Gaspe Basin, Bay of Chaleur, Nov. 26. - The keeper of the lighthouse at the point has ducks for sale. It is not unusual at this season for him to pick up an occasional dead ma!lard on his little gallery, where it has fallen after knocking its life out against the heavy glass front of the lantern. But during the thick weather of the past few days whole flocks of migratory birds have been lured to their death by the beacon lights. Just as the twilight was darkening one afternoon, such a disturbance was made that the light@keeper on duty thought it wise to investigate, and climbing up to the fender, found the pathway covered with struggling birds injured by their fight against the glass or fending He was busily engaged in wringing the necks of the ducks, when he received a severe blow on the head from the leader of another flock which was making for the fatal

The shooting took place close to a cabin used by railroad laborers for sleeping.

Bouret swore he saw Kert deliberately pull a revolver and shoot Greenleys, while standing outside the cabin. Several other witnesses swore the revolver was discharged in Kert's hands, while he was inside the cabin, and took effect in the victim's body after passing through the thin boards of the shanty. In several other details, the crown witnesses' story differed from others who were at the scene of the tragedy. Bouret's story was under suspicion from the time it was told.

The insurance was placed by Willis Faber & Co., one of the biggest marine insurance firms in Lloyds, though the insurance is hardly marine nature, consisting only of what is called builders' risks. This covers all risk from the time the construction is begun until the big sheil is finished except for the risk of launching. The principal danger will be from fire. hence the premium is small as com-pared with the rate paid for vessels subject to perils at sea. This is one of the largest insurances ever effected on a floating dock, although the underwriters' risk does not reach the total sum insured until the dock is finished. The Havana Dry Dock Company's floating dock is insured here for $300,000, and the new contoon dock now under tow for Port Natal, which is valued at $550,000, also is insured in London.

CALLS CHAMBERLAIN JEREMIAH

Ridicules His Policy, Declaring It Would Precipitate Trade War With the U. S.

London, Nov. 25. - Lord Rosebery spoke to three thousand people on the fiscal question at the Surrey Theater tonight. There were 20,000 applications for tickets, the issue of which had to be limited to the capacity of the theater. Lord Rosebery afterwards addressed a large overflow meeting. At both meetings he was given an enthusiastic reception, and all through his speech he was warmly cheered. Among those present at the meetings were a number of members of the House of Commons and others prominent to public life. His lordship's remarks were for the most part devoted to ridiculing Joseph Chamber-

"After last night's meeting at Queen's Hall, which was attended by seven members of Lord Rosebery's Government," said the speaker, "little could be added. The fiscal question must be solved and finally solved. The dissolution of Parliament cannot be long delayed." Lord Rosebery referred to Mr. Chamberlain as "a modern Jeremiah," whose assertions that the country had been decelered bad been received by factors desolated, had been refuted by facts, Mr. Chamberlain said the country was ruined, while Mr. Balfour, on the book, however, had decided against both these contentions. Mr. Stephen Grant, assessment commissioner, London, who is one of the three gentlemen credited with understanding the bill, was received by the chairman with the remarks, 'Now, we will get some light." Grant said that the application of the bill to London would cause a falling off in the revenue of some $20,000, which deficit would have to be met out of real estate or by revision of business taxes. The house tax would produce $5,893 in London, but the present income tax brings in $8,820. The day was spent in an earnest canvass of the points at issue, and BRUNSWICK HOUSE, CORNER YORK the views of representatives of dif- Woman Said to Have Mutilated Hus-

The Canadian Invasion. The "dumping" of Canadian iron and steel on the British market is furnishing the anti-Chamberlainites with a piquant argument. Last night both Congress will sustain Mr. Roosevelt, the Earl of Rosebery and the Earl of and that the European nations will not Crewe made use of it in political being so bankrupt that she can do nospeeches. In the past three years Canada has sold more iron and steel say anything more about it? We have (103,000 tons) in the British market got the isthmus and we can hold it than the United States, Germany and Belgium combined. This is dumping with a vengeance, and Mr. Chamberlain is leading an anti-dumping crusade. His speeches and the literature of his campaign are full of the subject. Mr. Chamberlain declares that the great staple industries of Great Britain are being steadily undermined by the dumping process, and he invariably cites the United States steel trust as the arch-offender. If it is true, it passes away, what will emerge will andra married her kinsman, Prince and hadn't sent a word to his wife as claimed, that a great industry will sometimes unload its surplus products on foreign markets at slaughter prices the United States steel trust would seem to be in a peculiarly favorable position to resort to such tactics. It controls prices in the home market, and by reaping inordinate profits on domestic sales can afford to sell its surplus output abroad at lower prices. But the Canadian iron and steel industry has been able to give the United States steel trust cards and spades, and beat it out as a dumper. If dumping is such a bad thing for the mother country, is there any satisfaction for Britishers in the fact that Canadians are the guilty parties, not the foreigners? Does it make a difference to the British ironmasters whether competition comes from Canadians or Americans? Is their Imperialism so ardent that they want to give a tariff preference to the country which does more dumping on their market than all other countries combined? This is a matter which the Britishers must settle among themselves. The Cana- new trans-Canada road, traversing high was not so wealthy as she had been in as possible and was taken to the psydian people, however, have a right to northern latitudes; the trans-Australia explanations from the Canadian iron road, running through the arid region, able to undersell the Germans, the Americans, the Belgians and the British, what is their grievance? By what right do they ask for further favors? They are drawing more than a million dollars a year in bounties from the federal and provincial treasuries, and they enjoy a considerable tariff protection. The object of this assistance has been to give the Canadian iron and steel industry a hold or the home market. Most Canadians will be surprised to learn that the infant has grown so lusty that he can

Was Gladstone Wealthy? [Marquise de Fontenoy.] Surely John Morley is mistaken in asserting through his "Life of Gladstone" that the latter was a rich man, for during his public career Gladstone proved to be as disastrous as financial was on several occasions in pecuniary straits, this, too, in spite of his fame as to the princess' already appalling acthe foremost financier of the Victorian era. Indeed, he was compelled at one time to sell his library-the collection of a lifetime-and another time to put up at auction his cherished and valuable collection of china. He was also forced to sell his town house in Carlton House Terrace, remaining dependent upon the hospitality of friends, such as Lord Rendel, whenever he made a stay in London. In fact, it was only during the last few years of the Grand Old Man's life, after the money spent in relieving the terribly embarrassed Hawarden Castle estate of Sir Stephen Glynne, and in developing the proper-ty, had begun to yield returns, that he may be said to have enjoyed anything like affluence. Nor does John Morley make any mention that I can find of the fact that not only was Gladstone a playwright, but that he at one moment considered going upon the stage as a professional actor. He was trade with others parts of the empire to such an extent stage-struck in his youth that he consulted the famous actor Macreedy respecting his chances of success in the dramatic profession. The tragedian is reported to have expressed a favorable opinion to him. But subsequently Mr. Gladstone was induced to abandon his intentions in that direction by the advice of his friend, Lord Stanley, afterwards fourteenth earl of Derby, so celebrated as prime minister and as translator of the works of Homer. Of course, the entreaties of Mr. Gladstone's own relatives likewise weighed in the balance of persuading him to change his plans. course of English history during the last half of the nineteenth century might have been different had Mr.Glad-

> It would have been clear to any rational individual that even a princely fortune would not last long at this rate of expenditure, but Princess Alexandra and her husband were both utterly without any real conception of the value of money, until it was all gone. Finding speculation unprofitable, Princess Alexandra went on the turf and sought to restore her fortunes by bold gambling on all the fashionable racecourses of Europe. Betting, however,

After these failures Princess Alexandra lived from hand to mouth for a couple of years, borrowing money in small amounts of old acquaintances, and contriving to get along with the help of all kinds of queer shifts. Her creditors, meanwhile, were receiving neither interest nor capital in return, and some of them resolved to take an extreme step, which the German law makes possible. One afternoon as the princess was walking down one of the streets of Stuttgart, she was seized by the public bailiff, who produced a warrant authorizing him to seize any portable property which she was carrying on her person, for the benefit of her creditors. Accordingly, the pricess was held up in the street, the bailiff and his assistants taking possession of her watch, of several articles of jewelry, of her purse, containing $80, and of several smaller articles. Her highness attempted to resist, with the result that there was a row in the street, ending in something like a free fight between the princess and the bailiffs. This affair caused such a scandal that Princess Alexandra's relatives, who had previously washed their hands of her, felt bound to interfere to prevent their noble name from being mixed up in any more brawls with bailiffs. They declined to settle any of the enormous debts contracted, but they promised to pay Princess Alexandra an annual allowance of $2,500 if she would leave Germany and live somewhere quietly, out of reach of further public scandals. The princess, being thoroughly tired of her life of adventure, accepted the proposition, and spent the next ten or eleven years of her life at English, French and Belgian watering places, spending the winters in Italy, all at the expense of the relatives who were subscribing to her annual al-

Mother Went to Panel to Bid Mad Son Good Night.

New York, Nov. 26. - For eight years William H. Goodwin, now 47 years old, whose mother died recently leaving fortune of $250,000, has been confined in a barred and padded room in the family residence suffering from violent insanity, and his condition is such that he has not realized that his parents are dead or that he is the subject of med-

The fact regarding the condition of the unfortunate man came out yesterday at a hearing before a sheriff's jury in White Plains, when a commission of three men, including Mayor Walsh, of Yonkers, was appointed to take charge of his affairs and administer his pro-

From the testimony taken it appears that Goodwin for all these years has been under the care of a nurse who has been constantly with him in a room in his mother's handsome home at White Plains, which was heavily padded and from which every article with which the patient might injure himself had been removed. This room was situated next to that occupied by his mother during her life and an opening in a panel in the door permitted her to see her son and to talk to him during his lucid moments. It was the mother's custom always to say good-night to her son. When she died the son went to the opening for a few nights, but no question was asked or any evidence given by him that he missed her. He has never asked about her and no one has thought it wise to tell him of her death. Dr. Coons, who has been Goodwin's physician for two years, testified that his patient had progressive paresis, and the case was remarkable in that he had "He will sit for an hour." his nurse testified, "with an open book before him, having no idea of what he is doing and without moving a page."
