facilities, this legislation goes further than any comparable previous Bill, because it asks the provinces to set program standards in seven specific areas, to make these standards public and to enforce them.

There is no such requirement in the Canada Health Act, in the Canada Assistance Plan or in the legislation governing contributions for post-secondary education.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East asked about national standards in the Canada Health Act.

Since most provinces approve of the Meech Lake Agreement, which explicitly authorizes the federal Government to set national standards for new cost-sharing programs that the provinces must respect in order to receive federal funds if they opt out of such programs, would such objectives have been legitimate in the Bill?

There are two answers to this question, Madam Speaker? First, these national objectives are in the Bill. They are stated in part in the preamble and in the requirements to set, make public and enforce program standards in some areas with which the provinces must comply to be entitled to the cost-sharing provided for in this Bill.

Second, what the NDP suggested in committee and at the report stage as national objectives were, in fact, disguised attempts at imposing detailed program implementation standards. For exemple, the Canada Health Act mentions accessibility as a national objective, meaning that fees cannot be charged for insured services. As the NDP recognizes that fees for child care centres should continue for an unspecified period, even according to its suggestions, it would be ridiculous to establish such an objective and to bind the financing provided in the legislation to that kind of objective. That is what the NDP is suggesting we do in its definition of affordability, among other national objectives. As well, its definition of accessibility seems to demand that provinces establish a child care center in all communities so that parents never have to wait for a space.

A similar objective in the Canada Health Act would mean that a province should provide hospitals, doctors and nurses in all communities and suppress waiting lists for surgery. The NDP definition of quality would demand that provinces provide services equivalent to those provided in most other provinces and conform to the most recent child care standards. Detailed implementation standards would be dictated under the guise of national objectives.

All I can say, Madam Speaker, is that those propositions are dishonest or that those who make them are completely ignorant of their impact. That is most annoying. Even if there was no constitutional aspect involved, would it be logical to have, for example, a standardized ratio of three children per care giver when we know that this standard could be easily met in Quebec City or in Toronto but would prevent the creation of a licensed day care facility in a small village or in an unorganized rural community? That is only one of the realities we are faced with when we think of national standards.

Madam Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks by saying that, in the rhetoric he served us last Wednesday, the NDP House Leader referred to a strictly federal program, the family allowance program, and asked what would happen if each Canadian province had its own family allowance program. It would be nonsense.

Madam Speaker, what I have to say may be of interest to the Liberals who want uniform national standards, like the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). In 1974, the present Leader of the Opposition introduced a bill allowing each province to vary the amount of family allowance payments according to the number of children in the family and their age. Two provinces, Alberta and Quebec, are exercising this right now, and Prince Edward Island has done so in the past. So this "nonsense" has been a reality for nearly 14 years.

Madam Speaker, this is a case where the question of diversity and the question of meeting local needs have been taken into account in a strictly federal program, without compromising the effectiveness of the program.

To sum up, the federal Government is showing leadership in this legislation. It asks provinces to devote funds to child care according to our own criteria in order to be entitled to cost sharing. For the first time it asks that provinces devise, make public and enforce standards of establishment of programs under a plan providing for provincial jurisdiction and it has set everywhere in the legislation national objectives which are significant and realistic in the context of the service provided and its present level of development.

We have not ignored the provincial jurisdictions, the diversity of this country and the levels of service the provinces could ensure realistically during the period provided for in the legislation. If we have been criticized on that, we present no excuses, for we prefer to bring about improvements rather than guarantee impossible things.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Tardif). She underlined the definition of a "child" contained in this Bill as "a person under fifteen years of age". The question I want to ask her is this: Does this Bill recognize well enough the particular problem of the "latchkey kids"? And what will the Government's policy be regarding the problem of latchkey kids under 15?

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Madam Speaker, that is a question that was extensively debated at the legislative committee, where it was clearly determined that under this Bill, a "child" is any person under 15 years of age. We also discussed after school hours day care facilities and facilities for students under 15.

It is obvious that the Child Care Act addresses all of the provinces and, under the enabling legislation, each one of them will be responsible for signing with the federal government an agreement providing for instance for after hours day care services for school age children, where the development, maintenance and supervision of these spaces will be subjected to the same authorities as other types of day care. We would not want, Madam Speaker, to create day care spaces not subjected to any control and where quality would be nonexistent.

Our goal through this Bill is not only to increase the number of spaces but also to ensure that these would be quality spaces. And in order to have acceptable quality, the same provincial jurisdiction that will establish standards to meet our expectations, that will decide where new spaces are required, that will decide where they are to be built or operated, also should check for quality. One agency in each province will be responsible for child care quality. Thus, there will be no problem. There could be for instance child care services in a school, but they should then be under the authority of that agency. Referring to Quebec, it would be the Office de garde that should be responsible for those child care spaces.

Mr. Caccia: My second question, Madam Speaker, is related to payments under the Canada Assistance Plan. I would like to ask the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary whether she can assure this House that provinces that wish to opt out of this legislation, Bill C-144, could still use the Canada Assistance Plan in the future?

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Madam Speaker, I would like to refer to what I think is Clause 12 of the legislation. No, it is not that clause. I have difficulty finding the exact reference, but anyway it is already provided in the Bill that any province that did not sign an agreement would remain under the Canada Assistance Plan. So this is provided for, it is part of the agreement. Any province that has no agreement with the Canadian Government would continue claiming its costs under the Canada Assistance Plan. That is provided under the legislation.

Mr. Caccia: I would like to know whether they would be able to do so in the future without any time limitation?

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): The only time limit provided in the legislation is for registering. A province for instance that entered into a federal-provincial agreement before 1990 would be able to claim its capital costs under the Child Care Act. It could do so retroactively. There is no other limitation. So any difference in status between two provinces would be whether they entered into a federal-provincial agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions, comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

[English]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): In intervening at this stage of the debate, Madam Speaker, there are a number of points that I would like to make, having carefully listened to the Parliamentary Secretary, in the hope that I clearly understood her rebuttal, which was certainly a very incisive one and relevant to the matter before us today. Nevertheless, there are problems with this piece of legislation that existed at the time of second reading that have plagued us throughout the committee hearings and the listening to witnesses. In some cases witnesses reinforced those sentiments relating to complexities and problems which are still with us at third reading.

The fact of the matter is that in launching this Bill and this measure, the Government is badly underestimating the number of mothers, fathers and children who will require the care that this Bill intends to offer. There are many more women in training, many more women at university, many more women entering the employment force than the 200,000 spaces would imply, in the case that they have children over the next seven years. It is an established fact that in cities such as Metro Toronto today the waiting lists are such that they will make the relevance and the significance of this program outdated. In other words, the figures that have been produced at the committee stage and the forecasts indicate that the need out there in order to be met would require a program that is seven times as large as the one that we are debating through this particular legislative measure.

The forecasts are for some 1.4 million children who will require assistance over the next seven years. We are therefore dealing with a limited number of spaces and with waiting lists that are not going to be addressed or assisted by this measure alone.

In other words, the federal Government is not going to cope with the extent of the problem that we have before us no matter how many reassurances the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) may give in this Chamber. Bypassing this legislation we will have dealt with the surface of the problem. We will have dealt so to speak with the tip of the iceberg, but we will not have dealt with the substance of the issue that must be resolved if we are to meet the requirements of a generation that in increasing numbers requires the services of child care.

We see every morning on the subway in Metro Toronto young mothers in particular board trains as early as 6.30 in the morning to take their children to the other end of the city because that is the only place they may have found for leaving their child in care, sometimes 40, 45 and even 60 minutes distance, a place that may be private or public but which consumes an enormous amount of time twice a day, particularly at the end of the day when both mother and child re-enter home after a long day. In other words, the situation is unacceptable in a modern society with the resources that we have in Canada and with the fine record that we had up to 1984 in meeting the social needs of Canadians across the nation.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke in this House on this Bill, he indicated that this Bill can only go so far to placate feelings. He made a reference to the deficit as being a time bomb. I thought that that intervention was inappropriate and extremely out of place in such a discussion.

We have to keep in mind that the deficit is a time bomb when it comes to an important social measure like this, but we do not have to worry about the deficit as a time bomb when it comes to the development of tarsands in mega projects in certain parts of Canada which are going to absorb billions of dollars. We are not to worry about the deficit being a time bomb when it comes to the defence equipment and Budgets over the next 10 or 15 or 20 years, but we are to worry about the deficit as a time bomb when it comes to child care in Canada. That makes me wonder about the values and the priorities of the Progressive Conservative Government. How can it worry about a deficit being a time bomb in relation to certain social measures, but not worry about the deficit being a time bomb when it comes to measures other than social? That, for the life of me, I cannot understand. The Government is to be condemned for these upside down priorities and values. I will come to that, at the end of my intervention, with specific figures, because they really trouble me.

Third, the point also needs to be made that there is an increasing dependence on the part of Canadians on adequate child care services, because Canadians need to have two incomes in order to build a family. Keep in mind that in the last four years the tax imposed on a person earning $25,000 a year has gone up by 22 per cent. That is a considerable burden. Add to that the fact that we have seen the deindexation of family allowances during the past four years introduced and implemented by this Government.

In addition, we have had the deindexation of the child tax credit. As a result, three measures will hit at the same time the person in the process of raising a young family.

Then there is the point which I made earlier, that the Bill and the expenditures that will go with it will only be able to meet the requirements of one-seventh of the child population that is predicted for over the next seven years.

In the case of Ontario, the province I come from, the adoption of this measure will mean that a ceiling will be imposed in Ontario to the extent that it will result in 12,000 less child care spaces than if it were to continue under the present regime. That is a matter of profound concern with the provincial authorities and Government.

There are certain incentives to enter into this agreement, but there are also certain penalties that will result in signing this agreement on child care. Probably the major disincentive and penalty is that by entering this agreement and abandoning the Canada Assistance Plan, which has served us well over the last 20 years, Ontario and, I suppose, other provinces will lose a substantial number of spaces, which, in the case of Ontario, has been estimated at 12,000.

I ask why the Canada Assistance Plan has to be abandoned. The Parliamentary Secretary dealt with that in her answers earlier, and I will take her word for that. The Canada Assistance Plan has served Canadians well. It has permitted the provinces to submit a bill, so to speak, to the federal Government for any social measures they undertake, and to be refunded 50 per cent for every dollar spent in social services and programs.

This is why at the present time we have child care services in existence throughout Canada which are made possible under the Canada Assistance Plan. We have $1.9 billion for child care systems—a substantial sum—that is spent annually.

This Bill and the speeches made in this House by the Government tend to create an impression that we are launching a totally new program and a totally new expenditure which has not existed until now. That is not so. That program of child care has existed under the Canada Assistance Plan, and will continue to exist, as the Parliamentary Secretary clarified earlier, if provinces decide not to enter into an agreement under Bill C-144 with Ottawa.

This policy was indicated quite lucidly by Marjorie Nichols in a column a month and a half ago. She wrote that the Government would be spending, assuming an inflation factor of 5 per cent a year, some $17 billion over the next seven years without this new program.

By adopting this program, the Government will be spending—and you have to include the inflation factor—some $22 billion over the next seven years. That is perhaps one way of putting into perspective the comparison with the program that exists right now under the Canada Assistance Plan, and it puts Bill C-144 in perspective as well. The increase is in essence 4 per cent more per year than would have been spent without this new program.

The matter of national standards is one that has been bounced back and forth across the floor in debates, in second reading today and particularly in the reply by the Parliamentary Secretary. Her analysis was quite interesting, and I recognize that. The fact remains that we want to ensure in Canada some basic minimum standards across the board, regardless of where the child attends the child care system. The standards have usually been a prerogative, and the leadership, up until now, has been given by the federal Government.

In this Bill, we do not find any reference to a pattern that has been established through other social security programs and systems. This is why the criticism has come from this side of the House. If we have missed a reference to national standards in Bill C-144, I will be glad to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary when I sit down. Perhaps she will be in a position to refer me to that clause in the Bill that establishes national standards. I will be glad to be corrected.

Another shortcoming of this particular measure and approach is that it does not set priorities for families in need. It is our understanding, from the hearings in committee, and after having listened to submission after submission, that families in need will face a more difficult situation than they have up until now.

In the question and answer period we dealt briefly with the question of the latchkey kids. The Parliamentary Secretary has referred the matter to the provincial authorities and this would be in their domain to designate and to take care of. We hope the contract, the negotiations, and the agreements that will be signed will give latchkey kids the just recognition as a phenomenon in society that has to be dealt with.

In this debate there has been very little reference, except for a couple of times, to the salaries paid to day care workers. They will continue to be the lowest paid in society, unless the federal Government gives some leadership on this matter, and unless it speaks openly and gives a clear indication as to what it thinks should be the appropriate and adequate payment to be given to those key individuals in our society.

On the question of priorities, to which I made a brief reference earlier, we should begin to examine the reference of the Prime Minister to the question of the time bomb of a deficit, and the manner in which the Government commits itself in defence equipment budgeting—although it is true that it is over more than seven years. In some cases it is five years. For some items and equipment it is seven years, in some cases it is ten years, and some cases it is over ten years. Nevertheless, when one looks at the totality of the defence equipment budget, one finds this astonishing $25 billion commitment which the Prime Minister does not find it necessary to worry about in terms of a deficit. Then one compares the $25 billion to the $4 billion, because in essence we are talking of a $4 billion expenditure on child care, that is the real amount, without including the tax credits. One asks, what on earth are the priorities of this Government? One wonders deeply and profoundly about what are the driving set of values that the Government is adopting when those priorities are compared. On the one hand we have $25 billion versus $4 billion.

We are looking forward to the debates not only here, but also on the hustings to stress and underline to Canadians the type of priorities that the Government has when it comes to the question of the care of children over the next seven years. It does not make sense to go into this type of funding when it is not looked at in isolation any longer, because it cannot and should not be, but when one looks at the type of funding in relation to competitive, parallel, and concurrent fundings of this Government, then the whole program becomes a shameless exercise in the pornography of power. It is a bad scene that emerges. In other words, if we can find the money for defence equipment, we better find the money for the proper care of the present young generation.

In Toronto the waiting list is 4,700. The other day, a young woman named Roberta Wilson, aged 19, went into the office of the chairman of the Metro Toronto government, Mr. Flynn, and had a sit-in for two hours until she was given a day care space for her son. She had to resort to this type of technique in order to get attention. I ask you, Madam Speaker, is that the way that mothers today and in the future will have to operate in order to get the attention of local, provincial, and federal governments? Obviously, this is not the way to resolve a problem with day care. Obviously, one does not want to have waiting lists of 4,700 in a metropolitan population. In fact, one would not want to have large waiting lists. There will always be some. However, this is insane, and it does not make sense.

I hear your signal, Madam Speaker, and I will conclude by simply referring to the fact that we have here a policy which looked reasonably good when it was introduced in the House some time ago. The more we studied it, the more we explored the situation out there in the real world in terms of waiting lists, in terms of taxation on medium and low-income families, in terms of the projections into the next seven years, and compared that with what this Bill is offering, we could only conclude that this measure is inadequate. When the measure is compared to other priorities of the Government, then the scene is really very distressing.

Ms. Tardif: Madam Speaker, I listened a moment ago to my hon. colleague talking about national expenditures. If I look at present expenditures under the Canada Assistance Plan for child care services, which total 160 million dollars a year, if I look at the Bill's preamble which provides for payments of four billion dollars over the next seven years, I have trouble understanding why he does not believe that this Bill will allow us to put more and more money into this field to meet the needs of Canadian families. This is a government priority, a priority backed by the present $160-million budget and by forecast expenditures of $4 billion over the next seven year period for child care services.

I would also like to go back to the matter of what is required from provinces under the agreements they will sign. He referred a moment ago to certain points which apparently would not be covered, on which the federal government presumably has not assumed its leadership role. I would like to refer him to sub-paragraph 4(1)(b) of the Bill which states that provinces must accord special priority to meeting the needs of children from low to modest income families.

Concerning the answer I just gave to a question from my hon. colleague concerning the withdrawal of the Canada Assistance Plan, I would like to remind him that I was not able to find the exact reference. Clause 13 of the Bill states that paragraph 10(1), which concerns the Canada Assistance Plan and its amendments, shall come into force on a day to be fixed by order of the Governor in Council, which day shall not be earlier than April 1 of the first year in respect of which all provinces have entered into agreements under the Act. Therefore, the Canada Assistance Plan will be able to reject the expenditures of provinces until such time as all provinces are covered by the new agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock, pursuant to an order made earlier this day, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings for the purpose of putting forwith every question necessary to dispose of third reading of the Bill presently before the House.

• (1700)

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment, will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to an order made earlier this day, the recorded division on the proposed amendment stands deferred until six o'clock later this day.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, August 19, consideration of the motion of Ms. Copps that Bill C-289, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act (list of ingredients), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, the Bill before us today clearly and simply proposes the full labelling of all restaurant meals. This sounds relatively uncomplicated as proposed in this Bill, but as so often happens, plans that look simple on paper are not always practical in the real world. Let us consider for a few moments the effect such a labelling requirement could have on the restaurant industry.

Most restaurant owners are proud of their establishment and try to serve the best food possible at the most reasonable price possible, while still ensuring some profit. Accordingly, they deal with a number of suppliers and buy from the source with the best product at the best price. This would, of course, be no problem if all products of a similar nature were identical. However, we are talking about the real world. For example, let us examine the potential problems with something as simple as flour.

Under Canadian food and drug regulations there are nine food additives permitted in flour for use as bleaching, naturing and dough conditioning agents. Of course, not all of those food additives would be used in a particular flour at the same time, but they provide the manufacturer with optional ingredients any one of which can be selected based on availability, price and technical requirements. The use of flour from one source with a certain combination of ingredients and food additives is no problem for the restauranteur.

When his supply runs low, however, he must either order more flour with the same composition from the same supplier, which limits his ability to shop around and get the best price available, or order flour with perhaps slightly different components from somewhere else. In the latter case, he is faced with having to change the ingredient and food additive information on every dish in which flour is used in his restaurant. The cost of changing this information would no doubt result in higher prices in the restaurant. If he decides not to change suppliers, he becomes tied to one supplier and as a result may very well wind up paying a higher price for the same flour. That again would require raising the prices in his establishment.

This is only one ingredient out of hundreds that a restaurant would use in the course of its business. The very same factors would apply to a majority, if not all, of foods and would create the need for tremendous record keeping efforts by both the restauranteur and the wholesaler.

In another situation, it is conceivable that the chef could run out of one ingredient such as a spice mixture while preparing a meal. Under this Bill he would not be able to substitute another mixture without changing the ingredient listing and, subsequently the preparation of the meal could be delayed or the food wasted and the service time for the consumer prolonged considerably.

There could also be considerably less creativity by chefs if complete ingredient labelling were required. Can you imagine the indignation of a master chef who has just finished creating a new gourmet meal when he is told that his masterpiece cannot be served to the public until the new ingredient listings are printed and ready for distribution? In fact, there may be great reluctance on the part of great chefs to reveal all the ingredients in their sauces and other foods.

Let us reflect for a moment on the dimension of the problem addressed here today. This is important if a practical solution is to be found. It needs to be recognized that not all ingredients are associated with severe adverse reactions. In fact, of the multitude of foods and food ingredients, only a small number have been associated with frequent or severe adverse reactions in susceptible individuals.

If this Bill before us today is passed it will create severe problems in the food industry as well as tremendous difficulties for the individual restauranteur. It is quite possible that it would produce so much labelling information that the sensitive consumer may not be able to comprehend all of it. That is not to say, however, that some measures are not required to provide to the consumer more information on the presence of potential allergens in foods.

To this end, officials of the Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare, in conjunction with representatives from the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association and the Allergy Information Association, have developed a proposal to address this situation. A list of the allergens responsible for the most severe or most frequent adverse reactions has been prepared and is presently being reviewed by the medical profession. As a first step, it is planned that a chart be made available to the consumer with information on the presence of these selected allergens in the foods served in fast service food establishments.

This proposal is far more practical and beneficial to all parties than the Bill before us today. Furthermore, the Allergy Information Association, having broad experience and contact with Canadians who suffer from adverse reactions to foods, drugs, et cetera, as well as the Canadian Diabetics Association, many of whose members manage institutional and commercial food services, have indicated support for this step-wise approach. Therefore, if this Bill were to pass it would seriously damage the productive negotiations between the Health Protection Branch and the food service industry to address this problem.

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Madam Speaker, the first comprehensive regulations governing the labelling of food products were introduced in the early 60's under the Food and Drugs Act.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is responsible for enforcing the provisions relating to labelling, packaging and advertising of food products, under the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act, the Food and Drugs Act and the regulations made therunder.

The Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare advises the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affaires on labelling and advertising matters relating to health. In 1973, the Departement of Consumer and Corporate Affairs published draft regulations on the packaging and labelling of consumer products as well as proposed amendments to the Food and Drugs regulations substantially changing food labelling requirements.

Madam Speaker, the new regulations were promulgated in 1974 and manufacturers of foods products were given a period of two years in order to implement them. These regulations gave rise to a comprehensive set of rules and guidelines relating to labelling and advertising.

Prepackaged foods must now bear a label with the following information, which is important: common name of the food, net contents, name and address of the person responsible for the product, a list of ingredients, durable life date and, if required, instructions for proper storage.

All the information required must be in English and French, except the name and address of the manufacturer which can be in either language.

Regarding more particularly the list of ingredients, these must be mentioned on most prepackaged foods in decreasing order of quantity or percentage of the prepackaged product. However, there are some exceptions, namely the following:

First, products that are prepackaged on retail premises; second, prepackaged individual portions of food that are served by a restaurant or other commercial enterprise with meals or snacks; third, prepackaged individual servings of food that are prepared by a commissary and sold by automatic vending machines or mobile canteens; four, meat and meat by-products that are barbecued, roasted or broiled on the retail premises; also, standardised alcoholic beverages and vinegars.

Some ingredients may be shown at the end of the list in any order. Those ingredients, Madam Speaker, can be spices, seasonings, herbs, except table salt, natural or artificial flavours, flavour enhancers, additives, vitamins, salts or derivatives of vitamins, mineral nutrients and salts of mineral nutrients.

Ingredients must generally be shown by their common names. Some of them, however, such as vegetable oils, flavours, seasonings, milk products may be identified by the name of the food category they represent.

Meat, poultry, fish or their by-products must be identified by their individual names, and in the case of vegetable protein based products, the source of the protein must be specifically identified on the label.

In the case of optional ingredients, or those that can be substituted to others in the preparation of a product, the label may list all ingredients that could be included in the product during the year. However, it must be clearly indicated those ingredients may not necessarily be present in a given package of that food.

Besides, when an ingredient has several components, the complete list of those components must appear on the label unless otherwise excepted by Food and Drug Regulations. Among ingredients for which a list of components is not mandatory we could mention butter, flour and cheese. Apart from the information processors must provide on the label, they can choose to list a certain number of additional information about their products. To protect consumers against any possibility of misleading information, guidelines were developed for the categories of statements that may legitimately appear on labels.

As pointed out, Madam Speaker, none of those labelling provisions apply to food served in restaurants, hotels or other food service outlets. And a close look at conditions in restaurants shows how impractical it would be to put them under such vast regulations. Some restaurants for instance serve a whole range of foods and sometimes change from day to day their menus and even their individual recipes. What would happen to small roadside snackbars and take-out restaurants with limited resources? How could they obey such labelling provisions? Further, trying to impose regulations without at the same time educating the food service industry, including for instance suppliers, and an adequate enforcing mechanism? This might expose sensitive consumers to a higher risk situation than now prevails. Also, if we were to force restaurateurs to label their foods, this would have to be done in a way that would not entertain a feeling of false security among people with food allergies. For the time being, it is therefore imperative that people with those kinds of allergies do not hesitate to inquire with the restaurateur about the ingredients of the foods before eating them.

Where the specific substance responsible for the allergic reaction is present in the food, or where the restaurateur does not seem to be quite sure of the exact ingredients, the consumer should not hesitate for a moment to stay away from both that food and that restaurant. People with food allergies should understand it is their responsibility to do everything in their power to avoid the substance to which they are allergic. This however does not relieve food service operations from the responsibility to better inform their customers to the best of their knowledge as to the ingredients of the foods they serve, when asked to do so.

Indeed, officials from the Health Protection Branch in the Department of National Health and Welfare are actively discussing with representatives of the restaurant and food services industry, the Allergy Information Association and the medical profession to exactly determine what information should be easily accessible to consumers as well as the best ways to make it available. Let me suggest, Madam Speaker, that we should simply let those people go about their work, without government interference.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): I will be very brief in my comments, Mr. Speaker. I hope this Bill will be passed this afternoon and then go on to committee where it can be studied in greater detail. Witnesses can appear and discuss the important aspects of the legislation.

I strongly support the thrust of this legislation. Indeed, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who brought the Bill before the House and I believe as well the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) who has also spoken out on this issue in the past, as has my colleague the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and a number of colleagues from the New Democratic Party.

I myself have received letters from a number of constituents on the subject matter of this Bill. A Mrs. Gail Takeshita of Sussex Avenue in Burnaby wrote a letter as follows:

> Dear Mr. Robinson:
> As a parent of a child with very severe food allergies, I was pleased to receive a letter . . . informing me of . . . Bill C-289 in an effort to achieve legislation requiring disclosure of ingredients in restaurant foods.
> My daughter has "anaphylaxis" which can also be called "allergic shock" or "general allergic reaction". This is a life-threatening reaction to foods. Incorrect information given by a waiter or waitress, or improper or inadequate ingredient listing on a package could someday cost my daughter her life.

Mrs. Takeshita strongly supports this legislation, and understandably so because the life of her child is at risk.

As well, I received a letter from a Rev. Sam Smith, an elderly gentleman who lives in South Burnaby. He writes to me about a situation facing his family particularly with respect to monosodium glutamate. He points out:

> Monosodium glutamate is the most dangerous. Causing allergic reactions in about 50 per cent of Canadians, to a more or less degree.

I believe my colleague from Vancouver East has indicated she is one of the Canadians who responds in a negative way to MSG. Rev. Smith points out that his wife can go into convulsions if she gets the amount of MSG considered normal in prepared foods. The worst foods are those in which the makers consider MSG to be only a flavour enhancer and therefore do not even list it as an ingredient.

The purpose of this legislation is straightforward. The Member for Hamilton East noted that she was certainly prepared to accept that there were some difficulties in the drafting of the Bill, but that in principle the legislation should go forward to committee. The key point is that now if one goes into a grocery store to purchase food, one is entitled by law to a listing of the ingredients in that food. However, if one goes into a fast food restaurant, a McDonalds, an Arby's, a Wendy's, there is no similar requirement. I would hope this House at this very late stage in this Parliament, perhaps the last week in which this Parliament is sitting, could in fact move in an non-partisan spirit together to pass this important piece of legislation.

I would hope as well that it would be recognized that it has the support of the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Ontario Medical Association and a number of other medical associations and, I believe, the Canadian Council on Children and Youth has examined this question. I would hope this Bill could be moved forward, the committee could examine it with care this week and it could be adopted before the House rises at the end of this week.

I support the legislation. I believe it is legislation that will be of benefit to literally millions of Canadians. I would hope the House would adopt the Bill in principle this afternoon.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, I follow the previous speaker not only in time but in general concurrence, although I am not as sure as he is that the House is going to rise on Friday. I feel he is right but we have been wrong so many other Fridays over the past months, I do not quite have his confidence. However, I think the Bill should be put to a vote shortly. I hope a committee could deal with the very real problems more effectively than we can in debate in the House, and that we can bring some relief, comfort and assurance to people who are living under desperate anxieties.

I have been impressed by certain statistics that are available to us from the Good Housekeeping Institute. The report is from a survey taken by that body with respect to concern over reaction to chemicals used in food, snacks and soft drinks. It was ranked second by consumers as being a matter of great concern and danger. In a 1988 survey by a national food association, the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada, 93 per cent of respondents believed that food additives should be regulated. Clearly, there is not only a concern on the part of people across North America, but it is a concern that is substantiated by the serious threat to health, indeed, to life, from the failure to have available the kind of information which this Bill wishes to put before the public.

We have to appreciate that if one suffers from this or that allergy, eating the wrong food can inflict not only discomfort but actual illness or possibly even death, so that a person who knows he or she has these allergies lives under the constant threat of taking the wrong food at a reception, a party, in a restaurant or wherever. There is no way that any individual given those circumstances is going to be wholly safe. We should take whatever steps we can take to bring to those people as much safety as we can. That is really the intention, as I understand it, of the legislation before us.

I commend the Hon. Member for Hamilton East who has brought it to the House. It shows the great value of Private Member's Bills. We private Members can focus the attention of Parliament on something that otherwise would be ignored. We can use this greatest forum of the land to be sure that the nation as a whole is aware that a problem is being taken seriously, that a solution is being examined responsibly.

Debate has already illustrated some of the difficulties of implementing such a Bill as we are considering. One difficulty is the fact that there are widely varying estimates about the number of people who suffer allergies. Some say there are three million in the United States alone. Some say there are 20 million in the United States alone. Whatever the number may be, we know there is a vast array of people who live under constant threat that at least their health is threatened and possibly their life by eating the wrong food.

We do not have precise statistics, but do we need them? Are we not aware that this is a commonly felt problem? Are there any of us who do not know someone who suffers from this or that allergy? They may be allergic to an element in food or to something in the atmosphere. I think all of us are aware of people, sometimes very close to us, who suffer from allergies and need this kind of protection. I can think of one time in the life of my oldest child when she was very, very young. It seemed that almost in a matter of minutes her life was threatened because she was allergic to an element she had taken into her body. If we had not been able to rush her to a hospital and have her receive treatment, she would not have lived another hour. The memory of that traumatic afternoon when the seemingly unbelievable was real before our eyes has certainly made me sensitive to the subject before us.

A little girl was playing as any other little girl might be, and then suddenly she was not able to breathe and had to be rushed to a hospital, we wondered for what reason, and then we were told what the reason was. Fortunately, treatment was a hand. But it has certainly made me sensitive to the critical nature of what we are debating.

When we focus attention, as we are right to do, on the difficulties in implementing this legislation, I hope we will give at least equal attention to the difficulty of living without it. Let us ask about the security of people if they do not have this kind of protection. We are now living in a time when it is needed more than ever. We now live in a time when so many people eat so many meals out. As a boy, I remember that going out for a meal out was an event. It is now commonplace. There are fast food restaurants, gourmet restaurants, and all the eating places in between. The fact is that many people are taking a large number of their meals out, some are taking most of their meals out and some, perhaps, all of them. More than ever throughout the western world we are subject to the possibility of being allergic to food in a meal the elements of which are unknown to us. If a person is unfortunate enough to have those allergies that can threaten health or even life, then this is a matter of great crisis.

In general, I support the intention of this legislation. I would like briefly to conclude by citing three steps I think we must take to cope with the problem. The first step is education. We are doing some of that right now. I look upon the House of Commons as a place of education as well as of legislation. It is a forum in which the representatives of the people of Canada debate with one another and put before the people of Canada the great issues of their time. This is such an issue when it affects the lives of people. We need more education to arouse awareness, to strengthen consciousness, so that everyone connected with providing a food to the public will see the serious nature of what we are talking about.

Second, this Bill is about communication, about the most effective way of communicating to people the knowledge necessary for health and life.

Finally, I want to take a moment to dwell on the need for regulation. We need law because we are humans. We do not always respond to good advice, to good counsel, to good information. We should but we do not. So many of us need the law to prod, to force, and so we move from education, which is always the best, the first and, I hope, long step.

We move to the step of regulation. The intent of this Bill, as I understand it, is to provide that measure of regulation which will provide a measure of security, which is surely the right of every Canadian if it can be provided.

I look upon this Bill as an effort at legitimate regulation. I do not quarrel with having traffic police that tell us to drive this way and sometimes to drive that way, to slow down, to speed up. We need that kind of regulating on the roads. We need regulating when it comes to putting up buildings.

I have just had an experience within the past month or so of dealing with municipal authorities over building regulations. They are quite right. For the protection of all, for the public good, we need processes through which we are required to go. Here we have another example of the same thing, a need for regulation in the public domain, regulation in the places to which men, women, and children are required to go day by day, namely, where they can find food and sustenance for life itself.

It has been said that man is what he eats. If that is the case, legislation dealing with the regulating of food is certainly among the basic legislation that can be put before this Parliament. I believe that we have a serious intent of that. This Bill certainly deserves to go to committee and I hope that detailed study will return to this House a Bill that is workable and that will improve the lot of our fellow Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I would like to comment very briefly on Bill C-289 which I supported during the debate on June 9 this year, when the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) introduced this Bill.

The purpose of the Bill is to compel restaurants to make available for public consultation a list, in English or in French, of all the ingredients in any food sold by them. I will continue to read from the Explanatory Notes to the Bill:

> This Bill will also compel each branch restaurant to affix on the packaging of any packaged food sold by it a list, in English and in French, of the ingredients in such food.

Madam Speaker, this proposal was introduced by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, and I think it is an excellent idea. Personally, I know people who are allergic to nuts and sea food or who, like me, are allergic to the hair of animals like cats, dogs, and all that sort of thing. I get asthma, so I know how I react and what I should avoid.

In this case, we are talking mostly about young people who eat outside the home and occasionally eat a hasty meal in a fast food establishment such as McDonald's, Harvey's and so forth. These young people must have access to a list of the ingredients they ingest. This may be extremely important, because as anyone who is allergic to something will understand, it is not always obvious that the cake or bread or food a person is served contains a specific ingredient, added during the cooking or preparation of the food, that acts as an irritant to that person and may cause a very strong allergic reaction.

I remember a very awkward situation when one of my friends who was allergic to nuts ordered a piece of cake. He specifically asked the waitress whether there were any nuts in the cake, and the waitress said no, there were none. He ate a piece and in fact, there was a dusting of ground nuts on the cake, and I have seldom seen such a violent reaction. He sort of choked and said, "There are nuts in it. Something's wrong." So something had to be done right away. He had to be taken to the hospital and given emergency treatment.

I am very impressed by these people who suffer from allergies and who sometimes have to deal with very difficult situations because of this lack of information. It seems quite right and straightforward to me that the House pass this Bill on second reading and send it to a committee in order to be able to really deal with the challenge raised by requiring fast food outlets and restaurants that are becoming increasingly popular with young people to describe on the box or container what is inside. I think that McDonald's, for example, has agreed to do so voluntarily. I am told that other chains will do so as a matter of good public relations and probably out of concern for the public welfare, but I think that this subject is important enough to justify sending the Bill for a thorough analysis of the consequences and to really see whether the Minister is right in saying that it would be onerous, difficult and sometimes impossible for food chains to list the ingredients on the container of the products they sell. I am not too satisfied with the Minister's answer that it is too onerous when we see one of the major chains, McDonald's, offer to do what the Bill proposes, i.e. describe on the container or warn the consumer what he or she is about to consume.

Madam Speaker, this Bill can be justified for all sorts of reasons, and not the least is the Canadian statistics showing that one Canadian a month dies of an allergic reaction to certain foods. So, it is a mattter of concern for me and I think that it is important for us to give it serious consideration and to refer this Bill immediately to the committee who may see fit to hear experts and representatives from the food chains concerned explain to us why and how we could implement a system which would enable us to meet the requirements of the law and which would inform Canadians by giving them a list of the ingredients of the products they are about to eat, whether out of a box or in restaurants. I for one will give support to that Bill and I hope that my colleagues in this House will do the same.

[English]

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take this opportunity to offer a few comments on Private Member's Bill C-289 which, as you know, is an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act concerning the listing of ingredients contained in restaurant food. It would compel every restaurant to make available to the public a list, in English or in French, of all the ingredients in any food it sells.

This is certainly a very sensitive issue. It has received a great deal of attention from health professionals, food regulators, the media, and the public at large. This attention is very well justified. Tragic deaths have resulted from allergic reactions to restaurant food, particularly in the so-called fast food restaurants.

According to various news reports, some 25,000 Canadians are at risk every day because of their food allegies. Some 24 people in Canada have died over the past two years, one a month, because of allergic reactions to food eaten in restaurants.

I am one of those unfortunate Canadians who suffers from a food allergy. I am sure that my colleagues on all sides of the House will be happy to know that my allergy is not life threatening. However, that is not quite so with one of my daughters who, over time, has developed an allergy to just one element that we have been able to determine, peanut and peanut oil, which can appear without warning as an ingredient. In her case, her sensitivity has developed to a degree where it requires only the most minute amount for her to have a very serious allergic reaction. Of course this is of great concern to me and the rest of our family and to any other Canadian who might have that kind of allergy.

• (1740)

Therefore, I welcome this initiative to try to deal with this matter so that Canadians do not unnecessarily expose themselves to risk.

It is not possible to indemnify a Canadian at all times from such risks if he or she has had the misfortune of developing a reaction. But certainly we as parliamentarians can go as far as reasonably possible to assist them in staying healthy.

It is very heartening to note that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is well aware of the problem of the allergic reaction to restaurant food and has already issued instructions to his Department to determine how much, if any, of an increase in food sensitivity reactions there has been, whether a perceived increase might be due to the availability of better instrumentation and diagnosis, and whether the population as a whole is becoming more sensitive for one reason or another. These are important scientific facts that must be determined in examining a reasonable solution.

In addition, the House of Commons Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare has held hearings on the feasibility of mandatory labelling for food products sold in restaurants and fast food outlets. Our Government is determined to find the best possible solution to the problem. It is likely that a large proportion of food sensitivity reactions are linked to relatively few foods or food components. On the other hand, almost any food has the potential to trigger a serious allergic reaction in an occasionally sensitive individual.

This problem is quite complex, and it is vital to solicit input from all parties concerned. Officials from Health and Welfare Canada and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs have consulted with both the Canadian Food and Restaurant Association and the Allergy Information Association. Consensus has been reached that a chart identifying foods served in an establishment and an indication as to whether or not they contain substances for listing on a so-called priority list was perhaps the most suitable mechanism for providing the information required.

In this context it is appropriate to quote from a letter from Mr. Douglas Needham, Executive Vice-President of the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association. Mr. Needham writes that his association supports the consumer's right to know the ingredients used in restaurant meals, and that his association continues to work with all concerned groups to identify and implement measures that will decrease the likelihood of more tragic deaths.

I want to applaud Mr. Needham and his association on this stand. In fact, according to a recent report by the Canadian Press, the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association is strongly encouraging a voluntary program among its 6,800 members. Industry spokespeople such as Mr. Needham have said that restaurant menus should warn consumers of ingredients that could lead to allergic reactions before they order a meal. The association has suggested a system of warning charts that could be introduced in quick service restaurant chains, because these establishments have a highly centralized control over ingredients.

The consistency of the menus in chain restaurants, combined with the limited choices available, make the charts a manageable idea. According to the same report by the Canadian Press, the association has talked with 24 quick service restaurant chains, and 22 of them have agreed to take part.

This is good news. It shows that the food industry is well aware of the problem and is more than willing to take steps to resolve it. It further shows that the idea of an ingredients list, if it can be fine-tuned and made manageable and practical is indeed a good one.

It is quite possible that the best way to protect Canadians with food allergies as they dine out is through the use of these ingredient lists. If this is the case, then every effort must be made to adopt the very best listing system possible. In this light, it seems quite probable that Bill C-289, effective as it has been in focusing attention on the problem, can be improved.

It is essential that consumers get the information they need to protect themselves in the marketplace, and to make intelligent choices. This applies as much to allergy sufferers who dine in restaurants as to anyone else.

The Government is determined to bring about an effective solution to this issue. If that solution is found to centre upon ingredient disclosure lists, then the House can be assured that the listing requirements will be applied in a manner that is effective, fair and as cost-efficient as possible.

Fast food and quick service restaurants are popular among Canadians, as we all know, and in large measure because quality control is strict. Consumers know what they are getting with a great deal of certainty, and prices are reasonable and affordable. We want to make sure that this continues.

We must adopt a system that affords the best possible protection to the Canadian consumer, and at the same time allows greater freedom and safety for those who suffer from food allergies. This is a very worth-while Bill. I certainly hope it gets to committee and is passed into law.

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Madam Speaker, I regard Bill C-289 as a positive step to solve a very serious problem. I am happy to see that we, in Canada, already have legislation in that area. It gives us hope for a definite solution in the foreseeable future to the problem of allergic Canadians who, when they eat in a restaurant, run a risk of having violent or fatal reactions.

Under the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act and Regulations and the Food and Drugs Act and Regulations, food companies must provide, in both official languages, comprehensive information on the foods they sell and on the ingredients in those foods. This is required for imported as well as Canadian products.

The Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act was passed in 1972 and it has had a tremendous effect. In general, suppliers know their obligations very well and put on their labels in both official languages the clear and precise information required by law. And we can say that, with some rare exceptions, offences are quickly dealt with.

That is fine for food products that Canadians buy in stores and put in their refrigerators. On the label of the canned ham or cereal box that he or she just bought, the consumer will find the product's generic name, the net quantity, the name and address of the company, the list of ingredients, the product's durability, as well as the method of preservation.

That is fine, Madam Speaker, and I am sure that such requirements have strongly contributed towards maintaining and improving the health of Canadians. But up until now the law has not protected people who go to restaurants and nothing imposes on restaurant owners to say what ingredients have gone into their foods. This is the basic purpose of the Bill now before you.

But to ensure that solutions are satisfactory and efficient, we must take into account the diversity and the breaking up of the Canadian restaurant industry. Let us not lose track of the fact that 78 per cent of the sales volume in the restaurant business goes to small private firms, often family businesses with a long tradition or, in some cases, ill-conceived and short-lived ventures. This last aspect complicates things even further for the legislator.

Restaurant services in Canada rely on some 72 000 commercial locations all across the country. Food products are served in a variety of settings and places: traditional restaurants, fast food outlets, banquet halls in hotels, catering services, cafeterias, schools, clubs, hospitals, planes, trains, boats and push-carts.

Restaurants use and interchange a staggering number of ingredients of all kinds and from all countries. Even restaurants with limited menus and fast-food restaurants can use up to a thousand ingredients. In the vast majority of cases, restaurants are at the mercy of their suppliers who can change certain ingredients without telling them. This further complicates the whole matter.

Meals served in restaurants cannot be compared to foodstuff bought at the grocery store. In large grocery stores, the consumer can pick up a package, read the label and put it back on the shelf if he is not satisfied with the product. In a restaurant, the customer does not know what ingredients are used in the dishes he orders.

Foods prepared in restaurants are quite different from those which are packaged for retail sale. Therefore, information on the ingredients used in them must be provided in a different way, although as adequately and efficiently as in the case of store-bought foods.

The information provided by restaurants must conform to certain basic criteria including timeliness: the restaurant must provide information on the ingredients used in making the dishes presently listed on its menu; accuracy: emphasis must be placed on ingredients which are known to provoke allergic reactions; precision: precise information must be provided to avoid any risk to the customer.

A few major restaurant chains have put out allergen tables and others will soon follow. This would seem to be a fair response to the rights of clients generally, and especially those who suffer from food allergies. This is an important step which deserves encouragement, and such initiatives are highly commendable.

However, Madam Speaker, we all know that conditions are altogether different in ordinary restaurants. Where the daily menu includes soup, dessert as well as vegetables and fruit in season, the chef changes menus and ingredients every day. We would be asking too much if that kind of establishment were expected to post a list prepared in advance, and we certainly do not want smaller restaurants to go under in the more or less distant future. That simply is not the objective of the Bill.

Madam Speaker, I also know that everything must be done to help a restaurant owner maintain and preserve the essential element of creativity on which rest the success and good name of his establishment. The same goes for restaurants featuring exotic dishes, and there is no need for me to stress the importance of Asian, Italian, Greek and other such restaurants. In the case of some other restaurants a menu might not be adequate and perhaps they would have to produce a 12- or 18-inch-thick recipe book. These establishments would be faced with an extremely complicated chore if they had to produce printed lists of ingredients.

In any case, allergy-prone clients looking over a list of ingredients might be lulled into a false sense of security. A simple distraction might cause an error and an extra ingredient can be added to a dish and lead to a feeling of sickness. No substitution nor any minor change would be allowed—utopian expectations if we consider the very nature of most restaurants.

Nor should we look only at restaurants in our quest for solutions to food allergy problems, Madam Speaker, for medical science might provide some of the answers even though experts are sometimes rather bewildered by the complexity of allergies in this sector where knowledge evolves so rapidly. There is such a wide variety of allergies that singling them out and identifying them to find antidotes is a gargantuan undertaking. If on top of that you consider that no two individuals will have the same allergic reaction to a given ingredient and that medical treatment cannot be identical, you are faced with an undescribable puzzle.

This is a multi-facetted problem, and we will eventually find adequate solutions only if all interested Parties keep on seeking them. The medical profession is already involved and we know that a number of other organizations, including the Canadian Restaurant and Foodservices Association, have officially indicated their interest in this vital matter. Finally, we know that Health and Welfare Canada as well as Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada officials continue to investigate all possible means of properly informing Canadians and helping people with allergies go to restaurants without fearing for their health.

I am convinced that Bill C-289 is another step towards better solutions to this kind of consumer problem.

[English]

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on Bill C-289, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act. Bill C-289 is concerned with the problems of those Canadians who unknowingly consume restaurant foods that contain ingredients to which they are allergic. This is of concern to me, of course, and it is of concern to my constituents.

The Bill before the House would require all restaurants to make available to the public a list of all ingredients used in the food sold. This Bill seeks to deal with a problem that has become acute in Canada. Many people suffer allergic reactions to food, food products or ingredients. Tragically, some even die from severe allergic reactions to foods they eat. The CBC has reported that approximately 24 Canadians have died from allergic reactions to food eaten in restaurants in the past two years. Thus this Bill identifies a very real problem for Canadian society.

Canadians who are at risk because of food allergies number in the tens of thousands. My wife Arlene is allergic to seafood. One might think that that is something easily identified. Sometimes it becomes very complex and difficult to determine when one is out and eating various salads and that type of thing. Two of my constituents wrote me, and I later spoke with them. They told me that when they took their child to a fast food outlet they thought that they knew all the ingredients. They found out that a substitute ingredient had been used in one of the orders that they had, something which could have had very serious consequences for the health of the child. I think people like that should be able to be reasonably secure when they go out. When they are at home of course they can rely on the labelling of products they buy in supermarkets. But I think people should have that same type of security as well when they dine out.

Many of today's foods undergo complex preparation or are made from recipes containing a multitude of ingredients. Often additives and preservatives are used and these may cause allergic reactions in some people. In fact, public opinion frequently holds that food sensitivities are related to substances used in additives and preservatives. However, this is not necessarily the case. For example, many Canadians are allergic—

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have just consulted with the Table Officers and I understand that if the debate on this Bill continues until 6 p.m. it will then drop again to the bottom of the order of precedence. I wonder if I might appeal to the Hon. Member from the Conservative Party not to talk the Bill out so that the Bill might in fact go to committee. I hope that we in the House could agree to do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member made that point previously during his intervention. The Chair is in no position to intervene in any way on the matter.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, the very complexity of the process of allergic reactions and realities of food preparation point out, I would suggest, several weak points in Bill C-289, or at least some grey areas which the Bill fails to address. I think those should be addressed.

For instance, the Bill would require restaurants to post ingredient lists. However, the Bill raises questions about ingredient lists which it does not answer. For example, would a restaurant be required to list the ingredients in the ingredients of the food? What about the ingredients that went into the butter that is in the cake which is the final product, or the ingredients in margarine, stock and sauce bases? How far down the food chain would the Bill apply?

Most would agree that the list should be very extensive so that consumers are protected when they dine out. What about materials used in the preparation but not consumed in their own right? Would every place that sells deep-fried food be required to list the type of oil they use? I think most people would suggest that that sort of thing should be in the Bill. The breadth and scope of our food service industry presents, I think, some very real challenges, challenges that should be addressed and which Bill C-289 fails to take into account. It is not specific enough—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do apologize. I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

The hour provided for the consideration fo Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order shall be dropped to the bottom of the order of precedents on the Order Paper.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there is an understanding and we have had consultations about the remaining 35 different motions. I think you will find an agreement among Members of the House to apply the vote just taken to the remaining motions, with the exception that the members of the Liberal Party are to be recorded as having voted against Motion Nos. 18, 40, 43 and 75A. As well, the division be recorded as applying to the report stage concurrence motion, that is in reverse to the votes taken prior to that. I hope that is clear.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, we agree with the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). However, members of my Party are to be recorded as having voted against Motions Nos. 33 and 47.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): With the help of very kind people, I think the Chair has this well in hand. Does the House agree that the division just taken be recorded as applying to all the remaining motions with the exceptions outlined by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The next vote is on Motion No. 8. Mrs. Finestone moved:

Motion No. 8

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion agreed to.

Mr. Gauthier: Before you adjourn, Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Deputy House Leader could tell us what we are going to be doing tomorrow?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, tomorrow at eleven o'clock we will commence debate on third reading of the Broadcasting Act. We hope that by the end of the day, since Private Members' hour is cancelled, we would also be able to send to the Senate the variable entrance requirement Bill. We will have our people here ready to debate that at the same time.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the honour and privilege to table a petition which has been certified correct as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions. The petition is signed by a number of residents of northwestern Ontario in Thunder Bay, Marillo, Kaministiquia, South Gillies, Nolalu, and Kakabeka Falls.

These people petition the Parliament of Canada with regard to child care services. They point out that families throughout Canada need high quality, available, affordable child care services. They believe that the child care Bill which is currently before the other place is not in the best interests of young children, women, or families in Canada. The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to withdraw the child care Bill forthwith.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF TEN WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour and the privilege of tabling a number of petitions, including several from the residents of St-Louis-de Kent, Jardineville, Rexton, Acadieville, St-Ignace, Tweedy Brook, Pointe-Sapin, Newcastle, St-Charles, Grande-Digue and Notre-Dame.

I have another petition from residents of Sackville, Dorchester, Upper Sackville, West Sackville and Jolicure.

Mr. Speaker, your petitioners deplore the Government's failure to act on the issue of unemployment insurance in New Brunswick. As you know, the eligible period was extended from 10 to 16 weeks. The situation is gradually getting worse. Your petitioners therefore humbly pray and ask Parliament to correct this situation and reinstate the 10-week eligible period for unemployment insurance.

EASTERN EUROPE—STRUGGLE OF OPPRESSED PEOPLE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the honour and pleasure to present a petition on behalf of 44 petitioners of Edmonton. The petitioners, the undersigned residents of Canada, avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that this honourable House will provide a remedy.

They say that Canada is a nation of many cultures gathered and living in freedom and that in Eastern Europe there are still many nations of people dominated against their wills by oppressive Communist regimes. These nations are continually struggling against their oppressor to regain their rightful democratic freedoms.

Therefore, the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to recognize the struggle of these oppressed people and actively pursue a policy to alleviate their oppression through helpful programs and representations to the oppressive Soviet regime.

This petition is certified correct as to form.

POLAND—SOLIDARITY

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the second petition I have is also addressed to the Government of Canada. The petitioners urge the Government to exert immediate pressure on the Polish Government to begin a dialogue on the authentic representative of the Polish workers, Solidarity, and not to use force in the current wave of strikes in Poland as an effort by the Polish people led by Solidarity to solve the country's problems without violence.

This petition is signed by 184 residents of Edmonton. This petition was not certified correct.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED COERCION TO FALSIFY TRAVEL CLAIMS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Last Tuesday at this time I rose in the House in response to an article in The Ottawa Citizen dated September 20, 1988.

In that article a former employee alleged that during her brief term of employment from October, 1987 to February, 1988, she had been coerced into falsifying travel expenses. I indicated to the House that my staff and I were satisfied that there were no irregularities because we had conducted our own investigation when the matter was first brought to our attention on or about September 8, 1988.

Nevertheless, as a result of the newspaper article I immediately requested a full investigation of the allegations by the Privy Council Office. That investigation has been completed. Today I have been advised in a letter by the Privy Council Office that the travel expenditures during this period complied fully with the relevant regulations and guidelines and no irregularities were discovered.

This week has been most difficult for myself, my staff, and my family. On our behalf I want to thank those friend and foe who offered support and encouragement. I table herewith a copy of the letter received from the Privy Council Office.

BROADCASTING ACT

Hon. Doug Lewis, for the Minister of Communications, moved that Bill C-136, an Act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to rise in the House and speak to Bill C-136, which this Government sees as being vitally important to all Canadians.

Madam Speaker, over the years, and even more so in recent years, radio and televison have become an essential component, indeed the very framework of a society's cultural development. The latest figures indicate that in just one week, a typical Canadian listens to eighteen hours of radio and spends 24 hours watching tv. This shows how much these media have become a part of our lives. They provide a direct window on the world and affect and reflect our choices and our values.

The television landscape has become more complex in recent years, Madam Speaker. Before, it consisted basically of stations that transmitted signals and antennae that received them. Since then, both communications technology and the very nature of our society have changed significantly. Today, 78 per cent of Canadian homes are served by cable TV and can receive as many as 60 or 70 different channels. The possibilities in this area seem endless.

[English]

We know we will be unable to resist these changes, so it is important that we retain our jurisdiction in these areas and that the social and cultural objectives we have set are reaffirmed and protected.

The Caplan-Sauvageau task force spent several months looking for better ways to address these concerns. It travelled throughout Canada meeting with people who work in communications and with other Canadians who have an interest in this subject. The findings and recommendations of the task force were then closely reviewed by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, which also engaged in extensive consultation with individuals and groups involved in radio and television.

The Bill we are considering today reflects many of the concerns raised during this three-year process.

[Translation]

The reason our communication policy is so important, may I remind you, Madam Speaker, is that it lies at the very heart of the concept of sovereignty. We think it is so fundamental that from the outset, we excluded our cultural industries and our communications sector from the Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

This key aspect of our commitment is clearly written into Clause 3 of the Bill, which states:

> The Canadian broadcasting system, operating primarily in the English and French languages . . . provides, through its programming, a public service essential to the maintenance and enhancement of national identity and cultural sovereignty;

The connection that we make, Madam Speaker, between our broadcasting policy and our Canadian identity attests to the particular situation in which we find ourselves and which I mentioned earlier, that of a country that must continually strive to assert its national identity in a specific geographic and demographic context.

[English]

That identity is a dynamic thing. Since 1968, when the present Broadcasting Act was passed, much has happened which impacts on broadcasting. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the changing role of women, a greater recognition of the particular contributions made by the French and English speaking communities, the richness of our multicultural diversity, and the recognition of the special place of aboriginal people in Canadian society are all changing how we approach broadcasting and what is expected of the medium. The pressure for legislation which recognizes this changed reality grows every day.

Canada is a much different country today, and Bill C-136 governing the broadcasting system reflects these changes. The existence of two official languages is more than just a constitutional reality. It pervades the entire broadcasting system. Bill C-136 specifically recognizes the existence of the two official languages and insists that they be reflected throughout the broadcasting system.

The CBC has particular responsibilities, as does the CRTC, in the application of its regulations.

[Translation]

For this requirement that we have embodied into the law is not ideological but pragmatic. It is based on economic imperatives, on market realities, and the differences are glaringly obvious, Madam Speaker.

The first difference is that English television in this country suffers essentially from a lack of Canadian dramatic programming, especially in prime time.

The second is that although Canadian content standards are generally respected on French television, there is a problem of program quality related to budgets and production costs.

These different realities of English and French broadcasting, which are related to the very nature of Canada, had to be recognized, Madam Speaker. And I am particularly pleased that the Government of which I am part took the initiative. For the first time in a cultural Bill, these obvious realities are admitted; this is a tribute to the cultural reconciliation between Quebec and English Canada. I believe that we all have reasons to be proud of this.

Now, how will we deal with these two types of problems that I mentioned earlier? How will we encourage more Canadian content on English television and the development of French television? We have chosen several approaches that I would like to tell you about now, Madam Speaker.

[English]

I should make it clear at the outset that the Government never even considered limiting the access of Canadians to American programs. What we really want to ensure through a culturally active policy is that television interviewers have a Canadian alternative. We want foreign services introduced in Canada only in such a way that it strengthens existing and new Canadian services. This act gives the CRTC, for the first time, explicit powers to ensure that this will happen.

• (1120)

A common observation about English television in Canada is that Canadian content is particularly low in dramatic productions even though drama accounts for 70 per cent of television air time. This is due to the high costs of producing dramas and the attractiveness of American programs which are usually available to Canadian broadcasters at very low prices.

The strongest argument in favour of increasing the number of Canadian dramas on English language television in this country is that viewers prefer dramatic programs. However, popular shows of this type also help define a society by reflecting its choices and values and are probably the best way of getting people to think about who they are.

This legislation offers two methods of increasing the quantity and quality of Canadian programming, particularly dramatic programming in English. The first is by redefining the mandate of the CBC to make it clear that its function henceforth is to be the provision of distinctively Canadian programming in all program categories.

[Translation]

The Bill provides another incentive to increase the Canadian content of programming. English-language private broadcasters will have to meet certain objectives, depending on their size, situation and of course their resources. If they exceed these objectives, they will receive financial assistance from Telefilm. If they fail to meet the objectives, they will have to contribute to a development fund for the production of Telefilm's Canadian programs.

[English]

We realize that some private broadcasters have reservations about this matter. Our response has been and will continue to be that things cannot go on as they are. Broadcasting has always been one of the most prosperous industries in this country, but it has not contributed enough to the development of television that is truly Canadian. Broadcasters must realize that they have a responsibility to Canadians, a social and cultural responsibility that they cannot ignore. Granted, the prosperity I just mentioned is not always evenly distributed among broadcasting companies but we have taken this into account, establishing a system of contributions that is defined in terms of the revenue of each broadcaster.

[Translation]

I found the criticism of this provision of the Bill as voiced by Quebec broadcasters quite unreasonable. As I pointed out earlier, French-language television has always been remarkable for its responsible attitude to Canadian content, and therefore its artisans should not in any way feel threatened by the contribution proposal.

Madam Speaker, I would now like to touch on the double relationship to be established, under the proposed legislation, between Parliament and the institutions involved in broadcasting policy and Canadian telecommunications, namely the CRTC and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the CRTC has always enjoyed enormous autonomy in carrying out its mandate, thus guaranteeing Canadians that their broadcasting system is not subject to unnecessary pressure.

However, a number of former presidents of the organization have deplored the absence of clear direction in the general orientation of our broadcasting policy. The Government wanted to correct this situation while at the same time leaving the CRTC the greatest possible leeway in the decision-making process. The approach was approved in the Sauvageau-Caplan Report and was also supported by the Standing Committee of this House.

Bill C-136 provides that the Government may give the CRTC general instructions regarding the objectives of the broadcasting policy. As for the Government's review authority, we have decided to restrict it to situations where these broad objectives were not met.

After examining the representations that were made, the Government also decided to relinquish its proposed authority to exempt certain categories of broadcasters from the legislation.

Madam Speaker, I firmly believe that we have here every possible guarantee that in future, the CRTC will be able to continue to carry out its mandate, undisturbed and fully autonomous, in the best interests of Canadians.

[English]

The commission itself, as well as certain other witnesses before the legislative committee, raised concerns that the new decision-making process, he who hears decides, and the greater emphasis on regional concerns, will lead to inconsistencies in CRTC decisions. It is the Government's belief that the legislation, including an amendment made at committee requiring panels to consult with the commission as a whole, provides the commission with ample means to avoid inconsistency. Any additional effort in this regard is more than compensated for by greater responsibilities to regional concerns.

[Translation]

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has always been the spearhead of broadcasting policy, in that it has paved the way, so to speak, for other broadcasters in the pursuit of certain objectives. Furthermore, it is the most important cultural instrument and the largest employer of Canadian artists. This perception of the CBC's role is not questioned, Madam Speaker. But for the first time, it is now backed up by a very clear provision concerning its independence. In this regard, I refer you, Madam Speaker, to Clause 45 of the Bill, which states:

> The Corporation shall, in the pursuit of its objects and in the exercise of its powers, enjoy freedom of expression and journalistic, creative and programming independence.

Madam Speaker, I know that the President of the CBC expressed serious reservations about the structural reform proposed in the Bill. In particular, he feels that the decision to create a two-headed board of directors is likely to compromise the CBC's independence. With all due respect to him, I believe that the president's criticisms do not stand up to analysis.

The Government proposed the appointment of a chairman of the board and of a chief executive officer in order to rationalize the corporation's operations. This structural reform is accompanied by mechanisms to provide better control of the Corporation's financial operations.

What you must understand in this proposal, Madam Speaker, is that with nearly a billion dollars of public money invested in the corporation, it is essential for the trustees of these funds, namely the Government and Parliament, to be able to know exactly how this money is spent.

This does not show a desire to reduce the CBC's autonomy—the corporation's independence is very well guaranteed—but the need to ensure that the taxpayers' money is administered in the public interest.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the provisions of the Bill concerning the rapid evolution of broadcasting technology. The frequent technological changes of recent years have led to jurisdictional conflicts and quarrels that have cost a great deal of energy and have been detrimental to the public interest.

We must be glad that the legislation before us remains neutral in defining technology. Broadcasting is no longer defined in terms of the vehicle as such but of the content.

In addition to avoiding unnecessary and costly conflicts, this neutrality will allow distribution systems to develop at their own rate, in terms of the use of broadcasting technology, while the law still remains in effect.

So in summary, Madam Speaker, this is a piece of legislation that, besides being pragmatic, very clearly establishes a set of essential principles that are in keeping with the nature of this country itself.

I see this legislation as a fundamental reform in the approach it proposes to our Canadian situation. Of course, Madam Speaker, the consultation process did not end when the Bill was tabled. Inevitably, with a Bill of this scope and complexity, which affects practically all Canadians, starting with our broadcasters, but also all those who see it as a tool that is indispensable to maintaining and enhancing their culture, we had a right to expect the legislative committee to do a very thorough job. We were not disappointed.

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) was admirable in that she managed to table a bill that would be able to meet the aspirations of Canadians in broadcasting, especially since the Bill has taken into account the constraints and challenges attendant on the expectations of the various social groups within our society, and this in the context of a rapidly expanding technology. That the Minister of Communications was able to achieve this in the past few weeks, through her own amendments and the amendments she approved among those suggested by Members of all Parties in this House, clearly shows how intent she was on giving Canadians broadcasting legislation that would respond to their needs and expectations for many years to come.

Where the dangers of Government intervention loomed too large, the Minister did not hesitate to reduce that risk. Where measures might have been judged too weak to respond to the aspirations of a given group in our society, she made sure the text of the Bill was amended so as to remove any ambiguity about the Government's intentions in this respect.

• (1130)

[English]

In some cases, as with the provisions for educational broadcasting, for example, the complexity and jurisdictional delicacy of the subject matter have dictated that the substance of the measures be contained in the more flexible instrument of an Order in Council, with only brief mention in the legislation proper.

[Translation]

As a result of these amendments to a Bill that had already received wide-spread support, we now have a bill that represents a consensus reached among practically all groups and individuals, including those who spent an enormous amount of time and effort studying this question during the last few years. I am thinking more specifically, Madam Speaker, of Florian Sauvageau and Gerald Caplan.

This Bill increasingly represents a consensus, and if it is not passed and enacted very shortly, many Canadians, and I am thinking of ethnic and language minorities, Native people, the disabled and many other groups, would lose this opportunity to take their rightful place in an area that is very important to them the broadcasting sector.

[English]

Before I conclude, I would like to note the contribution to this legislation of those in the Department of Communications, especially the Director General of Broadcasting and Cultural Industries, Christopher D. Burke, who passed away just a few days after this Bill was introduced in the House by his Minister.

On behalf of the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) and the Government of Canada, I would like to thank his wife, Debbie and son, Andrew who are in the gallery to mark this achievement, for Mr. Burke's outstanding service. In some important ways this Bill is his legacy.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I would like to remind all Members in this House who may intend to oppose the passage of this Bill that they will have to justify their actions before the Canadian public which is in favour of this legislation.

Finally, I believe we cannot afford to deprive Canadians of this modern and generous broadcasting policy we have before us today, and I am convinced, Madam Speaker, that what we know now will indeed be confirmed very shortly.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I consider the closing remarks of the Minister to be more or less a threat and really inappropriate at this particular moment, and I regret that those words have been said.

The occasion of this debate on final reading of this Broadcasting Act of Bill C-136, an Act respecting broadcasting and radiocommunications, is a very important one. This Broadcasting Act translated into legislative language is about Canada. It is about what Canadians will see and hear when they turn on their radios and push the television buttons on their TV sets. It is about how opinions are formed and how our society will respond, politically and socially, to our Canadian way of life over time. It is fundamental to Canadian sovereignty.

On the other hand, I had presented earlier, both in legislative committee and here in the House during report stage, on behalf of our Liberal Party, a substantial range of amendments which we believe necessary to make this Bill the legislative instrument required to meet Canada's TV and radio needs here and into the future. A number of amendments that we proposed have been accepted, and I appreciate the Minister's and the Government's openness in this regard. Nevertheless, the changes which have been accepted do not address some of the fundamental concerns we have raised throughout this debate, namely, that the cultural identity of our nation is to be preserved and strengthened.

I simply want to review the major policy areas where Bill C-136, as proposed, remains clearly inadequate. In choosing to focus on a limited number of key policy issues, however, I would not want anyone to think that Bill C-136 is otherwise acceptable. In fact, the Bill is seriously flawed, continues to be seriously flawed, and continues to reflect, as almost all witnesses who appeared before a legislative committee argued, the extreme haste with which this legislation has been rammed through the legislative process.

Major industry associations were forced to appear in mid-summer before they had had proper opportunity to assess this very complex Bill, and to arrive at conclusions by their boards of directors concerning its implications.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, Members who sat on the committee did not even have the opportunity to review the testimony and develop an enlightened opinion about the necessary amendments. The proceedings had precious little in common with the spirit of recent parliamentary reforms, especially the fact that the public hearings fell far short of the democratic process. The net result is a badly structured Bill which could not be properly amended to eliminate the obvious shortcomings.

[English]

I intend to indicate some of those very serious errors.

As concrete examples of this observation, I would like to indicate to this House and to the listening public that native peoples, aboriginal peoples, disabled peoples, and regional groups were not even heard when the legislative language translating the wishes of these task forces and standing committees were put before us. Multicultural groups got a hurried and last minute invitation to respond to extremely complex legislation.

Let me remind you, Madam Speaker, the concerns that we have about this Bill include many important matters, in addition to those that I wish to concentrate specifically on today. Among them are the following. First, that new concept of the definition of "program" in the Act. It is of serious concern, for it would split undertakings into two parts—a programming part and a non-programming part, creating a constitutional issue with the possible loss of federal jurisdiction over part of the undertaking. As well, their placement on the carriage priorities of our cable system is not clearly defined, and therefore could replace a channel even in the lower first 1 to 13 channel options that are available.

Second, the need to make provisions for broadcast programming in representative native languages is certainly not in this Bill.

When I hear the Minister's advocate talking about how this Bill is so vital and so important, it does not even bring in the major concern that the native constituencies brought to our attention in legislative hearings. They never were invited to present their view or an amendment during the legislative process related to the language of the Bill.

Third, the need to retain a seven-year term of office for the Chairman of the CRTC and the President of the CBC in order to protect the ability of both agencies to operate at arm's length from the Government, just like that of the Bank of Canada, indicates the fundamental role and place of this essential service to Canadians and for Canadians. That has been overlooked and ignored. The potential for political interference is flagrant in this Bill. Much was improved, but this is one area that indicates a serious lack of concern on the part of the Government, or its desire to make some decisions with respect to how the whole system ought to operate beyond that which is totally acceptable.

Fourth, the need to define more clearly the roles of the CBC chairman and president in order to reduce the potential under the new Bill for conflict within the corporation. The question of who is the boss has been raised by many. We have had to live through some serious problems in Telefilm Canada because of lack of clarity and definition as to the roles of the chairman and the president. We are running into the same problem here. The Minister stubbornly did not wish to hear, nor did she appreciate, the very carefully thought through presentation made by the President of the CBC, Mr. Juneau who, knowing that he was leaving, left an excellent legacy for study and for an understanding of the role and the functions of chief executive officers and who has to make the final decision—where the ball stops.

Fifth, the Bill fails to provide priority for the carriage on cable of public sector broadcasting services, including those provided by both federal and provincial public broadcasters. It has not clearly defined cable priorities-carriage priorities to programming services and leaves all kinds of gaps and holes.

The most serious of those has been effectively spoken to by the listening public which is very angry about where the House of Commons channel appears, as an example, and I think with just right. In fact the pressure has been so much that Skyline has decided to move the House of Commons channel from out in space on channel 50 back down to channel 18. Approximately 70 per cent of Canadians have converters, so they can at least get channel 18, but perhaps it should even be down in the first 1 to 13 which is off air.

Apropos that, Madam Speaker, perhaps you take a look at what could be considered to be a definition of a public sector service. We talk about public elements and private elements. In the public element we would have our national broadcaster, the CBC, which the Government would like to define as the "mass audience appeal". Notwithstanding, there is the CBC, the provincial broadcasters, and also a new area where the Government has put in very significant funding. I am referring to TV 5.

[Translation]

The federal Government's $1.79 million contribution—18 per cent of the TV5 network budget and three times the amount put up by Quebec—and all the money invested by France make TV5 a public network which unfortunately does not reach beyond the borders of Quebec. This public network paid for by the public—you, me, all Canadian taxpayers—ought to be on the air from coast to coast in this country.

[English]

I have said from the first of our public hearings from the West Coast, through the prairie provinces, in Saskatchewan, in Alberta, and in Manitoba, that if we believe the fundamental characteristic of Canada is its bilingual nature, the public rule of law for the broadcasting system should include options and choices for both English and French from coast to coast. That stamp should be there. Certainly, if we are putting millions of dollars annually into a program such as TV 5, such as Radio Canada, such as CBC, there should be no options. That has been a standard undertaking on my part, expressed both in committee hearings across this land and in legislative hearings, and it has not been acted upon. It is a major hole in this Bill.

This shows a lack of application of the philosophy of official languages, of multiculturalism, of the whole concept of the fundamental characteristic of Canada, and it belies the reality of those laws.

The sixth point I would like to make is about the urgent requirement to avoid unfair competition and conflicts of interest by incorporating in law provisions limiting the role of cable TV systems to providing programming other than that which is complementary to that offered by licensed Canadian stations and networks. There has certainly been recognition that cable is a hybrid system. I have no objection to that. However, I have objection to unfair competition, and this would be unfair competition. I have been a strong proponent of available options and choices, but I think within reason and within the concepts of an economically viable broadcasting system for Canadians and by Canadians.

The Minister may say that is this is all very partisan, as she alluded to in her speech. Any one of us who objects to her point of view, just like any one who objects to the point of view of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), is not considered to have a valuable or valued point of view. It is not only me and this Party, but let me bring to Your Honour's attention what I would consider to be a rather informed, enlightened, and non-partisan group that had something valuable to add to this whole process. I am talking about the Canadian Bar Association. I think it could be considered non-partisan. May I suggest that the Canadian Bar Association had some very constructive observations to make. It was able to appear before us on August 26.

I bring to the attention of the House and the general public that we only started hearings on August 10. We only advised the public that we would start these hearings in the middle of July. We now have before us some very valued advice. The following is what the Canadian Bar Association had to say: "The Media and Communications Law Section of the Canadian Bar Association brings together lawyers who practise in the communications field of law across Canada." I would say that is an enlightened group. It said: "This submission has been put together by a representative group of these lawyers based on their experiences in the broadcasting and communications law field. Given the importance of the new legislation, we are concerned that very little time has been given to interested groups to review the draft language of Bill C-136. In 1985 and 1986 many of the policy issues addressed in the Bill were given a full and comprehensive review as part of the work of the Caplan-Sauvageau task force on broadcast policy. In 1987 and 1988 many of these policy issues were reviewed again by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture which commented on these issues in its fourth, fifth, sixth, and fifteenth reports."

They were rather extensive reports, and I can remember that the Minister's answers to a few of them were totally unacceptable. In one instance, I think it was two pages. It continued: "However, the actual draft language of Bill C-136 has been available for review by the public for barely two months. It is apparent from just a cursory review that Bill C-136 raises numerous legal questions which require interpretation and clarification. This is hardly surprising since the Bill represents the first thorough going revision of the Broadcasting Act in 20 years." I interrupt my citation to say en passant that it is true that it is 20 years. It did need review, but it needed time in its legislative language.

The Canadian Bar Association goes on to state that given the all-encompassing nature of the changes to the Act, however, and the likelihood that once enacted the new Broadcasting Act will be in place for a considerable period of time, it is essential in its view that Parliament provide a full opportunity for each clause to be carefully reviewed.

In making these comments, the interest of the Canadian Bar Association is not with policy issues as such. As noted above these have already been extensively debated. Rather its concern is with the legal language of the Bill.

In that connection it is particularly interested in ensuring that the Bill meets three tests: first, that the language should be clear, unambiguous, and readily understandable; second, that the Act should be sensitive to questions of fairness and due process in the administrative law context; third, that the Bill should be consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In all these respects its review to date indicates that the wording of Bill C-136 gives rise to a number of concerns. Many of them are of a technical nature, but others have a more substantive character.

I really should read into the record the 29 pages of amendments that follow its comments but I will not. I will, however, bring to Your Honour's attention that 44 amendments were presented in committee and 12 at report stage, for a total of 56. That indicates how flawed the Bill was in the first place.

The association has indicated problems with the definition of broadcasting, the programming undertaking and distribution undertaking definitions and technical matters, definition of the term "public", applicability of regulations to exempted persons, responsibility for programs, overlaps in Section 5(2) and Section 3(1), and clarification of the word "element".

These are all amendments I brought to the House and suggested we look at them in legislative committees. Certainly not all of them were considered favourably by the Government.

The second thing it looked at was CRTC powers and procedures. It has very serious concerns around who decides, the seriousness of the due process, and the increase in CRTC powers. The last area it deals with rather extensively is freedom of expression and charter concerns. Not only did the CBA have serious concerns, every single group that came before us did as well. There were at least 40 recommendations for amendments of substance and an additional 30 linguistic corrections, and that suggests there is much cause for concern.

With respect to the linguistic corrections I was quite fascinated with an observation they made. This should give us pause. They say that this is undoubtedly the first time in the legislative history of Canada that the French version of a statute has been longer than its English equivalent. While the emergence of a new style of legislative drafting is to be applauded, there is a general loss of accuracy and consistency, which leads to some serious problems in the equal application of the law across this land.

There is another point of equal importance that was not seriously addressed satisfactorily, and that is the light weight given to educational and community broadcasting, which have now been moved jointly into a subparagraph. This certainly does not reflect the attention given by either the task force or the standing committee recommendations in this regard.

I heard what the Minister said in her speech about educational broadcasters. I certainly recall what she had to say about memorandums of understanding and so on. I suggest that the effect of the proposed legislation on educational broadcasters and the people we serve cannot be underestimated. This is not just some piece of legislation. The Broadcasting Act covers one of the largest industries in Canada whose products touch the lives of every man, woman, and child in this country. What the Criminal Code is to the administration of justice, the Broadcasting Act is to the lives of these people.

We believe the new legislation sends the wrong signals. I recommended that we restore educational broadcasting to at least its former position in the 1968 Act where it is described as integral to the Canadian broadcasting system. With respect—

. . . to community programming, Canada generally and Quebec especially have played a pioneer role in the world in the area of radio broadcasting. Such stations as CINQ and CBBL in Montreal are models in the area of community programming and have many copied emulators in Canada, especially in Quebec. It is therefore somewhat suprising to discover that a clear definition of community programming is not found in this Bill. It is not a local project. Local programming is not a sufficient definition.

It might be considered as coming under clause 3.(1)(j)(ii) dealing with local broadcasting. But again, would it matter to determine what are the responsible parties? How will community programming be financed and by whom? Who would have access to it, so that such global policies as those mentioned in the Standing Committee report may be developed and implemented?

[English]

This was brought to our attention very forcefully by the ethnocultural communities, as the educational concern was brought to our attention by the spokespeople for the educational sector. I think there was something to learn from that but the Minister obviously did not hear.

I would now like to address a major point contained in the Bill before the House. Historically it has always been recognized that broadcasting is not just another industry. Instead, it is the central vehicle through which Canadians communicate with one another. It is a major instrument for Canadian expression in the arts and entertainment, and an essential means for providing a Canadian perspective in news and information programming.

As a result, there has historically been a concern that the industry should provide programs which are genuinely Canadian in nature, and the decision making in the industry should clearly be in the hands of Canadians.

Of the amendments which the Government has accepted, the most important is the proposal presented by my Party in Motion No. 14 which resulted in a revision of Clause 3, the heart of the Bill, to include the statement that the broadcasting system should "encourage the development of Canadian expression providing a wide range of programming that reflects Canadian attitudes, opinions, ideas, values and artistic creativity, displaying Canadian talent in entertainment programming, and offering information and analysis concerning Canada and other countries from a Canadian point of view". It seems hard to believe that would have been left out of the Bill, but it was.

With the acceptance of this change the Bill now makes it clear that we as Canadians will continue to require, as we have for decades, that broadcasting stations and networks both provide programming that is Canadian in its character and that they be owned and controlled by Canadians. These are important and fundamental principles for a new Bill and, like most Canadians, I am pleased that the Government has included them by accepting this amendment.

However, these are not the only fundamental issues which a new broadcasting Bill must address if it is to prove effective in the future. As the Minister has quite properly pointed out time and time again, broadcasting has been changed enormously by evolving technology since the 1968 Broadcasting Act was passed. It will continue to change. This policy must be technology neutral, and among those technologies are satellites and cable distribution systems.

In addressing the issue of the present and the future, the crucial test will not be just the extent to which the provisions of the 1968 Act are retained. The key test will be the extent to which, in a more complex situation, we as Canadians continue to retain control over the system and provide a reasonable balance between Canadian and foreign programming. One issue which is central to the legislation is its provisions regarding the balance that should exist between Canadian and foreign programming.

There are two quite separate aspects to this issue. First, what proportion of the programming offered by individual stations or networks should be Canadian? I ask you to think about that, Madam Speaker. Second, what proportion of the programming offered by distribution undertakings such as cable systems should be Canadian? We are talking about Canadian culture, Canadian sovereignty, and Canadian identity. What proportion should we be allowed? What space should we leave for ourselves?

The question of how Canadian the programming offered should be was much simpler in the past. I would like to suggest—

. . . that after long public hearings, the Standing Committee adopted an approach established on the two basic elements recommended by the task force. First of all, to avoid any trouble, the legislation should include a provision protecting the broadcasting of foreign stations already available. That is the grand-fathering clause!

Also, it should allow any additional foreign service only in cases where such service brings something significant to the whole Canadian programming. More specifically, it had been suggested that the service should offer programs complementary to those already made available by licensed Canadian broadcasters.

[English]

I think it becomes quite clear that there has been some uncertainty about the technical interpretation of the "predominantly Canadian" provision. It is also seen as an impractical requirement for specialized minority intraservices such as those providing programming in ethnic languages or those which were available on a discretionary or user-pay basis.

In the light of the lack of clarity in the law and the difficulty for some services of providing predominantly Canadian programming, the CRTC has allowed a number of such services to operate with more limited levels of Canadian programming. In response to this situation, the standing committee proposed two changes. The first change would clarify the meaning of "predominantly Canadian" so it would be obvious that it meant that most of the programming provided should indeed be Canadian. The second proposed change would permit the CRTC to exempt from this requirement specialized limited audience services for which such a requirement was not practical. I think we were being very responsible, very realistic, reacting to what is and looking at what we should perhaps change. "If it's not broken, don't fix it", was the motto in many areas.

When Bill C-136 was first introduced this recommendation was rejected. Subsequently, in response to extensive criticism from many quarters, including the CRTC, the Government amended Clause 3(1)(e) to reintroduce the concept of "predominantly Canadian". However it seems incredible that we had to reintroduce concepts and protections for Canadian content and "predominantly Canadian". However, the redrafting has been done so badly that it remains unclear whether the intent is that the programming provided by Canadian broadcasters should, unless subject to the exemption provisions, be predominantly Canadian. I would like to point out that in trying to bring clarity to this whole issue and to assure ourselves that we are not talking about Canadian resources such as trucks, lighting or the crews who go out to do the photography, although they are important, it is not predominantly Canadian content in terms of artistic thought and ability to have us function as the Minister has said in her speech—

. . . at the very heart of our sovereignty.

[English]

Therefore, if it is a service that is essential and—

. . . at the very heart of our sovereignty.

[English]

—I do not think the trucks and the lighting equipment is what brings—

. . . at its very heart.

[English]

I would like to suggest that we studied the thinking of many of the groups that made recommendations for change to us. We decided in our clear non-partisan way that each broadcasting undertaking should provide programming that is predominantly Canadian, using predominantly Canadian creativity—that would be first—and other resources—those would be the other things that are also important—in the creation and presentation of programming unless the nature of the service provided by the undertaking, such as specialized content, format, or use of languages other than French and English renders that impracticable, in which case the undertaking shall make the greatest practical use of those resources.

It just seems to me that if we are looking for a Canadian system, that only makes good sense, practical Canadian common sense, perhaps not bottom line black dollar common sense all the time but certainly good Canadian common sense. That is what we were looking for in this Bill.

Given the importance of this provision, the Bill should not be passed without further amendment. If it is not amended to require that programming be predominantly Canadian, there will be no legislative basis for the CRTC to maintain such requirements. This is a very straightforward drafting issue and if the Government does indeed agree that such a requirement is justified, it should have amended the Bill to make this clear.

There is little point, however, in maintaining a requirement that most programming provided by individual Canadian stations and networks should be Canadian, if at the same time the programming offered by the cable systems is not to be overwhelmingly and increasingly Canadian but continues to become overwhelmingly and increasingly foreign in content.

In part, at least, because the 1968 Act was silent on the role of cable, the content offered by cable systems has become more and more foreign over the past 20 years. There was lack of clarity in the law. We are asking that clarity be there and that direction be there. Quite properly, the expanded choices now offered by cable television have been viewed as positive. I see this mixed system as a positive system—but it has its limits—to the extent that it actually made available to Canadians a wider range of programming than they had previously been able to receive from off air sources.

Many of us can remember the rabbit ears that sat on our television sets and how we wiggled and turned them as we tried to catch off air American programming. Cable came in and helped us to get a clear picture on our screens and also extended the reception as the cable system extended north. Otherwise, those Canadians in our northern regions would not have been able to receive the same fair access as we living along the border had.

I think it was a good initiative, a positive initiative, but there is a place where it should stop. It has actually made available to Canadians a wider range of programming than they had previously been able to receive with the rabbit ears. Genuine increases in programming variety are clearly a good thing. At the same time, however, to the extent that cable systems were simply bringing in programming already available from Canadian sources and undermining Canadian broadcasters, the way cable has functioned, was and is of concern. There has virtually been unanimous agreement by our committees and by everyone we heard that a new Act must at long last provide the CRTC with a proper legislative base for regulating cable television.

Indeed, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) emphasized again and again that a major inadequacy in the 1968 Act was its failure to deal adequately with cable. Yet the Government has failed, against the unanimous advice of both the 1986 Caplan-Sauvageau task force on broadcasting policy and the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, to provide an effective legislative basis for the operation of cable systems in the future. That deficiency in the legislation has the potential to undermine all the other provisions in this important legislation completely. It is in fact the Achilles heel of the Conservatives' proposed new broadcasting law.

When we made a suggested amendment with respect to cable priority carriage, we said that it is essential that distribution undertakings should accord priority to the carriage of Canadian programming services in French and English, both public and private, with priority given to the Canadian public element programming services, and that they may carry foreign originated programming services only where the programming they provide is substantially different from that already offered by a licensed Canadian broadcasting undertaking, or where those foreign programming services were already carried by distribution undertakings. We also suggested that it should be regulated in a manner that reflects a reasonable recognition of the exclusive rights acquired by Canadian broadcasting undertakings.

Nothing could have been more fundamental or more germane to the issue of a renewed Canadian Broadcasting Act. If these fundamentals are not to be included in this Bill, then there really was not much purpose in going through what could have been a very exciting exercise in an advance for the broadcasting industry and a new look for Canada that would have been in many ways technology neutral.

This issue is so fundamental that I want to review its background. After 18 months of extensive research and consultations with the public and the broadcasting industry, the Government's $3 million task force on broadcasting policy reached the following conclusions:

> The task force believes that the role of the Canadian radio and television services, both public and private . . . To the extent that foreign broadcasting signals are carried, they should complement programming from Canadian sources. We recognize that an exception must be made for foreign television signals that are already an established part of the system . . . The presence of a particular foreign signal in the system should never be allowed to preclude the development of new Canadian services. Priority must always be given to the development of our own broadcasting services.
> We believe it is evidence that Canada's own broadcasting industry, both the public and private sectors, can do most of the job of providing programming that is varied and comprehensive, including both foreign and Canadian programs. If the rights to show American programs in Canada were retained and exploited by American broadcasters, rather than being sold to Canadian broadcasters, it would be destructive of Canada's broadcasting system, particularly of private broadcasting. More important, it would create an even greater imbalance between foreign and Canadian programs and reduce Canada's ability to produce programs. The carriage rules that apply to cable television will have a powerful influence on the degree to which Canadian broadcasting services develop and the revenues that they earn.

In the public hearings which the Standing Committee held, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the CBC, and the Canadian producers expressed strong support for the approach the task force had proposed.

After exhaustive public hearings, the approach the standing committee adopted had the same two basic elements that were recommended by the task force. First, to avoid disruption, the Bill should make provisions for those foreign channels now carried to continue to be offered. Second, the test in the future of whether to permit the importation of any additional foreign service should be that it actually adds something significant to the mix of programming available to Canadians.

Specifically, the test proposed was that the service should offer programming complementary to that already available from licensed Canadian broadcasters. Otherwise, the system will become more and more fragmented. The potential for earning decent incomes for Canadian broadcasters, whether public or private, actors or actresses, songwriters or scriptwriters, will be constrained by the way this Bill has been written and by the fact that its concept of Canadian content, whether in the production end or the carriage end, has not been applied in a way that is in Canada's interests.

In response to those particular recommendations, the CRTC has stated that it agrees generally with the recommendation, while the Canadian Television Association said that it agreed in principle. To the extent that they expressed concerns, these were related only to the carriage of stations already available off air. In the case of the CRTC, concern was also expressed about including in the new Act any provisions at all related to carriage of foreign television signals in the Canadian broadcasting system.

More recently, in a letter to the editor published in The Globe and Mail on September 19, 1988, Mr. Michael Hindsmith, President of the Canadian Cable Television Association, noted that the new Act would allow the CRTC to refuse to permit cable systems to carry directly competing American signals. Commenting on the wisdom of granting the CRTC these powers, he made the following statement, I presume on behalf of his association:

> These powers effectively deprive Canadian cable TV subscribers of direct access to such U.S. services as Home Box Office, Showtime, ESPN, the Disney Channel or MTV. Instead access is achieved by licensed Canadian specialty services which purchase for a fee Canadian rights to incorporate U.S. programs in Canadian-originated services. The resulting blend provides access and ultimately a better product tailored to meet Canadian needs. The Canadian cable television industry, as an integral part of the broadcasting system, supports that approach.

While this makes it clear that the cable industry itself, like the broadcasters, is supportive of prohibiting carriage of directly competing U.S. broadcasting services, the essential issue for Parliament is whether this fundamental policy issue ought to be left to the CRTC or dealt with in the Bill. In our judgment, this issue is at least as important as any other that has been addressed in this draft Act and, as legislators, it is an issue we must now address. Surely the carriage regulations for cable are at least as important as requirements for Canadian content quotas for undertakings in maintaining any reasonable balance between Canadian and foreign programs in our system.

I want to emphasize, however, that unlike the CCTA, the Government is not assuming that the CRTC will implement this reasonable and necessary policy of protecting our own broadcasting system. Instead, astonishing as it may seem, and it has been repeated again this morning, the Government of Canada has categorically rejected these policy recommendations, although they were widely perceived to be both moderate and essential to the maintenance of a strong and separate Canadian broadcasting system.

Instead, the position the Government has taken is that any restrictions whatsoever on the entry into Canada of American stations and networks is in principle unacceptable. Does anybody smell free trade around here?

This position, which is inconsistent with over 50 years of broadcasting policy, is clearly stated in the Government's June 1988 response to the fifth, sixth, and fifteenth reports of the standing committee. The Minister said that again this morning.

In responding to this recommendation the Government has stated that the prohibition of foreign radio and television services other than those whose programming is complementary to that available from Canadian sources has not been included in the legislation since it would unduly restrict the access of Canadians to a new range of international broadcasting services.

Elsewhere the response states that the Government's policy is not to restrict access to foreign services. That is on page 28 of the response. The Government has explicitly rejected proposed amendments which would have implemented the unanimous recommendation of a standing committee, the task force, and lots of other interested and concerned Canadian citizens.

What will this position mean in the future? It will lay the basis in Canadian law for allowing all American broadcasters who desire it to extend their reach into Canada. The result will be to make it far more difficult for Canadian broadcasters to acquire the right to show the best U.S. programs in Canada. Even when they are able to do so, it will reduce their ability to earn revenue as a result. Revenues from showing foreign programs are now crucial to the successful operation of Canada's private broadcasters. The resulting loss of revenue will in turn undermine the ability of Canadian broadcasters to finance Canadian programming.

Yet in Clause 2 of this Bill, unclearly defined and poorly worded, is a carrot and stick approach to insist that Canadian broadcasters put in more programming. The vision is right, but the process is wrong. Adding this aspect of complete access by Americans into our system is an unbelievable and unacceptable situation.

This Americanization or continental approach to one of the greatest information medium of our time is the crucial issue. When appearing before the legislative committee Dr. Bernard

Ostry, President and Chief Executive Office of TV Ontario, said:

> We in Canada are far from being culturally sovereign in the cultural context, because of our exposure to non-Canadian products, particularly American programs and technology. Some 80 per cent of our publishing industry is in foreign hands; 97 per cent of films shown in Canada are foreign; 85 per cent of records and tapes are based on imported master tapes. In broadcasting, 71 per cent of all programs are viewed by English-speaking Canadians on television are American.

The Minister went even further in outlining very carefully in her book, Vital Links, the serious aspects of non-Canadian control of cultural sovereignty. There are serious implications from such a scenario. Our creative screenwriters, songwriters, singers, dancers, and authors cannot tell our story as freely as they should be able to. Many of these people have proven their world-class quality and have won all kinds of awards. If they do not have the space or the medium to deliver the message, we are in trouble. We must keep our broadcasting window, while mixed with foreign material, open enough for ourselves or we will be like Pogo who, in that famous comic strip, looked across the hills and said: "I see the enemy, Sir, and it is us".

This is not what Canadians want. Our broadcasting policy is to be kept as Canadian as possible. The implications of creating a single Canada-U.S. market are obvious already in the theatrical film industry. In that sector there has been a continental market for decades. The result is that most of the revenues earned in the Canadian market flow south to finance more American films, while Canada's own film companies lack the resources to contribute substantially to financing Canadian films and the ability to distribute and market them effectively. The same thing will happen in the future if the Government carries out its plans to give U.S. broadcasters unrestricted access to this Canadian market.

Why this radical and far-reaching departure from a tradition of building a separate Canadian broadcasting system, a tradition begun in the 1930s by a Conservative Government? Why the refusal to provide a sure legislative basis for maintaining and strengthening Canada's own off air broadcasting services and developing a strong and separate system of Canadian pay and specialty services? The only answer that can explain this—

Mr. Waddell: Free trade.

Mrs. Finestone: I thank my colleague. He is right, free trade. My Party believes that the only answer that can explain this decision by the Government is that it knows that any new provisions which restrict the entry of American broadcasters into Canada would contravene the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and would certainly bring the full weight of American anger against the negative economic impact. Clause 2005(2) would reach its zenith in application. It could be a wonderful tool for the Americans.

We have, of course, already seen evidence in the areas of cultural policy of the way the Government is acting since the signing of the trade agreement. We saw the gutting of the original film importation Bill of the Minister of Communications. We have Simon Reisman's public assurances that the revised and eviscerated Bill has at least been made consistent with the free trade agreement. That, of course, is why the draft legislation would do nothing effective to protect Canadian interests.

We know that the Government suppressed the Donner Report, an independent consultant's study of the sound recording industry which, in its leaked form, warned of serious consequences for Canada's songwriters and performers and the Canadian record industry under the trade agreement. The consequences of a weakened Canadian record industry for Canadian content quotas on radio are obvious, to say nothing of our own performers.

We have seen the Government reject as well the central proposals of its own 1985 task force on film policy related to the use of the Investment Canada Act to strengthen Canadian ownership and control over film distribution. Indeed, in the book industry where the Government had already established a strong policy in 1985 to strengthen Canadian participation in this vitally important industry, we saw in the 1988 New American Library decision the abandoning of the essential Baie Comeau policy.

At present the Government seems to be avoiding making decisions on a number of Investment Canada cases which will again test the 1985 Baie Comeau policy. Will those decisions now wait until after the election in order to avoid the embarrassment of further withdrawal from protecting Canada's cultural sovereignty and identity?

There is the fact that we have about 10 per cent of the theatrical film market, which is a problem. There are a number of areas in which the fact that Canadian culture was protected under the free trade agreement could be challenged.

There is further evidence for this interpretation of the Government's actions since other new legislative initiatives which might have contravened the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement have also been rejected. For example, the Government refused to include in the draft Bill any requirement that foreign pay-television or specialty services carrying on business through affiliates in Canada should do so through a Canadian entity licensed by the CRTC. I remind Members of the House that this unanimous, all-Party recommendation of the standing committee was endorsed by the Canadian Cable Television Association.

Failure to act on this recommendation will result in two classes of broadcasting networks carrying on business here in Canada—those which require a licence and must contribute to achieving Canadian programming objectives, and those which can extract money from the Canadian market without a licence and with no obligation to contribute to Canadian programming. The result will be a growing sense of unfairness and a resulting undermining of the legitimacy of the regulations applied to the Canadian services. The result will also be a reduced ability to meet Canadian programming objectives.

The Government said that it cannot do this, but that is not the case.

In a response to recommendation 17 of the standing committee's sixth report, it said it cannot do this because "most of the foreign services do not have a business presence in Canada and operate under American law". That is based on a misconception of fact and an error in law. I have consulted broadly on this particularly matter. The legal counsel with whom I drafted the amendment made it very clear that he and his colleagues would support the view that this is a misconception of fact and an error in law.

The misconception is that the recommendation would apply to off-air U.S. border stations. These stations do not contract to deliver their services to members of the public in Canada. The principal focus of the recommendation is on U.S. specialty networks like Arts and Entertainment and CNN, which enter into contracts with Canadian cable systems in Canada to deliver their service to Canadian homes. This activity is clearly capable of falling under Canadian law if legislators wish this to be the case. Obviously that is not the wish of the Government.

The term "undertaking" does not require actual physical assets to be present in Canada and in a number of cases have held that the presence of a signal in Canada can give rise to tortious, or copyright liability here. I have recommended that the Minister or her staff check landmark cases such as Jenner v Sun Oil, 1952, or CAPAC v International Good Music, 1963. Obviously there was no interest in following through on those recommendations.

In commenting on Bill C-136, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters summarized the problem well by stating that "the proposed Act fails to clearly establish the structure of the Canadian Broadcasting system and principles that will keep it Canadian". That is what it said during the legislative committee on Bill C-136.

CAB went on to note: "A post-free trade environment will undoubtedly generate increased pressure for access to the Canadian market for a wide variety of U.S. broadcast and programming services". It went on to express concern that "the Bill provides no certain defence against that kind of pressure".

The combination of increasing pressure from U.S. broadcasters for access to Canada and an absolute refusal by the Government to include in Bill C-136 any legislative basis whatsoever for limiting their access to Canada is a sure recipe for the rapid erosion of Canada's own broadcasting system.

Our concerns with this Bill are rendered more acute because the Government has even refused to provide a basis in law for the CRTC to protect those exclusive rights which Canadian broadcasters acquire to exhibit programs in Canada. I do not know any business person who would find these principles acceptable. Here too there was an all-Party recommendation from the standing committee and a subsequent amendment which I proposed earlier in the House. Yet the Government refuses to provide a legislative basis for the CRTC to take reasonable measures to protect the exclusive program rights acquired by Canadian broadcasters.

These points can be quickly summarized. First, the Bill does not clearly require that licensed Canadian broadcasters should, with appropriate but limited exceptions, provide programming that is predominantly Canadian. Second, this legislation fails to provide an adequate basis for regulating the carriage of foreign channels on cable television systems.

Third, the Bill fails to capture all satellite to cable networks carrying on business in Canada although technological change has made such networks an increasingly important part of the broadcasting system. It has failed to define clearly the carriage rules for public and private elements. Finally, the Bill provides no basis for the CRTC to protect the exclusive rights purchased by Canadian broadcasters.

The result is that the legislation as drafted creates the potential for further substantial Americanization of our broadcasting system. Since the Government has stated explicitly that it is opposed in principle to any limits at all on the entry of foreign broadcasting signals into Canada, it seems fair to assume that such signals will increasingly be allowed in even if they compete directly with and undermine our own broadcasters.

What the Government proposes to do in 1988 is reverse the decisions made in 1932 in the original Broadcasting Act. At that time the Government of R. B. Bennett moved decisively to limit the flood of American broadcasting and American programs which had come across the border, to provide a basis for developing a strong Canadian broadcasting system able to meet the needs of Canadians for both foreign and Canadian programs, and to do so in both French and English.

Now, 56 years later, the Government seems intent on giving U.S. networks and stations the unrestricted access to the Canadian market they were originally denied. If the Government carries through on its stated intention to create a wide open market, the result will be to undermine Canada's own broadcasting system and sharply reduce our ability to meet our own programming requirements. There is no evidence whatsoever that this is what Canadians want to see happen. Indeed, all recent research on the attitudes of Canadians tell us that precisely the opposite is true. Canadians want, appreciate, and recognize Canada's programs and they want them on their screens. They do not want them pushed out by unnecessary choices. A mixed system is acceptable, but this is outrageous.

In light of these fundamental deficiencies in Bill C-136, clearly it would be irresponsible of our Party to vote in favour of this legislation. Although we recognize the legislation contains a number of necessary and important provisions to bring the law up to date, the essential requirement for a new law, however, must be that it provides a solid basis for building a stronger and more Canadian broadcasting system.

The essential requirement for a new law must be that it provide a solid basis for building a stronger, more Canadian broadcasting system in the future. This law does not meet that test.

In deciding that we must oppose this Bill we recognize that this marks the first time since 1932 that it has not been possible to reach all-Party agreement on broadcasting legislation. We regret that. In fact, I find this a very difficult moment. As a member of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, I am particularly sorry that this has occurred. The members of that committee, including every government member, set aside partisan feelings and, as a result, were able to reach unanimous agreement on almost every issue, including all the major issues I referred to earlier.

This decision has not been taken easily. All efforts were made to amend the Bill constructively and to ensure a Canadian system by and for Canadians. Making the acceptance of a new broadcasting Bill unanimous was the goal. I believe that the Minister tried very hard. I acknowledge this with a full heart. However, not so with her Government and certainly not so at the cabinet table.

Regrettably, government philosophy is being guided by principles that we believe are not in the best interest of Canada. The reality is that in choosing to depart from over 50 years of non-partisan support for a strong broadcasting system of our own, the Government has rejected the unanimous advice of government members on its own committee. It has ignored the Caplan-Sauvageau report. The result is legislation that betrays one of Canada's most basic needs and interests.

I believe that when Canadians understand the fundamental flaws that exist in Bill C-136 under a veneer of pro-Canadian rhetoric, under a veneer of trying to defend itself by calling others guilty, they will reject it as an unacceptable and unsound basis for the future of Canadian broadcasting.

Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

> That all the words after the word "That" be deleted and that the following be substituted therefor:
> Bill C-136 be not now read a third time but be referred back to the legislative committee for the purpose of reconsidering Clause 3.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party and debate this very important Bill, Bill C-136, the Canadian broadcasting Bill at third reading, the final stages of the Bill. There has been an amendment introduced. I will speak to the amendment later.

In the limited time that I have I would like to address some of the remarks of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) who spoke for the Government today. I got a note from the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) who is in a meeting of the Priorities and Planning Committee, a committee of Cabinet. She could not be here. I appreciate getting a note from her. No doubt she will read my remarks.

After dealing with the Minister's speech in debate style, I want then to address my own criticisms of the Bill. Finally, I want to wind up stating what are the alternatives. I want to speak specifically about the electoral process that seems to be upon us and what this could mean.

First, the one thing I do agree with the Minister on is when he said that Canadians listen to 18 hours of radio and 24 hours of television. I assume that is per week and not per day. That shows us how important broadcasting is. In a way I regret that the press, with some limited exceptions, and some honourable exceptions, and the public have not paid more attention to this particular Bill, the first revision to the Broadcasting Act in 20 years.

The Minister quoted the Caplan-Sauvageau report. en français, c'est le rapport sauvageau-caplan. He also made reference to the sixth report of the standing committee of the house of commons. what he did not tell us was that in the essential, in the really important parts of those reports, the government did not follow the recommendations of those all-party reports. I regret that the hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) has not had the courage to get up and speak in this debate to outline what that committee recommended. he was chairman of that committee. I will say something further about that in my speech because it becomes key when we talk about the North Americanization of the Canadian broadcasting system which we are seeing now and which this Bill does not affect—in fact, it does not take any steps to stop; rather, it encourages.

The Minister mentioned the free trade agreement. He said that culture is exempted from the free trade agreement. I want to tell you, Madam Speaker, that that is not true. It is not so. It is not exempted from the agreement. Let me explain very briefly in layman's language why. The free trade agreement states—and I would like the Minister to listen to this if he might—that culture is excluded from the agreement. But then one has to read it carefully. There is another clause that states that actions of equivalent commercial effect can be taken.

I will give an example. Say that a Canadian Minister of Culture wants to take action to protect the Canadian airwaves, perhaps to restrict American signals that come into Canada. What would happen would be Americans could take action of equivalent commercial effect. They could restrict B.C. fish or B.C. lumber, and then the poor Minister would have all the workers, businessmen, employers, and so on from British Columbia who would come to say: "You cannot do this to us. Retreat on your broadcasting policy". In fact that is what would happen.

That is the insidious way that the Free Trade Agreement affects this deal and affects cultural policy. In fact, it restricts the Government from taking nationalistic measures. That is why this Bill is flawed in the fundamental ways that my colleague, the critic from the Official Opposition, said it was flawed, that is to say, its failure to establish a Canadian market and the encouragement of a North American market. The Government now has to do everything in the context of North Americanization, having sold Canada out in the free trade agreement. It affects cultural policies. It affects every policy.

The Minister said that they never considered limiting access of Canadians to American programming. Instead, he said that we wanted to encourage the Canadian alternative. But I say to him: How is this encouraging Canadian alternatives? In fact, the Government will be allowing American superchannels to come into Canada to knock out Canadian channels which cannot compete with them. Second, the Government is not funding adequately the Canadian public sector, the CBC, which has had to cut back on programming. It is flawed there.

The question is: Why has the Government not considered limiting Canadians access to these American channels? The answer is because of the free trade deal.

The Minister mentioned that there was a scheme to force private broadcasters to produce Canadian programs; but it is an unworkable scheme, as all the evidence in front of the legislative committee has shown. The Government should have considered other measures, tougher measures. If Canadian private broadcasters do not produce the quality Canadian programming after some encouragement and some help, and they still do not do it, then there is a licensing procedure. Some licences could actually be taken away and other broadcasters could be got who would do it. But the Government is afraid to do that.

The Minister spoke about CBC's independence. I ask from whom? He would say independence from the Government, and we have ensured that in this Bill. I say to him, and later in my speech I will give him the facts on this, the CBC has become a slave to ads now. It is in fact being privatized because its money is being cut back. It is having to put more money into commercials. In fact, it is a very subtle way of privatizing the CBC. The CBC will soon be just like any other private network, certainly on television. It is practically that now.

The Minister says that the Bill meets the hopes and aspirations of Canadians, and in fact amendments were granted. It is true that amendments were granted. I am pleased that a number of amendments were accepted. We worked hard together in committee with the Minister on this matter, but we did not get the big amendments to this Bill.

The Minister said that we have constraints. We know what the constraints are. The constraints are the free trade deal with the United States. We have a nationalistic Minister who cannot get those big ticket items through Cabinet. In my speech I will speak about those items in some detail. He says that the Canadian public is in favour of this Bill. Where? Show me where the Canadian public is in favour of it. I think that the Canadian public would be in favour of a nationalistic Bill that would protect Canadian culture. Why not try the Canadian public on that? The Government has not done this.

Let me deal in more detail with what the Bill does and where the flaws are in the Bill. I said in my second reading speech on this Bill that the problem with Canadian broadcasting was that the public sector was under funded and that the private sector was not doing its job in producing Canadian programs. I do not think that this Bill is going to change that, fundamentally.

This Bill, when it came in, was worse than the 1968 Act. It has been amended. I would say that it is marginally better now, but that is not saying very much because the 1968 law is 20 years old. We had this great opportunity to put a really great Act in here, and I do not think that we have done that.

In the past 18 months, we have seen a government policy. Just look at what has happened in cultural policy. First, we have seen the reduction of the capital cost allowance for Canadian films and television programs, and that had encouraged production of Canadian films and television programs. That action is going to discourage it. We are going to have less production of Canadian films and television programs as a result of that government action.

We saw the revision of the film products importation Act, which now substitutes grants instead of structural changes. The Government had to retreat in the face of pressure from the Reagan administration. Jack Valenti got what he wanted on this. That retreat was a shame, a blot on the Canadian Government. We saw the Minister's old film Bill, and then we got the new Bill which was clearly a retreat, and we can document that.

Third, we got the rejection of the Investment Canada guidelines for film distribution proposed by the 1985 film industry task force, recommendations that would ensure the orderly transfer of ownership and film distribution to Canadians. They were ignored. We then got the failure to apply the 1985 Baie Comeau book publishing policy, which promised to see the transfer of ownership in book publishing to Canadians; in other words, to protect Canadians in takeovers and apply a tough rule so that we could have Canadian ownership of publishers.

Finally, we see in this Bill the rejection of key recommendations of the broadcasting committee. These proposed measures would have significantly enhanced the production of Canadian programs for a Canadian market and have a significant beneficial effect on the recording sector.

The Cultural Industries Alliance; the Alliance of Canadian Cinema, Television, and Radio Artists; Association des Producteurs de Films et Video du Québec; Association of Canadian Film and Television Producers; Association of Canadian Film Craftspeople; Association of Canadian Publishers; Canadian Actors' Equity Association; Canadian

Association of Motion Picture and Electronic Recording Artists; Canadian Conference of the Arts; Canadian Film and Television Association; Canadian Independent Record Production Association; Canadian Periodical Publishers Association; Directors Guild of Canada; National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians; Periodical Writers Association of Canada; and The Writers Union of Canada, all raised these issues. They said this:

> It seems clear that the Free Trade Agreement will alter not only the course of our economy, but by inhibiting our freedom to strengthen vulnerable yet essential cultural industries, it will also alter the course of how we define ourselves as Canadians. The Agreement recognizes a North American reality, but it leaves little room for a Canadian vision.

You have to see this Broadcast Act in that context, in the retreat of Canadian cultural policy initiatives, because of the free trade deal.

I had a number of motions to amend the Bill which I described as key amendments. I draw Your Honour's attention to Motions Nos. 36 and 39. In Motion No. 36 I suggested that we should put in the words "deliver only duly licensed services". In other words, we would have to license all programs coming into Canada. In Section 39, I said:

> "(ii) should ensure that foreign services, with the exception of conventional off-air broadcasters, are complementary to Canadian services."

I took recommendation 58 of the broadcasting committee of the House of Commons, an all-Party committee, and I really adapted that. Let me just quote that recommendation. In referring to the Broadcasting Act, it says:

> The act should be drafted so as to define the essential role of distribution undertakings as that of distributing Canadian radio and television services in French and in English, both public and private, with first priority given to public-sector Canadian services, followed by private Canadian services. With the exception of the "three-plus-one" services already carried, the act should make provision for the carriage of foreign radio and television services only when the programming they provide is complementary to that available from licensed Canadian broadcasters and network operators.
> The act should also provide for priority to be given to the carriage of services in French in distribution undertakings that serve primarily francophone subscribers.

What does that mean? It means that we have American superchannels that will now start coming into our country. They are Canadian channels. If a Canadian channel starts up, something like Arts and Entertainment, it will not be able to compete with the Americans. It will be knocked off the air. Our news channel, like CNN News, will be involved. We will get American news, American entertainment. There is nothing wrong with American news and American entertainment, providing we do not have the Canadian equivalent. What we and the committee are saying is that they can only come in if there is no Canadian equivalent. If there is a Canadian equivalent, keep them out. In other words, they have to be complementary to the Canadians. That is the key.

We would not interfere with NBC, ABC, CBS or the Public Broadcasting System of the United States. They are well established in the Canadian market. We also would not interfere with the border stations. These new channels, if they come in, will swamp the private Canadian channels, that cannot compete with them. That is the key to this Bill and that is what the all-Party committee was recommending, but the Government did not act on it.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) dealt with the reasons the Minister gave—I do not have to repeat them—why they could not license them and so on. She had legal argument and authorities to back that up. The Government backed off from this because of the free trade deal. It is a fundamental flaw in this Bill and one of the reasons we cannot support it.

I will just quote what the sixth report said:

> We note that even in the large U.S. market, where service is provided entirely in English, there is only one available service in most programming categories. In Canada it is beyond question that a Canadian service could not co-exist with a non-Canadian service, especially if the Canadian service is expected to provide a meaningful contribution to Canadian programming.

The Canadian Broadcasting League said:

> If this country had adopted such an approach 60 years ago this country would never have developed a separate Canadian broadcasting system except in the public sector.

That is the first fundamental flaw in the Bill. I believe we are approaching one o'clock, but perhaps I could get started now and deal with the second flaw in the bill, the use of cable systems. They are the big winners here. They seem to have a lot of influence in the Conservative Party these days. What a gift they got in this Bill! They got the right to import almost anything into Canada, that is, there are no express limitations on what they could take. This is part of continentalization.

Second, they got the right to originate programming, not just local community programming to which no one objects, but to originate all kinds of broadcasting programs. They are not treated as a distribution undertaking now but as a broadcasting undertaking. I predict that the result will be that we will not be able to regulate any more, or even in the future, their tariffs and their fees properly.

Canadians in the last few weeks have seen cable fees go up on September 1. This Bill gives a great gift to the cable companies in that it allows them to broadcast, and it will make it more difficult in the end for us to regulate their prices.

This afternoon I want to come back to the CBC and to the role of the public sector, and then to wrap up my speech.

OLYMPIC GAMES—BEN JOHNSON, DISQUALIFIED 100 METRE WINNER

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, after an inspiring beginning, the Ben Johnson story appears to have had a brutal and disappointing end.

While drugs should not and cannot have any place in athletic competition, and while there can be no alternative but to bring the full weight of our own sporting regulations against Ben if he knowingly consumed the illegal substance, I was dismayed at the performance of our Canadian officials during last night's press conference in Seoul, Korea. They seemed to trip over each other in their rush to accept the guilty verdict, without attempting to defend the possible innocence of our own champion and Canadian citizen.

Given the tampering allegations, and the repeated denials of Ben and his coach, it would not have been too much to ask our officials not to render a guilty verdict until a thorough investigation was conducted into all the allegations and circumstances, and the roles of all the other people who were involved.

To accept the IOC ruling is one thing; not to defend the possible innocence and honour of one of our own, is quite another. If it had been Carl Lewis, one can rest assured that the Americans would have raised proper hell. I am puzzled and disappointed at why our Canadian officials were so anxious to drop Ben Johnson in front of the entire world.

ELECTIONS

POSTING OF ELECTORS' LISTS—RISK POSED TO VULNERABLE PERSONS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, as most Canadians are aware, we are very close to another general election. Yet there is a bit of a flaw in the process inasmuch as when the enumeration lists are posted, the names of all those people eligible to vote are available to the general public. Because of this exposure, senior citizens who live alone, and single women who live alone, become very vulnerable to those who would take advantage.

As we look to another election down the road it is very important that everything that can be done should be done to protect those people from becoming victims of people who would want to take advantage of them.

SHIPBUILDING

CLOSURE OF VANCOUVER SHIPYARD

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, recently the last remaining shipyard in the city of Vancouver closed down, and 150 more workers lost their jobs. For over 50 years shipbuilding had been a major west coast industry. The Conservative Government, through lack of any comprehensive shipbuilding policy, and inadequate subsidies, is directly responsible for the demise of this important industry.

The delay in building the promised world-class Polar 8 icebreaker has also contributed to this tragedy. In 1985 the Government approved this major project to be built jointly in Vancouver and in Victoria, but apparently promises are to remain on paper. Vancouver, which initiated the Polar 8 coalition, has been dealt out of the deal.

Thanks to Tory neglect, highly skilled tradespeople who should be building vessels for the longest coastline in the world, have been put out of work. Unemployment in Vancouver East remains at over 20 per cent.

OLYMPIC GAMES—BEN JOHNSON, DISQUALIFIED 100 METRE WINNER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I praised Ben Johnson's triumph at the Olympics, and noted that his example had inspired hundreds of young people at a rally in the Jane-Finch area of my riding. The rally was organized by a caring community under the title "Say No to Drugs".

The sad developments overnight are a tragedy for Ben and for Canada, but there is still a lesson there for young people whom Ben inspired. Saying no to drugs is worth it.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is quoted as agreeing that Johnson's actions were improper and wrong, especially because he is a role model. I am not yet ready to agree with the Prime Minister. Ben is entitled to the benefit of every doubt. There needs to be an inquiry to determine whether Ben's drug use is something that he knew about and condoned, or whether he is the victim of actions by others. Ben deserves this investigation.

FREE TRADE

PROTECTION OF ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you about something ridiculous. A common front of ecologists is afraid that the Free Trade Agreement might undermine the powers of the Canadian and provincial Governments with respect to the environment. These people claim that the FTA would have a catastrophic impact on Canada's ecology and resources.

That, Mr. Speaker, is utterly false and tantamount to misleading the Canadian public. The Free Trade Agreement takes due account of the fact that, in January 1986, the Canadian Advisory Council on the Environment, widely known for its independent approach, set three conditions: our ability to manage our renewable and non-renewable resources, control pollution and waste disposal, and protect our ecology.

A concrete example would be the maple bush fertilization program which is being developed, Mr. Speaker. Besides, FTA Article 603 confirms the right of Canada and the United States to pass regulations aimed at protecting human, animal and vegetal life as well as the environment. That happens to be a sovereign attribute of each country. They should stop their scaring tactics.

MINES AND MINING

GOLD LAKE MINES INCORPORATED—MONEY OWED TO MANITOBANS

Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, since 1984 there has been a cease trading order against Gold Lake Mines Incorporated. This company owes many Manitobans thousands and thousands of dollars. It owes up to $75,000 to one retired couple in the Bissett area.

Unfortunately, through our federal and provincial laws we are unable to protect these people. I call upon the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to check into this case, find out why this American-based firm is still operating through a different name in Manitoba, still filing mining claims in Manitoba, and is not being responsible to those people to whom it owes so many thousands of dollars.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ENERGY INDUSTRY

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, last weekend on television the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) stated that Canada has sold out its energy in the Free Trade Agreement.

That is incorrect, and it is wrong. Nothing could be further from the truth.

We do not have to sell our energy to anyone. The control of all our resources remains in Canada. Each province has under its jurisdiction the right to control the exploration, development, and the sale of its oil and gas. Pricing is based on international prices, not U.S. prices.

We moved to deregulate the oil and gas industry in 1985. That removed that disastrous Liberal National Energy Program that robbed western Canada of billions of dollars. Our energy policy is now and will always be made in Canada, by Canadians, for Canadians. The Free Trade Agreement secures access to the U.S. market for our energy products and that will lead to future development and security of supply for all Canadians.

LINGUISTIC MINORITIES

REQUEST THAT TV5 CHANNEL BE MADE AVAILABLE TO FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUÉBEC

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, two years of planning and studies have gone into the establishment of the TV5 international network which includes five francophone broadcasters from five different countries: Canada and Quebec, France, Belgium, Switzerland, and French Africa.

This undertaking flows from the francophone summit held in this country, and Canadian taxpayers have invested $1.8 million in this project. Unfortunately 1.5 million francophones outside Quebec will find it impossible to tune in to TV5. Again this Government imposes a double standard, according to where one lives in Canada. That is unfair!

This Government keeps forgetting all about francophones outside Quebec. We have to fight to command respect for their rights. Remember what happened before the Olympic Games—we had to fight this Government for a year and a half so that francophones outside Quebec would be able to watch the Olympic Games in their own language.

Mr. Speaker, TV5 is important to us. I urge the Government to get the lead out and see to it that all Canadians are able to tune in to the international signal of French-speaking countries.

TRADE

BENEFITS OF FREE TRADE FOR QUÉBEC

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, in Ontario 840,000 people, in other words, one-third of the workforce in Quebec, are working in a complete free trade situation in the automobile industry.

The situation has been like this since the Auto Pact was signed in 1965. The Pact could be cancelled on six months' notice. Workers in the industry are among the best paid workers with the best working conditions. Many have indexed pension plans.

Did free trade make them poorer? Today in Ontario, the unemployment rate is only 3.1 per cent with free trade. Today in Quebec, the unemployment rate is 9 per cent, without free trade. In British Columbia, the unemployment rate is 12 per cent, without free trade. In Newfoundland, they have 17 per cent unemployment without free trade.

Mr. Speaker, with free trade my Government wants to improve the economies of all the provinces. That is why we in Quebec are in favour of free trade.

COMMUNICATIONS

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO TELEPHONE SYSTEM ADVOCATED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Call-Net Telecommunications has again appealed to the federal Cabinet to grant a further extension to plainly illegal telecommunications services. Because of Cabinet interference in this case, Call-Net has received extensions totalling 330 days, and the Conservative Cabinet has allowed it to expand during this period. Indeed, the Department of Communications, as we detailed last January in the House, has intervened repeatedly and has advised Call-Net how to get around CRTC regulations.

The Call-Net affair is not an isolated case. It is part of the Mulroney Government's efforts to transform our telephone system. The Government is attempting to introduce an American-style system through the back door as part of its efforts to harmonize Canadian and American policies.

We in Canada believe differently. We think that universal access to a regulated phone system should remain our top priority. I have here petitions signed by over 1,000 telecommunication workers who want the Minister to stop interfering in this case, and I do as well.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this past Sunday the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) appeared on CTV's Question Period. When asked how he would cut the deficit, he replied: "One way is to slash the 10 billion to 12 billion or 16 billion that these nuclear submarines are going to put us in debt for in the next four to five years".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crofton: The right hon. gentleman's response reveals his profound ignorance on two counts. First, had he actually read the White Paper he would know that the projected cost is $8 billion over 27 years. Second, instead of nuclear powered submarines the Liberal defence policy calls for at least six additional patrol frigates plus a fleet of diesel submarines at a minimum cost of $8 billion.

Our Navy and most Canadians are astonished and dismayed to learn of this sudden new twist in Liberal policy to reduce by 50 per cent the badly needed and overdue naval construction. The true Liberal colours are thus revealed: a return to their unilateral disarmament policies of the 1970s. This from a Liberal Party that dares to talk about sovereignty and security. Shame!

OLYMPIC GAMES—BEN JOHNSON, DISQUALIFIED 100 METRE WINNER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are shocked and disappointed about the news that our premier athlete, Ben Johnson, allegedly tested positive for drug use after having smashed the world record for the 100 metres at the Seoul Olympics. There is certainly a great deal of sadness today across Canada stemming from this incident. Although the tests appear to be definitive, a lot of people have jumped to some very harsh conclusions very quickly.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was fast off the mark to muscle in on Ben's moment of glory and to congratulate him when he crossed the finish line last Friday night. He and his junior Minister of Sports (Mr. Charest) also acted with lightning speed in unfairly condemning Johnson when the results of the drug test became known.

Johnson's Sport Canada funding has been cut off and he is suspended for life from participating in Canada's national team. Ben Johnson deserves better from the Government of Canada. He made all Canadians proud when he set the world record at Rome last year in the 100 metres without drugs. At the very least, we owe him and his trainer Charlie Francis the opportunity to explain their side of the story. As well, the federal Government should initiate a full inquiry into the entire affair. Disturbing questions remain unanswered, especially whether or not the Government of Canada acted appropriately in the circumstances.

Mr. Beatty: Only the Liberals would try to exploit that for partisan purposes.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

TRIBUTE TO RETIRING MEMBER FOR VANCOUVER CENTRE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it was with great sadness that we learned yesterday that our colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), will not be seeking re-election. On behalf of all Members of this House, particularly my B.C. colleagues, I want to recognize the tremendous contribution she made to the public life of this country since she was first elected in 1980.

We all remember well her outstanding performance as Minister of Energy in revitalizing the energy sector in western Canada, hence her being named Oil Man of the Year. We also remember her role as mother of the Free Trade Agreement when she worked tirelessly to conclude the negotiations successfully.

The first Canadian woman in federal political life to hold such high profile economic portfolios, including President of the Treasury Board, she has been a trail blazer and role model for all of us who follow. However, it is the human side that the residents of Vancouver Centre will remember—and their Member's fight for AIDS research, the Vancouver Symphony, and quality of life for seniors.

Pat, we are really going to miss you. Thank you. We wish you good health and happiness. Keep on making waves, right from the Pacific Rim, which you love so dearly, across this land, because we will be listening.

OSLO OIL SANDS PROJECT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House applaud the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) supporting environmentally sound development and his willingness to promote this concept at the meeting of the World Bank Governors in Berlin. However, we hope he will turn his new found enthusiasm for environmentally sound development to the home front, too. While he makes the right noises in Berlin, his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gives $4 billion to the OSLO oil sands project.

This project poses a major threat to the McKenzie River ecology because the method of removing the heavy oil from the tar sand leaves huge toxic tailings ponds that will kill fish and wildlife. No environmental impact assessments have been conducted. This is at odds with the environmental posture that the Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance have taken.

The Government is inconsistent in its approach to the environment, saying one thing and doing something totally opposite. If the Prime Minister expects to be taken seriously he has to live up to his own rhetoric.

THE LATE IRWIN MCINTOSH

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform Members of the death over the weekend of the Hon. Irwin McIntosh, fifteenth Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan.

In North Battleford Mr. McIntosh distinguished himself as a newspaper publisher. As Lieutenant Governor from 1978 to 1983 he was outspoken and passionate in promoting the role of the Crown. He always displayed a great love of our country and its people. His dedication to wildlife conservation, skiing, literature, and local history will be sadly missed.

I carry with me the warm memory of many hours in my own youth spent at the McIntosh supper table discussing and debating issues of the day; a young Conservative learning from a proud life-long Liberal the values of honour, community service, and a love of Canada. Saskatchewan and Canada have lost a great citizen.

BANNING OF OLYMPIC ATHLETE FROM NATIONAL TEAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Last night the Minister said that Ben Johnson would be banned for life from our national team although he had not yet exhausted all his appeals and there had not yet been a full and fair inquiry into all aspects of this sorry matter. There are many things that should be investigated.

I would like to ask him under what authority he said that Ben Johnson should be banned from the national team for life? How did he say that at this time before any hearing? Should the man not get a fair hearing before he gets a life sentence?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, let me start by saying that yesterday was a very sad day for a lot of Canadians. I do not think anyone, when they enter public life, anticipates being faced with this type of situation.

What I informed the media of yesterday, and what we also informed them of through a press release, is what our rules provide for now and have provided for some time. Canada has some of the strictest rules in the world in the area of sanctions for doping, and we say that with some pride. In the case of the use of steroids, because of the danger to the health of athletes it is a life suspension if they are found guilty.

If the Hon. Member takes the time to read the press release we issued yesterday, in the second paragraph he will find the words "pending possible appeal", because of course we do expect that due process of law will take its course and Mr. Johnson has an appeal open to him. If he receives redress through the appeal, then the sanction will not apply. However, as is usually the case in matters of this or other types, the sanction will apply until the appeal is heard and the decision either confirmed or overturned.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Last night, the Minister responsible for Amateur Sport admitted he had received information several months ago that steroids were being used in this case, but he decided not to do anything about it. The Minister could have prevented this sad turn of events if he had taken the appropriate action at the time, and he would have saved Ben Johnson and Canada this terrible humiliation.

Mr. Speaker, why didn't the Minister take action at the time, and shouldn't the Minister, because of his failure to act responsibly, tender his resignation immediately? Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to ask for his resignation?

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I want to be very clear about the information that was being circulated about Ben Johnson. This type of information has been going around since his brillant victory and the world record he won in Rome. At the time, one of his opponents, Carl Lewis, made a public allegation.

Mr. Speaker, since that time, neither myself nor any member of my Department nor any person in authority have made allegations or presented evidence to support allegations about rumours being spread by other people.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, since then, Mr. Johnson was tested several times. In fact he was tested eight times in less than two years, and every time the result was negative. The last time Mr. Johnson was tested was in August in Zurich, a month before the race in Seoul, and at the time the test was negative.

POSITION OF CANADIAN OLYMPIC OFFICIALS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Well, Mr. Speaker, in this case the Canadian officials in Seoul expressed concern about the number of unauthorized people in the dope testing room. They expressed concern about the exchange of the water bottles and expressed concern about the possibility of third-party intervention. Despite this, the Minister was quick to ban Ben Johnson for life last night without a fair hearing. Yet he could have done something months ago to prevent this whole sorry mess. Is it not now time to ask for the resignation of this Minister who has not lived up to his responsibilities as the Minister for Sport?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, believe me, of all the people in this House of Commons today, I do not think there is anyone who would like more than myself to wish that all of this thing had just never happened. I wish it would go away.

I do not think it would be a responsible attitude on our part not to acknowledge the validity of the test. The information I have is from the Canadian Olympic Association, our officials in Seoul, and I am satisfied that the proper procedure was followed in the course of this test. I am also satisfied with the results.

With respect to the procedures, I want to be very clear. The IOC decision is without appeal. It is its decision. It is for these Games. It has suspended Mr. Johnson for the course of the Games. It now falls upon the IAAF, the governing body, international body, in the area of track and field, to impose a sanction. That sanction will be corroborated by the Canadian Track and Field Association. It is on that sanction that Mr. Johnson has a thirty-day appeal period open to him. We have acknowledged through our press release yesterday that that is very clear in the rules that are now in force at Sports Canada.

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEW BRUNSWICK COURT CASE—MINISTER'S LETTER TO JUDGE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister himself must by now be aware that in a prosecution yesterday in Saint John, New Brunswick, before Judge Taylor, conducted on behalf of the Ministry of Transport, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) sent a letter under his own hand addressed to and delivered to the presiding judge providing, I understand, extra information designed to support a conviction, which was not submitted in open court and which was not made available to the accused until hours later.

Since it is a well established tradition that such intervention is unacceptable, I call upon the Prime Minister to do the honourable thing and obtain the resignation of the Minister of Transport.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: The Liberal Party goes lower and lower.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table here today three documents, first, a memo from the Department of Transport from which I would like to read some lines to enlighten the House of Commons, one draft, and an official letter I sent to the judge. Here are the words in the memo of the Department of Transport:

> The judge has reserved his decision pending receipt of a letter signed by the Minister of Transport stating either that he personally approved the security measures in force at the time or that he authorized J. Rodocanachi, Director General, Security and Emergency Planning, to so approve the applicable security measures.
> The attached letter drafted by departmental Legal Services and submitted for your approval and signature states that Mr. Rodocanachi, in his official capacity, had the requisite authority to make the security measures which are the subject of the current prosecution.

I have the letter I wrote to the judge. It was requested by the judge himself. I answered the request given to me by the Department—

An Hon. Member: Off with Kaplan's head!

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): —and I think I did exactly what I had to do.

Mr. Kaplan: That explanation doesn't square with the report—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Where is your lynch mob?

Mr. Kaplan: —in which counsel for the accused makes it clear that he was taken by surprise by that tactic.

JUDGE'S REQUEST TO DEPARTMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister, therefore, what were the circumstances of the judge's request for information from the Department? Was the request made in open court? And why wouldn't the Minister have sent his letter through a process—

Mr. Crosbie: That's what the judge asked for.

Mr. Kaplan: —of the open court, so that the other side would be aware of it when it was submitted, rather than mailing it to the judge?

Mr. Crosbie: Into the sewer again, Bob.

Mr. Kaplan: That's where you guys are. That's where we find you.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the Liberal Party's mad drive to find all sorts of non-existent problems, today I produce a memo from my Department, from the Deputy Minister Glen Shortliffe, asking for a letter at the Judge's request on the procedures for delegating authority to the director general. Mr. Speaker, I produce the documents at the Judge's request. The issue is not that I went ahead. Again, the hon. Member is searching for a non-existent victim, for non-existent problems. This has been going on for weeks. And once again, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the documents and the Hon. Member can consult them when he likes. It's all there!

OLYMPIC GAMES—BEN JOHNSON, DISQUALIFIED 100 METRE WINNER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. I want to say at the outset that I agree with the Minister that it is a most difficult situation and my colleagues and I share with him and all other Canadians the regret for what has happened and the events which have unfolded in Seoul over the last 24 hours.

We have had the irrefutable evidence from the IOC, which none of us can challenge. On the other hand, we have the statements attributed to Ben Johnson and to his coach. We have seen quotes from his manager, from his family, and from people who trained with him, who suggested Ben would not have knowingly, and I emphasize the word "knowingly", taken steroids.

I want to ask the Minister in all seriousness what steps the Government of Canada is going to take to try to determine exactly what has transpired and what led to Ben Johnson having steroids in his urine after the gold medal event?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the unfolding of the events is that the first test produced positive. I think the Hon. Member is very aware of the mechanics around the test. Following the first positive test, there is an opportunity offered to the athlete and the Olympic Association of the country to be heard and offer an explanation, which was done.

I think the Hon. Member refers to the explanation offered by the Canadian Olympic Association on behalf of Mr. Johnson, the possibility of an inducement of steroids after the race. My understanding of the results of the test, and that was in the press conference yesterday, is that what they call the imprint in the analysis was not compatible with that scenario.

The IOC decision is without appeal. We cannot affect that. That decision being rendered, it is now up to the IAAF to act. My understanding is that it will impose a suspension for a minimum of two years. Then it is left open to Mr. Johnson to appeal that. I understand that the due process of law will be respected. He will have an opportunity to be heard and to make his case and to explain whether, as the Member points out, perhaps knowingly or unknowingly, he used the steroids or not. We expect that will happen. I have that assurance, I think, from the President of the Canadian Track and Field Association with whom I spoke yesterday and whom I know well, and I am persuaded that that opportunity will be offered to Mr. Johnson.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT UNDERTAKE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Minister. I have two points. Last night on CBC, Lyle Makosky, the Assistant Deputy Minister, indicated that the Government of Canada would be pursuing some form of investigation.

The Minister stated earlier today that in fact Mr. Johnson was tested in August in Zurich, and I assume found to have no trace of steroids in his system, and I am advised that it would be unlikely that in such a short period of time, from August to the day of the event in Seoul, there would be little if any benefit from the use of anabolic steroids for an athlete in such a condition as Ben Johnson. Will the Government undertake that investigation, an independent investigation, separate from anything that the sports governing bodies in Canada or internationally may do, so that Canadians, Ben's coach, and Ben himself can find out exactly what happened?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, in the conversation I had yesterday with the President of the Canadian Track and Field Association, we agreed that we would let the games finish and let time pass to let us all catch our breath and, as we say in French—let the dust settle.

[English]

—and that we would discuss with them the terms of an investigation to look at what happened, not only as far as the involvement of Ben Johnson is concerned but of those who are in contact with him, because it is a matter that needs to be cleared up. There are certainly a lot of questions left to be answered and we will want to do that, but I would like to stress that I would certainly prefer to enter into these actions in a context that is not the one we have today, and let a little time pass.

I may want to draw one distinction. We did ask for an inquiry in the area of weightlifting, but the circumstances were different from the ones of today. There were other circumstances that made us act immediately.

PUBLIC WORKS

SALE OF MOISIE LANDS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, in view of the Prime Minister's extended absence.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, for several days now . . .

Some Hon. Members: The question!

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, could you silence those imbeciles?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would refrain from referring to the absence of either the Prime Minister or anybody else, and would proceed with his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it is very simple. I would like to know . . . Since last Thursday, questions have been raised and documents have been produced and yesterday we could see that the Minister of Public Works was incompetent, that he was not even able to assess a property. He said that it was worth $28,000. You know, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that no one would even want to let the Minister of Public Works sell their doghouse! He also showed his negligence by sitting for more than six weeks on a very embarrassing letter that cast doubt on the integrity of the contracting system. I have excerpts of the letter here, where the Minister of Public Works yesterday tried to tell the press that it was just a personal matter. Mr. Speaker, all sorts of questions are raised here concerning his own chief of staff, Conservative organizers and the contracting system that go far beyond personal matters.

So the question for the Deputy Prime Minister is: As soon as the Minister had shown his incompetence, negligence or lack of judgement, why did the Deputy Prime Minister not ask for the Minister's resignation?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of different kinds of values ascribed to property. If a property has an ongoing use such as a radar base, then it may have one value. Once the base is declared surplus, the value rapidly declines. I think the best indication of that is the type of bids that were submitted by the 19 groups, the maximum amount being $100,000.

With respect to the suggestion about other action that might have been taken on the letter, the letter did not warrant any action other than that which I took, namely, to have a grievance by the person who signed the letter investigated.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has again demonstrated his sheer lack of awareness of the facts brought to his attention in the letter of August 5. The Minister should have reacted immediately and made sure that no-one would question his department's integrity and the tendering process, particularly not the property director of his own deparment who is an expert in this field and who made very serious accusations.

Back to the Prime Minister. Do you intend to let the Minister fend for himself, or are you going to come to his rescue or ask for his resignation? Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether he sees anything wrong with the fact that the Minister is so incompetent, so lacking in judgment, and so careless in taking action about the complaint sent to his home last August 5?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the letter in question dictated a course of action. I indeed pursued the action dictated by the letter.

CONTENTS OF FORMER OFFICIAL'S LETTER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Last week in the House, the Minister of Justice, in response to another matter, as reported in Hansard at page 19479, said that even the hint of an impropriety required that the issue be turned over to the RCMP. Given that this is the Government's policy in dealing with these matters, it boggles my mind to think that the Minister of Public Works did nothing when the Mayor of Moisie had been complaining about political interference in the land sale for months, and in fact when the PMO was making inquiries with respect to political interference in the land deals, he did absolutely nothing.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works.

Yesterday he said this outside the House: "I read the letter when I got it. There was nothing to indicate that it ought to be sent to the RCMP. Since it was a personal complaint I gave it to someone who works in my office."

So is the Minister saying that Mr. Hylands' letter does not even contain an allegation of impropriety? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is what I say.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE LETTER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, that is what the Minister says, and that is what Members of Parliament do not know. In light of the fact that we have a four-year history of other incidents, one would have thought that the Government had learned how to handle these kinds of situations.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know where that preamble is going. I would ask the Hon. Member to keep in mind the care which must be used in these kinds of questions.

Mr. Rodriguez: My question is to the same Minister. In light of the fact of what the Minister has said in his answer, if he felt that the letter was innocuous and innocent is he prepared to table in the House of Commons that letter which had been sitting in a bureaucrat's shirt drawer for over a month, so we can all see how innocuous it is?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the letter in question was the matter of a personal grievance by Mr. Hylands. As soon as other statements made in other places or on tapes indicated some impropriety and that the police should have charge of the investigation, I put the letter in their hands and that is where it will stay until they finish their investigation.

OLYMPIC ATHLETE BANNED FROM NATIONAL TEAM

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in view of all of the facts and the admitted breaches of security in the holding area for athletes at the Olympics following the race, which the highest officials have admitted took place, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister a question.

Does the Government not feel that the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport was a trifle hasty, to say the least, in condemning Ben Johnson to a lifetime ban when Ben Johnson said he did not take steroids, when his family said he did not take steroids, when his coach said he did not take steroids, and when every test done in the past showed that Ben Johnson did not take steroids and this Minister did not even talk to Ben Johnson to get his side of the story?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed by the attitude of Members of the Liberal Party, and I fail to see what they are seeking to accomplish with this tactic. Suffice it to say that the rules are very clear and have been clear for some time now under this Government. An athlete caught in a doping situation is suspended for life from Sport Canada funding and cannot participate in a national team that receives funding from the national Government.

There is an appeal available to the athlete. He has a 30-day appeal period and he can use it, but I want to stress one thing. There is a reason why we are so severe. It is for the athletes. The drugs, the steroids, actually kill them, and we do not think that we should enable that to happen in our sports system.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, a man is innocent until proven guilty. No one is questioning the contents of the urine sample.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't you tell Kaplan that?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Baker: No one is questioning the contents of the urine sample. However, there was a general lack of security at the Olympics. Ben Johnson was there a week and a half prior to the race. Even the highest officials admit that there was a breach of security in the so-called accreditation area. There were a number of ways that Ben Johnson could have been framed.

I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Because of the possibility that Ben Johnson could have been victimized, and because he is such a superb athlete who has passed every single drug test he has taken in the past, does the Prime Minister not feel that the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport should be reprimanded for repeating what he called rumours about Ben Johnson to the entire world without giving Ben Johnson a fair hearing? Or is the Government just putting on an air of righteous indignation in an effort to impress the world?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the member of the Liberal Party say that a man is innocent until he is proven guilty. That is another major shift in policy for the Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: It hasn't come too soon but we will take it.

The rules that are laid out by the IOC are very clear. I have spoken with Roger Jackson of the Canadian Olympic Association, I have spoken with my own officials in Seoul, and I have spoken with the President of the Canadian Track and Field Association. The information I have received from them is that the procedures were followed.

The opportunity of a hearing was offered to the Canadian Olympic Association, which took up the cause and made representations on behalf of Mr. Johnson and also made representations and explained what Mr. Francis said. The conclusions of the test have not been contested. That is very clear from one press release I saw this morning from Mr. Francis.

The Member says officials said something. He has not named them. That is the information I have now. Until otherwise indicated, Canada will accept the results of the test at their face value.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

BRUNDTLAND REPORT—PRIME MINISTER'S SCHEDULED SPEECH TO UNITED NATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He has given the Government of Canada's support to the Brundtland Commission and to its international report on the environment. My question concerns the Prime Minister's speech to the General Assembly of the United Nations on Thursday.

Does the Prime Minister plan to take some of the key recommendations of the Brundtland Report to the United Nations? Specifically, will he include in his speech the urging of all members of the United Nations to include, as part of their foreign policy development, a foreign policy for the environment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his question on such an important matter. The Brundtland Commission Report developed the concept of sustainable development and did so in a particularly impressive way. Canada has endorsed that concept through CIDA. In fact, the Minister of Finance is in Berlin today introducing new initiatives from the Government of Canada in regard to our foreign lending and investments in the future, all of which sustain the general thrust of the Brundtland Report.

We are very supportive of what Prime Minister Brundtland's commission put together. I will, of course, be addressing that issue and others when I speak to the General Assembly, and I thank my hon. friend for his views.

SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased, as one Canadian, to hear that the Prime Minister does intend to take the important matter of the environment to the United Nations. Picking up on what he just said about one of the recommendations of the Brundtland Report being to obtain national commitment from all nations in the UN to the notion of sustainable development, will the Prime Minister now make a commitment that this will be a sustainable policy of the Canadian Government and be applicable to all our agencies and programs as they impact on the external world?

Specifically, will he make a change in the Export Development Corporation's policy in Canada which, at the present, does not consider environmental impact at all in reaching its decisions? Will he assure the House that in applying this principle of sustainable development the Government of Canada will show a leadership role and apply it to all our external relations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the leadership role to which my hon. friend refers and seeks for Canada is one that, if I may say, was acknowledged by Prime Minister Brundtland herself in Toronto when she referred to the Government of Canada as one of the leaders, not only in foreign aid but in the marriage of foreign aid and sustainable development. This is very much an initiative of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister responsible for external relations, both of whom I think have provided important leadership in this vital area of our international life.

With regard to whether members of the United Nations such as Canada can do more, either in terms of aid or in marrying that aid to the concept of sustainable development, my hon. friend is quite right. We have not done enough as an organization. We have not done enough as a Parliament in regard to either international assistance or the harmonizing of that assistance with the concept of sustainable development. This Government and this Parliament will, I hope, do more.

CANADIAN FUNDING OF UNITED NATIONS PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister give us a very specific commitment today before he goes to the UN? If he does intend to address the sustainable development notion in his speech, will he show that leadership by saying that the Government of Canada will apply that notion to all of our agencies and programs as they impact on the external world, beginning, for example, with the Export Development Corporation which does not now act on that basis? Would he give us the assurance that the Government of Canada will in fact be practising what it preaches?

Second, since the Brundtland Report also noted that the fund that has been established by the UN to monitor environmental issues on a global basis is seriously underfunded, that it has only about a $30 million budget at this point and Canada only gives about $1 million, will the Prime Minister use the occasion to demonstrate once again some Canadian leadership by offering a significant Canadian increase in terms of our share in the funding of that important program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Canada is not only a very significant contributor to the United Nations, to the Commonwealth, to la Francophonie, and to the Third World in general, but I can remember when there was doubt in the minds of some nations as to whether they ought to contribute at all to the United Nations. They were in substantial arrears.

I instructed the Government of Canada to make sure that on the first of January, in advance of Canada's dues being exigible, the Ambassador be there to pay Canada's dues to ensure that the signal went out that Canada viewed the United Nations as a most valuable organization which deserved the support of all nations.

Mr. Broadbent: The environment fund.

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to the environment fund Canada has also taken, I think, an important role. We have paid our fair share, which is not to say that we cannot do more. I will be discussing that at the United Nations.

We have, in Canada, a modern and, I think, moderate foreign policy. I will be discussing that in particular. Most recent is the role of Canada in international peacekeeping. For example, Canada today supplies the largest number of members of a peacekeeping contingent which is bringing peace to Iran and Iraq where only months ago thousands of people were being killed.

This is a contribution that Canada has made in the past. It is the degree of continuity that my hon. friend would seek and encourage. These are the kinds of important issues that I will be discussing on behalf of all Members of the House at the United Nations.

MARINE TRANSPORT

REGISTRATION OF CANADIAN OCEAN-GOING VESSELS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the recently appointed Minister of State for Transport. First I want to tell her that all of Niagara rejoices with her in her appointment.

Will she tell the House what progress either she or her Department has made with respect to the establishment of a second registry whereby large ocean-going bulk vessels, carriers from Canada, would not have to register under flags of convenience to remain competitive but would be competitive with a Canadian crew?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I know this is an area in which he has been very involved on behalf of his constituents. He has been following it closely.

Let me advise him that the Department has analyzed the proposal for a second registry. The discussion paper was released yesterday for input from all the parties concerned. I will be following that very closely and will keep the Hon. Member advised of the outcome.

PUBLIC WORKS

SALE OF FORMER RADAR BASE AT MOISIE—CONTEST OF OFFICIAL'S LETTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. It concerns the sale of the Moisie radar base in the Prime Minister's riding. Yesterday, the Minister, after about 20 minutes of questioning, admitted his own negligence in failing to provide the letter signed by Mr. Hylands to the RCMP until the issue became public. Today the Minister said that the letter was one of "personal grievance".

Given that the Minister has just made that statement today, how can he explain the statement in the letter, an excerpt of which I have in front of me, which says: "Mr. Thibault, the choice of the local municipalities, increased his total offer to an amount superior to the amended Lefebvre offer. This situation resulted in Mr. Gosselin's telephone request that I meet with Mr. Coté on behalf of Mr. Lefebvre's interest".

Does that sound like a personal grievance, or does that not sound like interference from the office of the very same Minister?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, speaking of grievances I have one of my own. Yesterday the Hon. Member left the very distinct impression with the House that he had written to me about this matter in July and that I had indeed sent him a reply. It has been brought to my attention that the letter to which he was referring was from one Marc Laframboise, a member of the research team of the Liberal Party, directed to Mr. Jacques Roy of my Department. The reply came from him. That is not the impression that the Hon. Member left with the House.

In response to the Hon. Member's inquiry of today, there was nothing in the letter from Mr. Hylands that dictated that any other course of action should be followed than the one I took.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister fails to understand that what I have just read to him consists of a very serious allegation of political interference in the bidding process, then he should not be the Minister of Public Works.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. A senior official of Public Works sent a letter raising serious allegations, some of which I have just raised in the House. The mayor of the city expressed his concerns about the bidding process and the outcome. A government Minister has contradicted himself as to whether or not the RCMP was investigating. Another Minister today has just demonstrated his total incompetence.

Is it not about time that this issue be referred to a parliamentary committee so we can investigate it, not next year, not after the election, but this week?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there is a committee constituted by the House of Commons that has the power to commence any investigation it wishes. If the Hon. Member has some information that is germane to this question and it warrants RCMP activity, perhaps he should give that information to the RCMP. We have given them all we know. We will await their report.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A week ago, I put my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it was whether the Prime Minister would keep the promise he made before the United Nations that Canada would break off all economic relations with South Africa if there was no improvement in the apartheid system. In his answer, the Secretary of State for External Affairs more or less paraphrased the same promise, without satisfying anyone. My question is simply this: Will the Prime Minister keep his word on September 29?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the policy I announced, supported by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, was valid and remains the policy of the Government of Canada. In fact, last night at Laval University, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said more about the matter, introducing some new details on behalf of the Government of Canada. As far as we are concerned, apartheid in South Africa remains the greatest moral problem in the world today, and Canada together with its allies in the Commonwealth, the Francophonie, and the Group of Seven, is working very hard to break the system. I think that as a country we have taken some very important action since then, unique in some cases! We have taken further action together with various organizations and groups of nations and we are prepared to do more. Any decision as to breaking off our relations with South Africa will be made by Cabinet, if we conclude it is useless to pursue our present policy. Nevertheless, we keep hoping we are making some progress, be it ever so slight.

SEVERANCE OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, circumlocution from the mouth of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the mouth of the Prime Minister seems to be the order of the day rather than the key moral question that the Prime Minister made a promise three years ago before the United Nations that, if there was no change in the situation with respect to apartheid, he would sever all economic and diplomatic relations with South Africa. If there is one thing that is clear and ought to be clear to the Prime Minister, it is that there has been no improvement. There has been a marked deterioration.

The moral question is whether the Prime Minister will keep this promise.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am astonished that my hon. friend would refer to the tremendous work of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his responses in this regard as circumlocution. It is widely recognized by the leaders of the Front Line States, the leaders of the Commonwealth, et le Sommet de la Francophonie that Canada has provided very important international moral leadership in this vital fight against apartheid. I think it is very unbecoming for my hon. friend to refer to what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said as circumlocution. We view it as a most complicated, important moral issue, the most sensitive moral issue affecting nations today.

Mr. McCurdy: What about moral questions, making a promise?

Mr. Mulroney: I regret that my hon. friend chooses to make his views known in this particular partisan fashion.

Mr. Rodriguez: You made a promise.

Mr. McCurdy: No. We are talking about your promise.

Mr. Mulroney: It is an issue that goes much beyond partisanship.

Mr. McCurdy: It is a matter of word, honesty, promises.

Mr. Mulroney: I am trying to answer my hon. friend, if he will allow me. I think there has been strong, unanimous support by all Parties on this issue, from all corners of the House of Commons. The Government and all Members of the House of Commons have been working to rid the world of this evil that is known as apartheid. I thought I did so and I know I do so with the full support of all Hon. Members. When I speak at the United Nations I will speak in terms of the revulsion of Canada vis-à-vis apartheid, which is a profound evil. I know that I will speak on behalf of all Canadians who view apartheid as precisely the evil that it is.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN ADVISERS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): My question is of importance to the East and West Kootenays and is directed to the Prime Minister.

In light of the fact that in the intervening years since the signing of the Columbia River Treaty in 1964 Canada has lost some of the people who were well-informed on the Columbia River Treaty, and since it is desirable that Canada maintain a knowledgeable group of advisers on all elements of the Columbia River Treaty, will the Prime Minister undertake to add to the number of advisers on the Treaty, perhaps by way of the Permanent Engineering Board, or the Joint Liaison Committee?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a most important matter raised by my hon. friend. There is in point of fact a bi-national Permanent Engineering Board. There are regular consultations between provincial, federal, and U.S.A. authorities that govern our respective conduct in regard to this most important issue.

I give my hon. friend the undertaking that we will supplement the personnel and the expertise to make sure that the interests of British Columbia and Canada are fully protected in this vital area.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—INSHORE FISHERY—ASSISTANCE FOR PLANT WORKERS AND FISHERMEN

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. More than a month ago I rose in the House on a number of occasions to make the Government aware of the disastrous nature of the inshore fishery in certain regions of Newfoundland year. I asked the Government to provide immediate financial assistance to the fishermen who are affected.

The Minister for International Trade on behalf of the Government responded by saying: "There is no evidence, Mr. Speaker, of a disastrous inshore fishery about the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador this year. The Member cited no facts because the facts do not support that statement".

Yesterday, the same Minister announced a $3.4 million assistance program in Newfoundland to assist "hard hit fishermen and plant workers this year".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: You will understand, Mr. Speaker, that I was amazed at this sudden conversion. My question to the Prime Minister is the following one.

Given that the program in question pays little more than the minimum wage, that specifically fishermen a month ago said that this is not the solution to the problem, given that it involves a loan component for fishermen who are already over their heads in debt and cannot repay their current loans, is the Prime Minister prepared to consider converting this program, which has already been rejected as too little, too late, into an emergency financial payment program—not a loan program and not a minimum wage—to be made available to fishermen immediately? If that is not done there is no help forthcoming for six weeks, and the help that is forthcoming has already been rejected by fishermen's spokesmen as too little, too late.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, anyone can check the Hansard of one month ago to see at which time I said that while there was not an inshore fishery disaster in Newfoundland this year, the catch being considerably greater than last year, there were areas where the fish had not struck in, as is the case in most years. This year the same thing has occurred. On parts of the south coast and the northwest coast there are areas where there are great difficulties and the fish have not come inshore.

That is why we are introducing our fifth program in the last three years, a special response program, under the Canada Employment Commission. This program is a $3.4 million program. There are no loans involved. This is a job-creation program for fishermen and fish plant workers.

The provincial Government is supplementing the program with interest-free loans for those fishermen to enable them to go back into the fishery next year, and giving them relief on loans that they had for their vessels, if they had to pay on loans. So the province is supplementing the program.

There is an additional $1.4 million to help with Section 38 programs for fishermen and fish plant workers who are receiving lower unemployment insurance payments as a result of the poor fishery this year. There are several forms of assistance.

I might say that the same kind of program was occasionally introduced by our Liberal predecessors, but only after the fishing season was over. This was announced before the fishing season even closes, in a much quicker and more efficient manner than was ever done by our predecessors.

This is the best we can do in the circumstances. Fishermen are the only self-employed group of people in Canada who receive the UI program. We are ensuring that it continues to benefit them this year and next year as well.

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary question.

EMERGENCY FINANCIAL RELIEF REQUEST

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): My supplementary question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Many fishermen in the affected areas have only had less than $1,000 earnings—some less than $500—in all of this year. We are not talking about a program to give them an additional week or two earnings at very low wages. We are talking about fishermen who are short seven or eight weeks earnings to qualify for income supplements this winter. This year in particular it does not work.

I ask the Prime Minister again, will he take the funds that have been committed by the federal Government, $2.4 million, will he convert those funds into emergency financial relief for fishermen, giving fishermen the same kind of consideration and benefit that have been rightfully bestowed upon the nation's other primary producers, farmers?

Why must they be reduced to a loan program and to a program that pays little more than the minimum wage, which will strip them of the dignity of a decent ability to look after their families this winter and their children who have already gone back to school this year without the things they need to go back and get an education?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, both the fishermen and the farmers are primary producers. The Government is engaged in supporting both of these groups of primary producers with very substantial programs. I might say that I had the matter checked to try to see is there some equity and fairness in the situation.

The position is that net federal spending in agriculture is about equal to 29 per cent of farm incomes in Canada. The net federal spending in fishery programs is about equal to 78 per cent of the landed value of the fishery. Mr. Speaker, $223 million were paid out last year in UI fishing benefits, $80 million of that to Newfoundland fishermen. We are supplementing it with these job-creation programs.

There is no federal loan program involved here whatsoever. The fishermen and fish plant workers will be eligible next year for UI again as a result of these programs, something which is most desirable because they are the only self-employed people in Canada to have access to—

Point of Order—Mr. Waddell

Mr. Speaker: This will be the end of Question Period. I might say to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East that I will certainly consider her favourably tomorrow.

POINT OF ORDER

TRIBUTE TO MISS CARNEY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) spoke about the retirement of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). I think it would be fitting for someone on this side of the House to add a few words to that.

God knows we disagreed many times, especially on the energy program and on the free trade deal, but I think all of us on this side of the House admired the hard work and dedication of Pat Carney to her constituents, to the people of British Columbia and to the people of Vancouver. We wish her well. I am sure that when she stops taking all those flights from B.C. her health will improve.

We knew a tough opponent when we saw one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on behalf of the Liberal caucus and the Liberal Party in Parliament to add a few words as well about Miss Carney.

Mr. Speaker, I had occasion more than once to be on the receiving end of the Minister's answers when I put what I thought was a particularly effective question. I join with my colleague in saying that we had profound disagreements but I admired on many occasions not only the skill of the Minister but the fact that she stood her ground as a Member of this place and gave as good as anybody could.

She did it always with dignity. She did it always with class. She was a class act in this House. We admire her as a Member of Parliament, one dedicated to the job she had.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) indicated rather forcefully today that he had not written to me about the matter in issue today. I wish to quote from Hansard his words of September 26 as reported at page 19622. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Public Works whose office has refused to give information on the Moisie land deal to my office since July of this year. I remind him that I wrote to him at that time.

My privileges have been breached. It is very apparent from his own words that the Hon. Member is contradicting the allegations made today. I would bring that to your attention, Mr. Speaker.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has raised a matter, which is a complaint on his part, as to what another Hon. Member may or may not have said on another day.

There may have been a disagreement as to the facts. Certainly, the Hon. Minister has taken advantage of today's Question Period to set out the facts with some care, and I think that is where the matter ends. The Hon. Minister of State.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I, too, with your permission, would just like to make a couple of comments about the announcement that came from Vancouver yesterday when the Hon. Pat Carney announced that she would not be a candidate in the upcoming election.

Over the last four years, the Hon. Minister and I have had a very close relationship, me being her Parliamentary Secretary, both for two years in energy and for almost two years in the trade portfolio, International Trade. Over those years I came to know Pat Carney as one of the hardest working and most diligent Members of Parliament and cabinet Ministers that we have seen here. She gave me a great number of opportunities as her Parliamentary Secretary. I know that for a number of weeks she has been wrestling with this decision. It has been very, very difficult on her. I spoke with her last night, after she finally decided not to run. She is going to miss this place very much, and I think that it is fair to say that we will miss her. I did not want this moment to go by without saying a very public thank you to this very fine and wonderful Canadian who has, I believe, made a very significant mark on the history of this country in the last four years.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BROADCASTING ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-136, an Act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto, be read the third time and passed, and the amendment of Mrs. Finestone (p. 19682).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at one o'clock, there were two minutes remaining in the speech of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wonder if I might seek the consent of the House to get an extension on my time. I thought I had longer—40 minutes—and I only had 20. The Minister and the opposition critic had unlimited time. I could speak again, and if the House gives me the extension, I will not speak again on the motion. I could speak on this motion, but I would like to speak at the beginning to set things out, and I would give the House a commitment to not go more than 15 minutes at the very outside. I would seek unanimous consent.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, in that kind of spirit, I thank the Member for laying it out so clearly. Government Members would certainly have no objection to giving the Member more than the normal amount of time at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you very much. I thank the Parliamentary Secretary.

When I was speaking before, I wanted to say this. When I spoke on second reading of this Bill, I said that the problem in the Canadian broadcasting system was that the public sector was underfunded and that the private sector was not doing its job in providing quality Canadian programming. That was it in a nutshell.

This Bill was originally worse than the 1968 Bill. It has been amended. I think it is better now than the old Act, the 1968 Act, but only marginally better. I think that we can do much better after 20 years. This is the first Broadcasting Act in 20 years.

I said this morning that the Bill is flawed in numerous aspects. We have had amendments, and they have helped. We had a good legislative committee. I see the Chair here. We got some amendments.

Here are the flaws of the Bill. First, I believe that the Bill leads to a North Americanization—especially in television—of our broadcasting. The Government rejected two key NDP amendments that would in fact say that American superstations on television, if you like—new stations—could only come into Canada if they were complementary to Canadian stations. That is, if they added something. If Canadian stations, like an entertainment network or an all-news network, already existed, then the American stations could not come in. That would take some guts for the Government to do.

We are not talking about ABC, NBC, CBS, the American public network or the border stations. We are talking about these new superchannels that are going to run right over us and perhaps put our Canadian private broadcasters out of business because they cannot compete with them. That is one of the flaws in the Bill.

I asked this morning why the Government did not accept these amendments. The Minister has many good intentions, but the fact is that the Government is hemmed in by all the parameters of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. It cannot interfere with American investment or American industries coming into Canada, including the cultural industries.

The second flaw in the Bill is that the cable industry is being treated too well in the Bill. It is going to get the right to originate programming, in opposition to all previous reports, including the sixth standing committee report, the standing committee on broadcasting, and many witnesses who came to the legislative committee.

The problem is that we will have a potential for a monopolistic situation. We will have a vertically integrated industry that will now be able to broadcast as well as transmit. That could present some real conflict problems, because they will transmit their own programs, or they will be tempted to do that, or they will be in a potential conflict, as many witnesses stated.

The other problem is that it makes it more difficult for a regulatory agency or a government policy that really wants to hold down the prices of the cable industry, that wants to control the prices, as we control and regulate the telephone industry. We should be doing that with cable. That amendment was rejected. I see that the Liberal Party rejected my amendment on that. Canadians have seen, in the last month, cable prices go way up and different stations not available with their converter.

The third flaw in this Bill is that the CBC is seriously underfunded. If the Government wants to promote Canadian programming, it cannot do it by underfunding the CBC.

I want to quote Jamie Portman, a distinguished writer in broadcasting for Southam's, who said in an article in The Spectator of Hamilton:

> The government has ignored a recent call from an all-party Commons committee that it show its commitment to better Canadian programming by increasing its support of broadcasting with up to $250 million in fresh funding annually . . . in real dollar terms, the CBC's budget has shrunk by more than $150 million since the Conservatives came to power.

I outlined in my speech on second reading that the budget has consistently gone down. Not only that, in order to make up some of that money, the CBC's budget or money that is taken in on commercials has constantly gone up. So we have a pattern of almost like a privatization of the CBC. They are relying more and more on commercials. They are more and more like a regular network. That was not the original mandate of the CBC.

I specifically point out the plight of CBC Radio, which is being underfunded. There are difficulties in the regions. There has been a cut-back of 28 per cent in regional programming. Why? Because the CBC had to take money and put it into its central dramatic program to meet its aim of 95 per cent Canadian content in drama—a good aim.

The Government cannot have it both ways. We cannot say that this is a Bill that is strengthening Canadian broadcasting and at the same time be taking money away from the CBC, because it just cannot be done.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, speaking of the CBC, we must add that the French services have suffered most from the Conservative attack on the CBC. The French services produce more programs with a smaller budget than their English colleagues. As a result, we see fewer and fewer French drama series. You know that, Madam Speaker, as a former CBC actress!

Quebec's creative people, as the Coalition pour la défense des services français de Radio-Canada notes, almost always have to stay in their studios and cannot present their viewers with varied settings. Competing with Dallas takes money and resources.

• (1520)

Again, there is the same problem with French television. Resources are needed to produce those programs.

The third flaw in the Bill is that the Minister has talked about an alternate network in the Bill. It has been created with a wide mandate but there is no money for it. Therefore, we do not know when it is going to come in. We say: "Where's the beef?" If it is to be created in the Bill, where is the beef and the funding for it?

The fourth flaw in the Bill is with respect to the private sector. Through amendments we managed to get the notion of predominantly Canadian expression to apply to all the broadcasters in the broadcasting area. However, that only takes us back to the status quo that we had in the 1968 Bill. That is not acceptable to the NDP, when one considers that report after report has stated that the private broadcasters are not doing their fair share to create quality Canadian programming.

What does the Government do? In this Bill it sets out a performance incentive. That received no support in the committee hearings. It is a strange scheme. A broadcaster receives a penalty if so many hours of Canadian programming is not produced. Canadian programming is costly to create as opposed to buying an episode of Dallas or an episode of another American program. I predict that the broadcaster will pay the penalty or the fine because it is cheaper. I do not think that we will see any major change there.

Various groups interested in broadcasting appeared before the committee. They opposed this Bill, and in a sense then yielded in their opposition; not that they accepted the Bill, but they were not quite as vocal against it. I made the following analogy, which I think is a good one. When you are being beaten by a two-by-four and someone switches and hits you with a little stick, you say that it is better than being beaten by a two-by-four. That is what has happened here. These groups are being beaten by a little stick after the Bill was amended, and not by the old two-by-four of the original Bill.

I say to these groups not to be weak-kneed, stick to your principles and keep going. There is a national Canadian vision here that could be in broadcasting. There is an election coming. I say to some of those groups that there could be an NDP government, or a minority House in which there will be a balance of power in a centre-left Government. In that case, the trade deal will be ended, and there will be an industrial strategy for Canada. Part of that strategy will be a cultural strategy. There will be a surge in cultural initiatives. There will be encouragement and much greater subsidization of Canadian programming and Canadian distribution, which will mean work for Canadian artists. It will be a Government that will not be afraid to cut back the carriage of so much American programming, and that will take some political guts. I say to those groups not to lose hope, and do not be weak-kneed and think that we have to get this Bill through or we will get nothing else.

There was an action day in which groups in Canada talked about what could be done. They stated that the need for better and more Canadian programming is now stronger than ever. Canadians have invested considerable time, energy, and money in developing Canadian programming. It would be a tremendous loss if we were now to restrict our efforts. We need to forge ahead to continue to reverse the flood of foreign programming on our air waves and in our cinemas. What could be done?

We could fund the public sector sufficiently, and have a five-year commitment to the CBC in order that it could carry out this wide mandate that it is being given under the Bill. We could restore regional service. We could support CBC Radio and stop the cut-backs. We could get the CBC to do the all-news network, and not cave in to the Conservative lobbyists with Allarcom and the group in Alberta. That is what we could do for the public sector.

We could say to the private sector that we expect a minimum of 50 per cent Canadian content in prime time between 7 p.m. and 11 p.m., and if you do not produce it, you lose your licence. We will give some aid in a sense of helping the private sector to produce it, but we expect some results from the funding that they receive.

On the distribution side we could ensure that Canadians only receive the American specialty services when they are complementary to Canadian channels, for example, CBS, ABC, NBC, the border stations, and public American television, but not the superstations on some of those other networks, if we have the same service in Canada. If we do not have the same service in Canada, that is fine. But that cannot be done with a free trade deal, and that is why the free trade deal must go. If there is a minority Government, or anything other than a majority Conservative Government, that trade deal is gone.

Finally, on the distribution side, we must make a clear division between content and carriage. The cable industry, like other monopolies, should be regulated for the good of the people, and its rate of return should be regulated.

We can do it. When I was growing up we used to say in English Canada, and perhaps it was not the same in French Canada, do we have a Canadian culture? Of course we have a Canadian culture. We have a French Canadian culture, we have an English Canadian culture, and we have a broader culture of the two groups above that. We, especially in English Canada, and especially on television, have to take those steps now to protect that, or we will lose it. We are being inundated.

As the Minister stated when this debate opened, Canadians watch 24 hours of television a week, and young people watch more. We have to make sure that Canadians get Canadian choices of good, quality programming. This Bill will not do that. That is why we in the NDP will vote against it. That is why, if we have a say in the next Government, expect a strong, nationalistic, cultural Bill that will be unique in Canada's history. It will not exactly be unique, it will go back to 1932 when a Government had the guts to create the CBC and to create a strong public will in broadcasting. We have done it before, and we can do it again.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, the pattern of rushing Bills through Parliament this session continues with the debate on Bill C-136. It was introduced on June 23, debated for two days at second reading, and rushed through a legislative committee that met and heard witnesses for just over one week.

In August the Association of Canadian Film and Television Producers wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asking him to slow down the deliberations of the legislative committee. The letter urged the Prime Minister to direct the committee, then acting "with undue haste", to devote "full diligence and consideration" to the Bill. That did not happen. The Bill was rushed back to the House. At report stage most of the amendments that would have made the Bill better were rejected by the Government.

It is difficult to understand exactly what has been happening in the community. Many of the groups that spoke vehemently against this Bill in committee have now withdrawn their opposition, although they still say that the amendments should be passed. In other words, what we are hearing from the cultural industries is that it is a badly flawed Bill, but it is probably not as bad as what we may get after the next election, if the Government is returned. Therefore, let us pass it. It is only half bad and we might get something that is wholly bad. This is very difficult to understand. Why should we be asked to pass a bad Bill?

The co-chairman of the radio and TV task force, Gerald Caplan, co-author of the Caplan-Sauvageau report, having criticized the Bill for 18 months, then said: "It is better than the one we will get if this one dies and if the Tories come back after the next election with a majority". That is a strange argument for passing a poor Bill.

Indeed, the Bill is not all bad because no Bill can be all bad, but it could have been greatly improved had the Government been prepared to take seriously the committee stage and seriously examine the thoughtful amendments proposed by the Opposition. Perhaps one of the few positive things about this Bill is that it confirms the airwaves as public property to be regulated in the national interest. As well, the public network is still designated as "the principal vehicle for cultural expression in Canada". Having said that, it is difficult to find anything else that is positive in the Bill.

Let me look at the background to the Bill before returning to some specific criticisms. On June 23, 1988, the Government tabled a new Broadcasting Act and a broadcasting policy intended to replace the 1968 Broadcasting Act which provided the framework for developments in broadcasting in Canada for the last 20 years. The industry had been lobbying for many years for the Government to replace an admittedly outmoded Act, but what has been received is a Bill that does not go nearly far enough. It fails to make programming in Canada predominantly Canadian.

This is important because watching television is the number one leisure activity for Canadians, particularly young Canadians who are forming their views of their own country, of the world, and of their place in the world by watching television. This is true to a large extent. On average Canadians spend more than 24 hours per week in front of their television sets. Children watch almost 1,000 hours of television, compared to the 800 hours they spend in school. Canadians are radio listeners, too. Some 95 per cent spend 18 hours a week listening to the radio. More than 50 per cent of Canadians say that broadcasting is their principal source of news and information. Yet despite this heavy reliance on programming in Canada, most of what Canadians hear and see is not Canadian. Other world views, primarily American, are reflected.

We need more access to Canadian cultural products because 80 per cent of our publishing industry is in foreign hands, 95 per cent of films shown in Canada are foreign, and 71 per cent of all programs viewed by English-speaking Canadians on television are American.

I think we would all agree that just any Canadian content is not what is required. The present Broadcasting Act, established by the previous Liberal Government, reflected that the goal was not just programs being made in Canada, but that they be programs reflective of Canada. Granted that fulfilling that objective was easier in the past before the predominance of cable TV, it was interpreted to mean that over half the programming provided by each station or network should be Canadian. The technical interpretation of the predominantly Canadian provision is unclear and the CRTC has allowed a number of services to operate with more limited levels of Canadian programming, particularly specialized limited audience services in ethnic languages or on pay TV.

In response to that the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, in its fifteenth report, recommended that the definition of "predominantly Canadian" be clarified so that the meaning would be obvious, that most of the programming provided would be indeed Canadian, and that the CRTC be allowed to exempt from the requirement the specialized limited audience services I just mentioned. For those services the requirement is not practical.

Originally the Government rejected that recommendation, but after much criticism from many experts a watered down provision was included in the Bill as Clause 3(1)(e). The Government accepted the standing committee's first recommendation but not the second. The redrafting is so poor that it is unclear whether the intent is the programming provided by Canadian broadcasters should indeed be predominantly Canadian. This clause is so important that the Bill should not be passed unless it is amended. Otherwise, without a clear requirement for Canadian content, the CRTC will have no legislative basis on which to maintain any such requirement.

Prior to the introduction of this Bill the Canadian broadcasting policy was based on two fundamental goals. First, to maintain a separate broadcasting system rather than simply allowing American broadcasters to extend their reach into Canada. Second, to ensure that those broadcasters provide a reasonable amount of Canadian programming. A major criticism that many people have advanced is the failure of this Bill to address carriage regulations for cable. This was seen as an urgent and important issue by the standing committee and the Caplan-Savageau task force on broadcasting which reported two years ago. The standing committee concluded "the carriage regulations for cable are at least as important as the requirements for individual broadcasters in maintaining any reasonable balance between Canadian and foreign programming in the system". Both committees concluded that the Government should define for the CRTC which channels cable systems should carry. The Bill, however, is silent on this issue.

The Liberal Party moved an amendment to define the role of distribution undertakings as that of distributing Canadian radio and television services in French and English, both public and private, with first priority given to public sector Canadian services, followed by private Canadian services. This amendment was rejected by the Government. It was modified and presented again and rejected again.

In the new Act there are also some changes in the CBC's mandate. In the 1968 Act the CBC was to provide "a balanced service of information, enlightenment and entertainment". The new Act states that the CBC should provide a wide range of information and entertainment programming. Why does the Government object to the word "enlightenment" as part of the mandate of the CBC? This has not been explained. In terms of actual practicalities, there are those who suggest that this could mean the end of programs like The Nature of Things, CBC TV, which attract large audiences.

I want to talk also about the situation with respect to condominium owners and this Bill. Owners of condominiums which have an MATV system are concerned that under Bill C-136 they will be considered a distribution undertaking and subject to licensing by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. Their concern centres around the wording of the definition of "distribution undertaking" in clause 2(1) which, when taken together with clause 4(3), would bring MATV systems under the Act to the extent they receive and redistribute broadcast signals. The Canadian Bar Association addressed this issue in its brief to the legislative committee studying Bill C-136. It stated:

> There continues to be an omission in the Act, namely, the situation where an apartment or hotel distribution system, either using encrypted radio signals, or closed-circuit cable system, provides programs solely to the tenants of the apartment building or the guest rooms of a hotel. Constitutional issues aside, in that case, the new Act would not apply to the system because the signals would probably not be thought of as being intended for reception by the public.

Prior to Bill C-136, the situation was different, but the unease among condominium owners continues. The amendments which would have clarified the situation have been rejected. My Party believes that condominium owners have the right to know where they stand with respect to this issue. The amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), and rejected by the Government, clearly provides that assurance while allowing the CRTC to place terms and conditions to ensure fairness to local licensed cable television systems.

I have one final comment I want to make. It concerns the provision in this Act that allows the Government to give policy directions to the CRTC. This is worrisome. There is a point where it is logical but the Bill really is too open-ended. It would allow the Cabinet sweeping powers that ought to be spelled out in the law. Lately we are seeing quite a lot of the kind of drafting which allows the Government to make any regulations it chooses. This is a bad practice. It is a practice which has escalated with this Government. I may say that the assignment of all power to the executive is also the hallmark of the new free trade bill.

Most of the experts in the field, including members of the Task Force on Broadcasting, thought the Government should have some policy-making authority over the CRTC. However, the trouble is that this Bill as drafted would open the door to those powers being used in a Draconian sense. Whenever we look at legislation, I suppose we always have to look at it with two optics. First, one can assume the legislation is going to be administered by sensible people and people of goodwill. Therefore, if one takes that position, one does not become too worried about having things left wide open to be subject to regulation. However, I think as legislators we cannot assume that every Bill will always be administered by people of goodwill and good sense. We do have an obligation to have some things clearly specified. I would suggest that the issue of the Government giving policy directives to CRTC is one which should have been specified very much more clearly rather than left to be regulated.

The Standing Committee also wanted some real limits set on foreign, mostly U.S., broadcasting services in Canada. The Government rejects this. Again, one can look at it from both points of view. We would all say that Canadians should have as much choice and freedom in choosing what to watch as possible. But the Government also has an obligation to encourage the development of Canadian talent, Canadian expression, and while there is a balancing act here, it would appear as though the Government is choosing to go the route of continuing to let our airwaves be swamped with American content, often American content which is not of any great artistic value.

This is a Bill which is a start but which needs a great deal more work. It is regrettable that the Government has not been prepared to look seriously at amendments or to do the necessary work to give us a Bill of which we could be proud.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I want to thank my hon. colleague for a very well presented argument in the interests of a Canadian content of the Canadian system. Because she sits on the committee on Finance and Economic Affairs and because she was well aware of the changes that were to be brought through tax measures, I would like to ask her about the capital cost allowance and the kind of exchange, perhaps, or the kind of concerns that that brought to her attention. I heard the Member say it was important to find the mechanisms to develop the artistic skills and demonstrate the competence of our own Canadian talent and to develop the opportunity to see the expression of Canadian talent on our screens. As the Member pointed out, American programs are very costly to produce. We need all the kinds of internal funding here in Canada that is possible.

The Minister has enriched the Telefilm fund, that is true, that is public money, but added to that we had the potential, through the Capital Cost Allowance, of increasing the incentives of the private sectors in the film industry. We were able, through this House, to persuade the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to reinstate the capital cost allowance for the mining industry but we were not able to do so for the film industry. I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on that particular aspect which is in her portfolio.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that one of the traditional roles of the CBC has been to showcase Canadian talent. We have all heard many briefs from those who saw the role of CBC as hopefully expanding in the future to showcase more Canadian films. There is indeed a very direct connection between the Member's question and this Broadcasting Bill before us.

I suppose the Government, in removing the tax incentives for the film industry, has taken the Draconian approach it has taken in a number of other matters. Granted, there were some lawyers, doctors and others who were doing very well financially out of sinking money into the film industry, and there was a place to close that loophole. To close a loophole is one thing but to close off an important incentive to creativity is quite another. Indeed, the Government went too far with its sledge-hammer approach.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, it gives me some pleasure to be able to make a few further remarks on Bill C-136. I want to say how much I regret that the Government chose to defeat the amendment I put forward to this Bill as it affected the provisions for condominiums. Unfortunately, as a result of that, the anxiety of those people who happen to live in condominiums has not been satisfied at all, and their concerns will continue.

I want to say a few words at the outset on the provisions of this Bill as it affects the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The provisions of the Bill dealing with the CBC, Canada's national broadcasting service, were greatly improved in the legislative committee. The Minister has acknowledged that the CBC is the principle vehicle for cultural expression in Canada, and in the committee, the committee members worked hard to ensure that the word "enlightenment" was returned to the mandate of the CBC. The regional programming provisions of the CBC's mandate which had been weakened in the Minister's original Bill were strengthened in committee and there were other important amendments made which have also added to the legislation.

However, the bottom line question is: "Where's the beef?" There is no use for the CBC to have a broad mandate if the network does not have the resources to fulfil it. Obviously, the specific question of funding is not a legislative matter. However, it remains fundamental that, on the question of funding and other non-legislative matters, we in the NDP have a profoundly different view from that of the Conservatives.

The fact is that the Conservatives have launched a vigorous and systematic assault on the CBC since they arrived in office in 1984. They took over from the Liberals who, in their last years in office, sought to solve the deficit problems on the backs of this country's cultural industries.

The CBC's parliamentary allocation has been cut enormously in real terms since 1984. In fiscal year 1984-85, it was cut by $905 million. The effect of the Government's policy, first and foremost, has been what could be called the de facto privatization of the network. More and more, the CBC has been forced to count on its own resources to stay afloat. Over the past four years, the evolution of CBC-generated revenue has also not been of great help to the CBC.

The pattern is clear. It has been to cut the CBC's public funding and to force it to increase commercial revenues and act more like a private station. As the CBC noted in its brief to the committee:

> —this affects the quality and distinctiveness of the program schedule and it also means that creative risks have to be minimized or eliminated. This is not compatible with a Public Service mandate.

The damage has been most pronounced in the areas of regional programming. The standing committee set out in detail the crisis in the CBC's regional centres. In recent years, the network has been forced to cut 28 per cent of resources for regional programming in order to maintain network programming services on a national level. This has meant lost jobs and services for Vancouver, Calgary, Quebec City, Halifax and Chicoutimi, for example.

We have witnessed the forced centralization and privatization of the network itself. Peter Cochrane, a member of ACTRA, said the following in detailing the effects of the CBC cut-backs on the regions and on the quality of programming in general:

> We think the emphasis that should be placed on local and regional programming must be large. Right now, with the reduction in budgets—and I am talking as I said, predominantly about radio—what has happened is that one of the finest radio systems in the world—and I think it is not arguable—has been eviscerated.
> The general standard of programming, the general standard of what is made available to Canadians for the nurturing of their minds and their spirits, has become less and less and less effective. The stuff that is being reached out now and is being pumped into radios across the country is made level—a lot of it—generic pap, level pap, to which people are not required to respond.

We must remember that for the national broadcasting service to truly reflect Canada, there must be quality programming coming from all regions of the country and artists must have a variety of points of entry into the system.

The Minister has spoken of the money she has offered to the CBC in her new broadcasting policy in order for the corporation to reach the commendable aim of having 95 per cent Canadian content. In fact, the Minister is giving $20 million to the English service and only $15 million to the French service. This is great, but it does not come close to correcting the damage caused by the sledge-hammer cuts over the last four years. Even with the money, the CBC will not be able to meet the 95 per cent level unless it reallocates money, presumably from the regions, to meet this limited goal.

Thus, when we look at the substance and not the rhetoric being offered by the Minister, we find it lacking. The basic conclusion of the Caplan-Sauvageau report was that the CBC was the heart of the broadcasting system and it was seriously underfunded. It was the Conservative chairman of the communications committee who said that $250 million in new funding was needed to meet the country's broadcasting goals. This Minister has not even come close, as Dale Goldhawk, the President of ACTRA said, in responding to the Government's policy statement:

> And while the CBC is expected to fulfill a wide mandate, the money to go forward simply isn't there. In short, this part of the announcement doesn't exactly make my socks roll up and down.

Pretty witty guy, he is. Gord Hunter of NABET has said the following on the Government's broadcasting policy:

> The CBC has faced financial difficulty since the mid-1970s but the real assault began in 1984 when the Conservative Government took office. Each year the situation has worsened. I cannot see how the corporation could possibly be expected to increase its Canadian-content levels to 95 per cent when the funds allocated to it will not come close to paying for the service it was able to provide Canadians back in 1984.
> In 1984 there was a very large budget cut at the CBC, and 1,200 jobs were lost. This reduction in funding and the subsequent reduction in staff has seriously reduced the CBC's capacity to produce and we have seen an ever-increasing reliance on advertising revenues to survive.

Two final points have to be made about the effects of the Tory cuts to the CBC and why the centrepiece of any broadcasting policy must be the restoration of CBC funding to the point that the network can adequately fulfil its mandate.

The first point is that the French services of the CBC, which produce more programs on a lesser budget, have been particularly ravaged by the Government's attack. The effect of this has been that the French network can rarely afford to produce teleromans and other programming which can have high production costs. Television series on Radio Canada can rarely go on location. Creators have stuck with simple in-studio sets with which they must compete with dubbed versions of Dallas and the like and we are committed to ensuring that the both the French and English services receive adequate funding.

Second, in the Minister's policy statement the Minister pays lip service to CBC Radio and its extraordinary success with Canadians. On a literal shoe-string these radio networks have produced an extraordinary array of fine radio programming. Every year we see it building an audience despite cut-backs that have led to more and more repeats. While the Minister throws crumbs to CBC Television, she does absolutely nothing for the suffering radio service.

I note that in the recent CRTC decision, which renewed the radio licences for only three years instead of five, the Commission said the following:

> The overwhelming majority of interveners expressed strong support of CBC radio, stressing their desire to see the quality of service maintained and supported by adequate Government funding . . . Many interveners however, expressed concern about the CBC's ability to sustain the quality of its radio services in the face of reduced federal funding.

I do not want to take too long in this debate, but it seems to me that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is one of those structures in Canada that holds this country together much in the same fashion as a transportation system does. If the CBC were not there, many communities in Canada would not receive that kind of communication, very often because the private corporations and the private companies do not see a profit in providing that service. Canadians have recognized over the years that the only way that service can be provided is through a publicly funded corporation such as the CBC.

What we have seen over the last number of years is not so much whether or not Canadians deserve that type of service, but really an ideological approach to how Canadians receive these vital and necessary services. I want to say very clearly and very bluntly, not only to the Minister but to the Canadian public, that about the only Party which has consistently supported the kind of service provided by the CBC over the years has been this Party and the New Democratic caucus.

In conclusion, we in this Party and Canadians in general very much appreciate the tremendous amount of hard work that has been put into committee stage and all the proceedings that have gone on around this Bill by my colleague, the critic in this area, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I sat in on several of the meetings when witnesses appeared before that committee and I was quite impressed at the way the Hon. Member handled himself and pressed forward our Party's position on this very important matter.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I would like to take advantage of the remarks which the Member has just made with respect to the work of his colleague. I would agree that it has been an extraordinary catch-up and he has done an outstanding job. I would also like to pay tribute, and I am sure he would agree with me, to the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who, unfortunately, cannot be here. She put about two years of her time and effort into the considerations as we travelled across this country with an excellent team of professionals and professional staff to come up with this report of our standing committee, which I think stands as a landmark view and review of the broadcasting industry.

I think we should pay our respects and particular accolades to the Chairman of the committee and the members of the committee whose names are quite well known at this point. Behind the scenes we had an outstanding Director of Research, Paul Audley; an Assistant Director of Research, Rene Lemieux; researchers from the Library of Parliament, Tony Jackson, Millie Morton, and James Robertson; and a Senior Consultant, Tim Creery. We had other consultants who I think deserve to be recognized. They include Peter Grant, John McKay, Jean Paquin, Robert Pilon, Mark Stiles, and Robert Storey. We had some outstanding editors and administrative assistants, secretaries, and assistants from Centralized Support and Translation Bureau.

I say this because I think it is important to acknowledge the role that was played by our staffs, both the staff to the parliamentary committee for over two and a half years and our own personal staffs behind the scenes who enable us to be effective in this House. Members are only as effective as the collegiality of the research body that helps us draw up these kinds of reports.

That being said, the Minister, who had her speech delivered by another Minister in the House early this morning, said that she felt that this Bill should go through, had to go through, that there would be very unhappy constituents out there if the Bill did not go through.

Does the Member believe that the broadcasting system of Canada would be more damaged with the new Bill than it presently is? Because the friends of public broadcasting, or because one of the authors of the task force report, Mr. Gerald Caplan, and perhaps because the NDP of Québec region did not feel rather strongly that this Bill should go through, should we capitulate or have we, with the help we have had, done the kind of study that indicates that this is not a good Canadian Bill for Canadian broadcasting and for Canadian people?

Mr. Young: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) for reminding me of the tremendous work that research and support staff do for Members of the House of Commons on our committee work. I agree with her that very often we do not pay as much attention or give as much praise, if you will, to those people who work so hard to make us look good very often.

In response to the Member's question, I heard my colleague, the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, set out at least six points on which he expressed his concern over the flaws in the Bill. He has also indicated that we think that the Bill, with perhaps a little more consideration from the Government, would have been much stronger for Canadian broadcasting.

Having said that, I also appreciate the problem that the Minister has because of the debate that has gone on around the CBC over the last number of years. I can only guess at her difficulties in not accepting our suggestions. My friend, the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, has clearly indicated that we do not feel that we can support the Bill in its present form. We very much regret that because we all would have wanted to make this review, the first real review of Canadian broadcasting in a number of years, a very positive one. Unfortunately, because of the flaws in the Bill, we do not think we will be able to support it.

BROADCASTING ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-136, an Act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereto and in relation to radiocommunication, be read the third time and passed, and the amendment of Mrs. Finestone (p. 19682).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, one of the casualities of this somewhat bizarre period we are going through, where the election campaign is being fought within the confines of Parliament Hill, rather than on the streets and hustings of Canada where it probably belongs, is that we are now being faced with exorbitant demands by the Government to rush through very important pieces of legislation that reach into the very vitals of this country in a very profound way without the proper examination, judgment, or reflection that such a policies require and demand.

In saying that, I want to pay tribute to my colleague, the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), who against incredible odds has made every effort to introduce changes and amendments to the legislation that would reflect the testimony heard in the committee and draw out the concerns that so many organizations and so many Canadians have expressed.

The Bill was introduced only in late summer and Canadians have not been given the proper opportunity to engage in the debate that is required, especially when so much is at stake.

We are well aware that that some very important pressures are impinging upon the question of culture in this country. One is the explosion of a broadcasting technology that has exponential growth with the innovation and expansion of new forms of broadcasting and distribution in all varieties of communication. It simply astounds the imagination. One only needs to read recent articles that suggest the video recorder is on its way out. I went to buy a compact disc, only to discover that the salesperson told me it would be obsolete within months and a new type of tape would replace it.

Similarly in the area of broadcasting and the emergence of world-wide satellite technology and other innovations, it is absolutely imperative that we acquire a framework of public policy that is flexible enough to incorporate that change and still incorporate very specific values about what we as Canadians want to capture as part of the broadcasting spectrum so that Canadians would have a fair choice. That is one set of pressures.

The other set of pressures are applied as a result of our geographic location. It has been the touchstone of Canadian cultural policy since time immemorial. We have a neighbourhood relationship with a very powerful country that has been very successful in developing a dominating global communications empire. It is one of those areas of American industry that has dominated the world and which has developed an enormous political power within in order to protect itself.

I returned from the United States last week where I gave a series of lectures. It is fascinating to see how their view of their communication industry is, first, so different from ours, and second, so much dominated by a mixture of commercial and political forces to give it such incredible power within that country. Unfortunately, over the years that power has been exercised upon our country.

Canada is not seen as a distinct entity by the American communications industry, but simply seen as a suburb of Akron, Ohio, or some other regional variation to be addressed. There is no comprehension whatsoever on the part of that industry that it is dealing with a separate entity which has its own concerns, interests and values. We are simply treated as an appendage of its own distribution network. As a result, various Canadian governments over the years, Conservative and Liberal, have had to find ways to combat that while attempting to maintain an open communications system which offers a fair amount of choice without imposing complete isolation within national boundaries. It has been one of the most difficult balancing acts attempted by Canadian governments over time.

The Broadcasting Act has been an essential element in that policy. The American influence is not concerned about the Canadian Opera Company or the Royal Winnipeg Ballet. It is primarily concerned about popular culture, where it makes money. That is the American preoccupation. They would be quite willing to allow us to subsidize the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, but when it comes to popular culture in television, radio, film and publishing, it is a very different story and attitude.

This has been compounded very dramatically by a Bill that was also passed by the House just a few weeks ago. Bill C-130, dealing with the trade agreement, opens a whole new set of pressures and makes us even more vulnerable than we were to those commercial judgments.

Every cultural organization that appeared before the committee on Bill C-130, and others, pointed out that Article 2005 of the Agreement, the notwithstanding clause, gives the Americans the power to retaliate on what they consider to be any future act of a Canadian government that will impinge upon their commercial interests. That is a Damocles sword over the head of Canadians when they try to deal with the expansion of new technologies and distribution networks. That will require major redefining, but Canadians will be faced with a sanction that will always be present if the agreement is ratified. Of course, that is something that we and a majority of Canadians hope will never come about. It is something still to be decided.

The debate on the Broadcasting Act must be seen in the context of that new development. It is not only a theoretical threat, it is one that has already been exercised. We have already seen the pressure applied with the kind of Valenti muscle that was exercised with respect to the radical alteration of the proposed film Bill the Minister talked about a few years ago. It has now become a pale ghostly shadow of its original self.

We have seen how that kind of American muscle has been applied in the publishing industry. The brave words of the former Minister of Communications about ensuring that takeovers and acquisitions would be carefully guarded have simply disappeared before the blind eye that has been turned toward this area.

Therefore we must question whether the Broadcasting Act will give us the ability to meet such challenges. Will it provide the ability and resources in Canada to meet the new technology and the very omnipresent and growing American demand for full and complete access and control of our popular communications systems? As has been expressed at second reading, at committee stage and during third reading by my colleague, this Bill has failed that fundamental test. It has not given any confidence that it will provide a strengthened defence in terms of retaining the capacity of Canadians to protect their popular culture systems and feel free that they will at least have an effective choice.

Part of that weakened defence has been the kind of undermining and erosion that has taken place on the CBC itself since the inception of the Government. We have seen the cutback on budgets and the informal but very clear intimidation on the public network. The limitation on its independent role severely weakens the network.

If the CBC is expected to carry the load in terms of dealing with the challenges I have outlined, then it has not been given the resources to do it. The tasks may be clear and identified but the flesh is weak. It simply does not have the necessary support and resources. The move to diffuse the role of the CBC into new channels and alternate networks without any accompanying infusion of proper resources simply dilutes its ability to meet its task.

I think that Members of Parliament should take seriously the kind of statements that were made by the President of the CBC in front of the committee about just how precarious a position it has been put in, just how difficult it is. It is unfortunate that that kind of ammunition was not recognized by way of changes to the Broadcasting Act, or further commitments by the Government. God knows it is not for lack of money. The Government has committed in the last three months $15 billion or $16 billion to various projects around the country. Obviously, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has found a new money tree somewhere, or the whole fiscal framework has been thrown out the window for the sake of the election. Within that $15 billion or $16 billion of new commitment, surely there might have been something more for the Canadian broadcasting network, in a substantial way.

If that is the number one requirement we have, why is it less deserving than a gas pipeline to Vancouver Island which in itself may be of some value? I am not here to judge that in this debate. But surely on the scale of priorities—and particularly the priority of what this national Government is responsible for—nothing is more precious or valuable than the communication/cultural system of the country in light of the globalization and the Americanization that is taking place as part of it. Yet not one cent was provided to it.

Similarly, I want to point to the changed definitions that we apply to private broadcasters. It has been acknowledged that this is an area that has never been managed successfully. I do not think that anyone has been able to find the will or the fortitude by which to make a requirement for our private broadcasters to live up to a high level of responsibility. This is not a partisan attack. I include Governments of which I was a Member and which I supported over the last 15 or 20 years. I do not think we have ever applied the will necessary even through the CRTC or the Cabinet to make it stick. The price of a licence, being able to get on that airwave, I think, is an extraordinarily valuable entitlement, a rare one, a privileged one that we have given. Yet we have never asked for a full set of obligations in return.

There have been very powerful lobbies and very strong arguments, but the fact of the matter is that the private broadcasting system in this country has not lived up to its obligations to give Canadians real choices. You know the figures as well as I do, Madam Speaker, you have heard them in the House. Some 98 per cent of our drama is foreign, most of it American. That is shameful.

If we look at the area in which we are supposed to have real competence, in news broadcasting and public affairs, something we have taken some pride in as Canadians, by comparison so little of the budgets of private broadcasters is spent in those areas—very, very little little of it. There is nothing in this Broadcasting Act which strengthens that. The very strong message that came out of the Caplan-Sauvageau report has somehow been dissipated, kind of vapourized in this Bill. In fact, I would have to say that the management of the present system gives signals of that kind, both at the level of the commission and at the level of the Department.

I would like to give you one example, Madam Speaker. I have now received I do not know how many inquiries or demands from my own constituents about the displacement of the parliamentary channel from the cable system on to a cable system that requires a new converter. In my riding there are a lot of people who can neither afford a new converter nor a new TV set. They simply do not have the money. Yet they have found a great satisfaction—sometimes one wonders why—in watching the parliamentary channel, watching Question Period and debates. A lot of people feel that that is a very important exercise of their citizenship. As a Member of Parliament you yourself, Madam Speaker, would know how people draw to your attention when you have been saying something good, bad or whatever. That has become, in part, an ingredient in our culture over time. I guess we can say that it is certainly no worse than the soap operas with which it competes. Certainly, we have all learned how to dress more appropriately at least.

Why would we allow a system, a judgment that brings MuchMusic on to the cable systems, which is okay? I watch it. It is kind of fun at times. Or why would we allow a system that brings a new family channel or a new religious channel, both of which are valuable and have a minority interest but which displace the opportunity for Canadians to watch their own Government in action?

I have written to the Chairman of the CRTC about it. We have raised the matter in the House. The fact of the matter is that it says something. There is a signal out there that no one is minding the store. No one is applying themselves to that kind of judgment. It slipped by and everybody is backing off. It is like watching those sports officials in Seoul last night who were saying: "It is not my fault". Talk about passing the buck. I am afraid that that has become too much of a pastime under this present regime. Yet here is something that is very crucial to Canadians and we have allowed it to take place.

Let me give you another example, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

I think it is very important for all Francophones in Canada and in fact the whole country to have access to Channel TV5. Especially since the Government of Canada paid most of the money for this service. There is a service for Quebec and for the "Francophonie" but not for Ontario and certainly not for the West or the Atlantic provinces.

I think the people of my riding have the right to have access to Channel TV5. But the Government of Canada isn't there to make a clear-cut decision that will get the service for the entire country.

Madam Speaker, this is one more example of the lack of direction in Canadian policy. It's fine for Senegal to receive Canadian programs, but I think people in Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Moncton should enjoy the same privilege. This is one more example of the vacuum that exists in our communications policy.

[English]

That is the problem. The Broadcasting Act is not a piece of legislation that reflects a coherent set of judgments about what Canadian communication policy must be in light of the kind of conditions. It has been kind of patched together to satisfy one interest over another. A little cloth has been cut here and something has been tailored there, but it does not represent the kind of framework of broadcasting that the future of this country will require, especially in light of what we face.

I see you are asking me to conclude, Madam Speaker. I would like to cite one small example which will just take a moment. I refer to the amendments proposed at committee concerning the question of satellites for condominium owners. The amendments which we had gave proper credibility to the right to license programming coming in, but they also gave the technology access. The amendments proposed would have created a system equal to all Canadians. But it was also rejected even though it was supported by all sides of the House—by New Democrats, Tories and Liberals. Once again, there was a kind of blankness and refusal to respond to those kinds of conditions, simply because it was already fixed in stone.

The great regret of this—and it may be a product of haste and rush—is that it is not the kind of Broadcasting Act that Canadians either need or deserve, and it will not provide the kind of important front line argument and structure that we will need to deal with the future, especially as it relates to the preservation of Canadian culture.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I want to say to my hon. colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry that I was very pleased to see him mention, first of all, TV5, as it would bring a cultural perspective of French Canada to all Canadians. Many Canadians are bilingual, and I am sure that they would be interested in watching it. It would also bring in the international aspect of France and Belgium and Senegal.

It would seem to me that when we are spending Canadian public-federal dollars there is no reason why that public-federal service should not be available, if we truly believe that the fundamental characteristic of Canada is its bilingual nature. I can remember the arguments around the French and English on the cornflakes box. I hope we are not going to go back to that silly business.

You, I know, have had an ongoing interest around condominiums, and I was glad to hear you mention that. But because you mentioned at the outset of your remarks that you have been in the United States recently—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member, even in the period of question and comments, would come through the Chair to ask her questions and address the Hon. Member. It was done before and I let it go. The Hon. Member.

Mrs. Finestone: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You are right. I had forgotten the protocol of the Chair. Through the Chair, I would ask the Hon. Member if in his recent trip to the United States, and with his knowledge of the free trade Bill, he would see that although the Minister may well have wanted to have had a Canadian Bill that would reflect Canadian concerns, because the entertainment aspect is not seen as a cultural aspect in the United States, that had some true implication for the potential for licensing any and all satellite-to-cable programs, direct-to-home, which perhaps can soon be part of the new technology, or the direct broadcasting system, the concerns that new technologies will bring, and if we do not control them, we are going to have an even greater problem on our hands.

What would his view be regarding entertainment versus cultural programs, or cultural sovereignty?

Mr. Axworthy: In response to my colleague from Mount Royal, it may be that too few Canadians and perhaps too few Members of this House have taken the time to read carefully both the American implementing legislation dealing with the trade agreement and, perhaps more important the accompanying document that was issued by the President called Administrative Action. Within that document you will find that the Americans make very specific definition as to what they consider to be the impact of the trade agreement. They believe that any attempt by Canada to subsidize a cultural or communication activity that will injure their commercial interest will now be subject to a substantial countervail retaliation, not just in the area of culture but in other industries as well. They can attack hydro or automobiles for undertaking that kind of action.

It is interesting to note, in exchanging views with American experts in the field, which I have done in various meetings over the past week, that their view is that that is one of the great advantages that they have won as a result of the trade agreement. They have been able to see this as a way of substantially restricting any further attempts of Canadian content rules or limiting distribution in other areas. That is part of their win-win proposition.

The definition, of course, is one that is very clear. They see it purely as an enterprise. Perhaps you have to understand that is a country where there is virtually no foreign broadcasting. I guess the odd British film shows up on PBS from time to time, but Americans basically look at their own programming. They have no understanding or concept or sensitivity to a country such as ours, where 98 per cent of our drama is from a foreign country and, therefore, we have to provide protection. They see it purely as something that is a market-place decision, a market-place decision, by the way, that must be buttressed and supported by the power of the state.

I am just illustrating this particular observation that was made to me. It is one reason why the Americans have been so supportive of this particular trade agreement. They see it as a way of establishing a precedent for bludgeoning into other markets around the world.

The attitude expressed by Secretary Treasurer Baker and Ambassador Yeutter in front of the House of Representatives and the Senate Committee, on testifying, shows very clearly that the reason that American Congressmen should support the trade legislation is that it will give a lesson to other countries, that if they try to get cute on things like culture, establishing new forums and relations, then the Canadian example can be used to break through.

They will be using this, very clearly, as part of their argument at the Uruguay Round to open up the whole system around the world for their access, because they know that they have such a dominant position in order to be able to do this. Attempts by other countries to provide content provisions or limitations will now be under attack, and we are aiding and abetting in that attack by the acquiescence of the trade agreement.

This is not simply a matter of a debate between some cultural groups. This is part of a very clear and broad trade strategy by the United States. They are under pressure and they are losing markets in their manufacturing, and they see that the opportunities in the service industries and to the so-called entertainment industry is prime among those. They will be using this in a way that they hope will bash their way in to other world markets. Other countries have attempted to preserve their cultural arrangements against that kind of Americanization. We are in fact an accomplice to something that will become a very major and dramatic debate, the GATT Round, and unfortunately we are on the wrong side of the argument.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate, although I didn't think it would be necessary. I thought the Government would understand the incredible significance of this debate. What I fail to understand, Madam Speaker, is that during the last minutes of a reign, of a government, we are . . .

Miss MacDonald: Filibuster!

Mr. Prud'Homme: I beg your pardon. If you really think this is a filibuster, you don't know what a filibuster is, because if anyone can organize a filibuster, I certainly can and I would give you your money's worth! I regret the attitude of the Hon. Member for . . . for which riding?

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: Are you objecting to the fact that some of our Members have the right to speak on broadcasting? Is that your complaint, Madam Minister? Ridiculous.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Right. So if we can let bygones be bygones, the Minister seems very anxious to have her Bill adopted, and I understand that. The Minister would like to see her legislation passed as quickly as possible. However, Madam Speaker, we are talking about some vital issues. As an experienced parliamentarian, I fail to understand that having come to the very end of this Government's mandate—of course this Government was duly and democratically elected, I realize that—I can't understand why, within the last two weeks, this Government has introduced bills that are incredibly important to Canada's future. There was the child care Bill, which of course is not before the House today, Madam Speaker.

I briefly took part in it, not on the substance of the matter but on the way we were to vote on it. It is as though the Government, at the last minute, looked back on its election platform of four years and two months ago and said, "Oh, how can it be? We forgot day care! Let's bring in a Bill, rush the Opposition, rush all the interest groups and pass this Bill." In the last minute, almost at the last gasp of a dying Parliament! And again today, they come to us with a Bill! I see that they are impatient, that the Minister is very impatient, I understand that, but if she would bear with us, I could tell her, "Madam, why did you not force your Government to deal with this question long before today?"

When you have a Minister with clout in a department or in Cabinet, I think it is that Minister's duty, as my colleague, the Whip for my Party, and my Party's excellent critic, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), will tell you, when a Minister has clout, he or she must fight within Cabinet and say, "This is a priority." If it is a priority today, in the last minute, why were these Bills not a priority a year ago?

So I am quite amazed that in the last minute, perhaps in the last week of a long reign, because their term in office is almost the equivalent of five years, Madam, since we have sat continually, with extended hours and summer leave cancelled. The Government has really had five years and not four and in the very last minute, it wants to force through two bills that it considers very important and that we consider important. It wants to show Canadians that the Opposition is blocking two Bills, when there have only been three speakers, I think, on this Bill . . . Madam Speaker, I will not participate in a filibuster. We know that! I believe in Parliamentary reform. But I can tell you one thing: there is a difference between what you call a filibuster in English, i.e. unduly prolonging debate, and not debating at all, and we are within those limits.

You know, Madam Speaker, that we attach great importance to this Bill—that is understandable. Why? Because today, what is Canadians' main activity? It is watching television. It is not playing sports. Canadians are glued to the television twenty-four hours a week on average. It is important to know what is on television. It is important to know who controls television. Every year, for our young pages who have just arrived . . .

• (1640)

Our young pages who have just arrived are a product of that generation. Each year Canadian children watch almost 1,000 hours of television, compared to 800 hours spent in school.

It reminds me of the debate I had some years ago when I had the honour of being the arts and culture critic prior to my esteemed colleague, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), who did a remarkable job in her new assignment. I remember that I said to the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse) when he was the Minister, and that was before he became popular, "You have a duty, Mr. Minister. You are not the defender of cabinet decisions near the artist, you have the duty to defend the artist in Cabinet." That is my conception of a Minister.

[Translation]

That is how I see a Minister's responsibility. He has a duty to defend the interests of his sector, meaning that if I am Minister of Youth, I defend youth, and if I am Minister of Seniors, I passionately defend senior citizens, and I would certainly do that. If I am supposed to defend farmers, I have a duty to stand up to my Cabinet colleagues. I am not supposed to take the Cabinet's decisions and get them accepted by the people whose interests I am supposed to represent. It wouldn't make sense.

I repeat what I said earlier that our children, who will build the Canada of tomorrow, watch 1000 hours of television and spend only 800 hours in school.

Madam Speaker, 95 per cent of Canadians listen to the radio for an average 18 hours a week. Madam Speaker, this is very, very significant, if my figures are correct.

But I said all this during the debate we had two and a half years ago to Mr. Masse, our present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Two-thirds of Canadians . . .

[English]

Two-thirds of Canadians admit that watching television is their favourite pastime. I enjoy it too. Sometimes I watch television for too long in the late hours and it is terrible, Madam Speaker, as you know very well when you have to get up early in the morning, and you cannot do otherwise but keep watching television because it is interesting. In my case I watch international affairs, disarmament questions, east-west relationships, and political programs; for others it is a cowboy program, a criminal program, or violence. However, it is very important.

Today we are told we are filibustering after three speakers. We must make sure Canadians understand, regardless of whether or not there is an an election coming that, at the very last minute this Government has decided today to ram through the House a very major, capital, and important piece of legislation. That is the reason that, at the very last minute, I accepted the request of my esteemed colleague, the Hon.

Member for Mount Royal, who did a remarkable job in participating in this debate.

Fifty per cent of Canadians say that they are not too interested in reading, that their principal source of news and information comes from broadcasting. Madam Speaker, can you imagine that 50 per cent of Canadians say that broadcasting is their principal source of news and information. What does that mean in practice? It means that television shapes the minds of the people. Television shows them the type of news, or does not show them the type of news, and this is very dangerous. You, Madam Speaker, know what I am talking about because of your great career prior to this career. You understand the importance of broadcasting and television.

These young people who have just arrived to work in Parliament are the ones who probably tomorrow will be sitting in the House of Commons. Some of them get their information from television, or they are influenced by television. When you have a neighbour like the United States of America, and I hope they are listening across the street—for the time being. For listeners, when I say "across the street", I have to explain, to have an intelligent debate, that it is because the Embassy of the United States of America is across the street here in Ottawa.

When I was a student it used to be called the American Embassy. I remember I lead a delegation—I always liked demonstrations what I was a student. We had a few demonstrations to tell them that they should not call themselves the American Embassy, but the Embassy of the United States of America. It was a nuance that we students understood. We were proud Canadians and we understood the difference, because we are part of America too, but we are not citizens of the United States of America. We are Canadian. If we want to remain Canadian, if we want to have a Canadian country, and if we want to progress toward the future in remaining what we are and in becoming even better, we have to watch how we shape our brains. You do this by what you listen to, by what you see, or by what you read. It so happens that Canadians prefer television to reading. That means you gradually form an opinion of the world, of Canada, of your province, of your own race or religion, by what influences you. I repeat that to make Canadians understand why at this very last minute, it is important that we do not deal with this Bill urgently.

Last week it was day care. We are supposed to have a new era in Canada of participatory parliamentary process. Members of Parliament would be more independent. They would be somebodies after all. You remember that famous quote. Parliamentarians thought they were going to be somebody. They were going to give their time, their devotion, their patience and their understanding in working in a parliamentary committee. This was the invention of the man who is now Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland. He put his name on the report, the McGrath report. That dealt with reform of the House of Commons and its committees.

What happened with day care? Some 40 witnesses said it was bad, it was wrong. They are all experts. I am not an expert on day care, but I recognize its immense importance. You may smile but I understand the problems if we do not take care of our young Canadians. They are raised differently than you and I were raised. They are raised differently than my esteemed colleague from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was raised. Today we have a lot of single parents who could go on welfare. They want to work but they have children. They need day care. This did not exist in my day. I am the youngest of 12 children. We did not have day care because our society was different. I know we need a good full day care system, yet we rammed the Bill through the House. We did not listen to anything that was said in the committee. Now it has gone to the Senate and the Government would like the Senate to ram it through, otherwise the Conservatives will campaign against those in the Senate.

I say to the Senators: "As long as you exist, do your duty. You have the duty to at least study the Bill, at least for a couple of days. At least three days." Is that asking too much for something that is supposed to cost $6.4 billion?

Amendments to this Bill here today were turned down. Why did my colleague from Mount Royal work so hard? It is because she believed in the spirit of the McGrath report that says legislative committees will have some power. Power to convince. Power to be convinced. Power to call Canadians to participate, to give us their view, and then react accordingly.

There are parliamentarians who are stubborn and say this is the Bill, the Queen can do no wrong, the Minister can do no wrong, and it is take it or leave it. I would rather say leave it for a while until we come to our senses and recognize that the Bill is too important to ram it through the House so rapidly.

Do I need to say that the broadcasting message very often is not Canadian? I could talk for hours about Canada. Yes, I become passionate. What the hell am I doing in the House of Commons if I do not believe in Canada? I came here for that. Everything that could help us frame a good Canada must be debated and understood. Programming must be Canadian.

We should also remember it is all very well to talk about anglophones and francophones but we must understand that long before we were here, long before even my ancestors came to this country in the 1600s, there were native people and we should address that question.

I also disagree with the role of the President and Chairman of the CBC. This should be addressed.

I must conclude by saying I am disappointed, as Canadians should be, that a sense of urgency seems to have fallen upon the House of Commons. Everything is urgent. There is no urgency. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can call the election in the spring if he has such a—

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): No.

Mr. Prud'homme: Why not? I do not mind.

I would like to conclude by saying that this Bill should be suspended. If it is the intention of the Prime Minister of Canada, as is his right, to call an election, day care and this legislation should be put on the shelf and left to the next Government to decide how it wants to tackle it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, as the critic for communications and culture but more importantly as a Canadian, I know the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has a very passionate sense of the place of Canada and the importance of maintaining our identity. I heard him extol, and rightly so, the importance of differentiating ourselves from our American friends and cousins. He very often says that good fences make good neighbours.

Given that, I wonder how he feels about the fact that this Bill, while purportedly saying we are going to have a better Canadian broadcasting system, allows all kinds of American programs to come in here unlicensed. It does not define the necessity for predominantly Canadian content. It does not say where that content should appear on the screen.

The Hon. Member has also been outspoken, certainly in the lobby, with respect to TV5 and its importance for all Canadians. Therefore, does he feel it would be fair to allow the American systems access to our market and have them take the money out and produce fine programming but programming which can be hurtful to Canadian artists and their potential to grow and reach the world class level they are capable of?

Mr. Prud'homme: Well, Madam Speaker, that will show to my friend that we did not prepare ourselves accordingly, because if we had, I would be able to pick up a paper and have the answer. I will try. This is exactly what Winston Churchill said. This is true parliamentary debate and exchange. The essence of the British parliamentary system is to have that kind of exchange, unprepared. We see from time to time one of the members of the majority in the House asking a question of the Minister, such as happened today, and the Minister rising and giving the answer. Everyone knows it is theatre, it is prepared.

I do not deny the fact that Americans produce good programs. Of course, they do. They are so rich and powerful. I can use the same argument for the trade agreement of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and of President Reagan. I do not deny the fact that the Americans produce big and produce good, but they are big. I am not afraid of that. I enjoy the neighbourhood of the United States. I enjoy everything it can offer me, as I would hope Americans would enjoy what we can offer them. Unfortunately, it is very often a one-way street. The United States is so big. It does not want to harm us. I am sure of that. I am absolutely friendly with the United States of America. But I know one thing, being big as it is, it cannot care less about what it does to us, and this immense invasion of programming reduces our Canadianism. There is no doubt about that. Canadians will have to decide what kind of country they want and what kind of Canadianism they want to give to those who will come after them.

I am always extremely suspicious when a Bill of this kind is too general in tone. I do not like too much regulation. But there is not enough protection for us in this Bill against the absolute infiltration by American programming. It is not bad, it is dangerous, and at least we should realize it is dangerous. In a country the size of Canada, with our small population, we have to double our efforts in being more careful when we arrive at something that goes directly to the fabric of Canada, and that is this Bill. It is—

It is vague. It is not specific. There are too many loopholes. I am not overly fond of Bills that tell me where I am supposed to put the stamp on the envelope, and I hope I didn't give that impression. The simili, in any case, is very French. However, I would like to know how we can protect ourselves against this huge giant, a giant I am quite fond of, and I am referring to the United States. They are so pervasive and so powerful that if we don't watch out, the situation might become very dangerous for us.

[English]

What do we see in the national anthem? I had the honour, under the Right Hon. Lester Pearson, to be appointed to the National Anthem Committee. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) and I are the only sitting Members left of that committee. What did we include in the English version of O Canada? We say: "We stand on guard for thee". What does it mean? It means we must be careful with a Bill of this kind.

[Translation]

We must watch out. In fact, the same would apply, as I said earlier, to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. The agreement is not all bad.

[English]

We have what the Government calls the Free Trade Agreement, or, as my Party prefers to call it, the Mulroney-Reagan agreement. It would be silly to say that everything in it is bad. I am not ready to say that. I did not say it and I will not say it. But I am allowed to "stand on guard for thee". I say to you, the young people, it is your Canada that is at stake in the trade agreement. It is your Canada that is at stake in the kind of day care we want for Canada. It is your Canada that is at stake with these kinds of Bills, especially this one. This Bill is the most important thing because this is what influences people. How can we be denied the right to debate a little longer than three or four speakers for something that is—

. . . that goes straight to the roots of our Canadian identity? I am certainly not ashamed of taking part in the debate at the very last minute, because I thought the Government would say: Listen, we are going to call an election, enough is enough!

[English]

Enough is enough. How many more Bills does my dear friend have up his sleeve to try to ram through the House? Is he going to bring in Bill C-79? I had the honour to be the Chairman of the legislative committee on the reform of the Election Act. Is he going to bring another Bill forward? I would say, please, Madam Speaker, enough is enough. Please let us study this more attentively.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I must interrupt the Hon. Member. The period provided for questions and comments has now expired.

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, thank you, for giving me this opportunity to speak in debate on this important piece of legislation. One of the most important aspects of this present crisis in Canadian broadcasting is the increasing continentalization of our airwaves. The all-Party standing committee in its report recognized this problem and made a number of strong recommendations to ensure the distinctiveness of the Canadian market. These were not minor recommendations. As the sixth report of the standing committee, chaired by Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards), noted, these recommendations were parallel in importance to the Canadian content requirements that apply to individual licensed broadcasters. It is a combination of the Canadian content obligations applying to individual broadcasters and the carriage priorities, and other carriage rules applicable to cable, that determine whether the Canadian programming objectives set out in the broadcasting policy can be met.

The Minister explicitly rejected these recommendations to create a distinctive Canadian market. For example, Recommendation 58 said that the Act should be drafted so as to define the essential role of the distribution undertakings as that of distributing Canadian radio and television services in French and in English, both public and private, with first priority given to the public sector Canadian services, followed by private Canadian services.

With the exception of the three-plus-one services already carried, the Act should make provision for the carriage of foreign radio and television services only when the programming they provide is complimentary to that available from licensed Canadian broadcasters and network operators. The Act should also provide for priority to be given to the carriage of services in French and distribution undertakings that serve primarily Francophone subscribers.

Clearly it is the result of the trade deal negotiations that has hamstrung the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald). My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), put forward two motions that reflected the standing committee's and task force's reports to amend this Bill at report stage. They were Motions Nos. 36 and 39.

• (1710)

Motion No. 36 would ensure that all services operating in Canada, including U.S. satellite-to-cable services, are licensed. The House knows, for example, that the U.S. Arts and Entertainment Network is beamed into Canada by satellite and affiliates with cable companies package and sell it to Canadian subscribers. It makes no contribution to Canadian programming and does not need to meet the requirements of the CRTC. In fact, it basically costs A & E nothing to tap the Canadian market.

As the Association of Canadian Film and Television Producers said before the standing committee:

> It would be consistent with the government's stated policies for broadcasting in Canada to require all broadcast services available in Canada to be subject to CRTC regulation and approval. The CRTC has a demonstrated sensibility to the needs of broadcasters and the government's policy priorities. We should all be confident in the Commission's ability to develop a realistic licensing process for foreign satellite-to-cable services coming into Canada, given a solid legislative base.

That is what Motion No. 36 sought to do.

More important than this, however, was Motion No. 39. This motion would have ensured that, with the exception of the three plus one American networks, NBC, CBS, ABC and PBS and border stations, that carriage of foreign stations should only be provided by cable systems if the programming they provide is complementary to that available from licensed Canadian broadcasters and network operations. This motion is in part a response to the continuing penetration into the Canadian cable market by U.S. services. In particular, I am referring to the recent decision to license U.S. superstations which provide the unique service of Beverley Hillbilly reruns 12 hours a day in addition to Atlanta Braves, Mets and other baseball games.

As the producer groups rightly said when they came before the legislative committee, this will have a highly negative effect on the ability of Canadian producers to maintain a distinct Canadian market. To quote Sam Jephcott of the CFTA:

> Canadian producers have relied on the "cordon sanitaire" that kept such channels out of Canada in the past, an advantage that allowed them to license original Canadian programming to Canadian broadcasters as well as American ones, without the diminution in value that inevitably occurs when market exclusivity is compromised by transborder signal penetration.

Just as important as the question of a distinct Canadian production market is that of the viability of Canadian local stations such as City TV and specialty stations in the face of competition from directly competing U.S. services.

As I noted earlier, this motion comes from a direct communication of the all-Party standing committee's sixth report. In her response to that report, tabled with this Bill, the Minister gave the following reply, which is in my mind really quite extraordinary:

> The prohibition of foreign radio and television services other than those whose programming is complementary to that available from Canadian broadcasters has not been included in the legislation, since it would unduly restrict Canadians' access to a range of international broadcasting services.

The impact of the Minister's policy is really something quite different. She is simply dead wrong. Her policy will limit Canadian choices and the chance to watch Canadian broadcast services. As the Friends of Canadian Broadcasting rightly put it:

> If this country had adopted such an approach 60 years ago this country would never have developed a separate Canadian broadcasting system except in the public sector.

We are not proposing to stop Canadians from getting complementary services. We just want Canadians to have the chance to provide them. The standing committee, in the sixth report, put it very well, I think, by saying:

> We note that even in the large U.S. market, where service is provided entirely in English, there is only one available service in most programming categories. In Canada, it is beyond question that a Canadian service could not co-exist with a non-Canadian service, especially if the Canadian service is expected to provide a meaningful contribution to Canadian programming.

There was a Conservative majority on that committee, so the question is, what made the Tories—I notice one or two around—change their minds? Well, a group called the Cultural Industries Alliance made up of more than a dozen major cultural organizations has said the following:

> We have already seen evidence of the effect of the trade agreement on existing policies and policy development. This includes the rejection of key recommendation for Broadcast Policy made by the House of Commons Standing Committee—

This brings us to the general question of the impact of this trade deal on our cultural industries. It has clearly had an impact on the Bill before us. The Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) trade deal threatens to change completely the nature of cultural activity in Canada. The Prime Minister has repeatedly claimed that cultural policy was untouched by the trade deal. He has said with apparent pride that the status quo has been maintained.

What is the nature of the status quo of which the Prime Minister is so proud? Only 3 per cent of film profits stay in Canada, 3 per cent of videocassette sales are Canadian, prime time drama is 2 per cent to 3 per cent Canadian, and 77 per cent of all magazines sold in Canada are of foreign origin. The litany of statistics goes on. No other sovereign country can match this unfortunate situation.

The fact is that the United States has succeeded, in the trade negotiations, in whittling away at Canada's cultural programs as it has whittled away at so much of the character of Canada. As a direct or indirect result of the trade deal talks, the Conservative administration has abandoned its film distribution policy, abandoned the Baie Comeau book publishing policy which sought to repatriate a portion of our publishing industry, reduced the capital cost allowance on Canadian films which the Americans had argued was an unfair subsidy, and rejected a number of important recommendations of the House of Commons standing committee in the recently announced broadcasting policy. Worse, the trade deal effectively blocks Canada from adopting new policies to reverse the foreign domination of our culture so clearly revealed in the above-mentioned statistics.

According to Trade Ambassador Simon Reisman, new measures affecting cultural industries would be scrutinized by both sides to determine whether they are consistent or inconsistent with the agreement. The United States will be able to take retaliatory action of "equivalent commercial effect" against any Canadian cultural program that is inconsistent in its view with the agreement. In effect, it defines as an unjust cultural subsidy any action which costs the United States money.

In the area of communication as in so many other spheres of our relationship with the United States as a result of the trade deal, we are chipping away at the character of Canada and chipping away at those structures which will enable us to determine our own future, not only in the economic sphere but in the cultural sphere as well. What is more, we add to the sad litany of negative effects for our country that have been listed by those of us who oppose this deal.

I was interested in hearing my colleague in the Liberal Party express his pride in our country. That is a pride that I would like to have maintained in my own heart. However, that kind of pride in this country can only be reinforced and maintained if we have those powers and those abilities within our land that will enable us to determine our own future in all spheres, not because we are disinterested in appropriate economic and commercial relationships with other countries but because, if we are to have proper and rewarding relationships with other countries, as other countries have with us, those relationships must be based on the integrity of our nationhood.

This Bill, as so many others, because of a context which chips away at that nationhood, constitutes a failure on the part of the Government that should be the basis for its punishment when after Friday afternoon the Prime Minister, we all hope, will finally get up the courage to go to the polls to determine whether in fact the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal will be the determinant of our future or whether it will be the consciences and the needs of the Canadian people which will determine the future of our country.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in his speech the Hon. Member has stated that this Conservative Broadcasting Act will threaten the capacity of Canada to project its individuality, its soul, its self and, in particular, its capacity to project that individuality up against this massive attack of American media which comes from south of the border to threaten, not intentionally, I believe, Canadian expression or Canadian culture. However, it is a massive attack of radio, television, magazines, and even newspapers. Today I was walking down the street and saw that we now have newspaper boxes for U.S.

News Today on our streets. That may become more prevalent if this free trade deal goes into operation.

The Member has very well expressed this threat to our capacity, through broadcasting, to express ourselves as Canadians. I want to make sure that his point is not missed by the Canadian electorate who might be following this debate. Could he give us some more examples of exactly how threatening this Bill is to our capacity to do that. We do not get too many opportunities to put forward our point of view. We do not have the same resources as the Government, and I look on these debates in the House of Commons as one of the few means that we have to expose the weaknesses of the Government's legislation.

I know the Member ran out of time. Perhaps he has some more examples of how serious a threat this Bill is to broadcasting in Canada and the capacity of our country to express its culture and individuality so that we all have something in common.

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I was much taken with the preamble to his question in which he cited the tremendous impact upon Canadian culture of the American media. I immediately began to reflect upon that most conspicuous of matters treated in recent weeks by the American media, to wit, the presidential election. I like to think of Canada as a tolerant country, a country that accepts dissent, accepts a diversity of opinion. Indeed, I would like to think of Canada as—and please do not misunderstand me, let me make sure that I say this clearly—essentially a small "l" liberal country. I mean that to construe a nation of tolerance, of diversity of ideas and dissent.

We are being bombarded with the notion that somehow it is a sin to be a liberal by an American media which, through this Bill will gain, one way or another, continued and perhaps expanded access to Canada as an audience. It is suggested that to believe seriously that sticking laser weapons and other kinds of contraptions in orbit for war purposes is destabilizing, and to describe it as such and to suggest for a moment that these mass expenditures on weapons constitute a danger to society is somehow bad. They suggest that if every American does not, at every excuse, jump up and recite the Pledge of Allegiance, that is somehow un-American.

I know, Madam Speaker, that just as I and my colleague from Vancouver—Kingsway, you have been aware of what is going on there. That is an election that is based on the notion that a good society is an intolerant society. This may seem like a small thing but I think that most Canadians, were they to realize that this pervasive encroachment of the American media and those kinds of American attitudes have a serious impact on our young people, would be offended by it if they examined it for just a moment.

Surely it is significant to our country that those attitudes, which have developed in another nation with a history quite different from ours, should become determinant in our own attitudes in a country which I consider to be one of the more civilized countries in the world. Inevitably, if we do not enhance the opportunity for Canadians to have greater and greater access to those attitudes which are the foundation of our nation, our nation will be threatened seriously.

I find it offensive to have a trade deal that says that if we attempt to increase the degree to which we communicate our values through our cultural media there will be retaliation from our trading partner, the partner in the economic agreement. That, all by itself, is sufficient reason for rejecting the trade deal.

I do not know whether, in expressing this concern, I have specifically answered the question of my respected colleague, but I thank him for the opportunity to allow me to point out the real impact that the present debate in the United States has on our country through the American media. More important, the content of that debate is so destructive, so pitiful in its disregard even for American values, that I fear the penetration of such a set of values in our own country. Without any means of limiting it, it promises difficulties for us in the future.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, I know you are a much younger person than am I, but I would like you to cast your mind back a few years to remember the first time you or your family owned a television set. If you can remember those days perhaps you can also remember how you got the reception on that set in those days. I know that you have appeared on television yourself many times since then, Madam Speaker, and you are appearing on television right now. I would like you to cast your mind back a year or two to those days when the first television set was acquired in your family and to think of exactly how you got your reception in those days. That is the picture I would like you to have in your mind as I make my comments this evening.

I do not know what you remember about that, Madam Speaker, but I remember quite vividly when my family got our first television set. We had an aerial on the roof. There were some guy wires attached to that aerial to hold it on the roof. They were wrapped around some screws that were sunk in the roof. Sometimes when the wind blew one wondered whether the aerial would come down. Of course, the reception on the television was not very good. After a few years water began to leak where those screws were sunk into the roof. It was not a very satisfactory method of getting television reception.

When my wife and I got our first home, I was rather pleased that it did not have one of these aerials on the roof. It had a big tower on the side of the house. I remember those days very well, when there was a tower up the side of the house on which there was a television aerial. That is how we used to get our signals for television reception.

That was fine in our family for a while, but one day, not too long after we moved into our house, our three-year old daughter, Kim, was playing in the yard. My wife and I were looking out the back window from the second story and suddenly a face appeared at this window. It was our three-year old daughter, Kim, who climbed up the television tower and was looking in the window at us. As a result of that we decided that that was not a very good way of getting our television reception either and in fact it would be better to make a deal with a cable company and have them string some cable into the house to get our reception that way.

That is the way many people, particularly in urban centres, get their television coverage these days. When you become a cable subscriber sometimes you feel a little as though you might be a captive of the cable company, perhaps a captive of the CRTC because the CRTC regulates the cable companies and allots the territorial franchises for those companies so that there is inevitably just one cable company where you live. You must buy your television signal from one television cable company and you do not have any choice. As a result of that the companies can dictate the kind of programming you get. They set the rate for the cost of that programming and, of course, they do that in conjunction with the CRTC that regulates those companies. That programming is set in a way that sometimes we do not always appreciate.

I do not know whether you have heard from your constituents on that subject but I have heard a lot from my constituency in the last few months about changes in the kinds of stations that are now being received and changes in the rates being charged. Senior citizens in particular, who watch a lot of television, feel rather upset and concerned that they are being dictated to by the cable companies and the CRTC.

People who live in a single family home have another alternative to a cable company. It is the satellite television receiver by which people can bring in signals from everywhere. They do not have to rely on a cable television operation and do not have to pay the cable company. They are not a captive of cable television because they have the right to install their own dish in their own yard.

The interesting part of the satellite receiver is that it is not regulated by this Bill we are discussing this evening, Bill C-136. The Bill exempts from regulation an individual homeowner who might want to put a satellite dish in his or her yard. Individual homeowners like me and others are not governed by the provisions of this Bill. We do not stand to be regulated or licensed. We do not stand to pay a fee. In fact, this Bill exempts single family homeowners specifically from that kind of regulation.

However, people who live in a condominium apartment or townhouse, who are homeowners just like individuals in a single family detached dwelling, would not have an alternative to cable television. They would become subscribers to cable and subject to all those rules and regulations of cable. They could be subject to having to buy the same kind of programming that those cable companies give to everyone else. They could be subject to paying the fees and the increased fees each year that cable companies seek and which seem to be inevitably approved by the CRTC. They do not have an alternative of a dish or satellite television receiver that a single family detached homeowner would have, unless it was regulated.

The Bill we are discussing tonight regulates condominiums. It does not specifically exempt them from the provisions of the Bill as it does with single family homeowners. That is discriminatory. People who live in condominium apartments and townhouses feel very keenly that they are being discriminated against by this Bill. It is true that if each condominium owner decided to own his or her own satellite dish they would not be regulated. If there was a complex with 40 units and there was a dish on each of the 40 balconies or 40 dishes sitting on the roof, they would not be regulated. They would be considered to be exempt under the terms of the Bill.

However, because there may only be one, two or perhaps three dishes for the whole complex, whether they be townhouses or apartments that are owned just like you or I own a single home, they are subject to regulation. They are subject to be licensed and pay fees. It is not so much that condominium owners feel it is wrong to pay fees, wrong to be regulated or wrong to be licensed, but that they should be treated exactly the same as owners of single family dwellings. I agree with them very strongly. Otherwise, they are being discriminated against.

Condominium owners have gone through this battle many times in the past. They have gone through this battle with respect to property taxes. The House may be aware of the appeals that have been taken by condominium owners against assessments for municipal property taxes based on the fact of discrimination, on the fact that originally when all these condominium complexes were assessed for real estate taxes on a municipal basis they were assessed on the same basis as if they were a business, not as if they were single homes. They were assessed as if they were generating some sort of profit out of this. As a result, they were given the same type of assessment that a rental apartment building would have been given, a building in which there is an owner and tenants, in which the owner charges not only rent to cover the costs but to make a profit.

Condominium complexes originally, and there are probably some still today, were assessed on the same basis because they look like an apartment complex. They were assessed on the same basis as an apartment complex with the assumption that there was some sort of a business profit being generated. It was thought they should have a higher assessment than your home, Madam Speaker, and mine, a single-family detached dwelling.

Of course, condominium owners fought against this and fought against it very hard. There were appeals one after another in my province from city to city, from neighbourhood to neighbourhood, from complex to complex. Eventually, in most cases, certainly in my own constituency, those condominium owners were successful in having their assessments reduced to something comparable to that of your home and mine, Madam Speaker, single-family detached homes and dwellings.

They have been used to this sort of discrimination between single-family home owners and condominium owners over many, many years. They do not like it. It is quite natural that they do not like it. That is why they are upset with this Bill, just in the same way that they were upset with their real estate taxes many years ago, and perhaps to some extent upset with them today because of that discrimination.

You may or may not be aware, Madam Speaker, that many of these complexes were discriminated against, as some undoubtedly are today as well, as far as garbage collection is concerned. Once again municipalities treated them as if they were a profit centre, as if they were a business, as if they were an apartment building with an owner who was generating some profits. The concept for many years with those types of buildings was: "Look, we will charge you some taxes. The taxes may be higher than you might otherwise pay if this were a single home, but you will have to pay this high rate of taxes, and there are certain services we will supply you with". One of those services was garbage collection.

The garbage truck, sanitary engineers from the municipality, did not go around to the apartment buildings to pick up the garbage. That was not part of the tax bill. That was an extra that the apartment owners had to arrange for, had to pay for separately apart from regular garbage collection service. He or she then had to charge that back to the tenant and increase the rents in order to do so. It was the same concept that municipalities originally took with respect to condominiums, whether it be an apartment complex or townhouse complex. It was the same theory that was applied, which was that condominiums are a different sort of animal from the single-family detached home.

Condominium owners fought against that kind of discrimination as well. Eventually, they won, at least in my constituency and in my municipality. They may still be fighting those battles in some other municipalities across the country, but in mine they won.

It is against this background of discrimination, this background of a matter of high principle for condominium owners, a principle which says that they should be treated exactly the same as any other home owner, that they view this Bill. They view it as gross discrimination against them as condominium owners.

This piece of legislation and the particular problem of discriminating against condominium owners with respect to television reception in terms of satellite TV receivers did not start today. It did not start with this Bill. It did not start four years ago with this Government. Quite frankly, it started many years ago with the former Government, the Liberal Government, and the Broadcasting Act which this Bill is aimed at amending and replacing. That sort of discrimination between single-family home owners and condominium owners was inherent in that legislation, as well as in the legislation that was put in place by the former Liberal Government. Condominium owners did not just suddenly rear up and get excited when they saw this Bill for the first time as it concerns this issue. This is an issue that has been going on with them for years and years. In fact, it has been going on since the early eighties at least.

I recall that when I first made it known that I was going to be standing for Parliament in the last election, representatives of condominium complexes in my riding came to me. They outlined the problem for me and showed me the problem that was in the present legislation that had been put in place by the former Government. They said: "For Heaven's sake, we are counting on you. We are counting on a new Progressive Conservative Government to correct this wrong and to make sure that there is no discrimination in the future".

I took that message and conveyed it to the then Leader of the Official Opposition, the Present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I conveyed it to him in the form of letters that I wrote to him. I conveyed it to him in private meetings. As you may recall, Madam Speaker, I have conveyed it to him publicly in this House during this debate, the debates that have preceded this one and in statements that I have made in the House pursuant to Standing Order 21.

I have tried my best to get the message across that what the Government is doing here is viewed very vehemently and strongly by condominium owners not only in my riding but across Canada as gross discrimination.

I would like to add here that about 5 per cent of the population of Canada—5 per cent of the 25 million or 26 million who live in this country—live in condominiums. We are talking about something in excess of one million people who are potentially affected by this provision in the Bill, a million people in the country who feel that they are discriminated against as a result of this Bill.

It was not just with the Prime Minister that I expressed these concerns. I expressed them with every Minister of Communications and Culture that we have had since the Government took office in 1984. I have had meetings with those Ministers. I have had meetings with their exempt staff and their political staff. I have had meetings with their department officials. I have had meetings separately on my own and I have had meetings collectively with numerous other Members of Parliament who share this concern that I have on behalf of our constituents. It would seem that they have all been to no avail.

Initially, it appeared that we were making progress. You will recall, Madam Speaker, that early on in the mandate of the Government there was another Bill concerning broadcasting, Bill C-20. That particular Bill had inherent in it the same discrimination aspects as this Bill has with respect to condominium owners.

It was as a result of that particular piece of legislation and the meetings that took place around it within the Progressive Conservative caucus that an organization called the back-bench committee was formed. It is a committee which has been subject to a great deal of discussion, a great deal of debate. Some people, including my friend from Ottawa—Vanier, has characterized it as the dinosaur club of the Progressive Conservative Party. If we are the dinosaurs of the Progressive Conservative Party, we were born as a result of concern arising out of this issue, the issue of cable television, broadcasting, et cetera.

What has to happen is that we must have some changes made to this Bill or we have to see it die. That is what happened to Bill C-20. It died on the Order Paper when the first session of the Thirty-third Parliament came to an end. That Bill was allowed by the Government to die on the Order Paper. At that time it had apparently seen the light. But it did not because subsequently, as we can see, there was this new Bill, Bill C-136. Here we are at third reading. There are a great many people—over one million—in the country who are condominium owners who would like to see this Bill die on the Order Paper. Quite frankly, that is their last hope, their last gasp.

I see that you are giving me the time signal, Madam Speaker, but I hope perhaps somebody will ask me a question and allow me to make one or two further points.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, the Member got my attention when he mentioned my riding of Ottawa-Vanier and referred to my identifying some members of his caucus as dinosaurs. At the time I thought that indeed on the language issue, on Bill C-72, the people who were and are opposing certain amendments to the law of the land were indeed people who spoke of prior times or who represented possibly some thoughts or some trends that were with us many years ago, but he has now enlightened me by telling me that indeed it started with the back-bench committee. I remember that one too, so I thank him for reminding me of the historical significance of the dinosaur dynasty in the Progressive Conservative Party.

I know that the Member has a great interest in the condominium question on Bill C-136. I know that he has had a number of constituents call and write to him, and he has made us aware of the numerous interventions of his constituents.

He is certainly aware that our concerns have been similar to his in dealing with the wording of the definition of "distribution undertaking" in Clause 2(1), which, when taken together with Clause 4(3), would clearly bring the MATV, the master of TV systems, under the Act to the extent that they receive and distribute broadcast signals.

I want to quote something from the Canadian Bar Association's brief which I have before me and which impressed me as being somewhat enlightening and revealing of what, I would suppose, a very good body of lawyers would have to say about the subject of Bill C-136. I may want to ask the Member to comment on that.

They state in their brief to the legislative committee on Bill C-136, "There continues to be an omission in the Act, namely the situation where an apartment or hotel distribution system, either using encrypted radio signals or a closed circuit cable system, provides programs solely to the tenants of the apartment building or the guest rooms of an hotel. Constitutional issues aside, in that case, the new Act would not apply to the system because the signals would probably not be thought of as being intended for reception by the public". That is the end of the quote from the testimony of the Canadian Bar Association.

I wonder if the Member, who I think has a good background in law—I do not know if he is a lawyer, but he impresses me sometimes with his arguments—could explain to us if he has had any representations or comments from lawyers dealing maybe with the legalistic point of view here. It may be narrower than saying, as he has been telling us in the House, that indeed we should treat condominium owners as single-dwelling property owners are treated, that is, having the right to utilize the MATV systems.

I wonder if he could bring us up to date on the legal approaches to this Bill. Is he satisfied, for example, that there is a fuzziness to the Bill that would make it possible for a court to have to pass judgment on the interpretations of these clauses, and is there a danger that we are indeed going to be finding ourselves in a legal mess, in a few months or a few years down the road, with this wording of the definition of distribution undertaking, in Clauses 2(1) and 4(3)?

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his comments. I might say that the Canadian Bar Association's brief and their comments were made to the legislative committee dealing with this Bill before amendments were made to that clause that the Hon. Member referred to, the distribution undertaking clause.

In that committee, on the clause-by-clause passage of the Bill, there was an amendment made to this clause, as the Hon. Member knows, which added to the end of the definition of distribution undertaking the words "or dwelling unit, or to another such undertaking".

The purpose of that amendment, of course, was to try to solve the problem that had been pointed out by the Bar Association and raised by the Hon. Member, to take the fuzziness out of that definition. But in taking the fuzziness out of the definition, it in fact made it quite clear, in the eyes of the lawyers for the Department and in the eyes of the public, that what they were doing was excluding specifically single family home owners and not excluding other people.

In fact, I appeared in committee and put questions specifically to the lawyers from the Department of Justice who were there with respect to this Bill. I asked them if the wording "distribution undertaking", as amended at that committee, would catch something like a senior citizens' home. He said yes, of course. A senior citizens' home would have to be regulated and licensed and pay fees if it had one of these dishes.

I asked similarly if it would catch a hotel and that sort of thing. Again, that was the same story. There has been this effort to clarify it, but in so clarifying it, it has reinforced the discriminatory aspect of the Bill.

In fact, it is interesting to note that in dealing with this Bill and in seeking advice from the Minister as to how this Bill is going to be applied, the Minister has told me and told every condominium owner who has contacted her in this regard, "Have no fear about this Bill. You will be excluded from this Bill by regulation".

We know, of course, that the Bill catches you and regulates you and it may license and require you to pay a fee. But she said, "Don't worry about it, because we are going to pass a regulation that will exclude you. So there is nothing to worry about".

Why is it, the condominium owners ask, if we are going to be excluded anyway by regulation, that we do not put it specifically in the Bill and say that it is quite clear, you are excluded by legislation, not by regulation?

For some reason the Minister does not seem prepared to do that. The condominium owners attribute the Minister's statement to the cable companies. They say it is because of the cable company lobby and that this country is not being run by a government of the people, by the people, for the people, but in fact it is being run by the cable companies, and it is a government of the cable companies, by the cable companies, and for the cable companies, and that in fact this sort of thing is discriminatory and a real disappointment to condominium owners across the country, and it is to me, too.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments is now concluded. We will now proceed to the adjournment debate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

[English]

REFUGEES—CASE OF FRANCESCO PIPERNO SENTENCED FOR TERRORISM BY ITALIAN COURT

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, the abuse of Canada's immigration system by individuals who are undesirable, both in Canada and in their native countries, is becoming a major problem bordering on a serious crisis.

Francesco Piperno, a noted Italian terrorist, successfully stayed in Canada for more than seven years. He was convicted in Italy of complicity in the murder of former Premier, Aldo Moro, in 1978. Mr. Moro was elected to office by open, democratic elections. Italy had had a democratic Government since World War II, and any changes to its society are made by the ballot box and not through violence.

The Red Brigades, of which Mr. Piperno was a member, was committed to a communist revolution to be achieved by violent means. Democracy meant nothing to these committed terrorists. Their only objective was to destroy freedom and replace it with their own notions of tyranny. The Red Brigades were noted for their terror tactics which were responsible for killing hundreds of innocent human beings.

Therefore, it is ironic that Mr. Piperno, who despised democracy, would choose the democratic system which guarantees all people freedom, to defend him from being returned to Italy to stand trial. Mr. Piperno came to Canada and claimed refugee status. The Italian Government issued a warrant for his arrest for his role in the murder of Aldo Moro, the former Italian Premier, and it attempted to extradite him in 1983. In fact, for more than seven years Mr. Piperno used all the legal means at his disposal in Canada to avoid having to return to Italy to stand trial. Mr. Piperno was even able to land a job teaching physics at the University of Alberta while he continued his fight to stay in Canada. The final irony, he applied for refugee status, refugee status in a democratic country.

Mr. Piperno's case is a celebrated one. However, this occurrence is becoming more widespread in our immigration system. Individuals with criminal records, notorious criminals, murderers, and terrorists are taking advantage of our laws to escape prosecution in their own lands.

This is not right. If an individual commits a major crime in another country, that individual must be punished in the country where the crime was committed, if he can be assured of a fair trial. Individuals cannot be allowed to circumvent justice by escaping to Canada and using our legal system to avoid punishment for their deeds. The Canadian public must be protected from these types of individuals. We Canadians are a very generous group of people who place the rights of the individual above all other commitments. Thus, we have a major quandary on our hands.

At what stage do the rights of a society supersede the rights of an individual? We must remember that the individuals with whom we are dealing are not Canadian citizens or landed immigrants. Should those individuals who are not Canadian citizens or landed immigrants be granted the same rights and access to protection of Canadians laws as are available to all Canadians? Should Canadians be allowed to foot the bill for those individuals who are deliberately using our system of justice to evade punishment for a crime committed in their native country?

I believe that as legislators it is our duty to address this very serious problem, for it relates directly to the society we want for Canada. At present, due to the past policies of the previous Liberal Government, and the intransigent actions of the other place on Bills C-55 and C-84, our system has become inundated with false claims by individuals with unsavoury backgrounds. This, in turn, has sent out a false message to the world that, if one can get to Canada, one will have at his or her disposal all the mechanisms enjoyed by Canadian citizens and landed immigrants.

In addition, individuals who use Canada's immigration laws and legal system to escape prosecution for capital offences committed in foreign lands, create a negative impression of our system of justice. Canadians have every right to ask whether a dual system of justice is being practised. The taking of an innocent life in another country is the same as taking that life in Canada. Murder is a capital offence in all civilized societies, regardless of the political stripe of a government.

If one can escape to Canada after committing a murder, are we in effect condoning that crime, if an individual is somehow successful in staying in Canada? What if an individual who has committed a crime and has managed to escape to Canada and while using our legal system to gain status here, commits another murder? Who is responsible for the termination of an innocent life? The individual would still be alive if the perpetrator of the crime had not been allowed access into Canada and used our legal system to further his or her position. Therefore, even though the Government has passed legislation which will stop the cheaters and criminals of the world from entering Canada under false pretenses, further action is required. We need short-term measures which will prevent abuse of our immigration system until January 1, 1989 when the provisions of Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 come into effect.

Second, all individuals in Canadian jails who are fighting extradition to other countries for committing a capital offence should be sent back. Charles Ng is a prime example of an individual who committed the most heinous crimes in California and is still in Canada after four years of fighting extradition to the United States.

Third, any individual who commits terrorist acts in countries which have democratic Governments should be returned to those nations.

Fourth, all terrorists who commit crimes against innocent civilians, such as airplane hijackers, should be returned to those countries to face justice.

The message must be clear to all that Canada only wants those who are peaceful and law-abiding. Individuals who do not meet this criterion need not bother to come to Canada for they will be sent back. Canada was built by those individuals who had the greatest respect for the law. It is up to us as legislators to ensure that Canada continues this tradition. Our democratic institutions are our greatest asset and sometimes one of our weaknesses, but the more we recognize how fragile our democratic institutions really are, the more we will do to strengthen them. I am certain that our immigration system will once again acquire a worldwide reputation of being fair and accessible by those individuals who possess all the qualities which will continue to strengthen Canada.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for following up on his question. When he asked the question in May of 1987, the Minister could not give a full and complete reply because the case was before the Immigration Appeal Board. Subsequently, Mr. Piperno voluntarily left Canada, in January of this year, and withdrew all of his legal applications.

I guess this emphasizes the reality that someone can come to Canada as a visitor and despite being convicted of a very serious offence which resulted in a ten-year sentence, remain in this country until January of this year. It emphasizes for the House and Canadians the problem with the law that was on the books prior to this Parliament's action early last fall and the Senate's subsequent concurrence in our judgment a year later. It is a bit of a shame that the Senate took so long to approve legislation passed by democratically elected members of this Chamber, and we have to live with the consequences.

I would like to pay tribute to the Hon. Member. I served with him on the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration. He has had a longstanding interest in helping change the legislation so we could separate the true immigrant and the true refugee from those who would abuse our system. He brought to our attention a case of what he viewed to be abuse, and I am pleased to report that the law has been changed and the man in question has left the country and is currently serving his sentence in Italy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—ESTONIA—RECOGNITION OF HONORARY CONSUL GENERAL

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, have you been nominated as yet for the upcoming election? I am pleased to hear that. That is good. I have as well. I was nominated in a wonderful community centre in my riding called the Latvian Cultural Centre. That is really a great spot. I hope you will have an opportunity to visit it one day because it is the centre of the Latvian community in my riding and in Metropolitan Toronto. They have all sorts of Latvian cultural activities, language classes, history classes and dancing classes. I know you would enjoy them. As well, it is really a community centre for the whole neighbourhood. In fact, I have had fund raising dinners there, I think about six. I was nominated there in 1982 and again earlier this year. It is a very active place and a great spot in our community.

One of the reasons it is located there is that it attracts an awful lot of Canadians of Latvian origin who live in nearby neighbourhoods. I have a lot of Canadians of Latvian origin in my constituency. Interestingly enough, just outside my constituency is the Estonian Cultural Centre, called Estonia House, on Broadview Avenue. As a result of that, of course, there are a lot of Estonian Canadians who live nearby as well. In addition, we have a goodly number of Lithuanian Canadians.

You are aware, Madam Speaker, that Canadians of Latvian, Estonian and Lithuanian origin are called Baltic peoples. They come from the Baltic nations, if you will, and in fact I suppose something like 2.1 per cent of all my constituents could be described as being originally from the Baltic states. I am sure you are aware, Madam Speaker, that back in the 13th century—that is quite a way back and we have to look at history—Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania were independent countries. After that they became dominated by one neighbouring country after another and lost their independence but never the goal of freedom and independence.

After the First World War in 1918, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania became once again sovereign, independent, free nations. They remained that way until the Second World War, in fact, until 1940, when the Red Army of the Soviet Union invaded them and in so doing broke three peace-keeping treaties or non-aggression pacts with those three nations. Those Baltic states were devastated by the Soviets. In fact, in one month alone in the year 1941, while the Soviet Red Army was occupying those three countries, over 100,000 people were sent off to labour camps. Thousands were imprisoned, tortured or murdered.

On top of that, in 1941 the Nazis invaded and wreaked the same sort of devastation. About 300,000 Jewish residents of those three nations were deported or executed during the Nazi occupation of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania during the Second World War.

After all that came the Yalta Conference in which Mr. Churchill, Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Stalin got together and divided up Europe into spheres of influence, deciding that Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania should be in the Soviet sphere of influence. Immediately after that, within the next few years, with the Soviet troops again occupying those countries, something like 500,000 people of Estonian, Latvian and Lithuanian origin were deported to the Soviet Union. Between 1940 and the early 1950s about 10 per cent of the total population just disappeared, deported to the Soviet Union.

Canada recognized the independence, sovereignty and freedom of those three Baltic states, namely, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. When they were taken over and occupied by the Soviets, Canada never recognized that illegal annexation or occupation. We have always considered, as far as legalities were concerned, that those three countries should remain independent nations.

Each of those nations has an honorary Consul General here in Canada. Up until 1972, those honorary Consuls General of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania here in Canada were officially recognized and listed in a publication of the Department of External Affairs called The Diplomatic Corps and Consular and Other Representatives in Canada. However, since 1972, they have not been listed in our Canadian diplomatic directory. That is not so in other countries. For instance, the United States and Australia officially recognize the honorary Consuls General of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania to those countries. Here in Canada, since 1972 when we dropped them from our official recognition list, we have been thinking about it and considering whether we should put them back on the list and whether we should in some way recognize them again.

It seems rather strange that for 16 years now, Canada has been thinking about this and wondering about it, and Canadians of Estonian, Latvian and Lithuanian origin and many others including me wonder if it is just that we are slow thinkers and learners in Canada. What is going on that it is taking so long, or is it really that we are lacking in courage? Is that the whole reason for it?

Recently, even Mr. Gorbachev, the Secretary General of the Soviet Union, seems to have had more courage with respect to Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania than we Canadians have had. In fact, recently Mr. Gorbachev has allowed Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania to ask publicly to be made sovereign states and have sovereign status, to have representatives at the United Nations, to have representation at the Olympics, to have control of their own press and to have control over foreign travel and their own military and secret police. He has allowed Estonia actually to set up a commission to investigate the status of the deportations.

Why is it that Mr. Gorbachev has all this courage? If Mr. Gorbachev can have all this courage, why can't Canada have the same sort of courage and recognize in our diplomatic registry the Honorary Consuls General of Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania? Why is that?

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, first, I think that I should congratulate my colleague from York East (Mr. Redway) for the excellent presentation he has just given us on Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. I would like, perhaps, to remind his constituents that in defending them so vigorously, he shows, I think, how sensitive he is to the ethnic communities and how welcoming Canada is as a country, one that is built on such ethnic communities.

And that also is why the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) had the pleasure to reiterate in the House the policy of the Canadian Government on the Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. He clearly stated at the outset that we have no intention to recognize de jure the occupation of these countries by the Soviet Union since 1940. However, like all Canadian Governments since that time, we recognize their de facto annexation, because the Soviet Union exercises its authority over this territory.

This statement of principle is based on some concrete actions. The Government continues to allow acting honorary consuls from Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania to perform their duties in Canada.

Official relations with the authorities of the Baltic States are limited. No Canadian ambassador goes to the region. Other Canadian officials who go there avoid relations with the local authorities as much as possible.

Special procedures have been established to make it easier for Baltic representatives in other countries to come to Canada in the exercise of their duties.

Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania may be shown as acceptable birthplaces on Canadian passports and immigration documents.

To reassure my colleague from York East (Mr. Redway), these measures and others show that Canada still refuses to accept Soviet control over the Baltic States, and Soviet authorities are fully aware of that.

As to the listing of Acting Honourary Consul Generals of the Baltic States in the Department of External Affairs publication entitled "The Diplomatic Corps and Consular and Other Representatives in Canada", our policy is not to delete the names already listed but not to add the names of new consuls. Successive Canadian Governments did review the question and decided to maintain this policy.

In conclusion I would say that the Minister is very much aware of the concerns voiced by Canada's Baltic community and, without losing sight of the wider consequences relating to our foreign policy, he will certainly make it a point to take them under very serious consideration on every appropriate occasion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.21 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO MADAME THÉRÈSE KILLENS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, if the rumours we are hearing are true, the Thirty-third Parliament will be dissolved in a matter of days. Twenty-seven women out of a total of 282 Members were elected to the House of Commons.

• (1405)

[English]

I rise today to pay tribute to three of my colleagues who will be leaving this House shortly. I speak of Madam Thérèse Killens, the Hon. Pat Carney, and Miss Pauline Jewett. All three have played a very important role in leading the women of this country into public life. Their insight and intelligence have helped in the formulation of policy and legislation, and the fair and lucid critique of legislation once formulated.

[Translation]

Thérèse Killens was dedicated to the cause of the disabled and the homeless. She did not make a lot of noise, but we remember her for her effectiveness and for what she accomplished in the area of pensions for women working in the home.

[English]

Pauline Jewett will be remembered for her work in both judicial committees and constitutional committees. At a time when women managed to mobilize their forces to entrench the basic right to equality in the Constitution, it was noteworthy that women such as Pauline Jewett provided courage, strength, and inspiration.

Pat Carney, who was at the forefront of one of the most important debates facing the country, should also be lauded for her ability to hold her own and be fair, for her ability to voice her opinion and to be heard, as well as for her ability to listen.

To all of these women I wish good luck in their future endeavours. As a recent arrival in politics, I also extend my many thanks.

HUMAN RIGHTS

INDIA—PLIGHT OF DETAINED CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the protection of its citizens is a valued right in any country. In this regard concern is being expressed by Canadians and an international human rights organization about the plight of a Canadian citizen, a resident of Etobicoke North. I refer to Balkar Singh in detention in India since November 2, 1987.

The renowned international organization, Amnesty International, in a report last month urged the Indian Government to release him or charge him, and bring him to trial under normal judicial procedures, with all customary legal safeguards.

While recognizing the efforts of the Government to obtain consular access to the detainee to ensure adequate medical treatment and cessation of torture, I would like Members to join with me in urging the Indian Government to bring Balkar Singh to trial at the earliest opportunity, and urge the Government of Canada to continue in its worthy efforts to bring the matter to an early resolve.

THE LATE GEORGE GRANT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, Canada has lost one of its best patriots and best philosophers in the death of George Grant.

The man who wrote Lament for a Nation in 1965, lamenting the capitulation of Canadian identity and values to American pressure, is now to be lamented for himself by many Canadians who saw and heard in George Grant and his writings someone who understood what Canada had been about, and what we could be if we resist rather than give in to the temptation of continentalism, the American technological ethos, and the poverty of spirit that lies at the root of advanced liberal capitalism.

George Grant was one who understood the modern mind, who could discern and explore the moral fault lines and crevices of what the modern mind takes for granted as objective reality, but which is really no more than a collectively held uncritical belief.

In his books, Technology and Empire, English-Speaking Justice and Technology and Justice, he has given us a warning, too often unheeded, about the new tyranny that we court by turning our backs on the best of our philosophical and political traditions.

If the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement goes through, George Grant will have been spared from the final assault on the Canada he loved. If it does not, perhaps there is yet time to recover and play reveille for a country saved and a philosopher vindicated.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

PLATINUM MAPLE LEAF COINS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Royal Canadian Mint enjoys a proud reputation as one of the foremost producers of high quality precious metal coins in the entire world. Maple Leaf gold coins are sought out by coin collectors, investors, and those looking for a secure store of value.

Canada is a major producer of platinum, so it is only natural that we should also get into the platinum coin business.

Last Thursday's special striking ceremony initiating the production of platinum Maple Leaf coins, marks, I am sure, the start of what will be another highly successful venture by the Royal Canadian Mint.

POLITICAL PARTIES

THE LIBERAL OUTLOOK

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) our future Prime Minister after the election, announced with pride the platform of the Liberal Party with respect to the environment, quality of life and professional ethics. What I find particularly heartening is that the future Liberal Government will correct the injustice to the elderly and families on middle and low incomes perpetrated by the Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, this morning I was proud to join the Leader of the Liberal Party in announcing the forty objectives of our Liberal vision. The people will have to choose between a sleazy, dishonest Conservative Government and an honest Liberal Government.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, the other night I was surprised and disappointed to hear the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) state that Canada's ability to protect its environment is somehow threatened by the free trade agreement. That is a bunch of nonsense.

For the Leader of the Opposition's benefit, let me refer to the agreement:

> Import and export control measures can be justified when it is "necessary to protect human, animal or plant life or health (such as measures to protect the environment or endangered species)".

Instead of trying to scare people, why doesn't he start listening to B.C. Liberal Senator George Van Roggen, former Liberal cabinet Minister Gerald Reagan, the Liberal Premier of New Brunswick, the Liberal Premier of Québec, and countless other Liberals who agree that this agreement is good for Canada? Otherwise I think it is going to be very bad for the Liberal Party.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

DAY CARE BENEFITS—FEDERAL COURT DECISION

Mrs. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, last June the Federal Court of Canada ruled that the Unemployment Insurance Act was unfair to natural parents because it denied them the benefits for child care enjoyed by adoptive parents.

This decision makes a clear distinction between maternity benefits, which are received by women for health reasons, and parental benefits, which are paid to adoptive parents for the child's care and emotional development.

[English]

The Conservative Government has until September 30 to appeal this decision, if it wishes to take such a retrograde step. New Democrats hope that instead the Government will listen to groups such as the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, and the National Association of Women and the Law, and accept the ruling by implementing parental leave for Canadian parents without jeopardizing maternity leave benefits.

This move will finally ensure that Canada provides child care benefits already available in other industrialized countries.

POLITICAL PARTIES

SALES TAX REFORM—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, so the Liberals are starting to unveil their election promises and their Leader says that they would not proceed with sales tax reform. They would instead tinker with the present 12 per cent manufacturers' sales tax, perpetuating its unfairness, continuing to disadvantage our domestic manufacturers.

Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) should check with the members of his Party who sit on the Finance Committee with me and have shown considerable interest in substantial sales tax reform. But splits on Party policy are not new to the Liberal Party.

Of course, what else could we expect from the Liberal Leader, who, when he was Minister of Finance in the 1970s, was the "Father of the Deficit", raising expenditures nearly 30 per cent per year without increasing revenues, starting the inflationary spiral which led to the recession earlier this decade.

Once again the Liberals have shown that they are the Party of the past, with policies to hurt exporters, to kill jobs. Old ways, old times—Canadians will not be fooled. They want, they demand better.

EDUCATION

TAXATION OF SCHOLARSHIPS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, education ought to be a priority for all Governments. We on this side of the House place a high regard on the educational institutions in our country. We also have an understanding of the financial sacrifices that students must make while studying at a post-secondary institution.

It was with some dismay that I learned that the Government taxes graduate scholarships. Recently I received a letter from a graduate student in Sudbury, Ontario, who had received a $9,000 scholarship for her studies in 1987-88. When she completed her tax return she found that she had to pay $2,000 in taxes. Mr. Speaker, this is unjust. The Government should encourage academic excellence in our youth. This can only benefit the country as a whole. To turn around and tax the very moneys students are using to upgrade themselves is absolutely ridiculous.

Under this Government we have seen the most substantial tax increases in Canadian history. The problem is that the wrong people are the ones targeted to pay taxes. Why tax a student bursary, and not the 60,000 profitable companies that each year pay no taxes, or the 5,220 taxpayers who made over $50,000 last year and paid no tax, or the 40 people who made over $250,000 last year and paid no tax?

It is time for the Government of Canada to take students into consideration. It is time for the Government to call an election so the people of Canada can have a choice to make in the next election.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

TRIBUTE TO MEMBER FOR QU'APPELLE—MOOSE MOUNTAIN

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to pay tribute to a Member of Parliament who has contributed more to Canada than would be expected of any individual. I refer to the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain, the Hon. Alvin Hamilton. This man has devoted his life to serving his country, not only in the Armed Forces, but for 30 years in Parliament, and during this time also raising a fine family.

Under his leadership as Minister of Agriculture we developed grain and other markets with the Eastern Bloc countries which were unheard of before. I would say that he should be called the "Father of Free Trade". Alvin's initiative as Minister of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources to build the famous "Roads to Resources" has opened up the northern area more than any other program and has made the North and South one.

These examples are but two of the many programs and policies that have made the Hon. Alvin Hamilton famous for his forward thinking. He got the job done. This Parliament will be the loser when he leaves this place.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—USE OF PLASTIC BULLETS AGAINST PALESTINIANS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in response to reports from the West Bank and Gaza Strip indicating that the Israeli Army is now using plastic bullets without restraint against Palestinians protesting their continuing oppression under occupation.

The replacement of rubber bullets by plastic ones last month has been accompanied by a marked increase in the number of people wounded, up from 19 in July to 130 in the first 25 days of September in the Gaza Strip alone. Three people have been killed in spite of dubious Israeli claims that the bullets are non-lethal.

While those casualty statistics are considered appalling by representatives of the United Nations, they are not considered so by Israeli Defence Minister Yitshah Rabin. On the contrary, to him they indicate that his troops are doing a good job, even while admitting that the level of unrest in the occupied territories has not been diminished by this escalation of Israeli firepower.

Representatives of the United Nations have protested this deliberate and futile escalation. I call upon the Government of Canada to do the same.

OLYMPIC GAMES—DISQUALIFICATION OF CANADIAN ATHLETE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ESTABLISH INQUIRY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for Fitness and Amateur Sport. As the Minister knows, the Ben Johnson incident has raised sincere concern and many questions among millions of Canadians. I believe that it is the duty of the Opposition to raise those questions in the national Parliament, and for the Government to seek answers to those questions.

First, with specific reference to the Ben Johnson case, we now have statements made by the former Minister for Sport stating that he does not believe that Ben Johnson knew he was taking steroids, and a statement made by Richard Pound, the Executive Vice-President of the IOC, that Ben Johnson would not have administered these drugs to himself.

In view of these and many other unanswered questions, would the Minister make a clear commitment today to have a full inquiry into this matter in order to determine who is responsible, and in the meanwhile not categorically and finally condemn anyone?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see a change in tone in the approach to this issue and that the Hon. Member recognizes the fact there are some sincere questions to be answered. Yesterday the Government recognized the importance of these questions being answered and we intend to have an inquiry on this issue.

The fact that the Member refers to statements made by Mr. Pound and the former Minister and other people, and there are many statements in the papers today, also indicates to me and the Government the importance of conducting ourselves in a manner which will enable us to reach the truth and not do it in a disorganized way which would lead to nothing more than speculation. That is extremely important if we are going to get to the bottom of this. Yes, the Government will of course be part of an inquiry. We will discuss it with the parties concerned before a decision is made. We will take time to discuss it with them.

I think Canadians are sympathetic to the case of Ben Johnson, as all of us are. Ben Johnson being a Canadian, with the difficulty of maybe a mistake on his part, I think we are all sympathetic to his cause. However, I think the Hon. Member will want to recognize that the rules that apply to all other athletes, including the weight lifters who never reached Seoul, including all the athletes who never reached the Olympics because their times were not good enough, the rules that apply to them also apply to Ben Johnson. My duty is to apply those rules and that is what we intend to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister for his answer.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR THOROUGH INQUIRY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, there is also a broader question concerning the use of drugs in general by Canadian athletes.

Following recent discussions on radio and television, Canadians were shocked by the suggestions of more widespread drug use by Canadian athletes. In addition, statements were made to the effect that most athletes are not health professionals and that they must be helped by a professional in buying and using these drugs.

Under these circumstances, is the Government prepared to conduct a more thorough investigation in order to determine the extent of this drug use by Canadian athletes and the involvement of professionals? Is the Minister prepared to conduct a more thorough investigation of this matter?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, when this Ben Johnson affair was announced around 6 or 7 p.m. local time in Canada, I had already had the opportunity to discuss it with the President of the Canadian Track and Field Federation, Jean-Guy Ouellette. We agreed that there would at the very least be an investigation into the Ben Johnson affair.

We will sit down with those concerned, while allegations are pouring in from everywhere; we will sit down with the people concerned and see whether a broader, more extensive investigation of the whole sports community is warranted.

What I can say today with complete assurance is that there will no doubt be an investigation into the Ben Johnson affair, as I said yesterday. It will cover the people in his entourage and we will try to get to the bottom of this matter. We are prepared to do so as soon as we have the opportunity to discuss it at least with the main parties concerned, to give them the chance to tell us what form they think this investigation should take.

[English]

PROPOSED DOPE TESTING PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Gerrard Mach of the Canadian Track and Field Association said his association has been pressing for an improved drug testing program for Canadian athletes. He expected this program to be in place by April 1, 1988. That system would have included dope testing on one day's notice. However, according to Mr. Mach the program was not implemented on time.

Why was action not taken to implement this suggested program in good time for the Olympics? Would the Minister give an explanation for the delay in this program?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, in his first question my hon. friend referred to sincere questions and sincere answers. I think this is the time for some sincere answers.

To be very frank in this regard, Canada plays a world leadership role in the area of anti-doping. The first world conference on anti-doping was held here in Ottawa in June. The result of that conference was an anti-doping charter. If my hon. friend takes the time, and I am sure he will, to read that anti-doping charter which Canada is trying to have implemented all over the world, he will find a proposal for random testing without prior notice. That is this Government's position and the position we are trying to have implemented all over the world so that not only our own athletes are under strict guidelines, but all other athletes around the world are also under the same rules.

• (1425)

In the case of track and field, we are negotiating, and we were negotiating before the Seoul Olympics, a protocol of agreement to implement such a policy, and we are going as fast as we can to implement it. We are at the beginning of a process that started before the Ben Johnson incident, and we are not at the end of it.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PORT EXPORTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it concerns the Prime Minister's faulty trade deal with the United States.

At the same time the President of the United States was signing the Prime Minister's trade deal today the National Pork Producers' Council in the U.S. announced that it would be seeking countervailing duties against not only Canadian hogs—on which it has had success in the past—but Canadian pork products.

Given that the Prime Minister promised Canadians that no trade deal would be passed unless it gave Canada guaranteed access to the U.S. market, doesn't it prove that the Prime Minister's trade deal simply doesn't work? Doesn't it prove that we gave away the store and got nothing in return, and shouldn't we call an election now?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that shows the peculiar logic of the Opposition. All that this question indicates is the need for us to have the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement implemented in this House so we have a better defence against actions that might be taken in the United States under American law for countervail purposes.

The National Pork Producers' Council stated that it is planning to file a petition. It has a right to do that, and Canadian firms in Canada have a right to file petitions here in Canada. If it does file a petition—we are going to get together with our own pork industry anyway—we will be assisting that industry with a very vigorous defence to any allegations made.

I want to point out to the House that we have four investigations currently being conducted by National Revenue here in Canada on imports from the United States with respect to apples, cherries, coat hangers, and steel grinding balls. They are all anti-dumping cases, Mr. Speaker, but we don't hear the U.S. population complaining that here in Canada we are still enforcing our trade laws.

For Heaven's sake, stop being childish and get serious about the U.S.-Canada issue.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, speaking of reverse logic, we have just had a great example. The Minister just said producers have a right to file a petition. They had the right before. Therefore, what have we gained in the trade deal?

[Translation]

COUNTERVAILING TARIFFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary to the Minister. With the new U.S. omnibus bill, American producers will have the right to ask that countervail be used against Canadian pork producers, a privilege they did not have before the signing of the free trade agreement between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States.

Will the Minister finally admit that his trade agreement is a total failure, that we have gained nothing and that we have given away the store?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is really piteous to watch the hon. gentleman floundering with respect to the question that he has asked here today. How could this action of the U.S. pork producers have anything to do with the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement—

Mr. Boudria: That is the point.

Mr. Crosbie: —which is not yet in effect although it is approved by all elected Members of both the United States and Canada? The hon. gentleman's Party has seen that the unelected Senate has stopped the legislation in its tracks here in Canada.

The benefit of the legislation will be seen after the next election when it is passed by this House and the Senate and it enables us to become part of the binational procedure that will be in effect to decide these disputes in the future. The answer is that we will be far better protected after January 1 next year, but the hon. gentleman won't be here to join with us in that.

OLYMPIC GAMES—DISQUALIFICATION OF CANADIAN ATHLETES—STEROID TESTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport and it concerns the Ben Johnson case. As the Minister knows, there are a lot of unanswered questions which I think warrant an immediate investigation.

• (1430)

Yesterday in the House the Minister said that Ben Johnson was tested in Zurich about a month ago, after the competition there, and the tests were negative for steroids. He had been tested some seven other times and all the tests were negative. On the other hand, the IOC said a couple of days ago that there was evidence of long-term steroid use.

There seems to be a contradiction here. I wonder if the Minister can tell the House today why there is a contradiction of that sort. Can he explain the discrepancy of, on the one hand, the IOC saying that there is long-term use of steroids, while on the other hand he has always tested negative?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the results of the tests and the fact that Ben Johnson has been tested approximately, to my best knowledge, eight times in the last 21 months. Furthermore, in that 21-month period he had been out of training for a four or five-month period because of an injury.

I am not an expert in this area and neither is the Hon. Member, as far as I know, or other Members of this House. I do not know whether there is a contradiction or not. Some of the explanations that I have both read and heard seem to indicate there is no contradiction, in fact, between testing negative at the Zurich meet and testing positive at another point in time. Not being an expert in that area I will not seek in any way, shape, or form to replace that expertise.

Suffice it to say that Dr. Dugal, a member of one of the committees of the IOC Medical Commission, a Canadian who was part of the group there who received the test and evaluated it, made some comments today in le Journal de Montréal, and he seems to be very unequivocal about the results of the test and what they mean.

VALIDITY OF TESTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I do remind the Minister that he has at his disposal experts in the field with a lot of training and experience, and that the IOC said that there was evidence of long-term steroid use. Meanwhile, Ben Johnson had been tested negatively eight times in the last 21 months. I wonder if the Minister can explain that discrepancy.

At the same time I wonder if the Minister can explain to the House why, as a matter of policy, Canadian athletes are not tested before they leave the country to go to international meets?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, to make things quite clear, it is not for me to explain the content of the technical expertise on the results of the sample. Suffice it to say that we have representatives in Seoul, including the President of the Canadian Olympic Association, and that the Canadian Government accepts the validity of the test.

By the way, it is my understanding that up until now both Mr. Johnson and Mr. Francis also accepted the validity of the test. I do not know what more I can say as far as the test is concerned. We will perhaps have to wait until an inquiry gives us more precise information in that regard.

As far as the system in Canada works, once that determination has been made our rules are quite clear, as the rules were under the previous Government in 1983. Once that determination is made, a suspension or a sanction is imposed. In the case of the use of steroids, our rules are quite clear. With the first-time use of steroids there is then a life suspension pending, of course, the usual appeals that we hope will happen, and we will await anxiously to see the results.

PUBLIC INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister could perhaps comment briefly in the House on the public inquiry that will be conducted by the Government of Canada. Will Mr. Johnson's entourage be questioned in the course of this inquiry? I am referring here to people like his manager, his doctor and his coach.

[English]

Can he also say whether or not they would be looking at the whole question of due process for an athlete so that there is some kind of proper appeal if an athlete is accused? Will he be looking at those kinds of questions in the inquiry?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that we will have an inquiry and we will take the time to sit down with those who are concerned to make sure that we have some understanding of the terms and where we want to go with this inquiry. I hope that through this process we will offer an opportunity for Ben Johnson to speak and to be heard because Canadians want to hear what he has to say. It is important that he have that opportunity.

In the meantime, may I remind Hon. Members of exactly how the system works. In the case of Mr. Johnson, a test is taken. The IOC makes its determination, and it has made a decision to suspend him for the rest of the Games. That decision is without appeal. Obviously the Games will finish.

The IAAF, the international body for track and field, then enters in and suspends him for a period of two years. The Canadian Track and Field Association follows suit. That is the third instance. Automatically, the rules we have had since 1985-86 provide that the Canadian Government takes notice of that decision and then imposes its sanction.

After that has been done, of course the international federation provides for a 30-day appeal period. That is going on now and an opportunity is provided to the athlete to appeal that decision. If he is successful in his appeal, then the suspension will be withdrawn, as it should be. If he is not successful or if he chooses not to enter into the appeal, then after a period of two years the athlete will have an opportunity to appeal directly to the Canadian Government Minister to have his suspension lifted and then to be reintegrated.

That is the process that we have been following, the process that applies to each and every athlete in Canada.

PUBLIC WORKS

SALE OF MOISIE LANDS—REQUEST THAT INQUIRY BE ESTABLISHED

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have another question today for the Minister of Public Works. This morning, we read in The Globe and Mail that the Minister's statements are a mass of contradictions. His colleague, the Minister of National Defence, who was acting for the Minister last Thursday and Friday, informed the House that there had been an investigation by the RCMP. Friday, he said there was a second one. However, the Minister of Public Works, on whose behalf the Minister of National Defence was answering in the House, later informed the House that he was not aware of this at all. One day the Minister of Public Works tells us that he transmitted a letter on Thursday and the next day, it's Friday. Mr. Speaker, we have a really confused bunch across the way!

I want to ask the Minister of Public Works whether, as a man of honour and integrity, he would agree to submit his own case and that of his political staff to an investigation, either by the Privy Council or the Deputy Prime Minister or a committee of the House. One thing is certain: he is not at all sure about his facts. I think that if the Minister of Public Works, as a man of honour and integrity, wants to save his reputation, he should either immediately submit to an investigation or tender his resignation. Is he prepared to make a gesture to clear his own name?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday when I was away from Ottawa, apparently a package of material was given to the RCMP. They looked at it and found nothing there which compelled their further attention. Apparently, further information was given to them within a day or two, and they are now proceeding to an inquiry about that matter. That inquiry is still going on. We will await the results of the inquiry before commenting further.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just proved my point. He is already completely confused about what happened last Thursday and Friday. He tells us that Thursday, a package of material was examined by the RCMP. It wasn't like that at all. The Minister of National Defence told us the exact opposite. Thursday, the investigation had already been completed, and the Minister of National Defence said that a second investigation had been ordered that night.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works doesn't know what happened in his own Department and what his own staff was doing. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works has also sinned by omission. In his press release last Saturday, he said: To my knowledge, the actions of Mr. J.C. Gosselin, who was a member of my staff... ", and so forth. Mr. Speaker, why didn't the Minister of Public Works mention the actions of his present chief of staff, Mr. Ron Lefebvre, who was also involved several times in this matter? Why did the Minister justify what was done by Mr. J.C. Gosselin but forget about Ron Lefebvre?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I heard all of that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McInnes: But in any event, I got a letter. It was a complaint by an employee of Public Works. He wanted a comment from me. I asked to have the letter investigated, and until the RCMP have concluded their inquiry I will withhold further comment.

TAX REFORM

HOUSE—EFFECT OF PROPOSED SALES TAX

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Canadian Home Builders' Association has said that the Conservatives' proposed sales tax to be implemented if the Government is re-elected will add approximately $10,000 to the selling price of a newly constructed home. If we use today's Royal LePage figures, for an average home in Halifax that means a rise from $93,000 to $101,000, a rise in Montreal from $102,000 to $111,000, a rise in Toronto from $225,000 to $245,000, and a rise in Vancouver from $160,000 to $174,000. Given that this is going to mean that home ownership for the average Canadian family will be too expensive, why is the Government prepared to take away the dream of home ownership from thousands of average Canadians and their families by implementing such a tax?

• (1440)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Fear mongering.

Mr. Waddell: I don't think it's so funny.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I want to help the Hon. Member with some statements in the past months he has obviously missed. First, he knows that neither the base nor the rate for the new federal sales tax has been decided. Therefore, his complaint is very premature.

Second, the Minister of Finance spoke directly to the Canadians to whom the Member made reference this morning. This is what the Minister of Finance said in Regina on December 6. "He said that when the new system is clear, and there are a great many details to be settled, we will assess whether it might pose a barrier to affordable housing. If it does, we will take action to address the problem either by assisting individuals and families directly or by modifying the operation of the tax in this important area. We will do so in the spirit of reasonable consultation I described a few moments ago.

That is the answer to the Hon. Member's question. This Government has been working hard in housing and this is fully consistent with that.

Mr. Waddell: I don't know why the Government just doesn't exempt housing.

REQUEST THAT HOUSE PURCHASES BE EXEMPT FROM TAX

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Last year in my province Premier Bill Vander Zalm put on a property purchase tax, which meant a $1,600 increase for houses in the Lower Mainland, and his pal here in Ottawa, the Government led by the present Prime Minister, is going to put on a tax which will mean an increase of $10,000 on houses. I want to ask the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Don't be silly!

Mr. Waddell: These are the figures from the Government's own tax papers. Given that interest rates are up, given that housing prices are up according to today's figures, given that the Government is spending like a drunken sailor right now and will need taxation after the election, will the Government now say it will exempt home purchases from this proposed new sales tax and finally give a break to average Canadians and their families who need it to purchase houses?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, what I will say is that the Hon. Member should do some mathematics. First of all, there is federal sales tax and provincial sales tax being levied on building materials today.

Mr. Waddell: Not like this.

Mr. Hockin: Those, of course, will be removed and factored into our new multi-stage sales tax. Together with that, this Government has reduced the deficit from over 8 per cent of GDP to a little over 4 per cent in four years.

Mr. Waddell: You have taxed the average family more.

Mr. Hockin: That is putting an economic context in place so that the average Canadian can not only earn a living but buy a home as well.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STAFFING OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL CENTRES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in 1985 this Government announced it would cut back on training and recruitment programs for the Public Service and get rid of thousands of jobs in the Public Service through attrition. This the Government has done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: It has led to understaffing at air traffic control centres, for example, right from Vancouver, British Columbia, to Gander, Newfoundland.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why the Government this week is sending letters right throughout the United States offering Canadian air traffic controller jobs to Americans who were fired from their jobs in 1981. Why go to so much trouble to issue ministerial permits and orders to circumvent the Immigration Act and the Public Service hiring laws, and the security laws, just to hire Americans who have not worked since 1981, when so many Canadians are willing to train for these Public Service jobs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, and President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that indeed there is a short-term shortage of controllers. Some 40 or so are being hired on an interim basis.

Mr. Boudria: From where? From the United States.

Mr. Mazankowski: Outside the country. That is what I am informed. I think in large part this is due to the successful results of regulatory reform which has provided more transportation to more communities and, therefore, more people travelling, particularly in the Toronto area, and that is where the shortage is critical.

OFFER OF JOBS TO AMERICANS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, just a few months ago some Newfoundland applicants were refused even an opportunity to apply for air traffic control training positions because the notification of their interview time had come late in the mail due to the decrease, the downgrading of our mail service. Now, coincidentally when the head of Canada Post, Donald Lander, this week was given a huge salary increase, the Americans are taking Canadian jobs.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister justify giving the Americans free room and board, free relocation, all expenses paid, when the mobility grants for Canadians were halted by this Government? How can he justify an on-the-job training allowance for the Americans of over $1,000 a week, $5,000 a month, which is not available to Canadians? Why this handout to the Americans and a backhand to Canadians?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, simply put, I think the Hon. Member should be congratulating the Government, because the air traffic into Toronto has exceeded all expectations. In fact the Toronto air traffic control centre is now handling over 600,000 flights a year. That traffic was not forecast to occur until 1991. This is largely in part due to the success of regulatory reform, and the tremendous acceptance of it and the tremendous impact it has had on service to more Canadians—

Mr. Gauthier: You were warned.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and more Canadians travelling by air.

Mr. Tobin: You were warned, and you know it.

PUBLIC WORKS

SALE OF FORMER RADAR BASE—OFFICIAL'S LETTER TO MINISTER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. It concerns the radar base sale in Moisie, Québec. Yesterday in the House, in reply to a question I asked the Minister, he told me there was not even a hint of impropriety in the letter Mr. Hylands wrote to him in early August, a letter which he refuses to table in this House and which reads in part:

> Jean-Claude Gosselin became involved in this disposal. I acceded to Mr. Gosselin's request for a meeting with a Mr. Cote, a P.C. organizer who was lobbying for Lefebvre's tender—
> Mr. Thibault, the choice of the local municipalities, increased his total offer to an amount superior to the amended Lefebvre offer. This situation resulted in Mr. Gosselin's request that I meet with Mr. Cote on behalf of Mr. Lefebvre's interest—

Will the Minister not agree that these statements constitute not only a hint of impropriety but an impropriety itself, and the letter should have been turned over to the RCMP then and there?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have never used the "hint" with respect to this particular issue. We are not aware of a Conservative organizer by the the name of Côté. An official, one of my departmental assistants received a phone call requesting that he arrange an interview with Mr. Hylands. It is the kind of request I have had from virtually every single person in this House. It is one of the obligations we accept when we are Members of Parliament, to ensure that anybody has the opportunity to make proper representation to any of the public servants. That was done and it was done in the normal course of events.

This letter indicated that nothing was untoward. There was no complaint in the letter. It was from an aggrieved individual who was taken off the file. And my position has been made very clear on this.

REFERRAL OF LETTER TO RCMP

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. In light of the fact that the Minister is staying on this old saw that Mr. Hyland's letter was a personal grievance, if this is the case, if this letter was a personal grievance letter because he was taken off the case, why did the Minister turn this letter over to the RCMP which was doing an investigation into the land sale at Moisie? Has the RCMP suddenly become the shop steward?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, when allegations were made outside of the letter, it was brought to my attention that the RCMP had been given suggestions about undue influence or something of that nature. I immediately suggested it would be appropriate for the RCMP to have everything in my possession. That was the course we followed.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR ONTARIO GRAPE GROWERS

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. As the Minister knows, several weeks ago the federal Government and the Province of Ontario entered into an agreement to provide $100 million in assistance to Ontario's grape and wine industry. The negotiations are now under way with the province and the representatives of the industry. However, grape growers are anxious to be provided with the details of the distribution package. Will the Minister provide the House with an update as to how the negotiations are going and as to when an announcement will be made in this important area?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in this very important subject. Of course we are continuing to discuss this $100 million initiative with the province, with the industry, and particularly with the growers. I believe he is aware that there are various aspects to this program, including the acreage reduction, price support, marketing, and surplus removal.

Mr. Tobin: Why was this program necessary in the first place?

Mr. Mazankowski: The program was necessary because of a GATT ruling of which Members opposite are so much in favour. I challenge the Member to read the press release which was signed by Ontario and the Government of Canada.

In the meantime I want to assure the Hon. Member that the Government is assisting in the purchase of surplus grapes. Approximately 12,000 tonnes have already been purchased. This will continue. I am optimistic that the details of the program will be worked out very soon.

AIRPORTS

HAMILTON AIRPORT—SUGGESTED ALTERNATIVE TO TORONTO

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to return to the admission he made a few moments ago about the deplorable conditions at Toronto International Airport and the excuses he made for that which we in the Opposition do not accept. We insist that urgent steps be taken to try to remedy the problem for the travelling public.

Without excusing those conditions, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if the Government is aware that there is an underused federal airport in Hamilton? Why have no efforts been made by the Government to increase the traffic there, including the possibility of using that airport as an alternative to sitting on the tarmac in Ottawa, for example, waiting for at least two and sometimes three hours before one can take off and fly to the Toronto area?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are indeed addressing the very serious problems. That is why additional air traffic controllers are being brought in on an interim basis. The fact is that this Government has done a lot to improve the conditions at the Hamilton Airport. As a matter of fact there was a serious dispute with regard to the removal of some trees which had the effect of limiting the use of the Hamilton Airport. This was done. Of course we are encouraging the utilization of Hamilton in every way, shape and form.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER VISIT HAMILTON AIRPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is a former Minister of Transport. Would he undertake to visit Hamilton Airport to meet with the citizens' groups that are concerned with the underutilization of that airport? Will he take steps and make a commitment to increase the traffic at that airport?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have probably visited the Hamilton Airport more times than the Hon. Member even though he lives in the area. As a matter of fact I participated in the opening of the new airport terminal building.

PUBLIC WORKS

CANADA POST CLEANING CONTRACT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. I want to remind the Minister that his Department took part in the tendering of a cleaning contract for Canada Post. The president of the company which was a higher bidder and was awarded the contract said that after all the bids were in officials of Canada Post said they still wanted his company to do the job even though it was the second highest of the four bidders. He said: "They asked me to negotiate the bid". He said that he lowered his bid by about 10 per cent to make it slightly lower than Federated's and then was awarded the contract.

Does the Minister not agree that this has all the appearances of undermining the integrity of the bidding process? Is the Minister prepared to put a stop to this? Will he investigate it? What will he do to preserve the integrity of the bidding process so that people with the lowest bid can get fair treatment and get the contract?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, our Department handles thousands of contracts a year. I have not been given notice of this question and I do not know to what contract the Hon. Member refers. As a matter of general principle, Crown corporations are not subject to quite the guidelines that are imposed on Departments of Government. Canada Post has the final say on who they want to hire. All we do is administer the procedure.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is really a great surprise to know that this Minister is not concerned about this situation. Why is he prepared to allow a situation where the tendering process is stopped, while the person who made the highest bid, or nearly, receives the contract and the one who made the lowest bid is ignored? Why is he prepared to let this situation continue without taking any action?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if this matter is of the importance that the Hon. Member gives it, I thought he would have given notice to me so that we might have it investigated.

Mr. Keeper: Do you not read The Globe and Mail?

Mr. McInnes: It is not required reading, Mr. Speaker, no.

There are a lot of considerations in the awarding of contracts. There are three or four considerations and price is one of them. There are many others. If the Hon. Member gives me an indication of the file to which he refers, I will be glad to investigate it.

SOCIAL JUSTICE

QUEBEC'S PLACE IN CANADA

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and relates to the statements made by the Premier of Alberta, Mr. Getty, who said that the Province of Quebec got everything that the Premier of Quebec asked for. Moreover, Mr. Getty used the bilingualism policy to justify his statements by saying, "Bilingualism should not be rammed down our throats."

Since the Deputy Prime Minister comes from Alberta, could he talk with the Premier of that province to remind him that Quebec has not had its fair share, that Quebec got none of the frigate contracts, that this resulted in the closing of two shipyards, that despite many promises, Quebec has not got the space agency and that it has only received $560 million for regional development, while the West got more than a billion dollars and the Atlantic provinces... Could he ask the Premier of Alberta to stop spreading falsehoods, when Quebec has not got its fair share, economically?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I noticed in the press this morning that the Premier has modified his statement. I think that should be noted. I have not had a chance to speak to him about it, but I think it is worth noting that he also indicated that the present Government reflects western needs better than any other federal Government. I think that is really an understatement.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER FORCE ALBERTA PREMIER TO REVISE STATEMENTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is serious and I would hope that the Deputy Prime Minister will speak to the Premier of Alberta. The attitude of the Premier of Alberta tends to arouse all Westerners against Quebec because they believe that Quebec gets everything. Quebec has got nothing from the Conservative Government. It is just verbal pollution and rhetoric from the Prime Minister that makes people think that Quebec has got everything. Would the Deputy Prime Minister be prepared to ask the Premier of Alberta and to tell him that in the field of research, science and technology, Quebec gets crumbs, while the other provinces get most of the contracts and that in Montreal alone, Quebec is still waiting for its money to develop the old port, while all the other municipalities got theirs? Could he ask Premier Getty to keep his statements to himself?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I just quoted what the Premier said about this Government in terms of its support for the West. I think all Hon. Members would agree, if they were just to be a little bit objective, that this Government has been fair for the East, for the West, for Central Canada, for the North—

Mr. Nystrom: Big business.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and for the average Canadian because we have provided jobs like no other Government has in the history of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PAYMENT OF BENEFITS TO PARENTS CARING FOR TERMINALLY ILL CHILDREN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister, or whomever might be answering for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It has to do with cases that I am sure all Members of Parliament are aware of and have had brought to their attention, but which have arisen particularly of late in Winnipeg. I refer to the question of unemployment insurance benefits for women who cannot work because they have to take time out to care for their terminally-ill children.

A number of cases have come up in this regard and people have been denied benefits. Has the Government had an opportunity to consider this matter? It has had a profile recently. Is the Government prepared to say today that the regulations will be changed so that mothers or parents who are put in this very difficult situation will not be penalized by the current regulations?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration not being in the House at this time I will be happy to take the question as notice and relay it to them.

There are already some cases that are under judicial review and some decisions have been rendered. I know that the Department is looking at some of those cases now. Perhaps that is the case with regard to the subject that the Hon. Member is bringing up today.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, this is not a case of anything that is before any judicial process. This is a matter of policy that the Government has the freedom to adopt. This is not something new. This issue has been around. I am sure that there are Members of Parliament in the Minister's own caucus who have run into these kinds of situations.

Frankly, I am a bit surprised that the Government is not more forthcoming at this point. What could possibly be wrong with the Government getting up and announcing an intention to change the regulations so that parents who are put in this very difficult situation are not penalized in the way they are now? It has to do with the whole question of parental leave.

In that respect I ask the Minister whether or not the Government is prepared to say today that it is not going to appeal the decision with respect to Shalom Shacter. These are issues that the Government needs to come clean on now before the election so that Canadians can know whether the Government is prepared to act compassionately in this regard.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to take the Member's statements as representations, of course. I am sure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration will respond as rapidly as she can.

LINGUISTIC MINORITIES

REQUEST THAT FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUÉBEC RECEIVE TV5 TELEVISION CHANNEL ACCESS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications, but in her absence I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister.

My question concerns the TV5 network and the "Francophonie" outside Quebec which has yet to receive this signal. We know that TV5 is the brain child of the Francophonie Summit and is supported by five francophone entities: Canada and Quebec, France, Belgium, Switzerland and francophone Africa.

This week, from what was said by the Minister of Communications, I understood that action will be taken and a decision made with respect to this network. We know that at the present time, Francophones outside Quebec cannot receive the signal, except for a few small groups.

Has the Government finally decided to give francophones across Canada access to this important network and thus achieve a long-awaited goal?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I think he realizes this is a crucial matter and that we are very aware of the need for a solution.

Mr. Speaker, I am informed that discussions are under way at the present time which should lead to positive results. I am also informed, Mr. Speaker, that if there is no positive outcome of these discussions, the Government would certainly consider some kind of solution.

ACCESS TO TV5 PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): The Minister will remember the problems we had a few years ago with the broadcasting of the Olympic Games in Calgary. It took a year and a half for the Government to take action on this matter. We don't want to wait a year and a half, to be told that the TV5 network is not available.

Could the Minister tell Canadians today that the $1.8 million invested in this project will not be wasted, that TV5 will soon be available, if not tomorrow, at least soon, in other words, next week, so that we in the Canadian Diaspora will have access to an international francophone network?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think that again, there is at least one point on which the Hon. Member and the Government are agreed: Our investment should provide the expected return. I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that a solution will be found and implemented in less than a year and a half.

AIR SAFETY

CANADIAN AIRLINES INTERNATIONAL—FLIGHT'S WRONG COURSE, WRONG DESTINATION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): My question is addressed to whomever is answering for the Minister of Transport.

Last week, a Canadian Airlines International Boeing 737 left Yellowknife on a routine flight to Cambridge Bay, but somehow ended up at Churchill, Manitoba, 1,000 miles and 90 degrees off course. In the process it violated the airspace of many major routes.

I would like to know how did this happen, and what will happen in future to prevent a recurrence of this dangerous type of incident.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, obviously this is a matter that would be referred to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. Indeed, I would assume that it would be a matter that would be—

Ms. McDonald: It's the new continental policy.

Mr. Mazankowski: Perhaps if you want the NDP to answer the question you may not get the answer you like, Mr. Speaker.

Obviously, the company will want to assess this particular incident in terms of its safety standards as well.

I can assure the Hon. Member that one of the advantages of the new changes to the Aeronautics Act and the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is that they can involve themselves in the investigation of these kinds of incidents, and have a thorough and objective analysis and report on a subject of this nature. I am sure that the Hon. Member, as well other Hon. Members, would want to be as assured that this process would indeed take place.

PETITIONS

SOUTH MORESBY PARK—HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions from residents of Delta, Surrey, particularly Crescent Beach, and Tsawwassen, British Columbia.

The petitioners state that when the South Moresby Park Agreement was signed the federal Government committed itself to spending $20 million or more to explore for minerals and hydrocarbons in this First National Marine Park. They point out, however, that exploring for hydrocarbons in these waters is dangerous.

The West Coast of British Columbia is Canada's most earthquake-prone region, and the Queen Charlotte area has an even higher earthquake activity than the San Andreas Fault.

Therefore, the petitioners do not want any more hydrocarbon exploration activities to take place in their coastal waters, be they initiated by the public or private sector, nor do they want government to pay for any such activities.

As in duty bound, the petitioners pray.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a petition to present from people in Port Coquitlam, Port Moody, Tsawwassen, and other points along the lower mainland of British Columbia. They are petitioning the House and asking that all exploration activities agreed to in the South Moresby Park Agreement be discontinued and that the Government not pay for any such activities, a commitment of $20 million having been made in the South Moresby Park Agreement.

They also point out that the earthquake danger is higher than the San Andreas Fault in California, that the sea in that area is among the roughest and most unpredictable in the world, and that it could be a potential ecological disaster to open up a hole into an oil well in that area.

BILL C-55—REFUGEE DETERMINATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have several different petitions to present, all of them approved according to the rules, Standing Order 106.

One of them is from citizens of several places in Ontario who are very concerned that Bill C-55 threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees. They are afraid that most refugees who reach our borders will be turned away without having the merits of their case heard, because there is no sufficient appeal except on points of law, because the safe third country notion has no foundation in law, no definition, and because the standing committee of Parliament produced three years ago a far better, fairer and quicker system for dealing with refugee claims within Canada.

Therefore, they request that Parliament ensure that the Government withdraw Bill C-55, substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants, and that there be universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada.

SOUTH MORESBY PARK—HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of residents of Canada who are concerned that the South Moresby Park Agreement, which was signed in June, means that the federal Government is committing itself to spending $20 million or more to explore for minerals and hydrocarbons in what it is calling the First National Marine Park.

They point out that mining or drilling will render the whole concept of park creation meaningless. They also point out that the West Coast is Canada's most earthquake-prone zone and that the Hecate Strait is among the roughest and most unpredictable seas in the world.

Therefore, they request that Parliament understand that they do not want any more hydrocarbon exploration to take place in the coastal waters, and that they do not want the Government to be paying for it.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF PARENTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have petitions from a number of residents of the City of Toronto who are concerned with the promise that the Government made nearly three years ago that Canadian permanent residents should have the same right as Canadian citizens to sponsor parents of any age.

They are asking the Government to have that promise fulfilled now.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of Toronto who point out that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal threatens the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty, has no mandate from the Canadian people, would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social, and cultural programs that we need, and would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore, the undersigned ask Parliament to ensure that the national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate results in a national general election before any agreement is finalized.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE QUALIFYING PERIOD

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is also my duty to present to this House a number of petitions coming from residents of southeast New Brunswick, more particularly from the communities of Albert, West River, Hopewell Cape, Riverside, Pennfield, and many other communities in Albert County.

These petitioners feel that they are not being treated fairly in that the Government has changed the admissibility period for UIC from 10 weeks to 16 weeks. In their case, the Government is not taking any action to change the regulations so that the admissibility period is brought back to 10 weeks, and this action was taken by this Government in other parts of Canada.

SOUTH MORESBY PARK—HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of people in Port Coquitlam, Coquitlam, and in Port Moody, British Columbia, who say that on July 12, 1988, when the South Moresby Park Agreement was signed, the federal Government committed itself to spending $20 million or more to explore for hydrocarbons in the South Moresby marine park.

Whereas the Queen Charlotte region has higher earthquake activity than the San Andreas Fault in California, whereas Hecate Strait has the roughest, most unpredictable sea in the world, the undersigned do not want any more hydrocarbon exploration activities to take place in their coastal waters, nor do they want this Government to pay for such activities.

I may say, having visited all those areas, that I agree with the petitioners and that I am proud to present these petitions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BROADCASTING ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-136, an Act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto, be read the third time and passed, and the amendment of Mrs. Finestone (p. 19682).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I speak on third reading of this Bill, because I consider it important. It is important because it will change the ground rules for a highly useful service, namely broadcasting and television, which has an increasing impact on the lives of Canadians.

I speak because I believe that the debate has shown that this Bill has several shortcomings, that it needs to be strengthened, that we in the Official Opposition have sought to propose many amendments. Besides, the Government, to the Minister's credit, has accepted amendments to the Bill. I speak because television is very important in our house, as it is in other homes. Watching television may be Canadians' favourite pastime.

[English]

Watching television is the number one leisure activity of Canadians. It does not say much for keeping in shape, but it says an awful lot for that medium. I think that Marshall McLuhan, when he said the medium was indeed a warm medium, was completely right. It does appeal to people and it does have a very strong impact on our day-to-day lives. We inform ourselves through it and we are subjected to its publicity, spending most of our time watching what a third party prepared, either a sports program or a scenario of some type which is attempting to occupy our intellect for the period.

Each year Canadian children watch approximately 1,000 hours of television, compared to 800 hours in school; 95 per cent of Canadians are radio listeners spending eight hours per week at that activity; two-thirds of Canadians say that watching sports, theatre or concerts on television is their favourite pastime; more than 50 per cent of Canadians say that broadcasting is their principal source of news and information.

In 1988 Canada is culturally an occupied country because a lot of television we watch is not made in Canada for Canadians. The content of our system has been and remains a major problem. That is why it is appropriate that we give serious consideration to the Bill before us.

While it is true that our society relies heavily on the recorded media, it is important to remember that most Canadians watch, hear, and believe what they hear and see on that television set. It reflects the thoughts, the attitudes, the world views, and the feelings of other nations, and in Canada primarily that of our neighbour and friend, the United States of America. With Bill C-136 we are trying to push and encourage change and make Canadians a little more aware of the importance of and need for Canadian cultural products.

I want to give the House a few facts on foreign domination of our culture. Some 80 per cent of our publishing industry is in foreign hands, 97 per cent of the films shown in Canada are foreign, 85 per cent of records and tapes are based on imported master tapes, and 71 per cent of all programs viewed by English-speaking Canadians on television are American.

The same cannot be said for the French network because there is une difference. Today I rose and asked the Minister if indeed he could expand la difference, if he would look into the possibility of giving French-speaking Canadians access to a second French-speaking network. We have access to CBC because of a policy adopted in 1973 by the previous Liberal Government giving access to television and radio to all communities, French or English, in Canada where there were 500 people or more. That was a good policy we put into effect, and today Canadians have access to a national network of radio and television. Therefore, they can hear and see their preferred programs in the language of their choice.

Whereas most English-speaking Canadians take it for granted that the cable service to the television set they have before them will give them the programs they want to watch in their language, in most provinces outside Québec Francophones do not have that choice. I am asking the Government to lead on this issue, to show political will, and political courage, and to do something to give greater access to the 1.5 million Canadians of French expression living outside Québec who have access but to one station. Give them a choice. Give them TV5.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, TV5 was the brainchild of the first Francophonie Summit in 1986 in Paris. It was designed and set up by a number of European countries, together with Canada and Quebec, and also Francophone Africa, to give this community its first international network that would reflect various cultural expressions and where one would be able to get information from Canada and Quebec, from Europe—France, Switzerland and Belgium—and from Africa. This means that people who have access to the TV5 network will receive a kind of television that would be different but would give them access to international programming, which I think is very worth while.

Canada has invested $1.8 million in this experiment. So far, only Quebec has had general access to the TV5 signal. In my riding, in Ottawa—Vanier, we have one cable tv distributor, Skyline, that provides the signal or, I should say, sells the signal to its subscribers, because it costs more here in Ontario than it costs Quebecers to get services in French. In my riding, for instance, Skyline will charge $6 per month more than it does subscribers who do not have access to TV5 and Canal Famille. In Quebec, however, the same service costs only $1.68. In fact, it is more than the same service because in Quebec people get five signals for $1.68. How come? We are told the signal is available to cable TV distributors in Quebec at a minimum rate of, I believe, 27 cents per subscriber, with administration and depreciation costs, which I think is very reasonable.

Until five o'clock yesterday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I thought that with the help of the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), we had succeeded in getting this signal extended to the rest of Canada, but meanwhile, I was told, and this was not official, that negotiations fell through at five o'clock yesterday afternoon. Why? I don't know. I was told that negotiations had been resumed and of course it wasn't perfect, but Ottawa Cablevision, which serves the western part of Ottawa, had agreed to buy the signal at a very low rate, so that the entire National Capital would now be able to receive TV5. However, we saw today, Mr. Speaker, that apparently it fell through yesterday afternoon, because of some disagreement between the cable TV distributors and the consortium.

I hope the matter will be settled. I hope they will soon reach a decision, because it is important for us to get the same service. To me, it is elementary that Canadians who have invested in a network like this one through their taxes should have access to this programming. So I would not want us to waffle and negotiate again for months and months, but that a decision be made to make this programming available to francophones. It is one example that I give, among others, to show that there are really two main networks in Canada. There is the English television and radio service and the French television and radio service. The English-language service is of course always threatened by Americanization. And that is why I believe that Bill C-136 must be strengthened, to try to convince the Government and the CRTC, the agency responsible for all the regulations, to be extremely sensitive to Canadian content. And of course, at the same time I raise the problem of the French network, which has a great need for more diverse programming.

Today may be the time, at the end of a Parliament, to make a decision, but I hope that it will not be done in haste. I hope that Members will want to debate this whole question, so that they can understand what we in the Opposition are striving for, that is, to encourage the Government to shoulder its responsibilities, to give a voice to this political will, to really put decision-making powers into law, with increased accountability to the people, that is, to Parliament, via the Cabinet, but also with powers to make decisions and to give directions. Now, that is not quite what we have before us, Mr. Speaker! This Bill leaves much to be desired.

I want to touch on two points—I know that my time is not unlimited, on the contrary—two points that are important in my riding. The first is television receivers for residents or owners of condominium buildings or apartments.

• (1530)

What is called the condominium question. That has been the object of an amendment by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and the object of great debate here in which I participated.

I wanted to make sure people understood that resident owners of condominiums with a master antenna television system are really concerned. They came before the committee and told the Government and the Minister that they were concerned about Bill C-136 because of the definition of distribution undertaking in the Bill. Their concerns were that it would bring these master antennae under the Act to the extent that they receive and distribute broadcasting.

In debate I quoted the Canadian Bar Association and made the point that some of us were concerned that condominium owners would be treated differently than single dwelling owners, could be subjected to some discrimination, and under a CRTC ruling would possibly be subject to undue measures and more expensive undertakings.

Our position has been consistent and it was put very forcefully by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). We believe, and argued this all through the debate, that condominium owners have the right to know where they stand. The Minister answered a few questions but she was very vague and, I thought, wishy-washy and not too forthcoming with clear and definite undertakings. We believed and still believe that an amendment to the Bill would have been appropriate because it would have provided an assurance allowing the CRTC to place terms and conditions to ensure fairness. I hoped the Government would understand that all we were asking for was equity.

We did not and do not understand why the Government resisted, why the Minister continued to tell us not to worry. In committee the Minister said this:

> I would like to address an issue raised recently by people living in apartments and condominiums who use satellite dishes to receive broadcasting signals. There is concern that the broadcasting Bill will in some way impose restrictive regulations or limit their viewing choices. This fear is simply unfounded.

Many witnesses, including the Canadian Bar Association, said that they did not think the Minister understood what we were trying to tell her. Indeed, they fear condominium owners will be treated unjustly, and they are asking the Minister to make sure the Bill is amended. We proposed amendments but they were rejected. Given that, condominium owners will now probably be caught by the law and subject to what I would call unfair and possibly unjust regulations.

I want to end my comments on a more positive note. The Bill before us is very important. It is not a very strong Bill in the eyes of our critic. I want to pay a tribute to her as well. She has worked very hard in putting forward our point of view forcefully and with conviction.

We are sorry that the Minister had to fight, and this is not revealing secrets, her fellow cabinet Members to get this Bill. It is not a perfect Bill, far from it. We are told by some opponents of the Bill that we should adopt it, because if we do not, what we get come the next Parliament could be, if, God forbid, the Government were re-elected, a worse Bill than we have now. Those are the words of a man by the name of Gerald Caplan.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): That is not true.

Mr. Gauthier: I refer the Hon. Member to the record. I think he will find that it is true. Mr. Gerald Caplan was a member of the commission and co-authored the Caplan-Sauvageau report, and he said this week that he feared that if the Bill were not passed, we could face a worse Bill, that is, if we have bad luck in this country and the Government is re-elected.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Be nice.

Mr. Gauthier: This bunch of Tories over here.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Tell the truth, good government.

Mr. Gauthier: I will pass on that remark because it does not convince me that we should pass a bad Bill just because we fear that we will get a worse Bill from the Government down the pike sometime. I am convinced we will defeat the Government. We will improve the legislation. We will do it with generosity, understanding, and we will do it for sure come this fall.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Tell Bourassa that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, first, I was going to take this opportunity to indicate my appreciation for the support given to me by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Second, I want to ask the Member a couple of questions, however, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who sat for two years with us on this committee, has another commitment and I would like to respect her time. I would like my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier to understand that I cannot ask him the question for which I know he would have a most enlightened answer, but I will leave the time for my colleague from Broadview—Greenwood.

• (1540)

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

It seems that Bill C-136 has been a very long haul. At the time of the Caplan-Sauvageau report I was communications and culture critic for my caucus and I gave a brief to that task force. I then sat on a committee that studied the task force report. It was an excellent task force led by Florian Sauvageau and Gerald Caplan. It did superb work and held hearings across the country. Then our own Standing Committee on Communications and Culture came up with a unanimous report which largely endorsed the strongly pro-Canadian, unashamedly pro-Canadian, nationalistic, "let's promote Canadian culture. Let's have a strong Canadian broadcasting thrust", Caplan-Sauvageau report.

Now we see that the Government has reneged. It has refused and rejected some of the most important recommendations from the task force and from the Standing Committee. There are major flaws left in this Bill before us now.

Some improvements have been made, Mr. Speaker. Some amendments were accepted at committee. I would like to cite them briefly to show that some sanity has prevailed and these improvements have been made. For example, equal rights have been inserted into the broadcast policy for Canada in famous Clause 3 of the Broadcasting Bill. This has been long a demand of Canadian women who have been left out of Canadian broadcasting, yet we define the radio waves as public property and women were very much second-class citizens on that public resource, the airwaves.

The Government, incredibly enough, had not included a decent section although the standing committee had recommended a decent section on the subject. The Government had ignored it but now we at least have some recognition of that through amendment. We also see some improvement concerning regions, that they would reflect regions to the rest of Canada while serving the special needs of those regions. We also see a better statement of predominant use of Canadian creative and other resources in the creation and presentation of programming. This is in Clause 3. Here is one of the places where the Government's original draft gave way to Americanization. The wording in the 1968 Act had been stronger than what the Government wanted in 1988. Despite all the PR about promoting Canadian programming, the Government was not going to do that. Fortunately there is now a rather convoluted clause, Clause 3(e), but it does state very clearly that there will have to be maximum use:

> —and in no case less than predominant use, of Canadian creative and other resources . . . unless the nature of the service provided by the undertaking, such specialized content or format or use of languages other than French and English, renders that use impracticable, in which case the undertaking shall make the greatest practicable use of those resources.

That is a reasonable statement to make. I am glad to see that enlightenment for the CBC's role got back into the Bill, one of these curious anomalies, and the Government, fortunately, backtracked on that. It was a curious anomaly but it would have been very bad if the CBC had been left without that as its mandate and left only to inform and entertain, not to provide that enormously important role of enlightening Canadians through documentaries and very thoughtful shows which the CBC puts on.

Now we have a Bill that we cannot support, but there are still major flaws in it.

[Translation]

This would be the first time in Canada that a Bill would be passed without unanimity, without the consent of all political parties in Canada. In the past, a consensus was reached on the provisions of the Broadcasting Act and for 60 years, the parties have worked together to reach consensus on it. So this would be the first time that the Conservative Government would not seek to promote culture in Canadian broadcasting. The Conservative Government gave in to the principle of free trade, the Government gave in to the Americans and we will see how the strength of American programming will increase in Canada!

[English]

Great opportunities have been lost, Mr. Speaker. Two very major flaws remain in the Bill before us today. I want to explain the problem. The Association of Canadian Film and Television Producers explains it very well. That Association points out that to have a strong Canadian system—it endorses the standing committee's recommendations to this effect—two things are necessary. First, all networks doing business in Canada must be required to hold a licence. Second, that the CRTC must have regulatory authority over any service earning revenues in Canada and Canadian markets, including specialty services, so that as they expand Canadian content requirements can be included. This is absolutely essential. The Canadian Cable Television Association endorsed this recommendation. It has strong support throughout the broadcasting community, strong support among writers, directors, and people who work in the industry. However, the Government rejected that, and it has given a number of phoney excuses in rejecting these major recommendations.

What is the impact of the Government's approach? It says that no foreign service should be denied the opportunity to operate in Canada. If there are 50 specialty services in the United States, there ought to be 50 in Canada. If the Americans move to 60, we ought to have 60 here. At no time should we say that no Canadians should have service from Canadian programmers. We should have what the standing committee recommended.

Certainly we accept off air broadcasters, the three-plus-one, the three major American regular broadcasters and public service, PBS, in Canada. Once we get the specialty services there ought to be complementary services. We should not be licensing every service, but we should be licensing services that can make a distinctive contribution that will be complementary to what we already have in Canada. That is how the standing committee and the task force saw it. That is how the industry thinks it should be and what would be workable.

What we have is a provision from the Conservative Government that any and every American broadcaster who wants to extend service into Canada, money making opportunities into Canada, will be free to do so with one possible exception. The CRTC acts where the Government refuses to act in legislation. We cannot be terrifically optimistic that this will happen. The recommendations were very clear that it be right in the Bill. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), introduced an amendment to this effect. He moved Motion No. 36 which said that only duly licensed services should be permitted. The amendment was turned down by the Conservatives. This approach had been accepted unanimously by the standing committee which studied the matter and heard people from across the country. Conservative members of the committee unanimously agreed that to have a strong Canadian system we would require this approach to promoting Canadian services, that we would allow Americans in up to a point where they would be complementary, but that if there were a Canadian to take over, a Canadian would take over.

The Americanized Conservative Government wants continentalization. This will undermine the ability of Canadian broadcasters to produce more Canadian programming when we look at how the industry actually functions. What Canadian broadcasters do is purchase American programs. They make money in advertising, in selling them. If they do not get exclusive rights for these programs, their revenues will decline. By allowing any American broadcaster in specialty services, which may be showing exactly the same material, into the same markets the Canadian broadcaster will be disadvantaged. They may not get the rights in the first place, or they will not have exclusive rights and they will get less revenue for it. This is wrong, very wrong.

The standing committee recognized the economic reality of the industry. In our sixth report, it was stated very clearly that even in large American markets there was only one available service in most programming categories. The report says that in Canada it is beyond question that a Canadian service could not co-exist with a non-Canadian service, especially if a Canadian service is expected to provide a meaningful contribution to Canadian programming.

The Conservative Government is prepared to have two classes of broadcasters in Canada, Canadian broadcasters like we had under the old rules who are required to make a contribution to Canadian broadcasting with Canadian programming, and another category of broadcasters who are free to make money in Canada without making any contribution to Canadian content. That is wrong.

Just as bad money drives out good, this kind of provision will make it harder and harder to have good Canadian programming. People will be able to make money without it. The ability of Canadian broadcasters to use their American purchases to generate revenue which then goes into more Canadian work will be lost. That circulation within the industry that everyone who knows the industry knows about has to be respected, but the Government did not want to do that.

The Canadian Association of Broadcasters says that the proposed Act fails to establish clearly the structure of the Canadian broadcasting system and principles that will keep it Canadian. Why is that? The structure will have these Canadian broadcasters who are producing Canadian programs and then these other guys who are making money but are not producing. It has not been made very clear that if a broadcaster wants to get a licence, and he must have a licence to operate, he has to produce.

"A post-free trade environment", says the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, "will undoubtedly generate increased pressure for access to the Canadian market for a wide variety of United States broadcasting and programming services". It suggests that there will be no adequate defence against that pressure, and I think it is right. Now, more than ever, we need this kind of protection.

What is the Government doing? It is reducing the protection that previously existed. If this approach had been taken from the beginning, we would not have a Canadian broadcasting system, or certainly not one apart from the CBC.

The Cultural Industries Alliance said, in its opposition to this decision, that the Government's approach, if implemented, would give U.S. broadcasters a growing share of the Canadian market and would do so without leaving us with any ability to ask them to contribute Canadian programming. It is simply unfair, and it will be destructive of the Canadian system in the long run.

Parallel to this question about who gets a licence and what they have to do for that licence, there is also the question of carriage requirements. The standing committee, a bunch of realists if there ever was one, understands very well that most Canadians do their television watching through cable, so it is not just a question of what is in the air but of what people get on their actual television screens.

Carriage regulations which fall under the CRTC are absolutely vital. It will not do us very much good if the Canadian content in the air is swamped by this importation of signals, perhaps by satellite, into the system, signals which go through on cable. Carriage regulations are absolutely vital, as is the question of licensing.

Carriage regulations seem crucial, and the standing committee certainly said this. The 1968 Act, however, an Act which was passed without reference to cable, did not deal with this question. The standing committee recognized that most Canadians got their services from cable so carriage regulations were as important in maintaining a reasonable balance between Canadian and foreign programming as any other element of the system. Indeed, if cable is not considered, then any other measures may be quite futile if we then allow this massive importation to get out into the system by satellite and cable.

The standing committee recommended that the Broadcasting Act should define the essential role of distribution undertakings, a fancy term for cable, as being the distribution of Canadian radio and television services, English and French, public and private, with priority given to public Canadian and then private Canadian, and made it very clear that this should be in the Bill. This should not be something discretionary that subsequent pressure might see changed.

Except for the three-plus-one, the three regular American broadcasters and PBS, the Bill should make provision for foreign programming only when it is complementary to what is available from licensed Canadian broadcasters. There is no more important recommendation than this in the work of the task force and the standing committee.

It is absolutely vital, if we are to have a decent system, that we understand the economics of the system, where to use the carrot and where to use the stick. This Government has not been prepared to do that. The Government has not been prepared to do it, I think for the very simple reason that the Americans, who already make an enormous amount of money in broadcasting in Canada, put pressure on the Minister to weaken this Act.

[Translation]

This Bill was weakened by the Government to please the Americans. This is because of the principle of free trade, which must be respected; that is, the Americans will have access to Canadian markets, including the field of culture.

[English]

The Government said that culture was not on the table, but I think that culture was indeed on the table. I think that has been amply demonstrated. An excellent analysis of this has been done in the statement on the implications of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement made by the Cultural Industries Alliance. This alliance includes the major cultural groups in broadcasting as well as writers, directors, and others. They point out that there are five prime examples of how the Government gave way because of the free trade agreement. They include the capital cost allowance, giving way on Canadian ownership rules in film distribution, requiring only Canadian markets rather than having a licensed import scheme that would promote Canadian ownership in film distribution. Of course, they include backing away on the Baie Comeau publishing policy, another very fundamental policy. As well, they include the rejection of key recommendations made by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture regarding the broadcasting Bill. We can see the impact of the free trade Bill already. It is bad for the country.

In the very little time I have left, I would like to point out that other deficiencies exist in the Bill. The Bill does nothing to support the CBC adequately. Much of this deals with funding. The Government made the statement that it was injecting $35 million more into funding for the CBC. However, since the Conservatives came into power, they have taken away from the CBC budget $140 million. The $35 million will not make up for the $140 million that has been taken away, and it is not clear that that $35 million is on top of cost-of-living increases or in lieu of cost of living increases.

The Government is pushing this legislation through at the last minute. The Government will not get unanimous support for it because there are major flaws in the legislation. This would have been an opportunity for us to go forward with Canadian culture. As Canadians, we could be proud of our writers, directors, and performers.

After the next election, I hope we will have a different kind of Government, a Government that will see the promotion of Canadian culture as being very important. Indeed, it is economically important. This is a wonderful area for job creation and is absolutely vital to the soul of Canada. I am disappointed to see that the Government gave way to the Americans on this and, in so doing, gave up the opportunity to move ahead.

Broadcasting is an area in which we have a lot to look forward to if we do not bind our hands as the free trade agreement does. This is an opportunity that has been lost by this Government. The Government is going to push it through and push it through fast. I can only say that we have to look to the future. I hope this Government will be thrown out at the next election.

I hope the free trade deal, which is at the bottom of all that is wrong with this particular Bill, will be stopped. Then we will have the opportunity to look at what we want to do as Canadians in broadcasting. At that stage we can start to build on the traditions that have developed so much up to now. I look forward to a future of building a strong Canadian culture in Canadian broadcasting. In the meantime, I certainly will not support this Bill, and I look forward to it being upset and improved in the future.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague, who gave a very interesting and well founded analysis, how she feels about the Minister's speech which was given for her by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) yesterday. He said, at page 19673 of Hansard, the following about the Bill:

> —if it is not passed and enacted very shortly, many Canadians, and I am thinking of ethnic and language minorities, native people, the disabled and many other groups, would lose this opportunity to take their rightful place in an area that is very important to them, the broadcasting sector.

He concluded by saying:

> —I would like to remind all Members in this House who may intend to oppose the passage of this Bill that they will have to justify their actions before the Canadian public which is in favour of this legislation.

Would the Hon. Member suggest that this is a fair assessment on the part of the Minister and a fair analysis by the Minister?

Ms. McDonald: No, Mr. Speaker, with respect to native people the Bill is not very good. I might point out that people in educational broadcasting are still very disappointed in the Bill. I belong to a group of women who has certainly been very critical of this Bill. It indicates that we now have equal rights there, so we do not have to worry about it. Improvements have been made, but I think people would really like to see a better Bill and I think people would be prepared to wait for a better Bill.

The Caplan-Sauvageau task force took a fair amount of time to study the situation. The standing committee spent some time and did good work. A broadcasting Act has a life span of roughly two decades. It seems to me that taking a few more months is not a bad idea when we can reasonably expect that it is going to be around for some time. I think an investment of a few months in a decent Bill would be well worth the wait. People would be quite reasonable about waiting just a little longer in order to get something they would really be pleased with.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, with respect to what the Hon. Member just said, I would like to ask her how she sees the concerns that I see. We have a regional cut of about 26 per cent by CBC in order to fulfil the totality of its mandate. As the Member and I know, CBC has a multiple mission, that of television in English and French, that of radio, AM and FM, English and French, Radio International, northern services, and the House of Commons service. I suggest that these are very important in the public interest.

The Minister now wishes to add money, even though there has been a significant cut to which the Member alluded earlier in her remarks. The Minister wants to put money into an alternative program. She has put money into . . .

[Translation]

. . . TV5, which does not go beyond the borders of Quebec, unfortunately.

[English]

To what extent does the Member think the public sector should be involved in funding national programs of national interest such as Radio Canada, CBC, Radio International Services, TV5, as well as alternative services, and perhaps All-News?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the best way to have good Canadian programming in Canada is to have a very strong public sector in broadcasting. I do not give up on the public sector. I think we need stronger regulations. The standing committee was certainly very clear that private broadcasting had to do a better job. However, it was very clear that in some regions there simply would not be enough money, especially for very small Francophone communities in the West where there was simply not the advertising revenue to carry adequate services in a minority language.

Realistically, there are many areas in which it would be necessary to have strong public presence. For that we are simply going to need money. This Government has not been prepared to spend that money. It can find money for nuclear submarines and for all kinds of incredibly generous give-aways to sectors of the economy that probably do not need it, yet when it comes to building up our Canadian culture it has been very, very skimpy.

We do need a second channel. The alternative public service proposed in these guidelines set out by the Government is totally inadequate. It is very sketchy. It is very vague. We do not really know what the Government has in mind, whether there would be adequate funding or not. It seems very unlikely. Therefore, I would simply say that we are going to need adequate public funding in educational TV, a second channel, All-News, all these things. In some cases, the increases required are very modest indeed, but they would make a real difference.

I think we want to see this combined with a stronger requirement to the private sector to put back into programming some of the very high profits it makes, but realistically we are going to need that vital public presence. This Government is just not prepared to find the dollars to make it alive.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Gauthier: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment is lost on division.

Amendment (Mrs. Finestone) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Miss MacDonald), which was agreed to on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the co-operation of the Opposition on this particular Bill, at this point anyway, we have agreed that rather than proceed with other business we will call it six o'clock.

While we will discuss this with the other Parties, it would be our intention tomorrow to call the unemployment insurance Bill dealing with variable entrance requirements and/or the heritage language Bill. Whichever we can complete first and get on with the other business, we will do it in that order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister has given us the order of business for tomorrow. May I ask him if he has any news as to when we will have second reading of Bill C-79, the Election Expenses Act? I had the honour of being appointed chairman of the committee by Mr. Speaker and I am still waiting to chair it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think we will possibly study that particular matter on a practical basis rather than an academic basis.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Government House Leader can give us the projected business for Friday and Monday since we are all gathered here now?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on Friday we will do the bank credit Bill. If that is not finished, we will proceed on Monday with the same Bill and possibly follow it up with the postal services investigation board.

Mr. Nystrom: Ironclad guarantee?

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, just a suggestion, but I would recommend to the Hon. Minister to consider calling Bill C-79 so that we can start studying it. It is essential for the Chief Returning Officer to conduct a good election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 4.52 p.m.

UNITED NATIONS PEACEKEEPING FORCES

SELECTION FOR NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise to report to this House with a great deal of pride the selection of the United Nations Peacekeeping Forces as recipient of the 1988 Nobel Peace Prize.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: I am sure that all Members of the House will join me in expressing their pleasure at this announcement.

This prize has particularly special meaning for Canada. For many years peacekeeping has been accorded a prominent place in Canadian foreign and defence policy.

This Government has made peace and security one of the basic objectives which have framed our approach to the formation of Canadian domestic and international policy over the last four years. Indeed, peacekeeping was one of the primary goals identified for the Canadian Forces in the 1987 White Paper on National Defence.

The effective participation of Canadians Forces in virtually every United Nations peacekeeping operation since the Second World War has contributed directly to the easing of tensions in trouble spots around the world. If there is one thing for which Canada is held in high regard it is our support for the United Nations and for its peacekeeping efforts.

Canada has served on 11 separate UN peacekeeping missions from Korea to the Middle East to the Belgian Congo. We have participated in eight different U.N. truce supervisory or observer missions from Kashmir to Yemen to Lebanon. Finally, we have not restricted ourselves to UN operations alone but have also contributed our expertise to four other non-UN multilateral peacekeeping operations.

Our record is a proud one. Today, almost 2,000 Canadian Forces personnel serve around the world in a score of countries furthering international peace and goodwill. I have in the past indicated in this House and elsewhere that these dedicated officers and enlisted personnel deserve the unqualified support of all Canadians. Polls have indicated that most Canadians do indeed share this point of view.

Peacekeeping has long deserved the type of international recognition and support which today's Nobel Peace Prize announcement embodies. The UN's peacekeeping efforts in the past 40 years have finally received their just recognition, as have those nations, such as Canada, which have actively supported and contributed to such efforts.

Peacekeeping has a special place in Canadian hearts. I think I can say that we invented peacekeeping. Or, rather, the late Prime Minister Pearson invented peacekeeping. For his pivotal role in seeking the peaceful resolution of the Arab-Israeli conflict of 1956 Mr. Pearson was justifiably awarded the Nobel Peace Prize.

Today's announcement is a second Nobel Prize involving Canada and its peacekeeping efforts. I join all Canadians in extending our congratulations and our best wishes to our peacekeeping forces around the world. Their job is difficult and dangerous. But their dedication over decades has done much to further the cause of peace in the world.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Official Opposition to say how pleased we are to see that the Nobel Prize Committee has awarded this year's Peace Prize to UN peacekeepers.

• (1110)

Canada plays a special role when it comes to the concept of peacekeeping. I think it is clear—and history records this—that this very concept was something created by a Canadian. The late Right Hon. Lester Pearson, when he was Secretary of State for External Affairs in the Government of Louis St. Laurent, at that time convinced the United Nations to establish a force made up of troops of member countries, including Canada, in a way which resolved the Suez crisis of 1956. As a result, Mike Pearson received the Nobel Prize for Peace in 1957.

It occurred to me that it might be said that the awarding of this year's Nobel Prize for Peace to UN peacekeepers is almost like the award of a second Nobel Prize to Mike Pearson, because the award announced today is a confirmation of how important, how valid, and how successful the concept that Mike Pearson developed in 1956 has proven to be over the years.

This award is a tribute, certainly, to the troops of the member countries who have participated and are participating in UN peacekeeping operations around the world, and Canadians have proudly played a leading role in all such forces since their inception. They played an important role with the force created to resolve the Suez crisis, and they are playing an important role today in maintaining the truce which has ended the gulf war between Iran and Iraq.

This award is indirectly a tribute to the Secretary General of the United Nations, Javier Perez de Cuellar and his staff, for their work in bringing about the truce in the gulf war and generally in doing more than has been done for quite a few years in advancing the role of the United Nations in resolving conflicts and preventing them from breaking out into world wars of a scope which has caused such destruction all too often in the past hundred years.

If this award is a tribute to the Secretary General of the United Nations, it is also in recognition of the importance of the United Nations itself in helping to maintain an atmosphere of peace and security in the world. I know that all Canadians are very pleased to find that the peacekeepers of the United Nations have been awarded this year's Nobel Prize.

This is not the first time that UN agencies have been awarded the Nobel Prize, but certainly, because of the role of a Canadian, Mike Pearson, in creating the concept of peacekeeping by the UN, and also because of the role of Canadian troops in all United Nations peacekeeping operations, Canadians, I am sure take great satisfaction in this year's Nobel Prize for Peace.

I conclude by again stating how delighted we are in the Official Opposition that this award has been given to the Peacekeeping Forces of the United Nations, and I am sure that all Canadians are delighted in the same way and extend their warm congratulations to all those participating in United Nations peacekeeping operations, the forces of Canada and the forces of the many other member nations of the United Nations who are doing so much to justify this Nobel Prize for Peace.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, I would like to join with the Minister and the spokesman for the Official Opposition in congratulating the United Nations Peacekeeping Forces on being recipients of this year's Nobel Peace Prize. I think it is particularly appropriate when we know that over the years this Nobel Peace Prize tends to go to individuals, which is understandable. But the fact remains that over those same years there have been many, many individuals unrecognized in this special way who have been keeping the peace on the ground, where it counts.

We know that over-all, between 1947 and 1988, more than 80,000 Canadian servicemen and servicewomen have participated in 15 peace-restoring, peacekeeping, and truce supervisory operations mounted by the United Nations, and in three truce supervisory or observer missions conducted outside the UN framework.

In 1988, this very year alone, over 1,400 Canadian Forces personnel participated in international peacekeeping forces and observer missions. I am also told that since Korea 79 Canadians have died while serving in peacekeeping forces, something which many Canadians may not know.

What we are recognizing or what has been recognized today in the awarding of this Nobel Peace Prize is the terribly significant and sometimes dangerous role that many Canadians have played, as I said before, on the ground or on the line, literally, in some cases.

I had the opportunity to visit the Green Line in Nicosia, as I am sure the Ministers have had the opportunity to do so, and on a day-to-day basis Canadians there are put in a position where they sometimes have to confront people who are threatening or actually moving into territory that they should not be moving into, and these Canadians put themselves in a very vulnerable position.

That is the kind of real peacekeeping we are recognizing here today. I can say, as has been indicated by previous comments, that the peacekeeping role that Canada has played all these years is something that all Canadians agree on and with. We may disagree with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) on nuclear submarines and on first-use policy of NATO or Cruise missile testing, or whatever the case may be, but I think there is consensus on Canadian defence and foreign policy on the role of the Canadian Armed Forces and being available to the world for these kinds of peacekeeping operations.

We need to ask ourselves, I suppose, the larger question of how we keep the peace, not just between smaller countries who are fighting but between the superpowers, and that is where the debate enjoins with the Government.

For the moment, let us all come together and rejoice in the fact that the work that many Canadian men and women have done over the years in peacekeeping operations has been duly and honourably recognized.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ACID RAIN

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Special Committee on Acid Rain to which, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests a comprehensive response.

I would like to point out to the House that the report that I am presenting this morning is the accumulation of work done by a group of Members from all three Parties. Acid rain is a killer, and we must all work together to prevent any further damage in order to give our children's children the Canada they deserve. This is a good step forward. Some hope has been restored.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you as a former Minister of the Environment will be very, very interested in this report, because I am well aware of your grave concern as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

CALL FOR RESEARCH INTO SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by people in my riding, but also elsewhere in Winnipeg, who are concerned about the whole matter of schizophrenia as a major illness in Canada, affecting about 1 per cent of the population and causing severe mental anguish and suffering to the patients and their relatives, and costing Canadian society more than $3 billion annually in direct health care and other support costs.

• (1120)

The petitioners state that recent research findings, including those obtained in Canada, have shown the illness to be a biochemical brain disorder in part caused by genetic malfunction. Schizophrenic patients, their relatives and friends, desperately hope that a cure and method of prevention can be found as soon as possible through larger research efforts dedicated to schizophrenia.

The petitioners further state that the research effort in Canada dedicated to schizophrenia is extremely limited and not commensurate with the burden that the illness imposes upon Canadians.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will, in the future, be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in my riding, there is a very active environmental group that wants to present a petition. This group is called Les amis des arbres or "Tree Lovers Coalition". These people ask us to fight pollution, to support local initiatives, to consult the population and to support them, even financially.

Mr. Speaker, what is interesting about this group led by Phillip Norton is that it deals with little things. By dealing with all these little things, we will fight pollution and this ties in very well with what my colleague just said.

So I am pleased, on behalf of the people of Valleyfield, Franklin, Beauharnois, etc., to present this petition.

SOUTH MORESBY PARK—HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions on what is probably the last full day of Parliament before we enter an election.

The first petition indicates that, on June 12, 1988, when the South Moresby Park Agreement was signed, the federal Government committed itself to spending $20 million or more to explore for hydrocarbons in the South Moresby Marine Park.

The Queen Charlotte region has higher earthquake activity than the San Andreas fault, and the Hecate Strait has among the roughest and most unpredictable seas in the world.

The undersigned petitioners state that they do not want any more hydrocarbon exploration activities to take place in their coastal waters, nor do the petitioners want the Government to pay for any such activities from this day on. This petition was circulated by the Greenpeace organization.

Questions on the Order Paper

DEPORTATION FROM CANADA OF SALLY ESPINELI

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my second petition concerns Sally Espineli a Filipino woman from Winnipeg who was discriminated against on the basis of her marital status. The Human Rights Commission made a special appeal to the Minister of Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to allow Miss Espineli to remain in Canada until her human rights complaint had been heard. Nonetheless, Espineli was deported on August 31, 1988.

The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to instruct the Government, through the Minister of Immigration, to bring Sally Espineli back to Canada in order that the Human Rights Commission can hear her case in person.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present three petitions dealing with the question of free trade.

The first petition is signed by residents of Winnipeg, and towns in Manitoba such as Beauséjour, in which the petitioners state that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

The second petition is signed by residents of towns and cities in Ontario, including St. Catharines, Kingsville, Niagara Falls, Cambridge, and Leamington. In part it states that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in the course of bilateral negotiations, promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

The third petition is signed by residents of Nova Scotia from Dartmouth, Sackville, Halifax, Bedford, and Shad Bay in which the petitioners state that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF 10 WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, again today, I have the duty to present some petitions to you. The first one comes from people in my riding, from Saint-Louis and Richibouctou, and the second, from residents of Albert County in southeastern New Brunswick, from the communities of West River, Hopewell Cape, Hopewell Hill, Shepody and Riverside.

[English]

The petitioners deplore the action of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) changing the eligibility period for unemployment insurance from 10 to 16 weeks.

The petitioners demand that the qualifying period be 10 weeks, as it was before.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

The Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, Government orders will be extended by 11 minutes, after one o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Otto Jelinek (for Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-158, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure to speak on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Jelinek) to address third reading of this Bill, which is important, and I believe all Members agree is important to the unemployed in the weeks and months ahead during the coming year.

During second reading debate and Committee of the Whole stage, Members expressed concern about some areas of unemployment insurance, and that has certainly been taken into consideration. It is for this reason that the Minister of State has asked for a comprehensive review of economic regions so that we can correct some of the things that are wrong with unemployment insurance with respect to the variable entrance requirement. This is the first time that it has been done in 12 years, and it is highly necessary to do so.

The unemployment insurance program plays an important role in our social security system. Unemployment insurance benefits replace lost income. They help maintain the stability of local economies, and also help to protect the jobs of people employed in most communities. Bill C-158 contains an extension to the variable entrance requirement from January 4, 1989, to January 6, 1990, to allow the unemployment insurance program to continue to respond to regional differences for the next 12 months. We do not want to create hardship. The extension of the VER will be tangible demonstration that Parliament recognizes the difficulties many Canadians face in finding work.

If the VER is not extended, up to 80,000 recipients in high unemployment regions could find themselves without work, without pay, and unable to meet the eligibility requirements for unemployment insurance benefits.

I am asking the House to approve this amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act to maintain the status quo until we have the results of the comprehensive review of economic regions. We will not make changes to this important social program in a haphazard manner. If, when the review is completed, we will feel it is appropriate to make changes, we will come before the House with a detailed plan for the future. It may be that we find the VER, or some variant thereof, to be the best possible way to deal with regional differences, but let us await the evidence.

For the immediate future, unemployment insurance applicants must be assured of the situation regarding their admissibility. Through failure to extend the VER, we do not want anyone to find himself or herself in financial difficulty. Therefore, I ask for the support of all Members of the House that Bill C-158 may be passed with the minimum delay.

• (1130)

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak to Bill C-158, which is an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act to extend the variable entrance requirement. As the Parliamentary Secretary said earlier, the VER has been used for a number of years to maintain the ten-week eligibility period.

Mr. Speaker, although the Bill will maintain the current system and will, in certain cases, be beneficial to Canadian workers, it will do nothing at all for the people of New Brunswick, especially those in the southeast and the entire southern part who are affected by the variable requirement.

In June, the eligibility period for our workers went up to sixteen weeks, in July it went back to ten weeks and then went back up to sixteen weeks in August, where it is now, in September.

What happened? When Statistics Canada does its surveys to determine the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in southern New Brunswick, it does about 700 individual surveys, that is, 400 in the Moncton urban region and about 300 in the rural region.

According to these surveys, the unemployment rate in the city of Moncton is very low, and in rural areas it is very high. This means that when both rates are combined and seasonally adjusted, the average rate for the last three months drops below 11.5 per cent, which requires a change in the eligibility period.

The section we propose to change will do nothing for the people of New Brunswick. There are several sections in the Unemployment Insurance Act that have an impact on eligibility. These include Section 17(6), the section we are amending today, and also Section 17(5) and Section 35.

> Under these provisions eligibility for and entitlement to UI benefits are determined by three-month average of seasonally-adjusted unemployment rates for the UI economic region in which the UI claimant resides. These unemployment rate estimates are provided monthly by Statistics Canada as a by-product of the Labour Force Survey.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, we are changing only one part, one section, namely 17(6) and not Section 35, which is a shame for the people of New Brunswick.

When workers experienced the first change in July, many people were taken by surprise. They were relieved when in the following month, the 10 week period was reinstated. Subsequently, however, the eligibility period went back to 16 weeks.

Mr. Speaker, in June I received petitions, letters and any number of telephone calls. The same thing happened in July: telephone calls, petitions, letters and visits. The same thing in September: more calls, more petitions and even more visits and letters. In September however, I detected a note of aggressiveness among the workers affected by this measure.

Why? Mr. Speaker, you must realize that in our region, unemployment insurance represents a considerable adjunct to people's income. The workers felt aggressive towards the Department because it had failed to make certain changes. They felt this way because the Minister had made changes in the regulations to accommodate people in another region. These changes were to take effect as of September 11, 1988. According to the Canada Gazette: Her Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, pursuant to paragraph 58(t) of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, is pleased hereby to approve the amendment made by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission to the Unemployment Insurance Regulations, C.R.C., c. 1576, in accordance with the schedule hereto, effective September 11, 1988.

The change was made in the Outaouais region:

> One of the regions is that of Outaouais (UI economic region 49) comprising the city of Hull and the rural areas in the Gatineau River valley northwest of Ottawa. Unemployment rates for Hull have tended to be substantially lower than those for the rural portion of the Outaouais economic region.
> Because of the preponderant influence of Hull in the production of these estimates those for Outaouais tend to understate the difficulty of finding employment in the rural part of the region, with the consequence that UI benefit conditions may be more stringent than economic circumstances warrant.

That is why the people in our region have started to show signs of aggressiveness. In their case, changes in the eligibility period are affecting them adversely, but the Government refuses to take any action. It did in the case of another region, as I just pointed out. People are starting to ask questions. Why weren't the same changes made for New Brunswick? What we have here, Mr. Speaker, is a case of gross injustice.

When we talk about the eligibility period and mention ten weeks, some people say 10 weeks isn't very long. Anybody should be able to find work for 10, 15 or even 20 weeks. Mr. Speaker, if enough work was available in my region or in every region in New Brunswick or every region in Canada, people would prefer to work 20, 25 or 30 weeks or even all year round.

The fact remains that for some workers in New Brunswick, 10 weeks of employment is hard to find. Some occupations and certain types of work are seasonal. Fishermen, for example, are guided by the fishing seasons. If we look at the lobster fishery, which provides employment for most of the people in my constituency and in some other New Brunswick ridings, the fishermen, their assistants and the factory workers are limited to 10 weeks for the simple reason that the fishing season is only 10 weeks. There is no question of extending the season. The resource is just not there to support more fishing.

Not only fishermen and those involved in the fishing industry have difficulty. Thare are also construction and forestry workers. Sixteen weeks of work is very hard, and in some cases impossible, to find. Ten weeks is hard enough.

So how does one explain to the people of New Brunswick that the Government really does not want to listen? It remains insensitive and reading the words of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary raises some doubts about the Government's sincerity, because this Government has already disappointed New Brunswickers in the past and it is doing so again.

I refer to the words of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, who last Friday, when he introduced changes on second reading of Bill C-158, said, as reported on page 19558 of Hansard, which I quote:

> Unfortunately, in some regions, economic recovery is slower and the rate of unemployment remains higher than the national average. A failure to extend the variable entrance requirement at this time would have serious negative consequences for those regions.

He continues:

> One of the priorities of our Government is its desire to help those regions that are experiencing economic difficulty. The VER . . .

. . . variable entrance requirement . . .

> . . . recognizes that it is more difficult to find and keep a job in a region of high unemployment. This is, in fact, one of the most important aspects of the UI program, since it takes into account the labour market conditions in each region of the country.

And I could go on.

Mr. Speaker, this speech could be used to justify changes to the regulations under section 35. So why not make all the changes to ensure that all workers are treated the same way! How can one explain to the people of New Brunswick that this Government, on the one hand, says that it wants to treat them fairly and, on the other, just ignores them?

• (1140)

How can this Government explain to the people that it will not make the changes required to render justice to New Brunswick workers? The speech of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen), is meaningless. It did not accommodate all the workers. The speech is further rendered meaningless because government Members last Friday defeated a motion that would have established a fixed period of 10 weeks. The amendment was proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) and defeated by government Members who said they wanted to render justice to all the workers.

We have to question the sincerity of the Government and the Minister. We were assured last week that the Bill would not come before us last week, but that it would come this week instead so we would have enough time to propose amendments enabling us to make it fairer to all the workers of Canada. But, no, the Government last Friday wanted to push the Bill through. Two amendments were proposed and both were defeated. How can we not doubt the sincerity of the Government, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government's approach to this issue is totally unacceptable. The Minister is shirking her responsibility, which is to protect the workers. Her inertia is totally unacceptable.

What I find strange in this debate, Mr. Speaker, is that no other New Brunswicker rose to defend the interests of workers in the province. No Member and no Minister said a word, yet we do have two New Brunswick Conservative Cabinet Ministers in this House. The only Minister who did show some interest in this matter is New Brunswick Labour Minister Mike McKee who came here to Ottawa to confer with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall). Her efforts—or mine, for that matter—were to no avail because the Minister simply said she would study the situation, even after the Forget Commission spent millions of dollars reviewing our unemployment insurance program and after a standing committee of this House produced a report on the same subject.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good opportunity to talk about the UIC program. It is very useful to some people because it provides additional income to make ends meet, stabilize the local economy, and ensure at least some standard of living. As I said in my opening remarks, our people would much rather work full time all year for the simple reason that they are hard-working men and women who do not like to remain idle. They would welcome year round employment which would bring in a lot more money than UIC benefits ever do.

Some people maintain that unemployment insurance payments make life too soft for our workers. Mr. Speaker, I object to such comments. Some working couples in New Brunswick are in a situation where the man or the woman earns $6 an hour, 40 hours a week. That brings in $240 a week or, over 50 weeks, an income of something like $12,000 a year. The partner also works 40 hours a week at $4.50 an hour, or $180 a week. If he or she is lucky enough to work for 10 weeks the take-home pay is $1,800. And if subsequently, he is eligible for unemployment insurance, he will get $108 per week for 40 weeks, which will give him another $4,300. This means the couple has to live on $18,100, which is less than our non-taxable allowance here in the House. However, when they buy groceries, they have to pay the same price we do for groceries or for other services.

I think a comparison would be useful. There are people who say we spend too much money on unemployment insurance and that some people take advantage of the system. Recently, I saw all kinds of press releases on my desk announcing grants to various businesses in my region and other regions. There was one grant for $160,000, and that isn't much as government grants go, when you consider that some are for millions of dollars. This was a grant for $160,000 to one individual, to help him set up some kind of building. If we look at the person who gets $4,000 a year, that person would have to be on unemployment insurance for 40 years to get the equivalent of the grant that this individual received in one lump sum. So we shouldn't say we are spoiling people with unemployment insurance. We are just giving them back a certain amount of income that gives them a measure of stability.

Besides, the money spent on the unemployment insurance program is subsequently spent by recipients on food, shelter and clothing. The purpose is to help them meet their basic needs, which in many cases cannot all be met.

What should we do, Mr. Speaker, with this program? Instead of making it more restrictive we should try and expand it. Recently, at the beginning of the academic year in community colleges in New Brunswick, many young people came to my office. They had trouble with unemployment insurance. They had worked and were eligible for unemployment insurance, and they decided that since they were no longer employed and had nothing to do, they would be better off going to college to take a course. However, a number of these young people were not lucky enough to be eligible for a regular manpower program. When they were not selected by the Department of Employment and Immigration and decided to continue their education anyway, they were told: Too bad, we are going to cut off your unemployment insurance. So the only option these young people had was to stay home in order to collect unemployment insurance, because if they left home to take a course, they were no longer eligible.

Changes should be made in the program to deal with this kind of situation and to unable young people to continue their education. People often say young people should go back to school to continue their education and learn a trade. In this case, however, when they were willing to do so, they were told: No, stay home and collect unemployment insurance. The program could be expanded and this would be entirely in line with the recommendations of the Standing Committee of the House on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

In the first part of their report, they said, first, that everyone should be treated the same, wherever they live.

• (1150)

[English]

Second, meeting the longer-term needs of employees for stable employment and financial security and of employers for an appropriately trained and educated workforce should be recognized as legitimate objectives for the use of the unemployment insurance program. Third, employers and employees need a simple, intelligible and easily administered program.

[Translation]

And I could go on.

Further on in the Committee's report, they said that the eligibility standard should not be tightened and the level and duration of benefits should not be reduced in regions of high unemployment. They also believe that beneficiaries in all regions should be treated the same way. It was a unanimous report of this Committee, where, of course, all Parties were represented.

We could have taken the opportunity given to us, when changes were proposed to the Unemployment Insurance Act in Bill C-158, to accommodate all workers. We could also have made the changes recommended by the Labour, Employment and Immigration Committee, whose first recommendation was to adopt 10 weeks of insurable employment as a common eligibility standard.

So why was this opportunity not taken? All the arguments are there, all the documentation is there. So why did the Minister choose to study this problem again when all the data to make the decisions are there and especially when we know that some changes have been made to the regulations to accommodate workers in some regions of Canada?

So why refuse to make the changes needed to accommodate New Brunswick workers? That is a question which the Minister and this Government will have to answer for New Brunswickers.

At the stage we are now, it is impossible or almost impossible to amend the Bill, for the simple reason that the only acceptable amendment would be to refer this Bill to a committee for further review, which would only delay the Bill more.

As I said right at the beginning, even though this Bill does not go far enough to accommodate the people of New Brunswick, it must still be passed because it will do some good for some people, some workers.

So, Mr. Speaker, although I support Bill C-158, I ask the House, all Hon. Members and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to take immediate action to change the Unemployment Insurance Regulations so as to reinstate the 10-week qualifying period.

New Brunswickers demand this justice and they deserve to be treated the same way as all other working men and women, wherever they live in Canada.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have my back-up here, and I always like to have a back-up. Anyone who is Minister of State for Finance is a good back-up.

Mr. Gauthier: Is there a new buddy-buddy system here?

Mr. Rodriguez: He is preaching for a cause here today. He wants me to go easy on the next Bill which is about banks. He recognizes that there will be a new Government sitting on the other side after the election, and he is here preaching for a position. I have decided that he is a good candidate to be the ombudsman for the banking system.

• (1200)

I want to participate in this debate on third reading of Bill C-158, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. This Bill is better known as the amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act, amending the variable entrance requirement. People watching might want to know what the variable entrance requirement is. Back in 1977, under the previous Liberal Government, the variable entrance requirement was introduced into the Unemployment Insurance Act. What it did was to divide the country into 48 economic regions. In order to participate in the unemployment insurance program, an individual who is unemployed and eligible would require a certain number of weeks depending on the unemployment rate in that region. The higher the unemployment rate in the region, the lower the number of weeks required to participate.

For example, an individual living in a region that had 6 per cent unemployment or lower, would require 14 weeks for a renewal claim under the unemployment insurance program. An individual living in a region with between 6 per cent and 7 per cent unemployment, would need 13 weeks. An individual living in a region with between 7 per cent and 8 per cent unemployment, would need 12 weeks. An individual living in a region with 8 per cent to 9 per cent unemployment, would need 11 weeks, and for an individual living in an area of over 9 per cent unemployment, 10 weeks is required. Therefore, if one lives in a region that has a double digit unemployment rate, only 10 weeks of insurable earnings are required to participate in the unemployment insurance program.

That variable entrance requirement was introduced in 1977, and here we are 11 years later and we still have need for that clause in the Unemployment Insurance Act.

While the New Democratic Party will give quick passage to Bill C-158, I think it is important that we go on record that the solution to the problem is not this temporary clause that was put in the Act in 1977 to recognize regionally disadvantaged areas of the country. We do not see that as the solution. In fact, every single time we have to renew this variable entrance requirement, such as we are doing today in Bill C-158, which will take us to 1990, we are admitting that in this country we have not been able to resolve the problem of regional disparities.

After 11 years, seven of them Liberal and four of them Conservative, we are still unable to deal with the most serious economic problem of this country, regional disparities. We have been unable to spread out economic development in this nation. We are still saying that the solution to regional disparities is to make provisions in our social insurance programs so that areas that are condemned forever to be high unemployment areas will have easier access to our social programs such as unemployment insurance. This is an admission of failure on the part of this Conservative Government, and the Liberal Government also failed. Governments came up with DREE, DRIE, ERDA, IRDP, FEDNOR, the Atlantic Opportunities Agency, the Western Diversification Fund, a whole host of these things, and we still have need for the variable entrance requirement. In fact, of the 48 economic regions under the unemployment insurance program, 23 require only 10 weeks to be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. Fifty per cent of the 48 regions still have double digit unemployment rates. I think that this is an indictment of failed policies over the last four years of this Conservative Government.

What has been the Government's principal underlying regional development? It is the jail-house principle. If we want to diversify regionally the economy of a community, we put a jail in the community. That is the Government's response. Manicouagan has high unemployment. Individuals there require 10 weeks to participate in the unemployment insurance program. So what the Government does is to put a jail in Manicouagan. We have a problem in Newfoundland with high unemployment. They build a jail there.

It is a sad commentary when we have replaced well thought out regional diversification programs with this jail house principle. It is a sad commentary when communities vie with each other and compete with each other for the sake of getting a jail because that is the way to get 60 more jobs and, with other spin-offs, 100 more jobs. That is a sad, sad commentary of this Government. On the eve of an election, to bring the variable entrance requirement for renewal before Parliament is a sad commentary.

What are the hopes for the future? This Government signed the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and in fact condemned the regions to being forever hewers of wood and drawers of water. In fact, it prevents any direct intervention by a Government with respect to incentives or subsidies or in terms of helping regions to diversify their economies.

Mr. Scowen: That is not true and you know it.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is true, and the Tories are very sensitive about that. It is a clear surrender. The only part of this country that is going to have jobs is the Golden Horseshoe in Ontario. It is significant to note that while the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will get up and blow his horn over the 60 days of the next campaign, talking about how many hundreds of thousands of jobs he has created, the vast majority of those jobs are created within a 60 mile radius of Toronto. Everybody in Canada cannot live in the Metropolitan Toronto region. There are parts of this country, such as the region I come from, the Sudbury basin, which has a right and expectation to economic development.

We are a mining community and we are proud of that tradition. We believe that we have some expertise in hard rock mining. One would think there would be an economic strategy developed that would recognize that here is an area that ought to be a centre for mining technology. Its post-secondary institutions should be developing the kinds of research and development in mining that would allow this country to be in the forefront of such things as the detection of rock bursts. One would have thought the Sudbury basin, which is recognized all over the world as being a leader in the mining of nickel and copper, would be the centre for the development, production and manufacture of mining equipment. The scoop trams on the ground and the robotics that are now infiltrating the mines should be produced in the Sudbury basin. Yet, 70 per cent of the mining equipment used in the mines in the Sudbury basin are imported into this country from Sweden, Finland and West Germany.

After 11 years of attempting to diversify this country regionally we find that the only solution that the Tories have is the continuation of the Liberals' inability to do anything about the problem when they were the Government. Their only answer is to renew the variable entrance requirement, to recognize it, to enshrine it in legislation, and to tell the victims of the lack of the Government's ability to deal with regional disparities that at least things will be made easy for them to get on the unemployment insurance rolls. That is the answer from the Government and it is not good enough.

Is it because they lack the will? No sooner did they win the election in 1984 that in November of 1984 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stood up and made an economic statement. In the economic statement he had something to say about the unemployment insurance program. He did not say that the Government was going to work to eliminate regional disparity so there will not be a need for the variable entrance requirement, so there will not be a need for regional extended benefits, because that is the other little part of this game. The little scam is that if we have a high unemployment, "rate we can extend your benefits beyond the 49 weeks in the Act".

What did they do in the economic statement in 1984? No sooner had they won the election that they said that the retirment benefits, the pensions of all those who take retirment, will be considered as earned income. That was a time when in many of the regions the resource companies were having a rough time and were encouraging workers to take early retirment to protect the employment of younger workers. They got caught. They got it coming and going. They were losing their jobs, they took the early retirement, the Government changed the rules, and they lost their UI benefits because the pension was then considered to be earned income.

We on this side of the House objected to that. We asked the Government why it would do that. The Government said that was only the first step, that it was going to hire 800 Keystone Cops that would go across the country and enforce the Unemployment Insurance Act. It was going to get tough with the cheaters. So while, on the one hand, it said it was saving some money by making pension income earned income, it was hiring 800 Keystone Cops to go across the country to get tougher with the unemployed. That is how the Government resolved the problem.

What about the real problems? The Government said it was also going to undertake a study. It set up Mr. Forget with a commission that spent $6 million to study the unemployment insurance program. He came back with such right-wing recommendations that not even this Casper Milquetoast Government could accept those recommendations. Therefore, the Forget Commission report, which cost the taxpayers $6 million, is sitting on a shelf gathering cobwebs.

A standing committee of this House made up of Members from all sides, with a majority of Conservatives, studied the Forget Commission report and came back and said that the variable entrance requirement is basically unfair, that the real problem is regional development. The variable entrance requirement simply institutionalizes the unfairness.

The committee dealt with the issue that if you were unemployed in Toronto, where the unemployment rate is very low, and you are 39 or 42 years of age, and if you are 40 years of age and living in St. John's, Newfoundland, the effect of unemployment is the same. The older worker in southern Ontario who cannot get a job and the worker in Newfoundland who cannot get a job are experiencing the same difficulty. No one is to say that just because he is living in an area where there is low unemployment he should be able to get a job and that the person in Newfoundland will have difficulty getting one because the unemployment rate is high. The effects of unemployment are the same. The feelings of frustration about not being able to get a job because you are an older worker are the same.

So the standing committee recommended that, instead of going to a variable entrance requirement, we go to 10 weeks no matter where you are in the country. That recommendation was unanimously approved by Conservative Members, Liberal Members, and the New Democratic Party Members on the committee. The thinking was that if we cannot light a stick of dynamite under the Government to come to grips with regional development and regional disparities as a result of lack of economic development, then maybe we could focus its attention because if the cost in the social insurance program were to be very high then it would have to pay attention to that particular problem.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, the standing committee's report is sitting on a shelf on the same level as the Forget Commission report gathering cobwebs and dust. So now, in the Government's dying days, the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. Vezina) said in a press release dated September 16 that she is going to set up a study of the variable entrance requirement. One more time we will go back to this business of studying the variable entrance requirement.

We have studied the unemployment insurance program to death. We have studied the variable entrance requirement and the regional extended benefits program to death. That is not where the problem lies. The problem lies with fulfilling what the Prime Minister promised, which he has not delivered, that is, jobs, jobs, jobs. We are talking about jobs in the regions of this country. When the election is on we are going to remind this Conservative Government that it has failed the people of Canada.

You cannot offer to the people of the regions of the country the sop of a variable entrance requirement. Although it may deal with the present, there is nothing in there that holds hope that things are going to change in the regions and that when we, at great expense, educate our children in those regions they can find jobs in those communities and take their place side by side and help to support the community which gave them their shelter and their education.

I want to say to you and to the people of Canada, Mr. Speaker, that there is hope because there is a Party here on this side of the House, the New Democratic Party, which recognizes the inherent and generic problem. It is not the VER but the question of regional development and of creating employment opportunities for regions in northern Ontario, eastern Canada, northern British Columbia, and right across the country so that when you grow up in a community you are able to take your place in that community when you reach manhood or womanhood.

BANK ACT

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-140, an Act to amend the Bank Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1988, I had the honour to inform this House of the Government's policy regarding service charges as they apply to personal accounts in financial institutions. I am sure that many Members will recall the positive contribution to this policy development process made by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

The committee helped to focus attention on a significant public issue which was created when services were unbundled by financial institutions. Unbundling these services made it possible for the financial community to better tailor and market retail services. It was perhaps fairer to unbundle them than to have the user pay. But I believe that same financial community failed to make it clear to customers that individual services would have charges attached to them.

You know, Mr. Speaker, as a result of this customers had insufficient warning, in my view, that service charges were being imposed. They also had insufficient warning that they were being increased. The public, accustomed to free retail services, was by turn puzzled, then annoyed, and then infuriated and outraged with what was happening.

I know that there are many in the financial community who think that the Government has no place telling business how to operate. However, in this instance there is clear evidence of the need for government action.

[Translation]

While wishing to avoid price regulation, it was the Government's view that this issue could best be resolved by ensuring that the essential conditions for real competition existed. First among these conditions is an informed consumer. To ensure this, the Government adopted notification and disclosure of service charges as the key components of its legislative initiative.

In doing so, we wanted to ensure that Canadians would be in a better position to make informed banking decisions and price comparisons. Moreover, we were convinced that free market competition, not government regulation, was the best way to bring about fair pricing practices.

To sustain such a system, it was necessary to require that institutions create and publicize mechanisms for handling consumers' complaints. Moreover, we felt that the Government had a role in monitoring and publishing information about the relative prices of financial services.

To this end, my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), agreed to publish tables comparing the relative costs of such basic services.

This publication will ensure that financial institutions continue to comply with their voluntary undertakings. The first such publication was released on August 31, 1988.

[English]

The Superintendent of Financial Institutions has examined actions taken by financial institutions to remove various service charges. His report shows that in almost every case, compliance has been achieved or will be achieved in the very near future. I regret that I cannot use visual aids in the House. I went into my bank this morning where I saw a notice to revise fees, which I asked the bank manager if I could take home as a souvenir. He very kindly gave it to me to bring to the House today. I regret that I cannot table it and show it to the House this morning.

The Superintendent's report shows that in almost every case compliance has now been achieved or will be achieved in the very near future. Bill C-140 was one of two elements in the Government's response to the public's concern. The other elements of that response resulted from individual discussions I had with the major financial institutions in Canada.

The principal outcome of these discussions was the voluntary elimination of certain charges for personal account holders. Furthermore, the institutions acted voluntarily to ensure that basic personal banking services were available at little or no cost, as this display which I cannot show indicates.

As a result, six service charges, which most Canadians found to be objectionable, have been removed by various federal financial institutions. Specifically, recipients of NSF cheques are not charged for depositing such cheques in their personal accounts. There is no charge for closing personal accounts that have been opened for more than 90 days. For basic personal accounts no charges will be levied when the balance falls below a specified minimum. There are no charges now for transactions resulting from the institution's error as opposed to the customer's error. Administration and transfer fees on fixed term deposits, notes and GICs will not be increased during the term of these instruments. Finally, for dormant accounts with balances over $10, customers will be charged only if they have not responded to a letter advising them that a charge could occur.

These are substantive improvements. I am very proud that this Parliament, this Government, has had the influence to bring this about. Much has been achieved through voluntary action.

However, to complete this initiative legislative action is now required. There are those in the House who would like to legislate everything and have nothing done voluntarily, even though all three Parties, as I noted during the hearings of the committee, were willing to have a voluntary approach to this. We do believe that a great deal has been accomplished through voluntary compliance—as a matter of fact, everything that we wanted to have accomplished. But to complete this initiative some legislative action is now required. Let me briefly explain what is required and what the major provisions of this legislation are.

Bill C-140 is intended to improve the standards that banks must meet in notifying and disclosing service charges to their personal account holders in Canada. The Bill will also require for the first time ever that banks create and publicize procedures for handling consumer complaints. They are not required now by law to have a procedure. My hon. friend opposite mentioned to me a case this morning in which there is not a complaints procedure in a particular branch. This will be the law of Canada. They will have to have a complaints procedure in place. As a matter of fact, most banks and most branches as well as large trust companies have this procedure already up and running. It will now be required by law as a result of this Bill. These procedures will be submitted to the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions.

When customers open a personal account they will be entitled to receive the following. First, they will receive a copy of the contract to which they have agreed. This was not necessarily the case before. They will receive a list of the service charges applied to the account. When you go in to open an account, Mr. Speaker, or when your son or daughter does, for the first time ever they must not only get a contract to take home but they must have a list of the service charges which will be applied to that account, which is disclosure, the heart of this Bill. Third, they will be given information on how they can expect to be notified of any modifications on the charges must be supplied. Fourth, they will receive information on the bank's procedures for handling complaints, this must be there when you open an account. Right now, this may or may not occur. This will be required as a result of this legislation.

The Bill also requires that banks provide ongoing disclosure of services charges on personal accounts. One cannot make our system work without notification. How can you decide whether you are going to change banks or not, because you do not like the level of service charges, if you do not have adequate notification that the services charges are going to change? We require adequate advance notification of changes. Not everybody gets a statement in the mail, but most personal account holders do. For those who receive statements, this notice must be included with their statement. It must be at least 30 days in advance, that is for all of us who receive statements in the mail, and that is most people.

Changes will also be posted at least 60 days in advance in the branches and at banking machines. So if you do not get a statement in the mail, there has to be a notice in the bank or at the banking machines. By the way, that is an improvement on what the committee recommended, that the banking machines as well have changes in fees.

I am very, very proud of this, because this notification will make the system work. This will allow the consumer to shop and to go to the bank manager and say, "I have had enough of these charges. I hear that the trust company or bank across the street does not charge nearly as much for service charges. I am going to change my account". You cannot make that decision if there is not adequate prenotification and adequate disclosure of what fees are.

I respect very much the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), but when this Bill came forward he said something which was patently untrue, and the Bill has made this clear. That is, in addition to these measures, significant penalties for breach of the disclosure and complaints provisions are also included. The penalties provide for a maximum fine of half a million dollars for a violation of these provisions. These are large fines, they are five, ten times more than what is presently in the Bank Act. The Member for Ottawa—Vanier said there were no penalties. There are penalties, and there are enormous penalties. I hope that he will acknowledge that.

Recently, I announced as well that the Government intends to bring forth some amendments to this Bill, to reach beyond helping personal account holders and to help the small business sector. Although the committee that looked at this piece of legislation did not look at small business, I was determined to get our response to the committee, which had to do with individual accounts, personal accounts, in order to get our response on the record. Therefore, we brought out our response.

I also wanted some time, a few months, to use that as a model for our response for small business. A great many of these principles are equally valid for small business.

Therefore, I notify the House today that the Government intends to bring forward amendments to Bill C-140 which will extend similar notification and disclosure methods to business account holders in Canada.

This package, complete with amendments, and the passage of this legislation will ensure that business has greatly enhanced information about the cost of financial services. Banks will be required to keep a list of all their standard charges for business services. Such lists must be made available to the public for examination, upon request, in bank branches doing commercial business.

If you are a very small business operator, you may not want a list to take home of every conceivable service charge. That could be a very long list for businesses. It should be available to you, either on a computer screen or in the branch in written form, and that is established in this legislation. Such lists must be made available to the public for examination, upon request, in the branches doing commercial business.

Among other things, this will include the standard charges applying to loans and the standard charges applying to mortgage renewals.

All Members of Parliament get complaints from time to time about charges connected with loans and charges connected with renewing mortgages. These must be spelled out in this list as well. The information will include the information on standard application and search fees and on the cost of wiring funds abroad.

From now on, all the core business account charges must be published in a brochure, which can be taken from the branch. Both corporations and unincorporated businesses, including farmers, will now be able to shop around for the best deal. This core list will be outlined in the regulation.

I have to tell you that these amendments on behalf of the small business community and farmers and unincorporated businesses are made in order to respond to our belief that proper notification and proper pre-notification is essential to making the system work. We are also responding to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and other small business groups who have argued that this is essential. They are very, very pleased with these amendments that we are bringing into the Bill to cover and to help the small business community.

As a result of these changes, when making contractual arrangements, businesses will know the base against which they are negotiating. Those who do not want to negotiate a package will have better information about the cost of their banking services.

I would like to say a word about that. Most businesses actually have a customized arrangement with their banks. They go in and say, "Listen, I am going to be asking for all these bank services during the year. What are you going to charge me for them?" They will quote a number, $2,000 or $3,000, and you will want to compare that with what it would be without having a customized relationship or a contractual relationship that is customized for you in particular.

This will now be possible because all the fees must be made available for those who are not on a customized contract basis in the bank branch, and the small business operator can make that comparison and decide whether it is better to have a customized approach or to pay the standard fees as they occur.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the package of initiatives, both voluntary and legislative, this Government has brought forward amply demonstrates our commitment to ensuring that there is real competition in financial services both at the retail and commercial level. Government monitoring will serve to underpin that competition.

Mr. Speaker, this Government believes that real competition, not regulation, is the best means of ensuring that Canadians have access to the broadest spectrum of financial services at the lowest cost. The informed consumer is the key element in real competition. Once the measures I have outlined are in place Canadians will be equipped to make better choices and the consequent competition will work to the benefit of all.

[English]

Let me conclude with this. I plead with Members on all sides of the House this morning to recognize that if we today can pass this in all stages and in committee stage, we can have a regime in place tomorrow, or close to tomorrow, for consumers, for individuals, and for small business in Canada. Those who hold up this particular Bill—the heart of which, by the way, was agreed to by all three Parties in the standing committee who looked at this question—may be making this impossible.

I plead with Members on all sides of the House—because all sides of the House participated in putting together this solution—to support this Bill. Let us have debate in the Committee of the Whole rather than sending it to a legislative committee. I can answer all the questions there. I can help with answers on regulations pursuant to the Bill. This Bill is one of the more important things that any Government can do for consumers and small business. Let us get it done, and let us get it done quickly.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I know there are no questions at second reading, following the second speaker, but since the Minister did refer to some of the comments I made last June 30 I wonder whether the House would agree to let me clear up the situation with the Minister?

[English]

The Minister stated that, in my statement on June 30, I made certain allegations. I would like to clarify that statement, if the Minister will accept a question from me, in order to make sure the record is straight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: On June 30, 1988, when the Minister introduced the measure, in his statement to the House I did not see at the time he made the statement, any indication that there were to be penalties. It is true at the time that I stated, as reported at page 16962 of Hansard, June 30, 1988:

> Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs recommended fines or penalties of up to $10,000 for a first offence and up to $100,000 for each subsequent offence committed within a period of three years. There was no mention in the Minister's statement this morning of any serious measures or penalties to force the banks to act.

That is exactly the position in the morning. It is true that the Minister went to the press theatre on Wellington Street and made a statement and sent out documentation. In the documentation given to us at that time there were indeed penalties. At the time I made the statement, and the Minister must be honest—I know him to be an honest person—I had not heard any indication in his remarks that morning that he intended to proceed with penalties.

Mr. Hockin: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention and that is accurate, as I remember it. I believe the Hon. Member is correct. I do not think I mentioned the provisions that were made for penalties in my speech in the House. However, I was able to elaborate on those details later when questioned about it in the press setting. The Hon. Member was made aware of those penalties then. I was curious this morning to know whether he approves of those penalties, and I gather he does.

Mr. Gauthier: Our critic, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), will be here after lunch. I wonder if the Government would be willing to suspend the sitting in order to give our critic an opportunity to make the appropriate comments on second reading of Bill C-140 at that time, that is, shortly after Question Period.

Mr. Hawkes: There have been some consultations, and I believe the Minister has indicated potential amendments to the Bill. The House might be well served with an opportunity for the Minister to meet with opposition Members of both Parties and explore the possibility somewhat, at some time later this day perhaps, to move on in terms of the Bank Act.

The business which will be called immediately after Question Period is Bill C-152, an Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Language Institute. I think there is a predisposition in the House to move that Bill through its final stages relatively expeditiously. If there is some kind of agreement coming out of the negotiation to come back to the Bank Act and perhaps put some of the amendments in place that the Minister has in mind, or others may have in mind, we would be able to come back to it as soon as we complete Bill C-152. That is the priority item for after lunch, and I think people are geared up for that immediately following Question Period.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to debate second reading of this Bill. I recognize that the Liberal critic for this Bill will be not present until later. I would suggest as a compromise that I proceed with my speech on second reading and I will take my alloted 20 minutes. We can leave the 40 minutes allowed for the critic of the Official Opposition when she returns after three o'clock at some point if we get back to second reading of this Bill.

Mr. Gauthier: I am in the hands of the House. I recognize that we can do just about anything by unanimous consent. I certainly recognize that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has a point. He could make his speech and the House could suspend its sitting. I am in the hands of the House. I do not have any quarrels.

I could make my speech. I have it here. I just want to make sure that the amendments the Minister intends to propose are before us and that the Hon. Member for Trinity, who is our critic, has had the opportunity to look at them. That may have an influence on her remarks. I am trying to be as cautious as possible here. I certainly do not object to the Member having the floor at this time, if he wishes.

Mr. Hawkes: The Government very much appreciates the spirit, and we have no trouble with the idea. If, at a later point this afternoon, agreement cannot be reached on the amending and to move the Bill totally through the House we can find some time, after the heritage Bill has been dealt with, to allow, by unanimous consent, or whatever way is necessary, the critic for the Liberal Party to have the normal 40 minutes. The Government is quite prepared to support that all the way. I think we should come back to that later. That would be desirable. Even if we cannot do so, I think we should attempt to make time this day for the Liberal critic.

Mr. Gauthier: Perhaps I have not heard the words properly. I do not want this Bill to be held up in the House. If it can be passed today with the Minister's amendments, that is fine with us, and we could give expeditious passage to this Bill.

If I understood the Parliamentary Secretary correctly, he said that we can get back to this Bill after we have dealt with the Bill respecting the Heritage Languages Institute. I would hope that that would not be a condition of getting back to Bill C-140. In other words, I hope the Government has the intention of passing this Bill today in all stages, or at least getting it through the House before we adjourn at six o'clock.

I do not want to have a precondition put that the heritage Bill will be accepted before we go back to the bank Bill. Our critic on the heritage Bill is not here, as you know, and I would also like to consult with him.

Mr. Hawkes: Negotiations and discussions can proceed. It is my understanding, from earlier negotiations, that there is a clear predisposition among all Parties to pass Bill C-152 today. Since Members have not seen the amendments, we cannot have a final agreement in relationship to the Bank Act. So we are simply signalling that the thing we agreed to do, we would do first, and then we would do the other, as far as we can, and hopefully we can take it all the way.

Mr. Rodriguez: We in the New Democratic Party have very grave concerns about Bill C-140, which I will outline in my second reading speech. I cannot express any hope, and I cannot wish that the Government could have this Bill dealt with today. As a matter of fact, it has to be examined thoroughly because it is a powder-puff. It is a puff cream Bill and it is cosmetology. It is not an effective Bill, and I do not want to participate and to pontificate on something that is so ineffectual. It is like getting swatted over the back with 50 wet spaghettis, and I cannot accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have to come to some decision at some time. There are two possibilities. One suggestion is that we adjourn until two o'clock. That suggestion can only be agreed upon by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent that we call it 1:11 p.m.?

Some Hon Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore, we will proceed on debate. I will recognize a Member from the Official Opposition. The Hon Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

• (1250)

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, given the comments made by the Hon. Member from the NDP, I think I should protect our position, and not getting any information from the Government as to whether it will proceed this day, I think I should make my remarks which are pertinent to Bill C-140.

The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), our critic in this area, would have liked to be here this morning. Unfortunately, she cannot, but she will be here this afternoon and possibly will participate in the debate later on.

We now begin the second reading debate of Bill C-140, an Act to amend the Bank Act. As I said previously, it was introduced on June 30, 1988, in response to the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs dated June 6, 1988, on personal financial service charges. I will provide briefly a background to this sensitive and important issue.

All Members of Parliament have heard from their constituents on the topic of financial service charges for consumers. Complaints and concerns were so omnipresent that the standing committee decided to look into it. On March 29, 1988, a background paper by the committee's research staff was released. It concluded that when financial institutions began to compete for business by paying higher interest rates and providing more services, they imposed fees too quickly and without much sensitivity.

The report stated that, on average, routine financial service charges per family cost about $100 a year. This is not excessive. However, the problems stem from lack of information about them. The committee held public hearings during April to hear from consumer groups, financial institutions, and Government. Our focus was the consumer's need for information and the recent changes in levels and structures of service charges.

On June 6, 1988, the committee tabled its report which called for regulations to provide better information on charges, provide certain basic services without charge, such as low balance accounts often held by children and low-income individuals, and prohibit certain charges altogether. For example, the committee recommended the following fees be prohibited: fees to close an account which has been open for more than one year; and fees levied when customers fail to make transactions on an account. The committee also proposed that penalties for banks that failed to do the above be stiffened, an that the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions create an internal office to deal with consumer complaints.

My Party wholeheartedly concurred in the recommendations of the report. The banks responded defensively. The Canadian Bankers' Association said that the committee's recommendations were "interventionist" and went against the stated free enterprise philosophy of the Government.

On June 23, 1988, the Hon. Member for Trinity spoke to an opposition motion put by the NDP. Strangely, after tabling a minority report, they then moved a motion to support the committee report. The Hon. Member said at the time that neither blatant bank bashing by the NDP, calling for regulation at any cost, nor a staunch Conservative anti-regulation policy were useful in this debate. More careful consideration is required in this matter. She concluded that regulation of financial service charges should be a last resort. Instead of responding defensively, the banks should have admitted they went too far and too fast with their user-pay notion, irritating, confusing and inconveniencing their customers. The whole fiasco was a botched public relations exercise on the part of the banks.

On June 30, 1988, the Government responded to the committee's report in the form of Bill C-140. Earlier that week, five of Canada's six major banks said they would voluntarily comply with the committee's recommendations. The main purpose of the legislation at the time was to assure Canadians that the Government would simply monitor the banks' voluntary compliance. I also expressed my dissatisfaction with the Bill in the House on the same day. I said that the Government caved in to the banks. I called for more specific measures, namely inclusion of time limits in the legislation so Canadian consumers would know when services would be provided that treated them with fairness.

What is the status of the banks' activity in this area? On August 17, 1988, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) tabled the report of the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions regarding compliance by banks with the voluntary measures, and preparation for implementing future measures with respect to bank service charges. The conclusion? As of that date the survey done by the office indicated that four banks, the Royal Bank, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Scotiabank, and the Bank of Montreal appeared to be complying with the letter and spirit of the voluntary measures agreed upon. One bank, the National Bank, reported it was in compliance except for the withdrawal of the NSF charge back fee. This was to be done by November, 1988. Another bank, the Toronto-Dominion, was in compliance except for the provision of a no-frills account.

As a result of this report, a member of the standing committee withdrew his Private Members' Bill that would have legislated the now voluntary measures. Therefore, it appears that voluntary compliance has occurred in large part. Consumers, aware of where it has not occurred, can take their business elsewhere. They can act. They have a choice.

I will now turn my attention to the issue of financial service fees for small businesses. That is an important matter which I do not think was addressed sufficiently. At the time of the tabling of the report on personal financial service charges, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business made its views known. It wanted equal time and fair treatment from the banks. The Minister responded that he wanted small businesses to be treated largely the same as consumers, and that he would change the legislation to ensure this. He announced his intention to do so on September 15, less than two weeks ago.

The CFIB understood that the committee focused on the consumer aspects of the service charge issue, and therefore could not represent the interests of small business at the time. However, as stated in its brief to the committee during the hearing, small business concerns in this area are at least as important for three basic reasons.

First, small businesses typically have less choice in their financial dealings than do customers, since their freedom to switch business relationships with bankers is more restricted than for consumers. Second, the magnitude of service charge costs to small business is proportionately greater, often totalling hundreds of dollars.

Third, unpredictable and sizeable changes in bank service charges can have a dramatic negative impact on the ability of small businesses to plan their operations and cash flow, and could in turn affect the viability of the businesses themselves.

The CFIB asked the Government for something it usually does not ask for, government intervention, so that the Government would uphold for small businesses the measures taken voluntarily by the banks for consumers. The Minister of State for Finance said in his statement on September 15 that he expects increased competition in the financial sector to play a key role in ensuring reasonable service charge practices. Yet the CFIB also argued that any positive benefits from deregulation of financial services have yet to be seen for small businesses. It claims that the most apparent effect of deregulation to date is that the profit margins on big business lending have been narrowed, causing banks to resort to the imposition of larger and more numerous service charges on small businesses. Also, small businesses are captive customers who suffer greatly as a result of such cost saving actions as closing unprofitable bank branches in small towns on which small businesses often depend.

They felt that the effectiveness of voluntary compliance is suspect "in such an unbalanced market context". Their recommendations were as follows. One, complete information regarding current levels of and changes to service charges must be available to small businesses. Two, charge-back fees for NSF cheques must be eliminated for small businesses. Three, annual monitoring of bank practices in the area of small businesses ought to be put in place.

The CFIB tried to negotiate better treatment on service charges with the Canadian Bankers' Association but made no headway on the NSF charge-back issue. The Government gave no quarter here either or anywhere else on that issue in its announcement to extend similar disclosure and complaint resolution benefits to businesses.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, here are the Government's measures for small businesses. Consistent with what is now proposed for personal accounts, the amendments to Bill C-140 and the draft regulations will, first, entitle businesses when they open accounts to receive an enhanced disclosure of charges applying and information on the institution's procedures for handling complaints. Second, they will ensure that banks make available to the public for examination, on request, a list of all charges for business services in their branches doing commercial business. Third, they will provide for ongoing disclosure of core account-related business charges through a brochure available to the public. Fourth, they will provide thirty-day pre-notification, through statements, of changes in account-related charges. The Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions will also mediate complaints on behalf of small business account holders.

While all of the recommendations of the CFIB were not accepted, the organization is said to be pleased that most of their issues were dealt with. The main concession that small businesses did not achieve is the cancellation of the fee banks charge for depositing an NSF cheque, and God knows they do get them. The Government has promised to monitor the situation. If it does not improve, tougher action supposedly will be taken. We will see.

I and my Party will be watching closely to see if the disclosure of information on financial service charges continues. We will also carefully monitor whether consumers and small businesses are treated with fairness and consideration in the weeks to come. We are dealing here with a very important issue. We are dealing with small businesses which create a very large number of jobs in Canada. It is an appeal to Canadians by the small business community to be sensitive to their needs. I recommend that the Minister be very open and fair in dealing with this problem.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was just having an interesting discussion with the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). He was pleading with me to let this wet spaghetti Bill, Bill C-140, pass. He was pleading with me. He was crying. He was saying "Please". This is the man who called me a Johnny-come-lately. I called him a Tommy-come-never.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Here he was sitting on my left trying to outflank me on the left and he was appealing. I knew I was on my left because that is where my heart is. The Minister was pleading with me. I could see the tears rolling down his cheeks. He was saying: "Please, please—

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do want people to look closely at me. I am certainly not crying. I am not a very emotional person. I was trying to argue with the Hon. Member that it would be very much in his interests to see this Bill passed today. He disagrees with me, so he does not have to go on with any further theatrics.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, folks watching on TV may have seen the Minister on my left and they might have wondered what was happening. Was I surrendering silently to the Tory Juggernaut? The Minister says he is not a very emotional person. But he was crying inside and laughing on the outside.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: On the tenet of the proposition that he made, he was propositioning me. He was saying to me that half a loaf is better than no loaf. I know that anybody who lays that argument on me has surrendered the basic argument. He said: "Please, half a loaf is better than no loaf. Isn't it better that they get Bill C-140 than nothing at all?"

Let us just see what Bill C-140 says. It reads:

> —immediately after Section 202 thereof, the following Sections:
> "202.1 A bank shall not open an account in the name of a customer unless, at the time the account is opened, the bank provides the individual who requests the opening of the account with
> (a) a copy of the account agreement signed by that individual;
> (b) information in writing—
> (c) information in writing—

Then it goes on:

> (i) any increase to the charges referred to—

Shall be in writing, Mr. Speaker, in subparagraph (d) we find:

> (d) information in writing—
> (e) such other information in writing as is prescribed.
> 202.2 A bank shall disclose, in the prescribed manner, to its customers and to the public, the charges applicable with respect—

It is more in writing, Mr. Speaker. In writing, in the prescribed form. Then it goes on:

> A bank shall not increase any charge applicable to an account with the bank or introduce any new charge applicable to an account with the bank unless the bank discloses such charges in the prescribed manner . . .

Obviously in writing, Mr. Speaker, in triplicate, with the appropriate colours going to the bureaucrats in the Bank of Canada, to the Minister and every other minion around. That is what it says. Then here is the classic in clause 202.4:

> A bank shall establish procedures for dealing with complaints made by customers of the bank . . .

The bank will start watching itself. It is like putting Count Dracula in charge of the Red Cross blood bank. You put the banks in charge of hearing complaints. It says in here that there will be a local banker who will hear your complaint, and if you are not satisfied the local banker will funnel that up to a regional banker, who will then, if you are not satisfied, funnel it up to a national banker. That is supposed to be an effective system of redress for consumers. Then it goes on to say:

> A bank shall file with the Superintendent a copy of its procedures established pursuant to subsection (1).

In the appropriate form, Mr. Speaker. That means in writing, with the appropriate copies to the appropriate minions. Then it says:

> A bank shall, in the prescribed manner, provide customers of the bank who have complaints with respect to their accounts with prescribed information on how they may contact the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions.

So it will be informing them, in the prescribed form, in writing, of course, with the appropriate number of copies to the appropriate minions and on and on. Then you start looking for the meat among all of the potatoes. You cannot find one morsel of meat, not one morsel. This is a deliberate attempt to denude the forests of this country. I can imagine the number of trees it will take to pass all this information in the prescribed form, in writing, with the appropriate copies to the appropriate minions. Give me a break, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister comes over here with his crocodile tears and suggests that I should accept this half a loaf. I would not even call it bread, Mr. Speaker. Man does not live by bread alone. He has to live by some substantive amendments to the Bank Act that give customers of the bank some security with respect to their dealings with the bank. That is what we need, not this Casper Milquetoast Bill. I see it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 10 minutes past one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.10 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ENERGY

MEGAPROJECTS—ENVIRONMENTAL CONSIDERATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Government's spending spree on energy megaprojects once again shows the Tories talking one way and acting another. Despite the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) words on the environment, echoed by the Energy and Environment Ministers, it is clear that Tories do not understand that an energy policy is an environmental policy. Look at the record.

In November, 1984, they cut the energy division of the National Research Council, wiping out research on renewable energy, energy conservation and energy alternatives. While billions are committed now to oil megaprojects, to sweeten the pill a feeble commitment is made to research on energy alternatives and conservation. Clearly the Tories prefer to buy votes through megaprojects. That is their energy policy.

For us, an energy policy is an environmental policy. We are committed to shifting our dependence from non-renewable to renewable energy sources. We must work hard on energy efficiency, aim at a sustainable energy policy, and look beyond the next 40 years instead of the next four.

NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AWARD TO UNITED NATIONS FOR PEACEKEEPING

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the announcement that this year's Nobel Peace Prize has been awarded to the United Nations for its peacekeeping efforts makes this day a special one for Canada and the Canadian Armed Forces. Our contribution to international peacekeeping is well known.

While former Prime Minister Pearson raised the profile of this important aspect of the UN's work when he accepted the 1957 Nobel Peace Prize, Canadian participation dates back as far as 1947. We have contributed to 23 different United Nations and non-UN multinational peacekeeping and truce supervisory missions in the last four decades. No other nation has such an enviable record.

Over 80,000 Canadian Forces personnel have participated in international peacekeeping efforts over the years, from Korea to Kashmir, from the Congo to Cypress, and from Lebanon to Viet Nam.

Canadian soldiers have given their lives in distant lands while wearing the blue beret of the United Nations. These dedicated people have worn that beret with pride, knowing that they were contributing to world peace and international security.

I join with other Canadians in saluting the peacekeeping forces serving abroad and in congratulating them on a job well done.

DELAY IN GRANTING WORK PERMITS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration Mrs. McDougall) is squandering $9 million per month to stop employable people from working. Today, the Metro Toronto Community Services and Housing Committee is examining a report that about 9,000 refugee claimants in Metropolitan Toronto are waiting for their immigration inquiry and examination under oath without which this Minister will not let them have a work permit. Therefore, Metro's Community Services Department must give these refugee claimants over $4 million per month, although three-quarters of these people are employable and willing to work.

According to Immigration Canada, over 25,000 refugee claimants in Canada were denied job permits as of August 12, with more claimants coming in at about a couple of thousand per month. In September, the Minister cancelled all inquiries and examinations under oath till further notice. Therefore, likely more than 20,000 or 25,000 refugee claimants in Canada have been refused work permits by the Minister's policy and will be refused for many months to come. The total cost to taxpayers must be well over $9 million monthly, or $100 million annually.

Shame on this wasteful, anti-refugee Government.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

ROLE IN SUCCESSFUL LAUNCHING OF SPACE SHUTTLE

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians can take pride in the successful launch today of the U.S. space shuttle Discovery. Full marks go to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, a federal Crown corporation responsible for developing the peaceful application of nuclear energy.

AECL was instrumental in testing and verifying the shuttle's O-rings. Those rings are synthetic rubber seals which prevent the escape of hot rocket gases through the joints that connect the three main segments of the shuttle booster rocket.

In contracts totaling nearly $3 million with Morton Thiokol of Utah, AECL developed test procedures, quality control requirements, and inspection methods to ensure the performance and the integrity of the redesigned O-ring. Indeed, Canadians can be proud of our contribution to today's successful launching.

NEW BRUNSWICK—SPRAYING OF HERBICIDE 2,4-D

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, once again we have proof that the Government is only a recent convert to the cause of the environment. This summer, from June 29 to July 17, plants, crops, and people along the Saint John River were subjected to an aerial spraying of the herbicide 2,4-D.

I and all the people of New Brunswick were shocked to learn that the Armed Forces, who contracted the spraying program near CFB Gagetown, did not bother to give advance warning to land-owners living adjacent to the area. Furthermore, the 2,4-D was sprayed under unsuitable wind conditions that ensured that even more land would be contaminated. To top it it all off, the Forces refused after the fact to accept any responsibility for this contamination.

The Government's negligence in this spraying has not only severely inconvenienced the people living in the area, but it has also taken a severe toll on farmers' crops and their livelihoods. The Armed Forces and the Government have to accept responsibility for what has happened. The people who have been affected must be compensated for crop losses, and measures have to be taken to make sure that this never happens again.

Every day the Government tells us that it is here to help people. A mistake has been made. People have been wronged. The Government must not pretend that nothing has happened.

RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF ABANDONMENT OF FRANQUET-CHAPAIS RAIL LINE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, today in Halifax there is a meeting of provincial Ministers of Transport with the Minister of Transport of Canada (Mr. Bouchard).

Marc-Yvan Côté, the Quebec Minister of Transport, will be asking for a delay in the abandonment of the Franquet-Chapais rail section in Abitibi.

I appreciate Mr. Côté's excellent work, having myself been working for more than two years on this very difficult matter. This is the only line providing a direct rail link between the Abitibi area and the Chapais-Chibougamau resource area.

I ask the Minister of Transport to correct CN's decisions in this regard as soon as possible, and I urge him to support the rehabilitation of the Franquet-Chapais rail line.

Mr. Speaker, with men like Marc-Yvan Côté, Denis Lamarche and the members of the Senneterre unions and the CRDAT Committee, we may feel sure that this fight is not over in Abitibi.

HUMAN RIGHTS

INDIA—DETENTION OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada continues in its unacceptable oversensitivity to the views and perceived needs of the Indian Government when it comes to matters dealing with Canadian Sikhs. The case of Balkar Singh is an example.

Mr. Singh, a Canadian, has been held for almost a year now without any charges being laid, and the Canadian Government has been very short on efforts to ensure due process for him, to explain its inaction on his behalf, or to explain what else it may be doing with respect to the case of Mr. Singh.

Instead of being an uncritical ally of the Indian Government, the Canadian Government, at the same time as it takes an understandably hard line against terrorism of any kind in Canada or in India, should vigorously encourage the Government of India to respect and protect the human rights of Sikhs in India and elsewhere, should recognize the seriousness with which Sikhs regard the assault on the Golden Temple, and should press India to bring to justice those guilty of attacks on Sikhs during the days following Indira Gandhi's assassination. Uncritical acceptance of the views, the interests, or the perceptions of the Indian Government is not in anyone's interest.

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, last week in an interview the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) again repeated the claim that free trade will destroy our unique system of supply management in farm products. This statement has no basis in fact. It has been repeated in a partisan fashion without any supporting evidence in the hope that Canadians will eventually believe it. Other statements like those dealing with complete access to our resources and the sale of water are equally in error.

Our supply-management schemes work because we close our borders to imports of poultry and dairy products beyond a historical level of imports, and these arrangements are established under the GATT agreement. Our ability to control our borders continues under the Free Trade Agreement. We have agreed to protect that part of the industry that might be hurt as tariffs are removed. That has already been done in dairy products.

The supply-management schemes in Canada are secure. Any statements contrary to this are inaccurate and are made only for partisan purposes.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say how gratified I was to learn today that the Conservative Party has finally found a spot for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Conservatives are very quick to praise AECL for its successes. I have done so in the House over the past four years. However, I would remind Hon. Members that it was this same Government that cut $100 million out of research and development in Atomic Energy of Canada Limited's budget and then went on to cut $70 million out of its reserve fund.

If the Tory Government wants to use AECL and to praise it, it ought to open up the wallet of the Government and give it the money to do the job. The Government has robbed it blind. The Government should get back into research and development and mean what it says.

• (1410)

AECL has done a tremendous job over the years. It is part of the great success of the Shuttle takeoff today. So get with it and give AECL the money to do the job.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

PARTICIPATION OF PEOPLE OF TÉMISCAMINGUE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in the last days before the coming election campaign, let me Thank all those men and women municipalities and socio-economic groups in my constituency that supported me in obtaining results on major issues.

The establishment of a water treatment plant in Rouyn-Noranda, the location of a regional office of the Department of the Secretary of State, the Témiscamingue Airport, a full-fledged employment centre in La Sarre, flow-through shares, the establishment of a Department of Senior Citizens, all these are examples of projects that are important for my community and that were accomplished because of the involvement of people in my area.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain my fellow citizens' satisfaction with this Government's accomplishments will be reflected in widespread support for the Progressive Conservative Party during the coming federal election, because ours is the only party that is really committed to regional interests.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY ELECTION PLATFORM

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I read with astonishment the 40-point program of the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner). I had to wonder whose document I was reading. It started off with a mortgage assistance plan through the tax system, but I read in Hansard the Liberals saying: "It is simply not equitable. It simply does not serve the people who need help". That was said by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). He went on to say we shouldn't try to bribe Canadians with their own money.

In 1984 it was the Conservative Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was in Opposition who said exactly the same thing. He said: "We will stop the tax grab on the middle-income earner". But was it not the Liberal Leader, when he was Minister of Finance, who created tax unfairness through tax dodges for the rich and famous?

The document continues: "equal pay for work of equal value is a basic right", but it was this same Liberal Leader in 1984 who said that we should not force this on the banks, that it was premature to do that, even though it had been the law since 1978.

There was a promise of $5 billion for municipal water and sewage. Was it not the same Liberal Leader when he was Prime Minister in 1984 who said he could not make that commitment?

The document talks about eliminating the substandard housing on reserves, but the backlog grew during Liberal years.

Surely, they jest!

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PROGRAM

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, with great pomp and ceremony, the Liberal Leader made public his party platform which would mean more debts for us as Canadians, for our children and grandchildren.

Lavoisier once stated that nothing is gained or lost when chemical substances combine or separate. In the area of economics, nothing is lost, nothing is gained. The Liberal Party's policy has always been to spend without creating anything. Mr. Turner's election platform would put an end to our economic recovery, exert enormous pressure on our interest rates and bring about inflation rates similar to those Canada experienced in 1980-81.

His election platform is inconsistent. Canadians no longer want periods of borrowing and inflation. They want the Progressive Conservative Party to administer Canada in the 1990's.

SOCIAL JUSTICE

QUEBEC'S SHARE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Premier Getty of Alberta stated in his own province that Quebec has received everything the Bourassa Government has asked for.

I can prove him wrong, because this Tory Government has failed to fulfill its promise of a true banking centre in Montreal. This Tory Government has failed to establish in Montreal a space agency with at least 50 per cent of the space research contracts. This Tory Government has failed to award $130 million to develop Montreal's Vieux-port. This Tory Government has managed to close the shipyard in Sorel and the Vickers shipyard in Montreal by refusing to grant them part of the contracts for the new frigates. Moreover, this Tory Government has allowed the demise of all the industries involved in railway transportation, including Bombardier, Canadian Steel Wheel, Angus Factories, and the CN maintenance workshops.

Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Government is not getting everything Quebecers are seeking from this Tory Government.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

AMERICAN SPACE STATION—SIGNING OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS BY CANADA

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, today is an important day in the history of Canada's space program. At around five o'clock this afternoon, the Canadian Ministers responsible for Science and Technology will sign, for Canada, the agreements governing our participation in the space station. The Canadian Ministers will sign the inter-governmental agreement with their partners from the United States, Europe and Japan, and the memorandum of agreement with NASA.

For Canadians this project will create spin-offs totalling $5 billion, create 80,000 person-years and provide a unique opportunity to participate in a project with some of the most daring technology in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join Canadians in congratulating the Americans on the launch of their space shuttle this morning.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SAANICH, B.C.—SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a story here from the Victoria Times of September 21. Carol Pickup of Saanich, British Columbia, made public an internal post office memo she said was designed to teach Saanich a lesson for refusing to co-operate with Canada Post with respect to the installation of supermailboxes. The memo states:

> Please be advised that any new customer for supermailbox delivery will not be issued a compartment, even if the (green) box has spare compartments.
> The reason for the above is, Saanich council has refused to co-operate with Canada Post.
> Please ensure you follow the above.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

METROPOLITAN TORONTO FOOD BANKS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government likes to talk about the growth which has occurred in the last four years in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: One of the growth statistics not mentioned is food banks. If indeed these have been good times, why have we seen an estimated increase in food banks in Metro Toronto from 40 in 1984 to 160 today? This is private charity used by poor people, over half of whom are children. They are lining up in prosperous Tory Canada to get food.

Food banks have a valid role when someone's house burns down, when a traveller is robbed, or a battered wife leaves home, but the new role for privately sponsored food banks is to fill the gap in social programs, to keep poor people and their children alive until the end of each month.

Under the Conservatives, holes in the safety net are growing, and this is the proof. The Canada Assistance Plan which was introduced by a former Liberal Government was a commitment by this Parliament to a minimum standard of decency for all who live in this prosperous land. It has been betrayed. Millions of Canadians who enjoy a pretty good life in this country must feel ashamed when they see where the Mulroney Government has led them.

Mr. Beatty: Is there a time limit, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Kaplan: And you may not like to hear this.

TELEVISION

BROADCASTING OF PARLIAMENTARY CHANNEL

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago our local cable companies moved the House of Commons channel from No. 16 to No. 50. Anyone who did not have a super converter in order to get channel 50 was simply out of luck. A lot of people were very unhappy about this, especially a lot of seniors. Many of them called my office to say so. In fact, my constituency office at Bank and Alta Vista lost access to the House of Commons broadcast.

There was a loud outcry. In fact you, yourself, Mr. Speaker, expressed some concern. I called, and they listened.

I want to congratulate Vic Reed who is the general manager of Skyline on St. Laurent Boulevard, and Bill Kincaid of Ottawa Cable on Richmond Road. They have set an example for other cable networks across the country.

In spite of what everyone says about us here in this House, they do like to watch us on TV.

OLYMPIC GAMES—DISQUALIFIED ATHLETE—SUSPENSION FROM NATIONAL TEAM

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for Fitness and Amateur Sports. For several days Canadians have watched with increasing incredulity as the Minister displayed incredible incompetence in deciding to hang Ben Johnson before he even had the opportunity of a fair hearing. This morning at a press conference we heard the Minister time and again insist that the reason he had to suspend Ben Johnson for life was because he was acting on a regulation. The Minister should know that in fact no regulations exist governing the suspension of athletes. Why does he continue to repeat that he had no discretion in this matter, hiding behind regulations, when he ought to know that no regulations exist governing the suspension of athletes?

• (1420)

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker I can only refer to a document called Canada Drug Use and Doping Control in Sport, a Sport Canada policy update which reads as follows:

Violations and Sanctions

1 (a) Any athlete who has been proven through appropriate due process to have used banned drugs in contravention of the rules of his/her respective national and/or international sport federation will be suspended forthwith from eligibility for Sport Canada's Athlete Assistance Program and any other financial or program support provided directly to athletes or indirectly by Sport Canada via national sport organizations (i.e., national championship funding, national team program support, etc.)

The policy that we applied is exactly that. Furthermore, I can point out that on the same page, on the use of steroids, it says:

Individuals proven to have violated antidoping rules involving anabolic steroids and related compounds will be subject automatically . . .

. . . I stress "automatically"...

. . . to a lifetime withdrawal of eligibility for all federal government sport programs or benefits.

That is what the Sport Canada policy is. Those are the rules that I follow for any athlete in Canada, including four weightlifters who never reached the Games.

[Translation]

DISQUALIFICATION OF BEN JOHNSON—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, since his initial decision to jump on Ben Johnson, the Minister has referred to certain regulations. We know now there are no such regulations but only a policy that gives the Minister full discretion with respect to life suspensions. My question to the Minister is this: How can he claim that he gave . . .

[English]

. . . appropriate due process to Ben Johnson. If he reads his own policy statement, which is not a regulation, he will see that it says:

Any athlete who has been proven through appropriate due process . . .

What does he consider appropriate due process?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, read verbatim what the regulations prescribe:

Violations and sanctions:

1 (a) Any athlete who has been proven through appropriate due process to have used banned drugs in contravention of the rules of his/her respective national and/or international sport federation will be suspended forthwith from eligibility for sport Canada's Athlete Assistance Program and any other financial or program support provided directly to athletes or indirectly by Sport Canada via national sport organizations (i.e., national championship funding, national team program support, etc.)

And a little further Mr. Speaker:

Individuals proven to have violated antidoping rules involving anabolic steroids and related compounds will be subject automatically to a lifetime withdrawal of eligibility for all federal government sport programs or benefits.

Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had taken the trouble to read through all the regulations, which were in fact distributed to members of the press, she would have noticed that after two years, these athletes may appeal their suspension to the Minister, and it will be up to the Minister who is the incumbent at that time to decide whether or not to maintain the suspension. That is exactly what the regulations provide, Mr. Speaker. We are treating Mr. Johnson exactly the same way we would treat any other athlete in Canada.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mrs. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is a disgrace the Minister doesn't know what a regulation is. This morning he claimed he was forced to act because of a regulation, a regulation that doesn't exist! I therefore would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister or the acting Prime Minister the Minister responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport has proven to be totally incompetent, doesn't even understand what a regulaiton is and doesn't realize that according to his own policy the Minister has full discretion I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minster whether he will relieve the Minister of this case and ask for the resignation of the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport), who has made a mess of the Ben Johnson case.

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, quite frankly I did not expect any better from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. It was quite obvious that she and the federal Liberal Party of Canada intended to take this approach, which is certainly not helpful in clarifying the events around the suspension of Mr. Johnson.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to say that the Government's policy, the Government's behaviour towards this athlete is no different from our attitude towards other athletes, including several weightlifters, and no one ever . . . Mr. Speaker, it's funny, but one wonders where the Hon. Member and her fellow members were when we were applying exactly the same sanction in exactly the same circumstances to other athletes. Her memory is rather selective. Personally, I don't think she is acting in good faith.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the one who still claims that he is able to be Minister of Public Works. I shall ask him this. This morning, we had the opportunity as a group to hear the famous cassette that, again, casts doubt on the whole contracting procedure in the Department of Public Works and on the Minister's judgement, diligence and competence, since he did not give the letter to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in a timely fashion. But I want to ask the Minister, with all the facts that are known, with all the questions raised by this Moisie affair, which is starting to smell rotten, would it not be more honest for him to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, the Privy Council or the Treasury Board to conduct an independent investigation on the conduct of department officials, on the influence exerted in that affair and on the awarding of the contract, which in the end should probably have been cancelled because of extenuating circumstances?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there is an appropriate committee of the House of Commons which can convene a meeting, if it is thought desirable by Members, to look into any question, including the one posed by the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member has referred to a cassette. If it gives all the messages that he indicates, I hope he has put it in the hands of the RCMP.

Mr. Boudria: They already had it. You said so in the House the day before yesterday.

Mr. Lapierre: I would like to direct my supplementary question to the same Minister. His colleague, the Minister of Transport, was accused one day and he was not afraid to table in the House all the pertinent documents, and he was available for any questions.

This Minister is trying to hide behind the RCMP. We are talking about ministerial responsibility. We are talking about negligence, competence, all kinds of qualities that that Minister does not have—competence for sure.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, since this is not only a criminal matter but a question of ministerial responsibility, is the Minister ready to submit his resignation or his whole case to the Privy Council or the Treasury Board for an impartial inquiry?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that this was a criminal matter. It is in the hands of the RCMP. I think we had better await the outcome from them.

ENERGY CONSERVATION BUDGET

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has recently discovered the importance of the environment in this country.

I have here some internal departmental documents from the Ministry of Energy. Why, in light of the so-called priority given to the environment, did the Cabinet decide in the month of August to cut back on the budget of the energy conservation part of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, from some $74 million in 1988-1989 to $40 million within 18 months?

Why that cut-back of major consequences for energy conservation in this country when the environment is supposed to be a major priority of the Government?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can hardly comment on a document I have not seen and do not know about. The Member waves it in front of the House. It could be anything.

The premise of his question that the Government has only recently discovered the environment is fundamentally wrong. I remind him and all Members of the House that it was this Government that came into power at a time when, for example, motor vehicle exhaust emission controls were one-third as stringent here in Canada as those in the United States. Now we have the strongest such controls of any nation in the world.

When we came into office the controls on lead in gasoline were one-tenth as stringent as those in the United States, and now we have the strongest program on lead in gasoline in the industrialized world.

This is the Government, after all, that established five new national parks and has set the stage for two new national parks which we hope will be created before long. More national parks were created in three and a half years alone than were created in a decade and a half under the previous Liberal administration.

• (1430)

The premise of the question is wrong. I think the Hon. Member might like to do a little bit more homework on his questions before he comes into the House.

POSITION OF CABINET

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Perhaps the Minister should answer the question and not the premise.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: I have here in my hand a copy of a document, Mr. Speaker, that states: "In August, the Cabinet made a decision to cut back on the budget for energy conservation in this country from $74 million a year in 1988-89 to some $40 million a year in 1990-91 and, in terms of person years in the next two years, from 303 people to 60 people". I want to ask the Minister why, in light of the so-called priority for the environment, did the Cabinet in August decide to make major cut-backs in the conservation of energy?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the premise of any question would be relevant to any answer to the same question.

In any event, if the Hon. Member wants to measure the commitment of the Government of Canada to the environment, perhaps he would like to look at the figures which indicate that five months into the current fiscal year the Government of Canada, through my Department, was already spending $20 million more than the previous Liberal Government did in the entire year when last it was in office.

If you add to the budget of my Department, Mr. Speaker, all the expenditures that have been drawn from other Departments for major environmental initiatives of the Government of Canada, you will see that we have far exceeded inflation in expenditures on the environment relative to that which was spent on the environment by the previous administration.

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, four years ago the federal Government spent some $525 million on the issue of energy conservation. Now it is down to $74 million, a cut-back of around $500 million in four years.

I also want to know—perhaps from the Acting Prime Minister—why a proposition made by the Minister of Energy last spring that the Government spend $525 million over five years in energy conservation was cut back by the Cabinet in August to some $253 million. Why was the proposition of the Minister of Energy turned down? Why was it cut back from $525 million to $253 million? Why was that done?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member comes into the House and he picks one program and he says that because it is not exactly the same as it was when we took power in September of 1984 that there has been a cut-back, or an elimination, or some reduction in our commitment to the environment. I think he should judge us on our over-all record.

For example, this is the first Government to bring in a major environmental Bill, recently passed by the Parliament of Canada and proclaimed on June 30, since Environment Canada was established in 1971, that is, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. This is the Government that overhauled the National Parks Act, for the first time in over half a century, in addition to all the new national parks we have created.

I advise the Hon. Member and his Party when he wants to compare our record with that of previous admistrations to look at the over-all record—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West.

OLYMPIC GAMES—DISQUALIFIED ATHLETE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minster of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

After congratulating Ben Johnson last Friday the Prime Minister was quick to support the life suspension given by the Minister responsible for sports on Monday evening. Now the Prime Minister has not only reversed himself by ordering a full inquiry under the leadership of the Deputy Prime Minister, but in so doing he has completely undermined the integrity and credibility of his own Minister responsible for sports.

I would like to ask the Minister to confirm whether the Prime Minister or the Prime Minister's office was consulted about the life suspension handed down Monday evening. Second, how could the Minister justify the Prime Minister congratulating Ben Johnson Friday, condemning him Monday, and backtracking now in order to have a full inquiry to prove or confirm his innocence?

Can the Minister tell us where the Prime Minister stands and when he will stop running from one position to the next?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that if he takes the time to read the statement the Prime Minister made on Monday night I think he would see that the first thing referred to was the personal tragedy that would afflict Ben Johnson in such circumstances. I think that is a feeling that is shared not only by him but by all Members of this House, and certainly by myself. For now, I do not think that anything that we can say—certainly not by the Liberals—will change the situation.

We have proposed an inquiry. I have stated that we are going to get on with it as rapidly as we can in a context in which we can gain and collect information in an organized way, certainly not through all sorts of scurrilous allegations coming from all sorts of sources.

HOLDING OF INQUIRY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is curious that the Minister skirted the question concerning whether the Prime Minister knew of the life suspension before it was announced by the Minister. What shocks Canadians is that the Prime Minister is bouncing around the issues rather than standing and taking a firm position and giving the benefit of the doubt to a Canadian champion and a Canadian's innocence, and then let the inquiry make that determination.

I ask the Minister responsible for sports this question. This morning he failed to confirm whether this inquiry would be fully open and public. Can the Minister confirm and give his undertaking to this House that the inquiry will be fully open and public? Can he also assure us that it will take place immediately after the end of the Olympics, and that it will not be delayed by any possible election campaign?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I think that now we are really getting to the root of the matter. The Hon. Member from the Liberal Party is clearly on record as saying that he wants to have this during the election campaign. Now we know why. Members of that Party could not care less about Ben Johnson. They could not care less about the doping issue. The only thing that they—

Mr. Marchi: That is a lie.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to refrain from using words across the aisle that I might have to comment upon later.

HOUSING

TORONTO—DEVELOPMENT PROJECT AT DOWNSVIEW

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Housing I want to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works. I want to ask the Minister about the Government's new-found interest in Toronto and in Canada's housing crisis. I specifically want to ask him about the housing site at the Toronto Downsview Airport.

Yesterday I met with a group of concerned people about housing at the Downsview Airport on a piece of property that the Government sold to a private developer two years ago for about $14 million. Today, houses are being built on that site for which the bottom asking price is $680,000 and the top price is $950,000.

I want to ask the Minister what strings is the Government going to attach to developers who are going to be involved in the newly released Downsview lands to make sure that the housing which is constructed there is affordable and not luxury housing.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in response to the pleas of a good number of Conservative Members from Toronto, the Government for the past year and a half has been reviewing what we might do to deal with Toronto housing problems. Just two weeks ago we made an announcement which is virtually going to create a new city in the middle of Toronto with the Downsview project. That will allow a great deal of affordable housing.

The amount that will be involved is consistent with the policy of the Province of Ontario. Those are the guidelines we follow. We are going to work closely with provincial and municipal Governments to establish the appropriate blend, the mixture that is good for the area. I would hope that the Hon. Member will respond to this kind of initiative that Toronto Members are requesting.

. CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, we have yet to find out the details of that initiative. The problem is not only in Toronto, it is right across Canada.

This group pointed out to us yesterday that since 1984 the Government has slashed funding for all kinds of housing across Canada, including in Halifax. I want to ask the Minister if the Government is so interested in making affordable housing a priority in Canada, why it is doing nothing about its policy of establishing unit prices for co-op housing that makes it impossible for many of those groups to build co-op housing on Downsview and elsewhere.

I want specifically to ask the Minister a question concerning a co-op housing group in Halifax called the Greenstem Housing Co-op which is about to go down the tubes because of the Government's policy on co-op housing units.

• (1440)

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that the people involved in the co-operative housing movement in Halifax are very appreciative and fully applaud the initiatives that the Government has taken. More co-op housing has commenced in the last four years in Halifax than in the previous ten years.

I can also say that the amount of money that we make available to housing generally for co-ops and non-profits across Canada is adjusted in accordance with cost of living increases. It is reviewed at least twice a year to respond to various conditions.

We have delivered 40 per cent more to those most in need than any other Government has on any other program.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

THE OUJÉ-BOUGOUMOU CREES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

For more than 13 years, the Oujé-Bougoumou Cree community has been asking for recognition under the James Bay Agreement. About two weeks ago, Quebec finally set aside land for this community. Newspaper articles show that intense negotiations are underway and that progress has been made.

Mr. Speaker, my question is as follows. In view of the positive developments on the question of land and the intense discussions between the Cree representatives and the federal negotiator, can the Minister tell the House what the federal Government intends to do now to see this matter through in the interest of all signatories of the Agreement and especially of the Oujé-Bougoumou Cree and their chief, Abel Bosum?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is also eager to settle the matter of the Oujé-Bougoumou Cree. The first step was to select some land, and this was completed recently. The second is to create a new band.

Now, the Government of Quebec and the Grand Council of the Cree have taken 13 years to find a piece of land where the new band can settle and this land has just been found. Thirteen days later, you would like me to come up with an immediate answer.

I have said that we want to settle this matter and I have instructed our negotiator and asked him to proceed with an offer that will be put on the negotiating table next week so that the Oujé-Bougoumou Cree band can be created and the case finally resolved, which will allow us to bring in legislative amendments to the Agreement and the Act concerned as soon as possible.

SALE OF MOISIE LANDS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, and I am not sure if there is one in the House. It is a question that should not be answered by the Minister of Public Works because it touches upon his conduct.

I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister why the Government feels that the whole Moisie affair can be left to the police. Does this mean that the Government has abandoned its own conflict of interest guidelines of ethical standards for Ministers which are so clearly violated by this case?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, some people like to beat a dead horse to death.

Yesterday the Hon. Member's Party initiated a new 50-point platform—

Some Hon. Members: Forty.

Mr. McInnes: I would have thought that they would have been raising questions relative to the national interest as indicated in that particular platform, rather than perpetuating something that we have been over and over.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if there is an Acting Prime Minister in the House, I direct my question to him.

Is it the position of the Government then that as long as the criminal law is not violated, the Government is free to use its public trust to confer benefits on its friends, on its relatives, and on its cronies?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as a former Solicitor General the Hon. Member should know that the Government does not interfere with criminal investigations. However, the type of questions that have been raised by members of the Liberal Party today indicate why they have fallen to third place.

TORONTO—HARBOURFRONT—REQUEST THAT CONSTRUCTION BE SUSPENDED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Public Works responsible for Harbourfront in Toronto. The Minister knows that Harbourfront is already a mess, such as Downsview is shaping up to be.

As the Minister knows, eight years ago the federal Government agreed with Toronto City Council that Harbourfront was to include affordable housing, family housing, schools, local stores, public parkland, and waterfront access. Now it is becoming mainly housing for the rich.

In view of the unanimous Harbourfront Review Committee resolutions which I sent to the Minister this morning, will he assure the House that he will stop all further building in Harbourfront until the Royal Commission, headed by the Hon. David Crombie, has reported publicly?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member did indicate that I received this advice this morning. We are not going to act too hastily. Of course there is the Royal Commission headed by the Hon. David Crombie. I will be consulting with all groups that have an appropriate influence and an opinion on this matter, before making any final decisions.

REQUEST THAT HARBOURFRONT RESIDENTS BE CONSULTED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, for the Minister's further help I will send him a copy of a petition I have just received from Toronto residents asking that there be no further building south of Queen's Quay.

Since the Hon. David Crombie has not answered any of the inquiries from Harbourfront residents, or their elected representatives on City Council, will the Minister direct him to place Harbourfront Residents' Association representatives, and the two Ward Six aldermen of City Council, on his commission and the committees thereof, or at least to confer and consult with them immediately and frequently?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there are not many boundaries on the nature of the inquiry by the commission headed by the Hon. David Crombie. I know, and he has indicated to me, that he will be consulting with all groups that have an interest, and indeed I have confidence that he will follow that procedure.

Mr. Heap: He has ignored them and refused to answer.

DISASTERS

SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND TRAGEDY—COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence who is responsible as well for civil defence.

Last August 25, the Minister of Transport, in the presence of the Minister of the Environment, promised the Saint-Basile victims that the Conservative Government would contribute $1 for every dollar spent by the Government of Quebec.

Quebec now expects to pay almost $6 million to the residents of Saint-Basile.

Can the Minister assure us that the federal Government will spend half that amount, as Quebec Government Minister Rocheleau is requesting?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, there is an agreement between the federal Government and the provinces to cover federal contributions to emergencies. The news release that was issued at the time referred to that agreement.

It is done on a sliding scale, as the Hon. Member will likely know. Indeed, over a certain figure the contribution could go above 50 per cent. The manner in which it works is the following. After $1 per capita has been spent by the province, the federal Government starts to make a contribution; 50 per cent of the next $2 per capita of provincial expenditures are eligible for cost sharing; 75 per cent of the next $2 per capita, and 90 per cent of the remainder.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PAY $3 MILLION TO VICTIMS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responded as I expected. He has just admitted that the Minister of Transport and the Minister of the Environment misled the people of Saint-Basile.

The Minister of Transport did not make any restriction when, anxious to promote his own political career in front of the victims of Saint-Basile and the media—this is on tape—he stated unequivocally that his Government would give $1 for each dollar spent.

So here is my question to the Minister responsible for civil defence. Your Quebec counterpart with respect to civil defence sent you a letter asking that your Government live up to its commitments. Will the Minister find a way to hand over the money the Minister promised the people of Saint-Basile? Expenditures of $6 million! The Government is to pay half of that. Will the Minister honour that commitment?

• (1450)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member accuses us of trying to make political capital out of a situation, and then engages in histrionics of this nature.

What was indicated at the time was that the federal Government would respond in accordance with the formula, and we will indeed do that. Depending on the contribution by the province, the federal contribution could go above 50 per cent. All this will depend upon the contribution made by the province.

FAUNA

TRAGIC DEATHS OF BELUGAS IN ST. LAWRENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known fact that beluga whales are dying in the Saint-Lawrence River. The causes of the pollution which is killing them have been known for quite a while.

Why does the Government not put an end to this carnage by enforcing the Fisheries Act, an already existing and effective measure? Why is the Government not taking any action to stop the killing of beluga whales?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, scientific analysis of the blubber of Belugas indicates one of the offending pollutants, for example, is Myrex, which has never been manufactured or even marketed in Canada. Its origins are as far away as New York, into the Niagara River, which in turn empties into the Great Lakes and from there into the St. Lawrence River Basin. That is one of the reasons why this Government signed with the Governments of the United States, of New York and of Ontario, the first ever four jurisdiction agreement that will slash all toxic loadings into the Niagara River by 50 per cent by 1996. That is the kind of strong environmental action this Government has provided in this area as in others.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, when I asked a question about this situation in April the Minister talked about the utmost priority in acting. He said that with Royal Assent to the Canadian Environmental Protection Act we would be in a position to act quickly. He now seems to be saying we are not going to be in a position to act at all.

Why not use the Fisheries Act? Why not use CEPA? Canadians do not care which Act is used, but they want to see an end to this killing of whales. What specific action can he promise to undertake, given the seriousness of this problem?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act is one instrument and we are using it. Another instrument is the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement which we completely overhauled in favour of cleaning up the Great Lakes by including all sources of pollution, not just toxic chemicals; by setting targets and schedules for the clean up of the Great Lakes; and by weaving into the fabric of this binational agreement mechanisms for accountability to ensure that not only this Government but future Governments live up to the targets and schedules I mentioned.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSIONS

PROPOSED TALK SHOW GUIDELINES

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Radio open-line talk show hosts are very concerned that the CRTC is planning to make some serious changes to the rules for talk shows which will curtail the host's ability to choose guests, and put in place prescreening procedures for callers. Could the Minister tell the House if these changes are indeed going to be put in place and, if so, how are we going to ensure freedom of speech is not threatened?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As many people are aware, the CRTC has invited the public as well as broadcasters to react to the proposed guidelines regarding open-line shows. In fact the closing date for those submissions is today. Anyone wishing to comment on these proposals has been invited to submit their views on this issue.

I want to make it very clear, however, that these guidelines were never intended to interfere with freedom of expression. That is not their intent. The CRTC is trying to find methods to provide balanced and well informed programs.

TRADE

FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade and concerns the beleaguered Canadian footwear industry.

In 1984, on July 26 to be exact, the Minister's boss, the Conservative Leader, promised the footwear and textile workers "stability through the rigorous enforcement of our existing international rights and obligations, including if necessary establishment of global quotas and a controlled increase of import volumes".

In 1986 the Government abolished quotas on imports of men's footwear. This resulted in the loss of 3,000 jobs in Canada. Import quotas on women's footwear are scheduled to end at the end of this November. This will likely result in the loss of thousands more jobs. Given that, will the Minister finally, at the eleventh hour of the Government's regime, honour his Leader's commitment to the footwear workers of Canada and extend quotas on women's footwear for at least two years? Or is he just simply going to sit by and allow more jobs to be lost because of his inaction?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I assume an election must be getting close because the hon. gentleman is worried about boots. He is certainly likely to get one when the election comes.

There is no emergency with respect to the question of footwear. The question of whether quotas should be continued or not will be dealt with in the normal course of events after a careful survey of the present situation in Canada. There is no chance that thousands of people are going to lose their jobs as a result of any change in quotas. That is simply the hon. gentleman using his usual scare tactics to attempt to stir up the electorate.

[Translation]

JOB PROTECTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the people in my riding who work in the shoe industry are not amused by the minister's answers. They want to keep their jobs. I therefore ask the Minister of Trade how he can explain the fact that, in 1984, when his government came to power, Canada was producing 45,000 pairs of shoes per year and that now, in 1988, after the 1987 elimination of quotas on men's shoes, that number is down to 38,000 pairs. Given the fact that 7,000 jobs have been lost in this sector, what does the Minister intend to do to protect the rest of the workers who will also lose their jobs if this Government persists in doing nothing? Will he immediately assure Canadians that he will protect jobs in the shoe manufacturing industry? This time, I would like to get more than platitudes for an answer.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to have something other than nonsense in the way of a question. The situation is that this country lives by its exports. One-third of our gross domestic product comes from exports. One of every three Canadian jobs comes from exports. Therefore, we have to be participants in the GATT system. We have to engage in fair trade. Therefore, we have to take great care with respect to import controls and quotas and so on with respect to some of our industries which may be vulnerable to foreign competition.

The footwear industry is one of those industries which has been protected and we will continue to protect it, always being very careful so that we observe the international conventions which apply and do not endanger our exports which are very important to Canadian workers.

AIR CANADA

MAINTENANCE CONTRACT AWARDED IN BRITAIN

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, last Monday my colleague from Thunder Bay—Atikokan got the following response from the Minister of Transport: "As soon as I have a good explanation, or any explanation, I will give it to my friend". I would like to ask about the benefits of deregulation and privatization and whether someone, anyone, on the government side could answer the question posed last Monday.

Air Canada has granted a maintenance contract outside this country for the first time, involving an L-1011 aircraft being serviced in Great Britain. Why is the Government allowing Air Canada to set this kind of precedent by exporting maintenance work outside its own facilities rather than blending specialized workers into crews doing routine maintenance, as is allowed under the present collective agreement with the machinists?

• (1500)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by Air Canada, and I am sure the Hon. Member will recognize that Air Canada makes its own decisions on a daily basis, that as the airline's own in-house maintenance capacity has been fully utilized it has subcontracted the special maintenance work for one L-1011 aircraft to a U.K. firm.

I may say that this is a single contract for a thirty-day basis only, and is for specialized maintenance work.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, there go another 250 Canadian jobs on one aircraft down the drain.

TRAINING OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): I would like to ask the Minister a further question, Mr. Speaker. It has to do with a question which the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) asked yesterday concerning the hiring of American air traffic controllers.

In 1983 the Liberal Government stopped training air traffic controllers and the Conservatives did not start again until four years later.

Mr. Crosbie: We did. You can thank me for that.

Mr. Benjamin: Why, as soon as the Government and the Deputy Prime Minister began dreaming about a brave new world of deregulation, was there no thought given or action taken to arrange the immediate resumption and expansion of training of air traffic controllers in Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Deputy Prime Minister had answered these questions very clearly yesterday.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, he did.

Miss MacDonald: I might also say it is important that we realize that the issues we are dealing with require some urgency whether in the repair and maintenance of aircraft or in the usage of air traffic controllers. I would think even the Hon. Member would recognize that.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NERVE GAS TESTS CONDUCTED DURING 1960S

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

During the past few weeks the Opposition has made numerous accusations that a substantial number of people in western Canada were exposed to nerve gas testing in the 1960s at the Suffield Research Station in Alberta.

I do understand that a toll free number has been established for those wishing more information, and that is very good for individuals. Could the Minister tell this House, and indeed all the people in southern Alberta, just what exactly has been done? Does he have a list of people who are suffering long-term effects?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. We have opened up the telephone lines. We have started to receive some calls and we will follow up on each one of them. Mr. William Barton will continue with his inquiry.

As the House will know, on Friday the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) demanded an emergency debate here so individuals could be encouraged to come forward and present themselves for medical tests. Since that time my office has been in touch with hers on three occasions. I have written three letters to her to ask that the names of the individuals who have made, in her words, these numerous calls, be made available to the Department of National Defence. To date, she has refused to produce them.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question for Question Period. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys.

TRANSPORT

TRANSPORT ROUTE CANADA—TRUCKERS' FUND

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. CN Route before being privatized deducted $1,000 per truck from each trucker as a security hold-back. When the Company was privatized this fund was turned over to Transport Route Canada. It was a fund amounting to about $200,000. This fund has completely disappeared along with other moneys that have been put into it.

Why would the Government, a Government headed by Canada's most famous ex-trucker, turn over the truckers' own money to somebody else without at least getting the proper security to make sure that that money would be there for the truckers?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): I always give great care to the questions put by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys, Mr. Speaker. I will see that query is passed on immediately to the Minister of Transport.

INSURANCE FUND QUERY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, this $200,000 is now lost to the truckers. It is their own money. Not only that, but the truckers have been paying 4.8 cents a mile toward an insurance fund. That insurance fund of hundreds of thousands of dollars is no longer there. Truckers with claims, some of them over $100,000, do not have the fund to draw from.

Why is this Government which created this mess refusing to help these truckers? They are innocent parties in the Government's messing of this whole situation.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do understand the concerns that have been raised by the Hon. Member. As I said, I will see that these are relayed immediately to the Minister of Transport and the Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Speaker: I will come to Hon. Members in just a moment for the usual Thursday afternoon question, but I have an announcement I must make first.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Government House Leader. This being Thursday afternoon, I am asking him the customary question about the business the Government intends to call over the next ensuing time period. I am sure that we are all very interested in his answer.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that this afternoon we will commence, and hopefully complete, the report and third reading stages of Bill C-152, the Heritage Languages Institute Bill. If time permits following the deliberations on that Bill, we will then resume second reading debate on Bill C-140, the bank services charges Bill that was commenced during this morning's sitting. We would continue that tomorrow, perhaps. We hope there will be no further filibuster from the Opposition on this important Bill.

On Friday, we will go to second reading debate on Bill C-149, the postal services review board. On Monday, we will resume debate on Bill C-149, followed by second reading of Bill C-128, the Bill for the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. Perhaps Monday afternoon we will have a House Leaders' meeting to discuss the balance of the week.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I also ask the Hon. Minister when he is going to proceed with a Bill to amend the Canada Elections Act and other Acts in relation thereto.

This Bill was introduced and read a first time on June 30, 1987. It was debated only one day, March 16, 1988. It was sent to a committee and you, Sir, gave me the honour of being chairman of that committee, for which I thank you very much, but it so happens that I only thank you for being the chairman of a committee that does not sit because we have not yet finished studying that Bill in the House of Commons. It is a very important piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

I think it is one of the most important pieces of legislation which would update the Elections Act and which includes major amendments concerning the way we operate under the Elections Act.

[English]

May I therefore ask the Hon. Minister whether he has any good news for us on this very important matter. I am anxious to get working on the Bill.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, I thought that we would be dealing with election expenses on a more practical basis next week. We would like to proceed with this Bill, but it is being held up by the proposed Liberal amendment which takes care of the pledges of campaign refunds to candidates and the ability to assign them to banks.

• (1510)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Deputy Government House Leader did not answer any questions with regard to future House business. I was wondering if perhaps that question could be redirected to the Acting House Leader of the New Democratic Party who could explain what the House will be doing in December.

Mr. Speaker: That may have gone over some people's heads, but not everyone's.

CANADIAN HERITAGE LANGUAGES INSTITUTE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-152, An Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: I have a ruling to render regarding Bill C-152, an Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute. There are six notices of motion in amendment on the notice paper for the report stage of Bill C-152, an Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute. I am prepared to rule on those motions.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 are in order. They will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 5 and 6 deal with reports by the Minister. They will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

[Translation]

I will now call Motion No. 1 in the name of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

[English]

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis is moving the motion. I understand there is unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis) (for Mr. Marchi) moved:

Motion no. 1

That Bill C-152 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 3 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"retention and use of languages, including native and aboriginal languages, other than".

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am extremely grateful to my colleague who, I think, will speak after me . . .

[English]

He will be following but will allow me to say a few words on this Motion No. 1.

It is a very plain, simple motion, and I would very much appreciate it if the Minister would reconsider and accept the amendment. We could do it here. The rules are flexible. After listening to the few remarks I would like to make and the remarks of my hon. colleague who put this amendment, if the Minister sees fit, perhaps we will not have to vote and the Minister would gladly accept this amendment.

Why do we ask to put in the purpose of Bill C-152, an Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute, the words "native and aboriginal languages"? The Minister knows how strongly I feel about these matters. It all goes back to what Canada is all about. Long before my esteemed colleague from Toronto who put the motion came to this country, and this is the history of Canada, the ancestors of the Hon. Minister were probably in this country, and long before the Hon. Minister's ancestors were in this country, my ancestors were in this country, in the 1600s.

It is all very well to talk about the two founding races, the two official languages, but I have always made sure to remind Canadians that long before my French ancestors came to this land, there were people living in this land. These people were the native people. Why would it not be possible, I kindly ask the Minister, to make an addition to the Bill to recognize in concrete terms the contribution of these people, to make them a little different, to give them something more than all the rest? After all, as I said, this was the harmonious development of our country.

There were in Canada aboriginal people and natives. Then my ancestors came to this country in the 1600s. They did not discover this land. "Discover" is a word that I do not like very much. It is like discovering something. They happened to come to a place that was in existence where there was already an organized society. They took the land and later on, though we do not need to explain the history of Canada, the British came by and fought with the French in the St. Lawrence River and everywhere else in that part of Canada and they took the land. They made it a British colony and then gradually it became semi-autonomous and then autonomous.

Then we had the Canadian flag. On February 15, 1965, we proclaimed the flag. Then we had a national anthem. O Canada became the national anthem. I was a member of the committee which studied that. We told the House, under Mr. Pearson, that O Canada should be the national anthem and it was only proclaimed on July 1, 1980, event though les Canadiens français, which I say because there is no translation for that, had been singing it since July 1880. It took 100 years before we got together in Canada to proclaim it.

All that, in a nutshell, explains the harmonious development of our country, the harmonious constitutional development of our country with repatriation of the Constitution under Mr. Trudeau and with the Charter of Human Rights under Mr. Trudeau, incomplete as it may be, not to start a debate with Meech Lake.

I say to the Minister, why not? He is an honourable person. I have known him for quite some time now in Montreal. What would this amendment do? It would make people happy. It would make people feel that they are recognized.

We should never hesitate in this country. Every day, every week, every month, every year, we should not hesitate to recognize that long before all of us, you, Mr. Speaker, the Minister, I and my esteemed colleague from York West who put this motion, were here in Canada, there were some people here and they were the native people and the aboriginal people.

Will this motion be abusing anything? No. I checked very carefully to see if there was a good reason not to accept this. The Minister is now a full Minister. He does not need to consult with Cabinet. He is well respected. The Minister could say: "On second thought, it makes sense, it does not take anything away from the Bill". We are not trying to lower the standards of the Minister's Bill, we are just trying to add something. Is that not really the spirit of the McGrath reform? I have been here close to 25 years. I am not one who disagrees because we have to disagree. I have my own style, my own approach, to the political process. But if there is to be a true spirit of the McGrath report . . .

• (1520)

. . . if the parliamentary reform that was advocated by a highly esteemed Member of the House, Mr. McGrath . . .

[English]

. . . who is now the Lieutenant Governor. If the McGrath report on the reform of the parliamentary system is to mean something, would it not be a good example to accept this amendment?

[Translation]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For fear of being accused of saying somewhat surprising things only in English, I must also . . . for men and women of Canada, of Quebec . . . because I know Quebecers. I am one of them. I am a Quebecer. And I know that Quebecers who are, as we say, of old stock . . . right now, nobody knows what collective name to give us. The Minister is also a Quebecer, as the Speaker is.

I say Quebec men and women know very well the history of Canada. They know their ancestors came here, to a country already inhabited by people, Indians, Eskimos. There were people living on this land. The land was not created out of nothing, uninhabited. It had its first citizens. The best way to achieve what I call social peace, harmony in a good society is to make sure everyone feels comfortable in this country, in this province or part of the country, knowing he is recognized. People want their dignity. That is true everywhere, in all parts of the world. People want to have their dignity recognized.

Well, if the Minister accepted this well-thought-out amendment which is not a controversial one, we would not have to vote on it!

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I leave the matter in the hands of the Minister.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I and all members of the New Democratic Party support the idea and proposal that there be established a Canadian Heritage Languages Institute. It is not surprising we do that. I was born in Canada but both my parents came here as immigrants from eastern Europe. They came because they thought, and they were correct in their thinking, that Canada would be a good country for them, for their children and for their grandchildren. They realized that in the part of Canada to which they immigrated, English was the language of business and English was the language spoken in most homes. They accepted that and learned to speak the English language.

They believed, and I think history has proven them to be correct, that they could be better Canadians if they helped to maintain and foster the language they brought with them. I have some knowledge of the culture and history of their ethnic group. They were right, as are all the one-third of Canadians who are neither of Anglosaxon or French origin who believe, and have believed, and have at least verbal acceptance of their belief, in the desirability of fostering and supporting the language, culture and history they brought with them. That was first accepted when the Bilingualism and Biculturalism Commission brought down its report and particularly when Dr. Rudnyckyj, of the City of Winnipeg, who was one of the members, added to that report his own recommendation that favourable consideration be given by Governments to support the language and culture of the one-third of Canadians who are neither Anglosaxon nor of French origin.

That concept was not always accepted by the majority of people in Canada. In my Province of Manitoba there came a time when a directive came down from the Government of Manitoba to the Department of Education that it was not only improper but illegal to conduct classes in our schools in the French language. There was a time when a similar dictate came down in reference to the teaching in the schools of the Ukrainian language. I am happy to say that that view has long ago disappeared in the Province of Manitoba.

In my city it is now possible, if parents wish, for students to have one-half of the curriculum taught in English and the other half taught in one of three different languages, German, Hebrew or Ukrainian. There is a very extensive program for fostering and supporting heritage languages after the regular school hours. Students have the opportunity to be educated in 12 or 14 different languages, depending on the ethnic group from which they come. I think that is a tremendous achievement and one which could be well matched by other provinces. We support in principle the establishment of this Heritage Languages Institute.

But I must say I am shocked and amazed that the Minister for Multiculturalism (Mr. Weiner) would not accept the amendment contained in Motion No. 1. Who has more right to have their language recognized and supported than the native people of this country? With the exception of one or two Members of Parliament and perhaps one or two Members of the Senate, the rest of us are either immigrants or the sons, daughters or grandsons or granddaughters of people who came here as immigrants. So while this institute will foster the knowledge of all the languages of people who have come to this country over the last 100 years or so, the Government is not prepared to accept an amendment which would include the languages spoken by our native communities.

I find that very strange. First, I think it is unfair. Second, I consider it to be completely unrealistic. Does the Government not know what is going on in many cities in this country? Does the Government not realize that in cities like Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, probably Edmonton, and Vancouver, there is a flood of native people, including many young people, moving into the core areas of these cities? I have not been able to get a number which is accepted by Statistic Canada or by other federal or provincial government Departments, but it has been estimated that the native population in the City of Winnipeg is somewhere between 20,000 and 50,000 people. One need only drive around Winnipeg any day of the week to see how the areas in which they live in Winnipeg have gradually extended geographically. I am sure the same is true in the other cities I have mentioned, and maybe others as well.

One need only talk to teachers in the City of Winnipeg, or in some other towns in Manitoba, to get a horrifying picture of what is happening. There are native students who move in and out of the city and in and out of the schools. A native student in elementary grades can attend anywhere from eight to ten schools in one year.

The native people of this country need all the support they can get. They have been mistreated ever since the white man came to this country. It is going to take generations to right the wrongs which have been created. The problems are accelerating in our schools, in our welfare system, and in our jails and penitentiaries. The number of natives involved in all of these is growing at an increasingly escalating rate. We need to deal with these problems. One of the small ways in which we could deal with the problem is by including native people as one of the groups that can get direct help and benefit from this new institute.

I appeal to the Minister. Will he not be realistic? Will he not accept the fact that this Bill is not cast in stone the way it is at this time? It is not perfect. Will he not at least give serious consideration to a proposed amendment which makes sense and which would help improve the lot, not only of this institute but of the people who have been excluded from deriving benefits from this institute as the Bill is drafted at the present time?

[Translation]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank once again my colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who has a lot of experience in his riding, in the country, with minority and multicultural groups, and with this program. I am grateful to him for having started the report stage debate while I was busy on some other business.

[English]

It is with pleasure that I participate at report stage because it is important. It is important because it gives us an opportunity, as Members of Parliament in the House of Commons, at perhaps the eleventh hour, to ask the Government to consider a number of changes that would not diminish the Bill in stature, substance, delivery, or nuance, but would in fact strengthen, enrich, and improve a Bill which at some point in time will become the law of this country. While the principle of this legislation is certainly one that needs to be supported from all sides of this House, this piece of legislation has various gaps and holes that could be corrected in this place.

It is also important because of the way this Bill was treated. Notwithstanding the fact that there is, in principle, agreement from all sides on this Bill, at the first organizing meeting of the legislative committee, which is normally intended to sketch out the business agenda for the committee vis-à-vis the Bill, the Government tried to proceed into a clause by clause deliberation.

The Government wanted to get this Bill back in the House and approved without giving the public the assurance that the policy of multiculturalism that we embrace, federally speaking, as a Parliament, is going to be lived out on the streets of this country day in and day out. I find it offensive that the government Members pushed this Bill from start to finish during the course of that one day proceeding. I find it offensive that government Members embrace the theory that they know it all, that they know what changes should be made, that they do not have to go to the public or to another meeting. That is simply not good enough.

The fact is that at those very deliberations government Members said that the reason we could not go to the public to get their input is because we were going to run out of time because of the impending national election campaign. That may have more to do with this Bill than the words that have been uttered up to now. That is offensive because it speaks of doing the right thing for the wrong reason. I take offence to that kind of tactic.

The Minister is present and I commend him for that. He said at his appearance before the committee that he is prepared to consult and co-operate with Canadians. We then proceeded to the shambles that we witnessed. I am hopeful that the Minister will take under serious consideration the changes that we are asking him and his Government to make.

The first motion, as was elaborated on by a number of colleagues before me, is very straightforward and very simple. When we talk about the Heritage Languages Institute I want to be very precise and very open. Therefore, in Motion No. 1, I include the words "native and aboriginal languages" because nowhere in the Bill does it suggest or state that our aboriginal languages are going to be included as heritage languages for the purpose of this Bill.

The impression is left that the two official languages, which get support from other programs and other Departments, are not included but there is a grey area with respect to the aboriginal languages which belong to our aboriginal peoples. The aboriginal people wish to be reassured that their languages, too, may be considered as heritage languages for the purpose of this Bill, that those languages, too, may receive the support that we are prepared, through this Bill, through this institute, to grant to other languages.

The Minister might say that he does not have to put it in the Bill to support native languages. While that may be true, the other side of the argument can also be easily put forward, that is how do you hurt the Bill by being as specific as you can?

In various journals it is not clearly understood whether heritage languages does or does not include our aboriginal languages. For example, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, the leading national umbrella group, if you will, of the various cultural communities across this country, put out a document in March of 1988 entitled "The Other Canadian Languages; A Report on the Status of Heritage Languages Across Canada". It was very interesting to note that on page 4 of this report submitted to Members of Parliament it said:

> Heritage Languages in Canada are generally considered to be those languages other than the Official Languages and Aboriginal Languages which have their origins the world over.

In the Canadian Ethnocultural Council's report of March, 1988, they are essentially concluding that when we speak of heritage languages in this country we are not referring to either English or French and the aboriginal languages. It was with this intention that I put forward Motion No. 1. It would amend Clause 4, which now states that the purpose of the institute is to facilitate throughout Canada the acquisition, retention and use of languages other than the official languages of Canada. My motion would change the clause to read: "—the acquisition, retention and use of languages, including native and aboriginal languages—".

I raised this issue in the little time that we had at the first and only meeting of the committee following the organizational meeting. There was then a subsequent meeting of the committee which studied the Bill clause by clause. I raised it at a time when the Minister was present. I believe he took in the various arguments that were put forward.

He informed the committee after other thoughts and testimony was outlined that he would somehow take the matter back to his government shop in order to take a serious look at it. I am hoping that the Minister will respond to this one amendment which would clearly not abrogate the intention of the Bill. It would not weaken it. I think it is a small and minimum price to pay to reassure our native communities that the languages which they speak other than our official languages will for the purpose of definition be included in the Bill which will set up the heritage languages institute.

Native groups did not have a chance to come before the committee, as would have been their legitimate right, to make the point themselves because the Government saw fit to rush the Bill back into the House in somewhat of an unprecedented move as far as other Bills are concerned. Because of those reasons and the arguments that we have put forward, I am hopeful that the Minister will see fit to make this very slight yet important amendment to the Bill. In this way it will be a much more healthy Bill. It will eliminate the questions with respect to whether or not aboriginal languages are in or outside the legislation. I look forward to a response by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed that the Minister did not stand up to respond to the very pointed and good questions of the Hon. Member as to why aboriginal and native languages are not included by way of direct reference in this legislation. I saw that the Minister was hinting that he might get up. I hope he intends to get up to say that he will include such a provision. I hope that that is his intention. I must say that while it is against the rules of the House to mention the presence or absence of particular Members, I am glad that the Minister is here in order to hear this debate today.

I think this is a matter upon which he can move to make changes now. I am sorry I do not have unlimited time in which to speak. If I did I would stay on my feet until the Minister made the change. It is a simple and ordinary change. It is abysmal, shameful and dreadful that this legislation on heritage languages should have been dealt with before the committee to the exclusion of aboriginal people. There was no opportunity for groups to say how they felt about it. I am sure that was as a result of inadvertence on the part of the Government. It was because of the headlong rush toward an election that this happened. However, the Minister can still correct the oversight.

I must say that I am glad as an aboriginal person, as a native person, that I have the opportunity to express my point of view with regard to this matter. It is shameful that the elected representatives of aboriginal people across the country did not have a chance to comment on the Bill. I want to comment briefly on it since I have but a little bit of time here.

The legislation simply states that the purpose of the institute is to facilitate throughout Canada the acquisition, retention and use of languages other than the official languages of Canada that contribute to the country's multicultural heritage.

I must say that we are all Canadians. There is only one Canada. It is because we are confident in our citizenship that we are able to tolerate the cultural differences that exist in our country and, in fact, that we are able to celebrate them. Therefore we are able to recognize as this Bill does that multicultural heritage. We can also recognize the official languages. But this Bill fails to recognize the existence of aboriginal people in Canada. That is what the amendment seeks to change. The amendment seeks to include in the wording of the clause the words "native and aboriginal languages".

The fundamental point is that the legislation here is going to create an institute that will make resources available for the preservation of languages. That is important. It is important that aboriginal people have a part of those resources. But it is not enough to be able to stand up and say: "Okay, under this legislation we could make the money available anyway".

Why do half a job? Why have half a loaf when a specific reference can be made? Aboriginal people do not fit under official languages. Cree is not an official language of Canada. It does not fit there. Aboriginal languages do not fit under multicultural heritage. Native people are aboriginal people. They are the first people of this land. They do not fit under an ethnic group. They do not fit under multicultural.

The Bill should be drafted so as to fit the social, the political and economic reality of the country. It can be done. It will not hurt to accept the amendment which my colleague has put before the House. The Government should agree to the amendment. The Bill will be the better for it. There may be other amendments on which the Minister might want to reflect more in depth before he accepts them, or perhaps he might feel that they would have to go to committee for study. Perhaps that will be the case. However, this amendment is a simple one. What it does is recognize the reality of Canada. It recognizes the fact that aboriginal people are a part of the country. At the same time that official languages are recognized multicultural heritage is recognized. What is unacceptable is recognizing the multicultural nature of the country and the official languages of the country while ignoring the aboriginal people.

Mr. Minister, the time for that is gone. The time in which aboriginal people will silently be ignored is passed. I must conclude that the Bill came before the House in this form out of a sense of haste because of the results of the polls that came out this morning. The Reid poll indicates that the Conservatives are ahead and that the NDP are hot on their tail with the Liberals lagging behind. Of course, the Reid poll tends to favour the Conservative Party I must say more than does the Gallup poll. Given the results of that poll, the Conservatives are in a big rush to go to an election and in so rushing forget to do a decent job on legislation.

Let us slow down. Let us take a deep breath. Read the amendment and accept it.

The Government should listen to groups and reflect upon the reality of the country. The time is long past when native people will accept half measures. It is time to recognize that aboriginal people and native people are a legitimate and fundamental part of the country. Just saying that they can be fitted in under the umbrella of multicultural heritage is not going to be well received in native communities across the country. Native people are aboriginal people. They certainly do not fit under official languages.

I ask the Minister to accept the amendment rather than trying to skate around with some sort of explanation.

Mr. Orlikow: He has no explanation.

Mr. Keeper: My colleague says that he has no explanation. I give the Minister the benefit of the doubt. I assume that he will get up and respond to the comments that have been made by Members on this side of the House. I hope his response will be adequate to the situation. I hope that he takes the initiative in his own hands and says: "Yes, this makes a great deal of sense". If we are going to preserve languages in this country, then we ought to preserve not only the languages of multicultural groups, Polish, Ukrainian, Portuguese, Filipino, et cetera. They are legitimate. Not only should we preserve the languages of the French and of the English but we ought to preserve and promote the languages of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. I ask the Minister to rise to the challenge, to indicate that he is accepting this amendment and that he is going to do a full job rather than half the job.

• (1550)

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I find the motion unnecessary.

Mr. Keeper: Insensitive.

Mr. Weiner: The preamble does not exclude native and aboriginal languages.

Mr. Keeper: It does not include them either.

Mr. Weiner: Just to remind the Member, it reads:

> 4. The purpose of the Institute is to facilitate throughout Canada the acquisition, retention and use of languages, other than the official languages of Canada, . . .

The only languages, therefore, that are excluded are the official languages.

Some Members may have missed the point, but clearly, it is within the parameter of this very important heritage languages institute to make sure that there is a sharing of the knowledge and the expertise and the experience, and all that would take place under this Canadian Heritage Languages Institute.

Mr. Keeper: Why are you afraid to mention aboriginal people?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. The recorded division stands deferred.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 2, which will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West) moved:

Motion No. 2

> That Bill C-152 be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 28 at page 2 the following:
> "(i) to encourage participation in the federal Public Service of Canada, embassies and trade missions abroad, of those possessing knowledge of heritage languages, in order that Canada may benefit socially, politically, and economically from this knowledge."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I feel somewhat surprised by the Minister's previous response, and I think that he, in a very fundamental way, brings almost shame to what is a Bill that is supported by all sides. The House was only asking for an insignificant change in terms of three words that would have a very symbolic impact on aboriginal communities. Rather than simply talking about the problem, we in one small way could have done something about solving that kind of perception that is out there and the attitudes that are fueled.

I move, with the same sense of hope and importance, Motion No. 2 to this Bill. It comes from a sense that I have that the Government is risking and is only satisfied in having one heritage language or one community speaking to another. That is to say, if the Greek Canadian community from Winnipeg, through this institute, can speak to the Greek Canadian community of Montreal, then that is beneficial, but the Government seems to be simply prepared to stop there.

I have a different view of heritage languages, one that goes beyond simply having one community speaking to another, that goes beyond simply having individual Canadians of various persuasion being fluent in more than simply our official languages as a benefit to them, not only culturally but as a benefit to them economically and socially. The dynamic view of our heritage languages lies not only in a heritage languages institute that promotes those languages, but in a government that is prepared to embrace heritage languages as a national vehicle and as a national tool.

That is why I proposed in Motion No. 2 to include in the purpose of the Bill, on page 2, to clearly delineate that as a Government and as a Parliament we are prepared to utilize heritage languages on behalf of Canada, not only in our federal civil service, so that we can communicate and link many communities that now feel somewhat alienated from the federal Government and from Ottawa, but that we also include those individuals who are competent, professional and knowledgeable in their areas of expertise, and also possess a second or third or sometimes fourth or fifth language. We should include those individuals on our trade missions and in our embassies abroad so that those Canadians, on behalf of Canada, can begin to open doors that thus far have remained locked because of cultural barriers or because of linguistic barriers.

I am not suggesting that if you happen to be unilingual English or French you should not be serving on our trade missions, or in our embassies abroad, and in our federal Government. I am not suggesting that at all, and I want to be very clear about that. At the same time, it seems to me that we are not embracing the richness that is part of our country, the richness in languages and cultures that is fairly unique compared to some other countries, that we are not embracing these resources, because that is what they are—they are linguistic resources—and put them to the use of Canada, not of one particular cultural community, but to the benefit of our country abroad, whether it is through trade missions or through its embassies abroad.

It would therefore seem to be logical that if we had a Canadian of Japanese ancestry who spoke and was fluent in Japanese, who obviously understood and was aware of the Japanese culture, then that person, given the competence, would be able to advance the cause of Canada in Japan probably more effectively.

Therefore, I ask the House, would not Canada be richer for that? Would not Canada be enhanced on the international stage? Would not Canada be able to go back to this richness like no other country can, or very few in fact can? Is that not an advantage in the international community, where the competition is fierce, where people are competing for the various ears of various foreign Governments, whether it is for trade for our Canadian firms, whether it is to get an advantage for our firms into that country, whether it is to link much better communication between one country and the next, to perhaps encourage those countries to invest their resources and their know-how in Canada?

It has to do, in large measure, with communicating. Go into the international community which has obviously become the global village that a famous Canadian spoke of. It is in communication, it is being able to communicate what Canada is, it is being able to communicate with those international partners abroad, to enhance whether it is trade or whether it is a certain policy or whether it is to enhance the investment in this country or the travel into this country.

That is why I am seeking the support of the Minister and of the Government to rise beyond simply having a number of heritage languages retained in Canada. As important as that option is, it is equally important, and certainly more in keeping with the dynamism that we have to come up with in the 1990s across the world, if we could harness that linguistic and cultural resource in Canada and put it to work for Canada, in our federal Government, in our federal trade missions, and in our federal embassies across the globe.

How many times have we run into individuals who have said: "I am surprised that you do not do that as much as you can and as much as you should"? How many times do we run into constituents, or even ambassadors at various functions who represent other countries in this capital, who tell us that we are missing a golden opportunity? We in fact are. The reasons are not to derail the purposes of this Bill, or to suggest that it is not important to have the retention of various cultural languages.

• (1600)

Languages open doors for everyone. A young person coming out of university possessing a second or third language, all things being equal in marks, will be further ahead than an individual who does not possess those languages. We have a tremendous hang-up with our language issue, not only official languages, but other languages. Sometimes when one runs into young children abroad who, in addition to studying the literature of their own language, are studying English, French, and German, it gives one an indication that those youngsters will possess skills that will make their candidacy for a job or a placement much more advantageous than an individual who learns only one language. There is nothing wrong with that. However, think of the potential for encouraging our youngsters to learn and be as fluent as possible in one or more languages.

We have that resource and we are not putting it to good enough use for Canada on the international stage. That is why I proposed Motion No. 2, which would simply add another paragraph to the purposes outlined at page 2, line 28, which are many, but which would include one section that reads:

> "(i) to encourage participation in the federal Public Service of Canada, embassies and trade missions abroad, of those possessing knowledge of heritage languages, in order that Canada may benefit socially, politically, and economically from this knowledge".

I believe that, and it is in keeping with the intent of the Bill. It is in keeping with the advantage that we can possess as a country. It would seem to me to be a logical course to follow to facilitate that communication and gain an advantage on a very competitive world stage for our country and for our people.

I look forward to receiving the support of my colleagues in the House, particularly those on the other side.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words about this amendment, which I support. While there is a growing understanding among more Canadians that there is a tremendous value to the country, and not only to the people who are able to speak more than one language, it is still not accepted by many people, and unfortunately by many people who are in a position to make decisions and implement policies, if they are accepted.

Recently I spoke with some people in my constituency. The husband is German and the wife is Ukrainian. Their very young children are growing up speaking three languages; the two languages that are spoken at home, and the language which is spoken on the street and in their schools. Those children will have a tremendous advantage over other Canadians, and will be able to make a very important contribution, if we only permit it.

My colleague from Thunder Bay, who has spent a great deal of time on this Bill and on all questions relating to multiculturalism, has pointed out to some of us that there are now 70 languages spoken in this country, not counting many of the dialects.

I am sure I am not alone in my experience that, when I am in my office on Saturday morning, it is usually the case that more than half of the people who come to me because they need some advice or assistance, come with immigration problems. They have relatives or friends in the country from which they came who they want to help and encourage to come to Canada.

If that is the situation I face, I ask Members and the Minister to think about the situation and problems faced every day, and perhaps many times a day, by people who work in the Department of Employment and Immigration, to mention only one Department. Many of the people who come for help either cannot speak or certainly are not fluent or comfortable in speaking either official language of Canada.

Would it not be helpful to them, to the Department, and to the country if we could encourage, to a much larger extent than we already have, the employment of people in those Departments who are able to talk to, understand, and communicate with people who come in because they have a problem and need assistance?

Of course, in any Department we cannot have people who are able to converse in all of the 70 languages. I have talked about the situation of government Departments, agencies, and Crown corporations in Canada. My friend, the spokesperson for the Liberal Party, made the same point in reference to our embassies, consulate offices, and trade offices in other countries, particularly in countries where the language spoken is not either English or French.

Would it not be helpful for us, and facilitate achieving the goals held by that particular office, whether it is to increase the flow of immigrants, or to increase trade between that country and Canada, if, on the staff of those offices, there were people who could speak one or more of the other languages which people in this country speak?

It seems to me that this is a very sensible amendment. I support it, and I urge the Minister to give some serious, non-partisan, non-political consideration to this proposal. If he does, I think he would agree that this amendment is one which could well become part of the Bill.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, we find this motion unnecessary. The Minister is already authorized to do so in the Multiculturalism Act, Section 3(2)(e) and 4. To refresh the memories of Hon. Members who are rejoicing in the passage of this the first Multiculturalism Act of its kind in the world, it states:

> 3.(1) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government of Canada to
> (2)(e) make use, as appropriate, of the language skills and cultural understanding of individuals of all origins;

Under the section entitled "Implementation of the Multiculturalism Policy of Canada", Section 4 states:

> The Minister, in consultation with other Ministers of the Crown, shall encourage and promote a coordinated approach to the implementation of the multiculturalism policy of Canada and may provide advice and assistance in the development and implementation of programs and practices in support of the policy.

Therefore, we say no to this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A recorded division on the motion will stand deferred.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-152, an Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is Motion No. 3 which will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-152 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 35 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall be in the City of Edmonton. The board may establish and maintain other offices in other centres as the need arises."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is my third time at bat and hopefully we will get a hit, although it is a small hope.

This motion is intended to build upon establishment of the institute in Edmonton, Alberta. Let me say at the outset that I welcome the establishment of the institute in that city and province. We as a Parliament talk about a multicultural policy and here we have occasion to establish a heritage languages institute. We are placing it outside the perhaps typical Toronto-Montreal-Vancouver axis, an axis which exists not only because of the importance of those dynamic centres, but because of the number of people of different cultural heritages who reside there. However, I think it is a healthy and positive move to locate a centre of this magnitude in Edmonton.

The city of Edmonton and the province of Alberta have played a very strong leadership role in the promotion of heritage languages. Alberta was the first province to pass heritage language legislation as part and parcel of the school curriculum. It was not an after school or Saturday program, it was part of the curriculum and it involved a number of core subjects being taught in the various heritage languages. Therefore it is only fitting and appropriate that it be located there.

The NDP critic for multiculturalism was quick to question whether Edmonton would be able to fulfil the national task of instituting this policy across Canada. I was surprised to hear that because he is a fine gentleman and has been a fine supporter of multiculturalism over the last four years. I was somewhat surprised that he took an unfair shot at Edmonton and whether it can fulfil the obligations contained in this Bill.

The motion simply allows the board to establish and maintain other offices in other centres as the need arises. The reason I moved it is because the impetus for this Bill came from a study and report prepared by Professor Reisel and Professor Batts. In their study they envisaged a heritage language institute only for western Canada. While many of their recommendations were embodied in this legislation, the Government changed the mandate to include the entire country. Therefore, the feeling is that we should not restrict ourselves to only one location, the city of Edmonton, but that we be flexible. While Edmonton will be the major location, there may be secondary or satellite operations that are necessary to discharge the national function.

It is for that reason and that reason alone I thought it would be appropriate to move this amendment. I know the Minister might get up and say this Bill does not restrict us or the board from adding another centre. While that is true, I do not know why he is not prepared to allow this if the need arises. I am not saying open up an office when an office is not needed. I do not believe in that kind of symbolism without substance. I believe that if a need arises, there is a clear message from Parliament to the board that another office may be opened to facilitate delivery of the program entrusted to the institute.

It was with that in mind that I raised it at the very first and only committee meeting with the Minister and his officials. It is with that in mind I raise it again today in his presence. I hope he sees fit to add those words so that if the job becomes big enough that we need a regional component, and that will come no doubt, we will have a national structure led by Edmonton which is supportive of and responsive and sensitive to those regional needs.

This is a large country. It has been kept together notwithstanding the pressure from the south. We put together a broadcasting and transportation system running east to west in an attempt to keep this large and diverse nation together. It flows from that, that if we want to enhance the national treasure of heritage languages from one community to the next, one region to another, then it is appropriate that we make this legislation flexible enough so that we can accomplish that goal. That will indicate that we are prepared to recognize the diverse regional needs of our country by setting up other heritage language institute offices in other parts of the country.

That is the intention of this motion and I invite the Minister to seriously consider this amendment. For various reasons he has seen fit to not allow Motions No. 1 and N° 2, reasons which I do not share. I repeat, these are not controversial amendments. This Bill itself is not controversial. Other Bills have been controversial and have involved, rightfully so, a philosophical clash. This is the forum for debate. If we are simply going to agree to every fancy and whim of the Government, we might as well close up shop. It is healthy to have that clash of opinions. However, that does not exist here because there is all-Party support for the direction this Bill embarks upon.

Therefore, I invite the Minister to not reject these amendments as unneeded. I believe they are needed. I believe the Bill without them would not be as strong as a Bill that would emanate from this Chamber if we could agree in that spirit to adopt these amendments, particularly given the circumstance that this Bill did not go before the public for endorsation, recommendation, modification, input and vision as do other Bills. Let us pause for a moment and try to cross the t's and dot the i's as best as we possibly can so that we do not end up with a piece of legislation that, although is positive, is flawed in a number of different areas.

I end my observations on Motion No. 3. I am hopeful that the Minister and the Government will see to those regional tendencies and the uniqueness in our country so that Edmonton can and will do a number one job but that Edmonton, if the need arises, aided by other centres in other parts of the country, will augment, enhance and strengthen its work rather than weaken or detract from it.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this amendment. Before dealing specifically with it, I want to say to the Minister and the Government that we in the New Democratic Party are appalled that despite all the protestations of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister and other Members of the Conservative Party, the report which recommended the establishment of this institute, submitted to the Government more than a year ago, has not been dealt with until now on the eve of an election.

Conservative Members of Parliament realized that they had to do something to try to counteract the mistrust that has developed from one end of Canada to the other among Canada's ethnic communities against the Conservative Party and Government. The Bill should have been brought forward much sooner. There was no reason for not bringing it forward.

When it was eventually sent to the legislative committee, we had another shameful set of experiences. Here the committee met in what was supposed to be the organizational meeting. Instead the Conservative majority on the committee rammed through decisions which meant that the organizational meeting became the meeting. The Conservative Members limited debate. They eliminated the possibility, desirability and the hope of a number of very important witnesses of appearing before the committee to make suggestions. There were experts from the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, from the University of Laval and aboriginal groups who wanted to make suggestions.

I am certain, and I can only speak for my own city and province, that many of the ethnic groups and communities would have appreciated the opportunity of appearing before the committee either in Ottawa or in the city from which they operate. They did not get that opportunity, Mr. Speaker. Instead the Conservative Members imposed a deadline for amendments but required them to be in the hands of the clerk by six o'clock the same evening of the day that was supposed to be merely an organizational meeting of the committee. That is a shameful way to act in a parliament that is supposed to be democratic. It is shameful coming from a Government led by a Prime Minister who promised that it would be a Government willing and ready to listen to opinions.

With regard to Motion No. 3, we have no objection to Edmonton remaining the principal office of the institute. We accept that. It is a good choice. But we think—and the amendment tries to spell it out—there is no reason that the institute should not have the ability, and that ability, of course, would be limited by the funding which the institute will get from the Government, to develop and have offices in other centres in the future. We see no reason why the Government could not agree to that since this Government or any government in office can, in fact, control the number of offices which the institute can have because it is the Government that decides what the budget of the institute should be. There are—and I do not have to tell the Minister—even in his City of Montreal large ethnic groups who are neither Anglo-Saxon or Francophone. That is more true in cities like Toronto and Vancouver and it is true in many cities such as Winnipeg, Edmonton and Calgary. I cannot understand why the Minister is being so obstinate in not agreeing to the most non-partisan amendments which have been brought forward.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I find the amendment unnecessary. If I refer the Member first to Clause 5(2), it reads:

> The Institute may carry on its activities throughout Canada.

That seems very clear. It will, indeed, have a board of directors who will be chosen to represent the regional interests and needs of all Canadians from coast to coast.

In addition, if I am looking at the specific article that my hon. friend would like to amend, it states:

> The principal office of the Institute shall be in the City of Edmonton.

This will be a separate corporation. It will have the ability to make all of the decisions it feels are appropriate in keeping with the needs of this great country. Nothing precludes the corporation from opening any other office which it may feel necessary. It is for that reason it states clearly:

> The principal office of the Institute shall be in the City of Edmonton.

Certainly the amendment is unnecessary.

Let me quietly comment, if I may, and say that I did not think in view of the very exciting initiatives of the last six months, which some have described as being more fruitful than anything that has taken place in the previous 15 years, that I would be accused of any kind of foot-dragging. That is what the Hon. Member seemed to say. The Hon. David Crombie went west to Edmonton last summer from what I remember and made the first announcement dealing with an institute of heritage languages and the need to preserve heritage cultures and languages. It was then that the Drs. Kreisel and Batts were commissioned to carry on a very extensive and thorough consultation and provided us with a report back in the spring. Since then we have been privileged to put through a Multiculturalism Act, unanimously approved by the House. We have announced major new initiatives with new funding, one of which was for heritage cultures and languages. Now, today, we have a Bill. I do not see how anyone can say that is foot-dragging.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on Motion No. 3?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The next motion to be debated is Motion No. 4.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West)moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-152 be amended in Clause 24 by striking out line 35 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canada and to governments of the provinces and territories".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is my fourth turn at bat, but I will not give up. I will keep going, even though my motions were not agreed to on three previous occasions. I feel that the fourth motion will be the lucky one. I have a sense that the Minister will be prepared to pass the fourth amendment. I have not won a vote yet, but I am very much looking forward to winning many, many votes after the next election campaign.

The intention of the fourth amendment is, in a very non-partisan manner and in a way that will not detract from the Bill, to correct a piece of legislation that I think has omitted a very important facet of Canada; namely, our two Canadian territories. My fourth motion would amend Clause 24 by striking out line 35 at page 8 and simply substituting "Canada and to governments of the provinces and territories".

Clause 24 refers to the provinces in the disposition of the heritage languages institute but omits reference to our two territories. I think that is a very serious omission, just as I believe that the omission of aboriginal and native languages is a very serious omission. In my first amendment, I tried to have included in the purpose of the Bill aboriginal and native languages as heritage languages. As important as it was to include those languages in this Bill, I believe it is equally important to refer not only to provinces in the Bill but also to our two Canadian territories.

For the previous multiculturalism Bill that was adopted by the House, I made the same recommendation at committee. In a number of places, the multiculturalism Bill expressed itself as working with the provinces, but left out the territories. I met with a number of groups which came before the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism at various conferences at which I have had the opportunity and honour of representing our Party. I have shared with them the vision that we would bring to this dynamic policy. They have asked me, when we discuss multiculturalism programs in committee or in the House, why it is that so often the territories get left out of the picture. We stop at federal-provincial discussions.

Of course, during the Meech Lake discussion, the territories were again very much an integral part of the debate. Certainly our Party stood for that in that debate. In fact, one of our amendments recognized the aspirations of the territories. We have to realize that there are real, live Canadians who happen to reside in the territories. Those Canadians also have aspirations as do we in other regions of the country. Our legislation, coming from a federal House, must reflect that national diversity, that national interest.

This is not a provincial House that speaks only to one regional interest. We are the national Chamber. Therefore, I think any legislation that stops at talking about federal-provincial discussions and relationships is not only inaccurate but is incomplete. It is time that our legislation be reflective of and sensitive to the aspirations of the two Canadian territories, particularly when it comes to talking about heritage languages, and particularly in the face of a Government that refused to pass my first amendment that would have ensured that heritage languages would also include our first native and aboriginal languages.

This amendment is parallel to the previous one. The Government did not want to include aboriginal languages as heritage languages. Since it refused that amendment, and I do not know why it did, I hope it will not refuse this amendment which is more in keeping with defining in a fuller context what we mean by the word "Canada". It is more of a correction to the legislation.

I am asking the Minister to look at this as an important housekeeping amendment, but one that nonetheless is very symbolic. It is very important to include rather than exclude the territories. It is important to have a fuller and broader definition of Canada rather than a more restrictive one. Therefore, the amendment only serves to note that we must include the territories in Bill C-152. I hope, having refused the first three motions because he deemed them to be unnecessary, the Minister would see the merit in adopting the fourth amendment that I have proposed to my colleagues in this Chamber.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship): Mr. Speaker, I do accept the suggestion and I am prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on Motion No. 4?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York West. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Marchi) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions Nos. 5 and 6 deal with reports by the Minister. They will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-152 be amended in Clause 27 by striking out line 16 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"third anniversary of the coming into force".

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-152 be amended in Clause 27 by striking out line 24 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"before each House of Parliament and referred to such committee of the House, of the Senate, or of both Houses of Parliament as may be designated or established for the purpose, within the".

He said: Mr. Speaker, coming off the victory of the fourth amendment, I will see if it is possible to extend that victory to Motions Nos. 5 and 6.

Motion No. 5 would have the effect of committing the Government to taking another look at the heritage languages legislation after three years instead of after four. The Bill proposes that at the end of the fourth year, the Minister and the Government would take a close look to see how the heritage languages institute is functioning, how the directives are coming forward and how the results are being received by Canadians. That review is very valuable so that we as a Parliament may ensure that the legislation is being guided in a way that is legitimate and in keeping with the views of Canadians.

I propose, and I discussed this very briefly at our first organizational meeting, that we might want to do that review, particularly since it will be of a new institute, sooner rather than later. I think it might serve a very useful purpose if a new piece of legislation were to be reviewed in some detail and depth using some care after three years as opposed to four.

I think that a sooner review by the Minister, by committee and by Parliament would certainly be advantageous to the board of directors and the staff of the heritage languages institute. I am not sure how the Government devised the fourth year. Perhaps they envisaged four years in terms of the natural life span of a Government, or the four years was a compromise cut off between three years and five years. I am not sure whether there was any scientific equation to come up with year number four. However, having discussed this matter with a number of individuals since the Bill was introduced, I found it was their preference to go sooner rather than later in terms of a parliamentary review of the legislation. If in fact there were obstacles to overcome, barriers to be hurdled, we might be able to catch those kinds of problems earlier as opposed to allowing the institute to continue and then having to correct those mistakes later in the fourth year. That is in essence one of the amendments we are now debating in tandem, namely, amendment No. 5.

Amendment No. 6 speaks to the accountability of Parliament. When the Bill was first introduced, the Minister and the Government inserted a provision that the institute would have to make a yearly annual report directly to the Minister. While that reporting and accountability is useful, I believe the usefulness is short-lived if that reporting is only going to be done to the Minister.

If the report contains some non-productive results or perhaps some embarrassing information, it is very obvious that any Minister of any stripe will keep that information to himself or herself. Therefore, at the committee level I made the recommendation to the Minister that he do two things; first, make that report to Parliament so that the accountability serves not only the Minister but all Members of Parliament, and through them, all Canadians. The information in the yearly report will not then be for the sole information of one Minister and one Government, but will be shared.

The example I used at the committee hearing was the Official Languages Commission. It reports annually on the policy of bilingualism not to the Minister, not necessarily to the Government, but to this Chamber, to Parliament, and through Parliament to Canadians. Therefore, when the Commission speaks it speaks to the entire institution of Parliament. I believe that the heritage languages institute should borrow a page from the bilingualism book and report directly through Parliament to Canadians and to the country.

The Minister, I notice, has amended his earlier version of the Bill to endorse those thoughts that I made known to him some days ago. In addition, my original amendment suggests that we refer, as an automatic right, that report to the appropriate standing committee of either the House of Commons or the Senate, for its information. It is a slight nuance. Nonetheless, I recommended that it be reported to Parliament and, second, that it be referred to the various and appropriate committees of either the Senate or House of Commons. It is a good course of action because it ensures that the work done by the staff and board of directors is simply not going to be done in some kind of vacuum. Those results will in fact be meaningful and will be shared and built upon by members in this Chamber and members of the standing committee where the bulk of the legislative work and initiative gets done.

We have an institute that is working out there on behalf of our multiculturalism policy and the policy of a strong and vibrant program of heritage languages, and I think it is important that its work be rooted in this Chamber and perhaps, more importantly, through our committee system. I moved amendment No. 6 to ensure that those reports are made available to Parliament and to Members, and through Members to Canadians, rather than simply depositing the report with the Minister who will then decide whether to release it publicly or refer it to our standing committees. We in those committees should be aware of the work of that institute. Because of its findings we can invite those particular individuals to our committees, or perhaps institute some work that would augment, in partnership, the heritage languages Bill, and the spirit and work contained within this Bill.

That is essentially amendment No. 6. Again, amendment No. 5 is simply to have the threshold level for review to be the third year as opposed to the fourth year. I hope that in the spirit of the earlier amendments I proposed, perhaps in the spirit of the Minister's acceptance of Motion No. 4, he would acquiesce and accept that a review in the third year is much more valuable than a review in the fourth year. More important, perhaps, accountability should be done through Parliament and through our committee system as opposed to an individual Minister of the Government of the day. I look forward to hearing the Minister's comments on these two amendments.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on Motions Nos. 5 and 6. I am very pleased to see the Government did agree to accept Motion No. 4. It is a very important point, one which was too much overlooked. I am pleased to see the Government will benefit from the advice of Opposition critics. I hope it will see the light on these two motions as well.

Motion No. 5 is not an earth shattering kind of motion. It is a very modest one. For that reason I think the Government ought to accept it. It is simply very reasonable. What it would do is alter the timeframe, shorten by one year, the report by the Minister on the institute's activities and organization to three years after coming into force instead of four years. I feel that three years is a reasonable period of time to see how the institute is going, and I feel it would be more useful. We have two opposition Parties supporting this motion and I hope the Government will go along with it.

Motion No. 6 is, I think, a more important motion because it is one that will really have more of an impact. The idea is to get more public discussion and input. This is clearly a matter in which there is a great deal of public interest. Let us benefit from that public interest by ensuring that organizations and individuals concerned with the issue of heritage languages and the work of the institute are able to have input at the appropriate time.

Motion No. 6 would seek to extend the reporting processes of the Minister to include review by committee, hence increasing the likelihood of broader public input into the evaluation of the work and the organization of the institute. We have strong voluntary organizations in this area. We have experts. We have citizens who are concerned. It seems to me it would be very sensible to get their input into the Minister's report, that it just not be a report to the Minister and not just be something kept within the bureaucracy. We should have the kind of public input that is really suitable for this kind of issue because people really do want to be involved.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I will be voting no on both Motions Nos. 5 and 6. With respect to Motion No. 5, the yearly report of the institute would provide the House with opportunities to assess the progress of the institute. With respect to Motion No. 6, I find it unnecessary because there already is an automatic reference. Therefore, we will vote no on both motions.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the amendments we have been considering which were moved by my colleague, who has been doing a terrific job on this particular Bill, basically asks for a review after the third year as opposed to the fourth anniversary. The reason for this is that we are hoping, of course, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be calling an election this weekend. We in the Liberal Party hope that he has the guts to call an election because we believe that we are in a position to take over, to form a Government, and hopefully one that will last for a period of four years. Since we would like to be in that position for four years, we would like to see this particular legislation reviewed within that mandated period. If we stick to the Government's legislation, which basically says that it will be reviewed after four years, a whole Parliament will lose the opportunity to review how well the Bill is working.

We think that by accelerating, not very dramatically, but simply by one year, the timetable for a review, that is, from four to three years, we will confer upon the next Parliament the opportunity of reviewing this legislation. We think that is a reasonable position. We frankly cannot understand why the Minister wants to wait four years because he is basically telling the next Parliament that it will have no opportunity at all of reviewing to see where it can make improvements to make this legislation work more effectively.

In fact, if the institute is going to be able to assume the powers that have been described here in the course of the discussion this afternoon, if it is going to be able to have the impact on heritage language, education, promotion and development which I believe all three Parties have clearly stated that they would endorse, then why not give the opportunity for review to the next Parliament? Why block out a whole Parliament? Why block 290-odd Members from the opportunity of reviewing this legislation? I believe that the amendment that has been moved by my colleague, the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), which is to cut down the period for review from four to three years, would in fact accomplish that purpose.

Motion No. 6 deals with the reporting mechanism. We believe that it is really important that the institute report, not only to the Minister, which is presumably the possibility under any piece of legislation, but in fact directly to Parliament. The reason we would like to see that direct reporting is that we have seen how effective the parliamentary committee can be in reviewing, for example, the Official Languages Act. The discussions that have taken place on all sides of the House with respect to the report by Mr. D'Iberville Fortier show that a parliamentary committee in fact sometimes has the opportunity to highlight an issue more effectively than by simply reporting to the Minister.

Certainly if you have a good Minister in place the Minister may in fact act upon reports from people and organizations representing the institute for heritage languages. This is a totally new concept, a totally new institute. By giving the institute the opportunity to report to a specific parliamentary committee and by mandating that in the legislation we will truly be turning power back into the hands of parliamentarians and not simply giving the power for review of the effectiveness and possible improvements for the Canadian heritage languages institute to a single Minister.

We think that the motion to report to Parliament through the committee democratizes the process. We think the decision to review the process after three years, as opposed to four years, is going to make a real opening for the next Parliament to examine the issue of heritage languages in greater detail. In fact we think that these are both extremely reasonable and supportable amendments. We know the Minister is reasonable and supportable in relation to this issue. I do not want to get too carried away, he might want to use that in his campaign brochure and I would not want to see that happen.

Nonetheless, we think these are reasonable and supportable amendments to which I am sure my colleague, the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) would also like to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that I am maturing as I spend time in this place, but I am sure you would not confuse me with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). That reminds me of when I was in Winnipeg last week and was coming back to Ottawa. I stopped in at the airport and gave them my ticket. The clerk passed me my ticket and said, "Mr. Knowles", so I thanked him for the compliment. I hope that that is a good omen.

The legislation with which we are dealing to establish the Canadian heritage languages institute and the motions that are before us deserve the attention of this Parliament. It is too bad that more time was not spent at committee level in order to deal with this legislation. If that had been the case perhaps there would not have had to have been so many motions before us.

Motion No. 5, which in essence says that the Minister would report on the institute's activities after three years rather than after four years, makes a great deal of common sense. That certainly is not something that always characterizes this place or always characterizes amendments to legislation. This is a good amendment because, if we have the election, as I expect, called tomorrow morning . . .

Mr. Nystrom: What time?

Mr. Keeper: I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will call his press conference for ten o'clock and will put us on the road to a new Parliament. If we have the election call tomorrow and the election on November 21 we do not want the Minister reporting on these activities—even if it is a Minister of the New Democratic Party, only four years hence. The same applies to a Liberal or Conservative Minister. We want the report to come within three years so that the next Parliament will have a chance to consider the report.

Mr. Belsher: Keeper, you're smoking again.

Mr. Keeper: I've just been accused of something I am sure the Hon. Member does not mean. It is at least 12 years since I smoked a cigarette.

Ms. McDonald: Tobacco.

Mr. Keeper: I have my colleagues quickly giving me advice. They must think I am in quicksand here because they are telling me to make it clear that I meant Players and not some other brand.

Ms. McDonald: Much worse for your health.

Mr. Keeper: I have not smoked in 12 years, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am very conscious of the clock. Earlier this day there seemed to be a general predisposition that it would be a wise move on behalf of the House to get this Bill to the Senate. We do have amendments that require standing votes. On Friday this is not possible. The Senate seems to be moving rather expeditiously on certain things.

If Members would like to get this to the Senate with the possibility of Royal Assent before the week is out, government Members at least would be willing not to see the clock at this point and perhaps proceed a little longer in order to see if we could dispose of this Bill today. We could perhaps do Private Member's a little later or, alternatively, move to Private Member's Hour and come back and sit a little longer this evening.

I do not know what the will of the House is at this point, but certainly the government side of the House would be willing to make those kinds of accommodations which would enable Members to make the points they want to make and still possibly get the legislation to the Senate for Royal Assent.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nystrom: Five o'clock.

• (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather that there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and I do so as Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee for Regulatory Scrutiny.

I want to draw the attention of the House to the ninth report of the joint committee which I tabled on May 5, 1988. That report calls for the Government to table a comprehensive response by October 2. Since October 2 is a Sunday the interpretation of the rules, as I understand them, are that the response be tabled tomorrow.

I simply want to bring that to the attention of the Government and to say that the House, the country, and the Senate are looking forward to the Government's response tomorrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-15, an Act to amend the Patent Act, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

CANADA POST CORPORATION

ADVISABILITY OF AMENDING ACT

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Canada Post Corporation Act so as to make Canada Post an essential public service which would render illegal any strikes affecting postal delivery.

He said: Mr. Speaker, again I would like to pay a compliment to the whole process of parliamentary reform. It is through that process that individual Members such as myself can speak on some urgent and serious matters. This particular motion was drawn and was subsequently declared a votable motion.

The sending and receiving of mail over the years has played an important, sometimes critical, role in the lives of most Canadians. Prompt, reliable, low-cost service is essential to individuals, especially seniors, and to small and large companies.

As recently as yesterday I visited the Glynnwood Retirement Residence in Thornhill, as well as Thomson Court Apartments in Markham, which is also a retirement home. It was interesting to see how keen the residents were to check their mailboxes. It is not only a matter of anxiety over the timely receipt of pension cheques but also the receipt of much treasured letters from loved ones and friends.

Canada Post Corporation has the privilege of operating as a monopoly in providing mail service to all Canadians. With this privilege there is an obligation to meet the needs of its customers which comprise the entire population of Canada, including every business and institution in the country. As a result, every day the corporation faces the task of moving 30 million pieces of mail to more than 10 million addresses.

There is no room or time in an operation of this magnitude to cope with interruptions caused by strikes. It is the Canadian people who suffer, the people who must put up with inconveniences, higher costs, and even loss of business, the people who must also subsidize the corporation for its losses through their taxes.

We suffered through three postal strikes in the past year William Johnson stated in the August 25 edition of The Gazette of Montreal: "The third postal strike in 14 months should convince even the most timid: the right to strike is out".

The Canadian people are the ones who bear the heaviest burden and who are made most vulnerable. They must be protected. That is why I have proposed Motion No. 113 which states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Canada Post Corporation Act so as to make Canada Post an essential public service which would render illegal any strikes affecting postal delivery.

Constant interruptions in mail service as we have witnessed over the past years can no longer be tolerated. The effects have been devastating. When I speak of devastation I am not simply referring to a case of a Christmas card arriving on the first day of spring, nor an invitation suddenly surfacing after the event in question has taken place. I am talking about the real hardship felt by many senior citizens dependent upon postal delivery for their pension cheques, cheques that provide money for their food, shelter—the necessities of life, not the frills. I am also talking about the ruin of many small businesses whose entire operations depend upon regular mail service. Businesses such as small insurance agencies, publishing houses, and companies engaged in direct marketing through the mails are particularly hard hit by strikes.

Just this afternoon I spoke with Barry Cosburn who is President of the Markham based insurance firm of Cosburn, Griffiths & Branham Insurance Brokers Limited. He said: "Being a business dependent on Canada Post, we view it to be in our best interest to have Canada Post declared an essential service and, as a matter of fact, I would go further and privatize it".

I spoke to another businessman today who shares my concern about Canada Post and who is totally supportive of the motion. Graydon Card is the owner of Card's Home Hardware and Appliances of Stouffville. His comments were as follows:

> Since over 50 per cent of our daily business volume is done on a credit system, it is mandatory that our receivables come in on a regular and reliable basis.
> Past strikes have been so detrimental and threatening to our business, that we had to resort to personally delivering our invoices to over 400 customers.

I talked to another very successful businessman in Markham. Mark Cullen is the General Manager and Vice-President of Weall and Cullen Nurseries Ltd. He expressed his frustrations with Canada Post with the following comments:

> We spend about $250,000 in business with Canada Post. I wish I could say it is worth it.
> The unions only have to threaten to strike and a lot of damage is done. If we had just mailed a direct response catalogue, the response rate drops drastically since customers are worried that our products, many of which are very seasonal, may not arrive in time.
> If they go on strike and we just happen to have 30,000 mailers ready to go, we must throw them out.
> The actual strike and threat of strikes can throw our budgets completely out of whack.
> Unlike any other supplier, Canada Post's rules are quite rigid. It is cash up front and you must comply with certain packaging and labelling conditions. That would be fine if we had confidence in their ability to deliver our mailings on time.

In closing, Mr. Cullen said:

> Canada Post for example had guaranteed a maximum five-day delivery on a mailing of 500,000 catalogues. When we found out that many were not delivered for two and three weeks, we gave the business to a private courier.

Mark Cullen is very supportive of my motion.

Canada Post Corporation has a responsibility to all users. Many businesses have been drawn into bankruptcy as a consequence of strikes. The country simply cannot tolerate the prolonged interruptions of what is in fact an essential service.

Some 80 per cent of the total mail volume handled by Canada Post is contributed by the business community. Is it fair to jeopardize the future of such good customers by disrupting service to them? Is this the way to treat and keep good customers?

Competition for Canada Post is increasing. Private couriers, telephone, telex, expanding communications technology, and facsimile transmissions are all seeking this business. It is more important than ever now that service is not disrupted for any reason.

Parcel mail decreased by 8 per cent in the past year. One must deduce that private couriers are, therefore, providing more reliable service.

The 1981 postal strike is estimated to have caused a loss of $3 billion to Canadian business. Can we allow these types of losses to continue to affect a sector that provides 92 per cent of the job creation in Canada?

Small business is particularly vulnerable to the effects of postal strikes. Many have not been able to survive them, but even for those who have managed to keep their heads above water there has been a high price paid with serious impacts upon their growth and potential future.

Disruption of collections has affected cash flows and delayed receivables have resulted in heavy interest payments. Additional costs to cover alternate services provided by private couriers have been incurred. Inevitable sales drops and staff reductions have frequently resulted in frustration and broken morale that has been difficult to rebuild. It is tough when one has to deal with the consequence of an action but cannot control the cause.

• (1710)

Canada Post was incorporated in the fall of 1981. Now 62,000 people are employed there. It was a series of strikes that denied postal service to Canadians which was a leading factor in Canada Post becoming a Crown corporation, but even this new status has not eliminated the problem of strikes.

Postal strikes provided an opportunity for competition to grow, taking over markets once dominated by Canada Post. Once again, who stands to lose the most? It is the taxpayer.

When Canada Post was incorporated, it faced a deficit of over $300 million and a monumental task to meet financial obligations, to gain operational control of the organization, and to establish a peaceful relationship with the labour force. Factors such as strikes that limit efficient use of the workforce have a significant impact on the cost of providing postal services.

The annual report of Canada Post for 1987-88 says:

> Only in an environment where there is a balance between service, efficiency and postal rates can business grow, compete, reach and maintain profitability.

There is no room in this plan for strikes. Moves to improve reliability within Canada Post include the establishment of the Marchment committee in 1985. The first nine recommendations deal with the need for reliable service. The report reads, and I quote:

> All Canadians require a postal service. In particular, they require a reliable first and second class mail system . . . consistent, dependable, regular, movement of mail.

We know from experience that "consistent, dependable and regular movement of mail" cannot be achieved while an organization is coping with internal management-labour problems that consistently lead to strikes.

Once again, who is the big loser? It is the taxpayer, but it seems that the corporation's future is also being held up for ransom by troubling strikes.

To the credit of Canada Post, it has, indeed, implemented many of the recommendations of the Marchment report. However, it has been an uphill battle that unquestionably has been hindered by continuing labour-management problems, problems that in most instances resulted in strikes for which the Canadian public has had to pay too large a price.

Over the years Canada Post has suffered severe criticism for continually operating with a deficit. Gradually, this deficit is being reduced, from $129 million in 1986-87 to $30 million this year; a significant reduction.

However, I believe that most of this progress has been made through increases in postal rates, not improved efficiency.

During the four-year period from 1979 to 1983, the first-class postage rate was increased by the Liberal Government from 17 cents to 32 cents, an 83.7 per cent increase. In the five-year period from 1984 to January of 1989, the Progressive Conservative Government will have increased the rate from 32 cents to 38 cents, which amounts to a 17.9 per cent increase.

In the coming year, Canada Post Corporation is expected to break even for the first time in 20 years. As the plans are implemented there will not only be improved standards of moving mail, but these steps will help to reduce mail handling costs.

We, the customers, stand to benefit from these improvements. Let us not let a labour strike destroy the chance of attaining these goals, for such improvements are not without cost.

We invested $190 million in 1987-88 to support fundamental changes to improve the postal system. During the same period, Canada Post had to cope with three postal strikes and the negative impact that these must have had.

Canadians have been receiving and sending mail since 1705, when Pedro da Silva, Canada's first recorded mail carrier, was commissioned to provide service for both official and private mail between Montreal, Three Rivers, and Québec City. He had a tough time of it, as the first road connecting these settlements was not opened until 1734, but the mail got through.

Can we allow this important service that has been such an essential part of our lives to be bogged down and rendered ineffective by a never-ending series of strikes?

Labour-management problems of Canada Post have a history of being resolved through strikes, at grievous expense to the Canadian public. The customer, you and I, are the real victims in labour-management feuds for we must pay ever escalating rates and endure poor service. This is a burden we can no longer expect Canadians as individuals or as members of the business community to bear.

It was in 1967 that the Pearson Government legislated employees of the Canada Post Corporation the right to strike. This move has obviously been a mistake.

The Standing Committee on Government Operations, chaired by the Hon. Member from Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann), completed an examination of Canada Post's operational plans last year. On September 22, 1987, it submitted its report and its first recommendation read as follows:

> That the Government consider declaring Canada Post an essential service and invoking third party arbitration, if the approach to this year's labour-management negotiations does not reflect the Corporation's crucial importance.

May I stress that that was an all-Party committee that made that recommendation.

In closing, I must say that it is now time for this Government to react, I hope in a favourable way to my motion which in part reads as follows:

> —consider the advisability of amending the Canada Post Corporation Act so as to make Canada Post an essential public service which would render illegal any strikes affecting postal delivery.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that if you did a Canada-wide survey of Canadians, individuals, and businesses, you would find that a tremendously high rate of concerned Canadians would want to pass my motion if they were indeed here in the House of Commons.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I just have a couple of comments to make because I noticed that some Members want to put their feelings on the record about this particular motion. I suppose every word in the motion could be taken literally, such as the word "strike" and the words "any strikes affecting postal delivery". The biggest and most effective strikes affecting postal delivery were struck by the Government of Canada.

They were the ones who decided to close rural post offices. They were the ones who decided not to have weekend pick-ups at red mailboxes in the cities. They were the ones who decided to put in so-called supermailboxes and super-duper mailboxes from one end of Canada to the other, replacing the postmaster or the postmistress in those communities. They were the ones who decided that it was more important to make money in the Post Office than it was to have dependable delivery of mail services. They are the ones who, by their philosophy, would for the sake of breaking even or making money go back to the pony express. They would rather go back to the canoe on the St. Lawrence River. They would rather go back to the dog team up North. At least it would not then be a cost on the public purse.

The mail service is as important as medicare. It is as important as anything that one can think of. It is an essential service, but the Government of Canada does not believe it is an essential service.

The Government has brought in changes since it came into power that will radically change the postal service of Canada, so radically that we will no longer see a post office in a small community in Canada with a flag beside it. That is usually the one federal building in the community, and we are talking about 5,584 communities. There are 5,584 rural post offices, and those post offices are slated to close.

An Hon. Member: What does that have to do with postal delivery?

Mr. Baker: Every one of them is going to close. The Hon. Member over here is asking: "What does that have to do with postal delivery?" I thought that this motion was about postal delivery. He is asking: "What does that have to do with it when somebody can go to the next community, to some box out of doors and pick up their mail, when somebody can drive along the main street?" That is what the hon. gentleman says.

• (1720)

It is one thing for people to say: "Here I am in Ottawa, and this business of closing down the Post Office and going to the local drug store is a good idea. I get off work here in Ottawa at 4.30, 5, or 6 p.m., and I am sure of having the mailbox open. I can always go into the drug store and stand behind someone buying toothpaste or toilet tissue and be served by someone. I can get my mail then. This is as better service". That is what the people can say here in Ottawa.

Those post offices in rural areas serve the community. They are the place where residents do all their banking. They are the one federal establishment in those communities that has a federal presence and serves a purpose far beyond just picking up mail.

Another thing I do not like about the philosophy of the Government is that that service can be handed over to the local business person in the community. I have often thought about the closure of rural post offices. I know some Members of the House will not understand what I am talking about. I sometimes think that a lot of the time they do not understand what I am talking about.

However, someone goes into one of those new outfits arranged by the Government to be placed in rural areas and he is served by the local businessman. Perhaps he owes him money. Perhaps a person is picking up an unemployment insurance cheque, a Canada pension cheque, disability cheque, an old age pension cheque, or welfare cheque; sometimes he owes the businessman money. Some Members might say that there is nothing wrong with that because he is taking the cheque with the one hand and giving it back with the other.

However, I think there is something a little wrong with that; not only that, but if somebody in the community replaces that postmaster or postmistress, namely a local business person who perhaps may not be in that community but in another community. Granted, the mail box or the post office is a place of security, and people have trust in the person who is handling their cheques and their mail.

All I want to point out is that if in the interpretation of "strikes against postal delivery" Canada Post is an essential public service, it certainly is, and the first people who should recognize that are members of the Government of Canada. If they recognized that, they would not be putting in supermailboxes and establishments out of doors where someone who cannot get around very well has to go there in the middle of winter and pick through the snow to pick up his or her mail, compliments of politicians who believe that the Post Office should make money. Those politicians say that because they are drawing a comparison between the United States, Great Britain, and some other countries. This is not Great Britain. One could take Great Britain and put it in part of Canada and lose it. This is not any other country. This is Canada, spread out in large rural areas.

Mr. Belsher: Do you support the motion?

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member asks if I support the motion. If the interpretation of "strikes against postal delivery" means the actions of the federal Government, I would agree with it.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity given to me to make a few remarks on this subject. I think that the motion before us is very important and I would like to point out that motion M-113 submitted by Mr. Attewell, one of my colleagues, reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Canada Post Corporation Act so as to make Canada Post an essential public service which would render illegal any strikes affecting postal delivery.

Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to point out that Canada Post is already an essential service, an essential service for many people. Some people can use other services like Fax, which is a new technology. Some people can use either the postal service provided by Canada Post or the service offered by Purolator or other companies; these people can afford to pay more for this service and thus have other options. But for the elderly, for young people, for people on low incomes, postal service is already essential. It is not necessary to have an Act of Parliament; we do not need legislation establishing that postal service is essential. It is obvious that Canada Post is an essential service for almost everyone. But some people already have alternatives.

The other aspect of this motion is that it would make any strikes illegal . . . it is the idea behind this motion, the idea of making any strikes illegal. Just imagine! I think that we live in Canada, where people have human rights. I am quite surprised, but I would have thought I was in Poland. Am I in another country now? A country like Poland where the Communist government has already taken away the right to strike and made it illegal? Has such a law, such an approach, worked? Can a government take away people's human rights? Is it possible to make laws? Obviously. But is it possible for dictators to take away people's human rights, to take away their right to work? Mr. Speaker, I am impressed by the Poles, because they have a government that has all the powers, a government that says it represents all the people and that there is no other institution that can represent the people's interests. No church, no labour union, only the Communist Party can represent the people properly.

That is the approach of the Communist Party in Poland and these people have rejected the NDP. There really is a difference because the NDP is a democratic Party. We entertain socialist notions, notions to promote the interests of ordinary people, but in a democratic way, whereas a Communist party is a Party seeking to impose its views on people. They are determined to outlaw strikes and they have legislation which states that there shall be no strikes and no unions. But in the end, when people represent their own interests, they realize that joining forces can be an advantage. When they find out that working together and presenting a united front give them more power they form a union, but a union which the Government does not recognize as such. Still it does not make any difference. Solidarity is a Polish union representing workers, and their Government simply has to admit the fact and negotiate with these people in a country where dictature prevails.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, the emphasis in this motion should be on the words "the Government should consider the advisability of amending the . . . Act". The key word here is "consider". We are simply asking that the proposition be studied.

I take this opportunity to deal with the motion by saying that some countries have tried to outlaw any attempt by people to be represented. It does not work out because people know that when a Government ignores their interests they have to get together and tell the Government that they expect their interests to be properly represented.

I would also point out that unions are legal in North America and that strikes were legalized in the 1930s after a number of violent strikes. At the time the American Government thought it would be well advised to acknowledge the existence of union activities through legislation to settle the issue rather than pretend they did not exist and choose to let them take place in illegality.

Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that the motion must be seriously considered. I would be quite surprised if the Government were to let it come to a vote. I imagine that Government Members will want to talk it out. It is because the concept here . . .

An Hon. Member: . . . will you vote for the motion?

Mr. Keeper: The Hon. Member asks whether I intend to vote for this motion. Good question. Do you think I will have a chance to vote either way? I don't think so! I imagine there are government Members who have more sense than to let it come to a vote and who will say we should take the time to analyze the motion. It was a pleasure to be able to make my contribution to this debate.

• (1730)

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the Hon. Member who just spoke on his efforts to make an excellent speech in French. He is to be commended.

It is time we had an election, Mr. Speaker, because I am starting to realize I don't agree with anyone. I don't agree with the motion as proposed because, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should take away a right of association or a democratic right or a right to strike. I don't agree with my Liberal friend who spoke earlier, trivializing postal services as they are today . . . It's not true that we always go and pick up our mail at a private post office and that we buy stamps next to the toilet paper display. They can go on all they like about the privatization of our postal services, but I suggest they look at the polls which clearly show that generally, people are very satisfied with the new system.

Of course, I do not agree with the Hon. Member across the way when he says that Canada Post is an essential service. To a certain extent, it may be essential, and the usual example is that of the elderly who get their pension cheques in the mail and people who get their unemployment insurance cheques. As far as that goes, I agree. But it seems to me that the federal Government, and we have been here for four years, should concentrate on introducing a direct deposit system so that in many cases we could avoid a system that may be disrupted as a result of people exercising their democratic rights.

Mr. Speaker, the Government remains entirely faithful, and I fully subscribe, to the principle of free collective bargaining and the rights it confers, including the right to strike and the right to lock out, throughout the system. Part V of the Canada Labour Code provides a framework of rights and responsibilities designed to promote stable industrial relations between employers and unions in federally-regulated industries, which includes the Canada Post Corporation. Although the responsibility for collective bargaining lies first and foremost with the parties themselves, the Canada Labour Code provides for the assistance of experts in conciliation and mediation cases, where assistance is made available to employees and management when the parties are unable to reach an agreement.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that collective bargaining in federally-regulated industries is usually a very peaceful process, since about 90 per cent of labour disputes at the federal level are resolved without strikes or lock-outs. Of course, the cases we hear about are the more spectacular ones, and we have two Crown Corporations where that is the case at the present time. Granted, all is not sweetness and light, but 90 per cent of the disputes are settled without strikes or lock-outs.

The right to strike or to impose a lock-out is fundamental to the collective bargaining process in Canada. The possibility of a work stoppage is the final test, and should always be seen as such, for the bargaining mechanism and the economic resources of unions and employers. The same applies to lock-outs and the right to lock out should also be considered in that light. Although in most cases, neither party resorts to these measures, without that possibility, serious negotiations would be impossible. In fact, there are labour relations experts who maintain that a work stoppage, in addition to settling a dispute in no uncertain terms, has the effect of clarifying the issues and re-establishing priorities. I must say I agree.

The motion before the House today, Mr. Speaker, is flawed in that it proposes to take away the right to strike from employees who lawfully acquired that right. It does not, however, provide any substitute procedures for resolving the dispute. Most of the time, proposals put forward in this House and elsewhere insist on permanent and general compulsory arbitration as the most efficient means to resolve conflicts arising from employment.

Mr. Speaker, arbitration plays indeed and important and legitimate role in the collective bargaining process in Canada. First of all, it is clearly mentioned in the Canada Labour Code in connection with the resolution of conflicts which occur during the life of a collective agreement concerning the approval and interpretation of the clauses of negotiated contracts. Moreover, under special circumstances, when every aspect of a situation requires it, Parliament will insist on compulsory arbitration to deal with unresolved issues. However, as a rule, compulsory arbitration has been turned down by the Canadian Government as a favoured model for dispute resolution.

The compulsory arbitration system has never been effective as a means to prevent strikes in countries which have implemented it. Australia is a case in point. In 1904, Mr. Speaker, this country adopted the Commonwealth Conciliation and Arbitration Act which absolutely forbade strikes and lock-outs. That was in 1904. Those who had drafted it felt that compulsory arbitration would replace the more violent process of strikes and lock-outs. Nevertheless, the labour movement in Australia has never really accepted to be deprived of its right to strike.

In 1979, 75 years later, the Australian Minister responsible for Labour Relations made the following comments concerning working relations in Australia during the 1920's:

> The experience of the decade would be useful even if showed only one thing, namely, that the Government cannot prevent strikes by legally banning them. In a democracy, people cannot be forced to work if they do not want to—until 1930, strikes were made absolutely illegal under the Conciliation and Arbitration Act. Well, there were more strikes during that period than at any other period in the history of Australia.

That is a glaring example. For that matter, I remember that in the 1960's, Premier Lesage of Quebec had said: "The Queen does not negotiate with her subjects". The funny thing is that not long after that, they all sat together at the same negotiating table. The world has changed, Mr. Speaker!

Under the same law, in the 1930s and subsequent years, Australia experienced over half a century of legislative amendments to recognize the fact that compulsory arbitration is no solution to a conflict on working conditions.

In 1930, barely 20 years later, the total ban on striking in the Australian civil service was cancelled. They then relied a lot more on the criminal provisions of the legislation, together with the required qualifications and enforcement conditions. In addition, strikes and lockouts likely to disrupt interstate trade could result in criminal proceedings. In the late 1960's, Mr. Speaker, since the unions refused to pay their fines, the penalty system collapsed. That led to a review of the procedures used in contempt of court cases. Now, whenever a contract clause is violated, the parties get a second chance. They can still resort to conciliation and arbitration procedures before the criminal provisions of the law are enforced.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that my time is very limited. But the Australian experience proves at least one thing: it is not by passing legislation forbidding strikes or lockouts or by imposing heavy penalties that we can solve the conflict. Since I was a personnel director for quite a while, I sat at a provincial negotiation table. I was totally against imposing penalties of $60,000 a day to a union leader. It just can't be done, it is not realistic, Mr. Speaker, and we must make changes to this Bill.

I congratulate my colleague for his courage in putting it forward but, Mr. Speaker, I think we can find another solution to the problem.

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today is of the utmost importance for the collective bargaining system. We must therefore ask ourselves which factors must be taken into account in relation to it.

Mr. Speaker, we have had several similar motions in the past. We have also had calls from various quarters for a complete overhaul of our collective bargaining system. We keep receiving recommendations from well-intentioned people asking us to change our industrial relations system and to eliminate strikes and lock-outs.

Mr. Speaker, I say these people are "well-intentioned" because they usually have in mind the impact work stoppages have on innocent people who can do nothing about labour conflicts which affect them. Although well-intentioned, these people generally ignore the complexity of labour conflicts and the importance of industrial relations practices, including to right to resort to economic sanctions which have been worked out through many decades of experience in Canada and in other large industrialized democracies.

We have, in Canada, one of the most refined systems which allows employers and unions to settle their differences, a system which is the envy of many countries in the world. Our collective bargaining system gives employers and unions complete freedom to settle their disputes through direct negotiations without government intervention. In some countries, the parties do not even have this fundamental freedom.

The conciliation and mediation provisions allow employers and unions subject to Part V of the Canada Labour Code to start direct negociations when a deadlock has been reached in the collective bargaining process. If the dispute is not settled by conciliation or mediation, the legislation allows the parties, under certain conditions, to go on strike or to declare a lock-out in order to convince the other party that they will not back down from their position in the collective bargaining process. In most cases, Mr. Speaker, the threat of economic sanctions in the final stages of the process is enough to bring about the necessary concessions for a peaceful settlement.

The system set up under Part V of the Canada Labour Code ensures the implementation of collective agreements and provides for comprehensive measures to facilitate the collective bargaining process. When I look at the dispute settlement provisions in the Code, I am surprised to see how flexible they are and how they apply to a variety of circumstances related to collective bargaining.

One cannot expect a single policy or procedure to solve all social conflicts, but the flexibility of the Canada Labour Code leads me to think very highly of the dispute settlement method established over the years. I believe that the code is flexible enough to make a good dispute settlement mechanism work.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the right to strike or to lock-out can only be acquired seven days after the Minister has exercised an option in the area of conciliation under the Canada Labour Code. Also, pursuant to section 195 of the Labour Code, the Minister can at any time appoint a mediator to help the parties settle their differences. Under section 171 of the code, before the conciliation commissioner or the conciliation office present their reports, the parties can at any time agree in writing that the recommendations are binding. Thus, under these provisions, employers and unions can have access to all conciliation and mediation services which can help them reach a settlement and have the freedom to voluntarily settle the dispute by agreeing in advance to the recommendations made by the conciliation commissioner or conciliation office.

Mr. Speaker, I have explained in general terms the main elements of the collective bargaining process as described in the Canada Labour Code.

In the case of organizations under federal jurisdiction, I should like to make two comments. First of all, under the Labour Code, both management and unions are free to negotiate collective contracts which, in their opinion, are best suited to the conditions of the business, to the priorities and economic constraints facing the industry. When a third party intervenes as a conciliator or mediator, the parties involved determine the rules within the framework of collective bargaining, and conduct their own negotiations, the third party remaining impartial and helping them define the parameters of the matters in dispute, identify areas where compromises are possible and find ways of getting out of a deadlock.

Mr. Speaker, this approach is quite similar to that which the Government has adopted in many other areas of our social and economic life. Much more than in the past, the Government has encouraged the private sector to show leadership and rely a lot less on the Government to widen its economic outlook. Workers and businessmen therefore must assume greater responsibilities and seize every opportunity for growth.

From the labour relations point of you, Mr. Speaker, this means that management and unions will have more and more to solve their differences without Government's intervention. The conciliation and mediation processes provided for under the Canada Labour Code are based on this approach by which the responsibility for negotiations and dispute settlements falls first and foremost on the interested parties. Part V of the Canada Labour Code defines the rights and responsibilities of both management and unions and clearly indicates that the parties involved in collective bargaining must find a way to settle their disputes.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize the fact that the parties must deal dutifully with the collective bargaining process and understand that any reluctance on their part to reach a negotiated settlement, undermines a system aimed at encouraging constructive collective bargaining. We have witnessed before situations where both management and unions had relinquished their responsibilities for the settlement of a dispute to a third party, including public authorities.

Mr. Speaker, we must curb Governments overwelming tendency to interfere with our lives. The Government's reluctance to adopt a legislation to force workers back to work, except in cases where conflicts could jeopardize Canada's interests, clearly demonstrate its intention to encourage both management and unions to solve their own conflicts by themselves. That is why I fail to see the need for such a motion.

[English]

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to participate in this debate this afternoon in the final leg of of the Thirty-third Parliament. It may be very historic. My colleague from Don Valley East and I will be back here for the Thirty-fourth Parliament to look at some other legislation. It has been a long four years, and we look forward to the fall and the pending election.

My colleague from Winnipeg North Centre spent some time on the committee reviewing some of the postal concerns. I want to say at this time that I would like to thank all the participants who looked into what were at times some very trying times for the postal corporation. I think we have drawn very positive conclusions and made changes that have really worked quite well.

Despite some of the strikes that have occurred, to which my colleague from Don Valley East referred, in fact the Canada Post Corporation, for the first time in many, many years, is showing a ledger that is more acceptable to Canadians. This is despite the fact that there have been some very difficult strikes. I, like the Hon. Member, have considered naming Canada Post Corporation an essential service. I think Canadians as a whole believe that this may be a route the Government should look at. However, we have to be cautious before we automatically consider making such a major move. We should consider especially the immediate impact it would have on the relationship between the—

Mr. Belsher: Your committee recommended it.

Mr. Holtmann: That's right, between the Crown corporation and the labour movement.

Let me mention something in defence of one of the unions, the rural postmasters' union. Its members have never been on strike and in fact, in most cases they have acted very congenially and have worked hard to find solutions, although we are now entering a phase of change in rural post offices.

The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) thought that change was a negative idea. I suspect that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) did as well. The facts are starting to bear us out. Even with this change, we have made tremendous progress, despite the Rural Dignity organization preaching gloom and doom and saying that Canadians are getting less service. Over the countless months and days we have debated the postal changes, in fact they have have worked amazingly well with very little disruption in postal service.

In my own community, for example, a change that took place was reported by a local paper. A retail post office won unanimous consent. I along with the entire community looked at the change and the community in fact totally agreed to put the post office into a franchise store. In fact, today, the mail is available nine to ten hours a day, six days a week, and that is what the community wanted and agreed upon. The argument that change would affect us in such a negative way more than likely is proving to be false all over Canada.

I mentioned the fact that the Post Office is now in a very positive way in terms of balancing its budget. In fact, it is returning to Canadian users some of this funding by no longer charging for post boxes, something which was done on an ad hoc basis.

I think that my colleague for Winnipeg North Centre will agree that should the Post Office become a little more efficient, some of the lower costs to the Canadian taxpayers will in fact be turned back to the users. That is what I think is good management by the Post Office.

Should the time come that postal strikes become as violent and disruptive as they seem to tend to want to become, for no reason at all, we did make a recommendation. Just recently, we had the threat of a postal strike. There was a short strike. They were asking for payment for their lunch leave while most of these people are paid an average of $25 a hour. I think it was demonstrated that the Crown corporation would not tolerate that, and in fact there was a resolution to the strike.

I notice that my time is almost up. When the strikes were going on, the Post Office somehow managed to get most of the mail through. I think that is completely different from having a postal strike that totally disrupts services, as has happened in certain instances.

At this time I would also like to thank my colleague from Nanaimo—Alberni who yielded his position this evening to someone who knew better how to speak on this matter. As a result, I would like to commend him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS—ONTARIO'S LIFELINE PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE/MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the topic tonight is again the environment and the question of whether or not Canadians are entitled to know about the quality of water they have to look forward to for this and future generations. Canadians would like to believe a Prime Minister no matter who that person happens to be because the environment is too important to be left to rhetoric. However, the gap between rhetoric and fact is so wide it now requires an explanation. There must be an explanation about an issue that has been raised in this House many, many times, most recently on September 16 of this year.

Canadians are entitled to have an explanation from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). They are entitled to know whether the Prime Minister's sudden interest in the environment is driven by polls or by a genuine interest and desire to change the alarming trends we are witnessing, particularly in relation to surface and ground water. Therefore, the issue is very simply whether or not Canadians will have clean water. It is a question of recreation and of general ecological well-being. It is an issue in which this federal Government has a role to play.

The history is very simple. It is important that we remind the Government that in the 1960s and 1970s some $2 billion was spent by Ottawa under the National Housing Act by way of loans and grants to some 1,500 municipalities to build, repair, and improve sewers or to build sewage treatment plants and the like. A further $400 million was spent in the early 1980s but not by this Government. We notice, particularly in the last few months running up to the election, that this Government has made major commitments to the tune of over $12 billion, without counting the nuclear submarines. It is a commitment which probably keeps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) awake at night wondering how he will ever pay for all these promises. Out of that $12 billion, not one penny is being committed in response to a request made frequently by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities which calls for a $15 billion joint program by all three levels of government to rebuild our sewers and protect water quality.

The Liberal Party, as you know, Mr. Speaker, in 1986 and again last year, committed itself to providing the federal share of almost $5 billion for this type of participation. We want to get some information from the Tories. Do they really believe in water quality and health and recreation along our rivers and lakes? We want to know what the Conservative's environmental vision is all about. Is the Tory environmental vision driven by their reading of public opinion polls? Is it driven by conviction? Is it driven by the inevitable realization that we have to change our ways, our trends, and even our values if we are to survive as a species on this planet? Or, is it because the backroom boys are saying it is good public relations because the polls seem to say there is a big environment vote out there that must be grabbed while it lasts in order to win the election?

Despite all this we want to take the Prime Minister seriously. This is why we in the Official Opposition are pressing him here again tonight, perhaps the last night before an election is called. We are pressing him to live up to his statement on the environment to show Canadians that he means what he says; that water will be protected, that rivers and lakes will be clean again; that beaches will be open to the public. That is what we expect the Parliamentary Secretary to confirm in the name of his Prime Minister if the Prime Minister of Canada wants to retain his credibility.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has questioned the priority which the federal Government assigns to water quality and whether we will be participating in the Government of Ontario's Lifelines Program.

Let me deal with this latter aspect first. We have had the opportunity to review the details of the Lifelines Program which is to assist Ontario municipalities in the refurbishment of their water and sewage systems.

Municipal infrastructure is clearly an area of provincial and municipal responsibility. The federal Government cannot assist in programs such as these for reasons which have previously been made clear to this House. I am pleased that the Government of Ontario has designed a provincial program responsive to that province's needs and has taken this initiative without federal assistance.

This is not to say that the federal Government is not concerned about water quality or is not active in the area of water policy. In November, 1987, the Government announced its federal water policy. The over-all objective of the policy is to encourage the use of fresh water in an efficient and equitable manner consistent with the social, economic, and environmental needs of present and future generations.

The policy maps out five basic courses of action; fair and realistic water pricing based on consumption, federal leadership in water science, an integrated approach to water resource planning involving all sectors of society, a broad review of water legislation, and a public awareness program on water issues.

We already devote more than $300 million annually to encourage and improve the quality of water in Canada. In areas which are clearly a federal responsibility, such as the research, development, and transfer of new waste water technologies, the co-ordination of action among provinces, and dealing with international boundary issues, we have accepted our responsibilities and delivered on our commitments.

For example, we are already participating with Ontario to improve the quality of water in the Great Lakes. In 1987, we signed a protocol to the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement committing both countries to clean up areas of environmental concern. In June, 1988, the Government announced its $110 million action plan to protect, conserve, and restore the St. Lawrence River.

In short, the federal Government clearly recognizes its responsibility in the area of water policy and continues to assign the highest priority to the protection of this most valuable of natural resources, water.

IMMIGRATION—LOCATION OF OFFICE IN MINISTER'S RIDING/COST OF RELOCATING OFFICE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of raising in this Chamber at this time a question that I posed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) on September 21 of this year, concerning an issue that I thought was very embarrassing to the Minister personally and very embarrassing to the Government. I thought the Minister lacked any credibility whatsoever in terms of her response to my question.

Essentially the issue was the relocation of a new immigration office in the heart of her riding in St. Paul's, Toronto. By way of background, the Minister closed the immigration office at 230 Bloor Street in Toronto and relocated that office in the heart of her own community for obvious political gains. All through that the Minister said, "Well, I didn't know", which says one of two things: first, the Minister does not know about the operation of her own Department in relocating an office in her own backyard, or she was not exactly forthcoming with Members in this Chamber.

Because there were the long line-ups that we witness in centres right across Metropolitan Toronto and other centres as a result of the mismanagement of the Government vis-à-vis immigration and refugee policy, at the first sight of a problem what did the Minister do? She simply airlifted the office, removed the staff and materials again, and went to 4900 Yonge Street. All this cost the taxpayers of Canada $30,000 for moving from Bloor Street to her own office on Eglinton Avenue in her riding. Another $30,000 was spent moving from that office to the one at 4900 Yonge Street. More important, the lease for the office in her own riding was for $600,000 for five years which comes to a total cost of $3 million, plus the $60,000.

In order to save face the Minister created a need in order to keep that office running, not for immigration purposes but for training programs. I was somewhat offended, as were most other Canadians who are involved with this issue, because the office was moved for obvious politically appetizing reasons. Those reasons quickly went sour. At the first sight of them going sour the Minister did not delay and moved her offices yet again.

This is a colossal abuse of one's national responsibilities for a Department of Government and was carried out for purely personal, political, partisan gains that the Minister would make in her own riding. The Minister suggested in the House that the reason she moved the office—after saying she did not know it was going into her riding—was that the facilities were wrong, that they were located in the wrong building, that there were not enough waiting rooms, washrooms, and other facilities to handle that type of caseload. She happens to be the Minister of a Department. If in fact she says that it was the wrong place because there were not the proper facilities, then why as the Minister did she allow her Department to go through with the various relocations? It is very obvious that she wanted to display the ability to be able to move an office in her riding, went through with it despite the fact that the facilities were not right, only to have the community complain about it. She then reacted and moved it to 4900 Yonge Street.

I have been speaking to officers at 4900 Yonge Street. Not only do they not have the facilities there to handle the type of caseload that they expect, but the employment officers have been informed by their superiors that they will now have to relocate and move out of the location in order to satisfy the need that they anticipate for the immigration work.

Outside providing business and work for those in the moving industry, what is being accomplished by this Minister of Immigration? If she thought that it was not the proper place, then she could have stopped the move. If she thought that it was the wrong place but wanted to move for political reasons, then she should admit it. If she wants to solve the problems of line-ups, I suggest that she should look beyond her own riding and her own backyard. Not only should she try to solve the line-ups there, but she should try to solve them at the Bloor and Islington office where my constituents have to line up beginning at four and five in the morning.

If she were courageous and forthright enough to deal with the refugee backlog, then maybe those line-ups would be getting smaller. If we had on the job management those line-ups would not be there. Instead of dealing with immigrants by allowing them to line up at four and five in the morning like cattle, they should be given appropriate meeting times for scheduling appointments, as is done in every other office. I do not see why the immigration office operation should be an exception.

These are the questions which remain unanswered. Why did the Minister move the office into her riding in the first place if she knew that the facilities were wrong? Why does she continue to waste taxpayers' dollars for her own political benefit? Instead of only looking after her own political backyard, as Minister responsible for a national Department why does she not show some concern for the other line-ups that we see right across the country, not only across Metropolitan Toronto? If she has an answer to the refugee backlog and provides it before the election, as any courageous Minister of the Crown would do, then those line-ups might get smaller.

I look forward to the Parliamentary Secretary providing some of the answers that obviously the Minister, unfortunately, did not provide back on September 21.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate and respond to the question. In a way it shows that I agree with my colleague opposite. One has to be on one's toes concerning the administrative decisions made at various government levels. I can tell you that it is not necessarily a soft job to be given a Department these days because, when you get a Department you become more visible, but to the detriment of your family, your friends, your riding. It would almost be better if nothing ever happened any more in your riding, no family problems, no arguments with your friends. A moment ago my colleague took us to task about the refugee backlog. We have nothing to learn from them. For months on end, in cahoots with the Liberal Senators in the other place, they did everything they could to thwart our attempts to find a fair and equitable solution to a problem which had lasted for much too long already.

Mr. Speaker, this gives me an opportunity to set the record straight and describe the series of events. We began to review the situation in early 1988. The Minister did not hold the employment and immigration portfolio at the time. We examined the situation and when we checked the location of the famous . . . on Yonge Street, it was inadequate. So we asked ourselves where was our clientele for this immigration service and we came to the conclusion that it was in two very specific regions of Toronto, namely Scarborough and North York. There it is, we said. So they made an offer to Treasury Board to go in the region of Scarborough and in the region of North York. So they commented on that and decided to locate in a commercial zone in those two areas. And accordingly the Treasury Board said yes, etc. So, away they go from Yonge Street and along their way. Except that, and this caused the problem, there was indeed an administrative error, not an error in . . . Instead of choosing North York, they went to North Toronto. Something quite different! They went to North Toronto, indeed in the constituency of the Minister who later became the Minister of Employment and Immigration, which she was not then, a residential area. It was quite out of place. There was no way they could remain there.

And they did not . . . they started all over again and will locate elsewhere—in fact one is in Scarborough, and the other will be in North Toronto. Now, my colleague opposite says there was an unneeded expenditure on relocation costs and the lease that will be needed in the North Toronto. No. Because that is a residential area that is entitled to some services, that centre becomes the training centre for all employees. So, it will be used. We will honour our lease and it will be more in line with the area's zoning. The one in Scarborough already is in a commercial area, the one in North York will also be in a commercial area.

And, Mr. Speaker, until the North York office opens, because there are waiting lists, indeed, because the refugee problem was not solved in time, the Hon. Minister gave instructions for the office to remain open 24 hours a day to give better service and eliminate the backlog. From 4 a.m. people wait at the door in order to be heard.

So, Mr. Speaker, there you have the answers to the question, and I am pleased I will probably be the last speaker to rise before elections are called, if only this can be done before 10 a.m. tomorrow!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, September 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-140, an Act to amend the Bank Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Trinity.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, today we are continuing second reading debate on Bill C-140, an Act to amend the Bank Act. I have said on two other occasions in this House that haste in presenting Bills, followed by a very perfunctory study of the legislation, has become the hallmark of this Government.

In dealing with this legislation, the Government has really outdone itself. The Government enjoyed a long delay between tabling the legislation on June 30 and beginning second reading debate yesterday.

In his speech yesterday the Minister commended the positive contribution of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, yet he chose to delay action, despite the contribution of the finance committee, despite considerable prodding by members of his own caucus, and despite the unease of banking customers who wanted more clarity. Now suddenly he decides to act with lightning speed.

Yesterday the Minister had the arrogance to suggest that the House debate and pass the Bill at all stages even though he said that he had amendments which he did not yet have ready. Without seeing amendments we were being asked to deal with the Bill in all stages. Further, no text of the Minister's statement was provided in advance to the opposition Parties.

When the previous Liberal Government was in power it was customary to provide opposition critics with the text of ministerial statements three hours in advance. That is a courtesy that this Government does not see fit to extend. Because the Government has such a large majority, it feels justified in steam rolling all its legislation through Parliament, so that the Opposition and Canadians barely know what has hit them. When Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition objects to these unparliamentary and undemocratic procedures it is accused of filibustering.

The disorganized conduct of the Government and its handling of the agenda without rhyme or reason has the effect of greatly disorganizing the House of Commons and has contributed to the bad feeling in the House of recent months. In contrast with that state of events, I would like to point out that the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs dealt with this whole matter of charges by financial institutions in a systematic, orderly, and careful way. In response to complaints by the public the committee responded sensitively and effectively.

First, a report was commissioned by the committee staff because the committee wanted to have a clear picture of the extent of the problem so that we knew how far it extended over and above the letters we ourselves were receiving. The conclusion of that report has now been confirmed, and essentially it was that due to the unbundling of services, fees were imposed too quickly without adequate notice and in a manner that customers found insensitive.

According to the report prepared by the committee staff, routine financial service charges per family were averaging approximately $100 a year or $2 a week. That in itself is not a large amount, but customer irritation arose from the fact that some of these fees were unexpected and that information on them was difficult to find.

The committee went on to hold public hearings so that we could receive first-hand evidence of the extent of the problems from consumers, and also so that we could hear the responses of the financial institutions. On June 6, the committee tabled its report. The committee called on financial institutions to provide better information on charges, to provide certain basic services without charge such as the low balance accounts often held by children, and to prohibit certain charges altogether.

To give some examples, the committee recommended that the following fees be prohibited: fees to close an account which had been open for more than a year and fees levied when customers failed to make transactions on an account. The latter fees were particularly a source of irritation to customers who could not understand why they were being charged a fee for maintaining an account in which there had been no activity and therefore no work done by the financial institution on their behalf.

The committee also proposed that the penalties for banks which failed to provide full and clear information and notice to customers be stiffened, and that the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions create an internal office to deal with consumer complaints.

The banks responded defensively. The Canadian Bankers' Association stated that the committee's recommendations were interventionist and that they went against the stated free enterprise philosophy of this Government.

On June 23, I spoke in this House to an opposition motion by the New Democratic Party. Strangely, after tabling a minority report, the New Democrats then moved a motion to support the main committee report. I said at that time that neither the blatant bank bashing done by the New Democratic Party calling for regulation at any cost, nor the staunch Conservative anti-regulation, anti-interventionist policy were useful in this debate. More careful consideration is required in order to be fair and reasonable to all parties.

My own bias is always in favour of negotiation and agreement. I said then that regulation of financial service charges should be a last resort. This matter did not proceed very well because unfortunately, instead of admitting that they went too far too fast with their user-pay notion thus irritating, confusing, and inconveniencing their customers, the banks chose to be very defensive. Indeed, it was very much a botched public relations exercise on the part of the banks.

On June 30, the Government responded to the committee's report in the form of Bill C-140. However, earlier that week five of Canada's six major banks said that they would voluntarily comply with the committee's recommendations. The main purpose of the legislation at that time was to assure Canadians that the Government would monitor the bank's voluntary compliance.

Yesterday the Government decided to begin the debate at second reading at 12.30, even though the Minister's office previously informed me that the debate would begin at three o'clock and I had therefore arranged other business for that time. In my absence the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) responded to the introduction of the Bill.

On August 17, 1988, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) tabled the report of the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions assessing the voluntary compliance of financial institutions in making the following changes: first, that recipients of NSF cheques not be charged for depositing those cheques in their personal accounts. Many people felt that it was hard enough when a cheque they were given bounced; for the bank to impose a very large penalty on them for depositing that cheque in all innocence seemed doubly harsh.

Second, the closing of personal accounts which have been opened for more than 90 days was no longer to be subject to a cancellation fee.

The other matters on which the voluntary compliance of financial institutions was assessed included no charge for basic personal accounts if the balance fell below a certain level; no charge for services rendered due to an error on the part of financial institutions; no increase in charges for administrative and transfer services on fixed term deposits, notes, and GICs during the term of those instruments; and customers with inactive accounts and balances greater than $10 would not be charged, providing they had responded to a letter advising them that the charge would occur.

What is the status now with respect to these areas? As of August 17, the survey done by the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, tabled in this House, indicated that four banks were complying with the letter and spirit of the voluntary measures agreed upon. One bank reported that it was in compliance except for the withdrawal of the NSF chargeback fee, which would be done by November, 1988. Another bank is in compliance except for the provision of a basic no-frills account.

As a result of that report a member of the standing committee withdrew his Private Members' Bill to legislate the measures, which now remain voluntary. It does appear that voluntary compliance has occurred for the large part. Furthermore, what is particularly important, consumers are now being well informed so they are aware of the issues and, if they are not happy with the services of one financial institution, they can always take their business elsewhere.

After the report was issued in August the Minister kept his Bill on hold for six weeks. Why? What was happening in the interim? On September 15, the Minister said that the Bill would now extend the same requirements to small business. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business told him of its concerns in April. Yet up until September 15 there was no indication of any response from the Government. The Minister said that he was satisfied that the competitive market-place would solve all the ills.

However, the position of the CFIB is that increased competition in the financial institution sector is hurting more than helping small business. According to the CFIB, because of deregulation, because the banks are much more aggressively pursuing large accounts, profit margins on big business lending have decreased and, as a result, financial institutions are imposing larger and more numerous charges on small businesses. Cost saving actions undertaken by financial institutions, such as closing branches in small towns, also leave small business persons without any nearby financial institution with which to deal.

Although the committee was dealing only with consumer accounts, the small business concerns as presented to it are important for three basic reasons. First, small businesses typically have less choice in their financial dealings than do personal customers because their freedom to switch business relationships with banks is more restricted than for the individual consumer. Second, the magnitude of service charges to small business is proportionately greater, often totalling hundreds of dollars. Third, unpredictable and sizeable changes in bank service charges can have dramatic negative impacts on the ability of small business to plan operations and cash flow, and could in turn affect the viability of the business itself.

The CFIB asked government for something it usually does not ask for, government intervention, so as to ensure the measures taken voluntarily by the banks for consumers are applied to small businesses as well. Yet the Minister of State for Finance maintained in his statement of September 15 that he expects increased competition in the financial sector to be the best method of ensuring reasonable service charge practices.

The CFIB continued to make some very specific recommendations. It wanted very complete information regarding current levels of and changes to service charges for small businesses. It wanted the elimination of chargeback fees for NSF cheques. It also wanted annual monitoring of bank practices with regard to small businesses.

The CFIB tried to negotiate with the Canadian Bankers' Association but made no headway, particularly on the NSF chargeback issue. The Government has given no quarter either. In its announcement to extend similar disclosure and complaint resolution benefits to businesses, it does agree with the recommendation on eliminating chargeback costs for NSF cheques.

The Government has released a statement of what it intends for small business, but we have not seen the actual amendments. We have been told what will be in them and, consistent with what is now proposed for personal accounts, we are told that the amendments to Bill C-140 and the draft regulations will first entitle businesses, when they open accounts, to receive an enhanced disclosure of charges applying and information on the institution's procedures for handling complaints. Second, they will entitle businesses to ensure that banks and other financial institutions make available to the public for examination, on request, a list of all charges for business services in their branches doing commercial business; third, to provide for ongoing disclosure of core account related business charges through a brochure available to the public; fourth, to provide 30-day pre-notification, through statements, of changes in account related charges.

The Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions will also mediate complaints on behalf of small business account holders. So far so good but, Mr. Speaker, I would feel much better about dealing with this if I had seen the actual text of the amendments.

The Government has promised to continue monitoring the situation. My Party and I will be watching closely to see if the disclosure of information on financial service charges continues. We will also carefully monitor whether consumers and small businesses are treated with fairness and consideration in the weeks to come.

As of yesterday the Minister was converted to being a supporter of small business, whereas before September 15 he was an ally of unbridled competition. Yesterday he also became a supporter of government intervention.

By the time he rose in the House yesterday, he still did not have amendments to offer the Opposition. We were expected to take all these flip-flops on face and vote blindly for whatever he provided us, and he wanted the amendments dealt with in Committee of the Whole. The amendments finally reached my office late last night, which surely was not the Minister's idea of giving them to us in time to study. I am in favour of what I am told we are going to have, but the Minister's "trust me" approach in presenting and debating pieces of legislation is decidedly irritating. It does not inspire confidence and we will want those amendments carefully examined.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about this legislation as well. We are in a situation where the Government is rushing into this legislation only because of an impending election. I think it is obvious that there was no concern by this Government at the time that this was a crisis for many Canadians. We saw the banks charging for everything in sight. People would go to the banks not knowing that they were being charged.

We had examples raised by our critic, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), of pensioners with very small accounts being ripped off by the banks. We had the example by our agricultural critic, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) of how farmers were being penalized by the banks. We have had other examples too. As the banks have closed down in many communities, a decision they made, residents of those communities were charged extra for using the same services in other communities.

As mentioned by the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), this matter was examined by a House of Commons committee. Months ago recommendations were made. Instead of acting, the Government waited and waited until the banks started to reform themselves. Recognizing that the banks may have reformed now but may jack up prices perhaps during the election, the Government has come up with this very minimal package. It is an ill-prepared one.

The Government itself has announced that it wants to pass this legislation now. It wanted to pass it in all stages yesterday afternoon, but at the same time that it wants this legislation passed the Government tells us that there are amendments to make to this Bill. Where are the amendments? If the Government really and truly wants this legislation to pass and expects the co-operation of the opposition Parties, one would assume that the Government would have come to us and shown us the amendments.

Mr. Orlikow: Where is the Minister?

Mr. Murphy: There is not a single Minister in this House who can reply to these charges. I do not know if the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) will get up in a few minutes and explain what are the changes the Government wants to make.

Mr. Orlikow: He is a shark.

Mr. Murphy: He is a shark? I do not want to get into any personal attacks on the eve of an election. I think I will leave it to his constituents to solve his problems.

This is obviously not only a phoney issue; it is a phoney debate. You, Mr. Speaker, and everyone in the House at the present time know that when the Government wants legislation passed and wants the co-operation of the Opposition there are meetings, as we say behind the curtains, or meetings in Ministers' offices to discuss possible amendments. There has been no attempt whatever to do this. What the Government will do is go out on the campaign trail saying: "We tried to deal with the bank service charges, but the Opposition would not let the legislation pass". There has been no attempt by the Government to have this legislation passed.

I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is almost in the House. Perhaps he can tell us what the amendments are the Government wants to introduce because there has been no attempt to tell us. I would give him the opportunity. I will sit down now. If the Minister of Finance can get up and tell us what amendments the Government has to strengthen this rather weak legislation, then perhaps there could be some move in the House. At the present time we do not know what the amendments are. We do not know if the Government has any particular strategy to make sure that the banks do not rip off—as I mentioned earlier—the pensioners, the farmers, the fishermen and women in fishing, and all the other people who have been ripped off in the past by these outrageous and quite often hidden service charges.

I will take my seat and give the Minister of Finance an opportunity to set the record clear, if the Government really does have some amendments to show the Opposition.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that the Government thinks this Bill is important, but we know that it is only important to the Government. Given the tremendous antagonism to the kinds of rip-offs the banks have been doing to their customers, the Government had to appear to want to deal with the problem. In fact, this Bill does very little, if anything, to deal with the kinds of problems which thousands of customers of banks had to accept in recent years.

We are opposed to this Bill in principle because it does little to provide consumers and small businesses with any guarantees that they will be protected from unfair charges on the part of the banks.

What does this Bill do, Mr. Speaker? The Bill legislates the banks to publish a list of charges and to inform customers and small businesses of banking fees. I was in the branch of the Royal Bank with which we deal and it had a little pamphlet which said there were 168 different ways of a customer dealing with the bank. I ask Members of Parliament and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), which ordinary Canadian, which small businessman can possibly think through and come to an informed decision on which of these 150 different ways he or she can deal with the bank.

This Bill is based on the assumption that informed customers are the protected ones, but that is not the case at all. This Bill, if enacted, will do very little to help consumers who live in communities where in fact there is only one bank to help any community; nor will it do anything about charges that are already in place.

This Bill will require the bank to designate an employee to handle complaints about service charges. What bank employee will tell his or her employer, the bank, that it is charging exorbitant rates or that it really has not explained the situation to the customer?

As well, they can go to the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions to make the last appeal for unfair charges. Given the kind of reports we are getting daily about how inadequate our financial regulators were in dealing with the Principal Group of companies, a case in which ordinary Canadians lost hundreds of millions of dollars unnecessarily, we can see how little this means.

This Bill means, in fact, that there is no independent body to handle grievances. The superintendent is charged primarily with ensuring the solvency of the banks, not the protection of their customers.

What are the kinds of complaints ordinary Canadians have made in recent years? I can tell the House of one such complaint from personal experience. My wife saw an ad for an item being sold in the United States which she thought our grandchildren would like to have. She sent a cheque marked in U.S. funds for $6 to pay for the item. Even though the cheque was marked in U.S. funds, the bank charged $8.50, and this is from memory, as a service charge.

A 62-year-old Ottawa widow was seeking change for a $20 bill so she could do her laundry at the laundromat and was charged a $2 service fee by the Bank of Nova Scotia. This happened in June of this year. A pizza vendor in Oshawa went to his bank to get some rolls of change which he needed in order to settle the accounts with his customers and was charged 40 cents for every roll of 50 pennies he got from the bank.

Let me give some details of the kinds of things the banks have been doing and which, as far as we can tell, will not change at all as a result of this legislation. As reported in The Toronto Sun of August of this year, the charge for an overdraft cheque on an account will increase by $1 to $5, a 25 per cent increase. Returning an NSF cheque will cost $15, also up $1 or 7 per cent. The charge for searching for any transaction through a person's account will cost $2, up 33 per cent. If the transaction took place over 60 days previously, the charge will be $25 a hour, up 25 per cent, with the minimum charge being $15, up 50 per cent. The charge for presenting a cheque not computer encoded will rise 8 per cent to $3.50. Those are just a few examples.

Let me deal with the Royal Bank. Among other things, it will increase service charges for people holding gold, silver, term notes, demand notes, and Treasury Bills and for handling escrows. Among the increases for business services are 70 cents from 66 cents per cheque, deposit, debit or credit entry in Canadian funds; 72 cents from 68 cents for the same service in U.S. funds; $1.80 from $1.70 for each $100 of rolled coin deposited; $20 from $15 for an oral or written credit report; $25 from $20 for an oral credit report followed by a written report; and $14 from $12.50 for each NSF cheque returned. That is the charge for ordinary customers.

Let us look at what the banks will be able to do to the small businessman or woman after this Bill is enacted. After all, if one listens to Conservative Members of Parliament, to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or to the Minister of Finance, one hears repeatedly that the small business person is the backbone of the Canadian economy, that he or she creates over 80 per cent of the new jobs, and on and on. Look what this Bill will permit the banks to do to small business people.

The illustrations I will put on the record come from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which analysed this Bill. These small business people are not in any hurry to be critical of the banks, because without the banks they really cannot survive. They are captives to their particular branches, even more so than consumers who, if they get annoyed, can move their accounts from one bank to another. For small business, fear of offending the bank manager, something which might prejudice future business dealings, is a very real risk. Despite that, small business people still have major objections to this Bill.

First, the federation called for the banks to adopt a clear, open service charge policy which is consistently applied. Schedules must include the exact service on which a charge is applied, the exact price, and how long the price will be in effect. Nothing like that is in this Bill. Second, it calls for the elimination of blanket clauses used by the banks to waive the right to notice of service charge changes. In other words, small business people would like to know for some considerable period of time what the actual costs to them of services they get from the bank will be.

Third, the chargeback for NSF cheques from third parties should be eliminated as the banks have voluntarily done now for consumers. If an individual or company sends a cheque to a small business operation for work, service or goods supplied and the cheque bounces, why should the business person be charged for it?

Fourth, the federation says that bank errors should be paid for by the banks. It is saying that if an employee of the bank makes a mistake, and that mistake is caught at a later time, the cost of correcting the mistake made by the bank is charged to the small business person. How that can be justified by the banks, I cannot understand, and why the Government's legislation would not at least take care of that objection which is so obviously valid, I simply cannot understand either.

Fifth, the federation says that the communication of bank service charge policies and changes to these policies should be dramatically improved. In other words, to give the individual or business customer a booklet with 150 different ways of doing business is simply not good enough.

The CFIB suggests in its conversations with us that what small businesses really need is a yearly contract with their banks regarding services so they can plan their financial requirements. That seems to me to be a very valid, simple and justified request. As the CFIB has pointed out, the banks have traditionally accused small businesses of failing to manage and plan. Yet these unpredictable ever-increasing service charges are part of the problems of small business.

Finally, they point out that the Government's recent pronouncement on monitoring bank service charges and making changes to the Bank Act do nothing for small business. Those charges that the banks have volunteered to roll back or eliminate do not apply to small businesses. Further, they point out that given the track record of banks to date on interest rate charges on credit cards, an issue highlighted only a year ago, regulation and legislation is the way to deal with the banks.

When the Minister announced his Government's response to bank service charges as they affect consumers, he referred to "certain reprehensible and objectionable charges" having been voluntarily withdrawn, among them "recipients of NSF cheques will not be charged for depositing these cheques in their personal accounts".

Yet these same reprehensible and objectionable charges are continuing to be passed on to small business by the banks. We ask where the Government is, where the Minister is, and why the Minister does not live up to the promises he made.

When dealing with banks we are talking of a group of companies which play a tremendously important role in the economic and social life of this country. After all, the banks' decisions on whether to permit a loan, the size of the loan, the terms of the loan, and if and when the bank may call in that loan, give the banks tremendous economic and social clout.

We are not talking about some poor neighbourhood mom and pop store. We are talking about companies which are among the most profitable in this country. Let me put on record precisely what I mean. The latest figures we have are those for 1987. Let us look at bank profits and special write-down provisions, that is, their profits after regular taxes, including deferred taxes which are usually never paid, but before special write-downs they were allowed to make for tax purposes. Let us just look at how the banks did.

The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce had profits of $387 million. The Bank of Nova Scotia had profits of $381 million. The Bank of Montreal had profits of $413 million. The Toronto-Dominion Bank had profits of $528 million, and the Royal Bank, the big daddy of all the banks, had profits in 1987 of $541 million. That adds up to a total of $2.25 billion on which, as I have indicated, they paid very little in real tax.

On top of that they were permitted to make special write-downs for the huge loans they made to Third World countries, to companies like Massey-Ferguson which has disappeared, and to some of the oil companies as well. They were permitted to make a special write-down—and I do not have the time to give it bank by bank—of somewhere between $2.5 billion and $3 billion. These companies, which are among the most profitable and most powerful in this country, actually paid very little in real taxes on, as I have indicated, profits of well over $2 billion.

Let us look at the profits which they made from service charges. When you and I, Mr. Speaker, go into the bank and are charged 25 cents or 50 cents for a transaction, it does not seem like a great deal, but when you add these millions of transactions together and see what the banks charge, you get an amazing picture. Here is what banks made on service charges in 1987. The Toronto-Dominion Bank made $138 million.

Mr. Fontaine: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) is interjecting as he so frequently does. I invite him to get up and make his own speech. I say to the Hon. Member from Lévis that the figures I am giving are not figures which we pulled out of the air. They are figures provided . . .

Mr. Fontaine: Figures from NDP research.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I can ignore the Hon. Member for Lévis because 99 per cent of the time his contributions are so pointless and so useless that I really should not spend even 30 seconds dealing with them.

The figures I am putting on the record are figures supplied by the banks to the appropriate Department of the Government, whether it be the Superintendent of Insurance, Revenue Canada, or the parliamentary committee which looked into these questions. The majority of the committee's members, of course, were Conservative Members of Parliament.

The Toronto-Dominion Bank collected, in service charges, $138 million. The Canadian Imperial Bank collected $235 million; the Bank of Nova Scotia, $113 million; the Bank of Montreal, $283 million; and the Royal Bank, $365 million, for a total in 1987 of $1.134 million collected through service charges.

That may be satisfactory to the Hon. Member from Lévis and the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) who interjects almost every day when an NDP Member asks a question. He suggests that those questions come from Bob White of the Canadian Auto Workers or Shirley Carr, the President of the Canadian Labour Congress. The Hon. Member from Peace River should be much more concerned about how the banks overcharge and deal unfairly with their customers than about Shirley Carr or Bob White. The Hon. Member for Peace River, who is not here, will know what I am talking about.

Here we have a group of companies, the Big Five banks, which are among the most profitable, which pay virtually no taxes, and which have consistently ripped off their customers, whether they be individual consumers or small businessmen.

The public has demanded action and the public is not getting action because the Government is bringing in a Bill which it will be able to claim deals with the problem when in fact it is a hoax. In fact the banks will be able to continue to do almost everything they did in the past. It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that we intend to vote against this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to Statements pursuant to Standing Order 21.

OLYMPIC GAMES—CAROLYN WALDO—SYNCHRONIZED SWIMMING GOLD MEDALLIST

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is a great day for Canada, it is a great day for Canadian athletes with the gold medal won by Carolyn Waldo.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: The courage and spirit she showed were the kind of lift, as Carolyn Waldo said, that the Canadian team needed.

We have other winners. There was the stellar performance by Dave Steen of Burlington who threw off all comers to get the bronze medal in the decathlon. We have many winners representing Canada and I would like to spend a moment to read their names them into the record.

Carolyn Waldo, gold medal, Calgary; Mark Tewksbury and Victor Davis, Point-Claire, Québec; Thomas Ponting, Calgary; Sandy Goss, Toronto, silver medals, swimming; Cindy Ishoy, Hamilton, bronze medal; Ashley Nicoli, Toronto, bronze medal; Eva-Maria Pracht, Cedar Valley, bronze medal; Gina Smith, Saskatoon, bronze medal; Lori Molion, Whitby, Ontario, bronze medal; Allison Higson, Brampton, Ontario, bronze medal; Jane Kerr, Mississauga, bronze medal; Andrea Nugent, Nanton, Alberta, bronze medal; Dave Steen, Burlington, bronze medal; and Frank McLaughlin and John Millan, both of Toronto, bronze medals.

OLYMPIC GAMES—CAROLYN WALDO—SYNCHRONIZED SWIMMING GOLD MEDALLIST

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians can rejoice in Carolyn Waldo's great achievement, winning the Gold Medal for synchronized swimming.

Showing the true Olympic spirit in pursuit of excellence, Carolyn Waldo went all out in her final performance, rather than playing it safe even when the Gold Medal was in reach.

Perhaps we need to learn from athletes like Carolyn Waldo, and from coaches like Debbie Muir, that doing our honest best is even more important than winning the gold. As her coach said: "We were determined to go all out, and do extremely well to show Carolyn is a worthy champion".

We know she will take that same spirit into the duet final with Michelle Cameron a few hours from now. I am sure all Members will want to join me in saying "Thank you Carolyn Waldo, and good luck".

NATIONAL MUSEUM OF NATURAL SCIENCES

ACQUISITION OF WILLIAM PINCH MINERAL COLLECTION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the William Pinch Mineral Collection is one of the world's finest and largest. With over 16,000 specimens, many of spectacular quality, it has great potential for both display and research purposes.

It is good news that this collection is being acquired by the National Museum of Natural Sciences for incorporation into the National Mineral Collection of Canada.

It will cost some $7 million to acquire the collection and provide suitable public display facilities but this will not be borne by the taxpayers at large. The money is being raised by private donations. About three million dollars has already been pledged by some 64 corporations and a number of individuals.

Further donations to this worth-while public purpose would be welcomed by the trustees.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POLISH PRISONER OF WAR SURVIVORS

Mr. Ken James (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the contribution to world peace by the Polish people is a well known historical fact. Unfortunately, many of the Polish military were displaced following the Second World War as they could not return to a country which had succumbed to communism.

Polish soldiers fought alongside Canadian troops in Italy as part of the 8th Army during the Second World War. The famous Polish "Blue" Division, which distinguished itself during the decisive Battle of Warsaw, was trained at Niagara-on-the-Lake in 1917.

Our ties are close and I believe that consideration of this closeness must be granted to the Polish prisoner of war survivors.

Given our close ties and the courage and sense of community Polish Canadians have brought to our country, I urge the Government of Canada to reconsider the existing legislation and allow the remaining Polish veterans to be eligible for prisoner of war compensation benefits.

NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

AWARD WON BY UNITED NATIONS FOR PEACEKEEPING—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, Canadian soldiers are among those who have been honoured as recipients of the Nobel Peace Prize. Our nation's highly respected and competent role in peacekeeping had its strong foundation put in place by Canadian statesmen such as the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson and the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent.

So well did these Canadian statesmen lay that foundation for our country's role in peacekeeping endeavours that those Canadian principles have continued to develop and grow in the years since and have culminated in world-wide recognition, respect, and trust on the part of Canadians.

In a speech in the House on August 24, during debate on a motion dealing with peacekeeping, I stated that our Canadian soldiers are among the best diplomats that we have in the Government's service when serving abroad. They are politicians in their own right because they have to understand fully the people with whom they are dealing, and finally, they are among the best trained professional soldiers in the world.

Peacekeeping is worth the price. As a nation that is looked upon as a middle power in the world, as a country that has many friends all over the world, along with the Nobel Peace Prize there is no greater tribute that can be paid to our Canadian Armed Forces than for the Parliament of Canada and all Canadians to say "Thank you for your efforts and we wish you continued success. We are firmly behind you in your mission".

Canadians are a humble people. The meek shall inherit the earth. Canada and our Armed Forces will continue to try to make that a peaceful world.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

BELL NORTHERN RESEARCH—EXPANSION PROJECT IN NEPEAN

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Bell Northern Research announced today that it reached an agreement with the National Capital Commission to lease 300 acres of land adjacent to BNR's world headquarters laboratory complex in Nepean.

BNR plans to use the leased land to consolidate its various laboratory facilities in the Ottawa-Carleton region. This development will be the world headquarters for Bell Northern Research and one of the largest research and development facilities of its kind in the world.

This project will have an enormous positive impact on the economy of the national capital region. It will result in the creation of 4,000 new jobs in the high technology area.

The NCC will acquire other environmentally sensitive land in the National Capital Region to offset the impact of the use of Greenbelt land with proceeds from the lease.

This project is good for Nepean and good for Canada. It is consistent with both research and development and environmental protection.

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL DEFICIT—POSITION OF BUSINESS ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, for more than 10 years the organizations representing big and small business, including the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and some very prominent businessmen like Mr. Robert Campeau have been warning Governments that the deficits that federal and provincial Governments have permitted and continued are unacceptable, and will lead to disaster for our country.

The Conservative Government supposedly made the reduction of the deficit a major part of its policy. In the last couple of months the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Ministers have made promises. We have totalled the cost of those promises to be somewhere between $15 billion and $20 billion.

What astounds me is the cynicism of these business organizations that, after all the years of preaching restraint, are completely silent about the problems that will be created by implementing these promises that will cost billions of dollars to Canadians. They should put up or shut up.

The Government has talked about reducing the deficit. Why does it not say what these promises will mean to Canadians in the next five to ten years?

ENERGY

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, after analyzing the current low world prices for oil and gas, and recognizing the extreme difficulties small and medium sized producers have in raising risk capital, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) announced today an adjustment in the phase-down of the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program.

The incentive rate from October 1, 1988, to June 30, 1989, will drop from 33-1/3 per cent to 25 per cent. As of July 1, 1989, until December 31, 1989, the rate will be 16-2/3 per cent. The cap remains at $10 million per company or related companies.

The Minister has also recognized the number of jobs in western Canada that are totally dependent on the petroleum industry. This incentive means a further $80 million will be injected into the industry, which will keep the rigs working, protecting jobs and helping to replace Canada's depleting conventional oil reserves.

TRADE

STEEL EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Bethlehem Steel Corporation in the United States wants U.S. trade authorities to slap punitive duties on imports of steel rails from Sydney Steel Corporation and Algoma Steel Corporation.

Bethlehem says that Canadian producers are benefiting from Canadian government loans, grants, and other subsidies. This is clear proof that the Americans consider regional development as a subsidy under the trade agreement. The term subsidy under the agreement is not to be defined for seven years, which the Government hoped would more than allow it to get through the election without Canadians knowing the truth.

There is no level playing field with this trade agreement. It is tilted in favour of the United States. If the Government has any concern whatsoever remaining for Canadian workers, it will not allow this regulatory invasion of Canada by the United States. I ask the Government, for once, to stand up for Canadian industry.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, it has been four years since the Conservatives started a number of changes.

Mr. Speaker, we of the Conservative Government will continue in the same vein during the nineties.

That is what Canadians want. And good-bye to my Conservative friends!

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

PARLIAMENT HILL PLANT WATERING CONTRACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, today is the last day of employment for the four mentally handicapped adults who water plants on Parliament Hill. For the past 10 years the Ottawa and District Association for the Mentally Retarded has successfully bid for the contract to water the 5,000 plants in federal buildings. The Parliament Hill contract, at a cost of $3.50 per plant per month, ends today because a private sector competitor submitted a bid of 35 cents per plant per month lower.

I find it appalling that, in the International Decade of the Disabled, the Government is allowing this immensely worthwhile employment project to expire in order to save 35 cents per month. The project provided mentally handicapped adults with an opportunity to perform useful and productive work, and to feel valued as productive members of society.

Mentally handicapped adults face incredible obstacles in our society. In view of those obstacles, the federal Government should demonstrate leadership in recognizing the important contributions of the disabled. Instead, it is backing down on its commitment to disabled Canadians. In allowing those policies to be dictated by market forces, it is abandoning the sense of social compassion that makes Canadian society unique.

I call upon the Government to rethink its policy on employment contracts for the disabled. Governments should be providing leadership in these matters. This incident is not one I would want the private sector to follow—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni.

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's successful launch of the space shuttle can be compared to another launch, soon to occur.

Picture it, Mr. Speaker. The supportive polls are in place; the captain and the crew are looking good. Suddenly, with a burst of speed (and a visit to the Governor General) lift-off is accomplished.

The booster tanks—NDP hot air on one side, Liberal hot air on the other—lift the Big Blue Machine into the heavens.

Then they separate. Both the Liberal and socialist boosters fall to earth, their fuel expended. And the mean, lean, PC machine soars to the heavens where it belongs.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

VILLAGE OF LEMIEUX—LANDSLIDE HAZARD

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, there is a quiet village in my riding by the name of Lemieux. Unfortunately, this community is located on the banks of the South Nation River. Its banks are made of lead clay and are subject to landslides. There have been three such landslides in 1895, 1910, and 1971.

The last landslide engulfed 70 acres of land adjacent to the village. Studies have now determined that the whole village could slide into the river. The village must be moved to another site. This will result in tremendous disruption for the people of my riding. People need financial assistance to do this. I know that the Province of Ontario is working actively to help those people.

I now call upon Environment Canada or any other arm of the federal Government to provide assistance to the people of Lemieux in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. Let us not wait for another St.-Jean-Vianney before we act.

I wish I had time to pay tribute individually to each of these men and women. However, may I mention five Hon. Members whose lengthy and honourable service merits special acknowledgement. They are the Hon. Member for Durham—Northumberland who completes 30 years in the Ontario and federal Legislatures; the three retiring members of the class of '57, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain, the Hon. Member for Cumberland Colchester, and the Hon. Member for South Shore; and the Hon. Member for Bow River who completes a combined total of 48 years in the Alberta and Canadian Parliaments.

I have been privileged to serve here with these Hon. Members. While they will not be returning to the House, their contributions to Parliament and to the country will not be forgotten.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH TO UNITED NATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we seem to be a little thin here this morning. I say, on behalf of the Member for Oshawa, that we mean on the government side.

My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Last night I was in Winnipeg and I have to say that the people of Winnipeg were not at all surprised that the Prime Minister made an announcement about Winnipeg from New York City. That was very much appreciated.

During his only other speech to the United Nations on October 23, 1985, the Prime Minister had the following to say to the Assembly: " . . . if there are no fundamental changes in South Africa, we are prepared to invoke total sanctions against that country and its repressive regime. If there is no progress in the dismantling of apartheid, our relations with South Africa may have to be severed absolutely".

When the Prime Minister made that statement to the United Nations three years ago he received world-wide praise. However, the blunt fact is that the Prime Minister broke his word. He has not invoked total sanctions against South Africa. He has not severed diplomatic relations.

Why did the Prime Minister break his word to Canadians and to the world?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian I was very proud of the address delivered by our Prime Minister to the United Nations yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I would like to quote the Prime Minister's words when he said: "Consistent with our policy of moving systematically and deliberately to increase pressure on South Africa our Government announced earlier this week specific new measures to tighten the ban on government contracts with South African companies, and a further ban on high technology".

What is important about this approach is that it has been endorsed by the leaders of the Front Line States in southern Africa. I would refer the Leader of the Opposition to the words of those who best know the situation in southern Africa. President Mugabe has told our Prime Minister—and I want to quote his words because I see the Leader of the Opposition laughing. Mr. Mugabe told our Prime Minister privately and publicly that he endorsed the anti-apartheid measures that Canada has taken, and that further steps are not necessary at this time.

I want to say that ours is a consistent and pressurized approach on the South African Government that is bringing results.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Communications in her role as Acting Prime Minister did not, I am sure, feel too comfortable in congratulating her Prime Minister for breaking his word.

IMPOSITION OF SANCTIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on September 13, 1985, a week earlier, in this House of Commons the Secretary of State for External Affairs had this to say:

> South Africa should have no doubt that we will invoke full sanctions unless there is tangible movement away from apartheid.

That was on September 13, 1985. The situation, as the Minister knows, has deteriorated since then.

The Prime Minister restated that position at the United Nations on October 23, 1985, and again in this House of Commons on October 28, 1985, in almost the same words. Why did the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs make those promises to the world, and to Canadians, if they did not intend to keep their word? They did not talk about partial sanctions. They did not talk about travel embargoes. They talked about breaking diplomatic relations and imposing total economic sanctions.

The situation has deteriorated in South Africa. Why did the Prime Minister not keep his word yesterday by imposing total sanctions and breaking diplomatic relations?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Canadian Government is to move in a deliberate and systematic way toward total sanctions, and that is what we are doing. That approach is endorsed by the majority of members of the Commonwealth. It is endorsed by the leaders of the Front Line States in southern Africa. It is endorsed by those who best know the terrible situation which exists in South Africa and who really want to do something to help reverse the terrible blight of apartheid.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the deliberate speed invoked by the Acting Prime Minister is a disguise for a hasty retreat from a position made firmly three years ago by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Let's face it. The Prime Minister used the United Nations yesterday as an advanced photo opportunity for the election campaign.

[Translation]

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH SOUTH AFRICA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister had announced he would impose full economic sanctions and break off diplomatic relations with South Africa, but he failed to keep his word.

Why did he bother to go to New York and address the United Nations, if it was not his intention yesterday to keep his word and announce that he would break off diplomatic relations with South Africa and, in fact, break off all relations, both diplomatic and economic, with that country?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (The Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the cynicism and low level tactics of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition know no bounds.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That's why he is in third place.

Miss MacDonald: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition seeks to discredit the United Nations—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: —and the appearance of the Prime Minister of Canada before the United Nations. I am absolutely amazed, Sir, that in a forum where one looks for a non-partisan approach, such as the United Nations—

Ms. Copps: What about sanctions?

Miss MacDonald: —the fact is that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition seeks to score cheap political points, cheap partisan points, which he thinks will gain him some advantage in this country. That is absolutely reprehensible.

Mr. Gauthier: Order! She is not answering the question.

Miss MacDonald: Canadians are much better attuned to world events than the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

OLYMPIC GAMES—DISQUALIFIED CANADIAN ATHLETE—SUSPENSION FROM NATIONAL TEAM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the Ben Johnson case. Throughout this entire affair the actions of the Government have been contradictory and certainly worrisome, to say the least.

Last Friday the Prime Minister called to congratulate Ben. Then on Monday the Minister for Fitness and Amateur Sport, supported by the Prime Minister, condemned Ben to a lifetime suspension. On Tuesday the former Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport suggested that Ben Johnson, in his belief, is innocent and that Canada should fight to defend his honour. Then on Wednesday the Prime Minister reversed himself and ordered a full inquiry under the leadership of the Deputy Prime Minister to grant Mr. Johnson an opportunity to clear his name.

How can the Acting Prime Minister justify and explain the contradictory actions of the Government in the face of the Ben Johnson story? More important, will she now do the honourable and correct thing and suspend the lifetime suspension until this inquiry, under full process, has been given a chance to look into this matter, conduct hearings and make the appropriate recommendations? Does the Government not think that this would be the fair and judicious process with which to proceed in this very crucial matter?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I think every Canadian sympathizes with the situation of Ben Johnson, certainly for being an athlete and a person who represented us well and who is now in some difficulty. We can sympathize with him.

I have no problem sharing in that sympathy. But what I have a great deal of difficulty with is the position of the Liberal Party that would apply sanctions to all athletes in Canada, according to the rules and policies we have had up until now, but in the case of one athlete, in particular, for political reasons would take a different position. I think it is dishonest. It is inconsistent. It is not compatible with the truth and our approach as a Government, but it is typical of the Liberal Party of Canada.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, what I have difficulty with is being a Canadian and being embarrassed and appalled in watching the Prime Minister shift gears and shift positions on this one issue of a champion, a Canadian citizen, in front of the international community, depending on where he thinks public opinion is going to be. That is what I have difficulty with.

CONDUCT OF PROPOSED INQUIRY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): I return to the Acting Prime Minister. Given the fact that the Prime Minister has asked the Deputy Prime Minister to head this inquiry rather than the current Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport, and given that that obviously signals a loss of confidence, why does the Minister and the Government, rather than simply shifting another important dossier on to the Deputy Prime Minister, not replace the existing Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport with an individual who enjoys the confidence of the Government and Canadians?

Will the Government assure this House that that inquiry will be fully public, because it has not committed itself to that? And will it commence immediately following the completion of the Olympic Games this Sunday? Can the Minister give this House and Canadians that important assurance?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, let me repeat the exact process. In the case of Mr. Johnson, as in the case of other athletes who are now competing in the Olympics, when a first test is positive, a whole detailed process comes into play for the B test, and that is exactly what happened in the case of Mr. Johnson. There is then a opportunity for Mr. Johnson and the Canadian Olympic Association to be heard and to present their arguments.

They had that opportunity. They were heard. The Medical Commission then reached a conclusion, transmitted that conclusion to the Executive Committee which then made a decision. That is the first decision. Once that happens, our policy since 1983—and the sanction changed in 1985-86—automatically kicks in. It automatically, in the case of Mr. Johnson, as in the case of all other athletes in Canada, applies.

Mr. Marchi: You had the option, Sir.

Mr. Charest: We applied the policy in a very consistent way as we have done for all other athletes in this country.

May I add in conclusion that, if there are any medals to be won in the category of political hypocrisy, the Liberal Party would win gold, silver, and bronze, and that is in the dope category.

DISASTERS

SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND TRAGEDY—GOVERNMENT COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS—RESPECT FOR PROMISES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who is today responsible for the Environment.

The day after the PCB disaster at Saint-Basile-le-Grand, I asked the Governement to share the cost of compensating the people affected by this disaster. The Government said yes, and subsequently, the Minister of Transport, speaking directly to the people in that area, said that the federal Government, and I quote: " . . . will match every dollar provided by Quebec."

My question is this: Why did the federal Goverment fail to keep its word?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Minister of National Defence gave a detailed explanation of the agreement between the federal Government and the provinces concerning federal contributions in case of disasters. I could repeat those words, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps the Hon. Member would care to read the details in yesterday's Hansard at page 19,773.

• (1130)

PROMISE OF TRANSPORT MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question directly. The Minister of Transport promised the people of the region that the federal Government intended to share (the cost) dollar for dollar with the Government of Quebec. That is the promise of the Minister of Transport. And now, this Minister (Miss MacDonald) repeated what the Minister of National Defence said yesterday; that is, we have another example of a promise broken by the Government. That is the case.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): No!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister says no. But why did the Minister of Transport directly promise Quebecers that the federal Government intended to share (the cost) equally? Why?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I made clear that the Minister of National Defence explained the formula in case of disasters yesterday and I ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa to read his words.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I read his words and that is why I am asking this question. It is because the Minister of National Defence said one thing, but the Minister of Transport told Quebecers the opposite, for political reasons. I understand that very well.

AIR CANADA

TRANSPORTATION OF PCBS TO WALES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have another question concerning the Government's hypocrisy, to put it directly, on this matter.

A week ago we saw a couple of Ministers on television attacking Air Canada for transporting PCBs from Canada to Wales, fully consistent with federal regulations. If the Government is sincere and not just playing political games, instead of attacking Air Canada for acting on federal regulations, why does it not change those regulations?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important to note that the Minister of Transport wrote to the President of Air Canada expressing the view of the Government of Canada. He said in his letter, and it has been made public, "I would like to receive your immediate assurance that Air Canada will not carry PCB waste or similar waste on aircraft carrying passengers". He made that very explicit to the President of Air Canada.

DISASTERS

SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND TRAGEDY—MINISTER OF TRANSPORT'S PROMISE TO COMPENSATE VICTIMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the acting Prime Minister. I want her to adjust her set because I want to read to her the words reported and heard on CKAC on August 26, 1988 at 7.45 p.m., on the program Dimension. These are the words of the Minister of Transport.

The message is very short. The message is very simple. It is simply to tell you that the Government of Canada intends to be involved and there are various programs. Ottawa will put in as much money as Quebec so that "we can deal with the situation in the best possible way." So said Benoît Bouchard.

Can the Minister explain to me what those words mean, in view of what the Minister of National Defence said yesterday?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already explained that the Minister of National Defence, who is responsible for this dossier, gave the details on this matter yesterday in the House of Commons. I want to assure the Hon. Member that certain conditions have to be met. The province must put in an official request for compensation and assistance. That is the process which must be followed.

[Translation]

SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND TRAGEDY—COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the Minister of Communications in her capacity of Acting Prime Minister. She heard the statement made by the Minister of Transport on August 26, which was clear and specific. Let's not confuse the issue! The fact is that the Minister of Transport promised a dollar for a dollar, not half, not one-quarter, not 25 cents, 35 cents or 50 cents, but a dollar for a dollar! I would like to ask the Minister whether the Minister of Transport's word is worth at least a dollar. If it is not, is the Minister of National Defence going to try to make us forget what the Minister of Transport said by contradicting the Minister of Transport and, in the process, make it clear to us and to the people of Saint-Basile-le-Grand that the Minister of Transport lied outright?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already explained that the Government of Canada will certainly meet its obligations in this regard in co-operation with the Government of the Province of Québec. Any request for assistance will come through that process, and will be honoured.

EXTERNAL AID

PERCENTAGE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister and concerns a broken promise of the Conservative Party in 1984. Back then the Conservative Party, and I have the literature here with me, made a promise to "increase Canada's contribution to official development assistance to 0.7 per cent of GNP by 1990". In other words, it promised to increase our foreign aid budget to 0.7 per cent by 1990.

We have now heard from the Minister responsible that we will be hitting 0.5 per cent by 1990. Why has the Conservative Party broken its promise to the Canadian people? Why does the Government keep on breaking promises? How can we trust it and believe it when it is breaking promises like this?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we know the hon. gentlemen opposite are feeling increasing tension as their time comes to a close.

Mr. Broadbent: Tell us about St. John's East again, John.

Mr. Crosbie: That is illustrated by the questions they are asking this morning. The fact is there are no promises unkept. The Government remains committed to the ODA target which is 0.50 per cent by 1991, and 0.60 per cent by 1995. We have confirmed that before. There has been significant growth in ODA. In 1987-88 over $2.6 billion was spent by the Government on ODA.

Will the Member listen to this or is he going to talk to his Leader, who is also very nervous? Over $2.6 billion was spent by the Government on ODA, an increase of about $100 million, or 4.1 per cent over the previous year, and a 23 per cent increase—that is a twenty-three per cent increase—over the $2.1 billion spent in 1984-85. Will the hon. gentleman now get up and apologize for what he said?

Mr. Nystrom: It is no wonder that, when the Rhinoceros Party looks at the Hon. Minister, it calls for "freedom of Screech" in Newfoundland.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for External Relations said recently that we will hit the target of 0.7 per cent by the year 2000. In light of that, can the Minister explain why the Conservative Party promised in 1984 that we would reach the target of 0.7 per cent by the year 1990? Why this ten-year delay? Why this breach of a promise? Why did the Minister break a promise made to the people of this country back in 1984?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this was all explained in detail, I recall, by our fantastic Minister of Finance several years ago when he dealt with this matter.

ODA performance fell a little short of the target in 1987-88.

Mr. Broadbent: A little short?

Mr. Crosbie: The question is why. It was because our GDP expanded at a greater rate than anyone could have anticipated as a result of the efforts of the Minister of Finance. We have introduced other measures to improve the quality of ODA. There is an all-grant program. There is increased untying of bilateral aid. We have also entered into major ODA debt forgiveness for the sub-Sahara African countries. The Hon. Member should be on his feet congratulating the Government on how it has improved the quality of our aid.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

TABLING OF REPORT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Employment or the Acting Prime Minister.

In 1986 the Government rammed through Parliament a weak employment equity Bill which we said would not do the job for women, minorities, and the disabled because it contained no sanctions. Now, according to Section 6 of that Bill, all employers were to report progress to the Minister by June 1, 1988, and according to Section 9 the Minister was to report to Parliament as soon as possible after June 1 and not later than the end of this year.

It is now three months past the June 1 date and the Minister has not tabled the report. Will the Minister explain why the report has not been tabled, and when does she intend to table the said report?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't need to be reminded of how vigorously members of the Liberal Party have opposed employment equity. I remember very well how they opposed it when the Bill was going through the House.

I want to tell the Hon. Member, in case he has not realized it, that the work flowing from that legislation has brought about employment equity in a great number of firms. The reports have come into the Department of Employment and Immigration and are being compiled at the present time.

That report will be made public as was stated at the time the Bill was going through the House.

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE TABLED IN OCTOBER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Government is hiding this employment equity report because there has been no progress on employment equity, and there has been no progress on employment equity because there are no sanctions in the Bill as recommended by the Abella Commission, the target groups, and the Opposition.

Will the Government make a commitment to table this report before the end of October so that the people of Canada can make a judgment with respect to this program before any federal election? Will she do that and be fair with the Canadian people?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the benefits of employment equity. I want to assure the Member, who had looked at this when he was the employment critic, that 600,000 women who have come into the labour force, who have new jobs, are saying yes, indeed, employment equity is improving in this country. There are 600,000 more women at work today than there were in 1984, Mr. Speaker.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that if he would look at the number of companies that have contracts with the federal Government and which have already signed agreements to have employment equity as a condition of those contracts he would see how it is working.

PRIVATIZATION

AIR CANADA SHARE ISSUE—MARKETING AND ADVERTISING COSTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Privatization.

Can the Minister confirm that $7 million has been assigned for marketing and advertising of the Air Canada share issue? Can he explain why, since this would appear to contravene the regulations of the Ontario Securities Commission and other securities commissions?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I thank the Hon. Members for their applause, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I can confirm the figure to which the Hon. Member has referred.

Ms. Copps: The tax king of Canada.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is nothing contrary to the Securities Commission here. The expenses are made up with the normal things that you would expect in an issue, printing, share certificates, and advertising. I should comment that the advertising budget was somewhat greater than normal because we had, with Air Canada, asked the underwriters themselves to participate with us in broadening the market as much as we possibly could in this issue so that many Canadians could participate.

Ms. Copps: You were advertising pure and simple.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The result of this was a broad advertising program with a marketing programming in which the underwriters themselves participated. The result is that we will probably have close to 100,000 Canadians who will be shareholders in this company.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the brokers I talk to tell me if they hyped an issue like this, they would lose their licences.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Since the shares are priced to sell, the demand is strong, so would the Minister not agree that this $7 million was a frivolous and unnecessary expense?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member checks comparable size issues she would find that a great many fewer people participated in those issues, that there was much broader institutional participation and fewer average investors.

What we were striving for here was the broadest number of average investors we could get. I think the results of this issue speak for themselves. Close to 100,000 new investors in this company is an indication of a very successful issue and a very successful effort in exposing the issue to as many people as possible.

If I could add just one more thing, Mr. Speaker, I do a lot of travelling which I am sure is no surprise, and I talk to people from Air Canada. One of the real successes in the Air Canada issue is the broad number of employees from Air Canada—I think it is something like 70 per cent of employees—who have participated in this issue as well, which indicates their commitment to the company they work for, and it is certainly an indication of the success they expect Air Canada will have in the future as a company owned by individual shareholders.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Did you have to spend $7 million?

Oral Questions

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

VACANT HOUSES IN KITCHENER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Housing. As he is aware, Canada Mortgage and Housing owns some 80 townhouses in the city of Kitchener, Ontario, which have been sitting empty for about eight years because the housing was built on top of a garbage and landfill site and methane gas has been leaking into the houses.

I went to Kitchener a few weeks ago and took a look at the houses and the site. The Member for Kitchener said that he would "never in good conscience recommend to his child to move in there", and that in his opinion "the complex should be bulldozed".

Will the Minister agree that in the interests of public safety those houses should be bulldozed and the area cleaned up?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that CMHC did not build these units. They were zoned by the municipality and permitted to be built back, I believe, in 1974-75. In 1976 it was found out that methane gas was seeping from an adjacent property. I do not believe the complex is built on top of the land site but is adjacent to it.

CMHC's position has always been that until the appropriate authorities signify what a safe level of methane gas is, it will not allow these properties to be occupied. CMHC is working with the provincial, municipal, and regional Governments to come to a decision on what the safe level might be. CMHC is also examining ways of taking methane gas away from the area. But I can tell the Hon. Member that no one will move into the units that CMHC owns until safe levels have been set. I do not think bulldozing at this time is the answer.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER VISIT SITE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same Minister. The reason I went to see that site was to see for myself what kind of condition the site was in and also to talk to people in the surrounding area. I want to suggest to the Minister that the housing is actually built on top of a garbage dump and that is from where the methane gas is coming.

Let me suggest to the Minister that he himself should visit the site and take a look around it. If the Minister wants, I would be quite happy to go with him at that time.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy the company of my hon. friend, whether we are flying back and forth to our ridings in Toronto.

This matter has been drawn to my attention by the Hon. Member for Kitchener and the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean).

I hope to get there in the not too distant future and look at that particular project. If I do, I will be more than happy to have the Hon. Member accompany me.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BARRIERE LAKE INDIAN BAND—DEMONSTRATION ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. On Wednesday, 16 members of the Barriere Lake Algonquin Indian Band were arrested and their tents were dismantled and seized after they had set them up on Parliament Hill. This removal of the Barriere Lake Algonquins symbolizes what is happening in their home territory which is being threatened by clear-cut logging.

Why has the Prime Minister, or at least the Minister of Indian Affairs, not been willing to meet with these people to work out with them a plan by which together they could meet with the Quebec Government and ensure that their traditional way of life will not be destroyed?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had done his homework and had looked at what we did, he would have realized that I met twice with the Chief and his representative in a period of two days, without notice. I have offered the Indian Band in question our full support in contacting the Government of Quebec, which the Hon. Member should understand has jurisdiction over the lands in question.

I have personally talked to my Quebec colleague, Minister Savoie, with regard to setting up a meeting with the Indians, and I am informed this morning by the Member of Parliament for the area involved that in fact they are on their way to Quebec to meet with the provincial Minister.

The issue has been handled. We have offered our support and we will do whatever we can to help the Barriere Lake Indian Band solve the problem.

REQUEST THAT TENTS SEIZED BY POLICE BE RELEASED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of State has said was clearly not enough to satisfy the Barriere Lake Indians who felt themselves driven to the extreme measure of having to set up camp on Parliament Hill on Wednesday. These are desperate people.

I would ask the Minister if he would at least ensure that the tents are released so that the people can go fall hunting. Will the Government support their request for an eight-month moratorium on all clear-cut logging in the area while another alternate environmental plan can be worked out? Will the Government commit itself to a political and a technical process with the Band and with the Quebec Government to ensure that their traditional way of life is not destroyed? Will the Government act as an advocate?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member points to a situation that did not begin in 1984. It is noteworthy that these people have had the problem for a long, long time, some 20 years, and no one had addressed it.

Mr. Manly: You have done nothing.

Mr. Valcourt: We have met with them.

The Hon. Member talks about interfering in the administration of justice. I understand that the police have taken action. The socialists, of course, would always intervene in police work. That is not my job to do. My job is to work with the Chief and with the people to help them get Quebec to discuss the issues they have raised. We have made that commitment and we intend to follow up on it.

ENERGY

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Government has had no trouble giving billions of dollars to the big oil companies, but today the Minister of Energy reduced the assistance to small and medium oil companies under the Canadian Exploration Development Incentive Program.

I know the Government considers small and medium oil and gas companies a nuisance even though most of them are Canadian, but to reduce funding at this time of low world oil prices will be extremely harmful. Why is the Government trying to put the small and medium oil companies out of business?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has referred to an announcement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources this morning, and he says we decreased. In fact we increased. We increased the amount of assistance available from 16 and 2/3 per cent to 25 per cent in the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program, CEDIP.

The Hon. Member has said that we view this part of the industry as a nuisance. I do not know where the Hon. Member has been over the last four years, but the policies of this Government in the energy field have been directed at bringing back that part of the industry that was destroyed, absolutely destroyed during the 1980-81-82 period.

I visited many parts of Alberta and talked to those people he is referring to as a nuisance. They may be a nuisance in the minds of the Liberal Party because that is how the previous Government treated that part of the oil and gas industry. It treated it as a nuisance, and sent so many of them south of the border during that time. That is how that industry was destroyed.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance better stop smoking that stuff, because he really knows that it is one-third now, and the small and medium oil and gas companies wanted to keep it at one-third. However, as of October 1 it is reduced from one-third to one-quarter.

The Minister was not short of funds for the big oil companies, but if he was short of funds, he could have reduced the total amount available from $10 million to $5 million instead of reducing the percentage. He is acting contrary to what the small and medium producers wanted.

The Government says it wants Canadianization but it is putting Canadian companies out of business. Why is the Government refusing to acknowledge the damage being done to small and medium oil companies by the OPEC-orchestrated low world oil prices?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said we did not give the industry exactly what it wanted. I do not think we have given anyone in this country exactly what he or she wanted. That is the way the Liberal Government used to operate, throw the money around, make everybody happy.

Mr. Tobin: You have the face of a robber's horse.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What we have done is looked at the proposal that this—

Mr. Tobin: Give us a break, Mike, sit down. Issue the writ, call the election.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Clearly, the Hon. Member—

Mr. Tobin: You have more nerve than a toothache.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Clearly the Member from Newfoundland is getting a little twitchy. His collar is probably getting a bit too tight because of the pressure he is under now. I know that when you are third in the polls, just bumping up against the libertarian party, it is tough.

Oral Questions

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and relates to what he referred to in his previous answer. When his Leader was running for election in 1984 he promised that he would not be bribing us with our own money. That promise has been rehashed this week by the new Leader of the Opposition.

Does the Minister believe that the way money has been spent and thrown around in the last couple of weeks has been good for the Canadian economy and the Canadian taxpayers?

Mr. Broadbent: I want to record this one. Let's hear it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The socialist promises are pure hypocrisy.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend has used a word which I think is very appropriate, hypocrisy. I think that when the Hon. Member looks at himself in the mirror, he will not be able to believe what he just heard come out of his lips. What we have demonstrated over the course of the last four years and what we propose to generate if we are re-elected—

Some Hon. Members: When.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —after this next election—

Mr. Broadbent: When?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Very soon, very soon. What we will see is a continuation of the fiscal responsibility that we have demonstrated very clearly over the last four years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have brought down the deficit every year for three years running, the first time that has happened since the war. That is a commitment that we made to the Canadian people and it is a commitment we will continue to make to the Canadian people during the course of this campaign.

REGIONAL PROJECTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister, and I believe it is a serious question. Canadians want their MPs to fight for projects in their provinces and their regions, but they want the Government to have some kind of sense of fiscal responsibility and fairness.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1200)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: The question is very straightforward. Why has this Government been a complete failure over the last four years in making sure there is an honest bidding system, and making sure that when the Prime Minister promises roads, airports, and services to remote parts of his riding, it is done for all of the remote areas of Canada?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I see. That is fiscal responsibility.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can't believe what I am hearing from this Hon. Member. He represents the Party that has called for an $11 billion annual—annual—child care program.

Mr. Broadbent: You're wrong again. That's your propaganda you believe.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No, it's your proposal.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is the same Party, whose Leader, every time we brought forward any proposal to cut government spending, was the first one on his feet acting as self-righteous as he possibly can—

Mr. Broadbent: Wrong again! Wrong again!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —saying the Conservatives shouldn't be cutting spending on this program, we shouldn't allow this type of change to be made.

Mr. Broadbent: Do you ever tell the truth over there? Try the truth for a change, Michael.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. The drought in many parts of Canada has reduced the production of grain and oilseeds. Is the Minister in a position to announce a program at this time? If so, would he share that with Members of the House and Canadians?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is well known that there have been some major production problems this year because of weather, heat, and lack of moisture. It will be a more difficult problem to address than we have had in the last couple of years. People are going to need more assistance than will be able to be provided by crop insurance.

We are in the process of consulting with producers and with the provincial Governments, Ontario and the other provinces, in order to devise a program that will target the assistance and see that it goes to the producers who have suffered the most as a result of lack of production.

We are well along in that process and hopefully we will have some announcements made as quickly as we can so that producers know there is assistance coming. That will be of some assistance to them in meeting their financial commitments this fall.

I should also say that we anticipate a very large payment under crop insurance, likely to be close to $1 billion. There will also be some payments available under the Western Grain Stabilization Fund for the western part of the country.

Mr. Broadbent: What is the total, Michael? What does it add up to?

Mr. Mayer: We are looking to do what we can for other areas, especially Ontario, that are affected by the lack of production this summer as well.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

HEALTH

HEMOPHILIACS WITH AIDS VIRUS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Six weeks ago the Minister met with the Canadian Hemophilia Society with respect to its proposal for a compensation package to assist the 1,000 Canadian hemophiliacs who tested positive for the AIDS virus. Given that we are expecting an election call very shortly, probably within the next few minutes or the next hour—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —I would like to ask the Minister if he could—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You're two days late.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister whether he will commit today in the House before the dissolution to a compensation package for hemophiliacs who have contracted the AIDS virus as a result of deficient government blood supplies.

Mr. Tobin: It is a serious question. It needs a serious answer.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the preamble of the Hon. Member, if she knows something about leaving ships and stories about people leaving ships, of course she will have to address that.

I met with the Hemophiliac Society on August 15. We have had discussions. That was not the first. It gave us a proposal but I am not going to be making an announcement today or in the immediate days ahead.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

BLOOD SUPPLY—COMPENSATION QUERY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, what I think we have here is a national tragedy. We have a national tragedy where 50 per cent of patients with hemophilia have received the AIDs virus as a result of tainted blood supply which was under the direction of the Government. I do not expect the Minister to announce a dollar figure today in the House. I do expect him to endorse the principle of compensation for the 50 per cent of hemophiliac victims who are currently facing an uncertain future because they have contracted the AIDS virus. Will the Minister commit today to the principle of compensation for those hemophiliac victims?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what should be mentioned to the House and to those I have met with, with respect to the Hemophiliac Society—the first point that has to be made, I think, is that some of the statements the Hon. Member makes are probably made for political rhetoric rather than for health reasons.

Mr. Tobin: Come on, Jake!

Ms. Copps: Sit down!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I mean that, because when the Member talks about trying to tie in government with irresponsibility, that has simply not been the case. This has been an international situation. Blood products up to the fall of 1985 were not heat treated and that was not only a Canadian situation, that was as the AIDS issue developed. This Government then insisted that all product be heat treated. Even today, within medical circles there is a question of whether we should go from one method of heat treatment to another.

Second, blood products coming into Canada, or Canadian products, are under the control of the Canadian Blood Committee which is a committee of federal and provincial members—

Ms. Copps: Under your direction.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —appointed by both provincial and federal Governments. So this Government took action as early or earlier than other countries.

With respect to the principle of compensation, as was my first answer today, I cannot give a commitment as this time.

VACANCY

CARIBOO—CHILCOTIN—LORNE GREENAWAY, BY RESIGNATION

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, Lorne Greenaway, Esquire, Member for the electoral district of Cariboo—Chilcotin, by resignation.

Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

PETITIONS

PROTECTION OF NATURAL RESOURCES ON RESERVES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a significant and important petition to submit. The signatures have been collected and presented by 230 students, young Canadians, who attend Lisgar Collegiate Institute. Perhaps it is the first time they have become involved in the political process. They are concerned about an issue which they would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker.

The Algonquin Indians of La Verendrye Park who were demonstrating before the Centre Block a few days ago have put forward an issue which requires your attention, namely, the right to protect natural resources on the reserves and the land which they occupy and have occupied for centuries from the devastation caused by the lumber industry and by hunters who take away from them the natural resources on which their livelihood depends.

• (1210)

The petition is duly prepared and certified and is submitted for your consideration.

LABELLING OF FOOD INGREDIENTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present 7,000 signatures to add to the 20,000 signatures which have already been put forward petitioning the Government on the issue of food labelling, given that many restaurants do not provide a complete list of ingredients in take-out foods.

I would like to present these with a special tribute to Christian and Betty Lou Taylor. Christian Taylor died as a result of eating fast food from a particular restaurant. His mother has been carrying on this battle. For Mrs. Taylor and all the other Canadians who support ingredient labelling, I table this petition.

SUGGESTED INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, since this may be the last day we are here for a while, I want to present three petitions on behalf of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). They deal with a request from a number of British Columbians to amend the Indian Act to end all discrimination based upon sex and to ensure that past discrimination against women can be steadily and fairly rectified by reinstatement of the status and band membership which aboriginal women would have enjoyed if not for this discrimination.

The petition goes on to detail other things they are asking for but I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, can take a very close look at them after we finish this part of our proceedings. I wish to table these petitions on the Member's behalf.

SOUTH MORESBY PARK—HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a duly authorized petition here from a number of Canadian citizens concerned about the fact that on the very day the Government signed the South Moresby Park Agreement it also committed itself to spending $20 million or more to explore for hydrocarbons in the South Moresby Marine Park.

The petitioners point out that the Queen Charlottes region has higher earthquake activity than the San Andreas Fault and that Hecate waters are among the roughest and most unpredictable waters in the world.

Therefore, they point out that they do not want any more hydrocarbon exploration activities to take place in our coastal waters and neither do they want the Government to pay for any such activities.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, somebody said: "Here's 'old one-a-day' again". We have done more than one on many days. Our record is around 90 per cent, much better than that of the previous Government.

I think I will have a lot of answers on Monday, but today I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties. I think you would find unanimous consent to proceed with Bill S-21 at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to proceed with Bill S-21?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think you would find unanimous consent for this Bill to proceed through all stages at this time. If the motion were to read to send it to a Committee of the Whole House, we could proceed through all stages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the Bill proceed through all stages at this time?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Vankoughnet: Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) who will be absent from the House today, I suggest that I be made the sponsor of Bill S-21, an Act to revive Grenville Aggregate Specialties Limited of Madoc, Ontario, and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act. Accordingly, I request, with the leave of this House, that my name be substituted for the name of the Hon. Member in the records of the House as sponsor of said Bill.

I seek unanimous consent of the House to proceed through all stages of Bill C-21 now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Members have heard the request of the Hon. Member. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GRENVILLE AGGREGATE SPECIALTIES LIMITED

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington) moved that Bill kS-21, an Act to revive Grenville Aggregate Specialties Limited and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I had thought the Member would give some explanation of why we have agreed to pass this Bill. I think a short history would have been appropriate.

Bill S-21 apparently began in the Senate where it was sponsored by Senator Romeo Leblanc. It proceeded through all stages there in fairly short order. I do not intend to prolong debate here, but I think it is important that people understand that this is a Bill to revive a company which was incorporated in 1964 but failed to file its annual summary with the Secretary of State for three years and, therefore, following notice in The Canada Gazette in 1967 the company was dissolved in 1968.

Since then, however, it has apparently acted as though the company was never dissolved. Its directors continued business activities without knowledge of the company's dissolution. The company is now being sold. In order for the company to be sold it must be revived. The Canada Business Corporations Act does not provide for such revival. Therefore, a special Act of Parliament is required and that is why Bill S-21 is before us. It is no more complicated than that.

I may have a couple of questions at report stage, but I think this is a straightforward revival of a company, something we have been doing here for many years in cases where directors, lawyers, or whoever was acting on behalf of a company forgot to file the required papers with the Secretary of State annually.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill S-21, an Act to revive Grenville Aggregate Specialties Limited and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On Clause 2—Rights preserved

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, Clause 2 presents a concern to me. The concern which I have to put to the House arises from the wording in the Bill, that is, that the revival of this company will not prejudice the rights of any third parties which were acquired during the period of dissolution. I think that is a legitimate concern which should be answered in the House.

Is the Bill drafted in such a way as to protect those people who dealt with the company while it was not actively recognized as such? My concern is, of course, for any third parties that may have been acting with the company not knowing that it had been dissolved. Could there be a prejudice to the third party? If that concern can be answered in the positive, I would be satisfied.

Mr. Vankoughnet: Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the Bill has been drafted in such a way as to take this matter into consideration. Anything that has taken place will be taken care of in this circumstance.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Vankoughnet moved that Bill C-21, an Act to revive Grenville Aggregate Specialties Limited and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words at third reading of this Bill. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) was originally to pilot the Bill through its stages in the House. I want to thank her for the work she has done for this group, Grenville Aggregate Specialties Limited.

During the committee stage I rose to ask what I believe was an important question. I understand that we have assurances now that there will be no prejudice to third parties. I just read a letter dated September 23, which was signed by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal. It was addressed to Mr. Fred Seller, and the Hon. Member asked about third parties.

The answer came to her on September 26. I will quote the letter from Drache Rattenberg, barristers and solicitors, so that we understand that indeed these third parties will be protected. The letter is signed by Mr. Fred Seller. He states:

> It is my understanding that you are in possession of the draft Minutes from the Hearing before the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I have enclosed herewith a copy of the final edited version which makes reference only to affidavits relating to the publications of notices.
> However, if you desire an Affidavit I will have the principal shareholder of Grenville Aggregate Specialties Limited swear an Affidavit accordingly.

I think that satisfies my request. Therefore, I conclude my remarks by saying to the House that these Bills occasionally come before the House of Commons. They meet with certain requirements of the law.

Some time ago I believed that we could do without this process by having another forum look at these companies which fail to file the proper documents with the Secretary of State. I hoped that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would find a solution that would avoid the House of Commons and the Senate doing what we are doing today, passing a Private Members' Bill that revives a company which failed to report according to the law.

However, I believe there could be a solution by Consumer and Corporate Affairs if we address that properly. In the next Parliament I hope to have a chance to present appropriate legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, September 29, consideration of Bill C-152, an Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Marchi:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-152 be amended in Clause 27 by striking out line 16 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"third anniversary of the coming into force".

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-152 be amended in Clause 27 by striking out line 24 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"before each House of Parliament and referred to such committee of the House, of the Senate, or of both Houses of Parliament as may be designated or established for the purpose, within the".

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister responsible for housing asked whether I had come back to Ottawa to say no to the Government's Bill on service charges. If he will give a few moments of attention he will know perfectly well that I came back for a bit more than that. I came back for report stage on the Heritage Languages Institute Bill and whatever action may occur on it.

I come back with anything but good cheer on this particular Bill. Other colleagues have already pointed out the kind of treatment the Bill received in the legislative committee last week. It was outrageous treatment. One would have expected preparation for hearings, albeit limited hearings I am sure, for the testimony from persons in Canada who have a great concern about heritage languages, persons who have been involved in advancing the study of heritage languages, persons who are concerned about the organization of classes in their communities, in the various regions of Canada. I had fully expected that the establishment of a heritage languages institute in the City of Edmonton, with the responsibility to advance the study of heritage languages across the country, would have required some attention in the legislative committee to determine how the existing activities in the various regions of the country would relate and integrate with the programs that will be established by this institute. Of course, on this Friday afternoon, on September 30, it is a most doubtful question whether it will even be established, given all the speculation about an election.

The refusal of any such hearings in the legislative committee was a denial of all the conventions of the House and the parliamentary principles on which the Parliament of Canada is founded. During the last months of its mandate and the very rapid action on multiculturalism in certain areas, the Government is claiming that it understands the situation in this country and is concerned about advancing multiculturalism. At the same time it is prepared to reject the fundamental principles of the parliamentary system. That is a complete contradiction to all of its claims.

When Conservatives were members of the Opposition, they were well equipped to argue for the liberties of Parliament and assert the rights of the Opposition. For them to behave this way when they are in government is an abomination to the people of Canada. How can they make any claim to respecting the various cultures in this country and their traditions when those traditions we have derived from the Mother of Parliaments, including the principles of careful and deliberate consideration of legislation in this House and the legislative committees, were denied by government Members in the legislative committee?

The Taylors and the Turners who did the job on members of the Opposition in the legislative committee, who insisted that there be no hearing of witnesses at all, who pressed ahead and insisted that amendments to the Bill should be considered immediately, and who insisted that within hours the work should be done on the Bill in order to send it to the House, have no sense of what the Parliament of Canada is about.

I have attacked the Government once already in terms of the abuse of power. When it dealt with the multiculturalism Bill last spring, it suddenly cut off the process of hearings, put forward a limited list of witnesses to be considered, in the absence of opposition Members insisted on dealing with the amendments to this bill that have been put forward, and voted them down seriatim, one after another, in the legislative committee.

That abusive power is one that I have attacked from coast to coast in Canada. There are mailings to representatives of multicultural organizations and of the multicultural press. We have in this particular Bill even greater abominations, in the refusal of any kind of consideration of the testimony that could be provided by persons. This suggests a dreadful beginning for the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute when or if it is brought into existence.

If we establish this institute based on a request for a National Heritage Languages Institute in western Canada, to be based in Edmonton, it will be given a national mandate, as the Bill proposes to do. However, there is a refusal to talk with people who have been involved in the advancement of heritage languages anywhere in the country, as much in Edmonton and Winnipeg as in Toronto and Québec City. When there is this sort of refusal to consider what is going on, obviously there is no respect for traditions or for parliamentary conventions and no regard for the regional realities of Canada. What one has is the most shameless sort of playing of politics with a matter that is of enormous importance.

These comments have to be put on the record. One can only regret that at this late point in this Parliament, early on Friday afternoon of September 30, even government Members are hardly here to hear what a couple of their colleagues have chosen to do, presumably on the marching orders of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) or whoever is in charge of these abominations coming out of this Government these days.

To focus particularly on Motions Nos. 5 and 6 which we are considering this afternoon near the end of debate at report stage, we have two amendments by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), both of which I would want to support in my specific comments.

The first is an amendment which would propose that the operations of this Bill become active and take effect, and that the operations of the new Canadian Heritage Languages Institute be considered not at the fourth anniversary but at the third anniversary of its operation.

Clearly, from what I have said about our inability to have proper parliamentary consideration of how effectively this institute is begun, it becomes all the more imperative to have an early review of that institute. We all know that Parliaments tend to run in about four-year cycles. We all know that if this Bill actually takes effect, it is all too likely that the fourth anniversary review would coincide very closely with the next federal general election. That makes it all the more imperative that the review to be carried out be undertaken after three years rather than four.

I think government Members could recognize the value, for the good government of Canada, of having the operations of this Canadian Heritage Languages Institute reviewed after three years, so that there might be a possibility in the next Parliament for reconsidering what we are doing in such a hurried, hasty, and unconsidered way in the late days of this particular Parliament.

As far as Motion No. 6 is concerned, we have a proposal for the report of the institute to be presented, not simply to Parliament but to the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism for consideration. That seems to be a very useful amendment to the Bill.

We have not seen in the first three and three-quarter years of this Government very much of value in the area of multiculturalism. We had wasted days and wasted opportunities time after time. Practically the only useful thing this Government did in the first three and three-quarter years of its mandate in the area of multiculturalism was to move in this House for the establishment of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, which was done at the end of June, 1985.

The standing committee has begun to do useful work. I suppose all Members would agree. Obviously I have a certain self-interest in asserting that as one of the ongoing Members, the New Democratic representative on it. I leave to others agreement on the value of the committee, but I would point Members to the report issued by the committee last year, at the end of June, 1987, as one indication of the hard work members of the committee have done. More of our recommendations have been taken up in the last weeks, really, than we had expected in the spring when the multiculturalism Bill came before the House without any provision for institutional changes. Suddenly the Government has decided in these last weeks to establish a full-fledged Minister and Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship, as it happens. That shows that the Government has far more acceptance of the work of the standing committee than we had been led earlier to expect the committee would have the satisfaction of seeing.

Given this evidence of the work of one more standing committee of this House, in this particular instance, I think the case for a review by the standing committee of the work of the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute on an annual basis is a good one. It does not really take very much argument to say that they are in the standing committee where so much of the detailed work in practically every area of this House is done by Members who develop expertise, have a real concern, and work together across partisan lines. Certainly that was true in our committee.

Although the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) with whom I spoke earlier this day is not in his seat at the moment, he deserves commendation for the generally non-partisan way in which the committee operated, pressing multiculturalism and the achievement of the practices of government to ensure that the old policy statement and our Canadian commitment to it became a reality. That work in the committee is the best basis for making the argument for committee consideration of the annual reports which the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute would provide.

I speak very firmly in support of these two amendments in a positive sense, after my strong and very critical and really bitter attack on the treatment given members of the legislative committee. Opposition members particularly received bad treatment from those government members who chose to abuse the liberties of Parliament, who chose to violate the conventions of the House and ride roughshod not just over parliamentarians but over everyone in the country involved with heritage languages who deserve the right to comment on and to criticize the Bill in order to ensure that what we do here this day, this week, next week, or whenever it is concluded, is properly done.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we can certainly feel in the air that things are running down, but I would like to take the opportunity to make a few comments about the proposed amendments, specifically perhaps a little about the Bill in general.

It is time for the Government of Canada to support a Canadian Heritage Languages Institute. One of the hidden strengths of the country is the capacity of Canadians as a global group to speak almost every language spoken in the world today. Our immigration policies over time have brought to Canada, as landed immigrants and citizens, people from all four corners of this globe and from every nation of the world.

• (1240)

If we do not act and put public resources into the retention of those languages, we will lose the advantages that we have in terms of world trade, our influence on world peace, and our influence for a better environment on a global basis. We get some of that influence because of our heritage, our heritage languages, and the capacity of Canadians to speak with everybody on the globe. It is in the context of a better environment, a better future for people around the world, our capacity to help reduce poverty around the world, and of our capacity as a nation to contribute to the peace process around the world and to participate in the notion of economic development that the richness of our cultural diversity and our heritage languages becomes a priority item, at least for this Government.

I heard people on the other side complaining about the Government taking so long to come forward with a number of initiatives, including the naming of a Minister. One of the first initiatives of the Government was to set up consultation processes. Whether we were talking about the changes in tax policy or the multicultural policy, the Government said, in the interests of national unity and in the interests of getting the legislation correct and making sure that it would function, it must set in place processes that provide better consultation.

It is a pipe dream for anyone to think that the moment they are elected to this Chamber somehow or another the necessary expertise to deal with all the subjects that affect Canadians falls out of the sky. Hopefully, the electorate of this country choose men and women to come to this Chamber who have some broad base of experience, a lot of common sense, and a capacity to ask good questions and listen to the answers. In the final analysis it is our job to referee disputes and produce legislation that will help us as a nation to progress. At the heart of our capacity to produce good legislation lies the notion of our capacity to consult. Consultation takes time. If one is sincere in an attempt to consult, then one has to acknowledge that there must be the passage of time spent to listen, time spent to dialogue, and time spent to reach conclusions. All of that has to be done in the context of priorities.

When this Government came into office in 1984, the nation was looking bankruptcy in the eye. We had runaway borrowing. The Government of Canada was borrowing an amount that was equivalent to more than 90 per cent of the savings of Canadians. There was no money left for Canadians to borrow to buy a car, a home, or other things without going to the international market, reducing the value of our dollar, and increasing interest rates. Our standard of living was falling like a rocket. The Government came into office with many commitments. However, the priority was to straighten out the economic situation in order that there would be jobs for Canadians to enable them to participate fully in society.

I stand here four years later with certain knowledge that there are approximately 1,300,000 more Canadians with jobs today than there were in September, 1984. It is a record of achievement. It had to be dealt with first. We could not have a Canadian heritage language institute, or the budget money for that very important initiative, or the Bill before us today, if we continued on the path that the previous Government had taken us on.

Bankruptcy produces a situation where none of the good or positive things can be done. Bankruptcy would have eroded our health care system and our unemployment insurance system. Bankruptcy would have eroded our colleges, universities, and all our social programs. We make no apology for commencing our four year term of office with those initiatives required to restore the country to economic health, to provide jobs for Canadians and ultimately taxes for the public purse, to reduce the deficit, and put us on a path that would lead to the health that we are enjoying today.

I wish to deal with the amendments for one moment and urge my colleagues to defeat the amendments. Motion No. 5 seeks to take a four-year period and reduce it to three for the Minister to comment on the success of an institute. I believe that four years might even be a little short. Certainly, to make public evaluation comments after three years in the life span of a new institute with a mandate of this type is simply too soon.

Motion No. 6 has some detail on where the reports of the institute should be referred. The Standing Orders take care of that situation. Therefore, Motion No. 6 is not necessary, and probably it is not a good idea.

I urge my colleagues in the Chamber to approve the Bill, but to reject the two proposed amendments before us at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The first question is on Motion No. 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division will be deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Point of Order

And more than five Members having risen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division will be deferred.

Normally at this time the House would proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at the report stage of Bill C-152. However, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 13(5) the recorded divisions will stand deferred until six o'clock on Monday, October 3.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, we had hoped to be able to deal with the divisions and third reading today. However, I understand the position of the Official Opposition, and, therefore we will have to wait until Monday.

There have been discussions among the Parties, Mr. Speaker, and I think you would find that there would be consent to suspend the sitting until 2 p.m., and at the conclusion of Private Members' Business, which will commence at 2 p.m., to further suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair until later for the purpose of Royal Assent, and any other business unanimously agreed upon among the Parties.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we agreed to the Government's request for the simple reason that there is a bill dealing with unemployment insurance that we consider to be very important and would like to see given royal assent. Otherwise we would have said no, because the Government has failed to give us satisfaction on many issues and is constantly wasting the time of the House. However, to make it easier for the unemployed to receive their benefits, we agree.

• (1250)

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I want to give our consent to the procedure outlined by the Minister. The reason, of course, is that we want to see the unemployment insurance Bill receive Royal Assent now just in case something may happen later today or tomorrow.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, as official critic for the Liberal Party, I would like to say that notwithstanding the Government's action vis-à-vis the legislative committee on Bill C-152, we would have been prepared to see that Bill through report stage and third reading provided the Government co-operated and agreed to the very few amendments proposed by this side of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, since it is 12.55 p.m. and we are going to adjourn until two o'clock, would the Minister be prepared to discuss Bill C-79, the amendments to the Canada Elections Act? As you know, the Legislative Committee has already been formed. I was appointed Chairman of the Committee by the Chair, and I would be willing to sit if I were sent the election reform Bill. Could we start considering the Bill today? Or would the Minister consider putting it on the agenda next week, at the House Leaders' meeting?

[English]

Mr. Lewis: No.

POINT OF ORDER

TRIBUTE TO RETIRING MEMBERS

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, this morning when I made my statement pursuant to Standing Order 21, I neglected to include the name of a Member who announced yesterday his intention not to run in the next election, namely the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle). I would like to add his name to the list and wish him well in retirement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the House to suspend the sitting?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

At 12.53 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West) moved that Bill C-266, an Act to provide for the limitation of interest rates and fees in relation to credit card accounts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: This Bill intends to impose a financial law of gravity: what goes up should come down. The intention of the Bill is to regulate interest charges on credit cards issued by financial institutions, petroleum companies and retail stores. It will impose a floating rate limit so that interest charges may increase when the cost of money rises and be required to fall when the cost of money declines.

The reason for the Bill is straightforward. If the companies' costs go up, so do the customers'. If the companies' costs fall, so do the customers'.

In the case of financial institutions, the limit will be 6.5 per cent above the Bank of Canada rate averaged over the previous month, if the bank, trust company or credit union charges user fees and entry and renewal fees. The limit will be 8.5 per cent above the bank rate averaged over the previous month if no fees are charged at all. The limit will be 9.5 per cent above the average bank rate in the case of petroleum companies and 11.5 per cent in the case of retail stores.

To illustrate, if this Bill were law, credit card charges would have been limited, during the month of September, by the bank rate averaged through August. That average rate was 9.73 per cent. The requirements of this Bill would thus mean important savings for Visa and MasterCard users and dramatic savings for users of petroleum cards and retail store charge cards. Petroleum companies would have been limited to 18.28 per cent instead of 24 per cent. Retail stores would have been limited to 20.8 per cent instead of 28.8 per cent. The Bill will also prevent card issuers from getting even by increasing user, entry and renewal fees. So much for summing up the intent of the Bill.

Let me raise a question for the House. Why should Parliament want to impose this kind of limit? I would like to attempt an answer which is partly philosophical and partly historical.

First, let us face the argument that Parliament should stay out of the market-place, that this Bill represents an unwarranted intrusion. I know that there are probably certain officials in Ottawa who are having apoplexy on this Friday afternoon at the thought of this Bill. It might be a good argument if the users of the argument really meant it, but they do not unless it suits their convenience. They support the theory of free enterprise but often they advocate the opposite.

Where is this free market that they like to talk about? It certainly is not found in Ottawa on Thursday afternoon at 2 p.m., for at that time, the Bank of Canada, owned by the Government of Canada, enters the market-place to control the price of money, to control the interest rate that will be charged to banks and through them to the whole country.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada does not have the slightest inhibition about telling the business community what it can expect from him and what it can expect from him is certainly not a free market-place. That is an important point for all who think that Conservatism and an unbridled free market are one and the same. Obviously they are not. The left-wing critics of Conservatism like to see it that way and so do its radical champions, but the philosophy of Conservatism has stood for something else, and it can be summed up in this way: it is the belief that no power should be unlimited, that each power should be checked and balanced by another.

Conservatives, therefore, want private enterprise instead of state enterprise having a monopoly because they do not want the state to combine economic monopoly with political monopoly. However, private enterprise also must be checked and balanced. Its power has to be limited too.

This Bill is based on the principle that the state has a right to check and balance the power of corporations. When large corporations are not fair to their consumers, the state has a right to require that they become fair.

In the United States, the top 25 firms in the country control 50 per cent of the credit business. It could well be worse in Canada, and this means that only one power in those two countries is strong enough to defend the people. In our case, it is the power of Parliament, so I bring to the floor of the House of Commons this afternoon this Bill.

Let us take another example of how the state has the right to be active in this arena and is active in it. Our statutes include a penalty for usury. It is not always realized, but they do. They define usury in the most extraordinary way. Usury is defined as interest rates that are 60 per cent or higher. The rate is so fantastic, so ludicrous, that the financial institutions do not worry about it. I suggest that they should worry about it, and all their lobbyists should be arguing against this definition of usury because it means that Parliament has accepted the principle that Parliament has the right to impose a limit on interest rates. If we do not have that right, then how can Parliament be entitled to limit interest rates to 60 per cent or to any per cent? We could choose 60 per cent, 6 per cent or 160 per cent. Once we do so, we are expressing the same principle that Parliament, in the name of the people, has the right to do that.

Bill C-266 is therefore not a radical imposition of state power where the state should not intrude. It is just the opposite. It is an application of the principle that is found in our existing law.

So much for philosophy. Let us turn briefly to history. History shows that issuers of credit cards have been very quick over the years to raise rates but have been equally reluctant to lower them. Let me give a few examples from retail stores. In the 1970s, the major retail chains throughout Canada imposed charge card rates that rose steadily from 18 per cent in 1971 to 23.4 per cent in 1980, and this was because of the rising cost of money. Then they catapulted to 28.8 per cent in 1981. That was because the bank rate soared that year to 18.3 per cent. Note this carefully: the spread between those two rates was 10.5 per cent. That is a full point less than the spread that would be imposed by Bill C-266, so it is a very moderate Bill.

• (1410)

A reasonable person might expect that stores, given the situation, would have cut their charge card rates when the bank rate fell so dramatically in the mid 1980s. You would expect that, but they have not come down a fraction of a point. The Bay, Home Hardware, Canadian Tire, Eaton's, Sears, Simpson's and Zellers are still charging 28.8 per cent. Woodwards charges 26.4 per cent.

Some of the lobbyists justify this by claiming their customers pay less than Visa or MasterCard users since the stores do not charge any interest for a certain period, often 30 days after the purchase. Let us acknowledge that, whether it is 30 days or 21 days, but let us also see that it is only part of the truth. A customer may pay less if he pays in full in a few months, but if the bill goes on longer than three months, he will find himself paying more than if he used Visa or MasterCard.

Tough on him, you say, that is his fault, he should have paid up. Perhaps that is right, and it is tough, tough, tough on a Toronto man who wrote me and showed me how a debt he had incurred when he was working had doubled in the two years he was unemployed and could not keep up with the credit card charges.

I ask the House to take this seriously, to see this as a human problem, and to recognize that we have an opportunity and an obligation. Let us come back to the point that is so important for us to recognize. If the major store chain of this country can make profits in 1981 with a rate that was 10 per cent above the bank rate, why in August 1988 did they have to levy a charge 19 points above the bank rate in that month? Perhaps part of the answer is given here. I quote from The Globe and Mail of May 7, 1988. The news item is headed: "Card operations get the credit at Canadian Tire". It is a report by Karen Howlett.

> Profit at Canadian Tire Corp. Ltd. was up a whopping 27 per cent in the first quarter of this year. But most of the gains did not come from selling lawnmowers, hammers and spark plugs—they came from the company's credit card operation.
> Over-all, profit has been growing faster than sales at the Toronto based retailer. In its core merchandising division, however, profit gains have lagged behind sales increases.

Further on in the report we read:

> For the first time last year, the division passed the $1 billion mark in credit sales for its own and other credit cards, Mr. Groussman told shareholders. Canadian Tire's total sales, by comparison, were $2.5 billion.
> The credit division recorded a 29 per cent profit gain, far surpassing its revenue increase of 13 per cent.

Is it not clear, Mr. Speaker, that people who are using these charge cards of our major stores are paying more than reason and fairness should allow? Some Members may say that is true but they still do not want to pass a Bill like this. They may argue that in view of past successes by Parliament, the way to deal with this issue is to focus on it the spotlight of a House of Commons debate, such as the debate this afternoon, and committee inquiries such as we have had with some success. That method produced results with credit cards in 1987 and bank service charges in 1988. They were not the great results anyone in the House could have wished but, notwithstanding, they were results.

Why not rely on that method now? The reason, I submit, is simple. The public surely has the right to a guarantee that it will not be gouged. It cannot take that guarantee for granted in this country given the past and current practices of credit issuing institutions. Through the 1980s the bank rate has been up and down and up again and surely will be down again, but the store charge cards seem now written in stone.

Albert Einstein said that everything in this universe is relative, but he forgot about these charge cards. They are absolute. The rate on these cards cannot be changed no matter what else changes in the 20th century? So there is only one absolute left, the rate on these store charge cards, unless Parliament is ready to help the people. I ask in this debate that the House give the consumer a break and pass Bill C-266. Send it to committee. If there is quibbling about some feature of it, let the committee improve it. That is what a committee is for. It could be the Committee of the Whole this afternoon. That would be great. This Bill could be refined, of course. It is a human document, but let us pass it.

The financial institutions will not like it, but the people of Canada will. The retail chains will denounce us, but the people will cheer us. The lobbyists will show fury unbounded, but the people will see that this House of Commons is what its name suggests, it is the House of the people.

Since this just might possibly be the last hour of this Parliament, may I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and all the other speakers, for presiding over our debates with such fairness and grace. I want to say thank you, through you, Mr. Speaker, to all fellow members of this House for the opportunity to live and work with them all. I have enjoyed the company of all Members of all Parties so much, I am going to do my best to get back here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on Bill C-266. I want to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) for bringing forward a matter about which all of us from all sides of the House feel strongly. As a result of the Member's efforts and the efforts of members of the standing committee, it is obvious that something must be done about the fees and charges and interest rates on credit cards by a variety of interests.

I am sorry that my hon. friend is acquiescent enough to be satisfied that this Bill be referred to a legislative committee. I want to tell him that he would have the support of my Party and it is very possible the support of the Official Opposition for unanimous consent to deal with this Bill in all stages between now and three o'clock.

I want to refer to a story in the Bible, and I do this with some trepidation in light of the past of my good friend from Scarborough West. He knows better than I the story about Jesus driving the money changers out of the temple. That was at least 2,000 years ago and they have been sneaking in the back door ever since. They have done this in a manner which flies in the face of every Christian ethic and principle.

My hon. friend mentioned a person who was unemployed, could not pay his debt and ended up paying double. Those who would make a profit from the misfortunes of others are basically immoral. That kind of immorality flies in the face of principles and ethics not only of the Christian religion but every other religion I can think of. It is not a case of objecting to someone making a profit. Everyone agrees that for your efforts and your investments you are entitled to a reasonable profit after you have paid your taxes. That is not a problem.

• (1420)

My hon. friend mentioned usury, and he is right on. That used to be a hanging offence. Centuries ago it was an offence for which you could be drawn and quartered. I do not think my hon. friend's Bill goes far enough. I do not think they should be entitled to 9.5 per cent to 11.5 per cent above the prime rate. That is far too generous. However, at least the Bill places a limit on what they can do.

My hon. friend is perfectly right that when interest rates went up it was amazing how fast interest rates on credit cards and other fees and charges went up. They went up almost daily, certainly weekly. When interest rates started coming down, it took a month or more before the interest rates on these credit cards started to come down. Sometimes it took two or three months.

As an innocent stubble-jumping prairie boy, an average Canadian, I do not like being taken for a sucker. I am not going to be a party to what Barnum said, that there's a sucker born every minute. If I owe money, due to actions of my own, I will pay it no matter how long it takes and I do not object to paying a reasonable interest charge on it. However, the kind of stuff that Canadians are forced to put up with nowadays is more than usury, it is criminal. I cannot remember if there was ever a charge laid under the usury provisions of the Criminal Code. There might have been a hundred years ago. It is a criminal offence, even though they never get charged.

The bank rate is approximately 11 per cent today, yet the petroleum companies, Canadian Tire, Eaton, and The Bay charge 28 per cent. That is a 17 per cent mark-up. If that is not usurious, I do not know the definition of the word. The fees of bank cards like Visa and MasterCard are smaller than that.

I remember when an organization in Toronto started up a card called Cashex. There were a couple of thousands retailers in Toronto and area which agreed to give a 5 per cent discount when you had this card and paid cash because that is what it cost the retailers when it accepted a credit card. The credit company not only charges that interest rate, but charges the retailers 5 per cent.

I am sorry that Cashex did not survive. I quite often go into a store and say: "Here is my MasterCard, or I will give you cash if you knock off 5 per cent". Once in a while they do it.

I am certain that there is all-Party agreement on this very limited Bill of my hon. friend. The Senate is sitting this afternoon and it can deal with it in five minutes. Therefore, I not only give my support to the Bill but would like to close my remarks by asking for unanimous consent that we deal with second reading, report stage, and third reading between now and three o'clock this day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) that the Bill go to Committee of the Whole. Is there unanimous consent to that effect?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it is very unfortunate that government Members would not give unanimous consent. Perhaps the Bill could be voted on prior to three o'clock if government Members do not speak to it. That is the other way in which the Bill can pass the House. I will confine my remarks to only a couple of minutes.

I will speak to the principle of the Bill which involves interest rates and fees on moneys owed by Canadians. I want to put on the record the most outrageous interest rates and fees charged to Canadians.

I am sure every Member of Parliament has recently received letters from people saying such things as: "I owed $2,000 two years ago but now owe $5,000". That is all because of interest and fees. Imagine owing twice as much over a two-year period as you actually owed in the beginning. That is incredible. The person or institution to whom the money is owed then places a third party lien on the business from which the person collects his money, commonly referred to as a garnishee of wages or a third party lien.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was at the United Nations yesterday announcing a further forgiveness of debt owed to Canada by Third World nations. I am certainly not objecting to that, but it seems ironic that while we are being generous to our less fortunate neighbours, we are persecuting our less fortunate citizens in this country.

This morning a gentleman phoned me and told me that four years ago he owed $4,326.47. A month ago that $4,326.47 had become $22,562.94. Do you know who had put on those interest rates and fees, Mr. Speaker? It was the Government of Canada through National Revenue. There is your biggest violator. The highest interest rates and fees in the world are charged by the Department of National Revenue, the Government of Canada, the politicians.

• (1430)

His account from National Revenue came to $18,182.33 on a debt of $4,326.47. There is a line for law costs, which amounts to $51.70. I do not know what that is. I wish there was a lawyer one could hire for $51.70, but I am sure there is not. From a debt of $4,000 four years ago on a bankruptcy of a small company, this gentleman now owes over five times that amount.

This gentleman, like thousands of other Canadian families, has a gross income every two weeks of $699.56. The deductions from that include pension of $30, union fees of $16, income tax of $121, Canada Pension of $12, unemployment insurance of $17, for a net income of $489.56 for two weeks. What did the Government of Canada do? That great Government, made up of politicians who are supposed to represent the people, garnisheed his wages. It left him with $239.56 every two weeks for that gentleman, his wife, a mortgage, three children in school and two in university. Today he is looking at a cheque for $239.56 for a two-week period, all because he was charged interest and penalties of four times the amount he owed. It happened to be the Government of Canada.

The Department of National Revenue simply goes in and begins attaching. The amount it attaches depends on the attachment of wages Act of the province in which the person is living. Unfortunately, this person happens to live in a province where the attachment level leaves one with about $120 in the pay cheque.

The attachment of wages Act is another Bill made by politicians who are representing the people of each province. They decide to allow the courts to attach wages down to that amount. The federal Government of the country then decides to pass a law saying that interest rates and penalty fees charged by the Government of Canada to individuals can be as high as to cause a debt of $4,000 to become $22,562.94 after four years.

This family and thousands of other Canadian families are being driven into Third World poverty by the Government. I say to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and other politicians that when they talk about forgiving debts, charity begins at home. There are thousands of Canadian families who are suffering because of the actions of the Government.

Mr. Benjamin: Justice begins at home.

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman says that justice begins at home. That could be the subject of another long address.

Hopefully the election will be called today and there will be a new Liberal Government in power so that in two months we will sweep all of these high interest rates and charges by the Government of Canada into the ash can of history.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, first I would ask that someone check the sky carefully. I know there is a full moon, but there must be at least two to have that kind of rhetoric this late in the day.

I agreed to speak on this Bill in the name of my good friend, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), because I want to perform a bit of subterfuge on the House. I know the Speaker will have a deaf ear on this side for at least a minute and a half.

I came into the House some 16 years ago next month. This will be the last chance I will have to speak here. In fact, as my good friend from Newfoundland said, this is very likely the last half hour of this Parliament.

I want to take some time to say a special thank you to my electors, my staff, my colleagues—both pre and post TV—the Chair and all the people who sit in it, the Table and all the staff who work with the Table, the administration staff of the House of Commons with whom I have had a particularly close relationship, the committees and their staff and the pages particularly. I took part in the initial page program. To my left there are some fellows who are grown up pages now. We appreciate the help they give us as well.

I want to comment on the Bill put forward by my friend from Scarborough West and comment particularly on a superb speech he made just recently in support of this Bill. I want to recognize the Hon. Member's contribution to the public discussion of credit cards and interest charges thereon.

In the next election his electors should know that he is largely responsible for the recent Government investigation into this issue, especially those by the House of Commons Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. I am sure that many Canadian consumers are now more aware of the interest costs associated with credit cards because of the public debate that he initiated.

In introducing Bill C-226, a Bill to limit credit card interest rates, in September last year, there can be no doubt that my colleague was attempting to protect the interests of credit card users. However, the Government believes that the Bill does not quite do what it would like to see done.

As a result of the Government's investigation of credit card interest charges, everyone's understanding of such interest charges has increased. Initial public concern regarding credit card interest charges focused upon the apparently high interest rates of credit cards as compared to the interest rates on consumer loans and mortgages.

However, the standing committee found that the issue is considerably more complicated than it first appeared. I think the Member would be the first to agree that that is the case. Indeed, the first five of the seven recommendations in that committee's 1987 report concerned measures intended to enable consumers to understand credit card interest charges.

• (1440)

A number of the committee's recommendations for measures to facilitate consumer understanding of credit card interest charges concern matters of overlapping federal-provincial jurisdiction. Accordingly, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) initiated joint federal-provincial activity on the issue, and this has resulted in publication of a joint federal-provincial discussion paper.

This discussion paper shows that because the interest rate is only one of the factors involved in the calculation of credit card interest charges, the credit card interest rate is not a reliable indicator of the interest charges associated with its use. The discussion paper uses an example to show that a credit card with a relatively high interest rate can sometimes involve much lower interest charges than a card with a much lower interest rate. This clearly represents a very confusing situation for consumers.

The discussion paper outlines a number of alternative approaches which can be used by Government to help consumers make informed comparisons of the interest charges from competing credit cards. The objective of the current federal-provincial activity on credit card interest charges is to promote consumers' ability to make informed decisions on a competitive card market.

The Government has demonstrated its intention to proceed as quickly as possible to institute measures regarding credit card interest charges, which will be of great benefit to Canadians.

The House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs tabled its report on March of 1987. In June of that year, federal-provincial activity in the area of credit card charges began.

In December of that year, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made an announcement concerning the Government of Canada's approach to the issue and, in accordance with a committee recommendation, released the first of regular consumer information materials on this issue.

The federal-provincial discussion paper was released in April of 1988. Even now, government officials are presumably preparing to report on consultations with the private sector concerning the policy options outlined in the discussion paper.

My good friend, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West, will know that not infrequently members of Government who have a particularly good reason for bringing forward a Private Member's Bill and who do a tremendous amount of work on it do not necessarily get their Bill through. I stood in this House about three years ago with a recommendation and had it talked down by my colleagues. I felt some considerable hurt at that time, because I felt then, as I do now, that the intent of the Bill was absolutely essential. In my zeal to have my Bill put through, I was quite discouraged when my colleagues talked it out. I am happy to say that the essence of my Bill is now in place. I will not talk out this Bill this afternoon. We are in the dying minutes of a Parliament that, with all things considered, has been very productive.

I think, when he comes back, as most assuredly he will, that he will be able to follow on with his quest for fairness for consumers in this particularly difficult area, and I am confident that despite the technocrats, as he made the point in his speech, he will eventually be successful. I want to go on record as wishing him every success, both in his election and in his work in this House in the future.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for giving me these few minutes to say again that when I came into this House the first day as a very young Member, the House was full to capacity. As I stand here today, there are very few of us here, but at least I have had a chance in the dying minutes to go on record and say how much I have appreciated being here. Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will allow me to extend cordial greetings to my good friend, the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings (Mr. Ellis).

[English]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, for the last four years I had the honour every Wednesday of the year, almost, to chair the Members' Services Committee. We sat every Wednesday afternoon very peacefully, but very energetically. It was one of my great pleasures to be Chairman of that permanent committee of the House of Commons.

I must explain for those who are listening that, by tradition, this committee is usually chaired by a senior member of the Official Opposition. One of my pleasures, as I was saying, in being the Chairman of that committee was to have on the committee the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings (Mr. Ellis), who was the Vice-Chairman. I would rather call him by his name, as we always do. I must say that he sat on that committee before I became Chairman. Therefore, I was very privileged to be well informed by him as to the tradition of that committee.

There is a long series of great Members, and he may correct me if I miss some. I do not know how you say it in English. The le regretté. Mr. Duquet from Quebec was a member of that committee. That committee was chaired mainly by the Member from Nova Scotia, Bob Coates, and before him by Mr. Angus MacLean, who became Premier of Prince Edward Island. I have the honour, as I said, to chair that committee. I could not have done so without the immense co-operation of the Vice-Chairman.

I must say today that I always regret when I see an old colleague, a friend of mine, leaving the House, whatever Party he may belong to. I see with great sadness the departure of Dr. Pauline Jewett. I had the honour to sit with her as a Liberal Member when I came into the House of Commons in 1964, and I regret very much her departure. I sat with her on the committee of foreign affairs, national defence, and with Mr. Manly, who I had less chance to know.

There are so many colleagues of other Parties. I think of Dr. Isabelle right behind me, who is not going to run again. He is a long serving Member. There are so many other Members. There is Mrs. Killens. If I start, I will have to get the list of those who are not running. I hear that there are around 40 to 50 Members of Parliament who are not going to run again. I regret their departure. Every one of them, in their own way and in their own capacity has served very well.

I would also like to say that this is a good Bill. That is why I stood up to speak today. The time has come to provide for the limitation of interest rates and fees in relation to credit card accounts. I certainly pay homage to my colleague, who introduced the Bill, Mr. Stackhouse from Scarborough West.

If the electors of Saint-Denis can endure me for one more time, I hope that by next Parliament we will call each other by our names and not by our districts, or at least leave it to our choice. I would rather say, "my hon. friend, Mr. Stackhouse", than "the Hon. Member for Scarborough West or East". The time has come to look into that in the next Parliament, to be able to call each other by our own name and not by a seat.

The Hon. Member has been highly devoted in the House and has put this Bill forward with great passion, because he strongly believes in it. I passionately believe in it, too. There are so many views that are taking place that I would like to add en passant, at this late hour, on a Friday when everybody seems to be somewhere else—I do not know where our colleagues are, but I see that Mr. Benjamin and Mr. Stackhouse and Mr. Ellis are here, and our friend from north Canada. I do not know where the others are. It seems that there is something going on that I am unaware of. Are you aware of something, my friend, Mr. Daubney?

Mr. Daubney: No, we are paid to do the business of Canada.

Mr. Prud'homme: The House is sitting, so we are here, in case we are not back next week. I regret I did not have a chance to sit as Chairman of the legislative committee on Bill C-79, an Act to revise the electoral Act. I am the Chairman, and I am the Chairman of a committee that does not sit, so it is very frustrating.

• (1450)

I have been waiting for one year to do my duty. I would like to give my support to this Bill. As a matter of fact, if there is unanimous consent why should we speak on this Bill today? By unanimous consent we should accept this Bill at this time. I will put forward a motion to accept the Bill at this stage.

Mr. Benjamin: In all stages.

Mr. Prud'homme: Seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) or Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), I am sure, since it is his Bill. I propose to the House that the Bill be accepted, if there is unanimous consent. I do not hear any nays. We could at least accept the Bill at this stage and go immediately to the next stage and see how far we could go.

I am willing to move that this Bill we are now studying be accepted at this stage of the procedure. If it was the wish of the House to accept it at this time, I would rise again at the next stage and probably make the same proposal. I propose that we do not speak too long and accept the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. We will resume debate.

Mr. Benjamin: Who said no?

Mr. Prud'homme: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Benjamin: I didn't hear a word.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I asked whether there was unanimous consent. I hear and I see that the House is silent. Unless someone says no, I believe the House is . . .

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Shaking of heads does not count.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair heard one Member say no.

Mr. Benjamin: I saw one Member shaking his head and we heard a rattle, but that is not no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) for bringing forward Bill C-266. The subject matter certainly requires debate. It also requires the attention of the public and this House to be focused on a most important matter. During the course of the entire thirty-third Parliament this subject has been kept before us by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West. During that time he has struck the fear of God into the hearts of credit card users throughout Canada.

Most of us have a credit card because they are so useful and convenient. Most of us have at least one in our pockets, especially those people who, like ourselves, travel around quite a bit and do not want to carry a lot of cash. They are extremely convenient and one of the things of the modern age with which we are familiar. Apart from being an advantage to the user of the card, they can also be extremely profitable to the issuer thereof. Certain examples of exactly how profitable have been given this afternoon. For example, some retail stores make more money out of the credit card side of the business than out of actual sales. Credit card issuers make money in a variety of ways. Merchants who take those cards are obliged to pay 2 per cent, 5 per cent, and I have even heard as much as 10 per cent as a commission given by the merchant to the issuer of the credit card. In that case, it would not be an in-house credit card. There are also various user fees attached, whether it be a start-up fee, or 15 cents per item that is charged. The big money maker is the interest rates charged which range all the way from the high to the extortionate.

I have one complaint against credit card companies when it comes to the calculation of the interest payable. I am one of those people who like to make a little profit out of the credit card companies, if I can. I like to pay all my bills on time within a few days of the end of the period. That way perhaps I can have some free money for a couple of weeks. Occasionally, if I have been travelling around and do not manage to make that payment on the due date, then interest is charged not from the due date until the time that the bill is paid, but going back to the date of the initial purchase. I guess it serves me right because sometimes I make money out of the credit card company, but it does not seem entirely fair.

Occasionally there are pretty high pressure sales tactics used, particularly by in-house issuers or certain retail stores. Some pretty high powered tactics are used to get people to accept their credit cards and use them. Often those retail stores have the highest rates of interest attached to the use of their cards. This afternoon we have heard examples of rates as high as 28.8 per cent.

I would like to say a few words about the Bill presented to us in response to this real problem. We have a proposed legislative solution. We are going to legislate ceilings that credit card companies can charge. It will be done on a sliding scale which gets away from some of the difficulties that happen when a maximum interest rate is imposed, and for that reason it is good. If a legislated solution of this nature can be avoided, I think that that would be the preferable way to go.

Mr. Benjamin: We tried that and it did not work. You are dreaming.

Mr. Nickerson: In the final analysis, if I accept a credit card and use it, that is a freely entered into contract between myself and some other person. If at all possible the state should not intervene in those contracts that are made on a voluntary basis.

Another reason is that where Governments in the past have imposed maximum interest rates it has resulted in non-economic allocation of resources and, in the long run, brought about things that were undesirable. An example that immediately jumps to mind is the question of the Savings and Loans in the United States that are going through a difficult period and causing a lot of problems.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if I could prevail upon my colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) to sit down, let us at least deal with second reading of this Bill, and quit trying to talk out the Bill of his own colleague.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2) the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

SITTING SUSPENDED

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to order adopted earlier today, the sitting is suspended until the call of the Chair.

At 3 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 4.23 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Pursuant to order adopted earlier today, the sitting . . .

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Deputy Chairman: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-158.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, so that we may have a clear picture of the proceedings, would you be so kind as to repeat what you said initially and then dropped because it seemed inappropriate? Could you repeat "pursuant to the order adopted earlier" . . . ? I would like to hear the end of this "pursuant . . . ", what we agreed to this morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the order approved unanimously by the House, we are back for the message from the Senate.

Mr. Prud'homme: Today?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, today. The sitting of the House was suspended, but now we are back.

I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-158, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, without amendment.

I also have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-147, an Act to establish the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development, with amendments.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR HUMAN RIGHTS AND DEMOCRATIC DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

With unanimous consent, the House proceeded to consideration of amendments by the Senate to Bill C-147, the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development Act.

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that the amendments by the Senate to Bill C-147, an Act to establish the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development, be now read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion? Debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Human Rights

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of a number of changes the Senate has proposed to amend Bill C-147.

I wonder whether the Government could explain to the House the scope of these amendments and perhaps give us an opportunity to consider and discuss this important issue here in the House. Bill C-147, as you know, is a proposal we support and that, we believe, represents a reasonable position, but we would like some details on the process and perhaps a little more information on the amendment proposed by the Senate.

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as Members will know, the Bill in the form originally passed by the House referred in Clause 4 to the International Bill of Human Rights and certain things flowed from that. The amendments to Clause 4 make it more clear so that the average Canadian could look at the Bill and understand what it is intended to do. It is really the addition of some words such as "democratic human rights" in that clause which make it more clear. They were already in the Bill passed by the House in statutory form but in reference to the human rights Bill. Now they are in the clause itself for ease of reading and understanding.

The amendment to Clause 28 is designed to make sure that Parliament has the legal authority in the future to vote funds for the purposes specified in Clause 4. In particular, if Members look at Clause 4(b) where it says "support programs and activities for the benefit of countries other than developing countries", there was a sense in the Senate that the statutory authority to vote the funds existed only for developing countries. The insertion of that clause is to make sure that we are able to vote funds not only for developing countries but for non-developing countries.

In effect, the amendments are there for clarity as well as making sure we have the legal authority to vote funds in future to make sure the endeavour is a success. The Government is very pleased to be able to support these amendments and if Members have other questions, I am sure the House would give unanimous consent for me to rise again and give the answers if I can.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I studied the Bill very carefully. I am sorry to say that we passed such an important Bill with incredible haste. I know that my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâces—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) intended to take part in the consideration of this Bill, just as I did. We were both coming from Montreal to the House and unanimous consent had quickly been given when we arrived. The Bill had even passed third reading when we were to speak in the afternoon and the Bill was adopted.

I am sorry to get on the nerves of the majority by talking this afternoon. I have no intention to filibuster, but this Bill is very important to me.

I took part with the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau in setting up the Institute for Peace and Security in 1984. That Bill was like this one. But I must tell the Speaker of the House that when we studied that Bill in 1984, we went through all the stages in the House. We sent the Bill to a Parliamentary Committee which I had the honour to chair for months. We studied that Bill and heard 52 witnesses. I know that the Minister is very annoyed, but what I do not understand is why always . . . As a Member of Parliament, I hope that in the future, if I have the honour to be re-elected, we will learn that very important bills should be presented in good time so that we Members can not only really discuss them but also call the people from across Canada who have a tremendous interest in that legislation. This is not just any Bill. It is a Bill to create an international centre for human rights and democratic development.

We passed it with incredible haste and today, people say to me, "I would have liked to testify. I had concrete suggestions to make. How come you did not proceed as you did with the Bill to create the Institute for Peace and Security?"

This Bill was voted on in such haste, so quickly that even today, the Government in the last minute is accepting an amendment made by the Senate. I do not intend to defend the Senate, but once again, it may do some good for the Senate to know that a Member of the Lower House can talk eloquently, I hope, about it. But the Senate, after looking at the Bill and scrutinizing it, came to the conclusion that it was quite unacceptable. If you want a good Bill, amendments will have to be made.

Today we are given a quick explanation of the amendments that were just accepted by the Senate. They relate to the purpose of the Bill, Mr. Speaker. We know very well that the purpose of a Bill almost always has legal effect and the whole purpose of this Bill was changed.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary gave us explanations. I would not want to make myself too unpopular this afternoon by questioning every line of that Senate amendment, but what the Senate has just proposed to us is much more than that and the Government has accepted it, because it wants to have this Bill. They blindly accepted what the majority in the Senate wanted. They accepted it. That proves that the Senate, which has a constitutional duty . . . I am not defending the Senate, but I do defend its constitutional right to go through bills, which we often pass with incredible speed here, with a fine-toothed comb. And the Senate, after giving it careful consideration, decided to change the purpose of the Bill completely. And despite what we were just told, clause 28 that was just amended is not meant to allow the Government to vote additional money for countries which are not less developed.

• (1630)

[English]

No way. That is Bill C-147, Clause 28. I just had a few minutes to listen to the debate in the Senate, but that is not at all what we were sent here. It is not to allow Parliament to vote supplementary credit. It is to allow the institute to derive its money from aid programs. It allows the institute to go outside of Parliament to bring in new moneys.

Let me give a concrete example, Mr. Speaker. If the institute were to initiate a study and what have you in a country that is not the object of assistance, it will allow the institute to bring money out to study what may happen, let us say, in Poland. If it wants to give some support to the question of studying Solidarity, this would not be possible under the objectives of the Bill. It will now be acceptable according to Clause 28.

I like to co-operate. I look at people on the other side who are looking at me in anger. I regret that people will be angry at me for raising this, but in matters pertaining to foreign affairs, national defence and international development, I have always had a great deal of interest. I have not always been lucky enough to get the nomination I should have had to be the critic or otherwise—this will be a long story some day—so when these matters are put before the House, it is the only occasion I have to put my views.

This is a good Bill as amended. Therefore, I thank the Senate for having at least at the last minute, on the last day maybe, scrutinized the Bill. The Senators would have come up with a totally different Bill if they had had more time, a Bill that would have made sense, one that people would understand and that people all across Canada would be happy to have and be part of. We have to agree that the Bill as presented was not that perfect if at the last minute the Government has accepted a major amendment to Clause 28. I have not read the Bill today, but I have listened to what happened a few minutes ago in the Senate.

I would have liked the Minister in charge to explain to me word by word what it means. It means a hell of a lot more than what people envisaged. I was listening to an Hon. Senator who is not a Liberal. I was there to listen to a remarkable man, Senator Ottenheimer from Waterford—Trinity. He is a Conservative from Newfoundland. He is an extraordinary, bright, articulate Senator. I was listening attentively to what he was saying just an hour ago in the other Chamber, so I cannot be accused of quoting Liberals. He asked about the definition we may have in this country on democracy.

I look at my colleagues. At least some are interested. I thank the Hon. Member for Kootenay East—Revelstoke (Mr. Graham) for his interest. I look at what they mean by pluralistic. It is the ultimate in arrogance to believe that our kind of system is the kind that applies to every country in the world. There are countries just emerging from the British Empire, the French Empire, the German Empire, et cetera. These are ex-colonies that are now new democracies in their own way. I will stand here and defend their right to be different from mine. True democracy does not necessarily mean for all the world to follow our kind of system and government. In some countries it may be a one-Party system where they have a lot of elections. Or it may be our kind. Of course we may by having a real democracy in Canada show by example, but we must not be arrogant and tell others that what we do they do. That was the meaning of some of the wording we found in the Bill.

I regret that at the very last minute I have to get up and speak like this without a file. My staff are like the majority of Members, they think there is an election on and everybody has left. It is too bad that we do not have a Minister here, perhaps the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) or the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry). I know everyone is busy preparing for an election. We hear it may not come but it is our duty to know what the hell we are talking about. I am trying to follow the French translation to make sure I do not speak too quickly. If I could only leave you with a thought, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

. . . a comment. I do not understand how, in our Western style democracies, we who want to give the rest of the world an example, I do not understand why every time, whether it be the Liberals, the Conservatives, the New Democrats in the Western provinces where they have held power, the PQ or Mr. Bourassa's Government in Quebec, there is always this tendency, when Members are exhausted, at the end of their rope, and something may be about to happen, tremendously important bills like the one on child care are brought forward. Child care is important, Mr. Speaker. The Senate is still discussing it and I am told that the Senate is probably going to sit tomorrow, as an exception, to study child care because they might in the last minute accept a Bill on which there is not even agreement. But frankly, for future generations of parliamentarians, for the generations to come of those who believe in the British Parliamentary system . . .

[English]

I say that in French for those who believe in our parliamentary system which originates from the British parliamentary system. I am not afraid to say that in French. The British parliamentary system is one of the best systems sous lequel nous opérons—under which we operate, I think it is in English—in the world. We must take care of the good merchandise as they say. I do not understand why government always comes at the last minute with things and is unable to arrange an agenda, but I leave that to those in the future to decide. I would have liked to have this Bill because I have received so many representations from non-governmental organizations and human rights groups. They would have liked to have appeared as witnesses. It is sad that they were not able to. It is sad that these people could not come forward and make suggestions because now we are stuck with this Bill for years to come. To have to wait three years or five years to find out if we have made a mistake or not is sad, because this institute could do a lot to help people understand our kind of democracy.

• (1640)

Everyone is unkind to the Senate. I would like to say a word on the constitutional right of the Senate, if it is only to make the Hon. Minister a little more impatient. The virtue of politics is patience. I know the Minister wants the Bill passed and wants to have Royal Assent, but for me, each minute counts. Perhaps there will be an election, I do not know. For now, there is a duty to be done.

I will tell Hon. Members why the bell rang a minute ago. For something as important as we are doing, we need a quorum. I was not playing games. We need a quorum, according to the British North America Act of 1867, Article 48. Some believe that Mr. Speaker is the only one who could go to the Senate to represent us all, but that is not true. That has been slowly implemented, but according to my understanding of the British parliamentary system, particularly the way we have implemented it here in Canada, we should have 20 Members, and the Speaker shall be reckoned as a Member.

At times, by agreement, we can do anything. By agreement, we do not see the clock. By agreement, we can say that it is Monday. However, if a Member insists, it is too bad, and I am one of those who insisted.

I regret that neither of the Ministers could come to the House to explain exactly what they have accepted that originated in the Senate committee that studied the Bill extensively and heard from great experts. I say this for the benefit of those who are listening and those did not have a chance to come forward to put their views. I would hope that they will listen to us. They should read the speech made by Senator Ottenheimer from Waterford—Trinity. He made an excellent speech that everyone should read. The Hon. Allan MacEachen made an excellent speech that everyone should read to understand the meaning, the feeling and the work of Senators. They have the constitutional right to do this.

If we do not like the Senate, let us abolish it. But as long as the Senate exists, the Senate has the constitutional right to do certain things. I am in favour of at least amending the Senate Act, and that would please the Minister, so that the Senate could not delay any longer than three to six months any legislation. I am in favour of a system like that of Great Britain with no suspensive veto longer than three or six months.

The Right Hon. former Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau did this in matters pertaining to the Constitution. It is because of Mr. Trudeau that we have today the Meech Lake Accord. He insisted, in the repatriation of the Constitution, that in the case of amendments pertaining to the Constitution, the Senate could not delay for more than six months. It is good for people to know this, though it only refers to matters pertaining to the Constitution. That is why we have Meech Lake today. So, en passant, un coup de chapeau, and I do not know how to translate that.

Perhaps I will give the Minister a gift by sitting down. If he has more explanations for the object of the Bill, I will receive them with pleasure.

I for one believe that as long as the Senate exists, it has the constitutional right to do what it has done. If you do not like the Senate, abolish it. After all, when the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was the Minister of Justice, he wanted to amend the Senate Act, and he should have done so. He would not have had the trouble he has had today. I would vote for a suspensive veto of from three to six months any time.

The Senate has looked into the Bill, and has been highly accommodating to the Government. It passed the Bill rather rapidly. It could have taken a few more months and could have called the witnesses we forgot to call in the Lower House.

I regret, on behalf of the Commoners that we are, that we could not hear from all the people who would have liked to have attended to put forward their views on this very important piece of legislation. If it is better now, it is because the Senate majority saw fit to amend the Bill to make it more acceptable. It amended Clause 28 of the Bill and the objective of the Bill in Clause 4.

Unprepared as I may have been for this, because I was expecting to be in my riding at three o'clock, I heard that the bells were ringing. I did not know what was going on. I had to rush to the Senate and I discovered that it is because of this issue.

You can relax, Mr. Minister. I have finished. I do not know if others want to participate, but I have said enough.

I regret that we rushed the Bill. I regret that the Ministers were not here to explain the new object of the Bill. If the Minister is impatient, I would ask him to explain to me the object of the Bill. I would be interested in listening to him.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask my colleague if he would tell us where he stands on the Senate. Does he want it to be abolished or elected, or was he preaching for a call?

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, if that is the kind of comment I have to deal with at the end of a session, I can do without it, but I will answer. I do not expect a call. The Hon. Member will never get one because he said he is against the Senate. I would love to be there if he were ever offered a chair in the other Chamber and see how he would agonize and if he would accept or not.

Where do I stand on the Senate? It is very simple. If we cannot let the Senate do its own work, abolish it. If we cannot abolish the Senate, amend the Senate Act.

Does the Hon. Member want to hear a speech on the Senate? I will make one. I sat on the Constitution committee. I sat on the special committee in 1972 which went all across Canada. We made very special recommendations including that Senators should have a 15-year tenure of office and that Senators should only sit until 70 years of age. My Party now stands for an elected Senate, but we will have to know how this will take place. If we cannot accept the Senate, let us abolish it. As long as the Senate is there, its constitutional right is to scrutinize a Bill, regardless of pressure.

We should beware at times of the massive pressure of public opinion. Some say: "You do this," and then you panic and say, "Oh, my God, there are thousands of people on the Hill, I must do this". By the time you have finished doing it, there is another group of thousands of people who say: "You should not have done that, you should have done this". That means you must be intelligent and do what you think is best.

The Senators have done their duty and I am happy that the Hon. Minister has accepted this very substantive change. The Hon. Minister is not as stubborn as his assistant who could not come to an agreement with the Senate. It was the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who accepted the amendment. He knows that when Senators really get to work, they work well, but if they would have been given a little more time, they would have come out with a better Bill.

No one is attacking the integrity of the peace and security Bill. We took time, and every individual in Canada who had an interest in this matter was called in. I went to meetings day after day for 50 days. Today we have a good Bill which works very well. The same should be true of this.

I congratulate the Government for holding its nose and saying that what they say over there is not that foolish and it will accept at the last minute amendments put forward. I would like to try to make the Minister smile a little bit because I know he is extremely upset that I should speak for so long on such a very important piece of legislation.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I will not be very long. I would agree to have the Parliamentary Secretary answer some questions that I will raise. I would agree to have him answer some questions I will raise. While I was quite prepared to accept the centre as defined in the original Bill, I must say that the centre as defined by these amendments is a bit different and raises some concerns.

• (1650)

The centre we were ready to accept in the original Bill was a centre to initiate, encourage and support co-operation between Canada and other countries with respect to the strengthening of human rights. These amendments from the Senate have now introduced a new concept that the centre should not only promote human rights institutions and the development of human rights but also promote democracy. When one first looks at that we find a motherhood concept, and we are all ready to support democracy, but we also know that countries around the world define democracy in different ways.

I have a bit of concern. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to let us know who initiated these amendments. Did they come out of a committee study in the Senate? Were they unanimously put forward in the Senate? I would like to know that because of different situations in the world. For example, the German Democratic Republic calls itself a democracy but in fact does not carry out many of the things that are set out in this amendment. It does not have the freedom of the press as we know it. It does not have pluralistic elections as we have them. On the other hand, we have the President of the United States criticizing Nicaragua and setting up an economic blockade of Nicaragua because it is not a democratic country and does not have a pluralistic democratic system. Yet there were more political Parties running in the election in Nicaragua and more Parties sitting in the Nicaragua National Assembly than there are in the American Congress.

Nicaragua might ask if they really have a democratic system in the United States. Unless one has huge sums of money, in the United States it is impossible to crack the two-party system in that country. It has a two-party system that relies on heavy financing and there is not the control of the expenditure on election campaigning as we have in Canada. One might ask if that is really democratic.

I think this amendment changes the nature of the centre to a certain extent. It was a centre in the first place that promoted and strengthened human rights institutions and dealt with the violations of human rights. By the way, human rights are more easily definable and discernible than democratic institutions. We know if someone is being tortured. We know if someone is being put in prison without trial. We know if people are being executed without trial. But when it comes to determining whether this country or that country is democratic, and what is really a proper interpretation of democracy, it becomes more difficult.

While I am willing to support this amendment because I support democracy and I support elections and the freedom of opinion and expression, I would like some assurance from the Government that we do not intend to impose our western concepts of democracy on all occasions.

It is interesting to note that if we were to apply this in a very strict manner, I think out of the approximately 150 countries in the United Nations, only 30 are democracies as we have them in the West. The great majority of the countries in the United Nations are either one-party systems, dictatorships of one kind or another or absolute monarchies, but they are not democracies as we know them. It is easy to support motherhood wording but this is motherhood wording that is open to some dangerous interpretations. I would like some assurance that we would take a small "l" liberal approach in interpreting what democracy means, what periodic elections means and what pluralistic political systems mean. All these things are mentioned in the amendment. As my hon. colleague from Saint-Denis said, to have this thrust on us at the last moment is a bit surprising.

It is true that on the original debate on second reading we questioned why the centre was called the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development because when one reads the original Bill, it seems the substance of the Bill is more directed to human rights and not to democratic development. Of course, the Senate now has come forward and included some further wording with respect to democratic development. All I say is there is some danger in that and I would like some assurance from the Government that this will not be the imposition of our strict interpretation of what democracy means on other countries or to proselytize in a very aggressive way our concepts of democracy.

There are some, of course, I would not accept. I think they are phoney and foolish. On the other hand, we have just settled the Japanese question. One could question whether during the Second World War we were acting as a proper democracy when we did what we did as Canadians. If it is possible, I would like some further explanation from the Government with respect to this amendment and the matters I have just raised.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I just have a few words to say on the human rights centre, Mr. Speaker. It is rather appropriate that the human rights centre is going to be established in the City of Montreal. I was one of the Members of the House who were here in 1970 when the War Measures Act was invoked by the Liberal Government of the day. Of course, that was all centred in the City of Montreal and the Province of Québec, but particularly in Montreal as the biggest city in the province. At that time, of course, all the rights of individuals, human rights and other rights, were taken away with the implementation of the War Measures Act.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, I am sure, that it was invoked on that day by a Liberal Government supported by the Progressive Conservative Party. I was one of 16 Members of the House who stood up and voted against the invocation of the War Measures Act. It was very interesting to note that a few years later, the Hon. Robert Stanfield said in a major television program that perhaps the biggest mistake he ever made in his political career was to support the invocation of the War Measures Act.

Some 18 years later, as it will be pretty soon, it is rather interesting to note that this centre is going to be located in the City of Montreal. It is not only what happened in the Province of Québec in 1970 that makes a centre like this so important. The other day we did what we did to redress the problems of Japanese Canadians and apologize for what was done to them during the Second World War. In addition, there have been all kinds of other examples of discrimination not only outside this country, as my friend, the Hon. Member from Notre—Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East said, but also within this country. I think of the example of the Chinese head tax.

I think of the discriminatory action taken against Ukrainian Canadians many, many years ago. Many of these Ukrainians reside in my riding in the Province of Saskatchewan. I can think of many examples in Canadian history when there has been rampant discrimination and violation of human rights in this great country of Canada.

I think it is very symbolic that the centre is being established partly because of the invocation of the War Measures Act back in 1970. It is rather interesting to note that it has been established in the City of Montreal.

• (1700)

Mr. Prud'homme: I said that if anyone would speak on the War Measures Act and not give the facts exactly as they were, I would always stand up in the House.

My hon. friend was there, I was there, and many of us voted for it on the information that we had then. In case the Party of my hon. friend is more virtuous than they are, I would like to remind him that some of his colleagues of the New Democratic Party voted for it. I know that we are on the eve of an election, where my hon. colleague was an excellent friend, I may say, and I do not abuse that too often in the parliamentary system. I would not like Quebecers—

[Translation]

... men and women, to believe that the New Democratic Party is so virtuous, because several NDP Members also voted for the War Measures Act. I understand that something may be coming and that they would like to fight as the great defenders of virtue, morality and all the other fine things ... Well, I say to him that several of his colleagues at the time, with the information they had, voted for the War Measures Act. I do not want to get into a debate on the War Measures Act ... If he wants to, I will, but I have already had the opportunity to take part in such a debate and I said how much I regretted what was happening, how I would spend the rest of my days apologizing if we had committed an injustice. However, I think that we could end the debate by concentrating more on what has just happened rather than by re-opening what could be a longer debate. Let us do that somewhere else.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: In response, Mr. Speaker, I was not trying to mislead the House.

[Translation]

... when I said I was one of the sixteen Members who voted against the War Measures Act. At the time, there were twenty-three NDP Members in our Caucus. Twenty Members voted, sixteen against and four in favour. A Member from Ontario and three Members from British Columbia voted in favour of the Act. As I said before, I was one of the sixteen who voted against invoking this appalling legislation in our country eighteen years ago, one of the vast majority of the Members in our Caucus.

[English]

I was very, very proud to be one of those 16 that stood up at that time. I can tell you that at that time it was not easy.

Public opinion polls that were taken at that time showed an overwhelming majority of people in Canada who believed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had the proper facts and that he was doing the right thing. I can recall friends and associates and supporters in the general public who, in many, many cases, could not understand why we voted in that way. But I am proud to say that of the 20 members of the caucus present, 16 of us summed up enough courage to vote in the proper way.

Mr. Prud'homme: The 10 minutes is not over. I am just glad that my hon. friend put on record that some voted against it. Otherwise, the way he put it, if it would not have been challenged, it would make them look good. My father always taught me that you do not calculate virtue. You are virtuous or you are not. If some people happen to say, well, you know, some of us did it and some of us did not do it, then there is no more virtue, really.

Mr. Nystrom: I guess virtue is in the eye of the beholder. I spoke for myself and I spoke for, I guess, 80 per cent of my NDP colleagues, because 16 Members voted against invocation of the War Measures Act. There were only four that voted against it. The three that were not there issued statements saying that if they were in the House they certainly would have been voting against the invocation of the War Measures Act as well.

I hear the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I suppose in those days she was probably out there in support of the invocation of the War Measures Act. As I said before, I think it is appropriate to have the centre located in Montreal.

Ms. Copps: I thought in most cases the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) was free of the political gamesmanship that often goes on in this place. I would like him to specify specifically. I do not have any particular axe to grind. There is no particular reason—or maybe he can give me a reason—why this particular institute should be placed in Montreal, other than for pork-barrelling. I would like to know if he can give me the reason as to why this institute should be located in Montreal.

Mr. Nystrom: As I said, the only reason that I can think of that made it slightly appropriate was that it was the centre of the crisis back in 1970, which was the October crisis. I suspect that the principal reason is that it is being created for pork-barrelling reasons, for political reasons. The Conservative Party is in very, very serious trouble in the City of Montreal. I suspect that, if you carried out some public opinion polls, you would still find the Conservative Party running probably third in the City of Montreal.

In addition to the human rights centre, I would not be surprised if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced within a week or so that the space agency is also going to be located in the City of Montreal.

Mr. Prud'homme: Are you against it?

Mr. Nystrom: I suspect that those are the real reasons. I am not against that at all. I am just making a prediction that the space agency will be announced by the Prime Minister as to the land in the City of Montreal. But that will not be done until probably the first or second week of the campaign.

Mr. Prud'homme: There is one minute left. May I ask my hon. friend where we stand on the space agency? Are you in favour of putting the space agency in Montreal? A yes or a no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is not related to the Bill. On debate, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I had wanted to speak to some of the elements of the Bill. Frankly, I guess I am getting a little bit cynical. In the last week we have passed more institutions around this place. It seems to me that with the budget that is being given to this institution, it is a farce. It is a joke when you consider that, with a budget, the first fiscal year of the centre is going to get a $1 million budget.

There are people in the Third World right now who are dying by the millions of starvation, and this centre that is supposed to be promoting human rights and democratic development has a total budget of $1 million. Who are we trying to kid?

Furthermore, with respect to the location of this so-called international centre for human rights and democratic development, I cannot understand it, because having previously sat as the Liberal Member on the Human Rights Committee, I do not have a particular axe to grind for any community that has the knowledge in the area of human rights, or an expertise.

I know that when I needed to get expertise, I went to the University of Ottawa, the Human Rights Institute, which was the only institute of its kind in Canada that had developed a knowledge base and an expertise in the area of human rights. I assumed that when a Bill of this nature is going to be implemented, at the very least there should be consideration as to what educational base, what knowledge base, exists in the country, and where that can best be implemented in terms of such a centre. But it seems, just like the decision that was announced yesterday in the United Nations with respect to another community, that the Government does not make decisions on the locations of institutes on the basis of what is going to be best for the institute and for the country. The Government makes those decisions on crass political bases.

I have not seen as crass a political base as the suggestion that other centres of excellence, like the City of Ottawa, should not be considered for the human rights institute. I have not seen an analysis which shows me that the knowledge base that exists in the City of Montreal should be the best place for the institute. Perhaps that exists, but it seems that it was pulled out of the blue.

We are going to spend a million bucks, create another institute, give the Government another campaign platform, and then say that we can announce this in the City of Montreal or in another city, where the Government is desperate to save seats.

Let us face it, in the City of Montreal the Government is desperate to save seats, and it has created the location not because of the concern for the over-all development of human rights and democracy, but simply to pork-barrel, and I, as a person who has a moderate interest in human rights issues and who was involved as a Liberal critic, am distressed that the Government would not consider the issues of human rights in deciding where the most appropriate place would be to locate the centre for human rights. They would rather resort to crass political considerations.

It is not the first time that it has happened. You have a problem, create another institute! That will solve it. Who are we trying to kid?

We will all pass this Bill today and everybody will go home and sleep a little bit sounder tonight knowing that we have created the international centre for human rights and democratic development.

Frankly, with the budget that we have been accorded, with the fact that the decision for the centre was made not to create or to build on a body of excellence that already exists, but merely to pork-barrel, I think it is a bit of a farce. I want to know why we have spent our time over the last number of weeks in Parliament dealing with what I consider to be pork-barreling attempts by the Government to buy votes in a pre-election period. It would be far better if an institute of this importance were given an appropriate budget and located on the basis of an analysis of the body of expertise and experience that exists in the human rights community. Why not make that decision in the fullness of time as opposed to rushing it through so the Government can wave around another campaign promise?

• (1710)

Frankly, I am a little surprised and dismayed at the attitude of members of the NDP, the sanctimonious, holier than thou Party that is dragging up the history of the War Measures Act to justify the location of the human rights institute and then says in the same breath that they consider it pork-barreling. I consider that this has the potential to be an extremely important arm of Canadian and international democratic development. It is unfortunate that, in the course of this Government, much of the work that is going to be done by this centre has been abdicated by the Government. Our role in international aid, in foreign affairs, and as an adjunct to the foreign policies of the United States of America has diminished us in the eyes of the world community.

It used to be that, as Canadians, we could hold our heads high around the world because we were well respected for being able to maintain and sustain an independent foreign policy, and to be able to encourage the establishment of human rights and democracy in many centres and areas around the world that currently have not enjoyed the type of democratic rights that we have in this country.

Last week the President of the United States called the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) a visionary. Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker? Ronald Reagan calling Brian Mulroney a visionary. At the time I said: "My goodness, that statement alone will cost the Government thousands of votes". That statement comes from a man who, by the admission of his own advisers, was almost ruled incompetent during the course of his administration in the United States because they were so concerned about his handling of foreign and domestic affairs, and he is calling our Prime Minister a visionary. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada have travelled lock-step in their assessment of foreign policy. Remember the Philippines. Was it not Canada that spoke first to recognize the Government of Corazon Aquino and to recognize what many of us had known for many years, namely, that Ferdinand Marcos was an unabashed dictator? We waited and waited to see what the United States did.

It is unfortunate that the centre for human rights and democratic development will have to assume much of the work that should have been done by the Government. The Government has abdicated its role of arm's length foreign policy from the United States, and we are lock-step now in terms of the economy. In the area of regional development we have to consider what the United States will say before we can give money to Sydney Steel or do anything to support Algoma. At the same time as we are moving lock-step in the area of economic policies, social and foreign policy will follow suit.

That is why the Government has had an extremely ambiguous position on the question of Star Wars development. It did not come out against Star Wars development. The Prime Minister stated that the Government cannot get involved because it is too expensive, but the private sector can go to it.

Furthermore, let us look at the record of the Government in human rights in respect of exporting of arms and equipment that is being used to crush democratic developments in other countries, to sustain and abet regimes that depend on the use of force to sustain themselves, and on the use of military force. One of the first acts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was to loosen the regulations on exporting arms to other countries, and exporting arms to countries that were on the forbidden list.

It was not until it was raised by the Liberal Opposition in committee, and raised by human rights organizations, including Amnesty International, that the Minister realized the error of his 1985 amendment and changed the legislation or the regulations governing the control of the export of arms to prevent countries such as South Africa and other regimes from using Canadian armed military goods and ancillary goods, including helicopter equipment, from being used against the democratic process. We were actually supplying arms indirectly to South Africa, a country that the Prime Minister claims to abhor. Yet we were doing it because the Government opened a loophole in the export legislation.

I am sorry that this particular centre will have to pick up where the Government has left off. It is pure folly to suggest that the establishment of this centre could have any ripple effect on human rights development around the world with a $1 billion budget. Who are we trying to kid? We are kidding ourselves with that miniscule budget. After having cut back on our commitment to foreign aid, and cut back on our promises of tying increases in foreign aid to increases in the Gross Domestic Product, we are failing in the area where Canada used to be a leader.

I do not particularly know the best location for the international centre for human rights and democratic development. Perhaps Montreal is the best location. However, it seems to me that that decision was made in the same manner as many other decisions are made by this Government, and not on the basis of building upon an extremely valuable body of expertise and knowledge. Canada is the only country in the world to have received a human rights award for the work that we collectively did as a nation when we opened our arms to the boat people fleeing from Vietnam. We are the only country in the world to be so honoured.

Certainly, we have a background and a record, but that is not to say that the centre should be put in Montreal on an arbitrary basis when perhaps there are equally good arguments to say it should be located in Ottawa. The Human Rights Institute, where I certainly drew much information when I was acting as critic in the area, is based in, attached to, and has a strong association with the University of Ottawa.

I really cannot say whether Ottawa or Montreal is the best place for the centre. When we consider human rights, we should at least consider where the centre would have the best resources to prepare a sound policy on international human rights, instead of having a situation where the Government, and that is what it is doing today, doesn't decide on the basis of the facts but of political gain, which is a form of blackmail.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that once again, when human rights are at stake, rights that are deeply cherished by all Canadians, the Government still wants to play politics.

I really can't say whether Montreal would be better as a centre. But at least we should look at the possibilities, otherwise we will just have one more organization, one more international centre that will operate with a budget of one million dollars. This is incredible, it is ridiculous and it is just one more Conservative promise that doesn't mean a thing.

So in that case, I wonder whether there are any New Democrats who could tell us how Montreal was chosen. I would like to ask the Conservatives whether they can justify this decision. I am the first to support the decision, but not for the same reasons. They will give the Centre to Montreal because otherwise they will lose votes. That is not enough, Mr. Speaker, that is bribery, and Canadians will not be bribed.

That is what I would like to find out from the Government. Has any analysis been done relating to the location of this human rights centre? Human rights are fundamental and we are just tossing this around like a pre-election pebble, throwing it where it will get the widest ripple. Unfortunately, that has characterized the approach of the Government on too many issues. As far as I am concerned, the fundamental issue of human rights is too important to be just a pre-election pork-barrelling gesture.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is always interesting to listen to, and usually very consistent in her logic. She condemned the Government for its cynical approach in dropping an institute here and an institute there for political reasons. I wonder if she would apply the same logic to the Canadian Institute for Peace and Security created in the dying days of the Trudeau Government in 1984 when the Liberal Party realized it was in serious trouble in Ottawa? The former Leader of the Ontario NDP, Michael Cassidy, was coming back to run in Ottawa Centre. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) ran to the Prime Minister and said "Look, with Cassidy back we are going to lose". They lost the seat.

Would she say the same thing happened then, that it was a cynical move by the Trudeau Government in 1984 because it happened to drop an institute here and an institute there? Does she apply the same logic to Trudeau in 1984 that she applies to my friends across the way today? I would be very interested in knowing the answer to that question.

Ms. Copps: What happened to the Liberals in 1984?

Mr. Nystrom: They went down.

Ms. Copps: Obviously people were getting a message and they wanted to make a change and they made a change. I do not think Mr. Trudeau has to take lessons from any Member of Parliament about the issues of human rights and peace and security. When he was Prime Minister of Canada we were respected around the world. We were not wimps on our knees constantly begging the President of the United States to give us a little crumb here and there to survive in this worldwide economic mayhem.

No, I will not take a lecture from the NDP about the Liberal record on human rights prior to 1984. However, I do think that in the dying days of the Liberal Government some actions were taken that were not consistent with the long-standing record of strong human rights policy. That is why we were thrown out.

The thing I cannot understand about the NDP is this. A few minutes ago the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr.

Nystrom) was hearkening back to 1970 and the War Measures Act. Now he is hearkening back to 1984. When will the NDP stand up on its own policies and stop talking about something that happened almost 20 years ago? I could probably drag up something that Aggie McPhail did, and I will if that makes him feel any better. We are talking about 1988, our plans for the future and what we will do when we form a government. I wish the NDP would take the same positive approach, instead of talking about things that happened 20 years ago which I think most people would like to bury, if not forget.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was talking about 1984 and the export of arms and other military equipment to Third World countries. I would like to ask her whether or not a few years ago, when she was a member of the Ontario Legislature, she condemned the Liberal Government of 1980-1984 for increasing the export of military equipment to Chile, Taiwan, Paraguay and other countries like that which do not exactly have democratic Governments? After all, it was the Liberal Government that increased the export of military equipment to Chile. It seems to me the Hon. Member will want to get up and say that was wrong as well.

I admired her answer when she said in the dying days of the Trudeau Government that she disagreed with some of the things that were done. Unfortunately, the current Government kept on doing some of those things, like patronage, and dropping institutions into ridings according to political preference, and moving a prison to the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and all these last minute announcements, buying people's votes with their own money. I think those are the politics of the 1930s and they should have been gone in the 1930s, and I am very pleased the Hon. Member is getting up and saying quite frankly that she did not like what happened in the last days of the Trudeau Government and the dying days of Liberalism.

In the name of consistency, openness, honesty and integrity, will she now stand up and condemn her Liberal colleagues for the export of military equipment to Chile, Taiwan and many other countries with governments which we in this country think are reprehensible?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would rather talk about more recent events. I am willing to recant if the Hon. Member is willing to recant for his two pork-barrelling colleagues, such as Ian Deans, the triple dipper, the great socialist from Hamilton Mountain, despised Brian Mulroney one day and loved him the next after being offered a $95,000 a year job. Is he willing to recant? Is he willing to condemn his colleague—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think we are moving away from the Senate amendments.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to consider a response to the Hon. Member's question on arms if he is willing to agree with me that his former provincial Leader in Ontario did an absolute flip-flop. The Hon. Stephen Lewis one moment was completely against the federal Government and could not stand anything it was doing, until it offered him a cushy job in New York. He took it and sang the Government's praises for four years until the day he was about to leave the job and then started dumping on it.

The Hon. Member should not lecture me and the Liberal Party about humanity and consistency because a couple of his colleagues have a little bit to learn about that as well and I am not going to take that from him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.
