As it had rained during the night and forenoon it was thought that the match would have to be postponed; about noon, however, it began to clear up, and a fine drying wind soon put the crop in good order for cutting.

There were about eight acres of spring wheat, and a swathe had been already cut round for to make room for the reapers. The field was high in the centre, but quite smooth and rather soft, owing to the late rains.

There was some very good cutting done by all, but the "Champion" cut the lowest and cleanest. Both of the other reapers pulled down the standing grain with the outside or grain wheel.

Ministerial Memorialists.

A little piece of very instructive sparring has taken place between two Ministerial newspapers, the Toronto Mail and the Ottawa Times. In giving an account of the presentation of the memorial to the Governor-General, the Times stated that some thirty Ministerialists were amongst the signers. Shocked by this unwarrantable candor on the part of its brother organ, the Mail made haste to contradict the damaging statement, and called it an untruth. This has hurt the feelings of the Ottawa paper, and we give its remonstrance, in which it re-asserts positively its former statement:—

The Toronto Mail denies a statement made in the Times in the form in which it was misquoted by the Ottawa correspondent of the Globe. The latter said that the Government organ had admitted that thirty Ministerialists had signed the memorial against the prorogation; and this the Mail says is "untrue." We believe it cannot prove its assertion. But what we did say was that "some thirty members"—the number may have been anything between twenty-five and thirty-five, we merely struck an average—had signed the memorial in favour of an immediate Parliamentary investigation into the Hamilton charges; and we said further, that the members referred to were Ministerialists still. The Mail may rest assured that our assertion was not made recklessly nor without every reasonable effort to ascertain the real state of feeling among the members, and we defy it to show that of the "thirty" signers to the memorial there were more than seventy or seventy-five are Oppositionists to-day. Our confrere reminds us somewhat of the old Scottish Divine who took his text from the Psalms—"For I said in my haste all men are liars." The preacher regaled himself with a pinch of snuff and said—"Unph! Ye said in your haste, did ye, David mon! Acel! Gin ye had been here, ye nicht hae said it at your leisure!" But we have not been telling lies, as facts will certainly prove.

The article is in curious contrast with another on the same page, in which the Times strives to prove that Lord Dufferin by the prorogation was "obeying the voice of Parliament in the only way open to him." And it makes this assertion whilst its own editorial column shows, by the statement just referred to, that the recent majority of Parliament had become a minority, and that the Ministers no longer possessed the confidence of Parliament. The defection of over twenty Ministerialists on a point affecting the very existence of the Government tells its own tale. It simply places the Reformers in a majority in the Dominion Parliament, and shows that for the Ministry to meet Parliament would involve a humiliating and disastrous defeat. Could a more convincing sign of guilt be given than is afforded by the almost insane length to which Sir John has gone rather than allow a Parliamentary investigation of the charges against him? We may be sure that an experienced politician like Sir John would not by a mere blunder have sacrificed his majority, and that he must have had the most urgent reasons for fearing to face Parliament and Parliament's Committee. The "hunted fox" is now fairly brought to bay, and in his desperation he has closed up every avenue of escape. He may avert the blow for a short time longer, but the country can afford to wait patiently, knowing that if justice has been slow, in this case at least it is sure.

Judge Polette and Day arrived at Ottawa on Monday night, and Judge Gowan on Tuesday morning. They were closeted all the forenoon with Sir John A. Macdonald. The Commissioners have engaged a room in the Parliament building, where they will hold their sittings. They meet to-day to make preliminary arrangements. Sir John's intention is understood to be, to so manage that the report of the Commissioners shall not be adverse to him, then to resist the appointment of a Parliamentary Committee, offering as the alternative the report of the Commissioners. That is the loop-hole through which he expects to creep. He gives his friends to understand that the House will lend itself to his assistance. He is reckoning without his host, however. Even his powers of persuasion cannot win back to his support the outraged and insulted representatives of the people.

Mr. MacKENZIE's interviews with the Governor-General, after the prorogation of the House, have been made the subject of animadversion by Ministerial journals. As a matter of course, it would be improper for any one to publish the details of the conversations which took place; but it does seem proper, considering the misstatements which have been made by the Government organs, to say that the interviews were of a friendly character, and that His Excellency fully recognized the strength of the arguments used by the Opposition in favour of an examination of the Pacific Railway charges by the House of Commons.—Globe.

The Ottawa Citizen of Monday confirms the report that Sir Hugh Allan and the Pacific Railway Company have proved a failure, and have been abandoned. It says that Sir Hugh has practically failed to carry out the arrangements for raising the money to build the road. It advises the building of the road by the Government, and repeats the old and stupid story that the plan which has just failed was forced upon the Government by the Opposition.

Emil Lovingsone, alias Louis Donnson, charged with having, on August 15th inst., murdered John D. Weston, of Brooklyn, N. Y., at Albany, N. Y., and robbed him of $600, was arrested at St. Catharines on Tuesday. Lovingsone, suspecting the authorities were on his track, came to St. Catharines, where he became employed in Mr. Kittow's barber shop. In the meantime his wife was arrested on suspicion. After Lovingsone arrived here he wrote her a letter, which was intercepted by the police. The detectives procured the assistance of Chief Cummins here, and succeeded in arresting him. The murders reported to have been a horrible affair—the body of the victim showing twelve bullet wounds and his throat cut.

Intemperance on Railways.

Mr. W. J. Spicer, Local Superintendent of the Grand Trunk Railway, has taken practical steps to lessen one great source of danger to Railway travellers, by the issue of the following circular. No one would assert that intemperance is more common amongst railway employees than amongst other sections of the community; but intemperance in their case is attended with fearful peril to the travelling public, and many of them are through the thoughtlessness of passengers exposed to more than common temptations to imbibe too freely. Mr. Spicer's action will meet with general approval:—

TO AGENTS AND CONDUCTORS. The "dismissals" that are recorded every few days in our Office Circulars, in consequence of intemperance, show unmistakably that there are men in the Company's service who either cannot or will not control their propensity for drinking intoxicating liquors; and such men not only bring disgrace, suffering, and ruin upon themselves and their families, but so long as they remain in the service they reflect discredit upon and endanger the safety of their fellow employees, and cause damage to property and loss to the Company, by a loose and reckless performance of their duty—even when only slightly under the influence of drink.

We know that a man who only occasionally, at uncertain periods, drinks to excess, speedily becomes demoralized and unreliable, and so far as his connection with the working of a railway is concerned, in whatever capacity he may be employed, he is not to be trusted out of sight of his superior officer, and there must be a feeling of want of confidence, which proves extremely unsatisfactory in every respect. You will, I feel sure, agree with me that it is the imperative duty of every right-minded person to do everything in his power to eradicate this terrible evil from our large staff; and as "example is better than precept," I desire your co-operation in at once organizing a Grand Trunk Railway (Western Districts) Temperance League, to mean total abstinence from every description of intoxicating drink as a beverage.

The result of a faithful adherence to such a pledge must be inestimably beneficial to the staff at large, and a blessing to the families of the men who have hitherto wasted a large proportion of their wages in the purchase of liquor.

I shall be glad if you will at once read this to every one of your staff, and head a list with my name and your own, and give the names of all the men who concur and agree to unite in this movement for their welfare. I trust that the response will be favorable, prompt, and unanimous, on the part of all now connected with the Traffic Department of the Central, Western, Buffalo & Goderich, and Detroit Districts; and I may here intimate that total abstinence will have the preference as regards promotion and employment in the service.

W. J. SPICER, Local Superintendent. Montreal, August 13th, 1873.

WHAT has become of the impounded papers since the prorogation of the House? is the anxious inquiry which now presents itself to every mind. Have they been restored to Sir Hugh Allan, that he might destroy them, and thus defeat the inquiry into the conduct of the Ministers? Who can tell? Will the organs, so thoroughly posted, give us some information on the question, which is of so much importance at the present moment?—Hamilton Times.

ANNABEL OR THE TEMPTATION.

CHAPTER XXXIV. BARNARD HAYES ESCAPES AS A SCAPEGOAT. CHAPTER XXXV. THE DISCONSOLATE MOURNER—AN INSCRUTABLE MYSTERY.

Winter had now come—that cheerless season when Nature is dreary and desolate, when the trees have lost their foliage, when the grass is dry and withered, when flowers have disappeared from hedgerows and meadows, when the songs of birds have ceased to resound through the groves, when the cold grey sky casts a gloom over the landscape, and silence and sadness rest on all the earth.

The season and the scene were congenial to the mournful feelings of Philip Weston as slowly and sadly he wandered about the grounds at Rockstone. The outward dreariness fitly emblematised the utter desolation of his soul.

He visited all the places where he and Annabel had walked or sat together. Often did he repair to the dell which witnessed their parting, and sit for hours on the rustic bench where they breathed out words of affection in each other's ear in that fragrant summer twilight.

Annabel was now a young girl, and her eyes were as bright as the stars of the night. She had been in the mansion also he loved to linger where Annabel had often been found, especially in a room whose windows looked southward, which had been more particularly hers, and which still retained traces of her presence in the form of pictures and hangings, in which she had taken pleasure.

One day when a gleam of sunshine shot across the park, which was covered by a thin coating of snow, Philip sat by himself in this particular room which he had mentioned. Mrs. Langton had gone out in the carriage, and he was free to indulge the solitary habits to which he in his grief had given himself up.

Being sure that no one would come to disturb his mourning meditations, he remained in this room, which was so closely associated with Annabel, recalling her bright and beautiful image, and the days of love and happiness that had gone.

The only living thing there besides himself was a frolicsome kitten, whose gambols sometimes caught his eye, and were so out of union with his own heavy thoughts that more than once he felt tempted to rise from his seat by the window, and eject it.
