My wife has been troubled with colds. I have used it on her, and it cured her pain instantly. I was suffering with a severe headache, and by using it, I was able to get up with a piece of bread. I had a severe cold, and by using it, I was able to get up with a piece of bread. I had a severe cold, and by using it, I was able to get up with a piece of bread.

The Puzzling Pretty Widow

"No, I couldn't," retorted Mabin, with great fierceness, but with a twinkle in her gray eyes, which gave great hope that her words did, or at least no use for me to promise more than can perform.

There were three large windows, two on the right hand and one on the end of the room in front of her.

The word "Stop!" was on her lips, when suddenly she seemed to stagger, and she heard him gasp and struggle for his breath.

Running lightly and quickly to the window, she looked out in the keen morning air which had just raised her from the dazed condition into which she had fallen.

It was the physical fact that she began to shiver violently in the keen morning air which had just raised her from the dazed condition into which she had fallen.

Who was this man with the grave, sad, handsome face who got into the house by night, and stole his way to the very bedchamber of Mrs. Dale? In what relation did he stand to the lovely widow?

No honest man, whether relation, friend or lover, would pay mysterious visits like these. And yet there was something in his face so attractive, so interesting, that Mabin would fain have believed that there was some reason, some excuse, for his conduct. And the one excuse which she unwillingly had to find was that—

This began to show a way out of the mystery; but it by no means cleared it up. Was the man who had taken her father's house, as "Mr. Banks"? This seemed probable, and at any rate it could be easily ascertained. If so, and if "Mr. Banks" was a steady, steady, nocturnal forger? That there were so unexpected, so unwelcome, so to be inconceivable, on the part of Mrs. Dale, had been abundantly provided by the fact that she had believed the visitor to be a vision of her imagination.

But then, again, if he had been in the house, would not Mrs. Dale have heard of it? And was it not rather the act of a sane man than of a madman to assume a name not his own in order to hide his identity?

Even this she was not sure; and Mabin decided that this question must be answered definitely before she could think herself on the road to the discovery of the mystery.

In the meantime, the door of the room through which she had passed in the pursuit of the intruder being still open, she entered, instinctively looking round to see if he had left any trace of his presence.

She drew up the blind and let the daylight stream into the corners. The room was like the rest of the house, shabby and furnished with little taste. It had perhaps been a study, or a school room, for in front of one of the windows there was a large leather-covered writing-table, much splashed with ink.

Female Weakness Cured. Mrs. Saunders Made Well and Strong by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Brantford, April 25.—The wives and mothers of Ontario are the most ardent disciples of Dodd's way of curing Diseases of Women—i. e., by using Dodd's Kidney Pills.

This is natural, for no medicine, on earth, no agency known to man has saved women one tith of the agony that Dodd's Kidney Pills have banished.

Mrs. F. Saunders, of Brantford, tells her suffering sisters what Dodd's Kidney Pills did for her: I have been a martyr to Female Weakness for the past year and suffered terribly. Dodd's Kidney Pills made me strong and well and healthy, though several other remedies I used did me no good whatever.

Death of a Crimean Hero. Mr. Robert Chapman Dies at the Age of 79.

Was on Duty at Her Majesty's Marriage—Distinguished in Action—A Veteran Printer.

The British heroes who survived the shot and shell of Russia, in the Crimea, are fast vanishing before the invincible enemy. Death. The latest to fall from their sturdy ranks is Mr. Robert Chapman, who died yesterday, after a varied and useful life, at the ripe age of nearly 80 years.

He was a remarkable example of physical vigor, having been injured to hardship while serving Her Majesty in many quarters of the globe. To the last his tall figure was as erect as when on military parade, and his eyes remained to a great degree unimpaired.

He was one of the oldest printers in the Dominion, and he carried into his trade the habits of regularity and thoroughness which a soldier's life inculcated. His family name and presence will be much missed by his typographical brethren, who honor his sterling qualities.

Mr. Chapman was born in England on Jan. 16, 1819, and went to school in London, his home being within a stone's-throw of the famous Westminster Abbey. Early he learned the art of printing at Charlton, being of delicate constitution, he thought a quiet life would have a tendency to benefit his health, and at the age of 19 he enlisted in the British Army, under King William IV.

His first notable military duty was as a printer in the Crimea, where he was specially selected on account of his tall stature. He came to this city, about 1854, with the Twentieth Fusiliers, and while stationed here married Miss Susan Nichol, who returned to the old country with him a few years later.

When only a few years old, Mr. Chapman served through all the engagements of that historical war as sergeant-major, and was one of the storming party under General Wyndham at the taking of the Redan. His Crimean medal has the four clasps of Balaklava, Inkerman, Sebastopol, and J. Alma, and he received the Turkish contingent medal in connection with the same service.

He also served with his regiment in the Indies, Gibraltar, Malta, and at almost every station where the British flag was carried. After the close of the Crimean campaign, he returned to this city with that regiment, where the British flag was carried.
