By PANTON HOUSE. Associated Press Despatch.
London, Dec. 14.—Enormous numbers of visitors from the provinces are coming in to do their Christmas shopping in London. Some idea of their numbers can be formed when it is stated that cheap fares are now in operation on an average of now in operation on an average of over 100 trains a day, from all parts of England and Wales. In almost every big shop the toy department runs a special show for the children. A few years ago it was thought enterprising if a Santa Claus in white beard, fur-trimmed scarlet robe and grease-paint, were engaged to hand out toys. Now we have, for instance, a toboggan trip to the Caves of a Thousand wonders, an expedition to the North Pole, complete with seals and penguins, by miniature railway; Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop," with attendants in the costume of the period; or a children's motor show, with models, com-plete to the smallest detail, of all the famous makes. One of the most ingenious and popular of these attrac-tions is the trip "from Dover to Ca-lais by Channel Tunnel." The tra-veler enters a railway carriage and makes his "crossing" with fish swim-ming most realistically outside the windows; at "Calais," where the station is cut in a cliff, he steps from the train on to real sand, with a view of waves and channel steamboats, and receives a "present from France" from the hands of charming French peasant girls. The Queen began her Christmas shopping some time ago with a three hours' visit to one of the great London shops, buying, among other things, glass ware and clocks. A few years ago the shopping of a royal personage was surrounded by almost as much ceremony as a state procession. Equerries appeared at the favored shop, red carpets were hurried out, a way was cleared and decorated, and any vehicles in the street were moved away. Today, all that happens is that, within a few minutes of the royal customer's aring the visit. Otherwise, everybody carires on as usual; the assistants from whom purchasers are made may not even recognize their customer. Sometimes, of course, there is no formality at all, and royalties go

Special Work Will Be to Look Into Matter of Smaller Hospitals.

In explaining the function of the newly created Ontario Hospitals' Association, Colonel W. M. Gartshore, who is the first president of the as-sociation, said this morning: "The association, which was conceived by men in the province in-terested in the work of our hospitals, places us on a level in this way with the other provinces. The associa-tion will be divided into various committees, which will be devoted to such sides of hospital work as hospitals for the insane, tubercular hospitals, children's hospitals, all sol dier institutions, and the nursing side of hospital work. "All these committees will report regularly to the central committee and such recommendations as are thought advisable will be made from time to time to the provincial government, as to improving conditions in all kinds of hospitals. A special activity of the association will be to look into the matter of the smaller country hospitals. It is felt that here there is perhaps a great deal of useful advisory work that can be done in this way." Colonel Gartshore stated that the annual classification of hospitals by the American College of Surgeons will be continued as before, and that the association is not concerned in this method of examinations. "This classification by the American College of Surgeons," he said, "is a voluntary thing on its part, and we don't have to follow any of their suggestions unless we agree with their indings. For that matter, they consame classification of all he South American, as well as the American, hospitals, and by then placing we have at least a fairly accurate criticism of our own institu-

FOUR ESCAPED KINGSTON CONVICTS CAPTURED

FORTH' LOVE O'

THREE PALS

Desperadoes, Missing From Kingston Penitentiary, Located in Minneapolis.

THREE ARE WOUNDED

Associated Press Despatch Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 14.-Four escaped convicts, who were cornered after leaving the Minneapolis postoffice tonight, shot and wounded a policeman and two bystanders. One of the gunmen was captured and taken to police headquarters, where he gave the name of "Red" Ryan.

All four of the men were alleged to have escaped from the penitentiary sailing for the United States, to at Kingston, Ont., by setting fire to the prison barn and climbing over the walls. Later they are alleged to have robbed banks at Detroit and Chicago.

Those shot were: Patrolman Norman L. Schaef, seriously wounded; Gustaf Erickson, Minneanolis, slightly wounded: Carl Erickson, son of Gustaf, slightly wounded.

The four were followed to Minneapolis about a week ago, and were seen to collect mail regularly at the general delivery window. Tonight when they called they were followed by eight patrolmen, detectives and secret service operatives.

When they got to the sidewalk two of the detectives closed in on the quartet. Ryan drew a gun and shot at one of the detectives, the bullet missing its mark and striking Gustaf

Then, a moment later, Ryan's companions whipped out their guns and started firing as they ran. Police returned the fire and one of the bulets wounded Ryan in the shoulder.
The bandit ran into the front entrance of a clothing store and started through it to the alley. Ryan stumbled over a box as he entered the rear entrance and was overpowered. The other three escaped.

WAS WITH MCMULLEN.

Toronto, Dec. 14.-Norman ("Red") Ryan, who is said to have been captured in Minneapolis today after a battle with the police, is one of five convicts who escaped from Portsmouth penitentiary on the morning of Sept. 10 last by scaling the wall with an improvised ladder after firing the penitentiary stable in order to provide a smoke screen. One of the party, Edward McMullen, was younded in the arm by guards dur-ing the pursuit, and he was captured a few hours later, hiding under a fence. The other four got clear. Following is the description given of them by the penitentiary authori-

Norman Ryan, height 5 feet 1114 inches, complexion fair, eyes blue, reddish hair, gray spots on right eye-brow, sentenced at Hamilton and Montreal to 25 years for bank rob-

Thomas Bryans, aged 20 years, weight 132, height 5 et 2¼ inches, complexion fair, eyes tue, hair light, scar on lower lip, lone scar on neck, also scar on left forearm and across middle joint of middle finger, sentenced to 15 years for manslaughter. Arthur Brown, aged 24 years, height 5 feet 8 inches, weight 127 pounds, complexion fair, eyes blue, hair chestnut, vaccination mark on left arm, sentenced in 1921 to 10 years for housebreaking and theft. Gordon Simpson, 24 years height complexion medium, eyes hazel, hair dark brown, scar on back of right hand between thumb and forefinger, sentenced in 1921 to 10 years for pbreaking and theft.

The four escaped convicts were believed to have been the perpetra-tors of a daylight raid on a bank in Toronto some days after they got out of the penitentiary. Bank official were held up and about $3,000 taken.

* Ends Stubborn Coughs in a Hurry

For real effectiveness, this old home-made remedy has no equal. Easily and cheaply prepared.

$$$$$$$$$$$$ You'll never know how quickly a bad cough can be conquered, until you try this famous old home-made remedy. Anyone who has coughed all day and all night, will say that the immediate relief given is almost like magic. It takes but a moment to prepare and really there is nothing better for coughs.

magic. It takes but a moment to prepare and really there is nothing better for coughs.

Into a 16-oz, bottle, put 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to make 16 ounces. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, this mixture saves about two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, and gives you a more positive, effective remedy. It keeps perfectly, and tastes pleasant—children like it.

You can feel this take hold instantly, soothing and healing the membranes in all the air passages. It promptly loosens a dry, tight cough, and soon you will notice the phlegm thin out, and then disappear altogether. A day's use will usually break up an ordinary throat or chest cold, and it is also splendid for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness, and bronchial asthma.

HERE ARE THE NAMES OF ALL THE LOVELY CHILDREN

500 LOVELY CHILDREN WILL GET INVITATIONS FROM OLD SANTA CLAUS

The Advertiser Is Proud of Every One of Them and Sorry That All Their Pictures Could Not Be Shown in the Paper.

JUDGES' DECISION MONDAY OF TUESDAY

It's not been possible to show you the pictures of the five hundred Lovely Children who have reached The Advertiser in the search for the Loveliest Child in London and Western Ontario, and as the next best thing the name of every one of them is given on this page.

The Advertiser is proud that the cities and towns and farms Western Ontario possess such splendid children,-and prouder still that it has been possible to form friendship with them. To meet one Lovely Child is an honor. To meet five hundred of them is five hundred honors.

ONLY ONE REGRET.

There is only one regret in The Advertiser office. It lies in the impossibility of publishing all the five hundred photographs. The best that could be done in the space available was to give two or three each day. These were picked at random from the pile, in order that no favoritism be shown to any district, and their publication, of course, has no bearing on the selections which side the judges are now making.

But The Advertiser is genuinely sorry that all could not be shown to you, because every one of the five hundred is a lovely child and worthy of the front page in any newspaper.

Here are the names. Somewhere among them is Western Ontario's Loveliest Child. It is hoped that the judges' decisions will be available on Monday or on Tuesday.

Santa Claus will send to each one of the five hundred a personal invitation to come to the Children's Party in London next Saturday. The Advertiser will tell you more about it next Richmond street, London. week.

COUNSEL THINKS TOPPING VICTIM OF DELUSION

TOPPING BLAMES KILLING ON OLD IMBEDDED BULLET

Tells Lawyer That Ball Buried in Skull Brings On Spells.

RESULT OF SUICIDE

Swanson Thinks Prisoner Is Suffering Under a Strange Delusion.

Clarence Topping, who is now in Middlesex County jail awaiting trial for the murder of his sweetheart, Geraldine Durston, told his attorney, D. A. J. Swanson, K.C., of Oshawa, yesterday afternoon that the bullet with which he tried to end his life some years ago was still embedded in his skull.

According to Mr. Swanson, Topping stated that he suffered from severe headaches, and he blamed it on his attempt at suicide in Strathrow three years ago. He told the roy three years ago. He told the lawyer to feel the side of his head, behind the left temple, where a small lump was apparent. This, about the size of a large pea, he stated, was the bullet which had entered when he shot himself. It was tered when he shot himself. It was fits of depression and passion.

Mr. Swanson stated that he did not think that the bullet was still there, but that Topping was suffering under a delusion.

The lawyer also stated that when he saw Topping at the jail yesterday every courtesy was given him.

STILL HOLD PRISONERS

List of Crimes Includes the Illicit Manufacturing of Spirits.

Associated Press Despatch. Dublin, Dec. 14.—The public safety bill, extending the power of the Free State ministry to arrest and detain without trial persons deemed guilty of certain specified offences, passed its second reading in the Dail Eireann today by a vote of 53 to 13. This signifies its acceptance in principle by the House

During the debate there was strong adverse criticism of the measure from some of the members, one of whom, a Laborite, declared it resembled "the Russian system."

Minister of Agriculture Hogan said it was impossible to try thousands of prisoners, especially as under the existing conditions it would be unir to expect witnesses to come for-and this was corroborated by his father. Attorney-General Kennedy said he had many reports from the country of juries refusing to convict, and of the difficulties of getting witnesses from him. Portice produced a receipted bill. The garage man at Kincardine gave evidence of Portice

Home Minister O'Higgins, in concluding the debate, said there were areas of the country where armed men were still billeting themselves upon the people. The government as vindicating the rights of ninety Der cent of the people.

The minority voting against the measure was composed almost entirely of Laborites.

The bill has set at rest all rumors of an intention on the part of the government of the release of the 4.500 prisoners now held in jails or internment camps. Eamon DeValera, the Republican leader, and all his chief followers are held in custody under a special statute giving the ministry to arrest and detain them

This state, however, was only temporary, and expires on February 1, If the government thinks it unsafe to release the prisoners by that time the new bill is proposed, extending these successful farmer, whose home is at Provost, Alta., late this afternoon was the unanimous choice of the Alberta Liberal-Conservative Association for provincial leadership of the Conservative party.

Mr. Blair's nomination was made, following refusal of the leadership for personal and business reasons by Hon. R. B. Bennett, K.C., of Calgary, former minister of justice. E. W. Ewing of Edmonton and A. A. McGillivray of Calgary also were nominated, but they declined. Mr. Blair announced he was confident that the Conservatives would carry Alberta at the next election.

Want Leader. The delegates offered the leader ship to Mr. Bennett with great enthusiasm, following a lengthy debate on the alternatives of choosing a leader at that time or deferring it for an indefinite period. The nominations committee recommended that a provincial association be formed, that choice of a leader be deferred, and that Mr. Bennett be made president of the association with the tacit understanding that he act in a general way as leader of the party without the official title or responsibility. There was immediate objection to his proposed course. The majority felt that the effect of the convention largely would be wasted if they did not make a definite hoice at that time; that they would without a rudder"; and one delegate declared there were "a hund-red men in the convention as good as John R. Boyle or Herbert Green-field." It was decided by a close vote tnat the leader should be appointed and Mr. Bennett's name immediately was suggested, and nominations closed. His refusal to accept reopened was the matter, and Mr. Blair's unanimous election was greeted with hearty cheers.

Mr. Blair has taken an active part in politics for many years as a Con-servative organizer in this district and as a member of Parliament for Battle River

Fraud Charge Case Opened in Lambton Court-Three Witnesses Heard.

CASE NOT CONCLUDED

Sarnia, Dec. 14.-Three witnesse had been heard for the prosecution in charges against officers of the former Pendergast Fence Company, this city, when adjournment of the county criminal court was taken this after-Maurice Deburgh Pendergast president; Austin C. Smith, manager, and Miss J. M. Pendergast, secretary, were arraigned and pleaded not guilty to charges of conspiring to defraud the public between January 1, 1923, and August 31. 1923, by offering to sell goods by terms of advertise-ments, and neglecting or refusing to ship goods or refund money on orders requived.

Twelve prospective jurymen were challenged. W. S. Haney, M.L.A., is defence counsel. The amount involved is $11,000.

Witnesses heard today were Archibald Weir, K.C., who acted for the company on incorporation; Harvey Unsworth, who was vice-pres dent and bookkeeper until January, 1923, and Miss Irene Griffiths, who succeeded Mr. Unsworth as keeper. Much of the evidence con-cerned records of the company and the part taken in its operation by the respective officers. Evidence as to character and efficiency of the officials was generally favorable. Mr. Unsworth declared that up to the time he left the company he saw nothing in the conduct of its affairs that was in any way questionable, though the company was operating at a loss. Miss Pendergast, testified, served as secretary of the firm, handled correspondence alone and looked after advertising. ceased to attend the office of the firm owing to ill-health in the fall of 1922, but, according to evidence of Miss Griffiths, stock letters continued to be sent out bearing Miss Pendergast's signature and on occasions she dictated letters at her residence.

It is expected that the case will continue until Monday. Several "Beer" Cases. City and county barkeepers were involved today in charges of keep-ing liquor for sale, as the result of a government test of beer supplied to retailers by the British-American Brewing Company of Windsor, which has been declared to be from 3.5 to Round Table Club Hold First Meeting With Forty Present.

HEAR ABOUT BANKING

With an attendance of forty members and under the most auspicious circumstances, the "Round Table Club," a younger brother of the Lononship of young men's clubs in the city.

Organized by a few of the direct ors of the chamber with the definite idea of an appeal to the younger businessmen of the city for greater interest and knowledge in the affairs of national, provincial and civic hap-penings, it is essentially an analyti-cal club, in which, through discus-sion, the subjects on which addresses are to be given during the winter by men who are recognized as particu-larly well qualified to speak will be better and more fully understood by Speaks on Banking.

With E. V. Buchanan in the chair Gerald Pearson, manager of the market branch of the Bank of Montreal in London, had the honor of being the first speaker to address the new club. Taking as his sub-ject "Functions of the Bank in Mod-ern Business," Mr. Pearson in a very complete and concise narrative out-lined the history of banking in Can-ada the present benking act. Atta ada, the present banking act, its strength and protection for the de-positor, provided the management of the bank is in the hands of honest men, and the service rendered the country by Canadian bankers. He upheld both the working sys-tem of banking in Canada, whereby sixteen chartered banks with numersixteen chartered banks with numerous branches were in operation, as compared to the American system with its 30,000 separate banking institutions, and the Canadian system of training men, moving them from one position to another and from one city to another, so that they have a cosmopolitan experience which must stand them in good stead when they become in turn managers of branches.

Discussion Follows.

Professor E. H. Morrow, speaking during the discussion, congratulated the speaker on the thoroughness of his treatment of the subject. He added that if note holders of banks were to be protected absolutely by the government it was only fair that depositors should also be safeguarded. This was the general tenor of the discussion, though there was a distinct repugnance expressed all round to any form of government in spection, chiefly on the ground of exround to any form of government in-spection, chiefly on the ground of ex-pense and because it was realized that the granting of huge and inse-cure loans was performed by the headquarters staff in all banks and that the smaller branches were not headquarters stair in all banks and that the smaller branches were not in need of more supervision than was at present in force. Frank White, M.P., who was a guest, took part in the discussion.

Among those in attendance were Gordon Waldron, U. F. O. solicitor, W. C. Good, M.P., W. A. Amos, president of the U. F. O., and J. J. Morrison. he discussion.

Two local oil men left this week for Brazil, S.A. They are James Mc-Hattie and Sam Brown. They will be gone three years. Mr. McHattie was recently stationed at Fort Mc-Kenzie, the new oil field in the Arctic circle, and Mr. Brown is returning to Brazil after being home for three months. Another Bothwell oil man is already in Brazil, Mr. John Mc-Leod, wife and two sons left during the summer.

A huge birthday cake, properly "iced," and decked with holly and mistletoe, was at the door to receive the contributions, and each booth was gayly festooned in the red and green, emblematic of the season. At the end of the hall was the tearoom, the table prettily arranged with Christmas fruits, bright candles, sprays of berberry and huge scarlet poinsettias glowing against the snowy cloth. The mistletoe-decked aprons and caps of the pretty young assistants added effectively to the Christmas already in Brazil, Mr. John Mc-Leod, wife and two sons left during the summer.

Miss Kate Ellison, the president of the Guild, was the general convener,

It takes many years of study and much money to put a stu dent through a first-class medical college, and give her the hospital experience that needs. Also, it requires robust

If you could not stand the strain f nursing, why do you think you would be able to endure the irregular hours, the going out in all sorts of weather, and the strain incident to the life of a physician? Before you undertake the study of medicine, you had better have a thorough physical examination, and ask some competent physician's advice on the subject.

Your age is a bar to your taking up the profession of medicine, but it is an advantage in any sort of clerical or secretarial work. Employers would rather have women who are still youngish, but not very young, because they are not so likely to marry just about the time they get well trained and valuable, and also because they take more interest in their work, to which they are settling down for a life job, instead of regarding it as a bridge of sighs that they

As for what particular line of work you choose, that does not matter. All that counts is how you do it. You can fail or succeed in any line, and your pay envelope depends on how much skill, and energy, and enthusiasm you put into it.

Generally speaking, women succeed best when they stick to women's work. Most of the high-salaried women are private secretaries, and buyers of women's wear, and teachers. Most of the women who make fortunes are dressmakers, and milliners, and run women's specialty shops, and keep boarding houses and hotels.

There will always be a demand for pretty clothes, and those who know now to make them can ask what prices they choose. People will always be hungry, and need comfortable places to sleep, and the women who furnish home cooking and make homes for the homeless will have their houses full

But in choosing your profession choose something you like to do for its own sake, for we never succeed unless we put our hearts DOROTHY DIX. as well as our backs into our job.

Dear Miss Dix-I am a young girl of nineteen. Ever since I can emember a certain young man has been my ideal. He is more than anything in the world to me, but he doesn't love me. He calls me his little

A wealthy young man has asked me to marry him. He is a splendid young man, and would do his best to make me happy, but it hardly seems right to marry him when I know I love the other. What would you do?

I would stay single, and give time an opportunity to solve my sentimental problem. If you will just sit still and wait, the strangest and most wonderful things happen to you, for time is a magician that opens unexpected doors to us, and makes the queerest things come to pass. At nineteen you have got lots of time. So don't be in

Time often changes a make-believe brother into a lover. A man sees nasium. a girl grow up, and he doesn't think of her as a woman. She seems just like a little sister to him, and then something happens-perhaps the girl goes away from home and stays a while, or something else occurs that makes him see her in a new light, and he suddenly realizes that his feel-

Never give up a man until he is dead or married to another woman, and don't be foolish enough to rush off in despair and marry some other man while there is still hope. Keep yourself, as old-fashioned Methodists used to say, in an attitude to receive the blessing, if his feelings toward you change.

It is a most dishonorable thing to, a woman to marry one man while she loves another. It isn't playing the game fairly with him because you are taking his all, and giving him nothing in return And you will be utterly miserable, because the more you realize that you ought not to love the other man, the more of a romantic halo you will cast about him, and the more you will desire him.

Take my advice, and just wait. Time will either give you the man you love, or else it will cure you of your infatuation for him, and then when you marry you can give your hand and your heart together. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix-I am a girl twenty-two years old, and I am in love with a man ten years my senior. He wants to marry me, but he is a man with a dark and wicked past. Is such a man a desirable husband?

a hurry. Just wait.

No. Why take damaged goods when there is so much of the clean article to be had? Believe me, my dear, none of us leave our pasts behind us. They always lap over, and lay a mortgage on our futures. We cannot wipe out the sum of our sins, and start a fresh account with life. They are written in indelible ink on our

Be sure of this, that every woman who marries a man who has sowed a wild-oat crop has to help him harvest it, and she does it in tears and sorrow. Sometimes she does it in her own broken health. Sometimes in nursing a man who is paying for the follies of his youth in premature senility or incurable nervous maladies. Sometimes in bearing children who are born idiotic or deformed, for the sins of the father are visited on the children even unto the third and fourth generations.

It may be a long time before we get a single standard of morals, and women demand the decency of men that men demand of women, but at least the woman who has any self-respect can refuse to marry a man whose character needs to be run through a steam laundry before it is fit for a nice woman to touch.

A news item from abroad informs us that the American method of producing a slim, trim figure is meeting with astonishing success. This system, which has made such a wonderful Impression over there, must be the Marmola Frescription Tablet method of reducing fat. It is safe to say that we have nothing better for this purpose in this country. Anything that will reduce the excess flesh steadily and easily without injury to the stomach, the causing of wrinkles, the help of exercising or dieting, or interference with one's meals is a mighty important and useful addition to civilization's necessities. No mention was made at the meeting of No. 3 committee, of the board of education, held yesterday afternoon, of new secondary school accommodation, although it was the last meeting of the collegiate committee of 1923.

Routine business and the passing of accounts occupied the attention of the members. After this was finished Trustee W. SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1923.

There Are Better Sports. A correspondent, signing himself "A Lover of Fair Play," can see no sport in allowing a lot of dogs to be turned loose to chase a fox, released for the occasion

He points out very properly that the hunted animal, with a pack of hounds after it, has little chance of escape: it is terrified and fearstricken-all in the name of sport.

Where two strong men pull on a pair of gloves and return blow for blow there is an element of fair play. Were there a dozen pounding away at the one man we would all rush in and stop the thing. It would appeal to us as being very unfair and not to be named as a sport.

This business of turning a dozen or so hounds loose on one fox can with new business." hardly, even by a stretch of the imagination, be termed good sport.

They Were Warned.

The British people have only themselves to blame for voting against protection.

The Toronto Telegram yelled at them for several days prior to the contest, warning them of the folly of free trade.

If the people of England are not prepared to stop and listen to the Toronto Telegram, well they will get little sympathy if they and their apple cart get smashed.

What's in a Name.

The Milverton Sun expresses the hope that Edward Johnson, the Canadian tenór, can keep on going without losing his Canada identity, and without having to sing as "Carlo Spaghetti" or "Pietro Spinnelo."

Edward Johnson, when in London, told his story, and admitted that when he was abroad in the greatest musical centers of the world he was forced to use an Italian translation that in the wet period of 1914-15-16 chance to show what he could do.

No School for $2,000,000.

The secretary of the Tuskegee In- in two. stitute is authority for the statement that 2,000,000 negro children of school age in United States never see the inside of a school.

There are well organized forces in the republic to the south that still manage to keep the negro people in a condition where they can be counted on to furnish cheap labor. It would not be good policy to have them know too much.

Believe Something.

Sir Robert Borden says he would rather see a young man opposed to him politically than to see him take no interest in politics at all.

We have made considerable progress in smashing political lines, but in putting anything in their place to interest young men in politics. The result is that a lot of people know nothing at all of politics; know nothing of policies, or what parties made them; know little of the public men who have served Canada. They are not as well informed on these maters as the young men of a gen-

If it is a fact that some men used once." Made to wear in your mouth to take their politics too seriously, it, or fit very nicely in the vest pocket.

is even more of a fact that today we have shoved the pendulum to the other extreme.

It's a relief to meet a man who believes something, definitely, in politics, religion, or anything else. He's a giant compared with the man who is ready to nod his head to anything or everything.

Taxed. But No Vote.

A peculiar condition exists in regard to income tax voting. Several cases have been reported in London where young women pay income tax

The law says income must be taxed $400 before a vote is given; that is a salary of $1,400 with $1,000 exempt.

if the tax is only $350-no vote. In other words a single person with $1,400 income can vote on income; a person with $1.350 cannot.

There does not seem to be any good reason for the distinction. Where the city taxes money in the shape of a tax there is not much reason for withholding the ballot.

Forgetting the War. "It is time we quit talking about the war. Let us forget it and go on

A western paper carried that in report of an inspirational speech as some convention.

He's quite right-we should for

A man dropped in at the office yesterday; wore a returned button; wanted something to do. He lost his position when he went overseas, and never seems to have fitted in any man to popularize the U. F. O. in place since. He'd gladly forget the war, but he can't.

There are men, hundreds of them who have not moved a limb for Drury, the latter undoubtedly has three, four, five years. There they lie, strapped and buckled, their poor, war-shot bodies racked by pain. Would these men forget the war if

All around, this town, the next, back between the handles of the in the villages and in the country there are homes that carry a loss that can't be forgotten. We imagine farmer at Crown Hill is a safe leader | these people would be glad to wipe for the U. F. O. sentiment in Ontario. out the whole memory of suffering, and go back to the days prior to war.

As a matter of blunt fact too many people have forgotten the war. They were not there; they were not hurt; they did not have to come back and try to find a new place in their old community when the old one they left had been closed to them.

If we were as good as our pron ises to these men when they went away there would be no returned men out of work, nor would they be around trying to make a living selling silver polish and trinkers from door to door. .

Figures That Talk.

Robert E. Corradini, secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism, has secured reports from chiefs of police in 100 American cities regarding arrests for drunkenness during the wet and dry years.

Pre-prohibition periods are compared with post-prohibition periods in all instances. The reports of the of his name before he could get a there were in the 100 cities 323,790 As Edward Johnson he could not 1,000 persons. Surely there is virtue in a measure that has almost cut the rate of police court drunk cases

Potatoes vs. Gum Drops.

Sam Slough, in the Winnipeg Free Press, says:

"Taxes didn't use to be so high in the days when you carried the coal oil can home with a potato over the spout.

Listen, Sam, if the merchants put potatoes on the spout they didn't know how to catch the coal oil trade. The potato was O.K. until one mer-

A SLENDER INTEREST.

For all that London has only one presentative playing in the pro. ranks—Goldie Prodger—added interest has been given the race which gets way tonight with Morenz's inclusion in the Canadiens' line-up. It probably won't be many seasons before London will be very interested in pro. doings.

MARKET ACTIVITIES.

Dempsey has arrived in New York. Spalla will arrive in January. If Spalla shows he can "spilla" them fast enough, there might be some conncetion yet between the two news items.

STILL CHASING FOULS.

"Red" Fisher, who used to catch for Hamilton in the old Canadian eague, was at the Chicago meeting. "Red" was manager of the Bridgeport club last season, which has been disbanded. He is looking for a job.

TRADES.

One reason why more trades are not made at December meetings of the major leagues is that baseball men are such cautious traders that they always like to put off any deal until the last minute, figuring that perhaps there may be a rise in the market. There always is another meeting February. Between the two meetings some player might fall off a ladder or run his automobile into a southern pine. No one on earth is so afraid of ture of the intermediate schedule is getting stuck in a swap as a dealer in players. McGraw is one of the few baseball men who know who never will hesitate to pay considerably more than the market price for anything he really wants. He will trade an automobile for a bicycle if he needs the bicycle and can't use the automobil

HOW GOSSIP DISTORTS.

At a meeting this week, one of the hockey committee members said that he had heard one player was not going to perform in hockey this year. He had been injured this summer playing, and the L. A. A. A. had not tried to do anything about his doctor's bill.

"I have the bill on my desk now," interrupted Jack Greer. "The L. A A. A. has assumed full responsibility."

LIKE POLITICAL CONVENTION.

W. O. McGeehan writes: "The baseball congress here, by taking in all leagues from the lowliest bush to the top, developed a brand new and picturesque figure now known as a reunion guy. In the matter of privilege he is the last word in collections of ivory in the crude or in the most ornate carving. Wherever he horns in and plants himself he belongs. He is a reconteur supreme for, entertaining, he is entertained. He can go back to the time when Pop Anson, seeing the button and the sign in his hotel room reading "Push twice for ice water," pushed hard and with pitcher held under the button waited a half-hour for the water to start. Or he can tell you one equally good on a colleger just breaking in. "Among the honored grads are men like Jimmy Sheckard, Artie Hofman, Jack Quinn, Jesse Burkett, Joe Tinker, Frank Bowerman, Art Wilson, Fred

Clarke and from there on. "Each delegation at Chicago had a headquarters like those in a national convention. They dispensed good cheer and listened to much conversation. The reunion guys, accepted as privileged grads, migrated from one sitting to another. They were just as welcome in a California layout as in the foaming atmosphere of the Reds. They could swing an acceptable line of conversation at the White Sox, at the Cubs and the Yanks with equal abandon and finesse. These are indeed great days for the grads who still have something on the conversational ball. You need never ask any more what becomes of the old ball player. Attend a winer meeting."

New York, Dec. 14.-Babe Ruth eceived every vote cast by the official jury of sport writers at the end of the 1923 season as the most valuable player in the American League. Ruth, no doubt, would have re-been put up as a candidate for the honor of all baseball's greatest and most valuable player. Official batting averages of the American League remove all doubt that might have been entertained as Well, one ause for the feeling is that Tunney was about as aggressive throughou the fight as a bullfrog in a pool of molasses, while Greb bristled this attractive quality throug while Greb bristled with the battle. Detroit Manager Bargains Vain For Dykes and Bishop.

BY JOHN B. FOSTER.

Chicago, Dec. 14.-Ty Cobb went back to Atlanta a disappointed man-He bergained all over the hotel for someone to fill the gap at second base, and he was still going until the last minute before his train pulled out. He talked Connie Mack black and blue in the face trying to get Dykes, but Connie would have none of it. He wants Dykes and Bishop too. Mack feels that Dykes is a great second baseman, but he would like to be sure that he will not fall down on his infield next year, after he has made a start to prop his outfield by obtaining Strand

Sell Indianapolis Club.
It is very probable there will be change of ownership in the American Association which will revolu-tionize the aspect of affairs in that organization and introduce a new ement in its business.
The Indianapolis club, it is stated will be sold to the Cincinnati club of the National League, and the Toledo club, which has been managed and owned by Bresnahan, will be taken up by the men who own the Indianapolis club.

Toledo will be managed by Jack Hendricks, former manager of the Indianapolis club. The real estate in Toledo, it is stated, is in the name of the New York Nationals, and this will be sold outright to the Indianapolis interests. Who the Indianapolis manager will be is yet to be determined. Whether Bresnahan will continue in a managerial capacity with the American Association is another question not settled. Property Valuable.

The money that has been passed to swing the deal is a matter not made public by the clubs interested. but the Toledo property is valuable as a business venture, without taking into consideration its baseball his biggest asset.

The Philadelphia Nationals decided that they did not want Tierney at second. He was secured from Pittsburg in exchange for Rawlings, who helped the Pittsburg nine much more than Tierney helped Philalelphia. Powell was badly needed by Philadelphia, as it is feared that Williams may not go well this year owing to the physical trouble that he had last season. The team has been shy on outfielders, and Fletcher, the Philadelphia manager, believes that he has captured a good man. Fred P. Mitchell, who was man-

Mays probably will work a little harder for Pat Moran than he did for Miller Huggins, and the atmosphere of Fountain Square may prove to be more beneficial to Carl than that of Times Square.

After wearing out the seat of his uniform sliding back and forth on the Yankee bench all last summer Mays suddenly finds himself in great demand. Not an American League club would pay even the waiver price for him, but now two or three National League clubs are battling over him, and Carl seems to be the center of a minor war in baseball. GERARD IS MISSING

Special to The Advertiser. Toronto, Dec. 14.-It is years since the Frank Calder stake race has looked as open as it does this year. A look at the initial line-up says anything may happen at tomorrow night's pro hockey league openers. The dope says that Ottawa should fall by the wayside at Hamilton simply because they have lost Eddie Gerard, brilliant defence man and cap-

Strange, isn't it, that the critics should come out flat-footed and say that Gerard makes the difference between a world's championship outfit and the tail end of the N. H. L., yet that is just what they are saying.

That does not sound right. Gerard is a superb defence player, a brilliant rusher, a goal getter, and a wonderful leader, but still it is a mighty radical thing to declare that the champions without Gerard will be nowhere in the race. Benedict in goal, Boucher on the defence, Cy Dennenay, Frank Nigh-bor and "Punch" Broadbent are still bor and "Funch" Broadbent are still high-class hockey players; Jack Dar-ragh is a long way from being in the discard, and young "King" Clancy and Lionel Hitchman were both regarded as high-class "rookies" last season. Indeed, Clancy right now looks like a real star, and Hitchman, big, strong and game, should come along and make a good team-mate for Boucher. Hamilton, called to defeat Ottawa

Hamilton, called to defeat Ottawa tomorrow night in Hamilton, is a hard team to figure. They have many new players. Verny Forbes in goal measures up. Leo Reise is the only one of last year's defence players on the job. He will have for partners Ken Randell, the Toronto veteran, who played some of his very best hockey last year; Jess Spring the Toronto amateur, who is just breaking into pro ranks, and Fraser, a Nova Scotia player. Randall and Reise Spring, a husky youth, useful in amateur hockey, has to win his spurs at least—and then maybe he will re-vise his opinion Sunday a.m.

to be a ball player like McGraw. may make you smile to think of me trying to copy McGraw. He was a little bit of a shaver weighing about 140 pounds, while I was a big gangling fellow, weighing up around 185. Still, I admired the way he fought for every point.

I don't believe there ever lived a ball player who was McGraw's equal in getting on base, whether it was walking, being hit by the pitcher, bunting or hitting the ball out. He was likely to do either. Anyway, he nearly always got on the base.

McGraw never gave anybody any more of the base than he had to. He more of the base than he had to. He and Fred Clarke were tough birds when it came to taking all the bag to themselves and letting the other fellow shuffle around the best he could. The polite ball player of today often gives the base runner half of the bag to touch. Not in those days. You were lucky if you didn't get bumped into the outfield.

When McGraw was wrifing his "Thirty Years in Baseball" I notice he didn't say anything about how the didn't say anything about how tough that bunch made it for a fellow trying to go round that infield on a long hit. I didn't expect him to. Honestly, those fellows fought a fellow off so hard that I have actually here study with a horseshoe will to been stuck with a horseshoe nail in Nobody Wore Rubber Spikes. They had a way of bumping a runner around so that a green man would often be thrown out on what might have been a home run. Mind you, that wasn't considered unsportsmanlike. It was looked on as good baseball. It was the kind of baseball that wins, too. They were not the only ones. We all went at the game pretty rough.

only ones. We all went at the game pretty rough.

I hit a long drive one day at Baltimore and when I got to first base John Doyle almost bumped me into right field, pretending that he was trying to get out of the way. Stumbling to my feet, I went on to second and there Jennings backed into me, bumping me into center. I kept going, though. When I started to round third McGraw snatched me by the belt. Let me tell you, that infield was tough picking.

third McGraw snatched me by the belt. Let me tell you, that infield was tough picking.

McGraw had another trick of catching a runner by the belt and yanking him back just as he was about to score on a long fly. The umpire, you see, would be watching the ball to see just when it was caught. At that moment McGraw, with his fingers in the runness belt, would give a jerk and stumble him a couple of steps. Often he would be checked just enough to get thrown out at the plate.

Everybody hollered and wrangled about this, but as the umpire could never see McGraw get in his fine work he would get away with it.

One day we had a big fellow on third. I can't just remember his name, but he talked with a little accent—Swedish, I think. Anyway, he was on third ready to score on a long fly. Like the rest of us he was onto McGraw's trick. It looked to us as if this fellow had forgotten. Surely, he paid no attention to McGraw.

The batter drove a long fly to right field. The umpire watched the catch. Our man started for the plate without even looking around. He was

Then we all looked around and there was McGraw standing at third with the runner's belt in his hand. That big Swede, knowing the trick, had unfastened his belt so that it would come off when pulled. The gang didn't forget that for a long time I'll bet McGraw hsan't forgotten it to this day.

Yes, I always regarded McGraw as a wonderful, winning ball player. I may not have copied his fielding style, but I certainly picked up a lo watch some good player closely and try to imitate him. This, I think, would be a great help to any youngster. In trying to copy the star's fine points you will naturally discover his weak points. That proves a double benefit.

I used to watch the Baltimore Orioles whenever I had a chance, even before I got in the big league. That was a mighty tough outfit to beat. Every one of them fought to beat. Every one of them fought to beat Every one of them fought to win all the time I don't believe anyone of them had a thought of how much money they were making when they got on the field. Their minds were on winning that particular ball game for their own satisfaction as well as for the public. That is what made the Orioles so famous.

The one man I particularly watched was John McGraw. I made up my mind that I wanted to be a ball player like McGraw. I made up my mind that I wanted to be a ball player like McGraw. I may be the tron of first and that will show the first sure they want a big lead in the game. They Meant No Harm.

What I mean to say, though, is that I never saw a ball player deliberately try to injure another. I that I never the things he wrote about.

It used to be a very common thing for some runner on first base to yell down at me: "Hey, you big Dutchman, you'd better get out of the way down there or I'll cut your legs off. Watch out, I'm coming in a minute!" Though my mind was young, I wasn't so much on account of speed as of watching opponents and taking advantage of mistakes. A player can do this just as well on the bench as on the bases. Though my mind was young, I realize now that I had the faculty by North American Newspaper Alliance.

The answer is in the negative. The trapper didn't cease. He took what the wilderness gave. Is there any law on the amount of gold a miner can take out of the ground? Is there a law on each license to trap beaver had appended to it the number of trees a lumberman can cut? ten coupons or tags which the trapper had to affix to each of his ten pelts before selling them.

So the law made an outlaw of the north country trapper. And the north country gave its sympathy to him.

Ways to Beat the Law

T HE trapper took all the beaver fortune brought to his steel traps. And he devised a number of ways of beating the law in the disposal of the pelts.

First, if the trapper was anywhere near the Quebec border, he simply took his furs in the spring and paddled across river and lake to the boundary, where numbers of traveling dealers waited in tent camps along the water highways. to buy contraband skins from Ontario trappers. Knowing the skins to be contraband, these dealers rooked the trappers for all they could on the price of the beaver pelts. Thus the trapper was done out of his fair price, and the government of Ontario was done out of its royalty on the furs—the government getting a royalty on all skins of all kinds taken in the province.

If the trapper was too far from the Quebec border he could always find, in the little towns, someone who was making a special business of buying contraband skins and transporting them by canoe the several hundred miles through the bush to the border.

Those who were bold enough amongst the trappers simply swore out an affidavit to the effect that the beaver pelts they had above the number of ten, without tags, had been trapped outside the province.

Another system was to buy beaver coupons from the Indians. All Indians are not trappers. In the vicinity of white men, a sort of lethargy attacks the Indian. Since he is entitled, free, to a beaver license and ten tags for himself and every member of his family, the lazy Indian found a handy source of income in selling his tags to white trappers who had the misfortune to catch more than the ten beaver permitted by law.

One way or another, the trapper beat the law. The north country had its way. And it was with a loud chuckle that echoed over some three hundred thousand square miles of wilderness that the north country received the news

A trapper, this season, can now trap as many eaver as he pleases. The lid is off.

Making Outlaws of Trappers

ON Charles McCrea, (himself from the north country.) minister of mines for One portfolio rests also fish and gar put the new law across.

"We came to the conclusion," said he, "astonishing as it may seem, that there were as many beaver being killed in Ontario with the law as would be killed without any law. In short, as many beaver as possible were being taken. The law was simply of no account. It would break the treasury to try to put in a force of overseers sufficient to patrol that immense north country of ours. But what distressed the north country more than anything was that the law was making outlaws of the trappers.

We have removed all restrictions. A man may take all the beaver he can. The results will be: the trapper will get full value for his pelts; the province will get its revenue off thousands of pelts that were slipping into Quebec and Manitoba; and the trapper can hold up his head."

"And no more beaver will be taken now than formerly. Because formerly they were taking all they could anyway." "What about conservation?" Mr. McCrea was asked. "Ontario has seven districts, with a district warden over each. In these districts, at strategic centres, are the game overseers, to the number of fifty, with several special patrol officers roaming about. One of the principal duties of this staff is to make an annual report on the fur situation in every locality. For conservation, we will declare closed any district in which the fur bearing animals show signs of becoming Conservation is a drastic sort of thing. It wouldn't do, for instance, to declare a small region closed. In that case, it would be very easy for the trappers to trap within the closed region and pretend the pelts were taken outside The government has closed the entire province south of the French and Mattawan rivers to beaver and otter trapping until 1925. That region borders on one of the greatest beaver countries in the world-the Sudbury belt. Overseers and special officers have been thickened up in this closed region, to prevent trappers north of the rivers from sneaking across. Closed means closed. The fine for breaking the law will eat up a season's profits.

Season, is Closed Earlier

O NTARIO has taken the lid off beaver, but it has done another big thing in conservation. It has made the close of the heaver season March 31, and allows only ten days after that date for the trapper to get rid of his skins. For, you see, beavers are easily trapped in the early spring. Like deer and human beings and all other creatures, beavers are somewhat crazy during the mating season, and will take chances they would not otherwise take. In the spring, trappers can make far bigger catches than in the fall or winter. In past years, nobody knows how many beavers were taken at the mating season, and the skins turned in as late as May. The new law squares that. Another trick ruthless trappers had in dealing with the beaver was to destroy the beaver house, thus driving the beaver out of shelter. making trapping easy, or the actual killing of them with clubs a possibility. This has been made a crime of the darkest sort in the new law. which forbids the disturbing of beaver houses in any way.

"To patrol that vast wilderness," said Hon. Charles McCrea, "is economically impossible. Ontario can do best by placing the fur trade on a business basis, so that the trapper and the province can get the most out of it. And when conservation is necessary, conserve in the most drastic fashion."

The deputy minister of game and fisheries for Ontario is Donald McDonald, a name that ought

This girl little realizes that the matched pelts in her mink coat have behind each of them a story of daring and romance in the last wild-to be instantly significant to everybody in the fur game, from trapper to dealer. Mr. Mc-Donald was with the Hudson's Bay Company for fifteen years, and with Reveillon Freres and other great companies another eight years before he came down out of the north to handle the government's game and fisheries department. He was ranging the wilderness hundreds of miles inland north of Superior a quarter of a century ago, one year collected seventeen thousand muskrat on the Winisk and Albany rivers, and such tales he can tell of the trout fishing, for example, over the height of land, where legend had it that there were no trout. He knows fur. And he knows trappers. "Every year," he said, "Ontario is adding another game sanctuary to its list. In twentyfive years, by the present program, Ontario will have half a hundred great forest sanctuaries, both in the settled areas and in the very remote regions, where trapping will be forbidden and where the fur-bearers will be free to propagate and spread to the outer lands. A close season has a remarkable effect. Last winter, a sort of close season was declared by the weather. The severe winter made the trapping of muskrats very difficult. The result is, there has never been such a splendid crop of muskrats for years. There need be no fear for the fur crop. The edge of the real wilds, far north, has scarcely been touched, after all. And in a couple of years of closed season, on a wide area, we can restock the wilds in a most astonishing way."

Where Ontario Really is

IT is in that remote country beyond the last settlements that Mr. McDonald's heart is. Ontario hardly thinks of it as Ontario. Take a good wide look at the map of Ontario. The little black foot-shaped bit at the bottom is Ontario to some two million inhabitants of the province. That little black bit is south of the French and Mattawan rivers. When the person from Old Ontario says he is going north for a holiday, he means somewhere south, not north, of those rivers. Yet four-fifths of the province lies north of those rivers.

Strung along the Sudbury belt, northward. are the districts of Temiskaming, Algoma, Thunder Bay, Rainy River. North of them, north of all their boundaries, lies the district of Patricia, which is no man's land. It carries Ontario to Hudson's Bay. It is a land of spruce swamps and poplar flats. Its trappers are Indians, and white traders penetrate it to vie with the great companies in the search for fur. It swarms with fur. It is the heart of the last wilderness.

And Ontario has just sent its man into it. E. W. Paice, of the Soo, an experienced officer, now bringing the law, for the first time, into the Ontario which Ontario almost forgets. He went in by Winnipeg, up Lake Winnipeg to the top, thence north and east by canoe, up the Echimonish river to Oxford House, across God's lake and down God's river to Island lake, where there are nine trading posts collecting furs from that vast country that lies between northern out, via the route Paice had taken, with his Indians, to Manitoba. It is to collect Ontario's royalty on these furs that Paice has gone in there After he has established a system-of collection this winter, he is to push on into the great beyond, down mighty rivers that are amongst the other imaginary lines upon the map, visiting posts, camps, meeting traders and voyageurs on these highways, and spreading the law and the name of Ontario all over that forgotten country.

This winter, also, Dan Ward, special patrol officer, has set out from Lac Seul, above Superior, to cut a winter trail to Deer Lake, another trading centre in the far north. He, too, goes alone, with Indian packers, to carry the law into no man's land. On the east at Moose Factory, nearer home, is George Ray, special officer, patroling the James Bay country.

Real Buffalo Hunting Out West Back in the Sixties Toronto Man Knows Old Days of the Covered Wagon

The Buffalo Hunter Was Likely to Be Hunted By Indians Who Thought More Highly of a White Man's Scalp Than of a Buffalo

This is a story of hunting the buffalo in the old covered wagon days of the West. It is not bunk, nor fiction. It is a true story by a Toronto man who actually hunted buffalo on horseback with a revolver and every word of it rings true. In addition to being a corking good yarn it is a valuable document of the buffalo and Indian days in the great West.

By HOWARD WILLIAMS

N real buffalo hunting the Indians did not drive the buffalo around so you could shoot them from a pit or behind a clump of bushes as in the hunt recently filmed at Wainwright Park, Alberta.

First you had to find the buffalo. Most always where you found buffalo you were also liable to find Indians. They were not tame ones either and the hunter for buffalo was very liable to be hunted by Indians as they considered a white man's scalp more valuable than a buffalo pelt.

In 1865 I was stationed on the western frontier of Kansas at Salina as a lieutenant in the 5th U. S. Volunteer Infantry and was in command of B company. We were ordered to Salina from Fort Leavenworth because of Indian

When we came out from the Fort the stage line had been cut by the Indians. For two hundred miles west of Salina Indians had stolen all the stock and burned all the stations. At that time all the merchandise from Leavenworth was transported by mule team and oxcart to Usually two or three trains traveled together to better protect themselves against the Indians. Our duties were to furnish escorts to the trains.

I remember the supper on our arrival in Salina to relieve the company stationed there and how good the buffalo hump steak tasted. It was a fine supper with the other officers we were relieving. Nothing ever tasted as good as that buffalo hump steak after a hard day's

At that time the buffalo roamed in thous nds only twenty-five miles west of our camp. It being summer, we could not get fresh meat and resorted to buffalo meat.

A hunting party consisted of two or three men on horseback who did the actual hunting and an escort of four or five men and mule team and wagon. We would start early in the morning and ride twenty-five miles to the hunting ground, reaching it late in the afternoon. We would then make camp, feed the animals, possibly an hour before sundown.

After going about a mile we would discover a buffalo some distance away. Owing to the rolling nature of the country you would not usually see the herd. But the sentinel, a bull, stood on the high ground while the cows and calves fed in the valley or basin, the bulls surrounding the herd.

On approaching the herd you would see the sentinels all around. As you ride up the bulls see you and become quite uneasy. When you get near a sentinel bull he makes a break down into the herd, giving the alarm. When he goes the excitement starts.

You put your horse into a run and follow the bull, but he always gets to the herd before you and gives the alarm. Then the whole herd of five hundred to a thousand start on the run with heads down and tails up and you after them as fast as your horse can run.

Revolver the Weapon

IN one hand you hold your Colt's Navy revolver and guide your horse with the other. All of a sudden the entire herd stops dead still and faces you to see if you are still coming, and if you are, they start and do not stop or look back again. Now the time for action has arrived.

You still ride fast, as the buffalo are not swift runners, and you are soon in with them, select one while on the run, ride up beside it and shoot it, if possible, behind the foreshoulder and low down. As you shoot you turn your horse sharply away and turn around for safety and then come up again. If you wound a buffalo badly

He was so busy holding his horse he did not get a the rest of the party and came on a herd of two single shot at the buffalo. All the time he was or three hundred. They started on the run as in danger of his horse putting a hoof into a opher hole and going down, rider and all.

It is doubtful whether the colonel enjoyed that hunt very much, as that same night, after the hunt, when we were in camp his horse got loose Hunting buffalo on horseback may not seem from being hitched to one of the wagons, and started back to Fort Riley, seventy-five miles away. My horse followed, as I never tied him when in camp. Those horses made the seventyfive miles in seven or eight hours, as I learned when I went after them later.

About four o'clock in the morning, after finding our horses gone, I got up and went out to the road, and just then a horse and mule came along, dragging a long rope. It did not take me long to get hold of the rope and lead them into The colonel and I had transportation back to Selina.

During that summer I hunted buffalo several times. On one hunt I became separated from soon as they saw me. One of the characteristics of buffalo is that when they start in a certain direction they keep that course regardless of the ing they ran into the ravine. As the bank was quite steep, on coming out, they could not get out as fast as they went in. They filled up the ravine and those going in last went over the top of the others. I succeeded in getting across just as the last buffalo came up the bank. I think he was the largest bull I ever saw.

As he came even with me I fired from my horse. Evidently I hit him near the spine, for he suddenly lost the power in his hind legs and settled back on them, but kept on his forelegs. As I tried to get around for a side shot he twisted around, keeping his head facing me so that I could not shoot except in his forehead.

I had been told that a revolver bullet would not penetrate the thick mat of hair and the thick skull of a buffalo, so I did not try a shot straight on, but still tried to get a side shot. In the meantime the buffalo had gained strength enough to get up on his four legs, and then the battle began. He still persisted in keeping his head buffalo took. Instead of stopping or turn- toward me, and I kept circulating around him, turn and chase me. So we had it back and forth for some time, and I could not kill him. As my ammunition was getting short I let him walk came across an old bull walking slowly along, with a wolf following him waiting for his opportunity. I am told that when a buffalo become old and feeble it is driven from the herd, and the one I saw was an outcast. Being in an Indian country and short of ammunition. I let the buffalo and wolf go on their way, and soon joined

By that time it had become dark! We had lost our way, but kept on until about ten or eleven o'clock, when we could go no further, due to a deep ravine. We went into camp for the night putting on a guard.

A doctor and myself left camp to find the road. We found it after riding three or four hours, and arrived back in camp at three in the morning. I considered I had put in a full day, but my experience and pleasure paid me in full. In the fall of 1865 my company was ordered to Denver, Colorado. As there were no railroads we marched through Nebraska to the Platt river, and then to Denver, where we remained during the summer of 1866. The district was in command of General Upton.

During this summer we hunted antelope. On the fourth of July a party of four of us left Denver on horseback to ride into the antelope range. Antelope hunting is very different from hunting buffalo. Antelope do not go in herds, and were not very numerous. You seldom find more than three or four together.

You cannot hunt them from horseback either, as they can outrun any horse, and you would not, as a rule, be able to get close enough for a

After arriving in the antelope country we fed our horses and ate lunch. It was about noon. After a rest we started out to find our game. I. as usual, got separated from the party, and after riding some time saw an antelope over half a mile away standing on quite an elevation and evidently watching me. Now the question was how was I going to get it. There was no use trying to run it down, as it could run faster than

I adopted the plan of having the antelope come to me instead of going after it. An antelope has a large bump of curiosity. Anything unusual he sees brings out that bump. So I put my horse out of sight in some bushes and hid in the long

Then I took the ramrod out of my gun and tied my handkerchief to the end. I raised this The antelope soon saw it and commenced to move toward me in a roundabout way. It came closer all the time until it was within a few rods of where I lay. I fired at it, but it did not fall nor move.

I loaded and fired again, with the same result and could not figure out why I did not hit it or why the antelope did not run. The third shot brought it down. It was hit in the head and dropped in its tracks. Curiosity had held it

I was shooting a needle gun, and being so near the antelope I had overshot. That was why my last shot hit it in the head. I cut off the hindquarters, strapped them to my saddle, and started for the ranch where we were camping. We all had antelope for supper. I was the only one that had shot a pronghorn. Next day we rode back to Denver. Then there were only

Brains may be all right, but Gloria Swanson and Marie Prevost show no signs of wanting to change heads with Lloyd George and Bernard Shaw. And beauty is all right, too, but so far Rudyard Kipling hasn't offered to switch domes of thought with one of the Follies girls.

It hardly seems fair that the boy who plays hookey to see the six-legged calf in the side show should be spanked, while scientists can go all the way to Paris to look at a lady beetle wearing her brother's pants and no one even says "Naughty boy."

Shows the inferiority of beetles. Takes an operation to get a beetlette into pants, whereas many a wife wears the trousers without any encouragement at all.

Still it will be a pretty serious thing if a man can't be sure of waking up with his own head. Think of getting up in the morning, making ready to shave, and then seeing some other person's face in the glass. A man gets a kind of liking for his own head, even if he loses it every once in a while. There's a mutual attachment that it hurts him a lot to break. He has to get it in the neck, in fact, before he'll part with his old bean.

Curious thing. Man feels quite flattered by your interest if you tell him he should go to the doctor and have his heart or lungs examined. But tell him he should have his head examined.....

A head's great object in life is to support a hat and a barber. Many a head continues to support a hat years after it has ceased to interest a barber.

To return to the realm of pure science. Great thing to change the heads of a horse and an alligator. Talk about winning a race by a nose. And how pleased the savants would be to feast their eyes on an alligator eating hay. The horse, by the way, after winning a race, could reach around and eat his jockey for dessert.

Every Age Has Exploded Cures, Millions Have Imaginary Diseases R. JAMES J. WALSH, in his interesting new book, "The Cures That Fail," emphasizes two points. One is that anything will cure the patient when nothing is the physician practises medicine the shorter becomes his list of drugs. His thesis is based upon a fact that has gained general recognition, namely, that the vast majority of the ills and complaints of mankind are fostered by the mental attitude of the sufferers, and the symptoms complained of are aggravated by anxiety. The remedy, then, is the popular "cure" of the hour to which hu man kind accords temporary allegiance. Once that blindly confiding faith is shattered the "cure" becomes ineffective for the individual: if lost en masse, the "cure" falls into disrepute and can no more cure anyone.

The author's premises are sound and he has carried his argument to its logical conclusion. But we note that he says:

"Why should not human nature have its delusions when they add to the happiness of men? It is not with the idea of eradicating the delusions that this book is written, but so that we may all together laugh a little quietly at this human nature of ours and its humorous ways."

If millions of persons are "cured" of their ills and thus restored to happiness through belief in their delusions, it is open to question whether it is a good thing to broadcast these delusions to the world. An adequate reply to such an argument might be that he who labors under belief in a cure for imagined ills is going to persist in that delusion in spite of the assertions of a hundred wise physicians. Doubtless it is well that

Dr. Walsh is peculiarly well equipped to deal with his subject. He has attained eminence as a medical historian, in the pursuit of science, . nd as a forceful and pleasing writer. And right here it appears opportune to say that too little attention is paid to the history of medicine and surgery in modern medical colleges. A young physician who is well grounded in the known history of his profession has an advantage over his fellows who have had no instruction in it that will stand him in good stead, not only in critical emergencies, but in dealing with those patients whose sufferings depend for the most part on an attitude of mind. This class of patients is the bane of the conscientious doctor and a blessing to the quack. Their wretchedness is the reason for the latter's existence.

HE two main points of Dr. Walsh's argument are well illustrated by these incidents -which are not in the book. On the occasion of the return of Chauncey Depew from one of his frequent trips abroad, many years ago, the present writer asked him: "Senator, did you have any unusual experiences abroad?" "Yes, I didin Paris." he replied. "I became lame from rheumatism over there and was recommended to a physician. He treated me by means of what he called an electric battery. I took a handle in each hand and he turned a crank. I didn't feel anything, but I began to improve with the first treatment. After two weeks of this I was cured. Then I was informed that I had had no electricity, and that the handles I held were not connected ated by this statement made publicly by the most says Dr. Walsh. Create a belief in it, promilgate it, and the rest is easy. Thousands will be "cured" by it. But, he adds, a time will come, sooner or later, when no one will be cured by it any more; it will fall into disuse, and even into disrepute, until at last it is relegated to the limbo of forgotten things. And so he takes up these "magic cures" one by one, tells how they originated, what they did, and what become of them. He discusses some that had a great vogue several centuries ago and continues down to present-day psychoanalysis and Coueism. He deals rather gently with Coue; it is to be remembered that the little Frenchman does not proclaim himself as a healer; he asserts that his patients cure themselves by suggesting to their subconscious minds that they are getting better. Psychoanalysis, says the author, will pass; it is on the wane even now, he declares.

Typical of the "personal healers" was Valentine Greatrakes, who was born in Ireland in the generation after Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood. At the age of 40 Greatrakes announced that he could cure the "King's evil" by touching those afflicted with it. This disease was tuberculosis of the glands of the neck. From the time of Edward the Confessor the kings of England were popularly believed to have inherited the power of curing the malady. Along came Greatrakes, laid claim to the magic power, and "cured" thousands suffering from this and other complaints. He practised on the theory that diseases represented diabolic possessions and that the devils were driven out under his hands. His success depended upon his ability to inspire others with the belief that the Holy Ghost had commissioned him to oust devils. Dr. Walsh says that practically all religious healers have accomplished their results in the same way. Schlatter and Dowie are examples of this type of healer in this country in the present century.

The author hails Phineas Quimby of Portland, Me., as a great pioneer among personal healers. He it was, says Dr. Walsh, who inspired Wrs. Eddy, founder of the Christian Science Church, in her career of healing. Quimby began to "cure" through hypnotism in the middle of the last century. His method was to tell patients to fix their minds on some other part of their bodies than that which harbored the pain. If their toes hurt. Quimby told them to think of their fingers: then he rubbed their fingers and banished their pains. Mrs. Eddy, says the author, was treated and cured by Quimby of "spinal nervousness" resulting from a fall. Thereafter she returned to him a number of times to have her cure confirmed, "and gradually elaborated her own

> B ISHOP BERKELEY'S tar water deserves a high place in the list of popular remedies. The bishop was a famous English philosopher who lived for two years near Newport, R.I. He wrote a celebrated essay on the virtues of his tar water, by which, he discovered, he could cure himself and his friends of anything and everything. Here is the great recipe: Stir a quart of tar in a gallon of water. Let it stand forty-eight hours. Pour off the water and drink it. It is impossible to obtain any chemical substance from tar by mixing it with water, but the odor of tar remains, so that Bishop Berkeley readily persuaded himself that he was taking medicine. Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes said of the famous tar water essay: "He begins with the recipe for his favorite fluid and slides by gentle gradations into an examination of the sublimest doctrines of

In his chapter on "Cures With a Punch" the author calls attention to the virtue that was firmly believed to reside in moss scraped from a dead man's skull or mandrake gathered in a graveyard in the dark of the moon at the midnight hour when ghosts walk. "Cures" effected by these have been reported from ancient times. And, of course, remedies compounded of the tissues of mummies commanded great respect. It was not so long ago that it was possible to buy "mummy" in apothecary shops; but, alas for human frality, such mummy was usually ordinary meat soaked in preservatives. Nevertheless, it frequently cured pain and headaches which had persisted for months and with which ordinary medical practitioners had proved themselves powerless to cope. The moss from skulls of criminals who had been hanged in chains so that their bodies could not be removed frequently proved to be a strangely powerful therapeutic agent. The author points out a fact known to every seasoned physician, namely, that many aches, pains and ills are fostered by the element of hysteria and that by gaining a patient's confidence in the efficacy of a prescribed form of treatment wonderful cures are effected.

Take the case of Dr. Elisha Perkins, of Norwich, Conn., and his marvelous tractors, more than a hundred years ago. Contemporary historians agree that he was a splendid American and a devoted, hard-working physician. In 1796 he became convinced that he had observed striking beneficial results when the affected parts of patients were touched by certain metals. Accordingly, he fused several metals and made a pair of mind, 'cures' people," contained a little gold. With these he "stroked" his patients. The curative results were amazing. away. "Tractorization" became the fad of the hour. "Pains in the head, face, teeth, breast, side, stomach, back, rheumatism and all joint and mustle pains" were cured by the tractors, according to Dr. Perkins' announcement. The bent straightened up and walked erect. All maladies vielded to twenty minutes' downward stroking with the magic tractors. Patents were taken out here and in England. They were supplied to clergymen free; other professional men paid £5 a pair for them, while the price to the less fortunate was

D ERKINS became famous; he had proved himself a benefactor of mankind, and his fortune was made. A magnificent hospital, called the Perkinean Institution, was erected in London. Lord Rivers was president and Sir William Barker vice-president. Perkins' son was in charge, and at the end of three years he published the details of 5,000 cases treated there, although it was estimated that fully 1,500,000 persons had been "cured" in all by the tractors.

Finally, some hard-headed English doctors proceeded to test their theory that the cures were the work of the imagination. They made some "tractors" of wood, painted them to look like the Perkins invention, obtained the same results from using them, published these-and the bottom promptly fell out of the tractor market. The "cure" went the way of all baseless "cures" that had had their day and failed.

Andrew Jackson Davis, later famous as "The Seer of Poughkeepsie," was a Poughkeepsie shoemaker's apprentice when he heard "Professor" Grimes' lecture on "magnetism," and allowed himself to be "magnetized." He formed a partnership with a tailor, and in 1844 announced that he had received a Divine commission to heal by magnetism. Later he abandoned the tailor and took up with a physician. Then began a long series of "cures." Davis became all the rage. He lectured here on something he called "Clairmativeness" and wrote interminable jumbles of words which were hailed as the elements of a great new philosophy. His "Revelations" ran into thirty-four editions, and he came near being appointed physician to the United States Senate.

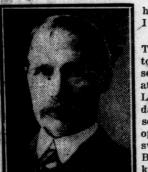

Dr. Walsh deals with the magnet fad; the rise and fall of Mesmer and mesmerism; the vogue and decline of hypnotism, which, he says, is now recognized as being harmful because of the deleterious effect of its practise on character. Absent treatment comes in for a chapter. Under "Appliance Cures" the futility of treatment by means of rubber plasters, liver pads, chest protectors, electric belts, electric medal batteries, electric rings, electric insoles, magic shoes and the blueglass craze is discussed.

Under the head of "Mystical Cures" are con sidered the so-called shrine cures and what Dr. Walsh calls "Dr. Conan Doyle's spirit helpers." He takes a decided stand against treatment by psychoanalysis, and predicts that it will soon be thrown into the discard. He calls it a pure mind "cure," and says that, like Coueism, it is a method of treatment which changes the attitude of mind of patients toward their ills, "and of course, like all other means of altering the state

INDESCRIBABLE PALLOR ON BONAR LAW'S FACE

Scenes on Lord Beaverbrook's Tennis Courts and in the Abbey Recalled by Beverley Baxter

YOUNG Canadian has given some vivid recollections of the inherent simplicity and humanity of the late Mr. Bonar Law. Under the title of "Memories" in the London Sunday Express, of which he is literary editor, A. Beverley Baxter, the young Toronto journalist, tells of the occasions he met the Canadian premier of England at Lord Beaverbrook's, principally on the tennis courts. "I like to think of him the first time I saw him. "It was in 1920. The Coalition was tottering to what seemed an' immediate catastrophe. Mr. Lloyd George was dazzling the world somewhere in Europe. On the stormswept bridge Mr. Bonar' Law was keeping the ship away from the rocks, tireless, skilful, powerful. At the height of the crisis, the House adjourned as usual on Friday. On Saturday I motored out to Lord Beaverbrook's secountry house and found that every one was on the tennis courts.

"When I reached the courts I caught my first glimpse of Mr. Bonar Law. He was engaged in an energetic but restrained argument at the net (the restraint being mostly on his side) with his host. I hesitated to interrupt them, because obviously the discussion was important, enand presumably political. At last Bonar Law brought the debate to a close with a finality that could not be questioned.

'It was out,' he said, suavely but firmly. The ball was distinctly out. There is no use your making a case to the contrary because there is the mark, and I abide by it."

Trivial, I know, but I like to remember him for his vigorous health then, his zest for the game, and also because it was my first intimation that statesmen, even at moments of crisis, are not very different from the rest of us.

He played tennis as one would have expected him to play-cautiously, with never a double fault, without any fancy serves or killing strokes, but with a most exasperating patience and an unerring instinct for placing the ball in a spot most awkward to his opponent.

"Some months went by; then, almost imsperceptibly at first, the parliamentary strain began to tell on him. One Saturday in March, 1921, he seemed to have recovered his vitality. He won three sets, and those playing with him were delighted to see him as he had been before. It seemed as if the streams of energy were reawakening within him. At the end of the game he walked down to the house for tea, and half an hour or so later I saw him there. "A dreadful change had come over him. He was sitting by the window, and his face had a grey pallor about it that spoke of the breaking point. Sorrow and suffering and indescribable fatigue were written there. After tea he went alone into the library with his host. When they emerged they both walked silently to the motor car, and without a word Mr. Bonar Law drove

Four days later he sent his resignation as leader of the Conservative wing of the Coali-

"The streets were placarded with only one newsbill. The political clubs were hot with rumor. Every possible interpretation was put on the resignation. Intrigues and counter-intrigues sprang up like mushrooms. The political pot boiled over. The consensus of opinion was that it was the culmination of a Conservative plot to wreck the Coalition.

"And at No. 11 Downing street, a weary. wistful figure sat oblivious to it all. "I am quite worn out," he had written to the prime "That was all."

"Perhaps I may be excused if I tell another tennis anecdote which may bring out the strange unpretentiousness of his personality.

"One Sunday, about a month after the meeting I have just described, I was playing tennis on Lord Beaverbrook's court in town. My opponent was a young chap, and we had just started our second set when Mr. Bonar Law, with his daughter Catherine, his son Anthony, and his son-in-law, Sir Frederick Sykes, arrived in tennis costume.

"I at once went over and offered the court to the prime minister.

"'No, no,' he said, with that soft persuasive Scottish voice that was so soon to leave him completely. 'I wouldn't think of taking the court from you. Go on and finish your set. Do.'

"He was so concerned about interrupting our games, and so self-effacing that actually I returned to the court and was about to serve when. fortunately, I came to my senses.

"This man," I said to myself, "is the prime minister of Great Britain. He has probably only a half-hour or so free. And I have the effrontery to make him wait while I finish a set with a

"We left the court at once. It seems incredible that we could have contemplated anything else. Yet those who knew 'Bonar' will perhaps understand.

"When we were going away that day I noticed that he looked grey and fatigued. And when he smiled in saying good-bye there was a wistfulness that suddenly made me say something which I had not intended.

"I suppose, sir," I said, "you know how ad we are, those of us who come from Can-

"He looked at me and smiled. 'I am glad of that,' he said simply.

"You are very close to our hearts," I said. 'I am glad of that, too,' he repeated, and his face grew strangely pensive.

"'I need the good wishes of my friends.' 'Less than a month afterwards he sat in the House of Commons unable to answer questions. His voice had become inaudible, yet party dissension had left his government so ill eminned that he did not dare to leave the front bench, directing his forces through his lieutenants-even in his silence, the greatest political strategist of many years.

TOO MANY TRAIN STOPS. AUTHORESS HAS CURE

I SABEL ECCLESTONE MACKAY, well-known Canadian authoress, was one of a party traveling to Lake Windermere, B. C., in August of last year, to attend the David Thompson Memorial celebration. As the railway from the golden south to Windermere is only a branch line, the train made frequent stops-in fact, so frequent as to be irritating. At length the train halted at a station called Briscoe. "Too bad it isn't a Briscoe car instead of a station," said someone. "We might get there some time." "Better still if it were Crisco," said Miss Mackay. referring to a commodity well known to housewives. "It might shorten the journey."

Never Had a Wakeful Night, Lloyd George Sleeps at Will

Can Go to Sleep in Three or Four Minutes-Wakes in Half An Hour As Fresh as Ever—Never Walked Floor War.

AN you sleep when you like? Can you, instantly and at any time, free yourself from the worries and distractions of your day and sink into dreamless slumber? He who can do these things is a happy man. Able to tap at will an unfailing source of fresh energy, he is fitted to direct great affairs in great emergencies. Because he can always draw across his tired eyes the soft veil of sleep he can front responsibilities too vast for another man. 1se is in one important respect at least another Napoleon, another Edison.

He is also another Lloyd George. The faculty of instant sleep is one which the statesman of modern times shares with the great soldier of the past. Napoleon could snatch his

Lloyd George four hours amid the thunder of hostile guns. Lloyd George can sleep when he wills. It is questionable whether history can produce men who bore the tremendous responsibility of the world's affairs so long as did these two. The post- armistice years have been strewn with the wreckage war as surely as, if more slowly than, those who died on the battlefield.

Mr. Lloyd George carried a burden as heavy s any of them, and has thrown it off only to address himself to the more prosaic but equally difficult problems of peace. No other politician has half his vitality. Just returned from an exhausting tour of Canada and the United States, Even in Worst Days of the the delivery of scores of speeches, the traveling of thousands of miles, the shaking of millions of hands, he plunged into the British election cam-

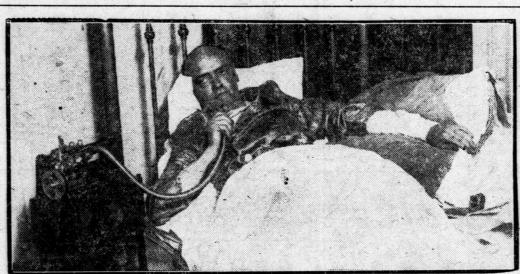

Why can Mr. Lloyd George, at middle age, do these things which would break a younger man? This is his own explanation, as tendered to an interviewer from the American Magazine:

"I never had a wakeful night. That was my salvation. I could go over to a couch now and lie down-as I often do during hard days-and I would be asleep in two or three minutes. Fifteen minutes or half an hour later I would wake up, fresh and ready for work again. It is partly a gift, but there is a decided element of self-training about it. You can school yourself so that when the body is in repose the nerve will carry the message to the brain that this is the time for sleep, and that nothing else matters. To form that habit requires a definite exercise of the will."

"Did you never walk the floor all night, even in the most critical period?" he was asked.

"Never! The most critical period was the month in which the Germans sank eight hundred thousand tons of shipping. If the destruction had continued at that rate we should have been whipped before America could make her power felt. I made a quick' re-survey of our resources and formulated decisions. In war rapid decisions are almost as valuable as right decisions. Then, having done everything that could be done. I finished the day and went to sleep."

That was how Mr. Lloyd George carried a nation through a world-war and remained fresher at the end of it than many a man tired out only by the petty routine of his little life.

Roalf Amundsen Sixteen years this went on. Every time I came to New York the sculptor telephoned me. Never did I have the time. But he was never put out with me-just sad; he had a patient, Christian voice. I liked the voice, so one day I told the sculptor when he telephoned me that there was no hope of my sitting for him. "'Captain Amundsen, there is always hope,' came that patient voice over the telephone. "What could I say to that? It was very complicated. When he came I thought a plasterer was there to plaster the room. He wanted me to sit in the bathtub while he made a life mask of me. I didn't want to do that, but, still, he was very patient. "Well, I sat there while he smeared my face and covered my mouth with plaster of paris. He had almost finished when I couldn't hold my breath any longer, and plaster flew all over the sculptor and the bathroom walls.

nodded at the sketching board, 'should be painless."

While the springs protested but did their duty. Captain Amundsen seated himself on a pink-quilted bed. The explorer faced a window opening on a small court. A shaft of sunlight fell upon the sitter's head. His féatures would have given many difficulties for a sculptor, because they cannot be described except in such geographical terms as promontories, crags, ridges and valleys. His blue eyes and prow-like nose characterized the man of the sea, the captain and indomitable leader of expeditions, but there were softer lines around the mouth, which became understood when the explorer told of his men and ships and dogs.

"What a wonderful hold the north has!" he mused. "It is simply overpowering for me. I am never quite tranquil in my heart until I am back again in the Arctic-or somewhere away from this."

Amundsen's palm swept the little room, and the faraway look that was in his eyes while he talked of evergreens and birds and snow scenes vanished when he became conscious of the fluffy hangings and the subdued pinks and greys.

"What more have I to see in the polar regions? Oh, well, we shall see, we shall see. You cannot tell what you may find/up there. There is a whole lot of space up there, nearly a million square miles, and I must have a little look around. The only rest I seem to find is in my work, and when I have succeeded then I feel rewarded. I have much work to do yet. There is my ship, the Maud. She is somewhere around 'seventy-six.' Some time during the next three years we'll see her from the sky. She is my drifting home. Eight of my good men are aboard and I'll never rest until I have rejoined her and

"Then I may take a little look around. You know, in my work I get very little chance really to see the world. I want to see places like Manchuria, Mongolia and Tibet."

And the polar explorer, whose idea of travel for recreation is to see "places like Mongolia and Tibet," places that still furnish ambition for other explorers, approved and autographed his portrait and was left in his little pink and

Pope Lets Nuns Read "Anne of Green Gables"

Roman Catholic Priest Told Miss Montgomery How He Obtained Special Dispensation From the Pope

OLLOWING the publication of her first novels, Miss L. M. Montgomery, author of "Anne of Green Gables" and subsequent 'Anne" books, received reams of letters from all sorts of admirers in various parts of the world.

One of these letters was from a Roman Catholic priest living in England, who wrote that he was going down to a retreat for nuns in the south of England. and that he was taking "Anne of Green Gables" with him. He explained that the, nuns were not supposed to read secular books, but thinking they would enjoy "Anne" he had secured a special dispensation from the pope in order that he might give it to them. Another letter was from an old man, seventy years of age, who lived in Australia, and who wrote that he had walked twenty miles to get the sequel to "Anne".

Numbers of the letters from young girls which found their way to Miss Montgomery, were addressed simply "Anne Shirley, Green Gables, Prince Edward Island.

On a return visit to her native Prince Edward Island, some time after Miss Montgomery had changed her name to Mrs. Macdonald, a local paper announced in its social columns that Miss L. M. Montgomery and infant son were spending a few weeks in the old house.

LOVE FOR A GERMAN MADE FRENCH ACTRESS RETIRE

Correspondence With a German Banker During the War Drove Beautiful Lavalliere to Convent

NE of the loveliest and most renowned actresses in Paris before the war was Eve Lavalliere. One day five years ago she disappeared, and later the story was circulated that she had renounced the world and entered a convent in the Savoy Mountains. Photographs appe: ed showing her in demure costume behind high walls, but, it seems now, these walls were only a small way removed from Paris, and the former beauty, now shrunken and white-haired, did not leave the stage because of religious

She was compelled to abandon acting by members of her profession, who discovered that she had continued to correspond with a prominent German banker throughout the world conflict. At one moment the case might have taken a more serious turn, but, according to the information circulating now, honor was declared satisfied provided Mlle. Eve left the stage for-

DRY-AS-DUST LAW BOOKS DROVE DEACON TO FICTION

Tried Manifold Number of Jobs Before He Budded Forth as an Author

ILLIAM A. DEACON. generally known as "Candide" of "Saturday Night," whose new book. "Pens and Pirates," is one of the most talked of books in Canadian literary circles, was not always a writing man. In fact his ability to hammer out thoughts on a typewriter is of comparatively recent date. He was in business for five years, attended three universities intermittently, decided suddenly to take a three vear law course in one year at the University of Manitoba, from which he graduated with the degree of IL.B.: served nine years at law, and put in three seasons as fire ranger in the Temagami district.

While practising W. A. Deacon law in Winnipeg he contributed to the Manitoba Free Press literary supplement, the Literary Review of The New York Evening Post, and The New York Times Book Review Supplement. In the spring of 1922 he was invited to fill the chair vacated hy Peter O'Donovan in the Saturday Night office, and this year he budded forth as an author of two volumes. The first volume, "Pens and Pirates." has received much favorable mention.

Deacon tells his friends that he tried almost every other way of making a living before he tackled literature. He claims that the experience he gained in the business world has helped him considerably in interpreting fiction, while his days and nights spent in Temagami helped him to more readily distinguish the nature fakir from the real thing. So far as the law is concerned, he declares reading Coke and Selden and the Principles of Roman Law developed in him an ardent desire for livelier reading. This is probably the reason why he prefers fiction to anything else.

THE TIME PRINCESS B LAUGHED IN PUBLIC

Lady Patricia May Have Looked Sad, She Could Laugh Heartily About a Black Eye

W HEN Lady Patricia Ramsay was the reigning beauty of Ottawa society, as the Princess Patricia of Connaught, she was by no means a social butterfly.

Ottawa remembers the Princess both for her personal charm and for an habitual sadness of appearance, and those of romantic mind delight to attribute the melancholy of the princess to pining for her absent sweetheart, the stalwart naval officer with whom she has now effected a happy union. For a long time, say these people, there was little reason to hope that differences in rank could be overcome so as to enable the princess to marry the husband of her choice. Ottawa likes to think it had a peek into a popular novel in real life. But there was one occasion on which Princess Patricia enjoved a hearty fit of laughter, and not without some rea-

A certain prominent Ottawa civil servant, now deceased was something of a Bohemian and was fond of expressing pronounced Socialistic views. He was a friend and crony of a number of Socialists at the Capital. One day this civil servant received notice that he had been awarded a "C. M. G." And shortly afterwards, he was commanded to appear at a dinner party at Government House for the formal bestowal of the honor by the Duke of Connaught.

On the morning of the day of his visit to Government House, the man who had been honored called into a bar, either in Ottawa or Hull, to get a "bracer" and there he encountered one of his Socialistic friends whose enthusiasm for "the cause" was very pronounced. The real Socialist, who had been bracing himself for some time, became violently enraged when he heard that his civil servant friend had accepted the "C. M. G."

"Traitor," he cried, and leaning over he struck the other a severe blow with his fist in the right eye. The injured man hurried home and, securing a piece of beefsteak, applied it to the damaged optic. He had to appear at the Government House function on the same night, nevertheless. with his eye bearing the mark of the encounter.

As luck would have it, the civil servant found himself seated at dinner beside the Princess Patricia. He felt somewhat uncomfortable. "You men of the civil service must have some very interesting experiences," remarked the princess. "One of the most interesting I have had came just this morning," replied the guest with the black eye, deciding to make a clean breast his eye and told the whole story. They say at Ottawa that the Princess Patricia never laughed so heartily in public as she did on hearing how the new "C. M. G." secured his black eye.

LORD CURZON WAS STUMPED ONCE BY LI HUNG CHANG

ORD CURZON acknowledges one time when he was properly stumped by the great Chinese statesman, Li Hung Chang. In his recent book, "Tales of Travel," the British foreign secretary relates the incident.

"While we (Lord Curzon and Li Hung Chang) "were being photographed, he suddenly asked me once again how old I was; and upon my replying that I was 36-'Dear me,' he said. 'you are exactly the same age as the German emperor.' I acknowledged the impeachment, whereupon he continued as follows: "'The German emperor, however, has six sons. How many have you?"

Curzon: I have only recently been married, and I regret that so far I have none. Li Hung Chang: Then what have you been doing all this time? "To this question I admit that I could not find, nor even now can I suggest, an appropriate

A THRILLING INCIDENT

THE most dramatic incident in the course of his life; according to Sir Homewood Crawford, the city of London's solicitor, who is retiring after occupying the post for thirty-eight years, occurred at an execution at Newgate, when he was under-sheriff.

Just before the execution a reprieve arrived. Although it was written on home office paper, it was enclosed in a board of trade envelope, and Sir Homewood was afraid it was a forgery.

"It was a trying position," Sir Homewood declares, "for to postpone the execution unnecessarily would have been cruel to the murderer. I decided to go on with it, and in an hour or so I found that the reprieve was a

FinancialReview

Associated Press Despatch.

New York, Dec. 15,—Considerable irregularity developed in this week's stock market, but the main trend was still upward, the averages showing that in the last six week's stock prices have recovered half of the ground lost in the reactionary period of the previous eight months. Industrials swung into a new forward movement during the week. Railway shares became unsettled as a result of the cutting of the Chicago and Northwestern dividend.

One of the features of the week was the increase in public participation.

Buying was influenced by a number of factors, including the favorable showing made by the November foreign trade statement, easing of commercial paper rates, another series of extra and increased dividends, a further reduction in crude ollproduction, followed by an increase in the prices of certain Texas and Pennsylvania crude products, unusually heavy retail holiday buying, and reports of increased inquiries for steel, particularly on the part of automobile manufacturers. European news also was regarded as more encouraging, the financial community apparently looking with favor upon participation of United States experts in the proposed inquiries into German finances and reparation. The Mexican revolution had a depressing effect on the securities of that government, but otherwise was not much of a market factor. Present indications are that total stock and bond sales this year, as well as new financing, will run well below last year's totals.

The cut in Chicago and Northwestern dividend, and the passing of the Omaha dividend, prompted by relatively poor earnings, generally was regarded as a temporary reduction, due entirely to the unfavorable situation in the wheat-growing regions. growing regions

Like similar utterances from his chief, however, the attorney-gen-eral's comment today is not eminently significant from any point of view. In fact it could be reasonably accepted with equal gratitude by dele-

But the attorney-general is not saying very much about "manifesta-tions" that would serve to displease extreme "wets" or the extreme the meanwhile he prefers to play close to the home plate with this comment, "In certain localities may be found an overwhelming sentiment against the act, while in other districts may be found an overwhelming sentiment against any change or any attempt to change it." Await Manifestations |High|Low|Close|Sales So that's that. The attorney-gen-| 109 | 107 | 107 | 235 | 16½ | 16½ | 19000 |

So that's that. The attorney-general adds that he could not attempt himself at this moment to determine just what the sentiment is generally throughout Ontario. It may be for a change, then, again, it may be not, and the government must wait for the "manifestations."

So while it can be readily assumed

So while it can be readily assumed that the O. T. A. is goilg to be served upon the government bill of fare in 1924, the leaders are not willing to 11% 11% 11% 28 28 28 8 8 17 17 17 17 17 come into the open-as any mo than they were before the electionand state conclusively what they propose to do or not do.

It is freely acknowledged here, of 438 418 414 17 17 17 18 15-16 3 13-16 3 15-16 course, that the "wets," or the so-called "temperance" advocates who seek government control or other modified forms of liquor legislation comprise a substantial group in the Tory ranks of the new administration. These gentlemen are going to be somewhat difficult for Mr. Ferguson and his colleagues to handle, judging by recent reports from their constituencies if there is even a hint of by attempt to directly or indirectly evade the O. T. A. problems or the proposed note of the people.

Glib statements and soft answers from the premier's chair will not suit these individuals, and in fact it is broadly predicted that in such an event they would precipitate a sharp division in the government ranks, with the result that several of Mr. Ferguson's followers will be no longer following him.

Likewise there are those Conservative members who profess to be strongly opposed to any change in the O.T.A. as those who demand it. And it is hardly likely the observers say here that they would be content to sit quietly by and see a referendum ordered if they did not approve of it. In the interim it is clear to see that the party leaders and advisers are much saddened to hear yesterday of the party leaders and advisers are his sudden death at Billingham adopting the "watchful waiting" his sudden death at Billingham, his sudden death at Billingham, policy—until such time, at least as they feel the practical manifestations one of the younger sons of the late referred to by Mr. Nickle.

Just what action the Chamber of Commerce will take I do not know, although we have been approached by several of the smaller retailers, who have stated that their Christ-

It is the servant of all, and I don't think the merchants' should feel that the church has no latitude in matters of this kind. I think they would be overstenning the merk if overstepping the mark if they attempted to license or tax bazaars which are held for charity."

Quite opposite was the view held by Rev. W. R. McIntosh, prominent by Rev. W. R. McIntosh, prominent winter sports at Chamonix, making Presbyterian minister, who said he the total of countries entered for

"It was all right when only a few bazaars were held," he said, "but now churches are only a small proportion of the total. The merchants pay it. People should live and let live, and I think that thoughtlessn that thoughtlessness is responsible for a lot of it. If their attention was called to the fact that they are taking money away from the mer-chants, those who do not need to go into bazaars, etc., will not do so."

STRATHROY MAYOR LIKELY TO RECEIVE ACCLAMATION

Special to The Advertiser. Strathroy, Dec. 14.-Although the municipal elections are but two. weeks off, there is yet no indication of any unusual interest. It is believed that Mayor Wright has earned a second term, and doubtless he will receive an acclamation. New York, Dec. 14.—Raw sugar was steady and unchanged today at 5 11-16c for Cubas, equal to $7.47 duty paid. Raw sugars were irregular because of conflicting rumors of a threatened railroad strike in Cuba. The market opened unchanged to 6 points lower, was carried 2 points higher, with December advancing to $5.74 on commission-house support, after which it became easier and closed rather weak, at 1 to 13 points net decline. The late heaviness, which was attained by Wall Street and Cuban selling, was due to more reassuring labor advices from Cuba. January closed $5.22, March $4.63, May $4.69, July $4.74.

Refined sugar was quiet, without change. Fine granulated was $9.05 to $9.15. Refined futures were nominal.

figures to 10c to 12c loss It was well along towards the day's end before wheat displayed any pronounced weakness. Until then the market had pointed upward most of the time, influenced somewhat by reports of heavy rains embarrassing the Argentine harvest. More or less buying too, was based on hopes of Washington developments favorable to plans for advancing relief supplies of good gains to Germany. Besides world supplies of wheat were showing a smaller rate of increase than was the case a year ago, and there was gossip that the United States government report to be issued next week would show 10 per cent reduction in domestic winter wheat acreage.

On the other hand, reports that about a hundred carloads of Canadlan wheat were arriving daily at Minneapolis tended to weaken confidence on the part of holders here, and to make the wheat market responsive to other bearnounced weakness. Until then withe wheat market responsive to other bear-ish factors. Broadening out of selling in the corn pit came at this juncture, and sent wheat as well as corn down-ward in price the remainder of the day, wheat finishing at the bottom figure reached.

With wheather conditions such as bears have been counting on for an increase of the crop movement, selling in the corn market was much more energetic than for some time past, and aggressive support was lacking. Oats, like wheat, declined with corn. Grain weakness depressed provisions at the last, despite strength of hog

BARGAINS IN

THIS week's list of reliable used Fords should catch the eye and fancy of any one who ever had the idea of driving his own car.

PRICES have been pared down to absolutely rock-bottom. There is certainly no excuse for being without a car these days. And it is easy to finance one, too. Just pay us a modest sum when you take the car you choose. The balance can be spread over a year if you wish.

DON'T forget. You take no chances on any of the used cars sold by Middle-sex Motors. The ones we sell all have the attention of our corps of Ford experts. A used Ford that does not give satisfaction is not good advertising for us, and that is why we make absolutely sure before any car leaves our salesrooms that it is in A1 mechanical condition. We invite prospective purchasers to bring their own mechanicany of your friends who know anything about a Ford—to inspect the car you are about to buy.

It looks as if the 1923 town council may seek re-election. The tax rate is the highest on record, but there is not much prospect of reduction. The school building loan is now paid, but two new teachers were added to the staff, which will keep that rate high. Barrister E. E. Wade, who filled a large place in his profession years ago in Brussels, passed away a few days ago in Detroit, where he was living with a daughter. Mrs. Wade pre-deceased her husband. An adult family survives. Charles Thompson, who has been in St. Joseph's Hospital for several months suffering from a broken knee cap and other injuries received in an elevator accident at the Seaman-Kent factory in West Lorne, was said this morning by hospital official to be greatly improved. This Gift Brings Many Merry Christmases

By far the best Christmas gift for some people is a Canadian Government Annuity. To an aged parent or other relative, a retiring pastor, an old teacher, or a faithful employee or domestic who has been long in your service, it should bring happiness and contentment through many years.

You may yourself buy the Annuity for the person to whom you wish to present it, or you may join with others in the purchase. Such Annuities may be of any value from $50 to $5,000 a year. They may be purchased at any age, to start at any age you choose, and, of course, will last as long as the life of the Annuitant. There are special plans of purchase by which provision may be made, if necessary, to protect the interests of the Annuitant's de-

December is surely the magic month of the year as far as the children are concerned. How they love to help with all the Christmas preparations, the making of simple presents, getting the fruit ready for the mincemeat, spreading almond icing on the cake, shining the five and ten-cent pieces to stir into the plum pudding. Already they have been down to the bush to choose the Christmas tree, which the ten-year-old shape, lay a little suet over and under been down to the bush to choose the Christmas tree, which the ten-year-old says he is going to cut all by himself this year. I think an older member of the family will have to inspect it first, as they have probably chosen one big enough for a community tree in the town hall. We do hope there will be a little snow for Christmas; it is so much more fun bringing the tree home on a hand sleigh, with the two-year-old riding in state among the branches, than it is dragging it over the mud.

All Want Dolls.

The three girls, in common with mos other little girls in North America, want Advertiser Ma-ma dolls for Christmas These dolls should be made with a silencer attachment. If they arrive before Christmas, how in the world car they be secreted in the box in Mother's room without making their presence known to their future owners? The frost is holding off so nicely that the farmer is able to speed the plow at odd times. Last year the ground was frozen hard nearly a month earlier than this, so this lovely mild weather should shorten the winter considerably. Other things that point to a mild winter are the shortage of nuts and also of bittersweet berries, as we have discovered to our sorrow. However, we won't quarrel with any conditions which tend o shorten the winter.

The squirrels have multiplied abun-lantly this summer, and have made up for the nut shortage by storing plenty of corn. At times they are an awful pest, and are such sly little things that they are almost impossible to trap or poison. Some of our neighbors had a lot of mischievous squirrels take possession of their attic, and they tried every way to dislodge them. At last the little animals seemed to grasp the idea that they weren't welcome; and, becoming despondent, they committed suicide in the water tank, So, whenever the water began to taste queer, the family knew they had caught another squirrel.

We nearly had the roof mended last week, but it was too slippery—that is a ways the trouble with roofs-they never leak on dry days. Ours always chooses a wet night, and we fly around putting pails and basins in position to catch the gentle rain from heaven so it won't make wet spots on the floors. It falls with a musical thud into the basin on top of the cupboard, with a high soprano tinkle into the tin pail in the hall, and splashes joyfully into a tub in the kitchen. The whole effect is beautiful and most soothing in the still watches of the night, when one wants to sieep. Some day I am going to chase a man up on the roof, take away the ladder, and not let him down until every leaky spot is mended.

WHERE WILL YOU SPEND CHRISTMAS?

In all the cycle of the year there is In all the cycle of the year there is no time that brings families together as does the Yuletide. Though you were at the ends of the earth you would long to be home for Christmas and if it were at all possible you would be there. In the long ago when traveling facilities were very limited, people journeyed many weary miles and endured great hardships that they might be with friends ships that they might be with friends and loved ones on Christmas Day Today it is so different. The modern railway enables you to cross the continent in a few days in comfort. This year there promises to be the usual heavy Christmas and New Year travel, north, south, east and west, and in order that you may reach your destination as comfortably and speedily as possible, Canadian Na-tional Railways are making preparations far in advance. Anyone wishtions far in advance. Anyone wishing to pay for the traveling expenses of relatives or friends from, any point, need only to place the money in the hands of net rest ticket agent of the line; our representative will deliver the transportation free of charge to your friends at the other end in a few hours. When traveling this Christmas go "National Way."

STORE HOURS NEXT WEEK: Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Christmas Eve., open till 10 p.m.

GIFT FURNITURE To the practical mind there is nothing that quite approaches the desirability of furniture as a gift. Such a person delights to roam among collections of odd furniture and select just the pieces for this corner of the room or for here or there. An attractive display now in this section.

provides a gift that may be used every day for many years. CHAIRS AND ROCKERS are shown in brown reed woven on hardwood frames. The seats and backs are upholstered in cretonne or tapestry and are priced at from, each $10.95 to $40.00

Among the number are Armchairs and Rockers, like cut, with broad arms, spring seats and covered with a good grade of tapestry. To-day I saw with Apple Sauce.

The useful and ever-present galoshes! They have had comparatively little publicity since their meteoric rise to popularity a few years ago.

At that time we were mildly thrilled by wearing them with the tops turned down and un-fastened, with the buckles clinking melodiously as we walked down the street. In those days, galoshes achieved the dignity of front page news, and editorial comment, and occasional odes. But we wear them more conven tionally nowadays, and we find them warmer too! In my little interview this morning. I gleaned these sparse but valuable facts about galoshes: 1. Galoshes are warm

2. Galoshes are seasonable pro-tection against cold weather. 3. They are conventional black and fleece-lined. 4. Galoshes cost $4.50 per pair and $3.00 for children's sizes.
