Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is putting a wrong motivation in his question. I think Canadians would accept the fact that we have provided good economic management. That is very evident in the economic policy and results over the last four years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We do have the challenge now of increasing inflationary pressures. We have options. We could ignore the problem as the Liberals did in the seventies. We know that that led us to the very high levels of inflation and the consequent high interest rates in 1981-82. Or, we could take a far-sighted, responsible, prudent approach and head off the problem now before it becomes the serious crisis that it was in 1981-82. That is the prudent policy to follow and that is what good economic management is all about.

[Translation]

INCREASED INTEREST RATES—IMPACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance seems unaware that, last week, Statistics Canada reported that inflation had gone down in almost every region in Canada. Despite this, the Government supports increases in the interest rates charged by the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks. Why is the government not willing to do something to stop this increase in the interest rates charged by the chartered banks? Does the Government consider the advice given by the premiers of no value? Why does the Government push for higher interest rates despite their harmful effects on home-building and home-buying, on farmers already suffering from drought in the West and on investment and especially job creation in poorer regions?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians understand that there is a clear link between inflation and high interest rates.

Mr. Broadbent: Yeah, the higher the rate, the higher the inflation.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I ask Hon. Members to think back to 1981-82. I have some newspaper headlines which might be helpful to Hon. Members "Chances receding in fight with inflation", "Acceptance of inflation seems to be getting the upper hand", "Can we beat inflation?", "Inflation now a fact of life". That was after the Liberal Government of the day allowed inflationary pressures to get out of hand.

There is another headline to which I want to refer the Hon. Member, that is, "Realism, responsibility needed to cure inflation". That is the approach we are following as a Government and that will be evident in the economic results in the years ahead.

PENITENTIARIES

LOCATION OF PROPOSED PRISON IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the Government's announcement yesterday that Newfoundland's new federal prison will be built in Harbour Grace, a Tory riding, rather than in Buchans. Would the Solicitor General explain what criteria were used in the decision to switch the location of the prison from Buchans to Harbour Grace? Can he explain to the people of Buchans and the people of Canada whether the same criteria were used in this particular decision as were used in the decision to locate the prison in Port Cartier, in the Prime Minister's riding?

• (1450)

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making an assumption that we switched the prison site from Buchans. We never selected Buchans as the site.

The Commissioner of Corrections set up a site selection committee and, using that criteria, they investigated a number of sites across Newfoundland, including Buchans. After reviewing the work of the site selection committee, the Commissioner recommended to me that the Harbour Grace area be selected, and I accepted that recommendation.

JUSTIFICATION FOR SITE SELECTION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General knows that money had already been designated in the 1984-85 Estimates for a federal penitentiary in Buchans. He also knows that this new location was chosen even before land was acquired, even before the federal Government was in a position to build a prison there.

The Minister for International Trade said today: "The federal Government cannot justify putting a prison in a community like Buchans which is nowhere near where prisoners' families are living". If this is the policy of the Government of Canada, how can the Solicitor General justify the building of the Prime Minister's prison in a remote part of his riding, in Port Cartier, 900 kilometres away from Montreal, a 14-hour bus ride away from Quebec City? If the consideration is close proximity to family, why was the Prime Minister's prison built where it is?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am extremely surprised that the Member complains about us not selecting Buchans as the site for the prison when the former Solicitor General also rejected that site and selected an area in Windsor.

I have here a press release dated August 7, 1984, in which the former Solicitor General, the Member for York Centre, announced that a penitentiary would be built in Newfoundland. "We are going to initiate an assessment of possible sites in the Windsor area later this week and it is expected that a suitable piece of property will be acquired within the next couple of months".

They did what we have done. They rejected the Buchans site because it did not contain a suitable infrastructure. I find it a little difficult that the Member complains now when what we did was what the former Solicitor General of his Government did.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General who will know that in 1984, the Liberal Party decided to build a federal penitentiary in a Liberal riding.

Ms. Copps: Retract that.

Mr. Robinson: Now we see a Tory Government building a federal penitentiary in a Tory riding. I want to ask the Minister—

An Hon. Member: What about Jack Harris?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Robinson: In view of the fact that the Prime Minister decided to build a prison in his own constituency, supposedly for economic benefit, if that is the same criteria for the Minister how can he explain on economic grounds not building the federal penitentiary either in the Buchans area or Bell Island area, both of which have desperately high levels of unemployment? Why one standard for the Prime Minister and another standard for the people of Newfoundland?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I explained earlier in the House, the site of Harbour Grace was recommended to me by the Commissioner of Corrections after his site selection committee had reviewed various possible sites in Newfoundland. One of the sites they looked at was indeed the Buchans area. However, they determined that the required infrastructure was not present in Buchans but was indeed present in the St. John's region or Harbour Grace area. That is the reason for it.

Certainly Buchans was considered, and indeed the Commissioner of Corrections met personally with the mayor and other members from that community, and listened to them carefully and considered their site.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, if this is suddenly a concern, why was the Government prepared to spend $42 million extra to build a federal prison in the Prime Minister's constituency? What exactly are the standards for prison construction by the Government? Is it economic benefit, correctional criteria, or is it in fact trying desperately to save the ridings of Tory Members of Parliament? Is that not the real reason?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, the site selection committee determined that Buchans did not contain the necessary infrastructure, which includes access to court facilities, medical and psychological hospitals, doctors and emergency services such as police, fire, and national defence. The Buchans area does not contain that infrastructure. The Harbour Grace area does.

In addition, CSC recommends that a community must have a minimum population of at least 2,500. Buchans barely has 1,000, and the Harbour Grace area which has been selected has a population of approximately 12,000 to 13,000. It is indeed a most acceptable site.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

HOUSING SITUATION IN TORONTO--OWNERSHIP OF DEVELOPMENT LAND

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. According to senior officials with Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Metropolitan Toronto area housing crisis is a result of the fact that land for housing is not coming on the market fast enough. They say that one of the major reasons for that is that six companies own all of the development land in the Metro Toronto area.

Will the Minister advise the House if CMHC has asked his officials to investigate whether there has been a breach of the Competition Act? If they have not done so, will the Minister give us his undertaking that he will do so?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely sure whether CMHC has asked officials in my Department in that regard. However, the Director of Investigation of the Competition Bureau is aware of the situation and is investigating it.

Due to the confidentiality provisions of the Competition Act, I really cannot say any more in that regard, except that it is being investigated by the Director of Investigation of the Competition Bureau.

IMMIGRATION

PLIGHT OF UKRAINIAN REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister will know that several weeks ago a group of 205 Ukrainians en route to Rome from Poland claimed refugee status in Vienna and are currently being held in an Austrian refugee camp, faced with possible deportation back to Poland.

The Minister will also know that the group wants to come to Canada and that the Ukrainian Canadian community has made extensive representations to the Minister for Government sponsorship of these refugees. In view of the fact that in recent years there have been virtually no Government sponsored Ukrainian refugees from eastern Europe, will the Minister advise the House whether the Government of Canada is prepared to accept and sponsor these refugees to Canada? Will she seek immediate assurances from the Austrian Government that the group will not be deported to any country behind the Iron Curtain?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member and other Members for their interest in this case. As the Hon. Member knows, people of Ukrainian background coming from eastern Europe have either Polish papers or papers from the Soviet Union. These particular cases were brought to our attention. We spent considerable time in an effort to assist them.

The applications are currently being processed, including medical and security procedures. Those procedures will apply. The process is under way. We have already been in contact with the Austrian Government and we are assured that no one will be deported to Poland.

• (1500)

We have asked for assistance from the Ukrainian community, with whom I am meeting next week on this issue, in identifying any cases of special hardship. I understand there are none, but if some are brought to our attention we will certainly process those on a priority basis. Our expectation is that these people, providing the process goes smoothly and all the people are cleared, will be arriving in Canada this winter or this spring.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LEAD IN GASOLINE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week we brought to the attention of the Government the publication of a U.S. Congressional study with respect to the impact on human health of lead in gasoline. Today we learned about a study undertaken by Dr. Anthony McMichael at the University of Adelaide in Australia to the effect that there is new evidence that exposure to relatively low levels of lead during early childhood can slow and perhaps permanently stifle mental development. Therefore, the question I must again ask of the Government is whether it is prepared at last to advance the target date for reducing lead in gasoline from January 1993 to 1990.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly assure the Hon. Member that the National Health and Welfare experts, as well as Environment Canada officials, are studying the brief prepared by the Canadian Coalition for Lead Free Gasoline with respect to the effect of high lead levels on the health of children. There will be consideration given to a accelerated phase-out if that proves to be necessary.

I should point out that the program, with the deadline of 1992, to eliminate lead in gasoline, was a program introduced by the Government of which the Hon. Member was a member at the time. Since that time, the safe blood lead level of concern has been lowered from 20 micrograms per decalitre in 1986, to 10 to 15 micrograms now. But we have seen a lowering of the actual levels in children in urban cities to a level of 8 micrograms per decalitre from 12 micrograms which was the level in 1984.

In other words, we are making regular progress and the research to which the Hon. Member referred has certainly been reviewed by officials in the Department of National Health and Welfare and in the Department of the Environment to see if further measures are necessary.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ADVANCE REDUCTION DEADLINE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has pulled out the wrong briefing note. I am referring to more recent studies. In view of the fact that the Royal Society of Canada cautioned the Government that the program that is now in place may not be fast enough, is the Government willing to make a decision and advance the deadline for further reduction of lead in gasoline from 1993 to 1990? That is the question the Minister ought to answer.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may feel I am reading from the wrong briefing note, but my answer to the first question he asked was nonetheless correct. The Government is looking at recent scientific evidence and the report of the Coalition on Lead in Gasoline with a view to determining whether a faster phase-out is necessary. I think the Hon. Member would have to agree that it would be irresponsible for a Minister to stand up in the House and promise to change the deadline date of a program his Government established without doing our homework first.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon with a single question, followed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North with a single question.

RAILWAYS

GRAIN TRANSPORTATION SUBSIDY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. Mr. Ian Gillies of the Cargill Grain Company said recently that although it is actually cheaper by over $8 per tonne to ship grain from southern Manitoba to the St. Lawrence terminal elevators than to the West Coast terminals, the federal subsidy paid to railways makes the cost to the shipper over $12 less to rail this Manitoba grain to the West Coast.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary confirm the accuracy of Mr. Gillies' statement which suggests that the railways' subsidies paid under the Western Grain Transportation Act have a dramatically distorting effect on economic activity in the Canadian grain trade?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to correct the situation. I am not the Parliamentary Secretary. I am the Minister of State for Transport.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: Not for long.

Mr. Tobin: Some things are better left unsaid.

Mr. St. Germain: I thank the Hon. Member for having given prior advice of the question. With respect to the Hon. Member's question, as the Hon. Member knows I have met delegations from his riding with respect to the port authorities and the shipping people who work out of and represent that area. We are concerned. His concerns are our concerns. However, the National Transportation Agency will be reviewing the Western Grain Transportation Act in 1989. I believe that it will come forward with recommendations at that particular time in dealing with the situation put forward by the Hon. Member, and we look forward to the response and recommendations with respect to this matter.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STATUS OF SALARY NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The vast majority of the public servants who are represented by the Public Service Alliance and the Professional Institute know their collective agreements with the Government ran out in 1987. They have been negotiating with officials of the Treasury Board since then. They have not had a single offer in respect to the salary part of their agreement. They have asked repeatedly to meet with the President of the Treasury Board and have been told that she is either too sick or too tired to meet with them.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister make it his business to see that a cabinet Minister who has some authority meets with the representatives of these two organizations so that the bargaining can be brought to a successful conclusion? The fact is that the morale of our employees is going to go down and down unless there is some movement.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise that the bargaining process is continuing. We all regret that we have not been able to reach a conclusion to the bargaining process, but there has never been a suggestion that the bargaining on either side is continuing in bad faith. I think we should leave it with the officials and with the representatives of the unions, with the hope that very soon they will be able to negotiate a final position and execute an agreement.

Mr. Siddon: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Before we get to the point of order, I should like to say Hon. Members have been very co-operative. The Hon. Member for Algoma has a single question and that is the end of Question Period. I then must hear the Hon. Minister on a point of order. The Hon. Member for York Centre also has a point of order. And we will get it all done.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF DROUGHT IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the drought situation which has afflicted southwestern Ontario and other parts of the province. Last month the Minister of Agriculture said that assistance would be provided to eastern farmers on the same basis as those in western Canada where some $153 million was provided to the livestock industry alone. The estimates of losses in Ontario now approach $.75 billion, that is $750 million of losses in crops. I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister could indicate what assistance is going to be provided and when that assistance is going to be provided?

The Minister of Agriculture failed to show up for a very important meeting a week ago with farm representatives. All the important farm representatives of various organizations are meeting in Guelph today. They want to know when the Government is going to provide assistance and how much assistance is going to be provided in light of the Minister's statement last month.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing interest in this matter. I just want to reassure him, and I think he knows, that no Minister of Agriculture has worked more closely with the agricultural community than the present Minister of Agriculture. In fact, many times the Opposition has condemned him and the Government for consulting with the farm community and working together with them. The Minister of Agriculture had undertaken to deal with this issue. I know he is actively working on it, as he has with the drought situation in other parts of Canada, and as he has with other agricultural calamities. I can assure the Hon. Member that he will be dealing with this in an expeditious way and, hopefully, to the satisfaction of all.

POINTS OF ORDER

SUPPLEMENT TO QUESTION PERIOD REPLY

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the NDP has informed me that, unfortunately, he had to leave the House. It is important for the record that I present to the House updated information received in response to a question, the first question I believe the hon. gentleman asked me earlier during Question Period. I think this information underscores the importance of not extracting from press reports information which later proves to be incorrect and thereby unnecessarily alarming people.

Ms. Copps: Order!

Mr. Siddon: I think this information is very important to the people of Montreal, if not to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

The Department of the Environment maintains a register of all inspected and registered dumping sites for PCBs in Canada. That is done in co-operation with the provinces. Notwithstanding that fact, there are still some PCB-filled transformers being used by industry according to policies adopted in 1977 when those transformers were no longer allowed to be installed in new industries and new plants.

There may be in some cases in some locations currently transformers in use which still contain PCBs. That is quite a different situation than having transformers stored that are no longer in service. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and Members of this House that Air Canada has no PCB-filled transformers operating in any of its facilities in the Montreal area. While it once did have some 29 transformers at Dorval Airport and five at the Toronto Airport, those were all removed starting in 1986, and have been replaced with transformers of the dry type air-cooled design. All of the PCBs taken from these transformers were shipped outside Canada and sent to a specialized firm in Wales where they were totally destroyed through incineration.

In conclusion, we can assure the House that there are presently no PCBs at Air Canada owned premises in Canada.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, mine is a very brief point of order. During Question Period my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) questioned the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) about the penitentiary proposed to be built in Harbour Grace, Newfoundland. I recognize that the Solicitor General is not in the House, but he referred to a document which hitherto has not been known about, which is a report that he claimed was received from the Commissioner of Corrections recommending that location. He did not quote from it and I recognize that.

However, in light of that revelation can I ask the Government that that report be made public.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to discuss this matter with the Solicitor General. I think my friend hit the nail on the head when he said that the Solicitor General did not quote directly from the report. However, I will discuss the matter with the Solicitor General.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Minister of State. I will also look at the record. If it is appropriate I will come back and report to the House.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment on the point of order of which you have taken notice. I want to suggest that even though the precedents that we have deal with the need to table a document which has been quoted or cited in debate, and that includes Question Period, I respectfully suggest that Your Honour consider making a ruling that if a Minister refers to a report from his officials recommending a course of action and says something about the advice contained in it, there should be an obligation to table the entire report so that Members of the House and members of the public will be in a position to know exactly what was in the report and the extent to which the comment about it by the Minister covers the whole of the nature of the advice and the context in which that advice is given.

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and other Hon. Members, that I have listened very carefully to the intervention. I will consider the matter.

I point out that this issue was discussed some weeks ago, I think on a matter raised by another very experienced Member in this place, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). I will consider it with care.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the customary question about the intentions of the Government with respect to the business of the House, this being Thursday. I know that this morning an order was proposed by the Government with respect to the business of the House and it was agreed to. However, there are likely Members who are here now who were not here this morning. I think that in the interest of carrying on a desirable practice I should ask the customary business question and give the Deputy Government House Leader an opportunity to reply.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that at 3 p.m. this afternoon, or as soon as we finish the business of the House question, the House will immediately enter Orders of the Day and proceed to consideration of Bill C-146. That is a Bill with respect to the tax courts. This particular piece of legislation will pass through all stages. This, naturally, is on consent. It will pass through all stages without debate and without a recorded division.

The following order of business has been put together with the co-operation of the Opposition Parties. I want to thank them at this time, as I did this morning, for their efforts in this matter.

Immediately after the consideration of Bill C-146 the House will proceed to consideration of report stage of Bill C-139, with the intention that the report stage be finished by 10 p.m. this evening and the vote on concurrence at report stage to be completed this evening.

Tomorrow, we will commence third reading of Bill C-139 and complete that on or before 2 p.m. with the vote being deferred until 6 p.m. on Monday. If in fact we complete that order of business before 2 p.m. tomorrow there would be no further business called by the Government.

Monday, August 29, and Tuesday, August 30, are the two designated days for the third reading stage of Bill C-130, the free trade Bill, pursuant to the order made on August 16, 1988. Any division requested on Bill C-130 shall be deferred until 3 p.m. on Wednesday, August 31, 1988.

Following that deferred division on Wednesday of next week, or as the first item of business on Wednesday of next week, the Government will call Bill C-114, the conflict of interest legislation, for second reading. Second reading of Bill C-114 shall be completed and voted on not later than 5.45 p.m. Thursday, September 1, 1988.

I will stick strictly to business and not to any provisions the order has with respect to the rules of the House. I point out that the House will then adjourn until 11 a.m. on Tuesday, September 13.

One added item I would point out is with reference to the legislative committees which are studying Bill C-136, the broadcasting legislation, and Bill C-144, the child care legislation. If in fact the legislative committees complete their work on these two items there is provision in the Order for the reports to be tabled during the adjournment of the House. They shall be deemed to have been reported and stand on the Order Paper ready for report stage consideration on or after Tuesday, September 13.

It is provided in the Order that the Notice Paper will remain open until 6 p.m. on Monday, September 12, for any amendments thereto. I indicated this morning that when we returned on September 13, in anticipation of the report by the committee on Bill C-136, the Broadcasting Act, being tabled, the report stage amendments being ready and on the Order Paper, that we would proceed with consideration at report stage of Bill C-136.

I am advised that the critic for the Official Opposition finds that date to be inconvenient, and I understand that. We will therefore defer consideration of Bill C-136 until Wednesday, September 14, and we will have our staff discuss the matter with the opposition staff. We will discuss it and put together items of legislation for Tuesday, September 13, which meets the convenience of all Parties.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) could give some guidance to the House with respect to the proposals which the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) indicated would be coming forward very shortly. It is the question of political rights for federal government employees.

As the Deputy Government House Leader probably knows, I had proposed that if we were to restore to the Order Paper the Bill proposed by the Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) and make some minor technical amendments to it, that Bill could in fact be put through the House quite quickly. That would be the responsible thing to do.

I had some misgivings about the proposals and what I understood from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), but could the Deputy Government House Leader indicate if it is still the Government's intention to table such a Bill or is that intention now abandoned?

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend will know that as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has said, consideration is being given to legislation on political rights, and that consideration is ongoing. As soon as we are in a position to put it into legislation, the Government will come forward with that legislation.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have another question with respect to House business. A long-standing commitment to correctional officers in federal penitentiaries across Canada remains unfulfilled. That is the commitment on the part of this Government to bring forward legislation permitting early retirement, recognizing the severe stress that many correctional officers face in their jobs within the federal Correctional Service of Canada. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) is on record as saying that he supports legislation of this nature, but we are still waiting for the Government to bring forward a Bill that would provide for early retirement for correctional officers in federal correctional facilities across Canada.

I would like to ask the Deputy Government House Leader when the Government will finally bring forward this legislation, and assure him that when the Government does bring it forward, certainly we in the New Democratic Party are prepared to facilitate immediate passage of that long overdue legislation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, Question Period, as the House knows, went until 3.10 p.m. today. I consider this to be nothing more than an extension of Question Period. I, in all good faith, laid out the menu for a considerable amount of days in advance. If that question has to be asked, I suggest that it is for Question Period.

TAX COURT OF CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-146, an Act to amend the Tax Court of Canada Act and other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I understand that there may be consent to refer Bill C-146 to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister is indicating that there may be consent to move directly to Committee of the Whole. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, August 23, consideration of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau:

That Bill C-139 be amended in Clause 19

(a) by striking out line 7 at page 70 and substituting the following therefor:

"any property is 2/3 of his capital gain"

(b) by striking out line 12 at page 70 and substituting the following therefor:

"of any property is 2/3 of his capital loss"

(c) by striking out line 17 at page 70 and substituting the following therefor:

"the disposition of any property is 2/3 of"

"years and fiscal periods ending after 1987."

Mr. Speaker: I have a further ruling for Hon. Members with respect to Bill C-139. There are 17 motions and amendments set down on the Notice Paper in relation to Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts.

Members will recall that on August 23, I promised to return and give a final ruling in connection with this Bill. In my preliminary ruling I found Motion Nos. 1, 2, 7, 14, 15, and 17 in order and ruled that they would be debated and voted upon separately.

I will now deal with the remaining motions.

[Translation]

Motion no. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) appears to be attempting to amend the Income Tax Act itself rather than this Bill. However, Clause 39 of the Bill does deal with several aspects of child care expenses and for this reason I will give him the benefit of the doubt. Motion no. 3 will be debated and voted upon separately.

Motion No. 4, again standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides will not be selected as it is similar to a motion moved, debated and negatived in the Standing Committee.

Motion Nos. 5 and 6 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) are both in order but since the Hon. Member is targetting the same clause in both motions the Chair will only select Motion No. 6 for a separate debate and a separate vote. This decision was made after consultation with the Hon. Member.

• (1530)

[English]

Motion Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 standing in the names of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) and the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) will be grouped for debate and will be voted upon as follows: (a) Motion Nos. 8, 10 and 12 will be voted upon separately; (b) a vote on Motion No. 9 will apply to Motion No. 11.

Motion No. 13 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides is in order and will be the object of a separate debate and vote.

[Translation]

Motion No. 16 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) causes the Chair concern as it does not fit in the Bill as reprinted. Furthermore, it appears that the Hon. Member is seeking to amend a section of the Income Tax Act, which has been repealed. This is not in order. In this connection, I refer Hon. Members to paragraphs 1 and 8 of citation 773 of Beauchesne's 5th edition.

[English]

To recapitulate, Motion No. 16 has been ruled out of order and Motion Nos. 4 and 5 were not selected.

I thank Hon. Members for their co-operation with the Table Officers in going through what has been a complicated matter and I hope that Hon. Members are satisfied with the result.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I believe the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) was on his feet at the time the debate adjourned the other day speaking to Motion No. 2.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps Hon. Members can assist the Chair. I understand that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre was speaking. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre can assist.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if you are moving to debate on the motions, we were on Motion No. 2. If I recall correctly, the Member from Winnipeg North Centre had a certain amount of time left in his speech.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate briefly what I said when we were last dealing with this legislation. Quite simply, we are opposed to what the Liberal Party is trying to do today with this amendment by treating the taxation on capital gains even more lightly than the Conservative Government is doing.

We believe there ought to be some equity and fairness in the taxation system for ordinary families. If you continue tax forgiveness on capital gains and not treat those gains as income, the ordinary family will have to pick up the burden, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that he does not support the capital gains exemption for small businesses and farmers?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that we do believe capital gains ought to be taxed with an exception for farmers and small businesses. These are legitimate exceptions. As far as the rest, all other capital gains ought to be fully taxed. In that way income from capital wealth can support public activities and the burden does not have to fall on the ordinary family.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has, without being formally recognized, brought a matter to my attention which I think must be acknowledged. The Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) has with great skill bootlegged a question in which probably was out of order. However, the question is there. The Hon. Member has handled it adequately and with dispatch. We will now continue with debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) has the floor.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I was a little confused here by the position of the socialists. They have confused a number of Canadians before on their policy.

I draw to the attention of the House the issue involving the earned depletion allowance on flow-through shares and how the policy flowed through from one position to another at one particular point in the debate, particularly after the Minister responsible for the Bill in question had made a decision. It became apparent in the mining community that it would cause some difficulties. Then we had the situation whereby the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) asked the question, and the tone of his question was in direct contradiction to the statement made by his critic whether the date of the initiative in question had been announced. That was a little confusing and I must say it left a number of us perplexed.

Mr. de Jong: That is the history of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Boudria: That is all right, Mr. Speaker. Everyone has a right to be confused and so do the New Democrats.

In the issue we are discussing today, we are hearing from the New Democrats that they do not approve of the Liberal amendment produced by my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). What he is proposing is a change in the Bill by which change the capital gains and dividends would be taxed in a manner consistent one with the other.

I draw to your attention the November, 1987, report on the White Paper on Tax Reform, Stage 1. That particular committee was made up of Members from all three political Parties. Let me read the list of Members. They are indicated by name and I understand we are supposed to refer to Members by their constituency but, nevertheless, representing the New Democratic Party we had the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) and so on. I draw to your attention that the report on the White Paper on Tax Reform was adopted unanimously. We are talking about a unanimous report here, Mr. Speaker. Here was the position expressed in the White Paper at Article 11. I read it—

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) is reading from the main body of the report, but he ignores the fact that his Party wrote a minority report dissenting with a number of recommendations of that committee, which is to be read in context with that report, as did the New Democratic Party. He should read on capital gains the New Democrats' contention that with the exception of small businesses and farms, capital gains should be taxed at 100 per cent. If the Member were to read the whole report, he would not be making the error he is making right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The Chair would be most appreciative that when a Member is standing he waits until the debate is stopped before conducting any further debate.

I do not believe the Member had a point of order the way I heard it, which was faint because the Member's microphone was not on during his discourse. I did not detect a point of order but rather a matter of debate. I will call upon the Member to resume debate.

Mr. Cassidy: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I simply wanted to make the point that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell was misrepresenting a colleague in the House by not citing the minority report in the report of the Finance Committee on tax reform which quite explicitly indicated the New Democratic Party's support for capital gains tax at 100 per cent rates on everything except small businesses and farms. That was the point on which, I am afraid, the Hon. Member misrepresented our Party. He is free to make his points, but I just want to make sure that he does not obfuscate the record.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is not raising a genuine point of order but a matter dealing with argument and interpretation. As I understood the debate we had in the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, of which I was a member, the NDP agreed on that particular point, and what he is doing now is not a point of order but simply a matter of interpretation, and personally I would put a totally different interpretation on the position he took during consideration of the Bill in Committee.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I think we have heard enough on this non-point of order and I would like to have the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) continue with his debate.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, recommendation No. 11 was unanimously carried by the parliamentary committee, as was recommendation No. 12. It is important to note that they were carried unanimously, with the accord of members of the New Democratic Party.

Recommendation No. 11 was that, as an interim measure only, the proportion of a capital gain or capital loss required to be included in computing an individual's taxable capital gain or allowed capital loss be increased from one-half to two-thirds for gains and losses realized in 1988 and in 1989. Believe it or not, Motion No. 2 strikes out a clause and replaces it with a clause with the figure two-thirds, the very same figure that appeared in the committee recommendation which was unanimously adopted.

There may be a philosophical point at which the New Democrats say they want the whole thing to be taxed differently. Our Party as well thinks that this tax reform would be a lot better had it been done properly. However, the point is that all political Parties agreed that if this tax reform were to take place, we should amend it in such a way as described in recommendation No. 11. Everyone agreed that that was the thing to do, but two political Parties have now changed their minds, the Conservatives and the New Democrats. We in the Liberal Party are consistent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The next question is Motion No. 3.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides) moved:

(a) by striking out line 5 at page 106 and substituting the following therefor:

"63.(1) Subject to subsections (2) and (4),"

(b) by adding immediately after line 43 at page 109 the following:

"(8.1) Section 63 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(4) 26 per cent of the amount deductible as child care expenses under subsection (1) in computing the income of the taxpayer shall be converted into a deduction from the tax payable by the taxpayer and the portion, if any, of such deduction that exceeds the tax payable by the taxpayer shall be refunded to the taxpayer."

He said: The purpose of this motion is to make our tax legislation more consistent and to apply the same approach taken in other areas to the area of child care expenses. Mr. Speaker, as you know, all personal exemptions such as deductions for dependants and children have been turned into tax credits, which seemed only fair. In fact, I recommended as much, if I am not mistaken, in my first speech in the House, in response to the first Budget Speech when we were talking about tax reform. I said that it would be fairer and more equitable to turn these exemptions into tax credits, thus setting a fairer value on these exemptions and making them a better reflection of the expenses to be covered. Since tax rates differ depending on one's income bracket, the exemption tended to be more generous to people on high incomes than to those on lower incomes. The Government agreed with this proposal, except that when it got to the matter of child care expenses, instead of transforming deductions for child care expenses into tax credits, the Government maintained the deduction formula.

If adopted, Motion No. 3 would, first of all, transform the deduction into a tax credit. We know that currently, the deduction is $2,000. This Bill will raise the deduction to $4,000 for children up to the age of 6, but only for families who provide receipts. If you hire someone and you have receipts for child care expenses, you can deduct up to $4,000 annually for children up to the age of 6. Before, there was a maximum of $8,000 per family. That will disappear. We know that a family that incurs child care expenses but does not have receipts, or where one of the spouses stays home to look after the children, can obtain a maximum increase of $200 annually of the refundable child tax credit. However, this applies only to families on lower incomes.

I have no problem with this second part of the Act; since it is in keeping with what already existed and the tax credit continues and is refundable, no problem. But regarding the expense deduction, we believe that it would be preferable to have some consistency and keep the tax credit approach as much as possible. And since it is a tax credit that helps families, we believe that this tax credit applicable to child care expenses should be 26 per cent. For example, a family with $2,000 in child care expenses would be entitled to a tax credit of 26 per cent of $2,000; if it has $4,000 in child care expenses, it would be entitled to a tax credit of 26 per cent. That is my proposal. It does not change the ceiling, but simply changes the deduction into a proportional tax credit. Why 26 per cent? Because it would help families with modest incomes more. Under the present tax reform, their income is taxed at 17 per cent. The first $27,500 of refundable income and a 26 per cent tax credit would thus benefit families making $27,500 or less and would change nothing, or very little, for families with more substantial incomes.

So I make this proposal for two purposes: first, to keep some consistency in the use of tax credits, since the Government has decided to eliminate exemptions and to change them into tax credits, I do not see why this should not be done for child care expenses; second, it would enable families with child care expenses who are in the lowest income bracket to obtain a 26 per cent tax credit for them.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was just given a very sober nod from the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). I hope he realizes that it is you, Mr. Speaker, and not he who consents to my being able to speak in the House of Commons.

This motion from the Liberal Party is like the curate's egg. It has some good portions and some that are not so good. The aim is to make the child care deduction into a refundable tax credit at the rate of 26 per cent of eligible child care expenses. This particular clause of the Bill, Clause 39 which amends Section 63 of the Income Tax Act, previously provided for the deduction of child care expenses to the limit of $2,000 per child under seven years of age. This has been raised in the Government's proposals to a maximum of $4,000 per child under seven years of age or a maximum of two-thirds of the taxpayer's earned income. The Liberal amendment proposes that that be turned into a refundable tax credit at the rate of 26 per cent of eligible child care expenses.

The NDP is of the view that we need to make sure child care spaces are available across the country. To act almost exclusively through the tax system as proposed by the Government is not good enough. By increasing the allowable amount from $2,000 to $4,000 we are providing a benefit to wealthy Conservatives who pay nannies to look after their children and then deduct the entire amount. Or, perhaps they are wealthy enough that they can pay for day care at full rates. However, there are an awful lot of people who do not have that kind of money.

In addition, like it or not, there is an informal child care network which has grown up because of the lack of more formal facilities. In that network it is not always possible to get receipts. If you do not get receipts, you do not get a credit. In addition to which, the wealthier you are, the more this $4,000 per child deduction is going to be worth. A secretary earning $20,000 a year who pays $4,000 or $5,000 for child care will be able to get a credit only at the rate of 17 per cent of that amount. It is worth about $680 to her, or about $15 a week. On the other hand, the wife of a company president who has a job as a co-ordinator in some company or something like that and is making $50,000 a year will have a marginal tax rate of 29 per cent, and the $4,000 or more her family spends on child care will be worth $1,200 to her.

We will support the Liberal amendment even though we have grave misgivings about this $4,000 which the Liberals choose not to interfere with, because the principle is that the child care deduction should not be a deduction but a credit. It should be at the rate of 26 per cent, which is equitable as between the person earning $20,000 a year and the person earning $50,000 a year. It is for that reason that we support this amendment.

I do want to say, however, that this is a minor improvement and, as my colleague from Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) will say, it is not an adequate solution to the problems faced by such a large number of working women and families across Canada which have not been responded to adequately by the Conservative Government.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a few additional comments. I think my colleague, as usual, has described most accurately and eloquently our concerns.

I would like to point out again that we feel very strongly that the Government's child care strategy, which would double the deduction for child care expenses, would cost a total of $2.3 billion, including the $200 child tax credit, and this would come out of the child care budget over the next seven years. That is a considerable amount of money. Our position is that it would go a long way to increasing considerably child care spaces which are the first priority across this country. It would mean that instead of many of the parents who now either do not have receipts for informal baby-sitting arrangements or have no alternative but to use unlicensed baby-sitting arrangements, would then have in their community licensed child care. If that amount of money were put into the child care system it would mean fees would be reduced and the cost of child care would not be as high.

As my colleague pointed out, this measure helps only those who pay taxes. For many mothers on welfare or with very low incomes it really will not be helpful and they are the ones that should be given priority in any money that goes into the child care system.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think I should take a moment to give my reaction to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). We have in tax reform an approach which is quite different philosophically from what he is suggesting when it comes to credits. We have eliminated deductions for things such as the married exemption, or equivalent to married exemption, child tax exemption, family allowances and so on, and turned them into credits. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has explained many times the reason for this. In this particular case the Hon. Member is essentially saying that expenses incurred to earn income should be reflected in a credit, not as a deduction. It is a technical point, really, but that is not what we are doing in tax reform. When you incur expenses to earn income, including the expenses of child care, they should be deductions, not credits. That is really what is behind what we are doing here.

The federal revenue loss on this proposal would be at least $100 million. The impact of providing a credit of 26 per cent represents that revenue loss. This would be in addition to the new child care initiatives which will cost the federal Government $380 million annually through the doubling of the child care expense deduction from $2,000 to $4,000, and the increase in the child tax credit by $100 in 1988 and $200 in 1989 and subsequent tax years for children under seven years of age. The Hon. Member was striving for consistency in his motion but the point is that if we adopt the motion we would be inconsistent with the whole philosophy of credits as compared to deductions for expenses in earning income, of which child care is one.

• (1600)

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would of course like to support Motion No. 3 presented by my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

The very basis of this tax reform was to convert deductions into credits so as to make the system fairer and more equitable. That is why my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides proposes that under tax reform, child care deductions be made into tax credits.

I find the argument of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) interesting. He states the Conservative Government's philosophy on child care deductions and considers them . . . he lumps them with the other deductions. Until 1987, personal exemptions and everything else that have now been changed into credits were taken as deductions. He justifies not making child care deductions into credits by saying they are an expense to earn income. That is the crux and that is what this Conservative Government does not want to recognize . . . Today, society has changed; keeping a family is not an expense to earn income. For most single-parent families and even for families where both parents work, it is essential; it is a personal deduction like the personal exemptions and all that. I think that they should be made into tax credits, because it is fairer.

So today while the Minister wants to justify them as deductions rather than credits, the child care expense deduction should be treated in the same way as the other deductions that were changed into tax credits, to be fair and equitable, because it is a personal expense and a necessity today. Single parents have to go out and work and even in families with both parents, they have to work to balance the family budget. So the Government should review its position and support this motion to correct the social injustice it is creating by maintaining the deduction instead of abolishing it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Garneau) negatived.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

That Bill C-139 be amended by deleting Clause 78.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Clause 78 deals with the elimination of the $1,000 investment income deduction under the Government's proposal for tax reform. I do not think any single issue has provoked more comment and concern than this, with the possible exception of the change in treatment of automobile expenses, which provoked a great deal of reaction at our hearings from small businesses and people directly affected such as travelling sales people.

The reason this proposal provoked concern is very simple. The $1,000 investment income deduction was a tax privilege available to people on modest incomes, particularly senior citizens. I think that when the Government chose to eliminate that it did not see the essential unfairness of the system it was creating. On the one hand, it gave a $100,000 tax free exemption on capital gains income which would, of course, go for the most part to wealthy Canadians. One-third of all capital gains in the country go to the 1 per cent of taxpayers with the largest incomes.

In the changes to the tax rates the Government actually brought taxes down on only one group compared to 1984. The people affected are those who earn about $100,000 a year. They pay less than in 1984, but everyone else pays more because in the interim between 1984 and the present the Conservatives have systematically been increasing taxes on average Canadians by a number of different means. The consequence is that, even after changes brought in under tax reform, average Canadians are paying more.

In addition to that, there are a number of privileges which have been left for corporations and a number of privileges which are accessible to people who are well off, well connected, or have various types of business enterprises. Yet, the Government chose to sweep away the $1,000 investment income deduction.

Mr. Hockin: You are arguing for the rich.

Mr. Cassidy: I am arguing for average Canadians. If the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) would like to propose an amendment to our amendment which would confine this investment income deduction to people with an over-all income of less than $30,000 or $40,000 a year, I would be happy to see that as an elaboration on the proposal I am making.

The amendment is to repeal the clause proposed by the Government which, in turn, repeals the $1,000 investment income deduction. In parliamentary terms it seemed that that was the most straightforward way to do this. I had prepared a somewhat more complex amendment. I consulted with the Clerks and in the wisdom of the Speaker he has chosen simply to accept an amendment from the New Democratic Party to repeal the clause completely.

If the Minister of State for Finance believes that it goes too far and believes that the investment income deduction should not be given to people earning over $30,000 or $40,000 a year, I can say that I agree with him. I would be happy to co-operate. We could stand this clause and he and I could go behind the curtains to discuss it. He need only indicate that and I am sure the House would be prepared to give its unanimous consent for us to work out an amendment jointly to bring this back in a way that he proposes, because that is not a bad suggestion.

The people who are particularly affected by this are senior citizens, people who have put a few dollars aside in Canada Savings Bonds, in RRSPs, or on deposit in Guaranty Trust, or people who have perhaps inherited a handful of shares in Bell Canada which give them an income of $500 or $800 a year. It is not a great deal but it is a part of their provision for their old age. This is who is hit particularly by the repeal by the Government of the investment income deduction, and that is why I am proposing, on behalf of the New Democrats, to put it back.

If the over-all tax system was fair, if there had not been concessions to people who are wealthy, if there had not been this very large tax-free zone on capital gains, again to people who are wealthy, it might be acceptable for the Government to tell senior citizens that everyone has to make a few sacrifices and that the investment income deduction has to go because that is part of the give and take, part of the trade-offs which occur with tax reform.

I have learned a great deal about tax reform and tax policy in the course of the last year as a member of the Finance Committee studying this particular issue. In fact, both my colleague from Regina East (Mr. de Jong) and I would probably agree that we have learned more than everything we ever wished to know about tax reform in the course of the last year. One of the things I have learned is that people do have an essential sense of justice.

[Translation]

People on modest incomes, and senior citizens are one example, see that the Goverment has eliminated the annual $1,000 investment income deduction while it gives a $100,000 tax-free exemption on capital gains income to Canadians who are rich or in any case well-off. They see that the Government has reduced taxes by $4,300 annually for taxpayers with an annual income in excess of $100,000, while people on modest incomes, like senior citizens and people with an annual income of $15,000 to $20,000, get a tax reduction of about $2,000 and maybe not more than that.

Add to this the de-indexation introduced as part of this tax reform, which means that even tax deductions received by those who are not well-off, by people on modest incomes, will disappear within three or four years.

Mr. Speaker, this is why senior citizens' organizations brought their requests and proposals before the Committee on Finance which examined this Bill, urging the Government to maintain the $1,000 investment income deduction. As far as I am concerned, it should do so until we have a tax system that is truly fair and equitable.

The Minister of State for Finance suggested that instead of giving this tax concession to everyone, we restrict it to those people with an income of less than $30,000 or $40,000.

Mr. Speaker, I accept the suggestion made by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Hockin), and I suggest that two minutes from now, after I finish my speech, we both go behind the curtains and, with the help of his officials, draft a new amendment for this section which would re-instate the investment income deduction for persons on modest incomes, restricting this concession to taxpayers with an annual income of less than $30,000.

We on the New Democratic side are prepared to accept this proposal. It is a good one. But to give the rich all kinds of concessions, to reduce corporate taxes by about 6 per cent, which represents a big drop in taxes for many corporations in this country, while at the same time depriving taxpayers on modest incomes of the few tax concessions they have left—it just is not fair, it is not equitable and we cannot accept that.

Mr. Speaker, I moved this amendment to the clause to eliminate the Government's proposal and to re-instate that part of the Income Tax Act that provides this concession, that allows the $1,000 investment income deduction. This is mainly for taxpayers on modest incomes. Mr. Speaker, it is a tax concession for people who are rich, and for them it should not exist, I agree. But compared to the other concessions made to the rich, this one has no impact on their investment activities. However, it is very important to the average taxpayer, and these are the people we want to help with this amendment.

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's motion is perverse in the extreme. First, what he is suggesting would literally dry up all the major sources of charitable contributions in the country. It would be an absolute disaster for almost every charity that Members of Parliament care about. It would result in putting yet more burdens on the Government and further centralize decisions on matters of that sort. I cannot believe the House would even tolerate the implications that are inherent in the Hon. Member's motion.

As for the $1,000 investment income deduction—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister knows that the amendment as I originally proposed it would not have touched other provisions relating to charities. It was the Speaker who chose the amendment as it is being considered here today. The Hon. Minister knows that it was not the intention of the New Democratic Party to eliminate that other part of what is in the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I do not find that to be a point of order. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I was speaking to both motions. I want to deal with the $1,000 investment income deduction. The Hon. Member is trying to make a point that was made early on in tax reform but has been subsequently clarified very well by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I think most Canadians understand that the original concern about the $1,000 investment income deduction is groundless because when one puts that measure in the wider context of tax reform, it results in reasonably good news.

The reintroduction of the $1,000 investment income deduction would cost the federal Government $1 billion. Who would that help?

While removing the deduction, we have offset it by providing higher personal credits for all Canadians. It is elderly Canadians who wrote us early on in tax reform in order to understand the policy. For most elderly filers, the loss of the $1,000 investment income deduction has been more than fully offset by a higher personal credit of $1,020 and the age credit of $550. These changes were most advantageous to those in lower tax brackets, for whom the age and basic credits yield much greater reduction in tax than did the old exemptions and the $1,000 deduction.

The answer is to put the issue into the whole context of tax reform. This is what we are doing successfully, and Canadians understand it.

It is only wealthy taxpayers who would argue like the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) that this should be restored, because only for wealthy taxpayers will the elimination of the $1,000 investment income deduction in conjunction with conversion from deductions to credits result in an increase in tax. That is why his motion argues against what he claims is his very motivation in the first place.

I should read into the record the kinds of tax reductions for seniors that are occurring under tax reform. A single senior with income of $15,000 has a tax cut of $105, which is 7.6 per cent of tax. For a single senior with an income of $20,000, the tax cut is $235, which is 8.2 per cent as a percent of tax. The tax cut for a single senior with an income of $25,000 is $435, which is a 9.9 per cent tax cut as a percent of tax.

The tax cut for married seniors with an income of $15,000 is zero, but for those with an income of $20,000 it is $575, which is a 67.3 per cent tax cut as a percent of tax. Married seniors with an income of $25,000 have a $655 tax cut, which adds up to a 28.8 per cent tax cut as a percent of tax.

Our approach is very progressive. The whole credit approach is especially helping our elderly and those with low income. We are proud of that element of tax reform.

Even though we are invited to step behind the curtain to look at another solution, we have looked at it carefully and are very proud of what we have produced because it is progressive. It is not regressive, which is the ultimate implication of the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to this motion. First of all, I disagree with the Government's position which is to abolish the $1,000 investment income deduction. Today, we are reminded of our senior citizens, of the neediest in this country and of those workers who have managed to accumulate a few savings. The deduction for the first $1,000 in investment income meant that they did not have to pay income tax on the interest earned. This partly compensated for inflation, which is still 4 per cent annually, so it was a form of protection for their meagre savings.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to deal with this matter in a tax reform plan that would make our tax system fair and equitable. We would have introduced a tax credit formula enabling small investors to avoid paying income tax on the first $1,000 of their investment income. Since the basic tax rate is 17 per cent, it would have been very easy to provide a tax credit of up to $170 per year, and this for all those who qualified for the basic tax rate of 17 per cent. This would have maintained a tax credit for low-income Canadians. That is the kind of solution I would have liked.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I support the position of the New Democratic Party, and I support this motion on the principle that we cannot afford to have a double standard in our tax laws.

The Minister of State (Finance) said earlier that the Government was generous and that while eliminating this, it was providing higher tax credits that applied to everyone. However, it maintained the $100,000 capital gains exemption. People who are in position to claim the capital gains exemption will certainly take advantage of the personal tax credit to which the Minister of State (Finance) referred to earlier.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot afford to have a double standard. Since the Government has decided to provide a $100,000 capital gains tax exemption, I think the least it can do is let taxpayers who are not in a position to take advantage of that exemption to keep the $1000 investment income deduction. As I said before, for the sake of fairness I would have preferred to see a maximum tax credit of $170, since the first tax bracket is taxable at a rate of 17 per cent. However, since the Government has decided to ignore completely the low-income bracket of Canadian taxpayers, I intend to support the motion to abolish this clause and maintain the $1,000 investment income deduction.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the amendment moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I say to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) that I have received a substantial number of letters from senior citizens in Winnipeg who object very strenuously to the proposal of the Government to remove the exemption of interest up to $1,000. These are retired people living on modest incomes and they just do not accept the view expressed by the Minister of Finance of State for Finance a few moments ago. He tried to tell us how much people will save because of the Government's tax proposals this year. But what he did not tell us was that for the first three years of this Conservative Government, income taxes were raised and sales taxes and excise taxes were raised, so in fact this year's reduction goes only part way in decreasing the increases implemented by this Government which hit all Canadians, particularly senior citizens.

Members of our Party have consistently proposed that the tax system be examined and revised and made much more fair than it is. The Carter Commission, appointed by former Prime Minister Diefenbaker, made it clear that the tax system had been changed so many times and so many special exemptions had been given to corporations and wealthy individuals, that it was completely broken down in terms of being fair. When this Government started to talk about implementing a fairer tax system, a reform of the tax system, as it was called, we watched with a great deal of interest to see what would happen.

I want to give one illustration of what has happened to one very wealthy individual in this country as a result of the tax policies of the former Liberal Government and the present Conservative Government. I refer to Mr. Robert Campeau. He was quoted in a news story which appeared in The Globe and Mail on May 12, 1988. It reads:

> "He told the Canadian Club of Montreal that Canada's deficit is 7 to 8 per cent of gross national product, compared with only 2.5 per cent in the United States. And he said Canada's Government-supported medicare is a mistake.
> "I question whether politicians, federal or provincial, who put in medicare were really thinking of the welfare of the people, or were they, perhaps, thinking of their own political welfare."

The article concludes:

> He lashed out at the regulatory burden business faces in Canada and demanded that social welfare programs be examined and rationalized.

Let us look at Mr. Robert Campeau. In the 1960s, he was a developer and builder of houses. He owned 4,000 acres of land around Ottawa and had built 11,000 homes. In the years since then, he was able, by contracts given to him by Liberal governments, often without the Government calling for bids, to build and then rent to governments some of the largest office buildings in the National Capital Region. According to information obtained by then Conservative Members of Parliament, including the late Walter Baker, Ron Huntington from Vancouver and the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), when they were in opposition, the rents agreed to were substantially higher than the going rates in the area.

The Guy Favreau complex in Montreal, the largest government building in Montreal and perhaps the largest in Canada, was built by Mr. Campeau through a lease and buy-back arrangement with the then Liberal Government. The present Auditor General described it as one of the most wasteful federal projects he had ever seen. According to the Montreal Gazette yesterday, the rent on the building is just under $1 million a month, and bricks from the walls are falling. According to a senior official in the Department of Public Works, all the bricks on the building may have to be replaced.

Using the profits Mr. Campeau was permitted and encouraged to make in Canada, he entered the United States and has become one of the most active and successful developers in the United States. He is now operating in the multibillion dollar class. How was he able to do it? Partly because of the favourable contracts he received from Liberal governments, but also because of the kind of tax system we have.

We did a search and found that from 1978, which was the earliest information we were able to find, to 1985, net profits for Campeau Corporation totalled more than $125 million. Yet, according to The Financial Post data, in 1978, the company paid no corporation taxes at all. In fact, it received a tax credit. Since then it has not paid one penny in current taxes.

Every one of the years from 1978, on have been profitable years for the company. From 1985, alone, the company recorded net profits of $27.9 million, yet no taxes were paid. The company was able to defer $24.3 million in corporation tax. In fact, the deferred corporation taxes which this company has accumulated amount to $141.8 million as of the end of 1985.

Mr. Campeau got started in the years that the Liberals were in office. We are now four years down the road from that time. We have had four years of Conservative Government. We have had four years of talk about fairer taxes. We have had four years of talk about reforming the tax system. We have had four years of talk about a minimum corporation tax.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): There are now more jobs and lower interest rates.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I hope the comments of the Hon. Member for Ottawa will be recorded in Hansard. He is obviously prepared to let corporations pay no income tax and wealthy Canadians pay no income tax as long as jobs are created. The seniors whom that Member represents, like the seniors I represent, resent the fact that they have to pay income taxes on relatively modest incomes. Many of them live in poverty and have to pay income taxes, while people such as Mr. Campeau and corporations like his and many others pay no tax at all. I am happy that the Hon. Member from Ottawa interjected. I think the people of Canada want to know who stands for a fair tax system. It is obvious that the Conservative Government and the Conservative Party do not.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the venerable Hon. Member I think there is a great deal of emotion which is being used to cloud the issue this afternoon. For instance, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Centre (Mr. Cassidy) gave us his own definition of affluence which is very elastic.

On the one hand he speaks of the tax on capital gains as being favourable to the rich, omitting to say that it applied to farmers, very average farmers, and that when it was first brought in in 1971, it had a devastating effect on the price of land. I think land went up by seven to nine times immediately thereafter, which created many problems for farmers who wanted to ensure that their children could carry on with farming.

It was because of this feature of this devastating inflationary aspect of capital gains provisions that my Party, in the short time that it was in office in 1979, worked very hard to introduce a measure which would allow farmers to leave their land to their children enabling them to keep as a retirement fund a certain amount of money. I think that amount was up to $200,000. In this way they could retire in dignity. They could also hand over their land to their children and their children could afford to take over the land.

It is wrong to say that the capital gains tax was a tax on the rich. It was a tax on farmers, on their land, and it created terrible problems. It is only recently that the price of land has gone down. Unfortunately, it is because the agricultural sector is in such difficulty. It was a very bad policy decision to introduce capital gains tax.

Capital gains tax also applies to small business. The $100,000, which figure my colleagues are bandying about as being a huge amount of money which most Canadians would think is a fortune, is a one-time, lifetime deduction. In other words, it does not recur every year.

When we look at the lifetime of a small business or of a farm, $100,000 is a very modest amount of money. It does not apply to multimillion dollar corporations such as the one described by the Hon. Member. He was talking about the Campeau empire. There is no connection, no relevancy to his using that example to talk about capital gains tax or to talk about tax reform. He was giving an example of a very small number of corporations which in very clever ways have managed to arrange their affairs so that they pay either no tax or very little tax. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has started to deal with that situation. For instance, he has removed an investment tax credit which was very useful to these types of corporations. It was a provision introduced by the Liberals with respect to which there was much abuse. Billions of dollars of taxpayers' money were wasted because it did not lead to the research that it was supposed to trigger. It lead to abuse.

We have discussed the implementation of a minimum tax. There are some problems with the technicalities of such a measure but we are still working on it.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre said the $1,000 investment deduction applies to modest people. Here, again, he cannot have it both ways. These are the very same people who have investments and who could until now deduct $1,000 of interest from their income tax. Who has investments? Is it your average Canadian? No, it is not. If we look at the figures in the Revenue Canada reports we will see that that $1,000 deduction was used a great deal by people in a far higher revenue bracket than the $15,000 or $20,000 about which the Hon. Member talks. When we look at the increase in the deduction for the average senior citizen, we will see that they have gained much more. As a matter of fact, I am getting complaints from senior citizens—not ones with modest incomes—who have very good portfolios. There are senior civil servants who have retired who find that this $1,000 is being taken away from them. They are very upset about it. It is difficult for some people to realize that we had to do this.

The money has to come from somewhere. We certainly should not cut down on programs, which is what we did not want to do. To the contrary, we wanted to increase the safety net for people. The money had to come from somewhere and this was one place from which it could come.

It would be false to say that the removal of the capital gains tax or a measure to permit deductions for capital gains tax of up to $100,000 in a lifetime is helping the rich. It is helping farmers. It is helping young people who want to take over their parents' farms. It is helping small business, men and women. There are more and more women in small business now. In one lifetime they will be allowed not to pay taxes on $100,000 worth of capital gains. That is not a fortune. They pay taxes on the property when they buy it. They pay taxes on their revenue over the years which comes from owning their land.

It is unfair to define affluence in that way. It is also unfair to cloud the whole issue of tax reform in this emotion and to let people think that the Canadian Government is not helping those who need it most. That is what tax reform is all about. You cannot take one part out and say, "I like this but I don't like that, because it affects me and I want it to affect my neighbour". So it has to be looked at as a package, which is what the Minister of Finance has said all along.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to enter into the debate on the amendments as introduced by my colleague. It is unfortunate that the Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of National Revenue (Mrs. Mailly) did not really understand the point that both of my colleagues, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and the Member from Winnipeg tried to make. In essence, the point that they were trying to make was that the tax system as it exists helps those with very high incomes, helps the very rich, whereas those exemptions that are of significance and importance to middle and to lower middle income earners have been removed, and the unfairness of the tax system continues to exist.

While I agree as well with the Member for Ottawa Centre, it is with a certain amount of hesitation that we introduce the amendment. If we really had a fair tax system, one that would consider a dollar is a dollar is a dollar, as far as tax purposes are concerned, then, to give special exemption for interest earned would not fit. A dollar in interest surely should be considered as a dollar in profit, which should also be considered as the same as a dollar in dividends or a dollar earned as a wage or a dollar increase in the capital gains.

Unfortunately, this Government has refused to accept the notion of a dollar is a dollar is a dollar when it comes to tax policies. So that a dollar earned through a capital gains increase is treated quite differently from a dollar that is earned by a wage earner or a dollar that is earned in terms of dividend payments.

We are saying that as long as these inequities exist in the tax field, we are darn well going to fight to help those, particularly senior citizens, who stand to lose their $1,000 exemption from interest earned.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) has attempted to put on the record the great benefits that senior citizens have received because of tax reform. Of course, he is very selective in terms of comparing taxes paid in one year as compared to the next year. Of course, what the Government insists on doing, in attempting to show that seniors and other taxpayers are saving money because of tax reform, is to compare the taxes that they paid in 1987 to what they will pay in 1988 with tax reform. Lo and behold, yes, many of them will be paying less.

If you can compare it to 1984, when this Government was elected, those taxpayers are all paying more, and that is the truth of the matter.

The taxes that they are paying, both on income tax and on sales tax, have increased because of this Government. The Government as well fails to mention that even when the taxes paid from 1977 to 1988, are compared, the taxes that the average Canadian tax earner is paying on the goods and services that he is buying are, of course, not included. One of the things that this Government did when it introduced tax reform and lowered the rates on income taxes paid, was to have also increased the sales taxes to make up for the loss in revenue.

So, yes, you have seen a decrease in the income tax that you have paid, but you have also seen an increase in the taxes that you pay every time that you buy a chocolate bar, some clothes, a gallon of gasoline or whatever it may be. This Government is now taxing you in a way that Canadians have never been taxed before. That of course is the first year. If this Government is ever re-elected, the second shoe will drop. That will be a universal sales tax, in which everybody going for a haircut or a shoe shine or going to the dentist will also be taxed on whatever goods or services they will be purchasing.

When this Government talks about the benefit of tax reform to the seniors, it takes a very narrow view in trying to establish its case that seniors are better off. If you take an honest view, if you compare what the seniors and the average Canadian taxpayer is paying, both in income tax and in sales tax in 1984, when this Government was first elected, and what they are paying now under the so-called tax reform, in 1988, you will find that the average Canadian taxpayer of course pays substantially more.

The Minister of State for Finance wanted to present the case that tax reform was very progressive. He showed the amount of decrease and taxes paid by various groups, those earning $15,000 or less per year, those earning $20,000, those earning $25,000, single and married couples and so forth, and he presented us with figures. In some groups, we will even save up to $655 per year in income tax. But then he stopped with that group. He did not go on and he did not mention, for example, that there are 180,000 Canadians earning $100,000 and more per year that will be saving some $4,165 in income tax.

The Hon. Member, the Tory across the way, says, "Wouldn't that be too bad?" From his perspective, that is not bad at all. In fact, that is great. But from the point of view of progressivity and fairness in the tax system, yes, it is bad. It means that under the Tory tax reform, if you are earning $100,000 and more per year, you are going to be saving over $4,000 in your income tax, but if you are earning some $25,000 a year, you are going to be saving some $435 in income tax. That is not progressive and that is not fair, and that is why Canadians generally have been somewhat lukewarm in their treatment of tax reform. Certainly, it has not produced the support that I think this Government was hoping it would produce.

Therefore, I think that the motion presented by my colleague that calls for the retention of the $1,000 investment and income tax exemption is a good one. It helps seniors. If the Government is interested in ensuring that seniors and those with middle income are the ones who will benefit, as my colleague has stated, we are willing to go behind the curtain and work with the Government for a proper amendment to put an income ceiling, if that is the wish of the Government. But otherwise, I think the amendment should be carried and the seniors of this country in particular should continue to enjoy the $1,000 exemption.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join briefly in the debate on Motion Nos. 5 and 6 that were put forward by my colleague from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

I want to focus particularly on his proposal that the $1,000 interest and investment income exemption in the income tax be continued. I want to do that on behalf of many of my constituents who have called me and have written to me about the kind of taxation that they have faced in the last year or two.

I remember how in the spring of 1987 many of the seniors looked at their income returns and considered the limited incomes that many of them have, perhaps with a pension plan and some investment income that they had received and had been able to build up over the years—not a great deal of money in many cases—enabling them to have a reasonably decent retirement. It allowed them to lead the kind of life that all of us are proud of having been able to achieve for senior citizens over the last 10 or 15 years, a good part, of course, because of the indexation of the old age pension which this Government tried, within a year of its election, to limit, not to do away with it completely.

These senior citizens found themselves over a year ago being hit with taxes. The taxes were not necessarily a great amount but the seniors were shocked that, their incomes not being very large and needing every cent to maintain themselves, they were having to pay tax. I have been sent by one or two constituents quite detailed statements of the kinds of incomes they had had for several years past. Their incomes had not improved markedly, probably had not kept up with inflation. But these senior citizens had paid very little, if any, tax until a year or two into the life of the present Government and then there they were having to pay tax.

This is the experience of individuals and couples in Thunder Bay like those in every city and town and community across the country, that under this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the Government has been wringing out of individuals, middle and lower income Canadians, every cent of income tax possible. The Government has done that without being prepared to recognize that the pressure for revenue ought to make for tax fairness, for applying to corporations something halfway like the kind of brutal search for revenue that has been applied to lower income Canadians and the poor of this country who should not have to pay tax at all.

That is the context and the background against which we consider whether the $1,000 investment and interest income exemption should be continued or removed. The Minister of Finance knows that the Government of Canada needs revenue for all kinds of purposes. He has been cutting back in many areas and not living up to the challenges that face the Government. He has been niggardly with financing of post-secondary education and health care. The Minister, who knows how much he needs income, should have remembered about the $500,000 capital gains tax holiday he gave some Canadians in his attempt to make more millionaires, as he suggested a couple of years ago. If he had been fair and treated every dollar like every other dollar, putting the burden fairly everywhere to raise the revenue he wanted, senior citizens and persons who have built up some investment and drawn income therefrom should not have been touched. But when the boots have been put to lower and middle-income Canadians the way they have by this Government as I have described, it is unconscionable and absolutely unfair to take away the $1,000 interest income exemption as the Minister of Finance proposes to do.

It is those human reasons that involve the lives of seniors in my city, persons who have built up a certain amount through their own savings over the years, who deserve to enjoy the income from small investments. If the Minister of Finance is not going to be fair about it, let us continue that exemption and allow seniors to enjoy the fruits of their savings and of denying themselves in the past in order to build up these investments.

I feel very strongly the political necessity of the motion put forward by my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Shall we call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) that she is unable to move her motion during Private Members' hour on Friday, August 26, 1988. It has not been possible to arrange an exchange of positions in the order of precedence pursuant to Standing Order 39. Accordingly, I am directing the Table Officers to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence.

Since notice will be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business tomorrow will be cancelled and, pursuant to Standing Order 39, the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour.

HERITAGE RAILWAY STATION PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved that Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Taylor moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me the greatest of pleasure to move third reading of Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations. Amended in a legislative committee, this Bill was presented to the House on July 15 by the chairperson of that committee, the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt).

The significance of railways in shaping our nation's destiny cannot be denied. Railways brought Canada into existence and, in large part, they have defined our fundamental character. Because of Canada's size, geographical diversity, dependence on trade and the twin needs of settlement and political identity, transportation has been of vital importance to us. It is above all railway transportation which has been the very backbone of our nation. It is the railway station that remains the most cherished of the tangible reminders of what Canada's railways have meant to Canada and her people.

These stations were points of departure and arrival for thousands of families as they travelled on odysseys of settlement across our enormous country. They saw the farewells of tens of thousands of Canadian troops who went off to fight in four wars, and they were the first thing that those who returned saw when they came back home. Railway stations have been the scenes of millions of journeys undertaken by Canadians from all walks of life, and they figure in the memories of millions of Canadians. So the distress of Canadians when these stations are destroyed is completely understandable. We will be a poorer nation if our railway stations are lost.

Railways were our "national dream", and the heritage of our railways is the heritage of that dream. It has often been said that a nation will be judged by what it consciously chooses to preserve. Therefore, should not Canada strive to save examples of the very buildings that speak so eloquently to the role of the railway in the birth and the growth of this country, our heritage railway stations?

The answer is undeniably yes. But we must move quickly. Our stock of heritage railway stations is rapidly diminishing, and if nothing is done soon there may be nothing left to preserve. That is the purpose of the Bill currently before us, to provide a mechanism whereby the preservation of Canada's heritage railway stations may be assured.

This Bill would forbid a railway company from destroying or in any way altering a heritage railway station or its heritage features unless authorized by the Governor in Council. Failure to seek authorization would result in a fine.

What is a heritage railway station? This Bill defines a heritage railway station as a railway station designated as such; that is to say, a railway station that has been designated a heritage railway station on the recommendation of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada.

Here may I say that the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada is most interested in this Bill. The board has often expressed concern that our railway stations are disappearing. While this Bill, when passed, will add new responsibilities to those which it has had traditionally, the board has indicated that it is pleased to have a role to play in the identification and preservation of Canada's heritage railway stations. The board will move quickly to establish criteria to identify potential heritage railway stations so that it may deal with applications for designation in an effective and timely manner.

Now, if I may, I would like to say a special word of thanks to those who have made special contributions to Bill C-205, the Bill before us today. First, the former Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park, Mr. Flis, first introduced the Bill in 1984. There are the Members of this House who, during the course of debate on this Bill, spoke so movingly of the need to preserve heritage railway stations, those stations that are so close to the hearts of so many Canadians.

Beyond that, I would like to thank the chairperson of the legislative committee, the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt) and the members of her committee, for the thoughtful and expeditious manner in which they dealt with this extremely important matter. I believe that the amendments resulting from committee consideration of Bill C-205 have strengthened the Bill in that they have addressed a number of technical difficulties, provided for clarification and will ensure ease of implementation of the Bill.

I also want to say a special thank you to the Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker) and to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). The Hon. Member for Regina West worked so hard for this Bill that sometimes I wondered if it was not his Bill, he was so enthusiastic about it. I thank him for that enthusiasm and that hard work. I would also like to thank the Heritage Canada Foundation, the very life of which depends on heritage. The Foundation has done a tremendous job in supporting this Bill. I would like to thank CP Rail, CN and VIA for appearing as witnesses, as did the Heritage Canada Foundation, before the committee and the Ministers of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) for giving so freely of the time of their departmental officials at committee stage.

The time for rhetoric is over. We must now take that final step and pass Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations. If we fail to do so, a vitally important aspect of our national heritage and indeed of our national consciousness, our heritage railway stations, will remain prey to the vagaries of corporate decision-makers and will have at best an insecure future, or at worst, no future at all. If we fail to act and these buildings, be they humble structures in tiny hamlets or grand architectural monuments in urban centres, are lost, we will have robbed future generations of what is rightfully their legacy.

Heritage railway stations must be preserved unimpaired for future generations, and I would urge the Members of this House unanimously to express their support for the Bill before us and to pass it from this House without further ado. Moreover, I would like to ask the Members of the Senate, for their part, to deal with Bill C-205 in an expeditious manner in order that the preservation of this nation's heritage railway stations may be assured.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank all Hon. Members for their support. I now move third reading of Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I take much pleasure in rising in support of Bill C-205 which was sponsored by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). It is a good Bill and it is long overdue.

There were many previous occasions in previous years when Hon. Members of this place from all Parties tried various and sundry ways and means of preserving railway stations as heritage sites to be refurbished or used to handle passengers. I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Bow River and say that the Bill has the full support of my caucus and my Party.

I must mention at this point a long-held dream of mine. I solicit the support of my colleague from Bow River and any other of his colleagues to finally get the beautiful old Union Station in downtown Regina converted into a multi-modal transportation centre. I have been working on this since about 1970, and there are so many players in the piece that it took years to get them all together. First the CPR was involved, then VIA Rail came into the piece and then the CTC, the Department of Transport, the City of Regina, the Saskatchewan Transportation Company, the provincial Government, and two or three others I have probably overlooked.

At one point, it looked as though we had finally gotten it together. The federal Government was prepared to put up $500,000 toward the cost of refurbishing that old station. We were to build an addition on one end for a bus administration office of about six stories and one wing of the station would be the bus terminal. The central part would be where rail passengers embarked and disembarked. There would be two or three travel agencies, a nice little restaurant and perhaps some boutiques and shops.

I am just as angry at the former NDP Government of Saskatchewan as I am at the present Conservative Government of Saskatchewan. The NDP Government dragged its feet, hummed and hawed and horsed around, but finally in February, 1982, an agreement was signed. In June, 1982, there was a change of government and the Government changed its mind. The agreement went out of the window. Now we are going to have to do the whole darn thing all over again.

In supporting this Bill, I put in my plea for help from Members from all sides of the House. I sure have not given up on it. It is one of several reasons why I am running again.

• (1710)

I also want to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Bow River. You know, Sir, how all of us get labeled around here. I am labelled a rabid, wild-eyed, left wing socialist-communist in disguise, according to the labels.

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. Benjamin: The Hon. Member for Bow River gets labeled just like other Members as a wild-eyed, right wing fascist, et cetera. Yes, there are left wing and right wing fascists.

In any case, the hon. gentleman and I have sat on the Standing Committee on Transport all the years he has been here. He has not been here quite as long as I have, but he has been around a heck of a lot longer than anyone else in this place or any other place. We sat in committee many a time and kicked the heck out of each other. A few times we agreed. This is a good example of that. We worked together, confounded the bureaucrats and the governments and the fancy lawyers from the railroads and a few others. In spite of all that, or perhaps because of it, the Hon. Member has with this legislation left a good legacy behind him. I say that because I understand he is not running again.

I wish I was in as good a physical shape as he is. He can run around the block and I can barely walk it. However, I believe since 1935 or 1939, I am not sure which, he sat as a Member of the Alberta Legislature, was Minister of Highways for some 17 years, and I noticed that he did not try to get away with some of the nonsense we hear nowadays from some Tories about privatization and turning highway construction over to the private sector and whatnot. He built a lot of good highways with good people in his own department. He had then and has now a reputation for honesty and integrity in his service to the public of Alberta and Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: That is something all of us need to emulate, whether or not we agree with the Hon. Member, and it was not too often that we did. However, he has earned the respect and regard of people in this place, the Alberta Legislature, and certainly all of western Canada. The legacy the Hon. Member is leaving behind will serve in his stead everywhere in Canada.

When I think of the thousands of locations where the two railways destroyed beautiful old buildings, I realize it is a historical and social tragedy. This legislation stops them cold. They cannot touch these buildings without someone's okay. I think it is to the everlasting credit of the Hon. Member that he took this initiative. It was a pleasure for me and my friend from the Liberal Party to support him on the issue. We took part in committee hearings, questioned witnesses, and only accepted amendments that the Hon. Member for Bow River was prepared to accept. We got it through, and I commend the Bill to the House.

I also commend the Hon. Member for Bow River. I hope no other Conservatives in the House learn how to survive as long as he has. I also hope he will not teach them. However, I do mean quite sincerely what I say about him and about this legislation, and I hope it can go through now.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I just want to take a few moments of the House's time to add my congratulations to our valuable and senior colleague from Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on his initiative which will ensure that our railroad heritage is in part maintained.

I do this for two or three reasons. First, I and my family have a long-standing interest in heritage matters. We live in a designated heritage home. I have had the privilege of being on the Rideau Heritage Board. I was a founding member of the Rideau Historical Society. My wife and I have, over a long period of time, appreciated and lent our skills and interests to learning about and preserving the heritage we have grown up in and been part of.

There is, however, another dimension which is awfully important to me. I am probably one of the very few Members of Parliament ever to have lived for an extended period of time in a railway station. In 1942, my mother became the station manager in Glengarry, Nova Scotia. I lived in that railway station from 1942, until I started university several years later. There are a number of unique things about that. First is the fact that my mother was appointed station master in the early days of World War II. It was very unique for the Canadian National Railway to have done that.

The building was beautiful. It was in large part a two-storey building, gabled windows in the upper storey, a freight shed with a flat roof, a waiting room about twice the size of the entrance to the West Block, with a fully functional telegraph office. It was simply a beautifully designed building, very, very functional, serving two main functions. One was to serve a prosperous rural community in the highlands of Nova Scotia, and the other was as a landmark on the railway line between New Glasgow and Truro where there was a break in the long grade over Gordon Summit crossing the height of land across Nova Scotia.

I would remind those who are not familiar with that area that the heaviest grades on railway lines in Canada exist on that branchline. That plateau on the railway line, the break in grade, served as a point for hooking on extra engines to get over the grade. It was important to the service of the local community and it was important in the functioning of the railway line.

The tragedy of all that, as I look back now at that magnificent structure, is that it is no longer there. In fact, if you drive by where that magnificent old building stood, a building which meant so much to me in my boyhood but, more important, so much to that great agricultural community in northern Nova Scotia, it has simply been destroyed. With that has gone an awful lot of railway history in Nova Scotia and a big part of that community.

As a professional geologist it has been my pleasure to travel widely in Canada over the years. The adoption of this Bill will ensure that three railways stations, which I consider to be great, will be preserved. The first I want to make mention of is the railway station in Cobalt, Ontario, owned by the Ontario Northland Railway. I do not know how many of my colleagues in the House have seen that station. It is a simply magnificent building and I hope it will fall under the purview of this Act. Another is the railway station in Whitehorse owned and operated by the Yukon and White Pass Railway. It is again a magnificent historical building which is linked very closely to the heritage of Canada. The third one of which I want to make note is the CPR station in Smiths Falls. It as well is a beautiful building architecturally and is very important to the evolution of the railway community in eastern Ontario.

In offering these comments I want to express my thanks to the Member for Bow River, to those colleagues of ours who served on the legislative committee, and to all Members of the House for their co-operation in adding a dimension to Canada's heritage in order that those who follow us will benefit from a great era in the evolution of Canada. So much of our historic economic evolution is related to railways and it should be a great priority for us to enhance that remembrance.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, maybe I have risen prematurely. However, I understand that there is unanimous consent to call it six o'clock when we have finished with this order of business and to continue with the debate on Bill C-139 at that time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I think that this will be determined when we dispose of the Bill before us. I thank the Member for her interjection.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is there unanimous consent to suspend the sitting of the House till 6 p.m. this evening?

Mr. Garneau: I think that if you ask, Mr. Speaker, you would get the consent of the House to continue on tax reform rather than to wait until six o'clock. We on this side are prepared to attack Motion No. 7 immediately, if the House so desires.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I would agree to reverting to tax reform at this time rather than calling it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is there unanimous agreement to proceed with the government Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain Acts, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides) moved:

That Bill C-139 be amended in Clause 90 by striking out lines 44 at page 224 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) $4,675 plus 23 per cent of the amount by".

He said: Mr. Speaker, the objective of Motion No. 7 is to reduce from 26 to 23 per cent the middle tax rate for taxpayers with taxable incomes between $27,500 and $55,000. The rate structure would then be 17, 23, and 29 per cent, which would be much fairer than the one proposed by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, as I just said in English, the purpose of this motion is to reduce the middle tax rate for taxpayers with a taxable income between $27,500 and $55,000 from 26 per cent to 23 per cent. The rate structure would therefore be 17, 23 and 29 per cent which would be much fairer than the Government 's proposal.

Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred to table a different kind of amendment that would probably have added an additional tax rate. However, this would not be allowed under our Standing Orders, at this stage, and I am sure the Chair would have declared the amendment out of order at this stage of the proceedings. As you know, amending a tax Bill is not the easiest thing in the world because of the precedents and financial questions involved, and the Standing Orders of the House leave us very little leeway. The only thing I could do at this stage was to suggest a drop in the middle tax rate from 26 per cent to 23 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, the tax reform has changed the number of tax rates we had so far.

[English]

The Government has decided to reduce the number of tax brackets from ten to three. If this amendment is defeated, the federal rate will be 17 per cent on the first $27,500 of taxable income, 26 per cent for the additional dollars between $27,500 and $55,000, and 29 per cent on all income over $55,000.

We believe that three tax brackets are not enough. Had the rules of the House allowed me to do so I would have introduced a more complex amendment. It is not, however, possible for me to do that. I tabled this amendment in order to have the opportunity to express my point of view on the number of rates of taxation. As I have said before, three rates do not produce a progressive type of taxation.

We also believe that the gap between the second and the third rate is not large enough. It is amazing that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) decided to impose a 17 per cent tax on the first $27,000 and then jump nine points from 17 per cent to 26 per cent. There is another increase for additional earnings, but only of three percentage points. That is certainly not enough and I think that is unfair for the middle class. When we compare the taxes that middle class Canadians will pay after tax reform with the dollars they were paying in 1984 we see that the average family will have a burden of more than $1,200 per year. We say that this situation is completely unacceptable and we think it should be amended.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when we take a closer look at the situation in various income groups, we see that according to the new tax table proposed by the Minister of Finance, with the new tax rates, people with an income of $27,000 or $28,000 will see their additional earnings... Someone with an income of $28,000 who has two children will see his additional earnings, say he has a raise of $1,000, this pay increase will be taxed at a marginal rate that is higher than for people with an income of $100,000. The reason is quite simple. At this income level, when you get a pay raise of $1,000, your child tax credit is reduced by 5 per cent, so that your actual tax rate is not 26 per cent but 26 per cent plus 5 per cent or 31 per cent—2 per cent more than for the person who earns $100,000 and gets a pay increase of $1,000.

This person will have to pay 29 per cent federal income tax on the additional $1,000. However, the other person who has a family with two children and whose income would increase from $28,000 to $29,000 would pay 31 per cent on the additional $1,000.

That is why we say this tax reform is unfair to families, something that has been repeated ad nauseam by all witnesses who appeared before the Finance Committee.

There are people who will say, and I am sure the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is one of them, that we don't have enough money to do something that will cost more than $1 billion. I would like to point out to the Minister that the main reason he got into this fix in the first place is that he wanted to introduce tax reform in two stages, the first stage before the election and the next stage after the election, and this remedy or, should I say, this lack of courage, is being paid for by the middle class whose income will be taxed at 26 per cent, while wealthier groups might see their additional income taxed at a lower rate.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore move this amendment, and I trust it can be considered in accordance with our Standing Orders and will reflect the objective I have in mind which is to make it quite clear that the tax reform proposed by the Minister of Finance is unfair to families. If the Minister of Finance tells me they don't have enough money and that one billion dollars is too rich for the Government, I say now, before he has a chance to give me that argument, that I find this very hard to believe, coming from a Minister and a Government that is prepared to invest $10 billion in nuclear submarines.

If the Minister has any other points to make, I would be glad to hear them. But I will say that personally, if I had the resources and if our Standing Orders had allowed me to table a more complex amendment, I would have preferred to add a tax rate, because I still believe and I am convinced that three rates are not enough and that we should probably have 17, 23, 26, 29 and 31 per cent. I pointed out earlier and explained why at this stage of the debate, the Standing Orders do not allow me to do that, and I used the little leeway I had to make it clear to the House that there was a problem here that we had to solve.

• (1730)

I said a moment ago that middle class families will pay an effective marginal rate that will be superior to the marginal rate of taxation for people earning over $100,000.

The Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, in its report on tax reform, calculated the real rate. These vary according to the number of dependent children and family income level. The following example has been calculated for a family with two children. What I said a moment ago about the marginal rate of 31 per cent is very well demonstrated in this report by the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce that was tabled in the other place.

I have read the report and am convinced that they are perfectly right that for everyone with an income between $27,500 and $45,000, the marginal rate will be 31 per cent if they have two children. That is unfair for the middle class and I hope the Government will accept this amendment.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's proposal is to reduce the middle income marginal tax rate from 26 per cent to 23 per cent. When I looked at the motion, I asked myself what would be the revenue implications. They are rather horrendous, at some $1.8 billion. That alone encourages one to look very closely at this proposal.

The other day we discussed the automobile question with the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). This is very much a limousine Liberal kind of motion. It ends up indulging the upper middle class at the expense of the lower middle class income tax bracket in absolutely grotesque proportions.

The tax rate under $27,500 would be the same as that proposed in the tax reform. However, from $27,500 to $55,000, the Liberals would reduce the marginal tax rate from 26 per cent to 23 per cent. That is the federal rate.

In order to understand how grotesque this proposal is, let us assume a 55 per cent provincial tax rate and combine it with the federal tax rate. Those rates would be 26.35 per cent for under $27,500; 40.3 per cent for the $27,500 to $55,000 bracket; and 44.95 per cent for $55,000 and over.

Let us review the tax savings at various income levels as a result of the proposal of the Hon. Member. I would like the Hon. Member's response to these because they concern every Canadian. First, the tax savings he would turn over to those at the income level of $27,000 as a result of his so-called improvement would be zero. At $30,000 it would be $75 federal, $115 federal-provincial combined if we assumed the 55 per cent provincial tax rate. That is a 0.4 per cent change as a percentage of income, a very small step forward for the $30,000 income Canadian.

Let us look at the $40,000 income level taxpayer. The combined federal-provincial savings would be $580 according to his proposal, which is a 1.5 per cent change as a percentage of income.

At $55,000, it would be a combined federal-provincial savings of $1,275 in tax, which is a 2.3 per cent change as a percent of income.

This would not only cost the Government of Canada and the Consolidated Revenue Fund $1.8 billion, a massive haemmorrhage on the Treasury, it would be horrendously regressive within the middle income tax category. It would provide no benefit to low income filers. Lower middle income filers would receive a small tax reduction from the proposal, while upper middle and high income filers would be the major beneficiaries. That is the import of this proposal.

The marginal tax rate that is proposed in Bill C-139 provides a much better balance of tax reductions to Canadians, while respecting fiscal constraint. Tax reform respects fiscal restraint and comes to terms with constantly trying to reduce the federal government deficit. When we consider the middle income category, we can see that it is progressive.

The Hon. Member's suggestion is regressive. It is a limousine Liberal approach to the middle class.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister for Finance (Mr. Hockin) has talked about limousine Liberals. He has not talked about Cadillac Conservatives.

Mr. Jourdenais: Do not talk about my Cadillac.

Mr. Cassidy: There you are. There is one here to the left of me. Normally he takes a progressive position within his Party. I say to my hon. friend that if he really wants to be progressive, he and all other Quebec Conservatives will ensure that not a nickel of corporate donations given to the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada will be used on election expenditures in the Province of Quebec.

It is very curious, Mr. Speaker, that in the Province of Quebec, the Conservatives said they would not accept corporate donations, but this policy is only local and voluntary.

But, Mr. Speaker, will they refuse money spent by the Progressive Conservative Party at the national level that comes from corporations? No! Money from Alcan and General Motors will be spent by the Conservatives in the Province of Quebec. It is hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Minister of State for Finance talked about the Liberals in their limousines . . .

• (1740)

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I know that it is 5.40 p.m. and we have been at this all afternoon, but I fail to see the relevancy of what the Member is speaking about in relation to tax reform. It is very interesting, particularly since he omits the union aspect of his argument. He will allow unions to contribute but he will not allow companies. It is, in any event, irrelevant to the debate, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Cassidy: I would say, on the point of order, that my points were entirely relevant to the forthcoming election. The people of Canada want to know where the Parties stand with respect to the coming election. However, I see you are taking advice as to whether or not I was relevant to the Bill, and I would say to my hon. gracious colleague from Gatineau that she is correct, perhaps this point was not totally relevant to the Bill except that corporations receive tax deductions for those political contributions.

Mrs. Mailly: So do unions.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, my colleagues are forcing me to continue this discussion.

Mrs. Mailly: You have our permission to switch back to the subject.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you. When I refer to the Hon. Minister of State as being a Cadillac Conservative, it is partly because he comes from London, but it relates specifically to the fact that he saw the mote in the eye of the Liberal without seeing the beam in the eye of the Conservative Party, if I can quote a bit from Scripture.

The Progressive Conservative tax regime gives the greatest tax concessions since 1984 to whom? Does it give it to senior citizens, pensioners or families trying to scrape by on $300 or $400 a week? No. It gives the greatest concessions to people earning over $100,000 a year.

I have a Summary for Taxpayers, a booklet that was prepared by the Department of Finance. It has a little "Canada" with a blue thing over the top of it for the flag. It was changed from red. The booklet points out that for households with a decrease in tax, families under $15,000 in income will get an average reduction of $140. Families earning under $30,000 will receive a cut of $460. Families earning in the range of $30,000 to $50,000 will receive an average cut of $525. Families in the $50,000 to $100,000 range, among those with a decrease in tax, will receive a cut of $735. But what is interesting is the final bracket. This says it all. Families with an income range of over $100,000, and those who have a decrease in tax, receive an average decrease of $4,165.

The result, Mr. Speaker, is that only families and taxpayers with an income of over $100,000 a year will pay less tax in 1988, after tax reform, than they paid in 1984, when the Progressive Conservative Party came to power.

Mr. Speaker, all other families will pay more tax, although slightly reduced by tax reform, but the net result is a tax increase if you count the sales tax and other taxes raised by the Conservatives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in real terms, the average family is suffering under Conservative rule. Its purchasing power is much less in 1988, than it was in 1984. Mr. Speaker, this is mainly due to the Government's piling tax upon tax on the average family and the average taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, I do not fully agree with the Liberal Party's amendment, but what my friend from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has suggested is specifically to change the tax rates for middle-income individuals, who are the base of the tax system. He is proposing that the marginal rate be reduced from 26 per cent to 23 per cent.

To begin with, Mr. Speaker, I wonder why, under the Conservatives' tax reform, a technician working for Bell Canada, for example, or an operator taking telephone calls who earns maybe $28,000 or $29,000 a year pays a marginal federal income tax rate of 26 per cent, while at the same time Jean de Grandpré, the president and CEO, the big chief of that company, with an income of over a million dollars a year, only pays a marginal rate of 29 per cent. Is that a real difference?

So here you have someone with an annual income of over $1 million who only pays the federal Government a marginal rate of 29 per cent. But the technician or the lady who takes telephone calls and works all sorts of hours, who is now on strike because of Bell Canada's effort to deny her a proper standard of living, pays a marginal rate that differs by only 3 per cent, i.e. 26 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I do not deny that during the study of tax reform by the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee, the Conservative majority, which co-operated in many of our efforts, flatly refused to talk about the tax rates imposed on individuals.

[English]

When we got to that particular point, I am afraid to say that they were not dealing in an honest way with the various tax rates. There is an unfairness in a system where the Government proposes that someone earning $1 million or more a year, like Jean de Grandpré of Bell Canada, will pay a marginal tax rate only three points higher than the marginal tax rate paid by a Bell Telephone operator or technician who is scraping to meet the rent and make ends meet. There is something wrong with that.

When the Minister of State for Finance talked about the affect of the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), he said this was regressive because it gives more money to people earning $50,000 a year than it gives to people earning $40,000, and surely people earning $40,000 a year should be better looked after than people earning $50,000 a year.

I agree once again with the words of the Minister of State for Finance. The problem is, however, that the words of the Minister of State for Finance are not matched by the actions of his Government. I would like to think that the Minister of State for Finance battled like crazy but was overruled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who is after all a former denizen of Bay Street where he worked in the investment industry. However, I have to say that, having perhaps worked too long at the University of Western Ontario, the Minister of State for Finance himself really buys the same argument, this neo-Conservative argument which has seeped across the border like a PCB oil spill from the United States that somehow it is good to reduce taxes on the rich and on the very rich because it will trickle down in benefits for average Canadians.

We all know that it does not. It goes into Mercedes, Cadillacs and limousines for Liberals and that kind of thing. It trickles up and stays up and it really does not benefit average Canadians at all. If we want to be honest about it, we would ensure that we had a fair tax system where the taxes on wealthy Canadians were proportionate to their ability to pay and where the average middle-class Canadian family, who is scraping by trying to pay a mortgage with the rates up by half a point today, and trying to meet the cost of living which has gone up since 1984, would in fact not have to pay a rate of tax that was just a shade off the rate of tax being paid by wealthy and very wealthy Canadians. It would be a tax system in which capital gains would be taxed on the basis of total inclusion rather than being totally exempted up to $1,000 as proposed by the Government or, for that matter, with the rate reduced by the Liberal Party.

These are aspects of tax fairness—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Fretz): Is the House ready for the question?

On debate, the Hon. Member Saint Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Motion No. 7 put forward by my colleague for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). I would like to state in the first place that this afternoon we just discovered this Tory Government's total hypocrisy. Each time we put forward an amendment, they immediately said it would cost that much. My understanding was that when they embarked upon tax reform the intention indeed was to strive for fairness and bring in propositions that were aimed at social justice, bringing fairness to all. What the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Hockin) just said is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. If we are to have rates that are fair to everyone, they should be at some point analyzed, and my colleague for Laval-des-Rapides proposed indeed for the $25,000 to $50,000 income bracket a rate that would be fair, that would be half way up the scale instead of a rate that is near the third one for the $55,000 and over bracket. Rather than come up with sound reasons and explain its position on that, the Government wonders how much that will cost, Mr. Speaker. Is this the way to go about achieving tax reform? This is not tax reform. It is adjusting the Income Tax Act to the Government's needs.

In the United States, Mr. Speaker, when the Americans decided to go into tax reform, it worked because all parties agreed on the mechanisms, the principle of that tax reform. They set up their parameters and told the officials: Here they are, implement them. There was no question of looking at costs only. Do we build up society by looking at the costs or by having principles of social fairness? This afternoon, we have clear and specific evidence that this Government has no idea of what social justice is, what fairness to all is.

Mr. Speaker, they always end up talking about money each time we come up with a proposal for child care services, which everyone has come to need. Each time we come up with proposals to lighten the tax burden of senior citizens, the answer is there is no money. But money they have, Mr. Speaker, to buy nuclear submarines. Will that bring us social justice? This shows the Conservative Party for what it really is. What my colleague for Laval-des-Rapides is proposing is very simple.

But the Minister of State (Finance) argued this would increase costs. Therein lies his error, Mr. Speaker, and I will not elaborate because this is so technical it might be difficult to explain to Canadians. What my colleague for Laval-des-Rapides is asking for is a change in rates, not the basic amount. This is what the Minister would not understand. What do we propose? We propose to reduce the rate from 26 per cent to 23 per cent, the average tax rate, for taxpayers with taxable income between $27,500 and $55,000. This is clear and simple. We are looking for social justice between the 17 per cent and the 29 per cent. Is that clear enough? The tax structure would include tax rates of 17 per cent, 23 per cent, and 29 per cent, which would be much more equitable than that proposed by the Government.

I spent two full days sitting on the Finance Committee, and whenever we proposed something . . . I remember that one night, the Conservatives Members on the Committee were fully in agreement with me and we removed one of the clauses—more on that later—but then we had to recant when an official commented that the proposal was impossible to accept because it would cost too much money. Yet, when we had discussed it without any reference to the costs, even the Tory Members were in agreement. But when faced with the costs, they said: "Hold everything!" That is what the so-called tax reform is all about, Mr. Speaker! It's really a joke to talk about tax reform when taxpayers are not treated fairly and when the only reason for amending the Income Tax Act is to make it possible for the Government to get other revenues while lulling Canadians taxpayers into believing that it is easing their tax burdens.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) has just stated that proposals should be considered irrespective of their costs. It is exactly that approach which is responsible for the very high deficit we are faced with today and which was responsible for such an extraordinary high level of inflation that the interest rates reached 22 per cent, that homeowners were losing their houses, and that young families who had managed to buy houses were losing them. As you know, Mr. Speaker, it is all very nice to be dreaming in colour and saying that the Government could give away everything while reducing taxes, that it could make available all the programs it is asked for, but it has to be concerned about costs because it will have to foot the bill in the end. Such an approach is both simplistic and disastrous. We had evidence of this in 1982, with the high interest rates and with inflation rates of 12 per cent, 13 per cent and 14 per cent. We had evidence of this with an unemployment rate with reached 20 per cent in some areas of my riding while it is down to about 5 per cent today.

Mr. Speaker, it is all very nice for the Opposition to speak with a sharp tongue and accuse us of being insensitive because we pause to ask just how much its proposals will cost. But after all, it is a question we have to ask, because this money we would be spending would be coming out of our own pockets. It is a fact that, as Members of the House, we would be called upon to contribute through our income taxes, but it is really the Canadian consumers who would have to pay more when they go shopping at the supermarket or when they go to the bank to renegociate their mortgages. The people who want to buy houses would not be able to afford them because of skyrocketing inflation rates. Moreover, they would not be able to buy them anyway because they would be without jobs. They would find themselves back where they were in 1981-82, among the 20 per cent unemployed who could not meet their payments on their cars, their houses, and did not have enough money at the end of the month to feed their families properly. It is ridiculous to try and show the tax reform in this light, from this point of view. It does not make sense, Mr. Speaker.

What I am trying to say is that we are dealing today with a legislation which we put forward because we wanted to streamline public finances and put everything back in order again. We certainly do not want to return to the total chaos the Liberals had created.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Fretz): The question is on Motion No. 7 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Fretz): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Fretz): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Fretz): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Fretz): I declare the motion lost, on division.

Motion (Mr. Garneau) negatived.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides) moved:

That Bill C-139 be amended in Clause 91 by

"118.2(1) and"

"(1.1) Each of the amounts expressed in dollars in subsections 118.3 (1) and 112.2 (1) shall be adjusted for each taxation year after 1988 so that the amount equal to the aggregate of

(a) the amount that would, but for subsection (3), be the amount to be used thereunder for the immediately preceding taxation year; and

(b) the product obtained by multiplying

(i) the amount referred to in paragraph (b)

by

(ii) the amount, adjusted in such a manner as may be prescribed and rounded to the nearest one-thousandth, or where the result obtained is equidistant from two consecutive one-thousandths, to the higher thereof, that is determined by the formula:

A is the Consumer Price Index for the 12 month period that ended on September 30 next before that year, and

B is the Consumer Price Index for the 12 month period immediately preceding the period mentioned in the description of A."

That Bill C-139 be amended in Clause 92 by striking out line 15 at page 228 and substituting the following therefor:

"$5,000 - (C - $1,000)".

He said: Mr. Speaker, as you know we decided that it was six o'clock after the debate on the private Member's Bill and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), did not know that. She was supposed to be back in the House at 6 p.m., but because of the decision taken by the House, she may be delayed a bit. I would like to see her motion accepted even though she is not here at the moment.

Mr. Garneau: I would like to propose the amendment for her.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Fretz): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (for Miss Nicholson, Trinity) moved:

That Bill C-139 be amended in Clause 92

—Mr. Speaker, the grouping of these motions does not make for easy debating, especially since we have only 10 minutes to address very complicated issues.

My Motion N° 8 is aimed at reindexing the refundable dependent child tax credit and the credit for mental and physical impairment.

[English]

In Motion No. 8 we propose to reindex the refundable child tax credit and the credit for mental and physical impairment.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in its 1985 Estimates, the Conservative Government decided to partially deindex child tax credits, family allowances and also the tax tables. Those are all hidden tax increases which the Conservative Government, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), has imposed on Canadians after having promised not to increase taxes.

Mr. Speaker, what we propose, once again within the bounds of the Standing Orders, is to save at least the essential. We know that there are major problems facing families. Everybody recognizes that the birth rate is down. A huge number of single parent families find themselves in difficult financial situations.

We propose to reindex completely the refundable child tax credit as well as the tax credit for mental and physical impairment. To me, it's a matter of common sense, of being compassionate towards people who are in need because of a physical or mental impairment and of ensuring that inflation will not whittle down the income of families with children.

We have limited our amendment to two specific cases, although I would have liked to do the same thing for other sectors.

[English]

To reindex the refundable child tax credit and the credit for mental and physical impairment.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in Motion Nos. 9 and 11 we recommend raising the income threshold of the spouse or dependent children at which the tax credit for a married person and the equivalent credit for a married person begins to be reduced. This recommendation had been made by the Senate Committee on Tax Reform and I support it.

[English]

In Motion Nos. 9 and 11 that we are debating now, we propose to increase from $500 to $1,000 the income threshold of the spouse, or the dependent children; at which point the married credit and equivalent to married credit begins to be reduced. This recommendation has been made by the Senate committee on tax reform.

Nowadays, children or students at university are trying to find themselves jobs. To earn $500 is not very much. In this situation, if the student earns $1,000, even though his family is paying for all the tuition fees and the room and board, et cetera, they cannot deduct the full amount because this student has earned a little more during the summer. I think that it should be increased to at least $1,000. It would be only fair. The same applies for the spouse. It does not take much to earn $500 through a little income, a little savings, and we think that the program will be more up to date and more in line with the situation that we are facing today if we increase the limit of revenue before cutting the tax credit for a spouse or children who are still living with the family.

Mr. Speaker, the motion I am referring to would allow a wife to earn up to $1,000—or her husband if he happens to be the dependent—before the tax credit begins to be reduced because of the income level of the wife or husband who is the dependent of the household main income earner.

The same thing goes for students. We believe that the $500 ceiling on earnings is too low. A student who is not afraid to work at delivering papers every day may very well earn more than $500 a year, and as a result his father or mother would not get the full credit for this hard working child, or for another attending vocational school or college whose summer job brings in $900 or $1,000.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 12 would provide a $130 credit for dependent children aged 19 to 21.

Motion No. 12 institutes $130 credit for dependent children aged 19 to 21.

Mr. Speaker, the tax reform has eliminated the concept of dependent children over 18 so that the father of a full-time university student who lives at home and earns $500 can, as a result of the tax reform, claim the full tax credit deduction. But if he happens to be over 18 it does not matter whether he attends university or even vocational school, no more deductions.

And that is not all, Mr. Speaker. When the head of the family dies, the mother takes over, she works outside and earns an income, but if her 18-year-old son is a full-time university student she cannot claim him as the equivalent of a spouse. These are new changes imposed by the Minister of Finance in his tax reform.

I find that totally unacceptable because, in the case of a family with a dependent child at school, there should at least be exceptions for those attending school on a full-time basis or for those who are staying at home and are without work. Those people, those families, are almost forced to make living arrangements outside the home to be able to get welfare. I think that the Minister of Finance and the Conservative Government have adopted an approach which is totally unjust and insensitive, which disregards the situation of families and which makes things even more difficult, particularly for single parents because women who are heads of families can claim the equivalent of married exemption for a child under 18. They are heavily penalized however when the child reaches 18 because they can no longer claim that exemption. Furthermore, if the child is responsible enough to earn some money and his income exceeds $500, his mother's tax advantage is eroded.

Mr. Speaker, it is too bad that we have to debate these motions together because we could have brought forward much more detailed and convincing arguments.

Earlier I listened to the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) who talked about balance, the deficit, interest rates and, of course, she would have been well advised to read up on what was happening in the world during that period before making her speech. There is something I do not understand. Where was the Hon. Member for Gatineau when her government proposed to spend 12 or 16 billion dollars on nuclear submarines? Did she rise in the House to point out we could not afford it? Did she rise to say it would cost too much? Money can be found for nuclear submarines without any problem. But when it is a matter of re-indexing child tax credits, tax credits for the mentally or physically handicapped, there is no money. When it is a matter of allowing a spouse or children to earn as much as $1,000 before reducing the tax benefits the father or mother can claim, there is no more money. When it is a matter of giving a $130 tax credit to the father or mother who wholly supports a full-time university student, which is the case 80 per cent of the time, there is no money. However, no Conservative Member brings up the matter of money or lack of it with regard to nuclear submarines.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to introduce more fairness in our proceedings, and if we lack money to make the tax system more equitable, then we must not have enough to buy nuclear submarines either.

• (1810)

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides has a selective memory because if he had total recall, he would remember that there is now a very hot debate on the issue of nuclear submarines, which is being examined from different angles including their cost. But it would be very simplistic on his part to compare a National Defense expenditure with tax reform and to conclude that, since we cannot reduce or eliminate any exemptions, we cannot proceed with tax reform.

Once again, he is selective. He picks the exemption for dependent children which is equivalent to the married exemption.

I was one of those single parents for several years. I took advantage of that exemption and I agree with him that many of those single parents are very sad to see it go, but what he fails to mention is that to compensate for its elimination we have reduced the tax rate. He suggested earlier that we should have reduced it even more. However, the amounts needed to increase exemptions have to be found somewhere. He said we should not be concerned with the deficit and all that jazz. Mr. Speaker, I find that speech a little strange coming, as it is, from a former provincial Minister of Finance.

We are still hearing emotional speeches in here, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Garneau: Please sit down!

Mrs. Mailly: You see, Mr. Speaker, instead of debating he says I should sit down. He does not like my arguments because they hit very close to home and he has a problem with that.

That is because instead of discussing frankly and honestly the advantages and disadvantages of that tax proposal, he would rather attempt to sidetrack the debate with an outpouring of emotion, half-truth and exaggeration. It is very unfortunate because that debate is a very important one for Canadians, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said, it is a bit difficult to comment on at this point because five motions are grouped. Motion No. 8 deals with full indexing for the cost of living in tax rates, in brackets, as opposed to the partial deindexation which is proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Three of the amendments deal with the deduction for earned income of dependants and of students. The final one relates to the amount which is given for the child tax credit for dependants where there is a dependant aged 19 to 21 in a family.

Let me comment briefly on that. The Government in the massaging it went through on tax reform created a system which was wildly inequitable and unfair to people with children. It was so unfair that once you got beyond having a couple of children you would actually be worse off under tax reform than you would have been without it. That certainly seemed like a perverse situation. That is why the Government decided that it would increase the child tax credit for the third or subsequent child.

I believe that the amendment extends that to a dependant aged 19 to 21. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) will talk about that. However, there is something more generally perverse about the Government's proposal. Take a couple of people in similar circumstances, say Joe and Jim or Mary and Sue who all work for Revenue Canada. Each one is a bread-winner. Each has comparable circumstances as far as the family is concerned and each is aged 31 or 32. Joe has a wife and couple or three kids. His seat-mate, the person working right next to him, Jim, has the same job with the same income, but instead of having children he is putting money into RRSPs to the maximum allowable according to government policy. Anybody would assume that the wage earner with the family would be treated more generously than the wage earner with the RRSP deduction, but it is the contrary under the Conservatives. I think there is something wrong with that.

The Government shows that it has its values turned around. If the Government were really concerned about the family, which I believe will be an important issue in the forthcoming election campaign, it would not have to bring in these artificial amendments about the third and subsequent child and so on. The Government would have demonstrated a commitment to equity by ensuring that the tax system in this country genuinely aided people with family responsibilities. Tax systems are there to raise revenue, but they also are there to express a social philosophy about the kind of society and the kind of country we want to have. Conservative tax philosophy does not have a great deal to say about the men and women, the parents who are raising kids in our society. I get upset over that, Mr. Speaker, as I get upset when I find developers and entrepreneurs in my constituency open up what they call adult only apartment buildings. My constituents who have children find they are shut out of desirable accommodation because it is adult only. I would have thought that everybody in society should have a commitment, but the Conservatives do not seem to have that.

I want to comment specifically on Motion No. 8 which aims to substitute full indexing for the deindexation put forward by the Minister of Finance in his tax reform proposals. It is very interesting to think that the Conservatives have come full circle on this question of indexing. You will recall that it was the Conservatives under Robert Stanfield who proposed that the tax system be indexed, some time back in the late 1960s. They fought for that and they thought it was fair. The New Democrats thought it was fair as well. Finally, ironically, it was the then Minister of Finance, the now Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), who brought indexing into the tax system.

My Party still supports indexing, particularly for people with modest incomes. I know where Robert Stanfield was on this issue and I know where the Conservatives are now. They have turned full face. They have abandoned the commitment they made in the 1960s and the 1970s. Now, instead of full indexation, it is indexation minus 3 per cent.

This is a very subtle way to impose a tax increase on average Canadians year after year. The child tax credit is partially deindexed. The value goes down by 3 per cent every year. The family allowance is partially deindexed. The value goes down by 3 per cent every year in any year when the rate of inflation exceeds 3 per cent.

The tax reform brackets are only partially deindexed, and therefore, rather than rising with inflation, they decline in value every year. That means that for people who are sitting around those turning points there is an increase in taxation every year. It is a hidden increase in taxation and, therefore, it is a dishonest increase in taxation.

I suppose that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) will tell us that the $100,000 limit on tax-free capital gains is totally deindexed, that it will be worth $100,000 next year, the year after that, and the year after that. I suppose that is the case, but it will take an awfully long time for an average family paying these increases in taxes to catch up with the privilege given to the wealthy family who is able to take advantage of having an investment property, some stocks and bonds, or an investment in a company and make $100,000 without paying a nickel in tax on that investment. Therefore, I would say that that argument falls.

My own feeling is that we should focus the indexing and protection against inflation at people on modest incomes. In the United States, as a matter of fact, there is a procedure by which the lower rates and the lower tax brackets for people at the top of the income scale are recaptured. Once the income of an American goes above $70,000 or $80,000, he then finds himself paying additional taxes on the money in the $20,000, $30,000, or $40,000 bracket which was initially taxed at the lower rate. I do not think that that is unfair. I think that is reasonable and recognizes the fact that if there is to be some moderation of tax rates, then there should not be the additional moderation for people at the top of the income scale getting reduced rates on the first $5,000, $10,000, or $15,000 when it is taxed.

The Government has focused this particular measure on people with modest incomes. The deindexing which takes place should not be there. I believe we should have full indexing for people on modest incomes so that, as their incomes rise, in order to keep pace with the cost of living, they do not then find that the tax person has his or her hands in their pockets before they get the benefit of some protection against inflation through rising incomes.

We have seen over the last few years just what the Conservatives have done. They raised the sales tax in 1984, they raised it again, and they raised it again. They eliminated the special tax cuts that were given to families on modest incomes. They brought in tax reform which they say will take 850,000 people off the tax rolls without pointing out that they added one million people to the tax rolls beforehand. All these things are a part of a tax grab which seems to be hitting particularly at people on modest incomes.

There is a theory of taxation that says we have to hit average people because there are so many of them. I think that is to hold average people in contempt. I think average, ordinary Canadians are prepared to pay their fair share, but they do not think it is right if they are paying, and paying, and paying again because wealthy Canadians are getting a privilege, on top of a concession, on top of a loophole, on top of another new way they can avoid paying income tax. Partial deindexing is particularly offensive because it is not just a once-and-for-all kind of thing, it is a measure which will go on year after year.

It is as though the Minister of State for Finance is reaching out from his heartland in London. Long after he ceases to be a Member of Parliament, he and the Minister of Finance will still have their hands in the pockets of ordinary Canadians with this partial deindexing proposal if we do not do something about it. That is why I happen to believe that Motion No. 8, which seeks to substitute full indexing for the deindexation contained in the Finance Minister's proposal, is a good one and should be accepted.

The Minister of State for Finance might pop up and say: "Oh, you are giving a privilege to people earning over $55,000 a year because you are going to let them benefit from full indexing". I would then challenge him to come behind the curtains with me and devise a tax system which is really fair for those people earning over $55,000 per year, a system designed on the American model, perhaps, a system that would ensure that the rates paid are more appropriate, given the ability to pay.

Let us get rid of the system in which the rich get tax cuts, ordinary people get tax increases, and partial deindexing will hit average Canadians in secula saeculorum, century after century, unless we do something about it. The time to do something is now, and I would urge you, Mr. Speaker, to step down from your chair and join the New Democrats, and in this case their colleagues, the Liberals, in ensuring that some tax fairness is put back into tax reform.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I want very much to have the opportunity to speak on this group of amendments, particularly those that apply to family benefits. We have to think of families in a different way than we think of single taxpayers who are concerned only with their own costs and with two wage earners who have no dependants. It is absolutely essential that we put a much greater emphasis on the needs of families, both from the point of view of the cost of raising children and from the point of view of the contribution parents with their children, the next generation, make to society for the rest of us. This is the generation that will pay for our old age pensions.

The Government has spoken a lot about being sympathetic to families, wanting to recognize families, yet the whole tax system has done the reverse. Family benefits have gone down rather than up and single taxpayers have had greater increases in tax benefits than have parents who have the extra costs and responsibilities and are contributing so much to society by raising children.

I would like to speak particularly to Motion No. 12 which concerns child tax credits for older children, dependants who are in the age bracket of 19 to 21. There are many, many parents who still have dependent children in that age group. The Government, of course, has disregarded this and has entirely removed them from the child tax credit coverage. We are talking now about lower income families.

We are told that this is fair since the parents of those going on to post-secondary education will be able to deduct the school fees from their income tax. Of course, it is absolutely essential that parents of these children are able to deduct at least these fees. There are many other costs which they will not be able to deduct. However, the Conservatives have completely disregarded a very large group of young people who are not going on to post-secondary education of any kind. They are not lucky enough to be able to get into college or university or trade training. Essentially they are at home. We must think also of parents with disabled children and the tremendous costs involved.

However, I would like to speak primarily about young people, many of them in my riding, who are unemployed, unable to get into training programs, and their parents have very low incomes. Many of those parents are single parents, on welfare in many cases, and they have been completely ignored by the Conservatives, and ignored in this Liberal amendment unless they happen to have two children. I do not know why they penalize the parent with one or two children. It costs quite a bit to feed them if they are at home and not working. There are many costs that their parents have to cover.

I happen to have Statistics Canada figures for the riding of Vancouver East. I would like to point out that for the age group of 15 to 24, the unemployment rate for males is 26.5 per cent; very high. For females it is a little less at 16.9 per cent. Let us compare that to 20 per cent and 15 per cent for those adults over 25. That is a very high unemployment rate, and I see that there are some 40,000 people in my riding who are not in the labour force but are over the age of 15 years.

These young people are living at home under a lot of stress. It is a time of conflict between parents and children. The young people are feeling very discouraged and worthless, and parents are feeling pretty hostile because they have to carry the expense and are barely managing to survive as it is, I am sure. It is grossly unfair and increasing the tension in families for the Government, then, to remove the child tax credit. It is kind of a last straw for poor families. I cannot understand why the Government would not cover these children and make the child tax credit available to the parents. We urge the Government to reconsider this.

Nor do we think that Motion No. 12, the Liberal amendment, is adequate. It recognizes that the child tax credit should be increased for dependants aged 19 to 21, but only if the taxpayer has three or more dependants. I do not know why they put that restriction on it. It seems very unfair. Certainly poor families that I know of cannot manage with two children. The alternative for these young people is to go on welfare. As my colleague says, in Quebec they would only get $150 a month living out of the home. That means that they are forced on to the streets to earn additional money for survival by illicit means. It certainly happens in my riding. If they are still staying at home, their parents are penalized, and it is very difficult for young people living at home to qualify for social assistance. This in turn forces children out of the home and forces parents to tell them that if they leave home and go out on the skids at least they will get welfare; very inadequate welfare it is.

This policy is adding to that syndrome for welfare families, so we should not support Motion No. 12. It is a slight step in the right direction, but it discriminates against certain kinds of families with one or two dependants. We urge the Government to reconsider its tax measures in this area.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, of the amendments grouped for debate I would like to address Motion No. 10 which stands on the Order Paper in my name. It deals with the tax treatment of older dependent children, 18 and up. The (a) part of my amendment deals with older children in a one-parent family and the (b) part deals with older children in the two-parent family.

I first want to talk about the equivalent to married tax credit or tax deduction which was available before this so-called tax reform to a single parent with a dependent child under 21. The equivalent to married deduction which could be claimed by the parent in such a case has been valued by the Department of Finance at $3,740 for 1987. A single parent can no longer claim that. The Government is, instead, offering a new credit which is only available if the child is under 18. This fails to consider the 18 year old who is still at home and going to school. In Ontario the average 18 year old is still in high school. This also fails to consider the 18 year old living at home and unemployed.

For a number of years now the unemployment rate for people under 25 has been double the national average. People with high school education only have particular difficulty in getting into the labour force. In 1986, the national employment rate for 18-year-olds was 21.4 per cent; for 19, 20, and 21-year-olds it was 19.3 per cent, 18 per cent, and 16.5 per cent respectively; generally about twice the national average, twice the unemployment rate for people over 25, particularly for those who have specialized skills. Single parents who are supporting older children at home are particularly hard hit because when the child reaches 18 the family allowance cheque stops, the right to receive the child tax credit, which will be increased in 1988, stops, and for the parent who receives support from the other spouse, child support payments very often stop when the child becomes 18.

For a single parent with a low income, and it is mostly women and single parents who have custody of their children, removing access to the equivalent to married deduction for a dependent child under 21, which is, as I said, valued by the Department of Finance at $3,740 in 1987, comes at a very difficult time when other forms of support are drying up.

The Government claims that it has made up for the loss of this deduction by providing a sales tax credit of $70 to 18-year-olds regardless of their dependent status. Also there will be a tuition fee credit for the parents of youths in post-secondary education. This does nothing for the parents of dependent youths who are either still in high school or unemployed. Clearly, the government proposal makes life harder for single parents with older dependent children. That is the purpose of my Motion No. 10 (a) which would amend Bill C-139 in Clause 92 by striking out line 49 and substituting the following therefore:

"under 21 years of age and in full-time attendance at a school or under 21 years of age and unemployed or so"

The second part of my motion deals with the older dependent child living in a two-parent family. The child who is in high school or the child who is unemployed is quite a heavy burden financially—although he or she may be a great joy in other ways—if the parents have a low income. As in the case of a single parent, family allowance benefits and the right to a child tax credit stop at age 18.

The Government argues that a credit will be available to parents with physically and mentally infirm children. This is no help to parents with healthy 18-year-olds who have to be supported in high school and whose clothing, transportation, recreation, and food bills still have to be met. It certainly is no help for the parent with an unemployed 18-year-old who also has to be provided with the necessaries to help in a job search.

In order to return some fairness to the situation, Motion No. 10 (b) would extend the current personal exemption to parents with children 21 years of age and under, regardless of the state of their health.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to these motions because they raise some important matters of principle on which the Government should make its response clear. I would like to begin with a blanket comment about the analogy and example used by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) which seems to underpin his critique of tax reform, that is, his example of the Chairman of Bell Canada and the average Bell worker because he is concerned about progressivity. I think I can help him with his problem because he is using marginal tax rates instead of average tax rates. If he took average tax rates he would feel better about the progressivity of our system.

I will given an example. If you take the combined federal and provincial rate, under tax reform a one-earner couple earning $30,000 with two children has a 13.7 per cent average tax rate. I think the Hon. Member knows what an average tax rate is. It is different from a marginal tax rate which is the tax on the next dollar when you move into a new bracket. The average tax rate is what you actually pay on an income of $30,000.

On $60,000 the average tax rate is 29.2 per cent. On $100,000 the average tax rate is 35.8 per cent. Once again, I am talking about combined federal and provincial taxes. The average tax rate on $200,000 is 40.8 per cent. I have no idea whether Mr. de Grandpré earns $1 million a year, but if so he would be taxed at a 44.8 per cent average tax rate.

The system is very strongly progressive when you use average tax rates which, of course, is the rate you should look at. We all know that when we do our taxes we think the marginal tax rate is high, but when we work it out we see that it is somewhat less because the average turns out to be less. It is the average ladder which is really the measure of a tax system progressivity. The Member is misunderstanding tax reform because he misunderstands the difference between marginal and average tax rates.

The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) and the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) have brought motions before the House as well this evening and I would like to respond to those. First, the implications of removing the indexing restrictions of the CPI minus three for the refundable child tax credit and the disability credit, from a point of view of revenue, are not trivial. This would cost $75 million.

Allow me to speak to this proposal. Over recent years the Government has introduced a number of changes increasing the benefits of both the refundable tax credit and the disability credit. The general problem that I have with all these Liberal motions is that they take one little piece out of the mosaic and look at it rather than looking at the whole mosaic.

I remind Members that we have been increasing benefits under the refundable tax credit and the disability credit. The child tax credit was increased by $70 in 1986, and by $35 in 1987-88. Tax reform further increased the refundable child tax credit by $35 in 1988. The new child care initiatives also increase the refundable child tax credit by $100 in 1988, and by $200 in 1989, and subsequent taxation years for children under seven years of age without child care receipts.

This is all part of the story. This Liberal motion conveniently overlooks these very important parts of the mosaic which makes up the tax system of Canada after tax reform. As a result of the combination of these changes, many parents with children under seven years of age will benefit from a $375 increase in the refundable child tax credit. It must be said in this House over and over again that all these credits end up being much more beneficial than the restriction on the CPI minus three about which Hon. Members opposite complain.

The new disability credit, too, is more advantageous than the old exemption for the majority of beneficiaries. The credit is worth $550, while the old exemption of $29.20 was worth $496 for someone with income of less than $27,500. There, too, the system is more generous and better targeted. The House should know that as a result of the change introduced by the Government in 1986, 85,000 new disabled persons have benefited from the expansion of the criteria of eligibility.

Motion No. 9 would increase from $500 to $1,000 the amount of income that a spouse may earn before the credit for marital status is reduced, and Motion 11 would do the same in the case of the equivalent to married credit. I want to speak to that, another motion which would cost the federal Treasury $75 million.

We do not feel that this is the way to go because, first, the $500 is the exempt income threshold under the existing law. It is important that we understand that increasing this amount would simply open the door to increased income splitting between high income spouses with income from property and non-working spouses. We just do not believe that this is fair. We thought about this very carefully and did not want to stand on the side of unfairness with regard to this.

The increase in the value of the marital credit provided in tax reform increases by over $1,200, from $4,300 to $5,500, the amount of income that may be earned before the relief for married status ends up being reduced to zero. This makes sense. This is clearly the way to approach tax reform. It does not make sense to accept this motion and incur an extra $75 million from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Motion No. 10 (a) extends the equivalent to married exemption for children aged 19 to 21 who are in full-time attendance at school or unemployed. The Hon. Member for Trinity spoke to this and I would like to deal with it. This, too, would cost around $75 million. Let us understand the history and all that surrounds this. Prior to tax reform the equivalent to married exemption could be claimed by a taxpayer who was single, divorced, separated, or widowed who supported a dependant of any age living with him or her during the year.

Under tax reform, the equivalent to married exemption has been converted into an equivalent to married credit. The credit can be claimed for a parent or grandparent of the taxpayer, an infirm relative, or a dependant 18 years of age or younger. Let us remember that we have broadened what we mean by dependant.

The Hon. Member for Trinity expressed concern for those between the ages of 19 and 21. Things have changed in this country. Previously, the age of majority was 21 but it has been reduced over time, and age 18 is now generally regarded as the age of majority for most federal laws and programs and most provincial family laws and social assistance programs. Would the pages want us to raise the age of majority to 21? Does it not make sense that it is at age 18? This has been done at the provincial level as well as at the federal level. For example, both the family allowance and the Canadian and Quebec Pension Plans regard age 18 as the upper limit for minor children.

There could have been a misunderstanding in this debate. We must remember that children who turn 18 in a year will continue to benefit from the refundable child tax credit, the dependent child credit, as well as the equivalent to married credit. Dependants 19 and over in full-time attendance at a post-secondary school will be able to transfer the unused portion of up to $600 of the education and tuition credits to a supporting spouse, parent, or grandparent. This represents a significant improvement over the existing system for children in post-secondary schools.

Recently I talked to a group of university presidents who said that this was very helpful. Again, the pages must appreciate this proposal. That deduction used to have to be taken by the low income earning student. Now it can be transferred to a parent or grandparent who could get more benefit from it.

The suggested increase to age 21 would set a wholly arbitrary age restriction. Those are basically my problems with the motion by the Hon. Member for Trinity. We have a new age of majority, we have the unused tuition fees credit, we have dependents 19 and over who can claim the refundable sales tax credit in their own right. This means that it would be inconsistent for the tax system to treat a 19 to 21 year old person as two things: a dependent child and as an adult. It is one or the other. This system treats them as an adult.

All these measures add up to a significant improvement over the existing system for children in post-secondary schools. Furthermore, children turning 18 in a year will continue to benefit from the refundable child tax credit, the dependent child credit, as well as the equivalent to married credit. Tax reform provides a $250 tax credit for older children who are dependent by reason of mental or physical infirmity.

The burden of my intervention this evening is to say that we should not look at one piece of tax reform and criticize it, try to increase it or make it more liberal. We should consider the whole mosaic to see the fairness of tax reform, the useful targeting of tax reform, and the progressivity of it as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Madam Speaker, I would like to talk about this group of motions, but especially about Motion No. 8. Of course, the main purpose of tax reform and of any tax system is fairness. The tax system takes money for the Government to distribute and match with those who need it. Also tax reform and tax policy give indications as to how we want our society to go.

Of course, I am thinking of several studies and I am sure that most or maybe all Hon. Members will agree that we have a demographic problem; everyone is concerned about what will happen in future with fewer children being born, the declining birth rate and all the problems related to the aging population.

So we need a family policy and it is clear that the reason we in the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition, have to propose amendments is because this Government's tax reform has completely overlooked the family. There is no incentive for the family. How can one have a tax reform and not think of indexing the refundable credits for dependent children? We talk about dependent children. We talk about the family. If we want to encourage the family, we have only to take the latest Quebec provincial budget as an example. The Liberal Finance Minister understood that a fiscal policy on the family was required and everyone applauded this budget. Here this Government has an ideal opportunity with tax reform—we do not have tax reform every year—but it has completely missed this opportunity. Definitely, the situation for mentally and physically handicapped dependent children is incredible! How can they not index those credits? Any Government of whatever stripe that neglects this aspect is not honest.

Of course, we just heard the Minister whose whole argument was based on the question of cost. Such a motion would cost so many millions, another motion so many millions, and of course we cannot afford it, the Government does not have the money for it. However, Madam Speaker, I do not want to come back to the submarine issue, I do not want to repeat myself, but there are other expenses the Government is committed to. On military expenses, for example, it spent $2.7 million to change the military uniforms. This money could have been spent for families and social justice. Has the $41 million for the prison in Port-Cartier helped families?

When we talk about money, let us put things in their true perspective. The capital gains exemption of $500,000 announced in 1986 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) cost the federal treasury $800 millions in 1987. If we want to put things in their proper perspective, let us do it right. Let us be honest: this Government has no family policy. Family is not one of its concerns. If they could tell us what their family policy is all about, maybe we could understand them better, but they don't have any. That is why we have to propose amendments, just as we have been doing since this afternoon, proposing amendments to the child care Bill, amendments to make the tax rate fairer. We are moving amendments to index the tax credit for dependent children, for children over 18 years old, for physically handicapped children, and the Minister still talks about costs. We could spend all night talking about expenditures, and about the money this Conservative Government has been wasting for the past four years.

Madam Speaker, even if they want to make you believe that they have reduced the deficit, later, in one of my motions, I will prove that they have not reduced it at all. They want to make us think that they are reducing the deficit, but after wringing more than $25 billion in extra taxes from taxpayers, they have still not really reduced the deficit because the figures they quote come from an accounting system that they changed to make it look like they reduced the deficit, but in fact, the real deficit still there in spite of $22 billion in tax increases over four years.

Madam Speaker, on this point, I would just like to tell the House that I support Motion No. 8, as well as all the other motions grouped together that come from my colleagues, because I believe that we do need a clear and precise family policy so Canadians can know where we are going and what we have set for Canadian families.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, once more the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) served us a mish-mash, stating first the deficit was no problem, and then we had not really reduced it, and finally we had reduced it through accounting gimmicks. Once more he confused everything in order to create an impression that this administration has no concern for Canadian families.

This is really ridiculous, because he just stated we debated the child care Bill. In the first place, Madam Speaker, are day care centres for senior citizens? Are day care services for childless couples? Or are they for families with children? He should make up his mind! If we introduced a child care Bill and asked provinces to increase day care spaces, because as you know day care centres are a provincial responsibility and we respect provincial jurisdiction . . .

So we asked them to increase the number of spaces, because we know very well that child care accessibility is what Canadian families need. Here is an initiative which helps Canadian families! Here is a family policy initiative!

Second, Madam Speaker, we introduced in this House legislation against pornography, especially child pornography. Therefore, Madam Speaker, can they blame us for not being concerned with families? No way! We had a lot of difficulty getting the Opposition Members to accept a pornography Bill. They told us we were stuffed shirts, we had no sense of humor, we lacked lifestyle, et cetera, we wanted to police Canada's bedrooms. They did not say: Hear, hear! We wanted to protect the dignity of women, we wanted to protect the dignity of Canadian families, we wanted to protect children, the innocence of children. No, they told us we were stuffed shirts, morons, et cetera.

So, Madam Speaker, they should make up their minds. Either we came up with measures to help Canadian families, or we did not introduce them! We did introduce good ones, and the Official Opposition did not support them.

Moreover, we came up with a prostitution Bill. Once more, Madam Speaker, when people complained that their neighbourhoods were invaded by prostitutes, many teenagers of both sexes indulged in prostitution, they could see no way they could bring up their children in a neighbourhood where prostitutes dominated the sidewalks . . . Tell me, Madam Speaker, is a bill against prostitution not a Bill to help family life? Of course it is! I am sorry to state that they left the House, those Members who earlier stated we did nothing . . . but they are not interested in hearing the facts. As I said, emotions come first. They want to wrap emotions around everything in order to hide the facts.

We introduced tax reform because it was needed. Canada went through very difficult times in the 80's, when the inflation rate was so horrendous people lost their homes because they could no longer afford payments on their mortgages. There were so many unemployed people that we were faced with incredible deficits.

And now, Madam Speaker, we are proud to say that we have created jobs for more than 1,500,000 Canadians who are paying taxes. Of course, when the Opposition talk about the increase in taxes collected by our Government, they usually forget to mention that we now have 1,500,000 more Canadians paying taxes. That explains the increase in Government revenues.

What they forget to say when they mention the increase in the sales tax is that, when we took office, we inherited such an increase passed by the previous Government. Why? Because they were out of funds to support the already existing programs.

So, Madam Speaker, they can rise on their feet in this House as often as they want, they can try to act like heroes, they can brag, and say "We are the defender of the weak and the oppressed". But, the truth is that they simply did not do their jobs while they were in office. On the contrary, they created overwhelming economic problems, ruined the economy in western Canada, and harmed Quebec with their hostile policies. Today, we are trying to solve these problems, which explains why they are so annoyed. They don't like to admit that, finally, someone is looking after the people of Canada.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides) moved:

That Bill C-139 be amended in Clause 92 by adding immediately after line 47 at page 229 the following:

"1.1) The personal income tax credit established by subsection (1) is refundable."

Madam Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague from Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) for supporting this motion.

Madam Speaker, this motion amending Clause 92 of Bill C-139 is aimed at bringing to the attention of the Members of this House what I think is a very important issue.

The whole idea of tax reform, we were told, was to bring a greater measure of equity and social justice in our system and to ensure a better distribution of the tax burden between the various classes in our society, between the various income groups.

I have said time and again that the approach taken by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the proposals he has made are completely out of line with the objectives and the principles he himself has outlined in his White Paper on Tax Reform.

There is no relationship whatsoever between what the Minister of Finance says and what he does as far as tax reform is concerned. And an example of this is the whole matter of tax credits given to married persons, dependants, and so on.

Though tax reform was aimed, as I said, to bring a greater measure of justice and equity in our system, a taxpayer who earns a lot of money or quite a bit of money, not hundreds of thousands of dollars, but $35,000, $40,000, $45,000, can get a tax credit, thereby reducing his tax burden. But if the taxpayer is a low-income earner, he cannot get the full tax credit because his income is too low. The tax system proposed by the Minister of Finance therefore gives tax credits to those who have money, but not to those whose income is not high enough for them to pay taxes.

According to the Minister's proposition, if you do not pay income tax you are not entitled to a tax credit. If you have—Madam Speaker, would you call the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), to order, she has the right to take the floor in a few minutes and if she wants to speak she should first read the texts.

As things stand now, an individual who does not earn enough to pay taxes is not entitled to the tax credit—no ifs and buts, the law says so—but someone else earning a big income can claim the tax credit. So under the tax reform of the Minister of Finance a person earning a big income will get something back from the Government, but the man or woman who earns a pittance simply does not qualify for this tax credit. This is like a subsidy for people who earn a fair amount of money and a sort of negative levy against those with a limited income.

This is why in Motion No. 13 I suggest we add after line 47 of Clause 92 at page 229 that the tax credit be refundable. This way, all taxpayers regardless of earnings, but particularly those who have no money and those at the bottom of the wage scale or without any income, could at least have the same thing, the same tax credit as someone who gets $250,000 and who at that income level will claim the full credit, like a taxpayer who gets paid $40,000 or $45,000.

As I see it, the refundable tax credit is the approach the Minister of Finance should have taken in his tax reform because that would have been the only way for him to achieve the goals he outlined in his remarks when he tabled the White Paper. The problem I have with the tax reform—and we could see that for ourselves during the many weeks when the parliamentary committee heard the testimony of a number of Canadians, accountants, and what have you—is that we were told over and over again that the legislative text and the recommendations do not square with the principles which had been established by the Minister and the Conservative Government.

The purpose of my amendment therefore is to have the tax reform reflect the words of the Minister. I think that the refundable tax credit approach is more equitable from both a social and a tax standpoint. It would be the first step towards a kind of guaranteed minimum income which, I suggest, would be a lot fairer, much more effective, and a much better incentive to a return to the labour market than all the formulas we have now. That is something the Minister has failed to achieve with his tax reform because the wording in this piece of legislation simply does not jibe with the principles he talked about when he tabled his paper.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, I should like to quote a booklet published by the Department of Finance under the title "Tax Reform 1987: A Summary for Taxpayers". On page 5, it is stated: "The key to making the personal income tax fairer is replacing personal income tax exemptions and some deductions with tax credits. Exemptions and deductions reduce taxable income. The value of an exemption or deduction depends on an individual's tax bracket and tax rate. Tax savings are the greatest for higher-income individuals." To put it more simply, Madam Speaker, I will say that until this Government proposed to move from a system a deduction to a system of tax credit, people in higher income brackets benefited more from deductions.

Let me give you an example: Suppose that you earn a salary of $40,000, that your tax rate is, say, 30 per cent, and that you are entitled to a $3,000 deduction; because you would have to pay 30 per cent on these $3,000, you would have saved $1,000 in taxes. But if you had a salary of $15,000, with a tax rate of 10 per cent on this $3,000 deduction, you would have saved only $300 on that amount. If such is the case, how can a former Quebec Minister of Finance tell the House that we moved from a system of deduction to a system of tax credit to help the affluent? On page 5 of that booklet which was distributed free of charge to all Canadians, it is clearly stated that the tax credits are the same for all. In other words, whether your income is $27,500 or $55,000 a year, your personal exemption, which is a credit, will amount to $1,020.

Until now, a taxpayer with a $27,500 income would have had a very small credit, a very small deduction, because his or her tax rate was very low, while the taxpayer with a $55,000 income would have had a very large deduction. The fine print is that a $27,500 income resulted in a $725 deduction, while a $55,000 income resulted in a $1,240 deduction, which is almost twice as much. With the tax credit system, the taxpayer with a $27,500 income and a taxpayer with a $55,000 income are both entitled to a personal $1,020 tax credit. How can the Hon. Member suggest that we are favouring the affluent and only people on higher income brackets? It is quite the contrary, Madam Speaker! The purpose of the conversion was to help lower income people.

Moreover, he said that a person must earn a lot of money to be entitled to a tax credit. What he means is that a person must earn enough money to pay taxes. But there are refundable tax credits. Even if you do not pay a single cent in income tax, you are entitled to the refundable sales tax credit. All you have to do is fill in your income tax return and say: I owe no income tax, but I am entitled to a sales tax credit of $50 for every member of my family. And these $50 per person largely offset the sales tax increase that had to be brought in because there was no money to maintain existing social programs. Consequently, it is rubbish to argue that there is no equity in such a system. It is rubbish to assert that one has to earn a lot of money to get a tax credit which is refundable.

And as far as indexation is concerned, what the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou is not saying is that he is talking about a 3 per cent reduction of a cost of living indexation. In terms of old age security pensions, this meant approximately $7 a month. He is talking about millions, even billions for nuclear powered submarines but he is not saying that even if the family allowances indexation had been maintained, Canadian families would not have gained more than $2 or $3 with inflation above 3 per cent. Fortunately, the inflation rate is about 4 per cent right now. Why? Because we, the Conservatives, have had the courage to take steps which the Liberals have shied away from for decades. This is how we succeeded in cutting down the deficit, four years in a row. Moreover, we have reduced both inflation and interest rates, we have created jobs, we have put back to work 1,500,000 Canadians, 70 per cent of which are women, and 80 per cent of those jobs are full time jobs. Therefore, they can say what they want, Madam Speaker, but they have nothing to offer except a lot of eyewash.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I would like to speak to this motion because I guess I have seldom seen a motion on tax reform that is so fiscally irresponsible as this one. I choose my words carefully. This particular proposal would cost the Government of Canada $4 billion. The provinces would be matching it, and it would cost them $4 billion. This is an $8 billion proposal. It is a proposal from a kind of limousine Liberal approach that would drive the whole country to the poor house.

What happens with this proposal is that we would give a refundable personal income credit to everybody; a newborn child one day old would get it, a 12-month old child would get it, a housewife who is not going to work but can stay home all day long would get it. Everybody would get it. This particular proposal is the most fiscally irresponsible proposal that I think has ever come before the House. If in fact we ever did such a thing, we would end up hurting the very people that we want to help, that is, those who have the most difficulty economically in getting through life, the lowest incomes, because the provinces of course would cut back their social assistance.

When they found out that you had another $1,000 or whatever income, they would simply cut back their provincial assistance. This proposal costs $8 billion, but it does not even accomplish what the Hon. Member wants it to do. I cannot understand the thinking behind this and I cannot believe that if that Party were in government it would ever bring it in. Why did they propose it tonight? They proposed it because they do not have any coherent ideas themselves about what they want to do in tax reform. This particular proposal would cost so much money that no matter what good ideas a government would have, they would not have the funds to dispense.

This kind of credit is not only fiscally irresponsible. It would not only refund over $1,000 annually to spouses who could stay at home or to wealthy corporate executives who do not need the money; everybody would get it. This whole notion of a progressive tax system would be fundamentally undermined by this proposal.

As I say, too, unfortunately much of the assistance that would go to lower income Canadians would simply be deducted by the provinces because of the income that would be picked up by this proposal at the federal level. To debate this much longer is to dignify a proposal which I do not think any credible economist or Minister of Finance would ordinarily recommend.

If in fact all that is meant in the motion is that the credit for dependent children should be refundable, that is not the way that the motion reads. I would remind the House that the refundable child tax credit is in place. This is the appropriate mechanism to ensure that it is properly targeted, and it has increased significantly by this Government, from $367 in 1985 to $559 in 1988, an increase of more than 50 per cent in just three years. We are targeting it.

Good economic management is to target properly, to help those who are in most need, but also to be fiscally responsible. This particular proposal does the exact opposite on both counts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Cossitt): The Chair apologizes to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East. She should have been recognized before the Minister of State for Finance.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I would just like to speak briefly to Motion No. 13. I think that the New Democratic Party supports the philosophy of refundable tax credits. We would agree that one of the more positive policies from a social point of view is the fact that the child tax credit is refundable. I am sure that this would apply with other forms of tax credits, perhaps the sales tax credit, for example, which I understand is about $50 per person. Why should that go only to people who pay income tax when it is the marginal people who do not earn enough to pay very much income tax, or those who do not earn enough to pay any income tax? Surely, they should be able to take advantage of that. It would make sense to make it refundable, so that it applies to those who do not have enough income tax to declare but still should have the benefit of the tax credit.

Another aspect to think about from a social policy point of view is that this is the beginning of the mechanism that a number of people feel is a start on a form of guaranteed income in Canada. We very much need to find a way and a mechanism for redistributing incomes that will benefit lower income people and that will tax higher earning people at a much greater rate. By redistributing this through refundable tax credits, it would mean that lower income people would receive more.

The Minister pointed out differences between provinces and the federal Government. I think that that would be a point of negotiation to work out. Basically we are in favour of the principle of refundable tax credits.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I do not intend to make a long speech. I see that the Minister had to leave the Chamber, but there are a couple of questions that occurred to me when this question of refundable versus ordinary tax credits came up. The Minister expressed great concern that making all tax credits refundable could have the effect of costing the federal Treasury something like $4 billion, which he felt would be matched by the provincial governments. He then went on to explain that while it would cost the provincial governments in income tax, they would save a like amount through the welfare system. It is basically with the federal Government that the cost accrues.

The question that I want the House to consider a little is: If the Government, any government now or in the past or in the future, is proposing a tax credit and begins the practice of making it a refundable tax credit, will that not make governments a little more specific about why they are putting the tax credit in place in the first place?

There is not much point in pretending to have a universal tax credit for individuals for sales tax, as my colleague from Vancouver East has pointed out, if the low income people for whom the general public thought that tax credit was being put into effect could not take advantage of it. The only way that those kinds of programs make any sense is if they are refundable tax credits. What is the point of having a refundable tax credit if the bulk of the poor people do not have enough income tax against which to write off the tax credit?

Mrs. Mailly: That is what they are. It is a refundable tax credit.

Mr. Althouse: We are saying that if there is a tax credit, make all of them refundable or be more careful about what you make a tax credit for.

Mrs. Mailly: That is like saying everything that has wheels is a car.

Mr. Althouse: We are proposing that if there is a tax credit it be made a refundable tax credit in every case. As I understand the motion, that is what is being proposed, yet the Minister was telling us that if we do this it will cost the federal Government $4 billion.

Mrs. Mailly: How can you have a tax credit on tax that is unpaid?

Mr. Althouse: If I may complete my remarks, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member shouts: "How can you have a tax credit on tax that is not being paid?" That is precisely the point I stood to make, had Members opposite been here at the beginning of my remarks. The reason for having the tax credit was to give poor people a tax break on sales tax. Therefore there ought to be a refundable tax credit.

Mrs. Mailly: It is refundable.

Mr. Althouse: All other tax credits that are put forward with the same argument need also, we are saying with this amendment, to be refundable tax credits. If that is not the intention, then we are saying that the Government should not put them forward as tax credits unless they are refundable as tax credits.

Mrs. Mailly: They do not pay income tax. They are below the tax level.

Mr. Althouse: The Hon. Member has presented an argument to the House already. I understand that if they do not have the income they will not be able to take advantage of those tax credits that are not refundable. That is the point of putting forward the amendment. The social reason for having put it forward, presumably, was to give them a break because people need it.

Mrs. Mailly: They need a job.

Mr. Althouse: If you are not prepared to follow through with it, there is not much point putting through a tax credit unless it is refundable. That is the only point we are trying to make with this amendment.

Mrs. Mailly: They need a good, well-paying job.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Cossitt): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Cossitt): The question is on Motion No. 13. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Cossitt): Motion No. 13 is negatived on division.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides) moved:

That Bill C-139 be amended in Clause 97 by striking out line 13 at page 260 and substituting the following therefor:

"(ii) $25,590"

He said: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this motion is to increase by $1,500 the threshold at which the refundable child tax credit begins to be reduced. This amendment will simply re-establish the pre-tax reform threshold.

Madam Speaker, the purpose of Motion No. 14 which I am proposing and which, if passed, would amend Clause 97 of Bill C-139 is to raise by $1,500 the net income threshold over which the refundable dependent child credit begins to be reduced.

In fact, this amendment seeks only to bring the income treshold back to what it was before tax reform.

Madam Speaker, once again, justice and equity are our considerations in moving this motion in an attempt to correct the approach which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his colleague the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) have taken in this tax reform one which I can only describe as being utterly mean heedless of families' needs.

We are proposing to raise from $24,090 to $27,590 the net income threshold over which the refundable child tax credit begins to be reduced because tax reform has changed the definition of net income. It has been changed because some deductions which were allowed before and on which net income was based have been eliminated. For instance, contributions to a pension fund, to the Quebec Pension Plan, to the Canada Pension Plan for those who live in provinces other than Quebec, to unemployment insurance and the $500 employment income have all been done away with, and the definition of "net income" has thus been changed without any amendment to the legislation itself.

The normal thing to do, Madam Speaker, would be to bring the level back to what it was before. Before tax reform, married couples with children who were entitled to the refundable tax credit saw that credit diminish once their family income reached about $25,500. Under tax reform, and because of the changes introduced with regard to contributions to the Quebec Pension Plan, unemployment insurance and the $500 employment income, the child tax credit will now begin to decrease at the $24,000 treshold. Before tax reform, families earning $1,500 more than that could get the full child tax credit amounting to some $500, but after tax reform, that credit will start being reduced, not at an income level of $25,590 but of $24,000.

I think it is turning everything upside down and I hope the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) and the Minister of State (Finance) will at least recognize that. I don't know if the Minister has forgotten, but we have raised that issue at other times during debate and it seems that nobody wants to understand that low-income families will see their child tax credit reduced while their income is at the same level as before tax reform.

[English]

I think this motion should be accepted. The net effect of the fiscal reform is that the definition of the net income for personal income tax has been changed. The contributions to the Canada Pension Plan and to unemployment insurance and the $500 exemption all disappear. The net income before and the net income after fiscal reform is not the same. The family with children who would receive the refundable child tax credit will have seen that child tax credit diminish if it has a net income of over $25,590. That will be reduced to $24,000.

This motion should be adopted. I will seek the support of all Members on both sides of the House to bring back the same level of income for those families in great need who otherwise would see their refundable child tax credit diminish at a very low personal income level.

Therefore, I ask the Government and the Conservative Members to think it over before refusing that amendment which would only bring things back to what they were before.

I would also like to say, Madam Speaker, that with partial de-indexation of the child tax credit that the Government refused to re-index earlier, we are greatly increasing the difficulties facing Canadian families, who are hit hard by the Minister of Finance and the Conservative Government and their tax reform. The child tax credit is now de-indexed but it will be reduced to an income level which is the same as last year but has been affected by tricky changes the Minister of Finance hasn't been willing to correct so far.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I would like to support this motion on behalf of the New Democratic Party. However, I wonder if the Liberals realize that they are being somewhat conservative in the level of the turning point for the child tax credit for which they are asking. I am trying to recall the study we did almost two years ago on the reform of family benefits. If my memory serves me correctly, when we studied the amount of the child tax credit, we discovered that the Conservatives had reduced the level considerably from where it was under the Liberal regime when it actually went to average marginal families. It seems to me that if we really care about children, about struggling families, and about the one in five children in Canada who are poor, then we have to give higher priority to the family benefits that will benefit children. The child tax credit and the family allowance are the best vehicles for doing this.

The Government has deindexed by 3 per cent the family allowance and the child tax credit as well. I am not sure if the Liberals had maintained full indexation for the child tax credit or not. At the time of the family benefits study, we proposed that in order to bring the turning point for the child tax credit higher, the credit itself should be increased by 80 per cent. I think that would have brought it up to where it would have been under the Liberal regime. We felt as well that it should be fully reindexed because if it is not reindexed, it then goes down progressively each year. It is very hypocritical to say that we are giving extra credits to poor families when in fact the basic child tax credit is going down in value by the 3 per cent deindexation every year.

If we care about children, and if we want to do something about child poverty, we have to give higher priority to benefits for families, particularly the child tax credit. This is one step forward. We would be more generous in that we would want an 80 per cent increase.

I believe this clause also covers the new $100 child care credit which will go to $200 in 1989. This would be available only to families with children under seven years of age and only to very low income families. As I have said many times in this House, I think any mother at home struggling to raise children will not feel that $200 recognizes the value of her work. She would much prefer a more generous child tax credit that is refundable. As well, the $200 for those parents who use informal baby-sitting arrangements is a big laugh when we think how much it costs per year for baby-sitting arrangements. Even if it is not licensed care, it is still expensive, and $200 is almost an insult.

I do not think the Conservative Government is realistic. Conservative Members talk about families and children, but they will not do anything substantive to remove child poverty.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, quite frankly, increasing in three years 50 per cent of the expenditures on any social program shows a very important priority. In fact, the child tax credit has been increased by this Government from $367 in 1985 to $559 in 1988. That is an increase of more than 50 per cent in three years.

The Liberal motion wants to increase the refundable child tax credit threshold by $1,500. The increase of $35 we have brought in for the child tax credit achieves much the same goals simply by a different means. I do not know what this motion really accomplishes.

For example, in 1988, partial child tax credit benefits will be provided to a one-earner family with two children and with an income of up to about $46,500 as compared to $45,000 for the same family under the original White Paper proposal. Moreover, these changes benefit all families who qualify for the refundable child tax credit at all income levels rather than just those whose family income is above the current threshold. This improves the progressivity of the child tax credit and the benefits system in particular and of the tax system in general.

This motion is unnecessary. I ask the House to defeat it, but I must ask another question of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). Perhaps she can respond to this when she speaks on the next motion, as would the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). I hope Hon.

Members heard this. They would give, as would the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), the personal exemption credit to all Canadians, whether they had to pay tax or not. In other words, a child who has just been born would get it. A person who earns no income would get it. This would cost the Government of Canada $4 billion. I could not believe it, but they did say that. They believe in spending $4 billion that way when it would simply reduce what the provinces would end up giving because of their increased revenues. The targeting that we have achieved would be totally dissolved in essentially a fiscal haemorrhage. I ask that Hon. Members defeat this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Cossitt): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Cossitt): The question is on Motion No. 14 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Garneau) negatived.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides) moved:

That Bill C-139 be amended in Clause 102 by striking out line 18 at page 265 and substituting the following therefor:

"amount equal to 18 per cent of the least of".

He said: The purpose of this amendment is to reduce from 12 per cent to 10 per cent the taxation rate of all small businesses.

Madam Speaker, the aim of this amendment contained in Motion N° 15 is to reduce from 12 to 10 per cent the rate applicable to small businesses.

Had the House's rules permitted, Madam Speaker, I would have liked to present an amendment geared more towards the small manufacturing businesses. But the legislation and the rules are structured in such a way that Opposition Parties cannot, at this stage, present amendments that would have been acceptable to the Chair and would have reached the exact end we are aiming at.

The reason for this is that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) spoke some months ago about fiscal reform in this House, he committed himself to reducing from 10 per cent to 8 per cent the rate applicable to small manufacturing businesses.

Now, Madam Speaker, the Minister did not keep his word even though he had then gained a certain amount of support and congratulations and was praised and applauded by the small manufacturing businesses and their organizations. When time came to deliver on his promise, not only did he not reduce the rate from 10 per cent to 8 per cent as promised . . .

Madam Speaker, this tax reform was supposed to help our small businesses that were badly hit by the elimination of the accelerated amortization provision, by the more complex paperwork for the remittance of source deductions, which are now on a monthly basis if not on a weekly or a fortnight basis, by the elimination of some other benefits in terms of research, and now, by tax rates that are raised and not reduced.

People who had made plans with tax rates 4 per cent lower in mind now find themselves in a rather ackward situation where their rates are 2 per cent higher than before.

Madam Speaker, I find the Minister has a cowardly attitude in that he makes wonderful promises and not only fails to deliver them but does the exact opposite. That is why we have proposed this amendment which is not even up to the goal stated by the Minister. If I had proposed the right amendment, the Speaker would have rejected it because it would have meant too many changes to the legislation which is before us and I would have been told that only the Minister of Finance can do that. But failing anything better that would correct the injustice resulting from a Minister who does not keep his promises, we must look for a compromise and at least keep for small businesses the tax rates they had before. They already have suffered too much from other tax changes mades by this Government.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few moments to speak to Motion No. 15 presented by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). The motion he put forward in the name of small business is certainly worth considering in those terms. However, it gets a bit more complicated than that.

Obviously our economy is all too dominated by very large enterprises which manage to do very well in comparison to small businesses. Small businesses find themselves all too often under-capitalized and forced to turn to financial institutions, particularly our chartered banks, for support. They have often found those banks in these last few years not nearly so sympathetic to their needs as has been true in the past.

Certainly small business has reason to be concerned about the tax rate. As the critic speaking on behalf of the Opposition suggested, to have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promise an 8 per cent rate to small manufacturing businesses, and having obtained credit in industry for doing that, and then turn around and hand them a 12 per cent rate, is only one more example of the breaking of faith which has marked the Government. It demonstrates the greediness of the Minister of Finance and his blind desire for revenue as it has been applied to small enterprises and individual taxpayers. In case after case the Minister has gone after small operators, small people, small companies, and allowed the big ones to get away with lesser payments or no payments at all.

That kind of economic situation would certainly justify support for this amendment. The difficulty with it for us in the NDP caucus is that the Canadian controlled private corporations to whose profits its rate reduction from 12 per cent to 10 per cent applies are characterized not by their necessarily being small businesses but by the anomaly, if you will, of being a big corporation.

There is in the nature of our corporate law something that strikes me very often as a contradiction in terms. You have a business as large as Eaton's, for example, which operates from coast to coast. It has a long history, a long and venerable history one would like to say, although I am not too sure I want to say that as a New Democrat being well aware of the labour policies of the Eaton family over the years, of being a supposedly private corporation. It has been closely held by the family and those involved with it, and because of this anomaly of corporate law it has been allowed to get away with reporting very little of its activities. This great company operates in the cities across our country. It pretends it is like a corner store. Conceivably one might argue this is the kind of private business in which the public has a limited right to know what is going on.

One could expand on this strange thing in our corporate law which allows such a company to be private in this way, but what counts is that companies such as Eaton's, which are Canadian controlled private corporations, would end up in this amendment the recipients of what is supposed to be a small business rate. Surely what is necessary if this kind of amendment is to be genuinely a small business rate, as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides said it was, is that there must be some other quantitative measure of what is genuinely a small business.

There is a number of ways of doing that. One could use as a measurement the number of employees. A small business might be 50 or 100 employees or conceivably more than that. One could use sales as a measure, whatever the figure happens to be, some several million, perhaps. One could use this as a way of distinguishing small businesses under that level from the large ones over it which one would not want to call small businesses.

Clearly there are a number of objective standards that could be applied, and I have no doubt that the Department of National Revenue would have the information at hand or be able to obtain it in order to draw these distinctions. If there is any difficulty in getting it from some of these private corporations, it is quite, quite timely to ensure that they report in the way that American companies have to report information to the authorities. We should long since have done that with Canadian corporations which have gone beyond this charade, I would say, of supposed private corporations. If the law has to be amended to get us some information, it might only have to be filed with Revenue Canada. It would not have to be published for all those who are concerned to protect the privacy of these supposed private enterprises.

Those are the kinds of concerns we feel about this particular amendment. We clearly want to support that part of it which is relevant to small business. The fact that it has the wrong qualifications in it with respect to Canadian controlled private corporations leaves us much more ambivalent. In the context of the votes this evening on division, of course it is not going to matter actually how we come down on this, but it is a motion which clearly is useful in spirit but should have been far more carefully drawn in the actual letter of the amendment.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) because of a number of questions posed in this House by his Party complaining about the number of corporations in Canada that do not pay tax. Do you remember those questions, Mr. Speaker? Tonight he is saying that we should lessen the tax burden on small business. The Hon. Member has admitted tonight that in fact most of the corporations which do not pay tax are small businesses struggling to get under way. When he asks me in the future about corporations that do not pay tax I will remind him that what he said tonight is a contradiction to all the questions he asked previously.

More important is the actual motion itself. I can deal with it very quickly. First, the 12 per cent small business rate is one of the most generous in the industrialized world. If you compare with other countries you will find that this rate is as low as you can find almost anywhere in the top 30 countries in the OECD. Therefore, we are taxing our small businesses at a very generously low rate.

Why not 10 per cent instead of 12 per cent? This proposal would cost the Consolidated Revenue Fund about $25 billion. There are a lot of things that can be done with those funds.

Third, and most important, is the point which the Hon. Member made, with which I agree, that all corporations, on the first $200,000 of revenue, would be taxed at a lower rate. That would help the large corporations as well as the small ones.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): It is a Liberal motion.

Mr. Hockin: It is a Liberal motion which you are supporting.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): No, no, we are equivocal about it.

Mr. Hockin: With regard to why we are leaving it at 12 per cent, the House will be interested to know that the rate of the dividend tax credit has been reduced under tax reform from one-third to one-quarter. This amount integrates perfectly with the 12 per cent corporate tax rate so as to ensure that corporate income that is subject to taxation at the small business rate is not taxed inordinately heavily as it is distributed by way of dividends to the shareholder. If the small business rate was to be reduced to 12 per cent, the dividend tax credit should also be reduced, otherwise too great a credit will be available.

Thus, the total tax on income, flowed through a corporation, would be less than tax on the shareholder if he earned the income directly. We are keeping the 12 per cent in order to ensure that these two are in balance and symmetry. Reducing the dividend tax credit further than has already been done by tax reform would have extensive repercussions in the public capital markets.

Once again, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has proposed an amendment which moves in a contradictory direction to what even he intended.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, this motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and the motion that I presented, which was ruled out of order, are meant to correct the injustice that the tax reform proposed by the Conservative Government does to small business.

So far, we had a tax system that allowed manufacturing companies a lower tax rate; there was a reduced tax rate for large manufacturing companies and a reduced rate for small manufacturing companies. Even the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), when he first presented his corporate tax reform, maintained this differential treatment and then proposed a reduced tax rate for small manufacturing companies, 8 per cent instead of 10 per cent. So the Minister of Finance wanted to continue along the same lines as we have for decades in Canada.

Since tax reform, the Minister of Finance has changed completely. Instead of continuing the tax reduction for small manufacturing companies, he increased the rate by 2 per cent. It is the only sector in the whole tax reform that is hit with a direct tax increase. Also keep in mind that this sector is hit by the lower capital cost allowance. The CCA was reduced across the board, so it applies to small business as well.

When the Minister says that the Conservative Government was generous to small business by increasing its tax rate 2 per cent, I would like him to define what he means by generosity for us. It is the only sector hit with a tax increase under tax reform. It is the only sector that creates more than 80 per cent of our jobs. Why then penalize the sectors which make the economy thrive? Is that good leadership? It is this unfair treatment of a sector which provides most of our jobs that we wanted to eliminate. Because the Standing Orders of the House prevented us from proceeding as we intended, we had to resort to this amendment in order to deal with the issue.

Mr. Speaker, we submitted this issue to the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee and once again we were given the same answer. We are told that we are too generous. Today I am asking the Finance Minister again to increase by 2 percent the small manufacturing businesses tax rate. Is that too generous? Is that excessive generosity? I am sure that the small businesses will remember that come the next elections!

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, we cannot possibly have the question now, I have not yet had the time to make my contribution in this debate. I am hoping that my words will influence the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), to change her position in favour of the right one which is the one we are suggesting.

I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), and I say that in a totally objective and non-partisan manner, in my usual way.

We could do even better than this, we could withdraw this amendment and ask the Government to do the right thing, that is, lower income tax for small businesses. However, we on this side of the House know that the Conservatives do not have a tendency to assist small businesses because they are too busy assisting big businesses. That is the nature of being a Tory and I accept that. My colleague from Laval-des-Rapides very astutely recognized that and proposed an amendment, the purpose of which is to lower that level of taxation.

My colleague wants to do this for a very simple reason. The current rate of income tax for general business is 36 per cent. Under tax reform that is reduced to 28 per cent. That sounds like something to applaud. If you group everyone together the rate is lowered by 8 per cent. That sounds good. However, the catch is that for small business in manufacturing the rate goes from 10 per cent to 12 per cent. Would you believe that the rate is actually going up from 10 per cent to 12 per cent under the Conservative administration? I do not want to belabour the point because my colleague from Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), who is an expert in small business, has spoken very eloquently on this, as has my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides.

Given the constructive input I have just made, I hope the Government will agree with us and will vote in favour of the Liberal amendment.

As for the New Democratic Party, which is ambivalent about how it will vote, according to its words, I hope it will reconcile itself to vote for one side or the other. I hope they choose the right side, the Liberal side.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 15 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

I declare the motion negatived.

Motion (Mr. Garneau) negatived.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou) moved:

He said: Mr. Speaker, for the past two years, the Conservative Government has been using all the means at its disposal to make us believe it is reducing the deficit, when it is actually using a different accounting system to fool Canadians, so that when it says it is reducing the deficit, it is not doing that at all.

Mr. Speaker, for starters, the first measure accelerated the remittance of source deductions. As a result, the Minister was able to assemble the sum of $2 billion, just once, and subsequently, we were shown a drop of $2 billion in the deficit, while in fact there had been no reduction in expenditures or increase in revenue. It was just that one time when, instead of getting the money before April 15, it came in before March 31, so the Minister had $1 billion more in his fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, the following year we got the accelerated remittance of federal sales tax. A nightmare for small businesses, Mr. Speaker, because every month the remittance must be made by estimating what the sales tax will be, and then the following month, the books have to be reconciled to calculate the exact difference—add and substract! Imagine, Mr. Speaker, the kind of nightmare this is for small businesses!

How can the Government say it is concerned about this sector? We have just considered a motion to increase income tax for small businesses.

The Government's tax reform is going to take money out of the pockets of low-income Canadians and senior citizens, with their modest pension and investment income, Mr. Speaker!

So what is the Government suggesting? The Government wants to change quarterly remittances. Everybody look at the calendar! According to us, the first quarter is up to the end of March. From now on, according to the Canadian Government, it will be until March 15, so two weeks early. Mr. Speaker, this was how they got another billion dollars to reduce the deficit, although they don't reduce anything because they just collect $1 billion two weeks early.

But we have to take into account the fact that for the Government, the fiscal year ends on March 31, and each time it announces early remittances, and it invariably does so before March 31, the Government can claim a reduction in the deficit, but this is simply not the case because all it is is a change in accounting rules.

But here, we are not dealing with source deductions, held by employers and deducted from employee paycheques or sales tax to be remitted. That would simply involve accounting methods of working capital.

This time, Mr. Speaker, we are talking about taking money out of taxpayers pockets, from those who need it the most. I am sure that senior citizens come to see you too, Mr. Speaker, in your constituency office with their quarterly form that they do not understand, while the Government is charging $1.29 interest because they sent it in a day late, after attempting to figure out their year-end remittance and finally losing everything. Can you imagine that they must now get used to paying remittance on March 15, June 15 and September 15 instead of at the end of the month? Why, Mr. Speaker? Not too long ago, last week in fact, we had that same debate in the House and before officials of the Finance Department could figure out how much that measure would cost, even Conservative Members said that we could not possibly do such a thing to our senior citizens! As if it were not enough to try to reduce their pensions, we now want to pick their pockets.

And when I suggested to the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs that we should delete the clause changing quarterly remittances, even Conservative Members agreed, Mr. Speaker. We had deleted that clause, Mr. Speaker. But officials went to see them one by one at dinner time and the Government Members said no, it's not possible! Just like the Minister of State (Finance) said all evening . . . It costs $20 million so we cannot accept it! Civil servants calculated it would cost $20 millions in interests. Since we could not afford that, the Conservative Members came back at the end of the evening, and voted conclusively to finally reintroduce this clause . . . For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am standing here tonight to propose again the same amendment. We simply cannot do this to our senior citizens. If the Government want to put an end to their working capital problem, they should look elsewhere for a solution, not at our senior citizens and our low income people. This is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, fifteen days! They have enough trouble as it is simply to reconcile their quarterly remittance.

Mr. Speaker, tonight, throughout this debate on tax reform, we have clearly seen the Government's hypocrisy. They want us, and all the population, to believe that they are reducing the deficit, which is not true, and all that time they are taking money from people who really need it. That is why I move to delete this clause, and I hope the House will support my amendment.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one last attempt to convince the Government of the validity of removing Clause 137 from the Bill. I draw this to the attention of the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Gagliano: He is an accountant. He should understand.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, he is an accountant so he should know how to count.

An Hon. Member: He is a lawyer, too.

Mr. Boudria: No one should have to apologize for being a lawyer. We do not hold that against the Minister, as you would appreciate, Mr. Speaker.

I want the Deputy Government House Leader to pay attention, because we will ask questions later. The parliamentary committee discussed this Bill in its usual objective fashion. All the committee members reviewed Clause 137, when suddenly one Member, then another and finally all members of the committee agreed that Clause 137 should be removed because it was unfair.

The issue was put to a vote and the committee decided to remove Clause 137. The Assistant Deputy Minister who was in attendance got quite upset and banged on the table so hard that the hub caps nearly flew off the Minister's limousine.

During the dinner hour the Assistant Deputy Minister had time to lobby the individual Conservative members of the committee. After having feasted on the meal, the Conservative Members suddenly had a change of heart and reinstated the clause which they had removed before the dinner hour. When the Conservative members were hungry they were willing to remove Clause 137 because they recognized that it was unfair. After they had feasted, however, they returned to their old Tory selves and reinstated the clause in question which would make senior citizens and many others who have to remit on a quarterly basis do so 15 days before the end of the month.

Apart from everything else, this is mathematically incorrect. How can one talk about quarterly remittance when someone has to remit at a period which has nothing to do with a quarter of the year? If one remits in the last half of the month of the quarter, it is not quarterly, it is something quite different. It is a Tory quarterly period, as my colleague says.

I will let the Conservatives figure out the fraction. It strikes me that it is something quite different from a quarter.

The Government wants to advance the payment by 15 days in order to get an extra bite out of the taxpayers before the end of the tax year. As my colleague said so eloquently, this is exactly what the Government did with the corporate sector. It is now imposing it on individual Canadians.

• (2020)

Conservative Members and all members of the committee recognized this and removed that section because it was unfair. However, as I said, after the Assistant Deputy Minister became really angry, we saw who the real boss is. It was obviously not the Conservative Members because they were whipped into line after having feasted and they came back and reinstated the offensive clause. If there are any Tory Members who have not feasted tonight and are still hungry, I say to them, let them go back to the good selves they were the day their hunger for votes made them withdraw that clause. Why do they not do the same thing now? If it was right then, surely, it must be the right thing to do now.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the proposal made by my colleague from Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano). The goal of this motion is to eliminate the change that has been made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his fiscal reform concerning the remittance of tax instalments that must be made quarterly by self-employed workers and that must now be made at an earlier date than before.

Mr. Speaker, that measure in itself is inconceivable, but on top of that, it is being concealed in another way by postponing its implementation until after the election. They forgot to . . . I do not know why, Mr. Speaker . . .

An Hon. Member: Coincidence!

Mr. Garneau: . . . a coincidence that must . . . I do not know exactly how it is that we have a fiscal reform that is coming into force on January 1, for the most part except that Clause 137 of the fiscal reform concerning earlier remittance of tax instalments by self-employed workers is now being postponed until fiscal year 1990.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, if that measure had been implemented openly as of today, self-employed workers and especially senior citizens would have been so offended by this petty trick from the Conservatives that they decided not to take any chance and to postpone the whole thing until after the election, just as they did for sales tax reform.

Mr. Speaker, do you know how much this represents in a given year, when it is finally done? It is as if the Government had received $1.1 billion more in revenue during the year when it is implemented.

[English]

There is $1.1 billion more for the Canadian Government for only one year. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, in that year, the Tory Government could say it has diminished the deficit by $1.1 billion, but, in fact, that will not be the case, as it has not been the case when the Government changed the remittance day for the personal income tax. It was not the case when the Government changed the remittance date for the sales tax. That was a trick the federal Tory Government used to try to tell the Canadian people that its deficit was lower and so it was able to tell a few stories about it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when one considers the three measures taken by the Federal Government in the past few years, one can understand why it was able to boast about artificial lowerings of the deficit. This time around, they did not take the risk of doing it right in the middle of an election year. It will be done only in 1990 because given was is going on now a days, sure enough, there will not be any election in 1988, but rather in 1989. That is the last chance, so they said "Let's do it in 1990!". No problem, they said, let's hit them right now and they will make their remittance at this time.

Clearly, they will not be in Government then, but the ones who will still be in Opposition might have the gall to blame the Liberals for it.

Mr. Speaker, I am saying that senior citizens are the ones most severely hit, because people with an income from employment or from a business, whether they are lawyers, accountants or something else, will not have any problems as their money is coming in on a regular basis—daily, weekly or monthly—and moving up the date of remittance of their taxes to the federal Government will not be as critical. However, senior citizens on fixed income, either pension income, paid at the end of the month, or interest income, paid maybe every six months or even annually in the case of Canada Saving Bonds, might have to pay taxes four times a year on an income paid on given dates.

The Government, whether it is Red or Blue, cannot take into account all types of income, but changing the date of remittance from the end to the middle of the month is a hassle for everyone. If the Government gets a billion more that way, it means that someone is not getting the interest on that money, and that someone is the taxpayer. This is a devious way for the Conservative Government to show that in this one year the deficit has been reduced by 1100 million, but it is a one year shot. With the transfer of interest income from senior citizens or self-employed persons to the federal Governement, when the interest rate is said to be around 10 per cent to 15 per cent, depending on the way it is computed and on the frequency of the interest payments, the Government, according to our figures, stand to gain about $20 million from our senior citizens.

The Government tried to de-index old age pensions. Fortunately, that did not work. Now it is making up for that by forcing senior citizens, whose pension or interest income totals $18,000, $20,000, $21,000, to make their remittances on the 15th of the month. Mr. Speaker, this is so unacceptable that even the Conservative Members who sit on the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs decided to vote against it. I hope that, after thinking it over, all Members of the House will see that the members of the committee were right the first time and that this motion moved by my colleague from Saint-Léonard—Anjou (M. Gagliano) should be voted on and agreed to very quickly by the House.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I think this is one of the silliest and pettiest aspects of the tax reform package the Government has put before the country. This is an absolutely outlandish kind of suggestion. What the Government is asking for is that all those people who make their income tax payments on a quarterly basis, retired people, small businesses, contractors and some farmers, a whole host of people who pay their taxes on a quarterly basis, will have to change their bookkeeping practices so they can make their cheques out 15 days sooner.

Why is the Government asking that all this disruption take place? It is simply that in the year that it comes into effect, for that one quarter, the Government will have one more bit of money allocated to the previous fiscal year instead of to the next year. For that one year, when it comes into effect, the deficit will be that much smaller by the amount of that particular quarterly payment. That is a pretty silly and cynical reason for forcing people all across the country to change their bookkeeping and accounting practices. I think the fact this may turn out to come into effect during an election year makes people even more cynical and quizzical about the utilization of this particular tax reform package. This is silly and petty and has no place in a genuine tax reform package.

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak on third reading this morning of what is the most comprehensive reform of our tax system which the Parliament of Canada has seen in the last 20 years. We have had vigorous debate in the House this week. I have said pretty well all I want to say about the motions that have been moved by the Opposition. I would commend those who are interested in the debate to read my responses to the amendments which the Opposition brought forward yesterday.

The Bill, as you know, Mr. Speaker, had its genesis in the June 1987, White Paper on tax reform. This was followed by extensive consultations with taxpayers by myself, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), by departmental officials, and by the standing committees of the House and the Senate.

I must say, having chaired a parliamentary committee in the first two years of Parliament, that I know how hard Members work on committees. The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has worked particularly hard in this session of Parliament, especially so on tax reform. I would like to commend the members of all Parties for the work they have put into this project and the seriousness with which they conducted their deliberations.

I would like to summarize, as we begin third reading, what the objectives were of tax reform in the first place and what we are trying to accomplish. I want to reiterate the momentum we have put behind each objective of tax reform with our various provisions.

First, we believe the fairness of the tax system should be increased. Second, we believe the tax system should encourage competitiveness and growth in jobs. Third, the system should be internally consistent with other Government programs and it should provide a more reliable and balanced source of revenues to finance essential public services. These were our objectives and what we have tried to accomplish. They have been achieved by broadening the base of corporate and personal income tax systems, and by broadening the base we have been able to reduce the rates.

Let us not forget that tax reform reduces rates, and converting personal exemptions and some deductions to credits of course is a major philosophical and practical step forward for fairness in our tax system, which is often overlooked. People say that they would like more deductions or more credits. By shifting exemptions to credits we have made the system fairer and more progressive.

The results of tax reform illustrate how the objectives have been achieved. We are not sort of saying that we are aiming for objectives, but the results prove that the objectives have been reached by shifting more of the tax burden from individuals to corporations and, by lowering tax rates, removing preferences and loopholes in the system, the reforms make the personal income tax system fairer and more progressive.

Let me give you some examples, Mr. Speaker. People ask for results. What are the results of tax reform? How can you prove that it is fair and more equitable? First, net personal income tax revenues to the federal Government will be reduced by $12 billion over the next five years. Second, income taxes will be reduced for 9.7 million, almost 10 million households in this country—85 per cent of all the households—by an average of $490. People will see that difference when they fill in their tax forms.

Lower income Canadians, how have they done? Some 850,000 low-income Canadians will have their income tax reduced to zero or receive refundable credits in 1988.

Income taxes will also be cut for about 1.3 million of the 1.4 million households with at least one person aged 65 and over. About 250,000 elderly Canadians will have their income tax in fact reduced to zero as a result of tax reform. Elderly Canadians in preponderant proportion—1.3 million of the 1.4 million households with at least one person aged 65 or over—will benefit from tax reform.

Taxes paid by persons with similar incomes and in similar circumstances will vary less after tax reform. One of the great problems that we have in Canada, in the sense of unfairness in the last 20 years, is that people felt that people with the same income were being taxed differently. They did not understand fairness regarding this. A good example is that some people are on salary, some people work for themselves, some people can take advantage of certain preferences and loopholes, and others cannot. We have tried in tax reform, and in a major way have changed this, by putting in place a situation where tax that is paid by persons with similar incomes and in similar circumstances will vary less after tax reform.

A good example—and I constantly had this brought to my attention when we were first elected—is a secretary who works for a large company, London Life, for example, in my home town and did not have the same deductions as somebody who was self-employed. This was becoming a very strong feeling of inequity. The tax reform deals in a major way with that.

Another feeling of inequity that existed was at the corporate tax level. People were saying that it is not just a question of small business and large business; it was industrial sectors. A manufacturing enterprise or a distribution enterprise or a warehousing enterprise pays a certain kind of average tax, but other industrial sectors in Canada such as real estate and financial institutions were in effect paying no tax. There was a perceived sense of unfairness among industrial sectors. For the first time this Government has come to terms with that problem and has made sure that all industrial sectors paid their fair share of taxes. It has not been easy and the finance committee knows this, because it went through the reverberations of this cost.

We have emerged with a package which, when it comes to corporate tax across the industrial sectors, is much more fair. Most taxpayers, as I have said, whose incomes consist primarily of a salary or wages, family allowances or standard pension and retirement revenue, will enjoy tax reductions. It is very important news and we cannot say that often enough.

I said at the opening of my remarks that we were able to reduce taxes. People say: "How can you reduce taxes?" We have done it by removing preferences and loopholes and by broadening the base. Because of base broadening measures through the removal of tax preferences and the conversion of exemptions and reductions to credits, we have produced a more progressive system. This is why I objected yesterday to the motion to amend our Bill, arguing for changing the middle income rate from 26 per cent to 23 per cent. Not only would this end up being an $8 billion haemorrhage on the system, but it would be regressive within the middle income bracket, not progressive.

While taxpayers with incomes of less than $15,000 represent 46.7 per cent of total taxpayers, their share of federal tax payable will now decrease from 1.6 per cent to 1.1 per cent. In other words, we are relying on that group.

The lowest income Canadians, the lowest income tax filers, we are relying on them profoundly, but less than we did before tax reform. The share of federal tax payable by taxpayers with incomes greater than $50,000—these are the wealthier Canadians who represent only 6.3 per cent of the total of taxpayers—will increase from 34.9 per cent to 36.4 per cent. Do not let anybody tell you that we have not increased the burden on the wealthy and decreased it on the lower income groups. In fact, we have increased the burden on the wealthy and decreased the burden on those of lower income.

People ask: "Well, is anybody going to pay more taxes under tax reform". Yes, there are Canadians who will pay more taxes under tax reform. Who are they? These are the ones who have been claiming in the past large special tax preferences or large tax credits. Those with substantial investment income or self-employment earnings will be subject to the new, fairer expense deduction rules. Those people will be paying more tax. They understand it, but that is part of the base broadening measure in order to lower taxes for other Canadians who are not taking advantage of those preferences.

Corporations will also be paying more taxes. The broadening of the corporate tax base will more than offset the lowering of tax rates. Corporate taxes will increase by 10 per cent or about $5.5 billion over the next five years.

We must remember that tax reform is about fairness on the corporate tax side. This is brought about by broadening the tax base, which allows us to lower tax rates. The result of those two moves, of broadening the base and of lowering the rate, is in fact the production of more corporate tax revenue.

Many more large, profitable corporations will now pay tax as a result of tax reform. With the reduction in tax preferences, the number of profitable corporations not paying tax will be reduced by more than 50 per cent.

Most corporations that do not pay taxes are generally small operations, fledgling operations, that are struggling to keep alive. Through tax reform we are going to be able to find ways to make sure that large, profitable corporations not paying tax will be paying tax. A good example of that, of course, is the taxation of the insurance industry.

Variations of tax paid by different sectors will be reduced prior to tax reform. Average corporate tax rates across industrial sectors range from 14.5 per cent to 24.5 per cent of income on financial statements, and reform has cut this range This is what I was speaking about earlier, the huge differences among industrial sectors on their burden. It is this range, which has been quite wide. It is now going to be narrowed so that it is going to be cut to 15.5 per cent from 22.6 per cent.

Tax reform will also reduce the rate of tax on the return from new investment, strengthening the incentive for firms to invest in profitable ventures. We have heard from the NDP members—and I do not want to ignite a new debate this morning—about how they do not like the capital gains tax. I would think that they would object to me reminding the House that they do not like the capital gains tax being treated differently from income tax.

We need in this system, and in just about all industrialized countries, a way to treat capital gains somewhat differently from ordinary income in order to encourage people to take some risks and to take advantage of opportunities that ordinarily would not be taken advantage of. Why? Because we can employ those people and put our economy into a new creative mode with higher employment. That is why there is slight difference in the treatment of capital gains and income tax. We therefore want to make sure that incentive remains.

The over-all financial sector in Canada will pay significantly more in taxes after tax reform, and I would like to speak to that as the Minister of State for Finance, answerable in the House for financial institutions. We have very strong financial institutions. Quite frankly, we have a system which is a model for the rest of the world.

There is a large country in South America with a very weak financial system. There are 360 different banks with just two or three branches each in that country and the people of that country are having great trouble mobilizing capital to lend or to invest in new ventures. The financial system is weak and therefore the economy of that country is very weak.

In Canada, our economy is strong because we have strong and highly efficient capital markets through a highly effective system of financial institutions. As a matter of fact, Canada has the fourth or fifth largest capital market in the world, and it is sustained and made stronger by strong financial institutions.

The strength of financial institutions does not mean exemption from tax. We all know that banks, trust companies, or insurance companies have certain reserves set aside for rainy days or for problems that might occur with people not paying their debts or for insurance claims coming due, but those reserves have to be appropriate from a tax point of view as well. We have attacked this problem. It has been a thorny problem and a difficult problem and we have emerged out the other end with a system that will now be taxing financial institutions fairly, unlike what went before, but not in such a way that will put in jeopardy in any way the great strength of our financial system.

The average tax burden for small firms is unchanged by tax reform while that for large corporations rises. We had a debate yesterday about small business, and there was a motion to decrease the rate on small business still further. The problem with that proposal was that it would also deliver the same benefits at the lower level to large corporations. It would put out of sync the taxation on dividends that flow through a corporation with the taxation of capital gains and the taxation on the corporations themselves. We have tried to align it carefully and have put in place this 12 per cent rate.

The average tax rate for small businesses over all will be 13.5 per cent, a full 7.6 per cent advantage over large firms. Large firms will have an average tax rate of 21.1 per cent. A major part of this relates to the small business deduction which has been maintained and gives a statutory tax for small business that is less than half that of large firms. These are very important steps to keep our small business sector strong and creative. As a result of tax reform, we have secured in place the advantage of small business over large corporations when it comes to taxation.

Canada is a very special country with its huge mining and resource industries. Incentives to the mining industry are very important to this Government. Flow-through shares and the ability to write off all investment against the income of a new mine will be retained, and the average tax rate of the mining sector will remain one of the lowest of all sectors in Canada. I spoke about equity among industrial sectors. There is a sector that we are treating in a preferential way and that is the resource and mining sector. The lower tax rate will more than offset the slightly broader tax base for the oil and gas industry.

All Canadians are concerned about the vitality and dynamism of firms that rely on research and development. Firms engaged in research and development will continue to benefit from one of the most favourable tax regimes for R and D in the industrialized world. Going through OECD arrangements for each country for tax treatment of research and development, one would be hard pressed to find one more generous than the one provided through the tax reform of this Government for research and development in Canada.

Revenue Canada's recent streamlining of the administration of the fully refundable R and D tax credit for small firms is a further useful step forward. A new general anti-avoidance rule will also help prevent abuse of tax avoidance arrangements and new information requirements for investment income and tax shelters will help identify avoidance and evasion.

I will not take much more of the time of the House, but let me relate all of this back to the objectives of the Government as stated by the Minister of Finance when he brought forth the White Paper in June of 1987. He said that in the final analysis, this whole package will be judged on whether we have given to our senior citizens more peace of mind and security, to those in greatest need a sense of a fairer and reduced tax burden, to our young a greater sense of opportunity and hope, and to our working people, more incentive, more stability and more freedom. I think Hon. Members can agree that we have met these objectives.

I would like to say a very special thank you to my colleagues and all members of all Parties who worked hard on the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs which, starting last fall, spent endless hours studying the tax reform package. The thorough review of the members of the committee led to a number of improvements and refinements in the legislation and I know that they are rightly proud of their work.

[Translation]

The tax reform proposals were designed to provide Canadians with a more equitable and more comprehensive system that encourages initiative, strengthens competitiveness, growth and job creation and provides a more reliable and balanced source of revenues to finance essential public services.

[English]

In conclusion, tax reform comes to terms with two difficult tasks. It makes the system fairer but it is also fiscally responsible. Yesterday during debate, a number of amendments were discussed. Good intentions were behind a number of these amendments, I have no doubt, in order to help certain groups, but I pointed out that the amendments themselves in every case ended up almost contradicting their own objectives because they would interfere in a contradictory way with the rest of tax reform.

Second, I did some mathematics. It would cost almost $9 billion in extra revenue for governments, and that would have the result of putting an additional burden on the Government of Canada to borrow, borrow, borrow. This causes the Government to pay more and more interest on Government borrowings, which in the long run simply burdens generations of those who will have to grow up and pay for the system. With tax reform, we have tried to make it fair, to make it clear, and to make it a system of hope for all Canadians, but also to be fiscally responsible.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, before starting the comments I wanted to make on third reading of this Bill, I would like to comment very briefly on what was said by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Hockin). First of all, I must say I was very disappointed the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did not take part in the debate himself and left that responsibility to his Minister of State. This is no reflection on the competence and sense of responsibility of the Minister of State (Finance), but since the debate is about tax reform which the Minister claims has taken up the majority of his time since he was appointed, I wonder why he is not taking part in the debate and entrusted a junior Minister with the task of informing Canadians about the various aspects of this Bill.

• (1030)

In any case, the Minister of State (Finance) repeated the same kind of rhetoric the Minister of Finance gave us when he brought down his Budget. Unfortunately, this repetitive rhetoric fails to reflect the substance of the legislation. That is unfortunate and that is the whole problem.

Earlier, the Minister commended members of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs of the House of Commons, and in fact all three Parties, for having worked so hard, both at public hearings and when drafting a report that was later tabled in the House. Of course we appreciate those kind words, Mr. Speaker, but for over three months we heard testimony from witnesses, both before and after the Finance Minister's report was tabled. We received a very clear message from most witnesses and it was: The Government's rhetoric is at odds with the contents of the Bill. We heard this from senior citizens, businessmen, the mining industry, the insurance sector and from practically all groups that appeared before the Committee, explaining that they agreed with the principle but were against certain aspects. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it became a farce. Every time we received a brief, it said: We agree with the principles, we urge the Government to continue in the direction it proposes, but finally, the brief would shoot down the tax reform paper.

The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs made any number of recommendations over ninety if I am not mistaken, and practically none were accepted. It got to the point that even Conservative Members on the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs who examined the Bill were tempted many times to vote against certain provisions. As my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) said last night, it was because of subsequent pressure that certain decisions were reversed.

Mr. Speaker, once again, the Minister has served up the same rhetoric we heard from the Minister of Finance, the rhetoric that does not coincide with the Bill and the tax measures it contains. He talked about lower taxes, as the Minister did, but of course he refrained from pointing out that these adjustments don't even compensate for the tax increases we had before. I have often explained tax reform by comparing it to a woman whose handbag is stolen by a thief in a park. A few minutes later, the thief gives the woman her purse back, after taking all the money, and he expects the woman to be grateful! That is something like what they have done. They increased taxes for four years and on the eve of the election, they lower them by about 10 per cent. Big deal! They claim to be the saviours who are bringing fairness to the tax system.

Mr. Speaker, today we are beginning the final stage of consideration of the tax reform Bill. I do not intend to repeat all the arguments that I developed in Committee and yesterday when the report was considered. The Minister, in referring to these amendments, just told us that it would cost a fortune! But the Minister knows very well that at the report stage, we cannot present amendments that are as complex as tax reform itself, because the Chair would reject them. What we were trying to show with these amendments was the inequity of this tax reform, which should have eliminated this unfairness towards different population groups and brought a little more justice to the various classes of taxpayers.

For example, I proposed full indexation of refundable tax credits for children and for blind or disabled people. Obviously, I see this as a matter of social justice, for two reasons: the financial problems families have and the declining birth rate in this country. Therefore, a way had to be found not to penalize families. The cost was not exorbitant. As for the disabled, it seems to me that the tax credit for them . . . if there is one group in society that deserves to be protected from the ravages of inflation, it is this one! That was suggested by many groups. But the Minister and Government Members said no, it was too expensive.

I will get back later to the issue of cost and the promises made by the Conservative Government. Why do they have money for promises and none for providing a fair tax system?

The Minister says that some of our measures would cost billions of dollars. Yesterday, for instance, I suggested that the tax credit that would replace personal exemptions be made refundable for people on very low incomes, the reason being that people with high incomes can take advantage of 100 per cent of the credit, but if a person has no taxable income, he loses out on the tax credit.

The Minister ridiculed my suggestion, saying that the Government would have to give a refundable tax credit to every new-born child. Mr. Speaker, that is the silliest thing I ever heard and it is a deliberate attempt to trivialize the purpose of this amendment. I realize that it is only fair for Members on the other side of the House to try and shoot down the arguments of their opponents, but for a Minister of Finance, for a Minister of State (Finance) to put this kind of interpretation on an amendment and calculate the cost at billions of dollars is totally irresponsible.

So despite the hard work by the Finance Committee and by Liberal Members on that Committee—we tabled the fifteen amendments we considered yesterday—despite all our hard work, the Government did not see fit to accept those amendments. If it had, it would have been possible to improve the Bill and bring it more into line with the Government's objectives.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should see tax reform within the broader context of the fiscal strategy we have seen unfolding in recent years.

There is always a tendency on the part of the Government—fair is fair, I suppose—to put the spotlight on tax reform so as better to hide the tax increases it introduced in recent years. If you put this reform in its proper perspective, we see that despite tax reform, over the past four years Canadian taxpayers have been hit by tax increases that are the biggest and most massive we have known in our parliamentary history.

Mr. Speaker, I will start with indirect taxes. When I give you the figures, I am going to give the rates and amounts the Minister gave us, which do not allow for the effects, if any, of economic growth.

For instance, since 1984, the Conservative Government increased federal sales tax from 9 per cent to 12 per cent. That decision alone will, in 1988-89, raise $3 billion more in revenue than the Government would have collected in federal sales tax if there had been no increase, and I am not talking about any effects of economic growth or growth in consumption but only about the rate. In one year, as a result of successive increases in sales tax, the Government collects $3 billion more, and I am referring to 1988-89.

The Government also expanded sales tax to cover candy, soft drinks, certain pharmaceutical products, snacks and so forth. On an annual basis, for 1988-89 this change in the sales tax structure provides the Minister of Finance with $400 million more in revenue. The excise tax on a litre of gas was increased 5 cents, which means that for 1988-89 alone, the result is additional revenue for the Minister of Finance totalling $2,225,000.

The Minister of Finance has repeatedly raised taxes and excise tax on alcohol and tobacco. For 1988-89 alone, the result of the policies of the Minister of Finance has been to take an extra $735 million out of taxpayers' pockets. I take all those figures, Mr. Speaker, from the budgets tabled by the Minister of Finance.

By imposing a 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls and cable television service, the Minister is taking another billion dollars from the taxpayers' pockets in the current fiscal year. The Minister raised the tax on paint, wallpaper and air transport by $60 million a year.

If one adds all this up for the 1988-89 fiscal year alone, without factoring in economic growth, the effect of the Government's policies to increase tax rates is to collect $7.4 billion more from the taxpayers in this fiscal year.

• (1040)

The sales tax had been increased from 9 per cent to 12 per cent; the excise tax on gasoline by five cents per litre. Taxes on tobacco and alcohol have been increased during the last four years. There was a 10 per cent tax on long distance calls, costing Canadian taxpayers $1 billion. When we add it together, in the fiscal year 1988-89 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) collected, just from the increased rate of taxation on indirect taxes, $7.4 billion of new money.

Let us consider the direct tax system, particularly the personal income tax. The numbers I will give to the House come directly from the budget speech. I did not invent them. The fact is that since 1986, personal income tax has been deindexed one year after the another. This means that in this fiscal year the Government will collect $1.8 billion of new taxes from personal income tax. This is not due to a change in rate but as a result of partial deindexation of our tax system. It is a hidden tax because the Minister does not announce those changes every year.

In the first year it amounted to $650 million; the second year it was $1.2 billion; and this year it is $1.8 billion. It has an accumulative effect year after year. In 1988-89, the Minister will collect close to $2 billion more in taxes due to partial deindexation.

The Government has eliminated some of the fiscal advantage that the family received in the past and, as a result, will collect $600 million more in 1988-89.

Mr. Speaker, the Government imposed a general 3 per cent surtax which was to be temporary, but which has been in effect for several years and now seems to be embedded in the system. This too provides the Government with more money, so that the total amount of new money that the Government has obtained not from economic growth but from changes in tax rates and fields of taxation and from partial deindexation of the system is $4 billion.

Mr. Speaker, if I take the increases in sales tax, which in 1988-89 amount to $7.4 billion, and add the increases in personal income taxes of $4 billion, I come out with a total of $11 billion in direct taxes for only one year. I did not add up the figures for 1986, 1987 and 1988, but for the 1988-89 fiscal year alone, the increases in direct and indirect taxes were $11 billion.

[English]

For the fiscal year 1988-89 alone, the Minister of Finance will collect from the Canadian taxpayer $11 billion more just through the increase in the tax rate in the field of taxation. It is not as a result of an increase in the economy.

Let us examine those figures and take into account certain fiscal advantages coming from the fiscal reform. While the tax breaks are less, let us be generous and assume that they will be $2 billion. If we take $11 billion of increases minus $2 billion in tax breaks just before the election, there is a net amount of $9 billion in new taxes. When one considers that there is a deficit of $28 billion, without those tax increases the real deficit of the Government would be $37 billion. One of the Government's main campaign platforms from the Minister of Finance was deficit control. He said that the deficit would be solved, not by tax increases but by better management of public affairs. It is really a farce.

Adding up the $7 billion in indirect taxes and the $4 billion in direct taxes, and taking account of the positive effects of tax reform on some sectors, one sees that the Minister of Finance has collected $9 billion net more in taxes in 1988-89 alone; comparing that to the $28-billion deficit, one realizes that were it not for massive tax increases, the deficit would be $36 or $37 billion. For a Government that boasts of its good management of public finances, this is really laughable.

Mr. Speaker, consider as well that economic growth is due to the world economic situation and that the Minister of Finance clearly said in his budget speech, perhaps a little naïvely, in the first part of his speech, that the economic recovery in Canada had begun before the Conservatives took power. If we were in a more stable economic situation, we would have a deficit of over $40 billion. I want to point out to the Minister of Finance that his management of public finances has been completely irresponsible and that the promises he made to Canadian taxpayers . . . I still hear the Finance Minister and the Prime Minister talking to us about this solemn promise not to raise taxes, that the deficit would instead be controlled by reducing expenses. Well, as in other cases, these promises have not been kept. Not only were they not held, but the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister chose a direction directly opposite to their commitments.

Mr. Speaker, returning to tax reform proper and the legislation now before us, I would say that one feature of those tax increases, in addition to being the most massive in Canadian history, because no other government had succeeded in a four-year period in raising taxes to such a dramatic extent—the worst part of the matter is that most of those tax increases were hidden by the indirect effect of de-indexation and by increases in indirect taxes that the taxpayer, the consumer does not see when he buys goods from the store. Because the Government preferred to raise indirect taxes, the invisible ones, those that are hidden in the price of goods, rather than direct taxes. Even when the Government increases direct taxes, it does so in a secretive, devious way. This is why, instead of raising rates directly, it went through partial de-indexation.

Mr. Speaker, one of the major failures of that tax reform is that it did not reach the goals set by the Minister in his White Paper, neither did it meet the goals referred to by the Minister of State (Finance) each time he rises. It is one thing to recite principles and state objectives, but when bills are introduced that fly in the face of those principles, Mr. Speaker, we wonder whether they are being naive or quite simply hypocritical, whether they are trying to deceive electors. For instance, looking at the major questions that might be asked on the matter of fairness, I am not the only one to suggest this, Mr. Speaker. True I have been stating this ad nauseam since the beginning, because this tax reform is structured in a way that is unfair to middle-income people, to families and to some extent to low-income senior citizens.

I would like to know how the Government explains away a number of concerns raised by taxpayers, by associations that appeared before the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. I would like to refer to those questions that were raised and that I am also raising to the Government and the Minister of Finance.

How does the Government explain that Canadian middle-income earners will pay $1,200 more in taxes this year than they did in 1984, while Canadians whose earnings are greater than $117,000 a year will pay $3,500 less in taxes? How does the Government explain the inequity of low income earners paying more and higher income earners paying much less?

Why has the Government abolished the $1,000 deduction for investment income which is frequently used by middle income earners and by old age pensioners, while granting an exemption of $100,000 in capital gains for the benefit of the wealthy? Why this double standard? Why do we abolish exemptions that help the middle class and senior citizens, on the one hand, and give to the rich people an exemption of capital gains?

Why did the Government not follow the suggestion made by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs and abolish the capital gains exemption with a formula that would take inflation into account? Why did the Government set aside this proposal? Why does it have money to give capital gains exemptions to the rich and does not have the money to keep the $1,000 interest deduction for senior citizens?

How does the Government explain that benefits which flow from the child care expenses deduction or those from the RRSP contributions are greater for higher income Canadians? Why were these deductions not converted into tax credits which would have contributed to improving the equity of the tax system and the usefulness of these programs?

Why has the tax rate for small manufacturing companies increased from 10 per cent to 12 per cent when the objective of tax reform is to reduce the tax rate?

Why did the Government give a break to large companies? It seems to have the money to do that, but the Government increases the tax rate for small manufacturing companies from 10 per cent to 12 per cent. Not only did the Government increase the tax rate for small businesses from 10 per cent to 12 per cent, but it went back on the promise the Minister made in this House to bring down that rate to 8 per cent. Not only did the Minister not respect the commitment he made in this House to the small business sector, but he did the opposite and increased the rate from 10 per cent to 12 per cent.

How does the Government explain that some 60,000 profitable businesses will continue to pay no taxes after tax reform? How does the Government explain that the tax system has not been simplified? According to the report of the committee on finance, the tax system will be more complex when the objective was to simplify it.

How does the Government explain its decision to base its tax system on credit which can be easily and fully used by taxpayers in the middle income or higher income brackets but which cannot be fully used by lower income taxpayers? Why are they not made refundable? Why was this opportunity not used to set the stage for a true minimum guaranteed income? Where is the equity in this legislation?

As I asked a moment ago in English, Mr. Speaker, how does one explain the Government's decision to do away with the $1,000 deduction? First, alleging that it is too costly, they scrap the $1,000 investment income deduction of older Canadians, then they turn around and allow a $100,000 capital gains tax exemption. What is the rationale behind the fact that, through direct taxes and lower family benefits, the average income taxpayer with children has to pay back to the federal Government 31 per cent of any salary increase, whereas the very wealthy taxpayer's repayment is only 29 per cent? Is that fair? Why would family assistance programs be eroded every year as a result of partial de-indexation when Canada's birth rate happens to be among the lowest in the world? Where is the fairness in the approach of the Minister of Finance? Would someone tell me why the Government chose to abolish the deduction for dependent children aged 19 to 21 precisely when they undertake costly post-graduate studies?

Mr. Speaker, not only does the Government disallow the child deduction even for those aged 19 to 21 and still attending school, but it also eliminates the option a mother living alone might otherwise have had to claim her 19-year-old child as spouse for tax purposes. This has always been possible under our system. In the case of a widow or the case of a single-parent family it was possible to claim the so-called equivalent to married credit. The Conservative Government has now struck out that provision in the case of children over 18 so that a family whose children are attending a post-secondary institution or going to university can no longer claim the child tax credit. And a widow or a single-parent family will no longer be able to use a university-attending dependent child to claim the equivalent to married deduction in the tax return.

How are we to explain this inequity? How are we to explain the Government decision to base its tax system on credits which can be easily and fully used by middle and higher-income taxpayers, but which cannot be used by lower-income taxpayers?

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that if you do not have enough income to pay income tax, you cannot benefit from this tax credit. This seems to me as clear as day! It seems to me also that if the Government had wanted to be a little imaginative it might at least have allowed this class of citizens to use and benefit from the tax credit system just as their fellow citizens in higher-income brackets do.

When the Minister of State (Finance) mockingly suggested that perhaps the Government should grant tax credit to newborn babies, he showed both his ignorance and unwillingness to make our tax system more equitable.

How are we to explain that small businessmen, as well as self-employed workers and contractors will no longer be allowed to claim a full deduction for entertainment expenses on their income tax returns, even those who have to go outside their towns or villages where their head-offices or main working locations are situated.

The situation is such that if you were to go and work for a corporation, or if you are self-employed and living, say, in Quebec, and decided to come and attend a seminar in Montreal to improve your skills or seek more expertise in attending work groups, you could not use 100 per cent of your hotel or restaurant expenses against your income, even if these expenses are directly related to your business operations.

I suggest it is alltogether unfair. These expenses will be limited from now on to only 80 per cent. We know that will result in all sorts of complication and encourage these people into making income tax returns which are not true to reality, because the Minister of Finance has failed to demonstrate openmindedness, and both listen to and understand the recommendations made by all these self-employed workers.

That is the reason why we, on this side of the House, declare that this Tory Government has failed in its effort to carry out a true tax reform, and that the Minister and his Tory colleagues are making claims which are not at all reflected in the Bill before us. I suggest that the Government did not avail itself of this opportunity to . . .

Mr. Speaker, I understand that it is now 11 o'clock and that we will resume following Question Period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 19(4), the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order (21).

NATURAL RESOURCES

PROPOSED LEGISLATION TO PROTECT WATER RESOURCES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-156, the Bill to protect Canadian water resources, which was tabled yesterday by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), is not comprehensive, or coherent. It is a hastily put together, incomplete, and hollow response to public pressure. For example, because the Bill only prohibits the increase of water flowing across the international boundary, it will not prevent the export of water by tankers.

• (1100)

Cabinet has powers to allow the export or diversion of water without an environmental impact assessment. Cabinet can also remove restrictions on the quantity of water that can be exported without consultation with Parliament, according to Clause 13.

The offences under the legislation are bizarre. Can you visualize, Mr. Speaker, someone being fined or imprisoned for diverting a river? Would it be after diversion, before, or when cutting the ribbon?

Finally, and most important, this Bill makes no difference to the free trade agreement, confirming the fact that this Bill cannot stop the export of water under the free trade agreement.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF UKRAINIANS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, since the announcement of the 1988 version of glasnost and perestroika, many have held high expectations for change in the Soviet Union. However, those expectations continue to be dashed and betrayed.

On August 7, Reverend Michajlo Hawryliw was arrested in Ukraine for serving a Catholic mass. He was sentenced to 15 days at an internal KGB prison in Rozhniatiw. Reverend Petro Zeleny was fined 100 rubles for serving the holy liturgy.

In Lviv, Ivan Makar is serving time in the Hapaev Street Prison for his part in the July 7 demonstration in front of Ivan Franko's monument, where thousands of demonstrators, in the spirit of the supposed reforms, asked for the legalization of the Ukrainian Catholic Church, proclaiming Urkainian the official language in the schools and erecting a monument to the victims of Stalin's terror.

Once again we are reminded that we must not confuse Soviet promises with Soviet reality.

I call upon the Government of Canada to issue a formal protest to Soviet officials for their continued blatant violations of fundamental religious and human rights in Ukraine.

UNION NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION OF PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of the House the problems that members of the Professional Institute of the Public Service and its leadership have been having in dealing with the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) and with the Government.

This is a union which is not militant. It is a union whose 18,000 or 20,000 members serve the Government loyally and strongly in many areas.

In 1984, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that his Party looked forward to working "constructively" with the Professional Institute of the Public Service as they negotiated solutions to many complex Public Service issues.

Since the new Minister took office this spring, apart from one reception which she gave for Public Service union leaders, she has refused to arrange any constructive and reasonable meetings with those Public Service unions, including the head of PIPS. She has told them that she does not want to meet if collective bargaining is going on. However, the fact is that collective bargaining has been frustrated for a year with PIPS members and leadership on a master bargaining contract, which means that the President of the Treasury Board would never meet them.

Her office has told the President of PIPS, Iris Craig, that she is either too busy or too tired to meet with those representatives. If the President of the Treasury Board is too tired, then she should resign and let someone else have the job.

SMALL BUSINESSES

SUPPORT FOR CANADA—UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, there are more than 840,000 small businesses in Canada. Over 1,200,000 jobs have been created since the election in 1984 of the Conservative Government. Many of those positions have been created by small businesses.

The President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business maintains that small businesses view free trade as being advantageous for growth and future prosperity.

This week I visited numerous small businesses in my riding of Edmonton East. All the small business people with whom I spoke endorsed free trade with the United States.

One company, Titan Foundry Ltd., stated that the elimination of the 7 per cent American tariff would immediately double exports to the U.S. market.

It is clear that most small businesses in Edmonton want to see the free trade agreement with the United States become a reality.

LA FRANCOPHONIE

FUTURE OF FRANCOPHONES IN CANADA

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, since our Progressive Conservative Government is in power, we have realized the urgency that Canada be better recognized internationally as a French-speaking country, since an educated, intelligent and enterprising French-speaking population represent almost one third of the Canadian population.

What have we done for that in concrete terms? First, we advocated French-speaking Summits, as the one in Quebec City last year. Second, we have passed Bill C-72 on the official languages to protect, maintain and promote the French-speaking minority in Canada.

Next week, that is September 2 to 9, the International Association of French-speaking parliamentarians, of which I am an executive member, will meet in Quebec City, Pointe-Au-Pic and Ottawa, as an ad hoc follow-up commission after the French-speaking Summit of Quebec City.

Mr. Speaker, those are the concrete measures that our Governement has taken to support the French-speaking people of Canada and of Quebec.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SITUATION IN SOUTHERN NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr Fernand Robichaud (Westmoreland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, for some months now, people in southern New Brunswick have been very concerned about their Unemployment Insurance benefits. The eligibility period has been extended from 10 to 16 weeks in an area where often unemployment adjusted rates nearly reach or are even higher than 30 per cent. The only reaction from the Minister to this serious problem has been to announce a full review of all economic regions. Again another review! Why did the Minister choose this course of action? Many studies have already been conducted. This problem has been examined quite a few times. The Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration submitted a unanimous report on unemployment insurance. That report suggested as a first recommendation the establishment of a standard eligibility period of 10 insurable employment weeks. The Minister has all the facts at hand. Time has come for her to act, and right now, so that people from southern New Brunswick be treated with some justice.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

WINNIPEG—STORAGE OF PCBS IN RAILWAY BOXCAR

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the tragic incident at Saint-Basile-le-Grand has alerted us all to the dangers of PCBs. We find now that in Winnipeg there is a boxcar with PCBs in it sitting in the city of Winnipeg. It is right beside an actively used railway track. There is no fencing. This boxcar is inadequately secured.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), has taken the time to see this site and talk to officials involved. He is looking into the matter.

The provincial government has said that it is not its responsibility. It is the responsibility of the federal Government. Environment Canada says that it needs the guidelines of the department. We need more than guidelines to protect us from these environmental hazards. We need regulations.

As a first measure we ought to be inquiring into the whole question of PCBs across the country, where they are, under what conditions they are presently stored, and what standards are needed so that people can be assured that they are safe.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADA POST CORPORATION—ADOPTION OF COMPULSORY ARBITRATION ADVOCATED

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, Canadians do not like strikes. In an article in yesterday's The Gazette William Johnson made the following observations regarding the postal strike:

"Postal strikes are absurd. The government creates a monopoly of mail delivery which makes the entire population vulnerable; then it gives a few thousand post office workers the right to stab the public.

Strikes in the post office are not an economic tug-of-war in which both sides to the dispute must take into account the survival of the company being struck.

Post office strikes are political strikes. The damage is not done to the employer; it is done to the public.

In his recently published book, A Public Purpose, Tom Kent, a policy adviser to the Pearson Government, refers to collective bargaining and the right to strike. He makes this comment:

"The cause of subsequent trouble lay not in public service collective bargaining, which was inevitable, but in the broadness of the right to strike and the carelessness of bureaucratic expansionism that followed. Before the end, the Pearson government was beginning to take fright at the prospects.

In his article Johnson went on to state:

"To restore labour peace and restore true collective bargaining, some form of compulsory arbitration must be imposed on the post office.

I whole-heartedly endorse the above views.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board has been a valuable asset for Prairie farmers. Under the terms of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement it will continue to benefit Canada. The agreement will not require changes in the Wheat Board marketing system, nor will it require disclosure of Wheat Board prices or other commercial information that could benefit competitors. If anything, the Board's ability to market grain will be enhanced.

As well, with the requirement under free trade for end-use certificates for imported grain, the integrity of our grain system will not be compromised. What the agreement does is create tremendous opportunities for Canada's grain producers in the U.S. market. Commodity groups, such as the canola producers and the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association, agree.

The opponents of the free trade agreement will have a tough time convincing Canada's grain farmers.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, last night in the town of Milton the Minister for National Defence (Mr. Beatty), in his usual courteous manner, referred to the Member for Hamilton East as a dog. I can tell the Minister one thing. I would rather be a dog than a Tory.

I also challenge the Minister who, in the same speech, did not have the courage to address his position on the submarines. Instead of making snide remarks about opposition Members, he should be dealing with his Government's dossier and shelving the horrendous fiasco of the submarines that even some of his own colleagues do not want. The Minister should cut out the partisan bitterness and get down to the issues. Submarines are no good for this country. Nuclear submarines will cost us billions of dollars. That money would be better spent in other dossiers.

However, I do not expect a Minister who compares an hon. Opposition Member to a dog to understand what it means actually to deliver programs in this country. Again, Mr. Speaker, I would rather be a dog than a Tory.

ABORTION

POSITION OF CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, at recent conventions both the United Church of Canada and the Canadian Medical Association reaffirmed the position that a decision regarding abortion is a medical decision that should be made by a woman and her doctor after all options are seriously considered.

The Canadian Medical Association also recommended medical standards for counselling, informed choice, medical, surgical, and nursing procedures, and follow-up care. Health care insurance should cover costs of medically required services, including counselling, early diagnosis of pregnancy, and early access, across Canada, to abortion should be encouraged.

The medical profession has provided an important contribution in clarifying abortion as a medical procedure with standards for practice and respect for differing personal views. The Canada Health Act must ensure fair access across Canada.

The best manner in which to reduce unwanted pregnancies is prevention; greater emphasis on effective and safe birth control, and government funding for family planning are essential. Women and doctors make responsible and moral decisions, and there is no evidence to the contrary.

ECOLOGICAL ACCIDENTS

EXPLOSION IN PCB WAREHOUSE AT SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND—GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, since last Tuesday, my constituents in Chambly, and especially in Saint-Basile-le-Grand and Saint-Bruno, have been going through an emergency crisis.

The area was the scene of the worst-ever environmental disaster in Quebec. A PCB warehouse caught fire, and several thousands of residents in my constituency had to evacuate their homes.

As soon as I heard about the fire, I rushed to the scene. I stayed until the next morning ensuring all concerned of my full co-operation.

When such a disaster strikes, it is comforting to see the joint efforts by authorities to ensure the security of the people. For example, when I was asked to contact the CFB Saint-Hubert, they immediately sent a fire truck specially equipped for this kind of accident.

I want to mention the tireless efforts and hard work of the firefighters in my constituency of Chambly. I also want to congratulate them for their courage.

Our Government also took their responsabilities, as is the rule in this kind of situation. Yesterday, on the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) request, the Transport Minister (Mr. Bouchard, the Environment Minister (Mr. McMillan), the Member for Verchères (M. Danis) and myself went to the scene of the accident to guarantee the population our support.

In fact, the Prime Minister has announced that our Government will join others in offering financial assistance to the residents of Chambly. Last night, following a request by Environment Canada, a sophisticated mobile laboratory was sent to evaluate the air inside the homes. This service is paid for by the federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the population of my constituency of Chambly, of Quebec and of Canada that our Government is doing all we can to help the victims and to make sure such a tragedy never happens again.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF FARMERS

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, on August 24, a press release from the Canadian Agricultural Policy Alliance strongly endorsed the trade agreement with the United States. This group, which represents farmers all across Canada, has expressed strong support for the free trade agreement.

Past CCA president, Stan Wilson, stated: "Contrary to the view expressed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, it is clear that the large majority of farmers would welcome freer access to the large and prosperous U.S. market". The Canadian Agricultural Policy Alliance represents grain, oilseed, hog, beef, and cattle producers from all parts of Canada.

The United States is already Canada's largest market for farm commodities, and it is becoming more important as other countries reduce their purchases.

The members feel the removal of tariffs and quotas, the improved method of dealing with disputes, and the process for resolving non-tariff barriers are all positive developments for Canadian farmers. This is especially true for the sectors interested in selling processed, high quality products into the large and sophisticated U.S. market.

Mr. Wilson concluded: "There is no doubt freer access to the U.S. market will be beneficial to the large majority of Canadian farmers. With the decline of traditional markets for grains and oilseeds, the very survival of large sectors of Canadian agriculture could well depend on secure access to the large and prosperous North American market. All farm groups should be working together to that end".

STANDARD ENTRANCE REQUIREMENT URGED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of State for Employment (Mrs. Vezina) announced a further study on unemployment insurance. This is the result of persistent questioning by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), who has put questions to the Government with regard to the unfair situation in New Brunswick and the variable entrance requirement for unemployment insurance.

Why another study? This whole subject has been exhaustively studied, first by the Forget Commission, and then by a long study made by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. That committee recommended that there should be a standard 10-week entrance requirement for unemployment insurance.

There have been enough studies. Why do we not have some action from the Government? Let it take up the recommendations of the Standing Committee and give us some action, not more studies.

PESTICIDES

BOYCOTT OF CONTAMINATED CALIFORNIA GRAPES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the pervasive use of toxic pesticides by many countries is the greatest threat posed to the health of people, and to the world environment.

A plea for reduced pollution and wiser world economic development always seems to fall on deaf ears, whether they be governments or the private sector, which show little remorse in gambling peoples' lives and health for the sake of the almighty dollar.

Eating food or drinking water contaminated with toxic residue has resulted in deaths, in cancers, and in birth defects.

It is shocking to read that the U.S. Government has estimated that, of 600 active ingredients used as insecticides, only 10 per cent have been studied enough to form an adequate opinion of their health risks.

However, it is gratifying to see some light at the end of the tunnel. More than one thousand labour, community, consumer, and health organizations, including the City of Toronto, and the Ontario Public Health Association, have endorsed the boycott of insecticide contaminated grapes from California. More action and leadership along this line is needed if we are ever to eliminate this scourge of contamination from our food products.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

DISMANTLING OF SPEAKER'S CORNER

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, correctly spelling Prime Minister Wilfrid Laurier's first name is one of the smaller challenges confronting students of Canadian history.

The National Capital Commission has finally been forced to recognize that the spelling on the plaque placed at Speaker's Corner on the Sparks Street Mall is wrong.

I expect that you are as shocked as I am, Mr. Speaker, that the NCC's response to this discovery is not to replace the plaque with a corrected version but to dismantle the Speaker's Corner.

The Speaker's Corner was, after all, originally unveiled by the Speaker of the House of Commons and the Mayor of Ottawa, now also a worthy colleague in this debating Chamber the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar).

The NCC Director of Communications blamed Murphy's Law for the original spelling mistake. However, the NCC's decision to remove Speaker's Corner this fall surely gives new meaning to the corollary of Murphy's Law—Murphy was an optimist!

THE ECONOMY

INCREASING INTEREST RATES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, how many times have we seen the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), rise in this House and tell Canadians how the Tory Government was responsible for lowering interest rates while the trained Tory seals, surfers, and book-ends were cheering and applauding?

Well, Mr. Speaker, if one can take credit for lowering interest rates, then one has to take credit for increasing interest rates. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I always give credit where credit is due.

The Government cannot only blow its own horn when it feels that things are going its way. Can we expect both the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Finance, to rise in the House today and say to Canadians: "If the interest rates are higher and you need to dig deeper in your pockets, you can say, 'thank you Brian, thank you Michael, we did it for you'"?

ECOLOGICAL ACCIDENTS

SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND—REQUEST THAT POPULATION AFFECTED BE BETTER INFORMED

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the fire at a PCB warehouse in Saint-Basile-le-Grand near Montreal is becoming one of the worst environmental tragedies in Canada's recent history. Would the Minister of the Environment or the Minister now acting on his behalf tell us what advice his experts have given him concerning the negative impact of this tragic incident on the health of the residents of Saint-Basile and surrounding areas? What steps has the Government taken to give the residents precise and clear information on their situation? All sorts of rumours are circulating. What is the possible impact of toxic fallout on the health of pregnant women? Are vegetables safe to eat, is milk from cows grazing in contaminated fields safe to drink? Those are the kind of questions people are asking and I am sure the Minister would be willing to share the advice from his experts with this House and, through television, with all Canadians. This would surely help and reassure the people involved.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we are obviously very concerned by this human and environmental tragedy, and I can assure my colleague that, despite the fact that provinces are primarily responsible for the storage and handling of PCBs, the Government of Canada is cooperating fully with the Government of Quebec to help everybody who, directly or indirectly, is affected by this disaster.

Concerning the precise information which my colleague is asking for, tests have been going on since the tragedy occurred and the results should be made public next Monday. In the meantime, I am told that my colleague, the Quebec Minister of the Environment has set up two information centres on the site so that all questions from residents who are understandably worried by all this might be answered immediately. And I repeat that the Government of Canada will do all it can to assist the Government of Quebec and the residents affected by this tragedy.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ESTABLISH WORK COMMITTEES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Minister would take this opportunity to convey to the people the advice he has received from his experts. However, perhaps he will be able to do it at some other time because I think it is important. Among the questions asked, in addition to the health impact, there is the whole matter of financial security.

I would like to ask the Minister whether the Government has established working groups at the level . . .

An Hon. Member: Question!

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, what is wrong with the Hon. Member? Is he going nuts, or what? I would like to ask the Minister whether the Government has established working groups either at the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation or at the Department of Agriculture in order to prepare specific plans to come to the assistance of affected people? Already, people contend their property will lose value. Farmers have seen their crops seized and taken off the markets, with good reason no doubt. At this point, mention has been made of significant financial losses.

I would like to ask the Minister this: Are working groups already on stream, particularly at the Department of Agriculture and also at the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in order to assist the people with specific programs, concrete measures?

I recall other situations much less serious wich arose in the past. Problems had then been solved with the help of working groups established right from the start to dispense adequate information to the people.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first of all, regarding the issue of making public the advice from experts, as I indicated earlier, tests being made are now in the process of completion, therefore I think it would be wise to wait before making it public. As I also said earlier, the results of the tests should normally be announced on Monday or sometime next week.

Mr. Speaker, concerning the assistance to the people affected by this disaster, I believe the Prime Minister of Canada announced yesterday that the Federal Government will provide assistance to the province in accordance with the disaster financial assistance arrangements as was done after the tornado that hit Edmonton, and in other similar circumstances.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the departments concerned are obviously appraising the situation. Indeed, as early as yesterday, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Environment were sent to the site by the Prime Minister precisely to assess what was going on and to report back to him.

QUERY ON WHAT PREVENTIVE MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I find my viability to get some specific answers from the Government rather disappointing because when thousands of human lives are at stake, it is not the time to make federal-provincial differences an excuse for lack of action.

Perhaps if we wait until next week, the Minister's answers might be more definite.

Now that we finally come to the realization that this environmental crisis may be much more serious than we had contemplated at first, I should like to know . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I suggest all Hon. Members should pay attention to the extremely serious issue raised by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides.

Mr. Garneau: Now that we realize that this environmental crisis will not be solved overnight, that it is very serious indeed, I should like to ask the Government and the Minister what precautions, what program and what approach the Government intends to develop to avert a repetition elsewhere in Canada of such a tragic incident, either with the PCBs, because now that the cat is out of the bag, we know that there are sites almost everywhere in this country where PCBs and other very toxic materials are stored! What is the Federal Governement planning to do to avert the reoccurrence of such a dramatic situation?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I agree with you that these are very serious issues which sould transcend partisanship.

Mr. Speaker, my Hon. friend has just said that this problem will not go away overnight. Just the same, it took the Liberal Party two days to suddendly become aware of it.

In view of the previous Liberal Government's record on this issue Mr. Speaker, I do not think the matter of Federal-Provincial differences should come up because I suggest even Mr. Lincoln, the Quebec Minister of the Environment and my own provincial representative at the National Assembly, has clearly indicated that the two levels of government are working hand in hand and doing everything possible do deal with this very serious situation.

Concerning the Federal Government's approach to this problem, I should like to call my hon. friend's attention to a press release issued on April 20, 1988, by the Public Relation Information Service where it is stated:

> "NRC scientists have developed a process to render highly concentrated PCBs harmless for elimination."

Mr. Speaker, negotiations are now in progress with a view to marketing this process in order to deal with the situation.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

DESTRUCTION OF PCBS—PROPOSED NATIONAL NETWORK OF FACILITIES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the fact that three years ago when the federal Environmental Minister met with provincial Environmental Ministers and agreed—here I am reading from the final statement of May 31, 1985:

> "That a co-ordinated national system of destruction facilities must be quickly put in place".

—will the Deputy Prime Minister admit that the federal Government has failed to deliver on this commitment?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer the question. Following the statements made by my colleague, the problem at that time was that no technology was available to proceed with the destruction. It was deemed advisable throughout the country to store these harmful substances in a safe and supervised location until such time as technology became available to destroy and dispose of them. My colleague has already informed the House that the National Research Council continued its research in that area and he announced in April that technology has now been developed and is available. We are negotiating presently with 30 firms throughout the country to develop a commercial licence for them to go on site and destroy the substances wherever they are stored.

PROPOSED MOBILE TREATMENT FACILITIES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, at the same meeting three years ago it was decided that, and I quote again from the same statement by the Environment Ministers:

> "The federal Government will take the lead in arranging for mobile treatment facilities, and as a matter of urgency, Ministers agreed to develop national codes of practice for storage and destruction of PCBs".

Will the Deputy Prime Minister admit that his Government has failed to deliver on this commitment as well?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend insists on reading from his prepared text.

An Hon. Member: It is your text.

Mr. Oberle: I just told him that the federal Government did assume its responsibility, did take the lead, did develop the technology, and did arrange a federal-provincial code in terms of the storage of these substances until the technology was ready to destroy and dispose of them. That technology is now ready, including the private sector in developing commercial licences, to have it done. Whatever the Hon. Member asks us to do, he is as usual two years behind the times.

INVENTORY OF STORAGE SITES—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister or whichever other Minister chooses to speak on behalf of the Minister of the Environment. It deals with this environmental time bomb which exists. Across Canada there are some thousands of sites where PCBs are being stored. There are close to 800 sites in Quebec. There are about 500 in Ontario and there are 32 here in the city of Ottawa alone.

So that people know the kind of danger they are facing, is the Government prepared to take the initiative now to publish an inventory of PCB storage sites across Canada along with an evaluation of whether or not the PCBs stored there are stored in a safe manner which does not risk the health of people in the adjacent areas?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that the prime responsibility with respect to storing and dealing with PCBs is provincial, the Government of Canada, particularly the Department of the Environment, does have an inventory of all storage facilities, and particularly commercial storage facilities of PCBs. I am informed that that information will be made available some time next week.

SAFETY OF STORAGE CONDITIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a couple of follow-up questions to that specific question. In the first place, can we have an evaluation by the Minister of the Environment about the safety of the storage?

It has been discovered in Quebec that in Shawinigan South there is another facility owned or controlled by the person who controlled the facility in Saint-Basile-le-Grand. That facility is surrounded by a flimsy, rusting metal fence. The grounds are littered with wooden loading palettes. It has not been licensed for three years. Will people have information about that as well so that early action can be taken to prevent these environmental time bombs from exploding and creating another situation, perhaps in a community of 200,000, not 3,000?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, again the prime responsibility with respect to the storage and destruction of PCBs is provincial. If my hon. colleague has specific information with respect to the fact that some establishments are not operating under licence, it would be appropriate for him to make it available to the appropriate department in the province in question and to give it to us as well. I am sure my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, will do everything necessary to inform his colleague so that this situation can be corrected.

REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister suggests that the Opposition Members should do the government's job in trying to find out if the storage sites are secure or not. Mr. Speaker, that is the Government's job. More precisely, as far as the Saint-Basile-le-Grand residents are concerned, what kind of compensation does the Government contemplate in view of the fact that we are not dealing with the destruction of houses or farms by a storm, as in Edmonton, but with consequences that may last up to 25 years if one looks among other things at cancer, at the destruction of farm lands, etc. Will the Government play a role in compensating the people of Saint-Basile-le-Grand who are already affected and who are likely to suffer consequences that could last 25 years because of this disaster, of this environmental bomb which has exploded in their community?

Some Hon. Member: Irresponsible!

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Once again, Mr. Speaker, partisanship prevails over common sense notwithstanding the seriousness of certain situations.

Mr. Speaker, if I understood the reasoning of my Hon. colleague correctly, he is saying that because he is an Opposition Member, even though he has some information that might help to preserve the health of Canadians, he will withhold it because in his opinion, it is the Government's job to deal with the situation.

Mr. Cassidy: It is in the papers.

Mr. Cadieux: If my Hon. colleague has some information he should give it to us and we will take the necessary steps to solve the problem. However, as I have said before, the prime responsibility for the storage of PCBs lies with the provinces. Of course, the Government of Canada will take every possible step within its jurisdiction, to ensure that the health and security of Canadians are protected. In terms of the present situation, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the Prime Minister has already indicated that the Canadian Government will share the cost of helping the victims, and will do as much as the provincial authorities. We have been there since the beginning and we will continue to take an interest in the situation. We can assure the people of Saint-Basile that they are in good hands and that they will be compensated as provided under the law.

QUERY ON WHAT PREVENTIVE MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question also deals with that tragic PCB situation. Last night, all Canadians could learn on TV that the owner of the PCB warehouse in Saint-Basile-le-Grand also has a warehouse in Shawinigan South, and the latter is in the same situation as that in Saint-Basile-le-Grand. Also, Mr. Speaker, which is most serious, that warehouse is unlicensed since May 13, 1985, and more serious still the owner is nowhere to be found.

In view of the fact that the owner cannot be found and holds no license since May 13, 1985, what will the Government do to prevent the same kind of tragedy that happened in Saint-Basile-le-Grand from repeating itself in Shawinigan South or elsewhere in the country, with similar results?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): The only encouraging sign on that matter that I can see today from the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, is that finally they realized there is a tragedy there.

Mr. Speaker, may I repeat once more that the responsibility for PBC storage and destruction lies primarily with the provincial government. I am convinced that my colleague, the Quebec Minister of Environment, Mr. Clifford Lincoln, is indeed reviewing the facts referred to by my hon. friend, after having heard them on television.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Minister answers there should be no partisan politics on such a serious matter. I would urge him to stop playing politics himself, in view of the fact that my colleague for Outremont since the beginning of that tragedy has been putting questions everyday and we have been closely monitoring the situation. The Minister is looking for the kind of information anybody could see on television. Perhaps he should do his homework. Now that we know there are thousands of dangerous warehouses across Canada, will they stop suggesting this is a provincial matter, and look after the safety and health of Canadians in order that they may enjoy safety and peace of mind? Is there a national government or not?

Mr. Grisé: Go and tell that to Bourassa!

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): There certainly is a national government, Mr. Speaker, and it is going to be a Conservative one for a long time if the Hon. Member's reactions are any indication.

Concerning the situation that now prevails, no one is putting the blame or pointing the finger at the jurisdiction involved, but nonetheless this is indeed a provincial matter. However, Mr. Speaker, the whole federal Government machine has been made available to the Quebec Government to deal with that serious, tragic situation, and to help the people involved.

CONDITION OF FARMLAND SURROUNDING WAREHOUSE FIRE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Since he does not want to answer political questions, I wonder if he would be prepared to give the House answers to informational questions. In conversations yesterday with the colleague of the Minister of Agriculture, it was learned that Ministry officials had been sent to Saint-Basile-le-Grand to assist in analysing the situation. Is the Minister prepared to tell us what they have found?

Will the farmland surrounding the warehouse fire be reusable? When will the produce from the farmland in the area be permitted to be used by consumers, if at all? Will all of the crop be lost? Will future crops be endangered? How long does the Minister anticipate the cleanup will take?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that this is not a political situation, so that may explain the fact that my hon. colleague says that we are not answering political concerns. Nevertheless, with respect to the specific and very serious question of my hon. colleague, samples have been taken. They are being analysed, and I presume that the test results will be made public sometime next week.

EFFECT ON LIVESTOCK

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, we know from reading the press that the residents of the little village have been evacuated and, according to one report, they are being permitted back for an hour today to feed pets, pick up clothing and the like. What is happening to the farm people in the area? What is happening to their livestock? Have all been evacuated? What is the situation with regard to the use of products that are now on the farms?

• (1140)

Will the farmers in the area have to await an announcement sometime next week or does the Government, along with the province, have a recommendation for them?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, tests are being made and concluded. I think what is important here is to establish the facts and the situation as it is. It would be abnormal, not to say unreasonable, to divulge partial test results or give partial answers when we have not concluded the studies.

I can reassure this House and all Canadians that everything is being done as quickly as possible in order to get all possible and relevant information not only to reassure Canadians in general but obviously to deal with this very tragic situation.

TECHNOLOGY

AVAILABILITY OF MEANS TO DESTROY PCBS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. This morning, he issued the surprising statement that the National Research Council already had the technology needed to destroy PCBs and was only waiting for trade agreements with about 30 companies across the country. I would like to ask the Minister this: Does he not he find it strange that the technology to prevent this crisis already exists and that commercialization is what has kept it from being made available to people who need it?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): What I said, Mr. Speaker, is that the technology has been developed and is now available. If the Hon. Member wishes I will send her, by messenger in the House so she does not miss it, a press release issued by the NRC a couple of months ago saying the technology has been developed and is available now at the NRC.

Despite the assertion yesterday that the NRC has stepped away from working on this critical issue, the technology is now available and we are building the machinery, mechanisms, and infrastructure to address the problem throughout the country. We are talking about literally thousands of sites, and all of this will happen in due course. Of course it is unfortunate that the technology was not developed three or four years ago, but as you know, three or four years ago or four or five years ago, we had another Government that did not take these things as seriously as we do.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, a press release issued a couple of months ago brings no comfort to today's disaster victims.

REQUEST THAT TECHNOLOGY BE MADE AVAILABLE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I am telling the Minister that it is the commercialization of the National Research Council by his Government, which favours profit over people's health, that causes problems. I would like to ask him if he will put in a request at the federal level to make that technology available to all sites and provinces where the potential exists for such disasters as the one which has just occurred in Quebec.

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, this technology developed by the NRC will of course be available throughout the country to anyone who wishes to use it. Shouting louder and engaging in more histrionics will not solve the problems, nor will it be any comfort to the people so tragically affected by this unfortunate accident.

NATURAL RESOURCES

PROTECTION OF WATER RESOURCES—CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Government of Canada, after much prodding by Members on this side of the House, came a little bit closer to protecting Canada's water resources from being exported south of the border. Will the Deputy Prime Minister indicate to this House whether or not the Government is now prepared to take the final and most necessary step and in some way amend the trade agreement with the U.S. in order to ensure that water is not considered a commodity under that agreement?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it has been indicated on many occasions here in the House by my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, and his very able Parliamentary Secretary, that water exports were not in the free trade agreement with the U.S. That, notwithstanding, because of scare tactics of the Opposition an amendment to Bill C-130 was introduced in order to make that very clear. Obviously everything has been dealt with with respect to the trade agreement, and the legislation to which my hon. colleague refers makes that even more clear.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE AMENDED

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Minister of the Environment should know that our deputy chief negotiator, Mr. Ritchie, said in committee that the U.S. Government, because water was declared a commodity in the agreement, could take the issue to the dispute settlement panel if it felt we were not treating the U.S. fairly on its request for us to export water.

Will the Minister go back to Cabinet and say to them that the people of Canada do not believe that Bill C-156 is everything we need? We need one more thing and that is to amend the trade deal.

Will he do that?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): There is a little distinction, Mr. Speaker, between what the people of Canada believe and what the Hon. Member believes. With respect to what has been said by various authorities, I would just remind my hon. colleague that Mr. Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, indicated water was not covered by the free trade agreement.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST THAT CHARLES NG BE EXTRADITED TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I recently saw articles in the newspaper saying that alleged murderers hope to obtain refugee status in Canada and thus avoid the law of their own country. Charles Ng came to Canada in 1985, to escape the authorities in California and has not yet been extradited despite a formal request from the U.S.

Why can Mr. Ng not be extradited immediately? We do not want Canada to become a haven for murderers.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. We have to keep in mind the distinction between immigration law dealing with deportation, and refugee status and the extradition process which operates according to treaties between countries.

With respect to Mr. Ng, officials in my Department have been working closely with American officials on this very sensitive issue. A formal request was received on, I believe, November 3, 1987. An arrest warrant was initiated by officials of my Department on behalf of the Americans on November 17. Before the matter came up for a hearing the fugitive made an application for adjournment of the case to the fall of 1988 on the basis that he had not had sufficient time to prepare material for the case. We vigorously opposed this but the court ordered the matter set forward to the fall.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the position of counsel acting on behalf of the Americans continues to be that the case should proceed at the earliest possible date. Once the matter is before the courts I cannot comment on it, but as soon as it is received by me in my capacity as Minister of Justice I can assure the Hon. Member it will be given the appropriate attention.

PENITENTIARIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—SELECTION OF NEW PRISON SITE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Justice. Yesterday in this House the Solicitor General said: "The site selection committee determined that Buchans did not contain the necessary infrastructure, which includes access to court facilities, hospitals, doctors and emergency services such as police, fire and national defence. The Buchans area does not contain that infrastructure, that is why Buchans was not selected".

Is the Cabinet not aware that court cases are heard in Buchans? Is it not aware that they have a hospital in Buchans with two doctors on duty all the time, 37 people on staff, and a brand new 1988 ambulance at the front door? They even have a public health nurse and clinic along with the hospital.

He says there are no police. The RCMP have a detachment there from his own Department, complete with a jail. There is a fire department with 32 firemen. As to national defence, the only base is in Gander, which is ten times closer to Buchans than it is to St. John's or Harbour Grace.

Will Cabinet cancel the Harbour Grace decision and reconsider Buchans?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada: Mr. Speaker, all Hon. Members of this House welcome the announcement of a new penitentiary in the Province of Newfoundland, I am sure. The problem is that the Hon. Member would like to have it in Buchans, given his new-found love for that area.

I just want to tell him again that the Commissioner of Correctional Services Canada established a site selection committee from among his officials and various sites were considered, including Buchans. The Commissioner recommended Harbour Grace and the Solicitor General and the Government accept that recommendation.

BUCHANS FACILITIES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, last week a swimmer from Buchans won four medals in the Summer Games because they have a swimming pool in Buchans. They have the best hockey players because they have an indoor arena there. They even have a curling club. All those facilities are contained in Buchans, Newfoundland, not Port Cartier or in Harbour Grace, or in Bell Island where the NDP want to put the penitentiary. They are in Buchans, Newfoundland, not New-found-land as the Hon. Member says.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as a central Canadian I apologize to the Hon. Member for my mispronunciation. As I said before, we would all love to have the penitentiary in our ridings but a federal penitentiary requires a community infrastructure for support. This includes access to court facilities, hospitals, medical and psychological doctors, emergency services such as police, fire and national defence. That required infrastructure exists in the St. John's region and exists in Port Cartier.

Ms. Copps: What about Buchans?

Mr. Cardiff: Buchans is a wonderful community. I am sure they are proud of their skating rink, their curling rink and all those other facilities. I would be proud of them if they were in my village as well. My village is the size of Buchans, with a population of 1,000. We are all proud of our communities like that.

Let us also note that the site for the correction centre is served by a population of about 12,700 people.

I want to make one further comment. The previous government announced a site in Windsor, not Buchans, in August, 1984.

RAILWAYS

REVIEW OF WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transportation, whom I am pleased to see in the House today in the fullness of his powers as Minister of State.

In his response to my questions about the effect of the railway subsidies paid under the Western Grain Transportation Act, the Minister said that my concerns are also the Government's concerns.

The subsidies appear to be encouraging diversion of grain from Thunder Bay and the St. Lawrence Seaway, with the railways as the chief beneficiaries. The taxpayers are being ripped off while economic activity is being seriously distorted.

Will the Minister of State assure my constituents in Thunder Bay, particularly unemployed grain handlers and others involved in the trade, that the review of the Western Grain Transportation Act by the National Transportation Agency which he referred to yesterday, as I was pleased to hear, will be open to people directly involved in the trade? Will he ensure that the agency will hold open hearings, and will have hearings in Thunder Bay and other key points in the grain transportation system?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out to the Hon. Member yesterday, certainly we are concerned about the plight of the port in Thunder Bay. I have received representations from the port officials and the shipping industry in that particular area. There is no question that we are truly concerned, and I will take his representations seriously in regard to the National Transportation Agency. As he knows, it operates at arm's length from my Ministry. However, his representation will be taken seriously. I am sure the officials of the National Transportation Agency are hearing this message right now.

REQUEST FOR COMPREHENSIVE REVIEW

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister, who appreciates that we are concerned about the way in which the railway subsidies may distort economic activity in this country, may not know that a permit was issued on July 29 to a foreign owned bulk carrier to carry 15,000 metric tonnes of grain from Vancouver to Montreal. With that kind of evidence of odd patterns of behaviour in transport, will the Minister assure all of us that the review by the National Transportation Agency on the way in which the Grain Transportation Act is being operated will touch on every aspect of the movement of grain, and ensure that that transportation system works fairly to the interest of Canadians in every part of the country?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I will do what I can in my role as Minister to ensure that the best interests of Thunder Bay are looked after, like all other ports in Canada, I will carry forward his request. However, we cannot confuse the situation which has arisen and causes concern with the drought situation that has impacted on grain shipments right across the country. I think we have to be fair not to confuse the two. The plight of the port is one matter, the drought conditions that have brought about problems in the shipping industry and grain movement industry are another. Let us not confuse the two. We will certainly look after it. We are concerned about it and are dealing with it.

REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

DELAY IN ANNOUNCING NEW TAX RULES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance. On August 19, the Government announced that the new tax rules concerning retirement savings will be delayed for another year, primarily because tax lawyers and accountants have said that this is the most complicated tax legislation ever seen in Canada. Will the Minister explain to the House why the Government did not accept the advice of the Institute of Chartered Accountants three years ago on simplifying the reporting requirements?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the Hon. Member's question is long and complicated. Basically, it is because of the effectiveness of consultations that the Departments and the Ministers had with various groups interested in tax assisted retirement savings, pension plans and the like. The Government is trying very hard to make sure there is equality and fairness in the different ways of saving for retirement and in the different ways of having tax assistance for that retirement. In order to do that, we want to make sure that money purchase plans, defined benefit plans, RRSP's and so on are treated somewhat equally and fairly. The Minister has found in his consultations that he can improve his program by giving himself a little more time.

REVENUE ACCRUING TO GOVERNMENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the delay obviously means a revenue gain for the Government because people are not able to increase their RRSP contributions until 1990. Does the Minister have a figure for the amount the Government proposes to capture by this delay?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a figure, but I will try to get one for the Hon. Member. As a matter of fact I am not entirely sure that there is a revenue savings from this. My understanding of the system is that it is pretty well a neutral effect, but I will try to get her that answer.

PENITENTIARIES

NEWFOUNDLAND PRISON—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF SITE SELECTION COMMITTEE REPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Question Period the Solicitor General, talking about the new penitentiary which is to be located in Harbour Grace, indicated that a site selection committee had been set up for an investigation of a number of sites, under the direction of the Commissioner of Corrections. I asked that a copy of that report be made public because it was news to the House that there had been such an investigation.

My question is directed to the Deputy Government House Leader who said he would look into it. Will it be made public? Furthermore, in connection with the decision to put a penitentiary in the Prime Minister's constituency at Port Cartier, was a similar process followed? Did the Commissioner of Corrections investigate a number of sites in the Province of Quebec to select the best one, as the Solicitor General claims was done in the case of Newfoundland?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the difficulty with the question is that part of it is procedural and part of it is directed toward the Solicitor General. As I indicated yesterday, there is no requirement in the rules that reports be tabled in the House when they are referred to by a Minister in an answer. We undertook yesterday to discuss this with the Solicitor General. That undertaking is still good. I will take the matter up with him.

SELECTION OF PORT CARTIER SITE IN QUEBEC

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, for my supplementary question I will ask the part that the Minister of State characterized as political. In the case of Quebec, where the decision was made to put the penitentiary in the Prime Minister's riding, was a similar process followed? Was the Commissioner of Corrections asked to establish a committee to review a variety of sites across the Province of Quebec before selecting Port Cartier? If there was such a study, will it be made public?

• (1200)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, in the process of asking the Solicitor General the first question, I am certainly prepared to ask him the second question.

HEALTH

ENVIRONMENTAL HYPERSENSITIVITY AILMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have one question to direct to whomever is speaking for health and welfare today. I did give notice to the Minister's office so I hope for a positive response. My question concerns environmental hypersensitivity, which is a multi-system disorder usually affecting the nervous systems of persons who are sensitive to some foods and chemicals and environmental agents.

On August 3 the Human Rights Commission wrote to the Minister expressing the hope he would express publicly his sympathy for the plight of persons such as Chris Brown who suffer from this very serious ailment. What action has the Minister taken? And will the Department of National Health and Welfare undertake a public awareness campaign, as well as research, to assist in avoiding and treating this serious and little known ailment?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving notice of her question. I am informed that my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, is monitoring the situation and will report back to the Hon. Member upon his return.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will have one question from the Member for Windsor West and then the Member for Winnipeg North Centre will close Question Period.

REQUEST FOR INSPECTION OF ALL PCB STORAGE SITES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of the Environment. Yesterday another Minister acting on behalf of the Minister of the Environment talked about how the Department of the Environment maintains a register of dumping sites for PCBs in Canada. Has the Government put in place a national program to inspect immediately all sites for the storage of PCBs of which it is aware to ensure they are safe and that there is no risk of a disaster equivalent to that which took place a few days ago at Saint-Basile-le-Grand taking place at these other sites with great risk to the health and safety of large numbers of Canadians? Can he tell us if such a plan is under way right now? If not, why is such a plan not being carried out?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): First, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I have to repeat myself on this question. The prime responsibility with respect to storage and handling of PCBs is a provincial responsibility. With respect to the information as to where those sites are situated, yes, the federal Government has as registry of such sites. I am informed that with respect to Saint-Basile-le-Grand the federal Government is putting everything into place to co-operate with the provincial Government in question right now, not only to deal with this particular situation, but I am sure to ensure that future situations like this do not occur again.

STORAGE OF PCBS IN UNSECURED SITES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject. The Minister has been saying that PCBs are primarily a provincial responsibility. We have in Winnipeg an unsecured boxcar with PCBs in it and the provincial Government says it is a federal responsibility. There are also PCBs at the Ottawa International Airport.

I would like to know from the Minister how many unsecured PCB sites there are across this country that fall directly under federal responsibility, which are just sitting there waiting to explode? And why does the Government just have guidelines instead of regulations that are enforceable?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the information which has just been given to the House by my hon. colleague— for instance, he said there are PCBs at the Ottawa Airport—I also noted yesterday that the Leader of the Hon. Member's Party said there were PCBs at Dorval Airport, and PCBs are not there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The last question. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACCEPT RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question and did not tell us how many PBC storage sites there are in the country.

Mr. Speaker, the technology to eliminate PCBs exists. The Government said it was waiting for the private sector to move. Why does the Government not take its responsibilities and do something by showing leadership in putting this technology to work to protect the public against such disasters?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the site list, as I said a little earlier, it exists, and I am informed that it will be made public next week.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the technology, its development has been an initiative of the federal Government, through the National Research Council. The leadership is already there, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to eight petitions numbered as follows: 332-5222, 332-5229 and 332-5232 to 332-5237 inclusive.

ALLEGED WAR CRIMINALS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present to the House today a petition on behalf of Canadian citizens who oppose the Memorandum of Agreement signed between Canada and the U.S.S.R. dealing with gathering evidence on alleged war criminals, on the basis that the agreement pertains only to Nazi war criminals and not all war criminals, contrary to what the Government promised in its response to the report of the Deschênes Commission of inquiry.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

QUEBEC PCB FIRE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair received notice this morning of a request pursuant to Standing Order 29(1) from the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I filed with you this morning a request, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 29, that after Routine Proceedings the House be adjourned for the purpose of discussing the current PCB emergency in Quebec. You know the situation, Mr. Speaker.

. . . you followed the situation in the press and on television, showing that thousands of people have been evacuated in the Saint-Basile-le-Grand area; there is contamination not only with PCBs but also with dioxins and furans, which are a result of the fire at the depot, in that area. It is indeed an environmental bomb that has just exploded there. Also, Mr. Speaker, there are thousands of similar depots in the rest of Canada which may also become environmental bombs if immediate action is not taken.

That is why we believe that the House should urgently debate such questions as whether the Government is prepared to give assistance, and what kind of assistance. Because this may have consequences, not just in the short term. It may mean rebuilding a house. The damage is not visible, but it may last until . . . perhaps farmland will never again be usable. What is the true situation, the risks for Canadians elsewhere? Could we have an inventory with an assessment of the dangers for people in the rest of Canada? Is the federal Government aware of violations of federal regulations or directives regarding PCB storage?

We are informed that there is now a technology developed by the National Research Council, but we wonder whether this technology will be usable very soon.

[English]

I am concerned about the fact that the commercialization of this technology could take years when we have thousands of disposal sites which are a present risk and that the federal Government should be prepared to move now.

• (1210)

For these reasons I believe that we should debate this matter as a matter of urgency now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) gave me written notice of his request for an emergency debate under the provisions of Standing Order 29 earlier this morning.

I have given his request long and careful consideration, for I am well aware of the seriousness of the PCB accident at Saint-Basile-le-Grand. I was there myself yesterday and personally know many of the people affected.

However, after a detailed study of the relevant Standing Orders and precedents I regret to advise the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that his request does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders and cannot be allowed at this time.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, The Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployement Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, and certain related Acts, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, when you saw it was eleven o'clock and time for Question Period, I had finished part of my speech, pointing out that increases in indirect taxes and income tax by the Conservative Government during the past four years had resulted in additional revenues of $11 billion for 1988-89 alone. I also said that, allowing for certain adjustments made as a result of tax reform, the net increase in taxes resulted in additional revenues for the Government of almost $9 billion for 1988-89. In fact, without these massive tax increases, the Conservative Government's deficit would be between 36 and 37 billion dollars, and this after six years of economic recovery!

Mr. Speaker, the facts I just mentioned, which are supported by the Budgets brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the last four years, are a clear indication that this Government failed to act on the commitments it made to Canadians. Both the present Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised they would not increase taxes and would reduce the deficit by cutting expenditures. That is not what they did, and without the massive tax increases, the Conservative Government's deficit would be $4 or $5 billion more than it was during the last full year of the Liberal Government's administration, a Government this Conservative Party has loudly criticized.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I would like to comment on two aspects—first of all on the impact that certain tax reform provisions may have on economic growth—and I will then finish my speech on a more general note.

Mr. Speaker, this Government which claims to encourage capital formation—research, development, investment in industrial and commercial sectors that create jobs—has introduced tax reform proposals that are likely to discourage high-risk investment. The Government's goal should have been to encourage and promote investment in the higher-risk sectors of research and development, including specific technologies developed by university researchers and research centres. This is vital to the long-term health of our economy.

Instead of promoting capital formation and investment, the Minister of Finance has implemented measures that will make the task of prospective investors even more difficult and hazardous.

For instance, why will capital gains, from now on, be taxed more heavily than dividend income?

Mr. Speaker, the 1971 tax reform stemmed from the study of the Carter Commission which had produced a white paper paving the way for public consultation leading to the inclusion of a new element in the 1971 reform, the capital gains tax. Capital gains being subject to inflation it was decided to tax one half of these gains at the taxpayer's marginal rate. Well, Mr. Speaker, we all agree that worldwide conditions have evolved in recent years and countries like England and the United States changed their approach. For one thing, the British chose to tax capital gains at 100 per cent, but they came up with an indexation formula under which the tax would apply only to real gains and not to those due to inflation. I think this is a very commendable approach and, in our context, I would agree that capital gains become fully taxable if we were to devise that kind of indexation formula.

As a matter of fact our own finance committee made that suggestion to the Government when they said: If you are not prepared to proceed with full reform and tax all capital gains while implementing an indexation formula to account for inflation, you should settle for only two thirds instead of three quarters, otherwise you would be taxing capital gains at higher marginal rates than those applicable to the dividends people get from their investments.

Why did the Minister completely ignore this unanimous recommendation from the finance committee and similar views expressed by the many observers who gave evidence before the committee? I have no idea. One thing for sure, however, is that henceforth it will be a lot more iffy and less profitable to invest in high-risk ventures than to buy shares in very stable no-risk companies because dividend payments will be taxed at lower rates than riskier deals involving capital gains, particularly when such investments prove to be very worthwhile and very profitable.

Mr. Speaker, this is why I believe the whole question of capital gains taxation has to be reconsidered. For example, as I said earlier we operate under a system where a once-in-a-lifetime $100,000 capital gains tax exemption is allowed. After that, three quarters of any amount in excess of the limit will be taxed at rates higher that those applicable to dividends. This sounds totally irrational to me. I would suggest that the $100,000 exemption is nothing more than a band-aid approach and an election gimmick, not a sound tax policy under which income is taxed on the same basis—be it capital gain or dividend or interest income—which is the objective the Carter Commission was aiming at. Once again, that is why we Liberals, as I have said in the Finance Committee with the concurrence of other Members of that committe, suggest that capital gains be taxed 100 percent, but with an indexation formula which would eliminate gains due to inflation, so that real gains would be taxed at the taxpayers' marginal rate. In that case, we should also change the present dividend taxation formula to ensure that taxation rates would be the same for interest and dividend income, etc.

Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude my remarks by saying that the Conservative Government did not give us a tax reform that is fair to low and middle income Canadians. I said earlier that the net result of four years of this Conservative Government, tax reform included, is that the middle income taxpayer with two children will have to pay $1,200 more each year in taxes while the person who earning over $100,000 will pay $3,500 less. If that is what the Conservative Government and the Conservative Prime Minister call tax equity and social justice, I do not want to have anything to do with that kind of justice.

Yesterday, we were told that the Government could not afford greater tax fairness. It cannot index the child tax credit, it cannot index the disability tax credit, it cannot make tax credits refundable for low income people, because it does not have enough money. Mr. Speaker, how come the Government does not have enough money to bring more fairness to the tax system while it has plenty of money to make all kinds of pre-election promises such as those we hear about day after day.

• (1220)

I do not understand why the Government does not have money for fiscal equity, but it does have money for all sorts of promises that it is announcing day after day which will cost a lot of money.

I read an article on Tory spending in The Toronto Star on August 6, written by Carol Goar, entitled: "Tory spree hits $14 billion". When one reads the article, one realizes that in the month of June the Government announced $5 billion of new spending. If that is added to the other announcements made since that date, the total reached the amount of $14 billion. Why does the Government have money for those things, including nuclear submarines and many other types of new spending? The amazing thing is that all those announcements are for the coming year. They will not affect this fiscal year but will affect the fiscal year after the general election. The Government is announcing new spending. It states that it will not affect the deficit and will not affect the public debt, but it will be spent over the coming five, six, seven years. Somewhere, some day, some how, some taxpayers will have to foot the bill.

That is why I am suggesting that, under the Tory administration, the financial decisions made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are contrary to the speeches he was delivering before the election in 1984. Since the Tory Government has been in power the public debt has increased from $176 billion to more than $300 billion. That is over 40 per cent in four years. The Tory Government has added more debt to the public in four years than the Governments of the last generation.

Without the huge increase in taxes, the deficit under this Government would be around $36 billion or $37 billion. We recognize that the world economy has been very good over the last five or six years. This recovery started before the Tories took over power. If we consider the real numbers, taking into account the good economic conditions in the industrial world for the last five or six years, and taking into account the situation in this country, the deficit would be $36 billion or $37 billion without those huge tax increases.

What would be the situation if we had to face another economic crisis of the type that Canada had in 1980-1981 and the beginning of 1982? That crisis did not only occur in Canada. It was the same in the United States, Europe, and Japan. It was a world-wide crisis. If, in 1989-90 we have to suffer a similar crisis, and the rate of growth of the economy instead of being 2.8 per cent to 3 per cent comes down to 1 per cent, .5 per cent, or even minus 1 per cent, as we faced in the worst part of the crisis, how will we face the situation with the huge deficit that has been built by the Government during the years of prosperity?

It is a question that all taxpayers will have to study very carefully and be in a position to tell the Government, when the time comes, that the Tories have not met their promises, and that the Minister of Finance, instead of managing the deficit with a better managing of the expenditure side, has succeeded in cutting the deficit only by huge tax increases. This is contrary to the promises, and this is why the Government will be defeated when it has the courage to call a general election.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) spoke about the next election. It is clear that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) have already gone off to fight the next election, together with some 208 of their colleagues. Frankly, I regret that fact when the Opposition acts responsibly on a matter such as tax reform, and acts as we have had to, to expedite a Bill that we think is unfair, wrong, and unjust. Nonetheless we understand if this Bill is not sent through the House in the next couple of days, taxpayers, businesses, companies, and individuals will be faced with a period of prolonged uncertainty, and quite possibly not know until the beginning of 1989, whether or not the new or the old tax system applies for the tax year 1988. On your behalf, Mr. Speaker, I want to express regret that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance feel so insecure about their constituencies that they have chosen to go there at this time.

I want to talk a little about the process under which we considered tax reform in the finance committee, and I want to talk about the whole question of fairness. For the New Democrats that is the fundamental question in this whole question of tax reform. When my time expires, if Hon. Members wish to ask me some questions on that, I would be happy for them to do so.

I wish to speak first about the finance committee. It is at the leading edge of parliamentary reform. It is a strong and able committee, and members co-operate. Despite his right-wing tendencies, the Chair of the committee works, perhaps in an unusual way but in a way we tend to find sufficiently fair that we can co-operate. As a consequence, the finance committee has contributed a great deal to the process of tax reform since June 18, 1987. We have had lengthy sessions and hearings. In fact, we have done a great deal of the work of the Finance Department and of the Government for them.

What has come out of that? What I can see is that a number of areas have seen changes in the tax reform because of the work done by parliamentarians from all Parties to improve tax reform proposals of the Government, or in order to try and eliminate some of the most egregious and objectionable portions of that Bill.

For example, the whole proposal that all farmers be put under a form of accrual accounting, which was absolutely unacceptable to commercial farmers across the country, has been removed. I believe that one of the reasons was the recommendations of the finance committee. Through amendments, we have been able to improve the provisions for automobile expenses for those who are self-employed and individuals who use their automobile for business purposes. There was an element of injustice in that issue on which many people spoke to us.

The Government finally had to back down on its decision to eliminate the flow-through share mechanism as a means of encouraging economic development in areas such as northern Quebec, northern Manitoba, and northern Ontario. That was because of the efforts of communities across the country and also because of the efforts of the finance committee. Dare I say that it was also because of the efforts of the New Democrats who have always indicated that, where a tax measure has obvious benefits in terms of being productive and can also be designed in a way that is not unduly expensive, it should be gone through with and not be rejected out of hand. It was for that reason we were prepared to work with the committees to ensure the maintenance of the flow-through shares, despite the initial opposition of the Government.

Likewise, a new set of incentives has been brought forward in order to help to encourage the Canadian film industry. This is another area where the Government proposed amendments that would have been crippling to the continuation of that industry. We were able to get some movement in terms of the construction industry and small development firms. We were able to get some movement in order to roll back the decision of the Government to basically disallow many research and development expenditures for tax purposes. We were able to get a modest increase in the child exemption tax credits, but only for the third and subsequent child. Those are some areas where the committee was helpful.

It bothers me—and it is a bit like today—that when the finance committee met there was not a minister nor a parliamentary secretary there. All we had from time to time were officials. Many times we did not have them. There was basically an executive assistant, middle level political official from one of the Minister's offices keeping an eye on things and no more than that. There was no one who could negotiate or discuss with the committee and say: "Yes, I understand what you mean" or "I don't know where you guys are at" and make us clarify our concerns. As a consequence, the finance committee, whose work I believe deserved respect, was like dealing with a black hole. We put in our recommendations and hoped something would happen but in the end in many cases nothing did.

Let me give you some examples. The committee recommended that business meals taken if a person were out of town on business for more than a day should not be penalized as is the case with other business expenses. That was not acted upon. We recommended an alternative minimum margin tax on financial institutions that would have brought in $500 million a year in extra revenues and would have enabled financing of a number of constructive recommendations which the finance committee made.

The Government turned around and increased marginally the capital tax, a measure which everybody agrees is antiquated and I do not think exists in any other industrialized country in the world. The committee recommended that the Government should seriously reconsider its proposals on anti-avoidance. They are unworkable and likely will result in years of litigation. We were acting on that on the recommendations of the Canadian Bar Association and the Association of Chartered Accountants with their great expertise.

We were convinced that this Government and the previous government suffered in particular because of a lack of vigorous and aggressive enforcement coming from the Revenue Department. We saw that that needed to be fixed but the Government did not see it that way. Instead, it has embarked into what I believe is unchartered territory.

The New Democratic Party had further suggestions which were also rejected. I recall that during the great debate between the Leaders during the 1984 election campaign the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) eventually had to accept that there should be a minimum tax on people who were wealthy. How effective was that tax, Mr. Speaker? It was not effective at all. In fact, we have information that after the minimum tax is in place something like 5,000 taxpayers will continue to pay no tax at all. Some 40 or 50 of them with incomes over $250,000 a year are totally tax free and the Government sees nothing wrong with that.

The New Democratic Party proposed that there should be a minimum tax on corporations. We have suggested consistently that this was not a bad idea. After all, such a tax exists in the United States under the tax reform proposed and put through by the Reagan administration. But, did our Government act? No, Mr. Speaker. What are the consequences? Sixty thousand profitable Canadian corporations will not pay taxes every year because the Government is not prepared to impose a minimum tax. That measure alone would have brought an increase in corporation taxes in Canada of $2 billion a year.

The one regret I have with the finance committee is that we did not look at the rates. We did not look at the fundamental unfairness and the injustice of the tax system as proposed by the Conservatives. I want to put on record what the Government's own figures show it has been doing to average Canadians since taking power in 1984.

In the quarterly economic review the Government reports that in 1984 direct taxes received as revenues by the federal Government amounted to $37.5 billion. By 1987, that amount had risen to just under $56 billion, an increase of 44 per cent. At the same time the economy grew by 24 per cent. In other words, personal tax revenues have been growing under this Government twice as fast as the economy.

What about corporate taxes? There the situation is rather different. In 1984, the federal Government had $11 billion of revenues from corporations. That amount had shrunk by 1987 to $10.5 billion, a decrease of $800 million. While the economy was going up 24 per cent, while personal tax revenues were going up by close to 50 per cent, what was happening with the Conservatives' friends in corporations? They were paying less taxes. When we in the New Democratic Party suggested that there should be a minimum tax on corporations, what did the Government say? It said that it would be unworkable, wrong, would stifle initiative, would decrease investment and would put the economy out on its ear. I have not noticed that happening in the United States where the Americans have had a minimum tax on corporations for many years. This Government rejected the minimum margin tax on banks and financial institutions. It rejected a minimum tax on corporations. It rejected fair taxation on corporations. The consequence is that average Canadians are having to make up the difference.

What do I mean? When the Conservatives took power they told us that they were going to clean up the fiscal house of the Government of Canada, that something needed to be done, and that deficits of $28 billion or $29 billion were too high. But, what is the anticipated deficit for 1988-89? It is $28 billion or $29 billion. It has not changed at all. The Government's spending has gone up. Taxation has gone up, up and up, but the Government has turned around and given favours to the corporations. It has given out the huge capital gains exemption to personal taxpayers who are very wealthy, and it has failed to put the fiscal house in order.

If the Government were to be consistent with its principles put forward in 1984, a fair tax system was needed that took from companies, that took from wealthy people, and then if the Government felt there was a priority, that took from ordinary people as well in order to ensure that its goal of bringing the deficit under more reasonable control would be achieved.

But the Finance Minister is a hypocrite. Three years ago he had principles. Now he has shown that his principles are for sale if the Conservative Party wants to get back in power. Over the course of the last few months we have seen a contract for new tanks, a contract for nuclear submarines worth $12 or $14 billion, in fact all kinds of new contracts in the military area.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hate to interrupt the debate but I just heard the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) call the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a hypocrite. My understanding of the rules in this House is that to call someone that is totally unacceptable. I respectfully request that he withdraw immediately.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I noticed you did not rule on that but if the Hon. Member for Ottawa Carleton (Mr. Turner) would prefer, I will say that the Hon. Minister of Finance said one thing when he came to office and he is certainly acting in a different way now. If anyone cares to check the dictionary he or she will find that that description is like the word that I have been asked to withdraw from the record.

I remind Members, as well, that in 1984 the Finance Minister said in this House of Commons:

> "—interest rates must be as low as can reasonably be attained . . . Monetary policy must ease the burden on monetary policy and contribute directly to increased confidence and to lower interest rates".

Now the Government has told the banks that they can raise their interest rates. The prime interest rate has gone up by 1.5 per cent in the course of the last seven or eight months, and the banks have served notice that they will continue to increase rates. The Government, when we challenge it, says that it endorses the policy of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, that of a high interest rate policy and a tight monetary policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadian men and women were expecting fairness from the tax reform. They were expecting a fair tax system, a system where low-income earners would be paying according to their ability to pay, and the high-income earners, the affluent, corporations would also pay according to their ability to pay. Is this what we are achieving with this tax reform? The answer is no. In effect, the Government mainly is granting concessions to the very rich. They give an average $4,165 yearly tax reduction to people with yearly income of $100,000 and over.

But the small taxpayer earning $15,000 a year only gets a $140 yearly tax reduction. The number of taxpayers has been reduced by some 850,000. But that same Government has added one million taxpayers over these last four years!

Mr. Speaker, I would remind you that since 1984, Conservatives raised the cost of oil and gas. They raised the Unemployment Insurance premium. They increased the sales tax in November 1984. They raised the sales tax in 1985. They pushed the sales tax up in June 1985. They increased the tax on the sales tax in February 1987. They changed the tax categories in June 1987. They increased the oil tax by one cent a litre in February, 1988.

They have come up with increases, increases and increases to the point where the average family, people with two children and $35,000 yearly income, experienced a tax increase of $1,300 a year, and this tax reform now gives them back $300. On the average, the average family with a $35,000 yearly income pays $1,000 more taxes in 1988 than in 1984. Such is the tax reform! Who profits from it? The rich, corporations, people with capital gains. This is not introducing fairness into the tax system, the kind of fairness we were expecting.

Mr. Speaker, I have noted on a number of occasions that the Government now gives a child tax credit of only $65 per child, a tax reduction to people with dependent children in the order of $65 per child, as compared to people without children.

Mr. Speaker, at the same time, a tax deduction of up to $7,000 or $8,000 a year is made available to those who have RRSPs. There is a lack of social justice when someone with a child gets a $65 tax credit while someone else with no children can contribute to an RRSP and get a tax break of up to $1,000 or $1,500 because he can deduct his contributions to a maximum of $7,500 a year.

That is the kind of social justice which the Conservative Government stands for. We believe that the tax system should ensure that government revenues are levied not only efficiently, but equitably. Mr. Speaker, the market leads to unequal and unjust situations, and one of the functions of the tax system is to balance things out.

Mr. Speaker, that is the reason why we have been relentlessly asking the Government to put in place a tax system which is fairer than the one we now have.

[English]

We believe, for example, that the tax burden on small businesses should be less than that on large businesses. Yet, we notice that the average tax burden borne by small businesses in Canada is just about equal to that borne by Conrad Black and his enterprises and by all other major companies. In fact, major companies continue to benefit after tax reform, from billions and billions and billions of dollars of what are known as tax expenditures. That means that they never have to pay tax, because they do not have to declare that their profits are taxable at all. That should change, and that is a failure of the test of fairness.

We wanted a tax system that would be simple, but tax reform is this huge Bill. It is about that thick. It will take legions of tax lawyers years to master what is in the Bill that we have been dealing with in committee over the course of the last few weeks. That is not fair. We should have a tax return which is no more than six or eight pages long that the average Canadian can fill out. When these people in the gallery make up their tax returns next year, they are going to have to contend with a tax return which is 80 or 100 pages long, and that is not fair.

We had thought that every kind of income should be dealt with on an equitable basis. I see that my time is just about up, but I know that my hon. friend from Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) has one or two questions which would allow me to talk about the injustices that would occur among individual families, depending on their levels of income.

I want to conclude by saying that I regret that, when the Conservatives had the chance to bring in real fairness in the tax system, they failed to do so. Yes, they gave us tax credits, but then they turned around and gave the money back to the people who benefited from the tax credits rather than giving it to people on modest and low incomes. They had an option, they had a choice. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance could have ensured that average Canadians were dealt with fairly in the tax system, instead of being too much imbued with the idea that they should remain faithful to their supporters in business, their supporters among wealthy Canadians. They forgot the need for fairness among average Canadians.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, indeed I have a question. In fact, I wish I had time for a lot of questions to the Hon. Member who has worked so hard in this whole area of finance and tax policy. I would like to congratulate him for the work that he has done, not only in speaking out so strongly with the use of such eloquent words but also in his alternative proposals which are outlined in our New Democratic report on tax reforms.

I would like to ask him, since social policy is indeed my special interest, for his views on the relationship between the tax system and social policy, if the Member heard that question.

Mr. Cassidy: I certainly did.

Ms. Mitchell: Also, how might tax reform be used more effectively to achieve goals of social policy, not that this Government has really defined what those goals are? I would like him to comment on that and, in particular, on the whole question of fairness for families, for older people, and for children. I think we would both agree that these people have not really been a priority in the Government's planning.

Mr. Cassidy: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) for her question. I want to point out to her, to the Government, and to the Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) who seems to be the one member of the Government taking some interest in this matter that the tax system as it is proposed is not fair.

I will give some examples. There is a partial deindexing on average Canadians, and that means that year after year the tax rates people will pay on increases in incomes are going to go up. The brackets are partially deindexed, the rates are partially deindexed, the tax credits are deindexed, so that every year the value of the child exemption and the child tax credit will go down by 3 per cent. That means that the Government has proposed to impose a permanent continuing tax increase that will of course be of most harm to average Canadians. We believe that the personal tax system shall be fully indexed to inflation for average families. That is surely an expression of social policy.

The Government believes that average families should pay more taxes every year than previous years. We do not think that wealthy Canadians should get tax breaks while ordinary Canadians pay an awful lot. We have cited the fact that a teller in the Royal Bank who may be raising one or two kids on her own has, in many of the last five years, paid higher tax than the Royal Bank itself. It is the same case for many other institutions.

We have argued that the child exemption tax credit should be substantially increased, that the tax system should take account of the costs for families of raising kids, and that of course is also excluded from the Government's tax measures. It gives more precedence to people investing in RRSPs than it does to people investing in the future of Canada by raising children.

We have said that there should be every effort to ensure that families living below the poverty line should not have to pay tax. The Government is going to tax people up to $5,000 below the poverty line.

The final point is that we had to move heaven and earth to get this Government off the idea that it was going to tax the food which poor families have to buy every week in order to keep body and soul together. That is what it wanted to do, and it was not until the people of this country, led by my Party and by other Members of Parliament, spoke up and said that that will not wash that the Government finally took that away. However, its idea of tax fairness was to tax food as part of its new sales tax proposals.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, while we are on the subject of tax credits, I wonder if members of the NDP would not agree that included in this legislation should be a move to block the NDP tax scam whereby municipal candidates in places like the City of Toronto, candidates who have no business doing so, are getting federal tax credits funnelled by the federal NDP. Does he not feel that this NDP tax scam should be blocked and that this particular legislation would be a good place to do that?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear that from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I am accustomed to hearing it from the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

I did some research and found out that one of the candidates for alderman who ran in the last municipal election in Ottawa put down on his records that most of his campaign funds came from one of the local Conservative riding associations. That is certainly indicative of where the Conservatives are that they would have done that.

This is a measure we should look at, but I think we should also look at the fact that the Conservatives and the Liberals alike have gone on year after year accepting corporate tax donations and trying to maintain that they stand for the little guy, while in fact they are beholden to the large corporate taxpayers. The only difference between the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party is that the Liberal Party has been less effective in getting those donations and that is why it is now $5 million in debt coming into the forthcoming election campaign.

That, too, is a tax scam which I believe should come to an end. I believe that corporations should not be entitled to get that kind of reduction. They should not be giving to maintain the two old Parties in power, and on this front, the Liberals are just like the Conservatives except that they talk like New Democrats when they are in opposition.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, along the line of the Hon. Member's suggestion for refusing corporate donations, I am sure he would agree that he should refuse union contributions. My brother, for example, is forced by way of union deductions to donate to the NDP. Of course the Hon. Member would agree that that is wrong and would want to see all union dues free to go to the Party of the individual's choice as opposed to the Party of the choice of the management of the union.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I think we are straying a bit from the third reading of tax reform. I agree, however, that legislation that would stop corporate contributions should also stop contributions from other organizations including trade unions. My leader has indicated that as well.

I want to assure the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, however, that a union like the steelworkers' union which is a responsible union in the Hon. Member's area and which does support the New Democratic Party is conscious of the fact—

Ms. Copps: Unsuccessfully, I might add.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) would indicate that it is very successful. It is very conscious of the fact that some of its members may not wish to contribute and does not make a political contribution on behalf of those members who choose to be excepted. This leaves an area of doubt as well.

I want to return to something else we think is unfair. The Conservatives continue to allow an exemption of $100,000 for capital gains income. They are taxing capital gains at only three-quarters rather than at the full rate beyond that front, and that is wrong. Just as I said, the Liberals and the Conservatives are very much alike. Who was it just yesterday who proposed in this House that the proposed rate of tax on capital gains be reduced? It was members of the Liberal Party trying to benefit their friends who get capital gains by reducing the rate of inclusion of capital gains and by cutting the tax on capital gains to two-thirds of regular rates from the three-quarters proposed by the Conservatives.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the question of taxes as they affect families. Perhaps the Hon. Member could briefly summarize, for those of us who have studied this some months ago and are perhaps a little fuzzy on it, what the Government has done in removing tax exemptions for spouses and for children. It sounds as if this is a progressive measure, but as I understand it, only about 50 per cent of the value of that family allowance is given back through credits to compensate for this. In effect, it has really taken away much more from families.

I am talking about all families now. It is taking away from a whole generation of Canadian children, regardless of income. This has not been replaced by other measures.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Québec-Est)): I would ask the Hon. Member from Ottawa—Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to be very brief, because his time is almost up.

[English]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that when two people have a child, their expenses go up sharply and their income goes down significantly because of the need for child care. Often one of them wishes to spend time with the child as well. Yet the credit for the first and second child is $65 a year under the Government's provision, just equal to the tax that will be payable on the family allowance. The family allowance will be deindexed and then the Government has another refundable child tax credit but only for people earning less than $25,500 per annum. The consequence is that a family with an income of $30,000 or $40,000 a year will bear substantial costs. They are carrying out a societal responsibility as well as something which is their personal privilege and pleasure in raising kids, but the tax system will hardly recognize those extra costs for those people. That, I believe, is bad social policy. Middle income families with children have virtually no distinction in the tax system from middle income families without children in the recognition of the cost they bear in carrying out the vital function in society that is raising children.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief intervention on tax reform and the environment. I must begin by observing that the Government has been very regressive in its approach to taxation. It has raised federal sales taxes and extended their application into the environment as well.

In his 1985 Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) removed tax exemption status from insulation materials, heat pumps, solar heater panels, furnaces, wood burning stoves, wind deflectors and generators, and windmills. As a matter of fact, since 1984, the Minister of Finance has consistently ignored the environment while at the same time the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) continues to spin his rhetoric about the integration of the economy and the environment.

If the Government is serious about the economy and the environment, and if it is serious about its endorsement of environmentally sustainable development, as the Minister said a year ago, then it missed a golden opportunity in Bill C-139, and I will explain this. There is in this reform package nothing for industry, for manufacturers, for farmers, or for developers of natural resources that would encourage, accelerate, or even facilitate initiatives aimed at protecting the environment, saving energy and using it more efficiently, reducing pollution or even allowing Canada to become a leader in the production of pollution control equipment, moving us from the present exploitative economy to a sustainable economy, the sustainable economy that we are all seeking at home and abroad. Therefore it is unfortunate that this Bill does not contain any of the following measures which would represent perhaps a modest beginning on the road toward ecological tax reform.

Let me elaborate for a moment. Take the recycling industry, be it oil, metals, paper, or anything else. Anyone in the business should be given at least the same if not better treatment than the virgin material producers who at the present receive a more favourable tax rate. A case in point is the Canadian Association of Re-refiners who recycle oil. Because of the temporary low world oil price situation it is hard to recycle oil at competitive prices. The role of the re-refiners is extremely important from an environmental as well as the energy perspective. Yet their pleas have fallen on deaf ears and there is nothing to be found in this Bill that recognizes the role of those who are in the recycling industry, including the re-refiners.

Let me draw to your attention another area, that of habitat retention. You would hope to find in a tax reform Bill some creative ideas about co-operation with the provinces so as to reform the present system of land taxation so that land taken out of production is no longer taxed or at least taxed at a lower rate. Senator Sparrow in his 1984 report entitled Soils at Risk made a similar point in his recommendations.

A measure such as that recommended, which I echo today, would be good for the ecology in a number of ways. First, it would help to rehabilitate top soil and help retain and where possible even consolidate or expand the amount of land available for wildlife habitat and wetlands preservation. This kind of reform is badly needed in order to move in that direction. Not a day goes by without a request arriving in this House concerning the desirability of preserving a piece of wetlands in areas for wildlife habitat and the like.

I would also like to bring to your attention the importance of accelerated depreciation from an ecological point of view in any tax reform Bill. Here we must stress that the definition of pollution control equipment has been left far too restrictive and in some cases is even counterproductive. For example, if you have improvements made in a plant or changes made in an industrial process, those improvements and changes are not given any sort of tax break. Take a paper mill, for example, where changing a process from chlorine to oxygen bleaching, which means you are then able to reduce the release of dioxins into the environment, does not qualify under our present system for any tax break. All we are asking for is tax considerations equal to those given to add-on equipment.

As to the period over which the depreciation should apply, again if the Government is really serious about environmentally sustainable development, then the tax write-off should be 100 per cent over one year.

Let us look briefly at the federal sales tax. Here again the definition of pollution control equipment is far too restrictive. It must be rewritten. It is badly in need of liberal treatment. In the case of the investment tax credit, another important area which needs to be reformed and urgently so, the concept should apply to investments in pollution control or pollution prevention. We need, in other words, attractive incentives for investment in this critical area.

This brings me to the final point, namely that related to flow-through shares. As you know, the Minister of Finance recognized the value of flow-through shares for the mining industry. Why did he not broaden this incentive through the tax reform Bill to encourage development of a domestic pollution control industry? The long-term idea would be to finance the transition from the present exploitative economy to an ecologically sustainable economy by providing industry with the cash flow it needs to make the transition. It seems to me that ecological tax reform would facilitate the launching of the process towards environmentally sustainable economic growth; a marriage, if you like, of the economy with the environment.

Ecological tax reform, I submit, is now a must if we really want to start on the road as defined a year ago, in April of 1987, by the World Commission on the Environment and Development, better known as the Brundtland Commission, and in the fall of last year by the National Task Force on the Environment and the Economy. It was in its report that the Task Force dealt with informed decision-making, with leadership, with round tables, with conservation strategies, with international responsibilities, with communications and education, and the follow-up. I submit to you it is time to begin to practise the ideas contained in that report.

Reform of the tax system from an ecological point of view is what we urge the Government to do if it is really committed to sustainable development and to ensuring that the environment and the economy are no longer treated as they are now, to our own peril, as separate entities.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to make a few further comments and repeat some of the things I said last night with respect to fairness and unfairness in the tax system, and the major need for reforms which will benefit families.

First, I believe very strongly, as does my Party, that you cannot have fiscal or economic policies in isolation from social policies. Ultimately, the beneficiaries of any of these measures must be the people of Canada. People are our resource and tax measures are the means by which we try to equalize income. We should be trying to equalize incomes more fairly and provide a floor of social programs such as the family allowance program and the old age pension which provide security and health for all our citizens. That is what we are so proud of in Canada. I believe Canadians, regardless of their politics, regard this as a very basic and essential rate that must not be tampered with by tax reform or the trade policy that the Government is trying to implement.

Family benefits through the tax system and other social programs like the family allowance are the means by which we recognize not only the important contribution parents make to raising children, but the need and obligation as a society toward children. These benefits are not simply charity to families who happen to have kids. Single people and couples without children who are taxed as single people are not simply giving charity to people who happen to have kids. All of us have an obligation toward the next generation of Canadians. We are all responsible for contributing to the cost of raising the next generation of Canadians. It is the responsibility of all of us to contribute to child care and to other benefits which go to families.

The same is true for senior citizens and the cost of old age pensions. All taxpayers in Canada should recognize that they are only reaping rewards for themselves because it is the children who are being reared now with the kind of care that is needed who will pay for their old age pensions and care when they reach retirement age. The family benefit system is a mutual give and take that we as a society believe in.

We believe tax policy should be a mechanism for pursuing social objectives. While the Conservatives would have liked to remove family allowance altogether, public opinion would not allow them to do so. Instead, the Conservatives partially deindexed the family allowance so that its value decreases every year.

Members will recall that the family allowance was introduced in tough times, primarily to compensate for the cost of rearing children. It was hoped that the family allowance would increase over the years, at least in an indexed fashion, in order to keep up with the cost of rearing children. Those parents who are fortunate enough to have higher incomes would, in turn, pay some of that back through the tax system. The family allowance is a very important concept of which I believe Canadians are proud. It shows that we put children high on our priorities, as we should.

As I said, the Conservatives wanted to do away with family allowance but because of public opinion they were forced to deindex there—

Mr. Oberle: What nonsense!

Ms. Mitchell: —which is a very sneaky way of taking money away from children and mothers in particular, since the cheque goes to mothers. In many cases, that is the only cheque that mothers get in higher income families.

Since various governments, including the Liberal government, allowed the family allowance to be reduced over the years, this necessitated the introduction of the child tax credit, which, during the Liberal regime, was targeted toward low and average income families. It reached marginal families and families above the poverty level.

The child tax credit was first deindexed by the Liberals, thereby reducing its value. Of course, the Conservatives would never consider reindexing the child tax credit.

As a result of reducing the income level for eligibility for the child tax credit, the Conservatives have created two classes of poor in Canada. There are the poor who do not have enough income for their children to be raised to meet their needs adequately, and there are the very poor, on very low incomes, who are the only people now eligible for the child tax credit under the Conservative regime. The income level for those eligible for the child tax credit will go down every year because it is not indexed as it should be.

While the Conservative Government talks about families and children, when it comes to doing something tangible they would rather put billions of dollars into nuclear subs than maintain an indexed child tax credit for poor kids. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) never once responded to the concern we have raised day after day in the House that one in five children in Canada are poor. That is disgusting. It is deplorable and disgraceful.

An Hon. Member: Kids want their parents to have jobs.

Ms. Mitchell: The Conservatives are complacent about jobs. The unemployment rate in Vancouver East is still very high. Many people are unemployed, particularly single mothers and young mothers and fathers who are unable to get into the job market. Those Members should not be so smug and patronizing.

Considering the lip service the Government has paid to lower income families, one would have thought the Government would have fulfilled its commitment. The House will recall how the Government talked about those in greatest need. It has barely maintained the same kind of income level for those people through family benefits. It has not introduced any kind of reforms that are needed in a society where there is a fair taxation of higher income people and corporations in order to pay for social programs that benefit everyone. Of course, the Conservatives have feared to tread on the toes of their friends, the corporations and financial institutions. They will not adequately reform tax policies to tax adequately those institutions so that more money would come into government coffers to provide those things that are the right of families, particularly the young generation.

The Government has not introduced reforms to tax higher incomes adequately. I believe my colleague stated there are at least 40 to 50 families earning over $200,000 who pay no tax at all. What kind of tax reform is that? There is no measure that requires corporations to pay fair taxes.

The Government has retained the $100,000 exemption on capital gains tax which allows quick flips by real estate speculators and millionaire investors. We want to see that exemption retained for farmers and family farms, but there is no need for losing that tax money from capital gains as it is applied to others. The Government has had a very ineffectual minimum tax. There has been no minimum tax on corporations and financial institutions. My colleague also said that this means the loss of $2 billion to the Treasury. We need that $2 billion to improve family allowances and child tax credits and to ensure that families and parents raising children have a fair deal. I include middle-income families as well because they are the ones who carry the burden of our social programs under this Government. Of course, the poorest families are the victims.

What this country really needs, of course, is a new Government, one which will have a clear statement of social policy, which will define the social rights of Canadians, and which will allow Canadians to have incomes above the poverty line. Canadians should have the right to affordable housing no matter where they live. They have the right to education and employment opportunities for young people and a universal health care program which would not be allowed to erode.

We need to be sure to retain the security of older people from hunger, worry and insecurity in their old age. Of course, it is only because grey power was so strong and because they have such voting power that they were able to rebuke this Government and insist that old age pensions be fully reindexed. I think it is shameful that the Government did not do the same thing for children. I know that many of those grandparents very much wanted the same kind of reindexation for the child tax credit.

The financial and tax policies of the Government must be used to fulfil these kinds of objectives. Seniors should not have to fight to retain indexed pensions. This should be a constitutional right. Children should have fully reindexed family benefits. Poor Canadians should not be used as political tokens in the way this Government tends to use them. They should have the right to a decent life with a decent income. I am tired of the kind of patronizing attitudes and comments of this Government and those Members sitting opposite. They say they are going to look after the needy, and the needy are families with two children who are perhaps earning $10,000, or $12,000 a year when the poverty line in Canada is well over $20,000. The Government refuses to respond to those needs.

The Government says, sure, it has taken away a few things with one hand but it has given marvellous tax credits with the other and everyone is much better off. That is not true at all. I would like to give a few examples of the impact of Conservative budgets and tax reform from 1984 to 1988, and we must look at these in a cumulative way. Members present remember back in November of 1984 when there were increases in oil and gas prices, unemployment insurance premiums and sales tax, which totalled $352 extra in taxes on families. In 1985, there was the elimination of the federal tax reduction, a modification to indexing on taxes, a cut in the family allowance payments, increased taxes on cigarette and alcohol, sales taxes were broadened and gas taxes were increased. Members will remember that at that time the Conservatives added $512.50 on average to taxes on families. That was in 1985. In 1984, tax increases totalled $352, and in 1985 they totalled $512.

In June of 1985, the Government increased gasoline tax to pay for reindexing the family allowance, to correct something it should not have done in the first place. That additional gas tax cost families and others $50. On February 26, 1986, the Budget of the Minister of Finance put a 3 per cent surtax on families. There was a sales tax increase on cigarettes and alcohol. There was another $340 added in 1986. The Government could not stop. In 1987 it broadened the sales tax base on cigarettes and airline tickets, and that added another $80. Take note, Mr. Speaker, we are getting close to an election so some of these things are going down a little bit, but the cumulative effect is there because those other taxes are still being paid by families. In 1987, the Government changed tax categories, another subtle way of affecting families. This may have helped some families a bit so we can reduce the amount by $310. But that does not nearly cover the previous taxes.

In 1988, tax on gasoline increased, which added another $500. Take a guess, my friends. What do you think was the cumulative increase on taxes as a result of this rotten Conservative regime? The Conservatives talk about tax reform and that families and children are important. But for an average family with an income of $35,000, which is not a high income, a family with two children, and children cost a lot to raise these days, especially if they are teenagers, the total increase in taxes was $1,074.50. What kind of positive tax measure is that? Why is the Government picking on families?

The tax reform really gave many more benefits, as I understand it, to adults who are paying taxes as single people, childless couples or single people, than it did to parents who are raising children. Those same parents are paying this kind of additional tax, and there is, of course, this hidden sales tax that will be imposed. I certainly hope the citizens of Canada begin to understand that this is another very sneaky and despicable way of giving people some tax benefits prior to an election and then whacking them with a very subtle form of taxation to increase the price of goods after the election. I hope Canadians are aware that this is the kind of trick the Conservative Government is playing and will not vote for that Party in the next election.

In closing, I would like to say that we believe very strongly that we must have a real reform of tax policy so that it is fair to all Canadians. We must be fair to families with children. We must maintain the present floor of social programs, and we should tax back more fairly from those who have all the resources and income and benefits of this rich country of ours in order to give more to the those who do not have the same kind of benefits in a fair way and as a social right.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I was tempted to comment on the need for an election now, since a number of Hon. Members have rediscovered the House of Commons temporarily, and suggest we all leave here today, go to the front door, catch the green bus, go to our offices, get our material, go to the airport or to our ridings if they are close, and start the election campaign even if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is not ready. Given the fact that you, Mr. Speaker, stand so close to the Governor General, I would have thought you could give us the sanction to do that. We do not need the Prime Minister. He is dithering his way away from a fall election.

Mr. Dick: Why do you not call it time now and go home as you suggested? Call it three o'clock.

Mr. Cassidy: We do need a date. If you, Mr. Speaker, would like to meet with me behind the curtain, I could suggest a couple of dates to you. However, I will not make that suggestion. I simply want to ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) to comment on whether or not the $200 credit which is to be given to children under seven years of age in the tax Bill is an adequate substitute for a national program of day care which will meet the needs of Canadian families with young children.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad my colleague brought me back to the realities of the child care program that was proposed by this Government. We will be working on this in committee next week while everyone else is going to go home to get ready for the election. I think there is no question at all. As I have said many times in this House, the $200 tax credit for homemakers who are looking after children full time, whether be it a father, a mother or people who use informal baby-sitting arrangements where they do not have tax receipts, is not in any way recognizing either the costs or the contribution of that parenting time. It is an insult, as I have said over and over again. It would have been better to reindex the family allowance and improve the child tax credit. Incidentally, this new child care credit just goes to low-income families. Let us not misunderstand it. It only goes to the poorest of the poor, that category to which the Government seems to limit giving benefits.

The rhetoric that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has used is that it gives families a choice. That is absolute rot. It does not give any kind of choice. A mother or father who is in the workforce who has a young child cannot afford to stay at home if they only have $200. Most of them are working because they have to work.

The Government has not brought in any parental leave policy either which would allow parents to have at least the first six months at home with the baby. That is something which is important to starting a life in the right way for a child. Parents should have the choice in that area.

As far as providing child care services is concerned, of course the Government does not want to do that. The amount of money that it has put into the child care side of things for day care spaces will result in less growth than if it leaves the situation as it is under the Canada Assistance Plan. Furthermore, it caps it off at the end of seven years. Thus at the end of seven years we can forget it, there will not be any more spaces.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

• (1340)

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the third reading debate on tax reform and, at the outset, give some background to the issue since this debate is coming to an end.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had stated in 1984, that a tax reform was unnecessary, adding that he had a few changes to introduce which, indeed, he gradually initiated as the opportunity came about.

Of course, one has to remember his first budget where he extended to everybody a $100,000 capital gain deduction not only on Canadian ownership, not only as an incentive to develop the Canadian economy and create new jobs, but to anyone owning for instance a property in Florida, which could be sold in order to buy a new one or make new investments in another country, and yet the owner would have qualified for this deduction.

At last, Mr. Speaker, the Government realized it had made a mistake. The Opposition had repeatedly declared that such a move would not produce the economic benefits the country needed, it would not have generated the new jobs Canadians were expecting in order to earn their living. Finally, the Government used tax reform as a pretext to save face and reconsider this unrealistic and unbelievable measure. Therefore, under that tax reform they propose a lifetime, $100,000 deduction, while raising the taxable portion of capital gains from 50 per cent to two thirds in 1988, and to 75 per cent in 1990. We can therefore state that those $100,000 become zero. This is a complete about-face from this Government, which put its whole economic strategy behind that $500,000 deduction, stating it wanted to give a signal, a clear and specific direction to all Canadians that, let us say, under a Conservative Government such was the economic approach—there should be incentives for people to invest. But now, less than two years later, Mr. Speaker, they changed the whole picture, they made not a 90- but a 360-degree turn.

Of course the Minister provided somewhat the reason why initially he stated that we needed no tax reform, and then announced one later—it is because our neighbours down South decided to have a tax reform.

Mr. Speaker, they decided in the United States to have a tax reform. They achieved this because they agreed on the principles; they set up parameters, and then they said: Let the officials implement them. Here, we are having a tax reform, and after each clause, each proposed change, there always is a cost analysis—how much that costs, should we repeal such or such a provision, or should we introduce another. So, they completely lost sight of the major goal, which was to have a kind of tax reform that would remedy every inequity in the tax system. We can give clear examples of this, Mr. Speaker, almost everywhere in the legislation.

But I would like to refer especially to the self-employed. There is in Canada an increasing number of self-employed. But now, the tax reform proposed by this Tory Minister of Finance is attacking that whole group of workers who, having lost their jobs, went into business as self-employed. The first thing he does, the Minister says: We arbitrarily repeal 20 per cent of automobile expenses, 20 per cent of entertainment expenses. And then he says: We are going to propose a free trade agreement with the United States, because you owe it to yourselves to become more competitive in order to sell Canadian goods on the American market.

Let us take the case of a company that must sell its products in the United States and that must be competitive. But the Government says to its salesmen: From now on, you can only deduct from your income tax return 80 per cent of your actual automobile expenses, 80 per cent of your travel and entertainment expenses. It is unacceptable to urge people to be more dynamic in their sales efforts, while reducing the tools they need to do so.

What about small businesses, Mr. Speaker, which, from what we hear from the Ministers, have been well represented and supported by this Governement? Every time they speak in this House or make a speech in some part of the country, they say that small businesses create 80 per cent of the jobs. That is right. This sector creates 80 per cent of all jobs; in fact, almost 99 per cent of all new jobs are created by these dynamic small and medium-sized businesses. And now, the only tax rate which is changed in this tax reform is the tax rate for the small manufacturing businesses. How can you have such a dynamic sector in our economy, one which creates so many jobs, and use the tax reform to increase its tax rate from 10 per cent to 12 per cent, instead of encouraging it?

That is another fine example of a turn-around from the Minister of Finance. A year ago, he presented tax proposals for Canadian corporations in which, just like the Government had done for several decades, he offered a reduced tax rate for all manufacturing companies, large and small. Now, in this tax reform, he keeps the reduced tax rate for the large corporations, but increases the tax rate for the small firms. It is incredible, Mr. Speaker, how a Government, in four years, can change its economic policies, right and left, completely changing its mind!

Moreoever, the Governement is proud to have proposed, in this tax reform, a capital gains exemption of $500,000 for the incorporated small companies. But what about all the registered companies? Even the incorporated companies, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you will understand, being yourself a lawyer. You know very well that, for small businesses, sales of shares are few and far between. Most of the time, they sell assets. Therefore, if the tax reform proposal to give a $500,000 life exemption does not apply, the whole idea is a sham and does nothing to lighten the tax burden of small businesses.

They say they are reducing the capital cost allowance. But that reduction applies not only to big businesses, but also to small ones whose tax rate automatically goes up because of this. What a way to help small business! When one considers that more than 90% of Canadian businesses are small businesses, that the 20% reduction in car, entertainment and travelling expenses will also apply to them, one concludes that tax reform does not promote but hinders economic development in Canada.

Another injustice in the tax reform is the acceleration of tax deduction remittances. From the outset, this Government has tried to convince Canadians that it could reduce and was gradually reducing the deficit. An analysis of this Government's accounting principles in its four budgets and in its tax reform reveals that there has been no real deficit reduction. The Government has done nothing but twist the accounting rules and, each year, on March 31st, try to make us believe that it has reduced the deficit by one or two billion dollars.

In 1986, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance introduced the accelerated remittance of source deduction system. Instead of sending the monthly remittance before the 15th of the following month, businessmen must now send in these remittances twice a month or every two weeks. This announcement was made one month before the end of the fiscal year ending March the 31, so that this new accelerated remittance of source deduction rule would bring in $2 billion every fortnight. Now the Minister of Finance uses this trick to convince all Canadians that he had reduced the deficit by as much as $2 billion when in fact he had not reduce it by a single penny because these $2 billion which he received 15 days in advance, he would have received 15 days later as he had done every year.

The following year, he introduced the accelerated remittance of the sales tax. Now, all businesses, big and small, must remit their accelerated sales tax on the 21st day of each month, even if it means making the necessary re-adjustment the following month if the amount is not correct, since the whole system operates on an evaluation basis. This means another billion dollar. Beside imposing on small businesses an enormous amount of additional paperwork, he tried to convince Canadians that he had reduced the deficit by as much as $1 billion. What has really caused the tax reform to go bust? Well, he has now changed even the quarterly remittances. The very word "quarterly" means that they must be done every three months. These remittances should be made at the end of every three month period. Now this Tory Governement has ruled that these quarters will no longer end on the 30th or 31st day of the third months, but on the 15th day of that month.

From now on, Canadian taxpayers, self-employed workers, senior citizens and lower income people who are not working but living on small investment income or interests will be required to remit their dues every three months on the 15th. Mr. Speaker, I cannot find the words: It is no longer a quarter because the three months are not completely over. Perhaps the Minister of Finance will eventually come up with the proper name but because of this tax reform, our senior citizens who are now visiting in large number my hon. friends in their riding offices are already having a lot of trouble trying to balance the figures for their quarterly remittance, because the money was sent two or three days too late or reached the department one week later because of our poor postal service. They come and show us their documents with penalties of $1.09 or $1.05 and ask us what they are all about.

Mr. Speaker, we are now going to make life even more difficult for people living on fixed income with only the Canada Pension Plan and the Old Age Pension, plus a few thousand dollars of interest income from their hard-earned savings, by telling them: We know that you are used to make your remittance on March 31, July 30, September 30 and December 30, but from now on, you will have to make the remittance 15 days earlier, that is on the fifteenth of the month. Mr. Speaker, that is why we have this whole complex paper work instead of simply reducing . . .

Mr. Speaker, when we looked at this clause, this new proposal by the Conservative Governement at the finance committee, even Conservative Members told us: This is nonsense! Why make life more difficult for our people, our senior citizens just for that! Why the change? Why not leave the quarterly remittance as it now stands and as people know it, that is at the end of the month?

When I suggested to the finance committee that this new clause should be withdrawn, even the Conservative Members agreed with me and it was withdrawn. Mr. Speaker, when the Minister's officials became aware of what was going on, they surely got mad and at supper time they visited one by one the Conservative Members of the committee and persuaded them that it was not good for the Governement, that there would be a loss of $20 million because of this. So that the Minister of Finance would not have been able to boast next year, assuming he is elected, of having lowered once more the deficit by $1 billion. So they reconsidered the clause, they voted again on it, they reintroduced it here and yesterday evening they did not have the courage to rise and to withdraw it. That is fiscal reform for you! From a fiscal reform that was supposed to be fair and equitable across the board, we now find ourselves in this slump of red tape so much so that nobody understands anything anymore.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the debate ends today and we have to accept a tax reform which does not make sense, one which complicates things instead of solving problems.

There is another point I want to raise. The Government had promised a comprehensive tax reform, one that would not deal with income tax alone. In his budget presentations however, the Minister has always acknowledged that it was not this aspect but rather the federal sales tax which was causing the most problems and that consequently, a complete overhaul of the sales tax was necessary. Where is this comprehensive reform of the sales tax?

When he introduced his tax reform, the Minister of Finance told us that it would be done in two stages: first, income tax reform, and that is what we have seen so far; and second, the following year, federal sales tax reform. In terms of the federal tax, where do we stand now? The Minister is talking about a multi-stage sales tax, about a national sales tax and about a value-added tax. Whatever form it takes, we will still have taxes and more taxes and the Governement will still be gouging the taxpayer.

Can you imagine that the Minister of Finance has even comtemplated a sales tax on food? The Opposition Liberal members reacted by launching a petition campaign and succeeded to some degree in having it changed but there is no guarantee that the Minister will not bring it forward one day. Because of all these petitions, because of the fight put on by the Liberal members of the Opposition, the Conservative members themselves came to oppose the Finance Minister on the issue, saying that it made no sense to go as far as taxing food, the very bread and butter of the people, Mr. Speaker! That was totally unacceptable. However, that did not stop the Minister of Finance from bringing in more taxes.

Over the last four years, he has managed to get more than $20 billion from the taxpayers in additional tax revenue and today, he wants us to believe that he has succeeded in reducing the deficit through all that creative accounting of his, Mr. Speaker.

We cannot support this tax reform because it does not meet the economic needs of Canadians, for there can only be one social justice. In its tax reform, the Government has abolished the $1,000 deduction for investment income which was precisely intended to give a break to people with modest savings, people on fixed incomes and senior citizens earning modest interest income.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is now doing away with this deduction. And surely, there are other people who did not need it who have also taken advantage of it. But at least, the Minister could have introduced a rule, since the first tax level under tax reform is 17 per cent, allowing people in need, the elderly with a minimum interest income, to have at least a deduction, a tax credit of $170. I think that he would thus have protected those in need and made tax reform fairer and more progressive.

You are indicating to me that I have little time left, Mr. Speaker.

The whole question of day care . . . He gave tax credits for the other personal deductions, but he does not give a tax credit for child care expenses because it is not a personal expense but an employment-related expense. Someone with an income must deduct expenses from it. In society today, Mr. Speaker, day care is not an expense to earn income. It is a personal need. Mothers and heads of one-parent families work because they must to make ends meet, not because they want more money. That is what this Conservative Government thinks of social justice! It has no understanding of what social justice means in Canada. I am sure that when the Prime Minister has the courage to call an election, Canadians will remember.

[English]

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in this debate at third reading on Bill C-139, an amendment to the Income Tax Act and other legislation related to it.

Fair taxation is one of the most important issues before the nation. This Government has made a great deal out of its carrying through tax reforms. As I want to demonstrate in a few moments, there has been little real reform in any dramatic way. There has been a lot of tinkering in various places to make the Income Tax Act a more and more bulky piece of legislation which requires a great deal of investment of personal time for accountants and those dealing with tax law in order to provide accurate advice to clients. I do not doubt it has also made the life of people in the revenue Department more difficult rather than easier.

There has been a great deal of tinkering with the system in an attempt to improve it. If one looks at the over-all picture that results from this tinkering, there can be no doubt that the so-called reform on which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has been working, particularly in the past year or so, is not an improvement in the Canadian tax system as far as fairness of taxation for Canadians in middle and lower income groups is concerned. It certainly brings the Government more revenue in certain areas, but it is not a move toward fairer taxation, particularly in the weeks, days conceivably, months at most, before an election campaign starts.

Fairness of taxation would surely be the most important concern a government would have in mind as it expects to be speaking to voters to ask for their support. I think that would be particularly the case for Conservatives who like to make a great deal about their sympathy for their constituents, for individuals, the family and so on. The brute facts that face us when we look at income tax and other tax changes which the Government has made since the fall of 1984, provides no basis for real confidence on the part of Conservative Members of Parliament or those who are candidates and would like to be elected to this House. There is no basis for confidence that they will get the support of most of their constituents.

Some of these changes may fly well on Bay Street and in similar areas where Canadian financial power is centred and where the wealthy of this country are most active, but outside of Bay Street and the country clubs of Canada, I would be certain that the changes the Government has made will not impress Canadians. It will give Canadians absolutely no reason to give up their general aversion, whatever may be true in the Province of Quebec and conceivably in Alberta. Conservatives do not understand the interests of ordinary Canadians, of families, and the result of electing Conservatives once every generation—perhaps a little more frequently than that—is to remind ourselves why we should not do that. Every once in a while those who like to change from the Liberals, when they become completely intolerable, to the Conservatives, rather than looking at those who are really concerned about their interests, are taught again that Conservatives do not understand the needs of ordinary Canadians.

In focusing these comments, I want to say that it is advisable not to get lost among the trees when dealing with the forest of taxation. It is the easiest thing in the world to be taken off into the minutiae of the system, which inevitably accountants and tax lawyers have to understand and which the revenue Department has to administer, but for us to get into detailed consideration of some of those things can take us away from the large picture, which is, I think, what Canadians as individuals and their families want to see.

Something of the danger of this getting lost in the minutiae was true last night when we were debating a variety of amendments to Bill C-139 and when the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) became involved in some responses to comments that I had made. He suggested that my argument for a reduction in the small business rate for real small businesses from 12 per cent to 10 per cent, not for all the so-called private corporations, including the Eaton's enterprise across the country, but for real small businesses, is somehow a terribly regressive step, something that might have some plausibility, but after all, progressivity of taxation has always been a matter of taxing in terms of the ability to pay.

Our assumption pretty well based in the realities of business activities is that small businesses are much less profitable as smaller incomes have a lesser ability to pay. Therefore, a small reduction in taxation from 12 per cent to 10 per cent for them is surely not an inappropriate proposal for a New Democrat to make when the brute reality of the corporate tax system is that the larger corporations use those credits, those who have the means to get involved in taking advantage of all the possibilities of investment credits—and I use that in the lower case "i" and "c" very definitely—the whole complex of encouragement that the Government offers through the tax system to corporate activity.

To argue that small businesses should have a slight reduction in taxation when large corporations, banks and other enterprises in this country conceivably pay no taxes at all, seems to me to be just one of those pieces of sophistry, to use the word the Minister likes to throw about, that one would expect the Minister of State for Finance would use in trying to defend in this House and before the voters and taxpayers of the country the things which this Minister of Finance has done to us time after time ever since the economic and fiscal statement of 1984.

Some changes, some of them quite important, have been made. I can think of one which is much easier to understand than the really complex changes the Minister of Finance has made more recently. The cancellation of the scientific research tax credit which the previous Liberal Government brought in is perhaps the most exciting attempt ever to encourage investment by the business community. It got to be such an exciting opportunity to invest that all kinds of fraud artists got into the game. Any government would have had to shut it down fairly soon. Certainly the Minister of Finance deserves credit for doing so after having recognized that there are certain boondoggles and dubious provisions in the tax system, dubious from an economic and sound fiscal position, but what are we actually left with in terms of the over-all realities of federal revenues?

While listening to my colleague, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), who leads in financial matters in our caucus, I was profoundly impressed by the figures that he put forward, and I want to pull several of those comparisons out of the national statements which were published a couple of months ago by the Department of Finance itself. These are truly startling figures, which indicate the lay of the land, if you will. These are the kinds of figures that tell us, whatever the trees may look like, whatever kind of trimming is taking place in one area or planting somewhere else, what the forest is actually like.

What do we find? From 1984 to 1987, the increase in direct tax payments to the Government by individuals has been from $37.5 billion to $53, practically $54 billion. As my colleague said, this is an increase of 44 per cent in total revenues that the Government of Canada receives from individual taxpayers across the country, a 44 per cent increase in payments by individuals at a time when the gross domestic product of Canada increased by only 24 per cent, by about one-quarter. The increase in revenue ran up towards 50 per cent, a 44 per cent increase.

What happened in another area of revenue receipt for the Government, that area of taxation, of direct taxes paid by the corporations of the country? What do we find here? As my hon. colleague said, there is actually a decrease in the amount of tax paid, from something over $11 billion to less than $10.5 billion from 1984 to 1987.

What needs to be emphasized here in the forest of taxation as they used to prevail and as they exist now, is that the forest of individual tax payments has grown enormously while the forest of corporate tax payments to the Canadian Government remains smaller and smaller, relatively speaking.

There was a time when the corporations of Canada paid as much in direct tax to the Government of Canada as individual taxpayers do. That now seems to have been a long, long time ago, but when you go back a quarter of a century and a bit more and you find yourself in that era, you see that the forest of corporate direct payments to the Government is just about as luxurious as this overgrown forest of payments by individuals. But gradually the proportions changed to two to one, and three to one.

When we reached direct payments in 1987 of $54 billion by individuals, and of $10.5 billion by corporations, we were beyond five to one in the proportion. There is the large sense of the way in which the tax system is being applied. There is the evidence of how very little real reform there has been in the finances of this country on the taxation side.

I would note that if we add the indirect taxes which the federal Government receives as well, and note that those have grown from $18 billion in 1984 to $23 billion, which is an increase of some 30 per cent in indirect taxes, we have measures there of the way in which the sales tax and the excise tax arrangements of the country have been made so much more onerous, so much heavier for individuals and for families in Canada as a result of the activities of this Minister of Finance.

These are certainly clear evidence of a lack of genuine reform, of real progress towards tax fairness, when we note that this is the situation just preceding a two-stage reform of our tax system in which the Minister of Finance has made minor reductions in personal income tax, belatedly, this summer—and they were proposed a year ago. They began taking effect in July of this year—this is perhaps less the sword of Damocles hanging over the ruler than it is an enormous boulder or, if you will, a rock slide on a mountain which is trembling over us.

We are not quite sure how wide it is going to be. We do not suppose that the Minister would have the courage to tax food, but we are never quite sure with this Government. The number of broken promises to this Government's credit is very large, and with assurances after an election, who knows? The trade deal is the largest evidence that you could attack something in an election campaign, before and during it, and then go ahead and do it afterwards. That kind of lack of faith that is so destructive of the democratic system leaves all of us far from certain that in the Minister's plans to tax every transaction in this country, every exchange in dollars, every purchase of services, to take in every cent he can get, to increase the burden on individuals in the country, he is not going to apply it food too.

Mr. Cassidy: Shame.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)): The 10 per cent telecommunications tax is in fact a nice indication of the kind of unfairness that this Government has put into the system.

I had an interesting exchange some months ago with the chair of the Finance Committee—the Member for Mississauga, I believe it is, or is it North?—that the tax on long distance telephone calls is primarily a business expense. Since the businesses are getting cheaper telephone calls, why should they complain if they have to pay something more in the way of a new tax? He completely failed to recognize that in regions of the country, isolated areas such as northern Ontario, and even there, for people outside a city such as Thunder Bay long-distance calls are the stuff of everyday life. In addition, it applies to people who can live a full and happy life in Toronto without ever having to worry about long-distance calls. I have constituents who routinely, partly in terms of business such as perhaps a dairy, face long-distance telephone bills of $150 or $200 a month. For those people to have to pay 10 per cent every month of that entire long-distance telephone bill is just an indication of the kind of unfairness that Michael Wilson has put into the tax system.

Mr. Cassidy: Shame.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): The fact that the Government refused to cap, to put some kind of a ceiling on this, to say that it surely would not be fair for anyone to pay more than $5 to $10 a month, maybe that is even high, is insensitive of the Government. Five dollars a month, after all, is $60 a year in new taxation for people who have to make these calls time after time. For there to be no recognition of these differences in Canada is just an indication of how insensitively this Government has been guided in these areas by a Minister whose base is on Bay Street and who has practically no recognition, no sense at all, of where ordinary Canadians live.

Mr. Cassidy: Shame.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I realize that my time is practically up and yet there is so much to be said about the way in which this Government has reduced the progressive nature of our income tax system, about the way in which the wealthy are the prime beneficiaries of the tax changes that have taken place. There is so much that could be said. I am grateful for the fact that my colleague, the Member for Ottawa Centre, has more time as the lead speaker on these matters in order to get those points out.

Ordinary Canadians, lower-income Canadians who got put on the tax rolls during this Government's terms of office, are now asked to be grateful because they are going to be allowed to get back off the tax rolls before the next election, know that they have been ripped off for three years by a government that does not have the good sense to tax the income where it is, whether it is in the hands of rich individuals or in large corporations, and to get the burden of the services of the Canadian Government spread over everyone fairly.

I realize that my time is up. I want to say that there is reason enough for us to vote against Bill C-139 to continue our opposition to the so-called tax reform and for the New Democratic Party to enter the next election campaign telling Canadians, "You want tax fairness, elect New Democrats in order to get it. You are not going to get it from the Conservatives and the Liberals who mostly built this system".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Danis): On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Given the Member's comment about the NDP in tax matters, I would like to ask him whether he would be willing to introduce a measure to plug the NDP tax scam that is currently being carried out in most major municipalities across this nation, where NDP local candidates are using federal tax deductions to credit their campaigns. Would he be willing to plug that NDP tax scam?

• (1410)

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, this is a question that is designed to be embarrassing in a partisan way. It is suggested that New Democratic federal associations have used this means in Toronto. The question is whether other Parties have used it and what other possibilities for financing activities exist like large corporate donations which are a small thanks to the Liberal Party for all the gifts that the corporate sector has received over the years.

These are nice questions. The law was passed by Liberals. The Liberals governed this country for most of the period during which the election financing laws were in effect. After the next election, we will see who forms the Government. I expect we will receive advice from the election expenses commission on what should be done. We will see who has the opportunity to reform the law and we will see, if the Liberals are elected, if they carry through the kind of reform the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is suggesting.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member did not answer my question. He may be aware that in the Province of Ontario, the Liberals do not run at the local level on a Party ticket. For a long time, the NDP has been running a tax scam, using taxpayers' money to get tax credits for municipal candidates. Would the Hon. Member be willing to move an amendment which would plug that NDP tax scam?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, this is quite a partisan matter, not that there is anything wrong with that in this partisan Chamber of ours. To call it a tax scam is the kind of emotive language that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, (Ms. Copps) likes to indulge in. If it were a scam, presumably the RCMP would have been investigating and laying charges. I have not seen that happen. I am sure that the Conservatives, who love New Democrats like brothers, would have been more than happy to instruct the RCMP to investigate that if it were the case.

Clearly a law is not being broken. Whether this is against the spirit of the law or not is a good question to be debated. We probably will not have the time to debate it adequately this afternoon, but I would suggest that the Hon. Member be precise in her language. The law has not been broken. If it had been, there would have been prosecutions.

New Democrats use the letter of the law to finance their efforts at the municipal level, and because income taxation is provincial and federal, there is no municipal tax. They use these provisions to strengthen the Party at the grassroots level in order to support efforts in federal election campaigns. If the law were to be changed to make it a scam, let the prosecutions occur afterward. In the meantime, the Hon. Member is trying to get political capital out of something her Party created.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the time is just about up and that there is some general agreement that we will go to a vote in a minute, so I will ask a question of my hon. colleague from Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) which sums up what third reading of this Bill is all about, the question of whether or not Conservative tax reform is really fair.

Does the Hon. Member believe that the Conservative tax reform is fair when it allows 60,000 profitable corporations to continue to pay no tax every year? Does he believe tax reform is fair when it deindexes the brackets and the child credits and the other credits that are given in the tax Bill? Does he think the tax reform put forward by the Conservatives is fair when it gives an average of $4,165 in tax cuts to most people who earn over $100,000 a year and leaves those people paying less tax in 1988 than they were paying in 1984 while at the same time all other taxpayers will be paying more? The average family will wind up paying some $1,000 more in taxation in 1988 than it was paying when the Conservatives came to power back in 1984.

Does the Hon. Member think that tax reform is fair when it means that families earning as much as $5,000 below the poverty line should be paying taxes? Does he think tax reform is fair when the Conservatives seem to want to wait until after the election to drop the other shoe, bringing in a sales tax scheme with no guarantee that it will cushion average families against the regressive effect of the proposed national sales tax?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): No, I do not, Mr. Speaker. Because I agree with the Hon. Member that we should get out of here and get back to our constituents who want to take their turn at this Government as soon as possible, that is all I will say. The Hon. Member is absolutely correct. This is not fairness. Let's get out of here and give our constituents a chance to throw the Government out.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to put a question to my colleague. Does my colleague support the moves of the federal Conservative Government which, at the same time as increasing the tax burden on ordinary Canadian families by $1,500 over the last four years, has given tax write-offs to the wealthy in the order of $100,000 in capital gains? I wonder if my colleague agrees with that approach that eases the burden on the very wealthy at the same time as it digs into the pockets of ordinary Canadian families.

I would also like to know if my colleague supports the actions of previous Liberal governments which, while in office, have consistently increased the tax burden on Canadian families while lowering the burden on corporations. The policy of making numerous tax loopholes available to corporations and wealthy individuals started with a Liberal Minister of Finance, and that led directly to increased burdens on ordinary Canadian families. I wonder if my colleague supports this Liberal favouritism for the wealthy and the Conservative favouritism for the wealthy, or is he prepared to stand up and speak out for some tax relief for ordinary Canadian families?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, when a good colleague tempts me to stay here a little longer rather than getting back to my constituents, I do, of course, as a friend, concede to that.

I reacted to what the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) said about a progressive tax system because there is nothing that my colleagues and I value more in a tax system than progressiveness. There is nothing that is more important to us than ensuring that taxes are paid by people in terms of their ability to pay, the ability they have over and above paying for the basic cost of living.

The Minister of State for Finance talked about progressivity in a system that has become more and more regressive. Liberals ask questions about tax reform when they created the system that Conservatives have been tinkering with over the last four years. This has never been progressive in all these years. It gets worse and worse, less and less progressive, and I do not want to have questions thrown at us by members of either Party when our concern is for tax fairness.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because I know people want to get out of here. However, there is only so much one can take, and on a Friday afternoon, I have about had it with the hypocrisy of a political Party that runs its own political tax scam in the City of Toronto. It is using a tax credit which was designed for federal Members to seek office in the federal Parliament. It is a shame. It is a scam and it is typical of the NDP policy.

On the one hand, NDP Members were totally against write-offs. On the other hand, they did a complete flip-flop on flow-through shares. NDP Members call for no loopholes and no tax deductions, but when the small mining community came to Parliament and said that flow-through shares were permitting the exploration and development that was important to the northern economy, the NDP in one day went from no-flow to go-flow.

As far as I am concerned, enough is enough. I know that we should have the vote, but I do hope that the NDP moves expeditiously to plug the tax scam that has been ripping off the taxpayers for the last number of years.

• (1420)

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member was mercifully brief in her intervention.

Mr. Grisé: Which you never are.

Mr. Cassidy: I want to point out that the NDP has the same privileges as every other Party under the election expense legislation introduced by the Liberal Government. If the Liberals wanted to ensure that the money was spent exclusively on federal election campaigns, it could have drafted the legislation to ensure that.

Mr. Minaker: Two wrongs make a right?

Mr. Cassidy: I note that the official spokesperson for the Liberal Party has now indicated she is opposed to flow-through shares. She is opposed to economic development in mining communities.

Ms. Copps: Not at all.

Mr. Cassidy: I would point out as well that yesterday her Party advocated a reduction in tax on capital gains. That is Liberal tax fairness. It is now time to concentrate on the tax unfairness of the Conservatives and have the vote.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, (a) the Liberal Party supported flow-through shares. It was the Liberal Party that introduced flow-through shares. For the Hon. Member to say the Liberal Party is opposed to flow-through shares is absolute balderdash; (b) the NDP is the only Party that I am aware of, unless there are others, which runs on a Party platform at the municipal level, and in the City of Toronto funds its local candidates through donations to the federal Party. These donations were intended for federal candidates. This is a tax scam. Whether it is a Tory tax scam or an NDP tax scam, it is a tax scam and should be renounced. I expect the Hon. Member to bring forward an amendment in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion, will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed, will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Pursuant to order made Thursday, August 25, 1988, the recorded division on the motion stands deferred until six o'clock Monday, August 29, 1988.

Is it the wish of the House that I call it three o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being three o'clock, pursuant to the order made on Monday, June 20, 1988, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 o'clock a.m.

The House adjourned at 2.23.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

PRESENTATION OF SIXTY-NINTH REPORT

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table the sixty-ninth report of the Striking Committee.

If it is the pleasure of the House, I intend to move the adoption of the sixty-ninth report later today.

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTY-NINTH REPORT

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, if it is the pleasure of the House, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent):

> That the sixty-ninth report of the Striking Committee, tabled earlier in the House, be adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have unanimous consent to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to table, on behalf of 4,725 residents of Beauce, a petition that reads as follows:

"We the undersigned citizens of Canada demand that the federal government currently in power prepare, without delay, legislation that will provide full protection for the human fetus from conception to birth. We would also like legislative action to be taken as soon as possible."

I hereby table this protection containing 4,725 names.

IRRADIATION OF FOOD

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present this petition, properly certified, from approximately 200 constituents of the riding of Kent. It is their wish that food irradiation not become part of food processing in Canada and that our children not become human guinea pigs in a process that may prove to be hazardous. Therefore, they petition that unbiased, independent agencies and scientists complete studies on the safety of consuming foods that have been irradiated and the effects of long-term consumption and environmental dangers involved and that in the event any food irradiation is allowed, it should be clearly labelled as treated with ionizing radiation.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition, duly certified according to Standing Order 106, from a number of residents of Toronto. They point out that the Conservative Government, without a mandate from the Canadian people, undertook to negotiate a trade agreement that would weaken our national sovereignty, interfere with many of the programs we need to develop our country, and fails to obtain protection against American countervailing duty laws, the agreement's main object. Therefore, they request Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed agreement through a national general election.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I have another petition signed by residents of Toronto, Surrey, Burnaby, and other municipalities in British Columbia referring to the promise of the former Minister of Justice to eliminate the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents of three years or more so that both groups would have equal rights to sponsor parents of any age. Since this promise has not yet been fulfilled, the undersigned residents and citizens of Canada call on the House of Commons to ensure that the Government fulfils its promises now.

OPPOSITION TO ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have two duly certified petitions. In the first the petitioners point to the danger of accidents from nuclear powered or nuclear armed ships in Canadian ports. They point out that this is a threat to the environment and Canadian citizens and therefore call upon the Government not to purchase nuclear powered submarines for Canada.

IRRADIATION OF FOOD

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): The second petition calls upon Parliament to act as responsible guardians and see that all development on the irradiation of food be stopped. They say that governments at all levels must take immediate steps to stop their agencies and Crown corporations from promoting and encouraging such development.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting on behalf of a number of residents of Grand Centre, Cold Lake, Medley, and Bonneville, important communities in the distinguished province of Alberta, who say: Whereas the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return; whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the free trade agreement. I see the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) in the Chamber. I am glad to know that many of his constituents are interested in this matter.

Mr. Mazankowski: Do you know where Grand Centre is?

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I request that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

I think the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) was seeking the floor?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I just wish to give notice that I wish to withdraw a Bill of mine concerning Central America. However, I would rather discuss it first with other people concerned and I will rise later, please.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade) moved that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased and proud to be moving third reading of this historic piece of legislation which will lead to implementation of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement negotiated last fall and which has been before us since December of last year.

I am a proud Canadian, although I only became one in 1949 as a result of a campaign in Newfoundland to decide the future of that province. I stand in a line of proud Canadians who have sought to secure for the people of Canada the benefits of free trade with the U.S. This is not something that has just occurred in the last year or two or three. This is part of Canadian history, the process of securing freer and freer trade with the United States of America. It is not something new, it is not something startling, it is not something unusual, it is not something revolutionary. It is part of a continuing process since Canada was formed in 1867.

For over a century leaders of Canadian Governments have sought to secure the kind of benefits that can come from free trade with the U.S. Down through our history, up until now, the opposition of the day, whatever opposition it was, always rose in a chorus to say that Canada's sovereignty, Canada's very nationhood would be imperiled by a free trade agreement with the U.S. Whenever this topic has come up, that has always been the cry of the Opposition, no matter what Party the Opposition was. Our sovereignty is imperiled, gone or endangered. Our nationhood is going to disappear because we are going to have a different commercial arrangement with the U.S. That was the call.

For those who opposed Canada-U.S. free trade, Sir Wilfrid Laurier had a name for them in 1911, and I quoted him at second reading. I noticed that several newspapers got the quotation wrong. They attributed to me what Sir Wilfrid Laurier had said. I would have been glad to have been his speech writer in 1911 so long as I could still have been here today. Sir Wilfrid Laurier called those who opposed Canada-U.S. free trade in 1911 and I quote him: "The freaks of unreasoning passion". That is a perfect description of those who oppose Canada-U.S. free trade today, freaks of unreasoning passion. They cry out that you are not a true Canadian. How often have we heard that in the last few months? You are not a true Canadian, you are somebody who is willing to sell out your country if you are for Canada-U.S. free trade.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) calls the legislation we are debating today the sale of Canada Act. That is the best he can do in his cheap jaunts across the country spreading misinformation about this legislation. When he says it is the sale of Canada Act, he is not just accusing Members of Parliament on this side of the House, the Government, of being traitors to their country, people prepared to sell out their country. He is accusing prominent members of his own Party. That includes Premier Bourassa. Of course, that accounts for his cool response to the importunities of Mr. Turner who went to see him on August 17, and we cannot say he got a rapturous embrace. He was hoping it would be indecently close but it was not. No criminal charges could be laid as a result of that visit.

Premier McKenna of New Brunswick, another prominent Liberal, who said the free trade agreement is in the national interest and in the interest of his province, is being called by his national leader, just as we are, a traitor to Canada, a person who supports the sale of Canada Act. If you are willing to sell your country, does that not indicate you are a traitor, you are a sleeveen, you are a less than desirable person, that you are unpatriotic.

It indicates to me that you are guilty of treason. Yet, this is the kind of statesman-like utterance we have heard from the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and their lieutenants for months now.

This is not new. Sir Wilfrid Laurier suffered from the same, what he called, freaks of unreasoning passion. Were these leaders of the colony of Canada before Confederation any less Canadian for entering a reciprocity treaty with the United States in 1854? This goes back as far as 1854. Who would claim that Canada was diminished or weakened as a result of that initiative? The opposite, of course, is true.

Were Sir John A. Macdonald and, after him, Alexander MacKenzie, failing to serve Canadian interests when they sought to renew reciprocity with the United States in the 1870s? They wanted a continuation of the reciprocity arrangements. Were they traitors to Canada? Of course they were not, and no one would suggest that they were.

Was Sir Wilfrid Laurier putting in peril the very idea of Canada when he campaigned in 1891 on unrestricted reciprocity with the United States? Was he putting in peril the very idea of Canada when he reached an agreement for this in 1911? No, of course he was not putting in peril the very idea of Canada, and his descendants, those people who say they belong to the same Party as Sir Wilfrid Laurier, are today saying that this U.S.-Canada free trade agreement puts in peril the very idea of Canada. What specious nonsense, what malicious tripe. One is statesman-like to keep one's language so moderate when one thinks of the nonsense we have heard in the House on this.

Were Canadian governments doing anything other than acting in the national interest in the 1930s when they entered into two Canada-U.S. trade agreements to reduce tariffs? Were they then acting contrary to the Canadian national interest? Of course they were not. Did Canada become any less Canada as a result of these two treaties of the 1930s? Of course it did not.

In 1945 Mackenzie King had a negotiation proceed between Canada and the United States for free trade. Simon Reisman was then a young man entering the government service. He was one of the secret coterie of people appointed by Mackenzie King to negotiate a free trade agreement with the United States. Was Mackenzie King then a traitor? Was he putting in peril the very idea of Canada when he had that negotiation initiated?

Of course we all know that he did not go through with it. He got cold feet in the end. No one in the Cabinet knew what he was up to and his descendants in the Liberal Party today complain that there was not sufficient consultation when the Cabinet was not even consulted in those days. I have suggested before that he consulted only his mother, then in the afterworld, in reaching that decision.

When Louis St. Laurent led the Government in the late 1940s and 1950s and arrangements were entered into with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, were they then betraying their country or endangering the very idea of Canada simply because we were going to get a more sensible set of rules for international trading, Canada being an international trader? Of course they were not, as Mackenzie was not. There was very little consultation of course. The public was not consulted. The public was not asked to vote on whether or not we should join GATT.

Lester Pearson was denounced in 1965 for selling out the auto industry. Who denounced him? Why, the precursors of the New Democratic Party, the swivelling socialists. You don't know where they are going to swivel to next. They denounced Lester Pearson as betraying this country because he entered into the Auto Pact. Today they have the Auto Pact wrapped around their bosoms so closely that they have in-grown chest hairs. You cannot touch the Auto Pact, according to the Leader of the New Democratic Party who represents Oshawa.

Oshawa has tremendous prosperity as a result of the Auto Pact. There is not even a blip on the unemployment screen in Oshawa. There is full employment. General Motors has invested $10 billion in Oshawa over the last 10 years because of the Auto Pact, which is basically free trade in the automobile industry and is the main reason for the tremendous prosperity of Ontario today. There is full employment in the southern part of Ontario.

However, in 1965 Pearson was said to be selling out the auto industry. He went ahead anyway and signed the Auto Pact. He did not go to an election first. He was not asked to go to an election. It had not featured in earlier elections. The Canadian electorate had not been asked to give their opinion on this subject.

When opinions were given the unions and precursors of the NDP were against it, of course. They are against everything. They are against every change in the status quo. They do not want anything in Canada or the world to change. The NDP policy is the policy of Clement Attlee of 1945. We all know that his policies got the United Kingdom autarky. We can live in Canada with our little market of 26 million people and prosper and increase our national wealth by trading back and forth with one another.

Lester Pearson went ahead anyway. Lester Pearson understood the difference between opposition politics of calculated hysteria and Canada's national interest and he went ahead. Who gained? Oshawa gained, Ontario gained, and Québec has gained from the Auto Pact.

Last year 89 per cent of all of Ontario's exports went to the United States of America, a tremendous proportion of them being automobiles and parts, compared to a national percentage of 76 per cent of our exports going to the United States of America. The part of Canada which is the most dependant on the United States market for its prosperity is Ontario. Is it not peculiar that many people in Ontario do not understand that? However, there is beginning to be a much better understanding of that. Perhaps that is because the Ontario provincial Government has not taken the lead. For some reason it has appeared to be against this agreement.

Over one-quarter of the gross domestic product of Ontario, 27.4 per cent, over one-quarter of the wealth generated in Ontario every year, comes from exports by Ontario to the United States and hon. gentlemen opposite are willing to put that at risk. The people of Ontario would be 27.4 per cent poorer every year if they did not have this trade with the United States which we are trying to protect for them. In Canada as a whole 18.7 per cent of our gross domestic product comes from trade with the United States. The national average is, therefore, much lower than the average in Ontario. We on this side of the House are fighting for the strength and prosperity of Ontario, whether or not they know it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: All the Canadian leaders I have cited sought the same thing, they sought to give Canadians the opportunity to sell freely abroad and thus build prosperity at home. That is what we are attempting to do. We want to give Canadians the opportunity to sell freely in the United States and to continue to build prosperity at home, which is what we have been doing since 1945. In 1945, only 36 per cent of Canadian exports went to the United States. Today, 76 to 80 per cent of our exports go to the United States of America. That is where our opportunities are. We are trying to enlarge them, secure them, and protect them.

To my astonishment two national Parties are fighting this tooth and nail, and the labour movement is doing the same. No amount of obfuscation or misrepresentation will satisfy the two Parties I have mentioned and the Canadian labour movement, which are all against this agreement. All we are doing is trying to protect how well we have done and to increase our opportunities in the future.

The effort of successive Canadian Governments to strengthen Canada by putting our trade relationship with the United States on a secure and equal footing is not new. The Opposition strategy that tries to obscure this objective by encouraging unfounded fears about a loss of sovereignty is not new either. In fact, our sovereignty is enhanced by this agreement. We become more sovereign, we become more powerful. We become better able to defend and protect Canada as a result of this agreement.

For example, if this agreement is carried into effect in future disputes, we will have binational panels to decide these disputes. In the United States, a binational panel including Canadians will sit with Americans and decide what action should be taken as a result of a complaint made in the United States under American trade law. That is an extension of Canadian sovereignty. We do not have that right or any protection in that line now. We can be subject to the most political kind of decision.

We are enhancing the sovereignty of this country, yet there are people sitting opposite who are so blinded by their desire to be in power or see someone else out of power that they will not grant one virtue to this agreement. I have not heard one of them, once in this debate, say one positive thing about the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. All they have done is try to encourage fear.

When trade barriers between Canada and the United States have been lowered, we are told by the Leader of the Opposition that Canadians will have been hosed, harmonized and homogenized. The Leader of the Opposition does not have very many good lines, that is why he uses this one so often. He should get some other speech-writers. The Leader of the Opposition says that we will be hosed, harmonized and homogenized when the barriers come down on January 1, 1989. I say that he should add that he is attempting to hoodwink the Canadian people when he says they have been hosed, harmonized and homogenized. He is an attempted hoodwinker.

If the Leader of the Opposition happens to be correct, which of course he is not, then he is saying that Premier Bourassa is hosing, harmonizing and homogenizing the Canadian people. That is a very rare thing for a premier of Quebec to do. I see a premier of Quebec hosing us, but I do not know about harmonizing or homogenizing the rest of us. He is saying that Premier McKenna, a member of his own Party, is prepared to hose, harmonize and homogenize. I suppose it is safe to say that, now that the United Church has met in British Columbia.

He is saying that Gerry Regan, former Premier of Nova Scotia and former Minister for International Trade for Mr. Trudeau, is to do the same. He is saying that Donald Macdonald, who was appointed by Prime Minister Trudeau to head a royal commission on Canada's economic future and prospects, and which brought in a report, and that all the people sitting with him, including Michel Robert, President of the national Liberal Party of Canada, are out to hose, harmonize and homogenize Canadians. It just shows how foolish, juvenile and inaccurate is the statement by the Leader of the Opposition.

If those who support this agreement are hosers, homogenizers and harmonizers, and traitors, then there are an awful lot of Liberals in this country in exactly the same boat, including Senator George van Roggen who had the courage, gumption and backbone to resign his position as chairman of the foreign affairs committee.

Historically, we see that the exact opposite is true. Since World War II, successive Canadian governments have pursued policies that have decreased trade barriers. Those same governments have created the modern social safety net that we enjoy today. They have pursued regional development and supported our culture and industries. We followed in that tradition of Diefenbaker and, to be fair, the tradition of Liberal governments in doing this.

In fact, we introduced our own Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which, already in one year, is astoundingly successful as we continue to pursue regional development.

Our colleague, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), and her predecessors have supported cultural industries with might and main.

We are bringing in child care with legislation that is before the House, adding to the modern social safety net. One can argue the details about whether it does enough, does not do enough, or spends enough or does not spend enough. We are bringing in free trade and child care. Surely that gives the lie to the people who run around Canada trying to mislead and frighten Canadians and senior citizens about what this means. I do not know how they can look at themselves in the mirror every morning. They are a hard looking crew in the first place.

Mackenzie King, Louis St. Laurent, John Diefenbaker, and Lester Pearson did not see any contradiction between tariff reductions, increased exports to the United States and domestic social and regional development policies to build a strong and unique Canada. None of them saw any contradiction because there is no contradiction. That is why we are able to take these steps. It is because of the prosperity in Canada as a result of our international trade and trade with the United States of America.

In terms of 1986 dollars, from 1947 to 1986, merchandise exports to the United States grew from just over $7 billion to almost $94 billion, an increase of over 1,225 per cent. During the same period, the welfare of Canadians went up tremendously. Per capita, Gross Domestic Product in 1986 dollars grew from $7,400 to almost $20,000, an increase of almost 170 per cent. Total employment in Canada grew from 4.8 million to 12.3 million, up 155 per cent, with employment in manufacturing rising by 88.7 per cent.

I might point out that in the last four years, employment has gone up 1.292 million. Let me also point out that in the last four years, 728,000 more women are working in Canada than were working four years ago. Yet we listen to this silly and vicious opposition day after day. There has been a 25 per cent increase in the number of women in managerial administrative jobs. Youth unemployment has gone down by 240,000 in the last four years. It increased 141,000 from 1980 to 1984, when Mr. Trudeau and the Liberals were in office and the pitiful grump we see here today had a majority. Youth unemployment went up, but where was Senator Hébert when he was needed? He was in the Parliamentary Restaurant having paté de fois gras when the unemployment figures were going up. The Opposition critic sitting over there today was the Minister.

In the same period, 1947 to 1986, public spending on education went up from $147 per capita to $1,237 per capita in 1983-84 in real terms. Spending on health care increased from $54 per capita to $1,211 per capita by 1985 in real terms. All this took place while we were becoming more and more dependent on the U.S. in our trade.

Direct financial benefits under social security programs rose to almost $50 billion in 1985, from $3.8 billion in 1947, for all public welfare programs, including health. This took place all the while we were becoming more and more dependent on the U.S. market.

More open competition with the United States led to economic growth and it led to a dynamic, distinctive Canada. The past four years in which we were getting closer and closer to free trade with the United States has made us no less compassionate as a society, no less progressive as a nation, and no less Canadian. That is the fact. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement will sustain and strengthen that growth and development if it is not sabotaged by the Opposition Parties and by the Canadian labour movement, that mindless organization that seems to be opposed to every change that anyone proposes in Canadian society today.

History and statistics, the plain facts, are not of much interest to the Opposition. We know its technique; level a charge, sometimes directly, sometimes by innuendo, that if one is for free trade, one is selling out Canada's sovereignty. The sale of Canada Act, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition calls it, is really for a brighter tomorrow Act. It is for our future, for our brighter tomorrow.

Is the Opposition suggesting for example, that Brian Peckford or John Buchanan would sacrifice their people's future or sell out their province or their country? How about Frank McKenna? We cannot mention a NDP Premier because there is not one. We cannot even mention them anymore because they are a vanishing breed. What happened to Pawley? Or I should I call him A-Pawley?

Is Robert Bourassa a man who is willing to deliver the future of Quebec into the hands of a foreign country? What an insidious and insulting suggestion made by the Leader of the National Party about the Premier of Quebec. He is saying in effect that Premier Bourassa is willing to deliver Quebec to a foreign country. Are the four western Premiers men who would falter when the good of their province and country hangs in the balance, Frank Devine or Don Getty and the others? Are these eight Premiers not sincerely seeking the good of their country by choosing to support the free trade agreement?

Is the suggestion that eight out of the ten Premiers of Canada are insincere traitors to their country? Is that the suggestion? That is the innuendo. That is what the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party go about this country suggesting. They are saying that not only this whole Party here but every Premier of Canada, except two, Prince Edward Island and Ontario, are traitors to their country. What a scurvy, scurrilous kind of campaign is being waged against this commercial arrangement.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition goes from one end of the country to the other saying it is the sale of Canada Act, and the Leader of the New Democratic Party repeats the charge that the very idea of Canada is imperilled.

The issue of free trade with the United States is not about who is or who is not a good Canadian. It is not about whether or not you sell out your country. It is not about imperilling the very idea of Canada. It is about the rules of commercial trade. This is what it is all about. What are rules of commercial trade between Canada and the United States going to be? How can we change them to our advantage? That is what it is about. But the opposition Parties do not want to debate or discuss it on that level. They want to discuss it in a cloud of insinuations and innuendoes to arouse the fears of people, for instance, that the social security system is going to fail. Imagine, Madam Speaker, going around trying to disturb senior citizens in Canada by feeding them those malicious lies? Mr. Bourassa said with respect to that charge:

> Mr. Broadbent should know we're not talking about the sovereignty of Canada . . . How could you seriously say that Canadian sovereignty is at stake when we want to protect Canadian markets in the U.S.?

That is Premier Bourassa's answer. I would like to see the Leader of the New Democratic Party go to Quebec and debate face to face with Mr. Bourassa. Is Mr. Bourassa a traitor or not? Is he giving up Canadian sovereignty or not? The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should have some backbone and meet Premier Bourassa face to face to make these charges and debate them with him. Gerald Regan said:

> I believe the greatest assurance of protection of our sovereignty, of our culture, is the maintenance of a strong economy, and free trade with the greatest market on earth gives an opportunity to strengthen our economy that any other country on earth would give their eye teeth to have.

That was said by Gerry Regan who for two years under former Prime Minister Trudeau tried to negotiate sectoral free trade with the United States and got nowhere. He is honest enough and patriotic enough to give his views now, as he is doing. He is still a Liberal but no longer in active politics. That is his answer to those statements.

What about business, the exporter, the resource and manufacturing and service industries, which are the creators of wealth and employment in Canada? Where do they stand? They stand almost unanimously on the side of the free trade agreement. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business supports free trade. The Québec Conseil du Patronat supports free trade. The Consumer's Association of Canada supports free trade. The Canadian Council for International Trade supports free trade. The Canadian Export Association, does it know something about exports the Opposition does not? Yes, it does, and the answer is, of course, that it does support free trade.

Mining associations, forestry associations, fisheries associations, agricultural associations, energy associations, service industry associations, and manufacturers associations, scores of them from coast to coast, support free trade. The Alberta Pork Producers Marketing Board, the Alberta Sheep and Wool Commission, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the Canadian Council of Grocery Distributors, the Canadian Meat Council, the Manitoba Farm Business Association—Manitoba—the Manitoba Hog Producers Marketing Board, the Ontario Pork Producers Marketing Board, the Saskatchewan Pork Producers Marketing Board, the United Grain Growers, the Western Barley Growers Association, the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association, and so it goes, the people in the market-place competing every day, seeking new opportunities, those who understand the realities of international trade, those with the practical experience, all support free trade. Do they want to sell out Canada?

Every time the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition says it is the sale of Canada Act, he is accusing these people of being traitors who want to sell out Canada. He is not only accusing members of the Government and every one in the Cabinet, and Premier Bourassa, Premier McKenna, Gerry Regan and Donald Macdonald, but he is accusing pork producers, the Cattlemen's Association, John Bullock, and all the rest of them, of being traitors and wanting to surrender Canada.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was asked by the New York Times about business people who are saying: "John, you are on the wrong side of history". He is not only on the wrong side of history, he is on the wrong side of the street. He is on the wrong side of everything one can conceive. He is just wrong. I quote Mr. Turner's reply:

> The business organization that has been most vocal in strongly supporting this trade deal has been the Business Council on National Issues, and a considerable percentage of their members are American-owned.

Can you now understand the answer, Madam Speaker? Do you see the innuendo: "These jerks cannot be true Canadians if they support free trade". That is the suggestion of Mr. Turner's answer. He says a considerable percentage of the the members of the National Council on Business Issues are American owned, so how can we trust what they say? This is a man who used to sit with them and sup with them. He used to send his bulletins out to them, the McMillan, Binch bulletins. He got back into public life in 1983, and we were a long time waiting for him. He was just there at the right time. But Mr. Turner supped with these people, he was retained by them. He took their fees. He lived with them. And he said we cannot trust their views because a very considerable percentage of them are American owned. That is the innuendo, we cannot trust them. Well, he was wrong, as he has been wrong so often in this debate.

The Business Council sent him an open letter saying that over 90 per cent of the assets and about 75 per cent of the control of member companies of the Business Council on National Issues are in Canadian hands. Who signed the letter? David Culver, the Chairman of Alcan, the very respected Canadian business leader, Chairman of Noranda, Alfred Poulis, and Thomas D'Aquino, in their capacity as officers of the Business Council, signed that letter and they pointed out the following:

> By embracing the rule of law, the (free trade) agreement offers Canadians greater security and opportunity... In our books that is a plus for sovereignty.

These are responsible spokesmen for Canadian business and they deserved to be treated as such. They do not deserve to have it suggested that they are unpatriotic, that they are dictated to by Americans, that they are not even Canadian owned, when the fact is that 90 per cent of their assets and 75 per cent of the control of those companies are in Canadian hands.

Let me add one other quote from a respected business leader, Mr. Laurent Thibault of Canadian Manufacturers' Association. He stated:

> The Canadian Manufacturers Association's support for the free trade agreement represents a dramatic change for this association. Historically, Canadian manufacturers have been among protectionist voices. However, the world economy has changed dramatically and we must change with it. The new trading environment created by the FTA obviously poses great challenges to Canadian manufacturers, but the consensus among our Members is that the FTA is a necessary strategic step that will help achieve our long-term objective of becoming globally competitive.

That is the position of members of the CMA which, historically, have been protectionists. That is why Sir John A. Macdonald's policy was developed. It was to protect manufacturers. In other parts of the country for 100 years the woods have welled with the voices of those protesting the tariff policy that protected Ontario and Quebec and exposed the rest of Canada which was cut off from its natural north-south trade. This is being changed by the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

The CMA recognizes that the world economy has changed dramatically. We must change with it. Who does not recognize that change must be dealt with? The Canadian labour movement does not, nor does the New Democratic Party. The people who now say they control the Liberal Party but who won't control it much longer do not. After the deluge in the next election they will be washed out to sea.

What the free trade agreement is all about is Canada becoming more competitive in all export markets. Why is free trade with the U.S. important for our position as an exporter globally, not just to the U.S.? As Donald Macdonald's commission pointed out, we are the only major industrialized country without secure access to a market of at least 100 million people. We have secure access to no market but our own—26 million Canadians. That is the only secure access to a market that we have. We have a chance to have secure access to the U.S. market under this agreement. The United States has access to its own huge market. Japan has access to its own burgeoning market. The countries of the European Community have access to the huge European Community of 320 million people. If Canada is to continue to develop world-class enterprises, we must be capable of competing and winning against the best in the world. Bell Canada and Northern Telecommunications come to mind as two such enterprises.

In the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement there is a breakthrough in services. All other GATT countries are watching Canada and the Canada-U.S. agreement to see how the services provisions will work. We are trying now to negotiate services provisions with the 95 nations that are involved in GATT. We have broken new ground. Madam Speaker, did you ever hear that mentioned by the Opposition Parties? Of course not. The Opposition is dismissive of the gains we have made in achieving more and enhanced access to the U.S. market, but those directly involved in the day-to-day business of exporting know better. What do they know?

They know that under the agreement tariffs will be phased out between Canada and the U.S. Better rules of origin will be put in place. National treatment will be extended to Canadian businesses in the U.S. All we have from the hon. gentlemen opposite is words about national treatment being extended to American companies up here. Do they not realize that national treatment will be extended to our companies in the U.S. where the market is 10 times as large? This is astounding. All we have ever heard is them complain that we will give U.S. companies national treatment here. Did we ever hear them once say: "My golly, what a help this will be for Canadian companies. They will not be able to act in a discriminatory fashion against Canadian companies in the United States any longer". Do we ever hear mention of that? What is wrong with them? What makes them so vicious, so unfeeling, so unreasonable and so unscrupulous?

Non-tariff barriers such as discriminating products standards will be reduced under the agreement. Access to U.S. federal government procurement will be improved. I have heard Members opposite complain about the fact that the Americans will get a chance to get some procurement in Canada. Never once have I heard them say: "My God, Canadian companies will get a whack at U.S. government procurement". Never once have I heard that. What is wrong with them?

Certain service industries gain freer access. Communications is one of them. Temporary entry for business and service personnel is made easier. Exporters know that access has to be made more secure because the Auto Pact is reaffirmed.

Do you know, Madam Speaker, that only one year's notice is necessary to be given to cancel the Auto Pact? The Americans can cancel it on one year's notice. So can we. Yet the Leader of the New Democratic Party acts as though nothing can happen, nothing can change the Auto Pact. He does not even acknowledge that the Auto Pact was in serious danger of being challenged by the Americans a couple of years ago before we started the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement negotiations. Now that we have the Auto Pact reaffirmed, and the people of Oshawa know the facts, the hon. gentleman will be out in the next election and our candidate will be in. Exporters know that safeguard actions by the U.S. will not apply to Canada if the problem arises from a third country. What the experts call a new sideswipe we have achieved. If the Americans take some action against third countries it will no longer automatically apply to Canada if we are not the problem as is now the case. We have got no credit for that from Members across the way. The Hon. Member for whatever in Winnipeg—

Miss MacDonald. Fort Garry.

Mr. Crosbie: —Fort Garry, or the Hon. Member from Windsor, who should be a firm supporter of this agreement since it does so much for Windsor, sit there knifing it every day. Safeguard actions against Canadian producers will be subject to binding dispute settlement. We have received no credit for that. Countervail and anti-dumping actions will be subject to binding dispute settlement. Other trade disputes will be dealt with through a formal dispute settlement procedure under the Canada-U.S. Trade Commission. We never get any credit for that.

Members of the Opposition say that binding dispute settlement is of no value and that we are better off without it. What do people in the business world think? The following is what Gordon Cummings thinks. He is the President of National Sea Products in Halifax.

> At present we find that the U.S. political lobbyists have been hard at work; that the United States Trade Commission is judge, jury and prosecutor in one;, that we stand guilty unless we can prove ourselves innocent—

That is the present position Gordon Cummings says. He is not a member of our Party. I do not know if he is a member of any Party. He goes on to state:

> What the free trade agreement can and will do is stop the frivolous U.S. actions, the bullying and the prejudgment that has hurt the Atlantic fishery, and some other sectors I can't claim to speak for, like lumber, potash, pork and tires. I have no reservations in speaking for myself and for National Sea Products when I say we welcome the dispute settlement mechanism outlined in the free trade agreement. And nothing has shaken my strong impression that the rest of the Atlantic Canadian fishing industry feels the same way.

That is the assessment of a senior spokesman for an industry which in recent years has faced six countervail actions and two anti-dumping actions. Other businesses agree. Do they know something members of the Opposition do not know? I would like to know how many countervail actions the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has been involved in. I would like to know how many actions the academic from Windsor has been involved in. The answer is that they have not been involved in one—not one single countervail action.

Mr. Langdon: How about you, John?

Mr. Crosbie: I have been involved in several. But the gentleman from whom I am quoting has been involved in six countervail and two anti-dumping actions. The only dumping actions that I have been involved in is dumping the New Democratic Party and dumping the Liberal Party. I will go on the rest of my life involved in anti-dumping actions against those Parties.

Binding dispute settlement was a key objective for Canada in the negotiations. It constitutes an important shield against U.S. protectionism.

The following is what Ambassador Allan Gotlieb had to say. He has done an outstanding job for the country in Washington. This might be an appropriate place to mention Simon Reisman who did outstanding work on behalf of his country. He came back from the private sector.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Gordon Ritchie is another man to whom a statue should go up in connection with this monumental task. He was Simon Reisman's deputy. Alan Nymark who is still with us in the TNO. I could mention, of course, many dozens of others. I should and I will mention my predecessor, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) who led the whole procedure.

• (1200)

Mr. Crosbie: As Ambassador Gotlieb has stated:

> The U.S. political system is well adapted to allowing the 'losers' to seek protection . . . This is an age of special interests. The [U.S.] legislative agenda is now run largely by committee and sub-committee chairmen . . . beyond the control of any President. They interact with highly motivated, handsomely financed special interest groups, seeking legislative fixes to their problems.

That is what we face in Washington. Those "fixes" for U.S. industry are protectionist measures.

We have heard the Opposition in the House, time after time in the last year or two, going on about these protectionist measures that U.S. congressmen implement, trying to blame them on us and the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, instead of blaming them on the U.S. system. How can they blame them on the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement when we have not yet got it? Why don't they support the agreement which will help protect us from these fixes?

Ambassador Gotlieb further stated:

> The free trade agreement will go a long way to substituting the rule of law for the politics of protectionism. For the smaller partner in the world's largest bilateral trading relationship, that will be a very significant achievement.

This is a man who knows. He has been on the scene for seven years. He was appointed to Washington by a Liberal Government, and continued on by our Government. We recognize merit when we see it. In addition, Mr. Gotlieb is a public servant. He knows the system, and his testimony is that it is a very significant achievement. That is what the free trade agreement is all about. Long-term solutions based on reciprocal principles, not raw political and economic power. We cannot win in the battle of raw political and economic power with the United States. It is ten times our size. If, by some misadventure, Mr. Turner got into office, or Mr. Broadbent, or a combination, say, Mr. Broadturn, or Mr. Benturn, or Mr. Turnbent, if a combination of those two parties got into office, can one see them taking on the United States with all its raw political and economic power? Can one see them engage in a battle?

While I think of it, Madam Speaker, I might point out that the Leader of the national Liberal Party suggested blithely that he will tear up the free trade agreement. This is the most irresponsible statement by a leader of a national Party since 1867. In fact, one would have to go back to Polybius in 50 B.C., or somewhere back beyond that to get a sillier statement. At different times he has said different things. He will negotiate a new free trade agreement, or he will negotiate a sectoral series of agreements, or he will take the trade personnel from External Affairs where Trudeau put them four or five years ago and put them back in the trade department. Imagine the astounding gall. The crowd that scrambled the eggs is now going to unscramble them and put them all back in a separate Department, and that will cure all Canada's trade problems.

Ann Hughes, a member of the American Government in the Trade Office in the United States spoke in Canada. She was asked whether there was any chance, if Canada turned down this U.S.- Canada Free Trade Agreement, that another one could be negotiated. She gave the perfect answer to that. She said that it would be disingenuous for anyone to think that if we turned down this arrangement there will be another one for many, many years. Disingenuous is putting it politely. It is dishonest to even suggest that it could be done.

Mr. Langdon: Good.

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) says: "Good". He does not want a trade agreement with the United States. This is astounding. The Hon. Member, who is from Windsor where the whole prosperity is based on Canada-U.S. trade, says that he does not want a trade agreement with the United States. This is astounding. This is academia gone nuts—academia nuts, I suppose, Madam Speaker.

Not only our security of access but our sovereignty is strengthened, as I said, by putting our trade relations with the U.S. on the basis of equally binding legal principles. Security of access means preserving Canadian jobs and industries that might be threatened in the future. It means preserving Canadian jobs. It means creating new jobs in Canada because of our more secure access to the United States market.

Alastair McEachen, President of the Retail Council of Canada, stated:

> There are a lot of investments, mostly European, waiting to be made in Canada once the free trade pact is in force. Canadian companies are also waiting for the free trade outcome before investing in their own operations.

Many investments are waiting to be made here. Who is keeping them waiting? The Opposition is keeping them waiting. Who is creating the uncertainty? The NDP and the Liberal Opposition is creating the uncertainty. Who is the worst offender? A man who should understand this. A man who went with McMillan, Binch and pretended to be au coeur, bosom to bosom with, and in sympathy with the business community of Canada for the years 1970-75—when he fled the scene here—until 1984. He should understand this.

Who is creating the delay and the uncertainty, preventing the investments from pouring in here now, and preventing Canadian businesses from getting ready to take advantage of the free trade agreement because they do not know when it is going to come into effect? It is the Leader of the Opposition, and I will touch on this a little later, who called on the Liberal majority in the Senate to say that they would not put this through until there was an election. We have no binding commitment that they will put it through if there is an election, Madam Speaker. I do not trust them one bit.

The damage that this is doing to Canadian business and industry is incalculable. They do not know whether they should be getting ready for January 1, 1989, for some time during 1989, or not getting ready at all because of the type of campaign waged by the NDP and the Liberal Party of Canada.

What of the charge that the free trade agreement means we are turning our backs on other markets such as the Pacific Rim and Europe? I will give the answer given by the Economic Council of Canada:

> Many believe that freer trade and expanded trade with the U.S. precludes expanded trade with other countries. There is no logical basis for this view. In fact, expansion of our exports sector to serve U.S. customers could well facilitate the economies of scale needed to reach more distant markets.

There is economic sense, logic, and an unbiased view of the Economic Council of Canada created by Liberal Governments to give impartial advice to Canadian Parliaments and Governments. Its advice is in direct contradiction to the opposition canards.

That is the case with the free trade agreement. It will benefit every region of Canada. It will create jobs, it will increase investment, and it will make Canada stronger. It will help us continue our development as a compassionate, dynamic, and distinctive society. That is what it will do.

While it is simple in its principles, the FTA is complex in its application, as we know in the House. It has to be complex because it is so comprehensive. The second major line of criticism offered by the Opposition, after claiming that the FTA sells out the country, and I have dealt with that, is to take the complexity and try to distort and misrepresent specific provisions of the agreement. There is not time for me to deal with all the distortions and misrepresentations. My colleagues will deal with many of them. I will deal with four. The first is the Quebec stock savings plan.

Three weeks ago the Leader of the Opposition stood in the House and charged that the Quebec stock savings plan was inconsistent with the national treatment provisions of the free trade agreement. He was completely and totally wrong. Premier Bourassa had to correct him and set him straight. He cited the sections of the agreement to him and embarrassed him. Never has a Canadian political leader been so embarrassed and caught out so far by a member of his own Party as was the Leader of the Opposition by Premier Bourassa.

I have a clipping here from The Globe and Mail of August 17, which states:

> Mr. Bourassa warned that he will defend the free trade agreement if it is attacked.
> "If there are errors in fact, concerning free trade or other things, I will maintain my position," he told reporters. "Neutrality does not mean inaction".

Premier Bourassa is going to be very, very busy during the coming campaign, because there are going to be many errors in fact spread by the Liberals and the New Democratic Party in their vicious and hysteric attempts to stop this agreement from going through. So that was the Québec stock savings plan.

• (1210)

On August 17 Mr. Turner rushed to Québec City to try to patch things up with Premier Bourassa. After they had met, Mr. Bourassa said that he would intervene only to correct misstatements as I have just quoted regarding the free trade agreement. He is going to be busy. Mr. Turner was chastened. He looked chastened. He looks very chastened. But, unwilling to let the point go, he said that future stock savings plans would be barred.

He tried to change it and to pretend that he was partly correct. Wrong again. Two wrongs do not make a right. His trade critic and he are speaking. Perhaps his trade critic does not know, either. He is blinded by unreasoning prejudice against the free trade agreement. The investment chapter of the agreement applies only to direct investment, not to portfolio investment. The Quebec stock savings plan is safe. Any stock savings plan is safe. The Leader of the Opposition is not safe. He is running around Canada being criminally negligent in what he says about the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and what he says about the Government and what he says about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He is criminally negligent in every word that he says when he is on the so-called campaign trail across Canada.

I advise the Leader of the Opposition to read the definition of investment on page 240 and 241 of the agreement. "Stock savings plans, present or future, Quebec or elsewhere, are not covered by the agreement". We have gone through the same thing on water, on blood. My God, Dracula is on the way from Romania, because there is going to be blood everywhere here in Canada, according to certain members of the Liberal Opposition. Blood is going to be sold. No more free blood.

Mr. Marchi: Political blood.

Mr. Crosbie: These are the kinds of fright tactics that have been raised against the free trade agreement. The second one that I am going to deal with is unemployment in fish processing.

On August 18 the Leader of the Opposition went to Newfoundland and made completely false statements. Incredible. He charged that Atlantic fish processing jobs are threatened by the free trade agreement. Wrong. Article 1203 of this agreement specifically includes controls on the export of unprocessed fish by Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, P.E.I. and Québec.

He went there and pointed to the fact that both Canada and the U.S. retained the GATT rights that they had before we entered the free trade negotiations, which is true. But, in a statement of administrative action, the U.S. has indicated to us that it will not challenge existing Atlantic fish processing regulations under GATT. So Atlantic fish processing jobs were never threatened. They were made more secure by the FTA.

The provisions are somewhat complex. To go and make a false statement is extremely simple. This is the technique that the Leader of the Opposition and the others have adopted. There are distortions and misrepresentations. Because the agreement is complex, it is not easy to explain the answer. It is the simple lie, the simple exaggeration, the simple allegation, and a complicated response has to be made, which is not easy for ordinary people to follow. That is the technique.

We all know who had those techniques before. I am not going to mention it. Sensibilities get too stirred up when we refer to who was a specialist in this kind of technique in the 1930s.

Atlantic fishery processing jobs were never threatened. They are made more secure by the FTA. Not only that, but the presidents of the two largest fish processing companies on the East Coast—in fact in Canada—Vic Young of Fishery Products and Gordon Cummings of National Sea, have said again and again that the free trade agreement is going to lead to more, not fewer, jobs in processing.

The Premiers of the provinces where the fish industries are strong support the agreement. How can the Leader of the Opposition go into such a milieu and make these kinds of false statements? Here are some of the other false statements that were made. "Many federal programs designed to assist Canadians may be challenged by the Americans under free trade". False. They can be challenged by the Americans now, they could have been challenged last year, five years ago, next year, but we are going to have some defences to these challenges in the future if the FTA is passed.

Here is what the Leader of the Opposition said according to the St. John's Evening Telegram:

> Any advantage, any grant, any incentive, any tax holiday or whatever given to a Canadian that is not available equally to an American will be considered to be an unfair subsidy.

A complete untruth. If it is said knowingly, we know what that means. I am not going to get into parliamentary niceties now. When I am outside this House and on the campaign trail, I am going to call a spade a spade. You cannot call a spade a spade in this House. You have to call it a heart. But outside, that is different. It is completely false. "Any grant, any incentive, any tax holiday, any advantage or whatever given to a Canadian not available equally to an American will be considered to be an unfair subsidy". It is totally false.

He told Carbonear residents, a major employer in the province's fishery industry, "We will be endangered by free trade". It is completely and utterly false. I am glad to see that the ranks of the Liberal Party have swelled by 25 per cent. There are four of them now that the Member has come in.

Electricity. Mr. Turner warned that other natural resources, such as hydroelectricity and offshore oil, will fall prey to the Americans. You can see the Americans coming over, taking our hydroelectricity and our oil. The poor dams are falling prey to the Americans as they do this. "As an example", he said, "that the agreement to develop the Hibernia oil through the Grand Banks will be overridden by the free trade agreement and it converts us into a continental reservoir in the United States".

I do not want to get involved in parliamentary vernacular and decorum. It is an untruth. Hibernia is not affected by the free trade agreement; it is grandfathered under the free trade agreement. It is affected by being given more assured access. The products from Hibernia will have more assured access to the U.S. market as a result of the agreement. That is one of the positive benefits of the agreement. It is not going to be overridden by the free trade agreement or converted into a continental reservoir of the United States. We will sell the oil to Canada for Canadians or to Americans or to Nicaraguans or to whoever we want to sell it to. We could sell it to the British or to whoever wants to buy the oil. This is a deliberate untruth.

He says:

> Under Section 4.08 and 4.09, all of our resources, renewable or non-renewable—hydro, water, coal, gas, wood—are swept into a continental reservoir with the United States . . . What's theirs is theirs, and what's ours has become theirs too.

An Hon. Member: What nonsense.

Mr. Crosbie: Is this the leader of a national Party? Is this a responsible person, addressing an audience in Carbonear and giving them this trash, this untruth, these diabolically false assertions, as to what happens to our resources? "What's theirs is theirs, and what's ours has become theirs too". Does a person like that think for one moment that he has a chance of becoming a leader of this country again? Not at all. Never. Not a chance.

Some Hon. Members: Never.

Mr. Crosbie: I can go on with further statements. The Liberal Leader said:

> Free trade may also mean the end of many of Canada's social programs such as Medicare.

It "may also mean the end". How could the free trade agreement also mean the end? This is the most diabolically vicious series of untruths spoken by a leader of a national Party of Canada in a hundred years, and he is not going to get away with it. He is not going to get away with it, not for one minute.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: That is what I call, in the last couple of quotes, a harmonization hoax. The Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party claim that we are compelled to bring our social programs into line with those in the U.S.

They claim that we will have to abandon regional development. They do not give any reason why we have to do this; they just announce it and try to pretend that this is so. This is part of that campaign. When you try to pin them down, they say that there is going to be more open competition between Canadian and U.S. firms. That is going to be the cause of this. That myth is exploded by the facts that I have given this morning, of the growth of social programs and regional development since World War II. It is at the same time that we were reducing our trade barriers with the U.S. All of these other things were burgeoning forth. It is going to continue that way. That is why we are going to always have improving child care systems, that is why we can have programs like the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. It is not disappearing; it is improving. It can only improve as long as we have the economic wealth to improve it, and we are only going to have the economic wealth to improve it if we can improve our access to the United States market. That is the sequence.

They point also to the negotiations over the next five to seven years on countervail and anti-dumping. What is anti-dumping? Anti-dumping is about selling goods for less in the other country's markets than in your own, so that cannot be the problem.

So then they point to countervail. What are countervailing duties? We use countervailing duties just as the Americans use them and every other country uses them. They are to protect a domestic industry from significant harm caused by unfair, trade-distorting subsidies given to foreign companies exporting into your market. If some foreign country exports into Canada at prices less than their costs or less than they sell at home, then we can bring in a countervailing duty, or if they subsidize their goods with unfair subsidies, trade-distorting subsidies, to compete in other countries, we can bring in a countervailing duty if we can prove it. The U.S. does it and we do it. It includes things like direct export subsidies.

For example, if Canada paid the producers of a widget 50 cents for every $1 widget to the United States, that would be a direct export subsidy. If the company exports its widgets to the United States, the Government will pay it 50 cents a widget, a direct export subsidy. The Americans would have a right to complain. It has nothing to do with medicare, child care, old age pensions, family allowances or social programs and has nothing to do with regional development programs of general application.

A general regional development program such as ACOA which is open to everyone, general application, cannot be challenged with countervailing actions, or it cannot be challenged successfully. Of course anything can be challenged. The point is, can it be done successfully?

We want to achieve a clear set of rules for countervail that prevents the kind of politicized decision-making we saw in the U.S. in the softwood lumber case. Binding dispute settlement is our main line of defence against those politicized decisions while we are working out the countervail rules with the Americans. If the Americans suggest, some time in the next five to seven years, some kind of distorted approach to those issues, we will simply say no. We will not agree to their suggestions. That is all we have to do, just say no. Nothing forces us to say yes.

The final representation I will deal with this morning is what I call the hijacking of the GATT. The Opposition claims the free trade agreement undermines the multilateral trading system that is so important for our access to global markets. That is not true. That is confirmed, of course, by Arthur Dunkel, the Secretary General of GATT. He has said that the free trade agreement will in no way hinder each country's trading obligations with the rest of the world.

We follow a two-track policy in trade negotiations. Bilaterally, with our largest trading partner, the U.S., we are improving the relationship by a bilateral agreement. Multilaterally, through the GATT, we are negotiating now with the GATT. I have been at several meetings myself. Our chief negotiator is Sylvia Ostry. We are going to Islamabad in the first couple of days of October to meet again with 22 other countries in preparation for the mid-December meeting in Montreal of all the GATT countries, the mid-way point of the Uruguay Round of GATT negotiations. We are pursuing a two-track policy.

We have achieved success in the bilateral negotiations with the U.S. We hope for a successful outcome in the MTN negotiations, but those are far from complete. They have another couple of years to go. We have to get 95 other countries to agree. GATT Article 24 specifically provides for free trade agreements between member countries and our agreement comes within GATT Article 24.

In June in Toronto, as we all remember, the seven leaders at the summit, our largest trading partners in Europe and Asia, strongly welcomed the free trade agreement and noted the contribution it would make to success in the multilateral trade negotiations. Our policy is two-track: one U.S.-Canada where 75 per cent to 80 per cent of our exports go, the other with the world.

Let me give the last word on the nature of the Opposition's criticism to a Liberal Senator. I will quote George Van Roggen, one of the most experienced and knowledgeable individuals on trade matters in Parliament. He is the Liberal Chairman of the Senate Committee and has been at dozens of Canada-U.S. parliamentary meetings. He is widely respected, but stabbed in the back by his Leader when his Leader made a statement calling on the Senate not to proceed with this agreement, not to give this a sober second look but to give it an inebriated no look at all, I suppose. Senator George Van Roggen has said:

> I think if it weren't for the verbal terrorism of the (free trade) opposition frightening people to death, the man in the street would be instinctively in favour of (the free trade agreement).

That is an exact description of it, verbal terrorism. Then he went on to say:

> That's the trouble here, the proponents are stuck with trying "to explain a difficult legal trade document while the opponents can sit back and make the most outrageous statements by pushing the right emotional buttons."

Senator Van Roggen is right, all the way from the sale of Canada to imperilling the very idea of Canada to the free trade agreement representing a fundamental change in the direction of the country to the stock savings plan falsehood to the fish processing falsehood to the harmonization falsehood to undermining the GATT falsehood to fabricated issues like blood and water. The Opposition has taken the low road. It has chosen to distort rather than to debate the issues. It has been a pusillanimous and discouraging exhibition on their part. I am going to talk bluntly here.

The Leader of the Opposition wants to tear up the free trade agreement and the Leader of the NDP wants to tear it down, the big difference between these two characters. One is an up tearer, the other is a down tearer. What do they say they are going to do instead? What is their alternative for Canada?

The most recent Liberal proposal was presented by the Leader of the Opposition to Mr. Bourassa on August 17. Mr. Bourassa was not buying it. He continues to support the free trade agreement. This latest Liberal proposal replaces one announced with much fanfare by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry who is a fandaglio of fanfare. On June 13, he had another fandango. First there was the announcement of June 13 by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry and no one bought that. Then the Leader of the Opposition had another plan. The latest plan had five points, three relating to trade, one relating to international monetary policy and one relating to domestic policy.

The Leader of the Opposition is supposed to be expert on world international monetary affairs because he was the Minister of Finance in the early 1970s. Michael Wilson knows more about it, has more knowledge of it in his little finger than the Leader of the Opposition has in his whole six-foot body. Michael Wilson got the other major countries of the world to agree on the G-7, including Canada, so that we participate in these monetary meetings. Michael Wilson is the Minister of Finance for the eighties.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe it is well known that we are not to refer to Members by their names but by their positions in Cabinet or their constituencies, and the Hon. Member has done this three times in a row without being rebuked by the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Minister is well aware of the rules and will abide by them.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, this is a very important point and I will be very, very careful in the future not to transgress.

Let me refer to the Halifax Herald Limited editorial of August 16, "Turner's trade gambit". After the Leader of the Opposition met with Mr. Bourassa, the editorial said:

> Indeed, even those who share the Liberal disdain for the trade agreement must be chagrined by the ground which is always shifting under the leader's feet.
> First, he wasn't too sure about the deal; next, he was going to rip it up; at one point, he was for free trade but not "this deal"; now, he wants a sectoral agreement and more trade with those Far Eastern countries with which Canada cannot possibly compete in several key areas of the economy.

That is a short and succinct description of the Liberal alternatives to the trade pact. I have not got time this morning to quote it, but I would refer Hon. Members to an article on the same subject by George Bain entitled "Turner's free trade package, is it funny or serious?", concluding that it was neither. It was pitiful. This appeared on August 20 in The Chronicle-Herald. He ends up by saying, "Fifth, in light of all that went before, Mr. Turner's talk about being willing to go back to sectoral free trade talks is hokum". That is another objective observer, the dean of Canadian newspaper columnists, George Bain. I recommend that as an excellent article.

Let me give just a couple of quick summations. June 14, "Turner rules out trade pact if Liberals govern", says an article in The Financial Post: "Turner made it clear yesterday that he opposes any bilateral free trade deal with the U.S., as he unveiled an alternative economic and trade strategy. The Liberal proposal was contained in a report by a task force chaired by Liberal trade critic, Lloyd Axworthy. The Liberal alternative calls for a strengthening of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade".

Now, imagine! For two years the world has been trying to strengthen GATT. It was our Minister, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, who went to Uruguay with the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) and were very helpful if not largely instrumental in getting the countries there to agree to start the process of negotiating on GATT again, the Uruguay round. Two years later comes the great Liberal alternative. What are they calling for? A strengthening of GATT? Is that not marvellous? We have been trying to do this for the last two years. It took two years for that to sink in to the Johnny-come-latelys and the mind of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry and get him all excited about it.

Here is something else from a CP report: "A future Liberal Government wouldn't seek new bilateral trade agreements with the U.S. or any other country, Liberal trade critic Lloyd Axworthy said today. He said the cornerstone of the Liberal trade policy issued in the June 13 report is a rejection of comprehensive two-way trade deals of the kind negotiated by the Conservative Government. The Party is committed to liberalizing trade with the U.S. and the rest of the world but on a multilateral basis or individual sectors such as the 1965 Canada-U.S. Auto Pact. We are not talking about signing individual free trade agreements, said Axworthy".

Then we go to The Globe and Mail of June 27 and discover a new trade critic for the Liberal Party. We have surprise announcements made by the MP for Montreal—Sainte-Marie

(Mr. Malépart). He said: "The Liberals would tell Canadians we won't negotiate one deal with the U.S. but several deals with other countries. We won't put all your eggs in one basket. Eventually Mr. Turner will make public a series of principles of accord on which any Liberal free trade deals could be based".

This is the Malépart version. He said: "This thing wasn't dreamed up overnight and dropped on the caucus just like that, said Mr. Malépart, the MP for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. It was worked out after a lot of thought. We relied heavily on findings of various public opinion polls".

Oh, is that what the task force was doing, looking at all the little public opinion polls to see what their tatterdemalion trade policy should be and then support strengthening the GATT two years after the process started?

The Ottawa Citizen of June 14: "A liberal government would not only scrap the free trade agreement with the United States but would not try to renegotiate in hopes of striking a better deal". That is very sensible. Not only going to scrap it, they will not even renegotiate it. This is John Turner: "At a news conference Turner said the deal is not negotiable". This is truly incredible. That is the policy, apparently, but it changes every couple of days. Then we have John Ferguson from Southam News on June 14 who did an analysis of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry's pronouncement, and I highly recommend everyone in the House read this. He says: "But if Canada isn't going to take on the U.S., where else are we going to peddle our wares? Well, it is all laid out in a new trade policy of the Liberals released Wednesday".

We are going to conquer the world, that is what the Liberals are going to do. It says: "The Liberals think we will get clobbered in any head-on competition with the Americans under free trade but we're going to knock them dead in a Pacific Rim, bowl them over in Europe, and have them begging for mercy in Latin America". All we have to do is follow these simple steps. These are the simple Axworthy steps: "Shake up the bureaucracy again to recreate the old department of industry and trade".

You know, the ones the Liberals uncreated in 1982 to move all the trade people over to the Department of External Affairs. That was a jim-dandy. That is going to revolutionize the world. Yes, Sir, we are going to be able to knock them dead in the Pacific Rim when we do that, bowl them over in Europe and have them begging for mercy in Latin America. Funny, in 1982 they told us that making trade part of External would "result in a greater priority in trade objectives, in the conduct of our international relations, give greater emphasis to the international marketing of resources and services, and strengthen Canada's ability to adapt to change in world economic conditions". Where was the Hon. Member in 1982? Why, he was in the Trudeau cabinet that was scrambling up the trade department, putting it into External Affairs, which this year he says he is going to unscramble and put back because this will enable us to take on and conquer the world. That is some policy.

Then he goes on to analyse. Research and development, that part of the GNP which goes to that, will be increased. They are going to go to Geneva where the negotiations on GATT are taking place and convince the Americans to change their trade laws so that any company losing a countervailing duty case would be required to pay the legal costs of importers who have to defend themselves. How are they going to persuade the Americans to do all these things? Having slapped them in the chops, having torn up the free trade agreement, having told the U.S. we do not care about them, having said we could care less about them, you are going to go GATT where 95 nations are present and tell the Americans what they are going to do, how they are going to change their trade law to allow higher levels of subsidies on imported goods into the U.S.? Has there ever been such a travesty of a trade policy put forward by anyone in any form in such a shape that is so laughable and so ludicrous if it was not so dangerous?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The Liberals hope to improve especially the GATT dispute settlement mechanism, and so do we. We started the process two years ago. In mid-December we will be having the mid-term meeting of the 95 GATT countries in Montreal trying to achieve those objectives, having done two years of work getting ready for it. We both have the same objectives there.

We have taken a lead role in the working group which is now seeking to improve the dispute settlement under GATT. Peter Bentley, Chairman of Canfor in B.C., pointed out:

> We have no assurance about when the current Uruguay round of GATT will be completed.

Remember that. No assurance on when it will be completed. It could take years. He says:

> In the meantime we could find ourselves in the embarrassing position of being unemployed and bankrupt if U.S. protectionism prevails before this event took place.

That is a perfect answer to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry's so-called trade policy, dependence on GATT. We could all find ourselves in the embarrassing position of being unemployed and bankrupt if U.S. protectionism prevails before this event took place. That is what the honourable gentleman wants Canadians to do, throw aside the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement that would give them some protection and wait and wait and wait for 95 countries to agree at GATT. It is astounding. Premier Bourassa said this:

> There is no contradiction between having multilateral trade and having a free trade treaty with the United States.

My comprehension of, my appreciation and admiration for Premier Bourassa goes up day after day. He might be a Liberal but, by God, he has his head screwed on right. Gerry Regan is a Liberal but his head is screwed on right. Donald Macdonald is a Liberal but his head is screwed on right.

George Van Roggen is a Liberal but his head is screwed on right. In addition to that, he has a backbone. There are many Liberals that are not going to swallow this stuff. We can and should have the benefits of both bilateral and multilateral trading arrangements.

Now the Liberals say they will seek sectoral free trade agreements with the U.S., not a comprehensive trade agreement as has been negotiated. That is something new. That did not appear in the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry's statement of June 14. It came up since, as I explained. The sector-by-sector approach was tried in 1983-1984 and it did not work. I have the reasons here. I won't read them now because of the time I have taken, but at page 10 of the transcript of Gerry Regan's broadcast on CTV, CJOH, April 10, 1988, he explains why the sector-by-sector approach did not work and could not work and will not work now. It will not work because the U.S. wanted to negotiate in sectors in which they believed they had an advantage while Canada wanted to negotiate in sectors in which we thought we had an advantage, and we could get nowhere.

In addition, if you did work out a sectoral agreement you had to have special permission from the other member states in GATT. GATT does not allow sectoral free trade agreements between members. It only allows comprehensive agreements such as we have negotiated with the U.S. Gerry Regan said:

> When I was a member of Mr. Trudeau's Government, I recognized the importance of obtaining better guarantees of access to the vital American market . . . I have come to the conclusion that the present free trade project is a more meaningful, courageous and important undertaking . . . more important than our limited negotiations in (1983-84).

The third element of the latest Liberal plan was to emphasize trade with Europe and the Pacific Rim. We did that in 1985. In our national trade strategy we established a major new initiative directed toward the Pacific. Where has the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry been for the last four years? Where was he when the then Minister for International Trade, the Member for Vancouver Centre, was adopting this new national trade policy, this major new initiative directed to the Pacific?

We have established new trade offices in Osaka, Shanghai, Bombay, and Auckland. Where were they when this was going on? They have now adopted this as a brave new policy when we already did this three years ago. Partly as a result, our trade with Japan is surging. It now accounts for $15 billion a year. The recent dramatic rise in our exports to Japan has re-established our trade surplus with that vital trading partner. Where was the great trade critic of the Liberal Party when all of this was going on? Why does he only wake up after the fact and discover what is happening in the Pacific Rim and what we have done, which our predecessor Government did not do? What a dynamite policy the hon. gentleman came forward with.

The idea that we can increase trade with other countries to substitute trade with the U.S. runs contrary to the plain facts of commerce and geography. Mr. Diefenbaker wanted to increase our share of trade with Great Britain instead of the United States and it did not work. Mr. Trudeau had a third option in the early seventies. He wanted to direct us away from the U.S. to Europe. It did not work. The sensible goal is a balanced trade strategy, which is what we are pursuing. We are seeking new markets where there is an opportunity to do so. That is called common sense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The Liberal alternative to the FTA is not an alternative at all. It ignores the threat of U.S. protectionism. It expresses high hopes for what the MTN may be able to achieve if 95 member states agree, and it ignores the benefits in terms of security of access and dispute achievement settlement achieved under the free trade agreement. About this The Ottawa Citizen said:

> The five-point plan the Liberal leader would implement as Prime Minister would replace the free trade deal with a rehash of tried and failed policies and motherhood statements about improving the international economy.

Right on, Ottawa Citizen. La Presse was equally harsh. It said:

> The Turner alternative is nothing more than an unrealistic mumbo-jumbo of mercantilism and unthinking optimism.

The key to understanding the Liberal alternative is contained the words which I quoted earlier of the Member for Montreal—Saint-Marie. He said that this was not dreamed up overnight, that it was worked out after a lot of thought and that they relied heavily on findings of various public opinion polls.

Do the people of Canada want to place their trust in a national Party that designs its trade strategy based on opinion polls instead of analysis of what exporters need to get the job done? Do you think that is what they want?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Crosbie: Are you sure?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Crosbie: Do they want to place their trust in a national Party that cooks up two alternatives in less than three months?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Crosbie: Are you sure?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Crosbie: In perfect agreement.

I have one last topic I want to address in this debate, that being the conduct of the opposition Parties in Parliament in seeking to block the free trade agreement. The NDP have obstructed the process of this House at every step. Bill C-130 was held up for three weeks on specious procedural grounds. Debate in the House was delayed by recorded votes on the first reading of NDP Private Members' Bills on such matters as naming hockey Canada's national sport or marking the anniversary of the signing of the Magna Carta.

By the way, hockey is quite a pertinent issue because I heard the other day that the Leader of the New Democratic Party wants to make the national sport, not hockey but rowing. He wants Canadians sitting on their backsides going backwards. It is pretty cheap to bring in a Private Members' Bill to make hockey our national sport in order to cover that up.

Those are the kinds of procedural steps the NDP took in order to prevent us from getting to this debate. They have not tried to debate any substance, only unfounded fears. All the time Members of the NDP were proclaiming that they were prevented from serious debate on the free trade agreement, these were their tactics.

When they and the Liberals were asked how much time they wanted for report stage and third reading, they said 350 days, more time than is left in the life of this Parliament. Imagine the two opposition Parties asking for 350 days of debate on report stage and third reading. Then they could not scruff up enough speakers for the days that we did have.

The NDP tampered with and misused the rules of Parliament, although they did stay within them. Unlike the Liberals, the NDP did not resort to corruption of the conventions of our Constitution, corruption of the conventions of Parliament.

The Leader of the Opposition returned to political life in 1984 and offered himself as a man of principle, a man coming out of the wilderness to cleanse Canada. He was going to bring much needed change to the nation by his leadership. He did not agree with the direction in which Mr. Trudeau had led the Party. He had been in Winston's on Bay Street since 1975 meeting with the people who he now excoriates. He was going to sweep away the old gang from the Trudeau years. He was going to bring a fresh new approach to the Liberal Party of Canada.

Where is he today? He is back in the hands of the politicians and back-room boys placed in the Senate at the behest of the Prime Minister he succeeded, the very people appointed to the Senate by then Prime Minister Trudeau or by the Leader of the Opposition in the few days that he was Prime Minister. He has put this whole issue and himself right back in their hands. He has fallen into the same tactics of trading in fear which were used by the Liberals in the 1974 election when they said "Zap, you're frozen" on the campaign trail. When they got into office they instituted wage and price controls. Mr. Turner is following in the exact tradition of the politicians who did that.

Who are those back-room boys who are now in the Senate and how long are they going to be there? Senator Gigantes will be there until 1999. Senator Jerry Grafstein will be there until 2010. Senator Marsden will be there till 2017, Senator Graham till 2004, Senator Hébert till 1998, and it will be 2018 when Senator Kirby from Mr. Trudeau's office has to retire. Senator Kenny will be there until 2018. Senator MacEachen will be there until 1996, Senator Pitfield until 2012, Senator Frith until 1998, and Senator Fairbairn will be there until 2014. Senator Stollery will be there until 2010, Senator Romeo Leblanc will be there until 2002, and Senator Davey until 2001. It seems as though he has been there an eternity now. Senator Jack Austin will be there until 2007, Senator Cools will be there until 2018, Senator Corbin will be there until the year 2009, and Senator de Bané will be there until 2013.

The situation is that the Liberal Party has told Canadians that it will govern Canada if elected with a majority to the House of Commons. They said that they have governed Canada for most of this long, interminable century because they have been given a majority in the House of Commons. They say that they are going to govern when they have a majority in the House of Commons and that they are going to govern when Canadians give someone else a majority in the House of Commons because they are Liberals, only they can govern the country, only they have the brains, the magnetism, the intelligence, and the arrogance to govern this Canada. They are going to govern it from the Senate where they have a majority of Liberal Senators until the year 2008. If everyone in the Senate today lives to be 75 and stays in their position in the Senate, the Liberals will have a majority in the Senate until the year 2008.

The Leader of the Opposition has told us, and it has been confirmed by Senator MacEachen and the Liberals in the Senate, that they will determine the policy of Canadians as long as they have a majority in the Senate. They say: "We do not care who elects a majority in the House of Commons, we do not care what their policy choices are". If it is the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and they do not like it, they will change it. They do not care if it is the immigration laws. If they do not like the suggestions of the people for whom the electorate was dumb enough to vote in the majority in 1984, they will change them. They say: "If we do not like anything you propose we, the Liberals in the Senate, will change it".

Now the free trade agreement is coming before the Senate. Although the Liberal majority in the Senate believes in free trade and believes in the free trade agreement, they will say no to free trade. They will tell us that we must have an election. We are not to be governed by the ordinary rules that govern Liberal Prime Ministers. We will be governed by the Liberal Senate.

They say: "We, the Liberal Party of Canada, are going to decide". That is what the Leader of the Opposition is telling Canadians. The slogan is not "let the people decide", it is "let the Liberal Party of Canada decide". Let the Liberal Party of Canada violate all the conventions of the Constitution.

Is this country run by a democratic parliamentary system or is there a Liberal tyranny in this country in which a government can never be changed because they will have a majority in the Senate forever? When the Conservatives or someone else comes to power, they will not decide the important issues of the day. That is what the Leader of the Opposition is telling us. The Canadian people will be asked whether they agree with this. What system will we have in this country?

I know what the Canadian people will determine. Do the people of Canada agree that Senator Kirby, of the Machiavelli memorandum, should govern Canada until the year 2016? Was he elected by the people of Canada to govern? Was Senator Kenny elected to govern until the year 2018? Was Allan MacEachen elected to govern until the year 1996?

They were not elected to govern. They were turfed out, turned out, tired out. They were put up in the second house of sober second thought. Where is the sober second thought for the free trade agreement?

The man who came back in 1984 said that he would cleanse the Liberal Party and brush aside all the old gang, the bureaucrats and Trudeaucrats in the smoke-filled rooms. The same group are now governing Canada. The Trudeaucrats who the Leader of the Opposition was going to eliminate from public life in order to cleanse the Liberal Party are those to whom he is now appealing in his final abject surrender to the desire for power. He is now appealing to them for help.

We will see what the Canadian people want. I cannot wait to get this question into the hands of the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The Governor General of Canada does not rule Canada only because of the conventions of the Constitution. She has the legal power to dismiss the Government today and rule by fiat. The Queen in England has the same right. Our system is democratic only because of these conventions that have governed us. There have been the conventions since the early 1900s that the Senate does not prevent legislation from going through the Senate when it has been passed by the elected House of Commons of this country. Anything contrary to that is contrary to the democratic system. I would expect the New Democratic Party to agree with that.

The Leader of the Opposition has sunk to the level of calling on Senators to abandon their conventional roles under the Constitution in the pursuit of partisan advantage. Are Liberal Senators giving sober second thought? Are they representing regional interests when they agree to obey the directions of an opposition leader to block an initiative that the House of Commons has approved? Of course not. The arrogance of the Trudeaucrats knows no bounds. After being defeated at the polls, they will rule from the Senate. They can do so for at least another two decades. However, the responsibility is not theirs. It is the Leader of the Opposition who is responsible for falling in with their schemes and making the suggestion to them.

The Opposition has and continues to play on the fears of Canadians. Canadians are more confident and more capable of seeing through the distortions and the misrepresentations spun by the Opposition than the Opposition believes. Canadians are bigger than the scare tactics of the Opposition.

The Government was elected to provide leadership to the nation in the face of changing circumstances and to take advantage of the opportunities that arise. That is what this Government has done. It has provided the leadership in seeking the achievement of a free trade agreement with the United States when the opportunity arose. It arose because our Prime Minister had a good, valid and valuable relationship with the President of the United States. We seized that opportunity and we have this agreement. A group of people who do not want the national interest to interfere with their insatiable lust for power are doing everything they can to prevent that.

This Government has provided the leadership in seeking and achieving a free trade agreement with the United States. We are proud of our record. We are confident that when Canadians are called on to decide in an election, they will support the Government and the free trade agreement. This Government is the free trade agreement. There is no free trade agreement without this Government. In the organized political Parties, we are its only friend. We are the free trade agreement, and Canadians will not forget that.

Free trade can only be achieved with a majority Progressive Conservative Government. It cannot be achieved with a minority. It cannot be achieved any other way. We are the only way to a brighter tomorrow for Canadians. We are confident in Canada, confident in Canadians, confident in ourselves and confident in our leader. We are coming, and we are many millions strong.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, in view of the time, I wonder if I might call it one o'clock and resume debate this afternoon?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE LATE JEAN MARCHAND

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): We were sorry and saddened to learn yesterday of the death of Jean Marchand, a committed trade unionist and the most passionate of the "three wise men", a great Liberal.

Allow me, to quote an excerpt from the tribute to him by Alain Leduc in this morning's La Presse.

> With Jean Marchand's death, we have lost one of the men who shaped modern Quebec, one of the architects of the Quiet Revolution, without which we would not be what we are today.
> But Jean Marchand's major contribution is still little known by more than half of Quebecers.
> Since they only know of the federal Minister and then Senator, they do not appreciate the debt they owe someone like Jean Marchand.
> As president of the CNTU, he was also a pioneer of the Quiet Revolution and a partner in its reforms, from the creation of the Department of Education to the unionization of public servants.
> He showed the same energy and the same passion when he moved to the federal arena in 1965. He fought for a strong Canada and the defence of bilingualism in Canada and, as Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, against regional inequalities.
> But it would do an injustice to Mr. Marchand's memory not to mention the sometimes strong reactions he aroused. His conflicts matched his image of a combative, fiery, emotional man, not a politician ready to make concessions to please. Mr. Marchand was a courageous militant, ready to fight for his convictions, even if they went against conventional wisdom.
> There are few Quebecers whom one can call without exaggeration the Fathers of modern Quebec. There are barely a handful, and Jean Marchand is one of them. And that is why we owe this pioneer our respect and our gratitude.

So to this passionate wise man and great Liberal, I say thanks!

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

PRESENCE OF PCBS IN HYDRO TRANSFORMERS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday a truck knocked over a hydro pole in Toronto causing PCB-laced oil to spill from a hydro transformer. Hydro officials said there was no need for alarm because the PCB levels in transformers are low and the oil coolant is pretty well safe.

There are two transformers on the hydro pole across the street from my own home. No doubt, they contain PCBs as well. Although PCBs have been banned in Canada for the past 11 years, there are still lots of them around in hydro transformers.

The National Research Council and Atomic Energy of Canada now say they know how to get rid of PCBs. I trust that even though the PCB levels in hydro transformers are low, we will get rid of them as well.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CFPR PRINCE RUPERT—PLANNED STAFF REDUCTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the statutory mandate of CBC requires that service be extended to all parts of Canada as public funds become available. The Conservative Government has hacked and slashed CBC's budget, making extensions of service impossible. CBC proposed a plan to the CRTC earlier this year which included the reduction of staff at Prince Rupert from 14 to two persons to allow extensions of service elsewhere in British Columbia. This plan was turned down.

On November 12, 1987, Pierre Juneau and again before the CRTC Michael McEwan, vice-president of CBC, stated that the plan was all or nothing. CBC now plans to reduce Prince Rupert to four staff and sell the assets anyway.

On December 2, 1987, Pierre Juneau, President of CBC, wrote to me stating that there was an undertaking with Treasury Board that "in the period of cuts to capital and operating funds, there would be no extensions of service", and that any funds would be for maintaining existing locations. The Standing Committee of the House concluded that storefronting should not be done at the expense of the existing stations such as CFPR.

The Minister has three choices, first, put forward the necessary funds for service extensions in Victoria, Kelowna, Kamloops and Prince George, while fully maintaining CFPR; second, fire Pierre Juneau and Michael McEwan for lying or, three, resign herself for failing to uphold her statutory mandate and Treasury Board undertakings.

YOUTH

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON HOSTELLING

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, last weekend it was my pleasure to represent the Minister responsible for Youth (Mr. Charest) at the thirty-seventh International Conference on Hostelling which was held at the University of Calgary. Present were 240 delegates from 60 countries and this was the first time in 80 years of hostelling that the conference was held in Canada.

It was a fitting area for the conference because Canadian hostelling was commenced in 1933 at Bragg Creek, Alberta, by two dynamic ladies who erected a tent and charged a 25 cents overnight fee. It was the first hostel in North America.

One of the ladies, Miss Mary Barclay, was present at the conference and was honoured by the delegates.

The Canadian Hostelling Association and Canada's fitness and tourism programs are complementary. Besides attracting to Canada hundreds of youths from around the world, it is an instrument of understanding and peace, blended with environmental appreciation. I compliment the Canadian Hostelling Association and urge the Government to continue and increase its financial support to this splendid organization.

ABORTION

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has breached another very firm commitment to the people of Canada. He committed himself to introduce legislation on abortion prior to the next general election campaign. Yesterday, seven full months after the Supreme Court of Canada rendered its decision in the Morgentaler case, the Prime Minister said he is going to wait for the results of the Borowski case.

Two months ago the Government went to the Supreme Court of Canada, asking the Supreme Court to postpone the Borowski case until Parliament had an opportunity to deal with the issue. The Prime Minister is now telling us that Parliament needs the guidance of the Court and he is postponing the introduction of legislation pending the results of the Borowski case.

The net effect of the new position of the Prime Minister of Canada is that we will not have legislation introduced until at least two years down the road. The Court is hearing the case in October and it is unlikely to render a decision until at least the following year. This is another example of a broken promise by the Prime Minister of Canada. He has a lot of explaining to do. He has to explain to the people of Canada his about-face on this very crucial issue which faces the country. The reality is that the Prime Minister lacks the courage and conviction to introduce legislation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BURUNDI—CONTINUATION OF RACIAL VIOLENCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, since its independence in 1962, the history of Burundi has been marred by one intertribal massacre after another. After the slaughter of 2,000 Tutsis in 1972, 200,000 Hutus were massacred in a period of only six weeks. Racial violence continues today. In the last few weeks over 5,000 people have been killed and 100,000 have been made homeless. The army has been deeply implicated in the killing.

Mankind ought not to tolerate human rights violations on such a massive scale. Canada should press the United Nations to conduct an independent investigation and to take action to stop the genocide.

ABORTION

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in a CBC interview last night the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) continued in his failure to provide leadership on the subject of abortion. He talked about abortion as being a question of personal decision for Members of Parliament when it comes to voting, but did not recognize the more basic personal decision women must make. What a double standard.

The Prime Minister defends the rights of Members of Parliament to vote on the basis of a personal moral decision, yet he stays silent on the question of the right of a woman to make a personal moral decision as to whether or not she should have an abortion.

No wonder that Ruth Evans of the United Church said last week that Canadians do not trust the Mulroney Government to come up with a workable solution on abortion. She said: "Mulroney, in particular, has not shown any clear leadership". It is not enough to say this is a difficult moral issue. He now wants to postpone any decision on abortion until after the election and hide his Government's position. The Conservative Government must tell the Canadian people what it plans to do on the question of abortion.

THE PRESS

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF EDITOR OF INDO CANADIAN TIMES

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, just a few days ago a 17-year old male was charged in the shooting of Tara Singh Hayer, the editor of the Indo Canadian Times, the largest Punjabi newspaper in B.C. A few days prior to the assassination attempt, a report from London, England, said that Hayer was one of the men targeted for a $50,000 contract killing because of his political views.

In Canada freedom of speech is the cornerstone of our democracy. Canadians have fought and died in two world wars to preserve this right. The printed and electronic media are free to venture any opinion on any topic without fear of endangering one's physical well-being. Assassination as a means of terminating political dissent is a tactic used by brutally repressive dictatorial regimes, of which we have many.

Any individual who uses violence to suppress freedom of speech must be severely punished. Canadians will not tolerate any attempts to subvert democracy.

FISHERIES

SITUATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR INSHORE FISHERMEN

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, hundreds of inshore fishermen in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador continue to receive no positive response whatsoever from the Government of Canada to their request for assistance after having a disastrous season this year in the inshore fishery. Indeed, organizers today in western Newfoundland, in the community of Corner Brook, a city 150 miles south of the northern peninsula, are putting together food to be sent to the northern peninsula to be distributed at the first food bank ever on the Great Northern Peninsula of Newfoundland.

We saw last week that the National Citizens Coalition, a right wing group in this country, awarded a $10,000 prize to the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), a cabinet Minister, for espousing the views of the National Citizens Coalition. The Minister says he wants to put it to work for a good cause. He will give it to the Tory Party—a back-door contribution. If he really wants to contribute it to a good cause, let him give it to the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland whom he is ignoring, and who have had no response, and who are trying to put food on the table. That is a good and worthy cause.

ABANDONMENT OF FRANQUET-CHAPAIS SUBDIVISION—REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, since March 1986, I have been working with CN employees, Denis Lamarche, the Railway Network Committee of the CRDAT and municipal and economic partners in the Abitibi region, to fight against the abandonment of the Franquet-Chapais subdivision.

I received a copy of a letter dated August 16, 1988, sent by François Gendron, Quebec MNA for Abitibi West, to the Canadian Transport Commission, in which Mr. Gendron opposed CN's application in the following terms: "The application by CN would jeopardize the mining potential of this part of the region."

In a letter sent on August 27 this year to the federal Minister of Transport, Marc-Yvan Côté maintained that "the abandonment of the Franquet-Chapais subdivision will, in the medium term lead, to a considerable rise in the cost of transportation between the Chapais-Chibougamau mines and the Noranda smelter".

Mr. Speaker, since 1986 I have spoken many times about this matter, both in the House and in the Standing Committee on Transport, and I repeat that Quebec is disavadvanted compared to Western Canada. I would ask the Minister of Transport for a moratorium on all applications for abandoning CN subdivisions in this country and I would ask the Government of Canada to grant CN a subsidy of $5 million for repairs and maintenance on the Franquet-Chapais subdivision in Abitibi.

PORTS

PORT OF CHURCHILL—LACK OF GRAIN SHIPMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as of today there is no grain being shipped through the Port of Churchill. There are no commitments from the Government to ensure that that will happen.

Last June I wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asking for his personal intervention in this matter. He in turn referred the matter to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) who responded to me indicating that he himself would not get involved.

Since the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds is a Manitoba Member of Parliament I believe it is his duty to make sure that there is grain shipped through the Port of Churchill. I call his lack of action a real treason to his own province and to the people in Manitoba of all three political Parties who believe that grain should be shipped through that port. I call upon him to act.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

VISIT TO SUBMARINE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, at the invitation of the Department of National Defence, I had an opportunity, as so many other Members of this House, to visit one of our Canadian Forces submarines last Thursday. Upon consulting the log, I found, to my surprise, that not a single Liberal or Socialist Member had dared visit the submarine, and this while both the Liberal and Socialist Leaders, in accordance with the respective programs of their Parties, are against nuclear subs.

Mr. Speaker, before speaking out against the submarines, it would perhaps have been better for both Leaders to visit our submarines and see for themselves the competence of our men and, by the same token, realize that our fleet of submarines is in need of immediate modernization, to bring the fleet up to the level of the and skills of men who have been trained to operate the best.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

COMPANY PENSION PLAN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, when the Progressive Conservatives were elected in 1984 one of the expectations that they created at that time was that they would act to do something about the long-standing complaints many CN pensioners have about their pension plan. We know that there was a subcommittee which heard from a great many witnesses and which made some recommendations. The recommendations of that subcommittee were not completely satisfactory to a great many CN pensioners, but they would have been better than nothing if they had been implemented.

The fact of the matter is that we are now on the eve of another election. We have all that many more people out there on CN pensions, and still we have no action from the Government. I think something we should all keep in mind is that these kinds of promises were made in 1984. Here we are in the fall of 1988 and not a blessed thing has been done about the CN pension plan, something that has been crying out for action for years.

SAFER PCB MANAGEMENT URGED

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, PCB, polychlorinated biphenyl, is a very dangerous chemical compound used as a coolant, primarily in transformers.

The recent incident at Saint-Basile-le-Grand, where PCB contaminated oil burned and released dangerous chemicals such as dioxin into the environment, is a dangerous and very serious situation. When ingested in small quantities they are fatal.

Although PCBs have been banned from use since 1977, many are still in use, and many storage sites exist with used PCB contaminated oil. They can and should be destroyed.

I call upon the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to take the lead and to convene a meeting of his provincial counterparts, industry users, and scientists, to deal immediately with a plan of action for safer PCB management.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, free flowing water is not a part of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States. Those who says it is often quote Article 105. Sir, let me quote Article 105 to the House and to the Canadian public. It states:

> Each Party shall, to the extent provided in this Agreement, accord national treatment with respect to investment and to trade in goods and services.

The operative word is "trade". How can you give national treatment in trade, Mr. Speaker, to something you do not trade—I repeat, do not trade? What nonsense their arguments really are.

Mr. Speaker: There is agreement among all Parties to have certain statements made, and I know that Hon. Members would want to hear first from the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

THE LATE JEAN MARCHAND

TRIBUTE TO A GREAT CANADIAN

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Today I wish to pay tribute to a man who made a great contribution to the lives of all Canadians. With the passing of Jean Marchand, we have lost one of the men who made Canada and Quebec what they are today.

Mr. Marchand was not just a remarkable politician, he was also a leading light of trade unionism. He was tireless in his defence of great causes, and he has left Canadians an impressive heritage. We all know that he fought for a strong Canada. We are also to a large extent indebted to him for introducing bilingualism, cast in the image of our country. Mr. Speaker, today we have lost a fighter, a man of exceptional courage, without whom Canada and Quebec would not be what they are now.

The Late Jean Marchand

Those who like myself had the privilege of knowing Mr. Marchand were able to appreciate his many qualities as a politician and his dedication to great causes. Within the Liberal Party, Mr. Marchand was well known for his political acumen and his leadership qualities. He was a man of rare eloquence who had the courage of his convictions. In a nutshell, he was a remarkable Quebecer and a great Canadian whom we shall always remember with great pride.

On behalf of the Liberal Party, I wish to offer our sincere condolences to his daughter, Marie Eve. Canada has lost one of its great men.

[English]

We are saddened by the untimely death of Jean Marchand. We offer our condolences to his daughter and to his family. With the passing of Jean Marchand Canada has lost one of its great men.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State for Canada): On behalf of the Government, I would like to join those who today mourn the passing of a man with a great heart and a political leader who put his stamp on Canadian society.

Jean Marchand was involved in every debate of any consequence in the recent history of Quebec and Canada. He was part of a generation that, from the forties onward, struggled to put Quebec on the road to social justice.

As president of one of the most important labour congresses of Quebec, he was at the heart of the battle fought by workers, for recognition of their rights and human dignity from Asbestos to Murdochville.

In the sixties, his thirst for justice made him enter the political arena and without fanfare but with passion and skill, he stood up for the rights of Francophones at the federal level and in Canadian society. In addition he was one of the progressive elements of the Government of which he was a member.

He decided to maintain his allegiance to both Quebec and Canada in the federal Government. With typical courage and honesty, he fought his difficult struggle to the very end, because Jean Marchand was, above all, a man of passion to whom politics was nothing if not commitment. This man, who had known and experienced our political travail, knew that somewhere, over and above political confrontation and party lines, there was a common ground for men and women of good will, whether they were from Quebec, Manitoba, Ontario, New Brunswick or elsewhere.

For him, the noise and clamour of social and political struggle have now faded away. May he receive from us this final expression of friendship and may he depart from us a serene and respected man.

• (1420)

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Jean Marchand was an outstanding Canadian who never did things by halves. He was a man of passion who fought ceaselessly for what he believed in, whether it was the rights of Quebec workers or the Canada to which he dedicated his entire political life.

He did not wait to see whether a cause would be popular. He made up his own mind and plunged into the fray. Everyone in his beloved province of Quebec and elsewhere in this country always knew what Jean Marchand was trying to do.

[English]

Sometimes wrong, more often right, this warm, courageous man served his country and his province with great distinction. Canada and Quebec have lost a relentless voice for social justice.

On behalf of all members of my Party I send our deepest condolences to his daughter, Marie Eve.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): As one who had the opportunity of working very closely with Mr. Marchand in my capacity as opposition transport critic while he was the Minister of Transport, I would like to join with my colleagues in the House of Commons in expressing my personal sympathy and condolence to members of the Marchand family on his untimely passing.

He was a man for whom my respect and admiration grew with each encounter. He was a tough, skilled, and very articulate debater. As The Gazette observed this morning, he loved a good fight. He was an exceptional orator. He spoke with conviction, and with emotion. He knew what he wanted, and he articulated it in a very precise way.

He fought for a better Canada. He fought for justice and equity. He was welcome in all parts of Canada, and particularly in western Canada. To western Canada he was a friend. He spoke to westerners, as he spoke to other Canadians, with sincerity and with honesty.

We may have not always liked what we heard from him, but we always knew that he was frank and that he spoke with conviction from the heart. He was trusted and, as I said, always welcome.

Jean Marchand was a nation builder. He was a great parliamentarian, a great Quebecer, and a great Canadian. I personally mourn his loss, and I am sure it is shared by all westerners.

Mr. Speaker: It would be appropriate if Hon. Members stood for one minute's silence.

[Editor's Note: Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

WINNIPEG—STORAGE OF PCBS IN RAILWAY BOXCAR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of the Environment, or the Deputy Prime Minister, whichever is answering for that portfolio.

In the last four or five days Canadians have been reminded how increasingly dangerous this industrial world of ours has become, and how absolutely crucial it is for Governments to take on the question of public safety with the utmost vigilance. Unfortunately, it has not been an isolated incident.

In my own province of Manitoba it was discovered late last week that on federal Crown land under the jurisdiction of the federal Government, in the CPR marshalling yards a boxcar containing PCBs was left totally unattended and unsecured, with a seal on it that a nine-year old boy with a penknife could have broken into without any apprehension. Inspections had not taken place for a long period of time, and environment officials at both levels of government professed to be surprised at the results.

Considering how serious a problem this is in the federal jurisdiction, can the Minister tell us how many other boxcars are sitting in railway yards across the country unattended and unsecured? Does the Government have a plan to deal with the problem of the serious contamination and vulnerability that exists on Crown land and railway properties across Canada?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to this very important situation, I think that we should all check our facts before we make allegations.

I am informed that there is a railcar owned by Canadian Pacific Railway in Winnipeg, that the car is in an isolated area, and located on a track that is fenced and patrolled regularly. The car has been inspected and is secure, with no leakages.

REQUEST FOR REGULATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister does not say is that the inspection took place after the boxcar was discovered. In the very same railway yard a fire broke out on Saturday night within proximity of the same boxcar. If the Minister thinks that that is adequate safety coverage, there is no wonder the Government and the country are in the trouble they are, and Canadians expect an awful lot more.

In 1985 both levels of government, provincial and federal, came to a meeting and agreed on a series of steps that would be taken, none of which have since been taken. There are no destruction facilities, and there are no regulations. There are only guidelines that cannot be enforced.

When is the federal Government going to take on its full responsibility and introduce the type of action and initiative that are required to provide proper regulations to guard against the type of event that we saw in Winnipeg this weekend?

• (1430)

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, again the Opposition tends to make statements of fact that are unfounded. Since 1977 the use of PCBs has been restricted through regulations under the Environmental Contaminants Act. Since June 30, 1988, all those regulations have been incorporated under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act that was tabled and passed by this Government. Nothing had been done by the previous Government.

TECHNOLOGY TO NEUTRALIZE PCBS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is guilty of a clear abdication of responsibility and response. There are no regulations in place governing these kinds of events.

I would like to ask the corollary question. Officials of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the National Research Council have said that they have developed technologies that make it possible to neutralize PCBs, but to quote a federal official of AECL, there has not been the political will to pursue those kinds of treatments. Does the Government have any intention of bringing in a plan of action with the kind of resources and investments that would bring about destruction facilities to deal with PCBs so that we do not have the kinds of circumstances that occurred in Québec and in Manitoba over the past week?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly surprised that that Hon. Member is talking about abdication. As I have already indicated, we have an Act in force that was passed in June of 1988. Regulations are included, and we will make sure that incidents like the one in Saint-Basile-le-Grand do not occur again, with or without the help of the Opposition.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ECOLOGICAL ACCIDENT AT SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND—REQUEST FOR RESULTS OF TESTS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Since last week, the Minister of the Environment has been assuring us that the federal Government, in cooperation with the Government of Quebec, is providing all possible assistance in taking samples to determine the degree of contamination in Saint-Basile-le-Grand. Given the further evacuation of another 300 people from the region, as well as the growing fears and frustrations of the 3,000 who have already left their homes, can the Minister tell us today the results of the tests conducted jointly with the Government of Quebec on the contamination in Saint-Basile-le-Grand?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague knows, some results were made public on the weekend and I am not able today to give the results of the further tests now underway. For example, approximately 20 schools and a number of homes will be sampled today in the Saint-Basile-le-Grand area as well as in the region evacuated on the weekend. So, Mr. Speaker, we will of course be able to provide the results when they are known this week.

TREATMENT OF INFORMATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Saint-Basile-le-Grand deplore the lack of information and especially the lack of coordination in providing it. They have the impression that someone may be hiding the truth from them and that the information they receive varies depending on who is speaking.

So can the Minister tell us whether there would not be a way, in cooperation with the provincial Government, to find a spokesperson to coordinate all the information and provide as much information as possible, so that the citizens would be assured that the different levels of government are in control of the situation?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think that under the circumstances, it is clear that all levels of government involved have tried to control the situation and to reassure the Canadian people about what is going on in Saint-Basile-le-Grand and its aftermath. I think it would be appropriate, not to say desirable, not to do anything in this House to increase the public's fears, which are no doubt very justified.

Regarding coordination, Mr. Speaker, I am informed that Gilles Saint-Antoine, assistant director of the Quebec Police Force, has been designated commander of operations at the head of the new organizational structure set up on Saturday, and that Jean Demers of Environment Quebec is responsible for field operations.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, obviously, all federal authorities and the whole federal apparatus concerned are cooperating with the provincial authorities involved, so as to make this situation as livable as possible, under the circumstances.

DESTRUCTION OF TOXIC SUBSTANCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question is for the same Minister. As he knows, 3,000 residents from Saint-Basile-le-Grand and surrounding areas had to be evacuated last week and 300 more during the weekend. Officials are running tests on the people, their houses and the farms in the area. Here is my question: Considering that the technology has been available since 1981, why has the Government not introduced legislation requiring that these substances be destroyed instead of simply being stored?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, I think, it was mentioned in the House that a new technology had been developed by the National Research Council and, if I remember correctly, that information was made public in April 1988. This is certainly a revolutionary process; contrary to the present method, it does not involve burning PCBs; it calls for new facilities which will certainly be built, I hope, in the near future. It is clear that the Federal Government will cooperate in the implementation of this new technology in order to destroy PCBs safely and thus avoid similar situations to the one which occurred in Saint-Basile-le-Grand.

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister refers to technology of the National Research Council. I was informed by a research scientist from AECL in Manitoba today that technology has existed since 1982, other than the technology to which the Minister refers. Mr. Colin Isaacs, President of Pollution Probe, also said on the weekend that such technology has existed for a number of years.

Since quite literally human lives are at stake here, I want to ask the Minister, notwithstanding the failure of past Governments, why the present Government does not build on what it has already done? Why does it not use the Criminal Code to make it mandatory that technology be applied for the destruction of PCBs after they have been used rather than allowing for their storage?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the new technology and the Criminal Code, I think it is obvious that with the new Act passed by this Parliament in June of 1988, there are powers that will permit the Minister of the Environment to make sure that those disasters do not occur again, and if they do, which we certainly hope they do not, those involved will be punished to the full extent of the law. Obviously this Government will do everything in its power to ensure that PCBs are destroyed in a safe manner so that the safety and health of Canadians are not prejudiced.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that in the existing law to which he has referred there is absolutely nothing making it mandatory that PCBs be destroyed. Once a storage facility has broken down, there is a potential disaster like the one with which we are now faced.

We know that there is technology available for the destruction of these dangerous substances. Since the present law brought in this year is inadequate, will the Government recognize the seriousness of the situation and bring in a new measure that will make it compulsory to destroy these substances? That is the issue.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as we indicated on Friday, there is a new technology that has been developed by the NRC which apparently is revolutionary in dealing with PCBs, and I am sure that this Government will do whatever is necessary in order that PCBs, when stored, are stored safely, and hopefully destroyed without any danger to the health and security of all Canadians.

STORAGE OF PCBS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on May 31, 1985, three years and three months ago, the federal Government agreed to "a national system of destruction facilities for PCBs involving a mix of fixed and mobile facilities," and the proposed facility in Québec would "treat high-level PCBs and other chlorinated organic waste from the rest of eastern Canada and the Atlantic provinces".

Since the technology to destroy PCBs has been available for years, what has happened since the announcement three years ago and since the borders of Alberta and the United States were closed to the transportation of PCBs? Why is there such a location in Saint-Basile-le-Grand? Why are there 71 locations in Nova Scotia, 41 locations in New Brunswick, 14 locations in Prince Edward Island, and dozens of locations in Newfoundland? A potential Saint-Basile exists in every province in Atlantic Canada.

Why has the Government failed in its promise of leadership three years ago to rid this country of this deadly chemical?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as was indicated previously in this House, particularly on Friday, the prime responsibility for storage and maintenance of PCBs is a provincial one. The Province of Quebec did proceed and is proceeding with respect to dealing with the substance known as PCBs.

It is obvious that all Governments are concerned about what happened in Saint-Basile-le-Grand. This Government in particular, with the co-operation of all Governments in Canada, will make sure that such instances do not occur again, and deal with the maintenance and destruction of PCBs in a safe way in order that they do not damage or endanger Canadians' health and security.

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—TRANSPORTATION OF PCBS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the only way PCBs are transported in Canada today is by rail from each province to the port of Montreal where they are containerized and then sent across the ocean to Pontypool, Wales, in the United Kingdom, for destruction.

It is outrageous enough that we would be shipping our filth to another country and risking the ocean environment while we are doing it, but does the Government not realize that by discontinuing the Newfoundland Railway next month it will be unable to carry PCBs by rail? Is the Government suggesting they be carried by our one and only road across the province? Does the Government not realize that every province in Canada has alternate road routes and a railway on which to carry dangerous chemicals? Newfoundland has neither.

Will the Government of Canada now keep the railway open for the transportation of dangerous goods, or does it care about the health and safety of Newfoundlanders?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted of course to try to be as amusing as the Hon. Member but I think this issue is serious enough that we should perhaps not try to divert attention from this important subject.

I understand that some provinces were very concerned with dealing with PCBs, Québec in particular, which was working and is still working on a project with respect to the destruction of PCBs. Obviously the population is involved and there is intense consultation that is going on, but I can assure all Hon. Members of this House, and Canadians in general, that the federal Government will continue to co-operate with the provinces in order to come up with a valid solution to this problem with safety for all Canadians.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I think we have had a good example here this afternoon of what is wrong with environmental law. The Minister of the Environment in Manitoba maintained for two days that it was a federal matter, and the Minister here, when he is backed into a corner, says it is a provincial matter. The fact is there is a need for co-ordination at both levels to deal with the problem. It has not been dealt with properly by any level of government.

The Minister has said we ought to pay attention to the facts. I ask him how he has the nerve to get up and say on behalf of the Minister of the Environment that the boxcar, which incidentally is in my riding, has a fence around it? I was there Thursday afternoon. I walked in from Springfield Road. There is no fence. You just walk in, and walk down the track.

I was there for half an hour and I never even bumped into anybody. I went back later under CP Rail supervision to have a look at the car. There was no seal on it but there is now; no lock, only a bolt.

If the Minister is interested in the facts, why did he not get the facts that were available to me through Environment Canada? He appears to be unable to get those same facts.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I obviously do not know what site the Hon. Member inspected but my information is to the effect that the car is in an isolated area, located on a track which is fenced and patrolled regularly. More importantly, the car has been inspected and is secure, with no leakages.

REQUEST FOR STORAGE REGULATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped we would not have to argue about whether something is fenced or not. The fact of the matter is that on one complete side of the North Transcona yards there is no fence. Anyone with eyes to see can see that. I am surprised the Minister would get up and maintain that. It is beside a track which is the main lead into the CP railyard in North Transcona. The switch leading into it is not locked. There are all kinds of things that could have been done to make that a safer storage site that were not done, and Environment Canada says the guidelines were being adhered to.

Are these guidelines going to be reviewed so that these kinds of cases will not occur again? Are there going to be regulations, because we know there are no federal regulations with respect to the storage of PCBs? The Bill the Minister referred to has only to do with spills after they occur. It has nothing to do with storage. There are no regulations and it is about bloody time there were.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the facts themselves, I am informed again that the information I have been given is what has been seen on the site. Of course if the Hon. Member—

Mr. Blaikie: Then you are stupid, because there is no fence.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cadieux: Of course—

Mr. Blaikie: I walked in there myself, you idiot!

Mr. McDermid: You walk through fences!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was your ego that walked through.

Mr. Cadieux: Of course, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Blaikie: I don't walk through fences. I could if I had to.

Mr. Cadieux: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I personally did not go there. Therefore I will take the Hon. Member's comments as notice and I will check with the appropriate people who have given me the report with respect to the fact that this car was fenced and was being patrolled. I can assure this House that, if that is not the case, not only will it be done but some people will probably be answering those questions for me.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

Mr. Thacker: Why didn't you say something about it sooner? You sat on it all weekend!

Mr. Andre: Why didn't you do something Thursday about it—

Mr. Blaikie: I did.

Mr. Andre: —if it was so life threatening?

Mr. Blaikie: I didn't say it was life threatening.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS OF PERSONS EMPLOYED BY THEIR SPOUSES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker, in a recent judgment the Federal Court of Appeal confirmed a ruling of the Canadian Human Rights Commission that spouses who worked for their mates should not be denied unemployment insurance benefits. Since the Unemployment Insurance Commission may still appeal this judgment to the Supreme Court of Canada, will the Minister state today whether the Government has agreed to accept the judgment of the Federal Court and forgo any appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada? In other words, will the Government accept the ruling of the Canadian Human Rights Commission that spouses should have the same right to unemployment insurance as all other Canadians?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is early days yet on this decision. The Department of Justice and my Department are reviewing the decision and once we reach a conclusion we will be able to report back to the House.

PARENTAL BENEFITS—FEDERAL COURT HEARING

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this is a fairly clear-cut matter. I had hoped we would have a decision before the end of this week.

Will the Minister also tell the House whether the Government has decided to accept the Federal Court decision in June that parental benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act should be available to natural parents in the same way as adoptive parents, that these benefits should be available to both father and mother, and that they should be distinct from pregnancy benefits? Would the Minister inform the House with respect to that judgment today if possible?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with respect to that particular judgment, Mr. Justice Strayer has asked counsel to put forward suggestions to him with respect to the form of judgment. There is, in fact, no judgment as yet as a result of the decision of last June. By the end of this month there will be a formal judgment issued by the court, at which time we will have an opportunity of assessing that with respect to future courses of action.

AVAILABILITY OF LIST OF PCB WAREHOUSE SITES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Environment. Last week, my party leader asked for a list of PCB storage sites in Quebec and throughout Canada. Environment Canada promised to provide it by the end of last week. Now we have not received this most important list. Why? Does such a list exist? And when will the Government provide this list of PCB storage sites?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated when I was in the House last Friday, such a list exists and it will be made public this week.

[English]

REQUEST THAT CONSTITUENCY LISTS BE DISTRIBUTED TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister supply each Member of Parliament, who is naturally very concerned about his or her own area, with a list of PCB storage sites there in order to enable Members to take further action? Can each Member of Parliament receive a list of storage sites of PCBs in their constituencies?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware which method the Department of the Environment was to use to make the list public. I will bring that to their attention and insist that a copy of the list be sent to each Member of Parliament.

ABORTION

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the Prime Minister's new position, his about-face on the abortion issue.

Last month the Government appeared before the Supreme Court and argued that the Supreme Court should postpone the Borowski case until this Parliament had an opportunity to pass legislation. Yesterday the Prime Minister said that this Parliament is postponing legislation until the Supreme Court deals with the Borowski case.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain this contradiction? Can he explain why the Prime Minister lacks the conviction and courage to introduce legislation in this House?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure whether the Hon. Member has a valid question and whether he speaks on behalf of his Party. I find it passing strange that the Hon. Member would be critical of anyone with respect to positions on abortion when his own Leader said that his own position is irrelevant. He refused, on a number of occasions, to indicate what his point of view was on that issue.

This is not a partisan issue. The fact is that the Borowski case is being heard on October 3. The Prime Minister has stated the obvious. There is the Morgantaler case and the imperatives with respect to it.

As far as the Charter of Rights considerations are concerned, the Prime Minister is simply saying that if there is an election this fall he does not think there would be an opportunity to have Parliament deal with it before the election. That is all he said.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, that's not what he said. He said he was going to wait until the Borowski case before the Government introduces legislation.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is abdicating his responsibility to provide leadership on the issue. For the last seven months the Government has promised legislation on the abortion issue. The Minister said last March that the Cabinet was considering legislation as an urgent priority.

In documentation filed with the Supreme Court of Canada two weeks ago the Government argued that:

> —answering the constitutional questions in the abstract, without passing upon the validity of any subsisting legislation, would involve a serious risk of encroaching directly upon the legislation function.

That is what the Government is arguing before the Supreme Court. Why is the Government saying one thing before the Supreme Court of Canada and telling the people of Canada another thing here in the Parliament of Canada?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we are not. I am sorry that the Hon. Member attempts to pretend that the matter has not been dealt with by Parliament. We made a commitment as a Government and a Party that Parliament would have an opportunity to vote on this in a free vote. We brought forward a motion which was debated and amended and upon which every Member had an opportunity to vote. I do not know whether the Hon. Member was here for that vote.

Some Hon. Members: No, he wasn't.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If he was not he should read Hansard to see precisely what transpired. There was no conclusive result from that debate. The Government is considering the matter now in terms of the next steps that could be taken and is reviewing its options.

I do not think that that is abdicating our responsibility. We allowed Parliament to have a free vote on this issue and no consensus was reached as a result. We, as a Government, will resolve this matter at the earliest possible date.

FORESTRY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In the last round of Forest Renewal Agreements, or FRDAs as they are known, the federal Government put up $609.9 million. The B.C. industry, which produces about one-half of Canada's forest products, received less than one-quarter of the FRDA funds. That agreement runs out in about one year.

Since the Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba agreements run out in six months would the Minister advise the House why Cabinet continues to withhold approval for negotiations in the West and has not even identified a pool of funds for such agreements?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe that I responded to that question last week or the week before. I said that this matter was under consideration and that there were discussions going on. I am sure that when a decision is made it will be announced.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, there are no negotiations and no funds have been identified. I confirmed that with the office of the Minister of State for Forestry this morning.

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, there is a growing body of opinion that the combination of the inclusion of the 15 per cent export tax as Article 2009 in the trade deal and the recent B.C. government decision to terminate replanting subsidies for the forest industry in B.C., which was pre-approved by Washington, means that there will not be a new sustainable agreement on reforestation for B.C. Would the Minister tell us when there will be negotiations and where the money will come from for those agreements in western Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the NDP is back at it again. When we announced the earlier Special Grains Program they wanted to know whether it was going to be new money, old money, borrowed money, or just what the case was. The money was found and distributed. The same thing happened with the science and technology program, and with child care.

The fact is that the Government has made a very strong and firm commitment toward regional development with ACOA, western diversification, and various ERDA agreements. We have demonstrated that we are committed to regional development, and we put our money where our mouth is every time.

DISASTERS

PCB FIRES AT SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND—CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour who is representing the Minister of the Environment on the matter of the catastrophe at Saint-Basile-le-Grand. Earlier in the Question Period I understood the Minister to say that the Canadian Environmental Protection Act had been in force since June 30 and that that was evidence of his Government's commitment to action on environmental matters like Saint-Basile-le-Grand.

If it is the case that the Environmental Protection Act was in place since June 30 and the federal Government was vigilantly using that Act to carry out its responsibilities, how is it that the Saint-Basile-le-Grand disaster took place?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to my hon. colleague, I think his question is a little bit strange. Nevertheless, since I am to answer the question, I will repeat what I have already said. It is no relief, but nevertheless remains the fact, that the prime responsibility for the storage of PCB's at that site at Saint-Basile-le-Grand was under provincial jurisdiction. It is obvious that with our movement with respect to the Act about which we are talking we will probably be in a better position to inform our provincial colleagues of what steps ought to be taken to ensure that in the future no similar circumstances occur anywhere in Canada, irrespective of jurisdiction.

GOVERNMENTAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in answer to an earlier question the Hon. Minister boasted about the Environmental Protection Act passed by the Government being in force on June 30. Yet he has been unable to explain why it had no impact in preventing the disaster at Saint-Basile-le-Grand. The Minister also said that the storage of PCBs at Saint-Basile-le-Grand was primarily a provincial responsibility.

• (1500)

Why was it that on August 26, in the Ottawa Citizen, the following quote was attributed to the Minister of the Environment:

> There's a collective responsibility between the federal government and the provinces to ensure that people's health is secure in the face of this kind of possibility," McMillan said.

He was speaking about the catastrophe at Saint-Basile-le-Grande. Why is the Minister contradicting his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, in not accepting the reality that there is a federal responsibility in these matters as in Saint-Basile-le-Grand and across the country? Why is the Government not accepting that responsibility and taking action, not only to prevent cases like that in Saint-Basile-le-Grand but to prevent future cases across the country since it has supposedly an inventory of PCB storage sites all across this land?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not see the logic in my hon. friend's trend of thought. But I guess that's obvious to everybody. Nevertheless, I do not think I was boasting about the particular Act that was passed and adopted on June 30, 1988. I was simply indicating that this Government, contrary to the former Government, took action. We finally came in with a Bill that was passed and adopted by the House which gives us the tools to deal with such situations. Those tools did not exist under the previous Government. Not only will we exercise our responsibility in federal jurisdiction but obviously, as we have been able to do since 1984, the Government will continue to work with the provinces in order to protect Canadian health and safety whenever possible.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE RESIDENTIAL HOUSING SPECULATION TAX

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. He should be aware that one of the best ways to cool off inflationary pressures in the Metro Toronto area without raising interest rates would be to institute a residential housing speculation tax.

Will the Minister give us his undertaking that the Government will institute such a tax in order to fight inflation in the Metro Toronto area and in southern Ontario, without discouraging economic growth in other parts of Canada by increasing interest rates?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it might be helpful to the Hon. Member if I reminded him of the number of steps taken under the tax reform leadership shown by the Minister of Finance with regard to measures that will inhibit speculation on real estate.

The measures involved include the elimination of MURB's, the increase in the inclusion rate for capital gains, the reduction in the capital cost allowance rate for real estate from 5 per cent to 4 per cent, and the introduction of the cumulative net investment loss account to discourage excessive sheltering of ordinary income.

Finally, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government continues to support, as do the majority of Canadians, the exemption of principal residences from capital gains taxation.

HEALTH

PROPOSED LOCATION OF LABORATORY CENTRE FOR DISEASE CONTROL

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister appointed an expert committee with industrial and scientific capacity to make a recommendation with regard to the location of the laboratory centre for disease control in Winnipeg. This committee recommended that the centre be located near the medical school and the Health Sciences Centre.

The Tory MP's from Manitoba got together and unanimously recommended that the centre go to St. Boniface, which is presently held by a Conservative Member of Parliament. Will the Minister respect the recommendation of his committee, play straight with Winnipegers, and locate the centre where it had been recommended by the expert committee, or will he simply play pork-barrel politics with this centre for disease control?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I appreciate that he has changed his view since we first announced the LCDC coming to Winnipeg when he did not think it was all that important. Now he feels that it is important. As I said in Winnipeg and elsewhere in Manitoba, an announcement will be made when there is a decision. I will not tell it to him directly today.

Mr. Keeper: I hope the Minister can back up what he said about my view with regard to the centre being located in Winnipeg. At no time did I downgrade the fact that this centre would be located in Winnipeg.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the people of Winnipeg want to know whether the Minister will place the centre where it should be in order to fulfil its promise or whether he will give into the temptation of playing pork-barrel politics just because his back-bench MP's are telling him to put it in St. Boniface. Put it where it belongs and stop playing pork-barrel politics. Tell us when you will announce that decision.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that he is applauding the federal Government's initiative and putting the LCDC in Winnipeg. It is a very welcome change of tune from what I have heard from the NDP, both provincially and federally—

Mr. McCurdy: What nonsense.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —saying about this Government's commitment to Winnipeg. While they may get a little irritated about my saying it, it is about time they heard it.

Mr. McCurdy: There is nothing unusual about dishonesty from that side.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just relax, our health care costs will go up if you keep going on like that.

Advice has been given to me from the advisory committee. I made that quite public. There is also an environmental study that we have to do under federal regulations for buildings such as this. When that material is complete and I have made a decision, I will announce it.

CHILDREN

GARBAGE PAIL KIDS—REQUEST FOR BAN ON IMPORTATION OF MOVIE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It concerns the Criminal Code of Canada.

The Minister will know that a few weeks ago I publicly called upon the Government to ban the importation into Canada of an offensive product known as Garbage Pail Kids cards. These are bubble gum cards depicting the mutilation, dissection, burning and murdering of small children.

Given that the promoter of this product now says he wants to bring into Canada a movie known as Garbage Pail Kids—The Movie, will the Minister of Justice state in the House that he will not let this kind of offensive movie into our country?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Department of National Revenue that current regulations with respect to importation of obscenity into Canada are being strictly observed. If the Hon. Member has any influence with his caucus colleagues, he might want to draw their attention to very progressive legislation, Bill C-54, which has specifically directed prohibitions against pornography, which might be of assistance to him with respect to the kind of offensive material he describes. He might be able to convince his colleagues to bring this matter into committee so that we can see whether there are better ways to improve the protection at our borders with respect to salacious material.

CRIMINAL CODE—APPLICATION OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, perhaps for once I can try to get a non partisan answer from the Government. I will try to be the same myself.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Given the present provisions of the Criminal Code on obscenity and crime comics, has the Attorney General, the Minister of Justice, attempted to receive information from his officials or the officials of the Department of Revenue in order to determine whether all of these products, the movie or the bubble gum cards in question, which offend millions of Canadians in their right mind, should be banned? Will he take that initiative and ban this offensive product that I believe is objectionable to all Members of the House and offensive to right-minded parents?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will give a non partisan response to the question. It is a serious question. I am not attempting to make it a partisan issue.

I am simply saying that it has been long recognized that our present obscenity laws—

Mr. McCurdy: Nonsense.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —require strengthening. Nonsense says the Hon. Member.

The fact is that we will be monitoring the situation. I am sure the Department of National Revenue is taking into account the representations made by the Hon. Member. I am not in a position to report to the Hon. Member as to precisely what action has been taken. I will take the question as notice and pass it on to my colleague. I am sure he will get back to the Hon. Member.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF—RENTS CHARGED TO CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. President of the Treasury Board or to her alternate. Given that excessive rates are charged civil servants and the RCMP who live in government owned houses in Banff, which has the highest rents of any national park in Canada, including Jasper National Park where rents for similar accommodations are some $300 lower, will the Hon. Minister lower the Banff rentals to what is charged in Jasper National Park or, at the very least, send someone with authority to the area to resolve this problem?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will know that housing rental rates vary from community to community. Canada Mortgage and Housing is responsible for setting the rental appraisals on an annual basis on all federal Crown owned land. As it happens in the case of Banff, CMHC has established that there is a viable rental market which in fact is higher than in Jasper and other places in Canada. I point out that the appraisal methodology is approved by the National Joint Council and is part of the collective agreement we have with the 14 union members. However, I would say that I would be pleased to provide a briefing opportunity for my friend to review this with Treasury Board officials.

Mr. Speaker: These will be the last two questions.

IMMIGRATION

IMMIGRANTS' ACCESS TO LANGUAGE TRAINING—ADVISORY COUNCIL RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, the report of the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council which was issued last Friday recommends that "The federal Government ensure that access to language training is available to all immigrants". Does the Minister agree with the recommendation? If so, what steps will she and her Government take to change the present rules which restrict official language training according to people's intended occupations?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I would also like to thank the Advisory Council for a very thoughtful and excellent report on immigration in Canada. Certainly language training is a very important element of people being able to settle in Canada and take a full part in Canadian life.

Point of Order—Mr. Cadieux

As the Hon. Member knows, we have extended the language training through the Settlement Language Training Program and, through the Job Entry we have made it easier for immigrant women, for example, to receive language training in connection with their job training.

The chief difficulty is with women who remain at home. That is why we focused on those particular aspects.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Spadina on a short supplementary.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, with respect to women who are supposedly destined to be at home, or women who are supposedly destined for jobs that do not require English, or men destined for such low paid jobs, or school children who receive no federal help for classes in English as the second language or French as the second language in their school, will the Minister continue to withhold official language training from such a large proportion of immigrants? Or will she take steps to change the rules?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what we have done is attempt to expand language training for those most in need. Let me say that in terms of children, one of the reasons we have such a broad consultation process on immigration matters with the provinces, with employers, with labour groups and with various non-government organizations, is so, whatever immigration laws are determined, provincial educational systems and programs in place are able to deal with the numbers.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that I have, I think, two probably short points of order, one from the Minister of Labour and the other from the Hon. Member for Churchill. I also have a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

CLARIFICATION OF REPLY IN QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), had personal experience with respect to the Winnipeg boxcar, I had the officials, during Question Period, check the information again. It appears that I have been misled on the existence of the fence. Most important, with respect to the situation of the car itself, it is being inspected and it is safe, but with respect to the existence of the fence I have been misled and I am going to ask officials of Environment Canada to explain why I have been misled.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Point of Order—Mr. Murphy

Mr. Murphy: At least that Minister is not fenced in.

WITHDRAWAL OF COMMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to withdraw a word I used in Statements earlier today with respect to the Minister for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer). I said he was acting in a manner which was treason to Manitoba. I certainly withdraw that word.

PRIVILEGE

THE GLOBE AND MAIL—MORNING EDITIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects all Members of Parliament as well as some 17,000 subscribers to The Globe and Mail in the National Capital Region. For the past several years The Globe and Mail has printed its second national edition here in Ottawa and has distributed that edition to the House of Commons as well as to other people in Ottawa. Political and other events taking place up until 10 p.m. eastern time and 7 p.m. Pacific Time were covered in that edition.

This spring The Globe and Mail changed that practice and began to supply to this House copies of its first national edition which is trucked from Toronto and which has a deadline of only 3 p.m. Pacific Time and 6 p.m. eastern time. That means that when this Parliament sits in the evening, as we did on tax reform and other issues last week, or when a federal leader meets the press in the afternoon in Vancouver, no news of those events appears in copies of Canada's national newspaper that is available to parliamentarians.

I have checked and this applies very specifically in the Parliamentary Reading Room, in the Centre Block, as well as the copies of The Globe and Mail which are reviewed for inclusion in the press digest, which we know as Quorum and which is read by all Members of Parliament. To add insult to injury, that late national edition with the 10 p.m. deadline is still printed in Ottawa but only for distribution in Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, and in the United States. That means that on Pennsylvania Avenue or Wall Street, New York financiers, Mr. Reagan and Members of Congress, receive a better service from Canada's national newspaper in terms of the news it covers than Members of Parliament or other people here in the Ottawa area.

I would hesitate to suggest this is a precursor of free trade, but I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to lend your weight to ensure that The Globe and Mail stops giving second-class service to the people of Ottawa, particularly to Canada's national Parliament, or it should stop calling itself "Canada's national newspaper".

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has raised this as a question of privilege. I have some difficulty in being able to bring the complaint within that particular forum. However, I am sure The Globe and Mail will be properly impressed with the need of all Hon. Members to be promptly informed of national events. I have no doubt that the Hon. Member's intervention will be noticed by the paper in question and might even get in the first edition.

Continuing debate.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie (St. John's West) that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your recognition and would say it is an honour for me to open debate on third reading on behalf of my Party. I think Canadians expect from Members of Parliament on this serious and, for many of us, solemn occasion, a level of debate and expression that is commensurate to the subject at hand. For that reason, I am very thankful we had a two-hour break between now and the time the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) spoke so we could clear away the somewhat putrid atmosphere of the House. After listening to the Minister, one of my colleagues noted that following the Minister for International Trade is like trying to track a skunk downwind. All one gets is the odour, not the tracks. I prefer to think of it more as coming into a small kitchen after a grease fire. All that is left is voluminous clouds of black smoke with no real content.

If I may continue the metaphor, the good thing about a grease fire is it just takes one shot of good clean cool water to clear away all the obscurity and all the fog that is created. All that it would take in this debate would be one clean cool shot of logic and common sense to dissipate the smoke and fog left after that quite miserable treatment, which was more reminiscent of a bar room brawl than it was of a serious and important exchange of different points of view.

I have been acting as trade critic for about three years. It has been a strange odyssey, but one that has taken me into the byways and highways of the country to talk to thousands of people, both by way of speech and by way of listening, as well as attending task forces. I have gone through three trade Ministers in my tenure. Watching their antics at times has been similar to watching an old movie of the Marx brothers. I can reminisce about the famous statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he appointed the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). He said: "I am going to give the Minister the ball and watch her go". We saw where she went. She went over her own goal line and scored a touchdown in her own end zone when she negotiated the softwood lumber agreement that cost the Canadian industry $100 million.

Of course we have the wonderful example of the present Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) who has given new dimension to the meaning of illiteracy. He had the gall to stand up and say with respect to the most important decision facing Canadians in decades that he had not bothered to read the basic document yet. He was going to rely upon his officials to tell him what was in it. I am sure his officials are trustworthy. But I would say that an abdication of responsibility such as the Minister confessed to is one that is singular in the historical annals of the country.

In saying that I want to say that I have had some interesting companions along the way. I pay tribute to my friend, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), who in all my travels has been to every committee, travelled with every task force and been involved in every debate along with me.

I also want to pay some compliment to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) who is not in the House at the moment. I would say that while I totally disagree with everything that he has had to say, and while we have fought hard and in some cases in a tough way, I have also respected the way in which he has conducted himself in this House. I appreciate the fact that over the past two or three years in trying to organize this very important exercise in the House of Commons we have been able to retain a level of respect for one another. I certainly do for him.

I appreciate those kinds of options. I believe that this is a debate that should not be conducted in a fit of vindictiveness, a spirit of meanness. Unfortunately, those are the qualities that the present Minister for International Trade brought to the debate. It should be conducted on the basis of hard, serious exchange of two very different points of view, two very different versions of what the country is about, two very different visions of what is Canada.

If I have any assessment, any feeling after three years of being involved in this matter, it is how much it has divided the country. There was with some great irony last night as I watched the Prime Minister in his 20 minutes of free paid political advertising offered by the CBC. He was asked this question: "What would you consider to be your greatest accomplishment?" He said: "National unity". Immediately my mind flashed back to the intense, sometimes bitter conflict between business and labour, between region and region, between one group and another, between church groups and the chambers of commerce and the way that this debate has divided the country like no other issue ever has. It has been far more intense than have been issues of language, issues of regional division. It has gone to our very heart and soul. The country is split right down the middle. For the Prime minister to say that his greatest accomplishment was national unity makes me wonder what planet he came from. What spaceship has he been on if he does not recognize that out there in the country there is an internal roiling of feeling, of emotion and of conflict?

I looked back at a novel written by Benjamin Disraeli entitled Sybil in which he described England in the 19th century. I thought it was reminiscent of Canada in 1988. He wrote:

> "Two nations, between them there is no intercourse, no sympathy, who are as ignorant of each other's habits, thoughts and feelings as if they were dwellers on different planets in different zones, who are formed by different breeding, are fed by different foods, are ordered by different manners, are not governed by the same laws."

When asked of whom he spoke, he said the rich and the poor. It is close to that in Canada now. I am not sure the divisions are totally between rich and poor. Let us look at the differences and the divisions in terms of groups that have appeared before the committee to express their views on the trade agreement.

In favour of the free trade agreement were the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Bankers Association, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Petroleum Association of Canada, the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association and the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association. On the other side of the debate is the Canadian Labour Congress, the Québec Federation of Labour, Canadian Federation of National Trade Unions, the Québec Teachers Federation, the Canadian Teachers Federation, the United Church of Canada, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, National Action Committee on the Status of Women, Women Working With Immigrant Women, and the National Anti-poverty Organization. There is the division of our country in front of us. That is what this Government has created.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Members opposite wish to make light of this. The fact of the matter is, as they well know, we have two solitudes. We have these two worlds. The Government has rammed right down the middle and split them apart. We saw it this morning with the Minister for International Trade. There was no sense of understanding or comprehension of the other side. No. He just put his steel jackboots on and tramped over everybody who disagreed with him.

Mr. Robichaud: Rambo-style.

Mr. Axworthy: That is right. Rambo-style. Put an Uzi submachine gun in the hands of the Minister for International Trade and let him spew all over the country. He does not care who he hits. He just wants to let us have it. That may be okay if one is an adolescent going to a Saturday afternoon movie.

But we are here debating a serious subject which goes to the very heart and core of the country.

As the Minister for International Trade said this morning, it is not a new debate. He made it sound as if the pro-free traders have just been waiting on the precipice of history to come to this divine goal one day, that they are somehow divinely ordained, pre-ordained to bring us this new Valhalla, this new heaven upon earth. What he did not say is that this is a debate that has brought the country into internal conflict generation after generation. I have to say that his reading of history is very strange and unique. He talked about Laurier, King and Pearson as being somehow proponents of free trade with the United States. I would like to remind you, Madam Speaker, and the House that in all the cases he cited free trade was defeated by the Canadian people. Elections were held and they withdrew.

What he did not say is an interesting footnote to history. In 1849 the merchant class of Montreal, Canada's business elite—342 Canadians who were the princes of Canadian industry at that time—signed what? They signed an annexation manifesto to join with the United States. Why? Because they had lost the preferential tariff under the British system. Free of having this country pursue its own independent course, what did that merchant class at that time based on the Conservative Party of Canada decide was the solution to Canada's problems? Annexation by the United States. That has been a train of thought, a philosophy, and a Pavlovian response by the same group ever since. Every time they feel a challenge, every time they feel that there is something out there that will threaten the comfortable cocoon, what is their solution? Annexation by the United States. Unfortunately, the problem is that for the first time in 100 years the so-called Montreal merchant class has a Prime Minister who agrees with them. That is the problem. They finally got a national government in sympathy with those views.

This morning I listened to the Minister for International Trade talk about history as somehow being on the side of the free traders. Yes, there were powerful forces and powerful coalitions promoting this cause since the inception of this country, but fortunately time after time when it came forward it was beaten back and disregarded.

The Minister for International Trade rose and stated that 1911 was a classic example of the value given by history to free trade. What he did not mention is that when the Government went to the polls, the Laurier people were defeated, with a large defection of Liberals on the side, including for one, Edward Blake, the major Grit leader in Ontario. The fact of the matter is that it was a serious debate but it was defeated. When Mackenzie King sat down and had this discussion with the Americans, why did he not go ahead? Because he realized very clearly that it would give the Americans what they want, and that would be final control of this continent. Therefore, the history lesson supplied this morning by the Minister for International Trade was highly selective and distorted, to say the least.

One thing strikes everybody seemingly strange, and I must say I was waiting for an answer when I listened to the Minister for International Trade this morning as he quoted Laurier, King, Gerry Regan, and Donald Macdonald. The person he did not quote was the present Prime Minister of Canada. In 1983, in his last pre-election statement on the issue, he stated: "Free trade with the United States affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it, not during leadership campaigns, or any other time". He went on to state: "Free trade with the United States is like sleeping with an elephant". The Prime Minister further stated: "Canadian plants wouldn't be able to compete with larger scale U.S. firms". The Prime Minister also stated: "Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911, they would do so again in 1983".

It is funny that we did not hear those quotes from the Minister for International Trade this morning. Is it not unusual that he did not quote his leader who had made all those statements?

A previous Prime Minister, who competed in the same leadership campaign, and is now the distinguished Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), stated: "Ontario and Quebec would be the hardest hit because of their industries, but we are in a position to benefit earlier from technological measures. When you are moving towards a common market—" for all those Tories who say that harmonization is not a problem, let me cite to them the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He stated: "You must accept some other ties. Our health insurance system is much more sophisticated than theirs, as well as some of our environmental or health standards, and they could be jeopardized. To ignore our interest outside the U.S. would also be in danger".

I did not hear the Minister for International Trade quote the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yet I thought the Secretary of State for External Affairs made some very important statements back in 1983.

The Minister of Trade stated this morning that we have a great Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He really understands what is going on. Let me quote the Minister of Finance who stated: "Talk of bilateral free trade strikes me as simplistic and naive. The U.S. has its national interest and we should enunciate clearly and pursue vigorously our own. Too much would have to be compromised especially by Canada to make a mutually acceptable broad master plan the best option". "Too much would have to be compromised", says the Minister of Finance.

The distinguished Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), dean of the House, has stated the same thing. "Free trade is a threat to our sovereignty". I suspect that a large part of the present front bench of the Conservative Party has a similar point of view. Therefore, the question has to be asked, why divide the country when in 1983 all those sages of Canadian political wisdom clearly foresaw the dangers, clearly understood the problems, and clearly saw the vulnerabilities that were being engaged in? What happened? Was it a hoax? Was it a big con job? Was the whole thing born in a lie? Did the present Prime Minister all along know secretly that he was going to do it, and he just was not telling Canadians the truth? I suggest that the results of 1984 would have been very different if the Prime Minister had been forthcoming and honest and stated that this is what he was going to do. I suspect that, in 1984, many Canadians would have looked much differently at the present Prime Minister and the Members he was trying to elect, for example the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister of Finance, if they had stated that now they had changed their minds. Can we then assume that they were keeping it secret?

When I hear the Minister and his colleagues castigate the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), or other members of the Opposition, for what they call misrepresentations, what could be a greater misrepresentation than the words I have cited, taken to an election, and then a few months after the exact opposite being done? A change is initiated that is of glacial proportions. It will shift the geology of this country, but nobody is told about it. It is kept a deep, dark secret. What greater example of misrepresentation? What greater example of mistruth is there than that? The whole basic foundation of this agreement started with a lie, with a mistruth.

I would say that perhaps the Prime Minister knew all along what he was going to do. He knew that he could not say it in the election, because he would not be the Prime Minister, so he kept it tucked away. I believe he had different reasons. When the plan was proposed, and the Prime Minister appeared on television, it was interesting to hear the reasons why. When we judge it in the light of the present circumstances, surely Canadians must judge this agreement based upon a very hard-nosed calculus of costs and benefits. That is the bottom line for a country. It is not for a corporation, but it is for a country. Therefore, we must examine very carefully the balance between those costs and benefits. We have to ask, what are the great economic bonanzas that will fall upon us?

It is very interesting that, as time goes on, those promises shrink to the point where they are now so miniscule they are hardly talked about any more. Did we hear the Minister for International Trade use any facts and figures this morning in terms of projecting the economic benefits of this agreement? Not once did he ever comment on this type of projected growth rate or employment. He used rhetoric, but no hard facts.

It was interesting to note that, during the course of committee hearings, on several occasions when representatives of the business community appeared, they would say: "We think there will be prosperity. We hope there will be jobs. We believe there will be economic growth". I would say: "Such a statement of faith is okay for a theologian but you are supposed to be a hard-nosed business person. Give us the hard facts". They could not provide them. The reason is because there is no sure guarantee. There is no magic wand that will have Canada all of a sudden move into the promised land.

The Economic Council of Canada, well known to be in favour of Canada-U.S. free trade, tried its best, used every possible good news criteria. Do you know what they come up with? Hold your hat, because this is going to knock you off your seat. It was a quarter of 1 per cent a year growth based on the assumption that there would be a 6 per cent productivity growth in the meantime. I asked Dr. Maxwell, the Director, in front of the committee: "What happens if you do not get the 6 per cent productivity growth and there is no guarantee? Isn't it true that there would be less growth under the Canada-U.S. trade agreement in manufacturing than there would be under the status quo?" Do you know what Dr. Maxwell's answer was? "Yes, that is right". If those enlarged, gargantuan predictions of productivity growth are not there, or are there only in partial terms, then we will have less growth in manufacturing under this agreement than we would have otherwise.

The jobs that they are talking about, primarily in the service sector, are lowly paid clerical jobs, again confirmed by the Economic Council. You will lose somebody in the printing industry and end up having somebody serving hotdogs at McDonald's. I am not sure that that is the right kind of trade-off that Canadians expect they are buying. I am not sure that that is the kind of economic promise that should be fulfilled.

Projection after projection, whether it is the Department of Finance or the Economic Council or Informetrica, comes up with the same conclusion, that the actual incremental growth in Canada over 10 years is marginal. Informetrica, which is an independent agency, said: "No one can argue any more about the question of whether there is more or less growth, because it is simply not there. It is hard to predict". I am not necessarily saying that there is less growth, but I will tell you that there is not that kind of great cornucopia pouring out thousands of new jobs that the Prime Minister talked about back in 1985.

Of course, what the Government did not talk about are the job losses. We have heard from the then Minister of Employment and Immigration that It could be close to 500,000 dislocated workers. Well, someone got to him and he changed his mind.

The Economic Council talks about 150,000 to 180,000. Let me give you an example of just how untrustworthy these figures are. A brief submitted by the food processors from Mr. McLean of McCain's Food predicted that in the agrifood industry, which is one of Canada's largest employers, there could be upwards of 60,000 job losses, spread right across the country. The reason is that, very clearly, the food processing industry is put in a dilemma. It cannot go ahead and buy the raw materials at the same price that the Americans can supply it. Their answer is very simple. They are going to move south. They will take their capital and move it where they can get a lower price for potatoes, chickens or whatever it may be. That will have an impact on farming, processing and retailing, all the way up the chain.

The Deputy Minister of Agriculture of the federal Government came in front of our committee. I asked him: "Have you studied the impact of this agreement on the agrifood industry?" Do you know what the answer was? He said no. One of Canada's largest industries, one of the most important foundations of this country in terms of self-sufficiency and food, and the Department of Agriculture had not got around to studying what the impact would be. He said: "But I can tell you that the food processing people are wrong because I read the Economic Council report". I said, "How did they arrive at their calculations?" He said, "Oh, by a computer".

There are people in the industry who say that there are going to be job losses. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture said that he relied on somebody else's computer. I put it to this House, who would you rather trust? I heard from the Minister for International Trade that I should listen to people in industry. He said to listen to the council of wisdom, the people who create the jobs. Well, I did. What do they say? "We are going to lose jobs". The printing industry said that 6,000 jobs may be at risk. The textile people, the clothing people, the electrical appliance people, they were not kidding. They said: "We have big problems here if you go ahead".

At the same time, we have a Government that refuses to talk about adjustment, that is perpetrating one of the great falsehoods of all time, saying: "We do not need any adjustment programs because there will be so few people affected, or communities affected. We will get by with the Canadian Jobs Strategy", which is that great success story that every committee of this Commons has lacerated as being a total failure. Nor do they say that the Canadian Jobs Strategy has had its budget cut by 30 or 40 per cent.

My colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has stated many times in this House that the Government—how can they make the case and keep a straight face while they are doing it—claims they are going to deal with the thousands of people needing adjustment in food processing or printing when they have already cut back 30 or 40 per cent from their present budget and they cannot even meet the need? There are community colleges across Canada closing their doors because of a lack of money under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. I know the reason why they will not have adjustment programs. They are afraid that under the trade agreement any attempt to help workers or industries will be subject to countervail, to trade action.

If anyone wants to see a clear case in point of how we are limiting our freedom of action, there we are. We cannot even mount the means of responding to the problem created by the trade agreement because of the trade agreement. We do not have any adjustment programs, but we know that we are going to have job losses.

I saw in this morning's Toronto Star a report from the Social Council of Metro Toronto. They are not Grits or New Democrats. They are a respected social agency of independent mind. What did they say? Under the trade agreement older workers will be left behind. They are going to be the real victims, people over 40 years old. People in those manufacturing industries who are going to lose their jobs cannot go to work for McDonald's and serve hamburgers the same way. The Social Council of Metro Toronto said: "Where are the programs to help?" Well, we get a placebo, a pat on the head, or assurances.

Let us talk about some other so-called economic benefits. For example, the consumer benefit. I have read the book of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) very carefully. It talks about approximately $800 in savings. There were some interesting gaps and omissions in that study.

An Hon. Member: It is not surprising.

Mr. Axworthy: This vision that is being presented to Canadians whereby that they can rush to Buffalo, Burlington, Grand Forks or Spokane and pick up a VCR at 50 per cent off, rush back across the border, is pure hokum, an absolute hoax. There is a rule of origin which says that anything that has less than 50 per cent North American origin is still subject to the tariff. Who do you think is making the VCRs that the Americans are buying? They are not making them in Michigan; they are making them in Taiwan and in Korea. Even if you find something that is North American in origin, when you cross the border you are still hit with the taxes, the currency controls. All of a sudden those savings begin to evaporate.

Mr. Nunziata: The travel limits, they are all part of the big lie.

Mr. Axworthy: The economist, Mr. Kerton, for the Consumers Association of Canada estimated that the savings for a Canadian family under the trade agreement as it is written might be one-fifth of 1 per cent a year, perhaps a total of 30 or 40 bucks. Mr. Racicot from the Consumer's Association of Québec estimated $38 a year in savings, perhaps, if you are driving back and forth across the border. Those are the so-called consumer benefits. Is that going to have you dancing in the streets, 38 bucks a year? Maybe. The information that we are not being given today is what we will ultimately end up losing.

Presently, the tariff structure generates about $2 billion worth of revenue for Canada per year. That disappears. It has to be made up somehow. We either increase the deficit or we tax. We saw in the last Budget an extra $500 million raised by a new tax on gasoline to pay for what we are going to lose this year if the trade agreement goes through. You just lost your $38. If you drive a car or you heat your home, it is gone. It is not there any more. That is just the beginning. Wait until you have to pay the full $2 billion. I do not see the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs talking about that in his little pamphlets that he spews around the country. It does not mention those kinds of calculations, that somehow there are going to be major tax bites or an increase in deficits. Talk about misrepresentation. I suggest that to accept on blind faith that somehow there will be all kinds of consumer benefits is simply to live in a fool's world.

Let us turn to the final argument that the economists like to use, those evangelical economists, the Jimmy Bakkers of Canada, who are saying that if only you buy free trade, you shall be saved. Their solution for Canada is called the shock therapy system. They say that if only we had access to that big American market of 250 million people, Canadian industry would be forced to get mean and lean, really gear down and get tough and competitive and break into those markets. It sounds good in a textbook, but we have an interesting case history before us.

There are many industries which do have free trade. One of the most important such industries was the farm machinery industry. There was a time when Canada was a leader in the production of farm machinery. Some of the proudest companies in Canada, companies like Cockshutt and Massey-Ferguson, provided not only jobs but real pride. We were the leaders in the technology. We sold all around the world. By the way, we did that when we had a preferential tariff.

Over time, in the 1940s and the 1950s, the Americans eliminated their tariffs so we thought we had to eliminate ours as well. Now the bones of those farm machinery companies are strewn from one end of the country to the other. John Deere priced them out of existence. Massey-Ferguson has been sold off. Versatile, located in my City of Winnipeg, is now a branch plant of Ford. The independent farm machinery industry of Canada which had free trade, which according to economists would make it lean, mean, tough and competitive, is now a dead industry.

Mr. Hopkins: International Harvester doesn't even have a plant.

Mr. Axworthy: No, it does not have a plant. The Morris-Rod-Wheelen system in Yorkton is also in trouble. I know because a relative of mine is involved. The fact is that there is no magic wand. To buy the case made by people like Richard Lipsey, John Crispo and people from the Queen's School of Economy is to buy the evangelical protestations of Jimmy and Tammy Bakker or Jimmy Swaggart. It may be fun, but we will not get salvation. We may get burned along the way.

Mr. Hopkins: Their revenues are down too.

Mr. Axworthy: Yeah, they have lost it all. Talk about real free trade. Sometimes we thought it was slave trade.

The point I want to make is simply that the proponents and advocates of this agreement have not been able to successfully make the case that this agreement will provide substantial improvement in jobs and in growth of consumer savings or productivity.

Let us consider the claim that this will help regional development. People tell us to look at the European Economic Community. Let us look at it. Is northern England bouncing into a wild era of prosperity and optimism because of the European Economic Community? No, it is a depressed, dilapidated region of England. The same is true of parts of Italy, Belgium and other places. Belgium has the highest level of youth unemployment and it is part of the Common Market. The problem is these countries are up against some very large economies which are simply dwarfing and swamping them.

Mr. Hopkins: Maggie Thatcher wouldn't understand that.

Mr. Axworthy: My colleague says that Maggie Thatcher would not understand that. She is beginning to understand it. Now, as the Common Market is beginning to move toward some of the same things that are in this agreement, Maggie Thatcher is saying: "No, no, that takes away our sovereignty, that takes away our economic rights". She is pulling away from the precipice. Maggie Thatcher is not prepared to make a leap of faith, even though she has a broomstick to do it on. She is not going to do it.

Mr. Marchi: And she lectures us.

Mr. Axworthy: That's right. She can come to the House of Commons and tell us that free trade is good for us, but when it comes to Great Britain, Maggie Thatcher is all of a sudden pulling in her skirts and saying: "No sirree, I'm going to defend my people".

I challenge Members on the other side to prove to us with hard facts, not rhetoric, not evangelicalism, but hard facts, that there will be economic benefits. Those facts simply are not there. Committee hearing after committee hearing, report after report, showed clearly that it was simply a smoke-screen.

Mr. Malone: False.

Mr. Axworthy: That comes from a Member who never attended one committee meeting and did not know what was being represented.

Let us move on to the other great statement that is made. Now we will talk about the Prime Minister, that great paragon of truth and veracity. When the agreement was introduced, he said that our highest priority is to have an agreement that ends the threat to Canadian industry from U.S. protectionists who harass and restrict our exports through misuse of trade. He said: "Let me leave no doubt that a new regime of trade remedy laws must be part of this agreement".

The Prime Minister was right in one sense. There is a new regime of trade remedy laws, but they are not the kind the Prime Minister was talking about. The end result of two and a half years of negotiations on so-called free trade with the United States to get some kind of salvation from U.S. protectionism is tougher U.S. trade laws. There is a skillful negotiator for you. There is someone who really knows how to get a good deal. After two and a half years and after putting the whole country on the table, we have ended up with tougher laws applied to us.

Last week the American President signed into law the omnibus trade Bill and with it, a brand new series of trade measures. Last March, Ambassador Gotlieb, our ambassador in Washington, wrote a letter to the Members of the Congress stating clearly that this law was contrary to the spirit of the trade agreement, it was damaging to international trade and it was contrary to the principles, rights and obligations of international rules. He cited a new definition of subsidies and new powers, but I will not get into technicalities.

We asked the Minister questions in the House. We asked him what he would do about this. He said: "Oh, boy, we're really going to get tough, can't have that happen". Well, it has happened. The U.S. has introduced a new protectionist trade law with tough new measures, and the only answer we can get from the Parliamentary Secretary is that it has been watered down. When we asked him how, he could not say.

We phoned the Department of External Affairs, the trade office and the embassy in Washington to ask how the new law had been watered down, to give us an example of the changes that have been made. There is no such document. There has been no analysis done. Perhaps it has been done, but it is not going to be made public because the changes have not been made. The fact is that the new powers under the U.S. trade law are much tougher. They redefine subsidies on a much broader basis. They give new powers to the President to retaliate. They give new import relief measures and 95 per cent of the measures that were in Ambassador Gotlieb's letter are still in that Bill.

Every other independent minded country in the world, Japan, France and the European Economic Community, are protesting and are threatening to take the U.S. to GATT. What do we get from the Government of Canada in protecting the Canadian interest? We get a whimper, not even a word.

This Prime Minister said that our highest priority is to have an agreement that ends the threat to Canadian industries. Here is a new U.S. protectionist Bill now in law, and the Prime Minister of Canada did not say a peep about it. The Minister for International Trade, that big, brave, brawling, blustering, blasphemous blow-hard from Newfoundland, what did he say about it? I do not think he said anything. Did you hear him say anything, Madam Speaker? Did you read a statement from the Minister for International Trade about the omnibus trade Bill? No, I guess he was off in Newfoundland talking to all those fishermen or getting rid of railways or something.

Surely we can see how illogical this is. Talk about a joke being perpetrated on the Canadian people. How can we look back on what the Prime Minister said about getting all this new protection while faced with a brand new trade Bill that really puts it to us?

As if that were not enough, the U.S. Congress and administration introduced in their implementing legislation brand new measures to punish us even further and extend their power to harass Canadian industry. They brought in amendments to say that U.S. industry can petition the trade office to undertake studies to determine whether or not Canadian exports have government subsidies. You do not have to do the work any more, just ask us, we will pay all the bills and take those Canadians to task.

This morning the Minister for International Trade was in high dudgeon about the Leader of my Party's comments in Newfoundland about the way in which the implementing legislation creates a real threat to the Canadian fish processing industry. He stamped up and down and swore that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was guilty of the worst kind of calumny. He was not telling the truth. I went back and read the U.S. Bill. This is it right here, passed by the U.S. Congress, and here is the section. It is a long section and I will read it to you: "Canadian Controls on Fish". I am reading from the U.S. legislation: "Within 30 days of the application by Canada of export controls on unprocessed fish exempted per agreement under Article 203, or the application of landing requirements per fish caught in Canadian waters, the President shall take appropriate action to enforce U.S. rights under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. In enforcing those rights the President has discretion to bring a challenge to the offending Canadian practices before GATT, retaliate against such offending practices, or seek resolution directly with Canada", et cetera.

That is the East Coast fishery we are talking about. If the Minister can somehow interpret this legislation as being protection against U.S. protectionism, then he had better put windshield wipers on his glasses because there in the Bill itself is the U.S. taking unto itself the right to challenge our ability to require processing of fish in Canada. They will take the raw fish but when we try to provide processing, there is the U.S. legislation saying we cannot do it. I ask you, is that ending the threat of U.S. protectionism which harasses and restricts our exports?

Furthermore, this same Bill carries with it instructions for the U.S. to renegotiate all the measures dealing with investment, culture, energy and resources to get even more than they got, to say nothing of the right of the U.S. to continue to apply steel quotas and implement new provisions on agriculture. Is it any wonder that the farm groups that appeared before the committee, the Western Canadian Pool, the largest farm organization, the advisory group to the Wheat Board, all said they feel we are in real danger for that reason? Yet the Bill itself provides new loopholes for U.S. trade action.

What about our own legislation? There is another great sort of coup d'état on the part of the Prime Minister. He was such a smart negotiator that he agreed to entrench in the legislation that we passed as part of the agreement the softwood lumber agreement. For time immemorial, if this agreement is ever implemented, we will be unable to challenge the right of the U.S. in effect to impose a 15 per cent penalty against all softwood lumber producers in Canada. In other words, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre's wrong way touchdown scored against her own goal will now be cast in bronze. We will never be able to change it.

In our own legislation, we agree that transportation subsidies for grain, something very central to my part of the world, for the first time in the history of this country, are considered to be an export related subsidy and subject to dispute resolution under the trade laws. That may not sound too profound in this Chamber, but if you are a farmer in Manitoba and you have to move your grain to Prince Albert by train and you are competing with a farmer in Minnesota who moves it down the Mississippi River system at a substantially lower cost, you will realize that by accepting that a transportation subsidy is a disputable offence, you have just given away our export market. That precedent will be established in further negotiations and it is in our own legislation.

Let me now go to the crown jewel of this commitment to obtain secure access. This is the one which in some ways tells the whole story. All the business groups, all the proponents, all the advocates, when asked about the agreement, say it is not perfect but it is an improvement. You ask them why it is an improvement and they say that we have this new dispute settlement mechanism. They make it sound as if it were new, which it is not. A more correct definition is that it is a review mechanism. The one thing that is very clear in the agreement is that U.S. trade law will still apply. We did not get any exemption as the Prime Minister promised. We did not get any special guarantee. We did not get any kind of special concession. The U.S. still retains the right, as we do, to use its own trade laws. The difference is, and I want to make this case to you, that the so-called dispute settlement mechanism is a worse system than what we have now. It will take longer, cost more, and be less protective of Canadian interests.

Let me quickly give you some examples. Under the present system we have the right to challenge the U.S. law. The omnibus Trade Bill has just been passed and it redefines a subsidy in a much broader way. If the U.S. attempts to take action against us based upon that law, we can take them to GATT and challenge it directly, saying that the law itself was not proper. It betrays the rights and obligations of the U.S. under the international trading system. Under this dispute settlement mechanism the law is not reviewed, just whether it was fairly applied. We cannot challenge the law. All we can review is whether or not the trade panel or the courts or the trade commission applied it fairly. That is all.

We got into a kind of gobbledegook with the officials and the Minister about whether you still have recourse to GATT. They say if you read Section 1802 we still have recourse to GATT except that since 1949 GATT has never accepted an appeal from any two countries that have a bilateral system. We do not have recourse to GATT. We have given up one of the most important avenues of protecting Canadian exporters, one which has been successfully applied in the last four years against the U.S. We have had six cases, we won three, we could have won two of the others except that the Government caved in on softwood lumber, and we lost one. We had a pretty good record of challenging the law. Yet this great agreement, this great achievement, this so-called improvement, takes that option away from us.

Not only that, it will take longer to apply. What is the biggest complaint by many Canadian exporters to the U.S.? It is that U.S. industry harasses them by taking action at the International Trade Commission, goes to the Department of Commerce, and it costs you a million or two to fight your case.

Let me give you another interesting comparison. Under the particular scheme we are debating today you cannot take a review until the whole American procedure is completed. It only kicks in at the end of the procedure. Under GATT you can kick it in after a preliminary decision, almost a year earlier than this one. When you are fighting a trade action a year is a lot of money. I suggest that rather than getting an improvement we have a retardation of our ability to fight our trade wars.

What is more, it was not necessary. The only thing that has been replaced in the whole system is the final review on the grounds that it was "biased". Yet, Ambassador Ritchie, who is recognized by all sides as being an honest man, when asked whether the present system was biased, said no. He said that the International Court of Trade in New York judges impartially. The only thing we replaced was the one thing that was working very well.

Is that what you consider a great accomplishment, Madam Speaker, a system that cuts off one of your major recourses, does not allow you to challenge the law, takes longer, costs more money and replaces something that was working perfectly well? That is a so-called benefit.

Mr. McDermid: That isn't the testimony the manufacturers gave at all, and you know it.

Mr. Axworthy: In terms of this agreement the Government makes Neville Chamberlain look like a winner. In that great pantheon of winners along with Neville Chamberlain and General Westmoreland will go the name of the Prime Minister. This is a full-scale, absolutely incredible defeat for Canadian interests. The only thing that can be said for it is that they are certainly trying to propagandize it. We are cutting down forests across the country to produce paper on which to print the message that this was a great achievement.

That is why we need an election. It is only through daily word of mouth comments that these facts and this kind of hard-nosed analysis will come out. The business people who support the agreement will be required to read the agreement and learn what it means. If they are going to be honest about it they will see that it is simply not the case that they will get secure, guaranteed access as promised in 1985.

Just last week I talked to some businessmen who said that that is not important, that if they are further harassed by the United States industry they can move their factories to Alabama.

Mr. McDermid: Who said that?

Mr. Kilgour: Give us the names.

Mr. Axworthy: We will provide all the information, just like the Government does. We will provide it.

Mr. Kilgour: Put up or shut up.

Mr. McDermid: Why doesn't he move them there now?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, to answer the Parliamentary Secretary, the fact is that it is already happening and many of them have.

Mr. McDermid: At least be honest in your presentation.

Mr. Axworthy: They want to talk about being honest. Talking about honesty, let me refer back to what the Prime Minister said about free trade with the U.S.

Mr. Nunziata: Lyin' Brian.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Two Members of Parliament, one from York whatever and one from Algoma called the Prime Minister a liar just now. I would like both the Hon. Members to stand up and withdraw their remarks.

Mr. Nunziata: Take your marbles and go home.

Mr. Hopkins: Can't take the heat.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It has been very difficult in the last few seconds for the Speaker to hear what was being said on the floor of the House of Commons as there were exchanges between the two sides of the House. I am sure that if some Hon. Members did use some unparliamentary language, they will have the courage to do the honourable thing and apologize. I have to bow to Hon. Members' honesty. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has the floor.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I sat for an hour and three-quarters this morning through the speech of the Minister for International Trade. On numerous occasions he called the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) a liar and said that he used mistruths. He said the same thing about the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. McDermid: No he didn't.

Mr. Axworthy: I did not see the Parliamentary Secretary rise to his feet at that time. If there is any side guilty of purple probe, of making unbiased allegations, I suggest that the Parliamentary Secretary read the "blues" of the speech of his Minister this morning and he will see the worst example of the use of debasement in a speech in this House on the most serious topic we have ever heard. I only wish that he would apply the same standard to his Minister as he wants to apply to Members on this side of the House.

The two major counts which the Government has put forward as the rationale for this agreement come up as failures. There are very serious questions about the so-called benefits. If the benefits are so meaningless and limited, why do they persist? It is interesting to note that when the trade negotiator, Mr. Reisman, withdrew from the table saying that he could not get what he thought was a fair deal for the country, or words to that effect, it was the political people who brought him back in.

I think the answer to the question lies in the substantial part of the accord. I think the real reason we have a total flip-flop on the part of the Prime Minister and his colleagues since 1983 lies in other parts of the agreement which do not deal with trade at all but with the basic domestic institutions and practices of the country. What you see is a concerted, coherent attempt to enfeeble the Governments of Canada. It is a clear expression of the neo-Conservative philosophy which says that it is the market-place of North America that will make decisions for Canadians and not Government, the public sector, people speaking through their elected representatives, or people relying upon public initiative. It is purely the market-place that will decide.

The philosophy expressed by the merchant class of Montreal in 1849 is now coming home to roost in 1989. They do not want to share power. The real issue in this debate is about who governs Canada, who is going to make the decisions, and who the decisions are going to be made for. As you go through the agreement you will see all the non-trade related items. What does investment have to do with trade? That was part of the trade-off with the Reagan administration.

It is instructive to read the words of Mr. Reisman speaking to the Ontario Economic Council in May of 1985 when he said, "A major difficulty in negotiating a bilateral agreement with the United States is that the economic benefits from free trade are likely to be asymmetrical and the Americans will have to seek concrete benefits in other areas".

The same formula applies whether you talk about this comprehensive agreement or another comprehensive agreement. We have to put more chips on the table than we have in trade so we end up having to put energy, investment, services, and the various domestic sectors of our economy on the table because we do not have enough to play with. The United States is 10 times our size. That was the message of Mr. Reisman. Mr. Reisman's conclusion in the speech was that we could get a deal if we put water on the table. He talked about the Grand Trunk Canal and all the rest of it. We know that that in fact became part of the deal. The fact is that we gave an awful lot more, we gave up a whole series of instruments.

• (1620)

For example, there is energy. I ask Members to go back and read a very interesting document produced by the Paley Commission during the Eisenhower administration. It put forward the notion that the United States could only have national security if it had complete control over continental resources. That was a number one priority going back to the 1950s. In 1988, the United States achieved that priority.

Mr. McDermid: They have not got it.

Mr. Axworthy: They have it in spades. I hear the protests of the apologist for the Government across the way. Let me quote from statements by William Martin, Deputy Secretary of the United States Department of Energy. He was appearing before the subcommittee in the House of Representatives and said: "The free trade agreement will benefit industrial energy consumers . . . ", American consumers, " . . . by ensuring non-discriminatory access to Canadian energy resources, increasing the availability of energy supplies such as electricity and gas; improving security of supply by reducing circumstances under which supplies can be interrupted; reducing energy costs by eliminating price discrimination in U.S.-Canada energy trade and increasing the competitiveness of U.S. industries in world markets".

Mr. Martin then went on to point out how U.S. industry, by getting access to cheaper Canadian energy, will be available to virtually put us out of those world markets. The industries he cites include petro-chemicals, pulp and paper, primary metals and so on.

He said: "The agreement can help make Canadian electricity imports cheaper. Under current regulations, Canadian exporters may not charge a price for that electricity that is significantly less than the least cost energy alternative available to their U.S. customers".

Mr. McDermid: That is wrong.

Mr. Axworthy: Of course, the U.S. Under Secretary of State is wrong. The Government apologist—

Mr. McDermid: Do not be silly.

Mr. Axworthy: The problem we have in the House with the Government is that it thinks an assertion is evidence. It thinks that by simply saying something is so, makes it so. The fact of the matter is that no one trusts the Government.

We are talking about the way the Americans understand the agreement. You can bet your bottom dollar that when it comes to a question of using the trade agreement to challenge, the Americans will be up there with all their high priced Washington lawyers.

The problem is that we have seen the Government, from the day it came into office, give away on every single count.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Axworthy: Pharmaceuticals, softwood lumber, potash, cedar shakes and shingles, you name it. I would like to know when the Government ever had the gumption and guts to stand up and defend Canadian interests. Not once has it had the gumption to do so. Do government Members think Canadians will believe them? Do they think Canadians will accept their bald-faced assertions? They are like these stupid documents which the Government prints up at a cost of $30 million or $40 million in taxpayers' money which do not tell the truth but simply state a selective case and miss the important essentials.

Investment is a great example. We are now at the point where there has been $33 billion worth of foreign investment since the Government came into power, 95 per cent of which has been takeovers and acquisitions. The Government is not simply selling off our resources, it is selling off everything that owns them. Everything is being given away lock, stock and barrel. It is not good enough for the Government that 95 per cent of all foreign investment is in the form of takeovers and acquisitions. It wants to give the rest of it away.

The Petroleum Monitoring Agency, the Government's own agency that measures these matters, points out that Canadian ownership is dropping rapidly. Why is that important to Canadians? If we lost the requirement to have Canadian ownership, we lose research and development, management jobs and we lose all the supplementary jobs that go with it.

Head offices create a lot of jobs in this information age, with people who work on the computers, do the data processing and innovation. The more they buy up Canadian companies, the more they do that work down at the head office. The Government will make it that much easier.

Will that create jobs? Is it in the Canadian economic interest to not only open the doors, but now open the windows without making one performance requirement? We will no longer have the right to require the creation of jobs here or the conduct of research and development. The Government has simply said: "Open Sesame".

This morning the Minister said that Canadians can be competitive. He referred to Northern Telecom as a Canadian company that can be held out as an example of what we can do in the international market-place. I agree.

However, the possibility of another Northern Telecom ever occurring in Canada under this agreement is virtually nil. There is a part of the agreement that limits the powers of monopolies. It prohibits preferential purchasing on a monopoly. We know how Northern Telecom began. It was a subsidiary of Bell, which is a monopoly and was granted that power under federal regulation. It was able to give a preferred purchasing arrangement to a small subsidiary to do all its R and D. With that protection, over time it grew and developed. Its engineers and scientists became world class. Now it can go into the market.

If one believes that could ever happen again under this agreement, forget it. It is gone.

Mr. McDermid: Tell us where that is not allowed in the agreement. Give us the chapter.

Mr. Malone: Give the evidence. How can you say that? You make me sick.

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) says he is getting sick. It is an example of how one's stomach's stability is related to the inability to consume the truth.

Let us talk about regional development. The Government says that nothing in the agreement touches regional development. Joe Ghiz, Premier of Prince Edward Island, said in a speech:

> Last week, the Director of Agriculture Canada in the Maritimes told an audience in Nova Scotia that a new agreement between the Province and the Federal Government must be tailored to avoid complaints from the United States.

Before the agreement is even in place, grants under our regional development programs are being conditioned in order to "avoid the countervails" on the basis of the new definition of subsidy implemented by the American legislation. We are already tailoring our cloth to fit the agreement.

Recently, I read an interesting study of the Canadian mineral industry by Professor Anderson of the Centre for Resource Studies, Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario. In his study on mineral resources, Professor Anderson said:

> It can be asserted that the forthcoming attempt to develop common rules for countervail and anti-dumping action under the agreement places the Canadian regional development programs at risk. Given the strong U.S. objections to these programs, Canadian negotiators may face significant pressure to curb such activities.

It is the same thing as Premier Ghiz is saying. He went on to say:

> Although the evidence is less tangible, it is also possible to argue that the Canadian minerals and metals industry could suffer in the international marketplace as a result of the free trade agreement. This statement rests on the premise that if Canadians tax and subsidy schemes slowly change or mirror U.S. policy, then Canadian firms may end up being less competitive than they are now in offshore markets.

Professor Anderson is saying that we will no longer be able to provide the kind of support we did to modernize the forest industry or to provide infrastructure support for minerals and mining. That is a key element of our regional development program.

Because of our resource base, we have used those kinds of government investments to aid the regions.

One can say the same thing about agriculture and the cultural industries. A strait-jacket has been put on the ability of the Government of Canada to make decisions on behalf of its citizens according to its judgment, or to have that judgment based upon the kind of normal democratic activities that take place in a society where there is freedom of action. But if we sign away those freedoms, if we give away that right to make decisions in the international agreement, we do not get them back again. Aside from those parts of the agreement, I think it is important to recognize the argument about harmonization.

The Minister for International Trade took great pains this morning to challenge the assertions made by our Leader with respect to the impact of harmonization, which is a very simple concept. It simply means that by having, over time, to harmonize standards, and also facing competitive pressures, Canadian businesses will put their own pressure on Canadian Governments to start limiting standards, to cut back taxes and programs. If you are faced with competition in the manufacture of furniture from a southern state that has a small minimum wage and no occupational health standards, and its costs are 5 per cent, 10 per cent or 15 per cent less, how do you compete? You start asking the federal and provincial Governments to reduce your costs accordingly.

The Minister for International Trade quoted Laurent Thibault, the President of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, with great authority this morning. He looked across the Chamber at me and said: "The Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) should listen to this gentleman". Well, here we go. Laurent Thibault, the President of CMA, said: "It is simply a fact that as we ask our industries to compete toe to toe with American industries, we in Canada are obviously forced to create the same conditions in Canada that exist in the United States whether it is unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation, the cost of Government, the level of taxation or whatever". Tom Stanfield, President of Stanfields, says: "It is the cost of Government, the cost of human resources, which will allow us to compete and therefore we will have to slowly adopt the American way with very few modifications". Why is it that manufacturing is largely located in the southern United States instead of in the northern states, which are more comparable to Canada when it comes to cost structures and way of life? They are going where they have lower costs. That is the answer.

With respect to the question of regional development, I live in a city just north of the states of North and South Dakota which are going through their own depression because they cannot compete with the sunbelt states which have much lower costs, much lower social programs. Does the Government think that pressure for harmonization will not occur over time? It is beginning to appear already. If we throw into the mix the kind of curious, eccentric arrangement called the Maquiladora process, where United States manufacturers can take component parts, send them to a little strip along the Mexican border, have them assembled by labour which is paid 60 cents an hour, bring them back up and stamp them "Made in U.S.A."

We asked the question in front of the committee: "How are you going to police against this? How will you stop those "Made in U.S.A." products competing with us?" The answer was that we can go down and inspect those factories. Just imagine for a moment, Mr. Speaker, a Canadian customs officer going into a small town in Georgia or a town on the border of Texas, with all those Texas Rangers and guys walking around with six-guns, saying: "I have come to see if you are cheating"? We may never hear from that customs officer again. It would be the highest risk occupation in the Public Service. I would not even give the job to the Minister for International Trade.

This is not a laughing matter. It represents a very serious pressure for us over time to accept a wholly different way of doing things, and not because the Americans are necessarily going to bludgeon us. It will be our own people who will say they cannot compete, and we will have to change the rules. That will bring about fundamental change in the way we do business in this country. It will again limit the parameters, the horizons, the options of Canadian Governments to understand any kind of investment, programming and support, with its own environmental standards, social programs, or whatever it may be. That is what we mean by "harmonization". It is not a figment of my imagination. It is reinforced by statements made by the Social Council of Canada, the Nurses' Federation, and the Wildlife Federation. Highly respected, serious minded, interest groups in this country have made that same case. When I read the editorials in the Winnipeg Free Press which say there is no problem or threat, I would ask those reporters to read the testimony of people who know. They should listen to the kind of people who can see that kind of problem.

These people are not worried about the bottom line. What they are saying is very simple. Capital can move quickly. One can move a million dollars in a second on a computer. Someone can set up a new factory tomorrow in any part of North America, but the jobs cannot be moved, the farmers cannot be moved, the communities cannot be moved, people cannot be moved very easily. That is part of the problem. This agreement may suit us fine and dandy if we are simply worried about a quick, fast shuffle of capital playing in those markets. But one of the things that has made us different as Canadians is that we have not just listened to the bottom line. We have not just simply followed the dictates of the market-place. We have not simply followed the profit margins of the stock exchange. They are important. They are necessary institutions. But they are not the dominant force. They should not set all our priorities. They should not make all our decisions for us.

We talk about Canadian independence. What has made us independent has been the role of the public sector, the ability to make major public investment when the private sector often would not do it. My part of the country grew because of investments made by the public sector, be it the Wheat Board, transportation or even investment in our communications system. We would not have a country if it were not for that ability of Governments at all levels to make those kinds of decisions. But we are now faced with an agreement that will limit those kinds of decisions and replace them with the market-place. That is why there are millions of concerned Canadians. That is why there is a deep and abiding split in this country. There are Canadians who recognize that this has been part and parcel of our history. It is an essential ingredient in what makes us different, and it is absolutely crucial for our maintenance as a country.

If we put ourselves into a strait-jacket, if we find ourselves no longer with the same kind of freedom of action we had before, then we no longer exist. I listened to the Minister for International Trade carefully. He said "Well, you signed agreements with GATT. You accepted rights and obligations", and that is true. The reason is very simple. There were some shrewd Canadian leaders back in the 1940s and 1950s who had some sense of vision. They understood very well that by joining an international body, we were able to protect that right of decision. When we negotiated reductions in tariffs, which we did, we did not do it at the sacrifice of our right to make decisions about investment. We did not sacrifice our right to make decisions about how we were going to support our energy industry or our mineral industry. We did not sacrifice our right to decide environmental concerns or financial institutions. We found there was a way of getting a balance, of opening up trade, of liberalizing trade, of bringing down trade barriers without putting those other things on the table.

One of the reasons for this was that we were not the "demander". We were able to share a bargaining power in those international organizations. We were able to get concessions from the United States and other big trading partners because other countries were part of the team. There is a good analogy in football. If you are a blocking lineman, and you are across the line from a 190 pound defensive end, and he is going to push you over, you get someone else to block him out. You double-team him. That is what you do with your international organizations. You double-team the Americans. You provide some way of putting proper pressure and balance against them. That is why it is worked well for us. That is why we suggest that that is the best way of bringing down trade barriers without giving away the store and all the rest of the chattel and goods that this agreement gives away.

The Minister for International Trade does not understand that, nor does the Prime Minister. They have forgotten that fundamental lesson we have learned in the last 40 years. It goes back to what I said before, not because it is a lesson they do not want to learn but because the motivating force, the driving impetus of the agreement does not really have as much to do with trade as it does with limiting government, of destroying the political mixed economy of Canada, of making the market-place supreme—of giving the big corporations the right to decide. That is what is really behind this type of agreement. It is that type of philosophy, theology or ideology which is really at the base root of where this agreement comes from.

I say to you, Madam Speaker, we want an election because we want the chance to give Canadians a choice. We want to give Canadians the right to see that there is a different vision of the country.

The Minister for International Trade got into a high dudgeon today about the use of the Senate. He was abusive in his comments about many of our colleagues in the Upper House. It is not surprising, he is abusive of everybody. He forgot one very simple fundamental fact. It was that he was the Minister of Justice who brought in a Bill concerning Senate reform. We agreed with it. Our Leader said: "You bring any proposal on Senate reform, an elected Senate, and we will pass it. We will go along with it". That was in 1985. Who backed off? Who withdrew?

Mr. Nunziata: Crosbie the coward.

Mr. Axworthy: That is right, the big bad wolf from St. John's West turned out to be Little Red Ridinghood. He simply did not have the guts to follow through. Why? Because he had his own people. He had the Lowell Murrays, the Michel Coggers and all the other guys. He had the Laval team and all the rest of them. They had to be gotten on to the benches too. What hypocrisy to talk about the Trudeau hacks when the Prime Minister and his colleagues have been loading the trenches as fast as they could. Our Senators are prepared for Senate reform. They want an elected Senate. Our Party wants an elected Senate.

Mr. Malone: You do not.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, we do. Our Party in national convention voted 78 per cent in favour of an elected Senate. I have not seen a similar resolution on behalf of the Conservative Party.

The Senate is not the issue. The instructions are very simple. Canadians have the right to make a choice on something that is fundamental. One does not shift fundamental ingredients, the rights of a people of a country without giving them the right to decide, especially when they were not told the truth in 1984, especially when the Government went around saying that it did not believe in free trade and that it would never happen. Surely to goodness all we are saying now is that the Upper Chamber is doing what it should do, and not say that it is for or against the Bill but: "Let the people decide. Let them choose. Let them show what they are prepared to do". That is all.

In the final part of my remarks I wish to talk about what that choice will be. Tomorrow our Leader will be speaking. He will outline in detail the kind of trade strategy that we will promote. I want to talk about what I felt and heard over the last three years. I want to talk about the sense I got from all those people who oppose this agreement but who want something different. The people who are against the agreement are not in favour of the status quo. They are not in favour of going back to some kind of little England. That is pure mythology that is being perpetrated.

Do you know what there is, Madam Speaker? There is a new kind of internationalism growing in Canada. There are all kinds of people in business, professions, schools, women's organizations and cultural groups who see Canada as a mature country with an important role to play in the world. They see us being able to help solve the problems in Central America in a way that we could not do before. They see us being able to work out new economic and trade relations in Latin America or in the Middle East. They see us being able to take a different perspective on the great power bi-polarities on nuclear weapons. They really believe that Canada has come of age as Laurier promised—but not as a junior partner to the United States, not as a country which will simply be the tail wagging the dog, a country which has integrated itself so much economically that it has no ability or right to make the types of choices that need to be made in the international arena. They see us, certainly, in an interdependent world.

The way to manage that is not to form a regional block, not to form into some kind of fortress to fight other regions, but to develop new international institutions. I refer to new monetary institutions, new ways of holding corporations accountable, new ways of developing financial fiscal assistance for Third World countries. There is an enormous sense of aspiration and of expectation on the part of Canadians to achieve that. But they know it will be frustrated by this type of agreement.

An interesting group of people is the Lawyers for Social Responsibility. They point out how in God's name this country could in the future ever take on establishing new policies in the Arctic, in Central America or in the United Nations if we become so economically integrated with the United States and when the only program that is allowed under this agreement for regional development is military purchasing. That is really all that is left for us to do. This Government has a White Paper which is probably the most extreme type of example of cold war mongering. I think that Ronald Reagan would blush if he put a document like that. This Government has the capacity sometimes to make Ronald Reagan look good.

We have the ability to do something different, to try to find a new type of internationalism, and we are going to throw it away. We are going to give it away. I was at a conference in Japan this summer. I was having lunch with a young Korean who was part of the Academy of Economics and Science. He is a top economist. He said: "I do not understand this agreement you are going to sign with the Americans. Why are you doing it? Right now, we have to deal with you on investment, trade and tourism. We look to Canada as being a significant and powerful important player. Once you get into this agreement you just come along for the ride with the Americans. We will just have to talk with them from now on".

Down in Central America this spring I was talking with he people there who said: "What about this agreement? We would like you to break the economic embargo in Central America. Open up new trade lines. Replace the United States in terms of machinery and other kinds of parts and goods. Why are you signing this agreement? Why are you cutting yourselves out?"

The world is moving away from this great power bi-polarization. This Government is not. It is the one that is stuck in the past. It is the one that has rearview mirrors attached to its policy. It is like a feeder fish that gets on the back of a big shark. This Government wants to become a feeder fish. It wants to latch itself on to the back of a big shark and go along with it.

Canadians do not want that. They want an independent role in the world. They realize that we can do it most effectively through international organizations, through strengthening, developing and enhancing them. That is why we are fighting so hard. We want to open up and retain that capacity for Canada to achieve that sense of a new vision and purpose.

Similarly, the people I talked to feel that we still have a real choice in the country for full employment. They feel that we still have a chance to put in place the right kind of mixtures of things to obtain full employment. We listen to members of the government treasury benches talk with enormous pride that after five or six years of a boom economy our unemployment is still at 8 per cent. That is not good enough. That is not acceptable. The boom started in 1983 when we were in government. It has continued throughout. We still have not been able to get unemployment down below 8 per cent. There is something wrong with that.

I refer the House to an interesting analysis done by a Dutch economist who studied those countries which were able to achieve virtually full employment versus all the other industrial countries that could not. He examined all the kinds of indicators. They were Gross National Product and levels of investment. Yet one of the key factors he considered was the ability to make independent choices about one's own economy. The successful ones were not members of the EEC or free trade groups. They were members of countries that retained the right to make judgments, to tailor and blueprint labour market policy, investment policy and research policy to fit the times and conditions.

The argument they are making is that there can be good international relations as part of multilateral groups, but not to the point where the right to make those choices is given away. That is what we are giving away. When the right to control investment, resources, energy, culture, agriculture, and regional development, plus the questions of harmonization are given away, the opportunity for this country to initiate significant new employment opportunities for many Canadians has also been given away.

Finally, I put this case to you, Madam Speaker. The third part of that new vision, the contrasting vision, is based upon a simple question of what I call democracy. It is a simple institution, but we have spent a lot of time in our society building it up, and slowly finding ways that people without wealth or status are able to have the right to make decisions about their lives, their families, and their neighbourhoods. We are simply the inheritors of an enormous number of battles and fights that have gone on in the past to ensure that that will happen. I believe that this Chamber is one of the prime repositories of that tradition. We have always recognized that there are sources of real power. Concentration of wealth is perhaps the most. Things can be bought, and things can be made to happen. There has to be a balance always. There has to be an alternative access always, a parallel ladder for people to have their interests heard, responded to, and acted upon.

We are in an age where much of that access is being closed off. We live in an age of executive federalism where more and more decisions are made by far-away institutions, by access behind closed doors of Cabinets or regulatory bodies. That is another topic that I will not get into.

Think what happens under this agreement, for example, when we lose our ability to make decisions about what the big corporations will do about tax policies. When decisions are made in a far off board room, outside our own country, where our own law cannot be applied to hold them accountable, what does that do in terms of the right to participate, the right to make a decision, or the rights of people in small, one mineral town communities in northern Québec, Alberta, or the Territories? If those opportunities are taken away to make those decisions because the power is removed, then an empty shell is left.

One of the real visions that people want is a return or a restoration of some feeling of control over their own lives. They want this institution to be far more effective than it has been in ensuring that we respond and are able to react to their types of concern. How is that to be done if a whole series of decisions have been taken on a whole range of aspects of our life and turned over to another commission, to private hands, to where it cannot be got at, or to where people are faceless? If that whole opportunity for ordinary Canadians to get a hold on the system and make themselves heard has been taken away, then one of the most precious and vital substances of their lives has been taken away. That is what this agreement does.

It is not only the economics. Talking about independence is not only talking about supply management boards, or investment programs. It is also talking about many intangibles, and things that people feel. After a while it will become fairly apparent that if we cannot get a decision from our own National Energy Board on the price of natural gas, and the real decisions are being made by the federal energy regulatory commission in Washington, or one cannot go to his or her Member of Parliament and say that something should be done about foreign investment because that foreign-owned mining company is going to shut down in my town and they are told, "Sorry, we have nothing to say about it", the message will get through that perhaps we had better start electing people in Washington. Perhaps we should go where the power is. Get a Congressman rather than a Member of Parliament, or get someone in their commission rather than here.

I do not state that this will happen overnight, but it may do so over time. People are pretty smart and they will figure those things out. They will soon realize that they have to go where power is. If you are going to exercise the power, you have to go where it is. It cannot be said that this will not happen for there are historical precedents. Hawaii first started out with a trade agreement with the United States and ended up as the fiftieth state. In the 19th century the German states started out as independent kingdoms or duchies. Over time as the Zollverein they had a customs agreement and they ended up being dominated by Prussia, and then there was Germany. History has many examples of where those things happening, and people finally decided that they were tired of being denied the rights to make decisions, so they went to where the power is.

Canadians have ambition and the appetite to be a significant and important, but independent, player and to do important things in the world, to open up not only world markets, but to do something constructive in trying to reorganize a crazy, nuclear dominated world. Canadians believe that we can do that. I do not mean to say that we will change things overnight, but we can make a real difference. Canadians want the independence to do that, and they can see that independence being shrunken or limited by this type of agreement.

Canadians want to retain the same opportunity within their own country to make decisions whether it is on ensuring equalization of opportunities, or that we do not have to have everybody move to the southern states to get a job, or move to Toronto, but we have always had the principle that we have tried to move jobs to where the people are. We also want to have the right to make those decisions for ourselves through our own institutions in our own way. That is the type of vision that many Canadians believe in. It is not the market-place vision. It is not the merchant class vision. It is not that type of bottom line vision. However, it is there, it is strong, it wants a focal point, it wants a vehicle, and it wants a government that will give life, substance, and meaning to that vision. Canadians do not find it in this Government. If this agreement comes into force and is entrenched in stone it will close off the doorways for that vision ever being implemented.

That is why we are involved in this fight. That is why we, on behalf of millions of Canadians from coast to coast, are fighting the type of battle we have fought and will continue to fight. We believe surely that, if any appeal makes any sense that we can make to the Prime Minister of this country, that is that he has a responsibility to give people that choice. If you believe in what you are doing, which you obviously do, then simply put it out on the platform at election time. Quit playing games. Quit going on television and saying, "Maybe this week, maybe tomorrow. I'll consult the stars. I'll consult my anniversary date. I'll check with the kids at home". That is not leadership.

The Prime Minister has a clear responsibility, and it is one of the conventions of Parliament within the real conventions of democracy that he has a right to put in front of the people a major change in the life of this country, and the people have the right to make that decision. Quit playing the games. Quit doing the cutesy little interviews. Quit tantalizing the Canadian public. Simply say: "That is an obligation I have as a Prime Minister, for no other reason, and I am prepared to live up to it".

We will be there, and we will do what we have to do. We believe there is a newer world out there. We believe that we can represent that vision. We believe that when the people get the right to make that choice and the Prime Minister gets off the television screens and gets over to Government House, people will give us that opportunity and that mandate to fulfil and live up to a brand new vision for Canada, one that goes way beyond this trade agreement, one that does not see us tied into a continental fortress, but talks about the world as a place where Canadians can do the most good, and where we can also do good for everybody else in the world.

LABOUR

PLANT CLOSURES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to prevent plant closures, which would require any corporation that had received federal funding to make public the books of any plant it proposed to shut down and would require any shutdown to be justified by demonstrating long-term losses.

He said: Madam Speaker, I had expected to be making a different speech this afternoon, but we will have to wait for that. What this motion seeks to do is two things: first, to address the very serious problem of plant closures which exist in considerable quantity right across the country. We do not document them through Statistics Canada at this stage any longer, but they are nevertheless a continuing and prevalent problem.

Second, it attempts to protect the taxpayers' investment in a sense, in these plants, because this particular motion does not deal with plant closures in general; it deals with plant closures which come about in the cases of corporations which have received federal funding. So it is not, as somebody suggested earlier, something that more properly would be looked at in a provincial context, but instead, something which I think is the responsibility of this House of Commons, since we provide the funding to these companies also to set certain conditions with respect to any shutdown which might take place affecting the companies involved.

To give a brief sense of the dimensions of the situation, I will take just the statistics for last year, which indicate that over 14,000 employees in the Province of Ontario alone were affected by such plant closures, 9,200 employees were affected by the complete shutdown of the plant that they worked for, something like 3,800 suffered reduced operations, and another 1,000 or so from partial closures. It is a total which really gives us a significant number of plants in the Province of Ontario to be concerned about.

In the case of my constituency of Essex—Windsor and the surrounding area, we have been particularly hard hit by such closures. I was fascinated this morning, for instance, to hear the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) talk about the full employment conditions which existed in southern Ontario. It is quite possible that there are parts of southern Ontario for which that is true. It is certainly not true for Essex-Windsor and for the Windsor area itself. Within the last few years, for example, we have had the great Atlantic and Pacific corporations shut some of their operations in Windsor, with 145 people laid off. We have had Sheller Globe shut its operations, with 205 people losing their positions. We have had the Industrial Tool Division of ITL shut its operations, with 185 people laid off. We have seen, in places like Kelsey-Hayes, Dominion Forge, General Motors itself, partial lay-offs taking place which have hurt people quite badly.

For the most part, if we talk about these closures it is not something which the federal Government has a great deal of power to do much about. But if we take a case such as ITL Industries, which owned International Tool, the company which shut down last year and cost 185 workers their jobs, that company in the preceding eight years had received totals of close to $1.4 million from this Parliament, from the various Governments that had support in this House of Commons. That money included $550,000 in terms of an IRAP grant for the adaptation of CAD-CAM technology, $230,000 in terms of IRDP modernization grants, $200,000 in the form of ILAP grants, $257,000 in the case of the Enterprise Development program.

With this kind of tremendous contribution to the capital base of this company, I think that it is something that is especially important, because it is an issue which is almost certainly going to become more significant as the trade deal comes into effect, if that happens. I think it is crucial that certain conditions be set on the grants which are provided by this Parliament to such enterprises.

I would suggest that there are two key concerns which, as the very basic minimum, have to be established in the case of a plant like ITL or some of these others that have shut down and thrown people out of work. First, I think that it is absolutely basic that a company, when it decides to close a facility within a community, should have to open the books of that facility to the community itself and to the workers who have often put 20 or 30 years of their lives into building this plant. If that were to be established as the first basic requirement, the result would be that the Windsor Development Commission, for example, would be able to look at these books very carefully. It would be able to bring auditors in to review the books and answer the question, which is almost always asked by the workers who are affected by this kind of a situation: Was it in fact justified to shut down this plant, was it justified because the plant itself was losing money and could not be viable and therefore had to face a shutdown, no matter what the community might like?

In the case when a company has, for a considerable period of time suffered losses, I do not think anyone would argue that we should keep the plant operating. However, there is a second point which I think should be very, very carefully considered by the Government.

If the community looks at the books of a plant that is to be shut down and finds that the company appears to be viable, to be able to continue to operate and provide employment and income for the people of the community, it should then be possible for the community, perhaps in conjunction with the workers, as was the case with Lapp Industries of Hamilton, to make a bid for the firm and, as purchasers, have some preference because of the tremendous contribution federal taxpayers have made to the plant. In the case of ITL, for instance, the workers felt very, very strongly that the plant was viable. It had orders which could have been filled and which could have kept it profitable and operating, therefore keeping the workers employed in the community of Windsor. However, those workers had no ability, either through the community or through their union, to bring in outside auditors who could have access to the books of the company. The company was able to say, "No, we are shutting the plant down for purposes which of course make perfect sense. It is strictly a business decision and we have the right to shut this company down".

If we had a government-sponsored Bill which put into effect these two conditions I have talked about, access to the books and the potential for local development commissions in conjunction with workers to buy the plant and keep it going, then the workers of ITL would have been able to make the company a proposition. They would have been able to say: "We will purchase this plant and see to it that it keeps operating, and as a consequence, 185 workers in an important area of machinery manufacturing in the City of Windsor will be kept on the job and the economy will continue to be diversified". The community would have been better off and the taxpayers would have been better off because the various grants which had been made to the operation would have continued to keep employment and income in the City of Windsor, employment and income which has disappeared.

A detailed study of the auto parts industry was undertaken by our Mayor's Committee on Unemployment. It looked very carefully at many auto parts plants. It heard very frankly from those parts producers that there is a great deal of pressure on them, pressure which comes from restructuring within the auto parts industry itself and from the increasing value of the Canadian dollar over the last year. That pressure has made it very difficult for some of those plants to keep going.

Indeed, it was the conclusion of the special study by our Mayor's Committee on Unemployment that we should set up a system whereby the community would get access through the development commission and the union to the books of the company and would have the ability at that stage to make an offer to purchase and keep open a plant which would be shut down. With such a system, we in Windsor would be in much better shape as we face the uncertainties in the auto parts industry of the years ahead.

I hope that today's debate will have the effect of telling the Minister for International Trade that there is still a great deal of unemployment which exists in southern Ontario. Second, there is a possible solution to parts plants shutting down and to other plant closures when federal money is involved, and that is to see to it that there is access to the books and that there is the possibility of purchases by local development commissions of these plants to see to it that jobs are kept in the communities, not just the community of Windsor or the communities of Ontario but communities right across Canada.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few comments on this motion. I do not think there would be much disagreement among Members with the fact that no one likes to see plant closures. That is usually a sad time in any community, and particularly difficult for the individuals who work there. I guess it is a motherhood statement to say we do not like plant closures. Certainly those of us in public life and the private sector like to do anything we can to assist in helping businesses which may be in difficulty.

However, I suggest it is another concept indeed if the federal Government considers passing legislation to prevent plant closures. Yet we have here a motion by a member of the NDP which suggests that the federal Government introduce legislation, among other things, to prevent plant closures. There should be a law on the books and it should require that any shutdown be justified by demonstrating long-term losses. The other part of the motion says the law should say that any corporation receiving federal funding should open its books to the public.

When I first read that I thought it was not surprising that it is from a member of the NDP, and I see it was seconded by a member of the Liberal Party. It suggests a time in Canadian life when perhaps industry and society as a whole were more static. It suggests the kind of company which apparently existed years ago in Canada where an individual might be employed at the age of 20 and be there until he or she retires at 65. I suggest that those kinds of industries have become very rare. What has happened to Canadian industry and society over the past decades is rapid change. The Canadian economy is not static, it is changing very rapidly.

The Economic Council of Canada recently did a study on the subject of adjustment and said, among other things, "Firms are constantly engaged in a process of adaptation, contracting or expanding production and employment, entering or exiting industries, merging and divesting, building new plants and closing existing plants". The same study found that the Canadian labour market is undergoing constant change. In a typical year, 8 per cent of jobs in the manufacturing sector disappear because of plant closings and contractions, while there is an increase of 9 per cent in the number of jobs created because of plant openings or expansion. Worker behaviour adds another important dimension to labour market turnover. The number of worker-initiated moves is equal in a typical year to at least 10 per cent of the labour force in the manufacturing sector. This excludes temporary movement.

Data would indicate that over the 1970s, which was characterized by multilateral trade liberalization, the main method of adjustment was creation of new establishments. At the end of the 1970s 30 per cent of existing establishments were new entrants, the large majority through the creation of new facilities rather than by acquisition. Conversely, 40 per cent of the establishments which existed in 1970 were no longer in existence by the end of the decade. I would suggest, therefore, that at the very least the suggestion by the NDP that the federal Government should step in and start legislating against plant closings is unworkable.

I would further suggest that those things causing changes in the market-place will be accelerated by the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. I believe there will be expansions, new plant openings, and so on as a result of Canadian industries trying to take advantage of the new open markets and the reduction of trade barriers between ourselves and the U.S. This is all well and good because the reduction of trade barriers is not something new, invented in this Parliament. This has been going on since the 1930s when economists and finally politicians came to realize that duties, tariffs, red tape, barriers to international trade, were very bad for everyone. They did not protect jobs in the long run, but ensured there would be fewer jobs to go around. Trade liberalization policy has been pursued by every Government of Canada since the 1930s. That has in fact helped to expand trade.

The Government, in the sensitive area of worker adjustment, has continued to try to obtain the best advice possible from all individuals in society. We have concluded that it is the private sector that is the engine of growth in society. The private sector and market forces, working in conjunction with trade liberalization policies, will increase the number of jobs and benefit all Canadians as a result.

However, the federal Government, aware of its responsibilities to ensure those benefits, announced the formation in January of this year of the Advisory Council on Adjustment. This council will assist the Government in at least three different ways. First, by examining the possibilities for Canadian businesses and workers to position themselves for optimum benefit from the free trade agreement. Second, identifying specific adjustment issues or circumstances, and examining various government programs that support adjustment by firms, workers and communities. Third, recommending any changes to those programs which would improve their effectiveness, efficiency, or equity as instruments to facilitate adjustment to the opportunities or issues arising from free trade and other issues.

However, it is not the intention of the Government to reinvent the wheel. There are in place a number of different programs and initiatives to assist in the difficult area of worker adjustment. However, the messages we have been receiving from the private sector are quite clear and, I believe, quite correct. The proper industrial policy for the Government of Canada is to allow market forces to work. I will repeat that for the benefit of members of the NDP: the best policy is to allow market forces to work.

This is something that I think has continuously escaped, and perhaps always will escape, the understanding of the NDP and those committed to socialism. They suggest, and you have heard it many times in this Parliament and those who have been here longer than you or I have also heard it before, that the Government should step in on every money losing operation, not just money losing operations either. The motion says any shutdown would have to be justified by demonstrating long-term losses. Presumably a company that loses $1 million or $2 million in a year is not what we are talking about. We are talking about the real big bucks over a long period of time, and there have been lots of examples. You do not have to look too much further than some of the Crown corporations we have been blessed with in the past. The names of Canadair and de Havilland come to mind. Perhaps they would qualify in the sense of long-term losses.

As you know, those two corporations together lost not just hundreds of millions of dollars, but billions of dollars. Yet when the Government of Canada came forward with a sensible plan to turn them back over to the private sector, the squealing and bleating from members of the NDP could be heard right across the country. Even then I am sure that under any criteria brought forward by the NDP, losses of billions of dollars still would not quite make it because they are committed to a different kind of Canada, one in which the public is always involved in either ownership, financing or control.

If the last four years have taught us anything it should be that when private industry is encouraged it will become the engine of growth in society. It is not public dollars and public enterprises which create long-term jobs, it is market forces which create them. I believe this motion should be rejected out of hand.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, the motion before the House asks the Government to consider the advisability of introducing legislation to prevent plant closures when those plants belong to corporations which have received federal funding, in other words federal grants or soft loans. The motion says that if a company which has received federal grants wishes to close a plant that was subject to those grants, it would have to make its books public and would have to demonstrate that it suffered a long-term loss before being allowed to close the firm.

I have no trouble supporting the principle behind this motion. It is true that it lacks detail as to how such a measure should be carried out. However, we are, after all, debating a motion and not a Bill. The motion says that the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to prevent plant closures under the conditions to which I referred. I think that most people sensitive to the plight of workers would support the principle behind this motion. If the motion is passed we would expect the Government to bring forward a Bill setting out procedures and methods for carrying out such a proposal.

There are some vague parts to the motion but they do not interfere with the principle behind it. I presume that the words "prevent plant closures" refer only to the manufacturing sector and not service-type industries which might also receive financial assistance from the Government. The motion does not specify any period of time between when the funding was received and the proposed closure. However, I would expect that any legislation coming forward as a result of this motion would impose a time limit. In other words, if the federal funding had paid off for a period of time to be determined by the Government this type of thing would not apply and the market system would prevail.

I thought it was rather amusing that when the Conservative Member spoke to this motion he completely forgot that the motion speaks only of corporations which had received federal funding. He said that the market-place should prevail and that if the market-place says a company should close down, it should close down. Of course, he forgot to mention that we are talking about companies which do not operate totally under the market-place system since they have received federal funding.

As you know, federal programs provide funding to corporations which will locate in slow-growth areas of the country. These are often referred to as our regional development programs. We try to stimulate companies to set up in the Atlantic Provinces, the Gaspé, the Eastern Townships, northern Ontario and northern Québec, areas which do not attract investment as easily as do Toronto, Montreal, and Vancouver.

The motion speaks only of companies which have received federal funding. I think that most Canadians would agree that if they received funding it is completely wrong for them, after a year or two, to sell the plant to a foreign buyer who will close it down or to close it down in order to put their money into something which they believe will bring them an even greater return.

They may not be suffering losses at all. That is very often the case, but they see an opportunity for getting even greater profit in another investment so they consolidate, close down the plant, and put their money into a higher-profit-making process. That is all right as long as they have not used federal funds to build up the equity in that plant. However, I think Canadians would agree that if they have used federal money they should not be able to close down the plant, put the workers on the street, and put the money into a higher-profit-making business.

The motion says that they would have to demonstrate long-term losses. That makes sense to me. As I have said, we are discussing a motion and not a Bill. I am pretty sure that with some imagination the Government could suggest how this might be done.

Government Members very often refer to what they consider to be a great record in job creation over the last few years. There has been quite a good record in job creation over the last few years but not much attention has been paid to the types of jobs that are being created nor the fact that there has been a lot of job turnover.

As the Hon. Member who introduced the motion pointed out, we have been steadily losing industrial-type jobs for service-types jobs. Everyone knows that industrial-type jobs are usually unionized, receive higher wages, are full-time and receive benefits such as pensions and health plans. Since they are full-time jobs, if you are laid off you get unemployment insurance. The new jobs that have been created since the recession of 1982-83 have, for the most part, been service-type jobs which have been part-time jobs at minimum wage and without benefit. Very often they are less than 15 hours a week so the employees do not get unemployment insurance if laid off.

So while we have been getting a lot of new jobs, a lot of them are of that kind. The job creation which has been going on is net job creation. Jobs are being lost and new jobs are coming on stream but very often the new jobs are not of the same quality as the old jobs.

The adjusted unemployment rate figures for last month were around 7.7 per cent. That is still higher than the unemployment rate before the recession of 1981-82. In 1981 the unemployment rate was 7.5 per cent and in the 15-year period prior to 1980, from 1965 to 1980, the average unemployment rate was 5.6 per cent. In 1981 it was 7.5 per cent. We had a recession in the following two years and the unemployment rate jumped up to around 12 per cent and has only started to come down since 1983. Five and a half years after the recession we still have a rate of unemployment higher than the rate just prior to the recession.

It is false to suggest that such a rapid turnover, even in a developing economy, from industrial-type jobs to service-type jobs can be adequately dealt with by the Canadian Jobs Strategy because such a turnover requires retraining, upgrading, and often relocating. The Canadian Jobs Strategy in its present form will not do the job. A unanimous report by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration recommended many changes to the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The other day, the Minister turned down most of them.

It is a step forward to accept a motion of this kind. It is asking that the Government consider the advisability of bringing in legislation to prevent plant closures, where the companies owning those plants have received federal moneys to help the companies in the past. It is saying that in those circumstances they should not be allowed to close unless they can demonstrate long-term losses. That is a good principle that I think we should support in the House.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in respect of this motion before the House. The motion states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to prevent plant closures, which would require any corporation that had received federal funding to make public the books of any plant it proposed to shut down and would require any shut down to be justified by demonstrating long-term losses.

That motion raises, by implication, three separate issues. The first issue concerns whether or not there should be federal government funding or assistance at all for private industry. Certainly we have seen over many years of previous Governments and, quite frankly, over the years of the present Government federal financial assistance to Crown corporations as well as private industry.

I suppose in a perfect world we would not have any need for any financial assistance to private industry. After all, private entrepreneurs are supposed to be risk-takers. They engage in business operations for the purpose of making a profit and one would think that they would be doing that on their own individual capital or the collective capital of a group of people who were prepared to take those risks. You may have some examples of this in your riding, Madam Speaker. In my riding I have an example of a private company which feels very bitter about the fact that there has been federal financial assistance to a competitive company. This particular industry, Allanson is in the heavy duty battery business. It has been established in my constituency for many years and believes very strongly that Government should not be giving grants or loans to assist companies or businesses that would be competing with it in the same particular line. However, that is exactly what has happened in the last two or three years.

The federal Government has put forward grants and loans to encourage regional economic development in northern Ontario. While this is a noble purpose, it has in fact assisted a foreign company to set up a plant in North Bay and compete with this company in my constituency that has been in business for many years. Allanson has been a profitable and taxpaying company for many years. It sees this as true Government intrusion of the highest order. It sees this as a very limited market for the kind of product it produces and that the Government has decided, in its wisdom, that there is a need for more competitors in this line than already exist, and is actually assisting another business with the tax money paid by Allanson in my constituency to get into business and compete with it.

I am sure you will agree that understandably they feel that this is a great injustice. This company, through its hard work and effort, through taking risks, investing capital and employing people is now paying taxes, and, through those taxes, is actually helping to fund a competitor at the decision of the federal Government. There are many people who would not agree with financial assistance to private industry in any way, shape or form, whether or not it be regional economic development, because they feel it is grossly unfair in light of the fact that they are taxpayers who are funding competitors. However, this is not an ideal world. While I am sympathetic and prepared to fight very strongly for my constituent, Allanson, I realize at the same time that there are other considerations the Government must take into account. I do not particularly agree with the considerations that applied in the Allanson case, but there are other considerations too.

During the great recession to which our friend from the Liberal Party referred a few moments ago, there were a number of instances of companies with many employees that would have gone under if there had not been some sort of government assistance through financing and loans. One example that flashes to my mind is Chrysler Corporation which apparently was on the verge of financial collapse, which would have put thousands of Canadians out of work at a time when the economy had been devastated and there were no job opportunities to compensate for a disaster of that sort. That is a case where, reluctantly, I would have to concede that some financial support would have to be given just to save jobs in a situation like that.

Another example that comes to mind, but where I do not think there has been any government assistance as yet, concerns the manufacturer of aircraft and aircraft parts in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. McDonnell Douglas is engaged in producing major parts of the CF-18, as well as being a major producer and supplier of wings for McDonnell Douglas aircraft. The head office and main plant of McDonnell Douglas is located in California.

The wings for all those aircraft are made here in Canada, in Metro Toronto, by McDonnell Douglas Corporation. It is interesting to point out that the industry does not refer to them as wings but as tanks, since that is where the aircraft are filled with fuel.

The wings, or tanks, are made in Canada at McDonnell Douglas, and are then shipped by special rail cars to California where the aircraft are assembled in the United States.

As Douglas Aircraft in the United States reaches the end of its orders for its current line of aircraft, it is obviously designing new kinds of aircraft to put into production. McDonnell Douglas wants to make the wings, or tanks, for that aircraft here in Canada as well. Unfortunately, in this imperfect world, other countries are competing with us for the ability to make parts of that aircraft, including the wings. Therefore, McDonnell Douglas has to come to the federal Government for financial assistance in order to help continue to make those wings in Canada and continue to employ 5,000 labourers directly and continue to employ 10,000 who are in the supply industries. It is another case in an imperfect world where apparently government assistance is necessary, whether we like it or not, in order to save jobs. In this case, it is thousands of jobs.

That brings me directly to the second issue raised by the motion. I see I am running out of time. I actually had three points I wanted to raise and I am barely getting to the second point which has, of course, to do with the whole question of opening up the books of a company that has received these grants, then the employees having the right to make a bid or put in an offer in the event there has been financial assistance from the federal Government and in the event there will be a plant closure. I am one who is very sympathetic with this proposition, but just as the Liberal Member who just spoke, I too see some great problems. The greatest problem I see is how one determines a fair price in this situation.

Since you have indicated, Madam Speaker, that my time is up, I am going to have to leave it to some of my colleagues to debate and determine how in fact, in a situation of this sort, we could ever arrive at a price that was fair to those who wanted to buy and that was fair to those who, perhaps, do not want to sell but because they received federal assistance, would be required to do so by this sort of legislation.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to hear my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), taking rhetorical flight in a detailed analysis, not only of the anatomy of airplanes but of the anatomy of the airplane industry in the region of Toronto. That, of course, is not unusual for a Toronto representative, a city which colours the impression one has of southern Ontario—which my colleague from Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is trying to dispel—that all parts of southern Ontario are blessed with virtually full employment. However, I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member express some doubt, in contrast to his colleague who spoke earlier, who seemed to go off into a state of religious ecstasy over the purity of market forces, resorting to the Darwinian theory of the 19th century as applied to economics. I think one has to bring both spokesmen for the government side back to ground zero, which is the notion introduced by my hon. colleague, which I rise to support.

It seems to me to be an eminently supportable resolution. It states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to prevent plant closures, which would require any corporation that had received federal funding to make public the books of any plant it proposed to shut down and would require any shutdown to be justified by demonstrating long-term losses.

It is not very surprising that my colleague should rise to advocate this resolution because, as he has indicated, Windsor has been the victim of a number of plant closures and office closures as well, which have affected hundreds of Windsor workers. We are concerned about that, particularly in the context of free trade.

Parts manufacturers, which constitute a major portion of our economy, are severely threatened. My colleague has referred to the report of the committee on that subject. It is well substantiated. We are sincerely concerned about the effects of the free trade agreement, the potentially higher value of the dollar, the exchange rate. These are of great concern. Let me cite some examples of closures which have occurred in Windsor which deeply concern our community: Armson Iron, Cross-LaSalle, Controlled Systems, Dominion Forge, Essex Mould, Great Lakes Forgings, Jaloy Manufacturing, Namasco, Sheller-Globe and Summerville Industries. Two of these companies, specifically Sheller-Globe and Cross-LaSalle, were closed because they were bought out by U.S. firms. There was no indication they were in such severe financial straits that they had to be closed down. They may well, on the basis of purchase, have provided the jobs in Windsor that were lost as a consequence of these closures.

On the one hand, we heard the ecstatic appraisal of market forces by the earlier spokesman on the government side, as if there existed free enterprise in a vacuum. The argument my colleague makes is that if there are federal grants—and there are a great many of these—which are provided to industries, that should incur an obligation on the part of those industries to recognize their obligation to the Government, to the workers and to the community which has served them so well. Even without such grants, there would still be a significant contribution made by almost any community to any industry. I think, for example, of the Ford Engine Plant in Windsor. Nearly $400 million in government money was spent in order to provide the base for the construction of that plant. The municipality, the council on which I serve, spent tremendous amounts of capital resources of the city when things were very tight to ensure that the GM Plant in Windsor could operate with a basis of a sound infrastructure, the kind of infrastructure, of course, the Government denies it has any responsibility for whatsoever.

We hear a Member, such as the Member who spoke earlier, talk about market forces in an ecstatic religious fashion. As other Members have pointed out, that underlies the notion of the free trade agreement which is, of course, the Government's means of releasing the shackles of government involvement in private enterprise at the expense of workers. That explains government Members' opposition to this very mild motion. But it is curious to hear the virtual unanimity with which the Government provides speakers who oppose any effort to protect the interests of workers. Yet, I have in my hand a document just recently released with the unanimous agreement of all Parties. I want to read the justification for a far wider scope of action which respect to plant closures. I quote from the report of the Human Rights Committee. It is entitled "Human Rights and Aging in Canada". I quote from page 30:

> It is the view of the committee that, while the enhanced employment programs recommended above are urgently needed, they are unlikely to be sufficient, by themselves, to remedy the special predicament of the laid-off older worker.

They are the ones most affected by these plant closures we are talking about today. It continues:

> In the absence of mandatory closures notification, closures can happen overnight, preventing workers from making long-term arrangements to move or acquire different skills. The absence of notification can also prevent workers from making financial arrangements, which may be critically important if severance pay is inadequate. Takeovers can have the same effects, and, as recent cases have shown, can also involve the absorption of pension funds, thus depriving individuals of their pensions. The impact of this on older workers, who may have been employed by the same company for many years and been dependent on a single pension fund, can be devastating.
> There may, furthermore, be ways of reducing the incidence of plant closures, without impeding longer-term corporate adjustment.

That can be done with the unanimous agreement of all three Parties in this House. It goes on:

> The use of Investment Canada in minimizing any adverse employment impacts of foreign takeovers, and the targeting of regional development spending to assist the growth of new businesses in areas hit by major closures, are possible approaches.

We go on to recommend that the federal Government and the provincial Government act to protect workers, at least in respect to the notification of plant closures and, subsequently, by actions to protect the workers—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Spadina on a point of order.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I wish to withdraw my motion No. 202 concerning Nicaragua, and I therefore seek the unanimous consent of the House to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the request of the Hon. Member for Spadina. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Heap) withdrawn.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the debate was interrupted at five p.m., the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry had the floor. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, I think we had reached the point in my presentation to the House where the argument had been sufficiently made. I feel the motion that I would like to move should now receive unanimous support. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be not now read the third time but be referred back to the legislative committee for the purpose of reconsidering Clause 8.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the amendment. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, I intended to start out by saying that I had been thinking a lot about this speech, during the long, interminable set of speeches by both the Government and the Official Opposition. I say this seriously, too, because despite the duress of closure having been used by the Government, despite what we might call the dirty tricks of millions of dollars of advertising being spent to try to promote the trade deal, there is still a fundamental choice, a basic debate that faces Canada. I think that it is very much, when we get right down to it, a question of direction and philosophy. On one hand we have belief in basically unrestricted capitalism, a society which is driven by profit, by the fast buck, where those who own our large corporations basically call the shots, and where that is justified by the fact that they are believed to drive the economy forward.

The United States has always been the greatest example in the world of that kind of society of unrestricted capitalism in which the search for profit has driven what has taken place. It is for people who believe this view of the world. It is not a minus in any sense to integrate into the United States. On the contrary, it is a giant plus, because they see themselves as tying into an economy which is itself the model of that unrestricted capitalism.

On the other hand, there is a belief in people before profit, a belief in community, where we can take care of each other, where we share power instead of seeing that power concentrated in large corporations, in large organizations, and in large government. It is not so much a view that unrestricted capitalism does not work, though I think it is pretty clear, looking at the last 100 years, that unrestricted capitalism does not work successfully. Governments have to intervene. They have to smooth out business cycles. They have to provide infrastructure for the large corporate sector to make the money which drives it forward.

As I said, it is not so much a view that this unrestricted capitalism does not work; it is a much more positive view. It is a view that sees human beings fulfilled as people by much, much more than money, by much, much more than profit. It sees them fulfilled in a fair, caring and sharing society. That is the different perspective from which we in our Party approach this trade deal.

The fact is that this deal stops us from being able to build in the future that kind of fair, caring and sharing society for average families for which we as a Party have always fought. That is why we fight so strongly and will continue to do so as long as we possibly can. That is what it is all about.

When we cut through the rhetoric, the false statistics that are thrown out by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), the nonsense which the Minister spoke in much of his speech, that is what it is all about. It is a question of direction: Do we choose the direction of unrestricted capitalism, U.S. style, or do we choose the chance to build a caring, fair society for average families in which they will have power to shape their lives? That is what it is all about.

This deal is in fact the biggest hoax Canadians have experienced in hundreds of years. The Government says that this is a trade deal. If we look through it, we find that there are chapters and chapters which deal with anything but trade. They deal with investment, agriculture, financial services, services themselves, emergency actions, technical standards, wine and distilled spirits. These are issues which are important to the people within those sectors. They are important to us as we try to shape monetary policy for our country. They are far, far more than a trade deal. Yet that is what we find throughout this deal, far, far more than a trade deal.

In fact, in this deal we find an integration with the United States which, over the next 20 years, will tie us so completely into United States society and United States assumptions that we will not have the ability to shape ourselves a Canadian direction for the future. That is what it is all about.

The Government says that it has been successful in signing this deal. When we actually get out on the hustings and face an election, this deal will be seen by the people of Canada not as a successful deal but as the largest failure of this Government, the failure that does not except us from the omnibus trade Bill in the United States with its various taxes on the capacity of Canadian exporters to export into the United States.

The committee on which I was a member said that we should not sign this deal if the omnibus trade Bill goes through. Last week, the omnibus trade Bill was signed by the President of the United States. It is now law. Yet this Government has not been prepared to withdraw this Bill as the committee suggested.

The Government did not get the exemption which it said was crucial, the exemption from countervail laws. We were told again and again by business people that they had to have that exemption in order to make certain that they had guaranteed access to the United States market. Well, they did not get it. There was no exemption from countervail or from anti-dumping. There was a complete failure on that level.

There was also a failure with respect to subsidies. The Government said that there had to be an agreement on subsidies. Looking through this Bill carefully, we do not find an exemption from subsidies, a code which gathers together an agreement with respect to subsidies. The Government failed at that and it concedes its failure.

Mr. McDermid: No, we didn't because—

Mr. Langdon: You did. That is what the Government said it sought, and it failed to get it.

Mr. McDermid: Those negotiations go on.

Mr. Langdon: Instead, it said that it will take five to seven years to negotiate it, and that five to seven years will leave us in a much weaker position to get any sort of justice with respect to subsidies. Once more, it is a failure, the third failure of this Bill.

There is a fourth failure too. The Government said that culture would be exempted. Yet for the first time, we have explicitly said to the United States that it can retaliate against us with respect to anything we do in the cultural area. There are certain limits on how much it can retaliate, but it has the right to retaliate. We as a country have never before put into words our recognition that the United States could retaliate against us for anything we felt was necessary to protect Canadian culture.

There is no exemption for agriculture. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) chaired a committee which said that there should be an exemption for agriculture. No, the Government failed to get that. There is no exemption for regional development programs. Regional development programs will be part of the five to seven years of negotiations about subsidies, about what is acceptable and what is not. We have already had the Deputy Minister of Finance at the time tell us that we will have to change our regional development programs as a consequence. There is a failure in that area as well.

There is a failure, too, with respect to the Auto Pact. The Auto Pact was not going to be touched. It, too, said the committee chaired by the Minister of State for Finance, was to be exempted from negotiations.

Mr. McDermid: It was strengthened.

Mr. Langdon: They failed on that one, too. We could take the list of virtually everything they said they were out to get with this trade deal and we would find that they have failed to get what they sought. Now they have the effrontery, through the Minister this morning, to come before the House and say that we on the opposition side are somehow being unCanadian in attacking this lousy deal. Well, everyone who accepts this kind of record of failure in negotiations frankly should be ashamed of themselves. They should come before this House not with the kind of bluster of the Minister for International Trade this morning but with a shameful look on their face and say: "I am sorry for having misled the House of Commons for so many weeks".

We heard the Government earlier say that this agreement is no threat to international trade, no threat to our relations under GATT. Yet that absolute nonsense was rejected by everyone I talked to from other countries at the start of this GATT round of negotiations.

Mr. McDermid: Did you talk to the G-7?

Mr. Langdon: The Parliamentary Secretary was not there so he did not happen to hear. Most of the G-7 had people there, as the Parliamentary Secretary would know.

Mr. McDermid: They are supporting it there.

Mr. Langdon: The point is that regional blocks like the European Common Market, like the kind of regional block this agreement would set up between the U.S. and Canada, will lead to more protectionism in the future. That is what is likely to happen as regional blocks with powerful markets fight each other and then start protecting each other as a consequence. It is not just by chance that we had in the same summer the U.S. Congress accepting the trade deal with Canada and undertaking through the omnibus trade Bill a much more protectionist piece of legislation than anything we have seen from the U.S. before.

We can continue with what this Bill says it deems itself to be, what the Government describes it to be, and what in fact it is. It says that there has been no change with respect to lumber exports. Of course, it has put into writing that shameful, degrading commitment that we accepted under duress by the U.S. with respect to our softwood lumber exports. We accepted that 15 per cent tax which is hurting lumber workers right across this country.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, yes, with record profits, too. Tell me how badly we are doing.

Mr. Langdon: Health care is not touched, the Government says, yet there are parts of this agreement, as anyone who has read it carefully knows, detailed ways in which health care is very significantly affected.

Mr. McDermid: You are out to lunch.

Mr. Langdon: I put it to the people of Canada—

Mr. McDermid: You certainly would.

Mr. Langdon: —that they should reject this agreement and choose instead a new direction, a direction based on fairness, honesty, open leadership, a direction which would take us to something far better than this lousy trade deal the Government has signed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Questions or comments.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have listened for the last 20 minutes to the Hon. Member of the NDP like I listened to the Liberal Party trade critic for about two hours. Both spent their time criticizing, knocking, saying how terrible the free trade agreement was. Not one of them suggested an alternative. For two hours we sat and listened to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and now the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and it was knock, knock, knock. The Canadian people know what you are against. The Canadian people want to know what you are for.

Therefore, I am going to, just as a favour to my friend from Essex—Windsor, read something out of the householder he sends to his constituents. There are the answers to Canadian's trade problems; this is what the NDP is going to do. This is its policy from its trade critic. "First, we have to get an election and defeat the Mulroney Government".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: That is number one. He is going to get the election but that is not going to be the result, I can assure him of that. "Second, we have to push Premier Peterson of Ontario whose Liberal Government has not fought the deal the way he promised". That is the second plank in the NDP platform. They are going to go to the Liberals to help out in Ontario.

"Third, we have to stress our New Democratic counter policies to replace the deal". Here they are: No. 1 full employment, whatever the hell that means; No. 2, plans to build our industrial economy on a wider high-tech basis—where are the plans; No. 3, making full use of our farm and energy resources for the future. Full use of our energy resources, isn't that interesting?

Here is a good one: "working out our trade disputes with the U.S. directly". Isn't that marvellous? He just stood up and knocked the new dispute mechanism, and he says that it is a terrible thing but "we are going to settle these disputes with the U.S. directly".

Next is finding areas where our two countries can make sector agreements like the Auto Pact with safeguards for Canada. Isn't that great? They tried to reach sectoral agreements and got one sectoral agreement in 23 years. What nonsense. How do you expect the Canadian people to buy that?

• (1850)

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, there are several points I would like to make. I appreciate the opportunity, although I would have appreciated it had the Member just asked the question.

[Translation]

There are two points I want to stress here. We have an agreement that will radically change this country but we did not get any of the things the Government felt were necessary. These included, first of all, an exemption from countervail laws. That is something we did not get. Second, an agreement on the matter of support for Canadian industries. There again we did not succeed. Third, we have no guaranteed access to the U.S. market under the agreement. Furthermore, we have lost the freedom to organize our own energy program, to screen takeovers of Canadian companies by U.S. companies and to protect Canada's agriculture.

Mr. McDermid: That is not true.

Mr. Langdon: It is. We have also lost the freedom to organize our own health care system . That is true as well. And we have lost the freedom to protect Canada's cultural industries. We have an agreement that is not equitable and that must be rejected.

[English]

The alternatives to that accord are quite clearly set out and have been set out for months in the book which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), and I prepared entitled A Time to Choose Canada. We said that it was important to start to look for domestic investment in a way that the Government had not recognized.

We saw, for instance, that it did not make sense for interest rates to go up as rapidly as they were, especially when the spread with the United States was at record highs. We saw, as well, that it was important to have a community development basis from which investment could flow. We saw that it was also important to be able to make use of the energy and resources we have in order to provide a basis on which to build our industries and encourage investment. We saw that it as crucial, as well, to increase research and development, something which the Government promised and never delivered on. It promised to double research and development and has not even come close.

We stressed regional diversification in our document because we must get away from the golden horseshoe as the basis for prosperity in this country. There must be a serious effort to try to diversify investment and that will not happen through free trade. Free trade, in fact, will concentrate investment in Ontario around the golden horseshoe just as there are concentrated investment and serious poverty in many parts of the United States. Skill development is also crucial, especially for older workers and for threatened industries.

As well as sector agreements we need issue agreements. We need, for instance, to get what the Government has failed to get, that is, a joint agreement between Canada and the United States on what constitutes a subsidy.

Mr. McDermid: That's what negotiations are for.

Mr. Langdon: Yes, but the Government failed to get it.

Mr. McDermid: We haven't even started negotiating yet.

Mr. Langdon: It failed to get it in this whole long, sorry set of negotiations.

Mr. McDermid: Get serious.

Mr. Langdon: It is also important that we have better bilateral relations with the United States on a case-by-case basis. I think that if we had spent much less time chasing this pie in the sky, comprehensive free trade deal and concentrated on softwood, pork, stainless steel, and fish, we would have been able to solve those disputes much more effectively. We would not now be facing the damage from each of those disputes which we are facing.

We also have to look to GATT with respect to subsidies. We have to look to GATT as the place where we can work out, with other countries, some agreements which see to it—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Order.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I remind you that my two colleagues from the other Parties had two hours each, so if I stray just a little bit over—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has elapsed for questions and comments. If he desired more time he should have asked for unanimous consent of the House when he finished his 20-minute speech. We have now gone past that stage. I regret very much that I must continue with debate.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I think it is still possible to ask for unanimous consent to finish this answer in the next five minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to have five minutes more to finish his comments?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I heard a negative. I will call on the Hon. Minister of Labour on debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in 1984, Brian Mulroney stated that his Party was committed to four priorities. One of these was economic renewal. Today, I am proud to inform Canadians that the Government of which I am a member has kept its promise. By signing a historic trade agreement with the United States, Canada has obtained the best guarantee for a prosperous economy. The free trade agreement is the culmination of over twenty-five years of hard work by Canadians and Americans aimed at improving and strengthening the framework of their commercial and economic relations. It was high time the Canadian Government adopted a comprehensive view of the economic changes that were taking place. Canada had to get a head start in the race in which countries the world over were competing, and the best way to do this was to gain secure access to the biggest and richest market in the world: the United States. We all know the arguments in favour of signing a trade agreement with the United States. About 80 per cent of our exports go to the United States, representing sales worth around $180 billion annually, while one out of three jobs depend on our ability to export our products.

• (1900)

The growth of our external trade is therefore closely linked to the trade relations we have had and have today with our neighbours to the south, something our predecessors understood. In 1879, Sir John A. Macdonald shared this comprehensive vision of Canada's economic future, witness his trade policy. In 1911, the desire of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Liberal Government to establish a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States reflected the economic realities of the time.

These are only a few historic facts, but there are many others. Thanks to the testimony and experience of our predecessors we are able to understand our own economic realities, and we will be able to build a future in the image of this country.

When in September 1985 we decided to negotiate a bilateral trade agreement with the United States, we knew what we were doing. We were not only mindful of our country's growth as a trading nation, we were also acting on a unanimous recommendation by committees and commissions of inquiry, including those of the Senate and the House of Commons and the Macdonald Commission, whose members represented all groups in our society. Need I recall, Mr. Speaker, that there was a Liberal majority in the Senate and that the Hon. Donald Macdonald was a Minister in Mr. Trudeau's Government?

Despite all these recommendations, the Liberals tried to ignore the lessons of history by involving Canada in a multilateral trade policy, while our trade with the United States continued to increase, from about 65 per cent to more than 75 per cent, and it did so despite the liberals' so-called nationalist policies and their rhetoric about their so-called third option.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the same Liberals would have Canadians believe that the same multilateral free trade process would give Canadians the same advantages as a trade agreement with the United States. What they do not tell Canadians, Mr. Speaker, is that the free trade agreement will enable Canada to control protectionist spillovers from the United States caused by domestic reaction to a budget deficit they have trouble keeping under control.

Mr. Speaker, let me remind these free trade detractors that Canadians are not being fooled and understand quite well that the Liberal Party does not offer a valid alternative to the accord.

Here is what Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa said in a press conference last August 16:

> With respect to the issue of negotiating on a sectoral basis we have to take into account the various GATT regulations . . . We did get the Auto Pact, of course, but it is becoming increasingly difficult to secure GATT approval to negotiate on a sectoral basis with another GATT country.

Canadians understand as well that they will be able to prosper in the 21st century if today they are prepared to look to the future and face the greatest challenges with vigour and determination. They are conscious of the fact that Canada's economic prosperity basically depends on the ability of our industries and our companies to maintain and improve productivity.

We know that Canadian farmers rank among the world's best traders, and they have demonstrated their skills on many occasions. Not only can we face up to our competitors in this sector, but we are also aware that access to American markets is a guarantee our farmers must have.

The value of Canadian agricultural products shipped to the United States is about $3 billion a year and that, Mr. Speaker, does not include grains and oilseeds. It accounts for over 50 per cent of Canadian food exports. Such figures faithfully reflect the situation, Mr. Speaker.

In addition to securing access to the American market the Free Trade Agreement will protect our agricultural sector against American compensatory anti-dumping duty and salvage measures. Some Canadians may have forgotten that pork and cattle producers have been the target of retaliation, but the people involved certainly did not, Mr. Speaker. With the FTA we can guarantee that they will never again be the hapless victims of American policy. Without the FTA, Mr. Speaker, history is bound to repeat itself.

We have maintained our marketing boards and the import control measures that constitute the very basis of our supply management system. During the 1986 Tokyo Economic Summit, the whole world became aware, thanks to the leadership of our Prime Minister, of the need to undertake a global reform of farm policies. For us, the first step in that process was certainly to agree with our main trade partner. Who could blame us for having brought forward what we have recognized ourselves, along with the international economic community? Need I recall, Mr. Speaker, that agriculture is one of the main pillars of our economy, as is the case with other countries?

As a Government and also and more importantly as Canadians, we had to take the necessary measures to ensure our continuing prosperity in that area as well as in all other sectors of our economy.

Admittedly, some adjustment will be needed following the implementation of this agreement and that is why our Government has set up an advisory council on adjustment in order to react quickly and judiciously to future changes and possible problems. Businesses, unions, consumer groups, teaching institutions are represented on that council and also the Federal Government which is automatically a member, Mr. Speaker. The council has the responsability to assess our programs and to ensure that they are used efficiently so that we are at all times ready to benefit from new opportunities arising in the work market.

Free trade will create new opportunities in the industrial sector. The Government has established a Skills Shortages Program in order to train employees in skills and jobs that will be increasingly in demand.

Companies can also use the Skills Investment component of the program in order to hire and train laid-off workers, Mr. Speaker. Moreover, communities that are particularly hard it by new technologies or markets can ask for assistance within the framework of the Community Futures Program under which businesses can be created and training assistance given at the local level. Who said, Mr. Speaker, that this Government did not care about giving businesses the means to adjust their production to the new trade dynamics? The same free trade opponents, Mr. Speaker, who tried to ignore that Canada is a large export nation which depends to a large extent on its trade relations with the United States!

The Conservative Government is committed to adjustment programs and it has assured businesses of a secure access to the U.S. market for their products. In the future, Canadian businesses will be able to produce more goods and to diversify services, thereby enhancing regional growth through resource development and economic growth.

Our Government has put forward an industrial and regional development policy which embodies one of the principles we cherish most: a country's prosperity depends on the economic strength of each of its regions. Decentralised decision-making is the basis of this policy. In our opinion, Mr. Speaker, the people of the regions are those most able to make the best decisions to help their region develop its industrial base and its export capacity.

By having greater control over their economic future, the regions will be able to take better advantage of the opportunities offered by the Free Trade Agreement. They will be able to benefit fully from those advantages and consequently, Mr. Speaker, not only the large centres but the country as a whole will benifit from free trade.

Allow me to give you a few examples. British Columbia will be in a better position to market its forestry products; Alberta's oil and gas sector will experience a new boom; the uranium industry in Saskatchewan will be able to expand as a result of the lifting of restrictions on uranium-enrichment processes; the Manitoba manufacturing industry will find new outlets on the American market; service industries, most of them in Ontario, will gain readier access to the American market; and Quebec will boost exports of electricity as well as pulp and paper products, not to mention eventual pork and beef sales, and demand for engineering and consulting services is expected to rise. As to the Atlantic provinces, Mr. Speaker, they will come to realize that a better trade environment is bound to spur the growth of their manufacturing and forestry sectors, their fisheries and their agriculture.

Given decision-making authority, the regions of Canada will be able to take better and quicker advantage of the new outlets of the wide North American market of over 250 million consumers. The regions will also be urged to ensure that industries switch to new technologies as soon as possible, for improved competitiveness rests on revamping the industrial base which leads to higher productivity and lower production costs. Mr. Speaker, the last two elements are essential if we are to gain a foothold in the huge southern market which will become a worthy challenge to our skills and enable us to create a great many new jobs. Mr. Speaker, Canadian workers need these jobs now, and tomorrow younger generations will take over.

Anxious to create these job opportunities for young Canadians, in 1985 the Conservative Government set up a comprehensive employment policy geared to training. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this policy is to meet the challenge of the skilled labour force training necessary to hold specialized positions in a highly technical and competitive Canadian industry. This policy is particularly aimed at our young people coming on the labour market. Mr. Speaker, gone are the days in Canada when without proper training, a young man could find a good and financially rewarding job. The need for unskilled workers is waning because our industrial base is continually developing to meet the harsh competition on world markets.

With or without a free trade agreement, Mr. Speaker, this reality of a greater need for a specialized labour force remains true. That is why the Government has put together an employment policy which is flexible and consistent with local needs.

To prepare a flexible and competent labour force, and prepare young Canadians to hold specialized jobs represent one of the greatest challenges Canada has ever been faced with. An employment planning strategy which already reflects the policy of the Canadian Government is already in motion. All its programs involve an element of manpower training or retraining. Steps will be taken to ensure Canada has the necessary qualified labour force to successfully participate in the new economic order. We need not only provide young Canadians with jobs consistent with their expectations, but we must also rely on them. And our Prime Minister perfectly expressed this deep conviction when he stated in the House of Commons on October 5, 1987, and I quote: "We go forward with confidence in our future, confidence in our country, and, most of all, confidence in the youth of Canada. We have set a course for a stronger, a more united, and a more prosperous Canada. It is not a path—it never was and it never will be—for the faint of heart, but this country was not built by timid souls. This is a pact for the daring, the innovative and the nation-builders who are now called upon to make a firm decision on behalf of a strong, united, and prosperous as Canada."

These are the distinctive qualities of youth and that is why the young people are confident in their ability to take on the new challenges that will confront them.

These young people support the Free Trade Agreement because they are aware that only in a stable and prosperous economy will they be able to fully develop their potential. Surely, they want to be able to choose from a host of interesting jobs, but they also want to test their talents as managers, entrepreneurs and innovators.

Who will have the courage, Mr. Speaker, to deny them a future worthy of their aspirations and their hopes? Precisely those who refuse to see in this agreement our best guarantee of economic success, the free trade detractors, Mr. Speaker, those who play up the fears by spreading false rumours, those who share neither the will and the foresight of their forefathers nor the spirit and the determination of their children, those who cast doubts upon the worthiness of our enterprises and those who believe that we do not have the power to preserve our distinct character and identity and who believe that an essentially trade-oriented agreement is a step towards our assimilation by the United-States!

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind those people today that Canada is and has always been a strong and distinct country and that foreseeing its assimilation amounts to doubting the very stature of those who built this nation. Nothing in this Agreement threatens our sovereignty any more than our social programs. Our Government has always vowed that Canada's sovereignty would not be jeopardized by a trade agreement and it has kept its word.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my allotted time has expired. That is a pity because I do have a lot more to say.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Hon. Member's speech, and perhaps I should say hon. neighbour, since our ridings are next door to each other. First of all, I would like to congratulate him on his excellent speech. I noticed, however, that in his speech he said that the free trade agreement contained a guarantee for the sale of Canadian agricultural products in the United States. I would like to ask the Minister, who mentioned agriculture at the beginning of his comments, what specific part of the agreement contains this guarantee that will help us sell our agricultural products to the United States.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his kind remarks—and I must say that doesn't happen very often—in referring to my speech. In fact, Mr. Speaker, and I say this for the benefit of all Canadians, we share a common border which separates our two ridings, mine on the Quebec side and the Hon. Member's on the Ontario side.

As for the free trade agreement, I think that all Canadians who have followed this debate from the very beginning—a debate that did not start recently, since it has been going on for a very long time . . . I remember mentioning in a previous speech how many hours of debate we have had and how many committee meetings, including the Legislative Committee and the Senate Committee and the Committee of the House of Commons, all of which considered these issues. Mr. Speaker, everybody realizes that what we obtained through the free trade agreement was guaranteed access to the U.S. market for our products, including agricultural products, and that the main advantage was also that we obtained a mechanism for the settlement of disputes that might arise from time to time, and which did arise in the past when we did not have this kind of mechanism.

Mr. Speaker, with this agreement, unlike the situation we had in the past, we now have access to the biggest market in the world with a potential of 250 million consumers, where our farmers will be able to export more and more of their products, and I am thinking of our pork and beef producers who obviously endorsed the free trade agreement we have today.

• (1920)

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. The Leader of the Official Opposition is going around telling people in Canada that the free trade agreement is the sell-out of Canada. He also says that it is the give away of Canada. He says that we will become the fifty-first state, and so on and so forth. He says that anyone who supports this deal is really giving Canada away or selling Canada to the United States.

I would like to ask the Hon. Minister, who is a resident of the Province of Quebec where there is great support for the free trade agreement, if the people of Quebec feel that Premier Bourassa, because he supports the agreement, is a traitor to Canada, is selling out Canada, is giving Canada away to the United States? Or, does he expect that Quebec will become part of the United States if this agreement goes through?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. No one in the Province of Quebec, and I am sure no one in Canada, thinks that Premier Bourassa is a traitor, to put it in the words of my hon. colleague, with respect to the free trade agreement or any other matter. As a matter of fact, on the contrary, I believe that the Premier of the Province of Quebec, like most premiers of the other provinces, thinks that this agreement is not only good for Canada but good for the provinces and the regions. I am sure that if Mr. Bourassa supports this agreement it is because he feels like so many other Canadians that it is good for the nation. Since my colleague referred to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I would like to take this opportunity to read to the House a quotation that I would have given a little later in my speech had I the time in which to do so. It is from a former Minister in the previous Government, Mr. Regan, who stated:

> When I was Minister of Trade . . . in Mr. Trudeau's Government . . . I sought to move in that direction by initiating free trade talks with the U.S. on a sector by sector basis . . . I have come to the conclusion that the present free trade project is a more meaningful . . . courageous . . . and important undertaking than our more limited negotiations.

Obviously, we are moving in the right direction. We have obtained an agreement which will favour all Canadians from all areas of the country and which will give an opportunity to all Canadians to participate in the growing economy of Canada and to obtain better jobs either for themselves or for their children in the future. One thing to which the Government has been committed from the outset is to bring back the economy of Canada the way it should have been before—the way it is now.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could ask a supplementary question, further to the one I just asked the Hon. Minister who was praising his Prime Minister's free trade agreement.

I wonder if the Minister is aware of the statement made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—and I must remind him that the UPA is a member of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—that: "The CFA believes that Bill C-130, to implement the free trade agreement, threatens many sectors of Canadian agriculture." And further on, "It has a negative impact on the marketing system and the future of the quota systems, the whole marketing system of the Canadian Wheat Board, quality standards for Canadian agricultural products and the horticultural sector."

I wonder if the Minister is familiar with this statement of July 30, 1988 signed by the National Council of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. How does he react to this statement? Is the Canadian Federation of Agriculture completely "out of it", or "fallen in the potatoes" as we say in French? Have these people been completely misled, as the Government Members claim the Members of the Opposition are?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I would never claim that the UPA is "out of it", as my hon. colleague would have me say, although of course potatoes are an important crop. I would certainly not claim, as my hon. colleague would have it in his statement, that the UPA is "out of it". On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I think that the UPA in the past has shown its knowledge, and usually great understanding of agricultural issues.

It seems that the UPA has taken a position this time that is not shared by all the associations that have something to do with agriculture. Mr. Speaker, coming from a constituency with many dairy farmers, I am told that despite what the UPA says, the free trade agreement is not only beneficial for these farmers, but they are obviously satisfied with the proposed safeguards in the Free Trade Agreement. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, they are even more pleased to have guaranteed access to the American market of 250 million consumers and they are especially pleased as well to have the threat of unilateral protectionist measures, which the United States used to take, removed by the free trade agreement.

[English]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words this evening about Bill C-130 and the free trade agreement which the Bill implements. It is obvious to everyone in the House and in the country that this agreement is of historic importance to Canada. The question is: Will the ultimate impact be positive for the parties to it, namely, Canada and the United States?

Will it also be positive for the international trading environment? Of course, promoters of the agreement—obviously, the Government—argue that it will be. I must say that I hope that they prove to be correct.

[Translation]

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, because of all the emotion surrounding this debate, opinions become polarized. We cannot afford to let that crucial issue, that national challenge turn into a struggle, which, put in simplistic terms would pit free traders against sovereignty advocates.

[English]

I have reviewed the agreement and as many of the arguments that have been brought to my attention both for and against it. I say to my colleagues with, I believe, a good deal of objectivity, that there is good news here and there is bad news here. First, the bad news is that the agreement is not as good as the Government and its promoters pretend it to be. The good news is that it is not as bad as its detractors claim.

Some of the declarations with respect to the agreement strike me as being almost ridiculous to the extent that I understand the language which is plainly set forth in the agreement.

It seems to me that the question before this House, in deciding whether or not it should support the agreement, is to consider what I called the bad news and to decide whether the free trade agreement and of course the Bill that implements it, but the free trade agreement for all its problems and disappointments, should be ratified.

We all bring a certain bias to this debate. For some it is pure knee-jerk anti-Americanism. For some it is fear that Canada is swimming into the whale's mouth, which was a turn of phrase recently used by John Ralston Saul in an article in The Spectator. I have somewhat more respect for that position, but I believe that it is born of inferiority and insecurity, suggesting that Canada needs another ninety-odd GATT partners to bargain effectively with the United States.

New Zealand has apparently been quite successful in its free trade arrangement with Australia. Admittedly, the dimensions are somewhat different, but we are looking at something like five times the population. New Zealand clearly has the better part of that bargain. I have always felt that skilful negotiators in Canada, and efficient industry in Canada, would have enormous advantages in a comprehensive agreement with the United States.

For still others who oppose the agreement there is fear of personal dislocation, job loss, and so on. This fear will legitimately persist no matter how many arguments may be made that Canada and Canadians as a whole will benefit. Adjustment will be very much a part of the implementation of this agreement. It seems to me that the Government has fallen far short in satisfying those constituencies that the necessary adjustments will be made in a timely fashion.

I have my own preference, Madam Speaker, I will not call it a bias, born of my experience as a Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development in the previous Liberal Government, my role as Minister of Science and Technology, and my own personal contacts with GATT and with our major trading partners at the international level. I believe and I would like to think that my preference which has always been for a comprehensive bilateral agreement with the United States is not born of bias but is born and essentially arises from the appraisal of a number of very salient facts. I am not going to repeat them, because many of them have been repeated ad nauseam in the House, and in other places.

We all know the extent of Canada's dependence on international trade. We all know the extent of Canada's dependence on the United States market. Much as many of us may deplore that fact, and we tried to take Canada way from that dependence when I was Minister, that is a hard fact, and also that the United States market is the largest and most significant market for finished goods in the world. I know many who will argue that we should enhance our trade with the newly industrialized countries, the Third World, China, and India. I agree with that, and I see no incompatibility between that posture and a comprehensive agreement with the United States.

I would point out for those who wax enthusiastic about the Peoples' Republic of China that the Gross National Product per head in China, in the range of $600 per year, gives it a total capacity to consume foreign goods of something in the neighbourhood of Canada's, and perhaps a slightly less domestic market. One must always bear that in mind. Sometimes people get carried away with the fact that we are looking at one billion souls. The fact is that it is their purchasing capacity that counts in terms of international trade.

I also have to point out that we have seen the growth of trading blocks. Much has been said about that. It is very significant, the Macdonald Commission told us, and it is an incontrovertible fact that Canada does not have unfettered access to a market of 100 million people, as do members of the free trade area in Europe, the Economic Community, Japan, and the United States.

Finally, another very salient fact has been the growth of U.S. protectionism. We fought it as best we could during the years when we had the stewardship of the Government and of the country. We were relatively successful sometimes, but not successful at others because the Americans have a wide range of non-tariff barriers, regulatory proceedings, and others which prevent Canadian firms from having unfettered access to the United States. It is absolutely obligatory that the access we have for the products we now sell be secured. Another thrust, of course, is to ensure that that market is enhanced to the extent it can be.

Finally, any arrangement that is entered into with the United States must be compatible with GATT and acceptable to our trading partners. The only arrangement which is acceptable to the GATT and acceptable to our trading partners is a free trade area under Article 24. It could be a custom's union, or it could go further. However, essentially it has to meet the criteria of the GATT. I would like to say a word in that context about the sectoral approach.

I have always been, as I suppose we all should be, a great advocate of the sectoral approach. There is nothing like carving out those niches in someone else's market, penetrating them, and exploiting them. That is what we attempted to do. That is the best of all possible worlds. Unfortunately, in the areas we were interested in penetrating in the U.S. market during our negotiations and meetings with Mr. Brock who was then the U.S. trade ambassador, it became quickly apparent that the Americans were not interested in such sectoral agreements. Going beyond that, as Members of this House probably know, although some may not, sectoral agreements are totally incompatible with the GATT and require waivers from two-thirds of the GATT members in order to enter into them.

These are not areas, and this is not an approach which enhances international trade. It restricts international trade. Hence, that is why the GATT itself sanctions a comprehensive free trade area, which cannot be prejudicial to third parties, which cannot restrict trade, but in the long term is intended to expand and enhance international trade.

Returning to the criteria and assessing this agreement, I pointed out that there were a number of important thrusts. First, the importance of securing access to the U.S. market. Why is this such an issue? Why can this not be resolved through the GATT?

So I would have this to say to my colleagues. Although tariffs may have been noticeably reduced since the Second World War, members of the GATT, including Canada and the United States, have obviously introduced clever new mechanisms in order to protect their national products against foreign competition. As you know, madam Speaker, this is what we call non tariff barriers and there is a whole range of these barriers as far as the United States are concerned and also other countries, even Canada. These non tariff barriers, although not very visible, are quite real and indeed reach incredible proportions. In fact, hundreds of them have been pointed out in studies conducted by the GATT on this matter. One glaring example of this, and I will come back on it later on, is a non tariff barrier that exists in the United States, that is the preference being given national products by all levels of Government in the United States as far as public procurement is concerned.

Also, madam Speaker, as we know full well here in Canada, there are the so-called trade remedies being used by Americans, antidumping laws, countervailing duties and other special measures aimed at protecting their national products against foreign competition. The list of Canadian products that have been hit by these measures is long: chemical products, canned clams, salt, cut flowers, potatoes, fish, pork, steel, wood shingles, and of course the most famous case of all, softwood lumber. So there is the problem!

• (1940)

Can we resolve this kind of non-tariff barrier through the agreement? The sad part is that I do not think we have. I do not think that the agreement provides the kind of security of access that we desired and that we anticipated.

The binational dispute settlement mechanism, that is, the provisions of Chapter 19, is a very far cry from a dramatic breakthrough. It is really, in essence, a substitute for the U.S. court system. They do not become relevant, as I presume Members know, until a dispute, whether it be softwood lumber, shingles or whatever, has travelled the same route as it does now, namely, the U.S. Commerce Department and the International Trade Commission.

Going back to our own experience as a Government, the issue was not a distrust of U.S. courts; it was trying to create a surprise-free environment which would inhibit the introduction of these actions destined to harass Canadian industry. The experts can argue that with the creation of this binational dispute settlement mechanism, which will apply to the domestic law of the United States, the process may be shortened.

In most cases that we will be concerned with regarding disputes between our two countries, one would hope that it never reaches that level, because it is the creation of that uncertainty through the International Trade Commission and the Commerce Department that has been the problem. The softwood lumber dispute settled in 1983 never went to the court system; it was settled at the level of the International Trade Commission.

Was there an alternative? I would argue that there was. If this agreement is adopted, I would hope that the process will be examined and that efforts will be made to find a mechanism to create a surprise-free environment.

Let me offer an example. The Hon. Gerald Regan, when he was Minister for International Trade in the previous Government, had proposed such a mechanism and had discussed it with some of his U.S. colleagues. We were told that the Americans would not surrender sovereignty over a dispute mechanism, that they would insist upon the application of their laws or insist upon the ultimate authority of Congress. I believe that the Canadian Parliament should have the same authority.

The mechanism that was suggested was that up front there would be a binational panel of this kind, without travelling the full administrative route in the United States, which would render a binding decision subject only to it being overturned by either an Act of the U.S. Congress or an Act of the Canadian Parliament. The likelihood of that kind of action being taken by the Congress or by the Canadian Parliament is of course very remote, so one would have effectively established a level of certainty far exceeding what one finds in this agreement.

A lesser proposal, not quite as dramatic, is simply that a blue ribbon panel be set up ab initio to deal with the particular complaint of a U.S. domestic industry, and in that fashion a determination would be made by a blue ribbon panel. Then, should the complainant really want to take on that panel and proceed through the administrative mechanisms in the courts of the United States, the complainant would be free to do so. It was felt that over a period of time the stature of such a panel would dominate and, by convention, would probably become effectively the panel of first and last resort on these disputes.

I do believe, if we look at Chapter 18, the creation of a Canada-U.S. Trade Commission, that this lays some groundwork at the cabinet level which I think over a period of time could be developed into an effective agency for the resolution of most international disputes.

There are other areas that are seldom discussed, such as the frequent application of Section 337 of the 1930 U.S. trade law, which is used to harass, especially new wave industries who claim patent protection, and they are basically through a simple petition exercise involved in U.S. court proceedings. This is something which I understand was addressed during the negotiations but was not resolved in Canada's favour. We have here, indeed, the status quo. In any new wave industry, if any of us should develop a product which we feel must have access to the United States market, which effectively all new wave products must have, then the question is: Why would I put my plant in Montreal as opposed to Burlington? Would I not be better off trying to export back to a market of 25 million people and stay in the market of 250 million?

I say again that security of access was not achieved. The situation remains effectively where it is. What about enhanced access, government procurement? Again, I think that we all have reason to be profoundly disappointed. We now have achieved, according to the calculations, an increase cutting into that $700 billion of government procurement of approximately one-half of 1 per cent. Big deal. We have moved to $4 billion. It is a little movement, but certainly a far cry from the expectations that Canadian exporters had with respect to achieving greater inroads into U.S. government procurement at all levels. You may recall that government procurement by America was one of the specific examples that I cited a moment ago.

What about the other side? What about this issue of sovereignty that we hear so much about? Are social programs and subsidy codes and so on going to be affected? I think that one thing that the people who criticize this agreement must recognize—and most refuse to do so—is that the GATT already provides a very high degree of encroachment on Canadian sovereignty. Canadians are not free to subsidize as they like. We may have done it in certain instances, but we are not getting away with it in many instances. That will get worse and worse.

To use the sovereignty argument one has to recognize that every treaty of any kind, in any area, is an encroachment on sovereignty. It is a surrendering of sovereignty to an international forum.

I would remind you, Madam Speaker, and others of this House, especially critics of this accord—because no one knows what the total impact may be—that this agreement is terminable on six months' notice. It seems to me that that is a complete answer to the sovereignty question. If Canadians feel at a given moment in time that yes, indeed, their social programs are going to be affected, are going to be homogenized, are going to be swallowed up by the whale, surely there would be enough national will in Canada to say "Enough is enough, we will terminate the agreement".

I might add as a footnote that I wish that Meech Lake were terminable in such fashion. The free trade agreement is there for six months, but Meech Lake, I fear, is there forever.

I also hear a lot of people lecture Canadian business on the fact that it does not really know what is good for it. I would not presume to do that. The business community has looked at this agreement and by and large has decided that it is in its best interests. I am forced to rely upon its opinion. It seems to me that it is somewhat presumptuous to tell the Canadian business community that this agreement is really bad for it and that we know better in this place.

What of the threat to cultural industries? I come back to the question of sovereignty. One argument to which I have never received a satisfactory response when I always argued for a comprehensive agreement was this: Does one as a Canadian seriously think that in terms of cultural industries the Italians, the French, the Japanese, the West Germans, and the British are going to step forward and protect the Canadian publishing sector or the Canadian communications sector or the Canadian theatrical sector? It can only be done in one way, and that is by a bilateral negotiation with the United States. It cannot be escaped, because the others have totally different interests. I do not think that the Japanese are especially concerned with their publishing industry in terms of American intrusion.

I understand that I am running out of time. Let me just say that I am satisfied, from my own experience and my own studies, that the GATT is not an alternative. I should say that in cleaning out my office—because, as I have said, I will not be running in the next election—I came upon a speech which I gave to the National Liberal Leadership Convention in 1984. In one paragraph of it I said: "Those who are involved with me in my campaign are tired of the old refrain that the world is a hostile, competitive environment, that we must peer beyond our borders wary and trembling in collective insecurity". I say that the adoption of this agreement will be very much in keeping with that thought, although I have serious reservations about it, as I have pointed out. Much improvement is needed, and I like to look at this as a beginning of a process, not the end of a process. The agreement must be improved, but for the reasons which I have outlined, I intend to vote for Bill C-130.

• (1950)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I think everyone in the House would agree that the Hon. Member delivered a very thoughtful talk. I think it was enjoyed and listened to by all who were in the Chamber and, I might add, by those who were close to the Chamber as well.

The Hon. Member said that he is not running in the next election. We have sat in this House together for nine or ten years now. I think it is fair to say that he will be missed. I hope that he will come back and play the piano for us the odd time. It is Canada's loss.

The Hon. Member is absolutely right when he says that this is the beginning, that we did not solve all the problems, and that there is much negotiating to be done in the future. He was an economic Minister on the Treasury benches of a Government. What advice would he give to the Government and the negotiators who will, over the next five to seven years, be trying to define a subsidy? When does a subsidy becomes an unfair trade practice and when a regional development program is just that and not an unfair trade practice? What kind of advice would he give to the Government's negotiators for that period of negotiation?

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, the issue of where a subsidy begins and where it ends is an extremely complicated issue. GATT, of course, already has rules, and I am one of those people who happens to believe that a benefit that may come from this agreement is that there will be some trail-blazing in establishing criteria which is much easier done one on one between Canada and the United States, criteria which then may be extended to our trading partners as a whole.

I cannot deal with all the regional subsidies. It would be a bit complicated to deal with them in a few minutes. It is my own view that national programs which are available without discrimination on a national treatment basis are programs for which Canada should fight strongly.

In terms of regional development, I think Canada should say "if you have national treatment and you are the subsidiary of a United States firm and want to locate in Cape Breton, you will get the Cape Breton development tax credit along with everyone else". The object of these programs is not to discriminate against the United States; it is to promote industrial development and jobs in the regions. That is the kind of effort that should be made, and the United States will have similar objectives as different areas of the country become impoverished from time to time and market forces are not capable of dealing with them. They have them now.

We in Montreal used to read every day that it pays to locate in New York State, and indeed it did. This is not something that is unique to Canada. It is a problem both countries will have to deal with, but I would like to think it would be dealt with on that kind of basis in order to satisfy the GATT partners as well.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I want to echo the words of my colleague and add to them our best wishes to the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) when he leaves this House. I would like to ask the Hon. Member three questions. First, if this deal were to fail, what would be the ability of a new Government to negotiate a new deal? Does he see that as being possible or realistic?

Second, if this deal were to fail, does he believe that after such a failure there would be any possibility of opening up sector-by-sector negotiations? Third, could he comment on what he would presume to be the expectancy of the Auto Pact if this agreement agreed upon between Canada and the United States were to fail to become ratified?

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, I think the question is highly hypothetical. How do we know what the reaction will be on either side of the border if the agreement should fail? I think the reasons for its failure would be important, but implicit in the Hon. Member's question is that there would be hostility and lack of trust, that we would essentially revert to where we were, that the protectionist forces might increase, and that Canada would not have the benefit of the so-called side-swipe provision which is in the agreement. I suppose that is a possibility.

Another possibility is that there could be a change of administrations on both sides of the border and another look would be taken at an agreement in a different form. It is a hypothetical question. My own preference would be that it not fail, but that there be a very strong commitment on both sides to improve it in some of the areas I have touched upon.

That ties in with a third question as well, what would be the impact on the Auto Pact if the agreement were to fail. Of course, the Auto Pact is terminable on one year's notice. Again, the question presumes an underlying hostility. I think the real issue is that in business and commerce, by and large, as the Hon. Member knows, if an agreement is operating to the advantage of both parties, it is unlikely to be terminated. On the other hand, if it is operating only to the advantage of one party, then it is very likely to be terminated, irrespective of this particular agreement.

That was the point I made earlier in regard to the sovereignty argument. If this agreement operates dramatically to the benefit of the United States and to the detriment of Canada, a future Canadian Government will be in a position to terminate it and to receive a mandate from the Canadian people to do so.

The Hon. Member asked if we would have any chance of getting sector by sector agreements if the agreement were to fail. I said earlier that I basically favour sector by sector agreements. Who would not favour sector by sector agreements? I suppose it is what one would call cherry picking, if one could get away with it, but it has to be done on a reciprocal basis.

When we sought agreements on urban transport, steel, informatics and agricultural implements, the four areas that we last tried to do sector by sector agreements on, we were quickly told by the United States administration that it was not interested. I am not so sure that the failure of this agreement would have any impact one way or the other. I think the difficulty is that sector by sector is a non-starter, would be frowned upon by GATT, and very likely would not be approved by the requisite two-thirds of the membership.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard).

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Madam Speaker, this occasion fills me with awe and respect, since it is the first time I have had an opportunity to rise in the House to speak in debate. I shall, if I may, address my initial remarks to my constituents in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean, to those who made it possible for me to enter these precincts and who have placed their trust in me. I want to give them the assurance that I will do everything I can to deserve that trust and will always be available to listen to what they have to say.

I am of course delighted that my maiden speech will be in support of a bill that is vital to Canada's future, to our economic development and to the national reconciliation to which this Government has dedicated so much of its energies.

A great deal has been said since the beginning of the debate on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, which has given rise to some remarks that were often bitter and spread a great deal of confusion in the minds of our opponents.

We are faced with two points of view. One is apocalyptic, and it is therefore necessary to try and put a more accurate perspective on this debate.

The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is merely an agreement that enshrines an irreversible reality. The facts are stubborn, that we know, and basically, it has been long accepted that our economies are interdependent. Actually, this agreement reflects a world-wide and unescapable trend towards putting an end to tariff barriers between trading nations.

At a time when the Common Market, with a population of 350 million people, is a reality that is increasingly making itself felt, our North American economy must also learn to express its maturity and get rid of artificial barriers on the road to progress.

I referred to Europe, Madam Speaker. We have all heard the arguments that raised the spectre of Canadian sovereignty being undermined as a result of the agreement. We must realize that Europe went through this a long time ago and since then has taken some realistic steps, going beyond the stage of an economic market to a commitment to a continental political entity. We must not forget that in Europe there are several political institutions, including the European Parliament and the Council of Europe, and that we in Canada must become part of the international market, the international club of trading nations, mindful of the fact that a nation that does not have a market of 100 million people is doomed to failure.

We are a big country, we have almost unlimited resources, but we are few in number. One of the difficulties with our country is that we have the will to succeed, we have all it takes, everything needed for what we desire, but we are limited by our numbers. With our population of 26 million, we cannot isolate ourselves, living in a world where interdependence is the rule.

This means that the dynamics of events, history, everything that drives the economy, the whole outlook for this country require an agreement with the large trading partner next to us.

Trade between Canada and the United States has increased steadily since 1935, when we first reduced tariffs. Today, we know how important trade with our southern neighbours is.

In Europe, when I was Ambassador in France, I often told the French people and Europeans with whom I spoke, to impress upon them the importance of our trade with the United States, that in some years the Province of Ontario alone sold the United States as much as all of Japan, if not more. I assure you that compared to the situation in Europe, this makes people realize how dangerous it is for us and for our country not to ensure secure access for such an important trade. Basically, people who tell us about the dangers for sovereignty should themselves recognize that the best way to assure Canadian sovereignty is secure access to the American market. We cannot live every day at the mercy of the U.S. Congress, when our trade is so important. Remember that when President Nixon slapped a levy on all Canadian imports a few years ago we immediately had an economic crisis on our hands. We cannot accept to live with this threat. We must set our sovereignty on a firm base. We must for ever protect our economic security. We must sign the agreement.

Today's new reality is that Canada-U.S. trade is no longer a one-way street. People like Campeau, Bombardier, Seagram and Molson control thousands of jobs south of the border. Canadians and Americans have gradually become partners on the same market of 250 million consumers.

What Canada needs to do now in this context is to make sure that we stand fast against the wave of protectionism in the United States and maintain this vital market for our economy by signing a firm agreement with our American partner.

Madam Speaker, I come from Quebec. I represent a riding there and our people have reached a strong consensus concerning the free trade issue. For very sound reasons, politicians as well as businessmen, industry, and large and small companies see eye to eye on the need for the Free Trade Agreement.

The Quebec economy simply cannot do without the American market where, I would remind the House, the province sells in excess of 75 per cent of its products, and that works out to roughly $16 billion a year.

Our major companies and our service industries, not to mention hundreds of small- and medium-sized businesses, have long since lived up to the challenge of competitors and they report massive exports to the United States. Our people are not afraid of free trade. They have been asking for it for a long time now because they know that tariff elimination spells lower production costs, higher productivity and guaranteed access to a huge consumer market.

When talking about such a sensitive sector as the forest industry we must keep in mind that Quebec exports to the United States total $3 billion. This is where we can see that for such an important sector—particularly in my riding where a lot of people depend on forestry products—untold benefits will flow from the implementation of the FTA. In recent years Quebec, like other Canadian provinces, was hard hit by American protectionism, especially in connection with softwood. Signing an agreement with the United States will put our producers beyond the reach of these coutervailing trade measures.

Our petrochemical industry, which is also facing high tariffs, will benefit from the elimination of U.S. trade barriers which, in turn, will promote the processing of our products to a larger degree within our boundaries.

For Quebec's outlying regions which have suffered for a long time from being far away from markets, the free trade agreement offers an unprecedented opportunity for economic renewal. The Government has already clearly determined that regional development policies will be implemented so that our regions can benefit from the new climate created by the free trade agreement.

National reconciliation that this Government has tirelessly championed will not be brought about merely by a constitutional agreement, it will also require an increase in a better distribution of collective wealth. This, in turn, will not be brought about by protectionism but rather through openness, a greater awareness of our capabilities and a willingness to tackle difficulties.

This is the way our businesses have set out to capture the American market. The way, Hydro-Quebec, with our huge hydro resource base as well as an expertise which is second to none, has gained faithful customers among New England States and is selling them its power surpluses, so much so that at this time, Hydro-Quebec has already signed for the coming years power delivery contracts totalling more than $32 billion. Now that the Quebec Government wishes to launch Phase II of the James Bay development, the free trade agreement with the United States confirms and clarifies our access to the American market for this energy resource as well as for other energy sources originating in Canada.

At the same time, with this deal, Quebec electricty becomes much more attractive to U.S. suppliers of energy. Under the provisions of the agreement giving our partners access to energy supplies, it will be easier to finance such ventures as Phase II of the James Bay project.

For Quebec, as for all provinces with energy resources, the free trade agreement will mean new investments in the energy sector and its related industries.

As a Quebecker, I am particularly sensitive to the new horizons this agreement opens for Quebec. The creative enthousiasm of our young people and the calm self-confidence of our older entrepreneurs who have already started to gain access to the U.S. market will now be visible throughout the North American continent.

Of course, opponents of our initiative have implied that, for all practical purposes, this agreement would put an end to the provinces sovereignty over their natural resources. Far from the truth!

In no way will the provinces lose their natural resources because of the free trade deal. The provinces will continue to own, manage and preserve, as is the case now, the various resources located within their boundaries.

Naturally, exporting provinces will have to abide by this Agreement. Nevertheless, they will gain enormous benefits as far as investment, guaranteed access to the market and jobs are concerned. The provincial Governments involved in no way attacked those special provisions in the Canada-United States agreement.

In the area of energy, as in other areas of the trade agreement, Canadian sovereignty never was put into question, nor were the traditional rights of Canadian provinces to manage their resources.

Canadian sovereignty, Madam Speaker, has been at the heart of the free trade debate. And no doubt that aspect of the debate gave rise to the most evident signs of demagogy and assumed outrage.

However, nothing that makes this country politically, socially and culturally different from the United States is affected by the agreement's provisions. Our cultural industries—the publishing industry, the film industry, TV, music and broadcasting are specifically excluded from the free trade agreement.

The century-old commitment of the Canadian Federal entity to fight regional economic disparities also is outside the scope of the Canada-U.S. agreement.

This means that the negotiation of regional development agreements will go on between the Canadian Government and provinces. This involves the essence of this country, its perception of equality, its social justice goals.

Over the years, Canada has built up one of the most advanced social system in the world. This to its mind is the sign of a society committed to reducing inequalities, a society where compassion is a major factor.

The American society, for reasons of its own which are not for us to discuss here, chose another road. It would be highly naive to be ignorant of what our Canadian values are, to believe the signing of a trade agreement with the United States implies that Canada would adhere to the Americans social standards.

Our social programs are here to stay. And I challenge anyone among our friends opposite or our friends anywhere to show that the free trade agreement will be the end of any social program.

No provision in the treaty requires Canada to harmonize its economical or social policies with those in United States.

Since 1935, Canada and the United States have been gradually reducing their mutual tariffs by 72 per cent. In the meantime, our social policy has evolved in a way that is quite different from that in the United States. Why should the total elimination of tariffs force us to do away with it?

By the same token, the reduction of tariff barriers did not impede Canada from promoting bilingualism and multiculturalism.

Our programs in such areas as Medicare, Old Age Security pensions, family allowances and unemployment insurance have never been on the table.

Moreover, American fishermen who felt that the unemployment insurance benefits paid to their Canadian counterparts were concealed subsidies saw their claims turned down by the US Department of Commerce.

The additional wealth resulting from the free trade agreement remains in fact the best assurance for the maintenance and development of our social programs. The economic stagnation and protectionism suggested by free trade oponents would be the best way to jeopardize our social gains.

Our Canadian identity cannot flourish in isolation, Mr. Speaker; it cannot be the result of artificial barriers. It will result from a world oriented stronger economy, to the advantage of regional development.

I strongly urge all Quebecers and other Canadians to be suspicious of all the prophets of doom and gloom who suggest that Canada will be swallowed by its huge neighbour. The Free Trade Agreement is a major step towards the achievement of the Canadian national goal. It is also the affirmation of our country's global role. Our relations with our neighbour to the South should increasingly become more responsible and adult. Fear and unwillingness to face facts would lead us nowhere. The United States are our natural partner. We cannot overlook the benefits which we could and should gain from this free trade agreement.

The surest sign canadian maturity is the support already given to the Free Trade Agreement, a support which proves Canadians are no longer afraid of competition, that they have gotten rid of their inferiority complex towards the United States and that they are determined to get their share of the North American economy.

Mr. Speaker, more than a trade issue this will have an impact on the very future of this country, something which could motivate people into correcting shortcomings and help Canada achieve the place it deserves among nations.

[English]

Mr. James: Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Bouchard) on his maiden speech and especially on his thoughts on this very important agreement. I want to bring to his attention the area of petro-chemicals which he mentioned and ask his thoughts on it. I would like to refer to a recent speech made by Thomas d'Aquino, the President and Chief Executive Officer of the Business Council on National Issues. He talks about myths and reality. He said:

> Here the myth becomes even more fantastic, especially when we count the many precise ways in which access to the United States market is either improved or made more secure by the Agreement. Take the case, for example, of where access is improved. Virtually all tariffs on trade will be removed over a 10-year period. Precise rules of origin will help clarify uncertainties at border crossings. Customer user fees will be abandoned by the United States by 1994. Except where the Agreement provides otherwise, the right of national treatment will ensure that the United States will not discriminate against Canadian producers. Steps are taken to reduce or inhibit the establishment of non-tariff barriers such as discriminatory product standards and product approval requirements. Tariffs and quotas on all agricultural goods, except for quotas in support of supply management schemes, will be removed.
> Access to government procurement markets will be expanded. Rules of origin offer more protection against offshore parts producers thereby giving increased reciprocal access to Canadian and American producers. A significant number of service industries will benefit because of the provisions dealing with the right of establishment and the principle of national treatment. Temporary entry for Canadian business people and service personnel is facilitated.

I know that the Province of Quebec is interested in furthering its petrochemical industry. With regard to tariff removal in particular, Polysar said:

> It is Polysar's considered opinion that the recently negotiated free trade agreement with the U.S. will provide significant benefits and opportunities for all Canadians.
> In our case we believe the removal of chemical tariffs over the next five years is a key element. Recently we have been considering reopening a plant to produce styrene that has been shut down since 1981, and the removal of tariffs could have an immediate impact on that project. The elimination of the 7.4 per cent duty on styrene would improve the Company's profit margin on the commodity by 2.5 cents for every pound sold. If the plant is reopened, the 100,000 ton of styrene would all be exported, largely to the U.S., leading to an improvement in profits of $5 to $10 annually.

What have the key executives and workers in the petrochemical industry in the Province of Quebec said to the Member about the opportunities there to expand the petrochemical industry in which I know that province is so very interested?

• (2020)

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, of course, the free trade agreement would provide us with a marvelous opportunity to improve Quebec's chances in the petrochemical industry. I can draw a parallel between this sector and the aluminum sector.

I was elected in a riding where raw aluminum is very important. We have raw aluminum plants in Alma, and there is another large one in Arvida, as well as in La Baie. The paradox is that while raw aluminum goes freely into the United States now, when we try to transform it in the secondary industry, we cannot do so without being exposed to tariffs. This is very bad because regions like mine can only be the exporters of natural resources, like electricity. This agreement will allow us to create secondary industries which are very important and will revitalize our region. It will create new jobs in the small enterprises for our young people. The youth of our region will not leave to live in big cities. While it is a good thing for them to leave sometimes, it is bad for the future when most young people leave their families and the region.

This is also a social project in that it will create jobs and new and great opportunities for young Canadians to build a new society.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, since this third reading debate is the last opportunity for us in the House of Commons to discuss the so-called free trade arrangement, I want to take the opportunity to deal with some of the critical arguments.

At the outset let us make it absolutely clear that what we are discussing in this Parliament is this very specific arrangement between Canada and the United States, signed by the President and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on January 2, 1988. That is what we are discussing. We are discussing whether we are for or against that specific arrangement and nothing else. What we must do is to add up the good points and the bad points in that arrangement and decide whether it is good for Canada or bad for Canada.

I say that because many people believe or make the mistake of discussing theoretical free trade, textbook free trade, or classical free trade. As a matter of fact, they are confusing this arrangement with the Common Market, with the European Free Trade Association, with the Auto Pact, and with GATT. All these things that I just mentioned are, in a sense, a type of free trade. What is evident is that there are many types of free trade arrangements. It is also obvious that one can be in favour of some types of free trade and totally opposed to other types of free trade arrangements. Of course, it depends on the details of each one.

A very excellent example of this is in Europe. In the centre of Europe there is the European Economic Community, better known as the Common Market. That comprises 12 countries. However, there are also in Europe seven countries that are known as the outer seven. They also believe in free trade but do not want anything to do with the Common Market. The fact that they are opposed to joining the Common Market does not mean they are against free trade. They have set up their own association known as the European Free Trade Association. Those countries include Switzerland, Austria, Finland, Sweden, Norway and, I believe, Portugal. Britain was originally a member of that group as well.

They have agreed to a type of free trade arrangement that is different from the Common Market. The European Free Trade Association has an agreement whereby they have eliminated the tariffs on all manufactured products but do not deal at all with agricultural products. They do not deal with resources or with joint economic policy. Since the Common Market deals with agriculture, with resources, and deals with a common economic policy, they did not want to join.

I simply make that point because I want to demonstrate very clearly that one can be against one type of free trade agreement and totally for another type, depending on the conditions.

In this debate, the Member who just spoke, the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard), made a common mistake. He said that because the Common Market is a good thing for some European countries, and they have agreed to that kind of free trade arrangement and it has not hurt them, consequently we should agree to this bilateral free trade arrangement with the United States.

There is no similarity between the type of arrangement that exists in Europe among the Common Market countries and this arrangement. First, in the European arrangement there are 12 countries, a great number of which, including Britain, France, Germany, Italy and Spain, are more or less the same size. Many of the countries can balance each other off economically.

The other major difference besides being a multilateral arrangement with countries more or less the same size is that in most cases they do not threaten each other from a cultural point of view because they have different languages and culture. There is the English language, French language, German language, Italian language, Spanish, Dutch and so on. There is quite a difference between that type of arrangement and a bilateral arrangement between a country of 250 million and a country of 25 million people where two-thirds of the population speak English and all of the United States speaks English. The threat to sovereignty is much more pronounced in this bilateral arrangement with the United States than it is in any way at all with the Common Market. Despite that, I repeat that a number of countries in Europe refused to join the Common Market because such things as agriculture were included.

The Liberal Party, which opposes this specific agreement with the United States, has taken a stand and still stands for freer trade. It was under the Liberal Government that Canada joined GATT in 1948. We were one of the first countries to join and set up the GATT arrangement, which is a type of free trade arrangement. The preamble to GATT states: "These are arrangements directed to the substantial reduction of tariffs and other barriers to trade, and to the elimination of discriminatory treatment in international agreement".

The Member who spoke before me asked why we should be afraid of this agreement if we are a member of GATT. Again, GATT is a multilateral arrangement with many countries so that they can balance each other off. It is not a one on one situation where a large country like the United States can dominate the smaller country, in this case Canada. Not only is GATT a large multilateral arrangement, it is an arrangement that includes many cultures, many languages and many types of economy.

The Liberal Party supported freer trade since the end of the Second World War. Canada joined GATT under the Liberal Party. In addition, it was under the Liberal Party that tariffs between Canada and the United States were brought down from an average tariff of 30 per cent in the late 1940s to an average tariff of 5 per cent right now, before this agreement is in place. Not only was the general tariff brought down from 30 per cent to 5 per cent, we have a situation now where 80 per cent of all trade between Canada and the United States is without tariff at all. That was done without this special so-called proposed free trade agreement. That was done under the negotiations relating to GATT and sector negotiations.

Much can be done and has been done to bring about freer trade without selling out our sovereignty, our independence, and our identity.

Let me also point out that in 1987, the year before this agreement was signed, Canada had a $20 billion trade surplus with the United States. There is a situation, without this agreement, in which there is no tariff on 80 per cent of the goods and services between the United States and Canada. The average tariff has been brought down from 30 per cent to 5 per cent, and we had a trade balance of $20 billion. Yet the Conservatives are on their knees begging for an arrangement with the United States.

I mentioned that the GATT was, in itself, a type of free trade agreement. I found it amusing this morning as I listened to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) who, in his bumptious and show-boating sort of way, listed off a number of former Liberal cabinet Ministers who supported this agreement. He referred to the Hon. Donald Macdonald and the Hon. Gerald Regan. He did not refer, of course, to the Hon. Eric Kierans or to the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, also former Liberal Ministers who were very active in the trade and economic area and who are very much opposed to this agreement. We just listened to the Secretary of State, a new Minister from Quebec. He and others try to give the impression that all of Quebec is in favour of the agreement, that there is a great consensus in Quebec, including the Quebec Government, in favour of this agreement. That is not so. The business associations are favourable to the agreement, La Chambre de Commerce, Le Conseil du patronat, and those who have economic power are in favour, but L'Union des producteurs agricoles, the trade unions in Quebec, the associations of social groups and so on, are opposed. It will be interesting to see what will happen in Quebec at election time. The point is that there is a great division not only in Quebec but throughout the whole country with respect to this agreement.

Having sat on two parliamentary committees, studying this proposed agreement, I have come to the conclusion that, generally, those who support the agreement are the business groups, the chambers of commerce, the boards of trade, the manufacturing associations, and so on, those with economic power. Those who are opposed, and there are a lot who are opposed, are the trade unions, the women's groups, some of the academics, the National Association of Poor People, and the churches. In other words, those who put a higher priority on economics seem to favour the agreement, although I think they are being short-sighted, and those who oppose the agreement are those who put a high priority on social, political and cultural matters including sovereignty, independence and identity. There are exceptions to that assessment, but generally that is the case.

The Minister for International Trade this morning suggested that all free trade agreements are the same. Members of the Government are using various agreements interchangeably. They seem to indicate that if the Common Market is good, if the Australian-New Zealand Agreement is good for those countries, then this must be good for us. I have already dealt with that. It is not at all true.

Members of the Government also have the tendency to suggest, and they do suggest, that if one is against this agreement that they have negotiated, one is a protectionist. The Secretary of State just said that if we are against that agreement, we are protectionists. That is absolute nonsense. To be against this agreement does not mean you are a protectionist any more than that the Austrians, the Swedes and the Finns, who are opposed to the Common Market, are protectionists. They have their own kind of free trade arrangement which is more suitable to them. We feel there is a better way of dealing with the United States than this agreement. Because we are against the agreement does not mean we are protectionists.

In some respects, the agreement falls short of what a true free trade agreement, a classical free trade agreement, should be, because it does not ensure access to the United States. For example, the most serious trade barrier between Canada and the United States is not tariffs. I already mentioned that 80 per cent of all goods and services between Canada and the United States pass without tariff. The most serious trade barrier or harassment between Canada and the United States is countervail and anti-dumping. This agreement does nothing about those two things.

As Canadians, we are all familiar with the shakes and shingles cases, the softwood lumber case, the East Coast fish case, the potash case, and the steel case. Those cases are all cases where the United States added a countervailing duty to the Canadian product going into the United States and thereby raised a barrier, in a sense, against our goods going into the United States. Since 1979 there have been 300 countervail cases launched against Canadian business in the United States and in 70 per cent of those 300 cases, there was a decision to impose countervail duties against the Canadian firms. That is a serious trade barrier to the United States, and this agreement does nothing about that. In that respect, it falls short of a classical free trade agreement.

On the other hand, the agreement goes much beyond what a trade agreement usually contains. A classical free trade agreement eliminates the barriers to trade between one country and the other country. It eliminates the tariff and non-tariff barriers, or lowers the tariff and non-tariff barriers, from one country to the other country so one can sell one's goods in the other country without these barriers. But this agreement includes, for example, the non-discriminatory access of Americans to Canadian energy. What does that have to do with the trade agreement? What does that have to do with trade barriers? It has nothing to do with them. We are eliminating the tariff against American energy coming into Canada and they are doing the same for us.

Why are we giving them non-discriminatory access to our energy supplies? It is obvious that the United States is running out of energy. It is running out of coal, gas and oil. It does not have the same hydro power we have. They are looking 50 years, 60 years, 100 years down the road. They see what Canada has and they want access to our resources. So the Americans said to this Conservative Government—which went on its knees to the United States begging for this agreement when we really did not need it—we will eliminate the tariffs on the balance of the 20 per cent of goods that still have a tariff. We will do nothing about countervail and anti-dumping, but to do that we want access to your energy. And they got it. Not only did the Americans get that, but I would like to talk about some other things in this agreement that do not belong in a free trade agreement.

I already mentioned energy. There is also the national treatment of American firms in Canada. Of course, it is vice versa in the United States, but there are 250 million of them and only 25 million of us. This means we have to treat American firms in Canada in exactly the same way we treat Canadian firms. I submit that this sort of thing does not belong in an agreement like this.

In addition, we have eliminated the screening of all foreign investment in this country by Americans. They can come in and buy out our companies, they can invest where they like and can take over Canadian companies, whether or not these companies are essential for our sovereignty and independence, and they can completely own the country as far as this agreement is concerned. That is in the agreement. We have agreed to eliminate the screening of investment takeovers.

I mentioned that one of the main differences between the European Free Trade Association and the Common Market is agriculture. Those who are not in the Common Market did not agree because agriculture is a very sensitive and touchy area. Between Canada and the United States it is also sensitive and touchy. We have a situation where we have a very short growing season. We have high costs associated with our cold weather. We will now be competing with the southern United States which can produce agricultural products over a much longer growing season at a much cheaper rate.

Cultural industries are involved in this free trade agreement even though it is said that they are not. There is an exception which brings them in through the back door. For the first time service industries are included in a free trade agreement. There is no other free trade agreement that covers service industries. Yet here we are in this bilateral ten to one population situation risking our service industries. Financial services are included, which is not usual. There are also restrictions on our Crown corporations and the right to create new Crown corporations, which is not usual in a free trade agreement.

Finally, this agreement eliminates the safeguards under the Auto Pact, which is not a free trade arrangement but which is a managed trade arrangement between the United States and Canada and which has worked very well in favour of Canada.

I have listed for you, Madam Speaker, 10 matters which are in this trade agreement which have no business being in a trade agreement. If this were a strictly free trade agreement, a commercial arrangement, as some of the government Members have stated that it is, then it would have been restricted to the elimination of barriers to trade between the two countries. It is not limited to barriers to trade between the two countries but sells out our ability to control our own country, our own economic policy, our own energy policy, and our own regional development policy as well as many other matters.

By entering into this agreement with the United States we are tying ourselves very strongly and intimately to the American free market system. As a result of doing that we will submit ourselves to strong competitive pressures that will lead to the harmonization of many of our programs which are not mentioned specifically in the agreement. That is what we mean when we say that our social programs are at risk under this agreement, as well as our regional development programs and our environmental programs.

If there are companies in Canada competing with American companies which have the right to sell into Canada without any tariff, then they will have to be competitive with those American companies. The first thing that will happen after this thing gets under way is that there will be a Canadian firm saying: "Look, I have to compete with these American companies. They have a lower price than I have because they do not have the same social costs. They do not have medicare or marketing boards. They do not have this social program. They do not have the same environmental programs. Therefore, if we are to compete you will have to cut back on those programs so I can compete with the American companies, or I will move to the United States". This is a threat that we heard in committee. It is something which is very easy to do. I think that is why a great many of our Canadian businesses favour this agreement. Capital moves very easily, especially when one is setting up a new firm or when one is modernizing, when one has to do something about an outdated plant or factory.

What does one do if one cannot compete properly in Canada? One moves one's Canadian firm south of the border and then sells into Canada. Warehouse and sales personnel could be left up here in order to sell into Canada.

Madam Speaker, I see that my time has expired. I wish to say this in closing. If this agreement is implemented, as is the plan of the Government to do, it will be the beginning of the end of Canada as we have known it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Guelph.

Mr. Winegard: Madam Speaker, what the Hon. Member has said is reminiscent of what was said in 1965 about the Auto Pact. At that time people said that the Auto Pact would destroy the country. All those people who wanted to be real protectionists ran for cover and said that the Auto Pact would be the destruction of the country. They said that because companies here in Canada would not be able to compete all automobile production would move south of the border. That has not happened. There is still a good deal of it going on here—a great deal more than before.

Which way does the Hon. Member really want it? He has told us tonight that Canadian firms would have difficulty competing under this new regime and that they will want to get rid of our social programs or move to the south.

Mr. James: He doesn't believe that.

Mr. Winegard: I do not think that he believes that either. I have also heard members of the Party of the Hon. Member say: "You know what will happen? All those big multinational corporations are going to move away". Which way do they want it? Members of his Party also say: "They will come up here. All those big multinational corporations will come up here to buy out all our Canadian industry".

Members of the Hon. Member's Party fear that everyone will come up here to buy us out. They also fear that all the multinationals will move south because it will be cheaper there. I say to my hon. colleague, as I have said to him before on more than one occasion, he really cannot have it both ways. Which way does he want it? Will the Hon. Member tell the Canadian people now one way or the other what he thinks will happen so that 20 years from now when the country is enjoying great prosperity, when all the protectionists have run for cover and forgotten that they ever made such statements we will know what the Hon. Member thought?

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, it is obvious that the Hon. Member has not read the Auto Pact. It was the Liberal Party that brought in the Auto Pact in 1965. At no time did Liberals say that the Auto Pact threatened Canada.

The point I was trying to make at the beginning of my remarks is that the Auto Pact is not similar in any way whatsoever to this bilateral comprehensive agreement with the United States. The Auto Pact obliges the three American automobile companies—there were four at the time—to invest in jobs and in manufacturing in Canada. Under the agreement they are obliged to invest as much in the manufacturing of automobiles and automobile parts in Canada as they sell in Canada. The purpose of the agreement is to make sure that they do not return all the manufacturing to the United States. As I have said, people who categorize such agreements refer to it as a managed trade agreement, not a free trade agreement.

At no time did Liberals say that it threatened our country. As a matter of fact, we said that it did not do that. The results speak for themselves. There has been a great increase in automobile production in Canada since the Auto Pact was signed in 1965. The agreement obliges the American firms to manufacture in Canada. The agreement before us withdraws the safeguards to that. Under the Auto Pact if American production in Canada drops below a certain level then the tariffs apply, whereas they do not apply as long as the Americans produce over that limit in Canada.

With respect to the harmonization and the Hon. Member saying that we are trying to play it both ways, we are not trying to play it both ways. I submit, and I submit very strongly, that by tying ourselves, a country of 25 million, into the market economy of the United States, which is a more open market economy than is ours, there will be strong competitive pressures. I am not saying that we will kill immediately all our industry. We believe more than the United States in the creation of Crown corporations and in the intervention of the Government to make things work. I said that this system threatens our manufacturing industry and puts it at risk. In the long run it will either be pressuring for lower taxes and lower social programs in order to compete with American firms. If that is not obtained then the way will be open to go to the United States, manufacture just over the border and sell back into Canada because there will be no tariffs.

I wish to quote a statement made by the former head of worldwide loans for the Dresden Bank in Germany. He said: "I know that it is not a friendly argument, but it seems to be the truth. If large European firms are given the option of creating a manufacturing plant in either Canada or the United States, they will almost by definition choose the United States. That is because of such factors as transportation costs, taxation rates, market size and labour laws". This was not said by a Liberal, or by Warren Allmand, the Hon. Member from NDG. This is what an economist from Germany has said. He has stated if they cannot get the competitive factors in Canada which are favourable to them, then they will move to the United States. They would do that more likely in a situation where they are building a new plant, or modernizing an old plant. Obviously, if they have a plant in existence now they will let that continue and not move it. However, the pressures are there. They are dangerous for Canada and for our independence and sovereignty.

• (2050)

Mr. Reimer: If I may, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) a couple of questions. The Member was speaking about the fact that since shortly after World War II the average tariff between Canada and the United States was approximately 30 per cent, and now it is approximately 5 per cent on average. The Hon. Member was saying how we had moved from 30 per cent down to 5 per cent before we got into the trade negotiation and now the agreement before us. Nowhere did he say, during that phasing from 30 per cent down to 5 per cent that there was any loss of sovereignty, or that Canada was in any way restricted in any of its policy choice. Why is it, when the tariff moved from 30 per cent down to 5 per cent, there was no loss whatsoever, but as soon as the tariff moved from 5 per cent down to zero, all of a sudden all the sovereignty is lost? Could the Hon. Member explain that?

My second question concerns social programs. I am sure the Hon. Member received the booklet entitled Evaluating the Free Trade Deal from the C.D. Howe Institute. On the question dealing with social programs the booklet states:

> First, 71 countries—including all the advanced industrial countries except Japan and Canada—are currently in regional trade-liberalizing arrangements. None has complained of lost policy independence. For example, the Netherlands maintains an expensive set of social policies, yet it has been in a free trade area with low-spending Belgium for 50 years. Sweden also has many high-cost social policies—indeed many more than does Canada—yet this little country of 8 million people trades tariff free with such economic heavyweights as West Germany and France. Throughout history, rich countries have traded profitably with poor countries, and high-spending countries have traded profitably with low-spending countries. The evidence from other countries is clear: free trade is not the enemy of diversity in social policy.

I ask the Hon. Member, where is the evidence? If the evidence of 71 countries involved in these arrangements proves to the contrary, where is the evidence?

Mr. Allmand: I will deal with the last question of the Hon. Member first. He is falling into the trap I mentioned at the beginning of my speech in which he compares countries in the Common Market and their arrangement, which is a multilateral arrangement between many countries balancing off each other, with this proposed agreement between Canada and the United States which is 250 million to 25 million with, for the most part, common language.

There is a considerable difference in the Common Market. As far as cultural matters are concerned, not only does Holland have its own language, but it is able to counterbalance. There is no overwhelming partner in that arrangement. If Germany and France decide to gang up on Holland—

Mr. McDermid: Germany is not overwhelming? What are you telling me?

Mr. Allmand: The Hon. Member has nothing to say when he is on his feet making a speech, yet he continuously shouts from his seat.

There is a serious difference between that arrangement where countries can balance each other off in their negotiations, this arrangement where there is a country which is the strongest economic power in the world, with basically the same language as Canada, except for Quebec and parts of other provinces, but the threat to our sovereignty and independence is much more serious.

Mr. McDermid: What bunk!

Mr. Allmand: The Hon. Member says that is bunk. Whenever someone says something opposed to the point of view of the Hon. Member, it is bunk. In that sense he belongs to the same school of thought as the Minister whom he represents, because that is all the Minister can do. When the Minister has no argument, he calls his opponents names.

I wish to point out to the Hon. Member who seriously asked me that question, the reason the people in the outer seven, Austria, Switzerland, Sweden, and Finland, did not join the Common Market, is that they did not think those arrangements were suitable for their countries. Yet they have set up a free trade arrangement which is different from the Common Market, and they are free traders in a different way.

While we oppose that free trade agreement that has been put forward with the United States, we point out that since the end of the Second World War, on a step by step basis dealing with tariffs only, and not dealing with access to energy, agriculture, cultural industries, service industries, financial services, and the restricted use of Crown corporations, without dealing with all those things, we were able to achieve this type of freer trade with the United States, and we would support that. We are not opposed to the lowering of tariffs with the United States. What we are opposed to are the many other things that are in this agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate with the Hon. the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher).

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to be able to speak today on one of the most important achievements of this Government, the negotiation of a trade agreement that will secure and enhance Canada's trade with our largest trading partner.

As Canada's former Minister for International Trade, and as the Member representing the northern Ontario riding of Sault Ste. Marie, I am particularly pleased that Bill C-130 has now reached third reading stage in the House of Commons.

Today I would like to focus on why Canada must develop a more predictable trading relationship with our friends to the south, and why the trade agreement is a good deal for Canadians, particularly Canadians living in northern Ontario.

The need and the rationale for a new trade agreement with the United States quickly became clear to me in September, 1984, when I assumed my responsibilities as Minister for International Trade.

When our Government took office in the fall of 1984, Canadian exports in several key sectors were under fire in the United States. Our forestry, mining, fishing, and manufacturing exports to the United States were being targeted regularly by American trade actions. Yet there was no mechanism in place to allow us to protect our interests effectively. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) demonstrated both leadership and a national vision when he put on our political agenda the negotiation of a free trade agreement.

In today's world the status quo would not provide the jobs required for Canadians in the 1990s. Our Prime Minister had campaigned in the 1984 election on the theme of "jobs, jobs, jobs". In northern Ontario we understood that clearly those new jobs could not be created without such a comprehensive trade agreement. Simply stated, the status quo was not working, and thousands of Canadian jobs were at stake.

Take for example an industry that is critically important to the well-being of Canada's manufacturing industry, and to my riding of Sault Ste. Marie, the steel industry. In 1984, the U.S. International Trade Commission recommended that protectionist quotas and/or tariffs be allowed and applied to certain products of steel. In the end, voluntary restraint agreements were proposed for all of the steel products exported from countries considered to be trading unfairly through dumping or subsidization. At the time there were strong voices in Congress arguing that Canadian steel exports should also be blocked.

The stakes in this game were high for the residents of Sault Ste. Marie. Algoma Steel is the primary employer in my riding, and Algoma exports approximately one-quarter of its production to the United States. Well over 2,000 jobs directly depend upon steel exports south of the border. Ultimately, we have succeeded in excluding the Canadian steel industry from being side-swiped by these protectionist measures that were aimed primarily at countries like Brazil and Japan. However, our steel producers continued to be targets of various rear-guard actions.

I quickly realized that, although Canada and the United States had an institutional mechanism to deal with the administration of the bridge that links our two countries in the Sault, there was no dispute resolution mechanism available to deal with our day-to-day trading relationship. Trade disputes were being dealt with on an ad hoc basis, with varying results.

It would have been irresponsible to continue to try to manage the largest two-way trading relationship in the world on an ad hoc hit-or-miss basis. This is one of the primary reasons that led to our decision to explore the opportunity of securing and enhancing our trade with the United States.

We carefully examined the facts and consulted with Canadians before embarking on negotiations with the Americans. Three of the most noteworthy facts are as follows: First, Canada has an internal market of 25 million people. This market is spread over 4,000 miles and is subject to various interprovincial barriers.

Our domestic market is relatively small when compared to the United States domestic market of over 240 million, or Japan's market of 130 million. Let us not forget that producers in the European Economic Community have access to a single market of 320 million consumers.

Second, given our relatively small domestic market, Canada must trade with other countries if we are to prosper as a nation. About a third of Canada's Gross National Product depends on access to foreign markets.

Among industrialized countries, only West Germany comes close to Canada's degree of dependence on access to foreign markets. However, West Germany has privileged access to a market of over 300 million consumers, whereas Canada's domestic market is less than one-tenth in size.

The importance of trade to Canada can perhaps best be understood in terms of jobs. Three million Canadians depend on trade for their jobs.

Third, the United States is by far Canada's largest trading partner. Over three-quarters of Canadian exports are sold to the United States, and approximately 2 million Canadian jobs depend on this trade. Last year Canada's two-way merchandise trade with the United States totalled approximately $175 billion.

The United States is Canada's most important trading partner for many reasons that relate to geography, history, and economics. Although the Trudeau Government's third policy option attempted to increase Canada's trade with Europe and decrease our trade with the United States during the 1970s, the relative importance of the U.S. market has continued to grow.

Given the fact that Canada must effectively manage its trading relationship with the United States if we are to prosper as a sovereign nation, our Government began a consultation process with Canadians to determine the best option available to us.

Yes, Madam Speaker, there has been extensive consultations with Canadians. Although there are some who pretend that Canadians have not been consulted on this trade agreement, the facts indicate that the consultation process has been moving forward for almost four years. As a front row player, I am proud to have been part of this Government's extensive consultation process with the Canadian people. Never in the history of Canadian trade negotiations were so many people involved in examining Canada's trade options.

In November, 1984, my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) released our agenda for economic renewal. At that time, we clearly stated that:

> The Government will examine, as a matter of priority, and in close consultation with the provinces and the private sector, all avenues to secure and enhance market access. This will include a careful analysis of options for bilateral trade liberalization with the United States in the light of various private sector proposals, as well as preparations for and opportunities provided by multilateral trade negotiations.

In January, 1985, I released a discussion paper that was widely circulated throughout the country. The discussion paper set out four main options to deal with our trading relationship with the United States: one, maintain the status quo; two, negotiate sectoral or functional arrangements; three, negotiate a framework agreement; four, negotiate a comprehensive arrangement similar in scope to the agreement we are considering today.

Following the release of our discussion paper, I set out across the country and met with the provinces and many groups and individuals from the private sector, unions, the universities, and elsewhere.

However, we were not content in limiting the consultation process to my travels across the country. In 1985, Cabinet approved my proposal to set up both the International Trade Advisory Committee chaired by Walter Light, as well as 15 sectoral advisory committees. These committees were made up of men and women from virtually all major industries and regions in Canada. Many meetings were held to ensure that this trade agreement was based on the most complete information available, and to ensure that Canadians could provide ongoing input during the negotiating process.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank again all individuals who so generously volunteered their time and their energies to this successful grass roots consultation process.

I am very pleased that this consultation mechanism has not been dismantled following the successful conclusion of our negotiations with the Americans. These committees were recently restructured to ensure that there is also meaningful consultation for the second track of this Government's trade policy—the Uruguay Round of multilateral GATT negotiations.

The Prime Minister has stated on many occasions that "gone are the old days of confrontation"; that our Government will listen and consult before acting. These consultations on Canada-U.S. trade were consistent with our Prime Minister's new approach to consultation rather than confrontation.

Rather than continue discussing the many ways in which Canadians have been consulted over the past four years, I will now turn to the second main point that I wish to discuss tonight—why this trade agreement is a good deal for Canadians, and particularly Canadians living in northern Ontario.

I mentioned earlier that Canada as a whole ships about 75 per cent of its exports to the United States. The importance of secure access to the American market is particularly well understood by Ontario residents, because 90 per cent of Ontario's exports are shipped to the United States.

For example, the forestry, mining, and steel industries are three of the most important employers in northern Ontario. All three of these key industries require secure access to the United States and, therefore, will be among the big winners as a result of the dispute resolution provisions in the agreement.

The forestry industry employs about 150,000 people in Ontario, most of whom work in northern Ontario. Over 20 communities in northern Ontario rely on the forestry industry.

In the Algoma area alone, there are seven major sawmill and forest product plants that employ about 1,500 people. These plants export around 90 per cent of their product to the United States. In addition, St. Mary's Paper in the Sault employs 500 people and exports 95 per cent of its paper products to the U.S.

The primary producers in the forestry industry will benefit from the creation of a dispute settlement mechanism that gives Canadians rights where before they had none. The fact that Canadian firms can now appeal adverse determinations by American trade tribunals to an impartial binational body will greatly assist our producers of lumber, pulp, paper, and newsprint.

Likewise, the producers of high value-added forestry products such as some papers, particle board, and plywood, will benefit from the elimination of existing tariffs because their products will become more competitive in their primary market.

Producers of converted products such as windows, doors, and kitchen cabinets also stand to benefit from free trade access to the United States. Most of Ontario's $5 billion mining industry is located in northern Ontario. Over 20,000 people in over a dozen communities work in the mining industry in the North. Since 75 per cent of its production is exported to the United States, it is easy to understand why the mining industry has responded favourably to the trade agreement.

In addition to the benefits flowing from the dispute resolution mechanism, tariff reductions will provide major benefits to the mining industry. Since American tariffs on metals and minerals now escalate when value is added to the raw resource, the removal of these tariffs will stimulate exports at the higher value-added sectors in the mining industry such as smelting and refining.

I would like to conclude with a brief discussion of the steel industry. With the recent share acquisition by Dofasco, Algoma Steel is part of the largest Canadian steel producer and is also one of the top five steel producers in North America. The trade agreement enjoys broad support in the steel industry, and rightly so. Algoma exports 25 per cent of its production to the United States and will greatly benefit from the dispute resolution provisions.

It is interesting to note that although both opposition Parties have vowed to tear up this agreement, no one has offered a viable alternative to our Government's two-track trade strategy. It is ironic that both the opposition Parties have indicated that after tearing up the trade agreement, they will attempt to negotiate a series of more limited agreements that are confined to specific sectors, although the eligible sectors have not been fully identified! Unfortunately, the so-called sectoral approach was attempted earlier this decade by the Liberals and failed. Furthermore, three years ago, the Macdonald Royal Commission on economic union and development prospects carefully considered the sectoral approach and concluded that it was open to "several serious objections."

Likewise, although the sectoral approach was one of the options considered in our 1985 discussion paper, my cross Canada consultations quickly led me to conclude that the sectoral approach was unworkable. I therefore find it highly ironic that both opposition Parties are now attempting to offer the sectoral negotiating approach as a viable alternative to this trade agreement. The sectoral approach was tried less than five years ago and it got nowhere. There is absolutely nothing to indicate that this discredited approach would fare any better today.

The comprehensive trade agreement we have negotiated with the United States is the product of extensive consultations with Canadians from every walk of life. As a result of this grass roots consultation process, this trade agreement will provide major benefits to all regions of the Canadian economy. In particular, northern Ontario will be the big winner because its forestry, mining and steel industries stand to gain significantly. I therefore look forward to voting for Bill C-130 later this week.

Mr. James: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) spoke about the GATT and the Common Market. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Kelleher), the former Minister for International Trade, to comment on that.

When speaking about the trade agreement, the Member opposite talked about the things we keep hearing about. He did not talk about anything very new, but there are a couple of new things on the horizon. Last week, President Reagan signed the omnibus trade Bill and the competition Act in the United States. A month ago in London, the EEC External Affairs Commissioner, Willy de Clercq, said, and I quote:

> —the concept that will be imposed on importing nations after the EC opens its internal market in 1992 is one of "over-all reciprocity." He asserted that this was consistent with the international trade rules under GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade). But most nations see the Europeans extending the protectionism they now practice in agriculture to such areas as financial services, merger policies, government procurement, local content rules and so on.

We have a major Bill in the U.S. and the expressed opinion of the Commissioner for External Affairs for the European Economic Community talking about protectionism. The Japanese, Latin Americans, and Southeast Asians are looking at this sort of movement and are not likely to change their barriers to trade. Yet the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East undoubtedly supports his Leader who says that he will tear up the agreement.

From the Minister's experience, what would he see happening if we allowed ourselves to tear up an important agreement with the United States? What kind of signal would that send out to these other important trading blocks that have already expressed some pretty important protectionist sentiments or have already passed some in Bill form?

Mr. Kelleher: Madam Speaker, I can certainly advise the Hon. Member that if one looks at the trade statistics over the years, one will see that 10 or 15 years ago, we exported as much as 20 per cent of our product into the European Community. Today, following the creation of the European Economic Community, we export only 7 per cent or 8 per cent.

I know what happened to Canada when Norway and Sweden came in as associated members. We were denied access to some of our trade in the pulp and paper industry. I know what happened to Canadian trade when Portugal and Spain became members of the European Economic Community. Again, our trade suffered as a result.

It is absolutely vital for us to protect our market in the United States where approximately 75 per cent of our exports go. One of the things the critics have overlooked in condemning our Bill and in telling us that they will tear it up is the very important, careful, methodical studies that have been done by recognized experts on what will happen if we do not have this trade agreement. There is no such thing as the status quo. We cannot stand still. We either go ahead with this agreement or we will be subjected to continued protectionist pressures from the United States. We saw all kinds of that before we negotiated and concluded this agreement, and there is no reason to suspect that if we do not sign this agreement, those pressures will not continue. One only need look at the continuing trade deficit in the United States to realize that those pressures will become unbearable on an administration and will reflect themselves on protectionist measures against Canada. The moment that happens, Canada will lose jobs. We cannot allow that to happen. We care about jobs. The other two Parties obviously do not care about jobs. That is why we are the Government and they are not.

Mr. Darling: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Minister's comments. He pointed out how important this agreement was to northern Ontario and listed the effects it would have on the forestry and mining sectors. I wonder what his comments would be with respect to the second most important industry in Canada today, one which has a great effect on northern Ontario and down into my own riding as well, and that is the tourist industry. I am of the impression that this free trade agreement will greatly enhance the tourist industry and will make it much more viable and even better than it is.

We are all aware, and I know the Minister is as well, that the one province that will gain the most from this, the Province of Ontario, is one of the two provinces opposed to it. Yet, if my memory serves me correctly, the Ontario Government sent trade and industry people to Europe and to the Pacific Rim to point out that it would be to their advantage to come to Ontario to establish industries because they would then have a springboard to the great American market of 250 million people. If that isn't talking out of both sides of their mouth at the same time, I would like to know what is. I would appreciate the Minister's comments on that.

One very prominent speaker, who I will admit was in favour of the free trade agreement, said that prior to the last Ontario general election the campaign was sort of blah and no one was excited. The back-room boys told Premier Peterson that he should get on to something really sexy which the people would jump for, and that was free trade. He was rather hesitant at the time so they said: "You don't have to worry, Mr. Premier; go out against free trade because there is no way in God's green earth that the free trade agreement will ever come to pass". As a result, that is what the Ontario Government did.

I think Premier Peterson is finding out that that is backfiring now because a lot of his friends and those who helped him to be elected are putting pressure on him to take it easy as far as the free trade agreement is concerned. I would appreciate the Minister's comments on that.

Mr. Kelleher: Madam Speaker, I certainly agree with the Hon. Member and, if I did not, he would certainly tell me about it. However, in this particular case he is absolutely correct. How a province which exports 90 per cent of its exports to one country could possibly be opposed to a trade agreement with that country, when this agreement is going to enhance trade and secure jobs for that province, is beyond me.

The Province of Ontario, more than any other province, knows the benefits of free trade because some 20 years ago we negotiated the Auto Pact which, in effect, is a free trade agreement. No other province in this country benefits more from the Auto Pact than the Province of Ontario and, I may say, the riding of the Leader of the NDP. General Motors has invested $2 billion in that riding because of the Auto Pact which has created thousands of jobs there. I have not yet heard the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) stand up in this House and condemn that agreement.

I cannot understand why the Province of Ontario or the opposition Parties are against an agreement which is going to provide more secure jobs for the people of not only Ontario but the whole country. That is beyond me.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in the third reading debate on Bill C-130 which implements the Canada-U.S Free Trade Agreement. I cannot stress enough the importance of this debate and of this Bill as we lead up to the next election, because the trade agreement and Bill C-130 which implements it foreclose on the possibilities for the Canada of the future which we could create after the next election.

Bill C-130 is a radical Bill in the sense that it goes to the roots of what Canada is all about. It is my position and the position of the New Democratic Party that it is destroying those roots. It is radically evil in that way. The trade deal is the Government's way of recognizing new economic forces in our world, forces which we must all recognize. These forces strengthen the power of multinational corporations at the same time as diminishing the power of nation states.

Mr. McDermid: Why is small business supporting it?

Mr. Manly: Pay attention and you will find out. Bill C-130 not only recognizes these forces but submits to them and places Canada at their service. The rise of multinational corporations and the loss of sovereignty by nations come at the very time when ordinary people throughout many nations in our world were taking control of their own lives by assuming control of their nations. How frustrating this is. The struggle of hundreds of years by common people to control their own lives and their own economic destiny by having a form of social democracy is now being eroded by multinational corporations. Practices such as multiple sourcing, transfer pricing, and electronic currency flows mean that when these nations attempt to regulate their own economies multinational corporations can get around those regulations.

The first nations that felt these new forces were, of course, the developing nations. Immediately after fighting for and winning their independence from European colonial powers, they became the playthings of the new colonialism. Instead of their economies taking off as they had hoped, they found that their economies were faltering and falling along with commodity prices and that commodity prices were being manipulated by the large corporations which were buying and importing them.

This has now been compounded by the debt crisis. The debt crisis has meant that in many countries there is a virtual international monetary fund dictatorship as to the kinds of policies that these different countries can put into place. They have been forced to change the whole direction of their economies. They have been forced to open up their economies to much more rapid exploitation by foreign capital, and now it is our turn.

Canada, of course, has never been immune to external economic forces. Many of us are old enough to remember the depression of the 1930s. We all have some knowledge of the great period of unemployment we had in the seventies and eighties which continues in many parts of Canada today. We know what these economic forces are.

In the past Governments have traditionally taken action which would mitigate the worst effects of these economic forces. At the same time the new economic forces present in our world themselves limit the powers of countries to ease these effects.

In the face of these new forces and this new kind of reality, I want to consider what Canadians should be able to expect from their Government. What kind of policy should a Government bring in which would help Canadian people deal with the new forces facing them? What kind of policies should they be able to expect from a right wing Government such as we have today? What kind of policy should they be able to expect from a more progressive Government?

First, let us consider a right wing Government. The first thing they would expect is that the Government would not simply surrender to those forces but would maintain the national integrity of financial institutions such as banks, that it would maintain the national integrity of our economic institutions, that it would husband our resources and take care of our energy supply because these resources, and particularly energy, are the key to the future economy of our country. We would expect that even a right wing Government would ensure that the social programs which have been put in place over the past 60 years to protect Canadians in time of difficulty would be protected.

We would expect that even a right wing Government would keep the Canadian level of control and ownership in Canadian business rather than having that level disappear. We would expect that even a right wing Government would safeguard our culture, and we would expect that it would work in international fora for trade liberalization which also has safeguards to ensure that Canadian workers are not the victims of trade liberalization.

• (2130)

In other words, Canadians should have been able to expect the sort of programs that the Progressive Conservatives promised in the 1983 election but have not delivered. They are the kind of promises that were made when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) all indicated that they were opposed to any kind of free trade agreement with the United States, when they were running for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. McDermid: Not any kind.

Mr. Manly: They were opposed to a free trade agreement with the United States. When they were running for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party, they declared that such a policy was simplistic. They declared that the Canadian people had rejected it in 1911 and rejected it again in 1983. They appealed to the view that Canadians did not want their economy to be totally integrated with that of the United States. The appealed to the view that Canadians had a pride in their own ability to deal with economic problems. While they made those kinds of commitments, they have not followed through on them.

A good example is when the Government, in 1985, came out with its very brave Baie Comeau policy with respect to book publishing. It said that if a Canadian book publisher or distributor was taken over by a foreign firm, the foreign buyer would have to find a Canadian majority owner or control within two years. According to the trade agreement, now the Canadian Government has the onus put upon it to ensure that there will be fair market price paid to the foreign buyer of this Canadian outfit. It does not say how the fair market price will be determined. The Canadian Government becomes the buyer of last resort.

In other words, the whole pressure of enforcing that policy is put on the Canadian Government and the financial pressure is thrown back on the Canadian taxpayer. It is another way in which the Government has betrayed its commitment to protect Canadian culture.

These are some of the minimum expectations we would have even from a right wing Government if that Government cared about Canada. Given the reality of economic forces in Canada in 1988, what could we expect?

I believe that all the positive measures I mentioned earlier that we would expect from a decent Conservative Government we would also be able to expect from a more progressive left wing Government.

In addition, however, we should be able to expect that the Government would be involved in a democratic planning process for the rational use of our resources, our skills, and for the rational use of government power in order to stop the leaks in our economy, to promote a greater self-sufficiency, to prevent unnecessary outflows, and to develop our international strengths, to develop our competitive edge. That would mean the intelligent use of our natural resources of energy, our human skills, and potential. It would mean the intelligent and planned use of public ownership and a recognition of the value of the public sector in and of itself, not just for any incidental contribution it might be able to make to the bottom line of the GNP. In this way, the value of health, education, highways, sewage treatment, parks, recreation and cultural activities in and of themselves would be recognized.

We would expect such a Government to work internationally to raise the standards for working people all over the world, because we cannot live in a fortress Canada any more than we can live in a fortress North America. Perhaps one of the fundamental flaws of the trade agreement is the idea that we can somehow live in a fortress North America. We must work with people all over the world so that the living standards of all peoples are raised. In that regard, I think we must push very actively for a clause in GATT that would tie trade liberalization with the developing countries, to improvements in the wages and working conditions in those countries.

We would expect further development of regional programs and development of decent programs of income redistribution, fair taxes, skill training, and labour adjustment. These are the types of programs we should have been able to expect from the Government, given the kinds of forces that are facing the Canadian economy and economies all over the world. However, that is not what the Conservatives delivered. While they made some of these commitments in 1984, they have not followed through with them.

Instead, Canadians received what the Conservatives did not promise or campaign on. They got a trade agreement with the United States. Rather than trying to protect Canada and Canadians from the effect of economic forces, the Government surrendered to them. We saw that as we were leading up to the agreement, with the gutting of the national energy policy and the dismantling of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. We saw it with programs of privatization and deregulation, both of which meet the demands of large business and further help to harmonize our economy with that of the United States.

We saw it in the supine way in which the Government refused to fight the countervail tariff on softwood. First the Government said that it would fight. Then it said that it would negotiate. Then it was going to fight again. Then it was going to negotiate. It simply caved in and there was a 15 per cent tax imposed upon ourselves.

We saw the surrender with the Government's acceptance of the American pharmaceutical industry's demands that we get rid of the kind of legislation that allowed Canada to produce low cost generic drugs that were of great benefit to many Canadians. We saw the Government push through legislation that resulted in higher cost drugs for Canadians, so that it would be in closer harmony with what they have in the United States.

Mr. McDermid: With the world.

Mr. Manly: Instead of Canada leading the world in terms of a program which has decent drug prices, we are now right back, lock-step with the United States pharmaceutical corporations.

Mr. McDermid: Ask the European ones what they think of it too.

Mr. Manly: I am sure that drug companies in multinational corporations from Europe would be just as happy as American companies to fall in with this. There is no debate there.

We have seen the examples of surrender in the trade agreement. The Government did not get what it said it would achieve in the agreement. It did not get the assured access it was seeking. It did not get a proper dispute settlement mechanism.

However, it gave the United States interests a great deal of what they wanted. They got national treatment with respect to American ownership of Canadian banks. They got no review of United States takeovers of Canadian companies under $150 million, whereas there used to be a review of everything over $5 million. We lost the possibility of any kind of preferential pricing for energy or other resources, which meant that we lost a possibility for developing a competitive edge.

We gave Americans open access to the Canadian market for U.S. services. Free trade in services might also benefit some large Canadian corporations that want to do business in the United States. When I asked Donald Macdonald about this, he mentioned the Reichmann's as an example of one company that would profit. We have given the Americans access to Canadian resources. There is a period of five years to seven years when the United States and Canada will try to define what constitutes unfair subsidies. This will be a time when there will be further pressure on Canadian programs, for example, regional programs. In other words, we are buying a pig in a poke.

• (2140)

Mr. McDermid: The Americans have more than we have.

Mr. Manly: The Americans might have more than we have, but the American programs are protected by the clause that says that security interests are outside the scope of this agreement.

Mr. McDermid: Well, they do it in all kinds of ways. Don't lay that one on us.

Mr. Manly: In addition to what we have given directly, we know the agreement will have an effect on Canadian culture, although, on the one hand, it says that Canadian cultural industries are exempt. The second part of the agreement says that the Americans can take action of the equivalent commercial effect. In other words, what is given with part of the agreement is taken away with another part.

Mr. McDermid: Not true.

Mr. Manly: It is going to have an impact on our social programs, on our regional programs, because of tax harmonization. It is going to have an impact, and it already has, upon labour standards and wages. I have heard of workers who have been involved in wage negotiations and the argument they have been given is that if they want to protect their jobs, they had better have wages that are comparable to those in the United States.

We are going to be competing with a number of states down in the southern United States which have right to work laws and minimal wages as low as $1.35. We are going to see a result of this agreement in increased militarization of our economy because national security is exempt from the agreement. The failure of Canada to get exemptions from the U.S. omnibus trade Bill is something that has to be of great concern to all Members in this House. It was of concern to all members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade last fall. They said that if those exemptions were not given, we should not go ahead with this agreement.

I see my time is up. I simply want to emphasize the fact that the Canadian people, including some of those who support the agreement, but definitely those who oppose it, want to see an election on this issue before this agreement is implemented. Therefore, I would move:

> That the amendment be amended by deleting the period and adding the following therefor:
> "In the context of an imminent general election".

Mr. Nickerson: That is not in order. That is not acceptable, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Schellenberg): I will wait for the amendment to arrive at the chair before a ruling is made. Questions and comments.

Mr. McDermid: I have listened to my hon. friend, and have for some time, because he sat on the trade committee and listened to the testimony of those people who are going to be most directly involved with the trade agreement, the people who create employment and make the economy tick. It is not the politicians; it is the industries, the small businesses, and so on. I listened to this old canard the New Democratic Party keeps dragging out about the mass movement of industry to the southern United States because there are no minimum salaries down there and no trade unions. What I cannot understand is that if it is so great down there, why have the industries not moved already? Why have they not moved en masse to the southern United States? I will tell the Member why. The productivity is probably the worst anywhere in the United States. The workforce is not a well educated workforce and it is an unproductive workforce.

I watched three of the governors from those states the Member talks about on television the other day. They are almost bankrupt.

Ms. McDonald: And they have free trade. How can it be they are bankrupt with free trade?

Mr. McDermid: Listen to the Member. Her finest speech is from the seat of her pants. She is marvellous.

Ms. McDonald: Explain it. You say they are nearly bankrupt but they have free trade with the United States.

Mr. McDermid: States in the United States have free trade with the United States? How does that work?

Ms. McDonald: They have free trade with all of them already.

Mr. McDermid: What is the Member talking about? Of course they have free trade with United States. They are part of the United States. I am talking about the Governor of Louisiana, the Governor of Alabama, and the Governor of Mississippi, I believe, who were on television. They are having a terrible financial time. No one is investing down there. The evidence they gave is that no one is investing down there. Three of them are banding together to go to Japan to invite foreign investment into their states because they cannot get people to invest. They cannot get people to invest there because the productivity is no good.

Why is foreign investment coming to Canada? Why are they investing in Canada? It is because of a stable financial situation, a stable Government, and a good outlook for the future. They have now got themselves access to an American market.

Mr. Thacker: We are good workers.

Mr. McDermid: Exactly. That is the key to the whole thing. I heard my hon. friend knock Mr. Reichmann. Mr. Reichmann had a choice. He could have established himself in the United States but he established himself in Canada. Why? He said it was because Americans work hard but Canadians work smarter. We do. We have an excellent educated workforce. We have productivity that is growing. The Member should take a look at what our steel industry is doing. It can compete with any steel industry in the world. Our auto industry produces a car less expensive today than the United States. What I am saying is that the Hon. Member and all his socialist friends stand up here and knock the multinationals, yet he loves big Crown corporations; the bigger, the better. The NDP wants to nationalize the banks and another oil company, yet they knock big multinationals. It is all right if the Government of Canada owns them and the NDP runs them. They love that.

Mr. Thacker: Would they nationalize General Motors?

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member sat in committee, as I did. He was a very faithful attendee. He heard testimony from small and medium-sized and large business groups. He heard from service industries which are actively involved. He heard from groups which will be the most affected by the free trade agreement. With very, very few exceptions—and the exemptions, we found out, were a fringe group of perhaps three or four members—they supported the free trade agreement. Did any of that testimony not sink in to the Hon. Member?

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked a number of questions and made a number of comments. I would like to begin by replying to his comment about the southern United States. Certainly, it has been the experience of British Columbia where we have the large firm MacMillan Bloedel, which is now, of course, owned by its own multinational—

Mr. McDermid: Is it Canadian or American?

Mr. Manly: In the long run, it does not matter that much once one reaches that level. I think J. V. Klein, former head of MacMillan Bloedel, pointed out that capital did not have any kind of nationalism, that it was free to move across borders. That is exactly what it did. It took the profits that were earned by the people of British Columbia, with the resources of British Columbia, and moved down to Alabama. Other companies moved down to Georgia and so on, and they invested down there. We went through a very, very difficult time. Our forest industry is still going through a very difficult time because too many of those companies have a cut and cut out attitude with respect to our resources and because we have a Government that is stupid enough to let them get away with it.

• (2150)

As for the fact that the Governments down there are bankrupt, well, that is an inevitable tendency when there are Governments that take almost exactly the same attitude as this Government takes. That is to say: "We are open for business. We want to make a deal. We will make a deal. It does not matter what the price is". That price may be paid 20 years down the line. Down in Louisiana 20 or 30 years ago there were probably some politicians who thought at that time that they were pretty smart because of the deals they were able to make with some of these corporations. They have since found out that they were not getting anything in return. It was give, give, give, while the corporations could only take, take, take. That is exactly the attitude of this Government.

Mr. McDermid: Give us an example.

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Member wants to point to the fact that the Canadian Government has been stable in the last number of years, that we have an educated workforce, and that we have resources. These are certainly reasons why people will want to come and invest in Canada. However, the point is that once we enter into this trade agreement and we no longer have the kind of sovereign power to manage our own resources—

Mr. McDermid: Show me in the agreement where it is taken away.

Mr. Manly: We say that Americans will have national treatment when it comes to ownership of banks. They can come in here and purchase our companies. We cannot have preferential pricing any longer. All that sort of thing takes away our right to manage our own economy. When we lose those rights, we lose the rights to protect the interests of Canadians.

Mr. McDermid: That is not true.

Mr. Manly: Of course it is true. It is right here in the trade agreement. The Hon. Member knows that it is in the trade agreement.

Mr. McDermid: I do not know it is in there because it is not there.

Mr. Manly: We favour Crown corporations as opposed to multinationals. Certainly multinational corporations make some very important contributions to our world. I do not deny that. What I am trying to say, and what is important for the Hon. Member and everyone in Canada and in the world to recognize, is that multinationals are developing a power unto themselves, a power which is not subject to the sovereign control of the people.

What I am trying to emphasize is that after a period of several hundred years in which the people of our world—particularly the people that make up the bulk of the Canadian population—have struggled for popular control of their nations, they now find that getting control of their nations does not mean that much because effective control is being sapped from within by the power of multinational corporations which are not answerable to the people. If we are talking about Crown corporations, what we have to do is ensure that they are answerable. Certainly, members of my Party do not dispute the fact that too many Crown corporations have not been answerable to the people of Canada. There is no question about that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time allotted for questions and comments has now expired.

The Chair has been looking at the amendment to the amendment presented by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands. The Chair has some serious reservations about the relevancy of the amendment to the amendment already before the House. I would like to reserve my decision on this amendment until tomorrow and allow debate to continue at this time.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is now 9.55 p.m. Of course I do not know which Hon. Member the Chair now intends to recognize. However, may I make a suggestion which would perhaps be agreeable to all Hon. Members of the House? It is that instead of having a five-minute speech now, which no doubt would not be satisfactory to whoever it is the Chair wishes to recognize, that we call it ten o'clock.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, he is one of the fellows who wanted the debate. He is one of the fellows who complained. They now want to quit at five minutes to ten. I would ask the Chair to recognize my colleague, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Boudria: That was very nice. I was trying to help one of your guys, stupid.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is willing to call it ten o'clock but, obviously, there is not unanimous consent. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Crowfoot on debate.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) that this will be five delightful minutes. I am sure that he is quite pleased that he has had the opportunity both to be here tonight and, I am sure, to stay.

It is important that we take a look at the recent history of Canada's economic place in the world. The fact of the matter is that when our Party came to government in 1984 at that time as a nation in a position of rate of growth vis-à-vis the rest of the world Canada was in thirteenth place, just behind Luxembourg. Today, we are ahead of Japan in terms of rate of growth. We are ahead of the United States. We are ahead of West Germany. There is no one in front of us. We have a faster rate of growth than any other nation on earth.

Also important to recognize is that we have cut by almost 50 per cent the disastrous rate of unemployment which was facing our country at the time that we inherited the Government after 16 years of Liberal rule.

It is also a fact that we came into office on the promise of jobs. While we have created more than a million and a half jobs, we are not content. We are not satisfied. We know that we will not reach the potential of our nation, the potential of this land with the greatest base of resources of any nation on earth, until we have secured markets. It is physically impossible for 25 million people to be a market unto itself. We live in a world today in which, to quote the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), there are new economic forces taking place. While he did not say it, one of the most important of the economic forces taking place is trading blocks. That is why today, with 92 nations belonging to trading blocks, there are 14 trading blocks around the world.

Members of the Opposition say to the Canadian people: "Remain isolationist and alone with a little secure market of 25 million people. Pretend for some reason that you can be secure". We could not—and we never did—live with such an insular attitude about trade when the Japanese and the Americans, as well as the Europeans and other nations, are reaching into larger and larger markets of efficiency. It is because of that efficiency that they are able to penetrate into markets that otherwise would not be open to them. In 1984 when coming into government we were faced with a situation in which, while our economy was relatively good vis-à-vis the rest of the world, there were in the United States some 400 pieces of legislation in Washington or in state capitals aimed at protectionism, most of which would have had a negative impact on Canada.

Mr. Manly: How about the omnibus trade Bill?

Mr. Malone: What about the omnibus trade Bill, the Hon. Member asks. What he does not know is that we now have protection that allows us to penetrate a market. Without a trade agreement the only thing we would have left would be to take the whipping that the American protectionist attitude would have delivered to this country.

Here we are, then, a full 30 per cent of our wealth—

Mr. Boudria: Time!

Mr. Malone: —as individual citizens of our country is dependent on trade.

I see, Madam Speaker, that two things have happened. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has stayed and the day is over. May I call it ten o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There will be 15 minutes remaining in which the Hon. Member may complete his intervention tomorrow.

It being 10 p.m., pursuant to Order made Monday, June 20, 1988, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 10 p.m.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to seven petitions numbered as follows: 332-5252, 332-5254, 332-5279, 332-5280 and 332-5283 to 332-5285 inclusively.

JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL

PRESENTATION OF SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Sixth Report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General.

[English]

This 300-page report entitled Taking Responsibility is the first comprehensive review by a parliamentary committee of the important issues of sentencing, conditional release, and related aspects of the correctional system. If the key recommendations of the 97 recommendations submitted in our report are accepted, public confidence in the criminal justice system will, in the committee's view, be significantly improved.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-157, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Auditor General Act in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-319, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to have the opportunity to introduce an amendment to the Canada Elections Act relating to a more precise definition of election expenses. As Your Honour knows, when the Standing Committee of the House on Elections, Privileges and Procedures reported to the House on March 3 of this year it recommended:

> "—that the Act be amended as quickly as possible in those sections dealing with expenses so that it precisely defines those election expenses which should be the subject of spending controls and rebates."

We have attempted to get the Government to introduce an amendment to this effect over the last five months. We have not succeeded and as a result of that I have the specific proposal before me which was given to the Government four months ago. I believe it is the type of legislation we need to restore credibility to our Elections Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition signed by 97 constituents of my riding. Pursuant to Standing Order 106, the petition has been certified as correct in form and content.

My constituents petition the honourable House of Commons and Parliament assembled and say that at the present time there is no law in Canada protecting the rights of the unborn child from conception to birth. The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to formulate and legislate a law to protect life from conception, which law will seek to save the life of both mother and child. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever humbly pray.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions from residents of Winnipeg and towns and villages in Manitoba including Anola and Dugald. One set of petitioners say that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The other group says that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians the secure access to the U.S. market which was the key objective in these negotiations but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, August 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-130, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be not now read a third time but be referred back to the Legislative Committee for the purpose of reconsidering Clause 8."

Mr. Speaker: Last night the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) introduced a subamendment, an amendment to the amendment submitted by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). Just so that Hon. Members will understand, the amendment by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, moved on behalf of the Official Opposition, basically seeks to amend the free trade legislation by referring a certain clause in the Bill back to committee. That amendment, of course, is in order.

The amendment sought by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands was to add to the motion of the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry the further words "in the context of an imminent general election". Last night Madam Speaker indicated that she was having some difficulty as to whether that was procedurally in order.

I want to assure Hon. Members that I have given this careful consideration because of the great importance of this particular legislation and this debate.

However, I have given some indication that the Table is having some trouble with the amendment. I have to rule it out of order because, as least in my view, it does not do what a subamendment must do, that is, amend the main amendment, that is the amendment of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. It is more a general statement which may well be true when taken in the abstract, but I find that it is not procedurally acceptable.

I point out to Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party that debate will continue and there will, of course, be opportunity to put forward another amendment which, I am sure, after discussion with the Table, might be more acceptable to the Chair. I thank Hon. Members for their understanding.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when I commenced to debate at about five minutes to ten o'clock I had had the opportunity to mention that Canada's economy was growing, that our unemployment rates had been falling, and that while the successes of our achievements over the past four years have been remarkably excellent in that regard, our political Party was in no way content with the rate of growth that we have or with the level of unemployment. To enhance the economic opportunities for our country, it is clear to all who know the nature of the Canadian economy that our foreign exports have to be secured.

The truth of the matter is that one-third of the individual wealth of Canadians comes from trade. It is also a fact that almost 80 per cent of that which we export is exported to the United States. It is also a fact that our exports to that market were being significantly threatened by the fact that there was a mood of protectionism which was bubbling up into a legislative process which had, in the legislatures of the states and the capital in Washington, nearly 400 bills aimed at protectionism, the impact of which would be, in the largest majority, negative for Canada.

Those who are affiliated with the New Democratic Party, either here in the House of Commons or by their satellite influence such as Bob White, the Vice-President of the New Democratic Party, take the view that this agreement is somehow a threat to our sovereignty, our culture, and our identity. We must bear in mind that Canada became more of a sovereign nation since the war ended in 1945.

Our cultural programs and social programs, particularly pension plans, workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance and medical programs were there at a time when tariffs were coming down. If we consider 1944 as the peak of tariff protection between Canada and the United States, from 1944 to 1988, 75 per cent of tariffs have been reduced. How can the NDP argue that all these programs that we have developed while there has been a 75 per cent reduction in tariffs will disappear when the next 25 per cent are removed? It is simply illogical.

The NDP talk about these threats against our sovereignty. If they believe that some kind of trade relationship with another country will destroy our capacity to market our goods in the world, or preserve our identity as Canadians, then let them find such an example in the 92 other nations that also belong to trade blocs or trade arrangements. If they believe that such a threat exists, I dare members of the NDP to go to New Zealand and tell New Zealanders that they are just like an Aussie, that they behave and think like Australians because they have a trade relationship with them. If there is anything a New Zealander takes pride in, it is the fact that they are not Australian, even though they recognize the mutual advantage of trading with each other without the encumbrance of tariff barriers.

The Liberal Party has stated that it does not want free trade and would tear up the free trade agreement if it ever became the government. My favourite comment is that by Donald Macdonald, a former Liberal Cabinet Minister, who said of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner): "That comment that he would tear up the agreement said more about the strength of his wrists than the strength of his judgment".

Canadians should know that Liberals in this country are not opposed to a trade deal with the United States. It is only the Liberals elected in this House, under the leadership of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and his influence on the Senate, who are opposed. There are many Liberals who are on record as saying that this arrangement is important and good for Canada.

The Premier of Québec, Robert Bourassa, asked:

> "How could one seriously say that Canadian sovereignty is at stake when we want to protect Canadian markets in the United States?"

He went on to say:

> "What's at stake are dozens and dozens of billions of dollars of potential growth for Canada's resource-based economy. Canada is the only one of 24 developed countries which is not part of some sort of free trade area."

That is the opinion of Robert Bourassa, Premier of Québec. He is a Liberal who is certainly in favour of free trade.

Let me refer to Ray Curran, President of a Liberal constituency association. He said:

> "Liberal leader John Turner's position on free trade is totally irresponsible. You can't make agreements between two sovereign governments and then just rip them up."

Those are two Liberals who say this is a good agreement and the proper approach.

Milt Harris, a gentleman whom I know, is the former chairman of the Liberal National Executive Finance Committee. He is also president of a company called Harris Steel. He said:

> "I am going to vote for the Conservatives, and if they ask me, I will give them money."

That shows the depth of his feeling as a former Liberal about what he thinks of a Party that would speak out against a trade deal that secures not only our economy but jobs for Canadian young people and gives us a chance to expand and develop a nation that will allow us not only to penetrate North America but any market in the world. Milt Harris went on to say:

> "If we lose this agreement, it will have very dire consequences for Canada."

Let me now refer to a Member who is presently in the House of Commons and chose to leave the Liberal Party to sit as an independent. Don Johnston, a former Liberal Cabinet Minister, said:

> "Our position on free trade is indistinguishable from that of the NDP . . . why would anyone vote Liberal?"

Let me say that Don Johnston has it right. I asked that question 20 years ago: Why would anyone vote Liberal?

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that as an experienced Member of the House, the Hon. Member should know that to refer to a Member by name is not correct. It should be a reference to his constituency. I would expect that with his care for the rules of the House the Member would have followed that direction. I hope he would.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is correct. I am sure the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) will be more careful.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, if you check the record, I think you will find that the references I was making were references to quotes. Those are quite permissible in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), of course, being a new Member, would not know that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member should know that he cannot do indirectly what he cannot do directly. The Hon. Member should be more careful.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, there is a long list of Liberals who believe that the trade arrangement is an appropriate and good move for our country. They have come on the record because they think it is important that Canadians know that the little rump opposite, that is so desperate to try to gain its position on the Government side, is up against a case of folly and is acting to the disadvantage of the potential economic and job security of our nation.

Former Liberal Cabinet Minister, Marc Lalonde, said:

> "The liberalization of international trade is, more than ever, a top priority for Canada. The best strategy for Canada is to press ahead with a two-track approach: support for a new round of GATT negotiations and an early start of negotiations with the United States on a comprehensive free trade agreement."

That is what we have.

Another on that long list of Liberals who believe it is important that we secure our largest market in the world is Stuart Langford. He was not an executive assistant to Mackenzie King, Lester Pearson or Pierre Trudeau, he was a former executive assistant to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Stuart Langford said:

> "Turner's position on free trade was founded not on conviction but on perceived opportunity. His "handlers" convinced him that he had to be more aggressive than Ed Broadbent. Turner bought the idea and as a result made the stupid threat to "tear up the agreement" should he win the next election. Turner's tough talk won him three minutes of coverage on television news but it destroyed three years of work in the west."

That is another person associated with the Official Opposition and who has worked with the Party for years but takes exception in the extreme to the position the Liberals are taking. It is clear to many that jobs and economic opportunities exist if we secure a trading relationship with our major trading partner, the United States of America.

• (1130)

Ron Longstaffe, a Vancouver businessman and Liberal fund raiser stated:

> "It seems very unusual to elect a Member from Vancouver—Quadra to have him go to Ontario and speak out against free trade."

Ron Longstaffe, a Liberal fund raiser, does not buy this notion. Donald Macdonald, a former Liberal Cabinet Minister, called the free trade agreement a considerable achievement. He saw it in terms of a great treaty that was struck between our two countries. Noting that the New Democratic Party Leader, the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), made the same promise, he said:

> Can you imagine Mr. Broadbent going down to Washington and saying "Mr. President, I just tore up our trade agreement"? He'd just say: "That's a coincidence, Mr. Broadbent, we just tore up the Auto Pact, too". What would the Member for Oshawa say then?

The list goes on. Paul Martin is a candidate for the Liberals in the next election. He says we have to be realistic and ripping it up is not a viable alternative. The same can be said for Premier Frank McKenna, the Premier of New Brunswick, or Gerald Regan, the former Premier of Nova Scotia and former Minister for International Trade.

I simply say, Madam Speaker, that the point has been made. Mr. Regan said:

> "Some people say that the pressure to compete with the U.S. under a free trade system will force us to dismantle our social programs . . . The answer, of course, is that it will not. Such claims are unmitigated nonsense and scare tactics . . . "

Those are the words uttered by a Liberal Cabinet Minister in the Government just previous to ours. He says that to talk about the dismantling of our social programs because of the trade agreement is unmitigated nonsense and scare tactics.

The first thing we all have to recognize in this debate about trade is the importance of trade to Canada. It comprises one-third of our wealth. One-third of everything we have comes from trade. It is also important to recognize that 80 per cent of our exports go to the United States. That is where it goes today.

In the beginning of this century we traded mostly with north European countries, particularly Great Britain. In the evolution of time, Britain has gone into the European Common Market. We are almost shut out from being able to sell to Great Britain. The amount we sell there is very minimal. We sell most of our export to the United States, nearly 80 per cent, yet we are faced with legislation upon legislation which are putting up walls and barriers, tariffs and non-tariff duties that will not allow Canadians to penetrate the U.S. market in a secure way. So we need an agreement not to dismantle all of the rules of trade, but to put rules of trade there, so there will be fairness and so that we can continue to export to a larger market and, because of that larger market, have the capacity, excellence and skills to penetrate markets in all parts of the world.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have just a few comments to make to which the Hon. Member perhaps could respond. He used a familiar argument, that tariffs have come down between 1944 and 1988, and this has not posed a threat to our culture or to a variety of other things that opponents of the free trade agreement now claim will be threatened. He posed the rhetorical question: Why should these things be any more threatened by the elimination of the remaining tariffs than they were threatened by the elimination of 80 per cent of the tariffs that have been eliminated since 1944? I hope I have made the argument correctly on behalf of the Hon. Member.

I think we have an obligation to understand what the various sides are saying. What has been wrong with this debate is that sometimes deliberately, and we have to assume sometimes not deliberately, people have caricatured what the other side has had to say. The New Democratic Party has never maintained that it is the elimination of tariffs that is the threat to our culture or sovereignty. That is not a claim we have ever made, but we have made a claim about the effects of the entire agreement, which I hope the Hon. Member will admit is more than simply the elimination of tariffs.

If all we had before us was the elimination of tariffs, then we would have quite a different agreement. The fact is, in order to get the elimination of those remaining tariffs, which the Government views as desirable, and in order to get the dispute settlement mechanism, which the Government views as desirable, but which was not what the Government set out to get by the admission of even some supporters of the agreement, such as the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), whom the Member just quoted, the Government proceeded to arrive at an agreement on a number of other matters which are quite separate from the traditional question of the value of eliminating tariffs, on questions having to do with foreign investment, energy, services and the cultural industries, and so on. All these were separate questions and were dealt with separately and were Canada's own business at the time of the coming down of the tariffs to which the Hon. Member referred.

Either the Member misunderstands our position or he has misrepresented it. The fact is that the claim with respect to the elimination of tariffs having all these effects is not a claim the NDP has ever made. It is a claim we make on the basis of the whole agreement. I see the Member is being coached by the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Darling: And a good coach too.

Mr. Blaikie: I would have hoped the Member was conversant with the agreement and did not need to be coached by the Parliamentary Secretary. The Member mentioned the former Liberal Cabinet Minister, Mr. Macdonald, who was in charge of the Royal Commission on Economic Development, as a supporter of the agreement, but it also remains the case, for instance, that the Royal Commission headed by Mr. Macdonald did not even look at the question of services. Yet that is something we have in this agreement, and which was not recommended.

There are a lot of things I think should at least be acknowledged. If the Member wants to criticize our position, we have an obligation to respond. There is enough to legitimately disagree about. We do not have to invent things to disagree about. We have lots to disagree about. The claim the Member says we have made about tariffs is a claim we have not made.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is quite right. We have enough we can disagree about without inventing things. That is why I did not invent anything. That is why it is important to point out the very elements of fear that the NDP and Liberals are now raising, and particularly I say that to the NDP because it was that Party which used exactly the same arguments some 23 or 24 years ago when it opposed the Auto Pact. The NDP told us all of the same things that would happen. The Auto Pact was going to somehow threaten Canada. Today we export two cars for every one we consume in Canada. The Auto Pact has put one-half a trillion dollars investment into southern Ontario in the 23 years of its existence. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill said: "You missed the point. It is not just about tariffs. It is about something beyond that". He is right. It also deals with the non-tariff barriers.

Then he made a very specific point, the one which I want to come to now. He said: "It deals with things like services". It is clear to this House, to Canadians and to all who have studied this issue that members of the New Democratic Party are saying: "We are not going to have anything to do with this deal. We are going to stick with GATT. That is our model".

The Uruguay Round on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is studying services. It is looking at the whole element of bringing barriers to services between countries down. Thus what the Hon. Member is saying is only inconsistent within himself. The New Democratic Party's view is to favour the GATT relationships around the world. GATT is the very agency that at this time is studying the removal of barriers on services, not between two countries on a bilateral basis but between many countries on a multilateral basis.

I say to members of the NDP: You cannot have it all ways. That Party is basically trying to proclaim that this agreement fits all the old arguments that its Members used more than 20 years ago when they opposed the Auto Pact, as well as when they opposed the Auto Pact amendments in the early 1970s. When this agreement was coming forward, they suddenly stood up in unison as a Party and with one arm straight in the air said: "Don't you dare touch the Auto Pact". They now use the same elements of argument to try to make Canadians believe that this relationship that will secure our markets, our economy and our jobs has the same evils that they imagined some 20 years ago. They were wrong then and they are wrong today.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) if he is aware of who was the biggest opponent, the harshest critic of the Auto Pact in the House of Commons in 1965. I wonder if he knows that the harshest critic, the one with the most flowing rhetoric possible was none other than the Leader of the Conservative Party, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, who attacked the Auto Pact day after day in the House of Commons.

On the contrary, with respect to our Party, our Party put its position with respect to the Auto Pact in terms of two things. First, we said that there should be commitments with respect to investment in the future and there should be commitments in the form of letters which the companies actually give to the Government as commitments. Second, we said that if there is to be a trade change like this, there has to be in place an assistance program for workers who will be affected, a lesson which the Conservatives have still not learned. That is why the Transitional Assistance Benefits Program was brought in. As soon as it was in place and as soon as the commitments to investment in the country were in place, as the Hon. Member should know, both the New Democratic Party and the labour unions involved, as well as the parts producers involved, became supporters of an agreement which, because it had safeguards, because it had support for workers who were affected, was at that stage a fair agreement, unlike this agreement.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, if there is anything that I have heard in what the Hon. Member has just asked in the way of a question that would give me reason to suggest that there is a significant difference between us and how we see Canada, it is his requirement that there be commitments and safeguards.

Last night, when I was having a bite to eat, I wrote out on my napkin, a very fast scratching, the areas in which I believe Canada is the best in the world—certainly better than the United States. We produce better beef. Americans will not like to hear that but we do. We also do it cheaper. We produce better pork in Canada. We have a better labour force in Canada. We are far better in telecommunications and telecommunications research. We have by far better oil field technology, which is why producers in the North Sea and the Middle East come to Calgary and not to Houston.

While I could go on with this list I see that Madam Speaker is encouraging me to hurry. Let me just say that there are some other areas in which we are the best in the world. We do not need safeguards and guarantees. We need markets. Give us the markets and Canada will show the world that we are people who can produce and create jobs and wealth because we do not need safeguards. We need opportunity. That is what this agreement with the United States is all about.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. However, the period for questions and comments has now expired.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe Your Honour was in the chair yesterday when a matter raised by the Parliamentary Secretary came up with respect to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and his use of unparliamentary language concerning the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). There was reference to the "blues". I would ask Your Honour to look at page 18974 of Hansard where, about half way down the page, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston is reported clearly to have used unparliamentary language. The Hon. Member is not in the House. However, I would ask the Chair to make a direction that the remark either be struck from the record or that the Hon. Member be asked to withdraw it when he is in the House.

I do not know if Your Honour has a copy of Hansard but it is clearly indicated that he used an unparliamentary word.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair will have a look at Hansard, which I have not had time to do yet today. If there is any language which needs to be struck out or withdrawn, I am sure that the Hon. Member mentioned by the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) will see what is reported in Hansard, do the honourable thing and withdraw later today.

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Davenport.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, the concluding words of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) in his last intervention were brave words. They would be credible if we had achieved in Canada a ready common market across our own nation. If that were so we could believe his call to go out to conquer the world, so to speak. However, we have not even achieved that. Therefore, it seems to me that what he is really putting forward is just a little bit more of the same Progressive Conservative rhetoric.

In this debate it seems that what the Conservatives have chosen to do is to ignore the fact that the issue of trade involves more than just trade. Of equal importance is the fact that they have neglected the preoccupation among Canadians that is now emerging as a result of the measurements that we obtain from polls, namely, that what we have been debating here yesterday, today and in the preceding weeks is really a debate on values. What is taking place this morning on the floor of the House of Commons, and tomorrow when we vote, is a comparison on a set of values as they have driven us so far, and as they will determine the future of our nation, and the behaviour of Canadians.

Why do I say that it is more than trade? Why do I say that this debate reaches an importance of the size and with the implications and impact of the Meech Lake debate? It is because in the long term the implications are immense, far reaching, and well beyond trade. What we are debating here is economic union in North America. That is the substance of this deal, which has been given the wrong title. It is an economic union in North America that is being proposed here, not on January 1, 1989, perhaps not in the next five years, but in the long term. That is what it is. The Government should at least have the decency to tell Canadians that, and Canadians may then want to decide if that is what they want. However, it has to be put on the table, so to speak.

It does not stop with trade, because this has been the experience in other continents where similar measures have been implemented, for example, in the case of the European Common Market. Eventually it touches on competition laws, consumer regulations, standards and the setting of standards, and this has profound implications on the environment. It touches on jobs, the jobs that will disappear, the jobs that will be enhanced, and the policies that have to be put into place in order to provide social shock absorbers to manage the transition.

There are certain things that, on the Canadian side of the border, cannot be changed and have to be dealt with in a real manner. Those are questions related to climate, wages, and volumes. Other speakers have dealt with those questions. On the question of volume, I remember very clearly a couple of weeks ago the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) stated that south of the border the production line could be extended on a Tuesday night and enough could be produced to satisfy the needs of the Canadian market, because they have that capacity. She put it very well and very effectively. On the question of climate, our growing season is what it is. We can only produce so much between spring and fall, compared to an economy where the climate permits production of much more. Therefore, there is the capacity for producers south of the border to do much better, unless we protect our own horticultural producers, as they have told us on a number of occasions. That is a reality from which we cannot hide.

On the question of wages, again we have developed a standard of living, and social security systems. We have produced something we are very proud of, namely, our hospital and medicare systems, and our minimum wages. They do not exist in the southern part of the United States. Therefore, we will not be able to deal with that type of competition effectively, no matter how brave the exhortations might be of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot, or the Parliamentary Secretary. Those exhortations will not help in the face of such a reality.

Mr. McDermid: How do we compete with them now, for heaven's sake?

Mr. Caccia: Those who claim that the European Common Market experience is one that we should imitate, as we were encouraged to do by Mrs. Thatcher when she spoke in this Chamber, do not realize that, when it comes to negotiations at the European Common Market table, the Brits are very reluctant to go any further into an agreement for further trade facilitations. The reasons why the British can retain their sovereignty, values and identity, is because there is a channel between them and the rest of the continent, a different language, and a different history over the last 10 centuries.

That brings me to the second theme that is central in this discussion. In a short manner, I will describe it as the battle of values. On the one hand there is the dollar sign, the market-place, versus quality of life. On the one hand there is the dollar sign, and what we want to be, our identity. On the one hand there is the dollar sign versus our sense of sovereignty and decision-making powers. On the one hand there is the dollar sign, and on the other hand there are the intangible values which would take a much longer time to elaborate on which make Canada what it is, and what makes a Canadian. In this battle of values there is a heavy emphasis on the one hand on the dollar, and on the other hand on intangible values of profound importance that have to be dealt with and put forward. This is why we are so keen to have an election called. We want to see this matter put to the people of Canada.

In this battle of values it is interesting to note that on the one hand editorialists—except for The Toronto Star—but most editorialists, most multinationalists, and probably most professionals are supporting the deal. In other words, those who are safe and secure and who can draw a financial benefit from this measure.

Mr. McDermid: Do not take any risks.

Mr. Caccia: I do not blame them. It is a question of values, and the Parliamentary Secretary is fully entitled to support them. However, on the other side of the population I sense that a growing number of farmers, particularly horticulturalists, and grape growers have already assessed what it will do to them. There is a growing number of food processors, and unions, because they represent the workers who will be affected in those factories whose future is at stake, which includes those in the large urban centres where shoes, textiles, and clothing are produced, and also a growing number of small businesses. There are also those, and I suspect that this number is substantial, who honestly believe that trade is not everything in life, that we can be driven and motivated by other values, not only the importance of the market-place and the size of a pay cheque.

On this side of the House others have put forward extremely well the alternative position. Because of time limitation I will only say that what we stand for, and what we do recognize, and what we recognized long before this so-called Progressive Conservative Party came into power, is the importance of international trade and that we must improve trade relations. We are fully on the same wavelength.

• (1200)

Where we disagree profoundly is how we do it. Do we do it within the confines of North America or do we do it world-wide? Do we want to improve, therefore, the trade agreements that affect 100 nations and be part of a large group of nations negotiating improvements as an alternative to a negotiation whereby, on a one-to-one basis, we negotiate with a partner that is 10 times larger and more powerful than us? That is where we profoundly disagree.

An Hon. Member: We are doing both.

Mr. Caccia: You are not doing both, because yesterday, in his speech, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) had to admit, at page 18946 of Hansard, that we have to get 95 other countries to agree. Well, they have not agreed, and on top of that we are implementing this measure on January 1, 1989, without waiting for the agreement and the concurrence of the international community. What a way of proceeding.

What we stand for is proceeding within and with the international community. We want to do it that way because, as I mentioned, the relation of forces in this type of trade deal as proposed by the Government puts us at a disadvantage. The American economy is 10 times larger than ours. When you hear talk about harmonization of laws or harmonization of standards, as in the case of pesticides, to quote a minute example, where we would be working toward equivalent guidelines, the bigger will not make an effort to adjust and harmonize with the smaller. That simply does not happen. It is the smaller that has to adjust and harmonize with the bigger. We do not want to see that happening, particularly when it comes to harmonization, as I mentioned earlier, of the environmental standards and regulations and laws, particularly incentives that might be given to industries in order to clean up their act, which could be interpreted as incentives to industry itself to produce more and better in competition with American firms. Again, that is a big item.

We want to retain our sovereignty and economic independence and not be isolated within the North American geography. This is why we think we have enormous arguments to put forward as an alternative approach to Canadians if an election is called. We will ask Canadians to judge. We will ask Canadians to make a choice in the full knowledge of what is at stake here. The values that I and many others have spoken about is an important factor which is not stressed often enough, that this agreement, this Bill, is more than just trade in the long term. It will affect our energy and our security. We are giving up long-term security, no matter how funny the Member for Crowfoot finds this.

Mr. Malone: Ridiculous.

Mr. Caccia: There is more at stake than just trade, because we will give up our political decision-making powers. We will also be giving up the edge that we have on energy by virtue of the fact that we will have to give up the two energy pricing policies that we have used, and quite successfully for very good reasons.

In the process, we will be less like us and more like them, as John Trent put it so well in a speech at the University of Trent, when he said:

> "We have declared it is not just what is on the table that counts but the probable after-effects of a trade deal, when Canadian corporations pressure the Government to lower corporate taxes, to lower social benefits and public health payments, and minimum salaries and union rights so that they can compete on a level playing field with the American counterparts."

This is what John Trent said on November 3, 1987, when he appeared before the committee.

What is this level playing field that has been bandied around so cleverly by several people, by several speakers, during this debate? The question being asked is: "A level playing field or an empty field" by a well known columnist, Leonard Shifrin, who wrote in the Toronto Star last October:

> "On day one of a free-trade arrangement, certainly no objections would be registered to Canada's pension programs, its medicare system, maternity benefits, or whatever. Even years down the road, no objections should be expected—as long as Canadian companies are being beaten in the marketplace. It will be only if we are winning that our "trade distorting" social practices will be diagnosed as the reason . . . One by one the measures that have defined our national community would be stripped bare as Canada's playing field was emptied of the offending provisions and made level with the U.S. plain . . . "

This is put well and effectively. To add to those two analyses, as I have said, by a university academician and a writer and columnist, you have the input by Margaret Atwood, which I thought was so punchy, so well put, when she appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade last September. It may not have been read in detail, as the Parliamentary Secretary says. He may be quite right. You do not have to read it unless you are the Minister for International Trade responsible for negotiating it. The average Canadian does not have to read it in detail. They can catch the sense and the direction and the values at stake here in order to express a comment. You do not have to know it all in detail. That is the responsibility of the Minister.

Margaret Atwood wrote, and I will conclude on that:

> "Canadian people, like people everywhere, have values other than money that are important to them. Their fears of losing these values are real fears, by which I mean that they are truly held and must be addressed. It is no use claiming that there is some mysterious gene of Canadianness welded into us at conception that will guarantee the retention of these values, even if all the social structures, educational underpinnings, and cultural manifestations of them disappear. What will be done, if anything, to give these values a fighting chance of surviving?
> . . . It is no use saying that these are emotional arguments as if that disqualifies them.
> Almost all of the arguments heard so far in this debate have been emotional arguments. Fear is an emotion, yes, and love of country is an emotion; but greed is an emotion too."

That is how Margaret Atwood concluded her remarks.

• (1210)

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member not agree with two statements that I will now put on the record? First:

> "The Canadian nation is not a weak and fragile plant doomed to disappearance merely because we trade more freely and securely with our American neighbour. Free trade will reduce regional divisions and enhance Canadian confidence."

The second statement is:

> "We cannot choose to cut back significantly our trading integration with the United States without risking severe economic dislocation, cessation of economic growth, and a resultant political instability. In the longer term, successful competition in a North American context will lead to a greater ability to compete abroad and diversify our markets."

Those two comments came from a commission which the Hon. Member's Government set up back when he was a Minister. They are from the Macdonald Commission on the Economy of Canada Report which highly recommended that we get into the trade negotiations with the United States. Very clear and concise statements were in the report on Canada's economy over a three-year period. If the Hon. Member does not agree with those statements, can he tell me why?

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for having revealed the source of the statements, otherwise I would not have recognized them.

Mr. Kempling: He would not have read that either.

Mr. Caccia: Those statements remind me of other parts in the same report which I would like to quote in reply to the Parliamentary Secretary because I find them rather peculiar, to say the least, when the same Macdonald Commission reported in an attempt to forecast what would happen:

> "Until these barriers are gone—"

And by these barriers the reference is made to trade barriers of course,

> "—the exhilaration that can come from a true sense of maturity will remain beyond our nation's reach."

That statement is in the same league as the ones which the Parliamentary Secretary quoted. It is rhetoric of some sort. That was the reason the Government was spooked by fear of U.S. retaliation, went to Washington, asked for access to the U.S. market and did not get it. Not only that, but the Government provoked a round of legislative initiatives, including the U.S. omnibus bill, which has made the situation for Canada tougher than it was before.

On the question of maturity and exhilaration, it is interesting and worth while to put on record what Mavor Moore wrote over the weekend as reported in The Globe and Mail. He analysed the situation so beautifully it would be a pity to miss it. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary can understand and appreciate the refinement of Mavor Moore's thought. He wrote:

> "Maturity may or may not be assisted by free trade; history gives no assurance either way. The one sure key to maturity is knowing who you are, and universal experience advises us not to lose it inadvertently, or to sell it at any price."

My answer to the Parliamentary Secretary is that I do not want to sell it at any price, nor would I like to see Canada's independence sold at any price—

Mr. McDermid: It was not.

Mr. Caccia: —nor Canada's identity sold at any price.

Mr. McDermid: It was not.

Mr. Caccia: —nor Canada's sovereignty sold at any price.

Mr. McDermid: It was not.

Mr. Caccia: Therefore, for all these reasons we will put to the Canadian people the importance of defeating this Government in order to defeat this measure.

Mr. Hockin: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question that pertains to the thrust of his remarks, particularly his comments about independence and sovereignty.

Does the Hon. Member not understand that the American ability to sideswipe Canada when the Americans take trade remedy actions against other countries has been removed through this agreement? We now have protected ourselves against sideswipes.

Second, does the Hon. Member not agree that the binational panel which deals with trade remedies puts us in a situation of equality with the superpower? Does the Hon. Member not agree, with the United States being ten times bigger than Canada, that right now when we have a dispute we have to go cap in hand and ask the Americans to be nice to us or fight in their court system? Does the Hon. Member not agree that the binational panel institutionalizes equality for Canada with the United States and that this is an enormous step forward for sovereignty?

Finally, all the studies indicate that securing access to and having liberalized trade with the United States will produce more jobs and more wealth for Canada. Does that not allow us to fund our cultural and other groups that help us to promote our culture in the sense of our cultural well-being?

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Minister of State for whom I have the highest regard, if what he said were correct, why was it necessary yesterday morning in this House for the Minister for International Trade to say, as reported at page 18946 of Hansard the following:

> "We want to achieve a clear set of rules for countervail that prevents the kind of politicized decision-making we saw in the U.S. in the softwood lumber case."

That is still to be achieved. It is not yet in the bag. That is not yet resolved. We have not achieved equality with the superpower in this. We still have to obtain it. Both of us have seven years to develop the question of resolving our own disputes and defining the question of subsidies. Subsidy has been left in limbo. I am sorry for the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) because he is making a statement of hopeful anticipation, perhaps, which even his own colleague, the Minister for International Trade was prompted yesterday to put in terms of things still to happen, not that have happened, otherwise the Minister for International Trade would not have gone on by saying:

> If the Americans suggest, sometime in the next five to seven years, some kind of distorted approach to those issues, we will simply say no. We will not agree to their suggestions. That is all we have to do, just say no.

What will happen when we say no to the future seven years from now? Will we pull out of the deal after having put into motion phenomenal machinery of integration of the two systems and harmonization of regulations? That will be pretty hard to do at that late stage. There are many unresolved questions, Madam Speaker, otherwise the Minister for International Trade yesterday would not have raised them himself in his own speech.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows there is a six-month termination period for the agreement. It is not a question that we cannot get out of very quickly. Does the Hon. Member not realize that this agreement enshrines the Auto Pact to the extent that if one wants to terminate the Auto Pact, which has been so important to the Member's province—we are all delighted about that—the entire international trade agreement will have to be cancelled? As the Hon. Member knows right now support for the Auto Pact in Congress is getting less and less. I put it to the Member that a great many families in his province will have more security of employment in the auto and parts sector from this agreement than they will if the agreement does not go ahead. I would appreciate his comments.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, that is a very thoughtful question. The Hon. Member raises it in his fine style for which I have the greatest admiration. I have to remind him that the Auto Pact was not in question in prompting this Government to run to Washington to obtain a trade deal of any sort. The Auto Pact is established. It is a sectoral trade agreement as the Hon. Member certainly knows. It was not in question so there was nothing endangering the future functioning of that measure which, by the way, was a fine Liberal initiative in the 1960s.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am really delighted, in fact I feel privileged to have the opportunity to speak on the final day of this historic debate on a matter of such great import to our nation. I am proud to be part of a government led by a Prime Minister who had the vision and courage to engage in these historic negotiations almost three years ago in the autumn of 1985 in order to secure for Canadians a long-term legacy which far exceeds that of mere access to U.S. markets and the economic benefits that will flow therefrom.

This free trade agreement represents an opportunity for Canada to step into the 21st century. It offers Canadians a chance to ask themselves whether we are grown up enough, whether we are self-confident enough now to take advantage of world markets. Are we ready to not merely rely on our natural resources and continue as so-called hewers of wood and drawers of water, but to turn those natural resources and our human resources to a much greater economic and social advantage for all future generations of Canadians. To turn those resources to our advantage, we will draw heavily on the products of our ingenuity, the talents of our young people, and show how proud we are as a strong and confident nation. We will display that message to the world as we engage competitively in world markets.

What we are dealing with here in the final hours of this debate is a basic choice between those rooted in fear, those who want to live in the past and who will invent every kind of phoney excuse to obstruct this great national objective, and those who project the confidence and enthusiasm our young people feel for the evolving world of technology, the needs of the developing world, and the reality that it will become a major force in the world economy in future.

Mr. Langdon: Tell us about the fish.

Mr. Siddon: I will get to fish momentarily. First I want to say how proud I am of the initiative the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took in creating this opportunity for Canadians. It grew out of this Government's commitment to expand our horizons, expand our productivity, expand our use of technology in turning our natural resources into a great future for our children.

As you know, the Macdonald Commission did extensive analysis of this issue, consulted widely with Canadians over two years, and recommended that we proceed in this direction. Over the three years of negotiations which culminated early last October with an initial agreement, the leaders of Canadian industry, business, trade unions, and all of the important groups in Canadian society, played a role and contributed to the evolution of this historic agreement. The heart and soul of this agreement, what it is all about, is competitiveness in world markets. Rather than continuing to shelter and isolate our industries, we will offer them the great opportunity of access to a much larger market. As a result, as the developing world becomes more prosperous and at the same time more dependent on our knowledge and our ability to trade, it will improve our ability to be price competitive in the international marketplace.

If we cannot sell our products, whether it be a natural resource or high technology, an intellectual product or professional service, on a price competitive basis in the largest economy available and open to Canada, that is the economy of the U.S., we will never sell those things in any other part of the world. Those who say that we can somehow ignore our major trading partner and not seek to gain increased and more secure access to that market are living in the 1800s. If we cannot compete, if our industries cannot produce products at a competitive price, which means at the same price or more cheaply than American industry, we can never sell to the Far East, the European Community or Australia.

We have to learn to be internationally competitive. That will create a great opportunity for Canada because, unlike the U.S. whose resource base is running down, unlike countries like Japan, Israel and Taiwan which have very few natural resources, we have all the resources in the world, to use a figure of speech. We have the young, well educated, talented people we need. We have the productive energy of a well educated, well trained work force in all sectors. The only thing lacking is the ability to meet the challenge of being price competitive in international markets. Those who advocate that we take another course, forgetting the U.S. market which takes 78 per cent of our exports, but rather turning to the Far East or Europe or elsewhere, have to realize that if it is tough to compete in the U.S., it is going to be much tougher competing against the Far East or the European Community which has its own free trade agreement.

Those who are so pessimistic, those Canadians who resist this initiative are essentially telling other Canadians that we have another option. We can import the products of countries which use sweat shop labour or which pay their workers 50 cents or less an hour. That is their preferred course of action. Yet they are the very same people who over the years insisted that we use embargoes and quotas to prevent the import of products from the developing world and those other countries which can produce much more cheaply than we can.

The fundamental point here is how do we become more competitive and gain more access to the U.S. market in order to learn how to compete in the world. There is no country anywhere else in the world that has a greater opportunity than Canada and a greater quantity of resources and educational institutions and human creative talent than Canada has to take advantage of this opportunity.

If we are to be competitive, we have to eliminate tariffs which protect our industry and the other tariffs which deny us access on a competitive basis to the American market. That is why the second most important ingredient of this agreement is to eliminate tariffs at a much faster rate than that projected under the schedule laid out under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. We are therefore committed in this agreement to removing all tariffs on trade and exchanges between Canada and the U.S. at the end of 10 years from the beginning of the agreement. The point is simply that tariffs are taxes on our producers. Whether those be tariffs and taxes against the imported products that go into our manufacturing base or the products our consumers inevitably bring in in any event, or whether they are tariffs against our own manufacturing sector imposed by American interests to shelter their industry from ours, those tariffs, which are taxes, are regressive.

It is a fact of history that the tariffs erected by the American industrial sectors against our manufactured products have been higher and higher in relation to the greater degree of processing involved in the resources we export to the United States. The Opposition has always appealed to government, as I did when I was a Member on the other side of the House, to get more value out of our natural resources and end the dependency of being hewers of wood and drawers of water and shipping out all our resources.

It is, therefore, very hypocritical and inexplicable that they would resist this initiative which would reduce and eliminate the tariffs against our value-added production in order that young Canadians can escape from the bondage of shipping out our raw materials; natural gas rather than plastic bumpers for automobiles, two-by-fours or whole logs rather than packaged or modular homes, unprocessed fish instead of finished TV dinners and microwavable, low-calorie meals with all the vegetables and other products we can put into that package.

This attitude we are hearing from our opponents, which has very little substance, is all caught up in emotion and rhetoric. It is denying the Canadian people and the children of our future the opportunity to escape from the bondage of being hewers of wood and drawers of water, to become truly productive, and to maximize the value we extract from our natural resources, keeping those additional dollars right here in Canada where they belong.

With regard to the fisheries industries alone, I have travelled extensively across Canada. I have travelled in the north to Baffin Island, Pangnirtung, White Horse, and Yellowknife. I have spoken there on free trade. I have travelled to small fishing communities on the wharves of Wool Bay in Great Slave Lake and to Buctouche, New Brunswick, and all around the Atlantic Coast in the past few weeks. I have been through many fish plants and have talked to many workers. I have talked to many businessmen, many community leaders, and many in the service industry.

They have told me not to let the opponents in the House of Commons and the Senate deny Canadians this great opportunity to become a powerful, dominant nation in the world in which our young people can look to the future with confidence and optimism that they will have a satisfying career at the same time as making their contributions to the coffers of government in order that we can maintain and enhance our social programs and ensure that as a strong, confident nation we defend and project our sovereignty to the world.

All this nonsense about the fifty-first state and giving away our resources is totally contradicted in the essence of this agreement. This agreement is all about sovereignty. Any nation that lacks confidence in its own culture and its own social programs to the extent that it has to shelter and protect them behind the barriers of protectionism and isolation from the world reality is a nation which is poor and weak in spirit. A strong culture will survive in the world.

The British culture is strong and flourishing in the world, as is the U.S. culture, the French culture, and many other prominent cultures. Canadians are fortunate to be a reflection, through our multicultural heritage and policies, of all of those strong values. We are unlike any nation in the world. We do not need the narrow-minded attitudes of the Opposition or some members of the Senate to protect Canadians and our sovereignty, our culture, and our social programs from this great opportunity to enhance that sovereignty and increase the integrity of those social programs by becoming a productive, leading edge, technology-intensive nation which takes advantage of its resources and shows its goodness to the entire world instead of hiding behind the steel walls of protectionism. This is the challenge we offer to our young people, the challenge to eliminate this uncertainty which has arisen from the protectionist attitude emerging in the United States.

The United States does not particularly care about little Canada. After all, we are one-tenth of their domestic market. However, we in British Columbia care about big California which is as large to us as the entire Canadian market. We care about the history which has forced us to ship our natural resources to central Canada or the Far East and bring the finished products back.

We want access to California. We want access to the states of the northwest; Washington, Oregon, and Idaho. We want that access on a fair and competitive basis because we are confident that given that opportunity we can sell 10 times more into that market than they can sell into ours. We are confident in the ability of our industrial leadership, our well organized union work forces, and our scientific institutions to compete aggressively and have access to that market 10 times larger than our own.

The Americans really care about the Far East. They care about dumping and the sweat shop labour about which I often hear our colleagues talking. They know that Canada, as part of a great continental alliance, is an important neighbour. We stand to gain vastly more than the Americans as a result of this free trade agreement. That is why the Government is so committed to it.

We would not have had to deal with the harassment of the countervail action and the anti-dumping action against our Atlantic fish exports in the United States, at great cost and uncertainty to the fishing industry, had this free trade agreement been in place.

Mr. Langdon: You certainly would.

Mr. Siddon: We would not have had to deal with the threatened 30 per cent countervail duty against our lumber exports had this free trade agreement been in place.

Mr. Langdon: That is not so.

Mr. Siddon: The Hon. Member sits in his seat kibitzing. He can speak when he has his turn. We would probably not have had to deal with the GATT case on the export restrictions on our west coast fish products if this free trade agreement had been in place.

Mr. Langdon: Tell the truth.

Mr. Siddon: I will tell the House why. We and our industries have been harassed by these protectionist measures coming from certain sectors of the U.S. industrial economy and driven by political force and weight right through the Congress and up to the presidential level in the administration because there was no protection, no remedy other than to go into the U.S. system and use U.S. lawyers to fight our case.

Mr. Langdon: It still exists.

Mr. Siddon: I think the Hon. Member opposite is concerned that I might be telling the people of Canada something that is true.

Mr. Langdon: No, untrue.

Mr. Siddon: The fact is that we have, for the first time in history, an unprecedented agreement with the United States of America which gives Canada something no other nation in the world has, that is, a trade dispute system which treats Canada as an equal to our immediate neighbour, the United States of America. In that process tribunals will be the point of referral of any of these disputes.

Mr. Langdon: No, no, no.

Mr. Siddon: Yes, the point of referral before important and detrimental initiatives can be taken to further tax and frustrate the productivity of our industries. We will, for the first time in history, and unique among nations, be able to refer such controversies to this balanced, non-partisan group of tribunals, this trade dispute panel, in order to head off this kind of problem.

Mr. Langdon: Not true.

Mr. Siddon: That is a great achievement of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and the Government of Canada which will bring untold benefits to the Canadian economy.

In the time I have remaining I want to illustrate the reality of this as shown in the solution which was found to the softwood lumber countervail case. For many months, in fact extending back three or four years, our industry was harassed by the threat of a major countervail duty being levied against our exports of softwood lumber. That industry, which is British Columbia's first industry, contributes 45 per cent of our Gross National Product in terms of our exports to the United States. That industry was in such a state of uncertainty that the investment decisions were not being made, the technology was not being put into our plants, and we were not going out and seeking other markets because of the uncertainty of that countervail action.

• (1240)

The point I wish to make is simply that when the former Minister for International Trade, now the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney), concluded an agreement with the Americans in January, 1987, it stabilized our forest industry. The industry put massive new investment into its plants. The stocks of the principal forest industries of British Columbia went up and employment reached unprecedented levels, with 30,000 new jobs being created in the forest industry in British Columbia last year.

If it was good for the automotive industry in Ontario, if it was good for the constituency of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, it ought to be good for western Canada. It ought to be good for British Columbia.

History will represent this free trade agreement as the most important achievement and turning point in the progress of this nation in this entire century.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I have seldom heard such overblown rhetoric and departure from the substance of the text. I have seldom heard such PR, wishful thinking and such an attempt to mislead Canadians.

However, the Minister did say one thing that I believe is correct and which the Minister of Communications and Culture (Miss MacDonald) has not had the nerve to say. It is to concede that culture was indeed on the table and negotiated away. The Minister has basically described the kind of situation our workers in cultural industries, including artists, writers, composers, film makers and so on, will face. He said they can compete in the world. Of course, they can compete if they want to make a film in Canada in which they change the street signs and licence plates to make it look like the United States or sometimes another place to sell the film somewhere else. If they want to sell Harlequin romances, they can do that in the world. However, if they want to make something distinctly Canadian for which we need a structure of support because we are a small country, those cultural supports will be gone in this trade deal. The Minister was frank enough to admit that.

Mr. McDermid: That is nonsense and you know it.

Ms. McDonald: Look at his remarks in the "blues". He said that artists can compete in the world. Of course they can compete.

I want to ask the Minister a specific question concerning his remarks early in his speech. He suggested that those of us who have a different vision for Canada, who are working very hard to defeat this trade deal, are somehow motivated by fear and it is only his side that has confidence.

Before the election the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) were against the trade deal. Did he ever correct the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance and say they are operating out of fear and do not have confidence in Canada? Why did he not make that kind of speech in favour of free trade before the last election? Why did the Hon. Minister not oppose his own Party Leader, the Prime Minister of Canada, and tell him that he did not have the right way of organizing the Canadian economy? Why was he not in favour of this before the election?

Does it not come down to the issue of trust. The Government, which is now using free trade and wants to sell out Canada, never stood for that in an election campaign. It is like the sacred trust. The Government tells us that social programs are not in the deal. They are in the deal and I will speak about that shortly. In the last election the same Government described social programs as a sacred trust. Immediately after the election the Government deindexed the family allowance and tried to deindex the old age pension. Fortunately, seniors rose up against the Government, as Canadians will rise up against it in the next election to defeat the trade deal.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the questions although not necessarily the comments by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) because they were so silly.

We talk about our sovereignty and cultural programs. The Hon. Member knows that there are clear provisions in the agreement to ensure that special provisions in legislation to protect our cultural industries are maintained.

I was saying that as a proud and confident Canadian I have no hesitancy in going out to share my culture with the world and turn it into something which we can all celebrate, which can bring economic benefit throughout the world. Canada, instead of being a small-minded, closed nation which protects every little thing from world reality, takes what we are so proud of and sells it. That is exactly the reason for this free trade agreement. We can become whole Canadians, not just petty negative backward looking Canadians as some would advocate.

Ms. McDonald: Why did you not say that in the last election campaign?

Mr. Siddon: The Hon. Member has been here long enough to know that as we research and study issues of national dimension, as we receive reports such as that which came from the Macdonald Commission, and as we do our homework and analyse the realities which I projected in my speech, we will learn about the benefits of an agreement of this historic dimension. This agreement can enhance our ability to add value to our natural resources, to market our professional skills, to market our social and cultural programs which the world should have and emulate. We can only do that by being in the real world, not shutting ourselves off from it.

Indeed, I, the Prime Minister and all Members of the Government are confident because when we travel this country we see smiling faces and optimistic people who tell us to put this through because they want it for their children. That is why we are engaged in this historic exercise that we will conclude shortly.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I was very impressed by the Minister's comment that the softwood lumber deal had stabilized the softwood lumber industry. It certainly stabilized the softwood lumber industry for about three plants in northern Ontario which immediately shut down when the deal went through in January, 1986, and laid off over 400 workers.

He would be interested to know that in his own province the Pas Lumber Company was almost put out of business when the Government of that province transferred the export tax of 15 per cent to a stumpage charge. The stumpage charge for the Pas Lumber Company in Prince George went from $6.3 million a year to $19 million a year. Now the British Columbia Government is trying to reduce that stumpage charge and the United States is opposing it. That deal, which was bad at the outset, has been entrenched in the free trade deal. Now we have to run to Washington every time we want to do something about our stumpage charges.

When the Minister talks about stabilizing the industry, he also knows that he is almost stabilizing some parts of the softwood lumber industry out of business. Last week, I talked to the manager of G. W. Martin Company in Sault Ste. Marie. It is a very large operation, employing 700 people. Since 1986, the appreciation of the Canadian dollar has cost it an extra $1 million more than what it was making in January, 1986. The export tax is costing it $750,000. It is at a point where it is not making any profit at all.

If this deal is so smart, why did the Government not index it to the exchange rate between Canada and the United States? The G. W. Martin operation in Sault Ste. Marie is actually losing almost 30 per cent from what it was making in 1986 as a result of the softwood lumber deal and the export tax of 15 per cent. I can assure the Hon. Minister that it is not stabilizing the industry in northern Ontario, it is destabilizing the industry. If there is a downturn in the U.S. housing market, things will be a total disaster.

Fortunately, the Ontario Government was smart enough not to put on a new stumpage charge because it would cost the industry three times as much, as it did in British Columbia. They are maintaining an export charge which, in itself, with the appreciation of the dollar, is a disaster for that industry in northern Ontario.

Mr. Siddon: My hon. friend stated in the closing part of his remarks that there is a downturn in the U.S. housing market. I do not think that has anything to do with the free trade agreement. It has a lot to do with the state of the U.S. economy.

In 1987, the forest industries of Canada had unprecedented profits. Rather than putting a 30 per cent countervail duty in the U.S. Treasury, we kept 15 per cent in Canada and put it back into the ground in the form of reforestation.

I am told that the three companies in northern Ontario that he spoke of were on the verge of serious financial difficulties because they had not kept pace with the evolving trend of technology in the industry. This leads to the basic point and principle of this agreement.

• (1250)

If industries fail to modernize and find ways to diversify and add value to their product, they will, of course, be faced with failure. The very heart and soul of this agreement is that it encourages value added processing. It encourages a situation where we bring in the best technology, and maximize productivity. Instead of exporting chips, particle board or two by fours, we are able to export a wide range of finished products to the world. That is happening in British Columbia right now. I have seen major investment in my own riding in British Columbia in world-class technology to process finished products from our wood fibre. The same is happening in the fishing industry—

Mr. Langdon: Time.

Mr. Siddon: —if the Hon. Member will allow me to complete.

Mr. Langdon: On your own time.

Mr. Siddon: In the fishing industry, a full two-thirds of all of our fish that come out of our seas go to the United States market. In the last two or three years we have seen tremendous increases in the processing before export of those fish.

Ms. McDonald: Time.

Mr. Siddon: As a result of the policies of this Government—

Mr. Manly: You sold out the B.C. fishery.

Mr. Siddon: —and the additional processing of—

Ms. McDonald: Time.

Mr. Langdon: Point of order.

Mr. Siddon: —the fishery of Canada, the exports to the United States, is worth almost $20,000—

Mr. Langdon: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Point of order, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: I think the Member is well over his time.

Mr. McDermid: They cannot stand the truth so they call it time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I can assure the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Mr. McDonald) that I can count. The question and comment period started at exactly 12.42. For three minutes the Hon. Member has been asking for the time to be expired. I can assure the Hon. Member that there were 30 seconds left in the time for questions and comments. I will give those 30 seconds to the Hon. Minister after which I will recognize the Hon. Member who will have her 20 minutes like everyone else.

Mr. Siddon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The final point I want to make is that in my own area of the fishery, the average income to a Canadian fish plant worker or fisherman, from our exports to the United States, is almost $20,000.

Mr. Manly: You put 4,000 jobs at risk.

Mr. Siddon: If the Hon. Member would allow me to conclude. There has been a 10 per cent increased access by way of eliminating these export tariffs on value added products. Crabmeat, fishsticks and TV dinners will add 10 per cent of income in the back pockets of every one of those fish plant workers, an extra $2,000 a year, and that is an illustration of the benefit the agreement will bring to all industrial sectors of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the ancient Greeks saw nature as being comprised of four basic elements, the earth, the air, water and fire. As the environment critic today, I want to talk about the impact of the trade agreement on all four basic elements of our life. I want to begin with water.

John the Baptist baptised with water. Water is a symbol of life. For the ancient Greek, water was the primal substance out of which everything else was created. We know, especially this summer with the effects of the drought on western farmers and producers, just how important water is to us. We know that we do not have too much of it and we are wasting it very badly.

What do we have with this trade agreement but a Government that has given away on this most basic substance of life? I would like to refer to some expert testimony of Mr. Mel Clark, consultant to the Rosan Academy of Aquatic Science and a former GATT negotiator for Canada. He is someone very well versed in water in international trade. He stated that the free trade agreement will override domestic legislation. When there is a conflict between the two, it is imperative there be an explicit exclusion of fresh water in the trade agreement itself. As the agreement now stands, water has been included. Not only has water not been excluded, but it is included in the FTA, both implicitly and explicitly.

Let me explain, using the expert testimony before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. In Article 408, export taxes apply to the export of any good. Article 409 applies to the export of a good. Article 201 states that the goods of a party means domestic products as these are understood in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Tariffs covering water have been included for many years in the schedules annexed to the GATT. GATT has adopted the harmonized system for classifying goods for customs and tariffs and it contains an item for water. It is beyond reasonable doubt that GATT understands water to be a good. Then there is explicit evidence where water is included in the tariffs schedules in the agreement.

Two conclusions emerge from the evidence. First, the FTA includes all natural water, regardless of how it is packaged or transported. It is not just limited to bottled water which has been the excuse used by the buffoon of a Minister who has tried to joke about this matter and to make light of it. It is a serious matter, indeed. Americans themselves understand that water has been included and, indeed, American Congressmen have made a big point that this is one of the advantages to the free trade agreement to them. Because their water problems are even more serious than ours, their drought more serious, their supplies of water much more badly affected, they are looking to the possibility of water imports in cases of shortages.

Mr. Clark raises one actually very scary possibility. In the event water sharing is required, how would the sharing be? Would it be on a ten to one basis, according to our population, or would it be on a nation to nation basis, a fifty-fifty sharing? I do not know, but it seems to me any kind of sharing on that basis, where we are forced, is certainly something we would not want to get into. We might want to share, particularly if we relate it to conservation measures. We might well want to share in the question of shortage with our neighbours, or with other people for that matter, but to be forced into it by a binding agreement is quite another matter completely.

Let us also be very clear that having a separate Bill or amendment to Canadian legislation does not cover the situation. It simply does not. It is the text of the agreement itself that will count. If there is any conflict between what is in the agreement, and water is in the agreement, and what we have in some Canadian law, it is the agreement that counts. It is not what some Minister, who will not be around after a while, says, and not what is in Canadian law. If I have an agreement with you, Madam Speaker, that I am going to sell you my house, but in a memo to myself I exempt the second storey of my house, you would take me to court. The text of the contract, in the case of any conflict between the parties, actually counts.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, water is included in the Agreement, inasmuch as water is included in the GATT. It is considered property under the GATT. The chief negotiator in the sell-out of Canada to the Americans was Mr. Reisman. Who is Mr. Reisman? A man who favours water exports. He even put forward the James bay project, the idea of a huge canal, which would make the Bay a body of fresh water.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry to have to interrupt the Member, but she will be given 14 minutes to speak when the debate resumes. It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

SCHEDULED DEPORTATION ON BASIS OF MARITAL STATUS INFORMATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) is planning to deport a 45-year old Filipino seamstress, a landed immigrant named Sally Espineli, for providing incorrect information on her marital status.

However, her employer, the Manitoba Fashion Institute, like many others in the garment industry, regularly recruits and demands that its women workers be single, which in turn forces women to circumvent an employment criterion which clearly violates our Canadian human rights legislation since marital status is a prohibited ground of discrimination.

It is ironic that the Government stalled four months before trying to deport a convicted terrorist, yet it wasted no time in taking action against a single, helpless woman. The Minister should instead suspend deportation and allow the Human Rights Commission to complete its hearing into her case so that our immigration policy will not violate our own federal legislation on human rights and so that the Minister may also ease the unique hurdles facing immigrant women.

The Minister has spoken very passionately a number of times about the plight facing immigrant women. Here is a real human story which cries out for her sensitivity as the Minister of Immigration and as the Minister responsible for the status of women.

This policy discriminates against women. This Minister has a golden opportunity in wearing those two ministerial hats to do something clearly in favour of women, to stop the discrimination, and to stop forcing them to mislead in order to get a job in this country.

INDUSTRY

FEDERAL SUPPORT FOR ONTARIO GRAPE AND WINE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) that, in co-operation with the Province of Ontario, the sum of $100 million will be provided to improve the competitiveness of the Ontario grape and wine industries.

The program will include assistance for grape removal, quality enhancement, and price support, as well as grape and wine market development. In addition, the federal portion will support the 1988 surplus grape program.

Research will be directed at determining alternate markets for grapes, as well as ensuring quality and productivity for improvements for wine and grapes. Details of the cost-share program will be worked out over the next few weeks with the province and, most important, with the producers themselves.

I join with my colleagues in the Niagara, Essex, and Kent areas of the province in making this important announcement that will assist the grape and wine industries to compete in terms of quality and price with products from Europe and the United States.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SALE OF NORTHWESTEL TO BELL CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to register deep concern about the recent sale of NorthwesTel to Bell Canada.

There has been no guarantee that the 400 jobs will stay in the Yukon. Such a condition should have been a condition of sale. Yukoners do not deserve the vague promises that have been made by Bell Canada in this regard. We need firm commitments.

We also question whether or not our telephone rates will be increased. Bell Canada rates in Ontario for basic residential services are 63 per cent higher than those rates currently in the Yukon and northern British Columbia.

It is also disturbing that Bell Canada had to pay $200 million for NorthwesTel but cannot find the will or the dollars to settle with its striking Ontario employees who have been on strike for over two months. We wonder if this kind of management style will soon be seen in the Yukon. NorthwesTel has not had a strike in at least 10 years.

The Government could have facilitated the sale of NorthwesTel to northerners. Instead, this Yukon company will receive its marching orders from Montreal. Unfortunately, it appears that the privatization plans of the Government take precedence over any desire for northern participation.

SENIOR CITIZENS

OPENING OF SENIORS VILLAGE IN ALBERTA

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Alberta has another first, thanks to La Vida Communities Incorporated, a privately based company located in Calgary.

Last weekend I attended the official opening of the club house of a seniors village called Woodside on the Green. This unique project is designed to meet the special lifestyle needs of senior citizens over the age of 55. In addition to providing beautiful single-family homes it contains an array of convenience and safety features. It is beside the Bethany Care Centre.

Lifeline, which is a centrally monitored medical and security response system, is in every home. An 18-hole golf course is adjacent to the club house, while Calgary, Banff, Kananaskis, and Drumheller are within easy reach.

Seniors of Canada, come to Alberta and complete a lifetime of activity in a La Vida home where fullness of life at Heatheridge in Cochrane, or Woodside on the Green in Airdrie, can culminate your retirement with peace, happiness, and contentment among friends of your own age.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ELDERLY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the thousands of older working men and women in Canada who, on hearing the statement by the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration and Member for Rimouski—Témiscouata (Mrs. Vézina), said that she refused to give them justice and eliminate discrimination against older workers who are penalized by not being entitled to unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the people of the Quebec City Region of ARSAC who say that they will remember the Conservative candidates in the next election as the ones who refused to defend their rights.

The Minister of State for Employment and Immigration is completely mistaken. She does not know what she is talking about! What the people of ARSAC were asking for is help for those who have taken early retirement, who lost their job under the former regulations, as a result of information provided by Conservative Members for the Quebec Region, which the Government refuses.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration to tell us why a retired person with a monthly income of $5,000 from an RRSP or an investment is entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits, whereas another older worker who has paid premiums is not entitled to unemployment insurance if he loses his job? That is the Conservatives' idea of justice!

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES—REQUEST THAT COMPILATION OF PCB WAREHOUSE SITES INVENTORY BE PROCEEDED WITH

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as we count the cost of the Saint-Basile-le-Grand tragedy and considering the serious irregularities that have come to light, we must admit that governments have to take their share of responsibility for this situation.

Mr. Speaker, how does one explain that this warehouse had not been inspected in the past 15 months? How does one explain that they continued to accept transformers and condensers until February 1986, thus exceeding the allowed limit by 30 per cent? How does one explain that they allowed storage of highly flammable solvents with barrels of oil containing PCBs? How does one explain that since 1983, they never systematically inspected the 3,800 barrels piled one on top of the other? How does one explain that in the past 15 months, no one checked the alarm system?

Mr. Speaker, these facts are troubling and an agonizing question remains: How many such storage sites are there in Quebec?

That is why I ask the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to urge his Quebec counterpart to proceed immediately to make a complete inventory of all storage facilities containing PCBs, especially in Abitibi-Témiscamingue.

Mr. Speaker, the people have the right to know and Governments have the obligation to respond.

AIR CANADA

SALE OF SHARES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada's shares are for high-flyers only. The Government's Air Canada share issue is a hoax for average investors.

Investors who buy Air Canada's shares can expect to receive neither dividends nor interest on their investment. Air Canada has operated profitably on a commercial basis over the last 11 years, and it has never paid a penny's worth of dividends to its shareholders, the people of Canada.

Airlines in the private sector, whether in the United States or in Canada, are rarely if ever in a position to pay dividends because they have a high debt/equity ratio built into their financial structures.

The Government claims that small investors are the target of its share sale. However, I would advise average investors to avoid Air Canada like the plague, unless they have thousands of dollars to invest and nothing else to do with it but play the equity markets.

Large investors are interested in buying Air Canada shares for the purpose of making capital gains, or to reap the tax benefits arising out of capital losses.

The real reason for the share sale is to reduce Air Canada's debt/equity ratio to make the sale of the other 55 per cent of the company more attractive to the high-rollers on Bay Street.

Since many brokers consider airline stocks to be unsuitable for the average investor, buyers should beware.

PUBLIC SERVICE

WAGES OF DOCK WORKERS ON EAST AND WEST COASTS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I know from time to time Members in the House hear complaints from the Deep East that it is sometimes discriminated against, and they often think that those complaints are in our wildest imaginations.

I want to bring to the attention of the House a very specific matter which has been irritating me, and giving me concern. I was hoping that it was going to be resolved so that I would not have to bring it to the floor of the House of Commons. It has to do with dock workers, both on the East Coast and on the West Coast. We have a beautiful system whereby there is a ship repair unit on the Atlantic, and a ship repair unit on the Pacific. A contract has been negotiated in which the Atlantic workers receive $3.50 less an hour than the same tradesmen in the same unit on the Pacific on the West Coast. This is not acceptable.

It is time that the Treasury Board got off their duff and moved to resolve this discrimination. There is no right to strike here, because these workers on both coasts, because of the importance of the job they do for national security, are designated workers. As a Government, we do believe in regional development. It is illogical to think that, with something within our administrative command, by Order in Council we could not remove this discrimination.

We talk about equal pay for equal work, and we talk about it only applying to women or visible minorities. Why can we not have it for our own trades people in the Public Service? The cost of living is more in the Halifax area than in Esquimalt. It used to be that comparative wage scales were different. The fact of the matter is that comparative wage scales in Atlantic Canada are even higher now than the comparative wage scales in the West.

My time is almost up. The fact of the matter is it is time to end the eastern workers being geographic scapegoats and second-class citizens, and to move to parity over a three-year period.

TAX REFORM

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT REVENUE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, there was a song by the Beatles called The Taxman, which went like this:

"There's one for you, 19 for me . . .

Should 5 per cent appear too small,

Be thankful I don't take it all."

That might not be an inexact description of what the Government has done with so-called tax reform, bearing in mind where Canadians started in 1984, and where they are today.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has tried to dupe Canadians into thinking that their incomes have risen with the few extra dollars that they have received in take-home pay since July 1.

The Fraser Institute describes this as "trickery". That is a harsh word, and it is not commonly used by that institute.

The Fraser Institute's recent report points out that Canadians face so many hidden taxes embedded in our cost-of-living that we do not even notice when we pay them. That is something that has often been addressed by Members on this side of the House. There are so many indirect taxes; the excise taxes on tobacco, alcohol, gasoline, the manufacturer's sales tax, which this Government has increased enormously.

The Conservative tax grab is big and still growing.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

VICKY KEITH APPLAUDED ON SWIMMING ALL FIVE GREAT LAKES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I was just waking up this morning when I heard on the radio the impressive news that Vicky Keith, an Ontario swimming coach, had reached land in Toronto after swimming across Lake Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: She had just completed a series of crossings of each of the five Great Lakes—the first person ever to do so. She had also just broken the previous world record for long distance swimming using the butterfly stroke, a world record that she herself set. She is the first swimmer to cross either Lake Huron or that Great Lake, Lake Superior.

But I feel that the most important reason that her achievement should never be forgotten is because of her drive to raise money to build a new aquatic wing in a sports facility being built for disabled youngsters.

Ms. Keith, along with her parents and crew, devoted many months to training, planning, and waiting for good weather—not to mention warm water—for safe crossings. Personal lives were set aside as this crew of dedicated individuals worked to make an opportunity possible for everyone who will use the new aquatic centre.

Canada has developed a fine tradition of young athletes who have donated their time, effort, and determination to benefit those who are less fortunate, and Vicky Keith now joins their ranks.

I congratulate Ms. Keith, her parents, and the crew on a fine achievement, and I urge all Canadians to show their appreciation by donating to Ms. Keith's cause.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BURSARIES

CONGRATULATIONS EXTENDED TO 2,500 BENEFICIARIES

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all Members of the House will want to join me and the rest of the country in congratulating the 2,500 winners under the 1988 Scholarship Program, whose names were announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on August 17. Fifty-three young Canadian students have been in Ottawa for the past two days, representing the 2,500 winning students in Canada.

The purpose of the Scholarship Program is to increase the pool of highly qualified personnel in science and engineering, and one of the Program's requirements is that at least 50 per cent of the scholarships go to women. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to say that this year, 53 per cent of the scholarships went to women. To be eligible for the Program, students must be enrolled in their first year of study for a bachelor's degree in natural sciences, engineering or related disciplines. Every year, 2,500 scholarships each worth $2,000 will be awarded. The scholarship may be renewed, depending on course results. The five-year program is worth $80 million.

On behalf of all Canadians, I wish the students every sucess in their studies.

EMPLOYMENT

IMPORTANCE OF PRERETIREMENT AND ADAPTATION PROGRAMS FOR WORKERS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the somber sequence of plant shutdowns is continuing. A few weeks ago, I said that the Simonds Company in Granby was closing its doors, thus jeopardizing the jobs of 131 workers. There was also the closing of Avibec in Marieville, which affects 55 jobs, and recently, Lowney's in Sherbrooke closed down, affecting 350 jobs, which is the worst so far.

Mr. Speaker, I think these plant closings will make the Government realize there is an urgent need for reviving the early retirement program. In the case of Lowney, for instance, which is very similar to the situation at Simonds, the workers are fairly old, in their fifties and will have to either transfer to Smiths Falls or lose their jobs altogether.

Mr. Speaker, in August 1986, when the Minister of Employment and Immigration abolished the early retirement program, it was supposed to be replaced by another program within the next few months. It has now been two years. Meanwhile, families are living in poverty because people who have worked all their lives unfortunately cannot depend on the early retirement program. I therefore feel that these three plant closings should make the Government understand how urgently these early retirement programs and the adjustment programs are needed.

It isn't enough to say that people can manage their own affairs, Mr. Speaker. I think the Government has a duty to help those Canadians who have worked hard all their lives, and who now at the age of fifty or fifty-five are being laid off for reasons beyond their control. I cannot understand why, since August 1986, the Government has failed to wake up to this fact and meanwhile is letting people go out on the streets. Mr. Speaker, I earnestly urge the Government to wake up to reality and act sensibly and realize there are people across this country who are in dire straits.

NARCOTICS

TORONTO—USE OF PARKS BY DRUG DEALERS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, drug pushers are beginning to take over our neighbourhood parks as witnessed by the amount of discarded syringes which are being found daily.

Metro police report that dealers use parks to conduct the majority of their drug transactions. This situation is intolerable. Our parks and streets must be made safe for our children and these vermin put behind bars. Each one of us has to contribute if the war on drugs is to be won.

Programs such as the one suggested by a few members of Toronto's City Council of giving drug addicts free syringes in order to attempt to control AIDS must be seriously questioned. Drug use cannot be condoned under any circumstance. Addicts must be urged to curtail their use of drugs and not be provided with better tools for their use.

I hope Toronto Council forgets this foolishness and instead supports Metro Chief Jack Marks' request for 100 more officers to help stem the flow of drugs.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

DESTRUCTION OF PCBS—ABSENCE OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. He knows that as of last week PCB has become a household term across Canada and our international reputation, as well as our domestic reputation, hinge on how well we will solve this problem.

The Canadian Environmental Protection Act was proclaimed in June of this year. The Act covers storage, handling, and destruction of PCBs. On that day the Minister of the Environment announced that:

> "The Government will get tough on polluters . . . and take offenders to court . . ."

On the same day the appointment of senior investigation officers was announced in all regions of Canada, including Montreal. Thus Canadians were led to believe by the Minister that they would be protected from PCBs.

Can the Minister inform the House today and explain why there are no federal regulations regarding the destruction of PCBs?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as a former Minister of the Environment the Hon. Member for Davenport should know that until the Canadian Environmental Protection Act was proclaimed on June 30 the federal Government, largely because of neglect by the Member's Party, lacked the legislative authority to act. We now can, including through the use of regulations.

Historically the management of PCBs has been shared by the federal and provincial governments. We have engaged in a Canada-wide program in that regard to ensure that the provinces and the federal Government are not acting at cross purposes.

I can assure the Hon. Member for Davenport, and through him I can assure the House, that unless national standards under CEPA are met by every province, and storage and incinerator facilities meet the highest standards of environmental protection, that territory at present occupied by the provinces, provided enforcement at the provincial level is not done, will be occupied by the federal authority. We intend to act.

• (1420)

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we have heard this rhetoric since 1985, and I am glad to hear the Minister reversing himself and all of a sudden becoming very bold on the floor of the House of Commons about federal jurisdiction, having reversed the thrust of the Bill in committee some six months ago. That is quite a reversal.

If the Minister has all of a sudden found courage and sounds like a lion on the floor of the House of Commons, when can we expect from him action on PCBs for the protection of Canadians, through CEPA, and announce the regulations for the destruction of PCBs? When will he stop hiding behind provincial Environment Ministers? When will he do that?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not hiding behind provincial Environment Ministers or anyone else. Under the authority of the Government of Canada, through myself, the Department of the Environment has arranged for every single PCB storage facility in the country under federal jurisdiction to be identified. We are ensuring that those sites meet the most rigorous national standards for storage.

Second, we have engaged in an exercise with the provinces to identify all PCB storage sites across the country under provincial jurisdiction. I can tell the Hon. Member that if in any one province any site does not meet national standards for PCB storage, then the federal Government will swoop in and occupy the territory.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the one who has swooped and swallowed himself in his rhetoric is the Minister of the Environment. He is reversing himself on the floor of the House of Commons, having taken a position 180 degrees diametrically opposite in committee on CEPA. Anyway, I wish him luck.

DESTRUCTION OF PCBS—CHEMICAL TRANSFORMATION TECHNOLOGY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): My question is directed to the Minister responsible for Science and Technology or to anyone answering today for that Department. It involves the new chemical transformation technology to destroy PCBs. I would like to ask the Minister why it took so long to launch the development of advanced technology for destroying PCBs? Would the $60 million cut in the Council's funding, initiated by the Minister of Finance in 1985, including the elimination of the Environment Secretariat, be the cause of that slowdown?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the clear implication of the Hon. Member's question is that the federal Government has done nothing in this area over the last three years. The fact is, number one, for the first time ever we have prepared a national inventory of PCB storage facilities across the country; number two, we pressed into service low-level PCB decontamination centres across the country in seven provinces. Only three do not have them. Third, we have laid the groundwork for PCB destruction plants in Alberta, Ontario, British Columbia, and Quebec. We now have one on stream in Alberta and one is about to come on stream in Quebec and in Ontario.

We have imposed, Sir, strict federal regulations under the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act for all shipments of PCBs from one end of the country to the other. We have instituted strict regulations with respect to the importation of PCBs, the manufacture of PCBs, the sale of equipment using PCBs, and finally, Sir, with respect to the wilful release of PCBs into the environment. Now that we have the Environmental Protection Act in place we intend to bring the full force of the law down upon violators wherever they may be.

HEALTH

SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND TRAGEDY—LABORATORY ANALYSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. After the Saint-Basile-le-Grand tragedy, 3,000-odd people underwent health examinations in Charles Lemoyne Hospital, including blood and breast milk analyses. They are anxiously awaiting the results.

Apparently, hospital authorities are still looking for laboratories to detect traces of dioxin and furans in blood and breast milk. How come such analyses are not a priority with the Minister of National Health and Welfare? Parents are concerned about the health of their children, pregnant women and new mothers are concerned that breast milk may be contaminated. Can the Minister give us assurances that his Department has taken the necessary steps to have those analyses done within the shortest timeframe?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to the Member's question is yes. With respect to the health protection branch and the LCDC, we are giving whatever help is requested. We are testing as well.

The Member made a valid point about the time lapse for information once a test has been conducted and about the toxicological work that has to be done. We are developing information. We have notified the Province of Quebec and will make that available to every one of the people affected as well. I have been told that that should be available by tomorrow night or the day after.

ANALYSES OF BLOOD AND BREAST MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. Will the Minister confirm whether it is true that the Food Research Division in his Department is today busy analyzing blood and breast milk samples or whether, as one medical officer told us, this is not a priority with the Department of National Health and Welfare, and samples are sitting on the shelves.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that is not correct. I do not know to whom the Hon. Member is referring. I have checked with my Department to ensure that we are giving every co-operation in that respect.

I also phoned the Minister of Health in Quebec and assured her of every assistance that we are willing to give and that if they want any further assistance we would be ready to give that as well.

SECURITY OF PCB STORAGE SITES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday the Minister of Labour, who was filling in for the Minister, told the House that as a result of the new law that is now in place Canadians no longer need to have any concern about potential disasters of the kind which took place in the past week in Quebec with PCBs. Just after he said that an expert in the Minister's own Department said the following: "We don't know a hell of a lot about these sites and we can't do a damn thing about it" if we find that they are unsafe.

My question to the Minister is straightforward. Who is correct in this situation, the Minister of Labour who said that we should rest assured, or the expert in the Minister's Department who says he can do nothing about it?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister of Labour intended to imply, and certainly I did not infer from his answer, that because of CEPA we would have a Linus blanket that would prevent pollution from occurring or accidents from taking place. There was no such exaggerated claim.

The fact is that we have now a stronger law than we have ever had. CEPA will equip the federal authority with a much stronger instrument to deal with PCB-type contamination and pollution than ever before. However, there was no implication from the Minister, from me, or from anyone in my Department that accidents will not occur.

The federal Government is totally committed to identifying PCB storage sites right across the country under federal jurisdiction and under provincial jurisdiction, to now ensuring that they meet the most rigorous national standards for storage.

To the extent that national standards in that connection are not met in a given province, I assure the House and the Leader of the NDP that the federal Government will take all necessary steps under its authority, which is now much broader than before under CEPA, to make sure that the job is done.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that, despite the verbiage he has just put on the floor of the House, the correct conclusion is that the expert was right yesterday and not the Minister of Labour. The Minister knows that the regulations are not in place which would give the federal Government the authority to act. When the Minister of Labour said what he did to the House yesterday he was leading all the people of Canada astray because the authority to act is not now in place, and the Minister should concede that.

• (1430)

AGENDA FOR DESTRUCTION OF PCBS REQUESTED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I want to ask the Minister a supplementary question with regard to an answer he gave just a minute ago. He said that, notwithstanding the Government's tardiness in terms of preparing regulations, the regulations it would have out soon would be pertinent to the storage of PCBs. He said nothing about the authority of the federal Government in the June Bill to destroy PCBs.

He knows, and experts in his Department no doubt have told him, that technology exists now to destroy all the PCBs in Canada within six months if we had the will to do it. Why does the federal Government not give us an agenda for the destruction of all PCBs, and give us that agenda now?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the agenda is, first, to identify all storage sites for PCBs across the country. Second, it is to ensure that each storage site meets the highest standard for environmental safety. Third, it is to work with the provinces to ensure that with dispatch, to the maximum extent possible, given the technology, the PCBs in those storage facilities are incinerated. Finally, we are going to do all we can as a federal Government to ensure the technology is available and in place and used.

I might add, in conclusion, that I will be convening a meeting of the Council of Resource and Environmental Ministers to ensure that those four points I have identified are carried through.

CONTENT OF PROPOSED REGULATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the country has been waiting some three years for the Government to live up to its promise on this. The Minister just now made reference for the first time in the House this afternoon to the destruction, as I understand him, the incineration of the PCBs. Is he now guaranteeing to the House that the regulations will include a requirement not simply for the storage of PCBs but for their destruction? Will the federal Government lay out a timetable so the people of Canada, at long last, can rest assured that definite, concrete action will be taken?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Leader of the New Democratic Party and, through him, the House and the country that we have a phase-out strategy in the advanced stage of preparation. I am in a position to present it to my provincial colleagues. That is the first priority, to phase out PCBs in use in the market-place.

In tandem with that, we will have a strategy, again well advanced, to identify the storage sites and arrange for their immediate or very soon incineration.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY CLOSURE—SITUATION OF WORKERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, there are 1,000 employees of Canadian National in Newfoundland who are presently facing an uncertain future because of the actions of the Government. There are 600 employees of Terra Transport who are presently negotiating their future because the railway will close in a couple of weeks. There are 400 employees of Terra Nova Telecommunications, a Crown corporation that was sold just last week to its only competitor, Newfoundland Telephone.

First, the 600 employees of the railway only have 30 days left on the job.

My question is directed to the Minister for International Trade who signed this agreement and made the announcement on behalf of the Government of Canada. Where have all those glorious promises gone? They evaporated into thin air. Why will the trainmen, the people who work the train, including the engineers, no longer have any job security? They are told to go to the mainland to work the spare board. Why is it that 150 permanent part-time workers, some of whom have been with the company for 25 years, are not even covered by the agreement? Will the Minister step in to stop this railroading of rail workers in Newfoundland and at least extend the lay-off deadline?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as we have come to expect, there is some element of exaggeration in what the Hon. Member says. The Newfoundland Railway had 642 employees. If I have the figures correct, I believe 155 are eligible to go on early retirement; 140 I believe are continuing on with CN. That leaves 347 who had to be provided for. Collective negotiations are now under way. They will get all the benefits in their collective agreements. In addition, they will get generous other benefits that will look after them, that will pay them salaries in many cases until they are 65 and then a pension afterwards, or other jobs will be provided.

The negotiations are under way now. They resume on September 7. The union representative has said that he is expecting and hoping to conclude negotiations with satisfaction for all parties after this next round of talks. Let us be serious. The situation is well in hand.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not include the remaining employees. He is an expert at side-tracking.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): The hon. gentleman is an expert in blowing, whistling and puffing, as we have come to realize, and in shunting.

With respect to the 400 employees of Terra Nova Tel, they have been given a guarantee that their jobs will continue. Their pension rights are continuing. Gander will continue as a central part of the operation. Additional money will be spent for capital purposes and there will be a reduction of rates for the subscribers of Terra Nova Tel as a result of the take-over by Newfoundland Telephone. Guarantees have been given to CN in writing. I am prepared to repeat them here on the floor of the House.

As the hon. gentleman knows, the people of Gander and central Newfoundland are well satisfied with this transaction. His attempt to raise further alarms does the people he represents a distinct disservice.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF TERRA NOVA TELECOMMUNICATIONS—EFFECT ON EMPLOYEES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Baker, I want to ask the Minister about the remaining 400 employees of Terra Nova Telecommunications, which Crown corporation was sold last week. By the way, the consultant who represented the successful bidder is a prominent former Tory MP from Newfoundland, and the consultant hired to sell the Crown corporation on behalf of the Government is a prominent Tory fund raiser nationally. In fact he even raised money for the Minister for International Trade and even hired a Playboy centerfold, Miss Shannon Tweed, to spice things up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member has not completed his question.

Mr. Baker: I will put the question, Mr. Speaker. Instead of Miss Tweed, perhaps Miss Piggy would have been more appropriate.

Can the Minister give a guarantee that there will be no layoffs in Newfoundland from this Terra Nova Telecommunications-Newfoundland Tel merger? Can he give that guarantee and, to prove it, will he at least table the documents?

BROADCASTING

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the Canadian Conference on the Arts, ACTRA, the Canadian Film and Television Association, the Association of Canadian Film and Television Producers, CTV and Global Networks, the President of the CBC and the Chairman of the CRTC all have one thing in common. They oppose the Government's new broadcasting legislation.

Why is the Minister persisting with this legislation? She told the committee this morning that the Bill would go directly to the House and we would start debating it on Wednesday, September 14. She said the Bill would go through.

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has said we will have an election announced on or about September 17, how does she intend to meet this impossible timetable? Why does she not withdraw the Bill?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I must thank the Hon. Member for his co-operation in committee this morning. I think he was behaving like a perfectly proper committee member, helping to get this legislation through. I thank him for the suggestions and, in fact, the amendments that he put forward.

A year ago this time, which I remember so well, Members of the New Democratic Party and the Opposition in general were asking why the Minister did not move forward more quickly with this legislation. They were asking why we did not have new broadcasting legislation because we had been working at it for two years. They were asking why it was not introduced and passed.

I must say that it took the committee a while longer to finish their work. When they tabled their final report in May of this year I took those recommendations, incorporated a great many of them into the Bill, and I have brought it forward. I may say that this Bill remains a priority with the Government.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I thought for a moment the Minister was going to call me a gentleman.

• (1440)

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, one reason that many groups are opposed to the Minister's Bill is her refusal to accept all-Party amendments to avoid the North-Americanization of broadcasting, for example, licensing and regulating, say, the American super channels. In light of the free trade deal would the Minister not agree we need stronger, not weaker, Canadianization provisions? And is the real reason the Minister will not accept these recommendations of all these groups in the all-Party committee is that she cannot because of that very trade deal?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the exaggeration of the Hon. Member really boggles the mind. I may just point out the fact that this Bill supports the Canadianization of the CBC to 95 per cent Canadianization in its programming. This Bill brings in a performance incentive to encourage the private broadcasters to do more and better Canadian programming than they have in the past. This Bill talks about broadcasting which must be predominately Canadian, and I would like to assure the Hon. Member that the CRTC, through its licensing of distributing agents and services, has to deal with all programs it receives. That is the way in which licensing is carried out in this country, by the regulatory body which has been set up by this Parliament to do that very thing.

THE MINISTRY

AIR FLIGHT TO THAILAND BY MINISTER'S SPOUSE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to ask him whether the Prime Minister is aware that the wife and daughter of the Minister for International Trade took a free one week trip to Thailand last month provided by Thai Airlines, and whether this is acceptable behaviour of the Ministry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in my 23 years of political life this is the first occasion on which any person in political life has tried to attack my wife or my daughter or to insinuate they behaved in some improper way.

In July, at the invitation of the Thai International Airways and/or the Government of Thailand, I was invited to go on an inaugural flight from Toronto to Bangkok. I decided not to go, having other responsibilities. My wife was invited and my daughter. They went. They went in the company of a Minister from the Government of the Province of Quebec. A Minister from the Government of Ontario went. The Mayor of Metropolitan Toronto went. Other persons in the private sector went. There was no impropriety whatsoever in them going at the invitation of the Thai Government.

I am very surprised that the Hon. Member would bring this up in this way, without any advance notice to me he was going to drag my family up on the floor of the House of Commons. It is not the first time he has done that. If that is his standard of behaviour, so be it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: I am not suggesting that the conflict of interest guidelines—

Some Hon. Members: Cheap! Cheap!

Mr. Kaplan: I am not suggesting that the conflict of interest guidelines apply to a wife and daughter—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Kaplan: —but I was suggesting in my question that they apply to the Minister.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Kaplan: But the day after he refers to the Leader of the Opposition as a Nazi, a criminal, and a liar, I do not think I have anything to apologize for to him.

BENEFIT QUERY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, apart from the Minister's own defence, whether the Government considers this proper or whether the conflict of interest guidelines mean what they say when they refer to the ability of office holders to accept hospitality and benefits, provided they are of nominal value? Is this a benefit of nominal value?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, now we see the reason for this. This trip took place in July. There was a story in the Toronto Globe and Mail in the last week of July about this inaugural flight, giving the names of many of the people who were on it. The hon. gentleman now says he is asking this question because I spoke in this House yesterday and said certain things, he alleges, about his Leader. I did not call his Leader a Nazi, by the way. I said he uttered untruths. But that is irrelevant.

The Hon. Member, if I can call him that, now says he is bringing this up because I made a speech in this House yesterday. Well, he can bring up what he likes, he will never stop me from speaking my mind in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. McDermid: Are you in that much trouble in your riding, Kaplan?

Mr. Siddon: Why do you not join the rat pack?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre has the floor.

IMMIGRATION

SCHEDULED DEPORTATION ON BASIS OF MARITAL STATUS INFORMATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for immigration. As I am sure she is aware, the first garment worker to complain about being discriminated against in terms of entry into this country on the basis of marital status is due to be deported by her Government tomorrow. The Commission of Human Rights has written to the Minister directly to ask her to intervene so that this woman can stay in Canada until the Human Rights Commission is able to announce its findings as to whether or not this person was discriminated against. I wonder if the Minister would take this opportunity to announce her decision in this matter.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to announce any decision. There has been a formal application to the Human Rights Commission. An investigation is being conducted. I am certainly taking a strong personal interest in the outcome of this—

Mr. Axworthy: Do not deport her, then. Why are you deporting her?

Mrs. McDougall: —and we will be watching it in our office.

URGENCY OF SITUATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope, Mr. Speaker, the Minister is aware of the urgency of this situation. The woman is due to be deported tomorrow.

Mr. Axworthy: People with compassion do things like that.

Mr. Keeper: Can the Minister hear what I am asking? All right. The woman is due to be deported tomorrow and the Human Rights Commission has made a special appeal to allow this woman to stay in Canada until her human rights complaint is carried through. It has found it has reasonable grounds to believe that the Department of Immigration has discriminated against this woman on the basis of marital status. Will the Minister recognize the urgency of the situation and make a decision now so that the woman can stay in Canada until her human rights have been respected?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Federal Court has some involvement in this, too. I would point out to the Hon. Member that I have already said we are investigating this matter. If he would like me to, I will say I am actively investigating this matter. But I do not need any lessons in human rights from the Hon. Member.

Mr. Keeper: What are you waiting for?

BURUNDI—TRIBAL WARFARE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As someone who has spent many years in Africa I am saddened and appalled at the barbaric and totally uncivilized slaughter the world has recently witnessed in Burundi. It amounts in fact to modern tribal warfare. Will Canada continue to maintain normal relations with Burundi? If not, what action does the Government intend to take to condemn this wanton slaughter of innocent men, women, and children?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think everyone in this House is shocked by the massacres in Burundi. It is part of a tragedy that appears to be ongoing. What all of us want to try to do is to find some effective way in which we might contribute to an atmosphere of peace and justice in that country.

• (1450)

Officials of my Department have met the Ambassador from Burundi. A representative of the Government of Canada was in the country last week, has just returned to Rwanda and is reporting to us. We are meeting today with representatives of the Hutu population in the region. We will work through the Francophonie and other organizations to try to change the practices that have so shocked the world.

I have noted that the European Community has suggested that it would be helpful to have an independent commission of inquiry. That was rejected initially by the Government of Burundi. We hope that it will reconsider that reaction.

We think that the first step should be to get facts as to how we might resolve the problem and then countries like Canada should certainly be exercising all our influence to try to achieve an atmosphere of peace and justice that would endure.

SCHEDULED DEPORTATION ON BASIS OF MARITAL STATUS INFORMATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration who also happens to be the Minister responsible for the status of women.

The Minister has just told the House that she will be investigating the deportation order served on a 45-year old Filipino seamstress, a landed immigrant, because she provided incorrect information on her marital status. That deportation order is to take effect tomorrow morning at nine o'clock. With all due respect I suggest that simply investigating is not an answer to this case.

Since the employer of this woman, the Manitoba Fashion Institute, like many others in the garment industry, regularly recruits foreign women workers with the condition that they must be single, which in turn forces them to circumvent an employment criterion which clearly violates our federal human rights legislation, will the Minister immediately suspend the deportation order and investigate the Espineli case, a case which involves problems faced by so many other immigrant women, so that we can be sure that our immigration policy is not going to continue to contradict and violate our federal human rights legislation on the books of our own Government?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the law on the books of the Government is not new.

I did not say that I will be investigating—I am investigating. We are looking very seriously at this matter.

I recognize that women immigrants or potential immigrants have particular problems in a range of fields which are long-standing, problems which we are also investigating. I take my responsibilities both for women within the immigration system and on the human rights side very seriously.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is very ironic that the Government procrastinated for 10 months before starting deportation proceedings with regard to a convicted terrorist but swoops in, to use her colleague's words, on a 45-year old helpless woman with a case file that has national repercussions.

Since the Canadian Human Rights Commission is investigating this case, and since the Commissioner has said that it will have to bring this woman back at Canadian taxpayers' expense if she is deported, why does the Minister not do the appropriate thing, stay the deportation order and allow the Commission to make a determination not on this one case file but on the many case files of so many immigrant women about whom the Minister has so passionately spoken? Here is a human rights story that cries out for her sensitivity as a woman and as a Minister.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as a woman, as a Minister and as a member of this Government I am not only aware of my responsibilities but I am very aware of the human conditions that we deal with every day, not just the ones that the Hon. Member chooses to raise from time to time. We deal with them every single day. We deal with them humanely and well. We also have some regard for the system which involves the Federal Court and the Immigration Appeal Board. We are actively investigating this file.

CHILD CARE

TORONTO—DAY CARE NEEDS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Day Care Connection, a child care organization in my constituency, received some 4,000 calls last year alone from families needing day care. That is over 10 calls a day, 365 days of the year.

Last week the Mayor of Toronto said that child care in Toronto is in a state of crisis. He is right.

I want to ask the Minister whether or not he is aware that in Metropolitan Toronto newly planned subsidized child care spaces have had to be cut back as a result of the Government's planned legislation on child care. Will the Minister not agree that there is something seriously flawed with that legislation and that he should go back to the drawing-board?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not. If the Hon. Member were to take a look he would see that 200,000 spaces will be created over the next seven years. Those are only subsidized spaces, not to mention the other spaces that are being created.

Additionally, I would suggest to him that he should indicate to his Party's Member on the committee that there should be some co-operation to get the legislation passed so that the money can start flowing.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REDRAFT LEGISLATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must realize that rather than being part of the solution that legislation is adding to the problem. If the Minister is not prepared to listen to Members of Parliament will he at least listen to Canadian families? Will he listen to the Mayor of Toronto? Will he listen to Canada's children? Will he go back to the drawing-board to improve this legislation?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to Canadian parents. I have listened to the parliamentary committee and its recommendations. The legislation has been following those recommendations very closely. The legislation has been approved in principle in this House. I suggest that what is being done now is that $6.4 billion is being targeted for child care over seven years, whereas at the present time the federal Government is spending $160 million. That is a 100 per cent increase in the last four years that this Government has been in office.

The Hon. Member's Party should start to support such legislation. It should start to support that kind of money. It should not say with respect to the 200,000 spaces that the NDP program of 200,000 spaces is more than the Government's.

Members of that Party should get off the rhetoric which says that on the one hand they are trying to be financially responsible while on the other by the year 2000 they will have an $11 billion bill which will somehow come out of thin air and that taxpayers support it. Less than 10 per cent of Canadians support the program of that Party which is why it was rejected by the Government, as well as for other reasons.

HEALTH

REPORTED CONTAMINATION OF MEAT USED IN HAMBURGERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Agriculture. In view of recent press reports that a disease called hamburger disease, or HUS, is causing severe health problems and deaths in senior citizens and young people, and that it is caused by meat contaminated by the E coli bacteria, can the Minister tell the House whether any special precautions are being taken in Canadian meat packing plants that are inspected by the federal Government to ensure that this contamination is not causing these serious illnesses and deaths which have occurred in Canada this year?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It gives me an opportunity as Minister of Health to indicate again to all Canadians that proper handling of food is essential. We have had a number of E coli outbreaks, as the Hon. Member has mentioned.

Additionally, the Canadian Government through the Department of National Health and Welfare and the LCDC has been co-operating with Public Health officials. We have put forward a warning again that proper storage, handling and preparation of food are necessary. I thank the Hon. Member for raising this issue which has given me the opportunity to make that point again.

MEAT PACKING PLANT OPERATIONS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Health clarify whether any review has taken place with regard to the operation of meat packing plants? Has there been any new commitment of funds by his Department for research to develop a serum or a vaccine for this disease? Just how extensive will the program of public information be to ensure that as few children as possible are infected by this bacterium and the toxin that it produces?

• (1500)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that LCDC is providing all laboratory assistance required to provide identification of organisms or toxins. We also have an epidemiologist on the site to assist in the investigation, as well as to contain the outbreak.

As I stated earlier, additionally, we have said to provincial health authorities that any further information that can be given, or any technical help that can be provided, we will do that as well.

In respect of any anti-serum, I would have to take cognizance of that part of the question and make further inquiries.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC SERVICE

NAVAL DOCKYARD WORKERS—WAGES PAID ON EAST AND WEST COASTS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Ship repair workers in the naval dockyard in Halifax are paid $3.50 an hour less than similar workers in Esquimalt, British Columbia. Those workers are all federal civil servants. They all do exactly the same work.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House, to the workers, and to Canadians, why federal employees in one part of the country are paid less than workers in another part of the country when they are doing exactly the same work?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without getting into the details of the issue, I would suspect that the collective bargaining process would have something to do with this.

I will take this matter under advisement and return to the Hon. Member with a fuller response.

PAY OF HALIFAX DOCKYARD WORKERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is correct, this is a matter that is a bone of contention in collective bargaining in the Halifax unit.

First, the workers in the Halifax dockyard have been without a contract now for one year. Because their work is essential they are not allowed to strike.

Why does the Prime Minister not do what is fair and honest to the workers in the Halifax dockyards and remove this regional discrimination in the hourly rate of pay, and immediately settle the contract in Halifax by giving the workers pay equity per hour with the workers in British Columbia?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to my hon. friend that it is government policy, as an employer, to reflect the current rates in that particular region. When viewed in the context of the rates that are paid in the Halifax region, those rates are reasonable. That is the point of view that the Government takes.

Mr. Rodriguez: Do you do it for MPs?

Mr. Lewis: In terms of the Halifax shipyard industry, and this was very well brought out by my hon. friend on the Government side earlier today, and I am surprised my hon. friend did not listen to his comments—

Mr. Rodriguez: Do you do it for MPs?

Mr. Lewis: No. We are going to stay with that policy.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is shameful.

EMPLOYMENT

IMPORTANCE OF ESTABLISHING PROGRAM FOR OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. For two years the Minister of Labour in this Government has been boasting he was going to negotiate with provincial governments an adjustment program for older workers. As we know, such a program was put in place under the Liberal Government to meet the needs of people 55 and older who were affected by plant closures, such as the ones that are now happening in the Eastern townships and also in Eastern Montreal at the Vickers plants. For two years, the Minister has been stating he is negotiating with provincial governments. Can the Minister tell us now whether the Quebec Government, the Ontario Government, the governments in western and Atlantic Canada signed an agreement with the Canadian Government to set up an adjustment program for older workers, so that our working men and women aged 50, 55 or over can benefit from a program that is really efficient and compassionate?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I said to the Hon. Member and to this House on several occasions, the program in place under the previous Government only covered four industries—it would not have covered Vickers employees for instance, as suggested by the Hon. Member, nor those of the company the Hon. Member for Shefford referred to earlier.

Mr. Speaker, the program is indeed in the final negotiating stages and I expect to be in a position to make an announcement very soon.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF FORMER PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I will believe the Minister again. For two and a half years, he has been telling me that he would make some announcements soon. But they have not been forthcoming; we still do not have any answer. Does the Minister not believe that it would be preferable to maintain the old program and to extend it to the people of eastern Montreal and Sherbrooke? It is an internal matter for the federal Government to decide. He does not have to wait for someone else. So would the Minister be prepared to implement the former program immediately? Once agreements have been reached in the provinces, then he can change them. It would seem more humane to me, because the guys from Vickers have been waiting for a year and a half . . . when they have to pay for their groceries, the cashier does not tell them that he will wait until the Minister of Labour has negotiated with Quebec; he wants to be paid right away, in cash. Why delay such a decision?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, since the former Liberal program was to end in 1985, and was discriminatory, we decided it would be better to negotiate a new non-discriminatory program for workers 55 and over, and I should be able to make an announcement very soon, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties with respect to the vote which is to be held on Bill C-130 and is scheduled for 3 p.m. tomorrow. I think you will find there is unanimous consent for the following motion to be put to the House. I move:

That, notwithstanding the Order of the House adopted on Thursday, August 25, 1988, any division demanded on Bill C-130, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, shall be deferred until 6.00 o'clock p.m., Wednesday, August 31, 1988.

This conveniences the House and those Members who wish to attend the funeral service for the late Senator Jean Marchand in Quebec City. We understand that this will allow everyone who wishes to attend the service to be back in time for the vote.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the Hon. Minister of State. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, first, I wonder if I could take this opportunity to seek unanimous consent of the House to allow the Leader of the New Democratic Party to have sufficient time to complete his remarks later today before the speeches begin. Second, we have an understanding that private Members' hour will follow the speech of the third Leader.

Mr. Lewis: I am prepared to entertain that suggestion. This is the first suggestion I have had that it was going to be made. I am not sure that I see any difficulty, however, I would like to check with some people, and perhaps we could look into it in a minute or two.

Mr. Speaker: I take it from that there will be some discussion and brought back to the House. The Hon. Member for Windsor West.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, while I would be happy to wait to hear from the Deputy Government House Leader, we are prepared to agree now to the suggestion of the House Leader for the NDP.

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Speaker: I wish to bring to the attention of the House a matter which gives me some concern, and I want the co-operation of Hon. Members.

I will not name any names, however there has been a suggestion that as a consequence of something said in a speech yesterday morning a question of privilege might be raised today.

First, the rules are very clear that there must be notice. Second, it should be brought at the very first opportunity. Despite the difficulty with the delay in Hansard, it would seem to the Chair that something said as long ago as yesterday morning, if it was causing that much grievance, could well have been brought to the Chair. Third, I must say that I examined with very great care certain remarks that were made yesterday morning. What I might have done if a complaint had been brought to me immediately or at the first opportunity is one thing. I did notice that there was apparently no disorder as a consequence.

• (1510)

I share with the House my difficulty in this. I am bound to apply the rules. At the same time, I would ask that, when Members are speaking—there was more than one complaint brought to me and it involved both sides of the House—no matter how passionate they may feel, that they exercise the restraint and constraints that are appropriate in this place. There are many ways to say here what one thinks of political issues. I raise this matter and share it with Hon. Members because I am afraid that, on procedural grounds, if there are further complaints about what happened as long ago as yesterday morning, I just do not feel that it would be appropriate to entertain them. I have taken this position on complaints coming from both sides of the House. Orders of the day.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy (p. 18987).

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding further, I ask for the indulgence of the House. I was about to rule on an amendment that has not yet been put to the House. I shall wait until later. I might indicate that I will probably be receiving it favourably. On debate. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

[Translation]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, water is included in the Free Trade Agreement because it is included in the GATT. Under the GATT provisions, water is a commodity. That means that the Government will no longer be able to block water exports through taxes.

Mr. Speaker, environmentalists from all regions of Canada are opposed to this Agreement. They are concerned about the negative impact of this Agreement on the environment particularly on water and non renewable resources, and rightly so.

This Government has adopted the principle of sustained development put forward by the World Commission on Environment and Development. Mr. Speaker, having commited itself to this principle, this Government then approved the principle of free trade, which goes against sustained development. You cannot have it both ways. Free trade means an accelerated development of our non-renewable resources. It means water exports, incentives to use pesticides and the prominence of chemical agriculture over a sustained development-oriented agriculture. Environmentalists have good reasons to worry about this Free Trade Agreement. No wonder the Agreement includes water as a very important resource for us. The chief negotiator for Canada, Mr. Reisman is a known advocate of water exports to the United States. He is even among those who support a wild scheme that would turn the salt water expanse of James Bay into a fresh water lake complete with a dam. That water would then be transported, to the United States. Mr. Reisman would like to see nuclear plants built to feed this water up to the American market.

Had the Government wanted to prevent water exports to the United States, it could have included a clause to that effect in the agreement, but it failed to do so.

There is a policy against water exports. There is even a bill that would disallow them. But the wording of the agreement is of paramount importance and if we look at the wording, water exports are a distinct possibility because water is included in the GATT.

Madam Speaker, this is a mistake, a betrayal of Canada!

[English]

Environmentalists all over Canada oppose this deal because environmentalists want to see us move toward a renewable kind of agriculture and forestry. That is what environmentalists want to see, and yet, with this deal we will see an ever faster exploitation of our non-renewable resources. We will not have the opportunity to use our resource base to create jobs because performance requirements will not be allowed.

The requirement for research and development, buying Canadian, local sourcing, all these requirements which have been used by other countries and which have been used in Canada in the past, and used very effectively in Québec, for example, will no longer be permitted in the deal on free trade. This is tying our hands for economic development, regional development, and resource management. It is tying our hands in terms of the conservation of our non-renewable resources. It means that Canada will depend more and more on selling our non-renewable resources at world prices—we cannot even have two prices—and selling them without transformation, without getting the benefit of the jobs around them because that will not be allowed.

Environmentalists see an ever faster exploitation of resources. In the case of oil and gas, these are resources in conventional terms that are not going to last very long. What happens? It means that we will have to go further out. We will have to go to environmentally fragile areas, to the Beaufort Sea, offshore to areas that risk the natural environment for native people and fisherpeople, the natural environment on which we all depend, in order to sell cheaply resources which should be for more than one generation, resources which should be lasting, resources which indeed have often been developed with the taxpayers' money, and now will be sold cheaply, in effect subsidized and given away.

A specific example of what is wrong with this deal for the environment is pesticides which are an important chemical product. That is one item that will be cheaper after free trade. Is this something that we should be happy about as consumers? Unfortunately, pesticides are a major environmental hazard, and measures to encourage even greater use are not something that environmentalists are going to favour at all.

Measures that have been used in the past to subsidize industry, to bring in pollution abatement, for example, reductions in acid rain, could be considered unfair subsidies under the trade deal and could be abolished.

There is going to be pressure to have lower environmental standards because the competition is going to be tough. Industries are going to say: "We have to compete with our neighbour with lower standards. We have to reduce our standards too". The pressures are all going to go in the wrong direction with this deal, and people understand that.

The area of culture is one in which the betrayal of this Government has been extremely important. People in the cultural community are beginning to understand that, and they are speaking up ever more forcefully on it.

Let me refer to testimony by a coalition that is formed of the major arts groups in Canada. Just last month they came up with a statement on the implications of the trade deal, and they are very clear. Each member of this alliance is convinced that the agreement's so-called exemption for culture will actually discourage Canadian governments in future from taking measures to assist the development of independent cultural industries by Canadians for Canadian audiences.

Yes, Canadians can compete in the world, but they have to make Canada look like the United States for those films, and then they can sell it.

Canadians want to see something of themselves. The regions want to see themselves and not just the use of our film industry to make American movies here. Measures need to be taken if this is to happen. It is doubtful if measures introduced in the past would be acceptable were they to be proposed by post-free trade Canada. Therefore, we are forced to conclude that our sovereignty is jeopardized by the agreement. They give a number of examples. The Government has reneged on the capital cost allowance. The Baie Comeau publishing policy was announced by the Government, but it is not being acted on. Takeovers are being allowed with no divestiture.

The previous Minister of Communications is unhappy about it and has talked about this abandonment of the Baie Comeau policy because of pressure from the free trade deal. We have rejection of Investment Canada guidelines for film distribution and rejection of the Raymond Rock report, a very, very weak proposal which the Government has finally come up with. The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) reneged on everything that had been promised to the cultural community. The very, very weak broadcast legislation that we have now is weaker than the present Act. Why, Madam Speaker? Because that is the climate. We will have North American culture because the giveaway is complete by this Government.

This agreement recognizes a North American reality but leaves little room for a Canadian vision, and I am sorry to say that that is the case. The cultural industries that came together for this brief pointed out that they were not surprised that this happened given Mr. Reisman's statements. He explained the amazing Article 2005, the one that is supposed to be the exemption. He explained what that means.

> "—new measures affecting cultural industries would be scrutinized by both sides to determine whether they were consistent or inconsistent with the Agreement."

What is that? Instead of making the decision ourselves, we have to scrutinize and ask whether this is something our American friends will object to. The Americans will scrutinize and ask: "Is this something where we can be making more money in Canada? If so, we will not let the Canadians get away with it." That is what Mr. Reisman was talking about. It is an absolute betrayal of all of the statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and Ministers saying that culture was not up for trade. It was up for trade and the Government gave it away.

Some Hon. Members: Nonsense.

Ms. McDonald: What Mr. Reisman is saying, and what we believe the agreement says, is that actions taken in the past are exempt from the agreement but any new initiatives are not. As a result, all of the provisions in the agreement which apply to the economy in general apply to the cultural industries as well insofar as new measures are concerned. Yet we need new measures to strengthen our Canadian culture.

The present Government of Canada has bound its own hands in a way no previous Government in our history was ever prepared to do. Under the constraints imposed by this agreement, vitally important cultural initiatives such as Bill C-58, the capital cost allowance, the Baie Comeau policy could never have been implemented. This Government has neutralized its own cultural policy initiatives. I say shame on this Government for having done that.

People in my riding are very concerned about this. Ordinary Canadians are telling me that they have pride in Canada. They like our country. They want our medicare system, our cultural system and the fairness that we have that has taken years to develop. A Macedonian Canadian said that if he wanted to live in the United States he would have emigrated there, and a Latvian Canadian told me the same earlier this week. These are sentiments of people who care about their country, who have confidence that we can solve our own problems, that we can do things ourselves.

We can trade with the world. We can develop our own economy. We can create jobs. We do not have to sell our soul or our resources cheaply. These are Canadians who have confidence in Canada and these are the people who have been betrayed by a Government which talked about patronage when all it wanted to do was get to the trough faster than the previous Liberal Government.

It is a Government that talked about the sacred trust and then moved immediately to deindex the old age pension. Fortunately, it did not get away with it. This is a Government that is saying "trust us" as we take this next step. Canadians cannot trust this Government. Canadians have a different vision. We have worked hard to build Canada. Seniors, who are opposed to this deal, think of all the work they have put in over the decades that is being given up by a Government that cannot be trusted and by a Government that has no mandate to act.

I have confidence in Canada. I have confidence that we can create jobs here. I have confidence that we can solve our problems, not easily, but we can do it. Certainly if we give up the very tools of our political sovereignty we will not be able to solve our problems.

We live in a changing world and we need the tools to change, to adapt, to create new solutions to problems. The future will be different from the past. The status quo will not go on. This Government wants us to give up the very political sovereignty we need in order to solve those problems in the future.

It is not this House that will be making the fundamental decision. The Government's course has been decided. It is using its majority and closure on this Bill. Canadians are going to make the decision at the next election, and I hope that next election will come soon. Canadians will decide that the Government does not merit their confidence, that they have been betrayed by it. The fundamental decision will be made not on Bill C-30, not tomorrow when we vote on it because that is a foregone conclusion, but this Government will be accountable to Canadians. They are not going to like the results because Canadians still have confidence in their country and they have lost confidence in this Government.

In the minute I have left I would like to conclude by moving an amendment to the amendment. I move:

That the amendment be amended by deleting the period and adding the following therefor:

"and its implications on the economic and political sovereignty of Canada"

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I think we just witnessed here on the floor of the House of Commons the approach which the New Democratic Party is taking in this debate, one of frightening Canadians and scaring them with tripe. I want to go through some of the items the Member was speaking about.

First, water. The New Democrats keep bringing up this old canard that water is in the agreement and that the Americans are going to come with their pipes and drain us dry of all the water. Let us take a look at the facts and the truth.

I want to quote Frank Stone who is a prominent Ottawa consultant on trade policy.

Ms. McDonald: And he is wrong.

Mr. McDermid: He is a senior research associate with the Institute for Public Policy. He is the author of Canada, the GATT and the International Trade System, published by the institute in 1983 and now being updated. He had a long career in the Department of External Affairs, represented Canada at the GATT in Geneva and led the Canadian side in the 1972 Canada-U.S. Agreement on Great Lakes Water Quality. He said:

"Under the Free Trade Agreement our water is for sale all right, as it always has been—as a beverage. All the Trade Agreement will do is disallow import or export duties on trade in water that is sold normally in bottles and jugs . . .

The Free Trade Agreement, like the many other agreements of its kind and the father of them all the forty year old General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), is concerned with regulations over commercial trade, not water diversions or inter-basin transfers. The items in the Canadian and American schedules attached to the Trade Agreement very clearly refer to water as a beverage. Indeed, water falls under the chapter heading Schedules entitled "Beverages, Spirits and Vinegars" which covers trade in mineral water, soft drinks, beer, whiskey and wine as well as vinegar."

He said if this was ever brought to GATT, his words, "it would be laughed off the table".

• (1530)

Just to satisfy the NDP let me read Clause 7 of the Bill which says: "For greater certainty, nothing in this Act or the agreement except Article 401 of the agreement applies to water. In this section water means natural surface and ground water in liquid, gaseous" and she understands gaseous "and/or solid state, but does not include water packaged as a beverage or in tanks." It is all there. Our water policy enunciated by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) in November clearly states this Government's position. For the Hon. Member to go around spreading those untruths across the land that the transfer of interbasin water is in this agreement is a total fallacy. The expert she quotes is someone out to do one thing. I would check his political credentials before quoting him.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, would that the Hon. Member were correct. I would be much happier if that were the case. The submission made by Mr. Frank Stone, a weak lily on which to lean in this case, finishes with a note for editors: "The views expressed in this article are his own". He does not represent the institute on that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. McDonald: He has some experience in the Department of External Affairs. The expert whom I have quoted also has that experience. Mr. Clark is a retired public servant. He was deputy chief negotiator to the Tokyo Round of GATT for Canada and has over 30 years experience on trade issues.

Mr. Kempling: A member of the NDP.

Ms. McDonald: He is not a member of a political party to my knowledge and that would not make him right or wrong if he were. Mr. Mel Clark is certainly an expert and he is a consultant to the Academy of Aquatic Science.

Let me quote further, apropos the statement of the Hon. Member that it is only bottled water, only fizzy water that is included. Mr. Clark says: "Explicit evidence that water is included in the FTA is that tariff item 2201, which is in both the Canadian and U.S. tariff schedules as well as the harmonized systems, includes all natural waters". Let's be very clear: all natural waters. The fact that vinegar is in the title is neither here nor there. The title is not the text, unfortunately. If there is a dispute between what is in the text and what is in the title, it is what is in the text that counts. The tariff item reads: "Waters, including natural or artificial mineral waters and aerated waters not containing added sugar or other sweetening, ice and snow". They have even included ice and snow. Is the Hon. Member trying to tell us that ice and snow are put only in bottles? Never heard of such a thing. Water is included and so is ice and so is snow.

The Hon. Member would like Canadians to be deceived about the importance of this agreement. It sells out water, non-renewable resources, culture and our social programs.

Mr. Siddon: It is a lost cause, Lynn. Forget it.

Ms. McDonald: There are 21 chapters in this agreement and 11 of them are about items that have nothing to do with tariffs. This Government is selling out what is most important to Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Time!

Ms. McDonald: This Government deserves to be defeated.

Mr. Lewis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find there is unanimous consent to the suggestion that we move Private Members' Hour this evening and therefore interrupt and put all questions necessary to dispose of third reading of Bill C-130 at nine o'clock p.m. Immediately thereafter we will move to Private Members' Hour. In addition, it is the wish of the House that when the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) speaks, he should be given sufficient time to complete his remarks.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, certainly we are in agreement with the proposal put forward by the Deputy Government House Leader with the proviso, of course, that we think the debate should be going on for several months more—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: —and we should have an election before the vote, but aside from that we are quite happy to go along with this particular suggestion.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we certainly agree. I also want to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to my friends in the Official Opposition and the Government for their generosity in allowing my leader to complete his remarks.

Mr. Mazankowski: Let us make it reciprocal.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could say that what the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) expresses gratitude for is at the same time in keeping with the traditions of this place. I appreciate his making the remarks he did.

Continuing debate with the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is with pride that I rise to support this Bill which will give Canada a new, more certain and more beneficial trade relationship with the United States of America.

I believe it is a good agreement for Canada. It is an idea older than Confederation itself whose time has finally come. It will stand the test of honest scrutiny. It is I believe genuinely in the national interest. The free trade agreement is necessary to secure access to our most vital market and is consistent with policies which are already strengthening our economy and improving the well-being of Canadians.

We on this side of the House support the free trade agreement because we believe it will bring prosperity and economic benefits to Canadians from coast to coast.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Free trade will mean lower prices for Canadian consumers, better jobs, and greater individual opportunities. Free trade will help the regions of this country. It will do so by creating a broader and deeper pool of national wealth, not just by redistributing existing resources.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, free trade will help us to sustain our social security programs. Nothing endangers them more than economic decline. Nothing guarantees them better than an expanding economy. The values we have as Canadians and the distinctive quality of life we bring to North America will be enriched by free trade. By strengthening our economy, free trade will help us support cultural programs that enhance the capability of our artists, writers and performers to express themselves to Canadians and to the world. Free trade will also improve our capacity to strengthen our national programs ranging from the environment to regional development to child care.

Free trade will strengthen our foreign policy. It will be welcomed globally as a beacon of hope for the forces of more open trade, particularly, Mr. Speaker, among developing nations and as a bulwark against protectionism.

My purpose today is to outline the rationale for this initiative, measure the results against our objectives, separate myth from fact, and assert the reasons why I believe this agreement deserves the support of all Canadians.

[English]

Almost four years ago the Government received an overwhelming mandate for change from the people of Canada. It is a mandate that we are doing our very best to honour with vigour and determination. Several years ago, before I entered the House of Commons, I set out an agenda for Canada.

First, I said that the new Government must establish that special relationship of trust at all levels with our allies, including our greatest friend and ally, the United States of America. Second, we have to send signals around the world that investment capital is welcome here and that this is a good, an honourable, and a decent place to do business. We have to state clearly that the private sector is the only motor whereby new wealth, new jobs and new opportunity can be created for Canadians. I also said that we must energetically stand and press for the lowering of barriers to trade because trade is our life-blood. In that direction lies our future prosperity.

Government in Canada must see its role as creating, with the private sector, a greater and freer access to world markets and higher levels of trade. That was true when I made that statement over five years ago and it is very much true today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is precisely what we have delivered during our mandate. More Canadians are working today at rewarding and satisfying jobs than every before. Inflation is low, the dollar is strong, business is expanding, and consumers are confident. The Canadian economy has out-performed all other OECD economies over the past four years. Relations with the United States have improved substantially. The sour mood and the petulance of the seventies and early eighties is gone. When neighbours quarrel, everybody suffers. When neighbours co-operate, everyone benefits.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We on this side of the House prefer the advantages of co-operation to the futility of confrontation. We are proving, as best we can, that co-operation works. The biggest challenge for government today is to manage the forces of change, and that is what we are trying to do.

In the information age ideas are the new currency of power. High tech industries and universities have become the arsenals in the nation's influence. In the nuclear age economic strength is becoming as much an alternative to military power as a basis for it. The proportion of world income generated from the sale of natural resources is declining. Capital has become more mobile, moving literally at the speed of light. Investment funds, the motor of growth, flow where there is political stability and profitable economic opportunities.

For all countries, especially the already industrialized countries like Canada, prosperity depends on the quality and skills of our people in harnessing technology, fostering innovation, and establishing an environment for stable growth. We have in this country world-class industries and world-class financial institutions. Our economy is diversified and strong. In the last four years we have recaptured much of the road lost. We are well equipped to prosper and to manage change if we make the right policy decisions now.

We know from painful experience what happens when we make the wrong choices, when we try to swim against the tide, for example, on energy policy or investment policy, or to resist the global trend toward more open trade. One has only to walk through western Canada from the late seventies to the early eighties to see the devastation inflicted on western Canada by a wrong policy choice in energy. That will not happen again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We must master change, not run from it. We must meet competition, not hide from it. There is no sanctuary from the difficult realities of the unfolding decades. If properly grasped, Canada's future holds the promise of ongoing economic renewal. If rejected, Canada's prospects can be thwarted and our horizons diminished. Canada's youth has understood this challenge. Our young people are saying no to the attitudes of the 1930s and yes to the opportunities of the 1990s.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The newly industrializing countries are not going to decide that their new prosperity has been a mistake. The Europeans are not going to revert to a pastoral life. Far from it, by 1992 the Europeans will have the largest, most powerful trading bloc that the world has ever known. Australia and New Zealand recognize where their interest lies and are rapidly accelerating their free trade association. So, Mr. Speaker, what is the best prescription for Canada?

[Translation]

For anyone ready to listen, to study events and trends and to learn from them, the message has emerged in a persuasive way, with the authority of genuine scholarship and the benefit of real life experience. New challenges demand objective analyses and fresh approaches.

[English]

The answers of a generation ago, a decade ago, must be reviewed in light of a rapidly changing world and Canada's role in it. Trade is the lifeline of Canada's prosperity. Trade with the United States, our most valued commercial partner, is the key to a secure economic future for this nation in the next century. Trade abroad means jobs at home here in Canada.

How best do we ensure this reality with the United States? In recent years independent analysis has sharpened the focus and I believe has helped to point the way for all of us. The Senate report on free trade with United States issued in 1982, under the chairmanship of Senator George Van Roggen, said that "the desired restructuring, growth and competitiveness of Canadian industry can best be achieved by the negotiation of a bilateral free trade agreement with the United States".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The report pointed out that it is precisely at the strengthening of the national fabric, both political and economic, that a Canada-U.S. free trade agreement is aimed.

In August of 1985, at a meeting of the U.S. National Governors Association, seven of Canada's ten Premiers called for comprehensive free trade negotiations with the United States and two of the three absent premiers soon thereafter conveyed their support.

The report of a special joint parliamentary committee on Canadian trade relations in 1986 urged "immediate trade discussions with the United States".

Then there was the powerful contribution to our national debate, which I think everyone would acknowledge, by the Macdonald Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada. Over a three-year period from 1982 to 1985, the Macdonald Commission analysed options for Canada's economic future. It heard from hundreds of Canadians, individuals and institutions, held public hearings in 32 cities, in all 10 provinces, and sponsored three-day debates in major centres across Canada. Its research alone fills 72 volumes.

In 1985, the Macdonald Royal Commission concluded that free trade for Canada with the United States would be "a prudent course which will help make us richer and, by making us richer, strengthen the fabric of our country and increase our self confidence".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: No analysis was more thorough, no body of research more impressive, and no conclusion more compelling to my colleagues and myself than that of the Macdonald Royal Commission calling for a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States of America.

This Government chose to act on that strong analysis and on that recommendation. This was not just the view of the Hon. Donald Macdonald, a distinguished former Minister of Finance in the Government of Canada. It was also endorsed by other commissioners such as Tommy Shoyama, a widely respected former Deputy Minister of Finance; by Laurent Picard, former President of the CBC, by Albert Breton and Clarence Barber, both prominent economists; by Jean Wadds, a former High Commissioner to London; and by Michel Robert, a distinguished Quebec lawyer soon thereafter elected President of the Liberal Party of Canada.

Meanwhile, the Government had been pursuing studies and consultations on the same topic. In 1985, we issued a major discussion paper setting out the options for Canada. We appointed the late Tom Burns, a veteran trade policy expert and former President of the Canadian Exporters Association, to consult with Canadian business and labour leaders.

We established an international trade advisory committee, involving prominent Canadians from all regions of Canada. We appointed 15 sectoral advisory groups. And we invited the Public Service to review options and explore prospects with the Americans and bring forward plans for a clear and realistic course of action.

In all of these consultations, in all of the studies and analyses there was one overwhelmingly and singular conclusion: Canada had to act quickly and decisively to confront the new reality of the future.

We are a nation of only 25 million people, heavily dependent on trade and living next door to the largest and richest market on earth. Almost 75 per cent of our exports, worth $108 billion, will go to the United States.

Millions of jobs are dependent on the success of this economic relationship, which is the largest between two nations anywhere in the world. That rich market, on which so many Canadian jobs depend, was turning inward and protectionist.

[Translation]

The Hon. Pierre MacDonald, Minister of International Trade in the present Government of Quebec, wrote this:

"Since the early 1980s, the United States has been grappling with an enormous trade deficit, which they absolutely must reduce. Consequently, a new wave of protectionism has appeared and has gained much ground among American politicians. This trend is highly disturbing to a number of trading partners of the United States. Given the importance of the U.S. market for Canadian and Quebec exports, protectionism is viewed with particular concern here."

"It is in this perspective that free trade talks were undertaken in 1986. The time could not have been more opportune to discuss free trade with the United States."

Mr. Speaker, Minister MacDonald, speaking for the Government of Quebec, was quite right. The time could not have been more opportune. We acted when we had to.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: Indeed, as the Macdonald Commission noted, Canada's economic growth is critically dependent on secure access to foreign markets. More, better and more secure access to the U.S. market represents a basic requirement, while denial of that access is an ever-present threat.

Access to our most important market was indeed being threatened. About 40 per cent of our exports to the United States were subject to quotas, "voluntary" restraint and other restrictions.

[English]

At that time, by way of illustration of the mood and atmosphere that existed in the United States, the Ottinger Bill, passed three successive years by the United States House of Representatives, sought to destroy the Auto Pact. That was the object of that exercise. The Americans demanded punitive action against Canadian steel, uranium, cement, subway cars, fish, lumber, in fact virtually all of our exports. There was a crisis a month for one Canadian exporter after another, as new trade barriers were erected against Canadian products and new legal interpretations were advanced to inhibit Canadian access to the U.S. market.

That is the challenge that we faced at that time and the negotiation of a bold new trade agreement offered the most realistic solution on behalf of the people of Canada.

I doubt that any other initiative taken by any Canadian government has been the subject of as much thought and consultation with Canadians as the launching of the free trade negotiations.

[Translation]

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, this is a quite legitimate question: How did we approach the negotiations? First, Mr. Speaker, we selected Simon Reisman as chief negotiator. He was the most able person we had, a man of great talent and unparalleled negotiating experience. Mr. Reisman's involvement in trade policy on behalf of Canada goes back to the very foundation of the GATT four decades ago. In bilateral trade, he was best known as the architect and negotiator of the highly successful Auto Pact, which has brought such prosperity to Ontario and Canada. Mr. Reisman then selected a team of the best and brightest public servants in the trade policy field, one of the finest such groups ever assembled—and properly so, Mr. Speaker. The mission we were giving them was one of the most important in Canadian history. Mr. Reisman led a series of consultations with Canada's private sector to ensure that the Government got the best possible counsel.

Throughout the negotiations, the provincial Governments were regularly briefed and fully consulted. Detailed analyses were conducted of all sectors of the economy. Comprehensive research was conducted on policy issues, ranging from United States trade remedy laws to the European experience in trade liberalization.

When we entered negotiations with the Americans, we had done our homework, thoroughly. As Prime Minister, I involved the Premiers in this process on a basis and to a degree that, I believe, Mr. Speaker, was unprecedented in our history. In a federation like ours, I met the Premiers on 11 separate occasions in intensive working sessions. They were intimately involved in the negotiations of the Free Trade Agreement from beginning to end.

Moreover, the continuing committee of Ministers and officials from the federal and provincial Governments met almost monthly to review progress and to guide our negotiation strategy.

[English]

Throughout, the entire trade initiative was guided with skill and resolve by the Ministers responsible for international trade during this historic period: The Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Kelleher), the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), and now the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1600)

Mr. Mulroney: What are the results? In a phrase, security of access and opportunity for economic growth. It is a good deal for Canada, one that serves our national interest, one that fulfils the objectives—not perfectly. Perfection is a rare commodity in our society and in our lives—but it is one that largely fulfilled the objectives that we had set for ourselves and for the Government of Canada.

Most of all, it is a fair deal for both countries, for Canada and the United States. Most obviously, Canadians will pay less for American products. All tariffs on U.S. imports will be removed over the next 10 years. There will be no more U.S. quotas on Canadian uranium exports. There will be no more U.S. import tax on Canadian oil exports. There will be no more U.S. customs user fees on any Canadian exports.

Most fundamentally and most importantly, the agreement will replace the politics of trade with the rule of law, a feature which is of particular value to the smaller of the two trading partners. From now on, any U.S. trade legislation affecting Canada will have to be consistent with the free trade agreement. From now on, all actions by the United States within the scope of the agreement, whether by the executive branch, the Congress or independent regulatory agencies, will be subject to notification beforehand, to consultation and, if necessary, to dispute settlement. From now on, final decisions on disputes regarding access to that vital market will be taken, not just by the Americans as they have been all too often in the past, but by Americans and Canadians acting together.

Canadian exporters will have a solid defence against harassment by their American competitors. This is good news, for example, to the fish and potato exporters of the Maritimes who have endured six vexatious but expensive investigations launched by their American competitors. Canadian industry will at last escape being sideswiped as the Americans pursue safeguard actions against other foreign exporters, but hit us on the rebound. This is good news for industrialized Ontario particularly.

Canadian exporters of lumber, shakes and shingles, and other goods will at last be able to challenge unilateral decisions imposing duties on their exports to the United States of America. Bi-national review will assure greater fairness, greater objectivity and, I believe, greater caution by U.S. regulators in the first instance. This is particularly good news for British Columbia, Ontario, Québec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and, indeed, for all exporting provinces.

This agreement builds on 50 years of bilateral and multilateral negotiations with the United States. The agreement takes a hodgepodge of existing agreements and ad hoc arrangements and translates them into a coherent and binding framework of rules tailored to the trade and investment realities of the 21st century. The agreement establishes a new blueprint for almost $200 billion a year in two-way trade. There will be new opportunities for duty free and more secure access by Canadian exporters. That is why our pork and beef industries and manufacturers in all regions are expressing solid support for the free trade agreement. Its provisions regarding services, business travel, investment, government procurement, trade remedy law and dispute settlement, establish trade rules for the future for Canada and the United States and I believe, as others have said in this House and elsewhere, offer a model to the world.

This is why this particular agreement was strongly welcomed by the industrialized leaders at their summit meeting in Toronto in June, and was underlined, and I quote the leaders from the Socialist President of France to the Conservative Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, who unanimously said this was a "catalyst" for the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Quote him fully. What did he add?

Mr. Mulroney: Which I suppose, Mr. Speaker, if nothing else, proves that some socialists have their heads on properly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Mulroney: But the agreement's main achievement lies not so much in the removal of tariffs or in new rules as in its ability to change attitudes, increase confidence and inspire innovation. The combination of new and better rules and improved dispute settlement procedures will ensure that trade and investment between Canada and the United States become more secure and more predictable. The success will be measured by the confidence of investors, Canadians, Americans and others, to establish new plants in Canada and to modernize existing facilities.

This is already happening as business now gears up for the implementation phase. This agreement provides a more positive framework for change. With it, I believe, we can meet the economic challenges of the next century. As the respected economist, Richard Lipsey, has stated:

> If the agreement turns Canadian policy outward, it will have done its job, irrespective of the specific gains that it undoubtedly achieves.
> To reject the agreement is to give up major gains on market access and to risk turning Canadian policies in the wrong direction—away from accepting globalization and toward the now obsolete, inward-looking policies of the 1970s.

Canada cannot go back to the prescriptions that were tried and have failed. With this agreement, we can move forward with confidence and pride in our ability to compete and excel among the very best in the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have heard, here and elsewhere, some myths and options, and I would like to respond briefly to some of those comments. I readily recognize that the concept of free trade itself troubles some Canadians. I would like to reassure them as much as I can. Free trade is indeed a big step—but in the right direction. We hear fears expressed about a "loss of sovereignty" that "our identity is at risk" or that "our social programs will vanish." Let history and experience be our guide. Canada is surer of its identity today, Mr. Speaker, than it ever was before throughout its history. Canada's international personality in the global community (especially now with the Commonwealth, the leadership of our Government, the creation of La Francophonie made possible mostly through the cooperation shown by this Government and our admission to the G-7 two years ago) is more mature and we express ourselves more independently than ever in the past. Our commitment and our capacity to protect our economic, political and territorial sovereignty have never been stronger. Our artistic community is flourishing. An officially bilingual nation whose constitutional framework we have recently strengthened and whose linguistic foundation we have recently reinforced, Canada has the significant advantage of participating in two of the world's great languages, and all of this is helping us, not only in our own country, but also abroad.

Our culture, Mr. Speaker, is a unique and rich mosaic of thought, experience and values we acquire from individuals, from every corner of the world. Canadian writers—Robertson Davies, Michel Tremblay, Mordecai Richler, Antonine Maillet, and Margaret Atwood—have attracted an international audience as never before. Our performing artists—from the National Ballet to Brian Adams, Céline Dion, André-Phillipe Gagnon and great symphony orchestras—have fans throughout the world, and more and more so. This brilliant and progressive affirmation of Canada's cultural influence took place, as trade with the United States expanded, year after year. Similarly, as Canada-U.S. trade grew steadily in importance over the years, successive Canadian governments brought in the Old Age Pension Plan, Family Allowances, National Health Care, the Canada Pension Plan, all uniquely Canadian initiatives. Very soon, this Parliament will pass legislation establishing one of the most advanced child-care systems anywhere in the world. If anything, the prosperity the Free Trade Agreement will bring will make these and other social programs easier to sustain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, Bernard Landry, who was the Minister of International Trade in the Government of Quebec, a very competent one at that, addressed the question of social programs in the context of free trade, and I quote: "My experience and my background, as well as the Government to which I belonged, all make me very sensitive to social issues, yet I have never seen the slightest evidence that Canadian social measures would be threatened by a free trade agreement. Such a claim does not stand up to rational analysis. Briefly, how would this rational analysis go? He answers: "The American system is not nearly as good as ours and it is a lot more expensive. So why should we change ours to adapt to theirs, when ours is less expensive and better?"

This is an excellent opportunity and an excellent answer given by an expert in economic matters, someone who studied in depth this issue of free trade and its impact on social programs in Canada. Mr. Landry concludes that free trade is likely to assist our social programs, and this is one of the reasons why we support it so enthusiastically and vigourously.

• (1610)

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: As for sovereignty or identity, I believe a recent editorial in Toronto's The Globe and Mail put this important question in perspective. I quote:

> No province is more dependent on U.S. markets than Ontario and 50 per cent of Ontario's trade is auto-related—an industry unusually dominated by foreign firms operating under a 23 year old bilateral trade pact (a limited form of free trade).
> Is Ontario less Canadian than Alberta or Quebec as a result?
> Is Ontario less committed to national independence now than it was before the Auto Pact sewed it so closely to a North American market? Surely not.

The editorial concludes: "But Ontario is obviously more prosperous". That has been the result of greater trade for Ontario with the United States—prosperity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We are proud of that tremendous prosperity in Ontario. We want to strengthen that great prosperity and, by using similar instruments in the process, enable other regions of Canada to grow in similar fashion thereby building a stronger nation for all Canadians.

If there is a link between increased trade with the United States and our quintessential Canadianness, it is that free trade enhances Canadian vitality and ensures the expression of our nationhood. The weight of history and experience, I believe, confirms that basic truth.

Consider the question posed by Newfoundland artist Christopher Pratt:

> "If the Newfoundland identity could survive total economic and political integration with another country, why do Canadians see the removal of some remaining barriers to trade with the United States . . . as a threat to our identity?"

I think the living testimony of the fact that there has been no change in the Newfoundland personality is exemplified every day by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is a bonus for Canada.

We hear from some that this trade agreement represents a radical turn, a monumental shift in Canadian economic policy, a sharp departure from trade policies pursued in the past. This is simply not the case. The agreement builds on a half century or more of experience in Canada and throughout the world of reducing barriers to trade. It builds on previous bilateral trade agreements dating back to 1935—the defence production sharing agreement, the Auto Pact, and many other bilateral initiatives.

The free trade agreement follows squarely and consistently in that tradition, a tradition that has worked increasingly to Canada's advantage.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is suggested in some quarters that Canada is rejecting the GATT. But essentially the facts prove otherwise. The Free Trade Agreement is fully consistent with the GATT. It discriminates against no country. Barriers are not raised against any other nation. Much of the language and the principles enunciated in the Free Trade Ageement are taken directly from the GATT. Moreover, both Canada and the United States have reaffirmed their existing GATT commitments, rights and obligations and are mutually pledged to advance the goals of the current round of multilateral trade negotiations. Remember as well, that Canada will host in Montreal this December a mid-term review of the multilateral trade negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it is also a good idea to mention that Canada will host in December, in Montreal, a mid-term conference to monitor the progress made in international trade negotiations. This is an important milestone to ensure progress towards genuine improvements in the world trading system.

There is widespread recognition, as acknowledged at the Toronto Summit and elsewhere, that this agreement offers a model for needed reforms in the GATT. It establishes new frontiers—in services, agriculture, investment, business travel and dispute resolution.

[English]

Other critics contend that Canada did not achieve improved or more secure access to the United States market. Let us examine the facts. There are numerous concrete examples in which access has been improved by the removal of all tariffs, by the right of national treatment to prevent U.S. discrimination against Canada, through greater access to American government purchasing, easier entry of temporary workers, to cite just a few.

Mr. Axworthy: That's it. You just did it.

Mr. Mulroney: Equally important are the measures which make our access more secure. New and important constraints have been negotiated against safeguard actions which in the past have allowed the United States unilaterally to impose duties or quotas on Canadian exports.

We all recall Canada's experience with shakes and singles when we were the target, or on specialty steel when we were not the target but we were affected nonetheless. Such action will be against the rules of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

Most significant of all are the dispute settlement provisions which ensure that Canadian exporters are less vulnerable to arbitrary interpretations or capricious applications of U.S. trade law. Exporters, jurists and business people alike are virtually unanimous in recognizing that the dispute settlement procedures under the free trade agreement are superior to those available under the GATT or in any other trade agreement that has been negotiated to date. It is generally acknowledged, I believe, that what has been accomplished in the area of dispute settlement is a triumph for the rule of law in international trade.

From time to time the Opposition contends that Canadians have not been exempted from U.S. trade laws. I have not, by the way, heard any of them advocating that Canada should give the United States an exemption from Canadian trade laws, which is the mirror image of what they purport to seek for Canada.

This Canadian Government has no intention of allowing Americans, or anyone else, to dump their products in our market, or to take advantage of subsidies to undercut Canadian companies in their own market. Until our laws are replaced by a system of new disciplines, and Canada and the United States have given each other a pledge to work together for five to seven years to create those new disciplines, our laws, the laws of Canada, remain in place to protect our industries and our workers from unfair trading practices.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Some people in this House and elsewhere profess concern about the energy provisions of the agreement. Interestingly, those concerns do not come from the Canadians who produce the energy nor the Canadians who invest in energy. These concerns do not come from the Canadians who work in the oil fields, nor the provinces that own the resource.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Let me deal directly with the pricing argument: Under the free trade agreement, Canadians will be able to sell their energy for whatever price the market determines, at home or in the United States. In this regard, the northeastern states represent a particularly lucrative market for our electricity and natural gas exports. For example, Quebec has recently signed a 21-year contract with New York to export electricity for more than double the price that Quebecers pay. This is possible because the market alternatives for our energy in New York are more expensive oil-fired generation using imported oil from offshore sources.

Similarly, Alberta natural gas stands to make promising inroads in the New England and mid-Atlantic U.S. markets. For decade after decade western Canada has only asked for the same opportunities as other provinces. Now it has an opportunity to grow and to prosper, and all Members should be supporting it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The argument that we can be forced under the agreement to share our energy resources deserves but a brief comment. What we have agreed to do in times of significant oil shortages, and what the previous Liberal Government undertook to do for all of the western industrialized countries under the International Energy Agency in 1974, is to reduce our consumption and to supply our foreign customers, including the United States, with a proportion of our supply at commercial terms. While the critics have been inventing problems on the energy issue, they have completely overlooked one huge advantage. We have achieved for the producing provinces, and for all Canadians, guaranteed access to the United States market.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Billions of dollars of energy exports formerly subject to the winds and whims of U.S. protectionism will now enter that vast market free and unencumbered. Think of what this means for investment and job creation here in Canada. Think of the beneficial impact that this will have upon our regions of Canada that have been asking for fair access to that tremendous market. Think of what it means to the hopes and aspirations of young people from western Canada, British Columbia, to Newfoundland and Labrador whose resources are so vital in the development of their regions.

[Translation]

Small wonder that Premiers such as Robert Bourassa, Don Getty and Grant Devine so strongly support this agreement. The producing provinces have been seeking precisely such a trading instrument for decades. It gives their regions an historic opportunity for durable prosperity.

[English]

But guaranteed access to the huge American market also means more investment and more exploration in Canada. It enhances our security of supply and benefits consumers as well as producers. To suggest that Canadians have given up control of our energy resources is nonsense. Decisions about how we develop our resources and what we do with them—even in times of shortage—are decisions that only Canadians will make, in the national interest of Canada.

As for water, Canada's rivers and lakes are not for sale. Geography is not a commercial commodity under the GATT, the free trade agreement, or any other agreement. No specious argumentation nor any distorted interpretation from the Opposition will ever alter that plain fact. Listen to what—

An Hon. Member: Who wrote this?

Mr. Mulroney: A Member asks, "Who wrote it". Listen to what Senator Van Roggen says. He wrote it. I want to thank my hon. friend for triggering my memory. Senator Van Roggen says: "Many of the attacks on the free trade agreement are mischievous, and motivated by partisan politics. The nonsense about water diversions is a good example. Water diversions", says Senator Van Roggen "never entered into the negotiations".

[Translation]

In fact, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this agreement which obliges anyone in either country to sell anything they do not wish to sell! The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is fond of saying that this agreement puts Canada "up for sale." Ultimately, silly slogans and blind jingoism will crumble when hit with the truth, when confronted with the facts. The Agreement in essence adopts current Canadian investment policies—policies that have manifestly won broad support in Canada and around the world and which helped rescue our economy from the blight of previous regimes. Traditionally sensitive sectors such as transportation, communications, culture and energy continue to be subject to special restrictions. Major direct takeovers will still be subject to review i.e. about two thirds of all corporate assets in Canada.

What is often neglected, Mr. Speaker, is what Canada has gained in terms of investments namely that our investments in the United States which, per capita, are three times greater than American investments here will not suffer discrimination, and that is a tremendous advantage for Canadian investors.

[English]

In fact, Mr. Speaker, cries of "sell-out" and "51st state" are not new to those responsible for the conduct of relations with the United States. As a distinguished Canadian once observed:

> "The picture of weak and timid Canadian negotiators being pushed around and brow-beaten by American representatives into settlements that were 'sell-outs' is a false and distorted one. It is often painted, however, by Canadians who think that a sure way to get applause and support at home is to exploit our anxieties and exaggerate our suspicions over U.S. power and policies."

That was what Lester Pearson wrote in his memoirs, published in 1972.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Pearson's assessment is as valid today as it was then, only today it applies directly to the exaggerations and distortions of the very Party that Mr. Pearson once led so proudly and so well.

[Translation]

To counter such misguided arguments, the Quebec Government published an analysis of the agreement, parts of which should be of interest to all my colleagues in the House. There have been claims that the Government or the Premier of Quebec have not read the document. Indeed, we now have an analysis of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States as viewed by Quebec. It is vital to Quebec and Canada. Here is what the Province of Quebec has to say in its analysis item by item and chapter by chapter.

Customs matters: During free trade negotiations, Quebec insisted that clear rules on customs matters be spelled out, to avoid the diversion of trade. We are satisfied with the rules adopted in this respect. Mature industries: The periods of reduction of customs tariffs with respect to mature industries reflect Quebec's requests in this regard. Agriculture: Quebec requested that agriculture be accorded special status in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, to ensure that farm support programs are maintained, especially income stabilization programs and agricultural marketing boards. In this respect, the Agreement satisfies Quebec's demands.

And now the conclusion drawn by Premier Bourassa and all his colleagues, which is so important to our producers in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada, and I quote:

> "Quebec is satisfied with the Agreement, especially with the treatment accorded Canadian supply management programs, federal or provincial income stabilization programs, farm insurance and financing programs and recognition of provincial jurisdiction over agricultural marketing boards."

By the way, the agreement on services is consistent with Quebec's position. Investment: The Agreement reflects the position of the Quebec Government, which hoped that negotiations would create a more stable, open and liberal climate to encourage investment. Institutional provisions: The Quebec Government called for the establishment of a bipartite commission at the ministerial level to manage the Agreement.

As to cultural industries, indeed, Mr. Speaker, this Government is concerned with that highly important reality, Quebec's and Canada's cultural welfare. You can imagine with what care and attention Quebec leaders reviewed every provision that dealt with that major cultural issue. And here is the conclusion. Quebec insisted that the cultural industries be excluded from the free trade agreement. The agreement reflects the position of Quebec and Canada in this respect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And here is the conclusion—overall, Quebec is satisfied with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. The Quebec Government's support for the agreement is not based solely on compliance with the conditions it initially deemed essential. The agreement also generally satisfies the expectations of the vast majority of Quebec organizations, which apprised the Government of their viewpoint during negotiations, and following the signing of the agreement. Although the agreement is not always as far-reaching as we had hoped, it unquestionably represents a step in the right direction. There, Mr. Speaker, we have a review of each provision by a provincial Government that was deeply involved in the negotiations. The Quebec Government, Hon. Robert Bourassa's Liberal Government, the Leader of the Opposition, Hon. Jacques Parizeau, all Quebecers say "yes" to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Under the free trade agreement, Mr. Speaker, the Auto Pact, so vital to the national interest and so important to Ontario's economy, will be more secure as part of a broader accord. The President of Chrysler Canada, Moe Closs, has said, and I quote:

> "The Canada/U.S. F.T.A. will save the Autopact . . . As we see it, the F.T.A. will permit the Canadian auto industry to continue to grow and prosper by ensuring that our access to the vast U.S. vehicle market will not be hindered by tariff barriers and the threat of trade irritants."

Clearly, the Auto Pact, which is subject to cancellation by either party on 12 months' notice, will be significantly less vulnerable to abrogation as part of this comprehensive free trade agreement than if it stood alone against the winds of protectionist action in the United States Congress.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Moreover, the Auto Pact's safeguards are retained and the content rules strengthened, to the advantage of North American producers.

What about the most vital aspect of all, jobs? The overwhelming consensus among private, non-governmental research institutions and economists in Canada is that there will be a net gain in jobs for Canada.

I know that some parties and some groups in Canada do not view jobs with the same priority that the Government does. It is a most important consideration in the conclusion of this kind of arrangement, and all of the independent analysis, mostly all that can be obtained, indicates that the gains in job creation will be substantial.

Mr. Axworthy: Minuscule.

Mr. Mulroney: In April of this year, the Economic Council of Canada concluded an extensive impact analysis of the free trade agreement and determined that the agreement will generate some 250,000 new jobs as the agreement takes effect. The logic is straightforward. Improved access to the U.S. market will lead to more investment, larger and more specialized enterprises, less protection, less harassment, lower consumer prices and higher wages and incomes. This logic is already at work in Canada.

In the years since the Government has committed itself to the goal of the free trade agreement with the United States, investment, job creation and growth in Canada are second to none in the industrialized world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Canadian business people in the hundreds of thousands are demonstrating their endorsement of the agreement through concrete deeds.

[Translation]

Investors from Canada and around the world have already said "yes" to the agreement, as witnessed by their continuing interest in the Canadian investment market. Concerns have been raised about adjustment programs. A panel of prominent Canadians, chaired by Jean De Granpré and appointed by the Government, is examining this question, and we will be considering their recommendations with great care.

But I am encouraged by the fact that labour adjustment has not been a major factor in free trade and even common market arrangements in other parts of the world. Canadian manpower mobility never has been so great. According to certain estimates for example, each year 4 million Canadian workers, or one out of four, change jobs. In other words, with or without free trade, adjustment for Canadian workers is an important fact of life in Canada. The best way to meet this challenge is through economic growth. And the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Speaker, will contribute significantly to this growth. And what are the alternatives? We all know it is important, before accepting or rejecting something, to consider the alternatives.

So, on October 26, 1987, the Leader of the Opposition announced in this House he would "tear up" the F.T.A. Now he has proposed what he describes as a five-point alternative. Let us examine the five points.

Who can quarrel with efforts to strengthen and streamline the GATT. It is an objective fully in line with what Canada's team at the GATT is presently attempting to achieve. Similarly, who would challenge the idea of modernizing the international monetary system? That is precisely what we are doing, Mr. Speaker, especially now that this government has gained admission for Canada to the G-7 table, to help coordinate such efforts. We have certainly never doubted the need to encourage Canadian companies to export and become internationally competitive. We have introduced policies and programs responding to that objective, and I think they are working. Our exports are expanding and not only to the United States. In the first seven months of this year, our exports to Japan are up a whopping 54 per cent over the same period last year, and that is no small measure of the success of Canadian programs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: But the United States are still, by far, our biggest customer and our largest supplier and, if relations with your biggest customer are in trouble, you correct the problem, you do it thoroughly and you do it well.

• (1640)

[English]

What of the sector by sector approach that is now being recommended by the Opposition? Listen to the counsel of the Trade Minister in the Liberal Government who tried the sectoral approach, the Hon. Gerald Regan, who said recently:

> "When I was Minister of Trade in Mr. Trudeau's Government, I recognized the importance of obtaining better guarantees of access to the vital American market to which we send the lion's share of our exports.
> I sought to move in that direction by initiating free trade talks with the United States on a sector by sector basis.
> The defeat of the Liberals ended that effort, but I have come to the conclusion that the present free trade project is more meaningful, more courageous and an important undertaking—more important than our limited negotiations."

Mr. Regan was a far-sighted Minister then and continues to be a man of vision now. He wanted to go further. He was held back by the forces of protectionism and negativism in his own Party.

And then, of course, there is the GATT to consider. It is curious indeed that a Party seeking to strengthen the GATT embraces a sectoral approach which most experts, including Premier Robert Bourassa two weeks ago in Quebec City, consider to be inconsistent with GATT rules. The "Five-Point Plan" withers under the most elementary scrutiny. I urge the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to heed the advice of one of his Liberal colleagues in the Senate, George Van Roggen, a wise parliamentarian who has spent more than a decade analysing trade policy, especially in the area of Canada-U.S. trade. Here is what he said:

> "It is a pity that what is essentially an economic agreement has been so distorted by its critics.
> It would be a tragedy if the opportunity were lost to conclude an arrangement that offers such large benefits to Canada."

If only, Mr. Speaker, Senator Van Roggen's senatorial colleagues could be permitted the same freedom to decide, the same opportunity to arrive at their own independent judgment of what is in the best interests for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Where is George?

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, somebody has said: "Where is George?"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The opposition Parties in the House obviously disagree with more than 250 leading Canadian economists who stated unequivocally in April of this year that the free trade agreement is:

> "Canada's best option in a world threatened by increased protectionism, since it provides an historic opportunity to ensure a greater degree of access to the U.S. market than Canadian producers would otherwise enjoy... better investment opportunities... lower prices for consumers... and a higher standard of living for Canadians."

When you dispel all the myths, when you analyse all the alternatives, as responsible parliamentarians must do, you find that with its imperfections this free trade agreement meets the most fundamental test of all; it serves the national interest.

We have the ability to manage change. With this agreement we now have the instrument to ensure that we can manage change in Canada's national interest. There will be greater opportunity and more certainty in the future for our exporters, our investors and our workers. The decision we make on the free trade agreement is the key step in redeeming the promise of this great country. With this agreement, with sound economic management and with stronger scientific, technological, educational and literacy programs, we can build a much better Canada. We have a clear choice.

The 21st century can be one of enormous accomplishment for all Canadians. We have the brain power, the resources and we have the national will. Canada is young and Canadians can still dream of a destiny unattainable by most of the world. The free trade agreement, most of all, is about our most precious asset—our youth. The young people of Canada have been uppermost in my mind as Prime Minister throughout this long and challenging negotiation. They shall be the principal beneficiaries of this new trading agreement. They shall become the new leaders of Canada in a new world in a new century.

James Joyce, one of the favourite Irish poets of the Leader of the Opposition and myself, once observed that:

> "The past is consumed in the present and the present is alive only because it gives rise to the future."

The free trade agreement is about Canada's future—one Canada, united, prosperous and strong with guarantees of prosperity and economic growth for the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We cannot compete in the world by withdrawing from it. We cannot gain freer access to the world's markets by limiting access to our own. We cannot grow and prosper by shrinking from opportunity and turning our back on reality.

[Translation]

We chose to negotiate not because it was easy, not because it was without political risk, but because it was in the national interest. We are proud of our distinctiveness as Canadians. We are proud of the values that mark us clearly as Canadians. We are determined to preserve and enrich those qualities which ensure a uniquely Canadian way of life. Our future will be built by Canadians doing their very best, providing world class results in a genuine national commitment to excellence.

[English]

All Canadians, those born in Canada and those who have chosen it for their home, can share in this great enterprise. Let us give them a chance to get on with the job. The decision is for all of us. Canadians have the fundamental ability, the skill and the talent to compete and to excel. As a government our responsibility is to provide the best environment possible to allow Canadians, individual Canadians, their chance to succeed. I believe we can do this by endorsing the free trade agreement today. By doing so we say yes to free trade; yes to jobs for our youth; and yes to a more prosperous future for Canada. We say yes to the great hopes and dreams of what this splendid nation can genuinely provide to our children, to the cause of freedom and to prosperity here and around the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the history of a country and a people is not written in one day. However, there are days in a country's history that are decisive for the future of its people, and the date of the next election is such a day. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is the only person who knows when that day will be, but when Canadians go to the polls, they will decide what happens to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, the agreement that is the subject of our debate today. Mr. Speaker, this debate concerns more than just our trade relations with our neighbours to the south. Canada's very future is at stake. The question is, what kind of country we will have at the beginning of the twenty-first century. Will Canada be independent, sovereign and autonomous, or will it be an American colony?

• (1650)

[English]

This debate is not simply about the future of our trading relationship with the United States. It is about the future of Canada. I travelled across this country again this summer from Prince George to Carbonear, from Québec City to Saskatoon. I have visited farmers, fishermen, factory workers, office workers. I have talked to new Canadians, I have talked to young Canadians, and I have talked to our older Canadian citizens from almost every walk of life. I have marvelled once again at the sheer diversity of our country and the spirit which pulls us together as a nation. It is a spirit not easily expressed. Such words do not come easily to Canadians, someone who works the land in Saskatchewan, digs a mine in Kirkland Lake, runs a business in Montreal, fishes for salmon off Vancouver Island, or types memos in a Winnipeg office tower. However, I tell you the feeling is there. It is there in every Canadian and it is strong. It is a sense of belonging to a unique nation. It is living in a very special place.

[Translation]

And Canadians, better than any other nation, appreciate unity in diversity. That is why our country is officially and firmly bilingual and multicultural. Instead of homogenizing our citizens, our regions and our cultures, we cherish our differences because they make us unique, rich, proud, tolerant and responsible. Granted, harmony in diversity demands maturity, vision and great openness of mind. Striking this fragile balance is a challenge we must meet every moment, every day, with patience and perspicacity, without flinching and without ever abdicating our responsibility.

[English]

We love this country. It is precious to us. Because we love this country, what we have built and what we stand for as Canadians, we will not allow it to be thrown away by the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What the Government is telling us to do in this trade deal is to close our eyes, sign away our future as Canadians and the right to shape the destiny and direction of our country. It is telling us to give up that which is most vital to us, our sovereignty, our way of life, the way we do things.

In exchange for what? In exchange for a leap of faith which even the Government's most optimistic predictions describe as having only marginal economic benefits.

Yet the Prime Minister and other advocates of this deal, like the dream merchants of another era, paint a picture of wealth and prosperity, as he did this afternoon, of unrivalled riches unheard of in history, or certainly in contemporary economic reality.

It is inarguably a very attractive sales pitch. Free trade. Who is against free trade? Who is against anything free? Positive words. Seductive words. Easy rhetoric. Free trade. Free gift. Free lunch. Yet Canadians know there is no free lunch, there is always a price, and the price of this deal is just too high. The price is unacceptable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The price is our sovereignty, our freedom to make our own choices, to decide what is right for us, to go on building the kind of country we want. That freedom, that sovereignty, is our most valuable asset. When you strip away all the technical jargon of this deal, that is what the Government wants to give away, our freedom to be different, our freedom to be ourselves, to do things our own way, not the American way.

We admire the Americans. We share many of the same hopes and goals. We are fortunate to have them as neighbours. We are proud to have them as friends. Yet as much as we respect and admire our American friends we do not want to become Americans.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The United States is certainly the most powerful democracy in the world, but it is not the only democracy. It is not the only country that values its independence and its freedoms and its ability to make its own choices. So do we. We have chosen to make a separate place for ourselves on the northern half of this continent. We have chosen to do it in a different way. They may not see it. They may not recognize it. But we are different.

The Americans were born of revolution. We were born of the joining of British and French traditions. Their Constitution calls for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The British North America Act called for peace, order, and good government. The United States is a categorical country. Stephen Decatur perhaps put it best once when he said: "My country, may it always be right, but right or wrong, my country".

For an American "you are either with us or against us". Choices are clear-cut. We Canadians instinctively seek a consensus and a compromise.

• (1700)

While both countries are federal states, they have a highly centralized Government in Washington. Ours is much less so. Even the largest of the states like California and New York do not compare to the overwhelming influence in our own confederation of Ontario and Quebec.

The American frontier was explored and settled with the discovery of California. The American frontier is closed. Our frontier remains open. Our frontier is the North, and it is very important to us. We look northward as a nation. We value the resources of our North, we treasure its ecology, and we admire its people. We are deeply concerned about the militarization of the Arctic. As we look around the Pole we feel kinship for Scandinavians, Russians, and Alaskans.

The Americans put all their faith in market forces. Yes, we believe in enterprise and we believe in rewarding success, but as Canadians we have the ultimate goals of fairness and sharing. We feel that those purposes have been accomplished better in a mixed economy.

Their society is a giant melting pot while ours is a cultural mosaic. We have two official languages. The United States is a unilingual nation. We have a parliamentary tradition which is being honoured here today in a momentous debate. Theirs is a presidential system with a separation of powers.

We are more influenced by geography, by our environment, and by the vast expanses of wilderness reflected so dramatically in the paintings of Lawren Harris, A. Y. Jackson, and others of the Group of Seven. My favourite painter, Emily Carr, is from British Columbia.

Every Canadian dreams, not only of his own home but of a cottage, a cabin, a tent beside a lake or a river. With all the black flies, the mosquitoes, and the thunderstorms, it is his own escape, his retreat in the wilderness, something he can call his own. That is very much a part of us.

The Government opposite and the supporters of this trade deal are perpetrating the myth that because we as a Party oppose this particular trade deal we are anti-American. That Conservative myth is completely false. We are not anti-American. We are pro-Canadian and we do not like being sold out as Wayne Gretzky was. What Peter Pocklington is to Edmonton, Brian Mulroney is to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver—Quadra): Mr. Speaker, let us not tell each other fairy stories or try to rewrite history. There was no iron curtain between Canada and the United States before this Conservative Government was elected. Trade relations between Canada and the United States did not start in 1984. In fact, previous Liberal governments have always perfectly understood the importance of our trade with the United States. We have always tried to reduce trade and tariff barriers between our two countries. We have always worked very hard to expand, increase and improve our trade with our neighbours to the south. That is a known historic fact.

Since the end of World War II, thanks to successive GATT rounds we have lowered our tariffs from an average 40 per cent down to 4 per cent. Today, before this Government signed a trade agreement with the United States, about 80 per cent of everything we sold on the American market crossed the border duty free. We obtained this without conceding one iota of our sovereignty to the United States.

However, to phase out 20 per cent of remaining tariffs over ten years, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sold the whole store. He sold us out to the Americans.

The Liberals were never afraid, and have never refused, to discuss trade with the Americans, far from it. What some people have forgotten or choose to ignore altogether in the present debate is the initial reasons that led the Government to start the talks with the United States.

Since the last war, we have had enviable success in negotiating with the United States within an international framework. However, the Conservative Government decided to take a different approach by initiating comprehensive bilateral talks with the United States. Basically, the purpose of initiating bilateral talks was to obtain secure access to the U.S. market. To achieve this, there were two things we needed first: exemption from U.S. protectionist legislation and a compulsory arbitration system to deal with cases when both countries could not agree on enforcement and implementation of this exemption. Both conditions were absolutely essential.

[English]

We in this Party have been saying that ever since these negotiations first started. We have said all along that any agreement with the United States that did not have a specific exemption from American trade law, that did not exempt us from their protectionist legislation—and I speak here about the 1930 Trade Act, the American trade law of 1974, and particularly about the Omnibus Bill just passed by the Congress and signed by the President—and did not give us a dispute settlement mechanism that would enforce that exemption, would not be fair, would not be free, and would not be worth the paper it was written on.

I recall the day when the Prime Minister and his Ministers agreed with me on that point. A year ago in New York the Prime Minister, as quoted by The Wall Street Journal said, "The U.S. trade remedy laws can't apply to Canada, period". The former Minister for International Trade, the Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), said in the House of Commons that the objective of any trade agreement would be the elimination of countervail by both parties. The current Trade Minister (Mr. Crosbie) agreed with his predecessor and with the Prime Minister. He spoke to the St. John's Board of Trade in Newfoundland on July 2, 1987 and said that "unless we get out from under the threat of countervail and other U.S. trade remedy law, and unless there is an effective dispute resolution mechanism to bind the Americans to their commitments, a free trade agreement with the United States would not be a good deal for Canada."

We have been saying that ever since the negotiations started.

I have been referring to this agreement in speaking across the country and have been referring as well to the Canadian and American legislation and the presidential interpretation of that legislation. Article 1902.1 of the trade agreement signed by the Prime Minister says that the United States "reserves the right to apply its anti-dumping law and countervailing duty law to goods imported from the territory of the other Party". This is confirmed by the President's statement of administrative action submitted to Congress on July 25, which states on page 98:

> "The United States retains the right to apply its national anti-dumping and countervailing duty laws to goods of the other party and also reserves its right to amend these laws."

In other words, there is no exemption from U.S. protectionist trade laws, no matter what the Prime Minister said this afternoon. The same laws which crippled our exports of softwood lumber and potash and fish, imposed quotas on our steel, still apply.

• (1710)

It is true that we are to have a new trade tribunal, but how will this tribunal work? How will this tribunal ensure that our exports have guaranteed access into the American market? How will it protect our exporters from protectionist United States legislation?

The Prime Minister attempted to deal with that this afternoon, saying that it is a better mechanism than we ever had before. However, his speech was full of endorsements, citations and statements of approval. He never once dealt with the agreement, dealt with the argument, or referred to the document. The Minister cannot tell us because he has not read it.

The fact is that the trade tribunal will not protect us or give us an exemption from American trade law. Not only will the system be longer and costlier for Canadian exporters, the tribunal will still be unable to challenge American trade law.

I refer once again to the trade agreement. Article 1904:2 states that the tribunal can review a trade decision of the American Government, using the document's words: " . . . to determine whether such determination was in accordance with the anti-dumping or countervailing duty law of the importing Party". That is U.S. law. It goes on to state that: " . . . The anti-dumping and countervailing duty statutes of the parties, as those statutes may be amended from time to time, are incorporated into this Agreement". It does not matter what the Prime Minister says or what his endorsements say, or how the citations he can provide in the House may support him here and there, the document is quite clear.

The President's statement of administrative action is even more brutal and blunt. Again at page 98 of the President's statement, it states: "The panel cannot order statutory modifications". In other words, the tribunal cannot change or challenge American law. Therefore, Canadian exporters will not be able to challenge American law.

The tribunal has the jurisdiction only to interpret American law, using American precedent, American jurisprudence, American judicial practice. This does not only include present American law, the 1930 Trade Act, the 1974 trade law, and now the omnibus legislation, which adds a whole new series of hostile remedies against Canada, but any future law or any law as it may be amended from time to time.

The Prime Minister stood up this afternoon and said: "We have made progress. We now have the rule of law". We certainly have. It is the rule of American law, enforced by this tribunal.

Let us look at some of the precedents that the tribunal would be referring to. The Government is hoping that Canadians will not look at the fact that dozens of our programs have already been found by American authorities to confer subsidies of some kind or another. During the five to seven-year period of negotiations, the Americans will be using their definition of subsidy as it has been derived under American practice in ensuring that they impose and force that definition on us.

Yesterday the Minister attempted to explain what countervail was. He told Canadians that U.S. countervail action "had nothing to do with regional development". U.S. countervail decisions have everything to do with our regional development programs, and it is nothing short of scandalous that the Minister responsible either does not know that, has not read the deal, or is attempting to tell Canadians something completely at variance with the documents before us.

Read some of the decisions made by the U.S. Commerce Department pursuant to American law that will be binding on this tribunal. For example, in a 1986 decision on groundfish, it listed 55 separate federal, provincial and joint programs which it considered subsidies. That is part of that American jurisprudence incorporated into this agreement.

The 1986 finding of the U.S. Trade Administration of the Department of Commerce says:

> "Based upon our investigation, we determine that certain benefits which constitute subsidies within the meaning of Section 701 of the Tariff Act of 1930 as amended are being provided to producers or exporters in Canada of certain fresh Atlantic groundfish. For purposes of this investigation, the following programs are found to confer subsidies":

I obtained a copy of this agreement and went through the list of 55 programs. I will not read them all, but will describe how some of them are categorized. Under federal programs they include certain types of investment tax credits; a program for export market development; regional development incentive program; industrial and regional development program. Are these not regional equality programs?

Others include the fisheries improvement loans program; Government equity infusions into National Sea Products Limited and Fishery Products International Limited. Those are among the federal programs.

Joint federal-provincial programs include agricultural and rural development agreements; transitional programs; economic and regional development agreements. All the ERDA agreements.

Let me refer to some of the provincial programs listed in the judgment. In New Brunswick, interest rate rebates; in Newfoundland, marketing assistance; in Nova Scotia, industrial development division grants; in Prince Edward Island, technology improvement grants; in Quebec, insurance premium subsidy programs.

The list goes on and on. It also included the fishing vessel assistance program which, since 1942, was used to help fishermen build and repair boats. Suddenly in February, 1986, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) cancelled the program saying in a press release that "it had outlived its usefulness", and noted only in passing that the Americans had found it to be a countervailable subsidy.

It is becoming abundantly clear, not only to fishermen but to all Canadians, that the Conservative Government has outlived its usefulness.

Of course, we are honoured to have the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans here at the moment. While I am on the subject of the fishery, and because he and his colleague, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), have been rattling their cages, disputing what I said about Atlantic processing, let me point out a couple of facts to both Ministers. Both have been less than forthcoming on the question of whether or not the Atlantic fish processing sector is threatened by the trade agreement. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said in the House on August 19 that I "untruthfully attempted to arouse the fishermen", when I said in Carbonear, Newfoundland, that the trade deal did in fact threaten the fish processing industry. The Minister for International Trade went even further and issued a press release attacking my statement.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans then told the House that Friday that the free trade agreement in no way jeopardizes the processing regulations, and that the President's statement confirms not only that the free trade agreement grandfathers existing Atlantic processing regulations, but that the U.S. Administration will not take these regulations before the GATT. I would refer to page 18570 of Hansard to substantiate those words.

The Minister has not read Article 1205 of the agreement which specifically states that the United States retains its GATT remedies. The Minister for International Trade stated in his press release that "Mr. Turner is wrong when he says that Atlantic fish processing is threatened by the free trade agreement".

• (1720)

Before I go on, Mr. Speaker, I should point out to both Ministers that their quarrel is not with me. Their quarrel is with the President of the United States and the U.S. Congress. All I am doing, and I thought I was doing it for the benefit of both Ministers, is quoting the President's statement to Congress and the American implementing legislation, the legislation implementing the trade deal that both these Ministers say they understand and support, and may even by now have read.

The President does not agree with the Ministers. While in his statement he acknowledges that:

> "Article 1203(c) of the agreement "grandfathers" from the obligations of the agreement various specified statutes of eastern Canadian provinces."

He goes on to say, and this is all on page 70:

> "In the event that regulations pursuant to these authorities should be issued so as to apply those authorities to control the export of unprocessed fish, Section 304(e) of the implementing Bill would require the President to take one or more of the actions specified in that section . . . "

In other words, and I want to make this clear to the Minister so he understands, the Acts themselves are grandfathered, but that does not mean much because if we ever use those Acts to protect our processors—and the same thing applies even more clearly on the West Coast—the full weight of the U.S. Government will come down on our fishery. Section 304(e) of the implementing legislation tells the President what he must do:

> "Within 30 days of the application by Canada of export controls on unprocessed fish under statutes exempted from the agreement under Article 1203, or the application of landing requirements for fish caught in Canadian waters, the President shall take appropriate action to enforce U.S. rights under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that are retained in Article 1205 of the agreement;"

In addition:

> "In enforcing the United States rights referred to in paragraph (1), the President has discretion to:
>
> Bring a challenge to the offending Canadian practices before the GATT,
> Retaliate against such offending practices;
> Seek resolution directly with Canada;
> Refer the matter for dispute resolution to the Canadian-United States Trade Commission; or
> Take other action that the President considers appropriate to enforce such United States rights."

Could anything be clearer, Mr. Speaker? The President has virtually unfettered options under that legislation to retaliate at any time against an attempt by Canada to protect its processing on either coast. I suggest the two Ministers, first, read the President's statement and, second, read the American legislation and, third, stop trying to mislead Canadian fishermen and Canadians in general.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, nothing, absolutely nothing has changed in the American approach to our Canadian exporters. The Americans keep the same provisions regarding countervail, quotas, antidumping and surcharges as they had before this agreement was signed by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government itself admits that it did not get what it wanted in this Agreement, namely guaranteed access to the American market. So, what is absolutely incomprehensible and totally unacceptable for all Canadians is that this Government, despite all that, continued these negotiations and sold out our interests, without ever reaching its own objectives.

The American market remains as protectionist and as protected as ever. Their lumber industry will continue to invoke protectionist legislation every time it feels threatened. The same goes for the steel industry, potash, fisheries and agriculture. Why? Because this Government did not have the courage or the honesty to go before the Canadian people with a failure. Neither did this Prime Minister have the courage, the honesty and the integrity to tell Canadians, "Well, we really tried to reach an agreement, but it didn't work." No, the Prime Minister could not say that. He could not be honest with Canadians, because he had invested too much political capital in this agreement. It was to be any agreement at any price. He had invested too much capital to be able to tell his fellow citizens, Canadians across the country, the truth.

[English]

The Government is desperate. It is telling Canadians that without this trade deal this country faces unimagined economic disaster. I would like to quote what the Minister for International Trade told this House, and you will recall it, Mr. Speaker, on June 22:

> "We want to save the Canadian people."

He hollered.

> "If anything goes wrong with our trade relationship with the United States, we stand to lose 25 per cent of our wealth."

He went on to say about those of us who oppose this deal:

> "They want to endanger one-quarter of all the wealth generated in Canada every year."

That is a prime example of being untruthful, and the Minister knows it. But it is part of an orchestrated campaign of fear the Government is attempting to use to sell this deal. Those who support the deal also do so on the basis of presumed economic benefits. The Prime Minister spoke in glowing terms about our future this afternoon, but what do economists have to say about the Prime Minister's trade deal? They are divided. The Prime Minister says he has a list of 250 economists. I could give him another list of 250 economists who are against it. In the paper entitled Venturing Forth the Economic Council of Canada comes down, it is true, on balance in favour of the trade deal. However, its projections, like all projections, are no better than the assumptions that underlie them. Let me quote from the dissenting opinion of Raymond Koskie, a council member and a lawyer from Toronto:

> "The Council simply assumes without a shred of hard evidence, that manufacturing productivity will increase by 0.6 per cent annually under the free trade agreement (i.e. 6.0 per cent in 10 years). Naturally, such a positive assumption produces highly positive results, but those results are, with respect, useless. The Council is not demonstrating, but is assuming, that increased productivity will result from the FTA. Naturally, having assumed that the FTA would bring about higher manufacturing productivity, the Council concludes that it would also create additional employment and higher growth."

Those are projections based on untrue assumptions. Moreover, despite its rosy assumptions, the council forecasts that even after 10 years this trade deal will have increased jobs by only 1.8 per cent above the numbers expected from the status quo. The council also looked at the reverse side of the coin. It examined the implications if Canada rejected the deal and things took a turn for the worst in terms of our relationship with the United States. It developed a projection based on a number of hostile trade actions by the United States, plus a significant outflow of American investment from Canada. What was the result after 10 years? Compared with the status quo, national output would be one-fifth of 1 per cent lower. Output for employed persons would be unchanged. Disposal income would be down a mere one-fifth of 1 per cent. The unemployment rate would be up by a scant one-tenth of 1 per cent. That is from the Economic Council of Canada.

So we ask ourselves as Canadians, is it worth it? Is it worth it to sell out energy? Is it worth it to give up our right to develop our own resources, our oil, our coal, our gas, our potash, our hydro?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): And despite what the Prime Minister said, even our water, because it is in the deal and all the subsidiary documents point to its being in the deal. Is it worth it to sell out our whole agriculture, our supply management system, our grain transportation subsidies, our potato industry?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): I see someone smiling about potatoes. One of the first things the United States intends to do in this so-called free trade deal is to limit all trade in potatoes. Here again, I cite the American implementing legislation. The President, under the legislation, is authorized to negotiate an agreement—and I am using the words of the American statute:

> "—to limit the exportation and importation of all potatoes between the U.S. and Canada, including seed potatoes, fresh, chilled or frozen potatoes, dried, desiccated or dehydrated potatoes, and potatoes otherwise prepared or preserved."

So much for free trade on potatoes. So much for the economies of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. They have been sold out.

• (1730)

I ask you once again, Mr. Speaker, is it worth it to give away control of our own capital markets?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Is it worth it to give away control of our own investment policy?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Is it worth it to sacrifice the Auto Pact by taking away the safeguards over a period of years?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Is it worth it to impede our ability to create new cultural initiatives? I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is it worth it? My answer, and the answer of the majority of Canadians in the next election, will be a strong, unequivocal, clear no.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister should admit that this Agreement goes well beyond trade. The whole agreement is based on a concept called national treatment. Section 105 of this agreement is quite clear. Canada will have to give the United States national treatment in investment and in goods and services.

The Agreement does affect our social programs, despite the Prime Minister's statements. It also affects our regional development programs, our agricultural support programs. During the next round of negotiations that will take from five to seven years, both parties will try to find a common definition of subsidy. That is where all our programs will be harmonized with those of the United States.

That is why we must ask ourselves whether Canadians want to harmonize our minimum wage with Wyoming's, which is $1.60 an hour. Do Canadians want to harmonize our unemployment insurance programs with the United States, where only a quarter of the unemployed are covered, at a rate that is only a fraction of the Canadian rate? Do Canadians want to harmonize our maternity leave with a country that has no equivalent program? In the United States, only about 40 per cent of women receive maternity benefits, and in most cases for less than six weeks.

Do we really want to harmonize our health insurance plan with a country where one quarter of women of child-bearing age have no medical insurance? Do we really want to harmonize with a country where 37 million Americans have absolutely no medical insurance? A country where the federal medicare program is not accessible for more than half the people living below the poverty line? A country where a serious illness can easily bankrupt you?

Personally, I prefer to live in a country where they do not check your credit card before they check your pulse when you have to go to hospital.

[English]

This agreement talks about the free flow of market forces. I believe in the market system, in competition, in private enterprise and in rewarding success. However, I have to remind the House and through you, Mr. Speaker, Canadians from coast to coast that, historically, Canada was not built on free market forces. This country became a nation in 1867. Negotiations began in 1864, because it wanted to resist the continental pressures of the United States. This country deliberately built itself east and west and then north to resist those continental pressures. We built a railway which brought British Columbia into Confederation in 1871. We persuaded Prince Edward Island to join this Confederation in 1873 with a direct guarantee for communication and transport. The Terms of Union in 1949, persuaded Newfoundland to come in under the same guarantees.

We built a railway. We built a national highway. We established a national broadcasting system. We established and built a national pipeline and a national airline—all to build an infrastructure that would hold a relatively small population together in a massive land mass. We deliberately resisted the market forces of the United States.

Free market forces alone would not have given us public housing, or a public transportation network, or the best medical care system in the world, the Canadian Wheat Board, or a very comprehensive support system for the weaker elements in Canadian society. What I am saying is not anti-American; it is pro-Canadian. The Americans have always been our closest friends and our closest allies, as well as our best trading partner. That will not change whether this deal goes through or not. That certainly will not change when a Liberal Government returns to Ottawa.

We heard this afternoon from the Prime Minister that those of us who do not support his deal are timid and afraid. We are accused of having no confidence in Canada's future. But who really are the frightened ones? Who are the ones rushing into this trade deal with the United States looking for Big Brother? Who were the frightened ones afraid of putting this deal to the test of the Canadian people? This is a deal that they tried to keep secret. They tried to hide it from Canadians for more than 1,000 days of secret negotiations.

It is the members of the Government who were afraid. They are wrong about this trade deal. They are wrong about this country. They are certainly wrong about this Party. We do have confidence in Canada. We do have confidence in our future. The difference is that our future is not a continental future; our future is a Canadian future with wide international aspects.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Our Canada has horizons which go far beyond those envisaged in the Conservative trade deal. There is a better way. We reject this deal because it turns us into little more than a colony of the United States and, on the international scene, into merely a junior partner.

I want to refer to a document produced by my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who pointed out in his report, Expanding Choices, that we are offering Canadians a better choice. I am sure you, Mr. Speaker, would allow me, and the House would allow me in a parenthetic but in a very sincere way, to say to my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry how much the House, how much the Opposition, appreciates the way he has worked against great odds in this House and in the committee through the heat of the summer. The results have been borne out in his analysis of this deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I also want to thank the other member of the committee from our Party, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), for his incessant work in the analysis of this deal which will mean so much negatively, I believe, for our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That report sets forth a clear agenda that allows us to trade with the world without giving away our sovereign right to decide our own future. The essence of the Liberal trade alternative—the Prime Minister can mock it—is to liberalize trade internationally. Our greatest leverage with the United States in developing new markets and expanding new trade opportunities has always come by negotiating internationally. The Liberal trade policy is a five-point program which will give us that leverage by making Canada a strong, dynamic, and sovereign world trader. The five areas are the GATT, the world economy, Canada-U.S. trade, export expansion and enhancement, and global competitiveness.

• (1740)

Beginning with the GATT, from the mid-1930s to the election of the present Conservative Government, the strategic trade objective of every Canadian Government was to increase the standard of living of Canadians by widening trade opportunities, and by obtaining improved and more secure access to foreign markets without putting our national unity or our national independence at risk. The chief vehicle for meeting this objective has always been, and must continue to be the GATT, the world's leading trade organization of over 90 countries.

As a founding member of the GATT, Canada has taken a lead in encouraging all trading nations to play a part in formulating its rules and adhering to its decisions. It is essential to understand the GATT and its great importance to Canada, because it has been through the GATT process that all modern reductions in tariffs between Canada and the United States have been obtained. Most of that was done while Liberal administrations were in power. As a result of past Liberal trading policies Canadian exports today are booming, and in particular exports to the United States. It will be the policy of a Liberal Government to build on that success, to build on that historic process, and not to change course, as the Conservative Government proposes to do. That is the difference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The supporters of this trade deal argue that in any trading arrangement, whether it be within the GATT or directly with the United States, we have to give up some of our freedom to act. We understand that. But then they go on to argue that since Canada is just a little country with no influence in the world, we are better off to join our economy to that of the United States. That is a "little Canada" argument. That is a "fortress North America" argument. What it overlooks is that while from time to time we may not like certain decisions of the GATT, the nations of the GATT do not dictate Canadian domestic national policy as this agreement with the United States will do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Because unlike the Government's trade deal, GATT deals exclusively with trade issues. GATT is a trade mechanism. It does not tell Canada how we should set our own domestic, economic, and social programs. It does not determine or shape our agenda. That is a very important distinction between the international process under the GATT and the pervasive nature of this agreement that goes well beyond being a trade deal.

I said to the Prime Minister, and he repeated it today, that it is "the sale of Canada" Act. The problem is that in bilateral or one-on-one negotiations with the United States, Canadian bargaining power is diminished by two factors. First, Canada becomes what is normally called in international trade language the demandeur, the petitioner. We are the ones asking the Americans to change their trade laws. Second, the United States market is 10 times larger than ours. There is little incentive for the Americans to open up their markets to us without getting substantial concessions in return. The Conservative trade deal with the United States is ample proof of that. Even after the Government made concession after concession in energy, in agriculture, in the negotiating process on the definition of subsidy which will reach right into the whole fabric of the country, the primary objective of any trade deal with the United States on a bilateral global basis was not obtained. There was no secure access into the American market, and there was no exemption from American trade law.

We have to aim for something which gives us better access, not only to the United States market, which is vital to us, but to markets world-wide. Our Party favours the GATT. In the GATT negotiations, as opposed to the bilateral negotiations with the United States, the United States becomes like us, a demandeur, a petitioner on a wide range of trade issues, some of which we may agree with, and some of which we do not agree with. However, we gain substantial leverage in achieving our trade goals by enlisting the support of like-minded countries within the GATT, leverage that is not available to us in bilateral, direct trade negotiations with the United States.

For example, in the Tokyo Round the United States and Canadian tariffs on dutiable industrial goods were each reduced by six percentage points. Also in the Tokyo Round the United States made a number of concessions that were important and of value to Canada which we could not have obtained on a bilateral basis without providing the United States substantial extra concrete benefits and concessions which would have impaired Canadian independence. That is why we prefer the international mode. That is why successive Governments since the war have kept to the international theatre, because our bargaining position with the United States has always been better that way.

A Liberal Government will take a more active role in building new rights and obligations into the GATT code, and into improving the dispute settlement process. We will work closely with the United States toward achieving our common goal of improving the GATT and widening the jurisdiction of the GATT to include services, and to include agriculture.

We would seek to strengthen the GATT by establishing a management committee of GATT Ministers of Trade which would meet not less than twice a year, and also arrange for closer consultation and co-operation between the GATT mechanism, the mechanisms behind the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development known as the World Bank for the purpose of improving the management of the multilateral system, of linking the trading, monetary, and aid prospects in one umbrella co-operation.

[Translation]

As for the world economy, there is an urgent need for reform. We have withnessed the emergence of new economic powers such as China and Japan as well as the economic rebirth of Europe. In the world today, Japan is the leading creditor and the United States are the leading debtor.

We have to maintain some flexibility in our trade policy to adjust to the new global and commercial economic trends. By signing a rigid trade agreement with the United States, we will be losing our own capacity to adapt to new economic situations.

We are also witnessing the formation of large trade blocks which could rapidly undermine the very principle of world trade without discrimination.

The Third World is sinking ever more heavily into debt and it is quite possible that this debt will never be repaid. Consequently, a major overhaul of international institutions is in order and we have some concrete proposals to that effect: There must be a reform of our trade, monetary, and financial institutions. At present, no such proposal has officially been made either by the OECD or the G-7 Finance Ministers. In fact, we are suggesting a new Bretton Woods where trading nations could find ways of dealing with an uncertain and volatile global market, especially in the highly volatile context brought about by the emergence of new economic powers, such as Japan, China and Europe and by the present policies of the United States.

[English]

In just over two months the Americans will elect a new President and a new administration will begin to take over in Washington. When I sit down with them to discuss trade, defence, the environment, our Arctic, or any other issue, I will not begin with the assumption that in order to obtain any agreement in any of those areas we have to surrender our sovereignty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This has been the approach of the Prime Minister of Canada and those days are numbered. Our two nations have common goals and objectives. We share a common ecosystem. One of our first priorities will be to ensure that together we protect that ecosystem. American Governments must understand, as more Americans do, that the acid rain and industrial pollution, which are killing our lakes, rivers, and forests, and their lakes, rivers, and forests, must stop. The price of their prosperity should not be the destruction of our environment.

• (1750)

We will negotiate a clean air treaty with a specific timetable for reduction in cross-border pollutants. Our trade policy will be environmentally sound just as it will be economically sound. The Government I lead will work with the new American administration as partners in the struggle to reduce protectionism around the world. We will work with them in international forums in Europe, Asia and with emerging nations around the world, to defend the principles of more liberalized trade and encourage the freer movement of goods between all nations.

We have never been a protectionist Party. We do not view the current situation, the current proposed agreement with the United States, with protectionist eyes. If it would have been just a matter of tariffs and lowering trade barriers and had been limited to trade, we would have said, "Fine, let us look at it very seriously and constructively". But it went beyond trade. It went right into the heart of our ability to determine the type of political, economic, and social country that we want to be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are each other's largest trading partner. We will work to solve trade irritants and continue to work for lower tariffs around the world, particularly between Canada and the United States, within those international forums.

Yes, after we have determined the results of the present GATT Round, we will examine again the possibility of establishing managed sectoral arrangements, like the Auto Pact, that has worked so well for both nations.

The Government that I lead will bring all of our trade experts under one roof in a new Department of Trade and Development. In addition to its legislative mandate to assist exporters to expand into newer and bigger markets, the new Department will back up our GATT negotiators to ensure that the GATT rules are followed. Canadian industry and workers will have direct access to the expertise of trade officials, united in one Department, in order to investigate and respond to the possible and fair trading practices of our trading partners and goods coming into our market.

We would have this department report directly and regularly to Parliament on opportunities and difficulties with all our trading partners, including the United States. We would have the department assist Canadian workers and businesses in adjusting to changes brought about by new international competition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Geographical distance, cultural differences, commercial barriers and language must be overcome if we are to penetrate the developing markets of the world.

I will be announcing the establishment of a National Trading Corporation with a special mandate for the growing markets across the Pacific. It will have three functions. First, the development and penetration of world-wide markets for Canada; second, the development and co-ordination of distribution facilities, including shipping and transportation; and third, the provision of specialized resources, including financing and the technical skills in exporting activities. It will be a leader in developing those networks which are so important, particularly in the Pacific. There will be training programs and, hopefully, language skills at our universities, hopefully at the university shared by the Speaker and myself as graduates of a great institution. There will be commercial knowledge required to increase our share of world-wide trade.

In co-operation with the private sector, we will build bridges across the oceans to new economic giants like Japan and China. I am talking about the Indonesias, about the Philippines, and then into Latin America, Brazil, the Argentine and Mexico.

We will open new trade missions, not close them. We will increase our trade support programs and we will increase funding for the Export Development Corporation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have had the honour of representing this country from time to time at OECD meetings. I think that we also now have to recognize the growing importance to Canada not only of Atlantic trade but of trade in the Pacific Rim. It is now our second largest export market after the United States. In Europe, the OECD has helped to develop a spirit of the Atlantic. We will promote the creation of a Pacific spirit through a similar organization of Pacific Rim nations which will encourage economic co-operation and the development of greater trade with all the countries of the Pacific Rim.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No trade policy can be a substitute for a national economic strategy. No trade policy, no trade pact, even with the United States, can replace our own efforts. We cannot depend on others to make us more competitive. We must do that ourselves.

A Government that I lead will invest in people and in education in order to give our younger Canadians the skills that they need today for the jobs of tomorrow. We will invest in research and development to give our industries the tools that they need to compete successfully on world markets.

Our goal, which we will achieve, will be to raise the level of public and private spending on R and D in Canada, from 1.36 per cent of GDP to 2.5 per cent. We will nurture the new industries which are helping us become more self-sufficient.

Some of these programs I have mentioned before. We will establish a national literacy program. There are over one million adult Canadians who can neither read nor write. There are 4 million more adult Canadians who functionally cannot read or write, in the sense of putting a subject and a verb and a predicate in order and using it for economic purposes.

We will invest in training and retraining programs for those displaced by the new technologies. We will create, as we created in 1984, a national apprenticeship program to improve the school-to-work transition for young people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We will provide our industries and our workers with adjustment programs to help them adapt to the changing international trade environment. We will establish a federal-provincial task force to work on the elimination of barriers to trade between provinces, with the goal of creating free trade within our own borders.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In the coming weeks, I will be announcing further details of our agenda to give Canadians a better choice for their future. Canadians will know clearly before election day what we intend to do in government.

I will tell you this. When we are in government, we will not invent phoney reasons to ignore our commitments. We will not try to rewrite history, as this Government has attempted to do in defending and selling this trade deal, a trade deal which represents a fundamental change in the political and economic direction of this country. It is not an ordinary piece of legislation. It is not just another major piece of legislation. It is the most important and drastically different piece of legislation that I remember in my lifetime and that probably Canada has faced in the 20th century, other than the 1911 election.

So it is not a matter of challenging the Government's ability to govern. It is so fundamentally a change in direction that the Prime Minister must admit that he has no mandate or authority from the Canadian people to sign a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister spent a good deal of his speech in the complimentary endorsements and citations, but I would like him to produce any citations during the last election that gave the Canadian people a warning that we would have this kind of agreement with the United States. Not one. It was not a feature of the Throne Speech of November, 1984. The only idea that we had of where the Prime Minister stood on this vital issue were the words that he spoke when he was replying in debate for the leadership of the Conservative Party in 1983, to his colleague, now the Minister for International Trade, the only leading Minister who, after all, has been consistent on this issue. It was not the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson); he was against free trade. It was not the Minister of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark); he was against free trade. The Prime Minister, when accosted face to face with his now colleague, the Minister for International Trade, had this to say: "Free trade, it affects our sovereignty, and we will have none of it".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister has never told us why he changed his mind. There has been no genuine debate, one thousand plus days of secret negotiation with the United States. This House of Commons has been given just 12 days to discuss the deal. The Prime Minister invoked closure all the way.

There have been no meaningful public hearings. Yes, there were hearings when the exchange of general principles was presented on October 5, 1987, but when the agreement itself was deposited on December 17, last year, there were no public hearings across the country, no opportunity for Canadians to present their views, whether they be members of a trade union or a profession, or having their own businesses, or farmers or fishermen.

• (1800)

A trade committee of the House completed its review after only three and a half weeks. That committee did not travel outside Ottawa. It did not listen to the concerns of Canadians across the country. The vast Conservative majority on the committee made sure it was nothing more than a rubber stamp for the Mulroney trade deal.

A Government, which by September 5, in a few days, will be going into its fifth year since its election, does not have the right to force through such a massive change in the direction of our country without going back to the people in an election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It was for all these reasons—a fundamental change in the direction of Canada, no mandate or authority from the people of Canada, no meaningful public hearings, inadequate debate in the House of Commons, and the end of the Government's mandate in this Parliament—that I asked Senators to delay passage of the trade Bill until the people of this country had had an opportunity to pass judgment.

The Prime Minister often talks about the Senate. When his Minister for International Trade was Minister of Justice we had our head-to-head on reform of the Senate and we advanced the proposition for an elected Senate at that time. We are still bound by that and that will be part of our electoral program. Under Meech Lake the Senate still has a constitutional role to play. We have asked the Senators to exercise that constitutional review, to review this legislation, and to exercise that role. I am not asking them to defeat the Bill. I am asking them to delay the Bill until the people of Canada have had an opportunity to decide. If the Prime Minister wins he can still meet the deadline imposed upon him by the United States of January 1, 1989. I think that is a pretty straightforward proposition. Call an election now. If Canadians vote for the Prime Minister, then he has his trade deal. If Canadians vote for me, there is no trade deal. All I am saying is: Let the people decide.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, to the Government, and to the country: let the people decide between a Conservative Government which is willing to sell Canada's soul for a deal which gives us virtually nothing in return, and our Party which will advance the trade strategy allowing us to trade with the world, including the United States, but without shredding our political independence or yielding on the sovereignty that has made this a unique nation north of the 49th parallel.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): I believe fundamentally that this country and Canadians from coast to coast want to be able to make their own choices, in their own way, in their own time, for their own future. Because of that, I repeat, Mr. Speaker: Let the people decide.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise with a great deal of pleasure to take part in this historic debate which, in fact, is one of the most important if not the most important in the history of this country in terms of the implications of the measure that has been put before this Parliament by the present Government.

I want, at the outset, to say to the House and to all those Canadians who are now watching this debate from Atlantic Canada . . .

. . . to the Prairies and to those in British Columbia who are still midway through the working day that there are a number of things I want to clear up in which all three Parties, it seems to me, have strong or substantial agreement. One could waste a lot of time either here in the House of Commons or speaking to the people of Canada about straw men and phoney arguments instead of dealing with what I think ought to be the essentials of the argument.

I want to suggest that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), the Leader of the Liberal Party, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), myself, and our respective Parties would share agreement when it comes to trade on the following matters. All three of Canada's national Parties want to expand trade. I have yet to hear a Member of the House of Commons who has said: "I am in favour of restricting trade. Let's go backwards." No one says that. No serious politician advocates that. We want expanded trade.

Second, we want expanded trade with our most important customer to the south, the United States of America. All three Parties agree with that. Having heard the Leader of the Opposition today and having heard him before, and having heard Government Members, we all recognize the need to expand trade elsewhere in the world. There is no disagreement with expanded trade with our neighbour to the south and with other countries in the world.

Third—and this is not frequently mentioned but I would enjoy hearing some Members, particularly from the Government, pick up on it—all three Parties in the House of Commons are for a reduction in tariffs and have been for a long time. We have supported the GATT process of gradually reducing tariffs, systematically, in a way that does no harm.

For countries in the Third World that, is done in the context that takes our national need, as well as that of other countries much stronger than ourselves, into account. All three Parties want a reduction in tariffs.

Next, I say to my fellow Canadians wherever they are tonight or this afternoon, watching this debate and listening to the arguments, that all three Parties in Canada's Parliament want higher employment levels. I have not heard anything to the contrary on that.

Finally I would say, if I understand all Parties, that no one is arguing the case for expanded protectionism in terms of trade in commodities between nations, either between us and the United States or between us and other countries in the world.

I would like to suggest through you, Madam Speaker, to the people of Canada that there are no major divisions among Canada's Parties on these important matters.

Some Hon. Members: Oh?

Mr. Broadbent: I have heard some questioning. Maybe there will be a contribution in the debate. I am saying that those stated goals are shared by all three national Leaders, by all three federal Parties. There are some very important differences.

In my comments in this debate today I want to deal with the present deal, the present negotiated proposal which the Government of Canada has entered into with the Government of the United States. In my comments today I am not going to dwell, as I did in contributing to this debate a few weeks ago, on the major aspects of this deal that have nothing to do with trade. The Leader of the Opposition touched upon some of those today, and I went over those at great length before. The deal we have before us, I say to my fellow citizens, is much more than a trade deal. It is much more than simply an exchange of commitments between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States about trade in commodities going across our borders.

What is involved in this deal goes to the root of what it means to be a nation. It touches upon the internal policies particularly of Canada because, let us have no illusions, we are one-tenth the size of the country to the south of us, and I will come back to that in a minute. The deal before us is not primarily a trade deal, although the Government will continue to talk about it in those terms.

I want now to get into what I think this deal really is all about and why not only New Democrats but increasingly among Canadians who have looked at it, whether in the West, in Central Canada or Atlantic Canada, the more they are aware of this deal, the more they are opposed to it.

Canadians share all those goals that I have just talked about. If the deal concerned only those goals, there would not be this debate. There would not have been protracted debate and questions in this House for the past two years if the deal had been restricted to the matter of commercial exchange between Canada and the United States. I want to deal with it and what I think is so seriously at fault with it, what it means to be a Canadian, and what it means for our country in the long run.

It was Sir John A. Macdonald, a bright, imaginative Conservative Prime Minister, the father of our country, who, in thinking about relationships between Canada and the United States, never made the mistake of thinking about them exclusively in economic terms. He said: "It might be that the lion and the lamb would lie down together but the lamb would be inside the lion". I profoundly believe that the question future historians will be asking about this particular period in Canadian history is the following: How did the Party of Sir John A. Macdonald come to advocate, at the end of the 20th century, a policy whose essence is the opposite to what he devoted his life's struggle to? In short, how could the present Leader of the Conservative Party, the present Prime Minister of Canada, sign a deal that the President of the United States quite accurately described not long ago as "a new economic constitution for North America"?

I think future historians will be asking about Conservative premiers as well, without exception, from Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and indeed because he is a Conservative whatever his label, the Premier of British Columbia. How could all those Conservatives agree to a deal which, according to the U.S. trade representative Clayton Yuetter, will mean after 20 years, in his felicitous phrase, that Canada "will be sucked into the United States economy"?

I will try to answer that because I think it is worth thinking a great deal about. Again I speak primarily not to my fellow politicians in this House, most of whom have thought it through on different sides and made up their minds, but to the people of our land. I want them to think through the implications of this deal for the future of our children and our children's children.

I ask: How could the present Conservative Prime Minister and Conservative premiers from coast to coast turn upside down the life dream of Sir John A. Macdonald? The question has to be answered. There is an answer to it and it is this. The Conservative Party today has no goal of nation-building that would distinguish our country from mainstream U.S.A. It has no goal precisely because, in my view, it has completely abandoned one of the guiding principles of conservatism.

There are in the history of Conservative movements here in Canada and abroad two important principles. In this debate and in the speeches we hear from the Premier of Saskatchewan, the Premier of Alberta, the Premier of British Columbia, and their eastern Canadian equivalents, there has been abandonment of one Conservative tradition in favour of another. I believe both here and abroad there are two traditions in the Conservative Party, normally competing for ascendancy, one with the other, and what we have seen here is the victory of one of those traditions over the other. We should be thinking about that and thinking about it a great deal.

On the one hand there is, for Conservatives of tradition, the importance of continuity and community and nation, of a sense of values based on a shared common past. According to this view, other values, like those of the market economy, are seen to be subordinate to the primacy of the historical common good of all in society. This view has been the kind of conservatism invoked by Disraeli in the 19th century when he made a critique of the ravages of industrialism. It was the conservatism of Sir John A. Macdonald who used government power to build a separate Canadian economy because he had a different vision of the future of this part of North America from what existed to the south of us. It is the conservatism that at one time supported the CBC and Air Canada. It was the conservatism of a Prince Edward Island Premier who, I remember very well, in the early part of this decade opposed putting property rights in the Constitution because he saw the possibility of its negative impact on a decision affecting the common good.

It was the conservatism of Harold McMillan's attack, and a brilliant attack it was, on Margaret Thatcher's policies in Great Britain. It was the conservatism of John Diefenbaker who brought in a national hospitalization program in this country because he knew if left to individual action in the market-place we would never have had such a plan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If there is this one kind of tradition of conservatism, as I think there is, and I believe it is at the core of most Canadians in varying degrees, there is another, stronger Conservative tradition in the Conservative Party. This tradition, while I believe it has normally been the stronger of the two in the history of the Conservative Party here and abroad, in the present historic circumstances, unfortunately for Canada, has gained complete and utter dominance. This Conservative tradition puts exclusive emphasis on the market-place. Instead of market values being subordinated to those of the community good, those of the common good are subordinated to those of the market-place. To put it perhaps more precisely, for Conservatives of this tradition, consciously or unconsciously, the common good is virtually defined in terms of market values.

This Conservative tradition, in contrast to the one I spoke about a moment ago, was seen in the original opposition by Conservatives to government pensions and medicare. It is revealed in the ideology of privatization and deregulation, in the belief that a national program for child care can actually be achieved by giving people tax breaks. It is espoused by Milton Friedman, practised by Margaret Thatcher, trivialized by Ronald Reagan, and has been put into the heart and soul of this trade deal by Brian Mulroney.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1820)

Mr. Broadbent: I believe that we have before us a deal which does not protect our water or our regional development programs, gives away control of our energy, puts in jeopardy over the next five to seven years and beyond our social programs, is indifferent to foreign ownership, and ignores the claims of Canadian culture precisely because these matters are totally subordinate to the claims of the market-place for the Conservative Government here in Ottawa and, regrettably, subordinate to the claims of the market-place for every Conservative Government anywhere in Canada today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Having abandoned the civilizing aspects of conservatism, they seek to establish an uncaring Canada. We will soon see that the people of Canada will abandon an uncaring political Party in the forthcoming election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Sir John A. Macdonald subordinated, because he saw the necessity of it, the forces of the continental market in his original dream of Canada. He understood that there was then and would always be an inevitable tension between Canada and the United States, between a Government in Canada that had a different concept of a future from that of the United States. He understood that to build with a market economy he had to have the state play a major role fundamentally to break the continental forces of the market if we were to have a nation called Canada at all. He understood that when a smaller country totally integrates its economy with a larger one it will also inevitably take on the values, norms, and customs of that larger nation. Would that we had a Conservative today who understood that reality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister has taken part in this debate and has now listened with respect to the Leader of the Opposition and myself. I believe that his life experience—and we can debate about this—as a former branch plant manager has so internalized the values of the market-place as being pre-eminent that, unlike Sir John A. Macdonald and John Diefenbaker, he sees no possible contradiction between the national good and the continental market good.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It follows from this kind of thinking that the only criteria brought to bear—and we have heard it in debate this week and in the past six months inside the House of Commons and outside from the Conservatives—by the Government in assessing the historical implications of this deal are market criteria. If you understand the Canadian national essence in such a limited way, it is no wonder that you will blithely sign a deal that will permit, over time, that essence to disintegrate. A nation protected by such leaders is not protected at all. A nation wise to the consequences of such leaders will vote those leaders right out of office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Rather than stand up for Canada, the present Prime Minister has handed over control of our future to the United States of America. Clayton Yeutter understands that. I quoted him earlier. Ronald Reagan understands that, and I quoted him earlier. I say to the Prime Minister today that "you, Sir, have let the people of Canada down".

[Translation]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In the 19th century, Madam Speaker, a Conservative Prime Minister who had an altogether different vision of the role and place of Canada on the North American continent set us on the road to independence. In fact, the Prime Minister we have now is not offering an alternative vision. He is willing to accept that Canada should become the Northern United States.

From the very beginning, the implementation process of this agreement has been the opposite of what the Prime Minister had promised in 1984, from a so-called open and transparent government.

At first, the Prime Minister was against this proposal, but no sooner had the Prime Minister met Mr. Reagan for the first time during the Shamrock Summit that he initiated a process which in the end will hurt Canadian men and women.

The Government never encouraged discussions. In fact, it tried to hamper them every step of the way. All summerlong, our colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), did a tremendous job in committee on this issue for our party and for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: He moved a great many motions to protect the interests of Canadians, but the Conservative Members on the committee always turned them down. For instance, the NDP motion calling on the committee to travel and listen to Canadians everywhere in the country was defeated by the Conservatives. The public hearings where witnesses had no time to be heard were sinister jokes. Canadian men and women were thus denied the right to express their views on one of the most serious decisions ever to be made by the Parliament of Canada. While the Tories were spending millions of dollars in propaganda, my caucus and I were visiting and listening to Canadians everywhere in Canada to find out what they thought of this agreement. We fought for the interests of ordinary people during parliamentary committee sittings where this agreement was considered.

Madam Speaker, Quebecers, from farmers to textile workers in Montreal, want and have the right to demand a stable future. The Free Trade Agreement with the United States is a threat. Whenever we suggested changes, the Tories said no. The cultural and artistic communities in Canada have truly florished, especially since World War II. Because of the all prevailing American influence, the Trade Agreement threatens this progress. Again, when we suggested changes to protect this positive development, the Tories said no.

We felt that the jobs of all the working women in the service industry, in all the cities, towns and villages from coast to coast were being jeopardized. Again when we proposed changes, the Tories said no.

Our grain producers who rank among the most competitive and productive in the world want to retain the existing powers of their Wheat Board. We agreed that this was important. Again the Tories said no.

All Maritimers want their regional development programs to be maintained. Likewise, Quebecers living in far away places, people living in the heartland of British Columbia as well as in the northern areas of the other provinces want to protect the capacity of the federal Government to support their regional economic development. When we moved amendments to this effect, again the Tories said no. This is totally unacceptable, Mr. Speaker!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, senior citizens want our health and social programs maintained and enhanced for future generations. The trade agreement jeopardize these programs, threatens to gut them as those in the United States. We have said: Yes, we must protect them. The Tories have said no. What the Conservatives do not understand when they say no to the requests made by women, artists, farmers, senior citizens, workers, simple requests relating to regional development and social programs, is that they are saying no to what Canada has become since the Second World War. Conservatives argue that they are steering us toward a better future. That is their argument. What they are really doing is in fact forcing us to conform to the concept of an American continent whose strength lies in the dollar, the almighty dollar, a concept that is illustrated by the United States, where 36 million people do not have any health insurance, where less than a quarter of the American people receive unemployment insurance benefits, where the rich get richer and the poor even poorer.

Mr. Speaker, if that approach is acceptable to Conservatives, it is neither acceptable to the New Democrats or to the Canadian people. We are saying no to this agreement because it will hurt people who are dear to us, men and women of this country. We are saying yes to Canadian men and women who want to carry on the Canadian tradition in a modern and humane way. We, New Democrats, are saying no to this Agreement because it threatens to ruin everything that is different, that is progressive in our country, Canada.

[English]

Our vision of Canada as a social democratic party is based on fairness for average Canadians and their families. We want a fair deal for the many, not a special deal for the few.

Our vision of Canada is rooted in what I believe has become a modern Canadian tradition of compassion and justice. It responds to the challenges of today but also reaches beyond to the challenges of tomorrow. Instead of rejecting the past, we want to build upon it. Instead of restricting the notions of liberty, equality and community, we want to expand them. Instead of marching backward, we look forward to the 21st century.

I say again to all those Canadians who have begun to watch this historic debate, we in my Party believe in a Canada where we work together with average Canadians for a future not of perfection but a future of fairness, whether we are thinking of lumber workers in British Columbia, office workers in our cities, the farmers in all of Canada, textile workers in Quebec, or women, whether they work in the home in the tradition of women in the past or are contemporary women who more often are working outside the home.

We believe that the concerns of these people, average people, ought to become the priority of government not one day of the week but the priority of governments day in and day out, week in and week out, all year long.

Our vision of Canada certainly embraces strongly our tradition as a trading nation. Our vision of Canada includes a strong but fair trading relationship with our largest trading partner, the United States.

Our vision of Canada encompasses enhanced trade with the world, with our traditional partners in the European Community and those in the Pacific Rim. Most of all, our vision of Canada goes beyond mere matters of trade. It retains Canada's sovereign ability to determine our own destiny here on this part of the continent, to ensure that Canadians retain control to make decisions about the kind of society we want and retains the control for our children to make the kinds of decisions that they want.

The Conservatives try to claim that Canadians must accept this deal or nothing. Having created a monster, they ridiculously ask: Is there anything better? Well, there are other options to enhanced trade that do remain pertinent to trade and trade alone.

I want to say something about those specific alternatives favoured by my Party. I begin by saying that any proposal for trade should be about trade alone and not entail the giving away of all those powers to create within Canada the kind of society we want. I said earlier that John Diefenbaker understood that as part of the 20th century and John A. Macdonald certainly understood that at the last part of the 19th century. I only wish there was some current Conservative leaders who understood their own Conservative tradition in this regard.

Our approach combines three fundamentals that are key to enhancing fairness for average Canadians and for future generations. They are new opportunities for Canadians at home, fair trade with the United States, and new global trading opportunities beyond this continent.

First, let me say something about the opportunities for Canadians here at home. We would institute a national conference on the economy. This would be a body which meets at least annually for a serious analysis and discussion of the Canadian economy. It would have a serious mandate. It would be made up of leading business people, trade unionists, and community representatives. Its role would be advisory, but it would be expected to make recommendations and have regular assessments of what was done with them.

I say frankly to the Prime Minister who is here with us in this debate that he began what I thought was a serious effort in this direction shortly after he was elected. He established a conference that brought together such representatives, in which they discussed the future of this country and made a number of sensible proposals. Then they were sent home and never heard from again.

I have talked to some of those people who were at that conference, including business people, trade unionists, and others who expected a follow-up conference. I suggest that any modern government, in a mixed economy, should begin with an approach, whether or not it is within a federal state, that receives advice from such people in the private sector. It should be prepared to listen and systematically have a dialogue, with the Government retaining the final responsibility of making a decision. Such people should not be brought together simply for show, then sent home and ignored.

Second, we would upgrade our industrial potential at the national level by doubling our commitment to research and development and strengthening our capacity for technological innovation.

Third, we would enhance the skills of our labour force with a long term commitment to eliminating illiteracy, improving skill training and apprenticeship training, and encouraging retraining opportunities throughout the working lives of our working men and women.

• (1840)

Fourth, we would encourage domestic investment by a determined policy to keep interest rates down rather than allow the Bank of Canada to do what it has been doing recently. Fifth, we would use our resource wealth as a base to develop a more diversified manufacturing economy here in Canada. Not long ago I was in the Province of Quebec meeting with the head of a corporation, to be specific in the Rouyn—Noranda area, a very successful corporation which is now reinvesting millions of dollars. As I went through the plant with the head of this corporation and saw this very successful enterprise, I asked at each part of the visit where the particular equipment was manufactured. He pointed out that the equipment was manufactured in Italy, Sweden, the United States, and a couple of other countries. Rarely did I find equipment manufactured in Canada.

We had a discussion and we had a fundamental agreement. We both agreed that Sweden with a smaller population, a forest products country, had made the effort to have an industrial strategy in order to start exporting mining and forest equipment based on its resources. He said to me: "We have never had such an industrial strategy in Canada". I told him that I agreed and that it was time we had one. We should be manufacturing that equipment here in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Prime Minister that I would have thought economic nationalism 1(b) is to capture your domestic market and use that as a base for exports abroad. I just wish we had a government around this country that would try it sometime. I see the Prime Minister smiling. I can tell him one thing: he would never find the Japanese anywhere in their country failing to use a domestic opportunity, a forest product potential, or a mining potential, and importing all their equipment. The Japanese did not start out with half our resources and they are exporting their manufactured goods all around the world. If we took even the conservative approach of the Japanese, we would have used our mining and forest potential not simply as hewers of wood and drawers of water. We would be manufacturing and exporting our goods all over the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we obviously want to go on trading with the United States. Americans are and will remain our most important trading partner. We presently benefit from this trade and we will go on doing so. But this should not be at the expense of our independance as a country.

To settle our trading disputes, we should establish a tribunal which has influence and power. We should examine these disputes case by case keeping in mind that they are normal between neighbouring countries and that Americans will sometimes win out. We should apply the Auto Pact concept to other sectors of our economy, like chemicals or electronics.

As far as multilateral trade is concerned, we should co-operate with other countries to give new impetus to international trade, to reinforce the system of financial institutions, and to establish an international code of ethics for multinationals. We should open up our horizons, find new trading partners, negociate through GATT.

The 40 per cent reduction in tariffs, Mr. Speaker, which took 40 years to become a reality, was negotiated through concessions made by both sides through GATT. This must go on. Although far from perfect, GATT gives Canada the trading flexibility it needs and neutralizes power struggles much more efficiently than the trade agreement negotiated by this Government.

[English]

New Democrats believe that developing the full potential of our country requires using the energy and enterprise of the private sector and the ingenuity and vision of the public sector to achieve Canadian goals. Unlike the Prime Minister who said earlier that only the private sector creates wealth, we in the New Democratic Party believe the private sector and the public sector in the past, in the present, and in the future will both have leading roles to play in the creation of jobs.

Strengthening Canada's economy means building from the inside out, with a comprehensive approach to encourage diversification, innovation, and self-direction at the community level; industrial and technological excellence at the national level; and global co-operation at the international level. A healthy and productive trading relationship with the United States remains important in our strategy, as I said earlier, and should be in the strategy of any political Party in this country. The Americans are and will remain our most important trading partner. That is a cliché, but it is true. However, as confident Canadians, we also believe in reaching beyond this continent.

We believe that our trade and other economic policies promise greater prosperity for average Canadians and their families. We also believe that they will aid and complement, not jeopardize, our capacity to control our own future as a people. In my judgment, whenever the Prime Minister decides to call an election, and I hope it is soon, the choices are really clear. Canadians will be choosing between different visions of Canada, and our vision puts fairness for average Canadians and future generations as the top priority on the front burner, not on the back burner.

Our vision says that all advances in social, regional and cultural policies that we have made so far in this century, particularly in the last few decades, need to be improved, not destroyed. Our vision says that it is time for fair trade, for regional fairness, for equality for women, for a secure future for our children. Our vision and our understanding of the present says that it is time, at last, for a New Democratic Party Government.

The Prime Minister gave an interesting interview the other night on television. I watched with care. I do not always pay fascinated attention to what the Prime Minister has to say, nor does he pay fascinated attention to what I have to say, but like many Canadians, I was watching to see if he would finally do what we believe is important and make it very clear that we would have an election. Well, he did say that we have a tradition of four years—and if it was not his words, it was certainly the argument—that it was an aberration to depart from that tradition, and that he planned to stay with that tradition. I hope he does.

• (1850)

I would like to conclude with the words of a very distinguished politician and say to the Prime Minister tonight, Sir: "You have sat too long here for any good you have been doing. Depart, I say, and let us have done with you. In the name of God, go". Call an election!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to be here this evening to take part in what in many ways is an historic debate on this piece of legislation and to say a few words about agriculture.

Agriculture has always been important to the country. It is one of the main reasons this country was settled. If we look back at our Confederation we see that agriculture was one of the original departments of government. Our history to date has been in making this land flourish and produce. In short, it has been to make it productive. There is no doubt in anyone's mind who is connected with agriculture, as I am as a farmer, that agriculture will play an important part in our future. That is why this agreement is so important for the future of agriculture.

We have tremendous production potential in Canada. Canada as a country has more land per capita than any country in the world, especially when we compare ourselves to the United States with a relatively large land base and a relatively large population, and when we compare ourselves to Japan with a relatively large population base and very little land. There are some 25 million people in Canada, 250 million or thereabouts in the United States, and about 120 million in Japan. That tells us something right there. It is that Canada does not have a large population to serve as far as agricultural production is concerned.

It is evident in other areas as well. Some 30 per cent of everything that Canada produces has to be exported. What does that mean? If we compare that to other countries such as Japan, we see that 15 per cent of what is produced in that country has to be exported. In the United States only 10 per cent of what is produced has to be exported. Thus we can see that Canada is very dependent on trade.

On average, a Canadian farmer earns at least 40 cents out of every dollar from trade. The figures vary from region to region and from product to product. Some 80 per cent of the wheat that we produce is exported; 70 per cent of Canola is exported, either directly as Canola or Canola product; 50 per cent of our barley is exported; and 40 per cent of our hogs are exported. We are very dependent on trade. That is why we have to think that this agreement will be very important for the future of Canadian agriculture.

Why have we been able to be so productive? It is because we have been good at what we do. With the establishment of the Department of Agriculture as an original Department at Confederation, we very quickly established experimental farms. In fact, the experimental farms in Canada celebrated their one hundredth anniversary two years ago. We have done other things. We have been leaders in plant and animal breeding. We are world leaders in embryo transplants. We have as good a gene pool in our livestock herd as any place in the world. That includes dairy cattle, beef cattle, pork, and poultry. If one goes anywhere in the world, people talk about how good Canada is in agricultural production. We have done it because of the kind of people that we are.

When we listen to some of the things that are being said about this agreement, we hear that it will cause problems and that by implication we will have a difficult time competing. It makes one wonder what our ancestors would have thought had they been here today to hear that. They came here and were told by Palliser, the original doomsayer, that the area which eventually came to be called the Palliser Triangle between the Mississippi Valley and the Pacific Coast would never, ever support settlement because of the type of vegetation that that land was able to produce.

When we consider that our ancestors came here against those types of odds and literally made the country flourish and produce with no roads, no electricity, no television, no schools—none of the things that all of us take for granted today that we like to have for our families—one wonders what they would say when we have the type of opportunity that we have and there are among us doubters in how good we can be in the international market. I find that very difficult to accept as a farmer.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said today, one cannot hide from trade. One has to look for opportunities. That is what this agreement does. It does not guarantee us anything but it provides us an opportunity.

I am the fourth generation in my family who has lived on this continent, the fourth generation of farmers, and I am the first generation born in this country. Why did my ancestors come here before me? They came here for the opportunity to produce. We have been very good at producing. We have been very successful in making this land productive. That is obvious when we see that we have to export as much as we do. If we were not producing it we would not be able to export it. Why are we able to export it? It is because the product we produce is in demand. It is a high quality product. Whether it is grain and oilseeds, or whether it is in the livestock sector, people buy it because it is a good buy. We are reliable sellers. We produce a high quality product. Our reputation internationally is such that Canada as a country is respected. That also helps us when it comes to sales.

When we see what has been happening, we see that we have been so good at what we have been doing that trade barriers have been erected against us. If we look at what has been happening recently internationally, we see the type of subsidies that have been put up against us in order for other countries to get at our markets. We find that in the European Community producers are being paid three and four times as much for barley as is a Canadian farmer. They are being paid three, four, and more times for the production of Durum wheat in Europe. Yet, on the Canadian Prairies, we probably produce the best quality Durum or pasta wheat in the world. Artificial barriers are put up. Non-tariff barriers are put up.

Why? It is not because we are a great big country and can afford to subsidize like the Europeans or the Americans. It is simply because we are very good at what we do and we produce a very high quality product.

This agreement gives us the opportunity to compete with that high quality product on a fair basis. That is really what this agreement is all about. It is nothing magical. The Prime Minister said again that it is not a perfect deal. We all know that. We say that continually. However, it is so far down the road in the right direction compared to where we are now in trade and agriculture that it is obvious, at least in my mind, and in the minds of many Canadians, the right way to go.

Many Canadians support this agreement. There is a group that has been put together called the Canadian Policy Alliance. It very strongly supports this agreement. I would like to mention who makes up this group. They are the Alberta Pork Producers Marketing Board, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the Manitoba Hog Producers Marketing Board, the Ontario Pork Producers Marketing Board, the Saskatchewan Pork Producers Marketing Board, the United Grain Growers, a very large grain handling co-operative on the Prairies, the Western Barley Growers, and the Western Canadian Wheat Growers.

This is what they have said about the free trade agreement: "There is no doubt freer access to the U.S. market will be beneficial to the large majority of Canadian farmers. With the decline of traditional markets for grains and oilseeds the very survival of large sectors of Canadian agriculture could well depend on secure access to the large and prosperous North American market".

• (1900)

Why will that happen? I want to suggest that it will happen for three reasons. First, the agreement establishes a fair set of rules. We know that those rules are ahead of time. Through negotiation they have been arrived at on a fair basis, and essentially they are fair rules. Second, both tariff and non-tariff barriers will be removed over the first 10 years of this agreement. Third, when disputes and concerns arise there are provisions in the agreement for a dispute settling mechanism.

It is very important to have rules of conduct in almost any endeavour in life, especially in a competitive sense. That is what we are talking about in trade. It is a competition.

Today the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) referred to Wayne Gretzky. I wish to refer to him in a little different light. Mr. Gretzky is perhaps one of the best hockey players ever to lace on a pair of skates. In many ways he is not exceptional as far as physical ability is concerned. He does not compare to Gordie Howe or Bobby Hull when it comes to stature and the ability to handle body-checks. However, he is very good at what he does. What would happen to Mr. Gretzky if every time he went on to the rink he played in a game that did not have very many rules and the other players were a lot larger than he was, and big enough that they could make up some of the rules as they went along? It would be very difficult for Mr. Gretzky to show how good he is every time he plays, and we all know that he does that.

In many ways that is the same situation with respect to Canadian agriculture. A country of 25 million people is able to produce beyond what we need in our own country and able to produce a high quality product. In the past we have demonstrated that we are so good that other countries want to erect barriers or trade in unfair ways to prevent us from getting into their markets. That is what the free trade agreement is all about. It is about establishing fair rules as far as trade between our two countries is converned, and specifically here I am talking about agriculture.

Let us look at some of the non-tariff barriers. There are many ways to thwart, limit, and frustrate trade. All that has to be done is inspect something at the U.S. border, it goes into the United States, and the Americans say that it did not meet a certain inspection, and send it back. If it is a perishable good, in the process of sending it back the shipper is so frustrated with what has been going on that he does not ship any more. We all know that that happens.

One of the most important things that we can do in this country to facilitate trade with the United States is to sit down with the Americans and work out a standard set of regulations that will be accepted on both sides of the border. Once those standard regulations are worked out, we then inspect on a random basis, or on whatever basis we determine, to see that those regulations and specifications are met. Surely that makes sense.

Therefore, we will not get into a situation such as the one in Manitoba three or four years ago in relation to hogs. An artificial barrier was put up because some of the states were concerned about the possible presence of Chloramphenicol, a drug used in disease prevention in the raising of hogs. What is so drastic about simply sitting down with one's neighbour, one's best customer and friend, and working out a standard set of rules by which to play?

The third issue that is very fundamental and, to me, one of the most important parts of the trade deal, is the dispute settling mechanism. When we trade between our two countries there will come a time when disputes arise. That is normal in any endeavour, whether it is buying a car or buying groceries. There are always occasions when there are some concerns to be looked at. The dispute settlement mechanism simply provides that there is a fair adjudication of disputes. Canada is not going to be exempt from American trade law any more than the Americans will be exempt from Canada's trade law. That should be normal. What is very useful and unique in this case is that the dispute settlement mechanism will be binding, and there will be an opportunity to deal with trade disputes on a fair-minded basis by applying the rules.

There have been concerns expressed directly about the quality, uniformity, and ability of Canada to maintain those two very desirable traits as far as grain and oilseeds are concerned. Those have been fully addressed in the free trade agreement. Both Canada Grain Commission and Canadian Wheat Board lawyers were involved in the final drafting of the free trade agreement to ensure that their interests were protected and to see that within the framework of the agreement they had the full legal authority to carry out their responsibilities under the agreement.

In fact, not only were the lawyers for the Wheat Board and the Canada Grain Commission involved in the drafting of the Bill before us, they were also involved in the discussions leading up to the agreement that was originally reached last fall. Nothing in the agreement hinders in any way the ability of the board to function in the same manner as it has functioned in the past. It is quite the opposite.

The Canadian Wheat Board now has the responsibility for issuing end use certificates. That responsibility has been given to the Canada Grain Commission to carry out. If anything, the legal framework under which the Canadian Wheat Board operates has been strengthened. End use certificates will be required should grain come into the country, and that will only happen if there is a certificate issued to bring it in under certain circumstances, or if there is an equalization of support programs on both sides of the border. In either case when the product comes in under an end use certificate it will be up to the Canada Grain Commission to see that it is adhered to, and that commission may decide to product identify that grain. It may wish to colour some of the grain or add some confetti to ensure that the integrity of our system is maintained. Rather than concern expressed about maintaining the integrity of our grain handling system, and the high quality that we have, the agreement actually strengthens the Canadian Wheat Board's ability to do just that.

There has also been concern expressed about the so-called transparency of the manner in which the Wheat Board operates. "Transparency" simply means that there is concern the Wheat Board does not have its prices made public when it sells. There is nothing in the agreement that compels the Canadian Wheat Board to operate in a different fashion than it does presently. In fact, when there is a system such as the Canadian Wheat Board that is doing a very good job of selling—and in fact it sold a fair amount of wheat to the United States last year—and its ability to sell is strengthened by giving it a better set of rules under which to operate. It seems to me that this agreement gives the board a better set of rules under which to operate.

I want to suggest to those who are concerned that they ask the board. The Wheat Board has told me that it would be delighted to sell into the American market without fear of political quotas, or without fear of having Section 22 of the American Agricultural Adjustment Act imposed on it. I would suggest that people ask the Wheat Board and the Grain Commission whether they see the free trade agreement as causing any problems. There are many opportunities in the United States for Canadian agriculture because of the quality of product we produce.

In conclusion, one other example is Canadian Canola oil. Last year in the United States it was named food product of the year. That oil is derived 100 per cent from Canadian Canola. At the present time we have a very small percentage of the American edible oil market, less than 1 per cent. With the concern today over health and diet, it gives us a tremendous marketing opportunity in the United States. In fact, the Canadian Canola Council is suggesting that we could need two million additional acres to supply that demand. That council can see the demand growing at approximately 10 per cent per year for the next number of years. This agreement gives us that opportunity.

There is an oilseed processor in Windsor, Ontario that is spending literally millions of dollars in expansion, largely aimed at the U.S. market. It is very well positioned to service the Detroit market. Here is a case where Ontario farmers—and there is a concern in Ontario—can benefit substantially by having more secure access into the United States. There are eight million to ten million bushels of soybean exported today. I am told by that processor in Windsor, Admuco Grain Co., that it can see an additional 18 million to 20 million bushels of soybeans being crushed for the export market. That is as a result of this free trade agreement.

I just want to conclude by saying two things very briefly. First of all, I think that this trade agreement is a very great opportunity for Canadian agriculture. I want to pay tribute to the negotiating team under Simon Reisman, all people in the Department and all people in the House who were involved such as the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister. They did a very good job on the agreement and on behalf of Canadian agriculture.

In conclusion, let me speak for a minute as a farmer. I am home on my farm on the weekend. We all know the frustration and the sense of unfairness that go with having weather deprive us of a crop. It is not good for the soul and it does not make us feel good. Above all, as a farmer you are proud of what you produce and you like to produce a high quality product. When the weather deprives you of that, it is not a good feeling. You work throughout the year and in many cases, as around my farm this year, you are left with virtually nothing of a cereal crop. There is not very much that we can do about that.

We have made some improvements as far as plant breeding and as far as what we can do with weather are concerned. However, it is equally as frustrating when we are deprived of a livelihood because we do not have the access to markets. It is just as devastating to farmers. That is what we are addressing in this Bill. We are giving farmers an opportunity to compete. My ancestors came here because there was an opportunity to produce. They made it work. They made history by making this country produce. We are making history, I firmly believe, because this Bill gives Canadian farmers a chance to sell, a chance to have access, a chance to market. It is going to be just as important to my children as my father found it important for his forbears to give him a chance to produce.

I am very happy to have had a chance to say a few words in support of the free trade agreement because I firmly believe that it is going to be very useful and very helpful to Canadian farmers in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I just have a couple of comments. The Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) said that there was great concern in Ontario with the free trade deal. He is really right.

Mr. Mayer: I did not say "great concern".

Mr. Foster: Some 48 per cent in the province oppose it, 31 per cent are in favour of it, and 28 per cent strongly oppose it. More important, the majority of the people of Manitoba and Saskatchewan oppose this deal, as was reported in the Environics poll of June 7 to June 27. In Saskatchewan, 29 per cent are in favour of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and 49 per cent are opposed. Even more important is the fact that 36 per cent strongly oppose it and only 9 per cent are strongly in favour of it. In Manitoba, similarly 27 per cent are strongly opposed and 11 per cent are strongly in favour.

I wanted to call to the attention of the Minister that the Wheat Board advisory group opposed this deal because of the implications for the Canadian Wheat Board. If we look at their report, which was issued a couple of weeks ago, on July 28, it reads:

> "After careful review of the proposed Bilateral Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement including Chapter 7 of the United States Statement of Administration Action, the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee considers the proposed Free Trade Agreement will:
> 1. undermine the ability of The Canadian Wheat Board to be an effective marketing agent on behalf of Canadian grain producers.
> 2. create an environment in which it will be increasingly difficult to maintain the quality and uniformity of the Canadian grains.
> 3. not provide enhanced and secure access to the U.S. market. The Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee recommends to The Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of State, Grains and Oilseeds, and the Prime Minister that the total grain industry be exempt from the Free Trade Agreement."

Part of that stems from the fact that the articles of the trade deal, as issued last October, seemed to imply that we would have full access to the U.S. and be exempt from Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. However, when we get into the actual agreement in the United States, the administrative recommendations and so on, it is rather fuzzy, especially at a time when the Ministers here and in the provinces are negotiating or considering changing our support programs and our stabilization programs, or perhaps doing that in the future, whether or not we in fact would be exempt from that U.S. Act which provides for controls on imports.

The Minister read out three or four groups in favour of the trade deal, and of course groups like the hog producers and the beef producers essentially have free trade now. They want to continue having that free trade arrangement even though they would gain essentially about one cent a pound. There would be some harmonization of health standards. We hope that they would not be lowered. They are scared to death of the dollar going to 95 cents next to the American dollar, if the exchange rates rise or come to par.

Mr. Mayer: What does that have to do with free trade?

Mr. Foster: More important, the Minister talks about the people who are in favour of it. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the largest umbrella group in the country, expressed grave concerns with the deal, and it sent a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) demanding a meeting with him, which it has not had yet. In its letter it pointed out that there were grave and serious implications for the Canadian agriculture industry, especially the integrity of the Canadian Wheat Board marketing system. It is very concerned that in the long haul the Government is going to give away that Wheat Board orderly marketing system to the multinationals, mostly large American grain companies, and that the power, the authority, and the effect of the Canadian Wheat Board will be lost.

Second, the Federation is concerned that the standard of quality of Canadian agricultural products will be lost. It is concerned that the Canadian Grain Commission will not be able to control products coming in from the United States.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that the 10-minute period is for questions and comments. Surely, we are not going to take 10 minutes in a soliloquy which in itself is a minor speech. I would like to have an opportunity to put on the record some things that straighten out the record, in terms of what the Hon. Member is saying, before the 10 minutes are concluded.

Mr. Foster: I was just about finished, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to comment on the final point or two in the Canadian Federation of Agriculture brief to the Prime Minister. It is concerned about the failure of the Government to consult with industry on policy administration for import quotas. It is further concerned about the failure on the part of the Government to make a strong public commitment to the continued integrity of the Canadian Wheat Board.

These are not the words of the Official Opposition or the NDP. This is a toughly worded statement of the President and the national council, of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the largest umbrella group in Canada. It not only covers the western pools, but it covers the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, UPA, and other such groups.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crofton): A point of order.

Mr. Mayer: If the Hon. Member wants to get up and speak and listen to himself, that is fine. If he is prepared to make a comment, I would be more than happy to try to respond to it. If he just wants to get up and put on record a diatribe, without listening to what is being said in the speech that I just concluded and giving me a chance, that is another story.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crofton): I thank the Minister for his intervention, but I was watching the time closely and I had every intention of giving the Minister an opportunity to respond. Has the Hon. Member concluded his remarks?

• (1920)

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I understand the Minister wants to respond and I think he should because the Prime Minister has not. These are important organizations. The Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee is the committee that advises his own Wheat Board. Its members are elected throughout the regions of the West—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crofton): I recognize the Minister.

Mr. Mayer: First, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest that if the Hon. Member would listen to what I just said and if he wants to take the word of the advisory committee, that is one thing, but I suggest he talk to the Canadian Wheat Board. Let me give the Hon. Member what the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board said about the free trade agreement and how the board operates. He said that they would be delighted to have access to the U.S. market without threat of quotas being imposed. The threat of quotas is there now under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

I point out to the Hon. Member that, if anything, the free trade agreement strengthens the way the Canadian Wheat Board operates because under the agreement the Board is given responsibility for issuing permits to let grain come into the country, if and when we get to a situation where levels of support are equal on both sides of the border. The board has in turn asked the Canadian Grain Commission to carry out that responsibility. There is a case where, if anything, the board's abilities to operate under its present set of conditions is strengthened.

When I tell the Hon. Member what the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board just said and point out how it will be administered under the agreement, I think he has to admit that that does not do anything but strengthen the way the Canadian Wheat Board operates.

Let me tell the Hon. Member what one American group said about the agreement. This is the National Association of Wheat Growers, the largest association of wheat growers in the United States. Its president, Mr. James Miller said:

> "Canada came out the clear winner in the free trade agreement—at least in wheat—because it—

"It" meaning Canada. He continued:

> —will gain access to the huge U.S. market without giving anything in return."

That is what a representative of the American wheat industry said about the agreement. That tells me that our negotiators did a very good job of negotiating on behalf of Canada, especially on behalf of Canadian agriculture.

I do not understand some of these things, Mr. Speaker. I just pointed out that we are probably as good a producer of grain and oilseeds as anybody in the world. We have been able to compete successfully every place, including the United States. Why are people given that fact—and it is a fact—so nervous about giving the Canadian Wheat Board and our system of producing and selling an opportunity to compete under a uniform and fair set of rules? I do not understand this kind of thinking. We are good at what we do. We have nothing in our history that suggests we cannot compete and yet we have people saying: "We are afraid. We do not want to compete. We do not want to open the border. We are not sure how good we are." It is like having a prize bull. You are sure this bull is the best in the world, but you keep the poor bugger behind a barn and a ten-foot slab fence; you never give him a chance to come out and compete.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: That is what we are doing. We are very good at what we do. All we want is a fair chance to compete under the rules. That is what this deal does.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crofton): I regret that the Minister's time has expired for questions and answers. I recognize the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) on debate.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When are we going to stop one Member from getting up and talking, talking and talking, not even concerning things the Minister asked about, so as to stop someone else from asking questions? That is not the purpose of our question and comment period at all. One person should not be able to monopolize it as was done a few minutes ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crofton): The Hon. Member for Trinity.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in the closing hours of this debate I just want to put a few remarks on the record. It is regrettable that the Government has decided to hurry this Bill through the House. This is a most important Bill. It amends about 27 Acts of Parliament. The Government has used closure all the way. There has been a total of 12 days of debate on the Bill. The period for committee hearings was short. Many people who wanted to give evidence were not heard from, and all the hearings were in Ottawa; there was no attempt to travel outside Ottawa. It is a very sketchy and superficial examination of an important piece of legislation which could change and affect the whole future of Canada.

This is billed as a trade agreement, but it goes far beyond a trade agreement in the sense that there is potential here to affect the whole conduct of Canadian economic and political life. In fact, as a trade agreement it does not do what the Government promised. The agreement was supposed to give Canada secure access to the American market. It does not do that, but it does put our sovereignty and our capacity to take independent action in our own best interests in jeopardy.

We on this side of the House oppose the deal, not because we are anti-American or because we are protectionists. On the contrary, we share with our American friends the longest undefended boundary in the world. The Americans are our allies and our most important trading partner. Liberals have always been in favour of liberalized trade, but Canada by virtue of our smaller economy has always been vulnerable to trade harassment by the United States. Over the years we have negotiated successfully through international fora rather than going head-to-head with our great neighbour.

The reasons for this are obvious. Apart from the disparity in size of the U.S. economy and population, which is ten times as large as ours, in a bilateral agreement we are the petitioners. We are the people looking for access to the American market. When we go to the GATT or international fora we are petitioners. The Americans are petitioners. All the economies of the world are petitioners. Everybody is trying to get a better deal. Not everyone gets what is first requested, but hopefully there is some kind of consensus with which we can all live. Canada has done well negotiating in the international fora. As a matter of fact at the time the Conservative Government started work on this trade deal some 85 per cent of our goods were already moving across the American border without tariff, with a further 10 per cent in the process of being phased out under the GATT.

Instead of negotiating within the framework of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the Conservative Government chose to put its eggs in the basket of a bilateral agreement. It failed to get the secure access to the American market that was promised. It would have been no disgrace to say "we tried, we failed" and then walk away, but not this Government. It had to have a deal at any price. What it has negotiated is the most massive giveaway of our sovereignty in history.

During the negotiations we were told time and time again that the Government would negotiate free access, secure access to the U.S. market. During the negotiations which also were conducted in secret, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) vowed that he would accept nothing less than total exemption for Canada from the application of U.S. countervail and anti-dumping laws.

Mr. McDermid: Where is that quote?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): The Hon. Member asks for a quote. I will be very pleased to give it to him, Mr. Speaker. In an interview with representatives of The Wall Street Journal, on April 3, 1987, the Prime Minister said:

"The United States trade remedy laws cannot apply to Canada."

In March, 1987, the then Minister for International Trade said that the objective of any trade agreement would be the elimination of countervail by both countries. Curiously, in the House of Commons during the last sittings of Parliament in 1987, she said that this was never her objective. The present Minister said, in a speech in St. John's, that he expected the agreement to provide for the elimination of countervail.

• (1930)

Secure access would mean that Canada would be exempt from American trade law, and that has not happened. We are not exempt from the 1930 U.S. Trade Act or the 1974 Trade Act. We are not exempt from the omnibus trade Bill recently passed by the U.S. Government.

There is to be a new trade tribunal, but it will not protect our export markets because it will not be able to challenge existing American trade laws. It will only be able to interpret American trade laws. Article 1902(1) of this agreement says that the U.S. reserves the right to apply its anti-dumping law and countervailing duty law to goods imported from the territory of the other party, that is, Canada. The Government failed to get an agreement to benefit Canada. Instead it took a deal at any price. It lacked the courage to walk away and admit the failure.

This deal has sold out many Canadian interests. In particular, I would like to draw attention to the sell-out of financial services because the deal provides much better benefits to the U.S. than it does to Canada. With the exception of granting Canadian banks and bank holding companies the right to deal in certain securities in the U.S., the U.S. has agreed only to extend Canadian controlled banks the same treatment they had as of October 4, 1987. Yet the U.S., on the other hand, will be free to establish new bank subsidiaries in Canada and invest without limit in all Canadian financial institutions, not only banks. We know there is no guarantee that this will be used in the best interests of Canada or in the Canadian national interest.

Existing U.S. banking regulations will prevent Canadian banks from increasing expansion to the U.S. because, unlike Canada where banks are federally controlled, in the U.S. they are controlled by the individual states. You cannot have a centralized banking system. So Canadian banks that want to expand into the U.S. have to negotiate with each state where they intend to open a branch.

Canadians were not generally aware of the difference between our banking system and that of the U.S. until the collapse of the ill-fated Canadian Commercial Bank. Canadians were horrified at the failure of that bank, the first in 62 years, but as Canadians at that time began to look at what was happening in the U.S., it was quite clear that it was a different system. The banks are state controlled, not centrally or nationally controlled, and when they get into trouble they are allowed to fail.

We have a system where we have opened up our financial controls to American interests, whereas the Canadians will not have the same access. It is a very one-sided agreement. Even the Canadian Bankers' Association which accepts this deal does so grudgingly, acknowledging that "the particular direct and immediate interests" of Canadian banks are not advantaged by this deal. That is an understatement.

This trade agreement also shows a lack of interest in and consideration for our needy. Our social programs, we learn, are to be harmonized with those of the U.S.

Mr. McDermid: Where does it say that in the agreement?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the language of the Hon. Member on the other side is at best inelegant so I am not going to respond. He will have a period for questions and comments.

Any program in Canada that can be regarded as a subsidy could be an unfair trading advantage under this agreement. We have seen cases in the past where our unemployment insurance has been cited by the Americans as a subsidy. What has happened in the past can continue to happen in the future. In fact, it may very well be extended in the future.

The Government has failed to recognize the link between domestic economy and trade policy. In order to enhance our trade we need to do more work at home. We need freer trade between the provinces. We need an increased scientific and technological capacity in order to remain competitive. We need to prepare Canada's labour force by training and educating Canadians to compete in both domestic and world markets. Yet the Government has capped transfers to the provinces for post-secondary education. We need initiatives which are not give aways but instead reflect a genuine commitment to the liberalization of trade in the best interests of Canada.

Not only were Canadians not consulted about this deal which affects our sovereignty, but the Prime Minister had one position before the election and another later. In 1983, in the course of the debate during the Conservative leadership race, he said: "Free trade, it affects our sovereignty and we will have none of it".

Mr. McDermid: Unfettered. He said "unfettered free trade".

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Not only were Canadians not consulted about this deal, but the present Government had one position before the election and another later. There were secret negotiations for 1,000 days when Canadians had no idea what was on the table or what was being negotiated.

We already have an international forum, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, which deals exclusively with trade. Canada has done very well negotiating there on trade matters. What we have before us in this measure which will amend, I believe, 27 or 29 Acts of Parliament—

Mr. McDermid: Twenty-six.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Twenty-six, thank you—is being rushed through closure at every stage with a total of only 12 days of debate. The future of Canada is at stake. This is not a trade agreement; it is an agreement which gives up much of Canadian sovereignty, much of our ability to be ourselves, to plan for our own future in the best interests of Canada. That is why my Party and I oppose it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crofton): Questions and comments.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question for the Hon. Member. Would she please point out to those who are watching and listening to the debate tonight where exactly in this agreement it says that we will harmonize our social programs with those of the U.S.? That is what she said this agreement does. Would she please be so kind as to point out where in this agreement it says that?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have been asked that question because it points out one of the problems involved in studying this agreement. Since I do not have the agreement in front of me at this moment, and by the way I have read it, I cannot point out the particular paragraph to the Hon. Member at this point.

• (1940)

Let me point out something else. The Government spent at least $40 million on a program to sell the trade agreement to Canadians. The last time I inquired the Government was still charging $138 for a copy of the actual agreement. I agree with the Hon. Member opposite. Indeed, Canadians should read and study the full agreement. However, apart from the fact that they would need a special bag to get it home, they have to pay almost $140 to buy it.

Mr. McDermid: That is not true.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): The Hon. Member says that it is not true. Perhaps he is going to tell me that the Government has reduced the cost. If so, I will be pleased to hear it. I have been advising people who have written to me to get a copy of the agreement from the library and set up study groups. I believe that once Canadians see for themselves what is in this agreement, even if they are not lawyers, and even though it is technical and needs a lot of careful study and application, they will see for themselves the potential for lack of control over the direction of our social policies and our political future.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the Member does not know where in the agreement it says that—

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not say that I did not know. I said very distinctly that I did not have the agreement here and cannot point it out.

Mr. McDermid: That is not a point of order, that is debate.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): It would be nice if the Member would tell the truth once in a while.

Mr. McDermid: The point is that there is nothing in this agreement anywhere that says we must harmonize social programs.

I want to correct the Hon. Member because she is way off base tonight. This is the agreement. It is available free in the office of any Member of Parliament. The Member is talking about the package which the House of Commons has put together including the free trade agreement, the Bill, and the two tariff schedules, the American tariff and Canadian tariff schedules which together are as thick as a telephone book. That has been packaged together and Queen's Printer is charging that rate.

There is no charge for the agreement at all. These are available to Members of Parliament of all Parties. This is the agreement in whole and it is free of charge to the public. The Member made a very misleading statement to the House tonight and I hope she will stand up and apologize.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I stand by my statement. That to which the Hon. Member is referring as the agreement is a summary of the agreement.

Mr. McDermid: No, it is not. It is the agreement.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): It is the Conservative selective proposal. Indeed this has been made available free of charge to all Members. Any citizen who read that and thought that he or she had the full story would be gravely misled.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, as I listen to Hon. Members in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties I have to conclude that history repeats itself. The last speaker again reiterated that we will lose our sovereignty. Other speakers in both opposition Parties are saying that we are selling out to the United States, that they are going to take over our industries, that they are going to come in and run the country.

I heard that in the early 1940s when the Alberta Government, of which I was a part, wanted to get our oil and gas developed, we could not get a dollar from eastern Canada or anywhere else in Canada. We went to France and to Britain. No one would invest their money and take a chance on the oil and gas in Alberta. The Americans came in and spent millions of dollars.

When we arranged with the Americans to come in to find our oil and build up an oil and gas industry, the Liberals and the CCF at that time vowed up and down that we were selling the country, that we would lose our sovereignty and our social programs. Well, the Americans spent millions of dollars and today we have a gas and oil industry of which Canada can be proud and which the Liberals tried to eliminate a few years ago with the national energy policy.

We have an oil and gas industry in Canada because the Americans risked their money. We did not lose one social program and we did not lose any sovereignty. They did not take over our country. They did not run our country. They lived according to the rules we set. Under this agreement the Americans will live according to the rules set by the Canadian and provincial Governments. They will not run the country. We can get a tremendous benefit from this just as all of the country has benefited from the oil and gas industry which was developed. All the threats, fears, and gossip put out by the Liberals and the CCF in 1940 was complete hogwash. There was nothing to it. This agreement can give us tremendous industries and we will not lose one iota of sovereignty.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Crofton): Would the Hon. Member care to make a brief response? There is one minute remaining in the period for questions and comments.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite says that our American friends have abided by Canadian and provincial rules. I agree. My criticism of this agreement is that it sets no rules.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, does the FTA not in fact enshrine the Auto Pact, which is so important to families in Ontario and Quebec, to the degree that the termination of the Auto Pact by Congress would in effect require the termination of the entire FTA? If the Member's Leader were to tear up the FTA, as he has promised to do, would Congress not very quickly give notice of his intention to cancel the Auto Pact because of the dwindling support in Congress for it and its perceived excessive benefits to Canada?

Second, if the FTA does not proceed, will not Canadians, including Ontarians, be exposed to the undiluted effect of all the provisions of the omnibus trade Bill which was signed by the President last week?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to speculate about what Congress might do given certain events. However, I think that to enter into a trade agreement because we are afraid of retaliation is surely the worst possible motivation. I have great faith that Canadians can negotiate a better agreement than this one, and that we can indeed compete internationally and do not have to lock ourselves into a bad agreement out of fear.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) is leaving because I want to address the first couple of minutes of my remarks to her. I have always had a great admiration for the Hon. Member. She has been and still is a hard-working Member of Parliament. She has just fought a nomination battle and won a close race against Paul Hellyer. I believe that she receives respect from all sides in this House.

However, she has just totally misled this House with the statement that she made on this agreement. I feel badly although I think she did it because she did not know. This is the text of the free trade agreement. This is what was printed and is made available to all Members of each Party, regardless of their political stripe. It is available to the public at no charge. Well, that is a little misleading because tax dollars paid for the printing of it and the public pays taxes. However, it is available. This is not an explanatory note; it is the agreement and it is available.

When I pointed that out to her, she denied it. Hundreds of people have come into my constituency office, as has been the case with my colleagues, to pick up a copy of this agreement. They have read it.

I understand that there is genuine disagreement about the free trade agreement and that there are different opinions. For the last three months we have listened to the debate in the House over the implementation of Bill C-130, the free trade agreement. While I might expect it from some Hon. Members in the House, I was very disappointed in that Hon. Member. I hope it is not an example of the desperation that the Liberals are showing, and the kind of action they will stoop to in the election campaign which is coming very soon.

As Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade, I have had a very rewarding experience over the last couple of years. While I was not on the front line and actively involved in the negotiations, I have been on the periphery. I worked with the President of the Treasury Board, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), then Minister for International Trade and now with my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I want to thank both of them for giving me the opportunity to play, albeit a small role, a role in the free trade negotiations, that of piloting the legislation through the House of Commons. It has been a great experience for me and one that I will never forget.

Of course, I must thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as well for giving me this opportunity by appointing me Parliamentary Secretary.

I want to congratulate Ambassador Ritchie and Ambassador Reisman, two gentlemen for whom I have the greatest respect. They are very proud Canadians and have done a marvellous job in negotiating the free trade agreement. To the staff at the trade negotiation office as well, I want to thank them for all their kindness. They have been most helpful. They have educated, guided and done a wonderful job, as have those in International Trade and External Affairs. At the outset, I wanted to pass on my thanks to those people.

I have given about 85 speeches across Canada and in the United States on the free trade agreement. Many in this Chamber as well as many throughout Canada will know that once you turn McDermid loose on free trade, heaven knows how long it will take. I will try to limit myself to a few subjects and perhaps comment on what the Leaders of the two opposition Parties mentioned today.

First, I will deal with the sovereignty issue. One hears time and again that Canada will no longer be a sovereign country because all the decisions will be made in the United States. Since other Members have gone back to quote Conservatives, let me refer to Mackenzie King. Mackenzie King would not sign an agreement with the United States to establish the St. Lawrence Seaway because he believed that it would diminish Canada's sovereignty. That is an historical fact.

It took a later Prime Minister, Louis St. Laurent, to realize that the St. Lawrence Seaway would be a great benefit to Canada. He signed the agreement that Mackenzie King refused to sign in the belief that it would diminish Canada's sovereignty.

Has the St. Lawrence Seaway diminished Canada's sovereignty? Not at all.

Today we are hearing from the Liberals that this free trade agreement will demolish Canada's sovereignty. There is no truth in fact. There is no example they can give to suggest that our sovereignty will be reduced in any way, shape, or form.

If the Liberals are saying that we have certain obligations when we sign an agreement, that we must do certain things and will face consequences if we do not, it is true that we have made that commitment. But we also made that commitment when we joined GATT in 1949. We made commitments to do certain things and to pay the penalty if we did not.

This agreement is an act of sovereignty because two sovereign nations are signing it. Furthermore, there is a six-month cancellation clause by which either Party simply has to write a letter to the other if it wants out of the agreement. Article 2106 of the agreement states:

> "This Agreement shall remain in force unless terminated by either Party upon six-months notice to the other Party."

While we hear the argument that we will lose our sovereignty and the Americans will dictate what we should do, the fact is that 80 per cent of what we do now is free trade.

In 1946, the average tariff between Canada and the United States was approximately 40 per cent. Today the average tariff is about 9.2 per cent, with some 75 per cent to 80 per cent free trade. In that period since 1946, prosperity has followed. There is no question that Canada is a much richer country today in many ways.

Second, our culture has grown. As the economy has improved, so have our cultural enterprises, and our ability to promote and support cultural enterprises.

I listened to my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) talk about culture passionately. I understand her interest. I go to the concerts. I visit the Canadian Opera Company. I attend the National Ballet and the Toronto Symphony. My wife is on the board of the symphony in Brampton. I go to the musical society. Let me point out that they are all sponsored by businesses. All the arts are supported by business people in all our communities, whether large or small. We have become a much stronger country culturally.

Third, during that period we have become a more sovereign country. Our sovereignty has not diminished at all. We are recognized today as a major middle power. We have joined the G-7. Our economic performance is admired around the world.

This trade agreement will not reduce our sovereignty one iota.

Let me deal with tariffs. The Opposition would have us believe that on January 1, 1989, all tariffs will be removed and there will be a whole new ball game. I listened to the Hon. Member for Trinity say that there was no consultation with the Canadian public.

All walks of life were consulted through the International Trade Advisory Committee which included the unions, the Consumers' Association, and so on. There was a broad cross-section on the International Trade Advisory Committee. There were 15 sectoral advisory committees. Do not tell me that Canadians were not consulted.

This debate has gone on for years. While this Bill has been before the House for some three months, the debate has lasted many years. The tariffs that come off on January 1, 1989, represent about 15 per cent of the tariffs between our two countries today. Those industries have said they do not need tariff protection and are ready to compete right away. Those tariffs are gone. Other industrial groups have said we need a little longer adjustment period, we need a five year adjustment period. They wanted a phase-out period over five years. That is about 35 per cent of the tariffs between our two countries which will disappear over that five-year period. The third group said we need a little longer period of time. So they have a ten-year phase out of the tariffs to allow them to adjust to the realities of trade both bilaterally and internationally. That is the tariff end of it.

We then have the non-tariff barriers, probably more important than the tariff barriers. The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) sat through all the committee hearings with us and he will remember very clearly that we had a Canadian manufacturer tell us that the tariff thing was not a big deal. He said the non-tariff barriers and the dispute settlement mechanism are what is important. He said he had been before the Commerce Department of the United States. He appealed to the courts. He sat in the courts for five years, and the courts turned around and told him to go back to commerce and ask again. He said the best thing of the whole agreement are these binational dispute settlement mechanisms that have been set up. We talk about these problems before they become major problems. That is very important.

In Chapter 18 and Chapter 19 we have the binational dispute settlements, which are binding, an appeal procedure after countervail or anti-dumping. The industries tell us this is great. This is the best part of the whole agreement.

Mr. Blaikie: After.

Mr. McDermid: I hear the Hon. Member say after. The New Democratic Party and the Liberals—

Mr. Blaikie: You said after.

Mr. McDermid: That is right. It is an appeal procedure.

Mr. Blaikie: So the whole hassle is still there.

Mr. McDermid: But the Hon. Member keeps saying we should be exempted from American law.

Mr. Kempling: I think he should never be in business. He does not understand.

Mr. McDermid: That is right. He followed in the footsteps of my father, but not too far. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the appeal procedure now is through the United States courts. It takes a long time. That was the testimony given by the people who have done it. Those Members do not want to believe it, but it is true. The dispute settlement mechanisms set up to handle any kind of trade disputes that come up or any kind of legislation that may be brought in by either Government, to sit down and discuss those things before they become problems, has been praised universally. In fact, the people in GATT think it is a great idea.

The great GATT supporters over there should know that the people in GATT think our binational dispute settlement mechanism is unique and is a model for them to look at very seriously in the negotiations going on now, and they have said that many, many times.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) was quoting Sir John A. Macdonald. He said how disappointed Sir John A. Macdonald would be with this agreement. I enjoy the socialists when they quote the Conservatives frequently. They quote Sir John A. Macdonald and Mr. Diefenbaker. It is quite interesting to hear them. I never hear them stand up and quote Tommy Douglas, David Lewis or any of those people. They are always quoting Conservatives, which is kind of interesting.

Sir John A. Macdonald today, I believe, would be proud of the country that he established back in 1867. He would be proud that Canada has matured and can now take its rightful place in the world economies. He would be proud that Canada can trade bilaterally and internationally without fear, without the need of protection, without those barriers. I listened to the Leader of the New Democratic Party say: "We do not want any barriers", but his trade critic is saying: "Why do you not put the barriers up on textiles? Why do you not put the barriers up on shoes or on garments?" You cannot have it both ways. The New Democrats are going to have to explain these things in the election campaign.

The New Democrats said that with this trade agreement ordinary Canadians do not expect a rosy future. But let me ask them this: If that is the case, how about the ordinary Canadian, Bob White, who is the President of the Canadian Auto Workers and National Vice-President of the New Democratic Party? If he does not think that the future is rosy, can he tell me why the Canadian auto workers are building the biggest, fanciest trading centre in Grand Bend that one has ever seen? And just down the road on their property, they are building a magnificent home for the President of the Canadian Auto Workers. I would imagine it is a vacation home. I do not think it is his permanent home. But they must think the future is going to be bright if they are doing that. The future cannot be all that bad.

We have not heard too much from Mr. White lately because I think he realizes that the Auto Pact has been enhanced by the free trade agreement.

The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party was talking about creating wealth. He said that the public sector could create wealth. I would agree that the public sector has to set the goals, the rules, and has to develop the atmosphere so that the private sector can perform well and provide meaningful jobs and trade internationally, and so on. But the Leader of the NDP said that both the private and public sectors can create wealth. I have not seen too many public sector organizations create a lot of wealth.

I found the reasoning of the Leader of the New Democratic Party rather interesting. He asked us to look at Japan. He said Japan would not buy machinery from offshore, it would make it right there. One thing he failed to mention is that Japan has a domestic market of 130 million people. When it builds a plant to produce this machinery, it can build it at economy of scale and what it does not use, it can trade. We do not have the population demand in Canada. With the free trade agreement, however, with those barriers down, we will have a 250 million or 260 million population. A 24-hour truck drive from my riding reaches 60 per cent of the Gross National Product in the United States. Does the Member opposite not think that is an opportunity for Canadians? Of course, it is.

Every business and service organization has said very clearly in its testimony before the committee, and my colleague from Burlington will attest to this, that this is good for Canada. These are the people who make it work. These are the people who take the money out of their pocket, put it down, take the risk and make it work.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) with interest. He said—and I am paraphrasing a little, but one can find it in Hansard—it does not matter what kind of multinational company it is, once it becomes multinational, it is bad, whether it is Canadian or American.

Ms. McDonald: No, no. He said it is big and powerful. He did not say "bad".

Mr. McDermid: That is exactly what he said the other day.

Ms. McDonald: He said "powerful".

Mr. McDermid: In the couple of minutes I have left, I want to talk about being a Canadian. I love this country. I guess I love it more today than I did when I first got into politics—

Ms. McDonald: You love it so much you are giving it away.

Mr. McDermid: —almost 10 years ago. I have had the opportunity of travelling across Canada. One of the advantages of being a Member of Parliament is that one has an opportunity to visit this country in a way in which, unfortunately, most Canadians do not have. I believe in the Canadian people and I believe in their judgment. As I travelled across this country and spoke on the free trade agreement, explaining it to them, one of the things I said, something I mean very sincerely, is that no political Party in this country would ever give Canada away, sell Canada away or trade Canada away.

Ms. McDonald: Except for the Conservative Party.

• (2010)

Mr. McDermid: There is not one political Party that would do that. We have all fought so hard for this country. We have all fought for the betterment of this country. For the opposition Parties to be making these outlandish claims that somehow this Party is selling out Canada that we all love so much, Canada that we all have sacrificed for to come to serve—all of us—is nonsense.

My hon. friend, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), in a previous incarnation made this statement: "Yielding to protectionism under the guise of economic nationalism is self-defeating for Canada. This country has always prospered under freer rules of international trade".

Let me conclude by saying that this free trade agreement is good for Canada. It is good for Canadians. It is going to make us a stronger country. It is going to help us in the international markets as well as the American market. It will allow our companies to grow and expand. Any person who is involved in the economy of this country supports the free trade agreement. I believe that in 10 years, just like members of the NDP now support the Auto Pact, they will be standing up saying that this was the best thing for Canada that ever came along. They will be clutching it to their bosoms and probably taking credit for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member. I have a short comment to make and then I would like to ask a question.

During the Hon. Member's speech he used as an example the development of the St. Lawrence Seaway as an international agreement that did not have any negative impact on our sovereignty.

Mr. McDermid: You missed the point.

Mr. Angus: I want to point out to the Hon. Member that one of the reasons we are in difficulty in the Seaway today is that in order to get that agreement between Canada and the United States the Canadian Government had to agree to the pressure from the American rail lobby to have 100 per cent cost recovery on the system even though the Mississippi was going for a free ride. There were no cost recovery measures on there.

Second, and more important in terms of the trade agreement, I want to remind the Hon. Member that as a result of yet another American lobby, the maritime lobby in the United States, marine transportation—in fact all transportation—was pulled out of the final agreement. So there is in no way free trade.

The question I have is this. I would like to give the Hon. Member some background first. It is something we have talked about privately. In the United States there is a program called the Buy America Program. If a state or a municipal government is in receipt of federal tax dollars for the acquisition of rapid transit equipment such as subway cars, streetcars or something similar, then there has to be 60 per cent American content. That is the minimum requirement. It used to be 50 per cent but this year it was upped to 60 per cent. That has a very direct impact on my community. CanCar and Bombardier sell to the United States. There could be a greater number of jobs in those plants as they relate to American contracts.

The Hon. Member has been a key player in the trade negotiations and in the relationship between the trade negotiator and the House of Commons. I want to know why the Government of Canada—and supposedly this is a free trade agreement which suggests that all barriers are down—did not make any attempt whatsoever to get the American Government to remove the Buy America policy so that Bombardier, or the Lavalin-UTDC-CanCar group could have a chance to compete for contracts in the United States and get 100 per cent of the jobs here in Canada. I would like an answer to that question.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the Buy America Program does not come into effect on this agreement. I think the Hon. Member will find that the small business set-aside program does. I believe it is grandfathered, but from here on in we can bid on federal contracts in the United States.

Mr. Angus: It does not affect Buy America.

Mr. McDermid: The small business set-aside program is exempted from the agreement. It also allows Canada to set aside programs for small business.

Mr. Angus: We are talking big business here.

Mr. McDermid: We can now bid on $4 billion worth of contracts in the United States that we could not bid on before.

Mr. Angus: What about CanCar and Bombardier?

Mr. McDermid: Bombardier supports the agreement. It thinks it is a good agreement. It is supplying in the United States and will continue to supply in the United States. It will be more competitive because of the free trade agreement. That is what it is all about.

I listened to the Hon. Member asking for exemptions from American programs. In the same breath he stands up to say: "We cannot have any programs in Canada". What total nonsense. Of course we can have programs in Canada. Of course we can have regional development programs. Of course we can have subsidies. Nothing has changed in that respect.

Mr. Angus: I never mentioned subsidies.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member is certainly talking about a type of program which is a subsidy program. That is exactly what it is. The Hon. Member should not be silly. Both countries have programs they want to protect.

Mr. Angus: Where is the Buy Canada Program?

Mr. McDermid: I think the Hon. Member understands that. Over the next five to seven years the agreement has set up a process to bring some common sense to subsidies, to regional development programs and so on.

Mr. Angus: What about subway cars?

Mr. McDermid: What is the Hon. Member talking about? Bombardier sold subway cars to New York. It will continue to sell and it is supporting the free trade agreement.

Mr. Angus: And it has had to have 60 per cent American content instead of 100 per cent Canadian content.

Mr. McDermid: Listen to the Hon. Member. Here is an NDPer who supported an American program. I cannot believe that.

Mr. Angus: No, I am not supporting it.

Mr. McDermid: You think it is a bad program? You do not think it should be there? If we get an exemption from that what is the Hon. Member prepared to give the Americans in return up here? The Hon. Member does not have an answer for that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blaikie: Is there still time for a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I think the Chair can be generous. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) on a question or comment.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have to commit what is called the sin of despair, in despair that there might ever be some relationship between what is asked and the answer that is given. I will try one more time. The Hon. Member is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade. I have known him for a long time—ever since I came into this House. I cannot believe that he really believes some of the things that he is saying. I want to make a certain allowance for tactics and for debate. But he stood up earlier today and he said: "If only we had this huge market and free trade and the access to that market then we would be able to overcome that problem", referring to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) having pointed to the fact that we do not and are not able, it seems, to manufacture our own machinery with respect to many economic sectors.

• (2020)

I ask the Hon. Member, because I am sure that he has some experience coming from Brampton, does he not realize that we have had free trade in farm machinery and farm implements since 1948, and this has not resulted in the flourishing of the Canadian farm machinery sector? Quite the contrary. The verdict of the last 40 years has been increased American ownership, shutting down of Canadian plants, and we are at the point where we hardly have a farm machinery industry at all.

Given what the Hon. Member said earlier, I wonder if he could possibly explain that.

Mr. McDermid: I would be pleased to explain that, Mr. Speaker. Is 1949, when the free trade in farm machinery came along?

Mr. Blaikie: In 1948.

Mr. McDermid: For a number of years following that the farm equipment industry flourished. Then what happened? There was rationalization, not only in Canada, not only in Britain, and not only in Europe, but also in the United States. There was a tremendous change in farm machinery. There was additional competition from Iron Curtain countries. One of the things that the NDP Members do not understand is change. They hate to see anything change.

Ms. McDonald: Answer the question.

Mr. McDermid: When change comes members of the NDP cannot absorb it. That is what happened in the farm equipment industry. It has become highly specialized. The nature of farm machinery has changed over the years. There was a rationalization that went on. Industries closed down because they became inefficient, or because they could no longer compete. At the same time other industries come along with new and modern technology, and new ideas. That goes on all the time, and that is what happened with the farm equipment industry. The Hon. Member knows that full well. He mentioned 1949. This is 1988, so he is talking about 40 years ago.

Mr. Blaikie: I am talking about the effect of free trade on a particular sector.

Mr. McDermid: No. We still do have certain farm machinery here in Canada, and we still build certain farm machinery in Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Very little.

Mr. McDermid: We do. The Hon. Member says "very little", but we do. The industry has been rationalized and we build what is good.

It is a world-wide phenomenon, and it has been so for many years. As the Hon. Member may know, there was an overcapacity throughout the world in farm equipment. For example, Massey-Ferguson had plants all over the world. The machinery that is built today is far more productive than the equipment that was built years ago, so there has been a rationalization that has gone on. To blame what has gone on in the farm machine industry on free trade is a fallacy.

Mr. Speaker: Continuing debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is a rather onerous task to be the one who will have the floor of the House of Commons in what promises to be the last half hour of the debate on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I hope that at least in the eyes of some I will prove adequate to the task.

We are at the completion of a political process here in Canada which, one way or the other, whether this agreement should be defeated in an upcoming general election, whenever that happens to be, or whether this agreement should go on to be implemented, will fundamentally change Canada.

Of course, the most fundamental change will come if the agreement is implemented. However, it will also be the case that, if the agreement is not implemented, the debate which we have had, and the efforts which the Government has made to bring about this agreement, will have a lasting effect on the political process. It will have defined people's positions on various things for many years to come. Therefore, regardless of how it finally turns out, we are at the end of a very historic political debate.

One of the things that has bothered me about this debate all along, and tonight is no different, is that there has been an unwillingness on the part of the people who promote the agreement to hear what the other side is saying, and to at least acknowledge the legitimate differences of view that exist about Canada.

In his opening words tonight, I heard the Parliamentary Secretary say that he respected many of the concerns held by Canadians who are critics of the agreement. Yet I must say that I have listened to the Parliamentary Secretary and to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), on many occasions in the House and outside, and I have yet to find one criticism that has been made of the free trade agreement for which they have shown any respect. Criticism after criticism, and concern after concern has been trivialized and caricatured. People who have raised these concerns or criticisms have been accused of everything from verbal terrorism to criminal negligence, you name it.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, where is that respect? I also ask not only the Government, but all of us here, the media, and everybody who has participated, why have we not been able—and I have seen it before in the House during the debate on the Constitution in 1981—to get to the root of what it is we are actually disagreeing about?

I suppose part of it is the inarticulateness of the political process. I also think it is a tactical refusal on the part of the Government to admit all of what is involved in this agreement. We saw it again tonight when the Parliamentary Secretary rose and talked about the elimination of tariffs. I have said it time and time again until I am tired of saying it, but I only have one more time to say it: this agreement is not only about the elimination of tariffs. If it were only about the elimination of tariffs, we would have an entirely different debate. It is either a manifestation of the profoundest ignorance for Members on the Government side to keep rising and talking about this agreement as if it only had to do with the elimination of tariffs, or it is a manifestation of the profoundest deceit. It is one or the other. I think there is a mixture over there. I think some are just ignorant, and some are deceitful.

What we have in the agreement is a lot more than the elimination of tariffs. Why does the Parliamentary Secretary and others not rise and talk about that? Why do they not talk about the provisions with respect to foreign investment? Why do they not talk about the provisions with respect to energy? Why do they not talk in the honest way that ex-Premier Lougheed did when he appeared before the committee and stated that this would enable policy to be set in Washington rather than Ottawa, and that he thought that was a good idea? Why do they not talk about financial services and other things that are involved in the agreement? Why is it that we only hear about tariffs? Why is it that we only hear about this one part of the agreement?

I say to you, Madam Speaker, that one of the enduring frustrations of this debate, for those of us who are against it, is trying to get the Government to admit, and the Canadian people to see, that what we are talking about here is something much more than what has ever been considered historically as free trade. Free trade never involved all those things, and that it is on the basis of those other sections of the agreement, having to do with energy, foreign investment, services, and the agreement to agree, over the next five to seven years on what constitutes a subsidy or an unfair trade practice that is the source of our anxiety about this agreement.

Would it not be nice if someone had just admitted, just once, that in those negotiations that will take place over the next five to seven years there will be attempts by the Americans to draw our social programs into the negotiations regarding what constitutes a subsidy? Does anybody on the other side actually believe that the Americans will not try that, that that will not become an object of negotiation? If the Government is successful in negotiating in such a way that our programs do not come to be seen that way, that will be terrific. We doubt that that may be the case because of the asymmetrical relationship that exists between Canada and the United States, but our first and foundational claim is that these things will be negotiated, that these things will be on the table, no matter what the outcome of the negotiation is.

Our first and foundational claim regarding that is that those kinds of things should not be on the table and that no Canadian government has any business entering into an agreement that provided for a process over the next five to seven years whereby those things would be on any table. As far as we are concerned in the NDP, those things belong on the Canadian table alone, they belong here in the House of Commons, and not on a table between an American negotiator and a Canadian negotiator, either in Washington or in Ottawa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Could not anybody at least have admitted that that is something that is going to take place regardless of the outcome?

I have asked myself the question I do not know how many times. I look over there and I see people whom I have worked with for nine and a half years now, and I ask myself, how is it that they could contemplate doing something which, in my judgment, and in the judgment of my colleagues and of many Canadians, is so detrimental to the survival of the kind of Canada that the Conservatives, one after the other, have risen to say that they love? I have asked myself why it is that so many can get up and demonstrate so much zeal, joy, delight in this agreement. I have finally come to the conclusion that this debate in many, many ways has had absolutely nothing to do with facts or economic analysis, because economists are a dime a dozen.

An Hon. Member: They cost more than a dime.

Mr. Blaikie: Yes. They just cost more than a dime.

I think my Leader covered it today when he began his speech with some philosophical analysis. What you have here is a kind of competing view of the world. It is really a religious argument. We have here people in the Conservative caucus who for so long espoused a view of the world in which they feel that the market-place should be sovereign, that regardless of the effect this agreement may have on Canada, they sense here, they sniff, a cosmological victory. Regardless of what the actual effect of the agreement might be, they feel that this Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement carves their view of the world in stone.

That is why they are willing, even if they represent grape growing industries or other areas that may be hurt by this agreement, or whether they actually, even in their heart of hearts, believe in some of the social programs—because some Conservatives do, but we remember that some did not—to swallow all this, repress it, and say, "By God, this agreement is a good agreement no matter what, because in this agreement we win the metaphysical argument that we have been having with the NDP for 50 years". They like that.

What they do not realize is that the Canada that they love is a Canada that has been created out of the mix of political traditions that have existed in this country, that have fought with each other, in elections and between elections and in civil society, for a view of what the country is about. We are a different country precisely because we have had those different traditions. We are a different country because we have had a red Tory tradition that the United States never had. We are a different country because we have had a democratic socialist tradition that never got off the ground in the United States. We are a different country for a lot of reasons, and one of the reasons is because we have had the tension that exists between these various political traditions, which exists within parties, between parties, which overlap. Some of us are hybrids. What they do not realize is that in this agreement they are declaring that creative political tension to be over. They are buying forever, if you like, one particular view, which has its place in Canada's political pantheon, if you like, but it has to be a place in Canada's political pantheon and not the only idol in the political sanctuary.

What we are saying, and I will be right up front about this, is that this free trade agreement philosophically makes the kind of Canada impossible that the CCF and the NDP have fought for since 1933, and indeed before that, in the form of the Independent Labour Party and others.

An Hon. Member: Bravo!

Mr. Blaikie: The Member says bravo. That is the point that I want to make. I do not think that any political party has the right, including our own, through an agreement with the United States, an agreement that they sought no mandate for, to declare an end to the political debate that has been going on in Canada.

Mr. McDermid: We can cancel in six months.

Mr. Blaikie: I will get to you in a minute. This is what the members of the Conservative Party propose to do, but they propose to do it not in the open. We have listened to the Parliamentary Secretary today talking about tariffs again. He did not talk about the fact that much of what his colleagues on the other side like about this agreement is that it does make the kind of Canada that the NDP and others have been working for in this political mix impossible. We will never achieve the kind of Canada that only we want, and we never should. But we should be in that mix.

What is happening here is that the Conservatives are about to achieve, by political stealth and deceit, what they would never be able to achieve directly. If they went directly to the Canadian people and said on an issue by issue basis "We want to institute a regime by which we will have unregulated foreign investment", they would be thrown out of office. If they said: "We want to hamstring our national government so we will never ever again be able to have a national energy policy of any kind"—not just the one the Liberals had which was not all that great—then they would be thrown out of office.

• (2040)

Mr. McDermid: We campaigned on that.

Mr. Blaikie: The Tories did not campaign on that. The Conservatives campaigned against the Liberal national energy policy. They did not campaign saying they wanted to sign an agreement which would prevent us from ever having a national energy policy of any kind.

Mr. McDermid: This agreement does not say that.

Mr. Blaikie: It does so. Peter Lougheed said that before the committee. Read it. That is one of the reasons he likes the agreement.

If the Conservatives tried to campaign directly on whether or not we should seek to harmonize our social programs with the United States in any way, shape, or form they would be tossed out of office so fast it would make their heads spin.

What is done in this agreement is an attempt, as I said before, to achieve indirectly what the Conservative Party would never be able to achieve directly, to enshrine in this agreement for a generation their view of Canada, this neo-Conservative view of Canada, which is at odds with the other tradition that exists within the Conservative Party. It is actually more at home with elements of the Liberal Party of Canada, 19th century Liberals, and there are many in the right wing of the Liberal Party who are smiling—most of them in the Senate, but some of them here—because what the Conservative Party is about to do is the dirty work of the right wing of the Liberal Party.

If the Liberal Party ever comes to power, God forbid, the Liberals will sit back and say: "Lads, the Tories did all the dirty work for us. They have done the things that we might not have ever been able to do. Let us just take them as given and go from here".

I know that the last time I criticized the Liberals in the House on the free trade agreement some people phoned me and said: "How can you be critical of the Liberals? They are against the free trade agreement. You guys should stick together". I tell you, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals are not to be trusted on this free trade agreement.

I would say to all those Canadians who are genuinely against this agreement: "Do not trust the Liberals when it comes to this free trade agreement". If they get in, they will as they have done so many times—who are the original continentalists in this country; it is the Liberal Party of Canada—buckle to American pressure as sure as I am standing here, and that six-month clause which the Parliamentary Secretary has been talking about will never be used. It is only the New Democratic Party that sees in this agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: Virtuous.

Mr. Blaikie: It is not a question of virtue. It is a question of this agreement being against what we stand for. I say this agreement is not against what the Liberals stand for. It was the Liberals who allowed all kinds of foreign ownership to take place.

Mr. Prud'homme: Do not preach.

Mr. Blaikie: We remember it was the Liberals who presided over the creation of the branch plant economy which eroded Canadian economic independence.

Mr. Prud'homme: The NDP is in danger in Winnipeg.

Mr. Blaikie: What we have is an attempt to win for all time debates which should exist separately, issues which should be debated separately and I have confidence that the Canadian people will see that this is the case. They will not be able to see that this is the case on the basis of what they have been told by the Government because the Government has concentrated almost entirely on the so-called elimination of tariffs and the opportunities this will create for Canadian businesses.

If you look at the analysis of the Conservatives, Madam Speaker, indeed if you read the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) book—

Mr. Prud'homme: Do not preach.

Mr. Blaikie: The Member keeps accusing me of preaching. I make no apologies for that. I am preaching against the free trade agreement which I thought he was against, but you see he is a Liberal and maybe he is not really against it, and that is why he is uncomfortable with the vehemence of my style.

Mr. Prud'homme: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. It is a technical point of order. Listening to the Hon. Member I realize now how badly the NDP is in trouble in Winnipeg.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I must tell the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) that his time had expired. I feel much happier knowing that his eyesight is getting a lot better and he realized that I was in the Chair for the last 15 minutes or so.

Mr. Hockin: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a couple of questions. I am very interested in cosmology. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is interested in cosmology. He is trying to make this debate about this commercial agreement into a cosmological obsession in the country. He is obsessed with cosmology. He wants to make this that kind of issue, but I have a couple of questions for him.

Mr. Blaikie: I can hardly wait.

Mr. Hockin: They deal with his theory of red Tories. His theory is that they would not support this agreement. I do not know what a red Tory is. I guess Gad Horowitz knows what a red Tory is and Louis Hartz or other people who invented the term. If you are using a term you should know who invented it.

An Hon. Member: He used to be one of them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: When you were president of the Young Tories you would have known what a red Tory is. A red Tory, according to Horowitz, is one who believes in protecting the state and protecting the country to make sure that society has cohesion and sensitivity. Also that it is not frozen into place in some sort of static kind of form that does not move dynamically and does not refresh each generation with new challenges. That is a red Tory. It is rather an interesting combination of protecting the collectivity and also giving liberty. That is what a red Tory is. If that is a red Tory, I think most Members of our caucus are red Tories.

An Hon. Member: What about Taylor, Shields and Jepson?

Mr. Hockin: On the Member's collectivist notions, can he name one Crown corporation that is disadvantaged by the free trade agreement? Crown corporations are the NDP's great example of collectivist thought. Can the Member even point to one Crown corporation that is disadvantaged in any real way by the free trade agreement? In fact, if the Hon. Member took a look at the uranium agreement, he would find there is improved access for our Crown corporations into the United States.

The second question is on protecting the state and protecting our ability as a country to forward our national interests. Has the Member read Article 906 of the free trade agreement which says that the parties to this agreement have agreed to allow existing or future incentives for oil and gas exploration, development and related activities in order to maintain the reserve base for these energy resources? Has he read that this is an energy policy? That is the heart of an energy policy. That is the state acting to protect the leverage of a country when it comes to major decisions on energy. Has the Hon. Member read that? How does the Hon. Member square that with what he said?

Third, talking about red Tories, does the Hon. Member not agree that the great problems in the African countries is that they have not developed enough resources to produce the kind of cultural and social programs they would like? It is through wealth and wealth creation that one builds one's culture, builds a reading public and a public for cultural productions and funds the social service programs. If you secure access to the largest market in the world, is it not true for anybody interested cosmologically in red Toryism that there is much more there in terms of resources for future generations as well as present generations culturally, in social services and in every other sense?

The fourth and final question and the most important one is this. Does he not agree, when he looks at this agreement, that we have put ourselves in a position where we have multiplied our leverage with the U.S. ten times with respect to bilateral disputes? For example, on trade remedies we have essentially negotiated equality with the U.S. With respect to sideswiping, when they get annoyed with another foreign country and apply a trade remedy to them, Canada will be exempted. Canada, one-tenth the size of the United States, has gained resources through this agreement, increased its sovereignty, its dignity, and that is what a red Tory or any kind of Tory would believe. In fact, a socialist should believe that as well.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, obviously—

An Hon. Member: Madam Speaker.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, it is not because I look at you that I say that; it is because I am not looking at you when I say that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do wish the Hon. Member would look at me when he addresses me.

Mr. Blaikie: The argument arose as to what constitutes a red Tory because I brought it up with respect to the various political and philosophical traditions that make up the Canadian mix which is set to be destroyed by this agreement. I suppose one of the people that comes quickly to my mind is George Grant who in 1963, wrote a book called Lament for a Nation in which he lamented the increasing absorption of Canada into what he called the advanced technological capitalism of the U.S. What we have here is the completion, I believe, of the process that he began to lament in 1963 with the defeat of the Diefenbaker Government over its refusal to do the bidding of the U.S. That was his analysis.

Mr. Hockin: Nonsense.

Mr. Blaikie: That was his analysis and I suppose he would be recognized by almost everyone as a red Tory whether they agree with him or not. That is the kind of analysis I was referring to.

The Hon. Minister also asked me to name Crown corporations which might be damaged by the agreement. The fact is that Crown corporations are on the hit list of the Progressive Conservative Government. It sees the elimination of Crown corporations as part and parcel of its whole economic agenda. Free trade, deregulation and privatization are the three thrusts of Tory economic policy.

The Minister asked me what Crown corporations might be damaged by the free trade agreement, as if he cared about Crown corporations. The fact is that he does not or else he would not be privatizing them. The Government would not be trying to sell Air Canada. It would not have the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) talking about selling the CNR as he did, not too long ago. It would not have the policies it has with respect to privatization. The Minister mentioned the uranium industry. The Government has already sold off that industry. I do not know how we can damage a Crown corporation that we do not have any more as a result of the privatization policy. It is sheer hypocrisy for these people to get up and pretend they care about Crown corporations.

Mr. McDermid: You did not answer the question.

Mr. Blaikie: I did so. The Minister quoted to me elements of the agreement having to do with energy policy. The key words were "existing policies". We know what the existing policy of the Government is. It is a deregulated energy sector. Of course in a free trade agreement you could agree to preserve existing policies.

Mr. McDermid: And future policies.

Mr. Blaikie: Preserve existing non-policies with respect to regulation of the energy sector.

The Minister asked me about culture, and this is incredible. He said, will it not be nice when the Africans get an economy like ours so they will finally be able to have some culture. I take that to be just the kind of vanity of modern man, if you like, with apologies for not saying "modern persons", that we should say to the people of Africa that the only culture worth having is the kind of culture you can cultivate when you have an advanced capitalist society. I think they have their culture now and they do not need a Progressive Conservative Government in order to have culture in Africa.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Unfortunately, Madam Speaker must interrupt as the time for questions and comments has now expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Thank you, Madam Speaker. In the remaining three minutes I will try to conclude this historic debate on free trade. I will take a few moments to summarize the position of the Liberal Party and explain the real reason why they are so opposed to free trade. The Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) has no choice. He has to get on side with Ontario and Ontario's Liberal Premier. That is the only way he can get the support of a province with 99 seats. That is why the Liberal Party has decided to stick with Premier Peterson. It is politics pure and simple, while Mr. Peterson wants to defend the interests of a province where unemployment is at a mere 3.1 per cent and exports are worth $60 billion.

Mr. Peterson is protecting the interests of his province, but he is a provincial leader. I think it is hard to explain why anyone running for a national party would be so anxious to support the interests of one province—the Liberal interests of that province.

As for the Socialists, Madam Speaker, in any case they are all in bed together! It's one big happy family of people on the left, who live like parasites on thriving free enterprise in this country. Those are the people who nationalize and live off others.

Madam Speaker, the Socialist Leader has to stick with his funding source, and that source is the Vice-President of the New Democratic Party who is the Socialist Leader's boss and gets his funds mainly from the United Auto Workers who have enjoyed the benefits of free trade since 1965. Madam Speaker, $30 billion worth of exports to the United States are connected with the automobile industry and are the result of free trade. There are 840,000 Canadians who make a living thanks to the existing benefits of free trade. Of those 840,000, there are many who pay dues to the United Auto Workers, to Bob White, their president, a man who holds the Socialist Leader hostage because he pays for the advertising on free trade ordered by the Socialist Party.

In concluding, Madam Speaker, I would like to say a few words about Quebec. The province of Quebec is ready for free trade, because in 1960, it started to prepare for more secure access to the American market and better guarantees. We trained business people. We trained accountants and engineers.

In recent years, Madam Speaker, Quebec has built a solid financial infrastructure in co-operation with the two main political parties we have in Quebec. Thanks to this infrastructure, our young people and our businesses are now able to conquer the U.S. market, and that is what Canadians and Quebecers need: the U.S. market, and not a Liberal-Socialist coalition that denies the interests of Canadians and Quebecers. So we challenge you Liberals . . .

• (2100)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 9 p.m., pursuant to order made earlier today, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the Bill now before the House.

[English]

Accordingly, the question is the following one. Ms. McDonald moved:

> That the amendment be amended by deleting the period and adding the following words therefor:
> "and its implications on the economic and political sovereignty of Canada".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

[Translation]

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to order made earlier today, the recorded division is deferred until 6 p.m. on Wednesday, August 31, 1988.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, have we taken a voice vote on all three or just on the amendment to the amendment? Do we do the amendment and the main motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As the House has decided to defer a vote on the amendment to the amendment, I cannot put the amendment and the main motion before the House until we have disposed of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. McDermid: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being nine o'clock p.m., pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

RAILWAYS

TRIBUTE TO PRESIDENT OF CANADIAN RAILWAYS EMPLOYEES' PENSION ASSOCIATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

That this House commend the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association and in particular National President J. Earl White for their dedication and tireless efforts on behalf of past, present and future railway employees.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is an honour for me to be able to rise in the House today to pay tribute to the work of the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association and, in particular, to their national President J. Earl White. Earl White has put in many hours of dedicated hard work on behalf not only of pensioners today but employees today, beneficiaries of the pension plan, spouses, and survivors.

I feel privileged to be able to draw to the attention of this House the accomplishments which Earl White and the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association have made in their efforts on behalf of pensioners. They have helped to draw to the attention of the public a very serious matter involving what I consider to be the legalized theft of literally hundreds of millions of dollars of hard-earned pension funds of railway pensioners across this land.

I have two motions on the Order Paper. The first motion, the one to which I am addressing myself at this time, is that which commends Earl White for the work he has done on behalf of railway pensioners. The second motion calls upon the Government to introduce legislation concerning the pension funds, not only of the Canadian National Railway but also of Canadian Pacific Limited.

This legislation would do two things. First, it would provide that pensions be indexed to the extent that such indexation is actuarially viable with the funds that have been paid into each railway pension plan, the unfunded liabilities of the respective railway companies, and the funds that are being paid into each railway pension plan on a current basis and that, in any event, the minimum indexation to be paid should be indexed to the Consumer Price Index commencing on the retirement date of each pensioner including those currently receiving pensions.

Second, the legislation for which I am calling, and for which Earl White has fought so diligently over the years, would provide that excess earnings on money contributed by employees and former employees must be distributed on an equitable basis to employees and future employees only and not go into corporate coffers.

That is the legislation which New Democrats are calling upon the Government to bring forward to recognize the contribution of pensioners and to recognize the extent to which Canadian National and also Canadian Pacific have been raiding the pension fund for many years. This was accomplished primarily in two successive stages by increasing the assumed rate of interest.

First, on December 31, 1968, CNR increased the assumed rate of interest to be earned on all pension fund assets from 4 per cent per annum to 7.5 per cent per annum, which change in assumption allowed it to reduce its unfunded liability from approximately $671 million to $300 million as of that date. That was the most profitable move ever made by Canadian National Railways for the corporation. At the same time it was the biggest rip-off of employees and pensioners to that date.

In 1987 CNR accomplished the same kind of thing by changing the assumed interest rate from 7 per cent to 7.5 per cent. It turns out that this was the largest single rip-off of a pension fund in the history of private pension funds in Canada. In fact, the pension fund credits received by CNR for the sole benefit of that corporation—not for pensioners, employees, spouses, or beneficiaries, but for the sole benefit of that corporation—during the past seven years are slightly more than $2 billion.

I could go on and talk about the figures for Canadian Pacific Limited. Unfortunately, these figures are not yet available, but I suspect that they will reveal the same kind of raid on pension funds as that which took place with the CNR fund. As Mr. White says, it is really a tie as to which of these two corporations should be designated as the most selfish.

Furthermore, these two corporations, which are trustees of two of the largest private pension funds in Canada, are also two of the oldest private pension funds in Canada having been instituted in 1935 and 1937.

I mentioned the increase in the assumed interest rate from 7 per cent to 7.5 per cent. Increasing the assumed interest rate in this manner caused a credit of $1.4 billion to arise. That basically meant that the obligation of CNR was eliminated and it reduced assets in the pension fund by some 27 per cent by one stroke of the pen.

Ninety-four per cent of 1,600 other pension trust funds have been established on a defined benefits basis and the trustees of those corporations are the trustees of some $150 billion of assets. It is very likely that when they see the example that has been set by CNR and CP Limited for their pensioners they may be tempted to follow that example. The percentage of funds which they might appropriate unto themselves might be a little less, perhaps 25 per cent, but nevertheless that would amount to literally billions and billions of dollars.

After all, moneys that are set aside for pensions are just a form of deferred income. In effect, this is robbery. It is legalized robbery of thousands of employees of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific.

• (2110)

I want to recognize the contribution that Earl White has made in drawing to the attention of the Canadian public, and in particular of railway employees and pensioners, what is a very serious inequity.

I did not bring into the House the literally hundreds of documents that Earl White has produced over the years that attempt to document very clearly the extent to which the pensioners have been the victims of raiding on their pension funds.

I want to say a word about Earl White himself. The motion recognizes his dedication, his tireless efforts on behalf of railway employees, pensioners, spouses, beneficiaries, and survivors. Some may ask who is Earl White, this man who has worked so hard as President of the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association.

Earl White is 79 years of age and has dedicated this part of his life to improving the lot of these pensioners. He completed and passed a three-year correspondence course set by the Insurance Institute of Canada. Following that, he completed another correspondence course by the Life Underwriters Association of Canada. After that he went into the Canadian Officers Training Corp and then returned to civilian life and the Canadian National Railways in 1946, having attained the very distinguished rank of Lieutenant-Colonel.

That experience was some 40 to 50 years ago, but certainly the basis upon which life insurance contracts and pension contracts are calculated is the same today as it was 40 to 50 years ago. Earl White is one of the most knowledgeable individuals in this area of railway pensions, and he certainly has studied this very carefully. Indeed, he has based his study on the audited financial statements of the railway companies themselves.

He notes that when a company like the CNR employs a high percentage of new employees between ages 18 and 25, like all employees employed on a permanent basis they are required as a condition of their employment six months after becoming employees to contribute to the CNR pension fund, effective from the beginning of their employment.

That means the CNR would have in its custody the pension funds of all employees for the duration of their working lifetime, plus for their expectation of life commencing on their retirement date. While it can be somewhat technical, the key element in all this discussion about pensions is the interest earned factor. That is the key question.

Effectively, as I mentioned before, CNR raised this assumed rate from 4 per cent to 7.5 per cent in 1968. Basically, the pension fund was reduced by some $371 million. That amount was credited not to pensioners, not to workers, not to their families, but to Canadian National Railways. This meant in practical terms that the assets on hand after 61 years would increase by the factor that Mr. White has set out in his calculations, which is 64 times over.

For Canadian National Railways, Mr. White has only been able to supply figures on the contributions of employees, the contributions of CNR, and investment income on pensions paid each year since January 1, 1960. Prior to 1960, CNR did not publish these figures.

He has provided me with all the figures, the amount by which all contributions, investment income, and realized capital gains exceed pensions paid from January 1, 1960 to December 31, 1987. That figure is over $5 billion.

The fact is that the earnings rate on a market value basis on all assets in the CNR pension trust fund was an average of 14 per cent per annum, from 1976 to 1986. The excess earnings were about $2.367 billion. That is pensioners' money.

The trustees of the CNR pension trust funds for the period for which they published financial statements have actually paid out in pensions less than 32 per cent of the total revenue received in the 28-year period from 1960 to 1988. If that is not legalized theft, I do not know what is.

I want to note that it was Liberal governments and Conservative governments that have avoided passing any legislation whatsoever that would protect employees and pensioners and their pension funds from predatory corporations.

I want to say on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we are committed to passing that kind of legislation. We are committed to passing the kind of legislation that would prohibit corporations from raiding the pensions fund that are contributed by employees, by pensioners. That is our commitment. I speak on behalf of my colleagues. I speak on behalf of my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), our transport critic—he is a former railway man himself—who will be participating in this debate shortly.

I speak on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who has done an extraordinary job in speaking out over the years on behalf of railway pensioners and railway employees. I know that a lot of these people reside in his own constituency. Indeed, as recently as yesterday that Hon. Member spoke in the House on the importance of amending the law and bringing in a new law to recognize that this kind of rip-off must end.

Not just railway pensioners, but all Canadians owe a debt of gratitude to Earl White and to the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association for his efforts, his commitment, and his dedication in bringing this to public attention.

Unfortunately, the time I have available to me is running out. I know that some of my colleagues want to speak. I will be interested to hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker) on this subject.

It is important to note that the onus is squarely on the CNR and Canadian Pacific to respond to Earl White, to respond to the concerns of railway pensioners right across this land who believe that they have been robbed.

This is at a time when the cost of living is going up and pensioners are struggling to survive. They are people who have contributed in many cases 40 and 50 years of their lives. I think of people like one of my own constituents, Ray Carrell, who put a lifetime into the railroad. The corporate executives, the fat cats in Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, get great pensions worth of hundreds of thousands of dollars per year, but the ordinary worker, the Earl Whites and Ray Carrells and other railway pensioners, are being hosed. They are the ones being robbed of the funds that rightfully belong to them.

I could go on further about some of the specific figures. Certainly I would be pleased to make these figures available to any Member of the House, indeed anyone in the public who is interested.

In my view Earl White has set out a very comprehensive and concrete statement of the exact situation affecting railway pensioners. He has the funds clearly set out. I believe that the claims Earl White has made are valid and deserve to be repeated.

I am pleased to have an opportunity to do so in the House. I only wish that we had an opportunity to bring him before a parliamentary committee. When New Democrats are in a position to bring forward legislation that would prevent the raiding of pensions, certainly one of the people who deserves the most credit for this change will be my constituent, Mr. Earl White.

Finally, I repeat that the reason this raid on pensioners' funds has been allowed to take place is that past governments, whether they be Liberal or Conservative, have stood by and allowed it to happen. We are not talking about hundreds of millions of dollars, but about billions of dollars. They have not brought forward legislation that would prevent this kind of rip-off of private pension plans and the pension plans of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific.

In conclusion, once again I want to thank all Members of the House for the opportunity to raise what I consider to be a very serious inequity which affects hundreds of thousands of pensioners, employees, spouses, and beneficiaries. I would also, once again, like to thank Earl White for the tremendous work he has done on behalf of the people right across Canada in drawing this matter to the attention of the public. Let us hope that one of the most important accomplishments of the next Parliament of Canada will be to right this great historic wrong.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the motion put before this House, dated August 10, 1988, proposing the commendation of "the Canadian National Railways' Employees' Pension Association and in particular National President J. Earl White for their dedication and tireless efforts on behalf of past, present and future railway employees".

On a personal basis, I would also like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), for placing the motion on the Order Paper. It permitted me the opportunity to be briefed thoroughly on this topic and I must say that I found it to be most interesting. I think Members would like me to share with them information about the pensioners of the railways of Canada.

I would like to give some background on the matter of pensions and on this association, in particular. Canadian National embraces some 44,000 pensioners, with a similar number for CP rail and other railways in Canada combined. These are people who the Government recognizes as having spent their lives making the railways of Canada run, railways which were long the lifelines of commerce, the very arteries and veins which bound the nation together in the first place and which still play an important role in getting our products to market—our grain, coal, forest products, and many manufactured goods such as automobiles, steel products, and pulp and paper.

As you well know, Madam Speaker, it is people who make an enterprise run, who are the background of the enterprise. They make it successful, and this is a fundamental truth in the case of our railways—Canadian National, CP Rail, BC Rail, Ontario Northland, and our resource railways like the Quebec Northshore and Labrador, to name just a few. Many of the people who ran some of those railways, indeed, many of those who built some of them, such as the Great Slave Lake Railway, parts of the BC Rail, and other lines, are today represented in the tens of thousands of railway pensioners.

They have worked hard in their careers, men and women alike, as trainmen, carmen, brakemen, porters, stewards on passenger trains, dispatchers, operators, and many, many other careers from maintenance of waymen to engineers. There are many categories which I am sure I did not mention but are no less important and no less worthy of mention.

Since being a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport I have noticed among railway men and women a pride in serving their railway which we do not often find in other occupations. They are very proud to be railway people. They do not seem to lose that even when they become pensioners. These numerous pensioners today are represented or have grouped themselves into a large number of local, regional, provincial or national associations, or combinations thereof.

If I may mention some, there are the CN Pensioners' Association and their many councils and locals, the Canadian Pacific Pioneers' Association, the National Council of CN Pensioners' Associations Incorporated, the Saskatchewan CPR Pioneers' Social and Service Association. I suspect my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), was probably a founding member of the Saskatchewan Pioneers' Association. I would like to mention the Biggar Railway Employees and Pensioners Association and the Ottawa Retired Railway Pension Association. There is even a CNR Lady Pensioners' Association. There are retired members of many unions—the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of the United States and Canada, to mention but a few.

An important contingent, of course, are members of the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association, whose membership totals some 19,000 and which I understand is split about equally between pensioners and active employees. The Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association has been in existence since December, 1971 and consists of 19 branches of which four are particularly active.

Many of these associations from time to time put forward their views on pension and pensioners' issues. The Canadian Railway Employees' Pension Association has certainly been among the most active in this regard, as has its president, Mr. J. Earl White. Without detracting one moment from the efforts of Mr. White, I think we must also acknowledge that many of the other unions have made similar types of presentations.

However, the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association has not been the only pensioner association which has made itself clearly heard. It is important to mention the National Council of Canadian National Pensioners' Associations Inc. This organization, called the National Council, was incorporated in 1974. It represents four regional and thirty-two local councils, some of which date back to the 1940s. At present, through its associations the National Council represents about 15,000 CN pensioners. It is the policy of the National Council to work together with CN for the benefit of its members. Since February, 1984 the National Council President has been one of the three pensioners' representatives of the CN Pension Board.

Many of the these groups have made numerous recommendations on improvements to their pension plans in the past and, over time, these have no doubt contributed to achieving some improvements in the benefits which railways and other pensioners enjoy today.

Not to be ignored in contributing toward improvements in the railway pension plans are the negotiated settlements among active employees with their employers, as well as various government initiatives such as the Pension Benefits Standards Act amendments introduced earlier this year. The former have enabled certain enrichment of plans as part of the collective bargaining process, and the latter government initiative will go a long way to increasing pension benefits.

Railway pension plans, and I can speak particularly for CN's pension plan, have long been among the best in the country. I should take this opportunity to mention to Members of this House the fact that CN's 1959 pension plan is above average. Indeed, by most standards it has been among the top ten plans in Canada and provides benefits that only 25 per cent of members of pension plans in Canada enjoy. CN has also done much in recent years and months to improve various aspects of its plan.

It is through the untiring efforts of employees and pensioners in all walks of life, as represented either directly with their employers or through their unions and associations, that benefits to them and Canadian pensioners as a whole continue to improve over the years. To all these groups and individuals, I would extend recognition and encourage them to work closely with their present or former employers to achieve their goals.

I wish to take this opportunity to express my highest esteem to the railway pensioners throughout Canada and my thanks to them for their significant part in building this great and wonderful nation.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by thanking the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for giving the House the opportunity to debate something which we do not often get a chance to debate. I recalled in the House just yesterday that one of the promises made by the Conservatives when they came to power in 1984, was that they would finally do something about the long-standing complaints that various CN pensioners and CN pensioners' associations have had about the inadequacies of the CN plan. I noted yesterday in the House that four years will soon have gone by and nothing had happened. We had the subcommittee make some recommendations. For a variety of reasons, good reasons, I might say, not all CN pensioners, particularly Mr. White, whom we honour tonight by debating this motion of commendation, were happy with the report. Even the recommendations of that report would have been an improvement, yet the Government has chosen to let four years go by without acting. The subcommittee reported a long time ago and absolutely nothing is happening.

• (2130)

There are a lot of CN pensioners out there, people who were pensioners in 1984, who will remember this, and people who have become pensioners since 1984. That, I might say, is a very large group because of the process that the CN has gone through since 1984. Incredible numbers of people have been retired. Many retired early, with or without a handshake. Many, fortunately, retired with a handshake.

It used to be that I knew an entire generation of people who worked for the railway. I now know an entire generation of retired railway workers. Most of them are not 65 yet. Most of them retired early as a result of what has been going on at CN. I might say that many of them are thankful to have been retired when they see what is going on in the railway and the way that the CNR is now being run. Many of them are grateful not just to be retired but grateful not to be having to put up with the way in which the railway is now being run.

As you might know, Madam Speaker, I come from Transcona. Transcona is and was a railway town. It is becoming less so as it has become part and parcel of the greater City of Winnipeg. But it still remains the case that a good many people in Transcona either do or have worked for the railway. A great many CN pensioners live in Transcona or in Elmwood, East Kildonan, or in other nearby areas which are all part of my riding. Without wanting to get into a bidding war with other Members, I would say that I probably have more CN pensioners in my riding than anyone else I could imagine. The main Transcona shops are there. We have had them there ever since 1912.

I also have a personal interest in it, if you like, Madam Speaker. I heard the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) mention the Biggar Pensioners Association. My association with the railway goes back to when my grandfather Blaikie started with the railway in Biggar in 1912 as a carman, or what was then known as a car knocker. I can remember in the mid-fifties before my grandfather retired in 1958 being in Biggar and going with him down the track as the trains came in. His job was to hit the wheels with a hammer and listen for cracks, among other things.

My father also joined the railway in Biggar. First, he shovelled coal and then later he went to Transcona to take his apprenticeship as a machinist. He retired in 1986 with 44 years of service in the railway as the Assistant General Superintendent of Equipment for the Prairie Region, Motive Power.

I just took a quick count. I think I have at least a half dozen uncles who are CN pensioners, and two grand-uncles, brothers of my grandfather who are now gone who were also CN pensioners. I have a cousin working in the Transcona Car Shop to this day. For me, the welfare of CN pensioners is not an abstract matter. It is something that I know many people whom I personally know will have to deal with if that plans becomes inadequate. That is why I am on my feet tonight. It is to advocate that something finally be done to change the nature of the plan so that CN pensioners are not forever dependent on the goodwill or the fiat of the CNR for increases in their pensions.

There are a number of things that need to be done. We need to have indexation built into that plan.

People who are retiring now, those who have just retired, and those who are in really tough situations now are those who retired quite a while ago—but regardless of the situation—all need to be alleviated of the uncertainty of wondering whether or not they will receive an appropriate increase when the economic situation demands it. We say, and we have said for a long time, that there needs to be some kind of indexation structured right into the plan so that this kind of economic uncertainty might be removed, so that people might continue to get a pension which has the purchasing value that it had when they retired from the railway. It seems to me that that is only justice. It is only elementary justice that people should not find themselves in a situation several years from now, or for that matter, if they are fortunate to live long, many years after their retirement, in which their pension is worthless. I do not know how anyone can argue against that.

Yet, obviously, nothing has been done. Part of the problem, of course, has been the unwillingness on the part of the Government to challenge the relationship between the company and the pension plan, to challenge this whole question of unfunded liability whereby on the basis of that unfunded liability the CNR feels that it has the right, when the pension plan generates money, to seize that money and to funnel it into the coffers of the CNR instead of either allowing it to accumulate interest or using it in a way that would give it back to the pensioners themselves.

What needs to be done is for the plan to be changed finally in such a way that the company actually contributes instead of sitting and saying: "We will look after the unfunded liability. We will look after it if anything happens". This is a very kind of tenuous way to operate. What if something were to happen to the CN? The very Member who spoke in this debate, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker), has said in the House before that the CN should be sold. What if the CNR were sold and in its new private incarnation it ran into economic problems and no longer had the political goodwill of the Government behind it? What would happen to all those pensioners who were depending on this company to provide the unfunded liability in those moments when the pension plan could not meet the commitments of the pension plan? This is a very real concern. There are a good many people out there who have literally bet their retirements on the validity and the solidity of this particular pension plan. The CNR has got away for far too long with this whole unfunded liability business.

I say to the Government and to future Governments—if the NDP were to form a government this is one of the first things that I as a member of that government would be working for—that they must make sure that this kind of change is brought about. I actually had a hope that, knowing as I did some of the members of the Conservative Party who have concerned themselves with this, they might have addressed themselves to it over that four-year period.

But time has come and gone. The problem remains the same. Earl White is four years older now. He is 79 but he has not given up. I am sure that he will not. He and many other CN pensioners, and various pension associations, are going to have to continue the battle to get some justice, to get that plan changed so that people who are retired now and find their pensions to be inadequate, people who are retiring now and have to face the economic uncertainty should inflation come back with any significance, or should any other economic situation be created in which their pensions will no longer have the same purchasing power, will not have to be dependent on what the CNR decides from year to year. As the situation exists now the CNR, could conceivably decide year after year after year not to do anything, not to provide an increase.

I not do see why these pensioners should be at the mercy of that kind of capricious judgment, however generous that judgment might have been from time to time. But it has not been all that generous, I can tell you, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member said that it was a plan that was above average, or better than most. The fact is that that is a statement about all the other pension plans in the country. It is not a statement about how good the CN pension plan is. It is a statement about how inadequate private pensions are in this country. The time for pension reform is long overdue, and the time for reform of the CN pension plan is even more overdue.

• (2140)

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I would like to say a few words about this motion. Your Honour will perhaps know that Edmonton is a CN town and many of my constituents are CN pensioners, including a neighbour. I do not believe I am overstating the facts to say that thousands and thousands of people in southeast Edmonton have worked for CN in the past, or are working for it now. I believe that they would want me to support strongly the motion of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I know of Mr. White from past interventions he has made on this issue. I hope that all Members of the House will vote in favour of this motion.

Unfortunately, I do not have Mr. White's representations with me. However, I know, as I am sure you do, Madam Speaker, from your constituents, that there is a concern that the pension situation for CN pensioners is not as good as it should be. I certainly agree with the Hon. Member who just spoke that other pension plans are even more inadequate. There is a concern that indexation is not there. If CN management feels like it, they will give it; if, for one reason or another, the CN management does not feel like it, then it will not be there.

Actuarial studies have shown repeatedly that men and women who have adequate pensions live longer than those who do not. That is an accepted fact throughout the life insurance industry, and it is one that none of us in the House should ever forget.

For a few summers many years ago I worked swinging a pick on a steel gang, as did the Hon. Member for Burnaby, and we both know a little about what it is like to work on a CN or CP section gang or steel gang. It is very hard work. If a person does that work for 30, 40, or 50 years, that person deserves to have indexation. CN pensioners deserve it, and I hope that it will come quickly. In my view the Government should have done it before. Indexation should be made a matter of law or a matter of legal obligation for both railway pension plans.

If CN is taking moneys or profits out of the pension plan that should go to the pensioners and not to CN's capital expansion or higher salaries to executives, that is something which I believe is unacceptable to a vast majority of Canadians.

There is a strong feeling across Canada, as Mr. White has shown to all of us, that the CN pension plan is not being managed adequately. Something has to be done about the CN pension plan.

I commend the Member for bringing this motion to the House tonight. I hope that all Members will vote for the motion and for what is behind it. The Hon. Member is attempting to help Mr. White, who I understand is now 79, to see something concrete, and a general and specific improvement of the CN pension plan for all former CN employees.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I only wish to take a few moments this evening because I know there is all-Party agreement and support for the motion to recognize J. E. White and the Canadian Railway Employees' Pension Association.

When I came to this place in October, 1968, one of the first things I started trying to do was something about railway pensions. Like others who have spoken, I had a personal interest in the matter. I had been a railroader, and I was the third generation in our family. My grandfather worked for the CPR in Revelstoke in the early 1900s, my father from 1919 to 1950, and I went to work for the CPR in 1947 after I got out of the Army.

I remember when I started my fellow employees, particularly the older ones, my local union officers, and even the local officials of the CPR. Whenever I asked about it or whenever I was at a union meeting, I was always given to understand that every month I put so much into the pension plan, the company put an equal amount into the pension plan, and upon retirement that was my pension.

When I came to Parliament and started looking at the annual reports of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, each year there was always something called an "unfunded liability". It was in excess of $1 billion for the CPR and almost $2 billion for the CNR. I thought, holy mackerel, that is a lot of money. There is no reason that those companies cannot pay indexed pensions or cannot raise the basic pension. However, I was just an innocent stubble jumping prairie boy. I kept going after the railroads in committee, and I think I have been through seven or eight different Ministers of Transport since I came here. I even asked the Prime Minister one time about my mother's survivor's pension, but that's another story.

It took me several years to realize what "unfunded liability" meant. It meant that the money was not there. After asking questions of the railway officers, listening to actuaries and officials from Health and Welfare, it finally dawned on me that all that meant was that the money was not there. It was what the railroads owed if every employee they had retired the next day, which everybody knows would never happen, could never happen.

Every MP from all Parties received letters galore every year from railway pensioners. Every year we raised it in the committee when we dealt with the CNR's annual report. Every third or fourth year there would be what was called an extra payment of the CNR pension fund. Invariably the CPR did the same thing in direct proportion. The CNR has always been the guinea pig.

Finally, I even got mad at the railway unions. I asked them what they were doing, and why they were not representing their members at the collective bargaining table and fighting. The pension plan is worth a strike, not necessarily a wage increase, but a pension plan for the employees and their brothers and sisters already on pension is worth a strike. Under the law, the railway unions, no matter what they tried, legally they could not represent those on pension because, under our present law, they are not considered part of a collective bargaining unit. Who is to speak for the railway brotherhoods and the railway pensioners? I compliment Members from all Parties who have raised this so often for so many years in the House, but the only ones outside the House who could and did speak for railway pensioners were people such as J. E. White and railway pensioners with whom we met from Moncton, New Brunswick, to Victoria on numerous occasions.

We obtained an order from the House of Commons after 1984, and a subcommittee was struck, half the Standing Committee on Transport. We held hearings in five locations. I wanted us to go to 25 or at least 15. We got to five locations outside Ottawa. Pensioners came for miles from all over, at their own expense, to tell us what they were going through.

There were men and women in their late seventies and early eighties who, when they retired, had a great, big pension. When they retired back in the 1950s and early 1960s, they had a pension of something over $200 a month. That was a fabulous pension then, but 10, 15, or 20 years later they could not live on it. Every once in a while their pensions would be increased by $2, $3, $4, $5 a month, out of what are called excess earnings.

What did I know and what did any other Member in this House know about the difference between a defined benefit plan and a money purchase plan, actuarial assumptions, and excess earnings? We very rarely heard about them. It turns out that there were excess earnings, all right, but they were on paper. It is like the "unfunded liability". The money is not there.

It is not that the CPR and the CNR has done anything illegal under our law. They have abided by the law meticulously. It is immoral and unconscionable that these two magnificent corporations, successive Governments since the 1930s, and Members of Parliament from all political Parties since the 1930s have allowed that to continue. There is no excuse. We all deserve to be blamed and condemned.

We tried in the subcommittee. We had some excellent staff—legal counsel, an actuary, a researcher from the parliamentary library, and an actuary from the Department of National Health and Welfare. They got the figures for us. They showed us what it would cost for full indexing, and it costs a bundle, a lot of money.

It was perfectly obvious that there was no way. It was obvious to all members of the subcommittee and to the whole standing committee that if we were to recommend full indexing of railway pensions, it would (a) not get accepted by this Parliament and (b) not be implemented by the Government. It is not just this Government, but previous ones as well.

We tried to get what we could, and we got a few small things in that subcommittee report which was unanimously adopted by this House.

Here we go again. Some time in the next several months there will be a new Parliament. I hope to be here, if my voters will let me, if I am lucky and honoured enough to be their representative again.

I want to thank my colleague from Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for this motion and his other motion on the Order Paper. I know that J. E. White is strong enough, angry enough, and ornery enough. He will be here, too, again appearing before a parliamentary committee.

I want to say that my Party and I are committed to the fact that this Parliament, whenever we get the chance, will bring in legislation covering all pension plans under federal jurisdiction that call for two things: First, no longer will any corporation be able to raid a pension plan for any funds or part of funds in that plan. We will recall one of the big multinational food chains headquartered in Toronto which tried to lift tens of millions of dollars out of a pension fund. We say that Parliament must pass legislation that prevents that and makes it unequivocal that every nickel in a pension fund belongs to nobody else but current employees and pensioners and that nobody else can touch it. Second, we stand for full indexing of all pensions under federal jurisdiction.

We got partial success in the minority Parliament of 1972 to 1974. We got indexing of old age pensions and family allowances, which we have since been lost under this Government. War veterans' pensions were indexed, old age pensions were indexed as were the pensions of the RCMP and the Armed Forces. Oh, many a Minister of Finance since would have loved to get out from under that, but it is still in place.

We would have full indexing even if it had to be phased in over two or three years. That is another aspect of pensions under federal jurisdiction that must be brought in and brought in as quickly as possible. Once done by a national Parliament, every other province will have to follow suit or accept their political peril if they do not.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I just want to say a word or two. I think that all of us feel very strongly about those who have inadequate pensions, particularly when it was promised. A few years ago when we found that the workers under the Workers' Compensation Board in Alberta were not getting enough to live upon, the Government decided to put money into it out of general revenue and, consequently, those on workers' compensation have been able to get by at least better than they would have had before. I thought that I should mention that, because there are ways of solving these problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion (Mr. Robinson) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to call it 10.04 p.m.?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INDUSTRY

ONTARIO GRAPE AND WINE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Government finally announced its program for grape producers in Ontario that it is putting out of business with the Mulroney trade deal. The Government declared that there will be $100 million of aid, but when we check the details we find that $10 million will be used for tax credits to the wine companies and another $10 million will be used for an annual grape surplus purchase program. That will leave less than $80 million to assist the half of the grape growers who will be put out of business.

The Ontario grape growers have demanded $156 million over the next six years to begin to adjust to the destruction of their farms, their livelihood, and their business. Thus, there will be only one-half of the funds that are needed to assist these grape growers. Worse still, the funds will be provided over 12 years instead of six years.

This is a foretaste of the treatment that workers and businesses which will be destroyed by the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) trade deal, will receive. It is totally inadequate, unfair to people, too late, insensitive, and lacking in any care for the people whose lives are being destroyed.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONOURABLE JEAN MARCHAND

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the late Jean Marchand was fond of quoting this sentence by Péguy: "Tout commence par la mystique et finit par la politique". Jean Marchand started with the "mystique" and always came back to it, and his message to us is not to become a slave to politics.

Today, on the day of his funeral, Hon. Members would do well to think about this message, about the role of democracy, the powers of the House of Commons, the legislative authority of the House of Commons, the independence of the Senate and about frankness and honesty.

That would be the most eloquent tribute we could pay Jean Marchand.

IMMIGRATION

DELAY IN PROCESSING BACKLOG OF REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, last week Immigration Canada stopped examining refugee claimants in Toronto, Windsor, and Vancouver, saying that the new immigration and refugee board would handle all the 50,000 or more cases in the backlog.

• (1405)

This irresponsible action throws still more refugee claimants onto provincial public assistance, although they are eager and able to work. It also leaves them in deepening destructive anxiety about their future.

This week the Chairman of the Immigration and Refugee Board, Gordon Fairweather, declared that his Board has neither the money nor the personnel to handle the backlog. He pointed out that the Cabinet must decide between an amnesty for all in the backlog, an amnesty for only some, such as the former administrative review, or more money and staff for his board.

I call on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to remember his promise of compassion toward refugees by breaking this deadlock, allowing refugee claimants to work, and making a clear, quick decision about their future.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

OPERATION OF NORTHWESTEL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, last week giant BCE Inc. of Montreal bought Terra Nova Tel. This week it bought profitable NorthwestTel, the other formerly CN-owned telephone company. BCE, through Bell and its other subsidiaries, now controls some 65 per cent of all telephone lines in Canada and has a monopoly on service north of 60.

S. O. 21

In order to be a good northern corporate citizen, BCE should operate NorthwestTel as an autonomous affiliate, seek ways to ensure northern ownership in NorthwestTel, and have resident northerners both sitting on its board of directors and also in senior management positions.

IMMIGRATION

EXECUTION OF DEPORTATION ORDER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, this morning at the Winnipeg International Airport immigration officials executed a deportation order against Miss Sally Espineli, just the latest example of an uncaring, unforgiving attitude which has permeated the Department of Immigration since the Government came to power.

Miss Espineli first came to Canada eight years ago. She was unable to get a job under her married circumstances, and told immigration officials she was single because that was a requirement by the company, even though she is now divorced.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission is currently investigating Miss Espineli's case to determine whether immigration policies have in fact discriminated against the human rights code. This decision will have national implications.

Yet despite presentations by the head of the Human Rights Commission to the Minister directly, and the mock signs of concern, the deportation order was executed. By refusing to display any sense of compassion she has shown herself well suited to the administration of the kind of Draconian immigration policies which have characterized the Government. To use Sally Espineli's own words: "This is my home now, my second country".

The Minister has ensured that this is no longer the case. There is still a final chance. Miss Espineli will not have to leave the Port of Vancouver until five o'clock. I remind everyone of the ancient words of the Talmud: "To save one life as if you saved the whole world.

FREE TRADE

REQUEST THAT SENATE PASS BILL C-130

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec Est): Mr. Speaker, we cannot build a strong Canada, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) would have us do, with a weak economy, a record deficit and record inflation, interest and unemployment rates, which was the situation we had under the previous Government.

To stand on its own two feet and defend its sovereignty, Canada must be strong and it must be respected. The kind of sovereignty to which the Leader of the Opposition referred is theoretical and illusory.

The sovereignty we defend is genuine sovereignty that allows political and economic relations with other countries and at the same time makes Canada stronger.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Liberals in this House and in the Senate will not take Canadians hostage, because those same Canadians will soon be judging their actions, and that judgment will be merciless.

I also ask the Senators to ratify the agreement within the next few days, because otherwise Canadians will ratify the agreement for them, thus making those Senators redundant.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it was a great surprise to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) yesterday suggest that the trade deal with the United States would enhance Canadian vitality and ensure the expression of our nationhood, and then use Newfoundland's union with Canada in 1949 as an example.

He should know that by joining with Canada in 1949, Newfoundland forever gave up its right to be a sovereign nation and many decisions about Newfoundland's future would be made in Ottawa, not in Newfoundland and Labrador, including social programs and regional development policies.

He should also know that the earned income of Newfoundlanders in 1949 was less than half the Canadian average and now is only slightly better at 55 per cent, after almost 40 years.

It is still the province with the highest unemployment and the least share of regional development funds. Average Newfoundlanders and average Canadians will not benefit from throwing our lot in with the great North American market and tying our hands regarding our future.

Even within Canada, Newfoundlanders must struggle to get treated fairly and obtain economic independence. Newfoundlanders and Canadians need government action to ensure fairness for all regions and all Canadians. They do not need a Conservative Government which gives up this battle.

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—DISPOSAL OF GARBAGE

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has led this House to believe that Hamilton never agreed to assist Pearson Airport with its waste disposal. For the record, I have a letter dated October 7, 1987, from Hamilton—Wentworth to Air Canada agreeing to assist Pearson. I quote an excerpt: "Regional Council at its meeting on October 6, 1987, approved the committee's recommendations". In July, 1988, only seven and one-half months later, when Pearson was in a bind, it reversed its approval stating: "Give us planes and we will take your garbage". I do not believe Canadians, even Hamiltonians, would consider that fair play.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—DISPOSAL OF GARBAGE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would invite the Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) to come into my riding and find out what the people of Hamilton—Wentworth think about his garbage. The fact is that when the initial approval was given, it was claimed there would only be 20 metric tonnes of garbage a week. We then discovered that the airport planned not only on dumping its international garbage on us, but all its garbage, 250 metric tonnes per week.

It was the Member's Government and the Ministry of Agriculture and the Ministry of Transport that misled the people of Hamilton into believing it would only be 20 metric tonnes.

Frankly, I think it is an insult to the people of Hamilton. We are not good enough to fly into. The Member for Etobicoke North says Hamilton is just a small town and someday we may be a big city and people may be able to fly there, but in the meantime he expects us to take his garbage. Well, you can have your garbage, you can the mess from the Toronto International Airport, and you know where you can put it.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—SUPPORT FROM SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, today's vote on third reading of the free trade legislation is greeted with great enthusiasm in Edmonton.

Small businesses and manufacturing firms in my riding of Edmonton East continue to express strong support for this historic trade agreement. For instance, officials at Emery Apparel Canada Inc. of Edmonton have informed me that its 200 employees will benefit greatly from increased commercial access to the U.S. market. They want free trade.

Another small business, Scorpion Small Engine Repair, which employs only five people, wants free trade to eliminate the existing 28 per cent duties on engines and engine parts.

Edmonton and Alberta will thrive because of this historic agreement. Future generations of Albertans will look back upon today as a landmark achievement in Canadian nation building.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, there is a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who said in this House just yesterday that Canada's rivers and lakes are not for sale. I said to myself: "Did I hear that before?" Well, let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, a short story. Once upon a time there was a Prime Minister of Canada who said social programs were a sacred trust. Then he decided that social programs were not a sacred trust and tried to make life harder for many average Canadians.

I will tell you another story, Mr. Speaker. Once upon a time there was a Prime Minister who said that the CBC and Air Canada were not for sale. Then he decided to sell Air Canada. We will see how many Canadians decide to buy shares in their own company which offer no return on their investment.

Who can believe a Prime Minister who wants us to believe in fairy tales? It is a fond hope that for once the right hon. gentleman means what he says. Let us also hope he calls an election immediately so the people of Canada can show how they deal with Prime Ministers who say one thing and mean another.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I got a telegram from my friend this morning. Here is what it says:

Felix, let the people decide just like they did in '84. Oh, but this time it will be different. No bottom patting, no Liberal hacks appointed because Trudeau cannot make me do it.

He has no option and this time he has no rain-maker again. Looks like his caucus is solidly split behind him.

Felix, can you imagine a galaxy of star candidates from Quebec which appears now to be only a black hole?

After yesterday's performance by Turner and Broadbent, Ma and I are convinced more than ever that we are supporting Mulroney.

Your friend, Bill

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, we have to refer to Shakespeare to find an apt description of Tory science and technology policy. We remember the famous words of Macbeth about "a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing".

What was the big Canadian news from the International Congress on Genetics held last week? It was not a Canadian scientific discovery, but another Canadian scientist who has discovered the United States.

Huntington Willard, an associate professor at the University of Toronto, surprised a news conference by announcing that he is leaving Canada "due to the lack of resources for the pursuit of fundamental science".

After all the consultations and conferences, after all the talk and palaver, after all the glossy brochures and hyped up announcements, we find the Tory record amounts to nothing. Worse, it is a litany of neglect and broken promises.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PCB STORAGE SITE AT SAINT-BASILE-LE-GRAND—INSPECTION QUERY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of the Environment. As he well knows, on June 30 of this year the Minister proclaimed with great fanfare that the Canadian Environmental Protection Act is the law of the land. Canadians could sleep better because senior investigation officers had been appointed to enforce the Act in each regional environment protection office across the land.

Did federal investigators visit the storage site at Saint-Basile-le-Grand and report to the Minister on the status of the facility? If no federal investigator visited the facility, can the Minister explain why?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to the Hon. Member's question is yes. In fact, officials of my Department were on the scene of the explosion and the fire at Saint-Basile-le-Grand within 30 minutes of the incident. What is more, next to the fire department itself, I think that we were the second on the scene.

POSSIBLE PROSECUTION OF SITE OWNER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, that means that the grand announcement of last June was that the Government acts upon disaster and not on preventive initiatives. Why did it wait until the disaster took place?

The Minister rejected twice, and he knows it very well, a proposal by the Official Opposition to amend the Environmental Protection Act so as to give the federal Government the power to set national standards for PCB storage and destruction. To make things worse, the Minister rejected our amendment to put into the Act a general prohibition against the release of toxic substances.

Does the Minister now realize that he thus removed with his own hands the Government's capacity to act promptly in prosecuting the owner of the PCB storage site at Saint-Basile-le-Grand? Does he realize that?

• (1420)

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, a full investigation is under way by the federal Government through my Department into the possibility of a violation, by Marc Levy and his company, of federal law, especially the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. We are not encumbered in our capacity to deal with Mr. Levy, if there was a violation or infraction.

To boot, any suggestion by the Hon. Member that anything I did in committee watered down the Bill is sheer nonsense. The Bill is strong, and what is more, it is a lot stronger by virtue of the committee deliberation on the Bill.

I do have authority under Section 35 to take action akin to regulations, but without the time-consuming process surrounding regulations, through the vehicle of an interim order. I have instructed my officials to prepare such an interim order.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Minister would like the House to believe that, having opposed the general prohibition, he made the legislation stronger. That is a pretty hyperbolic pretension on his part.

NATIONAL INVENTORY OF PCB STORAGE SITES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my third question for the Minister of the Environment is as follows: Last week in the House, the Minister of Labour promised an inventory of all PCB storage facilities in Canada. Yesterday, the Minister of the Environment said in the House, and I quote:

We have prepared a national inventory.

And a few minutes later, he said the inventory was being prepared. My question is, where is the national inventory of PCB storage facilities? Will all Members receive a copy of this inventory tomorrow, before they go back to their ridings?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member for Davenport realizes that the inventory that has been prepared is not specific to the Saint- Basile-le-Grand fire and explosion.

The Department of the Environment has a current, regularly updated inventory of storage sites across the country for PCBs. In light of the widespread interest in this subject, following the accident in Saint-Basile-le-Grand I have caused to have established an interdepartmental mechanism within the federal Government to identify and to update the list of all federal sites for PCB storage facilities.

We are working hand in glove with the provinces to ensure that our national inventory of provincial sites is also as complete as possible.

I am pleased to report to the House that, earlier today, I was talking with the Hon. Edward Connery, the Minister of the Environment for the Province of Manitoba. He is the current Chairman of the Council of Resource and Environmental Ministers. At my request he will convene a federal-provincial conference, a special meeting, within days to review that inventory and to make arrangements for its release.

HEALTH

TESTS FOR FURANS AND DIOXIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Yesterday, after the Minister's reply that the Department of Health's disease control laboratory was carrying out tests on blood samples and samples of mother's milk, a subsequent check of this information revealed that the information the Minister gave us was false. The laboratory referred to by the Minister was not the right laboratory, and the laboratory that was supposed to do the testing hasn't started yet.

This morning Dr. Weber, head of the laboratory of the Quebec Department of Health which has the samples, confirmed that none of the calls made to the federal Department of National Health and Welfare since last Friday had been returned. Why did the Minister give us the wrong information, why was his information inaccurate, since the testing for furans and dioxins has not yet started?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I spoke to my Assistant Deputy Minister of Health at the Health Protection Branch yesterday prior to Question Period. He advised me that some samples of cows milk have been taken for the federal Government, and that testing is being done specifically for furans and dioxins.

In respect to breast milk, I understand that the Quebec Government has advised nursing mothers to stop nursing and to attend at one of the Quebec hospitals to have their milk tested. I believe that is in conformity with what I stated yesterday when the Hon. Member asked a similar question.

[Translation]

ANALYSES OF BLOOD AND MOTHER'S MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Of course the Quebec Department of Health can ask mothers not to nurse their children, but that is beside the point. Did the Department of National Health and Welfare do an analysis of blood samples and samples of mother's milk? His answer was yes, and that is totally inaccurate.

• (1425)

[English]

I do not think the Minister's answer is acceptable. Why does the Minister continue to assert that the tests have been carried out? The laboratory which he said yesterday was conducting the tests is the wrong laboratory. The laboratory that should be conducting the tests has not even returned the calls made on behalf of the Government of Quebec. The director of the Food Directorate, Dr. Kirkpatrick, told us this morning that nothing was being done. Why is the Minister misinforming this House and the people of Saint-Basile-le-Grand?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not misinforming the House. With respect to breast milk, I gave the Member the information. It goes back to the provincial jurisdiction concerning health.

As I said yesterday, the federal Government with epidemiology and the LCDC are standing by ready to help. Additionally, as I said yesterday to the Hon. Member, the information that I conveyed to her was information that I received from the Assistant Deputy Minister. I will check further as to what additional tests are being done by the Health Protection Branch and I will be willing to give that information to the Member as well.

I do not think the Member should be making statements categorically because I made statements very clearly with respect to what information I received from the Department.

Oral Questions

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

PCB STORAGE SITES—NATIONAL STANDARDS—FEDERAL AUTHORITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. I hope he will use the occasion to correct the record. Yesterday he misled the House in a rather important way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I am assuming it was inadvertent and I would like him to be able to clear it up.

Yesterday he said, and I quote from Hansard, with reference to the PCB situation and the storage of such a substance:

> We are ensuring that those sites meet the most rigorous national standards for storage.

He went on to say:

> I can tell the Hon. Member that if in any one province any site does not meet national standards for PCB storage, then the federal Government will swoop in and occupy the territory.

Will the Minister now admit that the federal Government has no such authority in law to enforce "national standards"? Second, it has no such authority because the Conservative majority in the committee that dealt with this law voted against an amendment that would have given the Government that authority.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is patently false. Under Section 35 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, I have the authority, as Canada's Minister of the Environment, to seek and obtain an interim order which is equivalent to regulations without the time-consuming process surrounding that option to act in exactly the manner that I described yesterday, both inside the House and outside the House in the form of a scrum.

NATIONAL CONSISTENT LEVELS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I simply say to the Minister that in my judgment what he has just said is categorically false.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Can the Minister support what he has said? If he can support it, will he at the same time explain why the Government rejected the words "national standards" and had put in their place—after a prolonged argument on the point because some of us wanted to control this problem, not evade it—the words "national consistent levels", a nice ambiguous phrase? Why did the Government do that?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP wants to get into a battle of semantics on the floor of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: He says, with all the sanctimony that is characteristic of the NDP these days, that—

Mr. Broadbent: Your official told the truth about it.

Mr. McMillan: —"some of us have been fighting for strong laws on PCBs". In the three years that I have been Minister of the Environment, I have not before received a single question from the Hon. Leader of the NDP on PCBs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say to the Minister that in this Party we have effective Members who work on committees, unlike that side which voted down the amendment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The whole country—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: The whole country will have noted that the Minister refused to answer the question because he had no answer.

[Translation]

AID FOR VICTIMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is simply this. A week ago, I asked whether the federal Government intended to offer a compensation program to the families affected by this disaster. At that time, the Government said yes. Today, I would just like to ask if the Government can tell the House of Commons what this answer means and, secondly, would the Minister care to say whether or not the federal Government intends to provide legal assistance for the affected families?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the NDP probably knows, I did draw the matter to his attention—yesterday, I think, or earlier. The Government does have a program and has long had one, Emergency Preparedness Canada, under which an individual province affected by a disaster or an emergency can apply to the federal Government for direct assistance to people affected by that disaster within the boundaries of the relevant province. There is a formula that either applies or does not. When it does, it pretty well sets the amount of subventions from the federal treasury for the same purpose, depending on the extent of the damage and the population, because it is a per capita formula applied to the province concerned.

Mr. Broadbent: Legal costs?

Mr. McMillan: As I understand it, the Province of Quebec is tallying up all of the costs associated with the Saint-Basile-le-Grand disaster, the costs to the individuals, the costs to the community, the costs to the Government. Based on those calculations, which are yet to be completed, as the Hon. Leader of the NDP would understand, I presume an overture will be forthcoming from the Province of Quebec, and I can tell the Leader of the NDP, on behalf of the Government of Canada, that we will view that overture very favourably indeed.

IMMIGRATION

EXECUTION OF DEPORTATION ORDER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday in the House in response to questions concerning Miss Sally Espineli, a seamstress from the City of Winnipeg who is presently having a case heard by the Human Rights Tribunal, the Minister promised she would actively investigate the case. This morning immigration officials accompanied Miss Espineli to the Winnipeg airport and are now executing a deportation order against her.

If the Minister had undertaken the investigation, she would know that a Minister of Immigration has discretionary power in cases like this that has been exercised many times in the past, and she would know that the Chief Commissioner of Human Rights has asked specifically that the deportation order be halted until the tribunal has a right to hear the case. I would like to make this question an appeal to the Minister.

Miss Espineli's plane does not leave Vancouver until five o'clock this afternoon Ottawa time. Will the Minister please exercise the discretion the Minister of Immigration possesses and allow Miss Espineli to stay in the country until her case is heard, both for the sake of Miss Espineli and for all the other immigrant domestic workers who have the same rights that are being tested at the tribunal in an important case that will have important implications for thousands of people now living in Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did undertake to review this case personally, which I did. Let me just explain a little bit about what has happened in this case. I want to assure the Hon. Member that the case went before an independent adjudicator. It went before the Immigration Appeal Board. It was appealed, not once but three times, and heard by the Federal Court. The decisions are all consistent that this person misrepresented a material fact on her application to enter the country.

As the Hon. Member knows, once a deportation order is issued and has been upheld by the Immigration Appeal Board and the Federal Court, the court order must be carried out. My discretion does not extend to that extent.

Let me also say that there are some other elements to this case. The Federal Court was certainly familiar with the human rights case when it heard the case and it was very clear in its decision.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER HALT DEPORTATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Immigration, the Minister would well recognize that the question of misrepresentation is in fact what is being tested in front of the tribunal. That was a condition of employment in this country. Second, the Minister has the right to order the person who is under deportation order to be temporarily removed from the country and brought back immediately. Over 200 cases have been so executed by the Minister's Department already this year under those circumstances, because the Minister has the right to exercise compassion and discretion in individual cases where there are extenuating circumstances.

This is clearly a case in which compassion can be exercised and in which there are extenuating circumstances. The Minister has four or five hours to act. Would she please act and have Miss Espineli stay in the country until her case can be heard?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should point out that this is not a new problem. This woman was granted landed immigrant status in 1980. She came to Winnipeg, she worked for a Winnipeg company at the time when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry was the Minister of Employment and Immigration and may also have been Minister responsible for the status of women, for all I know.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Have a heart.

Mr. Axworthy: I was the one who brought in the policy that allowed them to stay, you might remember that.

Mrs. McDougall: There are many, many cases in which compassionate grounds apply. Many immigrant women come to this country and seek employment, and my Department has clear instructions from me that, if there is a problem in terms of any kind of discrimination, it will be investigated, which we will do. However, there are many people who come to this country without misrepresenting themselves whom I also represent.

Mr. Keeper: You forced her to lie; you forced her to lie.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE ENVIRONMENT

LIST OF PCB WAREHOUSE SITES—AVAILABILITY TO MEMBERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment.

The Government promised a list of PCB storage sites for all ridings, for all Members across Canada. Canadians want to know whether PCBs are stored in their riding, in their area, in their neighbourhood.

We are leaving tonight. Will the Government provide all Members with this list before we leave tonight? If not, why not?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think I made it pretty clear, and if I did not I will use the occasion to do so now, that at the federal level there is an interdepartmental task force identifying all of the PCB storage sites across the country on federal Crown land or under federal jurisdiction. For our part, we are working with the provinces to make sure that the federal Government's national inventory of PCB facilities under provincial jurisdiction is as complete as possible.

I hope to meet with my provincial counterparts in a very few days, certainly within a week, to make sure that the list is in fact as complete as possible. I anticipate, although I cannot speak for the council but can only speak for myself, that in the spirit of the joint management of PCBs in Canada through CREM, the Council of Resource and Environmental Ministers will make that decision, both about the form in which the list will be made public and about when it will be released.

• (1440)

LIST OF SITES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, last week, when the Leader of my Party asked the question he was told that there would be a list in our hands before the end of the week. I asked the question again earlier this week. I was told that the list existed. The Minister of Labour, who was substituting for the Minister of the Environment, is nodding his head, and that answer is in Hansard.

Does this list exist? Is it still being prepared? Are officials going out looking for PCB sites right now? Is there a list? Are we going to have it? Why the cover-up? Canadians want to know. It is important.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, you can always tell, when the NDP is void of any policy on environmental matters, it resorts to such exaggerated rhetoric.

I want to make it clear to the Hon. Member that we are not preparing a special list in light of the current interest. The federal Government has had an ongoing list which is regularly updated through investigations. However, because of the special public interest in this matter, we are joining forces with the provinces to identify every possible site.

In the past the inventory has been for internal management purposes. We are going to ensure that the list is comprehensive and up to date. It will be made public by the federal Government and, I presume, the provinces through the Council of Resource and Environmental Ministers. I do not think I can be more helpful than that.

PUBLIC SERVICE

WAGES OF HALIFAX NAVAL DOCKYARD WORKERS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State responsible for the Treasury Board. The Minister is aware of the difficult situation that is taking place at the present at CFB Halifax among the ship repair units and their concern for wage parity between the East Coast and West Coast.

Has the Minister had an opportunity to review the situation? Can he indicate to us the Government's intention with respect to wage parity and whether he is prepared to move on wage parity between the East Coast and West Coast?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, subsequent to yesterday's Question Period the matter was discussed with Members of Parliament. We checked into the matter and I have found that we are on record as requesting a mediator. We are in favour of a mediator who can look at the difference in pay rates between the East and West Coasts. It is our understanding that the Public Service Staff Relations Board will be in a position to appoint such a mediator in the very near future.

THE MINISTRY

NATIONAL CITIZENS COALITION—ANNOUNCEMENT OF AWARD TO MINISTER FOR INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the integrity of existing and proposed new conflict of interest guidelines now before the House of Commons.

The Deputy Prime Minister is fully aware that the National Citizens Coalition, a right-wing business lobby group that exists solely to attempt to influence government policy in a range of areas, has decided to give the International Trade Minister a $10,000 cash award. The Minister has announced his intention of collecting that award on October 18.

The Deputy Prime Minister is here as the primary custodian of those conflict of interest guidelines, in the Prime Minister's absence. Does he believe, upon reflection, that it is appropriate for any Minister of the Crown, in any portfolio, to accept a cash award from any lobby group, a lobby group being something which exists solely to try to influence government policy?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is asking a question about a private organization, a legal organization, which has a membership of tens of thousands of citizens of Canada, which operates quite independently from the Government of Canada, and which wanted to honour its founder. It believes that this year I have made the greatest contribution to the economic and political development of Canada by promoting the cause of free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: They, therefore, have decided to give the second Colin Brown Award to me, the Minister for International Trade.

If I decide, after listening to Members of the House, that it is proper to accept it—and I see no reason so far why I should refuse it—I will use the money involved in the award for a good cause. It will not be used for me personally but for the cause for which it was awarded, and probably other charitable causes as well. There is nothing in any conflict of interest regulations and nothing in any legislation—

Ms. Copps: Yes there is.

Mr. Crosbie: —that rules against accepting such an award. If I was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —and I well may be one day, should I refuse that?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, there is no danger of the Hon. Minister being awarded the Nobel Peace Prize.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, this is a serious question which goes right to the heart of the intent of the conflict of interest guidelines which were established to avoid real conflicts or the appearance of conflicts. A Minister of the Crown is saying that he has no trouble receiving a $10,000 cash award, whether it is used by him personally or not, from a lobby group. Whether a lobby group is right wing, left wing, or centrist, it is a lobby group, the stated intention of which is to influence government policy to reflect the views which that particular group holds.

I am not interested in the view of the Minister whose hand is itchy for the cheque. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, who is the custodian in the House today of the conflict of interest guidelines, whether he realizes the danger inherent in the precedent being established by the Minister for International Trade.

Will he and the Prime Minister review this award and the Minister's intention of accepting it, with a view to putting a stop to this kind of activity before it causes problems and a crisis of confidence in this nation in the whole notion of conflict of interest and Ministers acting independent of the views of any lobby group?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is just a continuation of a campaign of calumny which was started yesterday. That is quite obvious.

With respect to this matter, the Canadian Labour Congress is an organized lobby group, as are many unions. Do we argue that they should not provide funds to the people they think represent them or any of their views, or have done something good in politics? I wonder how often the Leader of the New Democratic Party has received funding from those kinds of sources.

Mr. Broadbent: Aren't you in the Cabinet? Aren't you a Minister of the Crown?

Mr. Crosbie: The Citizens Coalition, just the same as the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Manufacturers Association, is quite in order to operate in this country and to make awards to those to whom it wishes.

If my friend, the Deputy Prime Minister, or the Prime Minister, indicates to me that there is any impropriety in accepting such an award, I would be happy to give it up. I never asked for it in the first place. It came out of the blue and it can go into the blue as far as I am concerned.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

STORAGE OF PCBS—NATIONAL STANDARDS QUERY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue the PCB issue with the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday in the House of Commons he said:

> We are ensuring that those sites meet the most rigorous national standards for storage.

The Minister has had three opportunities earlier today to respond to my Leader regarding these national standards. Since the Conservative caucus members on the committee voted against including the term "national standards" in the legislation, would the Minister now have the courage to admit that there are no national standards to enforce?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if anything, the House Leader of the NDP knows even less about this subject than his Leader. The fact is that there was a manual published by the Government of Canada with respect to acceptable standards for storage of PCBs. It had nothing whatever to do with the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. It was in place beforehand.

We are simply saying that all the judgments that our scientists have made, as expressed in this manual, with regard to what the experts say should be done when PCBs are stored, ought to be enforced through regulation at the provincial level because it is their jurisdiction. It has been done in most provinces.

I went on to say that in those provinces where such standards are not enforced, we reserve the right, under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, specifically Section 35, to take the necessary action at the federal level.

• (1450)

MINISTER'S ANSWERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister will know full well that what he is talking about are national guidelines that have no status in law whatsoever. The Minister has had three opportunities to respond to my Leader's questions. He had an opportunity to respond to my direct question regarding the existence of enforceable national standards. I can only say that he is deliberately misleading the House on this issue. Will he not have the courage to stand up and say that he is deliberately misleading the people of Canada on this issue?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, of course, has every right to indicate in a question or in debate that, for whatever reason, any other Hon. Member through mistake, error or otherwise, may be setting up something that the other Member does not agree is correct. He may say that that is misleading, but the Hon. Member knows he cannot say intentionally misleading. I know he would want to withdraw that part of the question.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your intervention. I must say that I have never used the term "deliberately mislead the House" before. I hope I will never have to use it again. At this point, I cannot withdraw.

Some Hon. Members: Throw him out.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York—South Weston.

APARTHEID

OPERATIONS OF SOUTH AFRICAN COMPANIES IN CANADA

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In 1985 his Government announced a series of measures to demonstrate opposition to apartheid in South Africa, including the termination of Canadian Government procurement of all South African goods and services.

If the Minister and his Government are committed to these measures, will he explain why two South African companies operating in Canada, Boart Canada International and Long Year Canada, have received grants from the federal Government, and that Long Year and another company linked closely to Boart Canada have received $2 million in government contracts? Does the Minister feel that the Canadian taxpayer should be subsidizing South African companies operating in Canada? How can the Minister purport to be a leader in the fight against apartheid when his Government is taking a business as usual attitude with South African companies operating in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at this moment I am not aware of the details of the arrangements that the companies named by the Hon. Member might have with the Government of Canada. I will look into them. If there is any cause for us to act or anything inconsistent with our policy, I will take the appropriate action then.

Mr. Nunziata: I am somewhat surprised that the Minister is not aware of grants made by his own Government.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, in December, 1985, the president of one of the companies receiving grants from the Government of Canada snubbed his nose at the Minister and said the following: "Despite the press and posturing of our politicians—" referring to the Minister "—our business with our South African associated companies is proceeding in normal fashion".

Why is the Minister continuing his posturing? When will he stop his posturing, show some real leadership and sever all economic and diplomatic relations with South Africa?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my hon. colleague was not aware of the details for the very good reason that my hon. friend opposite phoned my office to get the information rather than the office of my colleague.

I have the information. I can tell the House that the Department has not provided any financial assistance to Boart Canada Incorporated. At the moment there are some applications from Boart or Long Year before the Department, that any corporate citizen can make. They are under review and, following the request of my hon. friend opposite, I have requested that these particular cases be brought to my immediate attention.

MINES AND MINING

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MINERAL DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines. The federal-provincial agreements on mining development are important for the outlying regions of Canada.

Can the Minister tell us in this House whether these federal-provincial agreements will be extended or renewed beyond 1989-90?

[English]

Hon. Gerald. S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's continued interest in mining matters. I can tell the House, and therefore the public, that the matter of renewal of MDA's was a discussion topic at the Ministers' meeting in Quebec City yesterday. I should mention that the Quebec MDA does not expire until 1990, so we have almost two years to deal with that particular issue.

The recent agreement that was signed under Economic Regional Development with the Province of Quebec allowed for a topping up of economic regional development agreements in that province. They may very well wish to tap that particular source.

I might say that the mining sector has been treated fairly well by Governments over the years, through the Canadian Exploration Expense, through flow-through share mechanisms, and, of course, through the $210 million new program for exploration that this Government just announced through the CEIP.

THE MINISTRY

AIR FLIGHT TO THAILAND BY MINISTER'S SPOUSE—BILL C-114

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Today this House will debate and pass in principle the Government's conflict of interest Bill. The Prime Minister, upon the introduction of the Bill in February of this year, clearly indicated that while the Bill was not law then, the spirit of the legislation was in effect immediately. In fact, in that Bill there is a clause that requires that a Member's spouse or dependant who receives any gift or benefit must record and table that information with the registrar.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House exactly what he intends to do in the case of the Minister for International Trade whose wife and daughter received a trip costing about $5,600 on Thai Airlines? What does the Government intend to do about that, when it is a clear violation of the spirit of Bill C-114?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows, and he has correctly pointed out, that public office holders have to disclose any gifts over $200. That was not the case here. If it had been the case, the Minister assures me that he would have complied by providing the notice to the ADRG.

I am also advised by the Hon. Member that if the Bill passes second reading, which is the approval in principle, he will obviously comply with the spirit and intent of Bill C-114. Since it is now public knowledge, always was public knowledge, the Minister examined this consistent with the current conflict of interest guidelines. He is fully prepared to comply with them as well as the future ones that are put forth in the principle enshrined in Bill C-114.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PAY COST OF FLIGHT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it was the Prime Minister who introduced Bill C-114 in the House and who, outside the House, made it crystal clear that in cleaning up the mess that exists in the Government the spirit of Bill C-114 was immediately in effect.

In light of the fact that another Minister in the Ontario Government has quite willingly said he is prepared to pay for the ticket for his wife, is the Minister for International Trade prepared to pay for the tickets for his wife and his daughter? Why do you not follow the example of another Minister of another Government at another level?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it might be fair if we got this in the proper perspective. Thailand, a country with which we have very good relations and with which we want to do expanding trade, after a negotiation with the Government of Canada and concessions for Canadian airlines, was allowed to start a route from Bangkok to Toronto which will assist both countries and the commerce of both countries.

As is the custom with every airline in the world, they invited the Minister for International Trade to go on their inaugural flight. I could not go, but my wife went in my place, and other Ministers from several provincial Governments and from municipal Governments, known as guests. One Minister paid because he was going on a business trip to the Far East in addition to Thailand.

My wife went to represent me and this country and in furtherance of good relations between this country and Thailand. It is not a gift in the ordinary sense of the word. Therefore, these suggestions are hardly fair, but we don't expect fairness from the Opposition.

With respect to the regulations, if the present conflict of interest Bill passes second reading, we are quite willing to make the necessary declaration to the Registrar General, which I would have done had I gone, in any event. There is no conflict of interest. There is no breach of any present rule. There is no impropriety. This is simply a goodwill gesture between this country and Thailand, the same as has happened with Singapore Airlines, Air Canada, Canadian Airlines, Wardair, and dozens of other airlines in the past.

IMMIGRATION

PROCESSING OF REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMS—TREATMENT OF BACKLOG

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Mr. Gordon Fairweather, Chairman of the new Immigration and Refugee Board just established through the Government's refugee legislation, stated yesterday that his budget for financial and human resources is not enough to process the existing refugee backlog of 55,000, nor would it allow the board even to keep pace with the regular number of claimants. Therefore, if the Minister is committed in her support and promotion of this new system, why did she fail to allocate the necessary resources needed to do an adequate job?

If the Minister wants to prevent the system from breaking down, even before it starts, what plans does the Government have to tackle this huge refugee backlog in the system?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been paying attention over the last few weeks, he would have known that I have said on several occasions that the backlog will be treated distinctly from the new refugee determination board, the board I am very pleased to have headed by Mr. Fairweather. I know it is going to be an outstanding example of the refugee and immigration tribunals in the world because of the kind of training they will have.

I have said any number of times that I will make a separate announcement about the backlog, that the three options on dealing with the backlog summarized by Mr. Fairweather yesterday are exactly the ones I have been mentioning myself. The only difference is that I have publicly said that there will be no amnesty.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, just before the passage of the two refugee Bills the Minister kept saying: "Deliver these Bills. That's all I need". She has those Bills. She has been promising Canadians an answer to the backlog, but still she continues this evasive dance about an interest that is uppermost in the minds of many Canadians. The Minister can be as evasive and as sanctimonious as she pleases, but there are basically two general options available to the Government.

Mrs. McDougall: Three.

Mr. Marchi: Will the Government provide additional resources to the new board so it can manage effectively with the backlog? If the Government has an alternative plan with respect to resolving the backlog separately, what is that plan and why the delay? Why not inform the House, and through the House, Canadians, of her plan—

Mr. Speaker: Given the hour, I think the question is long enough. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are developing a way of dealing with the backlog. I know it is important to many Canadians, especially those who are involved in the backlog. When I have an announcement, I will make it.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

STATUS OF WOMEN

REQUEST THAT ROYAL COMMISSION ON REPRODUCTIVE TECHNOLOGY BE ESTABLISHED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A report called "Women and Reproductive Technologies", which was prepared for Status of Women Canada, raises very serious ethical, health, and equality questions with respect to surrogate motherhood, gender selection, artificial insemination, and in vitro fertilization. Will the Minister arrange for this report to be made public? And will he tell the House what specific steps he and his Government are taking to establish a Royal Commission on new reproductive technology which, I believe, he favours?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important, first, to establish what this report is. It is one in a series of papers which is being developed because there is a federal-provincial status of women working group on the issue of women's health, generally, and reproductive technology is part of that. So there will be other papers as well that will be studied by this group in reaching its own conclusions on a separate topic.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who surely recognizes the need for action, and action now, on this whole matter. It is fine that the Status of Women continues to do its thing, but the new technologies—which have been developed primarily by men, I think he would agree—have major impacts on women's health, relationships with children and women's rights, yet women have had no say in these developments. Will the Minister consult with the Minister responsible for the status of women and with women's groups, including the new coalition, and recommend to the Government that a Royal Commission must be established and must be composed of 50 per cent women?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I agree with what the Hon. Member has said with respect to some of the issues she has outlined. I have said that myself on other occasions.

Ms. Mitchell: Get on with it, then.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): In terms of consulting with the Minister responsible for the status of women, that has been ongoing, as well as with some other members of Cabinet who have related responsibilities. With respect to the coalition, I have met with them. They have made their presentation to me and have given the reasons why they feel a Royal Commission should be established.

I have not given them an indication as to what position the Government will take, but I have said in this House and other places that I believe the issues of ethics are important. They should be studied. I think too often in medical science and other sciences, that science gets ahead of the ethics of these issues. But I cannot confirm or give the Member any assurance today that a Royal Commission will be established, either in terms of time or in terms of reference.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 51 petitions numbered as follows: 332-4899, 332-4973, 332-5096, 332-5111, 332-5154 to 332-5156 inclusive, 332-5172, 332-5187, 332-5208, 332-5209, 332-5215, 332-5216, 332-5226, 332-5238, 332-5239, 332-5241, 332-5249, 332-5251, 332-5255 to 332-5267 inclusive, 332-5272 to 332-5277 inclusive, 332-5281, 332-5282, 332-5287, 332-5296, 332-5306, 332-5314 to 332-5316 inclusive, 332-5323, 332-5324, 332-5326, 332-5357 and 332-5367.

CHILD CARE

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present to the House of Commons a duly certified petition. The petitioners are from the communities of Morinville and Legal, Alberta. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament that the child care decisions be left with the parents, where it belongs.

LABELLING OF FOOD INGREDIENTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that we are not actually bringing forward a Bill. In my hand I have petitions with more than 20,000 signatures supporting Bill C-289, an Act to amend the Food and Drug Act, which would require restaurant labelling on foods to heighten public interest.

I would like to table these petitions with special thanks to the Allergy Information Association and other groups, including the Consumers Association of Canada, the Celiac Association, the Allergy Foundation, the Canadian Society of Allergy and Clinical Immunology, the Canadian Nurses Association, the Canadian Association of Retired Persons, the Canadian Council of Children and Youth, the Allergy Foundation of Canada and the Food and Nutrition Research Foundation, for their special help in gathering these more than 20,000 signatures.

I hope that by the time we get together again it will be post-election and we will be able to do something about it.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of some 75 or more residents of the City of Toronto who are concerned about our immigration policy. Among other things they point out that in 1986 the then Justice Minister promised that the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents of three years or more would be eliminated so that both groups would have equal rights to sponsor parents of any age. Since this promise has not been fulfilled, they call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government fulfil this promise now.

RETENTION OF 10-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is also my duty to present a petition to you.

[English]

The petitioners are from Bayfield, New Brunswick, Port Elgin, Cape Tormentine and Baie Verte.

[Translation]

The signatories of this petition are very concerned about the change that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) has made to the qualifying period for unemployment insurance.

[English]

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to bring justice to the situation by keeping in place a 10 week qualifying period for the rural areas of southeast New Brunswick.

DESIGNATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, the petition that I wish to present today is headed: "Help Save the Rouge". I table it pursuant to Standing Order 106. It has been certified by the Clerk.

The petitioners state that the Rouge Valley in Scarborough is a unique and precious natural area and that protecting the endangered wildlife and wilderness areas in this particular valley is in the national interest. The petitioners join with the Scarborough City Council, indeed, with the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), the Save the Rouge Valley System, the Coalition of Scarborough Community Associations and also, Mr. Speaker, you, who have given your support to this very worthy cause.

They ask the Government of Canada and the provincial Government to work together to save this very beautiful area as a park.

ACTIONS OF ROMANIAN GOVERNMENT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have with me 350 petitions from Canadians who have a Romanian background in which they have pride and in which they have fond memories. They have written to the House with respect to what is taking place in their more than 13,000 villages in Romania which have been destroyed. They have asked the Government to bring to the attention of the Romanian Government their concern in this regard.

The Romanian Government is presently engaging in certain acts which violate basic human and minority rights that are destroying more than half of the 13,000 villages in Romania to build agri-industrial centres, resulting in the loss of a cultural and historical heritage which will deprive not only Romania but also future generations of priceless heritage by annihilating magnificent examples of Roman, Gothic and Reform periods of architecture.

Whereas that same Government has decreed that all geographic designations be changed from the Hungarian and Saxon languages to Romanian thereby seriously violating minority rights; and whereas the Romanian Government's current harassment through interrogation and house searches of the clergy will result in the destruction of both Protestant and Catholic religions, these Canadians of Romanian origin have asked that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) bring this concern of the Canadian people to the attention of the Romanian Government.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and the honour to present two sets of petitions. The first set of petitions declares that schizophrenia is a major illness in Canada, affecting about 1 per cent of the population, causing severe mental anguish and suffering to the patients and their relatives and costing Canadian society more than $3 billion annually in direct health care and other support costs.

The petitioners go on to point out that there is low funding for research in schizophrenia. They therefore call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will be commensurate in the future with the seriousness of this illness in Canada. The petitioners are from Sudbury, Ontario.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the last group of petitions I have is from residents in Vancouver, British Columbia, Val Caron, Hanmer, Sudbury, Blezard Valley and Capreol, Ontario.

The petitioners point out that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. Whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised; and that in fact the trade agreement negotiated between the Mulroney Government and the Reagan Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political life, the petitioners therefore call upon Parliament to dissolve now and allow the people of Canada to make the decision with respect to whether or not they want to enter this Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 385, 392, 393, and 408.

[Text]

COST OF CARE OF QUADRIPLEGIC PATIENT

Question No. 385—Mr. Brisco:

To the knowledge of the Government, what is the average annual cost for (a) institutional care (b) prescription drugs for a quadriplegic patient?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

(a) There is no information available on the cost of caring for quadriplegic patients. However, Statistics Canada's Survey of Residential Care Facilities indicates that the average annual cost of maintaining a physically handicapped patient in an institutional setting is approximately $46,000 per year. A quadriplegic patient may be placed in this type of facility.

(b) Information on prescription drugs for a quadriplegic patient is not available from the Government of Canada.

Further information may be obtained from the: National Office, Canadian Paraplegic Association, 520 Sutherland Drive, Toronto, Ontario, M4F 3V9.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Question No. 392—Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon):

For each fiscal year since 1980-81, have Canadians who grew up in Third World countries been employed by the Canadian International Development Agency as (a) professionals (b) contractors and, if so, in each case, in what numbers?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): The Canadian International Development Agency does not keep statistics of the type requested. Personal information obtained by the Agency can under Section 7 of the Privacy Act only be used for the purpose for which it was initially collected or for the purpose of responding to specific circumstances outlined in Section 8 of the Privacy Act. The compilation of the requested statistics would not be consistent with those conditions which must be met before personal information can be disclosed to a third party. Accordingly, it is not possible to assemble the requested statistics.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

Question No. 393—Mr. Brisco:

Are any persons (a) on the Canadian staff of the International Joint Commission (b) on the Canadian staff of the Permanent Engineering Board (c) in the Department of the Environment (d) in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans (e) in the Department of Justice (f) in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources (g) in the Department of External Affairs well informed on all elements of the Columbia River Treaty, from the beginning of negotiations between Canada and the United States to the present and, if so, what are their names?

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I have been informed by several departments as follows:

The Columbia River Treaty was negotiated to resolve issues between Canada and the United States relating to the co-operative development of water resources of the Columbia River basin. It was signed in 1961 and came into effect in 1964.

(a) At present, the individual most familiar with the Columbia River Treaty in the International Joint Commission is Commissioner E. Davie Fulton, who was Minister of Justice of Canada when the treaty was negotiated.

(b) Mr. Gordon M. MacNabb, current Chairman of the Canadian Section of the Permanent Engineering Board.

(c) The Department of the Environment was not established until after the Columbia River Treaty was negociated and ratified. However, Mr. E.M. Clark, Regional Director of the Department's Inland Waters Directorate in Vancouver (although not involved in the negotiations) is well informed on all elements of the treaty. Mr. Clark is also the Secretary of the Canadian Section of the Permanent Engineering Board and the alternate federal member of the Board.

(d) Since 1964, Fisheries and Oceans has had little direct involvement with this Treaty and its operations. Consequently there are no DFO employees with a thorough knowledge on all aspects of the Treaty. However, Mr. Tom Bird can answer questions concerning the fishery impacts of damming rivers and altering water flows. He also can act as a contact for previous DFO employees who were involved with the Columbia River Treaty.

(e) The Department of Justice does not have persons within the Department responsible for advising on the Columbia River Treaty. If legal questions arise from time to time they would be considered on an individual basis and advice given to the appropriate client department, agency or institution.

(f) No.

(g) The officer currently responsible for the Treaty in the Department of External Affairs is Mr. Alan Kessel of the Legal Operations Division.

LIMITED TEST BAN TREATY

Question No. 408—Mr. Caccia:

1. Was Canada one of the nations which, on August 5, 1988, in Geneva, formed a group for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the 1963 Partial Test Ban Treaty to ban all nuclear testing in support of a proposal by the Parliamentarians for Global Action and, if not, for what reason?

2. Will Canada be joining this group of nations and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No. Canada strongly favours the earliest possible conclusion of a comprehensive test ban treaty (CTBT). In practical terms, an adequately verifiable CTBT can be achieved only through direct negotiations and must be binding on all nuclear weapon states. Such a result cannot be achieved through simple amendment of the Limited Test Ban Treaty of 1963.

2. (a) No. (b) See 1. above.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 391 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 391 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EXPORT OF GRAINS AND OILSEEDS

Question No. 391—Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon):

For each crop year from 1980-81 to 1986-87, have Canadian grains and oilseeds been exported via (a) St. Lawrence Seaway ports to Pacific rim countries (b) St. Lawrence Seaway ports to European or Mediterranean markets (c) St. Lawrence Seaway ports to other markets (d) West Coast ports to Pacific Rim markets (e) West Coast ports to European or Mediterranean markets (f) West Coast ports to other markets and, if so, for each variety (i) in what quantities (ii) at what average price?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I bring to the attention of the Minister of State who undoubtedly knows that a question that I have had on the Order Paper since March 15 still remains unanswered to this day. I know that the Minister himself usually does his best to ensure that answers are provided. I am just wondering if I could get a commitment from the Minister that he will do his best this afternoon to contact the proper officials so that tomorrow prior to adjournment the answer to a difficult question, granted, but a question which has been on the Order Paper for two and a half months longer than our rules provide, is answered in a manner consistent with the rules of this House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the point of order if I may in order to assist my hon. friend and other Members of the House who may wish to pose a question which I am not for a minute suggesting was not a forthright question to which the Hon. Member wanted an answer. The problem is in the wording of the question.

When my hon. friend asks—and I have not got the exact wording although I think I am paraphrasing it properly—"has the Government or any Crown corporation, or any agency"—it is very difficult. A questionnaire then has to go out to all government Ministries, all Crown corporations and all Departments. Until we get all of the answers back it is impossible to answer my hon. friend's question.

• (1520)

If the next time he poses a question which has some specificity to it in that he is after a gentleman who worked for the Ministry of Communications and/or a Crown corporation, it would be of a great deal of assistance to the Ministry, because there is a lot of time and effort involved in answering those questions, if it could be spelled out exactly which Crown corporations or Ministries he was referring to. That type of answer is much easier to obtain.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: Perhaps there is a compromise which would be available, if the Minister would be willing to give an indication, perhaps privately later, if he thinks he has an answer from 80 or 90 per cent of those agencies that could be tabled, and the House could agree to have a tabling of that answer, and then consider it a complete answer at that point, if that were possible. Perhaps there could be private discussions later and tomorrow at the appropriate time whatever information is available could then be deposited, and perhaps we could close that issue which I have raised in the House approximately 10 or 12 times.

Mr. Speaker: I will leave it with the Member and the Minister of State.

POINT OF ORDER

WITHDRAWAL OF COMMENT DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, you may recall during Question Period I was seeking some answers to a question posed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). Although I felt the answers might have been a little confusing, I used the phrase that he was deliberately misleading the House.

Upon reflection and respect for your chair and your request, Mr. Speaker, and the traditions and the history of this House, I would like to withdraw the use of that term in reference to the comments of the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Speaker: We all know that sometimes answers, and sometimes questions, are confusing and that leads to remarks that would not otherwise be used.

I want to say to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, the House Leader of his Party, that I appreciate his comments. I wish to put on the record that the Hon. Member has given the Chair very good co-operation at all times, and I thank him.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions among the Parties, and there are one or two things I would like to deal with in my comments, so I will go slowly.

First, there have been discussions among the Parties and we have agreed to a change in the order adopted with respect to the business of the House. This afternoon, under Orders of the Day, the Government will call Bill C-143, which is known as the Substance Abuse Centre Bill.

The intention of all Parties is that this Bill will be disposed of this afternoon rather quickly. There will be a change made during the debate on the Bill by the Parliamentary Secretary to change the motion which currently reads to move it to a legislative committee. The motion will change that to move it to a Committee of the Whole House and through Committee of the Whole House, report stage, and third reading today.

We will then proceed with Bill C-114 until six o'clock p.m., at which time we will call the third reading vote and votes on Bill C-130, the free trade Bill.

There has been agreement among the Parties that tomorrow the business of the House will be followed as though it were a Friday. The House will commence at 10 o'clock a.m. with Orders of the Day for the continuation of Bill C-114. The debate on Bill C-114 will be completed at or before 11 o'clock a.m. There will be no further business called by the Government until 11 o'clock a.m., at which time the House will proceed to the normal Statements by Members and Question Period. After Question Period there will be the normal Routine Proceedings. Immediately after Routine Proceedings are finished, which will give Members an opportunity to present petitions, or whatever, the House will adjourn until 11 a.m., September 13, 1988.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. In order that the public can understand, on the basis that this House can do anything, if there is unanimity, tomorrow will be Friday. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN CENTRE ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, August 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-143, an Act to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my understanding that there have been consultations with the three Parties that the motion be amended to read "to a Committee of the Whole House" instead of "to a legislative committee", and that would be done on the understanding that the Bill would proceed through the rest of today in all stages without further debate. That is my understanding, and I would like it confirmed. If it is the will of the House to do that unanimously, then I think we could deal with it in that fashion.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) has some time left in his second reading speech. He wishes to put a number of concerns that he has on the record. Following that, we would move to Committee of the Whole and proceed expeditiously without any further debate until the Bill is passed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. House Leader has put the situation accurately. The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed the case that on August 19 the New Democratic Party Members of this House wished to expedite and facilitate passage of this Bill. Indeed, the Bill would have been passed through all stages that afternoon, except the spokesperson for the Official Opposition chose not to address herself to the contents of the Bill, which are perfectly consistent with the report of the House Committee on Health and Welfare entitled: Booze, Pills & Dope, which recommended the creation of such a centre. There could be no question of opposition to it.

Before my intervention was interrupted on August 19, we indicated that while we were sorry that 29 of our 31 recommendations were either neglected or rejected, that did not constitute a reasonable basis for putting impediments in the way of the quickest possible passage of Bill C-143. I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that this afternoon this Party will co-operate in ensuring that the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse will be implemented through the passage of Bill C-143.

In respect to my intervention during the previous portion of my speech, one of the dramatic findings of our committee was that there was not in fact a drug epidemic in this country which, to those of us who are trained in the field, constitutes an explosive incidence of a disease within a population. Rather, what is at issue is an endemic situation where a large percentage, or a significant percentage of the population is affected by a condition which we are quick to emphasize was not a condition of the abuse of illegal drugs to nearly as great an extent as the abuse of legal drugs, such as alcohol, prescription drugs, and substances which, although not considered to be drugs are abused as drugs, such as glue and propane.

I want to take note of the observation made by the committee that there are a number of agencies in existence in Canada, particularly the Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation in Ontario which, in these times of attempts to form centres of excellence in the scientific area in Canada, has been recognized by the World Health Organization as a centre of excellence.

Similarly, we gave recognition to a National Native Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program, the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Commission, the Nova Scotia Commission on Drug Dependency and other agencies, provincial or otherwise, in Canada, which have made a significant contribution with respect to drug abuse prevention, rehabilitation and treatment. We recognize the view shared by many organizations in this country that there should exist a similar sort of organization at the national level which would co-ordinate these kinds of activities nation-wide and make available information on those subjects to all of Canada in order to facilitate our attack on substance abuse.

With that, it is not my intention to delay but to complete what I initiated on August 19. I express my support and my Party's support for this legislation, and give my assurance that we will do everything to ensure that we can complete Committee of the Whole consideration and third reading this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mrs. Champagne in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-143, an Act to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse.

Clauses 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 7 carry?

On Clause 7—First Board

Ms. Copps: Madam Chairman, I would like to have some clarification as to whether the board is subject to the usual Order in Council review. I want to know whether it is subject to the usual Order in Council appointments process. Are the appointments by the Minister or by Order in Council?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, six of the board members are by recommendation from the Minister, GICs, and the remainder are by recommendation from the board.

Ms. Copps: They are not reviewable? They are not Order in Council appointments and, therefore, they are not reviewable?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, if I would be given the liberty by Hon. Members to direct their attention to Clauses 6, 7 and 8 rather than one clause, that would help me in my explanations, if that is acceptable. If Hon. Members look to Clause 6, the six members that are referred to are the chairperson and the five additional board members. Additional board members will be appointed to the board, if one would look at the board of directors. Under Clause 6, the Hon. Member will find that there can be additional ones appointed whose backgrounds or experience would assist the centre with the fulfilment of its purpose, and they would be reviewable, as other review—I will check that.

Ms. Copps: I understand that in Clause 8 the chairman and up to five other directors are appointed by Governor in Council, so they are reviewable. The nine directors who are appointed by the board, because they are not Governor in Council appointments, are not reviewable.

Mr. Boudria: Otherwise, how could they be referred?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, they are not reviewable by the Governor in Council. That is correct. It is the arm's-length approach that we are trying to build into the board, having both GICs and the separate board members. It is the second group that would not be reviewable.

Mr. Boudria: If I may, Madam Chairman, I just want to clarify this in my own mind. There may be good reason for this, but I am trying to identify how it works. The Governor in Council appointment review process is now called the experimental process, but it will probably become permanent in the future In any case, a process has existed for a few years whereby the Privy Council Office sends the names of the appointees to a parliamentary committee for it to review and comment on within 30 days. That will apply to the people who are appointed by the Governor in Council. The others, as far as I can see, are not referred to the Privy Council Office at all. The Privy Council Office cannot send them for review because they are not Governor in Council appointments. I want to be clear. Am I interpreting that clause of the Bill correctly?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, I believe that the Hon. Member is reviewing it correctly. We are in this experimental period. If we also look at the rules of the House covering committees, Standing Order 103(1) and (2), I believe that under those rules any committee of Parliament can also review appointments. If it is only restricted to GICs, then maybe the Hon. Member could indicate to the House what other route they may be considering. It is the arm's length that the Government is trying to build in, according to the recommendations made to the Government, that some of the members of the board would in fact be at arm's length.

Mr. Boudria: There is one possible alternative which I offer to the Minister as a possible suggestion. The Bill would say in this clause that the Governor in Council would appoint members upon recommendation of the board. Those additional members would technically be Order in Council appointments, but they would only be made upon recommendation of the board. You would have in that regard the independence that the Minister is looking for and at the same time they would be accountable to Parliament pursuant to the McGrath Report, which was later ratified by a decision of the Prime Minister, as announced in this House.

I do not think that it is a very complicated amendment. I offer it as a suggestion to the Minister, and he or his official may want to propose something.

Perhaps we can stand that clause momentarily and go through the other clauses in order to have a few minutes for the Minister's legislative draftsman or expert who are accompanying him today, and then we could have a review process, the kind of process that we have described, in order to make it consistent with the policy of the Government and of this House.

• (1540)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, I do not think there is any conflict between what the Hon. Member is saying and what we are trying to achieve. I think the question is does Clause 8 achieve what we are trying to build in?

Under the Governor in Council appointments, as that procedure is established in Clause 7, the Minister is obligated under Clause 8 to have consultations with the board prior to making recommendations. That is in Clause 8 now in order to meet the various requirements, be they linguistic, cultural, professional and so forth. Whether or not an amendment should be considered whereby the arm's-length is retained, which we all want and which is consistent with the recommendations and whether or not Clause 8(b) does that, is the question. Possibly to help the committee move on, if it is acceptable that we stand Clause 8, we will go through the other clauses and look at whether or not there is some method by which we can meet what I think seems to be an agreement on both sides of the House.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 7 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It was agreed that clause 8 would be stayed for a while.

Clauses 9 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 13 carry?

On Clause 13—Principal Office

Ms. Copps: Madam Chairman, could the Minister give us the rationale behind the suggestions that the principal office shall be in the National Capital Region?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, the centre is not expected to be housed in a separate building as such. In other words, what we are dealing with is not a mortar and bricks entity. We will be dealing with a small staff of professionals and we will be relying on a great amount of interchange within Departments, federal-provincial as well as professional. We feel as a Government it is best to have the office in the National Capital Region because of the expertise available, if not only in Ottawa but at least because of the communication that takes place in Ottawa on a number of health-related issues.

Ms. Copps: Madam Chairman, I am not questioning the rationale for it, although there are certainly other centres of expertise in terms of the problems of substance abuse. I just wonder about the procedure of putting that into the legislation. It seems to me that if the National Capital Region is the most logical place for it, then that can be determined by the Minister. Actually, to lock that in in the legislation I think is highly unusual. That sort of thing is not usually written into any piece of legislation. Would the Minister give the rationale for having it? It kind of handcuffs the office. The Addiction Research Foundation has many operations in other parts of the country other than Ottawa.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, I think the clause is drafted in such a way that while the National Capital Region is mentioned, I am sure the board would want to look at whether the National Capital Region is the best site. There are reasons that one could put forward why it is the best site. One could also mention the matter of the legislation that is drafted relative to Crown corporations if an example is needed. If the Hon. Member looks at the last part of Clause 13 she will see as well that there is discretion as to location. I think both eventualities are actually covered.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Chairman, the clause refers to a principal office which would suggest that there would be other offices in Canada. Can the Minister indicate what he envisions with respect to the centre once it is in full operation? Does he envision offices in major cities throughout the country? Does he envision more than one head office?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, it is not the intention at this time or our visualization that there will be offices across the country but rather one office working as a clearing house, working in liaison and working with interchange. If the board in its wisdom decides to have additional presence in other locations of Canada than where the principal office would be located, that would be a decision for the board to take. I think the board has to take it on the basis of delivery of service. That I think should be the criteria rather than the legislation dictating to the board where different offices might be located.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Chairman, can the Minister indicate what type of budget the centre will have? Does the Minister have some figures for the first year of operation? If he does, can he give us some examples of how money will be spent by the new centre?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Yes, Madam Chairman. There is a budget allocated for national drug strategy. There was a recommendation at one time of $1.4 million. The standing committee recommended that that should be reconsidered and it should be somewhat higher. We have allocated a budget of up to $2 million annually for the centre at this time.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Chairman, exactly what does the Minister expect to do with $2 million? It seems to me that that is a small amount of money in relation to the magnitude of the problem. If you are only allocating $2 million to the centre, how much advertising could you possibly do with $2 million? How much promotion could you actually do? Presumably the centre would have to pay salaries, rent and other such matters just to be in operation. Can the Minister indicate exactly what will be done with the $2 million, and does he feel that $2 million is enough or is it just a token amount?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No, Madam Chairman, I do not regard it as a token amount. If the Hon. Member would go back to the recommendations that were made by Mr. Archibald with respect to the setting up of a substance abuse centre, I think the recommendations are inherent in the Bill and the amount of money I have mentioned is in keeping with the recommendations.

Second, it is not the purpose of the Centre to "run the federal Government's drug program". As the Hon. Member knows, that is a drug program of $210 million over a five-year period. What was identified and needed was a clearing house for various types of information and activities, and while we have passed Clause 3, if I could direct the Hon. Member to Clause 3 as to the purpose of the centre, I could go through the five sections but they are listed in Clause 3.

Clauses 13 to 26 inclusive agreed to.

• (1550)

On Clause 27—Registered Charity

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Chairman, Clause 27 indicates that the centre, for the purposes of the Income Tax Act, shall be deemed to be a registered charity within the meaning of that expression for the purposes of that Act. Does the Minister anticipate that the centre will be on a fund-raising drive of sorts? Will individual Canadians and organizations be in a position to make donations to this centre? Does it expect to operate, to some extent, through public donations?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, as I indicated earlier, up to $2 million has been allocated for the running of the centre. The recommendations from Mr. Archibald were that there should also be corporate and public participation in the funding of the centre, and so Clause 27 was inserted in such a way that those who make donations to the centre would get the same tax consideration as those who donate to other charities.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 27 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 27 agreed to.

Clauses 28 to 32 agreed to.

On Clause 33—Evaluation

Ms. Copps: Madam Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister why there is legislation which calls for review only after the fourth anniversary of the coming into force of the Act. Why would there not be a review after the first anniversary, or does the Minister not intend to bring this on stream for four years?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, there will be annual reports, and as the Hon. Member knows, annual reports are subject to review by Parliament and specifically by Standing Committees. If she were to check back to the national drugs strategy, she would see that there was a comprehensive review mechanism built into that after the fourth year as to the continuation of the program. This is parallel to that.

The Hon. Member asked if we intend to bring the Substance Abuse Centre into place after four years. No, we intend to get the legislation passed and the Substance Abuse Centre established this year, possibly even flowing into this fiscal year.

Ms. Copps: Madam Chairman, it seems to me that if the Minister's intention is to coincide the evaluation of the centre with the evaluation of the national drugs strategy, he should call for an evaluation of the centre in two years. Presumably the national drugs strategy has been in operation for almost a year and a half and the evaluation process should then occur in 1990. Therefore, the Minister will be two years out of sync according to his own Act.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, no, I do not think that there would be enough time for the Substance Abuse Centre to have established itself or to have an evaluation that comprehensive so soon. I think it is better to give it a five-year program as we do with other fiscal arrangements to get it established, although there will be annual reports which are obviously important and will be studied by Parliament each year.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Chairman, I have a question or two on the reporting procedure under Clause 31. It indicates that the chief executive officer shall, within three months after the financial year of the centre, submit to the board a report. It indicates that the report should be available to the public at the principal office of the centre and then it says that a month after that, the Minister of National Health and Welfare would be provided with the report. This seems to suggest that the public will get a copy of the report before Parliament, and then the Minister is required to report to Parliament. Why is the reporting procedure laid out in the way it is? Would the Minister not agree that it would be far more beneficial to have the board report directly to Parliament without all these intervening steps?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare is responsible, under the Financial Administration Act, for the moneys that flow under this legislation, if passed, and therefore I am responsible for its reporting and also answerable to Parliament through that reporting mechanism, and this is parallel to other reporting mechanisms.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 33 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 33 agreed to.

Clause 34 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I believe the committee should now go back to Clause 8.

On Clause 8—Appointment to the Board

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Chairman, I have asked for a further check on whether Clause 8 in fact meets the requirements of Members opposite and the intentions of the Government. Standing Order 96 refers to powers of standing committees and reads:

> Standing committees shall be severally empowered to examine and enquire into all such matters as may be referred to them by the House, to report from time to time, and except when the House otherwise orders, to send for persons, papers and records, to sit while the House is sitting . . .
> (2) The standing committees, except those set out in sections (3) and (4) of the Standing Order shall, in addition to the powers granted to them pursuant to section (1) of this Standing Order and pursuant to Standing Order 82(15), be empowered to study and report on all matters relating to the mandate, management and operation of the department or departments of government which are assigned to them from time to time by the House. In general, the committees shall be severally empowered to review and report on:
> (a) the statute law relating to the department assigned to them;—

I understand from that that while it is at arm's length, the committee and specifically Parliament through the committee can in fact review those appointments.

Ms. Copps: Madam Chairman, that is absolutely false. Of course, any committee is empowered to subpoena anybody under any circumstance, but the principle of review of appointments has been endorsed as it relates to Order in Council appointments. Clearly the appointments are not Order in Council appointments and they are not automatically referred.

Obviously the Minister must realize that making an order of the nature he is suggesting under the Standing Order he related would only occur in the case of a national emergency on an issue and would probably then not be passed. The point that was made is that while we appreciate the fact that the executive board is reviewable, we feel that all positions should be reviewable by a parliamentary committee and we are sorry that the Minister chose to derogate from the principle of parliamentary review of all appointments in relation to the nine directors. We feel that they should also be reviewed by Governor in Council and we feel that would be a very easy amendment for the Minister to choose to make.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Chairman, as a former committee chairman, I think the important principle coming out of parliamentary reform is that significant appointments made by the Government, decisions made by the Cabinet, appear in The Canada Gazette and there is an automatic ministerial reference to the House of the named individuals and a further responsibility to provide résumés and things to assist the committee in its work. In a number of statutes, there are other kinds of groups that are appointed by the board itself. There is quite often a power to set up subcommittees of the board to appoint people to the board to do certain tasks. There are generally appointment powers for all kinds of Crown corporations and other organizations.

The members of the Parliamentary Reform Committee and the Members of this House, in the revision of the Standing Orders on the issue of permanent reference, gave committees not just the power but the responsibility to review all matters which fall on the administrative side as well as the policy side.

• (1600)

We are dealing here with an administrative matter. The appointment of board members by the board itself is an administrative matter in the hands of the board and not in the hands of the Government. I think it would be appropriate for the members of a standing committee, in this case the members of the Committee on National Health and Welfare, to consider whether or not they want to examine the board's behaviour, and that takes them to the issue of the nine members that it is possible to appoint under this statute.

Under the clauses of this Bill the Government is responsible for notification of the House and committee of all of the board decisions which the Government makes. That is consistent with the other statutes that we have had in recent times. However, it is up to the committee itself, under Standing Order 96, to look into administrative matters of the board which would include the board's power to appoint an additional nine people. I think it would be a mistake to change this clause.

Ms. Copps: Madam Chairman, obviously that is within the power of the committee. I am willing to lodge our protest and have this clause pass on division. We are talking here about the creation of a new centre, not the established practice for centres that have existed in the past. The fact is that Parliament has endorsed the principle that Parliament, not the Minister and not an elite group, however competent it may be, but the people of Canada have an opportunity, through their elected representatives, to review all appointments to government boards and agencies. This, unfortunately, is in violation of that principle. We have registered our protest and are willing to pass it on division.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 8 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On Clause 1—

Ms. Copps: Since we are discussing the over-all intent and spirit of the Bill I would like to ask the Minister a question. First, I think there should be recognition made of the work of David Archibald and those in the field who have been working for a long time for the creation of a centre of this type. This goes back to the days when the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, John Munro, almost achieved the creation of this type of centre.

Why did the Minister leave the false impression with several people in the health community that the Liberal Party was in fact opposed to this Bill when in fact the Liberal Member on the committee which looked into this issue argued most vehemently in favour of the creation of the centre? Why would the Minister leave that false impression?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I do not want to leave any false impression. If I was wrong and the Liberal Party was not opposed to it, I withdraw that. I just regret that the Hon. Member has not been able to fulfil the deals which her Party made. That is the point which must be stressed again.

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Chairman, if it is the decision of the spokesperson for the Liberal Party that it was the Liberals on the Committee on National Health and Welfare who initiated or were preponderant in the consideration or recommendation of this or any other matter in committee, let me assert here and now that the deliberations of the committee involved an equal participation of all sides. All sides were unanimous in all recommendations and most of us shared the concern that the Government has failed to address the other recommendations which were made.

Some 29 of 31 recommendations have been substantially ignored or rejected. We are all concerned about that. However, I think the self-serving discussion which is now taking place on a matter which we promised on August 19 and today would be passed to the House in as quick a fashion as possible is just unacceptable.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I do not want to prolong this. I will go through this very quickly because that which the Hon. Member has been saying is simply not true. Of the recommendations which were made, recommendations 1, 4, 7, 6, 17, 18, 28 to 31, 26, and 27 have been implemented. Implemented through a different strategy and a common goal were recommendations 2, 3, 9, 11 to 14, 15, 16, 24, and 25. Under active review are recommendations 5, 8, 10, 22, and 23. Recommendation 23 is covered by the private Members' Bill dealing with head shops. We lack jurisdiction for recommendations 12 and 20. The Government has rejected recommendations 19 and 21. Therefore, what has been said is patently wrong and I think Hon. Members should understand that.

Ms. Copps: Madam Chairman, in response to the comments of the Member for Windsor—Walkerville, I am shocked that the representative of the NDP is saying that they are working so hard in the area of drug abuse when that Party supports the legal sale of cocaine spoons and other illegal drug paraphernalia. I am very sorry that the Member has not fought the good fight in his Party and has not let his Party know that the sale of cocaine spoons and other illegal paraphernalia should be outlawed as was recommended in the report to which the Minister just referred. I wish the Member would spend his time talking to his colleagues as opposed to speaking out in the House about all the things his Party is doing when in fact it refused to support a private Member's Bill to make the sale of cocaine spoons and other paraphernalia illegal.

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Chairman, the Hon. Member has gone from duplicity to falsehood. The committee, as she very well knows, specifically rejected the proposal to ban the sale of specific utensils. The committee did recommend that consideration be given to the elimination of head shops. That is quite different from the elimination of spoons. Of course, even after lengthy deliberations, the Hon. Liberal Member learned very little and would not know that a cocaine spoon is no different from any other kind of spoon, that a cocaine razor blade is no different from any other kind of razor blade, and that a marijuana paper is no different from a tobacco paper. Of course, that is a complex matter beyond her understanding.

We were able to agree, however, that a place that was predominantly devoted to the sale of a number of items, books or whatever, which would encourage the use of drugs, should in fact be regulated. My Party, every member of my caucus, and I presume every member of the Party across the nation, shares the common sense view that substance abuse in this country needs to be controlled and attacked and agrees that alcohol is the preponderant substance of abuse in this country and that prescription drugs are a significant substance of abuse in this country. Symbolic actions to which we may say we are devoted, which are going to accomplish nothing in the effort to do something about the drug problem, do no good.

I thought all members of the committee agreed upon that. It surprises me that the Hon. Member, whose Party agreed that this Bill would be facilitated in its passage on August 19 yet deliberately delayed passage on that day and continues to do so today, would introduce an argument of this sort at a time when one significant recommendation which we made is about to be dealt with by the passage of this legislation.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Chairman, the Hon. Member says that a cocaine spoon is no different from any other spoon. Has he ever tried to eat Shreddies from a cocaine spoon? There is one use for a cocaine spoon and that is for the purpose of using cocaine.

Mrs. Sparrow: Space-size Shreddies.

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, space-size Shreddies. Seriously speaking, to set the record straight, I was on the committee that dealt with the Private Member's Bill to outlaw drug paraphernalia. The New Democratic Party did not participate at any of the meetings. There was not a single New Democratic Party Member who attended the meetings. In addition to that, they tried to obstruct in this House the passage of the legislation which would outlaw drug paraphernalia. I say that only to set the record straight.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I must call the committee to order. That which happens in standing committees does not have a place here. The rule of relevancy is being abused today and I believe we should get back to the Bill we are studying.

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS CONFLICT OF INTEREST ACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-114, an Act to provide for greater certainty in the reconciliation of the personal interests and duties of office of Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, to establish a Conflict of Interest Commission and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate today in the debate on Bill C-114, which is known as the Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons Conflict of Interest Act. This Bill is important not only to Parliamentarians themselves, to whom it is principally directed, but also to the Canadian public who want the operation of their Government to work properly, fairly and above reproach for the benefit of all Canadians.

I believe it is fair to say that at all levels we want that for our democratically elected institutions. Canadians are concerned about the issue of ethics in government and high standards of behaviour in Canadian public life. I suggest that no one Party has a monopoly on that concern, nor does any one Party have a monopoly on solutions. We must work together to develop these solutions.

Because of these concerns and the public interest in the integrity in the Government decision-making process, this has given rise to ever increasing demands for openness and accountability in the conduct of Government. Parliament and all of its Members, both in the House of Commons and the Senate, is under an intense and very legitimate scrutiny, scrutiny by the media and by the people of Canada, on this very important issue.

Our Government welcomes this scrutiny with all of its consequences. It is right and appropriate that we who hold public office should be judged against very high standards of conduct, standards which Canadians believe demonstrate the health, vigour and integrity of our parliamentary democracy.

The principle that no one in public office should use that office to further his or her private interests is fundamental to those standards and to our system of democratic parliamentary Government. This basic principle is one which the Bill before us is designed to uphold and to strengthen.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the Bill before the House of Commons today seeks to strike a delicate but necessary balance: to preserve and respect the individual responsibility and privacy of every Member of Parliament, while maintaining and promoting the highest standards of conduct among all Parliamentarians in the performance of their duties.

[English]

As we all understand, and as Chief Justice Parker noted in his report to the Government on the issue of conflict of interest, ethical conduct is fundamentally a matter of personal conscience and individual behaviour. In his comments on this question, Chief Justice Parker said "Public trust and confidence in the integrity of Government depends upon the integrity of individual public office holders and their individual sense of honour".

[Translation]

Canadians have a right to expect Members of the House of Commons and Senators to be persons of honour and integrity. The purpose of these new proposals to deal with conflicts of interest is to help those who are well-intentioned to conform to our standards, while at the same time as far as possible respecting the right of those who choose to serve the people of Canada to a minimum of privacy.

In short, Madam Speaker, this piece of legislation is unprecedented in Canada's federal public sector. It is unprecedented in that its purpose is to help Members of Parliament to avoid conflict of interest situations. It is unprecedented because it provides for administrative assistance, and it is unprecedented because it invites all Parliamentarians to close ranks and show the public that we are determined to maintain the highest standards of conduct in Canadian public life. There is, of course, other legislation besides this Bill that deals with the matter.

Finally, Madam Speaker, it is very important to be aware of the underlying principles on which this Bill is based, and of this Government's commitment to ensure that all Parliamentarians meet the expectations of Canadians.

[English]

In our debate today, we must not lose sight of the fact that the spirit of this Bill is in accord with the policies that have been adopted by this Government since it assumed office in September, 1984. In my comments today I want to set the context of the Bill in a wide scope so that Canadians will understand not only its important provisions but its place in the comprehensive approach our Government has taken on the question of integrity in public life.

Since 1984, my colleagues in caucus and Cabinet have been diligently working on a number of political reforms to ensure fairness and openness in government. I believe if you examine what we have done and what we are trying to do, it can be said that this is a Government committed to reform and more active in that respect than any of its predecessors.

I want to deal with some of the reforms that we have initiated and their implications for Parliament in particular and for Canadian political life in general. For years, the most significant development in our system of Government has been the perceived increase of Cabinet power, with the apparent resultant decline in the influences and effectiveness of Parliament. It is a favourite subject of editorialists. They lament the fact that there has been a loss of power by the Members. But I believe we have been the first Government in our history to try to reverse that trend with any measurable degree of success, and we have done that since 1984.

• (1620)

I want to point out some examples. I start with the McGrath committee. As a result of an exhaustive study and non-partisan effort—I point out this was a committee of all Members of the House and there were excellent contributions from all sides—what we did through that committee was strengthen the role of the Member of Parliament and parliamentary committees. We enhanced both the position of the Member of Parliament and his or her contribution and effectiveness on committees. I see here today the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who epitomizes what has been done by this Parliament and what can now be done by a parliamentary committee under the new rules.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Under the chairmanship of my colleague there have been far-reaching reforms with respect to what a parliamentary committee can do. We all know the leading role that has been taken by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, under my friend's chairmanship, and what we want to see in the next Parliament is a continuation of that role and an expansion of all standing committees. Members of Parliament will then have that sense of fulfilment that has been prevalent in the finance committee and other committees. That was the first step. The second step, and it has been referred to today, was to give parliamentary committees the power to review appointments, to bring appointments of the Governor in Council and Government before a parliamentary committee and have it examine the background of the person. Why is he or she an appropriate appointment for this committee?

I have to say there was some concern that we would find this process devolving into the way it is handled in the United States. I make no criticism of our neighbours to the south, but I find their appointment review process to be something I would not want to see copied in Canada. The appointment review system is a very good examination of some people. The Opposition has acted very responsibly. It has not called for every appointment to come before a committee. It has chosen to examine some appointments and not others. I think that has been healthy for the political process.

As you will know, Madam Speaker, the House of Commons now chooses the Speaker itself with a free vote by all Members. That was an excellent process and we ended up, I might say, as one of the combatants, with an excellent representative of all the Members of the House. Our Speaker has served the House well from the day of his election. And I think the election itself was healthy. We wanted to do that.

I have to say that there have been times through the process of appointments, and through the efforts of my friend, who was so energetic on the Finance Committee, when there was a little discomfort on the part of Government. There were things being done that caused several phone calls to my office. The caller usually started out by asking: "Why are they doing that?" I would try to explain to someone why they were doing that and the phone calls soon stopped. I think the whole process is healthier because of that.

I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that there have been many other changes, minor changes, which have affected the way Parliament works. It is my personal opinion that this Parliament will be remembered for many things, but basically because of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) complete and absolute determination to change the way things worked.

Mr. Rodriguez: Don't make me laugh.

Mr. Lewis: It is not difficult to make my friend laugh. It is easily done.

[Translation]

It is our objective to make the political process easier to implement and easier to understand for political Parties and their candidates and for Canada's electorate.

Our goal must be to encourage well-intentioned people to seek public office and to prevent such office from jeopardizing the reputation and solvency of the incumbent.

The proposed legislation is part of our effort to have a political system where the views and desires of Members are taken into consideration in the debate that takes place in Parliament and in the decisions that are made there.

To have an open, fair and equitable political system, the Government has tabled legislation to regulate the activities of professional lobbyists.

The Bill was passed by the House of Commons and is now in the other Chamber, where we hope the Senators will adopt the legislation without delay.

We feel it is important for the puplic to know what lobbyists are and what interests they represent, if our system of government is to function in an open and fair manner.

It is therefore important that this legislation should become effective as soon as possible.

[English]

There have been other initiatives of reform. Some time ago the Government announced a new system for the selection of federally Governor appointed judges. In designing and developing the process, we were acutely aware of two principles by which Canadians expect their judicial selection process to be governed. First, to ensure that the outcome of the process will be judicial appointments of outstanding capability and undoubted merit. The second principle is to ensure that the workings of the process be fair and open, moreover, that they be seen to be fair and open. Similar principles, merit and value, fairness and openness, have guided our thinking in fashioning a series of improvements to the federal Government's procurement process. In designing these improvements, we have been determined to ensure that at all times suppliers receive a fair opportunity to compete for government contracts and that they are made aware of the rules of the game so they can see for themselves they are being dealt with fairly and even handedly by the Government.

I want to say something about appointments. There have been various allegations of patronage to which the media has devoted so much attention.

Mr. Boudria: And government back-benchers.

Mr. Lewis: One should know that government appointments to agencies, boards, commissions and foreign service postings, are the exclusive prerogative of the Prime Minister, as they have been in the past. There has been no change in that system. The Government in Council appointments involve some 2,613 jobs on government agencies, boards and commissions. That is 1.1 per cent of the total Public Service population of some 231,000. Of the 2,613 appointments to these agencies, boards and commissions, only 377 are full-time jobs. Therefore, the Prime Minister of Canada, whether it is the present Prime Minister or past Prime Minister, has the authority to appoint 0.2 per cent of the number of full-time public servants. It is not as though that is all a Prime Minister spends his or her time doing.

I could review for the House a list of outstanding appointments, but I just want to refer to the last two. The last two appointments are the appointment of Yves Fortier to be the Canadian Ambassador to the United Nations—

Mr. Rodriguez: How about McDermott?

Mr. Lewis: I will get to Mr. McDermott in a moment—or Ian Deans. And Donald Macdonald who will be the Canadian High Commissioner to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Boudria: I want to hear all about Gil Christie.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, Gil Christie.

Mr. Lewis: That demonstrates the Prime Minister's commitment to make appointments that are firmly based on merit and not political affiliations. Both my hon. friends opposite may want to denigrate the appointments of Yves Fortier, Ian Deans and Dennis McDermott, but I do not think that is fair. All those gentlemen served their country. My friends may want to denigrate their appointments, but I do not think it is fair. They are not here to protect themselves. I am rather disappointed that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) would want to denigrate those appointments in that way.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, we have before the House today a piece of legislation dealing with conflict of interest. As soon as the Bill becomes law, it will affect all Parliamentarians, both in the House of Commons and in the Senate. As my colleagues have explained in greater detail, the Conflict of Interest Commission, an independent body consisting of three members, will monitor the implementation of these provisions. The Commission will report to Parliament. Members of Parliament, their spouses and their dependents will be required to disclose fully all personal interests to the Commission.

[English]

The Act is quite complete. It provides, for example, for definitions to conflict of interest and permitted private interests. It details the obligations of Members of Parliament. It details how contracts and benefits to former Members of Parliament should be handled. It prohibits the carrying on of business by certain Members of Parliament. It establishes a conflict of interest commission, as I said, to oversee the Act, to regulate, to provide opinion, to investigate and to report. Members will be required to furnish a personal information statement within 60 days of their election, and they must report material changes. Any infractions under the Act have to be reported to the House of Commons, and they must be considered by the House of Commons within 15 sitting days.

Before I wrap up my speech I wish to refer to my experience in my business career prior to becoming a Member of Parliament. I want to suggest that no one should enter public life with the idea that there is a great deal of money to be made unjustly, or that there is an influence to be used unjustly. I think it is fair to say that we all seek to serve the public and hope that during our years of service we will emerge with our reputations unscathed. Unfortunately, that is not always possible, whether by reason of human frailties, unfortunate circumstances or a lack of knowledge of the rules. The rules of conflict of interest are, unfortunately, not always as clear as one might think. Errors in judgment can be made in good faith which, examined in retrospect, indicate a potential conflict of interest which was not there on the first examination.

As a lawyer in a small city I was often faced in business with potential conflicts of interest. Usually, they were easy to determine and we could avoid the conflict. We might get into an action, a proceeding or a transaction on behalf of a client and find that the lawyer on the other side was a partner. That would be an immediate conflict of interest, no difficulty in determining it. So we would have to resolve it, whether by advising all concerned of the conflict of interest and securing agreement to go ahead, or in the alternative by saying: "Look, someone has to seek advice from another source". Occasionally, we even started out knowing that there was a conflict of interest but had the agreement of the clients on all sides for us to act on both sides because they wanted either me or my firm to put the deal together.

Those were situations in which we knew what the conflict was. It was evident at the start, or it became evident. I say to you, Madam Speaker, that when I practised law I knew where the conflicts of interest were. But I say to you, Madam Speaker, at the same time, that in politics, acting as an elected representative, it is not always that easy to determine at the start. I have compared it, if one looks for a comparison which can be understood, to playing football on a field where the goal-lines are easy to determine but the sidelines are either indistinct or continually being redrawn.

Everybody who enters public life and runs for office seeks to reach the goal-line at the end of one's career. That goal-line is to end up one's career without any conflicts of interest, without besmirching one's reputation. But often we find that the sidelines are either disappearing on us or being redrawn. I think it is fair to say that in the past four years of my life as a Member of Parliament there has been more found out about conflict of interest and potential conflicts of interests than in the first five years because we are learning. We are learning how to protect ourselves and how to see those sidelines while still seeking the goal-line. We all do. But we are learning more about how to draw the sidelines so that we protect ourselves and do not go out of bounds. I suggest that that is what we are going to do with this Bill. Nobody would suggest it is perfect. However, it is an effort.

The other personal thing I want to say is that there may be even yet other areas that we should look at, not within this Bill but I want to go back to my days as the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee when we examined the report of the Auditor General with respect to Canadair. Members from all sides on the committee found that there were some potential conflicts of interest which did not even involve money or influence. This is where public servants were appointed to the boards of Crown corporations and there was a very definite conflict of duties, not with any compensation, not with any intention that anybody do anything incorrect or favour one rather than the other. Public servants were being placed in untenable positions. I suggest that we are still learning about conflict of interest.

There are some who think that these new requirements will discourage Canadians from seeking public office because maybe the regime we propose is too rigorous. I am confident that that will not be the case. My conclusion is that after the conflict of interest regulations and requirements are put in place people will become familiar with the regime, it will be accepted and be welcomed as a necessary part of political life. There are sacrifices to be made, but I think there are many men and women of good will and dedication who will accept these discomforts as part of what one has to do in order to serve the interests of Canada.

I think that we have managed to strike a sensible balance between the public need for openness and the politician's acceptable right to some privacy in their private and financial affairs. I believe that the record of this Government will show, with our acknowledged imperfections and human failings, that we have made good beginnings in this important area of political reform. We understand and we appreciate that there is more to be done. But we expect that this Act will address the expectations of all Members of Parliament. We invite discussion in committee as to how it might be improved. We also hope that Canadians will put these reforms in perspective and appreciate the efforts which our Government has made over the course of the last four years.

We have made these efforts to fulfil our commitments and to respond to the concerns of the public. We believe that we have listened to the hopes and wishes and the criticisms of Canadians. In doing so we will continue the reform process of the political system, a commitment made by the Prime Minister prior to his being elected, a commitment which I think has distinguished this Government from its first days in office.

We do not suggest for a minute that all of the work is done. But with the support of Canadians our Government will continue to make effective political reform a reality for Parliament and for Canada.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, it is with mixed emotion that I speak today on Bill C-114. In a way I am happy to say that the Government is proposing in a certain measure some of the things that I have been advocating for some time. The Bill, of course, is not complete, and I will get into the details of how it is deficient later.

There is in one part that sense of happiness. But there is also a sense of sadness that, in fact, such legislation is required at all. Unfortunately, the legislation is required.

Why is it required? We could speculate on that for the rest of the afternoon and probably for the next weeks and months and never arrive at a final conclusion. In so far as I am concerned, I am of the opinion that these stricter rules are necessary because of the fact that rules in the past have been looked through much like an accountant goes through the taxation Act, in other words, attempting to find loopholes rather than the spirit of the legislation. When that happens it is unfortunate because, of course, if one Member of the House is found to be in a situation of conflict of interest in a certain measure, albeit not totally, that casts a dark shadow over all Members of Parliament.

Nevertheless, as an opposition Member, if we on this side of the House, or for that matter, a government Member is of the opinion that another Member has in any way abused the privileges that were given to him or her by the electors, it is of course his or her duty to report that publicly in order that the people of Canada can judge upon it. It is also the duty of that Member not to make allegations which would be unfounded, because that would cast the dark shadow, to which I referred earlier, unnecessarily and without foundation. That would ultimately ruin the credibility, not only of the person who made the accusation, but also many times of an innocent victim.

Today we are discussing Bill C-114, a Bill introduced in the House on February 24, 1988. How did we get into this mess? Well, it is difficult to say. Let me read a few quotes which would perhaps assist the House and Canadians in understanding about conflict of interest, abuse of power, and patronage.

On May 24, 1983, a prominent Canadian stated: "There'll be jobs for Liberals and NDPers too after I've been Prime Minister for 15 years and I can't find a living breathing Tory in the country". That was printed in The Globe and Mail on May 24, 1983.

On July 9, 1984, the same prominent Canadian stated: "I commit myself to set up criteria for quality which will impress the Canadian people. I think that what took place is completely unacceptable in an open democratic society. We are going to reform this instrument of our national life", referring to patronage.

On July 16, 1984, the same prominent Canadian said about patronage that it is a "fraud, a deceit and a sham". On that same date, the same prominent Canadian stated: "The method of making appointments could be corrected by dramatic measures . . . We are going to bring in a brand new dimension to them of objectivity and representation and fairness for all Canadians". On the same day, this Canadian, referring to his previous speech of May 24, 1983, stated: "I was talking to Tories then and that's what they want to hear. Talking to the Canadian public during an election campaign is something else".

Mr. Rodriguez: Who said that?

Mr. Boudria: An Hon. Member asks who said that. In July, 1984, the same person said about a political appointee: "There's no whore like an old whore".

Mr. Rodriguez: I know who that is.

Mr. Boudria: I am not sure if those words are parliamentary, but I am sure of who made the statements to which I have just referred.

Mr. Rodriguez: Now I know.

Mr. Boudria: Let me quote a statement made on July 19, 1984, considering patronage. The same individual stated that he would "never resort to that kind of attitude". On July 20, 1984, the same prominent Canadian stated: "The overriding criteria will be competence and a willingness to serve Canada". Again, that statement was about patronage.

When talking about 19 political appointees on July 25, 1984, the same Canadian stated to his opponent in a television debate: "The least you should do is apologize for having made these horrible appointments".

I think the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has already guessed who this prominent Canadian is. I think you have also, Madam Speaker, and I think most Canadians have. Indeed, the gentleman who made all those statements is now the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of our country. Perhaps that explains in part why we are in the mess that we are in regarding the credibility of public office holders, and regarding the attitude that public office holders are to have vis-à-vis conflict of interest.

Mrs. Mailly: Nonsense. We are in this mess because you are irresponsible.

Mr. Boudria: The Member opposite can say "nonsense". I challenge her to rise in her place and tell me which one of those quotes is erroneous.

Mrs. Mailly: Or out of context.

Mr. Boudria: I challenge the Hon. Member, and she knows, as I do, that every one of those quotes is precise, not out of context, and made to the people of Canada, or for the people of Canada to hear or read.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, no legislation can be effective enough to prevent the abuses we have witnessed in the last few years. However, as a Member of Parliament, I accept this new legislation, although with some reservations that I will mention in a moment. The legislation is somewhat like Ontario's, except that Ontario's is superior, in my opinion, to what the Prime Minister has presented to us. The legislation covers Members as well as Ministers. It covers spouses to a lesser degree and, unfortunately, it does not cover the political assistants of Ministers and Members at all.

As I said, we have some concerns about the way the Bill applies to spouses. I still feel that the Bill should require public disclosure of Members' assets, instead of secret statements. I believe that the parliamentary committee should have some powers, and we know that the committee's powers are not too clear in the Bill. For compliance measures to work, public statements should be required, and the legislation is rather confusing on this point.

[English]

Some people will claim that, if conflict of interest rules are strict, or if government ethic rules are strict, this would discourage people from seeking public office. To all those people who are of the belief that stricter rules discourage people from seeking public office, I wish to quote from the Hon. W. D. Parker's Commission of Inquiry into the Facts of Allegations of Conflict of Interest Concerning the Honourable Sinclair M. Stevens which states at page 350:

> By all accounts the U.S. disclosure requirements are working reasonably well. There have been criticisms relating to investigation and enforcement, but the requirements in principle have received wide-ranging approval.
> I was particularly interested to learn that the disclosure requirements have not discouraged "good people" from entering politics or running for public office. For example, a study of members of the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate conducted by the Center for Responsive Politics in 1985 found no one who felt that financial disclosure affected his or her decision to seek public office.

In other words, there is no evidence to support the contention that some people might have that conflict of interest rules, in particular public disclosure of assets, would discourage people from seeking public office.

I would like to argue the contrary, that, in fact, good and appropriate rules would probably encourage people to seek public office, knowing that their reputation will be enhanced once they are in office rather than observing the sad spectacle which we sometimes see today. One of the things that this Bill does not do, as I said previously, is that it does not provide for public disclosure. Justice Parker, in his report, insisted that this be a component of any new legislation or code regarding conflict of interest. He also said that public disclosure has to apply not only to the spouse and to the Parliamentarian, but that there should also be a disclosure of assets for spouses of Parliamentarians.

• (1650)

I read here from page 357 of the Parker Commission report, where His Honour, Justice Parker, said:

> In light of these views, and despite any apparent unease men may have about being publicly scrutinized because of their wives' public profile, I am satisfied that a modern conflict of interest regime requires public disclosure of the financial interests of spouses, whether male or female. I am fortified in this conclusion by the fact that all Canadian provinces with rules for disclosure by office holders apply a disclosure requirement to spouses as well.

In other words, what Justice Parker is telling us is that, at the provincial level, where rules exist concerning the disclosure of assets by public office holders, the spouse of the public office holder is always covered.

What the Government is proposing in this Bill is a mild form, if you wish, of the same thing. It is interesting to note that it is that proposal in the legislation which has caused the most uproar, particularly from spouses of Members opposite.

The Minister seemed to suggest a while ago that in fact this Government had invented rules on public sector ethics, as if it was a normal process of evolution of Governments whereby this Government established all kinds of new rules and that it is the fault of not having rules there which made the situation what it is today. First of all, that is totally incorrect. This Government did not invent the rules. I must say that in my opinion this Government needs more rules than any other. Be that as it may, the first conflict of interest guidelines that were introduced—and I have a copy of them at hand—were introduced in Parliament on November 8, 1974—

An Hon. Member: There was no law for 18 years.

Mr. Boudria: —by then Prime Minister Trudeau. On August 7, 1979, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), when he was the Prime Minister, introduced a new set of guidelines. They were not a law either, but we forgive him for that. He introduced guidelines in 1979, when he was the Prime Minister of Canada. I now hear Conservatives across the way saying, "Those were not laws". That is true. It is quite correct to say that the Right Hon. Secretary of State, when he was Prime Minister, failed to introduce a law, just like everyone else. So if the Parliamentary Secretary, who is making these funny noises across the way, is suggesting that, I agree with her.

On April 28, 1980, the Liberal Government, when it came back into power, introduced new and tougher guidelines. These guidelines were getting more and more complex, as they should have been in order to ensure that Governments were behaving in the way that they should. The same Government commissioned a working group in order to produce a report.

[Translation]

I have in my hand here a copy of the report from the conflict of interest task force chaired by the Hon. Michael Starr and the Hon. Mitchell Sharp—they were co-chairmen—and the executive director of the project was a man by the name of J. Patrick Boyer, who is now a Member of this House. This report was tabled in Parliament and it recommended reforms of ethics in the public sector. Well, all this to say, Madam Speaker, that this matter has been under consideration for a long time. Several successive Governments have presented different initiatives. So the Minister who just presented his Bill to us was a little mistaken, to say the least, when he suggested that his Government had invented the wheel. This Government has not invented much, as we know, Madam Speaker.

Now, on September 9, 1985, after a series of scandals embarrassed this Government, the Prime Minister rose in the House and presented a new code of conduct for public office holders. He presented this whole package, this new morality kit, all wrapped in a blue ribbon, and set it here on the Clerk's Table in the House. I have in my hand this so-called code of conduct for public office holders. It is quite an interesting document and we know that Judge Parker addressed the issue of how well or badly some Ministers followed the code presented in September 1985.

Now, in September 1985, the Prime Minister made some statements. On one hand, he sent a letter to MPs and Senators; on the other, he also proposed measures related to public morality in areas not covered by the code of conduct for public office holders. First, he proposed a code governing conflicts of interest; second, on September 9, 1985, he proposed new rules for the awarding of jobs or contracts. This concerned Ministers—I won't name anyone—who were sometimes tempted to hire their relatives, like their son as a lawyer, say, or their brother, brother-in-law, sister-in-law, and so on. This has happened in some cases.

There was also a new code of ethics for MPs and Senators set forth in a letter the Prime Minister sent to them. Another provision of this code of ethics was parliamentary review of Order-in-Council appointments. So this was established.

There was a Bill on lobbying. Madam Speaker, I am sure you remember it took me 15 questions in the House, over a period of two years, to convince the Government to proceed with this measure. Finally, it did. There were further steps, such as the advice to Crown corporations to stop hiring lobbyists. We all know that Frank Moores was hired by a number of Crown corporations to lobby the Government, and this while Mr. Moores was a friend of the Prime Minister, and so forth.

In concluding, the Prime Minister said in his letter, and I am quoting here from page 11—he mentioned this new code of ethics. He said: "This package of reforms is evidence of the Government's intent to adopt ethical standards worthy of the respect of the Canadian people . . . ". And we know what happened next. In so doing, we wish to further the process of national renewal by revitalizing the faith of the citizens of this country in their institutions of government. Many of these steps are long overdue, and heaven knows this Government has had cause to regret their absence." That is well said, Madam Speaker." But now they are in place, or in the process of being put in place, and we can look forward together to the dawning of a new day of trust and confidence." That was September 9, 1985.

Later on I will talk about what has happened since September 9, 1985. I may remind all Members of this House and all Canadians of what I just read: The dawning of a new day of trust and confidence.

So as of September 1985, we had this set of codes, a set of new rules governing or regulating the conduct of public office holders, and so forth.

• (1700)

[English]

If one did not know any better and if one had left Canada that day or perhaps had left the planet for somewhere else and come back this afternoon, one would believe that everything worked well after September 9, 1985, that no Conservative Cabinet Minister got himself or herself into trouble, that no accusations of conflict of interest had been made that a contract had been awarded improperly—

Mrs. Mailly: That is garbage!

Mr. Boudria: —that no people were charged with criminal wrongdoing or anything of the sort. We cannot comment on the people who have been charged individually except that the process will take care of itself. We know that has happened. We can talk about the other issues, particularly those involving conflict of interest.

I see the Member across the way is becoming rather excited because I am talking about the conflict of interest rules. I know it is an exciting topic. Perhaps her colleagues can contain her for a few minutes while I finish my remarks.

Mr. Siddon: What you are doing is cowardly slander!

Mr. Boudria: I want to read from a September 9, 1985 article that appeared in The Ottawa Citizen. This was two days before the code of September 9 was introduced. The article is entitled "Firm Hires PM's Pal, $200,000 Job Follows." It reads like this:

> A Toronto law firm was awarded $200,000-a-year worth of federal government legal work shortly after one of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's closest friends joined it earlier this year, The Citizen has learned.

It goes on to describe how Mr. Sam Wakim was hired by a Toronto law firm and by coincidence a lot of government contracts followed in that direction.

On October 2, 1986 there was another article—

[Translation]

Ms. Mailly: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Ms. Mailly), on a point of order.

Ms. Mailly: Madam Speaker, I am starting to wonder about the relevance of what the Member is saying. He makes allegations about what some people who are not Members of Parliament might have done. The Bill we are considering today concerns conflicts of interest involving Members of Parliament and their spouses. I believe that he is having a great time, but I do not think it has anything to do with the Bill. Besides, it is his irresponsible attitude that has put us in the situation we are in today and not the Bill.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I am sorry if the Hon. Member is not hearing clearly what I was saying. I will attempt to speak more slowly to make sure she understands everything in the future.

Mrs. Mailly: Go outside and say it.

Mr. Boudria: Again, perhaps I will repeat so that even the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) will understand.

The Member across the way and some of her colleagues are saying that I am insinuating and making false accusations.

Mr. Siddon: Total innuendo.

Mr. Boudria: I suppose the RCMP is making false accusations and that the Conservative Members of Parliament who, over the last 10 days, have made all kinds of comments in the House are making false accusations. In other words, the Member is probably suggesting that everyone who disagrees is crazy but everyone who agrees with her is all right.

Mrs. Mailly: What you have just said is morally bankrupt.

Mr. Boudria: That "I am all right, Jack" attitude, Madam Speaker, is totally inadequate. Canadians have had enough of it.

I have a newspaper article for September 23, 1987. I can provide this article for Members opposite if it pleases them. In this one we read:

> At 8.45 a.m. this morning, David Kilgour was still stewing.
> He has been stewing now for 173 days, ever since that Saturday in April when he warned the government it had better clean up its act or else.

The article continues:

> Kilgour said he would either cross the floor or else quit altogether if the government failed to meet his two conditions: (i) Pay attention to the economic woes of Western Canada, and (ii) Come up with some suitable conflict-of-interest guidelines.

An Hon. Member: What are you referring to?

Mr. Boudria: I think I am referring to conflict of interest guidelines. I am even referring to a request that a Conservative Member made. Surely I have the right to make that speech and I have the right to be heard. If the Member wants to be heard, I can yield the floor to her momentarily, she can make her point and I can come back to my speech provided that time is deducted from the amount of time that has been allotted to me. I know she will have ample opportunity to speak later.

As I was saying, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) was saying that the Government had to come up with some suitable conflict of interest guidelines. Those remarks came from a September 23, 1987 newspaper article from The Ottawa Citizen written by one Roy MacGregor. This was not the only case. There have been others. I could read on and on from newspaper clippings of various cases involving conflict of interest. I could refer to Members individually but it is not the purpose of what we are doing today. We are trying to propose rules which are better. If I am provoked by the Member across, we could get into this further.

I want to indicate to the House and to the Government that what is proposed to us today may be part of the answer, but it is certainly not the full picture. The Government has offered us only a partial set of rules involving conflict of interest, not a total package, and it has left many questions unanswered.

I have been asking myself, Madam Speaker, and you have probably wondered about this too, as I am sure most Canadians have, why this Bill was presented to us on February 24, 1988. Shortly before that, in 1988, there had been a number of issues raised in the House of Commons concerning conflict of interest. The Prime Minister, in the Throne Speech of 1986, had promised a new set of conflict of interest rules. It is interesting to note why we needed a new set of conflict of interest rules in 1986 when the Prime Minister had invented a new set in 1985 which he said were the best in the western world. If they were the best, how would they need to be fixed up? In any event, in 1986 in the fall Throne Speech here we were again with the Government committing itself to new rules regarding conflict of interest.

Lo and behold, the Government forgot about the necessity of having new conflict of interest rules until a few other problems arose, namely the Commission of Inquiry into Facts of Allegations of Conflict of Interest Concerning the Honourable Sinclair M. Stevens. This report was tabled last year and after it was tabled the Government presented us with a Bill on February 24, 1988, the same Bill that we are reviewing today, Bill C-114, entitled an Act to provide for greater certainty in the reconciliation of the personal interests and duties of office of Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, to establish a Conflict of Interest Commission and to make consequential amendments to other Acts. This is the Bill that was presented to us on February 24, 1988.

• (1710)

On that date, the Prime Minister wrote to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), and presumably to the Leader of the third Party as well, and this is what he said in the letter that he sent to my Leader:

> Dear Mr. Turner,
>
> I enclose a copy of a Bill dealing with conflict of interest for Members of the Senate and the House of Commons, which I intend to table later today.
> The Bill sets forth the Government's proposals in respect of conflict of interest. Its provisions, which affect the rights and privileges of all Parliamentarians, address some of the most difficult and complex issues facing persons in public life today. It deserves the most careful scrutiny by all Parliamentarians, and I invite you, as I am also inviting Mr. Broadbent, to join with me in asking all our colleagues in both Houses to review these proposals in the constructive spirit with which they are being put forward by the Government.

Listen to the next sentence, Madam Speaker:

I believe it is in the public interest that consideration of these proposals should proceed expeditiously so that the Bill may be enacted and proclaimed as soon as is prudently possible—

A few weeks later, I rose in my place in the House of Commons and asked the Prime Minister why it was that if this Bill had to be dealt with expeditiously, we were not proceeding with it. The Prime Minister ignored the question, answered something insignificant and just kept on going. The issue died. We did not hear about it for months.

Then a member of the governing Party, a former member of the government Cabinet, started making very serious allegations to the media, not to a Member of this House but to the media. After that, the Prime Minister decided that this Bill has become an urgent issue again. One must wonder, is the Bill urgently required because it is required or is it required because the media have started to ask questions once again? I do not know the answer, but I will let you speculate on it, Madam Speaker.

One must also ask what was the cause of the delay between February 24, 1988, and today, August 31 of the same year, in dealing with a Bill that was supposed to be urgent. I think there are answers to that question. Let me describe what I believe are some of those answers.

I have a newspaper article here entitled "Tory MP calls ethics law 'monstrosity' ". The article indicates that a Conservative Member of Parliament from Nova Scotia claimed that this Bill was a monstrosity and that it violated the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This was not a member of the Opposition but a member of the Government. He said, according to the article, the following:

"As far as I'm concerned, this bill runs totally against the fundamentals of Parliament," he said.

I read further from the same article written by Stephen Bindman:

One Conservative MP, who did not want to be identified, told Canadian Press he questions whether the government wants a vote on the stiff new rules, considering the possibility of a caucus split.

The article concludes:

And former speaker John Bosley said in an interview there is "quite a bit" of opposition in the Tory caucus to the legislation as it stands.

It appears that some Members of Parliament were objecting and objecting strenuously to the passage of this Bill. Some people would be misled into believing that it was members of the Opposition who were obstructing the Bill. Sometimes people believe that of members of the Opposition, but that was not so. Every one of the Members of Parliament mentioned in this article are members of the governing Party.

It appears quite clearly that Members of Parliament on the government side did not want the enactment of this legislation.

Mrs. Mailly: Who says that? It's in a newspaper.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Gatineau has asked me who said that. These are quotes of individual Members of Parliament.

Mrs. Mailly: In a newspaper.

Mr. Boudria: I will go further, if the Hon. Member for Gatineau would calm down and listen for a minute. I myself participated in a debate at CJOH Television in Ottawa. I was there with the wife of a Conservative Member of Parliament and she was there to present a case on behalf of the Conservative Spouses' Association as to why we should never enact Bill C-114. That is available on video tape. I was there supporting the Government's Bill.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Who was that, Mrs. Who?

Mrs. Mailly: It was her right, it's a democracy.

Mr. Boudria: I can certainly state who it was. It was the President of the PC Spouses' Association.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Who's that?

Mr. Boudria: The lady's name was Mrs. Schellenberg, and I am sorry, but I forget her first name.

We had this debate on CJOH and the person in question was saying that these rules should not be enacted. The point I am making is that it is that kind of lobbying in the background from Conservative Members of Parliament and from the PC Spouses' Association which has caused this Bill not to have been called for second reading debate until today. It was not because members of the Opposition would not co-operate.

The minute we were asked to go along with the passage of this Bill, we agreed to it and we will deal with this Bill in two short days of debate in the House of Commons. We will have three hours of debate on second reading of this very important piece of legislation. That is the co-operation the Opposition has given to the Government, and I do not take credit for that myself. It is the same for all opposition Members. This has been unanimously agreed to. However, it took almost seven months for the Government to move on this Bill, no doubt because of the lobbying it was subjected to from Conservative Members of Parliament and from the PC Spouses' Association.

This does not mean that the Bill as proposed is perfect, because obviously it is not. Like most things that Members of Parliament look at, we want to offer amendments to it and we want to offer our input into trying to make the Bill better. In the short minutes left to me, I will just describe some of the amendments for which I am looking.

First, this Bill does not require full disclosure. The amount of disclosure is set by Cabinet. The Bill does not prohibit blind trusts, which I do not think work in any circumstances. Chiefs of staff are not included but the spouses and children of Members of Parliament are. I think that is inconsistent and we need a statement by the Government as to whether or not chiefs of staff will remain covered by the present conflict of interest code.

Members are allowed to accept fees and gifts as long as these gifts are disclosed. We will want to examine practices in other jurisdictions to see if we should not prohibit the acceptance rather than require disclosure. I think that should be examined in committee, and I invite the input of all Hon. Members. The Bill does not prevent such things as loans or gifts from political Parties. Need I remind Hon. Members of the bill paid to redecorate 24 Sussex Drive? That particular issue involved the sum of $308,000.

The Bill in question is vague. We will want to tighten it up sufficiently. In closing, I want to thank you, Madam Speaker, for the time that has been given to me today. I invite all Hon. Members to support speedy passage of this Bill. Let us send it to committee so we can have full and thorough hearings on this very important piece of legislation.

Mr. Layton: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that there is consent from all my colleagues on all sides of the House for me to present a report from committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent that the Hon. Member table a report from a committee?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BROADCASTING ACT

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-136, an Act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS CONFLICT OF INTEREST ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-114, an Act to provide for greater certainty in the reconciliation of the personal interests and duties of office of Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, to establish a Conflict of Interest Commission and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I want to participate in this debate because I have been a close observer of what was supposed to be a brand new era. The Tories swept out the Liberals because the Liberals had done so many bad things. They had established bad practices like toll-gating, patronage, and pork-barreling. I was here when the Liberals were in power and every time they got up we sang "Roll Out the Barrel".

We all remember very vividly when, in the leadership debate, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recited the list of appointments which Mr. Trudeau had made, to which the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) had not objected. He pointed at him and said those memorable words, "You had an option, Sir". Everyone said that that was the turning point, and I believed it because I observed that debate. The Prime Minister established himself as a harbinger of new beginnings, of a clean slate. There would be no more of this dirty stuff, we were going to have Mr. Clean in spades. The honeymoon of the Tories with the people of Canada lasted six short months. Then we saw the deluge.

I listened to the Minister who introduced this second reading debate. To hear him tell it, Bill C-114 is somehow or other a normal evolutionary process of Conservatives on the way to becoming clean, cleaner, and cleanest. That is the impression he left. The Prime Minister is lying on his bed crying out for absolution. He is saying, "Mea culpa, mea culpa, mea maxima culpa, ideo precor beatam Mariam virgine". That has not been brought about by any evolutionary process but because of a list of scandals.

We had the Sinc Stevens scandal. The taxpayers of this country know full well that the Parker inquiry has cost them millions of dollars. They know who picked up Mr. Stevens' bills. It was the taxpayers of Canada. They know of the stonewalling that went on in this House for weeks by Erik Nielsen. He stonewalled day after day as the Opposition ferreted out the facts one after the other. The Government was pushed into establishing the Parker Commission inquiry.

We have not forgotten the Bissonnette affair, the Côté affair, the Frank Moores affair, or the toll-gating claims made by the former Minister only a couple of weekends ago. The most recent one happened in July and was raised in the House today. The wife and daughter of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) accepted two freebie tickets worth over $5,600. The Minister said that she does not have to declare that.

In an open letter to me and to all Members of Parliament written on September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister said the following about ethics: "It is a great principle of public administration, I could even say an imperative, that to function effectively the Government and public service of a democracy must have the trust and confidence of the public they serve. In order to reinforce that trust, the Government must be able to provide competent management and, above all, to be guided by the highest standards of conduct".

The height of their standards is the gutter. We have seen evidence of that. These are not figments of the imagination and the people of Canada are responding to it.

I suggest that you read the latest polls. When asked which leader reflects honesty and integrity the Prime Minister is not the first choice. He does not emulate those qualities. He does not show leadership in those qualities for Canadians. After all, 26 million Canadians cannot be wrong.

Expecting me to believe that Bill C-114 has arrived on our desks for debate as a result of an evolutionary process is like expecting me to believe that Moby Dick once existed as a minnow. That is crazy. There is no Canadian in this country who would believe that.

Let me give you another example. Everyone heard about the Gucci shoes. The Prime Minister received a $158,000 loan from the PC Canada Fund. The guidelines said that loans had to be declared. That came out as a result of the Côté deal. It was then discovered that the Prime Minister got a loan. He said that it was not a loan but an advance. When is a loan an advance, Mr. Speaker? When the Prime Minister gets it. Then he said that he paid it back. If you give me an advance and I pay it back, is that not a loan? Of course it is a loan. Canadians are not simple-minded, they understand that. One of the clauses in this Bill is called the Gucci clause.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, we are very much amused but we are afraid our colleague will have another heart attack. He is not being relevant to the Bill, apart from the fact that he is being dishonest in the way he is presenting his so-called facts. I would like him at least to be relevant while he is entertaining us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I am sure the Hon. Member is going to touch on the Bill occasionally during his oration.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Conservatives are so sensitive. We are debating principle on Bill C-114 which talks about truth and honesty, and that is what I am talking about. They are trying to tell me that the Gucci shoes did not exist. Of course they did.

The Minister who introduced this Bill for second reading and spoke on it first compared it to a football game. I want to compare it to a boxing match. The image is that Bill C-114 is a peak-a-boo Bill, now you see it, now you don't. It's the Cassius Clay stance, the peak-a-boo stance. Every time you think it's there, it is not. When you think you have an opening to take a punch, you find it is closed, the gloves are there and your punch gets picked off.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: It is obvious that I have them on the ropes, Mr. Speaker, and now I am going to deliver the knock-out punch. I am going to give them the left upper-cut. Of course it will be a left upper-cut. This Bill was introduced by the Prime Minister himself back in February. It is now August, the dying days of this Parliament, and at the eleventh hour Bill C-114 is put forward for debate and we have some more scandals brewing.

• (1730)

We heard the Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) talk about crumbs falling off the table. One Member said that if he told what he knew he could put 12 people in jail.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Rodriguez: It is not New Democrats who are saying that. It is Conservatives. They are not only shooting themselves in the foot, but in the head. That is not difficult if they can find it.

Why have the Conservatives brought the Bill in at this last minute? They do not want to pass the Bill. It is as simple as that. They want no change in the rules. They are not even being honest about Bill C-114.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: They do not want an effective conflict of interest law. You know that the Bill will not pass when an election is called within the next couple of weeks.

We paid several million dollars for the Parker Commission report. Maybe we ought to look at what Justice Parker had to say about conflict of interest. I want to quote Justice Parker. Justice Parker said that the key—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Can the Hon. Member give us the page he is quoting in the Parker report?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Rodriguez: Justice Parker said: "In my view—"

Mr. Stevens: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Can the Hon. Member give us the page that he is quoting from in the Parker report so that we are assured he is not reading it out of context?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): That is not a proper point of order. It is up to the Hon. Member whether he does or does not do so.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, Justice Parker said: "In my view, public disclosure should be the cornerstone of a modern conflict of interest code".

Mr. Stevens: What page?

Mr. Rodriguez: Justice Parker has said that that question of disclosure is the very essence of a modern conflict of interest code. One would think that the Prime Minister, having read this report, would in fact incorporate that suggestion into this conflict of interest legislation.

Mr. Stevens: Have you read the report?

Mr. Rodriguez: But it is not there. In the United States, they have full disclosure in their conflict of interest rules. In Great Britain there are full disclosure rules. In many provinces in Canada there are full disclosure rules. In municipal council there are full disclosure rules. But is there full disclosure in Bill C-114?

If the principle of the Bill is conflict of interest, then it ought to be based on a cornerstone, which is that public disclosure is the essence of any conflict of interest law.

In fact, Bill C-114 is diametrically opposed to that because it only requires Members of Parliament to reveal their assets to a registrar who may or may not make public any or all of the information provided by the Member. In fact, this is no disclosure at all. What has been inserted into this equation now is a bureaucrat. The bureaucrat and the Member will decide what, if anything, shall be disclosed.

That is not fulfilling what Justice Parker has said and has discovered in a very exhaustive hearing is essential to a conflict of interest guideline. What is being offered here is something called reasonable privacy of Members. That is a variation on the theme of full disclosure. It is not even consistent.

In fact, we in the New Democratic Party cannot accept that idea which is contained in Bill C-114. We criticize it for that because, in fact, it sets up a filtering system and some bureaucrat will filter what exactly the public should know. You cannot have a transparent system with that kind of filtering plant.

In fact, that is what is in effect now. The ADRG registers the assets. He does not have to reveal them. They are not public knowledge. Surely we should be aiming for something better than what we have had and what has failed us in the past. That is our first grave concern.

The second shortcoming of the Bill as far as we New Democrats see it is the whole question of requiring Members to make a public declaration of conflicts and withdraw from debate or discussion of the particular issue in which they have a conflict. When I was on municipal council, one had to declare publicly what the conflict was. Then one could not participate in the debate or in the vote.

According to the present Standing Orders of the House, the Member does not participate in the vote, but there is no public declaration of the pecuniary interest the Member has in the legislation that is before Parliament. As far as I am concerned, there must be a provision in the Bill that has some declaratory powers.

The third shortcoming of the Bill as we see it is the question of blind trusts. Again, Justice Parker has said—

Mr. Stevens: At what page?

Mr. Rodriguez: —quite strongly, one of his recommendations—

Mr. Stevens: At what page?

Mr. Rodriguez: You should know the page. You ought to know the Parker Commission report inside out. You should not be asking me the page, and I am pointing to Mr. Sinclair Stevens.

Why is he asking? He is better acquainted with Justice Parker than I am. He has spent more time with him. He spent more time with him, at my expense, so do not ask me the page. Do not ask me the page.

An Hon. Member: Go eat a banana, John.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): This is creating a considerable amount of disorder in the Chamber. I would be most appreciative if the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would refrain from using pronouns in the first person.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I observe that. You have given me a chance to cool down. But here is a guy on 14 counts—not one, two or three, but 14 counts of conflict of interest—

Mr. Brisco: A point of order.

Mr. Rodriguez: He spent more time with Justice Parker and he is asking me what page the recommendation is on. Buddy, what did I pay that lawyer for, who is now a judge? What did I pay Sopinka for? Let him tell you the page. Call Sopinka. I will pay the dime.

Mr. Brisco: A point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I would appreciate if the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) in the last minute he has, would refrain from using pronouns and speak through the Chair.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not wish to take from the Hon. Member's last moments in his speech, but out of regard for the Hon. Member when he is outside the Chamber, I remind him that if he exercises himself too passionately he may well be addressing the House in his last moments. He should have some due regard for his own welfare.

Mr. Rodriguez: When I consider this cause that I am on the public interest—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: The Tories are laughing. They think this is a joke. They do not know what it is to feel passionately about some issue. That is Tories for you, Mr. Speaker. No wonder they are in the mess they are in today. No wonder we need strong conflict of interest guidelines.

• (1740)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I would like to tell the Hon. Member that I am rising, through no fault of his, at this time to admit that there was a mistake and he has another 20 minutes if he so wishes.

Mr. Rodriguez: I thought I had to run through the speech, now I can savour each moment. Justice Parker in one of his recommendations said, key to our opposition: "In my view, the blind trust should be abolished". We paid millions of dollars for this kind of high-falutin' recommendation. We New Democrats think that it is a pretty smart recommendation, so why has the Government not included the abolition of blind trusts in the legislation?

It is the Cassius Clay stance. You think you have blind trust, but you notice the guard is still up and you are bobbing and weaving and it catches you a punch and you flick it off. It is because of this filtering system where one goes to a commissioner of trusts and you tell him what you owe. Then he says: "Sit down, my son, now which one of these things do you think we can make public?" He wants to know: "Should we make your 50,000 shares in Christ coins public?" You reply: "No, I do not think we should do that". He asks: "How about the Sunday newspaper you have in Ottawa? Should we make that one public?" There it is. It is as effective as a roaring rabbit. Of course, no one can challenge the decision of the commissioner, so there is no one to watch the watchdog. Who watches the watchdogs? No one. So we do not have an abolition of blind trusts.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with a great deal of interest to my hon. friend opposite. I know he studied Bill C-114, the conflict of interest Bill very carefully. I wonder if he would like to comment on whether the Bill goes far enough so that it will stop the laundering practices of the New Democratic Party, which launders money through the Elections Act to the municipal—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gormley: How much money did you clean last month?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, what do they call that? Remember the guard is up. What do they call it?

Mr. Shields: Answer the question.

Mrs. Mailly: Why don't you answer it?

Mr. Rodriguez: They call it reasonable privacy. Nothing that embarrasses. Nothing that really makes life tough for an elected politician, no, Sir. And who decides the reasonable privacy? The Member and the buddy the Government appointed as the commissioner, probably a Tory.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said it has never been an acceptable practice. He said he would never make it a practice to buy Canadians with their own money, and we all know Mr. Clean is in the House—

Mr. King: What about laundering, John?

Mr. Rodriguez: —and that hundreds and millions of dollars were spent to win a by-election.

Mr. Boudria: It was $162.8 million, to be exact. But who is counting?

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right, $162.8 million.

Mr. King: What about the laundering, John?

Mr. Rodriguez: We have another problem, Mr. Speaker, with this Bill. We New Democrats have a problem, and that is the clause in the Bill which we call the Gucci clause.

Mr. McCurdy: What is the Gucci clause?

Mr. Rodriguez: The Member asks me what the Gucci clause is. I want to prove to these Members that I have read Bill C-114 and I am relevant to Bill C-114. The Gucci clause refers to the Leaders of the political Parties in the House of Commons who do not have to reveal any moneys they receive from their national Parties. We all remember the $158,000, the loan/advance to the Prime Minister. That is a euphemism. English is not my first language but I think we call it a "euphemism" for a loan. It is an advance. But then I ask, why would you pay back an advance? He pays it back. The answer is: "Because I think it is a loan". You see, Mr. Speaker, you cannot have two laws, one for the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, and the rest for us small fry in the back benches. We cannot operate that way. We have to be even-handed. Of course, this is something the Tories do not understand. I could see my Party giving me an advance. I could see the Tory Party giving some of those Tory hacks in the back some advances. I know the Liberal Party does not have any money to give. It is looking for some money for itself.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am just wondering if the Hon. Member, who is in such full flight, could perhaps fill us in on the $1.345 million his Party received from unions in this country. That is $42,000 for himself.

Mr. McCurdy: Everyone knows about that.

Mr. Boudria: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair has a lot of difficulty with what is going on right now. It becomes very difficult when Hon. Members keep getting up on points of order which are not points of order, and which the Chair has to judge, and those Hon. Members do know that the point which they are going to bring up is not a point of order. There are only a few minutes left before six o'clock and I would expect the House to come to order. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That is the first legitimate question we have had and I will answer that question. I think it is an important question. I want to point out that the million odd dollars that unions contribute to the New Democratic Party is given openly and by vote. It is a democratic process. I want to say that that is not the same as the banks of Canada contributing money to the Liberals and Tories when they do not take a vote of their shareholders. They take it right out of the pockets of their shareholders. They starve to death because they take $80,000 and give it to the Tories.

Let us get back to the Gucci clause. We have a problem with the Gucci clause. We do not think there should be any exemptions. Since he said that the Minister had to step down as a Minister because he did not record his loan, the Hon. Member from Quebec Est did not declare his loan and the Prime Minister should have declared his loan—his loan/advance. We have problems.

• (1750)

However, we have another problem with this Bill because what the Bill is setting up is a quasi-judicial agency. This commissioner of trusts is a quasi-judicial agency. When the Prime Minister wrote to me and to all the lowly Members of Parliament in this House in 1985 he was very clear. This is what he said, and I want to put it on the record. In his letter of 1985 one of the things he said to us was: "You will find no quasi-independent agencies in this code that will allow the Government to shirk its responsibility by saying the problem belongs to someone else. Nor will you find anything that will relieve me and my colleagues of the necessity of exercising judgment". The man was telling us that in fact he would not pass off the responsibility of Government to any quasi-judicial agency. In fact he, the Prime Minister, was going to call the shots.

What have we got in Bill C-114? We have a quasi-judicial agency, a commissioner of trusts, a bureaucrat whose decisions will never be appealable and who will be appointed by Tories—hopefully they can pass the Bill before they get defeated. We cannot accept that in the Bill.

One of the other things with which we have some difficulties is the question of the spouses. In this Bill it requires that the spouses must declare their assets. We believe that there is a necessity to balance the right to privacy of spouses with the public interest. This is of great concern, particularly to women since the majority of spouses are women—just look at this House—and also a concern as we want to have greater equality in the House. It would serve as a barrier to having greater participation and equality in the House of Commons. What we are saying here is that the Government has to look at this particular clause again. We are prepared to introduce, when we get into committee, an amendment that would state that spouses disclose only those kinds of interests that might reasonably be said to give rise to concerns regarding conflict of interest.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I think that is a particular area that has to be examined closely. We have a Charter of Rights in this country now. We cannot trample on the rights of spouses of Members of Parliament. That is not to deny public disclosure. I made a very important distinction.

Madam Speaker, I want to conclude—

Some Hon. Members: Good!

Mr. Rodriguez: They are in the mood of trying to paint themselves white.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I hear you, Howard. They want to paint themselves blue—bluer than the driven snow. Look at what we have had. We have had no changes to the Election Expenses Act. We have heard Tories talking about: "Oh, we will not take contributions from corporations. We have clean hands". Yet they have 14 pockets in their coats. Then they pass a resolution which states: but it's voluntary.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: What about the unions?

Mr. Rodriguez: They do not have to take it. So there have not been any important changes to the Election Expenses Act so we can have another Masse affair by all Members.

Second, look at what we passed for a lobby registry Bill. It has so many loopholes in it that a herd of elephants could walk through. Is that creating transparency? No wonder a recent poll the other day—March, 1988—

Ms. Copps: The other day?

Mr. Rodriguez: It was a few months ago. That is in Liberal time. We know how long it takes for Liberals to do anything.

The majority of Canadians look with some askance at the integrity of Parliamentarians. Honesty of Parliamentarians is not high on the list of those we govern. Of course not. Because they look and see these things. In fact, there is an Election Expenses Act by which one can two-track and spend all kinds of money. Then there is a lobby registry Bill that allows every Tom, Dick and Harry to do whatever he wants. One does not have to declare the issue and how much one spends on the lobbying activity. We have had problems with that. Ask Frankie baby how much a fishing licence is. He will tell you: "It's $3,000 if I talk to the Minister. It's $5,000 if I get it for you". Ask Gary Ouellet, the man who has written 14 books on magic. He is the man who has a tuxedo with 16 pockets in its jacket. He can make a deck of cards disappear. As a matter of fact, I think the Prime Minister wishes he had him on the team. He could make some of those Tories disappear. It would make life easier for him. Needless to say, poor old John, he wishes he had him.

In conclusion—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I am persuaded that there are a couple of things more that I want to say in conclusion.

This Government will be judged not on whether it brought the unemployment rate down, not on whether it brought the interest rate down, not on whether it brought inflation down—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: —but it is going to be judged on honesty and integrity. That is where Members opposite score zero—zero. In fact, I think that those guys should start plodding over to the Chateau, have a shadow Cabinet where members of the Party can plan to get rid of their Leader. The Party may be running ahead of the Leader.

It is clear that what Canadians are looking for and what they looked for after the 1984 election was a new beginning. They have not had a new beginning. They have had old Liberal ways in spades. I know they will point to the odd NDPer, the odd sterling NDPer who has been appointed, like Ian Deans and Stephen Lewis, as an excuse for appointing 50,000 Tory hacks. They appointed Gail Christie to the board of Air Canada. When asked what her qualifications for working on the board were she said: "I have a driver's licence". The other day I got on a plane. The first thing I did was to go went into the cockpit. I said: "Is there anybody here named Gail Christie?" Not a word came back. They were all too busy trying to buy Air Canada shares.

We are told one thing and something else happens. We were told that Air Canada is not for sale. Then, before we knew it, it was: "How much?" Water was not for sale. Then, lo and behold, it was there in the deal. The man said he was not for free trade. I do not know what kind of kinky ideas he has got. He said voting for free trade was like going to bed with an elephant. It blows my mind. If the elephant twitches and rolls over you're a dead person. He was right.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, in conclusion, we will support the Bill and look for changes in committee and at report stage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 6 p.m., pursuant to order made Tuesday, August 30, 1988, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the subamendment in relation to Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, August 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be not now read a third time but be referred back to the legislative committee for the purpose of reconsidering Clause 8.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

• (1820)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. Just coming into the House I was handed a statement made by Mr. Bruce Rawson, who is the Deputy Minister of Western Diversification, which clearly shows that this vote is being taken under false pretences because—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: May I ask Hon. Members to keep in mind that whatever may be or however Members may feel about a particular issue, under the rules the Chair is now required to put all the votes. This is, after all, the way these matters are determined. I would ask Hon. Members to co-operate with the Chair. I know that there may be some wish to indicate Members' feelings during the vote, but I would ask that Members exercise the appropriate constraints and assist the Chair in keeping order in the Chamber.

The first question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Ms. McDonald moved:

That the amendment be amended by deleting the period at the end thereof and adding the following:

"and its implications on the economic and political sovereignty of Canada."

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Ms. McDonald), which was negatived on the following division:

During the taking of the vote:

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the vote but I am bound by the rules of this place. May I ask Hon. Members, having made the point, to co-operate with the Chair and take down the flags.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I know that all Hon. Members know that this is the end of a debate which is of great importance to the country and to this House. But there is another issue here, and that is how we handle ourselves. I would ask the co-operation of Hon. Members.

Perhaps I can ask other Hon. Members, in return for the co-operation of some others, to remove the buttons.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

I would ask for the attention of Hon. Members for just a moment. The rules of decorum in this place are primarily designed to maintain order. There is no magic precedent for what on another occasion was allowed or not allowed. I have asked Hon. Members to co-operate, and for the most part they have. There are some Hon. Members who are not yet cooperating, and they are creating disorder. I would ask that the pins be removed, and I would ask that the flags be held down.

• (1840)

The next question is on the amendment of Mr. Axworthy. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Axworthy), which was negatived on the following division:

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS CONFLICT OF INTEREST ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, August 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-114, an Act to provide for greater certainty in the reconciliation of the personal interests and duties of the office of the Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, to establish a Conflict of Interest Commission and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate concerning the adoption of Bill C-114 which deals with conflict of interest. The purpose of this Bill is, basically, to establish a system under which the obligation to observe certain imperative directives on conflict of interest becomes binding by law and which provides for an administrative framework that did not exist under the old system which was a set of basic directives.

I believe that this debate and this legislation are of crucial importance, since the subject matter raises the debate above party considerations. I think we all have a duty to approach this fundamental issue with a sense of co-operation and solidarity, whatever our political stripe. We are dealing here with an essential attribute of democracy. If there is any place at all in Canada where we can talk about democracy seriously, without fear of ridicule, it is within these precincts where we have been sent as the elective representatives of the Canadian people.

When we talk about democracy, we are talking about something that is part of the very essence of our civilization. With democracy a new concept was born, the concept that political leaders had to have and deserve the trust of those elected by the people. The concept is not brand new. Democracy was born in Athens, and it was Pericles who was first faced with a demand for openness and accountability. There is a rather amusing story that says a great deal about the perennial obligations and problems governments must face.

In the 5th century B.C., Pericles decided to build the Parthenon, and since Athens was very wealthy at the time and had considerable resources and especially a lot of gold, he had instructed Phidias, the famous sculptor and architect, to make a huge statue of Pallas Athena and to cover Athena with a mantle of gold. Since Athens had a lot of gold, this was not a problem. Phidias followed his instructions and covered this huge statue which was 30 feet high with a fairly thick mantle of gold. Subsequently, the opposition parties, since Athens was a democracy, accused Pericles of keeping back part of the gold. They ordered him to show he had not kept any of the gold for himself and had not given any to his mistress, his courtesans, his wife, his friends or his immediate entourage or, I imagine, to those who helped elect him.

But Pericles, who invented democracy, also knew its difficulties and tribulations, and he had the intelligence and cunning to see to it that Athena's gold mantle could be taken apart in pieces. And once the accusation was made, he took apart the gold mantle and had the pieces of gold weighed that corresonded exactly to the weight of the gold given to Phidias.

This is a lesson that we should all have learned from the history of Athens, Madam Speaker. But we know that this question of conflict of interest and public trust is perennial; it goes back to the beginning of democracy. When there is a tyrant or tyranny, no one cares about the trust that should be placed in tyrants. Tyrants rule by terror.

Remember the maxim of Dionysius, the tyrant of Sicily: oderint dum metuant, let them hate me, as long as they fear me. He governed by means of terror, as do all the world's tyrants.

But we are in a democracy, and even in Rome, at the beginning of the Republic, Madam Speaker, you will remember that one of the ways for an ambitious young man to go into politics was to accuse a proconsul returning from a distant province in order to force him to account for his management. That is how Cicero, for example, distinguished himself in his fight against Verres, a proconsul of a Roman province who had lined his own pockets and had to make restitution after Cicero, an eager young lawyer and ambitious politician, had convicted him.

We are dealing here with a basic responsibility and we know that the obligation of integrity for elected officials concerns not only the traditional rules of morality and the traditional virtues. Of course, these are constraining, but politicians are more obliged to be honest, to use a general term, than an individual in private life is required to be honest with his employer. This is because politics also affects the stability of institutions and the very essence of democracy. Every time a politician does something wrong, not only are ethical standards violated, but the strength and credibility of the State are also affected. This is very serious and it imposes an additional obligation.

One must also realize that things have evolved, of course. Like it or not, we all sometimes say, "when I was young," or "In my father's or grandfather's day, people were more honest." I do not believe that is true. I believe that we are really witnessing a positive development in institutions and public attitudes. For instance, it is very obvious that morals have evolved and have become more refined as democratic standards have grown more sophisticated, to the extent that what was acceptable 50 years ago no longer is so these days. The extremely clear and evident outcome is that politicians—men and women alike—simply have to be better, if you will, more rigorous than their predecessors.

From day to day, from one year to the next, and from one Government to another, an extremely difficult adaptation has to be made in keeping with the rising expectations of the people, and these expectations can readily be perceived with respect to controls, for example. One of the essential controls these days—not the only one, yet patently basic—is the one exercised by the media.

The media are ever more vigilant. I, for one, do not believe they ought to be taken to task, for they are the realistic image of a parallel phenomenon between public expectations, higher democratic standards, and additional media responsibilities. As guardians of public life and of a minimum of integrity and decency in public endeavours, the media as well must shoulder heavier responsibilities in response to the expectations of the people.

Of course this highlights the fact that public life is becoming ever more trying, that sometimes one wonders why anybody would want to go into politics, that sometimes when a decision has to be made one would even ask the question: should I jump into this lion's den? Should I agree to give up most of my own private activities to meet the new requirements of political life? And so we now find ourselves in a position such that we have to make an assessment in the context of the rules governing public life.

Madam Speaker, you are looking at a Bill introduced by a Government which did experience some difficulties and did make the odd mistake with respect to problems of this kind. If we forget all about the acrimonious political and biased debates, if we forget all about the passions which prevail in our obviously partisan proceedings in a venue such as this one, and when we take a closer look at ourselves, we come to realize that such problems have always been part and parcel of political activities and that, generally speaking, they have been much more complex than others we may have experienced during the first years of this Government.

I suggest it would be frivolous and vain to put on trial all Governments which preceded us in Ottawa. We could list names and identify people. We are all aware of the facts of public life. We have all been affected by the news which were published in the newspapers. We could mention a series of episodes throughout the Canadian history, but we will not, Madam Speaker, for fear of losing sight of the main purpose of this legislative initiative.

Madam Speaker, the main purpose is to look to the future, to meet the expectations of Canadian citizens, in order to prevent a repetition of what happened under a Government in 1910, under another Government in 1920 and again in the years after that. And the perfect place to start is right here.

It is not the newspapermen and reporters who can devise an enforceable system. It is not our fellow citizens watching television in their own homes who can change things. This is our responsibility. If we cannot achieve this here, nobody will. The buck stops here! If we should allow the system to continue as it has until now, Madam Speaker, we are well aware that all the Governments which will follow us, because they are made up of fallible human beings, will be exposed to temptations. All Governments are made up of human beings.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Listen! I know that the person who has the floor should remain indifferent to all these shouts, but since I am not as thick-skinned as my hon. colleagues, I should like to be able to say quietly what I have to say, without being interrupted by all these untimely remarks, Madam Speaker. This is undoubtedly the rule of the game here and one should be able to accept that. However, I am extremely disappointed to realize that it is impossible in this House to say anything significant, to deal with basic issues, and to meet the expectations of Canadian voters. I was chosen by 50,000 people and sent here to say what I have to say, and I should like to be able to do so without being exposed to constant harassment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I know, Madam Speaker, that this will not stop people from screaming, but I will go on.

I was saying, Madam Speaker, that every one of us, wherever we sit in this Chamber, will be held accountable by history for this exercise we are engaged in. Little by little, we are in the process together, whether we agree or not, of making things progress, of advancing the exercise of democracy in Canada.

Considering what we have done in the past two years, although I was not here, I believe I have reason enough to be proud of being a Member of this Government which, for the first time, has enacted regulations under which the process for the appointment of judges will be more impartial and objective than ever before. I am not saying, far from it, that bad appoitments have been made, that judges who are now dispensing justice in Canada are not good judges.

On the contrary. I have practiced law for 20 years and I can testify that justice in Canada is in good hands, that we have judges who are responsible and at all times aware of their obligations. That being said, the situation must also be perceived as being such; citizens must be certain that the judges appointment process creates the widest possible range of options. We must put an end to the practice of appointing judges because they happen to be members of a Party. We could keep on appointing the best judicial minds within a party and they would prove to be very good judges. However, people would not like a criterion based on partisan politics. The judges appointment process must be diversified. I will not name any names; I do not want to hark back to the past. I believe that we must keep improving the system.

This Government is the first Government in the history of Canada, the first Government in the history of this democracy that has enacted regulations stipulating that eligibility lists must be made up without any intervention by the Government in order to allow a better selection.

An Hon. Member: Not true!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): It is also this Government, Madam Speaker, which introduced the very important bill on lobbyists registration, in an attempt to deal with a phenomenon common to all democracies in the world, which is the fact that powerful interests can afford to be represented in the national capital by people who are well acquainted with the government machinery, who often know decision makers personally and can therefore sometimes have more influence on a decision, good or bad, than ordinary citizens in the course of their daily occupations who, of course, have no such influence.

It is therefore very important. We cannot prevent people from being represented here, from promoting their points of view. It is a fundamental rule of our democracy that everyone must have freedom of expression. But those whose interests can be represented on a systematic basis must at least be forced to indentify themselves. People must know who is lobbying here, and for what interests and the extent to which they can influence decision making. Here is a government that, for the first time in the history of Canada, has accomplished that. And now this Government wants to go one step further and pass this bill, as I hope it will, with the unanimous support of all Members of this House who can hardly object to legislation so beneficial for democracy.

There was a code of conduct, a code of ethics referred to as a conflict of interest code, but it was not backed by legislation. In a society like ours, there is no substitute for the rule of law. The rule of law is democracy at its best, because it is lasting, because it can be supervised by the courts and because it provides all the necessary guarantees that the desired goals will be reached.

What is being proposed to the House and the citizens of Canada is a set of very important restrictions that this country's elected representatives who are here today will apply to themselves and, through this legislation, to subsequent governments and parliamentarians. I believe it is a measure whose time has come. I do not believe it will make things any easier for people, but we need it just the same. Not just because we think people are dishonest, but there are always exceptions, and we must keep those exceptions to a minimum. The parties themselves must be very vigilant with respect to their own members, each individual must be personally vigilant. We must realize that people have to protect themselves. We have to protect the public, of course, but we must also protect their elective representatives.

We are living at a time, and I have seen this in the four months I have been here . . . I have done a number of things in my life. I have been involved in the private sector, where I practised law for a number of years. I was in Paris, where I had the privilege of representing Canada as its Ambassador to France. I know what it's like to be under pressure and to be rushed all the time, but I never imagined, Madam Speaker, that political life could be as stressful, as arduous and as disruptive as it is. Major decisions are made daily in Cabinet and in the House, fundamental decisions that affect Canada's future. They are sometimes taken very quickly, and there are all kinds of priorities that intervene in the life of a man or a woman who is involved in politics. It is very easy to overlook something. And it is very easy to forget the importance of how we are perceived. In politics, perception is far more than just that.

Some people think politics have become a matter of image. I agree that the emphasis on image has been increasing. Yesterday, for instance, we saw people who took advantage of the visual aspect of our proceedings to show the Canadian flag and to wave it as if it were their personal flag and as if Members who did not have a flag in their hands, in front of the camera, were excluded from that national identity. No, I agree the emphasis on image has increased. However, in politics image is far more than that, just as perception is more than perception. In politics, perception is one aspect of reality. When Canadians see the Government at work and when they see all the inner workings of that Government which are so complicated and so difficult to control, they must have the assurance that there are controls and guidelines to which men and women in public life, to which politicians can refer in their daily decision-making.

That is why I believe we must vote in favour of this legislation which will protect us, which will give us control, and which seeks to strike a balance with a concept that is equally delicate: the concept of privacy.

Last week, the Canadian Bar Association held a convention and a conference in Montreal. The main conference was on the limits of privacy for politicians in relation to the media. And a Member of this House, a Member of an Opposition Party, also attended this extremely interesting discussion. Perhaps since it took place outside this Chamber, it was at least somewhat unemotional and objective. There was a very worth-while exchange of views with distinguished representatives of the Canadian media also present. It was clearly apparent that there was a fundamental problem, which I believe this Bill is trying to correct, because we all recognize more and more that respect for individual rights and liberties in a society like ours implies that anyone is entitled to his or her freedom and privacy.

On the other hand, we all know too that the press has an extremely important role to play in watching over politicians and what they do. But where do the rights of one stop and the obligations of the other begin? That is a good question, an extremely important one. So it is a dangerous situation if in future being a politician means giving up one's private life. I find that prospect horrifying and personally, I do not agree that we can ask politicians to give up their private lives, because without it, they would become monsters. You cannot live without at least some private life. I believe that it would be very dangerous to have people who had to give up their private lives controlling the levers of power. They could easily become unbalanced and lose sight of reality; they need to keep in touch with poetry, with nature and with the real world.

Now, this Bill seeks to strike a balance by requiring politicians to disclose their assets. If this is done publicly, it may violate one's privacy. A commission is therefore created to receive this information, which it will have to keep secret. I think that this combines the obligations of democracy and respect for privacy very well.

I see that my time is almost up. I will have to try to conclude. I shall conclude, if you allow me, Madam Speaker. We have a very important decision to make. I hope that we can set aside our partisan differences. I hope that we will not lose sight of the fundamental interests of this country and of democracy. I hope that when we vote on this Bill, we look to the future—the distant future, not the immediate future—not the future of partisan concerns, but the future of the public interest of Canada. That is what we are all here for.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, just how much credibility can this Bill generate if we consider that the former Minister, the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens), who was found guilty in 14 cases of conflicts of interests, will be running as a candidate in the forthcoming election, with the blessing of the Prime Minister? So where is the credibility in this measure?

[English]

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, I would remind everyone in the House that what we are dealing with today is a measure to establish a system which will look to and address the problems of the future. We are trying to prevent any Government—ours or Governments formed by other Parties—from having the type of problems that we have seen over the course of the history of Canada.

I was a witness to what happened in Quebec. During the forties and fifties the Government of Quebec was very much considered all over Canada, as well as in Quebec itself by many people, as being corrupt. It was a very bad thing for the image of Quebec. It stained the image of Quebec. I was very young at that time. Many people like myself admired people such as Jean Marchand, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Gérard Pelletier, Claude Ryan, and René Lévesque. Many of those people fought against the Government then in power in Quebec, and suffered a lot from the image that that gave to Quebec.

• (1030)

In Quebec in the 1960s and 1970s we adopted laws such as this one which succeeded in cleaning up the image of Quebec. For many years now Quebec has been a model of honesty. I hope it will always be the same. It is the case because people in Quebec had the courage to stand up in the House and propose legislation such as this.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) made a very nice speech. No one could disagree with some of the sentiments expressed: a clean slate, look to the future, bad practices of the past, and politics should not be image. Fine words!

The Hon. Minister belongs to a Party that made image the issue. Everyone knows in this country that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was a great believer in the image-maker. The Minister's presence in Parliament followed a by-election where the Government and the Prime Minister had stated we should never buy voters with their own money. He bought his seat in the House with over $100 million.

When this Bill leaves so many loopholes, how can the Minister say "look to the future", when there is what we call the "Gucci" clause which eliminates the declaration of moneys loaned or advanced to Party leaders? Why does the Bill have the loophole that there be no public disclosure? Why does the Bill set up a quasi-judicial body, a bureaucrat, to decide what will be made public, if anything at all? Why is there no abandonment of the blind trust, after Justice Parker, with millions of dollars of taxpayers' money, gave us advice on what a Bill such as this should contain? How can the Minister talk about looking to the future when we have a Bill that is so obviously flawed, or is it just empty rhetoric and nice professorial treatises about what a conflict of interest Bill should contain? I would ask the Minister to come to grips with those types of questions before lecturing Canadians.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I essentially thank the Hon. Member for giving me the opportunity to say what I think about a few things. First, those sleazy sayings about the Prime Minister, and the "Gucci" clause, and things like that, I am sure are some of the reasons for which many good people will always refuse to become involved in politics and serve Canada. When they see that those things can be said in the House, false things—

Mr. Rodriguez: Come on!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I personally know the Prime Minister. He is one of the most honest men I know in the world. He is a friend of 25 years. I would not be in politics and be here if I did not believe that the Prime Minister is a man of great honesty. It is completely disgraceful that people in the House of Commons, at this great historical moment when we speak about adoption of great legislation for the future, think about the shoes of the Prime Minister.

There is one further thing I want to say about my election. I could not answer any questions previously, because nobody ever asked a question before in the House and I have been here for four months. I read all the rubbish in the newspapers about the fact that my seat was bought. A few days ago in the newspaper I read that $1.5 billion was spent to buy my election in Lac-Saint-Jean. That is awful. It was a perfectly clean election, and no money was spent to buy anything.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) simply announced that the pavement of the airport would be redone. That has been a project for four years, and it simply came up at that time, and it is only $1.10 million. We established a fund of $1.4 billion to create jobs, and that is all, and a few things like that.

Ms. Copps: A few millions here and a few millions there.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): The Opposition attempts to make the people believe that the federal-provincial announcement of $120 million for the development of the region of Saguenay, Lac-Saint-Jean, was tied to my election. It is ridiculous, everybody knows that, and the opposition Members know it themselves perfectly well. It was simply the renewal of the framework agreement between Quebec and Ottawa, signed each five years, for the development of the regions of Quebec. It was late, it was due, and it has been waited for and expected for four or five months, and it was only announced then.

It was also announced that the Government would spend $100 million for the cleaning of the St. Lawrence River. Opposition Members all attribute that to my election. I must say that I am very proud that the Government assumed its responsibilities for the environment and the cleaning of the St. Lawrence. It would be a scandal not to do so.

In conclusion, one has to accept such things in politics, and I know it. It is very difficult. I am sure more and more we will see fewer people ready to accept it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The question and comment period has expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, I am damned surprised that a Minister of the Crown would deliver . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member would want to use the kind of language which is suitable for the House of Commons.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I am bloody surprised that a Minister of the Crown would have us believe that expenditures of $1 billion here and $1 billion there in Lac-Saint-Jean were sheer coincidence.

Madam Speaker, this statement by the Minister is one of the reasons why we are having this debate on conflicts of interests, and this has to be an unbelievable joke on the part of a Government whose recent history spells corruption of people who sought to take full advantage of the system.

I am not surprised that the Minister chose not to answer my question concerning a Member and former Minister, Sinclair Stevens, for we on this side are getting used to hearing the Prime Minister claim that he will introduce a Bill on conflicts of interests while at the same time he has no qualms whatsoever about supporting as a Conservative Party representative a Member whom a Tory-appointed judge found guilty of 14 conflicts of interests. This man is highly regarded and still belongs to the Conservative caucus, yet even his colleagues did not ask that he be thrown out as they did in the case of others who found themselves in a similar predicament.

So it is false to pretend that we will regroup here as one big family.—For instance, the Minister mentioned a big statue in Athens, the statue was weighed at Athens to see whether the gold would weigh the same before and after the insults about conflicts of interests, but I would like to tell the Minister that the $2.1 million statue which was loaned to the wife of a former Minister of the Crown was not visible. It was money tied to an interest-free loan made directly to the wife of a Conservative Minister of the Crown because of his responsibilities. Moreover, the Minister claimed in his speech that several other Governments found themselves in the same predicament. Let him name them, because according to Mr. J.M.S. Careless, who ranks among the best-known Canadian historians or it is not the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party, but J.M.S. Careless who wrote a few months ago that this is the first time in Canadian history that Ministers and Members have been trying to benefit from Government funds, something Mr. Sinclair Stevens who is going to run again under the Tory banner during the forthcoming federal election did shamelessly.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Athabasca.

Mr. Shields: That Member knows full well that you do not refer to Members in this House by name. You refer to them in this House by their riding, and she should know that. I know that she continually breaks the rules of this House, but I think that is deliberately—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: It is reprehensible that she would continue to do this knowing full well she is breaking the rules of this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East is well aware—

An Hon. Member: What was your husband doing in this office? You forget about that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you turkeys go home?

An Hon. Member: What is the history of your Party?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I wish all Hon. Members would refrain from throwing insults across the floor of the House of Commons. It is not helping the debate in any way. That goes for Members from all sides. As far as the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is concerned, she is well aware of how to proceed, after four years of the rule which says that all Hon. Members should be referred to by the name of their riding. I am sure that she will abide by that rule from now on and help the Chair.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I am sorry that I used the words "Sinc Stevens" in this House. I realize it is unparliamentary.

An Hon. Member: You just did it again.

An Hon. Member: A complete disgrace to this Chamber, day after day.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is wondering why the Hon. Members would make life so difficult for everyone in the Chamber by willingly going against the rules.

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I can understand why the Members of the Conservative Party are so touchy on this issue. As far as I am concerned, the conflict of interest legislation that is before this House remains an absolute farce as long as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) refuses to accept his responsibilities——concerning the Hon. Member for York Simcoe.

[Translation]

[English]

—and all that anybody across Canada has to say. I did not say that you had an option. I did not set myself up as the patron goddess of purity, as did the Prime Minister in the debate in 1984. But in fact, it was not the Liberal Party; it was J.M.S. Careless, an eminent Canadian historian, who, when writing about the history of this Government over the last four years, said that it was the first time in the history of Canada that the tone of patronage had changed. In the past, he wrote, Members were trying to do things for their ridings. In this case, you have clear-cut situations of members of the Government, of the Conservative Party, using their parliamentary privilege to fatten their own pocket-books, to take advantage and to receive personal gain.

The Criminal Code does not stop anyone from robbing a bank. If the Criminal Code stopped everyone from robbing a bank, we would have no bank robbers in Canada. Anybody who expects the conflict of interest legislation that is currently before us to absolve this Government of a litany of corruption, a litany of scandals and a litany of self-aggrandizement and self-benefit, really does not understand, that to quote the words of the democratic candidate—

An Hon. Member: Run a business out of your office.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Fontaine: Madam Speaker, I should like to find out whether it is proper for an employee or a Member of the House to provide his or her spouse with an office to carry out business of his or her own? Do the conflict of interest guidelines apply to that?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Lévis is well aware that he was not raising on a point of order to seek an information, but to interrupt the person who had the floor. What is unacceptable for one side of the House is also unacceptable for the other.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Mrs. Copps) has the floor.

Ms. Copps: All I am asking, Madam Speaker, and I can understand why the Tories become very irritated whenever we refer to the issue which my friend the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) quite properly designated as the Gucci article . . .

[English]

—refers to lavish spending on personals. There was the incident of the Prime Minister and two other former Ministers of the Crown eavesdropping on opposition caucus meetings by the former Deputy Prime Minister of the House of Commons. There was influence peddling, insider land speculation, failing to disclose personal loans, awarding government contracts to friends, patronage. The list goes on and on and on, and any type of defence that the Government intends to provide is totally destroyed when we see the name of the Member from York—Simcoe—which is synonymous with the rip-offs of this Government—continues to stand as a candidate with the blessing of the Prime Minister. He is going to be waving that Conservative banner in the next federal election. There were 14 charges of conflict of interest that were levied, not by the Opposition, not by the Liberal Party, but by a judge appointed by the Prime Minister.

The Canadian public spent over a million dollars. In fact, I think it was in the neighbourhood of $3 million that was spent in taxpayers' money to examine the situation, and it was not at the request of the Opposition. We sought a parliamentary committee. It was the request of the Member from York-Simcoe to be exonerated. The Prime Minister said that the judge would exonerate him, but the judge did not. He found him guilty on 14 counts of conflict of interest, according to the conflict of interest guidelines which were described by the Prime Minister in 1985 as the strongest guidelines in the western world. He came out in this House—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South.

Mr. Edwards: I know that the Hon. Member is trying to score some partisan points, but I would remind her that she strays dangerously close to being in contempt of court. I understand her to have said that charges have been laid and that a party has been found guilty. I think, in the case that she is referring to, that that is not the case at all.

Ms. Copps: What are you talking about? I do not know what case the Member is referring to. I was referring to the findings of the Parker Commission which were tabled in this House. There were 14 counts of conflict of interest found by Judge Parker against the former Minister for the interest-free $2.1 million loan that his wife received for her company business.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, the point that I am making is that the Hon. Member should choose her words more carefully. I heard her say "charges" and "guilty". She is leaving a false impression in the minds of Members and the public.

• (1050)

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, Mr. Justice Parker, a Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario, after a lengthy and costly royal commission of inquiry, found quite clearly that the former Minister had breached the conflict of interest guidelines on 14 separate occasions. In effect, he found the Minister guilty of breaching the conflict of interest code. That was the finding of a Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario. For the Member to suggest that that is not the case is absolute nonsense. He should go back and read the report which ended up costing the taxpayers of Canada millions of dollars because the former Minister was so crooked he could not follow them.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, to come back to my remarks, I think the ultimate point to be considered is that the Criminal Code does not stop people from robbing banks. Let us examine the history of this Government.

I will accept the fact that the current Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Bouchard) may be coming at this with a bit of naivety. I hope he is not as naive as he sounded in his comments. In 1985 I was sitting in this House, as were other Members, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) came out with a very thick book. It was covered and wrapped in a lovely blue ribbon. He brandished and flourished it and said: "These are the toughest conflict of interest guidelines in the western world". That was before we saw Minister after Minister after Minister resign under a cloud. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean said: "Let's wipe the slate clean. Let's start all over again in a very non-partisan way and bring in conflict of interest guidelines". But we cannot legislate a personal code of ethics.

The current Member for Halifax had a trustee in a so-called blind trust who had twenty-twenty vision. His trustee was found guilty by the Investment Dealers Association of Canada for not operating a blind trust, yet he continued to be his trustee. Is that covered under the conflict of interest legislation that is before us? No, because the Prime Minister ignored the recommendation of the Parker Commission to abolish these so-called blind trusts where people have friends, relatives and other people in so-called arm's length relationships actually acting in the case of the blind trust with twenty-twenty vision. That has not been dealt with in this legislation.

For members of the Government to suggest that somehow the Parker Commission did not exist, that the Hon. Member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) was not found guilty of 14 counts of conflict of interest, and the Prime Minister is not, in fact, endorsing that conduct by welcoming him with open arms as the continuing Conservative candidate in that particular riding makes this whole exercise of conflict of interest guidelines seem to be a sham.

I was talking about the Democratic presidential campaign in the United States. There is a saying drawn from the Greek language, "the fish rots from the head down". It is also very true that in the area of cabinet appointments, let us remember one thing, those people are appointed by the Prime Minister. If you were the chief executive officer of a company and you consistently put people in senior positions who were there not to benefit the company, not to assist the taxpayers, not to help ordinary people in getting by in their day-to-day lives but to rip off the system, then should you not accept responsibility for that? In the case of the Hon. Member for York Simcoe it was not the Opposition that demanded that he be thrown out of the Conservative caucus but the Quebec caucus of the Conservative Party. Yet the Prime Minister ignored that recommendation, and is the Government, in claiming to be introducing conflict of interest guidelines yet keeping that Member as part of the team, not making a mockery of the whole notion of conflict of interest?

Mr. Ricard: Sit down. What about Bryce Mackasey?

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member asks about Bryce Mackasey. Bryce Mackasey was called before a bar of the House and himself asked to be submitted to that procedure. That was exactly the process we suggested in the case of the Member for York Simcoe. If the Government believes that it can deal with the issue by introducing new conflict of interest guidelines that have more loopholes than you can drive a Mack truck through, then I think the Government is underestimating the intelligence of the Canadian people. You can build all the laws in the world but it does not stop individual Members from exercising judgment, Madam Speaker. When you have a Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and a Prime Minister sitting silent this week while the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) is to receive a $10,000 cheque from an organization which believes in apartheid, is against bilingualism, against affirmative action and does not believe in a minimum wage, when the $10,000 cheque will be used for his own re-election—

Mrs. Sparrow: That is not what he said.

Ms. Copps: —that shows the kind of bad judgment that no conflict of interest guideline or legislation will cover. It is bad judgment on the part of the Member and on the part of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister in permitting that Member to consider accepting a cheque from the National Citizens Coalition.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the National Citizens' Coalition is against bilingualism. In spite of that, a Minister of the Crown, probably with the blessing of the Secretary of State who said nothing and did nothing, will accept a $10,000 cheque from an organization which is against bilingualism in Canada. Is that the policy of the Conservative Party? The said Minister clearly indicated in the House that he was going to collect and use for re-election or charitable purposes $10,000 from this national group which is against bilingualism and will not hear of implementing sanctions against South Africa, while fully supporting the apartheid system in that country. That is the kind of judgment we can expect from such a Minister! I should like to tell the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Bouchard) that it is not a bill we are dealing with in the House which will change the judgment of the Prime Minister who was responsible for appointing this Minister in the first place and who now refuses to intervene to stop him and let him know that it would be wrong and against our Standing Orders for him to collect a $10,000 award from an organization which is against bilingualism in Canada.

An Hon. Member: An extreme right group!

Ms. Copps: When we raised this issue in the House yesterday, there was no response from the Government. The Prime Minister who in 1985 stated that he would show leadership in the development of conflict of interest guidelines finally delegated this responsibility to the Deputy Prime Minister and others, prefering to wash his hands of the whole mess, something Canadians just will not accept.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to order made Wednesday, August 31, 1988, debate is now completed. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MEARES ISLAND—CALL FOR HALT TO LOGGING

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Ontario's Minister of the Environment, Jim Bradley, announced that he is establishing a round table on the environment and economy as recommended by the National Task Force on the Environment and the Economy. For this we congratulate Mr. Bradley. It is interesting to note that Adam Zimmerman, chairman of Noranda and a former member of that task force, is quoted as saying:

> The whole case has been thoroughly made. My view is that the task force report really said pretty well everything and now the thing is really to pursue it, do something, and not sit around studying it.

We applaud Mr. Zimmerman's words. As the Chief Executive Officer, he is ultimately responsible for MacMillan-Bloedel in British Columbia, a forest company not noted for its careful treatment of the environment and presently engaged in a battle to clearcut the virgin rain forest of Meares Island.

• (1100)

Actions speak louder than words. Mr. Zimmerman could take his own advice and act to stop MacMillan-Bloedel from clearcutting the ancient, beautiful, and culturally important forest on Meares Island.

CANADA SCHOLARSHIPS PROGRAM

AWARDS TO 2,500 STUDENTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to underline the importance of the Canada Scholarships Program. The Government is very pleased to honour some of Canada's best students through this innovative program. Fifty-three young Canadians have recently been in Ottawa as representatives of the 2,500 1988 Canada scholarship winners. Each student will be eligible for $2,000 per year for a total of $8,000 per scholar.

The Canada Scholarships Program was announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last January in Toronto at the National Conference on Technology and Innovation. It will help fill the pressing need for highly qualified personnel in industry, universities, and government. Our future prosperity will be greatly enhanced by the contributions of these well trained, bright young people. As the Prime Minister stated at the University of Waterloo in March, 1987, the western world is moving toward knowledge-based economies, and Canada must move with it.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

YELLOWKNIFE—APPLICATION OF NORTHERN TAX BENEFIT

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, federal employees in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, are being subjected to seeing a benefit quickly become a liability. The northern tax benefit has become a nightmare for over 600 employees owing to the Government's refusal to set the housing benefit at a fair rate. As a result, there is the clearly inequitable situation in which a federal employee in the Yukon might receive a $600 credit in taxes as a result of the northern benefit while a Yellowknife employee receives a $2,000 to $3,000 liability in extra taxes.

To complicated this situation further, Treasury Board has not been deducting the appropriate tax at source and employees are now hit with owing as much as $5,000 to $6,000 in back taxes. So much for fairness for average families. Revenue Canada's response is "Pay up or else". Treasury Board's response is "If you don't like it, leave the North". That is exactly what is going to happen. Yellowknife employees are requesting to be transferred out and other employees are indicating that they will refuse assignments to Yellowknife.

I challenge the Minister responsible for Revenue Canada, whose Government likes to preach tax reform, to go to Yellowknife and meet with federal employees to resolve this unjust, unfair, and inequitable situation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RESPECT FOR INDEPENDENT MEMBERS

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we must deplore the undignified circus atmosphere which took over the House during last night's historic vote on Bill C-130 concerning the liberalization of our trade with the United States.

Mr. Boudria: Including the Conservatives' badges.

Mr. Desjardins: The NDP Members displayed on national television a childish behaviour. They acted in their usual irresponsible and immature way. They have demonstrated once again they are not ready to govern this country.

And what can we say, Mr. Speaker, about the noisy and undignified intervention by a small group in the Opposition galleries? It will be up to you to decide, Mr. Speaker, whether the Opposition should be censured for this disgraceful and unbecoming spectacle.

Let me say to the Liberals, who keep on calling for an election, that they will get it soon enough and that they will pay dearly for their foolhardiness. Canadians will teach them a good lesson.

The only dignified event last night was the vote by three independent-minded members of this House. They were not afraid to let their convictions be known by voting with the Government. They understood that the country's best interests required that they do so. For the courage they showed, they at least deserve our respect.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PEARSON STATUE—NAMING OF SCULPTOR

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on October 1, 1986, I introduced a motion in this House asking Parliament to cause a statue to be erected in honour of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, Canada's 13th Prime Minister. Today I am glad to say that the maquette honouring Mr. Pearson was unveiled. We also now know the name of the successful sculptor, Mr. Danek Modzenski, of Edmonton, Alberta.

S. O. 21

I want to congratulate Mr. Danek Modzenski for having been chosen as the sculptor of the Pearson statue, and I also want to indicate my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works, who was the chairman of our committee and without whose help all of this would not have been possible. I also want to thank the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) for agreeing to erecting a statue in honour of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

CANADA

A SALUTE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Canada is a fantasy land to millions of people in almost every country in the world. Productive soils, abundant grasslands, beautiful hills and mountains treasuring minerals galore, pure cold waters, timberlands, animals and fish, everything desirable to ambitious humans to work and build, with a burning hope to own their own land are all in Canada. No wonder people of every race and colour and creed want to live in the Land of the Maple Leaf.

I like to think of Canada as a vast mosaic containing something typical of every peoples and the countries from which they came. I salute Canada, the land of the brave and the home of the free!

THE FRANCHISE

RIGHTS OF THE DISABLED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party fully supports the granting of full citizenship to all persons who have previously been denied the right to vote because of a developmental, mental or physical disability. Bill C-79 is an omnibus piece of legislation intended to amend Canada's election laws and it includes amendments which would correct this injustice to Canada's disabled community. I am sure Hon. Members on all sides of the House would want to see those amendments passed.

We in this Party have said in the House and in letters to the Government that we would fully support amendments concerning the rights of the disabled. In fact, New Democrats say again that we would be prepared to agree to limited debate on these amendments and would pass them in all stages without undue delay once they are introduced in the House. On behalf of my Party, I urge the Government to bring these amendments forward in the form of a separate Bill as quickly as possible, especially since we face an impending election.

IMPORTANCE OF ESTABLISHING NATIONAL PROGRAM TO DEAL WITH PCBS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the federal Liberals let PCBs into Canada. Today, we in Canada are trying to rid the country of all the PCBs that the federal Liberals allowed in without any planning during their 20 years in office. We urgently need a national program for all aspects of the PCB problem, including identification of all PCB storage sites, federal Government inspections to enforce the national storage and surveillance standards, and a technology to neutralize PCBs instead of incinerating them.

It took the Saint-Basile-le-Grand disaster to wake the federal, provincial and municipal Governments up.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are entitled to better protection. Government means anticipating events!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

INSTALLATION OF GREEN MAILBOXES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, green post boxes are growing like mushrooms in Canada since the Tory Government took office in 1984. Mr. Tony Elisi of St. Léonard woke up one morning and found four green mailboxes in front of his house. Four green mailboxes in front of any house is disgusting. Imagine how his house will look when the supermailboxes replace those green boxes. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would ask any Member of Parliament if he or she would buy a house with four mailboxes in front of it. No, no one would have the courage to buy that house.

For two months I have been asking Canada Post to do something about removing those boxes and relieving Mr. Elisi of this ugly problem. However, Canada Post only says that it will remove them when it replaces them with supermailboxes. What consolation for Mr. Elisi. I think it is time that Canadians threw the Government out of office so that we can change this ugly policy of installing supermailboxes and green boxes in front of beautiful Canadian homes.

POLITICAL PARTIES

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO YORK-SIMCOE LIBERAL CANDIDATE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, on a day when the House is debating the conflict of interest legislation with a view to cleaning up politics and government, it is most disturbing to learn that one of the star Liberal candidates being put forward in the coming election, Mr. Frank Stronach, the wealthy owner of Magna Corporation, who will be a candidate for the Liberal Party in the riding of York—Simcoe, has been quoted as saying, after spending $100,000 on his nomination meeting, that: "He who has the gold makes the rules". That is a very disturbing statement. I hope that will not be the policy of the Liberal Party in the next election.

Mr. Daubney: It has been in the past.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF RETIRED EDMONTON JUDGE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a remarkable woman, Mrs. Marjorie Bowker, a 72-year old Edmonton grandmother and retired judge. As she just told me a half an hour ago on the phone, because of her legal background she has the expertise to read the trade deal and, because she is retired, the leisure. Unlike the Minister responsible, she actually took the time to read the trade document and she has this to say about it.

She says that this deal is bad for Canada, will lead to a loss of jobs as Canadian companies close or relocate to the U.S., and means we give up control of our resources. In the end, she believes Canada could face the eventual loss of political independence and our sovereignty as a nation.

She has read the deal. I urge the Minister responsible not only to read it but to read Mrs. Bowker's remarkable document.

HUMAN RIGHTS

POLAND—CALL FOR LEGAL RECOGNITION OF SOLIDARITY

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, once again Poland is at a crossroads. The recent strikes have demonstrated that the people of Poland will not succumb to the enslavement of the communist system which has denied them basic human rights and is the direct cause of the abysmal economic conditions in their country.

After eight years of brutal suppression, the Polish Government continues to refuse to recognize the legal existence of the trade union movement Solidarity. If Glasnost is to be considered genuine, Polish officials must initiate meaningful dialogue in order to reconfer the union's legal and democratic right to exist.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to press Polish officials to reinstate Solidarity, and to fulfil their obligation as a signatory of the Helsinki Accord by guaranteeing freedom of expression, and the recognition of free and democratic trade unions.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

WINDSOR—PLANNED STORAGE OF ONTARIO HYDRO PCBS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday it was reported in the Windsor Star that a "storage facility for 100,000 litres of PCB-laced oil is being planned for Windsor's west end by Ontario Hydro. The oil and PCBs would be stored on the site of the closed J. Clark Keith generating station". It "would be the largest of several dozen PCB storage sites in Essex County".

Therefore, I call on the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to carry through on what he said in this House over the past several days, and immediately "swoop" down and work with Ontario Hydro and the Ontario Ministry of the Environment to ensure that, if this project goes ahead, it will be done with the highest standards of safety and security so that there will be no risk to the health and safety of the people of the west end of Windsor.

I know this site has been planned in order to have a place for Ontario Hydro to use its special treatment facility, and I urge Ontario Hydro, if this site goes ahead, to put this facility to work as soon as possible. In the meantime, serious study should be given to whether the site is necessary and whether this is the best place for it. This is a serious matter for the people of my community.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEMBER'S OBSERVATIONS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in this House of Commons, for the first time in my parliamentary career, I saw and heard an aggressive, hostile demonstration in the seats reserved for the Opposition's guests.

I also saw the socialist leader wave, smile, encourage and applaud the demonstrators. I saw the socialist Members urge on the demonstrators with their approving looks and expressions of encouragement and incite them to disorderly behaviour in this House. I also saw the socialist leader give the starting signal to the demonstrators by being the first to take the Canadian flag from his jacket. This touched off the disorder.

The muscles of his face were strained and tense, but the socialist leader gave the go-ahead to his party's mercenaries.

IMMIGRATION

SITUATION OF UKRAINIAN REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, almost 300 Ukrainian refugees who escaped from Poland and are at present in Rome have not been permitted to come to Canada since they applied for permission to come to this country.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has the floor. I apologize for the fact that he had to be interrupted.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago I asked a question on behalf of those refugees and received no answer. A week later my colleague from Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) asked the same question and again received no answer. Last week the Conservative Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) asked the same question and received a non-committal answer from the Minister.

I understand that two days ago the Minister met with a delegation from the Ukrainian Immigrant Aid Society who explained the problem to her. I further understand she has now agreed to facilitate the entry of these refugees to Canada. I want to thank her, and pay particular tribute to the efforts made by the Ukrainian Immigrant Aid Society, and I am sure all Members of Parliament will join with me in that expression of thanks.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PEARSON STATUE—NAMING OF SCULPTOR

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to join with my friend from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell in announcing the commissioning of Mr. Danek Modzenski as the sculptor for the statute of the Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

The choice of Mr. Modzenski was made from five Canadian finalists. He was born in Edmonton, obtained his training at the Alberta College of Art, the Academy of Fine Arts and Crafts in Poland, Red Deer College, Vancouver School of Art, and the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology.

The work submitted and the difficulty of making the choice are a tribute to the talent of all Canadian artists. Mr. Modzenski is a fine example of the talent of Canadian youth and we are pleased with his commission today.

APARTHEID

GOVERNMENT TREATMENT OF SOUTH AFRICAN CONTROLLED COMPANIES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) claims to be a leader against apartheid in South Africa. In 1985, with much fanfare and with a puffed chest, the Minister announced a series of measures to demonstrate opposition to apartheid in South Africa.

Yesterday in the House I pointed out to him that his own Department was making grants to South African controlled companies operating in Canada. Not only that, the Government has been doing business with South African controlled companies over the last several years, amounting to almost $2 million. How can one seriously accept the Minister's commitment to fighting apartheid when the Government is taking a business as usual approach to South African controlled companies doing business in Canada?

Yesterday in the House the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) said: "I can tell the House that the Department has not provided any financial assistance to Boart Canada Incorporated", one of the South African controlled companies. The Minister was mistaken and I hope he will take the opportunity to clarify the record. Here it is in black and white. Boart Canada has received grants from the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Sometimes the Speaker has a special prerogative. I am going to ask the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) to rise. He and I and others were at a memorial tribute today to a former colleague of ours, the Hon. Jean Marchand.

THE LATE HONOURABLE JEAN MARCHAND

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to add my modest contribution to what has been said by religious, political and union figures who in the past few days were unanimous in their tribute to that great Canadian, Jean Marchand. He was one of that rare breed of men who not only make things happen but also significantly change the course of a country's history.

Through his commitment to social change, he gave dignity to Quebec workers and opened the way for a vigorous labour movement in the Province of Quebec.

Through his political involvement, he encouraged French Canadians to take, to an unprecedented extent, their rightful place in Canada's political apparatus. He always championed the cause of social justice, he was humble and generous in the exercise of authority, and he was a true friend to the neediest and most vulnerable in our society.

To his daughter, Marie-Ève, to his grandchildren, his brothers and sisters, his nephew Jean Sexton, who reminds me so much of him, and to all members of his family, I wish to extend my condolences and the assurance that his memory will always fill me with gratitude and admiration.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I think it is appropriate to remark that, unfortunately, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) was unable to be here several days ago when tributes were paid to the Honourable Jean Marchand. In view of the special friendship of the Hon. Member, and keeping in mind that many of us attended a memorial service this morning, I thought it was appropriate that another tribute be paid.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday, when the Conservative majority in the House of Commons was passing the Canada-U.S. free trade implementing legislation, we learned at the same time that once again the Canadian people have been seriously misled about the impact of that deal.

We have been given assurances repeatedly by the Prime Minister and other Ministers that there was nothing in the deal that would affect the ability to deliver regional development programs, a very vital part of Canada.

Mr. McDermid: Right.

Mr. Axworthy: At the very same time, the Deputy Minister for Western Diversification, Mr. Bruce Rawson, said explicitly that the Canada-U.S. trade deal was going to be used as a basis for effecting decisions on regional development.

Mr. McDermid: He did not. Read what he said.

Mr. Axworthy: I quote directly from the recorded transcript of Mr. Rawson's remarks: "It is most important to avoid, we think, competitive sectors such as red meat that we think are much more likely to cause frictions in a free trade environment".

Clearly, Mr. Rawson has pointed out that the Government is already taking decisions relating to regional development in western Canada based upon the trade deal and what it thinks it will mean and how the Americans will implement it.

Why is the Government continuing to withhold vital information from the Canadian people? Why are western Canadians being penalized already by the Government before the agreement is even in effect?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has toned his rhetoric from his communiqué, but I am displeased that he has not been able to recognize reality, fact, and truth.

The Hon. Member is talking about an article which inaccurately reflects the statements made by Mr. Rawson. I want to inform the Hon. Member of what Mr. Rawson said, and what I have said consistently. We do not give grants or loans to companies in competitive sectors. I have said so, and Mr. Rawson has said so publicly.

That has been the stand publicly. These statements have been published in our material which I am sure the Hon. Member will read, if he has time.

I said exactly the same thing to the Hon. Member in the legislative committee as Mr. Rawson. Mr. Waddell from External Affairs, the U.S.-Canada Trade Desk, said the same thing to the Hon. Member during legislative hearings. The senior ADM for Western Diversification, Mr. Silverman, under questioning by the Hon. Member said the very same thing to him.

Canada and the provinces are as free to assist and promote regional development under free trade as they were before. The free trade agreement brings us under no other obligations regarding subsidies than we already have under GATT. I hope the Hon. Member takes the opportunity to read the free trade agreement.

Mr. Axworthy: I say in response to the Minister that his statement just confirms the Government's continual intention to mislead the Canadian people.

Mr. Mazankowski: Tell the truth. Tell the truth, Lloyd.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the fact is, as Mr. Rawson has said, that the Government is already making decisions on applications under Western Diversification based upon a perception of what it thinks the trade agreement means, how the Americans will react, and how they will define a subsidy. It has nothing to do with our international obligations. According to Mr. Rawson and the Minister himself, it is clearly based upon their reading of the trade agreement which has not even been passed by this House yet.

If it is happening in western Canada, is it happening in other parts of Canada as well? How many other regions are being penalized and how are our other regional development programs already being dictated to by the Americans through this trade agreement?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks why a Department of a Government of Canada would be cognizant of international obligations. I do not quite understand it.

The predecessor Department of Western Diversification and other regional development Departments, probably since 1947, have been cognizant of their responsibilities in international agreements.

The Hon. Member is trying to put forward to the people of Canada an untruth that countervail is only because of the free trade agreement. The Hon. Member knows that we are subject to countervail under GATT. When any country takes a decision that we are harming it, that country has the opportunity to countervail.

I will repeat that there are no obligations under the free trade agreement that are not there under GATT.

Mr. Axworthy: All I can say is that the Minister shows an abysmal ignorance of the difference between our obligations under GATT and the kind of judgments they are making on the trade agreement.

UNITED STATES OMNIBUS TRADE BILL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister now agreeing that because of the passage of the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill, which substantially broadens the definition of subsidy according to U.S. law but not by GATT, that we are now making decisions in relation to that U.S. law because it is entrenched as part of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement? In other words, is the Government now saying to all western Canadians who make applications that it will make decisions on the veracity, credibility, and legitimacy of those applications according to U.S. trade law, before it even signs the agreement or has it passed in the Parliament of Canada?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the Member's concern about developing the economy of western Canada. I would have thought that he would have been in favour of it.

Mr. Rawson has issued a statement that states: "Recent press reports quoting me as saying that the free trade agreement will adversely affect regional development assistance in western Canada are not true".

Mr. Axworthy: He also says he is afraid of being fired.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: He also said that.

Mr. McKnight: I wish the Hon. Member would make that statement outside the House of Commons where public servants, who served several Governments of several political stripes, do not have the opportunity to have recourse against statements made in this House that impugn their integrity.

Mr. Axworthy: Thank God they tell the truth because you don't know how to tell the truth.

Mr. McKnight: I suggest to the Hon. Member that he take to heart what the Free Press said, and tell the truth.

His Leader was wrong on the Quebec investment plan. His Leader was wrong on fish processing.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Rawson is right about free trade.

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member is wrong about what he impugns to this development agreement rather than the agreements that we have had in the past.

• (1130)

GOVERNMENT FOREST INDUSTRY POLICY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister for International Trade, or perhaps to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the trade deal and its effects on regional development. On August 29 the Minister for International Trade said, and it was repeated today by another Minister, that this deal has nothing to do with regional development programs.

Caron Fine Wood Products applied under the IRDP to establish itself in my constituency in Alexandria, Ontario, and was told that under the Canadian forest industry policy established as a result of the Memorandum of Understanding regarding softwood lumber, which is incorporated in the trade deal, it could no longer get grants because its project is inconsistent with the Canadian forest industry policy.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister now admit what we have known all along, that in fact regional development programs right across the country are being abandoned as a result of this trade deal? That is happening right in the riding that I represent.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer this question. There are many reasons why we have a new forest industry policy in this country. One of the reasons is that we were running out of trees as a result of the deliberate policy neglect of the former Government.

Therefore, we have decided that perhaps it would be better if we invested scare public resources in the renewal of our forests, in building infrastructures, in stabilizing the resource base, in building technology-enhanced machinery and equipment for our forest industry, and in many other things. That is why we have a new forest policy. The Member is simply putting a red herring on the floor and tying it into the trade deal.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the furniture company which is trying to establish itself in my riding will be very comforted by the ridiculous answer the Minister just gave us.

[Translation]

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CONSEQUENCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister. Considering the fact that the departmental official told me himself that this forestry policy was established as a result of the memorandum of agreement between Canada and the United States concerning lumber, doesn't this prove that industries applying under regional development programs are now being refused grants because of the Prime Minister's trade agreement?

[English]

I can only wonder how Premier Buchanan accepted the Government's commitment and policy about regional development.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, if there is any justification for a free trade arrangement with the United States it is the forest industry of Canada. The forest industry is no more and no less in peril now than it was before—

Mr. Boudria: I thought you said we were running out of trees.

Mr. Oberle: —as a result of the free trade arrangement.

The Hon. Member may want to make an argument against forest preservation or the way we are handling our products. However, the forest industry, of all industries, is celebrating the agreement because for once it will permit us to upgrade our products and add value to them, something which was impossible to do in the past because of the tariffs which were added on to finished manufactured products.

Of course the Americans would buy our trees, perhaps in the most primitive form that we would sell them, but as soon as we add value to our products the tariffs go on. That is why the industry is so enthusiastic about this deal. It would be helpful if the Hon. Member would get that into his narrow skull.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO CIVIL SERVANTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for the Western Diversification Fund. At the outset it seems very clear to me that we are running through the same movie we went through on the water deal when the Government said that water was not affected and then finally came around to admitting it.

I am sure the Minister will agree with what the Prime Minister said on October 4, that is, that regional development programs are untouched and unchallenged by this deal. The senior civil servant in charge of the Western Diversification Fund said yesterday that that was not the case. I have a transcript of what was said and the reporter stands by it.

Another senior civil servant, the former Deputy Minister of Finance, was quoted last October in The Globe and Mail by another reporter, whose veracity will no doubt be challenged. Mr. Stanley Hartt, then Deputy Minister of Finance, said: "We're going to have to think differently in terms of ways to promote economic development". He went on to say: "We will have to find other unobjectionable ways" to provide industrial development assistance. He was specifically saying that regional development programs would have to be changed.

Last fall a senior civil servant said that they have to be changed and yesterday another Deputy Minister said that they have to be changed. Why is it that they can read the document and understand it, yet the Government does not understand it, or misleads the people of Canada?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification): Mr. Speaker, with all seriousness I would like to ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party to review the speech that was given by the Deputy Minister of Western Economic Diversification—

Mr. Broadbent: Not the speech, what he said in the interview.

Mr. McKnight: What interview? The Hon. Member refers to an interview. If he would like to check I am sure that the Deputy Minister will say that there was no interview, that he spoke to the Institute of Public Administrators of Canada. He was replying to a question put forward by Gordon Robertson, the former Clerk of the Privy Council. Through that questioning he explained the policies of the Western Diversification Department.

The policies have been well stated, by myself and the Deputy, and they are in our public information. They are that we will not enter into assistance for competitive industries.

The New Democratic Party may want to pick winners and losers in competitive industries. The business men and women of Canada do not believe that the Government picking winners and losers in competitive industries is the best use of taxpayers' dollars, and I do not believe the taxpayers of Canada do either.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I notice the Minister did not deal with the question. I will put it in the most straightforward way that I can.

Mr. Stanley Hartt, former Deputy Minister of Finance, has said: "We will have to find other unobjectionable ways", in terms of the deal, to provide industrial development assistance. He was referring to regional development programs in comparison with the deal.

Is the Minister now telling the people of Canada that Mr. Hartt was wrong, that the Government of Canada does not have to change its regional development programs? I want a clear answer. Does it have to change the regional development programs because of this deal or does it not?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification):

No.

POSITION OF MINISTERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister explain why the Deputy Minister in charge of Western Diversification said yesterday, with reference to one particular sector, that there could be no development programs in that sector any more? The Deputy Minister of Finance actually read the deal and was talking about the negotiations that will go on for the next five to seven years and about what will no doubt constitute a subsidy. Why is it that these experts have one position and cabinet Ministers, who are trying to save their political hides, have another?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification): Mr. Speaker, I do not think Ministers or Members on this side have to worry about their political hides when people look at the alternatives that are being put forward.

I have already explained to the Hon. Member why Western Economic Diversification has been saying since it was formed that we will not be assisting competitive industries. We do not believe, and neither do people in the industry—and he can check with the red meat industry in western Canada—that Governments should pick winners and losers in a competitive industry. When I said no, there is no need to change because of the free trade agreement, that is accurate.

The free trade agreement does not pose any obligations concerning subsidies that are not already there under the GATT. If we could assist, promote, and not have fear of countervail under GATT, then we can continue to assist, promote, and have no fear of countervail under free trade.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

PCBS—PORT OF MONTREAL—SHIPPING AND STORAGE DEPOT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am not only a resident of Montreal, a mother and a grandmother, but I am privileged to be a Member of Parliament from the great city of Montreal. I was horrified to learn that the Port of Montreal which is federal land under federal jurisdiction is the largest storage and shipping depot in North America for PCB wastes.

In downtown Montreal, in the midst of three million people, there are hazardous wastes. My question to the Government is this.

Mr. Lewis: Charlie could have told you that.

Mr. Crofton: Too bad you didn't discover that when you were in office.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you answer the question, Charlie?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about dangerous chemicals, if the bullies across the way would listen.

Unfortunately, we now know what could happen with this dangerous waste. Has the Minister made a recent check to ensure safe and secure handling of this material as it is shipped into Montreal and out of Montreal? If he has done so will he ensure that it is at the maximum, optimum level of safety? In the case of a PCB disaster, what kind of contingency plan does the Minister have to evacuate the city of Montreal?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I actually do not think that the Hon. Member adds much to this discussion and debate by resorting to such hysterical rhetoric. She says she takes great pride in representing Montreal, as she should. I do not know whether her constituents take such pride in her performance if she is so little aware of what is in her own riding.

Mr. Nunziata: You won't tell us, you fraud.

Mr. McMillan: In any event, I can tell her that Montreal has been a port of exit for PCB materials that are exported to Wales for incineration. They are subject to the most stringent federal regulations and the full force of law under the Transportation of Hazardous Goods Act. The PCB materials themselves are not allowed to be in Montreal at the port longer than, I think it is, 48 hours before shipment.

REQUEST THAT SHIPMENTS BE HALTED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Minister does not have to live in Montreal and be responsible for the safety and security of its citizens.

The Québec Environment Minister said this morning when asked about a possible PCB shipping accident in the St. Lawrence: "The risks of transporting dangerous wastes in this manner are frightening".

The time has come to stop the storing and shipping of the nation's PCB wastes in Montreal. I am asking the Government if it will stop shipping and storing of PCB wastes in Montreal? Or is it not concerned about the safety and security of the people of Montreal?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as is the wont of members of the Liberal Party across the aisle and the Hon. Member, she quotes the Minister of the Environment for Québec. She does so very incompletely. She did not go on to complete the rest of his paragraph which is: "It is a question of principle. On a temporary basis exporting our wastes to England from Montreal is fine".

I ask her and I ask her Party, given the fact that communities across Québec and Ontario have resisted efforts by both Governments—the Government of Ontario and the Government of Québec—to establish permanent incineration facilities in those provinces, what is her answer?

Mr. Tobin: You're the Minister.

Mr. McMillan: If we cannot get permanent facilities built in provinces such as Québec and Ontario because of community resistance, what are we supposed to do? We have been shipping them to Wales. Soon to be on stream in October in Swan Hills, Alberta, is a permanent facility. The federal Government will be working with the provinces to see whether we can overcome community resistance to these permanent facilities.

In the meantime I am discussing with my cabinet colleagues the possibility of some transportable or mobile units that can overcome that very problem of resistance.

Oral Questions

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister in charge of the Western Development Fund. In light of the fact that the Prime Minister of Canada said to Premier Ghiz of Prince Edward Island when talking about regional development subsidies: "Trust me. They are excluded from the deal", yet the senior bureaucrat involved is saying that the subsidy program is already being restricted because of the trade deal, what I want to know is who the Canadian people can trust. The Prime Minister has already broken promises in terms of senior citizens. He has broken promises in terms of closing down rural post offices. He has broken promises in terms of patronage. He has broken promises on acid rain—

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member will get to his question.

Mr. Nystrom: In light of the fact that the Prime Minister has broken promise after promise in the areas of patronage, acid rain, Air Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: I do not know quite where this question is going, or the preamble. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, how can the people of Canada trust this Prime Minister and this Government when they have broken so many promises?

Mr. Axworthy: They just keep lying.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification): Regardless of what has just been said by the Hon. Member for Fort Garry that we just keep lying—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKnight: —I would suggest that he take cognizance of the Winnipeg Free Press editorial which states: "Tell the truth".

Mr. Axworthy: Why don't you take cognizance of the truth once in a while?

Mr. McKnight: The paper says that the Leader of the Liberal Party was wrong in so many instances regarding the free trade agreement.

Mr. Axworthy: Stop reading editorials and start looking at the truth.

Mr. McKnight: He was wrong in so many instances on the free trade agreement.

The Prime Minister has kept his word. He has kept his word that we would develop the economy of western Canada. He has kept his word that we will have a share in the decision-making.

Mr. Axworthy: Tell us about the CF-18.

Mr. McKnight: He has provided a fund of $1.2 billion that is real, unlike the fund about which the Hon. Member knows, which the previous administration established and which disappeared into thin air.

The Hon. Member says that the Deputy Minister responsible for western economic diversification said that free trade is restricting opportunities. That is not true.

Let me quote from a release by the Deputy Minister which states: "Moreover, I did not say that free trade will impede, restrict, limit, violate or put at risk regional development assistance".

Mr. de Jong: And nobody believes you!

Mr. McKnight: There is nothing in the free trade agreement that provides further obligations on Canada in regard to subsidies that are not already found in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

DEPUTY MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said that we share decision-making, and there will be, between Canada and Washington after this deal.

Mrs. Mailly: Sit down!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It's the same.

Mr. Broadbent: I will be in Saskatoon—we will be in Saskatoon. You should worry.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I hope that Hon. Members who are enthusiastically engaging in an exchange of opinions here will remember, keeping an eye on the clock, that they are stopping other Members from putting questions and stopping Ministers from answering. I do not want to have to draw that to their attention. However, I am sure, having done so, they will co-operate.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville will put his question.

• (1150)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, it is a question here of who is being honest with the Canadian people—civil servants like Stanley Hartt, Bruce Rawson, or the Prime Minister of Canada.

In light of the fact that Mr. Rawson has stated that the red meat industry will now be excluded—perhaps that is why Pocklington sold Gretzky to make some money, because he will now not get grants from the federal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question very directly.

Mr. Nystrom: I want to know whether or not the Minister will table in the House today a list of sectors that will not get assistance now because of the trade deal, in light of the fact that Bruce Rawson has stated that some sectors, such as the red meat industry, will not receive assistance. What are those sectors? Will the Minister table a list today, and will he be honest and open with the people of Canada?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Diversification): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what could be done to convince the Hon. Member of what Bruce Rawson, the Deputy Minister of Western Economic Diversification, said, a man who has served a number of Governments of Canada, or how I could convince him. Better than that, I would only reiterate what Mr. Rawson stated: "Moreover, I did not say that free trade will impede, restrict, limit, violate, or put at risk regional development assistance".

I would be very pleased to table this document.

The other thing I would like to inform the Hon. Member and ask, in a fully competitive industry, I know it may be the socialist doctrine that drives the Member—

Mr. de Jong: No, it's Peter Pocklington's doctrine.

Mr. McKnight: I believe that the Hon. Member, who comes from my province, has a better understanding than that.

Mr. Broadbent: How many millions did Pocklington get? Tell us about Pocklington's grants.

Mr. Speaker: Given the time, I am going to leave philosophy and move on to another question. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think the last several minutes are ample evidence that we should issue the writ. I hope the Prime Minister takes that into account.

THE MINISTRY

AIR FLIGHT TO THAILAND BY MINISTER'S SPOUSE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Given that this very day in the House we are discussing the creation of new conflict of interest guidelines, given that earlier this week the Minister for International Trade changed his story on the trip received by his wife and daughter to Thailand—he said that they were representing him—given that Section 35 Subsection 1 of the current conflict of interest guidelines requires a Minister of the Crown who directly or indirectly receives a benefit of over $200 to declare that benefit, what action does the Deputy Prime Minister intend to take since his Minister has violated the current conflict of interest guidelines?

Mr. Speaker: An Hon. Member's question that refers to the activities of anybody in light of the guidelines may well be appropriate. However, the Hon. Member has gone further than that. The Hon. Member, I think, has just made a charge. On other occasions I have said that preambles or questions cannot be used in this place in lieu of a formal charge. The Hon. Member, I believe, is wanting to inquire of the Government, as to what its view is of a certain event. That is a legitimate question in light of conflict of interest guidelines. If the Hon. Member will allow me to reinterpret the question, I think that that is the question. It is not appropriate to lay a charge by way of preamble or by question. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a similar question was put yesterday and I answered it. The Hon. Member will find that answer at page 19111 of Hansard.

MINISTERIAL DECLARATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister—I doubt deliberately—missed the point. The Minister for International Trade has changed his story on the reason for the receipt of the trip. Earlier he said it was a trip given to his wife and to his daughter which, of course, would not be covered under any section on public declaration. He later clarified that, after the Deputy Prime Minister made a statement in the House, and stated that his spouse and his daughter were representing him in a semi-official capacity.

Since they were representing him, since the trip was worth approximately $6,500, there is an onus on the Minister to declare. I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister can tell us whether, pursuant to Subsections 1 and 2 of Section 35, the declaration was made?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer remains the same. I invite the Hon. Member to reread it.

Ms. Copps: You did not answer it yesterday.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Government has long claimed that the trade deal would have no effect on regional development programs. For example, the Minister of Finance stated in the House on October 16, 1987, as reported in Hansard at page 10087:

> Our ability to deliver regional development programs to all parts of Atlantic Canada will remain absolutely unchanged and unaffected by this agreement.

This morning on Canada A.M. the Minister for International Trade admitted that the trade deal provides no protection for regional development programs, and that under the deal the next five to seven years will define subsidies, and we will then know what is permitted and what is not.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is the following. Will he not now be forthright about this and admit that the end result of this trade deal will affect regional development programs? Why not be honest about it?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are being honest about it, and it does not affect regional programs.

I am surprised at the Hon. Member for St. John's East saying that, after this Government committed itself to help Hibernia and the people of Newfoundland. I am absolutely surprised. That came in long after the free trade agreement was signed. What is the Hon. Member talking about?

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, we were also told that water was not in the deal, Mr. Speaker.

We know that ACOA is five-year program which some government Ministers have already called the last kick at the can for Atlantic Canada. Coincidentally, this five-year period is the same period in which subsidies are to be defined under the trade deal.

Will the Minister, or his representative, not come clean and admit that ACOA could in fact be the last regional development program for the Atlantic provinces, because of this trade deal?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, first, no, I will not admit that. Second, the free trade agreement in itself is a regional development program, and it will help the Maritimes grow. It will create employment in the Maritimes. It will protect the industries that have been harassed all along.

The Hon. Member is away off base. No, it will not be the last regional development program for eastern Canada. This Government is committed to all regions of the country, and will continue to be.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT ON PROGRAMS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. A few weeks ago, we had a statement by the Deputy Minister of Finance. Today, we have a senior official responsible for regional development confirming our worst fears, namely that regional development programs would be jeopardized by the free trade agreement. What I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister, since today, the senior official who told the truth probably had to do what a number of Conservative Members have done before him and issue a clarification, and I imagine the responsible Minister called him to ask him to change his story, like Peter White did . . . What I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Could he inform the House today why senior officials who administered the program have to consider criteria for U.S. subsidies, while the Government says the exact opposite?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible has explained that very well. I do not know why Hon. Members across the aisle want to malign distinguished public servants who have served this country and governments over the years.

What we have here is another classic example of, when all else fails, you wallow around in the mud to see if you can find a little dirt to throw at people. That is exactly what is happening, Mr. Speaker.

I would draw the attention of Hon. Members to an article by John Ferguson which appeared this morning. It talks about the manner in which the Liberal Party has distorted, planted fear, and maligned the elements of the trade deal, all for political partisan advantage. Mr. Ferguson states:

> Both play on voters' fear of the unknown.
> Both claim to be based on a cool analysis of the facts.
> And both are dead wrong.

NEED FOR APPROVAL BY DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister can quote all the newspaper articles he wants, but the fact is that Mr. Lawson's comments are there and they are quite clear.

What I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Could he explain why projects are now submitted to the Department of External Affairs before final approval? Could he explain why the Government is taking into consideration the criterion . . .

An Hon. Member: . . . the free trade test.

Mr. Lapierre: . . . the free trade test, as the Hon. Member pointed out? Why has this criterion be added to the list? And could he explain why, since the beginning of these talks, we have been told that free trade would have no impact at all on regional development? Why has the Government been lying to us for months?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will say to the Hon. Member, as I have said to others, once again, that there are no further obligations required of Canada in regard to subsidies under the free trade agreement than already exist under GATT. The Member asks, "Why does one department of government consult with another as to international obligations?" We consult on every western diversification application proposal and contract—every one—with the Department of Justice, because it is a legal contract—and all government departments consult. We consult with the Department of Communications regarding international obligations in that field. We have also consulted on two or three occasions, as Mr. Waddell from the Department of External Affairs has said, with the Department of External Affairs on international trade obligations.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKnight: At no time was any project rejected after we had consulted with the Department of External Affairs. Therefore, regional development as well will be built upon with free trade and we will go forward.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PRESENTATION OF LEGISLATION ON QUALIFYING ELIGIBILITY PERIOD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and concerns eligibility criteria for unemployment insurance benefits.

We know that generally speaking, Canadians must have worked fourteen weeks to receive unemployment insurance. We also know that to allow for regional disparities, in some cases Canadians can get unemployment insurance if they have worked less than fourteen weeks. However, the House must first pass a bill, as it has done since 1976.

Madam Minister, do you intend to introduce legislation this year that will allow Canadians to be eligible for unemployment insurance if they have worked less than fourteen weeks?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the eligibility standard expires on January 4, 1989. I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question, and I can assure the House that between September 1, 1988 and January 4, 1989, we have ample time to adopt a bill for the purpose mentioned.

Since with respect to the objectives we have sought to attain with this legislation since 1976 there always has been full co-operation on the part of all Members of the House of Commons, I am confident that such an amendment can be adopted within a week.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

REQUEST FOR INCLUSIVE LISTING OF PCB SITES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my first question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. With the PCB fire in Seattle we are becoming increasingly aware of the danger of PCBs still in use, not just in storage. There are some experts who think that the whole Great Lakes system is a PCB storage site.

I ask the Minister if he would not agree that to have an adequate grasp of the PCB problem in Canada we would need a list not only of the storage sites in our areas but also of places where PCBs are in use, or at least major places where they are still in use, and of PCBs in major waterways where they are concentrated in large amounts. Could he provide us with a series of lists in order for us to have an adequate grasp of the PCB problem today?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member will probably know that under very strict federal laws and regulations over the years the use of PCBs has been subject to quite rigorous sanctions, again at the national level.

I will be presenting to my provincial colleagues next week—I think on Wednesday, details have yet to be finalized—a plan from the national Government for their consideration as part of a Canada-wide effort involving both levels of government for the complete phase-out of PCBs.

In that connection, I will take the Hon. Member's recommendation under advisement as to the possibility of a list identifying the major sites where PCBs are used. It would be a very long list and it would be awfully difficult to compile, but to the extent that it could be done, I will consult with my officials to see that it is.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF CURRENT INFORMATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan, has managed to get at least a partial list, a provincial list, from the Province of Ontario, and the rest of us are still waiting for our lists. I wonder if he could not undertake at least to provide information that is immediately available while he is gathering that further information. Could he not give us a beginning, a start on this problem, and then provide us with the rest of the information when it is possible for him to do so?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I presume, in connection with this particular question, that the list that is being referred to is that of PCBs in use. Is that correct?

Ms. McDonald: Storage.

Mr. McMillan: I will be very candid with the Hon. Member. I thought, as did my colleague, the Minister of Labour, that we would be able to provide the list of PCB storage facilities across the country as early as today or yesterday. It has not been possible. I have put a greater premium on making sure that the list is accurate and complete rather than on necessarily getting it out early.

I know that the Hon. Member would be the first to criticize the Government if I were to release something that was shoddy or incomplete or that the public could not have confidence in. However, I give this commitment as I speak to the Hon. Member, that the list is being prepared and that it will be as complete as possible when it is released, and I hope that it is as soon as next week.

Mr. Speaker: I ask Hon. Members to be patient. I will take a single question from the Hon. Member for Trinity. I am then going to move back to the New Democratic Party because there is a Member who has a question for the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs, and I think that it is appropriate that it be asked today. The Hon. Member for Trinity.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—SEVERANCE PAY OF FORMER EMPLOYEES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance and it concerns fairness. Three years ago, in September, 1985, the Government moved in an unprecedented way to bail out the depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank, many of whom were wealthy foreigners. But today, three years later, over 200 Canadian employees of that bank have not yet received severance pay.

Will the Minister explain this, and will he explain further why the Ministry of Labour, which has had a legal opinion for two years that those 200 Canadian employees who were innocently caught in this situation were entitled to severance pay, has not provided them with any help and they have been obliged to launch private suits?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would have been able to answer this question better if I had been given notice. It is a serious and very specific question. I should say this. She knows of the proceedings with regard to these two banks being in receivership and being dealt with by the trustee making decisions on these matters. There is a difference between depositors and employees, and they are treated under difference processes, but I will certainly take her representations to the authorities in order to make sure that they are aware of the importance of this.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that this will have to be the last question. I would call on the Hon. Member for Beaches who, I understand, has a question.

VETERAN AFFAIRS

VETERANS INDEPENDENCE PROGRAM—EXPANSION OF COVERAGE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It may very well be the last chance that I have to ask the Minister a question in the House or, indeed, for him to give a response. I regret that very much, because the Minister's work has been appreciated by all Members on all sides of the House.

All Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1210)

Mr. Young: Certainly it has been appreciated by the veterans in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Now comes the hard question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: I am always reluctant to ask the Minister a question because I always manage to make him look good.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: In June of this year the Minister announced to the Canadian Convention of the Legion that he intended to expand the Veterans Independence Program to cover those veterans who served only in Canada in the First and Second World Wars.

Is the Minister in a position to announce when that will happen?

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of State (Seniors)): Yes, Mr. Speaker. To start with I would like to thank all Hon. Members for their very kind and generous expression of goodwill which they accorded me a few moments ago. This is one of the reasons that makes serving in Parliament the finest profession that anyone can have. I have enjoyed it tremendously, not only because of the work that we are all able to do but because of the associations that we make, not only with Members in our own Party but with Members in all other Parties. After all, everyone is here trying to do a job for the people of Canada.

Although our debates may at times get hot and overheated, they are just like football or hockey games. The teams play very hard against each other for an hour, and then usually sit with one another and have a beer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: That is the spirit I have always found here. I have just as many friends on the other side of the House as I have in my own Party. I like them all very much. I have received tremendous support and friendship from Members on my own side of the House, and I appreciate so much the very nice accord given to me a few moments ago.

I appreciate receiving the question that I have from the Hon. Member for Beaches who has always shown a tremendous interest in veterans and their welfare. He has continued to do so all the years I have known him, and I know he will always continue to show this interest in the veterans of Canada.

In answer to the question, I am very pleased to advise that effective April 1, 1989, the Veterans Independence Program will be extended to our veterans who served in Canada during both World Wars.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This is the last day before the break. There is some indication that there is one question for the Deputy Prime Minister. The time for Question Period is over but the Deputy Prime Minister might be prepared to take the question. It is up to the Minister to indicate whether he is prepared to do so although the time has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is appropriate to ask the normal business question of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) so that we have an understanding as to what the business of the House will be when we come back after the break. I also have a question regarding the Election Expenses Act.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) has raised a question of the Deputy Prime Minister. Undoubtedly because he has other business he has left the House and it is well beyond the end of Question Period. Perhaps the Minister of State will be prepared to respond.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that when we return on September 13, the Government will be calling two Bills for consideration, Bill C-147, the Human Rights Institute followed by Bill C-152, the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute Bill. We hope, although I do not believe it is firm at this point, that there will be all-stage consideration of both Bills on that day.

On Wednesday, September 14, we will begin report stage consideration of Bill C-136, the Broadcasting Act.

My friend asked about the Elections Act. One knows that we presently have before us Bill C-79. There have been discussions and an exchange of correspondence with respect to election expenses. I understand that the matter of my friend's correspondence is still under consideration.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, just further to the comments from the Deputy House Leader, will the Government be in a position to respond with regard to the election expenses prior to the scheduled reconvening of the House on September 13?

Mr. Lewis: I will have to check into that, Mr. Speaker. My friend's letter had some suggestions in it. I think we want to consider those suggestions fully. In any event, we are looking at the whole matter. I think if we come back and have some time, it is certainly something that could be considered.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of people in Nova Scotia, mainly from Halifax, but also from other parts of that province and Canada. The people from Nova Scotia in their petition express concern with the Government's proposals regarding child care. They believe it neither contains national objectives nor necessary funding arrangements and, as a result, will not ensure that families have access to higher quality child care.

Whereas the proposed Child Care Act is not in the best interests of young children, women or families in Canada, the undersigned call upon Parliament to withdraw the Child Care Act forthwith. The petitioners have signed the petition and the petition has been certified by the Clerk of Petitions.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions signed by residents of Scarborough, Markham and Ottawa, Ontario; Sydney and Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia, and Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan. In both petitions they say that the Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, that a trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

• (1220)

PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and privilege of presenting a petition from many citizens of my riding of Hamilton Mountain and residents of the City of Hamilton as well as Peterborough, Scarborough, Stoney Creek and Belleville. All of these petitioners feel very strongly that families throughout Canada need a high quality, available, affordable child care service. Whereas the proposed child care Bill is not in the best interests of young children, women or the families of Canada, they therefore call upon Parliament to withdraw the child care Bill forthwith.

Order Paper Questions

DESIGNATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present to the House of Commons today a petition about helping to save the Rouge Valley, and the petitioners join with thousands of volunteers who have been working on this project for some years. The Rouge Valley is a unique and precious natural area. Protecting the endangered wildlife and wilderness areas is in the national interest. I would like to invite Hon. Members of the House of Commons and those listening today to visit the Rouge Valley. It is a beautiful place. The petitioners call on the Parliament of Canada and the provincial Government to make this area a Canadian heritage land or a provincial park and the petitioners join with the Scarborough City Council, the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), Save the Rouge Valley System and the Coalition of Scarborough Community Associations.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have 17 petitions concerning the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement to table today. The petitioners humbly declare that the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada without obtaining anything in return; that Canadian industries are still not protected from American trade laws; that the United States got everything they wanted in all the important sectors, in particular in agriculture, energy, automobile trade, financial services and investments; that the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened; that the Conservative Government has not provided any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers.

For these reasons, they humbly ask Parliament to censure the Government for having signed the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement.

[English]

PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, on behalf of petitioners from the cities of Cambridge, Kitchener and Waterloo, Ontario, a petition in which the petitioners say that families throughout Canada need high quality, available, affordable child care services and that the Government of Canada must introduce legislation containing national objectives and appropriate mechanisms for a comprehensive, non-profit child care system and that the child care Bill proposed by the Government contains neither national objectives nor necessary funding arrangements. The petitioners call upon Parliament to withdraw the child care Bill forthwith.

CLOSING OF EMBASSY IN ECUADOR

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present to the House today 16 petitions on behalf of Toronto residents who wish to state their opposition to the closure of the Canadian Embassy in Ecuador and the hardship imposed on individuals seeking to apply for emigration to Canada or visitors' visas. The petition urges Parliament and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to reopen the Canadian Embassy in Ecuador.

PROPOSED CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege of tabling a petition today, a petition that has been certified correct and true to form by the Clerk of Petitions pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners who are residents of the Province of Ontario are concerned about the child care Bill currently before Parliament. They point out that it has been recommended that child care services be available for families throughout this country, that the legislation should contain national objectives and appropriate mechanisms for the development of a comprehensive, non-profit child care system accessible to all families throughout Canada and they call upon Parliament to withdraw the child care Bill forthwith.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour and privilege and indeed the obligation of presenting a petition signed by a number of citizens of Canada. The petition has been properly certified by the Clerk of Petitions pursuant to Standing Order 106. In this petition, the petitioners point out the need in Canada for high quality, available, affordable child care services and point out the fact that these services should be available for all families. They say that these services should meet certain national objectives and that there should be appropriate mechanisms provided for the development of a comprehensive, non-profit child care system which is accessible to all families. Whereas the child care Bill proposed by the Government of Canada contains neither national objectives nor necessary funding arrangements and will not ensure that families have access to high quality care, the petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada to withdraw the child care Bill forthwith.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

PRESENTING PETITIONS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, while I have the floor, I would just indicate that during Petitions, the rules of the House were deliberately broken by the Whip of the Official Opposition. In light of what happened yesterday and in light of arguments earlier this morning, a dangerous trend is developing. People are deliberately breaking the rules of the House.

Mr. Speaker: As Speaker, naturally I have to take into account the representation of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, and I assure him and other Hon. Members that I will be careful to ensure that the rules of the House are not broken, and if they are, I will try to take appropriate action.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, since the Parliamentary Secretary has bootlegged in this accusation, I would like him to make a specific charge if he has one as to what rule was broken. The petitions I tabled were certified by the Clerk of Petitions as being appropriate. They were tabled in due course and at the appropriate time. There is nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Speaker: I think I can settle that. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has raised a matter and I said that I would of course always be conscious of matters that are raised. I made no ruling one way or the other as to whether or not the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was in breach of the rules, and I take the representations of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary as just that. I do not, in my comments, indicate for a moment that I have made any decision that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier was in breach of the rules.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to belabour the point, and I know you will be reviewing it, but I would like to remind you that this is just one of a number of charges that the Government has made over the last year in an attempt to restrict the ability of Members of Parliament to present petitions. I think in almost every case when this has been done, you have found that the points have not had any validity and you have ruled against them. I suspect that that will be the case again today. We do have a process for having petitions certified. Obviously this took place on this particular occasion, and I find it reprehensible that the Parliamentary Secretary continues to try to restrict the ability of Hon. Members to present petitions.

Mr. Speaker: I did not take it that the Parliamentary Secretary was necessarily trying to restrict the right of Members of Parliament to present petitions. I think his remarks were aimed, perhaps, at the length of the explanation, and these things are matters which the Chair has to take into account. The Chair on occasion has perhaps been too generous, but nonetheless, the Chair has tended to go as far as is appropriate in allowing Hon. Members to express in the Chamber the intentions of their petitions. However, there is of course the rule that the explanation should be brief, and I know that all Hon. Members will want to co-operate with me in that regard.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Speaker: I want to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the fact that I have received two applications for an emergency debate and they are on the same issue. I first want to point something out. I have some considerable doubt as to whether, given the order, I can even entertain the applications. However, I know the applications, one of which I received last night, are serious.

• (1230)

I must indicate to both Hon. Members who applied that it will take some persuading for me to move in the direction they ask. However, given the issue I am prepared to perhaps overlook to a degree the order for today and I will hear first the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) because his was the first application, and then I will hear the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). It is the same issue and I am sure they will buttress each other's remarks.

Mr. Hawkes: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Given your intention to extend some latitude, and not knowing what is about to be said, I hope the Government will have a right of response if that is indicated.

Mr. Speaker: The rule is that an application for an emergency debate is to be a succinct statement by the Hon. Member applying. It is not to be a debate on the issue, it has to be the argument for the case. The reason it must be a succinct statement is that otherwise, of course, it would be appropriate for the other side to respond. That is the rule and under the rules only the applicant can speak and the argument must be succinct. I know both Hon. Members who are applying are experienced and I trust they will not take advantage of that rule. I would hope that the Parliamentary Secretary would not have to rise on a point of order because of any infringement of that rule.

I will hear the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 29 I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the public statement by the Deputy Minister for western diversification that the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States will be harmful and is already harmful to regional development programs. That statement is a clear contradiction of claims made in this House by the Government. That statement was retracted only this morning by the Deputy Minister, obviously under clear intimidation by the Government.

I will just make this point. Because of this order agreed to—

Mr. Hawkes: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Axworthy: May I be allowed to complete my statement without interruption by this jerk?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, there has been an accusation made about the behaviour of the Government, that it is clearly intimidating someone. That simply cannot be allowed to pass unchallenged. There is no intimidation.

Mr. Speaker: I have the Hon. Member's point. I am sure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry will try to keep his remarks as succinct as possible.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, after that unnecessary interruption let me just make this point. I recognize your admonition about the problem we are facing in these unique circumstances. Yet the House will be adjourning for 10 days and there will be absolutely no opportunity to continue discussion of this very important issue. Therefore I hope you will give it proper consideration and give Members of Parliament the opportunity this afternoon to debate it properly and see where the truth really lies.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise, as you indicated, under the same provision of Standing Order 29 to argue very concisely that the situation would be alarming indeed if, as we contend, we now have another senior public servant of the Government of Canada, this one in charge of western diversification, adding to what the former Deputy Minister of Finance has already said, that regional development programs are going to be affected by the trade deal negotiated between our government and that of the United States.

If true, as we contend it is, this is alarming for western Canada, Atlantic Canada, and the northern parts of most of our provinces in particular. However, the key point with respect to the rules of the House is precisely the question of the adjournment. Today is the last day for debate in the House before we adjourn. We are supposed to be coming back a number of days down the road, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said publicly, and I want to underline this, that there is every possibility an election could be called during that period of time. The traditional four-year period of the Government, as the Prime Minister has described it, is now up. He has said he would be expected to call an election barring some very exceptional circumstances which he said do not exist.

It is for those two reasons, Your Honour, that I suggest the application for a special debate falls within the framework of the rules.

Mr. Speaker: I have stretched the rules considerably to hear these applications because they arise over a matter of great importance to the country. I indicated that, at least on what I knew of them earlier, I was probably not too partial to ordering an emergency debate this afternoon. I have listened carefully to both Hon. Members. They are very experienced, one being a former Minister and a senior critic in his Party, and the other of course being the Leader of the NDP.

I understand fully the concern expressed by both Hon. Members and others during Question Period. I also listened very carefully to Question Period and, without sitting in judgment, it seems to me, and I know I was admonished by the reform committee not to give reasons for turning down an application, this issue is so important it may be helpful if I say why I am not inclined to grant the debate at this time.

First, as I said, I considered the matter very carefully when I received the first notice from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. I considered it very carefully today. I considered very carefully the exchange in Question Period. There was a difference of opinion in Question Period on this matter. However, it is extremely difficult for the Chair to think that it amounts to an issue on which there must be an urgent debate. The Deputy Minister may or may not have said something. In any event there are differences of opinion as to what he said. Of course, there will be different conclusions drawn from what he may or may not have said. Even given the very great importance of this issue it is very difficult for the Chair to decide that this afternoon there ought to be an emergency debate.

The Hon. Member for Oshawa raises another matter, and this is certainly speculation and not something upon which I can comment, that this day will perhaps be the last day of this Parliament. No one can be certain about that but it seems to me that in itself does not give cause to extend the sitting beyond the agreed order into this afternoon.

I want to say to both Hon. Members as well as others that I listened very carefully because the country has been listening very carefully to the debate in this chamber. I know there must be a very great temptation among other Members to get up and comment upon this issue. However, we have had Question Period. I of course have no more idea than anyone else what may happen in the ensuing days. There seems to be at the moment a very serious difference of opinion on what a senior official has said and the implications that flow from it but that is not sufficient at this time to order an emergency debate.

I thank both Hon. Members for the succinct way they presented the matter and I also thank the Parliamentary Secretary and others for their forbearance.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

Mr. Rodriguez: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent of the House to withdraw Bill C-271 standing in my name as a Private Member.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill withdrawn.

PETITIONS

CHILD CARE—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a very important petition today from quite a number of families who are very concerned about child care. They state that whereas families throughout Canada need high quality, available, affordable child care services, and repeated recommendations have been made that these services must be available for families, and that the Government of Canada must introduce legislation containing national objectives and appropriate mechanisms for the development of a comprehensive non-profit child care system accessible to all families throughout Canada, and whereas the child care Act proposed by the Government contains neither national objectives nor the necessary funding arrangements and will not ensure that families have access to high quality child care, therefore, in the best interests of young children, women and families, the petitioners request very strongly that Parliament withdraw the child care Act forthwith.

• (1110)

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 106 to present a petition similar to the one just presented.

It is signed by several persons from southwestern Ontario who find the Government's Bill on child care to be woefully lacking in national standards. Finally, they state that since the proposed child care Act is not in the best interests of young children, women or families in Canada they call upon the Government to withdraw the Bill immediately.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition concerning the issue of child care. People who have signed the petition indicate their concern that families throughout Canada need high quality, available, affordable child care services. They believe that the legislation which is before the House of Commons at the present time does not provide that.

They state that the legislation contains neither national objectives nor necessary funding arrangements, that it will not ensure that families have access to high quality child care, and therefore the interests of young children, women and families of Canada will not be met. The petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to withdraw the child care legislation forthwith.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present three petitions. The first is signed by residents of the City of Winnipeg, and the Towns of Fort Whyte, Oak Bluff and Sanford, towns in Manitoba. The second one is signed by residents of Winnipeg and the Town of Kamerno. The third is signed by residents of Medicine Hat, Alberta.

The three petitions state that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that in the course of his bilateral trade negotiations Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised and that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S.

Therefore the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

CHILD CARE—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by residents of Ontario who live in Sault Ste. Marie, Gravenhurst, Huntsville and Dundas. They state that whereas it has been repeatedly recommended that to make child care services available for families the Government of Canada must introduce legislation containing national objectives and appropriate mechanisms for the development of comprehensive non-profit child care system accessible to all families throughout Canada, therefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to withdraw the child care Act forthwith.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents pursuant to Standing Order 106.

The petitioners feel that the child care Act proposed by the Government contains neither national objectives nor the necessary funding arrangements and will not ensure that families have access to high quality child care. Since they believe that the child care Act is not in the best interests of young children, women or families, they are asking that the Government withdraw the child care Act immediately from further consideration.

REFUGEES—REQUEST FOR SPEEDY PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I also have the opportunity and privilege to present a further petition on behalf of a number of other constituents who are concerned that the existing procedures regarding the processing of refugees has broken down. Basically, they are asking Parliament to move quickly to ensure that refugee applicants have their applications processed efficiently and effectively.

EQUALITY OF CHOICE IN CHILD CARE

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, it is also my pleasure and privilege to present a petition signed by 47 Canadians, residents mainly of the Olds area and of Calgary, Alberta.

The petitioners oppose the initiatives of child care. They point out that a considerable number of Canadians believe that the state and their tax dollars have no place in the area of child care which is a parental responsibility, except in cases of demonstrated financial need.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to act upon the problem of this limitation in choice of child care and restore to the system fairness and justice by opposing any form of national child care policy which does not provide equality of choice, therefore leaving the child care decision-making process with the parent, where it rightly belongs.

CHILD CARE—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of southern Ontario, specifically from the Cities of Stratford, Toronto and Ottawa.

The petitioners protest and state that families throughout Canada need high quality, available and affordable child care services. It has been repeatedly recommended, they say, that to make these services available to families the Government of Canada must introduce legislation containing national objectives and appropriate mechanisms for the development of a comprehensive non-profit child care system accessible to all families throughout Canada.

The Bill proposed by the Government, they note, does not contain either national objectives or necessary funding arrangements. It will not ensure that families have access to high quality child care. Consequently, it is not in the best interests of young children, women or families in Canada.

Therefore they call upon Parliament to withdraw the child care Act forthwith.

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-147

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Immediately before Your Honour puts the motion I wonder if I might make an inquiry of the House. There was an understanding among the Parties that this Bill would go to Committee of the Whole House and be dealt with in all stages this morning. I wonder if I can inquire as to whether or not it is possible to get unanimous consent to have the motion read that the Bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not really know where the Minister of State gets the impression that there have been some understandings regarding moving this legislation into Committee of the Whole. I would not want to rule that out as a possibility. However, I think that it would be appropriate that further discussions take place now.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that we should proceed as per today's Order Paper. If there are any changes later in the day or later this morning we can interrupt those proceedings and perhaps make some changes. However, at the moment I think we should proceed as per today's Order Paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition was consulted, and it is true the critic for the Bill gave his consent to proceeding with consideration in Committee of the Whole immediately after second reading. However, I have no idea how many speakers there will be on all sides of the House, so I really cannot say whether we will finish the proceedings on the Bill this morning, and I cannot agree with the Minister's suggestion that the House be asked to deal with all stages of the Bill before 1 p.m. I would ask him to be patient with us, and with the Bill, and I think that by the end of the day he will be satisfied.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, under those circumstances, I suggest that Your Honour should proceed to read the motion in its original form.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps there could be consultations among the parties in order to reach agreement on how the Bill is to be dealt with, possibly later on?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR HUMAN RIGHTS AND DEMOCRATIC DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-147, an Act to establish the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: On debate the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) has the floor.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is a singular honour to present this Bill before the House, because it is a distinctive and important way for this Parliament and this country to share in the world-wide recognition of the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. That achievement, so many years ago, was an historic turning point in the recognition that the rights of men and women do not depend upon the good will, the charity, or the caprice of rulers and governments, but are inherent within being human.

It is true that since 1948 men and women throughout this world have suffered tragic, tortuous abuses of their rights. That should not blind us to what has been achieved in the name of humanity. Among those achievements is the building up of a body of international law to which Governments can appeal and to which the critics of Governments can appeal. Although that body of law does not have the enforcement power that we could wish, it nonetheless provides a standard, a criterion by which Governments, institutions, and individuals can be measured and judged.

This remarkable document, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, has provided the foundation for the development of various declarations by Governments, including the Parliament of Canada. It can be said with accuracy that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is very much among the progeny of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Therefore, we can take heart from observing how, in 40 years, there has developed throughout the world a respect for the rights of people to be codified, articulated, and clarified in law, so that people can have some measure of civilized and rational defence against abuses. It is not enough to have only law; there must be power. Part of the power in any age, but particularly in this communication age, is knowledge, hence the importance of the proposal of Bill C-147, an Act to establish the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development.

The intent of this Bill and of this international centre will be to gather knowledge, assemble it, and disseminate it; to assist people seeking to enlarge their understanding and expand their knowledge, both within this country and beyond, so that the rights of men and women can enjoy an increased respect over what they have today.

I am very glad to say that this initiative was first recommended in June, 1986, in the report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations, whose eminent House of Commons Chairman, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), I am glad to say, is present in the House.

I am grateful to have had the honour of participating in the work of that committee, and of seeing that an idea conceived and articulated in that committee's report is now gaining the possibility of legislative fruition today. Its practical value has since been underlined by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, the Parliamentary Group on Haiti, and the Special Committee on the Peace Process in Central America.

We can note that the Bill's provisions reflect the general philosophy and approach outlined in the June, 1987, report entitled International Co-operation for the Development of Human Rights and Democratic Institutions. This report was the result of a consultation involving several hundred Canadian and international organizations and individuals which was undertaken on our behalf by two special rapporteurs, Professor Gisèle Côté-Harper and Dr. John Courtney. As Chairman of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Human Rights I am very glad to add my voice, as I trust there will be expression from other members of that committee in this debate, to support the general thrust and intent of this legislation and the centre to which it will give life.

The centre's mandate will be based on the International Bill of Human Rights. It will endeavour to conduct its affairs in a way characteristic of the country in which it will serve, and under whose authority and by whose support it will serve, namely, it will look out to the world. It will not be confined to this country alone. Its mandate will add a new and unique element to Canada's efforts to promote human rights internationally. It will offer Canadian experience and resources to groups and agencies in other countries to assist them to develop their own institutions in support of rights and freedoms.

The centre will be authorized to provide technical assistance, training, and resources for the development of electoral, legislative, judicial, and legal law enforcement and correctional systems. It may assist non-governmental groups such as churches, co-operatives, trade unions, professional associations, and other community-based associations in their effort to gain a stronger voice for citizens. It may also support organizations and programs which seek to secure an equality of rights for disadvantaged groups including women, native peoples, minorities, the disabled, and the aging. It will be enabled to do so within our own borders, for this centre will not be confined to the city in which it will have its headquarters, but it will be given the legislative authority and capability to conduct its work throughout this country, as it will be authorized to conduct its work in other countries within the law of those countries.

Given the need to respect the rights of men and women, given the need for knowledge to strengthen the efforts of legislative parliamentary committees, and the efforts of individuals, groups, and organizations within this country to do precisely that, it is absolutely imperative that there be such a centre which can provide the knowledge and the expertise required to make the protests, the initiatives, and the desires of such groups and persons effective.

An examination of this legislation will arouse in us a greater concern for carrying out the cause of human rights in this country. Recently we had put before the House a report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights entitled Human Rights and Aging in Canada. It is one example, and I refer to it simply as an illustration of the need to recognize, perhaps with a lack of consciousness on the part of many Canadians, how the rights of men and women can be abused, the right to seek employment with some expectation that the person will be judged only on his or her merits, the right to have the normal personal freedoms of a human being in this country, regardless of what institution a person is in due to age and infirmity. Such rights—elementary, basic—are not being honoured throughout Canada at this time, as our report shows.

• (1130)

We have made a beginning through that report, as other committees have made a beginning on behalf of other rights and in protest against other abuses. But we need to have an ongoing concern expressed by people who will be fully and wholeheartedly devoted to this cause, and this we will find in this proposed centre.

I am glad to say that, especially in view of the mandate that it has and the responsibility that it must exercise, this centre will be an independent corporation, it will receive statutory funding, increasing from $1 million in its first year of operation to $5 million in its fifth year. In subsequent years, financing will be provided through parliamentary appropriations.

The Government believes that this should be done on a multi-year basis, following parliamentary reviews every five years of the centre's operations. This will give assurance to Canadian and international partners of the independence and the stability of the centre, but at the same time the parliamentary reviews will ensure that the operations of the centre are consistent with the broad lines of Canadian foreign policy and the objectives of our development co-operation program.

You will note from the legislation that the centre's 13-person board of directors will include at least nine Canadians and three nationals of developing countries. Ten members will be appointed by Governor in Council. These in turn will select and appoint the members from developing countries. A selection committee has been established to make recommendations on the composition of the board. It comprises Mr. Gordon Fairweather, Chairman, formerly the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, and at one time a distinguished Member of this House, and as well, Mr. Marc Brault, Mrs. Margaret Catley-Carlson, Mrs. Francine Fournier, Mr. Rene Lacoste, Dr. William Saywell and Mr. Justice Walter Tarnopolsky. It is expected that the committee will provide its recommendations early this fall.

The centre's primary focus will be on activities of benefit to developing countries. We readily believe that this is not only in the tradition of Canada but that the need for it has never been greater. When one surveys the human rights records of various countries throughout the world using for reference, for example, the human rights guide offered by the publication The Economist, it is clear that the human rights record in so many developing countries is a tragic and sorry sight. Part of the need of development is the development of a greater respect for human rights.

Notwithstanding, the centre may engage in co-operation with developed countries as well. Programs for developing countries will be funded by means of the parliamentary appropriations provided in the Bill. Programs of co-operation with developed countries, however, will be financed from contributions received from public and private sources. The name of the centre is that recommended by the special parliamentary committee to which I referred earlier.

We believe that by basing the centre's mandate on the International Bill of Human Rights, this centre will ensure that its purpose is recognized throughout Canada and abroad, as a valid consequence of Canada's international responsibilities, and that it will be an important application of the report of that special committee, which laid such stress on Canada's foreign policy, having a place not only for recommendations and hopes, but also a much greater place for actions and achievements. We have here one of those achievements, the achievement of this international centre for the study of human rights, which will at least have the potential to bring into being in Canada an expanded knowledge of and a concern for human rights here and throughout the world.

I am very proud to present this legislation as an eloquent and practical reaffirmation of the commitment of Canada's Government and of the Parliament of Canada to constructive international action for the advancement of human rights and democratic institutions.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) on his presentation on the purposes and objectives of this institute, and Bill C-147, which is the Bill to effectuate that institution, the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development.

This concept is not something that has suddenly been brought forward in the last minute. Indeed, it is something that has been given a great deal of thought. In June, 1985, a special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate was created, which involved members from all three Parties of the House of Commons and from the Parties in the Senate. In its report called Independence and Internationalism, which was the result of its studies, which came out in June, 1986, it made a specific recommendation on this very subject. In that recommendation, it called for the establishment of an international institute of human rights and democratic development with carefully prepared guidelines for supporting activities by non-governmental organizations. This recommendation, found on page 105 of that report, comes from the research and concerns that were a result of a year's study of the human rights situation throughout the world, in an overview of international development. It resulted in what is known as the Simard-Hockin report, from which I have just read.

Following this presentation, there was then a Standing Committee of the House of Commons on External Affairs and International Trade—the regular standing committee—which met during the years of 1986 and 1987, and it came out with a report. The Government replied to the Simard-Hockin report, first of all, favourably and said that it was going to try to look into this matter and that it would be in a better position to consider this at a later time but that it was supportive of the idea. That idea was given further support by the External Affairs Committee in its report called For Whose Benefit. In that particular report, it said that it favoured the establishment of such a committee, such an institute.

This is not some new idea. It is something which emerges from two very extensive studies by two very reputable committees in their recommendation that such an institute be established. It is with great pleasure, therefore, that I would add the voice of our caucus to support the idea, in principle, of this institute.

We have to say that one of the main concerns that has emerged, however, from our studies in these committees is that the situation of Canada giving development assistance to countries abroad that are in clear violation of the human rights of the citizens of those countries, seems to be misunderstood, and if not, is at least causing confusion on the parts of the inhabitants of those nations. It seems to me, as if it were, in some people's minds, counterproductive for us to be helping Governments that are repressing people in the name of helping them. Because of the state of confusion, because of this apparent inconsistency and paradox, it has been necessary for us to examine and watch very carefully our relationship with those countries. How do we conduct our international assistance and how do we help those countries to foster human rights abroad are questions that must be asked. That is why this institute can be a cornerstone or one of the building blocks in this process of trying to help developing nations to establish better human rights situations.

We have to recognize that many of the developing countries, in fact many of the developed countries, carry out gruesome violations of human rights. Haiti, a country receiving development assistance, has a Government that is repressing freedom of speech, freedom to assemble and even the freedom to live of those who want to express any disagreement with the Government. In light of this kind of violation of human rights, we see confusion. There is confusion on the part of Canadians who ask how it is that we are giving assistance to a Government like that of Haiti when it is thoroughly repressing its people. Regrettably it is not only in Haiti but in other nations throughout the world that human rights are being brutally repressed. In some there is no such thing as human rights.

Look at the situation in Burundi. I tried to bring to the attention of the Standing Committee on Human Rights that we must look at what is happening in Burundi because of threatened genocide, not only threatened but, in fact, genocide of the Hutu tribe and majority of the people by a minority repressive regime. Here is a gruesome example of genocide. While it is correct to criticize the policies of the Soviet Union, Chile and so on in terms of their failure to live up to the idea of human rights, brutal genocide and the massacre of tens of thousands of people is going on elsewhere. This is the decimation of human lives on a gross and massive basis. Something must be done urgently in our international relations about the way in which we deal with human rights in other countries and the way in which we deal with our international development assistance to those countries.

The same thing could be said about the aboriginal people in East Timor and in Irian Jaya. The oppression by Indonesia of those people and the genocide which has taken place over many years is again another example of brutal murder and slaughter on a wholesale scale. It is the purposeful and wilful starvation of masses of people. Yet Indonesia receives international development assistance from Canada. Real and gruesome situations such as this led our committee to say that Canada must look at the question of human rights and our relationship to development assistance programs in the Third World. The Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade raised these questions and asked what Canada's policy will be.

Tragically the list goes on and on of nations where repression is part of the ordinary way of life. Canadians cannot look away and act as if these problems did not exist and blindly go on simply dealing with those countries and providing them with assistance. Some kind of action must be taken. For that reason the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade made some strong recommendations about what must be done, at least in the area of international development aid. In order to be able to be objective and fair the report said that for the development assistance program on the whole the committee saw merit in developing a classification grid for recipient countries that would provide incentives for good behaviour as well as penalties for poor human rights performance. Without minimizing the difficulties of such a system of categorization, the report continued, the committee put forward as a basis for consideration a suggested category system.

Let there be, first of all, a category called "human rights negative". This would apply in extreme cases, to those judged by the international community to be guilty of persistent, gross and systematic violations. In other words, the kinds of violations to which I have been referring, gross slaughters and genocide. The committee, proposed a classification grid system which would define that kind of repression.

The second category was a "human rights watch" for cases of less or variable concern where serious allegations have been made, but with many grey areas and where development progress is still possible.

The third category we recommended was "human rights satisfactory", which has an obvious meaning. Finally, we had "human rights positive".

With a classification grid we would, as a country, be able to say that if a nation is in a category that is satisfactory or positive, a green light would be given for full speed ahead for providing assistance and for the way in which it is given. But if a country were placed in a human rights category, watch or if a country were placed human rights in a negative category Canada would not be giving government to government aid but would work only on emergency relief for floods, fires and earthquakes or through non-governmental organizations such as the Red Cross, Amnesty International, church organizations and so on. That would be a comprehensive organized system of approach which the committee said needs to be put into place by Canada.

That was and is a sensible recommendation. The committee went on to recommend that we set up an evaluating system of nations as well. It is not enough merely to lay out the criteria. One also has to evaluate where the countries are falling in some category or other and to define under what category they fall under. This is no easy matter. It requires research, definitions and on the spot assessment. It requires the views of non-governmental organizations and of people throughout the world about what is happening in the various countries. It is not only a matter of stating criteria but also of observing what is happening in nations, assessing them in terms of this grid and classification, and then making a firm decision. It means an objective approach. It means not a willy-nilly approach of "Well, we will help this week but we will not help them that week", but a deep assessment based on criteria.

The Government replied to this report For Whose Benefit? In its reply it did not accept the committee's request that there be criteria laid down. It did not accept the recommendation that countries be categorized by this criteria. On March 3, 1988, in this House I expressed my concern. The Government said it would bring these problems before Cabinet and that countries would be judged by the Cabinet as to whether or not they would receive aid. I said that that simply was not good enough, that Cabinet is too busy to do this kind of thing. I asked in whose hands this would then be left and what kind of objective, satisfactory and comprehensive review would be made of the human rights situations in countries to which we are giving assistance. I have expressed my concern about this on many occasions, but I want to express my concern about it once again.

• (1150)

I hope that through the process of establishing this kind of an institute, there will be some possibility of establishing some guidelines or parameters that can be recommended to the Government so that the Government can take steps forward from its present position. Whichever Government may be in power will have to realize that objectivity and even-handedness is needed and that criteria must be set down so that we treat everyone the same. We should not treat one set of nations that may be friendly toward us in one way and those about which we are not too happy in another way. If we are to continue to be respected, we have to take an even-handed approach.

I think Canada has had a tremendously good record over the decades. The world respects Canada. The world respects our international development systems, precisely because we have been able until now to maintain, perhaps through good luck as well as through good management, objectivity and fairness.

In establishing this new institute, perhaps the Government will ultimately see a role for it in establishing criteria. Perhaps the Government will not want to have this organization monitor these criteria, but hopefully it will at least encourage and invite this institute to establish criteria by which the Government, the Department of External Affairs and CIDA, the arm for international development, will be able to have guidelines and make decisions on what kind of aid and how much aid it will be giving.

We hope that this institute will develop into something that will be even greater than what has been proposed. We hope it will give advice to External Affairs and to Cabinet on situations throughout the world. Of course, as is true in every system of Government, we can anticipate that bureaucrats at External Affairs and CIDA may want all the assessing on human rights to be kept in their empires, but they would be well served if they opened up the process and invited such an institution as this to play its role.

There are a number of things about this institute that encourage me. Obviously it can do much to help nations to improve their police forces so that they would be less brutal and to provide insight, instruction, inter-relations and comparing of notes with nations throughout the world, especially those we are helping with international development.

By the way, helping a nation is a two-way street. When we help, we are also helped. As we try to learn things from Third World nations, they learn from us about ways to improve law and order, justice and equality rights. As we discuss ways to eliminate discrimination, and certainly above all to eliminate brutality and the gruesome violations of human rights, that educational process is of benefit to Canada as well as to the nations with which we are working. It is a positive program.

Education is desirable and important. Research and development will be extremely important. I do hope that this organization will refine its ability to verify human rights situations throughout the world. It is not sufficient to merely observe whether or not a nation is violating human rights. We must lay down the conditions whereby we are able to assess whether those violations have or have not taken place.

There is much research and study that this institute can do in establishing the very conditions, objectivity and criteria for us to assess whether we are helping a brutal regime or whether we are helping a regime that is truly struggling to move upward into the light of day for the betterment of its people. Therefore, this institute must receive our enthusiastic support.

It has received recommendations from two very notable committees. The Government has now placed before us Bill C-147 to implement the institution. While we are certainly favourably inclined toward such a positive step, I hope all Hon. Members will also be critical about some of the things involved in this Bill. There are some things that I think Members of the House of Commons should think about. One is that the space devoted in the Bill to the objectives of this institute is very slight indeed. The description of its objectives and purposes amounts to a couple of paragraphs. The rest of the Bill deals with the institutional structure of the organization and the appointment process. Of course, those are important, but it is disappointing to see that so little is said in the short preamble about the specific objectives of this organization.

On the one hand, I am pleased that the objectives are not specifically set out, because that might provide room for us to move forward in the areas I have discussed. On the other hand, it seems to me that something of such great importance as this should at least set forth more fully and precisely the objectives of this institution. In any case, I bring this to the attention of Hon. Members. I would ask them to study the Bill and ask themselves if they would like to see anything more precise than that which is offered among some of the objectives included in the Bill.

I for one would like to see one of the duties of this institute being to develop criteria for human rights and criteria for monitoring human rights. Many things have already been done in this field through the Helsinki Accord. In terms of monitoring, many models have been put forward already. Still, it is at a crude level even at best, and this is an area in which Canada can give leadership in research and in recommending the way to monitor, understand and assess the criteria by which nations observe or violate human rights.

The second thing I would like to bring to the attention of the House is the matter of finance. We know that there is always a problem with money. All good things require money. This one is no exception.

The Bill proposes the assignment in the first year of $1 million for this institution and $2 million the next year, $3 million the next year, $4 million the next year and $5 million the next. Then Parliament would assess the situation and decide what further funds should be granted to it. It is a sensible approach to increase year by year the amount of money provided to the institute, but I am concerned about one thing, and I hope that the Hon. Member for Scarborough West and others who will deal with this Bill will consider it. That is, there are many people in non-governmental organizations in the field of human rights who feel, first, that $1 million may not be adequate to launch this institute, particularly if a large part of that amount goes for the basic infrastructure involved in setting up such an institute. They feel this is inadequate funding for the very first year, which is usually quite expensive for any organization or institution.

• (1200)

Second, and maybe even more important, non-governmental organizations are concerned that the Government expects the public and other institutions to support this institute. They are having a hard enough time maintaining their own work in a very competitive market. If the Government does not plan to support this organization in its entirety and plans to call on revenues which are already supporting other organizations, it will put a great strain on their ability to maintain the good work they are doing. In that sense it would be self-defeating.

The solution to that problem, according to these organizations, and I share the view, is that the Government should support this institute and not look for support among those who contribute money to organizations like the Red Cross, Amnesty International and others. Those organizations are already under great financial strain and such competition is viewed by them and their leaders as a very real threat to their ability to provide very valuable services to the country and the world.

My third point deals with the proposed name of this institute. This is an Act to establish an International Centre For Human Rights and Democratic Development. I know what it means and you know, Sir, what it means, at least I hope we do, when we speak about human rights. However, with respect to the words "democratic development" there is some concern. Perhaps your view, Sir, of the meaning of "democratic development", or that of other Members of the House, might differ from mine. However, I think it should be pointed out that in the report made by rapporteurs studying the matter for the Government, Madam Gisèle Côté-Harper and John Courtney, on pages 24 and 25, there is a concern expressed that this title may cause some difficulty for Third World nations when that organization is working with them.

We know, unfortunately, that the words "democratic republic" have been used by some of the most oppressive nations on earth. We know that the eastern bloc uses the words "democratic peoples republic" and so on and the word "democratic" can be misused. We know that the United States has often used the words "democratic government" as a euphemism for countries that will go along with American foreign policy. For that reason Third World nations, who see how the superpowers use these words to camouflage nationalistic intentions and the extension of their empires, are going to be suspicious when they see the words "democratic development".

What do those words mean? This is not some sort of savant's concern or dilettante's comments. It was expressed by those asked by the Government to study this matter. The recommendation is not to use those words but to use some others less prone to be misunderstood or misinterpreted as some kind of manipulative effort by Canada to establish our own way of life or values and interfere in the values and life systems of Third World nations. Therefore, I call on the Government to consider some revision in this area.

In conclusion, I hope the Government will proceed with this institute, widen its terms of reference, and that it will be more than merely an educational institution. Rather, I hope it will become involved in the pragmatic research that deals with criteria and monitoring of human rights violations, setting down criteria and trying to be objective. I hope it will flourish and that its title and finances will be reviewed.

I also hope that it will pass this House in all stages today, obviously because of pressing concerns of time. In saying that, I do think there should be further discussion on an objective basis with people from the human rights field and all political Parties in order to make it the vehicle Canadians want it to be, an effective, objective and humane institution which all of us can support. I commend all those involved in its conception and now in its fulfilment.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak in fundamental support of this Bill on behalf of my Party. It was introduced by my friend from Scarborough West and I congratulate him. I know he feels sincerely about the issues this legislation attempts to address. I am pleased to hear that the honourable Liberal Member has spoken in support of this Bill. That indicates fundamental support among all three Parties for the legislation.

Most Canadians, when they consider our contribution to international aid, believe we are attempting to contribute to something besides technical and economic development. I think there is a perception that Canada has certain other goals in mind when it provides aid, particularly to developing nations, with respect to the development of an environment in those countries which is respectful of human rights and pointing ultimately to the development of democratic institutions. Therefore, in a certain sense what we have here is kind of a motherhood thing, but all too often Canadians are confused by the fact that in certain nations there are crises precipitated due to infringements on the human rights of their citizens. There are any number of examples that could be cited.

Not too long ago a delegation made up of all three Parties went to Haiti to look at a situation in which democratic processes and human rights were being severely abused. The question arose as to how it is possible for Canada to provide bilateral aid or any aid that implies a relationship with a Government which would treat its citizens so badly.

My hon. colleague from the Official Opposition cited Burundi. In recent weeks Burundi has certainly raised that question once again in the minds of Canadians. We could cite Nicaragua, El Salvador, Chile, and Indonesia. All around the world there are developing nations which Canada tries to support in their progress, both on the economic and technological fronts, which nations call into question, such as whether Canada is in fact making any significant contribution to the development of democracy around the world.

This question has bothered parliamentarians. As my colleague indicated, a number of committees have addressed the issue. The Human Rights Committee of the House of Commons has studied, it as did the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade in 1987. The Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations also addressed the issue. As my colleague indicated, one of those committees indicated the necessity of having a set of criteria, a categorization of the countries to which Canada contributes aid which would relate the kind of aid and the delivery mechanisms of that aid to the human rights standards and practices of the various countries to which that aid would be distributed.

There is a great deal of concern that Canada, in providing overseas development aid, not be neutral in respect to the nature of the environment in which the people live, but rather that Canada's international aid have a purpose. One recognizes that meeting the elementary needs like food, clothing, housing, and so on are the key to the development of democracy, but you cannot have the development of democracy, even if all of those needs are met, if Governments suppress their own people, if human rights are abused, and if there is no progress toward the evolution of democracy.

This matter has been addressed in a number of ways. Two committees suggested the establishment of an international centre for human rights and democratic development. In 1986 the special joint committee recommended as follows:

> —we recommend that the government consider establishing an International Institute of Human Rights and Democratic Development with carefully prepared guidelines for supporting activities by non-governmental organizations. To ensure that the Institute is sensitive to the varying national perspectives on democratic development, particularly in the Third World, we recommend that its board of directors include international representation, on the model of the International Development Research Centre.

For Whose Benefit also recommended essentially the same thing. It said:

> The Committee therefore recommends that the International Institute for Human Rights and Democratic Development carry out its distinct mandate as an independent, free-standing body working closely with Canadian human rights groups and non-governmental organizations.

One of the problems which arises in considering the nature, structure, and terms of reference of this new centre is that, as I indicated earlier, it refers to itself as an International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development. A number of non-governmental organizations have expressed concern that while the Bill attends, in respect to human rights, to a kind of definition by saying that for the purpose of this Act the International Bill of Rights will constitute the reference and source for adjudicating what constitutes human rights, it fails to deal with what constitutes democracy and democratic development.

One of the concerns which all committees and very many parliamentarians have had is that Canada seeks to enhance human rights and democracy by a means which would not impose on other nations our own institutions and values. I would have to say that if we are unable at least to define democracy in terms of values then we have no goal in mind. We could not possibly know what it is we are trying to further by the establishment of this kind of institution.

One of the serious deficiencies of this piece of legislation is its failure to deal with that. As my hon. colleague from the Liberal Party recognized, this is a significant failure which might be addressed, I suppose, by omitting, as was suggested by the report prepared by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) by quoting Harper and Courtney. However, it seems to me that the merit of that proposition might make it difficult to deal with that question in a productive way because I am not so sure that we want to eliminate the prospect that this centre may in fact further the development of democratic institutions. Therefore, perhaps the omission of that reference is not in order.

One of the means that have been recommended to ensure that there would be an objective consideration of that aspect of this centre's function, that is, the furthering of democratic institutions, was to ensure that there be broad representation and broad linkages drawn between the centre and those organizations and institutions which could contribute to the delineation of those values and criteria that would permit us to evaluate the extent to which progress is being made toward the development of democratic institutions.

As you will recall, For Whose Benefit says that this would be a free-standing body working closely with human rights groups and non-governmental organizations. The Côté-Harper report suggested that there be significant lines drawn between CIDA and the Centre for Human Rights Research and Education at the University of Ottawa. Neither of these linkages are drawn in this legislation, yet it is this kind of linkage which would permit this centre to begin to address this issue of the furthering of democratic institutions.

If we look at the structure of the board of directors we are left with another problem. If we are going to address the issue of democratic institutions there is a great danger that a too narrowly appointed board might impose an ideological set of criteria. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there are those, particularly to the south of us, who consider that the only form of democracy which has any merit is that which ensures that there will be a totally free enterprise system with no state intervention, with none of the co-operation which occurs between private industry and Government in this country.

I hesitate to say this, but there may be those who could be appointed by a Government, without consultation of the sort which is called for in these various reports, to a board of directors which, from that ideological point of view, would in fact impede the kind of democratic development that we seek to have. What we want, I think, is to be able to communicate the ideal of democratic values which are common to the Canadian people. I quite frankly confess that I think Canada must reflect internationally—not by imposing its institutions or rigid definitions on other nations—a kind of Canadian consensus of the values underlying democracy and to apply criteria developed from those values in distributing aid.

We are very much concerned about this issue. We are trying to find some meaningful way of addressing it which will not impede the passage of this Bill today. Therefore, we suggest we do as this House did with respect to the Centre for International Peace and Security and the board for CSIS and have the appointees appointed with consultation among all Parties in this House. This seems to me to be a very simple means of addressing a number of those concerns which I and my colleague from the Liberal Party have addressed.

What we are saying is that we consider this legislation has merit, as the centre has merit. It is an institution that all Parties agree should be established. There may be some disagreement with respect to exactly how it will proceed to do its work, but I think that can be addressed by ensuring that all Parties in the House are involved in the appointment of the board, that the board will not be established on the basis of patronage or a too narrow ideological test.

Let me indicate that the concerns we have raised are concerns expressed to us by a number of non-governmental organizations such as OXFAM, the Canadian Coalition for International Co-operation, the Parliamentary Centre for International Studies, the North-South Institute, the Canadian Network of NGOs, Amnesty International, the Task Force on Churches and Corporate Responsibility and so on. All of these organizations had concern about the inclusion of the reference to democratic development without there being in the legislation any sense of what that means, and with the failure of any kind of connection or representation upon the board of directors of this centre from CIDA or the University of Ottawa Centre. We need some means of ensuring that the centralizing tendency of the Department of External Affairs, and the prospect of potential ideological thrust being imposed upon this board, is dealt with through a simple amendment which I will propose during the consideration of Committee of the Whole.

While this Bill has a kind of centralizing tendency in the sense that all members of the board except three are appointed by the Government, we have a decentralizing counterforce to this by moving the institution to Montreal. This does not really accomplish the kind of dispersal of involvement we would prefer. We think it would be much better to consider the structure of the board as a more reasonable way in which to ensure that there is a decentralizing aspect to the character of the board and, therefore, addressing the issue of human rights and the development of democratic institutions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions and comments. We are now entering debate under Standing Order 55(2), 20 minutes plus questions and comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-147, An Act to establish the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development. For personal and other reasons, I have always been greatly interested in this subject. The University of Ottawa, in my riding of Ottawa—Vanier, has had a centre to research and promote human rights since 1981.

This centre was founded in 1981 by the Senate of the University of Ottawa, at the initiative of Walter F. Tarnopolsky, who is now a judge. This centre works very well with an annual budget of around $750,000, part of which comes from the University, part from the federal and provincial Governments, and a large part from research contracts awarded to the Institute.

Since the Government has now tabled a Bill to establish the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development, I wish to make some constructive comments on this Government initiative, Mr. Speaker.

I noticed that in their speeches, the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) and the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) both referred to many countries that have serious problems with human rights, fundamental rights, democratic rights. They listed a series of countries. I recall some that they named, like Haiti, Burundi, Chile, Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, etc. We all know that, we see it every day in the world, and we have troubling examples of abuses of all kinds, distressing examples of the inhuman treatment inflicted by Governments that show very little concern for human rights.

So I am very glad to support this Government initiative and, for the benefit of the House, I would like to read the mission that the Government has assumed by establishing this institute or International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development. I quote clause 4:

> The objects of the Centre are to initiate, encourage and support cooperation between Canada and other countries in the promotion, development and strengthening of institutions and programs that give effect to the rights and freedoms enshrined in the International Bill of Human Rights, and, in carrying out those objects,
> (a) to support developmental programs and activities for the benefit of developing countries; and
> (b) to foster research and education, discourse, the exchange of information and collaboration among people and institutions in Canada, developing countries and elsewhere.

So this is a statement of the Centre's mission. And I think that if some were to criticize the mandate, or mission, it would be a good start, Mr. Speaker. It may be difficult for some Canadians to reconcile themselves with the Centre's name, to know how this concept of democratic development, for example, will be defined. We in our country understand it since democracy is part of our system; it is a constantly evolving way of life that we know well.

But one democratic right to promote—and I hope that we will exercise it soon—is the right to vote. Not everyone has freedom of expression and free speech. Not all countries on earth enjoy this right. Neither does everyone have the right to be represented.

When we are talking about human rights, we must not forget that these democratic rights are very important. However, the Bill gives no indication what the Government wants to do or how we define democratic rights.

The Bill fails to provide any specific plan for improving the situation with respect to human rights in the Third World. I hope that the Centre through its Board of Directors will take steps to establish a program and define areas of activity, thereby perhaps expanding its mandate somewhat to try and cover democratic rights as well and promote those rights.

I was thinking that to promote American or Canadian-style democracy in developing countries is not necessarily a good thing right away. We may have to start by offering some encouragement and promoting programs that would help these people understand that our individual freedoms, our fundamental rights are important to the development of a nation, and that they would do well to make some changes in the way they live. They could perhaps be persuaded to take steps that would make these countries more democratic and more respectful of human rights.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want us to be accused of imperialism, and I don't want us to export our way of life to these countries. I think that when we talk about co-operation and foreign aid, we are talking about a desire to help these people reach goals that we, at least many of us, have already attained here in Canada today.

Mr. Speaker, another concern is the appointment of the Board of Directors. In the Bill at Clause 7, it says:

> 7. There shall be a Board of Directors of the Centre consisting of a Chairman of the Board, a President of the Centre and eleven other directors to be appointed as provided in sections 8 to 10.

Mr. Speaker, with my colleague I considered presenting an amendment whose effect would be to have the Board appointed after consultation with the Leaders of the Opposition and the other Parties in the House, but especially with the NGOs, the non-government organizations.

[English]

I thought that we would like to have these specialists, these active groups of NGOs consulted. After all, who can better carry the mission to fruition? Who can better express what Canadians feel without that nuance, that possibility of government Order in Council appointments exclusively done by the political process? I thought that that would be something the Government would accept, that is, that the NGOs, the specialists in the field of human rights and, of course, the other political Parties, would be consulted prior to the naming of the 13 members of the board.

• (1230)

I hope that we will proceed with such a course of action and that at committee stage such an amendment will be possible.

The other point—

[Translation]

I am referring to financing. Of course the Bill contains a pretty clear financial schedule covering six years, starting in 1988:

> 28. There shall be paid to the Centre out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for the purpose of supporting developmental programs and activities for the benefit of developing countries . . .

. . . one million dollars in 1988, two million in 1989, three million in 1990, and so forth, so that by 1992, we have the amount of five million dollars in the fiscal year commencing on April 1, 1992.

Clause 28 goes on as follows:

> (f) in each fiscal year thereafter, such amount as may be appropriated by Parliament.

The only thing I want to say about this, Mr. Speaker, is that I hope the Government does not intend to fund this institution by reducing the budget of CIDA or of any other government organization involved in rights. I certainly hope so and, in committee of the whole, I will ask the Minister whether he intends to confirm that indeed new money will be allocated to the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development.

This I consider to be a very important point because I would not want such organizations as CIDA to be forced to curtail their activities. I do not think it would be appropriate to raise a smokescreen and make people believe a new centre is to be established when in fact the funds come from another agency which will have to reduce its workload.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, and this may be somewhat more personal, it has been decided that the centre will be located in the Montreal Urban Community. As a matter of fact, clause 19 of the Bill stipulates:

> 19. The head office of the Centre shall be in the Montreal Urban Community.

Mr. Speaker, this political decision on the part of the Government flies in the face of the recommendation made by the committee which had been appointed to consider this objective or this idea.

[English]

I know that my colleague who spoke before me referred to this. However, I would like to refer again to section 78 of the report to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) entitled International Co-operation for the Development of Human Rights and Democratic Institutions, dated June 30, 1987. The special rapporteurs Gisèle Côté-Harper and John Courtney explained how they feel that the international centre should not be called anything else but the "International Centre for Human Rights and Institutional Development", which is a modification, a clearer definition of what we meant.

At recommendation 89 they propose the creation by Act of Parliament of a Crown corporation, type C, to be known as the International Centre for Human Rights and Institutional Development, Centre internationale pour le développement des droits humains et des institutions, composed of a board of directors and a secretariat. It will be located in the National Capital Region. Evidently, the Government does not feel that the National Capital Region is going to be getting this centre since in the Bill it states Montreal. I do not object to its being located in Montreal. However, I point to the experience acquired at the University of Ottawa in my riding over the last seven years with the library that is in place and the reputation that has been built up by this centre. It is consulted regularly by international groups. It has a window on this great problem of human rights. Over the years it has developed an expertise which to me is a proud acquisition at the initiative of the university. I hope that there would not be a duplication, for example. I hope that the centre in Montreal will use the library, the research facilities and the expertise available at the University of Ottawa to pursue the objectives set out in this Bill.

I know that in the Bill it states that the centre may have activities anywhere in Canada. I hope that there will be active use and support of the Ottawa University centre.

I wish to make it clear that I am not objecting to the centre being located in Montreal. I will deplore it if we are duplicating services. I hope that we will not be doing that. I say to the Government and the board that it will be more than welcome at Ottawa University to co-operate and work fully with the new centre for international human rights and democratic development.

• (1240)

Having said those few words, and knowing there are Members who would also like to speak, I shall resume my seat and speak again at report stage.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to rise in my place and, once again on behalf of the New Democratic Party, indicate our support for the establishment of the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development.

I wish to pay tribute to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), who has worked tirelessly for the establishment of this centre in committees and in working with non-governmental organizations for a number of years now. My colleague has noted some concerns that we have with respect to the appointments process, and indeed we will be moving an amendment that would ensure that there be consultation with leaders of the opposition Parties in the House of Commons before appointments are made to the board of directors of this centre. I hope that that amendment will be supported by Members of the House.

I would have thought it desirable that, just as there is consultation with non-governmental organizations involved in the field of peace, development, and disarmament, before appointments are made to the board of the Centre for International Peace and Security, so too should there be such consultation before appointing members of this particular board. I hope that that particular proposal will also meet with the support of the Government.

Among other things, the objects of the centre include strengthening institutions and programs that give effect to the rights and freedoms enshrined in the International Bill of Human Rights. It is fundamentally important to underline the fact that the International Bill of Human Rights includes not only the question of the international covenant of civil and political rights but also the international covenant of economic, social, and cultural rights, and the optional protocol to the international covenant on civil and political rights. As the great Canadian poet and political thinker, Francis Scott, wrote: "The trappings of democracy hang loosely on an emaciated body politic". I am very pleased that an important part of the mandate of this centre will be to encourage economic development to assist those who are poor and powerless in other parts of the world. In particular, I welcome that part of the mandate.

With respect to the other part of the mandate, the promotion and strengthening of democracy in other parts of the world, I wish to highlight two or three areas on which I believe it to be particularly important that the centre focus its work in the very near future.

Two days ago in Toronto I spoke at a rally of some 2,000 people commemorating the fifteenth anniversary of the bloody overthrow of the Allende Government in Chile. Since that time, 15 years ago on September 11, 1973, we have seen a reign of terror in Chile where over 30,000 people have been brutally murdered, have disappeared, have been forced into exile, or have been injured or tortured. For example, I think of Carmen Gloria Quintana, who was terribly burned and who has now returned to fight for democracy in her country.

I would hope that the international centre, which is proposed to be established in this Bill, would, as an early priority, turn its attention to the importance of restoring democracy in Chile. I also hope that it would look at a number of concrete recommendations in that regard, for example, the fact that Canada should not be voting in favour of World Bank loans to Chile. In December, 1987, Canada was the only country, together with Britain, to vote in favour of a World Bank loan to Chile. It is important that we express our opposition clearly in the international forum. It is important that we stop any trade in military or paramilitary equipment with Chile. It is important that we urge the junta to hold free and open elections without any exclusions. The fraudulent constitution that provides for a so-called protected democracy is obviously profoundly undemocratic.

Finally, in the context of Chile, it is essential that the Government issue visas and call for the release of the 15 political prisoners in that country who face the death penalty. I was in Chile a little over one year ago and I met with one of those prisoners. Certainly, we have to recognize the fundamental injustice that faces those people. There has been reference to terrorism by Pinochet. Surely the greatest terrorist in Chile today, the man with the blood of thousands of innocent Chileans on his hands, is Augusto Pinochet himself. I met with the mothers of the disappeared. I met with the families of victims of torture. I met with women in Valparaiso who work with an organization called CODEPU that has been doing a courageous job of assisting political prisoners, and assisting the families of the victims of torture and of the disappeared. I hope that the international centre will do what it can in areas such as Chile to help seek the restoration of democracy.

I hope that the centre will turn its attention to a part of the world that for too long has been ignored, which is the tragic situation of the people of East Timor and the brutality and violence to which they have been subjected by the Government of Indonesia.

Finally, I want to turn to one other area that I believe is an important area for this international centre to look at a very early date, which is the whole question of the rights of the Palestinians in the Middle East. The Palestinian nation has a generation of young people who have grown up under occupation in the occupied West Bank and Gaza. In that area we have seen a situation in which the Government of Israel has subjected the Palestinians to brutality, violence, beatings, gassings, shootings, to deportations which are clearly in breach of international law, to the sealing of houses and the bulldozing of others. I would hope that the international centre would look at this whole question on an urgent basis. I would hope that the international centre would recognize the importance of looking at the whole question of the rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, to an independent state which would obviously be subject to international safeguards to ensure that it posed no military threat whatsoever to Israel, but an independent state in the West Bank and Gaza.

I also believe that it is essential that we call for an international conference of all those parties that are affected by this tragic situation, at which the Palestinians and their chosen representatives, the Palestine Liberation Organization, should be represented. It is essential that this great historic wrongdoing finally be undone, that this occupation be ended, and that the Palestinians be entitled to treatment with justice and democracy in their own land.

These are some of the issues that I believe it is essential that the international centre deal with in the early days of its existence. I am pleased to support the establishment of this centre. It is long overdue. I know that it was a recommendation of an all-Party parliamentary committee. I want to pay tribute to all Members of the House, including the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) who chairs the Standing Committee on Human Rights, the Hon. Member for Eglinton Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), and in particular, my colleague and our spokesperson in this area, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville, who has brought this important international centre to fruition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In view of the fact that there is going to be an amendment and probably further debate on one of the sections, shall I call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville.

• (1250)

Mr. McCurdy: Since there is only a single amendment, we are prepared to let it go through second reading and deal with the amendment before one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All right.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Chairman, we are starting the Committee of the Whole stage and it is getting close to one o'clock. I think that you will see, if you seek unanimous consent, that there is agreement to not seeing the clock at one o'clock and going on for a few minutes just past one o'clock.

Mr. Gauthier: On that same point, Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: On the same point, Mr. Chairman, I don't think there is unanimous consent to extend debate. We have about nine minutes left. Why not wait until one o'clock to see what happens? If the Hon. Member decided to co-operate with us, our questions might be shorter than if he pushed us in a corner and, in the process, made us work longer than necessary.

Mr. Grisé: I don't want to start a debate with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), but I think we will certainly co-operate with the Opposition Parties.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-147, an Act to establish the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 6 carry?

[Translation]

On Clause 6—Capacity in Canada

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Centre may carry on its activities throughout Canada.

I don't want to amend the Bill, but I would like to know if the Hon. Member responsible for the Bill could give me the assurance that the Centre will exercize its activities, including annual meetings and research projects, consultations with communities or consultations with various countries here in the National Capital, and I am thinking of our embassies here in Ottawa and of all the Government expertise we have in Parliament, could the Hon. Member give me the assurance that at least one of the Centre's annual meetings will be held in the National Capital so that these embassies, these experts on human rights and the University of Ottawa's Centre, which, I imagine, he knows is an extremely valuable Centre with a very extensive library recognized as one of the best in the world, could the Hon. Member give me the assurance or inform the House that the Centre intends to have meetings here in the National Capital at least once a year?

[English]

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I share with the Hon. Member his respect for the University of Ottawa's library and Centre on the Study of Human Rights, which is renowned throughout Canada and beyond, and from which many of us have learned in the past. I cannot conceive of this centre ignoring that institution, nor of the proposed centre ignoring the resources that are available through other institutions in this city.

It is clear that the legislation does not require the proposed centre to work in Ottawa, but I think that we can believe that reason will drive it in this direction and that we can confidently expect that the centre will make full use of the rich resources of the Ottawa-Hull capital region.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, as you know, I cited some concerns with respect to this legislation, concerns that I suggested may be addressed by an amendment to the Bill. It is an amendment that I have reason to believe the proponents will accept, because it recognizes the essentially non-partisan nature of our approach to foreign aid and—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I do not wish to cut the Member off, but we are on Clause 6 and I believe his comment is on Clause 7. Shall I carry on with Clause 6 first?

Clause 6 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 7 carry?

On Clause 7—Board of Directors

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Chairman, my hunger expedited my intervention. We did arrive at the appropriate place. I would hope that what I said earlier would still apply. I would move an amendment as follows:

That Clause 7 of Bill C-147 be amended

(a) by deleting line 38 on page 3 and substituting the following:

"7. (1) There shall be a Board of Directors of" (b) by adding the following after line 42.

"(2) All appointments pursuant to this section shall be made after consultation by the Minister with the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of every other recognized Party in the House of Commons."

Mr. Gauthier: I am speaking in support of this amendment, Mr. Chairman. I hope that the Government will accept this amendment. Indeed, it is one that would allow for a more non-political, non-partisan assurance that the nominations will be made to this board, to this centre, in a manner which would possibly make it more transparent to Canadians, that indeed, it is not a patronage appointment, it is not a nomination to the centre done by the Governor in Council, that is the Prime Minister and the Cabinet, but rather it is done through the consultation process with the Leader of the Opposition and Leaders from other recognized Parties in the House.

I would have liked to see the NGOs also involved in this process of consultation, but I understand the difficulties with that. I would have liked some experts in the field to have also been consulted. I take it that that will be part of this whole process, and I would recommend strongly to the Government that it keep in mind the non-governmental organizations. If we keep the amendment, these organizations will be important to the Government and to us.

• (1300)

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Chairman, the Government is willing to accept the amendment. I should point out to the House that already the process of consultation of interested and informed parties has begun. So far hundreds of letters have been sent to interested persons and groups in this field to ask for recommendations of prospective nominations for the proposed board and already many and useful suggestions have been received. Such consultations will obviously continue. We are certainly happy to expand that consultative process to include the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of any other recognized Party in the House.

The Deputy Chairman: Before I put the amendment, under "Organization", it should read "by adding the following after line 42." Is that so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. Members have heard the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 7, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 7, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 8 to 27 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 28—Payments to Centre

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make sure it is clear. Do I understand correctly that, according to the schedule, the amount of funds available will be immediately $1 million—if this Bill passes, of course—and that another $2 million will be available on April 1, 1989, so by April, 1989, $3 million will be available? Is that correct?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Chairman, that will be correct except for any moneys expended.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member heard my speech at second reading. Can he assure me that this is new money, that this is not money coming from existing budgets of, say, CIDA or other organizations of the Government in similar work? Is it a request for new money that the Government is making, and can we have an assurance that those other budgets will not be diminished by the amounts allowed in this Bill?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Chairman, to my knowledge, this represents money to be received from an expanding developmental program.

Clause 28 agreed to.

Clauses 29 to 32 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the Hon. Member for his comments on the problem relating to the definition of "democratic development". I thought at this stage I would bring this matter forward again.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Chairman, we are satisfied that the proposed title in the Bill adequately and clearly states the nature of the proposed centre.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (for the Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For the record I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member who presided over the deliberations today. I think he did a very good job and deserves our recognition and thanks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.06 p.m. the House took recess.

EMPLOYMENT

WAGE AND SALARY TRENDS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the income disparity between those at the top and those at the bottom has increased sharply since the Conservative Government took office, with only those at the top keeping pace with or in some cases substantially outstripping inflation, says a report which was published recently by the Ottawa based Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives.

The cost of living has increased by 13 per cent since September, 1984. Over that period, the incomes of salaried workers have risen by 12.7 per cent, while managers' incomes rose by 22.6 per cent and senior executives' salaries rose by 43.7 per cent, the report went on to say. Thus, for every category of worker in Canada except management and senior executives, wages and salary increases trailed inflation.

The researchers found this to be a worrisome development for most workers since wages usually rise during a period of expansion. It is not hard to conclude that little of the over-all growth during the past four years is attributable to the Conservative Government's policy, as the report argues.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

PARTNERSHIP WALK FOR THIRD WORLD DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I understand that last Sunday while I was participating in the Partnership Walk for Third World Development in Toronto, you were taking part in a similar walk in Vancouver. As you know, these walks to increase awareness of international development among Canadians are sponsored by the Aga Khan Foundation of Canada and the proceeds raised are matched by CIDA.

The Foundation was established by His Highness the Aga Khan, spiritual leader of the Ismaili Muslims. There are about 40,000 Canadian Ismailis, and since coming to Canada a few short years ago they have made an enormous contribution to our country.

In my community, Ismaili Canadians sponsor Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, Citizenship Courts, and blood donor clinics. Sunday's Partnership Walk for Third World Development is a further demonstration of the full participation by Ismaili Canadians in the wider Canadian community and it is a great example for all of us to follow.

DANGEROUS SUBSTANCES

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF TOXIC WASTE PLANT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Government of British Columbia appears determined to proceed with a four-company consortium's proposal to construct a toxic waste plant, including an incinerator, treatment plant and dump, within the Thompson-Fraser watershed near Cache Creek, British Columbia. This plant will attract between 12,000 and 250,000 tonnes of toxic waste from all parts of the Province of British Columbia as well as from beyond the provincial boundaries.

The British Columbia Medical Association has called for a full public inquiry into hazardous waste management before rushing to build this plant. The Thompson Watershed coalition has fought the proposal from its inception because of a host of unanswered questions and an inadequate referendum process, and has the support of thousands, including cattlemen and fishing camp operators in the immediate area.

Since the provincial Government refuses to guarantee public participation in the decision-making process regarding this toxic waste facility, I call upon the federal Government, through the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), to apply all influence possible to have a judicial inquiry initiated with intervener funding so the public can have full confidence that the future of this toxic waste facility will be in their long-term best interests.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ACCOUNTABILITY FOR CRIMINAL ACTIONS

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, yesterday a Supreme Court of Ontario jury rejected Mr. René Vaillancourt's application for parole after serving 15 years of his 25-year sentence for the murder of Toronto Police Constable Leslie Maitland. In so doing, the jury reflected the growing concern of Canadians at large that our judicial system in general and our parole system in particular must do everything possible to protect public safety and to ensure that those responsible for society's most reprehensible crimes are held fully accountable for their actions.

Similar sentiments were expressed by Members of this House last year during the capital punishment debate. Indeed, many of those Members on opposite sides of the death penalty issue were united in their insistence that prison terms needed to correspond more fully to the severity of the crimes committed.

Therefore, in order that Canadians may have respect for and confidence in our laws, let me urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to amend the Criminal Code by removing the 15-year review to ensure that a life sentence for premeditated, first-degree murder is precisely that, a prison term of not less than 25 years' duration.

EMPLOYMENT

CALL FOR OLDER WORKERS ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my dismay and frustration with the Government of Canada's refusal to implement an older workers adjustment program. Some 30 months ago this Government promised the Canadian Parliament and Canadian people that it would implement a specific program for older workers. To date we have had nothing but broken promises from the Government of Canada.

In fact, the Government has gone one step further. It has now blamed this on its provincial colleagues. This is the typical Tory way.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) knows that Canadians between the ages of 55 and 65 are facing unemployment rates higher than those faced during the 1981 recession. Two Commons committees dominated by Conservative Members have called for this program to be implemented immediately.

I call upon the Government of Canada to honour its commitments and promises to the Canadian people. However, it is too late. The Canadian people will no longer buy false promises from Tory Members of Parliament, and we will face them on the hustings with that issue first and foremost in the next federal election.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

MULTIPLE-USE LAND POLICY URGED FOR ONTARIO'S TEMAGAMI AREA

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this past Labour Day weekend, frustrations harboured by the Temagami area workers, their wives and their children, frustrations caused by over two and a half years of inaction by the Premier of Ontario, were vented in a mass demonstration.

The residents of the Temagami area have seen a provincial Government stalling and waffling, a provincial Government which is not serious about arriving at a solution to the controversial situation in Temagami and not concerned about the livelihoods of the people involved.

We are not talking about the workers in one sawmill. We are talking about families, a community, and the disastrous effects felt by those living in the entire Timiskaming region. For the residents of Timiskaming to have to go to the extent of creating a roadblock, breaking the law, just to get the attention of their Government at Queen's Park, is shameful and disastrous.

For years, hunters, anglers, miners, loggers and tourism operators shared this renewable resource. We shared the Temagami forests. The local residents and northern Ontarians can tell the Premier and the Liberal Government in Toronto that they have co-operated over the years.

A multiple-use land policy is desired for the Temagami area's continued stability and growth. It is about time that the Premier and his Cabinet started to listen to this responsible message from the residents of northern Ontario.

AIR CANADA

PRIVATIZATION CONSEQUENCES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have two examples of how Air Canada's privatization is changing the operation of this outstanding corporation for the worse. Every Air Canada's employee is now receiving a glossy folder offering applications for Air Canada shares. These are being distributed special delivery at a cost of $4.48 per envelope. Imagine having more than 20,000 envelopes delivered at a cost of about $90,000. No wonder investment dealers across Canada are complaining about this expensive sales pitch for shares that will pay no dividends.

Contrast this sales campaign with the lay-offs which are taking effect at Mirabel where half the cargo personnel will lose their jobs. For the 48 workers at Mirabel who will be unemployed as of October 29, share applications will be cold comfort indeed. No wonder the major unions which represent Air Canada employees remain implacably opposed to privatization.

The unions can see a future of lay-offs, contracting out, and contraction of Air Canada services along with the shares which will pay no dividends. The people of Canada will receive no dividends either from the sale of the corporation which they already own. Should the Government opposite not consider whether the privatization which it so mindlessly promotes does something other than give Air Canada management a free hand to turn this company into another U.S.-style badly performing airline?

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY'S POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the reign of error brings to mind a wheather vane. Where does the Liberal Party stand with respect to free trade? On October 26 last year the leader stated in the House that he would tear up the agreement. On July 26 this year the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) proposed a series of bilateral amendments with the United States and other countries.

Last Friday the Quebec Liberal lieutenant said that his leader would not tear up the agreement. When the Liberal leader says: Let the People Decide, I am sure he means: Let each of my caucus members decide because I do not know which way to turn and my wife has not yet given me an order concerning free trade.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT RATES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment figures released last Friday indicate that unemployment has gone up for two successive months, with an August rate of 8 per cent and more than one million Canadians out of work. It is now five years since the recession of 1982-83, and the rate of unemployment has never been lowered to the pre-recession rate of 7.5 per cent in 1981.

Once again part-time employment increased while full-time jobs decreased. Unemployment was over 10 per cent in five provinces and the rate for youth was 12.2 per cent. The most troubling figures relate to older workers for whom the unemployment rate is now worse than it was during the recession of 1982.

Despite this, after two and a half years of promises, the Government has not delivered on its program for older worker adjustment. On the contrary, it has cut unemployment programs by 32 per cent since 1984. So much for the Government's rhetoric on jobs, jobs, jobs.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SIGNING OF DENE-MÉTIS LAND CLAIMS AGREEMENT AND NORTHERN ACCORD

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, last week two historic agreements were signed by the Prime Minister in the Northwest Territories.

The first, signed in Fort Rae on September 5, was the Agreement in Principle respecting the Dene-Métis land claims. Nearly two decades of negotiations went into its making.

The second, signed in Yellowknife on September 6, was the Northern Accord, modelled on similar hydrocarbon agreements in other provinces. The Territories will now receive their own oil and gas royalties. Their own revenues will grant real independence of action in matters within their own domain.

These two agreements demonstrate the commitment of this Government to the constitutional and economic development of the North.

RAILWAYS

REVIEW OF SUBSIDIES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, residents of Thunder Bay are pleased to know that Transport Canada has requested the National Transportation Agency to review the regional impact of the subsidies paid to the railways under the Western Grain Transportation Act.

My constituents and I are profoundly concerned that these subsidies could so reduce the cost to the shipper of having southern Manitoba grain hauled to the West Coast that the shippers would be encouraged to ignore the higher total cost and send the grain west rather than to Thunder Bay and down the St. Lawrence Seaway.

We expect the review requested of the NTA to be thorough and fair. We require the NTA to establish that the higher cost of hauling grain over the mountains is not averaged out in a manner that produces discrimination against the St. Lawrence Seaway.

I have urged the head of the NTA to hold public hearings on the Western Grain Transportation Act in Thunder Bay and other centres of Canada's grain trade. I urge him to provide us with the information we need to assess the fairness of the subsidies paid to the railways.

The Western Grain Transportation Act requires an open and honest review. Only such a review will ensure that operations under the Act are fair to all the ports.

TRADE

BENEFITS OF FREE TRADE

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, here are some of the assessments made by well-known economist Bernard Landry, former Quebec External Trade Minister in the Lévesque administration. Speaking in support of free trade, M. Landry said that " . . . the agreement is the envy of all western countries . . . The United States is the major client of most countries throughout the world . . . Everybody else must be satisfied with multilateral negotiations (GATT)."

The interesting aspect, Mr. Landry said, " . . . is the issue of social measures . . . Had my many progressive friends in Canada convinced me that Canada's social measures would have been threatened, right then and there I would have disregarded all my convictions as a free trader and my whole experience based on economic problems.

Past experience and personal backgroud make me very much aware of social issues, and I have yet to see the least indication that a free trade agreement would spell trouble for Canada's social security fabric.

Take Sweden as an example. What is the development strategy of Sweden, probably the leading western nation when it comes to social measures? Free trade, as it has always been. Sweden happens to be a founding member of the European free trade alliance which signed such an agreement with the European Economic Community."

Free trade for Canada, Mr. Speaker, we will soon be voting on that issue!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA FOR RECEIPT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise once more to express my displeasure at the Minister's inaction on the issue of unemployment insurance eligibility in the whole southern part of New Brunswick.

Why does the Minister refuse working men and women of New Brunswick the same eligibility conditions she grants those of Quebec?

Why does she refuse to make the necessary changes to do justice to the rural population of New Brunswick?

Statistics Canada tells us that the sixteen-week unemployment insurance eligibility period will remain unchanged for yet another month!

[English]

Why does the Minister drag her feet? Why is she being so unfair to the people of New Brunswick? She should act now and apply the ten-week eligibility period. The problem has been studied to death. It is now time for action.

THE ENVIRONMENT

WATER POLLUTION—RESPONSIBILITY OF PAPER MILLS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, recent spills from the pulp and paper mills in Saguenay—Lac Saint-Jean will not longer be ignored by the various socio-economic interest groups and the people in our region. Whether we are talking about Cascade, Donohue, Abitibi Price or any other companies, we will no longer tolerate spills in our waterways.

Today, the environment comes first, and the time has come for company management to change their attitudes and their approach.

A word of caution: The people of Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean don't want a Greenpeace solution. We don't want to close our factories and put our workers on welfare. We reject an approach that is tantamount to suicide.

The time has come for us to get together and find solutions that will respect the environment and at the same time protect our jobs. The two cannot be separated. That is the challenge we must face, and the next major conference on the environment in our region will be a unique opportunity to report on the present situation and identify solutions.

ELECTIONS

CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is here because he can hear publicly that in this cat and mouse game he is playing with the federal election he is showing contempt for the people of Ontario, in particular because the municipal elections, which have been scheduled for some time now, are almost on a collision course with the federal election.

I understand why the Prime Minister takes that view because he knows he is going to be blown out of the water in the Province of Ontario. There is not going to be a Tory left in Toronto after we have finished with them, but we want to urge him: don't delay, call the election today, because the people of Ontario want to have a little respite after they blow the Tories away before the civic elections are held in every community across the province. Don't show contempt for the people of Ontario, please, Mr. Prime Minister.

Oral Questions

HOUSING

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—EFFECT OF MUNICIPAL PROPERTY TAX SYSTEM

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is bad enough when the shortage of serviced land in Metropolitan Toronto causes the price of housing to skyrocket, but it is absolutely outrageous when the municipal property tax system can actually encourage land owners to keep residential land off the market. In Scarborough, for example, one construction company has 14.5 acres of residential land which is used and taxed as farm land. Although the property has an estimated market value of $10 million, its assessment is an unbelievable $1,506 and the taxes are therefore only $491 a year.

Let us be clear, the owners are not acting illegally. The fault is with the Governments of the municipality and the province and I urge them to remove the possibility of this kind of scandal and help us expand the availability of housing land.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT RECORD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and deals with the record of his Government on the environment. The truth is that when the Prime Minister came to power he inherited a whole range of ongoing Liberal programs including renewable energy, lead reduction in gasoline, toxic chemical research, water conservation, and domestic acid rain reduction.

For four years the Prime Minister has cut and cut and cut. He slashed the Atmospheric Environment Service. He cut the Inland Water Conservation Service and eliminated the Environmental Secretariat of the National Research Council. He cancelled the Guelph-Toronto Toxicology Centre and cut research in Niagara River pollution.

Why, on the eve of an election, has the Government announced a series of new programs, including a program for renewable energy research, when the Prime Minister eliminated that very program only two months after he assumed power in the last election?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): Why has the Government discovered only today that lead in the environment poses a serious threat to human health, particularly the health of children?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend refers to cuts in the environmental budget. In fact, the amounts expended by the Government of Canada on the environment today are increased by 13 per cent over and above what they were in 1985. There has been a very substantial increase in expenditures, not only by the Department of the Environment but by Departments such as the Department of Energy which plays an important role in environment programs as well.

Mr. Broadbent: It hasn't even met inflation.

Mr. Mulroney: I see that the Leader of the NDP is back. I welcome him back from his tour. I will try to respond to NDP questions in just a moment. I am trying to answer the Leader of the Opposition.

With regard to the environment the Government passed the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, which is the first major piece of environmental legislation since 1971.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We completely reformed the National Parks Act which was the first time it was overhauled in almost 50 years. We established four national parks and have set the stage for the creation of two other national parks. I believe that that is the largest number of national parks created in such a short period of time. We proceeded with the St. Lawrence River clean-up. We introduced the Halifax Harbour clean-up program. We built South Moresby.

This is a record on the protection of the environment which any Government, particularly any Liberal Government, would envy.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I believe the record will show that the environmental services of the country have been gutted under this Government and that increases in expenditure have not met the yearly rise of inflation. Canadians will wonder whether all these death repentance programs will be slashed after the next election if the Prime Minister were ever to get back in power.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ELIMINATION OF PCBS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for most Canadians the environment is a national priority, but for the Prime Minister, the environment is a priority only around election time. Will the Prime Minister admit that our country would have been much further ahead in eliminating PCBs if he had not cut the National Research Council's research programs on PCBs and on the recycling and incineration of toxic chemical products? Will he admit that our country would have been much further ahead in the fight against PCBs if he had not fired 336 employees at Environment Canada since his Government came to power?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition suggests that my Department and the Government of Canada are encumbered in our capacity to deal with urgent problems like the PCB situation by virtue of cuts to the Department of the Environment. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The fact is that five months into the current fiscal year, well before all the figures are in, the budget of Environment Canada for this year is $796,235,000. That compares very favourably with the budget for the entire last year in which the Liberals were in office, when the budget was $777,564,000.

In other words, five months into the fiscal year, before all the figures are in, the budget for Environment Canada is already $20 million more than the budget for the entire year in which the Liberals were last in office.

DISPOSAL OF SEWAGE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, one of the serious cuts in the National Research Council was that of the special research group into PBCs which was cut early in the mandate of the Government. Had that cut not been made this country would be in a far better position today to deal with this serious problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): I will direct my question to the Prime Minister again. Why did the Prime Minister this year eliminate the program to construct federal sewage treatment facilities? Why, for four years, has the Government consistently refused the requests of every city and town in the country to provide federal help in a co-operative fashion to eliminate the dumping of raw sewage into our lakes, rivers, and streams?

Why has he refused to enter the cost-sharing program proposed by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities to meet anti-pollution standards, to deal with raw sewage, and to eliminate the problem of pollution in our great metropolitan areas? Why has the Government not done what the Liberal Party did for three years, that is, committed itself to that program with the municipalities?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the hypocrisy of the Official Opposition has no boundaries. The fact is that when the Liberal Party was in office in the late 1970s and early 1980s it cancelled broadly-based national programs to fund provinces and, through provinces, municipalities for waste water treatment. That program was done away with by the Liberals.

In the absence of that program, when we took office, we resorted to very innovative ways to clean up the St. Lawrence River, for which purpose the federal Cabinet approved $110 million. Recently we announced, with the Province of Nova Scotia, a $197.5 million program to clean up the Halifax Harbour. The list goes on.

In fact, if you add to the budget of the Department of the Environment all the expenditures on the environment of DRIE, Energy, Mines and Resources, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and the Office of Western Diversification, not only have we kept up with inflation, we have also exceeded it in expenditures on the environment.

TRANSPORTABLE PCB INCINERATORS—PROPOSED LOCATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Minister of the Environment who last week, here in Ottawa, endorsed transportable incinerators for the destruction of PCBs.

Will the Minister confirm the statement by Tom Meredith, President of ENSCO, that such incinerators would only be set up at a single site in Ontario, in Québec and in the Maritimes, so that PCBs would be brought to each incinerator site? Would the Minister confirm Mr. Meredith's statement?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the gentleman to whom the Hon. Member makes reference was expressing a point of view, albeit a very expert one. The details surrounding any leasing of a portable or transportable unit for the incineration of PCBs remain to be finalized. I am consulting with my cabinet colleagues on the question, in concert with the provinces.

• (1430)

There are very formidable obstacles facing all the provinces in connection with the establishment of even a transportable unit, not to mention a permanent one. But I can assure the Hon. Member for Davenport, and through him, all Members of the House, that the Government of Canada is treating the issue with utmost urgency, and any technical or other obstacles to doing the job will, we hope, be overcome.

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in 1985, in an announcement made by the Department of the Environment, the following statement was made: "The federal Government announced in May 1985 that it will take the lead in arranging for mobile treatment facilities". What has happened to that commitment of the Minister's Government?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the commitment was pretty well honoured. We had a fairly broadly based strategy when the Ministers of the Environment met in 1985 to deal with many facets of PCB management in the country. For example, it was that very strategy which gave rise to the building in Swan Hills, Alberta, of a permanent facility for PCB incineration, which plant we hope to have on stream in October if all the relevant environmental tests are passed and the permit is granted by the province.

In connection with the same strategy, we brought on stream many units across the country for the incineration of low-level PCB contaminated material. We have encountered quite a bit of resistance in Quebec and Ontario to the building of permanent facilities for the same purpose, but we are trying to overcome those obstacles by pursuing with the United States the possible leasing of transportable units.

REQUEST THAT CRIMINAL CODE APPLY TO ENVIRONMENT LEGISLATION VIOLATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said just over a week ago that the nation needs what he described as a collective commitment to deal with the serious environmental problems. Given that the people of Canada are waiting for the Government of Canada to catch up to them in their concern about the environment, will this newly expressed concern lead to concrete action?

I think specifically of the following. A year before the Government brought in its Bill, allegedly to protect the environment, the Law Reform Commission made a report to the federal Government urging it to put crimes against the environment in the Criminal Code of Canada.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister why the Government of Canada rejected this advice when it drafted its legislation for June? And will it now change its position on this important issue, catch up to the people of Canada, and put environmental concerns in the Criminal Code?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated, I think my hon. friend would agree that the actions of the Government in passing the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, in developing with the provinces some five new national parks, and in concluding some important international treaties on behalf of the protection of the environment, have been useful and important contributions to the national well-being with respect to the protection of the environment.

No one has a monopoly on virtue. No one has a monopoly on his or her desire to protect a heritage or the environment. I think all Members of the House of Commons feel very strongly about the protection of the environment, and it is in our interest to act wisely and collectively to ensure that it be done.

We have taken some important measures. We propose to take more. I listened with care and attention to my hon. friend as he made some important suggestions with respect to the protection of the environment.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the point is that these suggestions have been made by this Party not just in recent weeks but over the past number of years. More concretely, from the Government's point of view, it was the Law Reform Commission of Canada, which reports to the federal Government, that made the same suggestion.

INCLUSION OF CRIMES AGAINST ENVIRONMENT IN CRIMINAL CODE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Other countries in the world, including Japan, West Germany, Switzerland and Denmark, and more than 10 states in the United States have already made the decision to include crimes against the environment in the Criminal Code. My question for the Prime Minister is simple. Why does the Canadian Government not agree with this very constructive action?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party should know that the new Canadian Environmental Protection Act contains very severe sanctions. There are enshrined in the very fabric of the legislation sanctions that are akin to those he is calling for. Indeed, those sanctions include $1 million a day fines, and chief executive officers and presidents themselves are personally held liable in the eyes of the law for offences committed by their agents, their companies, or by themselves. There are six-month jail sentences and up to five-year jail sentences among the sanctions.

The Hon. Leader of the NDP asks why the sanctions were not included in the Criminal Code. We were advised that while that might have made good rhetoric and, in the case of the Hon. Leader of the NDP, good demagoguery, the fact is it would have been much more difficult for the Crown to establish onus of proof following the path he has suggested than the one we actually took.

In the Canadian Environmental Protection Act we have the first major overhaul in environmental law since 1971. Those sanctions, by any reasonable standards, are tough and will be stringently enforced.

LAW REFORM COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister has promised to swoop down at the appropriate time, but he also knows that these tough standards to which he is alluding do not exist. They have to be agreed to by the provinces. They have not had them agreed to yet. He knows that the one way of effectively dealing with the matter to ensure that the people of Saint-Basile-le-Grand and people in Vancouver, Charlottetown, or in Moose Jaw are equally protected by high standards, is to follow the Law Reform Commission's recommendation to put those standards in the Criminal Code.

Will the Minister deal with the substance of that matter now? Will he acknowledge he could have put this matter in the Criminal Code, like other countries in the world have done? He could have had those high standards. Why didn't he do it? And why won't he do it in the future?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there is not even unanimity within the Law Reform Commission. It is very debatable within the legal community that the best way to go is through the Criminal Code. The best experts whose advice we could draw on indicated to us that we would be able to get convictions and we would be able to throw the polluters in jail more effectively and expeditiously if we followed a different course.

We have very tough sanctions. There are $1 million a day fines. In some categories there are no limits available to the judiciary for this purpose. There are stiff jail sentences as an option, six-month jail sentences for some offences and five-year sentences in other cases. We think we can get the convictions more effectively on the path we have taken than on the one the Hon. Leader of the NDP has suggested for purely partisan and political reasons.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

MANUFACTURING PRODUCTIVITY REINFORCEMENT PROGRAM—OUTLYING REGIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Regional Industrial Expansion, I shall direct my question to the Prime Minister.

In the last few days, we had an announcement from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion concerning a program to replace the IRDP. We note, Mr. Speaker, that all the regional economic development elements have now been removed from the new program, called the manufacturing productivity reinforcement program. Indeed, now, if you want to set up a plant in Montreal, Louiseville, the Eastern Townships, the Beauce or the St. Maurice Valley, you have exactly the same level of grants and therefore no incentive to set up outside the major centres. I want to ask the Prime Minister how he can justify this announcement, which will no longer provide any benefit for the regions outside the main urban centres.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, said the other day how pleased he was with what the federal Government was doing to create jobs in the outlying regions such as those my hon. friend just mentioned. The fact remains that since this Government was sworn in, 316,000 new jobs were created in Quebec, compared to 40,000 created under the Liberal Government. So I think that the Government of Quebec and Quebecers are very happy with what the federal and Quebec Governments have done together to create jobs in that province.

ASSISTANCE FOR SMALL AND MEDIUM-SIZED BUSINESSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, seldom have I heard such crass hypocrisy! I asked the Prime Minister to tell us something about the program for enhancing manufacturing productivity.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that what the Prime Minister refers to as Quebec's outlying regions are not the regions mentioned in the program. Beauce, Mauricie and the Eastern Townships are in the central region. Read your own program instead of generalizing and using Robert Bourassa's statements as a shield!

My question to the Prime Minister is as follows: What explanation does have for the fact that the kind of assistance provided to small businesses under the former IRDP will no longer be available because property costs, building costs and the cost of second-hand equipment are no longer eligible? How does the Prime Minister expect small businesses to get established in the regions, when his program is tailored to the needs of multinationals which can afford to buy new equipment? And what is a small businessperson supposed to do if he wants to get started and needs a building and equipment? Can he no longer depend on his Government?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should counsel the Hon. Member to revisit the new Act. Once he gets his facts straightened out perhaps he can come into the House and ask intelligent questions.

Oral Questions

TRANSPORT

TRUCKING INDUSTRY DEREGULATION—REQUEST FOR FREEZE ON SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister who in his role with the Government brought us into the reality of deregulation, particularly in the trucking industry.

During discussions on the White Paper, Freedom to Move, and the subsequent legislation implementing deregulation of transportation, the Conservative Government was warned time and time again that it would be creating chaos out of stability, particularly in trucking. With the demise of Transport Route, which was formerly CN Route, and the loss of up to 2,400 jobs, we are seeing the inevitable results of deregulation.

Will the Government act immediately to freeze existing trucking routes and services and, as soon as possible, restore stability to the trucking industry by reintroducing the test of public convenience and necessity?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the issue brought up by the Hon. Member, CN Route, the particular company of which he speaks, lost $71 million in 1986, well before regulatory reform was even on the scene. I think that the Hon. Member is being totally unfair in bringing up this question in this context.

PROTECTION OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of State for Transport. The Minister should be aware that the President of the Ontario Trucking Association, Raymond Cope, has warned that there will be more bankruptcies in the Canadian trucking industry, just as we saw in the United States where there was a wave of bankruptcies after deregulation.

If the Government is not prepared to institute a freeze and to reintroduce regulation, what action will be taken to protect the trucking industry and the thousands of men and women across the country who work in it?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is being totally unfair when he brings regulatory reform into the picture. He knows that if we go back to the Maislin scenario and look at CN Route and the history of losses we will see that in 1984 it lost $32 million, in 1985 it lost $43 million. In 1986 it lost $71 million. We are concerned about the plight of the workers—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. St. Germain: —and those who are involved. I have asked my colleagues, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister of Labour, and the Minister of State for Finance to assess the situation immediately in terms of Transport Route Canada. This Government will make sure that the interests of workers are looked after.

PRIVATIZATION OF CN ROUTE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister responsible for privatization.

Less than two years ago the Government privatized CN Route and received approximately $29 million. Not only did it give away the transportation arm but it also gave away land holdings valued at more than $80 million. Now the Government's friends in the private sector have closed down the trucking operation and put over 2,300 men out of work while creaming off the valuable land assets for themselves.

How could the Deputy Prime Minister possibly agree to an arrangement like that which gave millions of dollars to the private sector and which left the workers of this company without jobs or compensation?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, here again I think we have to put this in the proper context.

Ms. Copps: A rip-off.

Mr. St. Germain: I do not know whether members of the Opposition want an answer.

There were two options. First, CN was going to shut it down or else sell the company as it was. What we have is total irresponsibility on the part of members of the Opposition. Here again they are saying that the figure is some $80 million. My officials inform me that the total amount of the real estate amounted to something in the order of $34 million. They are not even sure whether it was that much. I think that Members opposite should get their facts straight before they stand up.

Again, we will look after the workers, as we have in the past and as we will in the future, to make certain that their interests are well looked after.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Minister better get some new assistants because they certainly cannot value the land.

TREATMENT OF WORKERS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put my supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. The Minister of Labour agreed to abandon provisions of the Canada Labour Code that at least would have protected these workers somewhat. If the Government had kept the land it would have at least had the land to compensate the workers instead of its friends in big business.

Will the Government agree to the union's request for an investigation of this deal and this giveaway? Will the Government explain why it is allowing thousands of workers in the country to go without jobs or compensation while its friends are ripping off millions of dollars from the taxpayers?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, since the question has been put to me, notwithstanding the fact that my colleague's facts seem to be confused somewhat, I can assure my hon. colleague that Labour Canada officials are already looking into the matter right now. They will make sure that all provisions of the Canada Labour Code are respected.

ASSETS OF CN ROUTE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Why does the Government think it is good business to sell off Canada Route for a price which was less than the assets and which cost those people their jobs? Why must thousands of people lose their jobs to allow some speculators to rip off those assets?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I believe we have answered this question before.

The question is whether or not the value of the assets has been clearly put. Information given to us by our officials—not by assistants but by officials of my Department—states that the value of the assets was $34 million. The bidding that was put forward was a fair process. The only bid that came forward was the one for $29 million. It was an effort to save jobs and to protect the interests of workers in Canada.

PROTECTION OF WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Even by the Government's estimation, if the assets were worth $5 million or $6 million more than they sold them for, why did the Government not at least ensure that those workers and their pensions were protected? If one is going to sell assets at less than market value why not make sure that the workers are protected?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make reference to the pension matter. I think that the Hon. Member will be pleased to hear that payment for pension arrears up to the end of July has been submitted by the employer. Payment for the month of August is not due until the end of this month. I have every reason to believe that it will be made.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FEDERALLY REGULATED COMPANIES—RECYCLING OF GARBAGE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. At the same time that some are questioning the Government's real commitment to clean up the environment, urban garbage disposal is fast reaching crisis proportions. Will the Minister commit the Government to clean up the environment by reducing the volume of garbage that is produced by requiring federally regulated companies to recycle their garbage, and at the same time impose packaging restrictions which would require packaging to be bio-degradable?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member's representation is a solid one. I welcome the qualification to his question because he will understand that most of the problem is within provincial jurisdiction. However, to the extent that the federal Government has authority in this area, recycling policies are practised throughout the Government of Canada, and have been for some 10 years.

• (1450)

To boot, the federal Government has a Demonstration of Resource and Energy Conservation Technology Program, DRECT as its called, and it has been in place for some 10 years too. This federal program has provided funding on a cost-shared basis with industry to support recycling technologies.

I am pursuing with my cabinet colleagues the possibility that, under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, we might broaden the total program, somewhat along the lines of some parts of the question the Hon. Member has put on the record today.

RAFFERTY-ALAMEDA DAM—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO FORMER OFFICIAL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Miss Elizabeth May, a distinguished environmental expert in this country, recently a senior adviser on the environment in the Minister's office, has resigned her position on the grounds that the Minister of the Environment made a political deal to grant a licence for the Rafferty-Alameda dam project in Saskatchewan, which will have an enormous impact on the province of Manitoba, without undertaking any studies or any environmental impact assessments whatsoever, in return for which the federal Government would receive provincial agreement for a grasslands national park, and to use the statement of Miss May: "Manitoba's interests have . . . been shafted".

If this is true, it represents a serious violation of public trust in the Minister's responsibilities. Is the Prime Minister prepared to undertake an inquiry immediately into the charges made by Miss May, based upon the major credibility that she has as an environmental expert in this country, to determine why the Minister was prepared to make a deal that would grant federal approval for a licence for a project in the riding of the Premier of Saskatchewan in return for a provincial agreement on a park, and put at mercy the environment of Manitoba for the sake of a political deal? Does the Prime Minister not agree that that warrants a proper inquiry by the Government into the actions and behaviour of this Minister?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there is no foundation whatever to the charge that the Hon. Member has just made. The premise of the question is that "Manitoba's interests were shafted" in connection with the permit issued by me under the authority of the International River Improvements Act.

I have an article in my hand from the Winnipeg Free Press that quotes the former Deputy Environment Minister, Tom Owen, who, I gather, was in office at the time. He stated: "Manitoba officials were not concerned because they viewed an agreement between Canada and the United States that governs the transborder flow of water as the province's best safeguard. That opposition to the licence was not a position we the Manitoba Government took".

REQUEST THAT PROJECT BE DELAYED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister can slough this one off. The fact of the matter is that a senior adviser in his own office, who gave him advice on environmental matters, has resigned her position on the grounds that the Minister deliberately betrayed the trust of his office by granting a licence without doing an environmental impact study on a project that will see interbasin transfers of waters, a position that all parties took when it affected the Garrison diversion, and this Minister has granted a licence without that type of study. Even the Government of the Province of Manitoba today states that it has written to the Minister asking that the project be delayed in return for proper studies.

Will the Minister undertake to halt any further agreement on this project, and state that agreement will not be granted until there is a proper impact study on the waters of Manitoba and what the project will do to them, or is the Minister already too deeply embedded in his political deal?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when I made my decision to grant the permit for the Rafferty dam, I had in my office my Deputy Minister, my senior Assistant Deputy Minister for this area, and the top hydrologist in the Government of Canada in my own Department, and I asked them, after many meetings over many weeks, what was their best advice. They said: "Minister, our best advice is that you have no technical or other grounds on which to refuse the permit. We recommend that 13 environmental conditions, all of them stringent, be attached to the permit. Our advice to you is that if any one of them is not honoured by the relevant jurisdictions (a) you have the power to revoke the permit, and (b) you ought to do so".

I acquiesced in the advice of my top officials. I think it was the right decision, and I would do it again.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER COMMISSION STUDIES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister knows that his issuing of this permit without adequate environmental study belies a lot of the rhetoric that the Prime Minister and the Minister have been spouting this last week about a new commitment to the environment.

This was a serious breach of the Minister's responsibility to issue that permit. In the letter he quoted from Manitoba the Minister referred to the Canada-U.S. Boundaries Waters Treaty. It is precisely in the context of that treaty that he has been asked before in the House to refer the matter to the International Joint Commission for a study, which he has not been prepared to do.

I ask the Minister if he will commission the appropriate studies, and stop kidding us by saying that there are these 13 environmental conditions that have to be met. We all know that once a dam is built and water is polluted in Manitoba there is now way of revoking that. We want studies done now, not after the fact.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand, and I will share it with the Hon. Member or anybody else in the House, a history of the Rafferty dam going back to the 1930s. It has been studied to death ever since. Different Governments of different political Parties have sought the construction of this project.

I made my decision based on the advice of the best hydrologists in the country and of most senior officials. I note that these questions are based on an article that appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press which contains a paragraph that the Opposition does not quote. It states: "Miss May said she hopes environmental groups don't take a knee-jerk anti-Tory stance because I do think they, the federal Tories, deserve credit for having done more in the federal environment area than any previous federal Government".

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it would not take much to supersede the record of the former Liberal Government, by anyone's admission. That is not what is at stake here.

What is at stake here is the Manitoba environment and the fact that the Minister has seriously compromised his credibility with respect to a serious environmental question by issuing that permit against the advice of his senior environmental expert.

The Minister talked about not having any good technical reasons to turn down the permit. There are a lot of good environmental reasons to turn down the project. That is what the Minister has failed to consider, and that is why he should no longer be the Minister of the Environment.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have obligations under the International Rivers Improvements Act to ensure that any project that affects a river that is jointly managed by different jurisdictions, including not only Canada but the United States, meets the most rigorous environmental standards.

I have satisfied myself on the basis of advice from the best experts that I could consult that those obligations are being met. The Province of Saskatchewan approved the dam. The Province of Manitoba approved the dam. The State of North Dakota approved the dam. The Government of the United States approved the dam, and now the Government of Canada has approved the dam.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT— CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On July 30 members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture wrote a letter to every Member of Parliament to express their concern about the Prime Minister's free trade deal with the United States. They asked for a meeting with the Prime Minister to seek assurances that marketing boards, the Canadian Wheat Board, and the horticultural industry would not be sacrificed in this deal.

Since the Prime Minister has not yet met with this group, and it is the largest farm umbrella group in the country, what action is being taken to reassure those producers that they will not be wiped out by this deal?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, this year, representatives of the Canadian agricultural industry have generally and consistently supported our policy of free trade with the United States. The same applies to the pork sector, the meat sector in general and the grains sector. We made a commitment to farmers to protect farm product marketing boards, and we did just that. We maintained our position on this issue, both in bilateral and multilateral talks.

I think Canadian farmers are satisfied with the position we have taken on behalf of Canadian agricultural producers. I don't think there is any question about that.

• (1500)

POULTRY INDUSTRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of State for Agriculture. He knows that the CFA is the largest group in Canada and he knows that it is not satisfied with the assurance the Government has been able to give regarding the trade deal.

Can the Minister explain why poultry products and broiler hatching eggs which have a national marketing board, have not been put on the import control list? Why has there been no arrangement established by the Minister for consultation as demanded by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture? Why has there been no action in this regard for the largest agricultural umbrella group in the country?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I would just remind the Hon. Member that for the first time ever a Prime Minister met approximately 10 times with Canada's farm leaders, something which never happened before.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Trudeau would never meet with them.

Mr. Blais: Twenty-three or 25 consultation boards have been created with farm leaders around the country covering all sections of agriculture.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, all groups involved in the agricultural industry, including producers and processors, were consulted to an extent unheard of under the Liberals. We discussed our policies with Canadians, and today, Mr. Speaker, Canadians are satisfied with those policies. We dealt with every single issue raised by producers generally.

CHILD CARE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REDRAFT LEGISLATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last week witnesses from approximately 40 groups appeared before a committee. All opposed the Government's child care Bill. Unfortunately, people from poorer regions, such as the Atlantic provinces, Saskatchewan, and the North, were excluded from these hearings.

Since all witnesses severely criticized the Bill and, indeed, many asked for its withdrawal because it fails to establish national objectives, restricts funding, and terminates growth in child care after seven years, will the Minister reconsider this unacceptable legislation? Will he redraft the Bill? This time will he establish clear national objectives and adequate funding to develop comprehensive, affordable, quality child care across Canada which will go on, develop, and meet the needs of children beyond 1995?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the committee has listened to witnesses. Its clause by clause study was completed last Friday and I take it the committee will be reporting the Bill back to the House. This Bill will increase, almost double over seven years, subsidized child care spaces. That was reconfirmed in the committee and very clearly pointed out.

The Member persists in saying that the Bill will reduce growth rate. That has been proved wrong again and again and again, and she should not make statements which are inaccurate.

If the Hon. Member recalls, an amendment was accepted last Friday and, if approved by the House, it will focus the Bill even more to lower and middle-income families.

The Hon. Member might disagree philosophically but at least she should stay with the facts that the Bill will create 200,000 new spaces and it will, with the co-operation of the provincial Governments, have areas of standardization. She should keep in mind that after seven years there will also be $800 million per year program compared to a $160 million program this year. Every point the Hon. Member makes is simply wrong. What she disagrees with is a philosophical position. She believes the state should run everything.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, that shows how insensitive this Minister is. I was referring to the conclusions of 40 different organizations from many regions of Canada, unfortunately not from the poorer provinces because this Minister has refused funding.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, surely if the Minister looked at this matter again over the weekend and took any of these representations seriously he would have concluded that without national guidelines and without adequate funding—and this funding is capped no matter what the Minister says—thousands of Canadian children will continue to be at risk—and I mean thousands. There are many children in informal, unlicensed baby sitting services, and many children have no care at all, and this kind of situation will continue under this Bill.

Is this the kind of child care legacy the Conservatives want to leave to Canada? This is no national child care program. It is a fraud.

Mr. Speaker: Given the time, I must cut the Hon. Member off. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on the one hand the Hon. Member says that she wants a universal program which is costed out in full bloom at $11 billion. Then her Leader went to Vancouver and said they were going to have 200,000 spaces, but then when we create 200,000 spaces he says that is not adequate. In every way they say one thing but do another thing. I say to the Hon. Member that she had her chance in committee. She put forward her amendments and in a majority situation those amendments were judged and found wanting. The Bill will come back, it will be passed and we will have a national child care program.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

APARTHEID

CONTRACTS WITH SOUTH AFRICAN CONTROLLED COMPANIES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns his Government's hypocritical position on economic sanctions in the fight against apartheid in South Africa.

In a document from the Minister's Department entitled "Canada Against Apartheid", it says:

> The federal Government itself buys no South African goods and services at all for its own use and does not enter into contracts with any majority owned South African company.

Will the Minister admit today in the House that this statement is totally incorrect and that the Government, in fact, has surreptitiously provided loans, grants and contracts to South African controlled companies operating here in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has developed a reputation in this House. He is an expert at putting a twist on numbers. Indeed, he has become "Mr. Twist".

Ms. Copps: Rather that than "Joe Who".

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The other day in the House of Commons he was claiming that there had been $2 million involved in contracts. In fact, the figure involved is $41,939. Those are all provided for exclusively with regard—

Ms. Copps: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I would ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton East to control herself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Do not be sexist, Joe! Maureen will not put up with it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): All of those transactions had to do not with anything surreptitious, if I may use the word that describes the Hon. Member's conduct, but with a specific exclusion exemption that has been made for products, including spare parts, that can only be sole-sourced.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Minister check the record again because it is clear he continues to posture on the subject.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has had two weeks now to investigate this particular dossier. Will he indicate to the House today how many South African controlled companies operating in Canada have received government loans, grants, and contracts? Can he give his undertaking in the House today that this practice will cease immediately? When will he stop the posturing and take some real action to fight apartheid in South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is taking advice, but this question is too important to leave to that Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: What? That is sexist.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and I think you will find agreement for the Minister of the Environment to make a short statement, followed by the usual responses of the spokespersons for the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Murphy: We were hoping for his resignation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Minister of State. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier indicate agreement. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

ALLEGED REMARKS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. If I understood the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in his response to an Hon. Member, he suggested that an Hon. Member had no right to ask a question about apartheid.

An Hon. Member: He did not say that.

Ms. Copps: I find that incredibly—

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Boudria: He may have said it too fast for you, Barry, but he said it any way.

Mr. Speaker: I am not exactly sure what the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs did say, but I will look at it. It seems to me that that is probably not a question of privilege at this point.

PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

ELIMINATION OF LEAD IN GASOLINE

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank Hon. Members for their consent.

On March 25, 1986, I announced that effective December 31, 1992, the petroleum industry would be required to eliminate lead in gasoline across Canada.

My decision was based on a study conducted for Environment Canada by a blue ribbon panel of scientists under the direction of the Royal Society of Canada. Those experts recommended, among other things, that the Minister of the Environment consider even more stringent controls on leaded gasoline, should future research render such a course advisable.

Since that time new research in the United States and in Australia, and elsewhere has convinced me and the Government of Canada as a whole that lead in the environment poses an even more serious threat to human health, especially among children, than health experts previously thought.

Accordingly, I am announcing today, on behalf of the federal Cabinet, that lead in gasoline will be illegal at all retail outlets across Canada after December 1, 1990. Violators will be subject to very stiff sanctions under the new Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the Minister which we welcome fails to recognize that it was a Liberal Government that launched in December, 1983 the program of reducing and eventually eliminating lead in gasoline. This Government has now changed its position. Originally, probably yielding to pressures by industry, it decided to choose 1993 as the target year.

We in the Opposition have raised this matter in this House on a number of occasions. As recently as one month ago we called on the Government, on the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), and on the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to advance to 1990 the deadline for further reduction of lead in gasoline. We are glad, therefore, to see once more that the Government is continuing the work started by preceding Liberal Governments. What strikes us, though, as a bit disturbing is the timing of this announcement. It is almost cynical or, I should say, almost a desperate attempt by this Conservative Government to gain credibility, to appear to be concerned with environment and with health. It is an attempt, in a way, of a blue chameleon trying to change its colour into green.

In any event, to conclude, I am sure Canadians will not be fooled by this Government's sudden decision in its sudden conversion to the environment in a crass manner which evidently is intended to garner votes.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the announcement that the removal of lead from gasoline will be speeded up. It is something for which I have called for some time. Previous environment critics for the New Democratic Party caucus have called for it and, of course, environmentalists have called for it for a very long time.

I think that there is an easy, broader lesson to be learned. Reference has been made to the fact that experts have only recently found out that low levels of lead can be very harmful, particularly to the development of children. Yet, we have other environmental hazards which we are still seeing accumulate, on the basis that low levels are not harmful to health. I think that emissions of NOx, for example, are continuing to go up even with improved standards. There is still going to be an increase.

The Government has announced that low level radiation is not a health hazard. We wonder how many lives have to be lost and how much illness there has to be before the lesson is truly going to be learned that we have very serious environmental problems.

I welcome the announcement. It is high time that we move on leaded gasoline. It is particularly a problem in my area, an urban riding which has lead in the soil that is being removed. It has been a local problem as well as a national one. It is only one very small step, and it is an important lesson that we have to stop pollution. It is very, very significant in all areas of life, and it is still not being acted upon.

CANADIAN HERITAGE LANGUAGES INSTITUTE ACT

Hon. Jake Epp (for the Secretary of State of Canada) moved that Bill C-152, an Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to rise today to speak to Bill C-152 and to open the debate on behalf of the Government. I am sure that it would be appropriate, Mr. Speaker, to let you and Members of the House know why I am standing in this place this afternoon instead of the Hon. Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Weiner). I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you and Members would appreciate that this is one of the holy days of the faith that the Hon. Minister observes. For that reason he has asked me to make a presentation on behalf of the Government, and I am honoured to do so. I know that Hon. Members opposite will understand why he is not here.

Some two months ago, this House gave its unanimous consent to the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, and on July 21, Royal Assent passed this historic Act into law. I think all Members, and especially Government Members, are justifiably proud of the co-operation and consensus which turned this piece of Canadian legislation into the first law of its kind in the world.

This afternoon, in introducing for second reading Bill C-152, an Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute, I believe it is a further demonstration of the viability and of the life that comes not only from the Multiculturalism Act but which is Canada.

Others Members of the House and I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that you have worked strenuously over the years in the field of multiculturalism, both as a Member of Parliament, as an active member of an ethnic group in Canada, and as a former Minister. I hope that you, as well as other Members of the House, feel that this is an important milestone in some of the work that you have done as well.

• (1520)

The Bill before us has its roots in the Canadian Multiculturalism Act and in the multiculturalism policy of Canada. This Bill gives expression to Section 3, subsection 1 of the Act, which states that it is the policy of the Government of Canada to preserve and enhance the use of languages other than English and French. This Bill also gives specific recognition to sections of the Canadian Multiculturalism Act which commit the Government to facilitate the acquisition, retention, and use of all languages that contribute to Canada's multicultural identity.

This Bill is another concrete example of our Government's resolve to meet the challenges of our evolving multicultural society which we set out in the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. Last year, the former Secretary of State, the Hon. David Crombie, announced the Government's intention to establish a national heritage languages institute in Edmonton. He commissioned Dr. Henry Kreisel of the University of Alberta and Dr. Michael Batts of the University of British Columbia to conduct a study on the best way to meet this commitment. The Bill before us today results from that cross-country process of consultation and assessment.

Dr. Kreisel recommended that the federal Government establish an institute to foster and further the learning of heritage languages, an institute that was described as without walls, an institute that would serve the needs of all those active in this area. The report recommended that the institute reach out to the educational and cultural communities of Canada, to the business communities of Canada, and to all levels of government to forge a strong national network, a network bringing together linguistic resources of Canada and the experts in the field. It would in fact fulfil a tremendous need for the co-ordination and exchange of information on Canada's heritage languages.

I would like to take just a moment to emphasize to the House the extent to which our heritage languages enrich the Canadian way of life. There are over 70 languages spoken in this country, not including specific dialects. Some belong to the aboriginal peoples of Canada and were part of our heritage long before the arrival of Europeans. Other languages have been brought to this nation by those who came here from all parts of the world seeking a land of freedom, security and opportunity.

From my own perspective, heritage languages are a vital component of daily life in Canada. I have spent considerable time travelling across the country and meeting people from many different cultural and racial groups, groups which remain fiercely proud of their first languages. One does not have to venture far in any of our major metropolitan centres to encounter the variety and the vitality of Canada's spoken languages. They are all around us. They are a living culture which lifts the everyday life of this country beyond the ordinary.

Just last Saturday, I had the opportunity to speak at the annual meeting of the Canadian German Congress in Winnipeg about the establishment of a chair for German-Canadian studies at the University of Winnipeg. This further verifies the multicultural nature of Canada and the need to preserve and give understanding to other Canadians of that heritage.

This richness and diversity of languages is something to be proud of. It is something to be cherished. It gives us a sense of where we have come from, a sense of our roots, and of how many unique individual heritages contribute to our national character.

Language is the strong current of a culture. Language provides the means for passing on the heart and soul of a culture, its folklore, stories of the past, and, yes, dreams of the future. Languages bond people together, giving them a strong sense of community and of common values, but languages are more than just a social phenomenon. Languages are an important natural resource for Canadian people.

Language is an economic resource. It is a resource which boosts our trading profile. It is a resource to use in international diplomacy. It is a resource for tourism. Certainly our reputation for hospitality and friendliness is much enhanced as we welcome visitors in the languages of the world. Within Canada today, there is an increasing demand for people—teachers, translators, negotiators—with heritage language skills. This is why we made such strong commitments in the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, commitments that we are backing up today with Bill C-152.

Let me take a moment to outline to the House the special features of this legislation. The Bill describes the establishment of a new and special kind of institute, an institute which from the outset is designed to be a co-operative venture. We want the institute to be a facilitator, to be a means for community groups, institutions, corporations, and all levels of government to work together to develop the rich linguistic versatility of our society. To that end, we have established measures for an endowment fund, a fund which will allow the institute to function independently and to set its own priorities.

The institute will be incorporated federally as a charitable organization so that it can seek a broad base of public and private support. We also expect it to encourage support from other levels of government. I think all Hon. Members would see this as being a co-operative era of partnership in multiculturalism. This is our idea of working in co-operation with all segments of Canadian society and further developing a major national resource, our heritage languages.

The institute's mandate is ambitious. It will undertake a variety of activities that will foster the teaching and learning of heritage languages across Canada and their ongoing use in our society. This mandate includes improving public understanding and appreciation of heritage languages, upgrading the quality of instruction and learning materials, developing Canadian oriented materials, and conducting research into all aspects of Canada's heritage languages. Of course, one major purpose of the institute is to provide a national focus, a focus which will bring together expertise from across the country to respond to the different priorities identified at the community level.

I will not take the time of the House now to go into specifics about the powers of the institute or the way it will be set up. There might be questions about that later. Each of us here has an opportunity to read and to consider the Bill, but I wish to make the point that it is important for all of us to consider, in a positive sense, our heritage languages.

We have attempted to provide the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute with the maximum degree of flexibility, the flexibility to ensure that it can meet its objectives and achieve excellence in its work. We have given the institute a structure and a set of objectives to accomplish this important task. Let me repeat just how important this task is.

Right now, the multiculturalism sector of the Department of the Secretary of State supports some 1,600 supplementary schools at which over 130,000 students have a chance to learn the languages of their ancestors. These are impressive figures and enrolments are continuing to rise. My point is that we are not dealing with a marginal social and cultural activity. We are in fact responding to the many Canadians who feel deeply concerned about preserving their heritage languages and using them in today's modern society. We have made a commitment to help these Canadians do exactly that.

Our commitment to this institute is part of the strong new directions for multiculturalism that were announced last May by the Minister. That commitment is being reinforced with $62 million in new money over the next five years, including $14.5 million to preserve and enhance heritage languages and culture. Over the first five years of its existence the institute will receive $6.7 million. What is significant is the breakdown of this funding to ensure a sound base for the institute's development and long-term financial security.

In addition to $250,000 start up financing, $500,000 per year will be provided for operating costs and $800,000 per year will go to a special endowment fund. This fund is designed to help the institute become financially self-sufficient in keeping with our fiscal responsibilities to the Canadian taxpayers.

I should also take some time to address the question of the relationship between heritage languages and official languages. The Canadian Multiculturalism Act clearly states that it is the policy of the Government of Canada to preserve and enhance the use of languages other than English and French while strengthening the status and use of the official languages of Canada. I am proud to say that our Government's record speaks for itself in this regard. It is our Government that brought in the new Official Languages Act. It is my colleague from Lac-Saint-Jean, the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard), who negotiated landmark agreements on official languages with a number of provinces. The Bill we are considering today complements those agreements. Most important, it complements our official languages policy by advancing multiculturalism throughout Canada in harmony with a national commitment to our official languages.

I think it should be noted that the Secretary of State, who has responsibility under the Financial Administration Act for official languages and for these programs, is of French Canadian background. The Minister who brought forward the Multiculturalism Act and the Heritage Languages Act has an ethnic background, if I can use that term. That is simply a demonstration of the fact that all of us here have different experiences and backgrounds. Whether our experiences are personal in the sense that our families came from other countries, or whether it is simply through our knowledge of history, those experiences are very much part of our lives today.

That fact also reminds me of the story my father told me, something which might be reflected in various ways by other Canadians. He came to this country in 1924 as a medical doctor, never to practise again, because of the history of Europe involving World War I and the Russian civil war and revolution. He arrived in Québec City, speaking five languages and none of them was official. However, he was accepted into Canada. He was given freedom and the right to practise religion as we saw fit. We were given the right to speak our own languages. Above all, we were given the opportunity to develop not only our families and communities but hopefully also contribute to the development of Canada.

I have used that personal vignette simply to make the point that there are Canadians across our land who have had if not the same experience at least similar experiences and it indicates why Canada is so important to them.

Heritage languages are a vital element of communication and understanding in our multicultural society. They are fundamental to the way in which we deal with one another as Canadians. I truly believe that this country has an unlimited opportunity with its people, its cultural diversity, and many different languages, to take greater advantage of this modern world than any other country. To do so we must safeguard and develop what we have. We must look to the future with a sure sense of where we are going. This Bill is part of that progressive outlook. I hope the House will give it rapid passage in order that the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute can begin its work without further delay.

If I may be permitted, let me say in the other language that I speak: Vielen danke für die gelegenheit, heute zu sprechen zu diese wichtige sache. I hope we get passage soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the Hansard reporter got that, as did the translators.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean) that Bill C-152, an Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. E un pracere di ringraziere il Ministro, e di presentare la posizione Liberale. I would like to thank the Minister. I think the House appreciates his standing in for his colleague, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Weiner), who is today, along with many other Canadians, observing a religious holiday. Let me say at the outset that the Official Opposition supports in principle and welcomes the creation and establishment of a national institute for heritage languages. It does so not only because it believes in it, but because it is very much needed. If one was to look across this country at the various heritage language programs and services provided by our schools through the provinces with the help of the ethnocultural communities, one would very quickly see a need for a national institute such as the one we are discussing today to co-ordinate and facilitate national standards and consistency in this area.

To a certain degree, through the fault of no one in particular, we have a chequer-board program nationally which grew from different initiatives in different time periods. Alberta, for example, the first province to pass enabling legislation, did it in 1971, with a combination of heritage language programs. In Saskatchewan the legislation was introduced in 1974. In Manitoba it was in 1980. British Columbia started in 1960 through several school boards to develop heritage languages. The first bilingual program, English and the second language, was offered in 1983 in the school district of Castlegar.

In Quebec the heritage language program instruction started in 1971 under the name of "d'enseignment des langues et des cultures d'origine", which teaches several languages for 30 minutes per day during a regular school day. In Ontario the program started in approximately 1971. Today it is largely an after-school program. Finally, in the Atlantic region, no public school offers heritage language programs and the initiative is left with the various ethnocultural communities.

That is obviously a very quick analysis which certainly does not do justice to the status of heritage languages across the country, but it gives me an idea, and I am sure other Canadians, that there are different programs with different criteria depending on where one lives. Therefore, for that one very good reason, we in the Liberal Party believe there is a need, not only to co-ordinate these programs to give them a standard which would apply across the various jurisdictions but also eliminate duplication under one central body with a national vision. As well, there must be communication between the school boards in different provinces in order to exchange information.

The second reason for supporting the principle of the institute is, as the Minister well noted, that the question of heritage languages is very much alive and well in Canadian society. There are some 128,000 children enrolled in various language programs across the country spanning some 62 languages. The census figures of 1986 indicate that many Canadians of various generations are not speaking only English and French but are trying to maintain a third or fourth language, not only as an inherent part of their culture but also in an attempt to broaden their opportunities by possessing one or more languages.

My own riding of York West reflects that dynamism. The last census indicated that 37,000 individuals in York West alone spoke a mother tongue other than other English or French. These tongues include Italian, German, Chinese, Ukrainian, and Portuguese, as well as a number of other languages. In York West individuals are trying to keep these languages alive as a part of identifying their cultural roots and identity which give us all a sense of purpose and vision. There is a link between language preservation and cultural preservation. One without the other is certainly poorer for it.

The third reason we believe it is important to rally behind the principle of an institute is that we believe we should view heritage languages in a constructive sense and as a national resource and treasure. We should adopt a philosophy that in addition to our bilingualism policy of English and French, it is an advantage to be able to speak a third or fourth language. It is an advantage to utilize a third or fourth language to delve deeper into one's culture or to open locked doors which will remain locked without the knowledge of another language. As a country we should be adopting that as a positive tool.

In my travels as a Member of Parliament on various parliamentary committees I have always been pleasantly surprised by the different school systems in the different parts of the world where children are encouraged to learn three languages. More than a cultural attribute, they realize that a youngster graduating from school will possess an economic attribute as well in terms of positioning himself or herself in the market-place.

That is why we are happy to support the principle of a heritage language institute. The promotion of heritage languages as a integral part of a multiculturalism policy in this country was always supported by this Party when it was in office. It was an integral part of the Government's multiculturalism policy in the 1970s and early 1980s.

In 1981, for instance, a Liberal administration convened the first national conference linking Canadians from all parts of the country in a heritages languages conference. Two years later that Government tripled the funding for heritage languages and introduced, for the first time, new moneys for the production of Canadian teaching materials. Later it also established a national heritage language resource centre for heritage languages at the Ontario Institute for Studies and Education in Toronto.

During our time in opposition during the last number of years we have rallied to the defence of heritage languages. In fact, in an effort to bring to the forefront and crystallize a new agenda for a multiculturalism policy in June of 1987 the committee, in a report entitled Building a Canadian Mosaic recognized the importance of heritage languages. In that report, page 3, it says that the standing committee recommends that the new multiculturalism policy embodied eight principles. One of those principles was the enhancement of heritage languages. On page 47 the committee recognizes that the policy should encourage the preservation and enhancement of the heritage languages of all Canadians, recognizing the cultural and economic benefits of multilingual resources.

It was heartening that the Government took at least this idea from the report, since it rejected virtually every other recommendation in the standing committee report which was a unanimous position of the members of that standing committee. Nonetheless, I have a number of concerns which I wish to table for discussion at committee stage in terms of fine tuning and upgrading various parts of the proposed legislation.

I must say at the outset that I am disappointed that the Government waited until the eve of a federal election campaign to introduce this legislation. The report by Professor Henry Kreisel and Professor Michael Batts was prepared and submitted to the Government more than a year ago. When it was submitted there was no urgency, no discussion, and very little communication with regard to proposing a response to that report. All of a sudden, on the eve of a federal election campaign, we have the crystallization of this legislation.

I am disappointed because for the four years of this administration's life Parliament and the country have had to endure a multicultural drought. All of a sudden it rains all sorts of gifts on the eve of a federal election. It took four years to get to a multiculturalism Bill, and even then many of the proposals submitted by the standing committee composed of members of all three Parties were left out.

For four years the communities and organizations were crying for redress. The individual budgets of the Departments were dwindling compared to their levels in 1984 and there were no answers. All of a sudden a few weeks ago increased funding was announced.

For four years the third language media was complaining that there was not enough government advertising in their various media compared to the media in the English and French worlds. A few weeks ago at a conference in Toronto, after some three years of such complaints, the Minister came through with additional dollars. We now also have the institute.

It is fine to come up with some initiatives, but it is somewhat of a shame that we have to wait to the very end of the administration's life to see some improvement in the situation found by a new Parliament and particularly by a new Government. If we were to look at this year's Estimates, before the gifts started to be showered around the country, we would see that in terms of transfer payments there was a decrease in this current fiscal year of funds to various voluntary groups, universities, and institutions of some $435,000. We would see there was a decrease of $500,000 in group development initiatives, a decrease of $223,000 in citizenship and community participation, a decrease of some $19,000 to the performing and visual arts, a decrease in intercultural communications, in performing and visual arts, and a decrease in Canadian ethnic studies of some $250,000. These are in this year's Estimates. That goes to show the intentions of the Government in the normal course of its administration, compared to the number of initiatives we have seen triggered by an election call.

I would suggest very sincerely that the Government of Canada stop advancing multiculturalism through the eyes of a general election. It should not attach the multiculturalism cart to an election roller-coaster. That does not engender confidence or pacify cynicism. Certainly in the aftermath of an election, there will be an accounting. The Government must look at its promises, its commitments, and at reality.

In a conference attended by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in 1984 before the last election, he made perfectly clear some 48 specific promises he would deliver once becoming Prime Minister. Looking at these promises now we see a litany of unfulfilled expectations and broken promises on behalf of the many organizations and volunteers which make multiculturalism on a day-to-day basis the force it is today. My message to the Government is to stop showering the country with gifts just because there is a pending election. Let us have a long-term, consistent and genuine policy we can be proud of year in and year out.

The second concern I have with respect to the principle of a Canadian Heritage Languages Institute has to do with our official policy of bilingualism. I believe we require greater and parallel initiatives and resources to encourage more of our landed immigrants to learn better one of the two, if not the two official languages. This was recognized back on October 8, 1971 by the former Prime Minister, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, who was the architect of the official policy adopted by all Parties of the House in 1971. In introducing the concept of multiculturalism, he said: "the Government will continue to assist immigrants to acquire at least one of Canada's official languages in order to become full participants in Canadian society". He found the time, while making the multicultural announcement, to highlight and reinforce the importance of those Canadians participating in if not both, one of the two official languages, as a way of being completely integrated and mobile in the mainstream and lifestyle of this country.

I believe that in 1988 we have not done enough to encourage this mobility. Many individuals do not have access to proper language training, but this should not stop the Government from its first priority of welcoming as many landed immigrants and newcomers as possible and integrating them linguistically into either English or French. The person who is affected the most is the immigrant woman. Many times, because of our criteria, she is blocked from entering into English or French language training because she may be deemed not to be the head of a household. The husband may qualify. The children will learn either English or French by playing with their peers, but the woman becomes ghettoized. She becomes locked in her home with the resultant inability to master the English or French language. That will determine the type of job she gets. It will determine the amount of dollars she is paid per hour, and it will determine the vertical mobility of that woman in the workforce. Therefore, I believe greater emphasis, while saluting the value of heritage languages, must be placed with those same Canadians in order to have them become fluent in one of the two languages which will increase their confidence as citizens and their positioning in Canadian society. From an economic standpoint, it would certainly enhance their life much more rapidly.

If one were to look at the statistics of the Canadian Employment Immigration Commission, one would take some care in listening to the argument I have just put forward in terms of a percentage of total immigration for selected years. For instance, in 1968 the percentage of immigrants knowing English well was some 51.3 per cent. In 1984 that dropped to 44 per cent. In terms of knowledge of French, in 1968 the percentage was 6.3 per cent. That dropped a full percentage point to 5.1 per cent in 1984. Those landed immigrants knowing neither English or French in 1968 numbered 38.7 per cent. In 1984 that percentage rose quite dramatically to 47 per cent.

Therefore, while one can attach different factors to produce that sort of trend in terms of the sources of immigration and so on, it is nonetheless important for us as a Parliament to try to take the message from these numbers, and while we are reinforcing the value of heritage languages, at the same time put additional resources into the training our new immigrants in English and French in terms of business, in terms of social, economic and political pursuits, being fluent in one of our two official languages is absolutely crucial.

My next concern is with the inherent risk in this legislation, and I underline the word "risk", that heritage languages to a certain degree will be ghettoized. I believe it is very important that no ghettoization be formulated through the body of a national institute. It is simply not good enough, in my judgment, simply to link up the Greek Canadian community in Alberta, for instance, with the Greek community in Toronto or Montreal through the institute. While that is valuable, it should not stop there. Instead, we must interlink those communities with different cultural communities. Cross-cultural linkages are absolutely vital if we are to share and be united as a Canadian family. The networking within and among different communities is an important part of advancing the cause of change and reform in that very community.

More important, rather than simply stopping at utilizing heritage languages as an institute within Canada and among communities, the real challenge for this Government will be to utilize heritage languages as a national tool and resource. More Canadians capable of speaking in a variety of languages should find themselves in government circles as well. They should find themselves in increasing numbers in the Public Service of Governments federally and provincially. They should find themselves in greater numbers in the trade missions to which we send people in all parts of the globe. They should also find themselves in greater numbers in our foreign embassies, immigration posts, and trading posts abroad.

We need to recognize that it is important to co-ordinate the various heritage language programs. However, what more dynamic solution do we have to that situation than to utilize that natural resource—since that is what it is—to the advantage of our country on the international stage? Canada is indeed in a very unique position. Not every other country possesses the national treasures which we possess. We have over 62 languages in which Canadians are fluent.

We have to put that to good use, not only domestically but internationally, to open those cultural doors through the ability to converse and to communicate. I am sure that if we can harness that talent, that resource, Canada will not be poorer for it. Canada will obviously be richer. We will be sharper on the cutting line in terms of international competition with other countries of the world if we can also adopt Canadians who, in addition to being competent in their fields, can also naturally and efficiently communicate in the languages of the world. This is a global village, to quote the words of a famous Canadian.

It is important that an institute undertake this work at this time. If one were to conduct a survey in our high schools and universities, one would find that the number of people taking various language courses is dwindling at an alarming rate. I have met with a number of high school professors and directors of various language programs. There has been an emphasis to take the three Rs, to do well in mathematics, sciences, and English. Of course, that is of fundamental importance to any student and of particular importance to any graduate from our educational institutions. While pushing the fundamental courses we should not underestimate the capabilities and the values of a young man or woman leaving university at the age of 22 or 23. In addition to being solid in a number of areas of his or her degree, he or she could also be capable and educated in a third or fourth language.

I believe that this institute can play a significant role to try to reverse the trend that is beginning to take place in our high schools, colleges, and universities. It can rekindle a certain value for languages among our students. It can try to impress upon them that it is not only a question of culture but that at the end of academic training the ability to converse in another language also takes on an economic dimension. Students emerging from various institutions need as many advantages today in the competing world as they can possibly afford.

I have a number of concerns with respect to the structure of the institute. For instance, the legislation would create a board of directors numbering 21. However, the staff, as articulated by the Minister of State for Multiculturalism at his press conference when he announced this measure a few weeks ago, suggested that the staff can be as small as three individuals. One question that I obviously have is: What kind of an organization are we going to put in place when there is a board of directors numbering 21 and a staff of three? It is obvious that not only is it top-heavy in terms of directors but also in terms of the responsibilities that the legislation is expecting the institute to carry on. On page 2 of the Bill it states:

> 4. The purpose of the Institute is to facilitate throughout Canada the acquisition, retention and use of languages, other than the official languages of Canada, that contribute to the country's multicultural heritage by
> (a) promoting, through public education and discussion, the learning of heritage languages;
> (b) providing the public with information about heritage language resources;
> (c) developing programs to improve the quality of heritage language instruction;
> (d) assisting in the production and dissemination of Canadian-oriented materials related to the study of heritage languages;
> (e) assisting in the development of standards for the learning of heritage languages;
> (f) conducting research into all aspects of heritage languages;
> (g) establishing scholarly and professional links between the Institute and universities, colleges and other organizations—

It then goes on to state that it should initiate, finance, and administer programs and activities created to this purpose; support, encourage, and organize conferences; publish and otherwise disseminate information related to this; and establish award scholarships and fellowships.

Those are all fine tasks. I think all Members of the House would agree with every one of them. The question is: Can three people as a staff undertake successfully the tasks that the legislation sets out? I believe that we need to take a very close look in committee at the ability of a staff of three to fulfil the expectations of this legislation.

I also have questions with respect to how the board of directors will be appointed. It states in the Bill that the Government will appoint 13 and the board will make another eight appointments. I think that it might be useful to list some of the qualifications which members of the board possess. I would also like to know where the community input is in terms of those appointments. Will we have the community proposing some names which the Government and the board will take under advisement? Or, will the appointments be made as we have seen in the Canadian Multiculturalism Council in a vacuum? Will there be members of various communities asking themselves who is that person on that board who purports to represent community A or community B when in fact that person is not an integral part of that community?

There are questions with respect to funding. Will the funding proposed by the Government in fact allow the institute to do the kind of job over the long term? The Bill suggests that it wishes the institute over the course of time to be its own fund raiser to keep the institute alive. That also raises a number of serious problems. Many organizations, in particular voluntary organizations and non-profit groups in our society, are always scrambling for funds.

Before I was elected to office I was associated with a number of non-profit organizations. Sometimes as an organization we spent more time fundraising than in fact fulfilling and delivering the programs on which the group was designed. I am somewhat concerned that the small staff of three will be too preoccupied with financial requirements of keeping the institute afloat as opposed to delivering on the expectations set out by Parliament in this legislation.

There is no mention in the Bill about native and aboriginal languages. It is unclear whether native or aboriginal languages will be included within the heritage language programs or whether they are outside it. I think clarification from the Minister would certainly be helpful in clarifying that question. It is an important question, and one that many communities, particularly those in the North, are asking vis-à-vis this legislation.

• (1610)

I also ask whether there has been any consultation with the provincial Governments. The question of education and schooling is clearly within provincial jurisdiction. It would be interesting to see if the federal Government has dovetailed or communicated with the provinces, and whether there will be co-operation or any financial assistance from the various provinces, because obviously an institute of this calibre, or potentially of this calibre, can be of extreme help to the various Ministries of Education under the auspices of the provincial Governments.

In the actual legislation there is little input on the role that various community and ethnocultural organizations will be playing. I would like to see a greater role and assessment by various ethnocultural communities and national bodies in terms of interweaving their resources, talents, and aspirations with those of an institute. There must be a way in legislation of affording those community and group interests a role in this national institute.

Finally, in the legislation it states that the Minister will review the institute and its directions after a period of four years. That may be appropriate. However, others are asking if perhaps that is a little too long to wait in terms of a review. Perhaps that review should come earlier so that if there are a number of modifications to be made they are made well into the mandate of the institute rather than follow a direction that, after four years, proves not to have been as advantageous as a modification or a change.

The institute must report to the Minister in an annual report. I would suggest that we look at that situation and perhaps expand it. Perhaps that report should be made to Parliament, so that that report is shared by all Members of Parliament. Perhaps the report could be made to the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism and Members of Parliament from all three Parties could be apprised on an annual basis of the institute, rather than the report going directly to the Minister and perhaps never becoming public. Secrecy will not enhance a new launching of that institute. That report should be made public on the floor of the House of Commons or through the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism which would benefit the advancement of the institute and of the policy.

Another concern I would like to touch upon quickly is that a number of people and Members have been questioning the appropriateness of locating the institute in the City of Edmonton. I feel that that criticism is unfair and unwarranted. The location is not as important as whether the program will be delivered and whether the standards and expectations set by the legislation will be maintained. In my estimation, Edmonton is a fine city that is dynamic, enterprising, and cosmopolitan. It is perhaps advantageous to have the institute located in Edmonton as opposed to having it, and every other program that deals with multiculturalism, targeted to or located in the Montreal or Toronto area. It speaks highly of the policy if at times such as this we can move westward or farther east than Toronto or Montreal when we talk about multiculturalism. While those two cities and Vancouver certainly embody in numbers and in programs the very spirit of multiculturalism, to stop in those cities is to be incomplete.

The Province of Alberta is a leader in terms of heritage language instructions. After Ontario at 49, there are 42 languages taught in the Province of Alberta. Alberta has 116 schools where those languages are taught, the highest after Ontario and B.C. Alberta has 899 classes of heritage languages, 10,900 hours of instruction, almost 11,000 students, and some $324,000 of federal moneys. In 1971 it was the first province to pass legislation to permit languages other than English or French in the teaching of heritage languages in the public school. In 1974, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, being a representative of that city, the program was instituted on a bilingual basis with one of the heritage languages for 25 per cent to 50 per cent of the school day for some subjects. Therefore, I believe that Edmonton is most appropriate, and in fact recognizes the spade work and the lead work that Edmonton and Alberta have done with respect to heritage languages.

In conclusion, I look forward to a discussion of this Bill at the legislative committee, or perhaps in the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. I have raised a number of concerns that I and my Party have with respect to the Bill. I am sure that my colleagues in the House will be amplifying on some of their thoughts and concerns and that those concerns will be best able to be addressed by that committee. Unlike the multiculturalism Bill that got a quick ride through committee and Parliament, the community organizations and the very many experts out there in the field will have the opportunity to give their input, have their say, and put forward their recommendations. By the conclusion of committee stage there will be a piece of legislation that will be stronger and not weaker. In principle we are in accord and we support this Bill on heritage languages. We also look forward to making it bigger and better for the benefit of our national fabric.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Environmental Affairs—Bill C-74—Size of Government funding/Reduction in person-years within departments; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Housing—Metropolitan Toronto—Vacant land at Downsview air base.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean) that Bill C-152, an Act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure to join in the second reading debate of Bill C-152, a Bill to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute. With my colleague, I readily accept the absence of the Minister for Multiculturalism (Mr. Weiner) this afternoon who I am sure is with his family celebrating the Jewish New Year, as are other persons across the country and around the world. That is only one manifestation of a multicultural Canada. I am sure the Minister would have liked the Bill to come forward in late August, a time when his office did consider the possibility that it might do so, because I am sure the Minister would have liked to speak to the Bill. I am sure no one will take it amiss if I observe that if he had been here, a Member of Parliament from Montreal, and a speaker of Hebrew, to some extent, taking part in the debate this afternoon on this heritage language institute, there would have been a completeness or a certain symmetry in terms of appropriate representation in the debate.

The debate on the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute this afternoon is a little heavy with Epps. When there are two people whose first language is German speaking to the Bill this afternoon, it leaves it a little incomplete. You, Mr. Speaker, may well represent one of those other Canadian realities, Ukrainian, or Polish, I am not quite certain of your capabilities, your presence in the Chair, and your membership in the House. If the Minister had been present there would have certainly been three of the leading heritage languages of western Canada represented, which are well practised and well taught in the Cities of Edmonton and Winnipeg, and particularly represented in a certain sense of the debate.

I would never wish to slight my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Marchi), who represents the Italian speaking realities of this country in this debate. At one point I spoke to some of the persons involved in heritage languages in this province, persons of Italian origin, and said to them quietly, and I trust this will not upset anyone, that what the Ukrainians have done in the West the Italians have done in Ontario in terms of establishing the importance of heritage languages. I say that quite readily because aside from the fact that my father and the father of the Minister would have understood and spoken Ukrainian, there is obviously no ancestral pride in my stating that particular recognition of the role of some of the communities in asserting the importance of heritage languages.

I did not look at that particular aspect of the topic in preparation for this afternoon, but I was interested in having my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West, scan heritage languages across the country and note some of the instances. In a few moments I want to explore more carefully what some of the situations are in various provinces of Canada, so that we will have a better sense of the situation into which this institute will be injected, the situation which the institute will be required to work with, to transform, to develop.

He mentioned in British Columbia, a province which would surely exemplify, as its name might well suggest, as perfectly as any province has the desire to create a unilingual English-speaking Canada, a desire that prevailed for so long, to the detriment of French-speaking Canadians and the Québeçois, and of course to the detriment of all of us and our ancestors who came to Canada with languages that we now call ancestral or heritage languages and who found themselves being discouraged from using the languages, encouraged to forget them and to merge into the Canadian English-speaking mainstream.

In recognizing that reality, the first program in British Columbia was brought to my attention, because having lived for nine years just down the road from Castlegar, British Columbia, when I was teaching at Notre Dame University in Nelson in the interior of B.C., I thought immediately, of course, that is a bilingual program. It is also in Russian, with the Doukhobors who live in the area.

That took me back 16 years to the misfortune of a broken knee suffered in the faculty-student football game. I was in the Trail Regional Hospital that fall of 1972, during the Canada-Soviet hockey game. I must say, I do not suppose that there were many places, many hospital wards in Canada, where the four patients in that ward were all persons who, if history had taken a different course, would have been happily cheering Tretiak and his team-mates on the Soviet team. As it happened, in that particular hospital ward the four of us—two Doukhobors, one of white Russian ancestry and myself of Mennonite stock; all of us from parts of the Soviet Union, now Canadians—were cheering the Canadian team on. This particular incident is just a reminder of the multicultural realities of Canada in which we have been involved in this Parliament over the years in trying to recognize, and to which we have, surely, in the multiculturalism Bill of these last months, given statutory statement, though not, I would assert, anything like adequate institutional roots.

We are now, certainly in this Bill to establish a Canadian Heritage Languages Institute, in this particular case, moving to establish one of the vital institutions of the federal Government, established by and supported by the federal Government, to ensure that all of our talk about multiculturalism, ever since the beginning of the last decade, is not simply talk.

That, of course, takes us back to the context that I have already alluded to, the long decades during which immigrants to this country, wherever they came from, were encouraged to become English-speaking Canadians. As a nation pressed its nationalism on all the citizens of Canada and urged them to merge, a pressure or a tendency developed which was only arrested in the 1960s, in the context of the quiet revolution in Québec, the work of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism which led to the Official Languages Act, the recognition of French as well as English, as fully the official languages of the federal Government and the federal institutions and which led two years later to the enunciation of a policy not of biculturalism but of multiculturalism.

In the midst of all of that development, it is surely more than just appropriate this afternoon to remember the work of one of the Royal Commissioners, Dr. J. B. Rudnyckyj, who is surely, among all the scholars and the public figures of Canada in all those years, the person who in his insistence on the importance of recognition of the languages other than English and French in Canada deserves to be remembered in this Chamber and thanked for his efforts.

I have been informed that he is disappointed time after time by the very, very limited recognition in the multiculturalism Bill, in the broadcasting Bill, and in the legislation brought forward of the multilingual realities of Canada as they were, as they might be, as they should be, if we were only prepared to see funds put in, if we were only prepared to put national support behind the efforts of communities to maintain their languages, to build up the culture to which language is so integral, in order to ensure that the multiculturalism of Canada, the mosaic that we have talked about, the diversity that is there and yet is so often still under challenge, is really fostered and built up.

What has happened, of course, in province after province, as communities recognized from the beginning of the 1970s, is that the Government of Canada was no longer hostile to culture and language—other than the English speaking and the French—but was prepared to encourage, and some funding was made available—a bit here and a bit there—enough to do it very impressively.

In Saturday schools and in various ways through continuing education programs, languages have been encouraged to some extent. I think that the reality remains, and that is what makes the Castlegar school development important.

We have the pioneering efforts in Edmonton and the achievements in Winnipeg, and wherever it is possible to move beyond the voluntary effort, the community effort, the Saturday school, into the establishment of schools in which it is possible not just to study another language, as I did to some extent as a high school student in Manitoba, where German was my foreign language, if you will, and on into the university. To do that goes some limited way toward what we are talking about. The real achievement in the use of heritage languages is the possibility of studying subjects in that language. We have the bilingual school, in which half the day is in English and the other half may be in Ukrainian or in Hebrew or in German, to take them in reverse alphabetical order. In those realities on the Prairies, we have the most important developments that we could imagine, in the way of ensuring that heritage languages are more than just something that we work at desperately on a limited or no-pay basis, doing our best to pass the language on to the next generation.

In that context, of course, the western achievements in the Provinces of Alberta and Manitoba certainly deserve to be recognized first and foremost. It is saying something about the question of how the institute would be well established.

I say, without any hesitation at all, that Edmonton deserves to be the place to establish the centre. If one is going to have one institute with obviously one head office, the challenge would be in how the whole country could be served in this way.

In contrast to that, I want to refer to the sad experience still in this province of mine, my adopted province now, if you will, having had to practise as an Ontario MP for a couple of weeks in the Edmonton area. I still find that a bit ironic. It was not the context in which to make very much of my years of growing up in Manitoba and my years of teaching in the West, when people had me cast as an Ontario MP. I say, bluntly, that Ontario disappoints one so very often. In a few areas, I suppose it is more than in the area of heritage languages.

It is very much regretted that across this province languages are still being taught in Saturday schools and by voluntary efforts, and that that is all that we can achieve.

In the previous Legislature of Ontario a member of my Party, Mr. Tony Grande—and I say this with considerable pride—proposed a motion, which got support from all the Parties, to have the heritage languages incorporated in the curriculum of the public schools of Ontario. It was an initiative that got support at that point but which the Peterson Government has not really followed through on, although a study goes on to determine what kind of assistance the Province of Ontario will give to the heritage languages in this province.

• (1630)

That, of course, is the kind of contrast that I put forward with regret but may, in fact, provide the justification for concern about how the new institute will be able to develop the teaching and the study of heritage languages in Canada. A great deal of effort is required across the country and in our communities where persons want to study the language.

What we have had up to this point is really fairly half-hearted efforts. I say that from the perspective of government in terms of resources put in. I have no doubt about the determination and dedication Dr. Jim Cummins of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education and his colleagues, to whom the Hon. Member for York West has already alluded, have brought to this subject.

This has been with very limited resources. There was a certain amount of funding from Employment Canada at one point, an application to the Government for assistance by the Department to provide additional funding and a proposal for $250,000, something which becomes relevant in further consideration of the funding to be provided. Those efforts have gone on far more by the determination of individuals matching that of efforts of the various ethnocultural communities. Those efforts and some efforts along the same line in the Province of Québec to develop a unit, a centre or whatever at Laval, matched by the efforts of Professors Kreisel and Batts who were invited to partake by the previous Secretary of State in July, 1987, pointed to having three institutes established.

We should not gloss over the fact that Professors Kreisel and Batts were looking at a national institute for heritage languages in western Canada. Although they carried their research beyond western Canada to Toronto and Montreal, the report is oriented in its organizational structure and surely in its funding, proposals and so on to the establishment of an institute which would provide for western needs. It would then be a co-ordinate, I would think, with the expansion of activities at OISE presumably given the work already built up there and quite likely at Laval University in Quebec City.

This would still leave Atlantic Canada having to look where? Toronto is a fair distance away. Laval might conceivably assist. Experience would show the possibilities, but we have in Bill C-152 the acceptance of the Kreisel-Batts report and a generalization of it for the entire country. That will point the way to certain questions that need to be asked.

In this one institute with limited human resources we will have the responsibility to support the training of teachers, the development of resource materials and texts—all the effort required to advance heritage language teaching in communities. As I was saying, talking to Dr. Cummins this morning, the existence of a centre is the merest beginning. The unit at OISE does not really amount to very much because the efforts are needed in Hamilton, Thunder Bay, Sudbury, and Windsor to single out only a few communities in Ontario. Teachers, after all, are doing this as volunteers. They are not being paid. There is no board with great resources to send them somewhere for instruction. They have no kind of reward, and one can hardly expect that taking some instruction will advance their credentials and give them more salary. That is not the nature of a system which is still outside the public school system of the Province of Ontario. Those are the brute realities that face us when we set out to do something as important and as admirable as establishing an institute to ensure heritage language teaching in this country and the study of it is as advanced as it should be.

The fact that education is a provincial responsibility poses questions which in the legislative committee we shall have to explore with care. I wonder to what extent Departments of Education will respond. I say that without any prejudice as far as any one place is concerned because I would imagine the Department of Education for the Province of Alberta would have limited interests in something coming out of OISE. I am concerned that the Department of Education for the Province of Ontario may need the persuasion of activities in the Province of Ontario to put the kinds of resources into the institute that will certainly be required.

That may well suggest that what the Bill proposes to do is to get a brain or a heart or whatever the right organ might be for the institute. Then we will have the limbs across the country. The Kreisel-Batts report envisions that almost half the moneys each year should be spent for program activities, namely, $200,000 out of the $454,000, the suggested annual cost. It is in those programs that the institute would be a reality in its activities across the country.

Having said these things, let me say categorically again that the choice of Edmonton for the centre or the institute is certainly one place that is more than just appropriate.

What we have to be concerned about is the way in which this decision will work out, recognizing that others have been in the field and recognizing the costs incurred. I have already alluded to the proposals in the Kreisel-Batts report which suggest that the annual cost of a national institute for heritage languages in western Canada could well amount to $454,000. One rather odd thing about this Bill is that it is far more specific than is commonly the case. We are actually told in Clause 23 of the Bill how this institute will be endowed over the first several years of its operation. After providing for an initial establishment payment or investment of $250,000, Clause 23 goes on to provide for five fiscal years. The first $250,000 will be for the current fiscal year and then in the next fiscal year we will have $800,000 going toward the capital of an endowment fund and we shall have $500,000 to be expended for the purpose of the institute.

I want to raise one of the most important questions about this admirable initiative. That $500,000 annual cost operating allotment compares rather poorly—this is $500,000 for the country—with the $454,000 in the Kreisel-Batts report for a western Canada institute. Put that beside the proposal to the Department of the Secretary of State for $250,000 to support the efforts of the unit at OISE in Toronto. That amounts to $700,000 which is significantly more than the Bill envisions this particular institute having. Taking these applications and proposals at face value, that would still not provide for efforts in the Province of Quebec or in Atlantic Canada. There I feel very real concern about the limited resources, the straitened resources, the institute is actually being given through the Government's Bill.

It will be necessary to obtain the co-operation of all concerned with the matter across Canada and to do so very rapidly. It will be desirable to have the director and his or her program officers at work very quickly establishing connections with communities and with provincial Governments and other organizations to ensure that provincial assistance is also obtained so that the work of the institute is successfully carried out in the communities.

I should recognize that the Bill also provides, in Clause 22, for the new institute to be deemed a registered charity within the meaning of the Income Tax Act. For the new Canadian Heritage Languages Institute to be a charity in this sense means that the fund raising possibilities will be larger than those that are sometimes the case for multicultural organizations. We might expect to have resources increased from donors. The donors would probably like to build up the endowment fund, and if that is done quickly, the additional resources that might be available could be used for the operations of its institute and the carrying out of its programs across Canada.

Although the funding in this Bill does not compare very well with that suggested by the Kreisel-Batts report, I find it ironic that when so much of the report has been taken up, one of the specific recommendations made about how an institute should be established was not, and that is it should not be done by a Bill of the Canadian Parliament. Here we are this afternoon debating Bill C-152 which establishes this institute by legislation.

I have been assured by officials of the Department of the Secretary of State that this had to be done through a Bill in order to provide the proper context for federal funding to be provided. Without meaning to reflect in the least on their integrity, I find myself a little suspicious about that particular assertion. I am sure that a context could be provided in which federal funds might go to an institution that was not established by Act of Parliament. It is quite possible to do that to achieve this goal very quickly. I know that the Government, in these days, weeks or months, whichever it may happen to be, before the next federal election, is interested in moving very quickly. I am sure it is not only a Bill that can allow that to be done with the proper speed.

There is one additional aspect of the new institute on which I would like to comment, and this is the nature of its board of directors. I have already said a good deal about the challenges that will face the executive and obviously the board as well in ensuring that this institution is well grounded, established, and accepted across Canada. The Bill proposes a board of perhaps 21 appointees, 13 to be appointed by the Governor in Council, and another 8 to be drawn in by the members of the board. This would provide 21 board members. The Kreisel-Batts report recommended a detailed membership structure of the board. Of course, the report was talking about a western Canadian institution.

The Kreisel-Batts report recommended as many as 23 members of the board including the director. If the director were to be ex officio and would not vote, that would bring us down to 22 members on the board plus the chairperson. The recommendation was for a board of about 24 people drawn only from western Canada. They were looking to a couple of people from heritage language associations in each of the western provinces, a representative from a university in each of the western provinces, a couple of representatives from the community colleges which are concerned about heritage languages, and up to eight persons appointed from provincial Departments of Education and/or culture and multiculturalism, depending on how the provincial Government is organized. That was clearly designed with representation from the provinces, from universities and colleges, and from heritage languages associations which would ensure that from the provincial level down through to the grass roots, the board would be aware of what was going on and would be able to carry back to those organizations news of the activities of the institute.

There will be a very great challenge to the Governor in Council in constructing anything like a board as good as the one suggested by the report with only 13 persons from across Canada. It will clearly be necessary to make selections. As I know, with my slip of the tongue about Edmonton in my reaction to a place when I was thinking of an institute, these are invidious selections. The Cabinet will have to make many invidious selections in choosing which of the persons involved with heritage languages associations, universities, and provincial Departments of Education and/or culture will be selected. It will not be possible for there to be two persons from each provincial Department of Education and culture in the context of the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute Bill. I do not envy the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) or the Minister for Multiculturalism the nice job of making these choices.

If the patronage barrel is rolled out one more time, a number of Tory hacks will be appointed. The word "hack" is not really fair to those who have been active in political Parties, as many of my friends have been. I would not necessarily call them hacks just because they chose to be active in a partisan context. However, this means that the expertise of those persons may be in Party work but that they are not necessarily equipped to direct an institute of this sort.

I will not go into the sorry history of patronage in this Government or previous Governments at this point. We all know what a sad thing it is, based on the greediness of individuals and leading to ineffective leadership. The Canadian Heritage Languages Institute deserves better than that.

That is why concerns were raised in the recommendations made by the report of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism and even more strongly in my minority report of 16 months ago entitled A Living Diversity which emphasized the importance of a genuinely representative structure to the advisory council to Government and to a research centre for multiculturalism. I think the Heritage Languages Institute deserves to be representative in that way. It will be a very great challenge to have anything remotely resembling that in this particular institute through the structure the Government has given us.

There are a number of questions to be asked, and there are a number of serious concerns to be explored in the legislative committee as we consider Bill C-152 and move ahead what remains to be an important initiative. Because it is so important, this initiative deserves to be as well constructed and as well begun as it possibly can be. It is because of my concern that it be effective in the communities of every province that I have expressed the concerns I have felt in the past and do so again this afternoon.

• (1650)

There remains only one point I would like to make since I do not suppose there will be any more debate on the Bill before it goes to the legislative committee. That concerns the question of aboriginal languages and how they are going to be supported by this institute. There was some discussion at the press conference, following on the Government giving first reading to this Bill last month, which suggested that this institute would not be constrained in its activities other than recognizing the official languages of Canada are English and French and they have abundant support. Therefore, the institute will be responsible for all the other languages. I was looking at the Bill again and it may be unfortunate that in Clause 2, as is customary in these Bills, heritage languages are not defined. There is then no recognition of the fact that aboriginal languages might well be treated as heritage languages of still another sort and this institute might do something to advance them.

It is to the credit of Professor Kreisel and Professor Batts that they looked at this matter. It is worth putting a paragraph of their report on the record. They say:

> Finally, a word about a special problem, namely, the place of aboriginal languages in the plans for the Institute. Our view is that, while native groups have special needs and special programs designed to meet these needs, they should certainly be able to approach the Institute for helping in the teaching of aboriginal languages, the creation of teaching materials, et cetera.
> Certain other, and no doubt pressing, issues, like the preservation of native languages that are in danger of extinction, will presumably fall outside the mandate of the Institute.

I find those last two sentences somewhat contradictory because any support given to ensuring aboriginal languages are taught and learned in Canada, one would expect that would happen in the native communities across the country. It could also apply to others, however, as was nicely demonstrated over the last few days by this German immigrant living in Manitoba. He has finally found the spiritual home he has been seeking all his life. He found it on an Indian reserve in Manitoba. That deserves to be taken quite seriously.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): My riding.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Yes, in the riding of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who introduced the Bill. A fascinating development.

However, if that is done, then surely those languages will continue to exist. Surely the aboriginal languages will not suffer extinction as quickly if the institute provides this help. I hope, although this is from the report and not the Bill, that the institute established in Edmonton where Professor Kreisel has his home will operate on the terms he suggests in his report.

I say that with particular concern for many of the aboriginal tongues. I live in northwestern Ontario where Ojibway and Cree are a dynamic reality. Yet I have no doubt that even there support for the teaching and learning of those languages would be useful and the institute could be helpful. I suppose what Professor Kreisel and Professor Batts were concerned about was that they did not think the institute should become responsible for preventing the actual extinction of the aboriginal languages. The situation is of course very serious. The vast majority of native tongues are in danger of dying out. As one of my native constituents said the other day, "when any of our languages from Europe or Asia or whatever fall into disuse in Canada, there is no global loss suffered in the sense that the language remains alive somewhere, but if my language, Ojibway, dies out, it is gone forever". That underscores the urgency of the institute being attentive to the needs of every language other than English and French.

In conclusion, the Government has put forward a proposal with much potential. I trust that it will be successful. We may need to put more resources into it than what the Government has proposed, but that is a matter of working with an initiative which is worth fine tuning and improving to make sure it does the job we all want it to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being awfully close to five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

EXTRADITION

PROCEEDINGS REGARDING LEONARD PELTIER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

> That this House deplores the extradition of Mr. Leonard Peltier to the United States from Canada on the basis of false information filed with a Canadian court by American authorities, and that this House calls upon the government to seek the return of Mr. Peltier to Canada and the annulment of all extradition proceedings in this regard.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to again have an opportunity to bring the Leonard Peltier matter before the House. I think there are very clear parallels between this case and the case of a perhaps more well known Canadian, Donald Marshall, and the inquiry into what really went on when an innocent native Canadian was held for so many years when he was absolutely innocent of the charge of which he was convicted.

Leonard Peltier is presently being held in Leavenworth Penitentiary, Kansas, and for those members of the public who are interested in looking at more of the precise legal arguments with respect to this case, they can find them beginning at page 5025 of Hansard of April 9, 1987, when a large number of Members of this House participated in the debate on what was then known as Motion M-28.

The treaty was broken by the United States in the Peltier matter. That treaty is a very old one, established between Canada and the U.S. on August 9, 1842. It was amended July 12, 1889. It is Article 9 that I am specifically addressing in relation to the motion presently before the House today. If one looks at Article 9 of the treaty, one sees that there is a requirement that the prima facie evidence put before the courts of another country be provided in an honest, factual, forthright manner by the foreign country party to the treaty. Otherwise serious damage is done to the treaty, obviously. In this case, serious damage is done to the highest courts of Canada, the Supreme Court of British Columbia, the Government and people of Canada, and most obviously to Leonard Peltier who is presently serving two concurrent life sentences for an offence which it is unlikely that he committed.

There is a basic legal argument that all the evidence, not just the Myrtle Poor Bear affidavits, had no validity. There was no evidence sufficient to warrant Peltier's extradition in 1976 to stand trial on charges of murder. Evidence advanced in support of extradition, apart from the fabricated affidavits, does no more than place Peltier with several others hours after the probable time of the shoot out. This counters the current Minister of Justice's position that "the evidence held against Mr. Peltier was considered sufficient to warrant committal for extradition on four of the five charges contained in the extradition request".

The extradition was successfully obtained by fraud committed by agents of the Government of the United States against the Government of Canada and the Supreme Court of British Columbia. The basic argument is that evidence obtained by fraud is no evidence. The legal argument and challenge to us as Members of this House and Canadians generally is that the "impugned extradition" should be declared null and void so the U.S. Government is not permitted to retain the benefit of its own fraud, which in this case is the damage done to Canada and the continued incarceration of Mr. Peltier.

There are certain basic facts which should be on the record, and then I intend to quote from a number of articles written by a large number of journalists on this matter in recent months. The facts are that on June 18, 1976, Mr. Justice Schultz of the Supreme Court of British Columbia granted an order to the Government of the United States of America for the extradition of Leonard Peltier on, inter alia, two counts of first degree murder.

• (1700)

Second, the Federal Court of Appeal dismissed an appeal without written reasons on October 27, 1976. The applicant was extradited on December 18 after an unsuccessful appeal to the Minister of Justice.

Third, the order put the applicant on trial for the murder of special agents Ronald Williams and Jack Coler of the Federal Bureau of Investigation at the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, U.S.A., on June 26, 1975. The applicant was convicted on both counts at Fargo, North Dakota, on April 18, 1977.

In October, 1987, the Supreme Court of the United States refused to hear an application for a new trial, exhausting all available domestic legal remedies. The applicant was also extradited by the State of Wisconsin on a charge of attempted murder and by the State of Oregon on a charge of burglary. He was acquitted on the charge of attempted murder and the charge of burglary was dismissed at the request of the prosecution.

The applicant was not ordered to be extradited on a count of attempted murder of an Oregon state policeman on November 14, 1975, on the ground that the details of the incident was scanty and the identification of the assailant weak, notwithstanding the deposition of Officer Kenneth T. Griffiths.

The extradition of Mr. Peltier was the result of a fraud perpetrated on the Government of Canada and the Supreme Court of British Columbia by agents of the Government of the United States in that it was based on affidavit evidence known by said agents to be false, and thus is void ab initio.

On October 1 of last year members of all three Parties joined together and held a press conference and released documents, those Members being the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), who is here and will, I imagine, participate in today's debate, myself, and the Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk). The three of us have obviously reviewed many thousands of pages of documents in relation to Mr. Peltier and truly believe that the way in which to remedy the matter is through Motion 115 which is before us today.

On April 9, 1987, The Gazette ran an article entitled "Indian leader extradited via false evidence: lawyer". Lou Gurwitz, who was here for the debate last year, has for many years been Mr. Peltier's counsel. He described the conviction as "the clearest case of frame-up I've ever seen." That is a lawyer who has practised criminal law in the United States for many, many years.

Last year representative Don Edwards of the U.S. Congress and Chair of the House Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights stated that the evidence clearly indicated "government abuse of the investigative process, suppression of evidence and falsehood".

The U.S. Government itself admitted that the affidavits used to extradite Leonard Peltier were entirely false. This prompted an article in the Yale Law Review, Volume II, number one in the fall of 1983 by J. J. Privitera in reference to Canada and the Peltier case. He said:

> Implicit in any workable contract between nations in which they agree to submit evidence in support of probable cause to the courts of either state must be an understanding that the parties will not defraud one another.

There are many other articles, including several more recent ones from which I would like to quote. One was written by Kirk Makin for The Globe and Mail. He actually travelled to Kansas City where he interviewed Mr. Peltier at Leavenworth. The article reads:

> Leonard Peltier is in the hole again, undergoing the worst punishment a prison can mete out.
> But to the native Indian activist, it is almost like going home. For nine of his first 12 years in jail, Mr. Peltier languished in isolation in even worse conditions—23 hours a day in a two by 2.5-meter cell.
>
> Yet Mr. Peltier's stature as a symbol of Indian oppression continues to grow. The next scene is due to unfold on a Canadian stage later this year. A team of lawyers is currently preparing several legal challenges.
>
> In the main one, they will try to convince the Supreme Court of Canada that Mr. Peltier must be returned because the Federal Bureau of Investigation falsified evidence used to extradite him in 1976.
> "It was not only Leonard Peltier's rights that were violated," Mr. Peltier said in a prison interview observed by two sour guards and a revolving camera. "It was the rights of all Canadian citizens.
>
> "There was a fraud committed on the whole judicial system. The United States seems to have no respect for its allies."
> Mr. Peltier's fame extends to Europe and Asia, and he has defence committees dotted all over. Thousands of Californians recently attended a benefit concert for his defence, and the Human Rights Commission of Spain recently awarded him the International Human Rights Prize.

Mr. Makins' article of June 3, 1988, continues:

> The Canadian lawyers are also looking into a civil suit against the FBI, and into the possibility that Mr. Peltier has Canadian relatives might afford him Canadian Indian status, permitting him to be transferred to a Canadian prison.
> "There is no question the legal focus has turned to Canada," Toronto lawyer Dianne Martin said. "And this is not some kind of show trial. It is the most time-consuming, exhausting project I have ever undertaken.
> "We became party to a terrible injustice," she said. "Canada has an obligation to that man. We allowed ourselves to be used in the FBI's paranoid attack on American Indians.

June Callwood wrote an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on October 21, 1987. She says:

> In the fall 1976, Marlon Brando went to Ottawa to see Warren Allmand, who was then Minister of Indian affairs, to beg him to help obtain a new extradition hearing for an Ojibway-Dakota Indian, Leonard Peltier. The U.S. Government wanted the American Indian Movement leader to try him for the shoot-out deaths on June 26, 1975, of two FBI agents at the Harry Jumping Bull hall on the Pine Ridge reserve in South Dakota.
> Leonard Peltier, a charismatic man who was leading a protest against the giveaway of Oglala Sioux reserve lands on which uranium had been discovered, was viewed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation as a dangerous person.
>
> The agency was so anxious to bring him to trial that it falsified the evidence it presented at the extradition hearing in Vancouver, a fact that emerged in examination of the 12,000 relevant documents since obtained under the U.S. Freedom of Information Act. The FBI's deceit at the hearing is no longer in dispute.
> The critical evidence was given in a affidavit by Myrtle Poor Bear, an addled woman who had been hospitalized more than 100 times for mental illness. The FBI obtained from her five separate accounts of the shootings and chose the most damaging of these, the one in which she declared she watched Leonard Peltier kill the men at pointblank range. On the basis of that affidavit, a federal court of Canada sent Leonard Peltier back to the United States. The truth is that Myrtle Poor Bear was not present at the shootings.
> Warren Allmand did not act on Marlon Brando's personal plea that the evidence at the extradition hearings had been concocted, and now he's a sorry man. Last April, the Montreal Liberal spoke in the House of Commons in support of a private member's bill, Motion 28, brought by James Fulton, the New Democrat member for Skeena. It asked that the Canadian Government request Washington to return the Indian leader to Canada, on the grounds that the extradition was obtained by fraudulence. Warren Allmand now describes the extradition as "a travesty of justice."

Motion 28 was, of course, talked out. A government engaged in a dimpled dance of courtship with the United States is not likely to prejudice its hope of coitus by rushing to assist a native person going blind in a Kansan prison.

> Leonard Peltier, 42, is serving two life sentences in Leavenworth. An arterial hemorrhage threatens his sight. All appeal recourses have been exhausted, the last one only two weeks ago, despite proof that the evidence at his trial was poisoned and much that was favourable to him was suppressed.
> It has been more than 13 years since two FBI agents turned up at the hall occupied by Leonard Peltier, two other men, and some women and children. Although the agents had no warrant, they said they wanted to search the premises for used cowboy boots they believed Jimmy Eagle, a 12-year-old boy, had stolen. Leonard Peltier, mindful that more than 400 native people had been killed on the reserve in recent years, resisted. Within minutes the place was swarming with state troopers. The National Guard, SWAT teams, the 82nd Airborne Division in helicopters, armed personal carriers and M16s.
>
> The two FBI men and a native person died as thousands of rounds of ammunition shredded the building.
> Four AIM members, including Leonard Peltier, were charged. Two went to trial for murder but were acquitted unanimously by juries critical of the FBI's evidence. The man the FBI really wanted, however, was Leonard Peltier, who had fled to Canada. He was arrested in Hinton, Alta., in February of 1976, and extradited in December, despite strong suspicion that he had been railroaded.
>
> The support for Leonard Peltier is unprecedented and resembles that given Nelson Mandela of South Africa, with whom his name is often linked.
> The White House has received petitions bearing more than 20 million signatures, 18 million of them from the Soviet Union, which views the native leader as a martyr to U.S. racism. Congressman Donald Edwards, a Californian democrat and a former FBI agent himself, joined 55 other Republican and Democratic Congressmen this year to seek a new trial for Leonard Peltier. In Canada, 60 Members of Parliament support the cause and so do 74 international church groups, Amnesty International, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Desmond Tutu of South Africa, George Erasmus of the National Indian Brotherhood and four Nobel Prize winners.

• (1710)

I think that gives some idea of the research that journalists have undertaken with respect to Leonard Peltier's case. The Sunday Star on May 10, 1987, published a short editorial which is worthy of being placed on the record. It is entitled "A subversion of due process".

> A little known case involving an American Indian extradited from Canada to face murder charges in the United States is testing Canada's willingness to protect its judicial process from abuse by foreign countries.
> The case involves Leonard Peltier, an American Indian leader alleged to have killed two FBI agents in 1975. Peltier was extradited after a 1976 Vancouver hearing. It has since been learned that U.S. authorities submitted false evidence at the extradition hearing, but the Canadian Government has not demonstrated the will to protest.

However, Jim Fulton, a New Democratic Party MP from British Columbia has put forward a Private Member's Bill calling upon the Government to demand Peltier's return to Canada for a new hearing. Fulton points out that the key evidence at the 1976 hearing was an affidavit sworn by Myrtle Poor Bear, who said that she had observed Peltier shoot the FBI agents at point-blank range as they lay wounded behind a car. It has since been confirmed that the judge was not shown an earlier affidavit in which Poor Bear, a psychotic with a record of 105 hospital stays—admitted that she wasn't present when the agents were killed.

The Peltier case demonstrates how the authorities were able to take advantage of an extradition treaty in which the evidence consists of affidavits that must be accepted on blind faith and the accused person is not present at the hearing to offer a rebuttal.

Furthermore, under the terms of the treaty, the U.S. Government was represented at the Peltier hearing by a Canadian lawyer on the staff of the federal Department of Justice. This demonstrates the conflict of interest surrounding then Justice Minister Ron Basford's decision not to exercise his discretion to override the decision of the judge.

The Fulton Bill parallels an American effort to vindicate Peltier, now in his 11th year of imprisonment in the U.S. The Bill has the support of 60 MPs representing all three Parties. But it recently failed to come to a vote because of the limited time allotted for the debate of Private Members' Bills.

But the Government does not need the approval of Parliament before launching a protest over the use of false evidence to win Peltier's extradition. What is it waiting for?

I have another article with the headline "Evidence on Peltier was false, MP says", and other articles entitled "U.S. told lies in extradition case—lawyer", "MPs seek new hearing", "Indian leader extradited via false evidence: lawyer", "MP's Bill seeks return of Indian from U.S. jail". The articles go on and on. In October of 1986, The Ottawa Citizen published an article by Stephen Bindman entitled "Jailed Indian activist has new hope international clamour will set him free". The article is worthy of quoting as well:

Amnesty International, the human rights monitoring agency, has said "the interest of justice would best be served" by giving Peltier a new trial because of "serious doubts" about his first encounter with justice.

The National Association of Criminal Defence Lawyers in the U.S. has gone to bat for the native leader and the Chairman of the House of Representatives sub-committee on civil rights has said the Peltier case clearly indicated "government abuse of the investigative process, suppression of evidence and falsehood".

In his latest unsuccessful appeal, three judges of 8th U.S. circuit court of appeal conceded last month that the prosecution had withheld ballistic evidence at the trial which was favourable to Peltier.

"There is a possibility that the jury would have acquitted Leonard Peltier had the records and data improperly withheld from the defence been available to him," the judges said.

They also said there was clear evidence in the case of "improper conduct on the part of some FBI agents".

But the judges said that under guidelines issued by the Supreme Court, a possibility is not enough to order a new trial, there must be a probability.

I think Members of this House need to understand what those guidelines of the U.S. Supreme Court mean to someone like Leonard Peltier.

Said Peltier's New York Lawyer William Kundstler: "Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse had the seventh Calgary and Leonard Peltier now has the 8th circuit.

"There can be no rational explanation of this ruling other than that the court was unwilling to grant a new trial, no matter how justified, in a case involving the death of two FBI agents".

I have another article written by Michele Landsberg from New York. It was published in The Globe and Mail on June 14, 1986. Again, it is worthy of being placed on the record.

Looking back 10 years Vancouver Lawyer Don Rosenbloom called the extradition of Leonard Peltier "the most disgusting experience of my life".

Saul Terry, president of the B.C. Union of Indian Chiefs, remembers the case as "sleazy".

Right Rev. Robert Smith, moderator of the United Church of Canada, calls it "a shadow (across) the national conscience of Canada".

And I call it terrifying.

The more I plow through the documents in the case of Mr. Peltier, the more chillingly I am reminded that legislators and law enforcers are capable of every kind of treachery, and that Canada, the bland and the good, has been party to a fraud.

If that seems extreme, let me backtrack to June, 1975, to Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. The U.S. Government was virtually at war—complete with armed men and heavy weaponry—against American Indian movement dissidents camped on the reserve. AIM was there to protest against the tribal chief, who was busily selling one-eighth of the reserve lands, rich in oil and uranium, to the federal Government.

The FBI committed a fraud as the U.S. Government later admitted (but only after it had Mr. Peltier back in its grasp) and on the basis of that fraud, the Canadian judge ordered Mr. Peltier's extradition. Mr. Rosenbloom desperately flew to Ottawa to ask the then Minister of Justice, Ron Basford, to stay the extradition on the grounds that the affidavit was now known to be false. Mr. Basford refused.

It is at this point that one must wonder about the propriety of having one of Mr. Basford's staff representing the U.S. Government. Is there not even a ghost of a suspicion that there could be a conflict of interest here?

What makes it worse is that it's now clear that we Canadians sent Mr. Peltier off to South Dakota to a travesty of a trial. The FBI agents emerge as shabby and ruthless tricksters. Vital evidence was illegally suppressed. The judge has since had a decision overturned for biased, anti-Indian remarks.

Let me conclude by reading Michele Landsberg's conclusion:

Canadian Members of Parliament of all three Parties are petitioning Justice Minister John Crosbie to intervene with Washington.

Canada, a victim of a fraud by a U.S. agency, has a right—and a duty—to ask for Mr. Peltier back. We should not, as Mr. Rosenbloom said, "sleep on our rights", but we have to do more than that if we want to shake that shadow off our national conscience. We have to look at the terms of our extradition treaties that leave us wide open to official deceit by other governments. We have to ask ourselves, is that what we mean by justice?

I hope Bill M-115 carries today and that we see Mr. Peltier back in Canada for a fair, open, honest and factual extradition hearing.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to my colleague from Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and I would also like to take this opportunity to thank him for presenting a motion to ask the Government of Canada to seek the annulment of the extradition of Leonard Peltier to the United States, which occurred in 1976, that is 12 years ago. Mr. Peltier was turned over to the American authorities in December 1976 after an extradition hearing was held in Canada. He was sent back to the United States where he faced charges relating to the death of two FBI officers in June 1975 and infractions he allegedly committed in other U.S. states.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, calls not only for annulment of the extradition proceedings but also for action to bring Mr. Peltier back to Canada. For that, he would have to be released, since he is now serving two life sentences for his part in murdering two FBI agents. Nowhere does it say what will happen if Mr. Peltier is allowed to return to Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the motion before you this afternoon is extremely unusual: nowhere does the law provide for annulment of extradition proceedings once a fugitive is turned over to the appropriate authorities. In fact, the motion calls upon the Government of Canada to do something that is impossible.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable that the American authorities will agree to release, and thus waive their jurisdiction over, someone who was given a fair trial, found guilty and sentenced for having committed the most serious criminal offence there is.

Mr. Speaker, this particular case has, over the years, taken on near-mythical proportions. Mr. Peltier is a hero to those people in Canada, in the United Stats and in the international community who believe he was extradited on false evidence and wrongly convicted as a result of the suppression of evidence and the fabrication of testimony to convict him of crimes he did not commit. No one doubts the sincerity of the people who support Mr. Peltier's side of the case. However, the facts do not support the claims of the people who proclaim his innocence.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that we must look at the facts if we are to understand this case. In my comments on the motion I would like to examine certain important facts, and hope that many of my colleagues will do the same.

Early in 1975, Mr. Peltier went to the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota to take part in a political struggle that was taking place between the local Native government and younger members of the tribe who supported the more radical position taken by the American Indian Movement. The confrontation occurred at a time when relations between young reservation chiefs and the Indian Affairs Bureau in Washington were particularly strained. By the summer of 1975, the situation had become explosive.

On June 25, 1975, two special FBI agents, Ronald Williams and Jack Coler, came to the Pine Ridge Reservation to investigate a robbery allegedly committed by a person who was supposed to be living on the reservation.

Upon arriving in a part of the reservation called the Harry Jumping Bull Compound, the two agents were met with gun fire. The shooting came from a section of the reservation occupied by supporters of the American Indian Movement. Leonard Peltier himself did not deny his presence on the scene that day, and in January 1987, during an interview on Fifth Estate, on CBC television, he did not even challenge the allegation that he participated in the first exchange of gun fire when the FBI agents arrived.

As soon as the first shots were fired, the two FBI agents took cover behind their vehicle. A subsequent examination of the vehicles revealed the presence of more than 125 bullet holes.

At Mr. Peltier's trial, it was proved that although the two FBI agents had been wounded during the initial exchange of gun fire, they were shot down at close range as in an execution-type shooting, with a small caliber weapon and high velocity ammunition. It was proven that Mr. Peltier was carrying a weapon of that kind that day and that he also happened to be in the area where the bodies of the FBI agents were subsequently found.

Mr. Speaker, this evidence alone is enough to justify the extradition of Mr. Peltier so that he could answer the murder charges. However, there was further evidence, a large body of evidence that implied that Mr. Peltier took an active part in the murder of the two FBI agents. It was also established that Mr. Peltier had in his possession the personal weapon of Jack Coler, one of the two FBI agents who were killed.

Although the evidence justifying the extradition of Leonard Peltier is overwhelming and conclusive, we must admit, Mr. Speaker, that we deplore the use of the two affidavits signed by Myrtle Poor Bear who claimed she saw the murder, since this flawed the proceedings. Subsequently, it was shown that Mrs. Poor Bear's testimony was entirely unreliable and that the FBI knew she had left the Pine Ridge Reservation the day before the shooting. It is unfortunate that the Canadian authorities were not informed of the problems connected with these affidavits before Judge Schultz of the British Columbia Supreme Court admitted them as evidence during the first extradition hearing early in 1976.

Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today is based mainly on the fact that Mr. Peltier's extradition was obtained on the basis of the affidavits of Myrtle Poor Bear. Quite simply, this is not true. Before Mr. Peltier was handed over to the American authorities we had been advised that the testimony given by Mrs. Poor Bear was unreliable. Mr. Peltier was extradited on the basis of other admissible evidence which did warrant this course of action.

Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government of Canada is that Mr. Peltier was legitimately extradited to the United States to face charges pending against him. Moreover, no point of law would allow us to annul the extradition proceedings or seek the return of an individual serving a sentence for crimes for which he was duly found guilty.

Were such recourses possible, Mr. Speaker, nothing indicates we would be justified to act on them in this case.

• (1720)

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to start by congratulating the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for once more introducing this important resolution. I think I should read into the record this important resolution once more. It states:

> That this House deplores the extradition of Mr. Leonard Peltier to the United States from Canada in 1976 on the basis of false information filed with a Canadian court by American authorities, and that this House calls upon the Government to seek the return of Mr. Peltier to Canada and the annulment of all extradition proceedings in this regard.

Leonard Peltier is an American Indian from North Dakota. In June of 1975 he was involved in a shoot out at the Pine Ridge Reserve in the State of North Dakota. This shoot out took place as a result of two FBI agents coming to the reserve in search of a suspect, at least that is what they said. They said that they were coming to look for a suspect by the name of Jim Eagle. However, they had no warrant to go on to the reserve or to approach the ranch on the reserve where a certain number of Indians were staying. In any case, in the process of these events gun-fire broke out between the FBI agents and the Indian people. As a result of that gun-fire the two FBI agents were killed and one Indian was killed.

Following these incidents there were warrants of arrest drawn out against three of the Indians who there were there that day, a Mr. Butler, a Mr. Robideau and Leonard Peltier. Peltier escaped into Canada and was finally arrested in Hinton, Alberta in February, 1976. He was sent to Oakalla Prison in Vancouver where the extradition proceedings took place.

The proceedings started in May of 1976 and concluded in December of 1976. He was extradited to the United States where he then stood trial and was convicted of the murder of these two FBI agents.

It is interesting to note that the other two accused, Robideau and Butler, were both acquitted on the grounds of self-defence. They were all involved in this shoot out. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in a shoot out like this no one knows where the gun-fire is coming from or who started it. However, at the end of it all two FBI agents were dead and one Indian was dead and warrants for arrest were issued for three people. Two of the three were acquitted, having stood trial in the United States. However Peltier was extradited from Canada to the United States, then tried and found guilty.

It was only after the extradition that it was found that one of the principal sources of evidence used against Peltier was false. That was an affidavit signed by a Myrtle Poor Bear who was allegedly the girlfriend of Leonard Peltier. In the affidavit she swore that she was at the Pine Ridge Reserve that day and that she was with Peltier and she saw Peltier fire the gun.

Later, she repudiated that affidavit and said that she was coerced. The affidavit was so discredited that it was not even used in the trial of Leonard Peltier when he came to trial in the United States after his extradition. The Americans themselves admitted that the affidavit was false. They accepted that. After the trial the three main witnesses against Leonard Peltier had the charges against them dropped. Two of them then stated that they were coerced to testify in the trial, and the third person died and could not comment on what took place at the trial.

• (1730)

Still later, through the use of the freedom of information law in the United States, it was found that the American FBI had concealed certain evidence. There was evidence that the shell casings found at the scene of the event did not come from the gun of Leonard Peltier, but from another gun. It was sworn at the trial that the shells that had shot the two FBI agents had come from Peltier's gun. First, the affidavit of Myrtle Poor Bear was shown to be a false affidavit, then the witnesses who testified against Peltier in the trial claimed that they had been coerced. Then there was the fact that certain evidence was concealed or hidden and later found to be very critical with respect to the conviction of Leonard Peltier.

On that basis there was an appeal to the American Circuit Court of Appeal to have a new trial ordered on the basis of this new evidence. It is interesting to note that the Circuit Court of the United States concluded that Peltier's defence had been hampered by the misconduct of the FBI, and by possible perjury, but it did not order a new trial. It admitted that there had been possible perjury, and it admitted that these incidents to which I referred certainly hampered Peltier's defence, but it did not order a new trial. There was a petition presented to the United States Supreme Court to order a new trial, but it turned down that request.

I am particularly incensed about this case. In 1976 when the extradition proceedings commenced, I was the Solicitor General of Canada. When the extradition proceedings were concluded, I was the Minister for Indian Affairs. During that period of time I was approached by certain Indian leaders both from Canada and the United States to intervene to have the extradition cancelled or to stop it. At the time I made inquiries with respect to this matter, but I was told that it was before the courts and justice would take its course. Something took its course, but it was not justice. It was only after the extradition and after Peltier was sent back to the United States that we found out that the affidavit was false, the evidence of the witnesses were false, and that certain evidence was concealed.

I consider this to be a travesty on the system of justice and a breach of faith between two sovereign states. Here the FBI of the United States used false evidence before a Canadian court to have an individual extradited to the United States. I consider that to be a serious breach of trust. As a Minister of the Crown at that time, I consider myself to have been misled by the authorities of the American Government.

I feel that the motion put forward by my hon. colleague, the Member for Skeena, is one that must be taken seriously. I was very disappointed to hear the response of the Parliamentary Secretary speaking on behalf of the Government. He almost seemed to be building a case to justify what the Americans had done in this matter. He stated that the affidavit of Myrtle Poor Bear was not the telling evidence in this case. How are we to know? It certainly was accepted that the affidavit was false. It also came out later that other evidence was false. Surely this extradition should be annulled and be declared null and void, as the motion requests, and Peltier should be returned to Canada for a new extradition hearing, and then there should be a new trial. Perhaps there will be enough evidence to convict him. I do not know, and I am not going to make a judgment on that. What I do know is that the extradition proceeding was false, and it should not be accepted. It is totally wrong that we here in Canada should be submitted to this type of treatment and behaviour by American authorities. I cannot understand why the Government would not take a stronger position with respect to this matter.

The type of treatment of Leonard Peltier is not an isolated case. He is only one of many Indians who have been treated unfairly by our judicial system. In a way he has become a symbol, just as Donald Marshall has become a symbol, of what is wrong with respect to our justice system in the way it relates to Indians.

It is interesting to note that, in June, 1988, the Canadian Bar Association, a rather staid and conservative organization of which I was a member at one time, put out a report entitled: "Locking up Natives in Canada: A Report of the Committee of the Canadian Bar Association on Imprisonment and Release". This report was published by Professor Michael Jackson of the University of British Columbia. In the report it states that Indians in Canada receive a raw deal before our justice system, and some radical changes should be made.

In conclusion, let me say that this case represents a serious miscarriage of justice which must be corrected. The Peltier case is an important case because of its symbolism. If we believe at all in our sovereignty as a nation, we as Canadians should make it clear to the Americans that this type of thing is not acceptable, and we should cancel that extradition.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in connection with this motion of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). The motion states:

> That this House deplores the extradition of Mr. Leonard Peltier to the United States from Canada in 1976 on the basis of false information filed with a Canadian court by American authorities, and that this House calls upon the Government to seek the return of Mr. Peltier to Canada and the annulment of all extradition proceedings in this regard.

The impact and effect of that motion is that of an application to Parliament, an application to the highest court of the land to review a proceeding that has been held and to take a fresh look at it and see if there should not be a different result. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Parliament is the highest court in the land. It means that this is the court of last resort in dealing with problems of any nature, and problems of this type in particular.

The Hon. Member for Skeena and other Hon. Members have indicated that this particular case is one of a travesty of justice, and to quote the Hon. Member for Skeena in his quotes of others, that a fraud was committed on the judicial system. In dealing with the question of whether a fraud was perpetrated on the legal system, I suppose that we are looking at two legal systems, that of the United States and that of Canada, when we are discussing the issue. In particular, I think that Canadians generally, in viewing American courts and the American judicial system, have a tendency to feel that quite frequently American courts will go further than Canadian courts in striking down convictions of persons, whether they be native people, or otherwise, in the United States on grounds of tainted evidence.

Generally speaking, that is the impression that most Canadians have had over many years. It has only been in recent years with the Charter of Rights in this country that the Canadian courts have started to take a different attitude and a different look at the type of evidence presented and whether the evidence itself is tainted and therefore should not be allowed to be the foundation of a conviction in this country.

Having said that, as far as the Canadian courts are concerned, all Hon. Members, and particularly those who come from the legal profession, will have to agree that for a long time the American courts have been viewed much differently in this respect and have been considered as perhaps leaning a long way overboard from what Canadian courts would have done in the past with respect to dealing with evidence that was suspect in any way. That being the case, what we are being asked to do, and what apparently has been done in the United States—

EXTRADITION

PROCEEDINGS REGARDING LEONARD PELTIER

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fulton:

That this House deplores the extradition of Mr. Leonard Peltier to the United States from Canada on the basis of false information filed with a Canadian court by American authorities, and that this House calls upon the Government to seek the return of Mr. Peltier to Canada and the annulment of all extradition proceedings in this regard.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, prior to the break I was commenting that under our system compared with the American system, we have had a tendency over the years to feel that the American courts are much more likely to accept the fact that tainted evidence should be used to overturn a decision or strike down a trial or, in fact, not be allowed to be introduced in evidence at all so that a conviction can be founded upon it.

It appears somewhat strange to those of us who are not entirely familiar with this case and all the facts and evidence surrounding it to hear that so many people have made statements that this is a fraud committed on the judicial system in a jurisdiction like the United States where the American courts traditionally have been quite fair and much more fair, if you will, in the sense of rejecting evidence and failing to found convictions on tainted evidence or overturning a trial based on that sort of evidence.

When we are dealing with a case like this, Mr. Speaker—and we are dealing with it in the context of a court application to the highest court of the land to review it as far as we are concerned in Canada—it is only fair and reasonable that both sides of the argument be heard, the side of the argument which says this is a fraud committed on the judicial system and that we should, in fact, overturn it. It is also fair, I would submit, and I am sure you and all our Members would agree, Mr. Speaker, that the other side of the story should be heard in order to determine which is right and which is wrong. As well the Department of Justice has its side of the story.

As has been said, we are deciding a question here of whether Leonard Peltier was improperly convicted for the murder of Ronald Williams and Jack Coler, two special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the United States.

This matter has been before the courts in the United States, at trial and before U.S. appeal courts. The trial court that heard the evidence against Mr. Peltier and the various appellant courts that have examined the case in the intervening years have commented adversely upon aspects of the investigation and some of the conduct associated with the extradition and the prosecution of the case against Mr. Peltier. At the same time, notwithstanding that, the conviction has survived all of these judicial scrutinies so far in the United States.

Following Mr. Peltier's trial, and conviction in the summer of 1977, an appeal was taken to the United States Court of Appeal for the Eighth Circuit. That court upheld the conviction and subsequent appeals were similarly unsuccessful. This included a hearing before the Supreme Court of the United States.

The difficulties encountered with the affidavits of Myrtle Poor Bear continued to be an issue before the United States courts even after Mr. Peltier's conviction, although for reasons of an obvious nature, I am told, Ms. Poor Bear was not called as a witness for the prosecution at the trial. Mr. Peltier raised the affidavit issue with the Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit Court to underline the concerns about the way the United States investigated and prosecuted the case. It was suggested that the U.S. authorities had, in effect, presented false evidence at the extradition hearing in Canada to secure Mr. Peltier's return to the United States. The FBI was condemned by Judge Ross of the Eighth Circuit Court, who was prepared to find that the FBI had abused the investigative process by submitting the affidavits of an individual whose credibility and reliability was entirely suspect.

The judgment of Justice Ross is of interest and significance in that it demonstrates that the Court of Appeal was able to comprehend that Mr. Peltier's extradition had been justified on the basis of evidence other than the unreliable evidence contained in the affidavits sworn by Myrtle Poor Bear. It is interesting to note that when the Peltier case was before the Court of Appeals, he or his counsel did not purport to claim that he had been extradited on the basis of insufficient evidence. Mr. Justice Ross characterized the distinction in the following way:

> We do not find it necessary to decide what standard should be applied to the review of claims of government misconduct in international proceedings, since, under any standard, Peltier's claim is on its face lacking in substance. Peltier does not claim that he was extradited solely on the basis of Myrtle

> Poor Bear's affidavits or that the other evidence presented to the Canadian Tribunal was insufficient to warrant extradition. It is clear from a review . . . of the transcript that other substantial evidence of Peltier's involvement in the murders was presented in the extradition proceedings . . .

In 1979, after exhausting the first round of conventional appeals open to him, Mr. Peltier took his case before the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations. By this time he was claiming that he had been unlawfully extradited from Canada on the basis of false evidence fabricated either by U.S. law enforcement officials in collaboration with Canadian authorities or by Canadian officials who acted on behalf of the Government of the United States during the extradition proceedings. He further alleged that he had been poorly treated while he was in custody in Canada and this had resulted in prejudice to his ability to prepare an adequate defence to the extradition request. Because Canada is a signatory—I notice, Mr. Speaker, that you are giving me the high sign. I will close but I would like to close by indicating that there are apparently two sides to this story. I think in fairness we should hear both sides before the highest court in the land, Parliament, makes that final decision in this particular case.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—BILL C-74—SIZE OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING/REDUCTION IN PERSON-YEARS WITHIN DEPARTMENTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on June 19, I asked a question related to insufficient funds for the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to implement and enforce the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, but in a broader sense, I meant the lack of commitment to the environment on the part of this Government. A week ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) proclaimed himself a born-again environmentalist. Surprise, surprise. If the declaration of the Prime Minister is to be taken seriously and not as smoke and mirrors, then an explanation is due for the following.

We have a Minister of the Environment who engages in the trade, literally speaking, of environmental issues with the Premier of Saskatchewan, thus giving up his role and mandate on the Rafferty-Alameda dam. We have a Minister who, for three years, virtually sat on the commitment made on PCBs by the Ministers when they met in 1985. We have a Minister who used his Parliamentary Secretary and his back-benchers to weaken the Canadian Environmental Protection Bill in committee on four major fronts.

First, the Bill was weakened because it did not give the federal Government the power to issue enforceable national standards. Second, it was weakened because it does not allow citizens instead of only the Minister of the Environment to seek injunctions so as to prevent violations of the Act. Third, the Bill was further weakened by not inserting a so-called general prohibition clause so that the release of any toxic substance would become a violation. Finally, an amendment was forced upon us in committee whereby the management of emergencies was slowed down by providing as mandatory the provincial consultations in which the Minister of the Environment has to engage now.

In addition, we have a Minister who has not acted on even one recommendation of the task force on the economy and the environment which is now one year old. We have a Minister who could not convince the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) to add water to unprocessed fish, lumber and beer as items which are exempted from the trade agreement with the U.S.A. The Minister still maintains that trade and the environment are not related. So much for the depth of belief of this Government in the integration of the environment and the economy.

We have a Minister who sat for three years on the federal water policy before bringing legislation to Parliament a few weeks ago. We have a Minister who still has to take a stand on the federal commitment to provide money to small municipalities and businesses not in a position to afford the cost of the destruction of PCBs. So much for the Minister's swooping in, particularly when it comes to money matters.

We have a Minister who has shown so much interest in his own legislation that he has not made one speech on either Bill standing in his name at any stage of debate in the House. We have a Minister who has allowed his Department to lose over $70 million to inflation since 1984, a Minister who has over the same period lost 336 person-years. We have a Minister who has not initiated nor asked for a single study on the environmental consequences of the trade agreement with the U.S.A.

• (1805)

We have lost people in every section of Environment Canada in a manner that would take too long to illustrate in the limited time available. Against this background, therefore, I have to ask how credible can the Prime Minister's statement of last week be and how seriously can we take it? Canadians would like to believe their Prime Minister, they would, no matter what their political beliefs might be. You know that. However, because the environment is so important, it cannot be left to chance nor rhetoric. The gap between rhetoric and fact is so wide and flagrant that it requires an explanation on the eve of an election campaign, by the Minister of the Environment at a minimum.

Moreover, Canadians are entitled to know whether the Prime Minister's sudden interest in the environment is driven by the polls or by a genuine desire to change alarming trends in air, water and soil, at home and abroad, which require much more than just a declaration accompanied by generalities.

I thank you for your indulgence and I would stress that Canadians are entitled to know.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who has just spoken asked about this Government's commitment to environmental issues. I am very happy to have this opportunity to briefly outline just a few of those initiatives. I think the record speaks for itself and the list of issues speaks for itself. With your indulgence I will try to describe some of those initiatives, although I suspect time will not permit me to do justice to the entire list.

For example, comprehensive new environmental legislation, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, was promulgated on June 30 of this year. Regulations were introduced to reduce motor vehicle emissions. Lead additives are being removed from gasoline by regulation, and I am pleased that the deadline for that has been advanced. Chlorofluorocarbons will be reduced by regulation. We are putting in place national requirements for the storage of PCBs, which has of course been very much an issue these last few weeks.

We have expanded our pesticides management program. We have introduced new water legislation prohibiting large-scale water exports. We have upgraded the U.S.-Canada Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement and signed a Niagara River pollution accord with the Americans. We are cleaning up Windermere Harbour in Hamilton and the Sydney tar ponds. We are working with the City of Halifax to build an oil-from-sludge sewage treatment facility. I think that is a very exciting development in itself.

We have signed agreements with seven provincial governments to control acid rain. It was this Government that introduced the first amendments to the National Parks Act in over 50 years. We established four new national parks, Ellesmere, Pacific Rim, South Moresby and the Bruce Peninsula. We hosted the International Conference on Ozone Depletion in the Upper Atmosphere and were instrumental in securing the world's first ever global treaty on the atmosphere.

We negotiated the Canada-U.S. Porcupine Caribou Herd Management Plan. We increased the number of sites designated for wetland protection to 30, a number greater than that of any other country. We signed with the United States the North American Waterfowl Management Plan, a 15 year program to reverse declining waterfowl populations. That is of course extremely important in the drought areas of western Canada.

We issued a comprehensive report on the state of the Canadian environment. We will supplement that initiative with fact sheets on particular ecosystems and issues. We have established a working group with industry and the provinces to implement the principles of sustainable development.

The list goes on, as you know. However, incomplete as that list may be, it certainly speaks of commitment. It certainly speaks of a record in which the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), indeed all members of Cabinet, all members of this Government, and I would go further and say all Members of Parliament, can take some pride in and accept some credit.

HOUSING—METROPOLITAN TORONTO—VACANT LAND AT DOWNSVIEW AIR BASE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I will bet you have been at some red hot public meetings in your time as a Member of Parliament. When I say that, I mean meetings where your constituents were concerned, disturbed, upset, worked up, and perhaps even rip-roaring mad. I can see from the look on your face that you have been at a few of those meetings, and I imagine more than one. I have, too, and I suspect that all Members in this House have been at those kinds of meetings from time to time.

• (1810)

I had that sort of an experience earlier this year when I met with some tenants in my constituency. These are tenants who live in the five apartment buildings that are located at the southeast corner of Don Mills Road and Lawrence Avenue East in my riding. They are the residents of 16 The Don Way East, 18 The Don Way East, 1065 Don Mills Road, 1071 Don Mills Road and 1001 Lawrence Avenue East. They formed an association of tenants called the Five Rs Tenants' Association. The President of that Association is a dynamic guy called Peter Bate, and you know that sort of dynamic guy, Mr. Speaker. You have had them on your tail before with a blowtorch, and so have I.

That meeting was held on a Saturday afternoon at Don Mills Collegiate and there were an awful lot of people there. They were worked up, upset, and really mad about the fact that their rents were going up and the maintenance on their buildings was going down. They were afraid that their rental buildings might be converted into condominium apartments and were concerned about the fact that they did not have anywhere else to go. There was no alternative.

The reason there was no alternative and still is no alternative for those tenants and others in Metropolitan Toronto is the fact that the vacancy rate on rental apartments is so low. In addition to that, no rental apartments have been built in Metropolitan Toronto for years. When the rents go up and they have to move there is just no alternative accommodation, particularly for people on modest incomes and for senior citizens.

At that particular meeting they were interested in having some answers to the problem. They wanted answers from their municipal representatives, their provincial representatives and, of course, from me, their federal representative. You are aware I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that all three levels of government play some role in the housing and accommodation picture.

The municipal government has a role to play as far as zoning by-laws are concerned and are part of the approval process for building. The provincial governments have a role to play in the area of rent control, rent review, and the whole planning process. In spite of the fact that some people would like us to believe that the federal Government does not have much of a role in this, it does have a role to play as you and I know, Mr. Speaker.

How can the federal Government help in a situation like this? Any federal program must apply across Canada. That does create a problem for the federal Government, particularly in this sort of a housing climate, because there are different vacancy rates in different parts of the country.

In my City of Metropolitan Toronto the vacancy rate is .2 per cent. It used to be .1 per cent, virtually nil. In Ottawa here it is almost 2 per cent. In Halifax it is almost 6 per cent and in Edmonton, from where you come, Mr. Speaker, I am told it is almost 7 per cent. In Saskatoon it is almost 9 per cent and in St. John's, it is almost 11 per cent. They tell me that in Montreal some places will give you three months free rent just to rent an apartment. However, in Metropolitan Toronto there is virtually a nil vacancy rate. When the federal Government looks at what it can do for rental housing in particular in Metropolitan Toronto, it has to examine it in the light of the that situation across the country.

There is one thing for sure that the federal Government can do in this situation, and that is to make available some of the surplus land that the Government has in the greater Metropolitan Toronto area. There is a lot of land which has been discussed and talked about, but there is one area which has been identified in particular and that is the land at the Downsview air base. Perhaps 260 acres of land are potentially surplus and could be made available for badly needed affordable housing in the Metropolitan Toronto area by the federal Government.

• (1815)

The federal Government has to get going. It has to get moving to make this land available. It is not an easy process, I admit. That land is under the control of the Department of National Defence and it has to decide whether or not it is surplus as far as it is concerned. Perhaps it has to move some buildings from one part of the base to another.

The federal Government, through the Treasury Board and the Bureau of Real Property Management, has to make a decision that it is surplus land to all of the federal Government. It then has to decide on what basis it is going to release the land, who would administer its release, whether Canada Mortgage and Housing or Public Works, and under what conditions the land should be released. All of these matters have to be decided.

I admit, and you know, Mr. Speaker, as does the Parliamentary Secretary, that it is not an easy task. But we have to get on with it if these people in the Five Rs Tenants' Association are ever going to have an alternative place to live.

I hope tonight the Parliamentary Secretary will start the process of releasing that land at the Downsview air base and, in Heaven's name, tell the poor deserving people of Metropolitan Toronto that that land is going to be made available. I am sure they will applaud the Parliamentary Secretary tonight if he makes that announcement.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for the manner in which he has consistently, throughout the life of this Parliament, represented the views of his constituents and others. I say to him both as a member of the Government and as an individual that we are certainly well aware of the housing crisis which exists in Metropolitan Toronto. I can say that as a father. My daughter went to York University last year to study law and found just how difficult it is to find suitable accommodation. During the course of that year she, fortunately, was able to find suitable accommodation on campus, but we understand that is not an alternative which is open to all people, even all students. In an economy such as the economy of Metropolitan Toronto, which is, of course, one of the most vibrant in the country, there are many benefits, but there are also some disadvantages. A shortage of suitable housing and accommodation and increased pricing for that housing and accommodation is one of the by-products of that healthy economy.

I must say that some of us who live in other parts of Canada where the economy has not been so vibrant perhaps may be forgiven for wishing on occasion we had some of those characteristics of the Metropolitan Toronto economy. But there are certainly two sides to every coin, and with the benefits comes some problems.

As a result of our awareness that there is a shortage of suitable land for additional building, the Government began an inventory some time ago. It asked all its federal agencies, as the Hon. Member knows, to investigate its holdings with great care. Of course, the Department of National Defence was asked to do that as well. All of us in this House know that CFB Toronto's Downsview site is a very active military establishment. It is certainly anything but abandoned. It represents one of the nation's four military supply points. Nevertheless, the Department of National Defence has been asked to investigate very carefully its own plans for the future, its needs for the space, as have other agencies.

While I cannot give the Hon. Member the information he would prefer to receive, I can say to him that I understand the study is all but complete. I am advised that an announcement of the results of the investigation should be made available very shortly, at which time he will, hopefully, be able to take that information to his constituents.

DISASTERS

JAMAICA—DESTRUCTION CAUSED BY HURRICANE GILBERT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, a tragedy of colossal proportions is unfolding on the Island of Jamaica as Hurricane Gilbert sweeps across the Caribbean. Early reports on television and what we have heard on the news indicate widespread destruction on the island, including houses, hospitals, schools, and places of employment. Indeed, I heard last night that the airport in Kingston which was built by Canadian engineering and partly by Canadian resources is totally destroyed.

We have to be conscious of Jamaica's problem as a fellow member of the Commonwealth and because the historic homeland of thousands and thousands of Canadian citizens is Jamaica.

• (1405)

So far, perhaps understandably, the Government has taken no action and made no gesture, waiting, I understand, to hear from the Minister's office exactly what type of assistance is required.

As soon as the dimensions of the tragedy are known, and as soon as it is possible to make any offer or any indication, I urge the Government to do so. Canadians will broadly support generosity toward Jamaica in this terrible hour of need.
