EDITORIAL.

FOR the last time on European soil we present an issue of the LISTENING POST, with the hope that it will be as well received as its predecessors.

In this issue an endeavour has been made to present to all members and ex-members of the Battalion, and their friends and relatives throughout the world, certain information that a rigid censorship during the actual progress of the war prevented us even mentioning, whilst still preserving the lighter features of satire and humour in verse, story and sketch, that have made our little journal a welcome visitor during the past three years.

In the years to come, if we are to remain in existence, many changes in the policy of the paper will have to be made. Advertisements will, of necessity, have to become a feature if the journal is ever to be placed on a satisfactory financial basis under the stress of the struggle for existence that is the outstanding fact of our modern civilisation. Current comment on military matters, and on civilian topics, that interest or affect the soldier or ex-soldier, will, of necessity, have to displace fiction to a large extent—though in this connection matters peculiarly affecting the 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion, its members or post-bellum organizations, will naturally receive prior consideration.

The measure of the LISTENING POST's success in entering the ranks of commercial journalism will depend, primarily, on the measure of support given to it by the members and ex-members of the 7th Canadian Battalion.

A full explanation of the future policy is given elsewhere, and it is hoped that every old 7th man will rally round the little rag that first saw the light at Messines in 1915 and that, since, has (in spite of almost insurmountable difficulties) managed to keep up its identity in France, Belgium and Germany.

In the résumé of the 7th Battalion's part in the war, and accompanying maps, are given many dates. It is regretted that mistakes of one or two days may have crept into these articles; but our readers are asked to overlook any such that they may notice. The mass of official documents that contain the exact information of all our doings could not, obviously, be carried around by a unit in action, and the brief outline of our wanderings have been made up, chiefly, from memory. The official handbook of the 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion that General Odum speaks of in his letter will, no doubt, contain exact and authoritative information of all our doings; but the information on which that book will be based is not available to us in our limited time before going to print.

Our Future Policy.

A wish has been expressed by a great many of our readers that the LISTENING POST should not cease with the War.

The jump from trench journalism to commercial journalism is a pretty wide one, but it has been decided to attempt it, and, as an initial measure, issue the LISTENING POST once a month for six months after reaching B.C.

The paper will be issued on the 15th of each month, commencing on June 15th. The price will be 25 cents (Canadian, please—not French centimes) per copy. It will be sent each month, post free, to any address, on receipt of subscription rate of $1.50 covering the last six months of 1919.

It is hoped to publish twice a month and to reduce the price when the present exorbitant costs of paper and printing have subsided to more reasonable levels.

The present features will be continued, with the addition of current news of interest to soldiers and ex-soldiers generally. No political questions will be dealt with by the paper except in so far as they affect the interests of the soldier or demobilised man, the general policy being to remain absolutely independent of party politics. Its columns will be open for correspondence, and information on all military matters supplied where possible.

It is intended to place the paper on sale in all the principal towns in B.C.; but to avoid disappointment, fill in the subscription form elsewhere in this issue and mail to—The Editor, The LISTENING POST, Tommy to his Nurse.

HAD I the gold that Mammon sought
And all the wealth beneath the seas;
Had I the spoils barbarians brought
To lay before their deities;
Had I the moonlight's limpid rays
That from the vaulted heavens dart,
I'd spin each tiny one that strays
And weave a spell about your heart.

Had I the luminous star of night
That hangs resplendent in the sky,
I'd give it only that I might
Perceive the tear-drop in your eye.
Had I the vivid hues that paint
That sky ere yet the Sun-God dips,
I'd give them all without complaint
Could I but kiss those lovely lips.

These would I give, and giving still
Be humble, low, contrite and meek,
Could I by listening drink my fill
Of music when your sweet lips speak;
But, oh, my love, I have not these,
Of gold below nor jewels above;
But I'm a man, and if you please,
I have a heart and I can love.

THE CHOCOLATE SOLDIER.

(Regarded with the utmost contempt by Old Bills, but in high favour with the opposite sex of any country—particularly Germany).

The Bluff that Didn't Work.

C.O. (after hearing charge): Well, this is a serious offence, you know—in fact, there is too much of it going on. What have you got to say for yourself?

Accused: I appeal to your mercy, sir. This is the first time I have ever been brought before you, sir.

C.O.: Yes; that makes a big difference. I don't like to spoil a good record, or punish a man who has been doing his job in front line for a long time. However, I can't let you off altogether—take my award?

Accused: Yes, sir.

C.O.: Sheet—

Company Commander: I haven't got his conduct sheet yet, sir. This man came up with the draft that joined us yesterday.

C.O.: WHAT?—28 days. March out!

Sergeant: "What's all the racket about?"

Simp: "Take a slant yourself, Sarge. They're up in the air about something."

Whizz-Bangs.

One day when out on inspection, the officer enquired if a certain party had shaved that morning.

Yes, sir, was the reply.

With a razor?

Well, it was a Government issue, sir.

* * *

At another inspection the officer came across a rifle that was doubtful. He asked if it had been cleaned.

Yes, sir, was the reply.

Would you bet on it? asked the officer.

Yes, sir.

You're Scotch, aren't you?

Yes, sir; I am.

All right—you cleaned it, I guess.

Recruit: Say, waiter, give us some more of that soup.

Waiter: No—you've already had yours.

Recruit: Go on; where do you get that stuff, anyway?

Waiter (in earnest): Over there at the kitchen.

Hold up your Heads.

(To the returning Canadian troops.)

HOLD up your heads! It is your right.
Count not in vain the years of strife,
The nights of pain, the living death,
The stricken comrade's sobbing breath,
The passing of a brother's life.

Hold up your heads! Yours is the right.
You earned it through the frenzied years,
The shell's wild scream, the bullet's whine,
The sudden blast of hidden mine,
The fighting down of nameless fears.

Hold up your heads! Your cause is won.
Ye fought that freemen might be free.
Fast speed the ships that bear you west—
A woman's kiss, the old home nest,
The fruits of glorious victory.

BACK TO MUFTI.

By LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR ARTHUR W. CURRIE, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., Commanding Canadian Corps.

BACK TO MUFTI! How significant are these words!

To the survivors of the heroic phalanx, who, at the invitation or at the orders of the Government, put on khaki, left Canada, home, and business, and went to war, "back to mufti" means that their work as soldiers is completed.

By the definite victory they won, paying for it with their lives, their limbs, their health—by their unflinching devotion, generous sacrifice and splendid bravery, these khaki clad men have made permanently secure the freedom and prosperity of the country—they have written "CANADA" in bold, outstanding letters in the world's Roll of Honour—they have secured for Canada the right to speak as a nation admired and respected in the Concert of Nations.

The meaning of their victory can only be gained by the survey of all we stood to lose in the moral, political and material fields—in case of defeat.

Aside from the benefits accruing from victory, Canada will be enriched by the return to civil life of all those who had donned khaki and are now going back to mufti.

Of these men, some are crippled or of broken health and all of them were temporarily estranged from the stream of economic life of the nation. Not a few have lost, while away in the field, much, if not all, they possessed, through unforeseen agencies and possibly the inadequacy of our laws.

But the men, who for years have fought, suffered and tendered their lives daily on the battlefields of Europe for Canada's sake, with the "CANADA" badge on their shoulder and "CANADA" engraved in their hearts as their constant inspiration, can and will continue to uphold their Canadian ideal by becoming useful Canadian citizens. Their military life has been to them a complementary education. Their conception of citizenship has been enlarged so as to include duties besides privileges—of those duties they have performed the most sacred and most onerous—they have shed their blood in the defence of the State.

The dangers, sufferings and losses shared in common have lowered the barriers between classes, broadened the outlook on life and created an atmosphere of tolerance, mutual respect, understanding and sympathy.

The Citizen Soldiers have learned the value of individual initiative, backed by sound judgment, and they have also learned that organization and discipline, by measuring the task to the strength and capacity of the individual, by preventing waste and assuring mutual support, yields much greater results than scattered efforts.

The duly subordinated and co-operating powers which made them irresistible soldiers in the field are the very elements essential to good and progressive citizenship in a free country, and it belongs to Canada to turn to good account in the struggle for prosperity of the nation, the qualities acquired or developed by her sons in the field of battle.

Canada is resetting her house in order and readjusting her life for peaceful pursuits. This rearrangement, to be permanent and assure the stability essential to our young nation, must take into account the lessons of the war. The task will be facilitated by the unquestionable spirit of co-operation, tolerance and endeavour created at home and abroad by the sense of a common danger.

Under the stress of war, Canada and the rest of the world have learned that, when approached with courage, good-will and honesty, acceptable solutions can be found to most problems.

In dealing with national, social and economic matters, we must eradicate jealousy, sectional or class prejudices and all things which, without contributing to the greatness and prosperity of the nation, have in the past absorbed so much of our energies, obscured the issues and created strife and unhappiness.

The return to Canada of the fighting units of the Canadian Forces fresh from the field places our country in a favourable position to reconsider the organization for defence of the man, woman and industrial power.

A plan must be thought out which will derive the greatest possible profit for the nation from the knowledge gathered both in the battlefield and at home. This plan must ensure if, unfortunately, war should come again, the maximum military effort with the minimum disruption of economic life and productivity.

Our unpreparedness when war came caused an unquestionable waste of time, lives, and public funds.

The extemporizations and makeshift measures which had to be adopted, chiefly to gain time, must in the future be avoided.

Having attained the status of a nation, Canada must be prepared to face with courage and resolution the problems incumbent upon nations. Amongst those, preparedness for defence is and will remain the most essential.

The destruction of material and equipment, which has taken place on such a large scale during the war, must give an opportunity to industrial Canada to develop our great national resources and to reach and maintain a high volume of productivity.

The shortage of foodstuffs the world over, secures a continued demand for the products of the land.

Granting courage and foresight on the part of the legislators, and thanks to the energy, initiative and ready adaptability of our people, the transition from war to peace conditions will not weigh heavily upon Canada.

The re-absorption of our army into civil occupation will not present a difficult problem and will be greatly facilitated by the adoption of methods which will encourage and assist individuals to seek and find employment in the directions of which their several physical, mental and professional capacities can best be utilised.

It must be understood that the men crippled or disabled through wounds or sickness, contracted through the war, the dependants of these men as well as the dependants of our dead, will become the wards of our grateful nation in the measure required by circumstances.

At the Estaminet.

BON soir, madame, and you, fair demoiselle,

Bon soir, ma chérie, comment allez-vous?

To your blue eyes I drink this sparkling wine

Which sells at demi-franc less quatre sous.

If you will parlez, I will drink no more

Vin blink or most pernicious French bière.

Let's to the garden go; ouvrez la porte

And promenons among the pommes-de-terre.

Ah non? Beaucoup travail ce soir?

Du lait, you sav. is waiting at the door.

Très bon pour soldat; here is my vaisselle—

Some more, ma chérie, otherwise encore.

Why scan you so this franc note of Bethune?

"No bon pour vous, beaucoup malade?" Nay, nay

This is no crown and anchor bill, sweet maid—

I got it here at this estaminet.

My cash—you compree cash—is tout finit;

But I should worry, ça ne fait rien—

To-morrow to the tranchées I partis,

Beaucoup bombardé by the Allemand.

Adieu, petite, I shall not revenir;

The Boche barrage will blow me in the air.

Toute suite I shall be blessé or napoo—

Peut-être—je ne sais pas—c'est la guerre!

How it Began.

THE Adjutant and 2nd in Command had vanished for the day on a duty trip to Brussels, and the O.C., feeling somewhat lonely and slightly put out at the question, "What have you written for the LISTENING POST to-day?" that had been served up with every meal in the mess of the past week, decided on doing something all by himself. Hence the following document on the Editor's table next morning:—

"The Commanding Officer hopes to get a hearty laugh or two for himself and others, by offering one prize of 100 francs for the best unofficial interpretation of the initials O.R. The official interpretation thereof is 'Other Ranks.'

"This interpretation can be expressed in two words, thus: (in the unparliamentary language of Bairnsfather's 'Ole Bill'), 'Orl Right'; and so they are, God bless 'em. Or in verse, thus:

"There was a young man from the West,
Who enlisted along with the best.

..... ?
..... ?

Our Rations, Our Rum, and Our Rest.'

"Such bald innuendos as, 'Who stole Our Rum?' or, 'Who ate Our Rations?' will not be considered.

"The name of the winner, with his winning effort, will be published in the next issue.

"N.B.—Lance-Corporals are warned against the Obvious Risk, under the above rule, of sending in such solutions as, 'Only Rotters.'"

Frankly, we hope the O.C. wasn't disappointed, but would like to assure him that if he got his laugh, it was certainly on the worried Editor of our family paper.

All the free writing paper from the Y.M.C.A.; leaves from every note-book in the world; sheets of foolscap from the Orderly Room; and the backs of about a million envelopes—drifted in to the Editorial sanctum, until it looked like the baling room of the army waste-paper collecting department. Good, bad and indifferent (with the odds on the latter) were the efforts submitted, and the making of a choice from such a collection a worse experience than carrying a platoon's rum in an exposed bottle through Fritzie's barrage. However, someone has to be the goat and have 100 francs thrust into his protesting jeans, and as Lance-Corporal A. T. Garrick (No. 2 Company) is only a little fellow and can't resist very much, we have decided that he shall suffer for others.—Herewith his effort:—

On Request, Our Reliable Old Riley Offers Rather Original Remarks On Real, Overproof Rum, Rations, Or Rest. On Referring "O.R.," Old Riley Oozes Regular Old-timer Regimental Orthodox Rhetoric.—"O.R.," Observes Riley, "Occurs Rarely Outside Routine Or Regimental Orders, Rules or Regulations. On Routine Or Regimental Orders, Redundancies Or Repetitions Often Recur. Orderly Room Officials Reveal, Occasionally, Rare Oddities, Reeking Of Routine. Only Reflect: O.R.—Our Rations, Our Rum, Our Rest, Our Razor, Our Regimental, OR Other Ranks."

Herewith a few other samples submitted.—Note the becoming modesty with which our heroes disclaim any wish to finger the filthy lucre!

ORDINARY RUBBISH.

And it came to pass that when the hordes of Foch had smitten heavily the gates of Germania, and completely crushed the tribes within, the Canada-ites and they of the valley of Woodbina lay idle.

It chanced one day, as two warriors of the Army of Currie were passing a village, then known as Borset, they beheld afar off on the way side a tablet bearing the following inscription:—

"O.R.'s will proceed immediately to the lands of their forefathers; and therein will receive many pieces of silver."

Quoth he, bearing the insignia of the army of Chilliwack: "What mean these letters O.R.?"

And his comrade, a once learned scholar of Nanaimo, in the land of Can-a-da, replied:

"Lo! Is it not, as is spoken by the Greek scholars, that a time will come when the earth will be visited by things known as Rumours which, being interpreted, means, Things will happen which will happen not?"

"So, verily, I say that the letters on which thou gazest mean, 'Only Rumours.'"

SGT. H. F. CRUICKSHANK.

O is ours, others, yours and mine;
R is Ranks that's always short of coin:
So please shell out, and many, many thanks.
You need the laugh; but I can use the Francs.

JOE SULLIVAN.

Oh! Refuse not me that hundred francs,
Or Really I shall be downcast.
Oh! Render unto me and I will dance
Or Revel in Liege without a pass.

Oh! Remember all that I have missed;
On Rations I have had to feed—
Or Rather, let me say, exist;
Or Refuse to eat—a likely thing indeed!

Of Resolutions I have made a score;
Of Recent date, I've broken quite a few.
Oh! Reward me with the prize—or more—
Or Rapidly I'll break the others too.

Oh! Real indeed would be my joyful song!
Oh! Rich indeed, could I but win the dough!
Oh! Rob me not of gladful hours and long,
Or Rapidly my tears will surely flow.

Oh! Receive my thanks, in anticipation—
Old Robbie says, "It forward points the view"—
Or Respect will vanish of thy appreciation,
Or Refusal make me something dreadful do.

C. HAYDON.

The meaning of O.R.

After sober thought, one is forced to conclude that the term O.R. has not only one, but many meanings. As far as this battalion is concerned, perhaps, they might well be classified as follows:—

1. On joining up—Just Ordinary Rookies.
2. In England—To the peaceful (?) Englishman, Overseas Ruffnecks.
3. In France—
 - (a) During a Scrap, the Objective Reachers.
 - (b) After most scraps—Just Odd Remnants.
 - (c) In trench warfare, best known as Odlum's Raiders.
4. After leave to Paris, London, Brussels, Liege and other Places, 'Opeless 'Recks.
5. Last, but not least, I think, on the whole, we might call them the

OLD RELIABLES.

JIMMY.

FOOD FOR THE HUN.

What starving Germany really needs is Humble Pie.

(1) Bill: "Here, what d'ye knock his hat off for?"
 Alf: "All the German civvies have to take their hats off out of respect to the Corps."

(2) Alf: "Here's your chance. Now don't forget to approach him with the air of a conqueror, but without the arrogance of a Hun, and if he don't salute—"

(3) — off comes his-hat."

(4) Alf: "Why did you let that big stuff get away? Were you scared?"
 Bill: "Scared—nothing. That guy had a cap on!"

7th Canadian Infantry Batt. Memorial.

A SUGGESTION was made that a memorial (to be erected in B.C.) to all Officers, N.C.O.'s and men who have laid down their lives in the War should be erected by the members and ex-members of the Battalion, without any assistance from the general public. On a vote, the Battalion decided, practically unanimously, in favour of the proposal, and a Committee as under were appointed by the Commanding Officer to handle the matter:—

CHAIRMAN.—Major D. Philpot, D.S.O.

SECRETARY-TREASURER.—Captain P. M. Ferris.

MEMBERS.—Brigadier-General V. W. Odlum, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O.; Captain S. Wharton; Coy.-Sgt.-Major A. H. Waddington, D.C.M.; Sergeant A. Martin, D.C.M.; Lance-Corporal L. A. Lavery, and Private T. H. Hollingdale.

This Committee to act until the organisation of the 7th Canadian Battalion Association is completed, when a Committee to continue the work will be elected by the Association. Subscriptions are invited from all Officers, N.C.O.'s and men at present serving, or who have ever served, on the strength of the 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion towards the cost of this memorial. No amounts are suggested, it being the general wish that each individual should be left to give whatever amount he wishes. Subscription lists will not be published, but will be open for inspection by any bona-fide member or ex-member of the 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion on application to the Secretary-Treasurer.

All subscriptions will be acknowledged by mail on specially numbered receipts. Subscriptions may be given in personally to the Secretary-Treasurer, or forwarded by mail, addressed—

Cheques, Money Orders, etc., should be crossed, and made payable to 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion Memorial Fund.

The Seventh at War.

BROILING August days and the wide sweeps of Valcartier's plains saw the organisation of Canada's army commenced, and amongst them the 7th Canadian Battalion of Infantry (later known as the First British Columbia).

The Battalion was made up at that time from about 250 officers and men of the 6th Duke of Connaught's Own Rifles of Vancouver, 250 of the Irish Fusiliers of Canada from Vancouver, 250 of the 88th Fusiliers from Victoria, 150 of the 102nd Rocky Mountain Rangers from Kamloops and district, and 150 of the 104th Fusiliers from New Westminster and Chilliwack. All these units were old Militia Regiments, and most of the personnel had seen some years' service in them. An independent detachment from East Kootenay and another from the West Kootenays were attached for a few days, but were then absorbed by the 12th Battalion. Major W. Hart-McHarg, of the 6th D.C.O.R., was given the Command of the Battalion, with rank of Lieut.-Colonel, and Major V. W. Odium, of the 11th Irish, the position of Second-in-Command.

The West Kootenay Detachment, under Major Rigby, rejoined the Battalion at West Down South after our arrival in England.

Followed a period during which our chief object in life appeared to be parading as many men as possible at any old time of the day or night to the Q.M.'s stores to draw such vitally necessary articles as brushes, shaving, or laces, boots, pairs—never, by any chance, could we get more than one variety of article at one time. The end of September saw us fairly well equipped and aboard transports on the high seas; and the middle of October, disembarking at Devonport and en route for Salisbury Plain.

Our sojourn at West Down South in tents, and from Christmas onwards in the huts at Lark Hill, gave us a taste of what war really was. Before then, a great many of us imagined that it would be one long picnic interspersed occasionally with a few odd skirmishes with just enough bullets zipping around to give a tinge of excitement to the game, and a little bayonet exercise at the end of the day on real Huns just to keep us from feeling too bored. A constant nightmare of mud had never entered our calculations, so that a few weeks of living, walking, sleeping, and eating amidst a foot or two of England's stickiest variety didn't tend to improve tempers, and certainly made the firing-line in France appear a veritable heaven by comparison.

By February our dearest hopes were realised, and after dark on the 9th of the month we quietly stole out of camp to the train, and morning found us rubbing our eyes in Avonmouth. A few short hours and we were aboard the transport.

The trip to St. Nazaire was very pleasant, as the much-dreaded Bay of Biscay was quiet as a mill-pond, but high winds springing up as we entered the mouth of the River Loire prevented the ship being docked at St. Nazaire, and for three days we lay within a thousand yards of the dock, gazing on our promised land.

A two-days journey in box-cars in the delightful continental fashion and we were pretty glad to stretch our legs as we swung off for billets around Strazeele.

Here, for the first time, we saw signs of the war—at night the dull booms of guns in the distance, the sky lit up by their flashes and by an occasional flare-light.

About a week was spent around Strazeele before moving up to the Line, the only excitement during that time being a visit from Sir John French, who came around to give the 1st Division the "once over" before they were allowed to start on their career of Boche-hunting.

The 27th February saw us established in billets at Ploegsteert, and there, under the able guidance of the 1st Hants Regiment, we made our debut in the trenches.

Not many of the old originals will forget that first trip in a new, strange world. It was what, in the light of later experiences, we should term "a very peaceful night," but to us it was war in all its grim reality. No bullet ever sings by one with the same note as the first that passes by one's head; and no shell ever has such an awe-inspiring, terrific whistle through the air and such a blinding flash and roar on explosion as that first little whiz-bang that drops a hundred yards away.

About a week was spent by the Battalion at Ploegsteert, during which time everyone had their turn in the trenches and on working-parties—even down to the portly Quartermaster, who couldn't rest content until he had crawled out into the No-Man's-Land to the Listening Post. One or two casualties were sustained during this period, and as we buried an officer and private together in the little village churchyard—the first of the Battalion to pay the price of war—we began to realise all that was before us in the years to come.

Early in March we moved to Fleurbaix, about a mile and a half in front of which village was our first stretch of Canadian line. The whole Division was in and comfortably settled down by the 10th March, on which date the glorious but ill-starred Neuve-Chappelle action commenced. Our share in the action consisted in firing off unlimited rounds of ammunition with the idea of worrying Fritz as much as possible. Of the real battle we saw nothing, though the roll and rock of the preliminary bombardment seemed to our unaccustomed ears like the end of all things.

Towards the end of the month we moved out to rest billets at Estaires preparatory to carrying out offensive operations from that vicinity; but after a few days these were apparently called off, and we moved to scattered farm billets around Steenvoordie.

From here, in the second week in April, we moved to Ypres by bus and marched into the trenches in front of Grafenstafel Ridge, east of St. Julian, relieving units of a French Division. Life began to get a little more interesting from then on, as Fritz took an intense dislike to our presence from the start, and showed it in an unmistakable manner by pounding us unmercifully with his lighter guns.

Here, for the first time, we made the acquaintance of his vile "tear" shells, and the sight of No. 1 Company, who were in reserve trenches, going around with streaming eyes after a stiff dose of them was ludicrous in the extreme to all except the unfortunate victims.

About the 20th we moved out into Brigade reserve near Fortein and took advantage of the opportunity to visit the town of Ypres, which, at that time, was fairly intact, though the beautiful Cloth Hall was a mass of burnt-out ruins, and the Cathedral close by in little better shape.

Ypres, as it looked then, with thousands of British "Tommies" mingling with the civilians on its streets in the April sunshine, and hundreds of little transient barrows lined up along the curb round its Grande Place, selling every imaginable article of use or ornament, and every second house an estaminet supplying weak beer and worse wine to the troops, presented a far different picture to a week later, when the writer passed through its deserted streets at midnight, stumbling through a litter of broken tiles and masonry, every footstep sending an echo through the deserted and ruined houses that was more disconcerting than the shells that never ceased for weeks to fall on the doomed city.

On the afternoon of the 22nd April, everything was calm and peaceful, and the whole surrounding country bathed in sunshine when the ball opened. The first intimation we had was the sight of an 8-inch shell scattering the houses in St. Julian, about half a mile away, as it suddenly arrived from out the blue. This lone stranger was promptly followed by salvos of four, and in a few minutes what had been a peaceful country village looked like a fair imitation of Dante's Inferno. Amidst the clouds of red brick-dust and black smoke could occasionally be discerned the figure of a Highlander trying frantically to collect up his equipment and get clear of the village. Shortly afterwards we saw the low, yellowish-green cloud over to the west of St. Julian that heralded the first use in modern war of gas. What it was at that time we did not even trouble to conjecture; but ere long the knowledge was to be driven into us beyond the possibility of error. Fairly soon, fantastic figures were seen running towards us, and, on rounding up a dozen or more, we discovered that they were French colonial troops, most of them wounded, and all choking and gasping in the most ghastly manner. About 6 p.m. the Battalion fell in by Companies and moved up to Grafenstafel Ridge, assembling there shortly after dusk. During the night they moved over astride the road leading to Poelcapelle, and dug in as best they could along the hedges, etc.

The 23rd passed off fairly quietly so far as we were concerned, though it was by now fully evident that big German operations were developing. In the afternoon, Lieut.-Colonel Hart-McHarg was very badly wounded whilst going round in front of the Battalion selecting locations to dig in a defensive line. He was rushed down to the Field Hospital as soon as darkness fell, but died the next day. The night was spent in digging in and attempting to make our temporary position as strong as possible. Two wagon-loads of shovels and wire brought up by the Engineers assisted greatly in this, but the task, in the time available, was impossible.

Dawn saw the commencement of such a bombardment by the enemy as we had never in our wildest dreams imagined, and the powerful attacks that followed soon saw the Battalion in groups of Companies, Platoons, and sometimes even individual sections, engaged in fighting for their lives, without knowledge of what was happening on their flanks. Murdered by that terrific fire, and driven back by sheer weight of numbers, they reformed and were driven back again, until nightfall found but a handful of men under a few officers, out of what had been a Battalion, still hanging on to a few square yards of Grafenstafel Ridge. Why they were still there they did not know or enquire, but just stuck around until the next day's renewed attacks pushed the survivors along with the rest of the brigade over the crest of the Ridge.

The next few days were spent in wandering around from one portion of the salient to another, supporting fresh British troops who were pouring in to fill the gaps, and on the 27th the Battalion (or what was left of it) moved back to Brielen. The huts newly erected there looked inviting, and we were soon tucked away and asleep. Our comfort was short-lived, however, as dawn brought Fritzie's shells bursting overhead, and we were glad to quit their shelter and dig in yet once more under the hedges.

A few small drafts were received from England, but did not go far to fill the gaps. The Battalion's casualties during the operations had reached 650, of which six officers and 176 other ranks had given their lives.

The first week in May saw the Battalion, under the Command of Major Odlum, move down to Bailleul and billet near there. The day after arrival we received our first big draft, consisting of about 12 officers and 250 other ranks from the 30th Battalion, who were being broken up in England to reinforce various units. The middle of May found us on the move again, and after a couple of days' march we settled down in an old orchard behind Festubert.

The operations around there were spasmodic but costly, consisting of mopping-up odd pieces of trench system after a general attack carried out by the British. The work chiefly devolved on the newly-organised Brigade bombing section, composed of men of all Battalions in the Brigade—which section was wiped out and re-organised so often in those few days as to be almost unrecognisable.

The Brigade operations culminated on the 24th by a successful attack at dawn on K.5 by the 5th Battalion, supported by Nos. 4 and 1 Companies of the 7th, the other two Companies of the Battalion moving up later in the morning to assist.

From Festubert we moved over to Givenchy, taking over the ill-omened "Duck's Bill" and "Keep" from the Imperials. The strength of units was then so low that the 7th and 8th were linked to form a composite Battalion for holding the line.

After a short tour in the trenches, the Brigade moved back early in June to the Oblinghem area for ten days' rest, our places being taken by the 1st Brigade, who, meanwhile, pulled off a most gallant but unsuccessful attack on the trenches opposite the Duck's Bill.

About the middle of June we returned for another week's trench tour, chiefly occupied in clearing up and getting in the 1st Brigade dead from "No-Man's-Land," and then moved back to Essars, near Bethune.

On the 24th June we started out on a three days' march that brought us back to the scene of our first "breaking-in" to the war game at Ploegsteert, and there, on the forward slopes of Hill 63, we spent a more or less peaceful time until the following spring.

Hard work and discomfort was certainly our portion during this period. We spent the summer in digging miles of trenches down the slopes of the hill, only to see the winter's rains turn raging torrents down them and render them useless, whilst the little bubbling brook we dignified by the name of the Petite Douve River would rise fifteen feet in a night and flood the surrounding country—including, incidentally, our front line—so that it was no uncommon sight to see the reliefs for posts steal out at night on the top of the parapet with a raging sea of muddied waters on either hand.

August and September brought us welcome drafts of about 500 men from the 47th Battalion, so that by the end of the year we were again in splendid shape and ready for anything.

The one event of outstanding interest during this period was the raid on the enemy trenches near Petite Douve Farm, carried out by a selected party of the Battalion—the first attempt at this kind of warfare carried out on the Western Front, and destined in later years to grow into one of the most important branches of trench warfare. The raid was planned to inflict damage to the enemy and secure prisoners and identifications, and the measure of its success can be gauged by the fact that the raiding party killed about thirty of the enemy and secured twelve prisoners at the cost of one casualty.

The end of March found us once again on the move back to the Ypres salient, and not one of the survivors of that first tour there but had a tightening of the heart-strings when word was passed around that we were again booked for that veritable hell.

Our forebodings were certainly justified, as at no time during our four years' stay in France and Belgium have we put in a harder stretch than that four months in 1916—hard both physically and on men's nerves and moral. "Sorrel Hill," "The Pollock and Bean," and "The Bluff" will certainly never be forgotten by those who survived.

The "Pollock and Bean" was our first real hammering of the trip, when No. 4 Company and the flanks of 2 and 3 on the left and right respectively received a concentrated bombardment of "Minnies" and whizz-bangs for an hour and a half. As the former contain some 200lbs. of explosive, the state of the trenches after the strafe can be better imagined than described.

The German attack on the "Twin Hills" and Sorrel Hill on June 2nd gave us our next turn. Lieutenant-Colonel Odlum had been wounded and evacuated a few days earlier, and Major Humble, who was at that time Staff-Captain "Q." on the 2nd Brigade staff, took over temporary command of the Battalion.

On June 3rd the Battalion counter-attacked from Square Wood with the avowed object of recapturing

The Seventh at War (contd.)

Sorrel Hill. The situation appeared impossible on the face of it, but something had to be done to check the enemy's further advance. The attack had been intended for dawn, but it was impossible to get troops assembled in time, so that the actual "kick-off" started at 6.30 a.m. Met by a withering machine-gun, rifle and shell-fire, it was impossible to progress very far, and in the late afternoon the survivors were withdrawn and taken out for a few days' rest and re-organisation. After four days the Battalion again returned to the line, and held the Hill 60 sector during the preliminary bombardment and the counter-attack on the night of the 12th-13th, which threw the enemy back to their old positions on Mount Sorrel. This proved one of the most trying trench tours ever put in by the Battalion. The only accommodation was in trenches knee-deep in mud; constant rain and very heavy enemy shell-fire placed a terrific strain on all ranks. Trench tours and periods in rest at Dickebush filled in the time at the salient until August 11th, when the Battalion moved to Eperlecques for training prior to the Somme.

Lieut.-Colonel Odum had returned in the meantime, but had been ordered to the 11th Canadian Infantry Brigade of the 4th Division, to be G.O.C., and the command of the Battalion devolved on Captain Gardner, who had just returned from England after being severely wounded at Festubert.

One more incident deserves mention before closing with the very eventful second tour in the salient. On July 25th, at 10 p.m., the enemy blew up the largest mine exploded to that date on the Western Front, at "The Bluff." The trenches were held at the time by No. 1 Company, but timely warning from the Intelligence branch of the enemy's probable intentions enabled the withdrawal of the majority of the garrison and preparations for repelling any attack and to counter-attack. The thoroughness of these preparations can be gauged from the fact that within five minutes of the blowing up of the mine, men of No. 1 Company had rushed and occupied the lip of the crater with a Lewis gun in action, and the terrific fire opened by the Companies on the flank and by the artillery completely stopped the enemy's attack at his own parapet.

Some two weeks were spent at Eperlecques, and the journey to the Somme, and then about a month in Albert, Pozieres, the Chalk Pit, and the front trenches alternatively. During this period the Battalion did not take part in any of the major operations, but did most strenuous work in holding the line, making local attacks (chiefly bombing attacks to clean up certain locations) and repelling enemy counter-attacks; the casualties sustained during this period being very heavy. One instance deserves special mention. On the 27th September the Battalion moved up to relieve another unit at Mouquet Farm. No. 2 Company, moving up in the darkness, found an enemy counter-attack in progress; without hesitation, they flung themselves into the action, with such determination, that within a few hours, they had driven the enemy back to his own lines and effected the normal relief of the other unit and allowed them to withdraw.

The trouble of his old wound, aggravated by the vile weather conditions on the Somme, broke down Lieutenant-Colonel Gardner's health, and he was evacuated to England, the command of the Battalion passing to Major W. F. Gilson.

After the strenuous days on the Somme, the Battalion moved up to the Vimy Ridge, taking over the normal trench warfare work again on November 2nd, and continuing until about December 18th, when a move was made to Bruay, where a month's complete rest and Christmas were spent.

January 18th found us moving back to the line again in the Bully Grenay sector, around which we remained until the end of February, when we moved again to the Vimy Ridge and began work in earnest for the spring drive. Practice over tapes laid out to represent the enemy's positions—trench tours, and perfecting all arrangements for the forthcoming attack—filled in the next few weeks. Vile conditions of mud and water and a raging snowstorm ushered in the morning of April 9th. But nothing could stop the irresistible weight of that attack; and by noon the whole of the famous Ridge was in Canadian hands. The Battalion's casualties in the initial attack were heavy; but immediately reorganizing, they, with the rest of the Brigade, continued with the action until the capture of Arleux-en-Gohelle at the end of the month, after which a move was made into rest at Maisnel-le-Ruitz.

A month was spent in reorganizing and training, the gaps being filled by some 500 officers and men transferred from the 48th Battalion (3rd Divisional Pioneers), which was broken up about that time.

The next work undertaken was holding the line around Lens and Loos until the 15th August, when the famous Hill 70 action was fought. This action, though limited in extent, was one of the most bitter of the whole war. The enemy was in no doubts as to our intentions, and intended to hang on at all costs. The march in to assembly positions was probably one of the most difficult ever carried out by any troops. For four miles gas-masks had to be worn by everyone (including the picking up of battle stores at the dumps) and for most of the night the assembled troops were exposed to a most galling, harassing fire of high-explosive and gas.

The attack at zero, however, went through with a rush, and by dark the whole of the hill, almost up to the lines laid down as the final objective, was in the hands of the 1st and 2nd Canadian Divisions.

Then followed days that will remain forever vivid in the minds of the survivors. Every gun that Fritz could bring to bear was trained on that few square miles of battered trenches hiding them from view in the storm of dust and flying earth and debris, and twenty-seven times attempts were made by German troops (who, whatever may be said of the moral standards, certainly showed magnificent courage) to retake the hill, though in every occasion meeting defeat.

After the Hill 70 action had died down, there followed again a period of trench tours and short rests in the Lens sector, until towards the end of October when the Battalion moved up into the Ypres district for the third time.

A couple of weeks were spent in moving by short stages as far as Wieltje, whilst awaiting our turn to take part in the battle raging around the Grafenstafel and Passchendaele Ridges. On the 8th November the Battalion moved into the line at Mosselmarkt, and on the 10th, in conjunction with other units, attacked at dawn with the object of extending the gains already made to include the whole of the crest of the Ridge north of Passchendaele, with its command of the plains as far as Roulers. Conditions of weather and ground baffle description; the whole country was one vast vista of shell-holes and mud, with water everywhere; and to add to the discomfort and difficulties (if that were possible) the dawn broke drear and grey, with rain pouring down in torrents. Within two hours, in spite of the almost impossible going, the Battalion had reached their objectives.

And then followed a repetition of Hill 70. For nine hours, the enemy swept the crest of the Ridge with storms of shells of every calibre. Only to the sodden state of the ground, which neutralised to a great extent the effect of the heavier shells, can be ascribed the fact that anyone came alive out of that inferno. As it was, the casualties for the action were exceptionally heavy. One Company, marching under command of a Lance-Corporal, could produce only seven men!

The Battalion were relieved by units of the 3rd Canadian Division on the night of the 11th, and moved back to Brandhoek, and from there, in buses, to Bethune. After a few days rest in the town, we moved down to the Lens area and once more took up trench warfare in our old sector.

Christmas found us once again enjoying the hospitality of Bruay for a month, and then, back to the line—this time on the Hill 70 sector (our first visit there since the strenuous days of August).

The first six months of 1918 were spent in short tours in the trenches around Loos, Vimy Ridge, and in front of Arras, and fairly long periods in reserve and rest, during which time the Great German Offensive had commenced, swept to its high water mark and subsided again to the stale-mate of position warfare. Only once during that period did it look as if we were to get our share in breaking up the repeated thrusts. A few days after the big attack started on March 21st, the Battalion was rushed down in buses to the Third Army front only to be re-embussed and returned to the old stamping ground around Arras.

By the end of July we got our first intimation that the Canadian Corps were to be given a chance in the big operations planned to drive the enemy back from the ground he had captured in the spring rush, and the beginning of August found us entrained and en route for Amiens by a circuitous route.

The preparations for the big attack were very complete and the extraordinary secrecy maintained rendered it impossible for the Germans to get any warning of the impending blow. On August 6th we moved up by bus to Amiens and marched through the town in the night, dawn finding us carefully tucked away out of sight some miles east of the town, down the main Roye Road.

4.20 a.m. of the 8th August saw the opening of the grand ball, and two hours later the Battalion started out on their share of the operations which, during the course of the morning, developed (in comparison with previous operations) into more of a route march than a fight. Some hard work cropped up later in the morning in cleaning up odd machine gun detachments, but was tackled with real enthusiasm; by 1 p.m. the Battalion (sharing honours equally with the 10th) was marching proudly through the streets of Caix—some eight and a half miles inside the Germans' dawn lines—whilst out of the other end of the village poured a mixed mob of German transport and fleeing troops.

This action ranks as the finest in the Battalion's history, as the whole day's operations only entailed a casualty list of three killed and seventeen wounded.

The succeeding days were spent in driving the enemy still further back, the Battalion handing over its frontage, Damery, to French troops about the 17th. The next ten days were spent in marching back to the vicinity of Amiens and entraining and detraining and marching into Arras ready for further operations.

During the night of September 1st the Battalion (who had been moving up in reserve and support from Arras as the operations proceeded) assembled on very hurried orders for the assault on the Queant-Drocourt line. This attack commenced at dawn on the 2nd September, and was carried through with magnificent dash. A few hours secured all the objectives allotted us, and in the capture of them the Battalion's toll of prisoners alone reached over 600. Serious fighting was experienced by the 10th some two miles beyond the famous trench line, and it was not until the next day that the enemy were driven beyond the Canal du Nord, the last action of the Battalion in this phase of the operation being to establish and consolidate the line along the Canal. A couple of weeks in Simencourt behind Arras followed and then the Battalion moved forward again for the Cambrai operations.

Dawn of the 27th September found us assembled again for attack, and at 7.20 a.m. the Battalion moved forward, crossing the Canal du Nord in the wake of the 3rd Brigade and taking over the action from them near Marquion. Stubborn resistance was encountered near the Arras-Cambrai Road, and it was only after some hours of most bitter and determined fighting at close quarters, that the enemy's forces were driven back and our objectives gained. The night was spent around Haynecourt and the next two or three days in that village, whilst the attacks were continued by other troops. A two-day trip holding the line in front of Abancourt early in October, and we were moved back to Marquion.

From there we departed on the 6th to take over a line from the Imperials in front of L'Ecluse. The whole line fronted on the Sensee River, which, being flooded by the machinations of the Bosche, gave us a peaceful kind of lake between us of some thousand yards or so in width.

On the 11th October, indications seemed to point to the enemy's withdrawal, so, by the aid of a narrow foot-bridge placed over the normal channel of the river, an attempt was made to force a crossing over the raised road to Tortequenne that presented the only alternative to boats as a means of crossing. The attempt succeeded so well that by late afternoon the Battalion were all across and had captured some square miles of enemy territory and some fifty-six prisoners, at the cost of three men slightly wounded. The advance was continued next day to the Sensee Canal, but was held up there by blown bridges and the enemy's determined resistance. A way of overcoming this by using cork floats for bridges was tried out and by night of the 14th the Brigade were over the canal and merrily taking up the chase. Two days later the Battalion settled down in the outskirts of Aubercicourt (other units passing through to continue the pursuit) and it was in the peasants' homes of the town—by then some thirty miles behind the fighting lines—that the 11th of November and cessation of hostilities found us.

A few days of preparation and we were off for our long hike to the Rhine. With that march I do not propose to deal, as its progress is shown on the map accompanying this narrative.

February finds us in the old-world village of Vauxborset, some seventeen kilometres from Huy, waiting, more or less patiently, for our turn to move over to England and then—HOME.

Of the crowd who left Valcartier four and a half long years ago, there are still a few (though pitifully few) serving. Of the old Battalion and the drafts from different units who have reinforced us, many have paid with their lives the price of Empire.

In our pardonable pride and pleasure at the conclusion of a task well done, and the prospect of an early return to our homes in dear old Canada, let us never forget the sixty-four officers and thirteen hundred and thirty-five other ranks who, in helping to place the reputation of the old 7th Battalion where it stands to-day, gave their all.

The Future of the 7th Batt.

(BY BRIG.-GEN. V. W. ODLUM, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O.)

WITH demobilization already partially accomplished, and with the machine in full swing to land the last of the Canadian soldiers at their homes by midsummer, the time has come for those of us who have served with the old 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion to lay definite plans for the associations we are going to form to keep alive the friendships which have grown up during years of war and which we now value so highly. It will, I am sure, be the unanimous wish to:—

- (a) Keep contact with all old comrades;
- (b) Perpetuate the name of the battalion and keep alive its traditions;
- (c) Raise memorials to the memory of those who have gone, and do everything possible to help those who were dependent on them;
- (d) Lend a hand to comrades of the 7th who need assistance.

But while we may agree on the purposes we would like to accomplish, it is probable that there will be a diversity of views as to the means to be employed and the immediate practical steps to be taken. Therefore, to crystallize thought and give a concrete plan for discussion, I make the following suggestions:—

1. To "keep contact," we need a 7th Battalion Association, for active membership in which all who ever served with the 7th Canadian Overseas Battalion (and no one else) would be eligible. Associate membership could be extended as desired. The Association should hold periodic reunions, become the trustee for trophies and battalion funds, and charge itself with the duty of raising and caring for monuments and memorials. Its organisation for mutual assistance in time of need should be especially complete. Active membership should be marked by an emblem, unobtrusive but always visible, the right to wear which should be jealously restricted to and guarded by the active members.

2. To perpetuate the name requires the continuance of the 7th Battalion as a living military formation. This can only be done by embodying it in the Canadian military system, either as an addition to the units already existing or replacing one or more of them. The 7th Battalion should never be absorbed by any battalion; that goes without saying, for its record is prouder than that of any militia unit; and already in B.C. there are perhaps even more militia battalions than can be kept filled. Hence the obvious conclusion is that it should displace some existing formation. I propose that the "7th Canadian (1st British Columbia) Infantry Regiment" should take its place in the militia list, with battalions as under:—

First (and regimental depot): At Esquimalt. To belong to the permanent force and be formed of officers and men of the 7th who wish to continue in the service, with the present O.C. of the battalion in command.

Second: At Vancouver, displacing the 6th D.C.O.R., or the 11th Irish Fusiliers.

Third: At Victoria, displacing the 88th Regt.

Fourth: At New Westminster, displacing the 104th Regt.

Fifth: At Kamloops, displacing the 102nd Regt.

As the original 7th was formed by drafts from the 6th, 11th, 88th, 102nd and 104th (supplemented by a Kootenay contingent) this arrangement would enable all the parent regiments to participate in the perpetuation of their now famous child.

The regiment should be a straight infantry one—just what the 7th has been. It should wear the line infantry uniform, with the 7th Battalion badges and buttons; and it should carry colours, with the preparation and presentation of which the 7th Battalion Association should charge itself.

3. To raise memorials, no organisation other than those already named is needed. Memorials will undoubtedly take many forms; some will be public and some private; but the chief of all should be a monument erected by the living 7th to the gallant dead—to the more than a full battalion of officers and men who have gone to their last rest in France and Flanders. This monument should be placed at the regimental depot, if one is established; if not, then near the Parliament buildings in Victoria or close to the provincial university in Vancouver; and it should be designed, executed and paid for by men of the 7th. I understand that a plan along these lines is already under consideration, and that preparatory steps have been taken by the battalion commander.

To centralize all these efforts, and to give a forum for the exchange of regimental news and views even where wide distances separate, I think it is essential that the famous old LISTENING POST should be continued as the joint organ of the "7th Battalion Association" and the "7th Canadian (1st British Columbia) Infantry Regt." I would like to see Major Geo. Gibson and Major D. Philpot on the management and editorial committee, and would count it an honour to be there myself. A practical scheme can be worked out whereby the journal could be made self-supporting and at the same time remain the property of the perpetuated 7th Battalion. The LISTENING POST should become the centre where the "7th Battalion Memorial Handbook" would take shape and grow—a handbook which we have long had in mind, and for which much material and many photos have been gathered.

For my own part, I prize more highly the group of friends I have made through service with the 7th Battalion than all others that life has given me. And I want to retain their friendship and "keep up communication" with them until we "go across" for the last time. We must all understand that there will be differences of opinion in years to come, for we cannot hope that all will see alike on political and other public questions. But whether we agree or differ, we can deal with each other in a spirit of loyal comradeship and fair play.

One little thing I warn all to remember—the change from uniform into mufti is going to transform appearances, and officers and men will not be so easily recognised as in the past. Mistakes will be made; but no one should feel hurt if they are. Membership in the 7th should be considered an "Open Sesame" at all times, and there should never be any hesitation on anyone's part in making his identity known.

If we bear these things in mind, and form associations along lines similar to those suggested the future influence of the old 7th in the homeland should be as great as has been its past fighting efficiency in France and Flanders.

VICTOR W. ODLUM.

The 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion Association.

It is the intention, shortly after our arrival in England, to hold a meeting for the purpose of forming a 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion Association, and drawing up the necessary rules, etc.

Will any ex-members of the Battalion who would like to attend that meeting please communicate with the Editor of this journal, and information as to the date and place of the meeting will be sent to them by mail.

All ex-members of the Battalion now in England or Canada who are desirous of joining the Association are requested to communicate with the LISTENING POST, when all information will be sent to them.

Full details of the Association will be published in future issues of the LISTENING POST.

Transport Sergeant: "Now, look here, don't try any hot air on Old Bill. He's been out since Mons."

Boxcar: "Oui, mam'selle, he's an old-timer all right. I remember at the second battle of Ypres—"

We were packing,—er—shaving soap and blanco to the boys in the front line—

And on my way back I came across a party of Germans with a mininwerfer pointing straight at me—

I had just time to put my rifle on the guy at the gun when—

BANG!

The Song of the O.R.

WHEN first we donned the khaki suit,
 And learned to curse the issue boot ;
 When we learnt the way to form our fours,
 And drilled despite our aches and sores,
 We worked like tanks—
 And got no thanks—
 We knew we belonged to the "other ranks."
 But our rage would melt,
 Because we felt
 We'd soon strut around in a Sam Browne belt.

Oh, the ambition of those early days !
 (We'd sell our souls for a word of praise.)
 We dreamed of chevrons, crowns and stars,
 Of batons crossed, of medals—bars.
 Resolved to climb,
 We'd bide our time,
 And wait for the stripe and the extra dime.
 We thought our chance
 Would come in France,
 But instead we saw our ignorance.

We found that stripes and the right to shout
 Don't save a man from a bawling-out ;
 He may be a Col. or an R.S.M.,
 But that don't cut any ice with them.
 We saw with an eye
 That although the guy
 Who comes on parade with a collar and tie
 May be a snob,
 And a bit of a "nob,"
 He certainly hasn't the cushiest job.

We wanted a rank where we could cuss,
 But wouldn't have somebody jump on us,
 And found, when we had searched the list,
 That such a position doesn't exist,
 The higher you get
 The more you fret
 That something is going to be upset—
 And so it's clear,
 Although it's queer,
 We're better off than the Brigadier.

So come, ye officers, give us "Shun !"
 Give us fatigues for a dirty gun—
 Ye N.C.O.'s go ahead and scoff ;
 We have the smile than won't come off !
 We are the chaps
 Who have the snaps ;
 We don't get hell for your mishaps.
 If things go wrong
 You feel the thong,
 While we lie back and sing this song :

And when we come to the end of this pike
 Our silver badges will be all alike,
 When they talk of the "Seventh" we'll be as proud
 To say, "You bet—I was with that crowd !"
 I had no stars,
 Never rode in cars,
 Was just an ordinary son of Mars—
 Twenty francs—
 Little thanks—
 In short, I was one of the "Other Ranks !"

CHANGING HIS TUNE.

The Real Thing at Last.

A True War Story!

Captain Bunkin's Strategy.

CAPTAIN BUNKIN sat in his dug-out reading a week-old paper and smoking hand-made, issue-tobacco cigarettes. The air was dark with falling shells, but the captain never turned a hair—for he had foiled the Hun at Ypres, beaten the Boche at Vimy and out-generalled the German at Amiens—wherefore when a louder detonation than usual shook the flimsy structure wherein he sat, a slight smile merely flickered across his tailor-made face and his perusal of theatrical notices intensified.

He was a brave man this Captain Bunkin. Not only was his the bulldog courage and unbending determination of the Bunkin breed, but time and time again he had shown a gelid composure in the face of the most fearful odds—as, for instance, when a French farm dame, armed with square-pushing sabots and a pitchfork, objected to his company playing football on her goat-pasture. He had even been known to beard his batman in his den and demand an accounting of his vanished whisky. Verily, he was a doughty individual, this Captain Bunkin!

After a time he threw the paper down and looked at his watch. "Hours—fourteen," he said to himself in a large, hoarse whisper. "What on earth to do until to-morrow night? Ah, I have it! We'll have a trench raid just to break the mopotony."

To say a thing was for Captain Bunkin to do it. Accordingly in a few moments he was to be found conferring with Brigade.

"Mister Brigadier?" enquired the captain.

"Yes, yes," answered a faint voice, wearily—"special leave is off, passes to Doullens napoo, and machine-gun courses kaput—anything else?"

"Mister Brigadier," said Captain Bunkin, slowly and impressively, saluting with the disengaged hand—for he was most punctilious about the observance of military etiquette—"I have decided to raid the enemy trenches, as my men have run out of the poker-chips supposed to be part of their trench-stores and are slowly dying of excessive repose."

"Ca ne fait rien to me," said the Brigadier. "Do what you like with your own men—they don't belong to me."

"Very good, Mister Brigadier," answered Captain Bunkin, saluting again. "I'm glad to think I have your sanction. Good-night, Mister Brigadier."

"Good-night, Captain Pumpkin—or Buncombe, I should say—good-night."

Captain Bunkin saluted once more and then switched off.

His next step was to send a runner to the artillery.

"Please supply bearer with one (1) box-barrage, as per advertisement, and oblige,

Yours faithfully,

Archibald Bunkin, Capt."

So ran his message.

The bombardier who received it went at once to the magazine and picked out the largest and finest box-barrage in stock, for he had often met Captain Bunkin at the wet canteen and was rather fond of him.

"Take this to the captain, with my compliments," he said to the runner, "and tell him if it doesn't suit we have the same in half-sizes and quarter-fittings."

When the runner reached Coy. H.Q.—so-called on account of its retiring disposition—he handed the box-barrage, carefully wrapped in brown paper, to Captain Bunkin, and was at once dismissed.

The captain then outlined his plans to his subordinates, and saw to it that each man was supplied with the milk-chocolate, spare handkerchief and writing-pad required on such occasions, and soon all was in readiness for the grand assault.

Promptly at hours—zero, the captain placed his box-barrage adjacent to the German wire and touched it off. A blinding flash lighted the ruined terrain for several hectametres in any given direction, and then as it died away, Captain Bunkin, brandishing his sword, gave the word to charge.

The troops did so to a nicety, with the exception of a Jew private, who overcharged and was taken prisoner.

But to their astonishment, the troops discovered that the guileful Teuton, having got wind of the affair, had lifted his front line up and moved it back several kilometres.

What was to be done? Captain Bunkin hastily conferred with his colleagues, and then sent for the engineers to place the rods in position to hold a curtain of fire about the doomed area. But—alas for Bunkin—the curtain was damp, and, although he tried to fire it with his own hand, nothing resulted.

Disaster seemed imminent. But it was in moments of the extremest stress that the Bunkin breed never failed to rise to the occasion. For a moment our hero stood motionless in deep thought. Then the significant words fell from his lips—"Every second man a pick!"

With a hearty British cheer the troops rushed to obey, and soon every man was armed with one of the most effective weapons of modern warfare.

When morning dawned its cold light fell wanly on a silent and deserted no-man's-land, and there, across from the Canadian lines, the brown scar of a newly-turned trench lay plain for all to see.

The German general in charge of that sector of the front stared incredulously through his glasses from the top of a nearby hill. "Donnerwetter!" he snarled, also "Strengstens Verboten!" and "Hoffnungstahl!"—for he was one of the old school of hard-swearing Huns—"Why is our front line unoccupied?"

The ensuing inquiry revealed that through the cowardice or carelessness of those in charge the German front line had been left all night at the mercy of the perfidious Briton. Disgrace and punishment swiftly followed, and as a result seven officers and two hundred and fifty other ranks faced the firing squads.

As Captain Bunkin remarked at the close of the dinner given in his honour—"Mister Brigadier, there are more ways of killing a cat than bombing it from an aeroplane!"

Sympathetic Old Thing: "And did you get all those wounds in the tracas?"

Windy: "Oh, no, mum. Two in the barrage and one near the objective."

Sympathetic Old Thing: "Dear, dear—what a complication!"

Whizz - Bangs.

Good Fritz, I do not fully understand
Why you so suddenly should fume and fret,
And pitch a whizz-bang at me every time
I raise my head above the parapet.

This is no time to stop and reason why—
Though I confess that I should like to know
Why good munitions should be used on me,
Who am no officer or N.C.O.

I do not see why you should rub it in :
I raised my head up only with the hope
To lamp you over with the naked eye,
Instead of trusting to my periscope.

Your whizz-bang doesn't loiter on the road :
It rushes in a most unchristian way,
And then I do not stop to calculate—
I simply lose ambition right away.

I somehow miss the joy it ought to bring
To be a target for a battery,
Selected by the Heinie High Command,
With orders strict to make a hole in me.

Do I appear to wily Ludendorff
A bar to his strategical withdrawals,
That my existence in this vale of tears
Should get the goat of squarehead generals?

If I retire with a punctured skin,
Will Kaiser Wilhelm thank himself und Gott ;
Or chuckle if an ounce or two of steel
Should touch my carcase in a tender spot?

I'm only doing gas-guard here above,
For others who are bomb-proof down below ;
Their sap is wide, and very, very deep—
You Heinies dug it, so you ought to know.

I'll soon be there, despatching pork and beans,
Beyond your reach, unfriendly Allemand ;
And you can either call your gunners off,
Or fling your whizz-bangs at some other man.

WHEN FULL MARCHING ORDER DOESN'T FEEL SO HEAVY.

HELLO, CANADA!
(It's the way they say it.)

With a 14 days' leave warrant and 30 or 40 of the best tucked away in the jans, it sounds pretty good coming from Angel Eyes—eeow!

But when your paybook shows nothing but a leave warrant four days overdue, you get that shell-shocked feeling when the Military Policeman salutes you with a request to see your pass.

C'Etait la Guerre.

BY AN EX-PRIVATE.

I TRIPPED heavily down the stairs—"D—n!"

But I wasn't going to let a little thing like trousers worry me to-night, for wasn't it the time I had been looking forward to for four long weary years. It was, in fact, the occasion of my life: my return to civilian clothes. To celebrate the event my wife had invited some of our old-time married friends to dinner, and I was looking forward to a good time. The only damper was that she would insist on my dress suit, but, as I have said, little things like that weren't going to worry me to-night. The main thought was "civvies," and I felt as happy as the proverbial lark.

My wife was waiting for me at the bottom, but instead of hearing the expected gasp of happiness, it was a gasp of surprise and exclamation.

"O-o-o-o! George, what have you been doing?"

I thought it must have been my slowness in dressing. It had been rather a hard battle.

"I wasn't more than three hours, was I, dearest?"

I got enthusiastic.

"Isn't it great to think that I am my own boss once more. Can do what I like, go where I like, stay out—I mean go out at night, have a few—"

"B—but George, you—your dickey's sticking out, and where is your vest, and you've got a belt on, and, and—oh! George, what have you been doing?"

I began to lose a little of my enthusiasm.

"Doing?" I said. "Doing? I've been dressing, of course. You don't think by any chance that I've been building a Zoo, or melting an iceberg?"

At that she began to show signs of tears, which was too much for me. I hadn't made a woman cry since leaving home, and I wasn't going to start immediately on my return.

"There, there, Molly," I said, "don't cry. I'm sorry. I'll go right upstairs and fix myself and be down again in a jiffy."

About an hour afterwards I was again at the bottom of the stairs. I had left the mirror not altogether comfortable in spirit or in body, but I thought it must have been the strangeness. From the sounds in the dining-room I judged that the guests had arrived and were waiting for me. I burst in with a joyous whoop.

"Hello, everybody! What's the latest?"

I expected a chorus of welcome immediately, but the smiles on their faces slowly faded to looks of surprise. (My sudden entrance must have alarmed them.) Or was it disgust? Then all of a sudden, after looking at one another, the smiles returned and the chorus started.

"Have a good time?"

"Did you enjoy yourself?" etc., etc.

I told them what a good time I had had in France for four years (I had never been wounded), and what hard luck it was that one had to take leave once a year. They must have thought I meant it, for they all sympathised.

Everybody, especially the men, made me a sort of high muck-a-muck, jumping around me and fiddling with my clothes, just as a young girl does with her pet doll. Jones made a specialty of my tie, and Williams of my suspenders, King of my buttons. Rather a strange way of showing their hero-worship, I thought, but still I remembered how they had all fussed over me when I left, and how they had envied me being young enough to enlist at forty-six.

We had a cocktail; then dinner was brought in.

The hors d'œuvres were excellent, and I enjoyed them so much that my knife didn't seem to be able to carry them to my mouth quick enough, so I resorted to my fingers, until I asked Molly what she was making faces at me for. The soup also was fine and I waded right in, for I was hungry. The servant, a new one since I went away, didn't seem to appreciate that fact though, for he insisted on bringing me a clean napkin every ten seconds. I didn't know what the idea was.

He constituted himself a nuisance, that servant. Kept hanging around and doing silly little unnecessary things.

I knew he looked on me as a sort of tin god, and all that; but still, he carried things too far. If he could find nothing else to do he would take one of my knives away and bring me another, or pick up the crumbs off the floor. Absolutely unnecessary, and very worrying. I put fifty-cents into his hands once with a go-away frown, but it seemed to make him work harder than ever, so at last I had to tell him to look after the guests also and not spend all his time on me. Everybody gave me a smile for my generosity.

They all, of course, wanted to hear of my adventures, so I did my best, enormously helped by the excellent wine my wife had got in. I am reserved as a rule until I've had a few drinks, and then I become loquacious.

They listened intently for a while, and then everybody, very strangely, got a coughing fit. While I was telling of my leave in Paris, Mrs. Jones got quite red, and I thought she was going to choke. It was the wine, I guessed, and the smoky atmosphere.

After a few minutes things got so bad that a few of them had to leave, apologising to Molly with something about the 'flu. I was sorry, of course, but I wasn't going to let the evening finish so soon. The wine was good and I knew my stories were, so I went on talking. I was just going to take another drink in the middle of my telling of the time we were out at rest in Bruay, when I realised a hand on my shoulder and Molly's voice saying, very far off, that everybody had left, and that I had better get to bed.

That was the last time I heard Molly's voice. We now communicate to each other through lawyers.

"Anything in the Limey's canteen, Shorty?"
"Nothin' but two packets o' Woodbines an' a hard-luck story."

Scene.—Two old-time “bucks” of the rear rank, seated round a fire in a “rather better than usual” Belgian billet.
Period.—Armistice days.

“You know, Bill, I’ve been thinking——”
“Kind of unusual, ain’t it?”
“Maybe—but serious, Bill, I’ve been thinking a whole lot.”

“Woman again?”
“Nix on that stuff, Bill. Listen—the fighting end of this war is over now, and——”
“How interesting! You know the other day I heard Napoleon had——”

“As I was saying, the fighting is over, and pretty soon we’ll be hiking along Granville Street, or some place else, looking for work—WORK, Bill.”

“Yea—heard you the first time.”
“Yea is right—and no good applying to the Q.M. for your rations neither. You know, Bill, rations may be bum at times, but they’ve been pretty regular. Four years—and I guess there ain’t more’n perhaps one day that we’ve missed our rations. Them A.S.C. blokes may not be fighters, but they haven’t done so bad, Bill.”
“Yep—I reckon there’s no denying that.”

(Pause)

“Remember those days we had round Bruay, Christmas before last? Gee, those were great days! Remember that saucy little piece of muslin in our billet that you got so stuck on? Let’s see—Germaine, wasn’t it? And we caught you one evening——”

“Here! Never you mind about that now.”
“Remember the day we dodged that inspection and beat it up to Maisnil-Ruitz——”
“And old George got tight and wanted to marry the widow. Do I remember—say, we sure had some fun that day.”

“That’s right, Bill—That and Cambligneul—Those trips to St. Pol—Even old Poperinghe. Say, Bill, we’ve had some good times!”

“We sure have!”
“Damn near as good as leaf.”
“Come off it—there ain’t nothing to touch that last leave of mine.”

“Where’d you go?”
“Oh—London mostly.”
“Say—London’s a great burg and no mistake. Leave don’t come very often, but it sure is the life when it does come—fourteen days living like a king and nothing to do but spend your wad—and London too—It’s sure a live burg and no mistake.”
“It sure is,” (chuckling). “It sure is alright, alright.”

(Pause)

“What were you doing before the war, Bill?”
“Oh—digging mostly.”
“Same here—8 to 12 and 1 to 5 reg’lar—three bucks per.”

“Correct!”
“Pretty tough graft it was, too—working on a new sewer system, I was. Digging into a foot of compressed macadam, mostly, with a blunt pick, and the foreman cursing his head off because I didn’t get down a foot every five minutes—Slid over to the States when the war broke out, the quitter—Wait till I see him again; I’ll stick a ‘Mills’ in his back pocket and watch him evaporate, the son of a rhinoceros—he certainly made me work.”
“Same with me. I guess them foremen are all alike.”
“Guess so. Did you ever sweat like that on a work-party, Bill?”

“In the ARMY? Say, do you think I’m crazy?”
(Laughing) “I was only kidding, Bill. I’ve watched you dodging round the end of a traverse, slinging out your thimbleful an hour every time the officer came round. Them easy times is over, worse luck!”

(Pause)

“Your old woman particular about boots, Bill?”
“BOOTS—she sure is!”
“Same here. Now I come to think of it (shamefacedly) well—I usually take off my boots on the back porch and come in sort of easy-like in my stocking feet.”
“Same here, by heck” (with a sigh).
“Yep—and no tobacco-ash or burnt matches on the floor, neither—and no smoking in the parlour, if I remember right.”
“Funny thing, but them regulations applied to me, too.”

(Pause)

“Did you ever lose your job, Bill?”
(Cautiously) “Ye—es, once.”
“Same here. Lord, she’s a demon when she gets started—why the old colonel’s worst feels like a pat on the back compared to her.”
“That ain’t no lie!”

(Pause)

“Well, what d’you think of this proposition of peace and home and work once more?”
(Rising) “I think this, Jack—Let’s start to-day—Welcome the old missus with a hug—To hell with the war and the army in general!”
“Good old Bill. I feel the same.”
“SHAKE!”

JIMMY.

Pte. Coldfeet: “Well, sir, if I ain’t movin’ fast enough to suit you, I ain’t scared to go back to my company.”

The Old Red Patch.

In the Book of War 'tis written;
And the words are crimson stain,
That he who wears the Old Red Patch
Must suffer toil and pain.
With lips stern-set, un murmuring,
Through battle-shock or flood—
Though the path of glory be but a trail
Marked out by his own life's blood.

Ere we doff the sombre khaki
And return to scenes of yore,
To our friends in the distant Homeland,
Forgetting the days of war;
Ere we enter the door of the old life,
As our fingers raise the latch,
Shall we pause for a moment and wonder
Of the days of the Old Red Patch?

Of the nights when we stood together,
Ere yet the new day was born,
Waiting with tense, blanched faces
For the first grey streaks of the dawn,
And the roll of Hell's own thunder
As the barrage tore its way,
And we lifted ourselves to follow
To death—or the end of the fray.

Of the nights when we talked together
In the weird, unnatural calm
Of a quiet trench at midnight
In the yard of some ruined farm;
And we spoke of the days behind us,
And our hopes for the years before,
When Flanders should but a memory be,
And trenches know us no more.

Of the days when we drilled together,
When of rest we were given a spell,
And we silently cursed the sergeant
Who wanted it done too well,
And prayed for the end of the morning
With its score of a day's work done,
And the afternoons in the sunshine,
With books and games and fun.

Of the days when we stood at attention
As the bugles filled in the pause
O'er the grave of a fallen comrade,
Who had given his life for the Cause,
And we laid him to rest in the sodden clay,
A blanket his only pall,
The simple code of a soldier's creed—
That a man shall sleep as he fall.

Yes, I think we'll remember the old days,
And a thought for the badge that we wore—
The Red of the Old Division,
The first of a glorious Corps;
When the grim reaper's finger beckons us
And our souls steal into the night,
We shall "fall in" again in the Shadowland,
And be glad that we fought for the right.

IDDY-UMPTY.

Chasing the Elusive Hun(d).

IN days of old, knights buckled on their armour and went to do battle for their King and Country. The same spirit prevails to-day.

In the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and eighteen, some of our young bloods buckled on their Webb equipment and proceeded to the great war.

After going through the hands of M.O.'s grading boards, etc., and receiving advice and instruction from those gentlemen—resident in England for the duration—who wear crossed-swords on their caps and speak a jargon composed mostly of such words as "sler-hope" and "hipe," and finally parading at various hours of the night for inspection of brushes—tooth and combs—hair, some arrived in sunny France determined to be in at the death.

However, such luck was not their's, for they arrived, not at the death, but at the stage of affairs when the enemy's condition might be said to be in a state of decomposition rather than dying.

The future looked tame—an endless period of guard-mounting and dismounting and of polishing buttons followed by a return to Canada with no souvenirs and an unblooded bayonet.

Our heroes met together and reasoned. What could they say to their innocent offspring in reply to that oft-repeated cry, "What did you do in the Great War, daddy?" Would the hot blush of shame mount to their cheeks as they murmured, "Not there, my child, not there!" No, a thousand times, no! They then and there swore a great oath not to rest until they had killed a Hun, be he only a burgomaster or an "ortskommandant."

And their chance came! Fortune indeed favours the brave! On the great march to the Rhine, their battalion arrived one night, wet and weary, at a small village not a hundred miles from Cologne. Opportunity knocks but once at a man's door, and during the evening's search for the cheapest and deadliest vin blink, a small dog—species, Dachshund—crossed their path. One moment of uncomprehending suspense, and then with eyes ablaze and nerves taut they unsheathed their bayonets and charged. With no time to "kamerad" the animal turned and fled. Over the top they went, regardless of danger and M.P.'s, and, after experiences too thrilling to report, their objective was reached.

Late that night they sat in their stable with the remains of the once beautiful quadruped at their feet. As they swilled their last snort, they agreed that the crowning moment of their lives had at last arrived, and that they had done their bit.

In the glorious days to come, when they are asked, "Have you ever killed a Hun?" their smile of modest acknowledgment will be like that of the blacksmith, who, "something attempted, something done, had earned a night's repose."

Bombing Sergeant (after detailing the duties of a bayonet-man in a raid): "Now, if there's any questions y.u fellows would like to ask—"
Private Coldfeet: "Er—what's the quickest way to transfer into a Labour Battalion?"

A Tale of a Summer's Morn.

THE Battalion had rested for several days round Agnezles-Duisans, and Private Prowler, the expert "taster" of No. 4 Company, had sampled the various vile concoctions of every estaminet within a radius of ten kilometres during that blissful time.

Normally, the worthy Prowler could carry his load like a real soldier, but on this occasion the addition of strong cognac to sour gooseberry wine that posed as champagne had proved too much of a strain, and by the time he had passed the gates of the casualty clearing station his legs were getting periously near that point where they would flatly refuse to proceed further. It was at this unenviable stage that the befuddled private discerned a little corrugated-iron shack at the side of the road. It looked like a place that one could manage to spend a summer's night in, and the door pushed open to his touch without trouble, so he stumbled in, only to trip over a pair of legs and measure his length on the floor.

Muttering a combined imprecation and apology, which, however, brought no response from the recumbent one, he took stock of his surroundings. Several men smothered up in blankets appeared to be sleeping soundly on stretchers, and to his joy Prowler noticed a stretcher and blanket not in use. A few minutes later, and well wrapped up in the blanket, he had crawled in between the sleeping figures and passed off into the log-like sleep of drunken stupor.

The next thing he noticed was a steady swinging motion of the stretcher, which made him imagine for a moment that he was at sea, but a sudden, blurred memory of the previous night made him shake his head clear of the blanket and sit bolt upright to enquire what the devil was the matter.

There was a yell of absolute terror and a terrific crash as the stretcher and Prowler hit the ground together, and four badly scared R.A.M.C. orderlies ran for dear life.

Vigorously rubbing the part of his anatomy that hurt most, and giving vent to the most violent language, Private Prowler jumped up to follow the fast disappearing orderlies with blood in his eye, when the sight of half-a-dozen newly-dug graves arrested his attention. A vague suspicion began to form itself in his clearing brain, and retracing his steps he went back to his resting place of the previous night. Turning the corner to the front door he stood for a moment speechless and wide-eyed, gazing at the little painted sign that hung on the door:—

HOSPITAL MORTUARY.

Hogan: "Bejabers, Clancy, I wouldn't like to be that high up widout one."

The Two Clerks.

Alms.

Signaller to Adjutant (particularly busy): Speak to Brigade, sir?

Adjutant: Who wants me—a clerk, eh? (grabs 'phone). Hallo! Hallo! Adjutant, 7th speaking—What? Can't hear you. Shake your 'phone, man! What? Speak up! SPEAK UP! Press your lever and speak close to the mouthpiece—didn't you ever use a 'phone before? WHAT? "General Clark speaking?" Oh—yes, sir—hear you perfectly, sir—yes, sir—no, sir—not at all, sir—certainly, sir—attend to it right away, sir—thank you, sir—yes, sir—good-bye, sir!

(Another signaller fired.)

Certain gentlemen in the Battalion have reached a high pitch of efficiency in soliciting alms. One of these hurry-touch individuals accosted an officer for "the odd franc."

He got it, hesitated a moment as though it were incumbent on him to say something complimentary, and finally blurted out, "Sir—you're very like Napoleon."

CPL WUSH FARMER

McSporran: "There's nae doot wha wears the breeks, Angus."

"Been cleaning the flies, Cookie?"
 "Naw, makin' duff with German war flour."

EMERGENCY RATIONS.

Perhaps nothing in this war—unless it be the all-conquering number nine—has been the subject of so much cheap humour, undeserved ridicule, sneers, bum verse and bad language, as 'bully-beef.' But the iron ration has at length come into its own.

Conchy: "Yes, madame, one chevron—married man."

OVERHEARD AT SEAFORD.

Instructor: "Whad'ye mean, 'Camouflage?'"
 Jock: "Some of you instructors going back as returned soldiers."

This is due, not to sudden change of heart on the part of the undemobilised, but to the fact that bully-beef sandwiches have proved to be the only practicable light refreshment available for our Belgian dances, and immensely popular with the "civils."

After going painstakingly through the bobbing waltz of these parts, Private Jack Canuck conducts his mademoiselle up to the refreshment counter and watches the disappearance of his ancient ally with incredulous amazement. He himself has grown so used to tolerating in sour silence or vociferous disapproval large lumps of canned ox, when nothing else was available, that he cannot quite appreciate the appeal of these dainty morsels to a pre-war appetite.

To see a Belgian farm girl, with fourteen hours' field-work behind her, toying with a trayful of Fray Bentos confections with true Gallic verve, reduces him to a shamed silence.

Old Bill: "Wonder what's eatin' the old bat?"

A 7th Battalion V.C.

SERGEANT RAYFIELD, V.C.

No. 2204279 Sgt. RAYFIELD, W. L., 7th Canadian Inf. Batt. (1st B.C.)

For most conspicuous bravery, devotion to duty and initiative during the operations east of Arras, from September 2nd to 4th, 1918. Ahead of his Company, he rushed a trench occupied by a large party of the enemy, personally bayoneting two, and taking 10 prisoners.

Later, he located and engaged with great skill, under constant rifle fire, an enemy sniper who was causing many casualties. He then rushed the section of trench from which the sniper had been operating, and so demoralised the enemy by his coolness and daring, that 30 others surrendered to him.

Again, regardless of his personal safety, he left cover, under heavy machine gun fire, and carried in a badly wounded comrade.

His indomitable courage, cool foresight and daring reconnaissance were invaluable to his Company Commander and an inspiration to all ranks.

The "Listening Post" Register.

DEMobilisation means the breaking of ties of friendship that have stood the test of many hard years. In the hurry, bustle, and anticipation of an early return to civil life few will think of exchanging addresses with old chums; and a considerable number will be uncertain of their future movements, and consequently unable to give a definite address at the present time.

To form a connecting-link between all old members of the 7th Battalion, and to be in a position to advise them of all steps taken to form an Association to keep alive old memories, and to report the progress of War Memorials, etc., the Editor of the LISTENING POST proposes to establish a register of addresses to be kept up-to-date as information is received from old 7th Battalion officers, N.C.O.'s and men.

To be of real service it is essential that the names of as many old members as possible should be on this register; and it is earnestly requested that every officer, N.C.O. and man who has at any time served in the 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion may send in his address as soon as possible after his return to civil life, and notify the paper of any later changes.

In connection with the 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion Association, the address of any old member will, on writing to the Editor of this journal, be supplied to any other former member who wishes to get in touch with him. The register will not be open to the general public, nor to private firms for business purposes.

Help to keep the old associations alive in the years to come, and help yourself to get in touch with those old chums who have dropped out of sight, by sending in your address (a postcard will do) to:—

TRUE REPRISALS.

Apart from the "snake-charmers" of the kilted battalions, we carried no frightfulness into Germany.

An opportunity for just reprisals has plainly been lost!

On that memorable march, when the frou-frou of Canadian ammunition-boots for the first time resounded through the streets of Cologne, why could we not have had an issue of bombing-aprons filled with, say, ham-sandwiches? The dress order for parade should have read: "Ham-sandwiches at the high port; faces at the alert position."

As a lesson in the resources of the Empire, a tribute to the Navy, and a silent reminder of the departed glories of the Fatherland, it would have been without an equal.

Er—this is one of his off days.

Some People w

THE STAFF OFFICER

Little strips of flaming red,
 Little crowns of gold,
 A few short lessons in "Passed to you,"
 Produce a warrior bold.

THE RUNNER

Little scraps of paper,
 Carried round all day
 Where the shells are thickest,
 Earn the Runner's pay.

THE GENERAL

Little words of stern reproach
 Sizzling as they fell,
 Made the blameworthy subaltern
 Feel like merry L.

THE DEFAULTER

All the little dirty jobs—
 Little drills with pack—
 Make him swear he'll murder do
 If ever he gets back.

THE BOSCHE

Little jobs of frightfulness;
 Drunks on looted wine:
 Now he's pushed for evermore
 Back beyond the Rhine.

THE KNUT

Little suit of stylish cut;
 Christie Stiff and waistcoat grey:
 Yellow boots and lemon gloves:
 You can see it any day.

THE ADJUTANT

Little silly memo's,
 Sent as midnight strikes,
 Bring down on his foolish head
 His comrades' worst dislikes.

THE IMMACULATE PRIVATE

Blanco, Brasso, elbow grease,
 Little tins of helmet paint—
 Make a vision fair to see
 (Which all B.C. privates ain't).

we have Met.

THE COLONEL

Little specks of harmless dust,
Little things forgot,
Shining steel allowed to rust,
Get's the Old Man hot.

THE MAJOR

Little piles of shovels,
Cubic yards of mud,
Get the Tommies longing
To spill around his blood.

THE QUARTERMASTER

Little piles of pants and socks,
Grub and S.R.D.,
Make him hail-fellow-well-met:
He's the boy for me.

THE WOMAN

Little frills and furbelows,
Little smiles she gave,
Signed me on for evermore
As her abject slave.

THE BABY

Little howls throughout the night,
Tiny squeals at dawn,
Make me utter vain regrets
That he was ever born.

THE NURSE

Little hands that cool my brow,
Little smiles that haunt me still,
Little words of hope and cheer—
"Would that I were always ill!"

THE SCOUT

Little crawls in mud and wire,
Stealthy raids upon the Hun:
He becomes a first-class liar
When he tells you what he's done.

THE INSTIGATOR OF THESE EXECRABLE RHYMES

Fair and fat and lazy too;
Never known to run a race.
Always damns what others do.
Can you picture here his face?

Necessary Knowledge.

THERE was at one time a small pamphlet issued by a benevolent and fatherly G.H.Q., entitled, "Questions a Platoon Commander ought to ask himself." It contained a series of questions, about forty in all, something after this style:—

(1) Do I know what to do if the Hun captures all the men in my platoon in a raid?

(2) How am I to prevent trench feet in my platoon?

(3) If the neighbouring platoon has more gum-boots than mine, do I know how to obtain them without being discovered? etc., etc.

Now, however, the nasty days of trench warfare are over, till the next war begins, and one's thoughts go back to the joys of civil life and all that it means. But are we fitted for it? Can we, think you, dare to return to the state of bliss without preparation? I think not. Now is the time for our fatherly G.H.Q. to set to work and compile a new pamphlet. Its title, I might suggest, would appropriately be, "Questions a Newly Demobilised Soldier should ask himself." And more than that, I venture to suggest the framework for this most essential publication, putting in a few of the most important points as follows:—

(1) If someone asks me my name, shall I remember not to give my number and rank first?

(2) If I am walking in the street and I meet, (a) a Brigadier, (b) a lady, shall I remember not to either,

(a) salute, or (b) if I am carrying the baby, give a smart "eyes-right?"

(3) If the batteries at Work Point suddenly open up with target practice, remember that I don't have to make a dash for the nearest cellar?

(4) Am I sufficiently confident of myself not to be moved if I see a M.P. when I am on the streets after 10 p.m., even though I haven't got a pass? Do I also remember that the wife may be sitting behind the door with a poker, waiting patiently to greet me on my return?

(5) Shall I remember, if the girl at the exchange is a little slow in putting me through to my number, not to yell out, "What the — is the matter with you, signals?" And when I do get through and can't hear very well, not to tell the (a) fellow, (b) girl, at the other end to "Shake your 'phone."

(6) Being accustomed to jumping motor lorries, do I remember that if I bum a lift on a civilian car the owner might not like it, and become a little peevish?

(7) Do I realise that if I am in charge of a gang, and the boss suddenly appears, I don't have to bring the bunch to attention?

(8) Shall I remember that when the 1st B.C. come down the main drag with the band playing and the colours unfurled, that I take off my hat; that I used to belong to the old Regiment, and helped to put some of those honours there?

Teacher: "Is there any question you would like to ask?"
Toughguy (pointing to the stripe): "Yeh—what did you get that start in life for?"

Teacher: "Oh, for teaching you how the ass gets in class—compre?"

Private (trying for an advance): "But I've lost all my shaving gear and can't shave, sir."
 Pay Bob: "Insufficient reason. There were six outfits lost last week. Take a look round the incinerator—you might find one there."

Telephone Troubles.

When you want a Brigade in a Hurry.

Hello! Put the Staff Captain on.
 He's out.
 Well, the Brigade Major.
 He's at the football match.
 Try one of the staff learners, then.
 Not in.
 Well—let's see—get the Gas Officer on the 'phone.
 Not up yet.
 Well, for heaven's sake get somebody. How about one of the clerks?
 All having lunch.
 Who the h— is there, anyway?
 Two batmen, a runner and the carpenter.
 (Despairingly) Put them on.

ABOUT OUR NEW UNIFORM—

Private Jiggs is convinced that there is nothing in the Q.M. stores to compare with any of the above styles.

What we have to put up with, or, Kicks from Kompanies.

It was cold; I was tired, so it was no wonder it was with a sigh of relief that I snuggled down between the sheets one night about 10.30, after dealing with the evening "run" from H.Q., and giving the orderly sergeant his instructions for the morning.

Everything was up to date—all those damnable returns sent in. Yes, I figured I could sleep with an easy conscience, coupled with the pleasant prospect of a late breakfast of bacon and eggs on the morrow—

"Officer from No. 1 wanted on the 'phone, sir!"

Hell! I might have guessed it! Giving vent to a flow of language unknown in pre-war days, I struggled out of bed, and, after bruising my toe against the wash-stand, and knocking a chair over with my shin, I finally managed to find a match and light the candle. Then, donning a coat and pair of boots, and shivering like a leaf, I made my way across the snow to the signal-station.

"Hallo—hallo! Yes—O.C. No. 1 speaking."

Faintly, but clearly, I heard the reply from H.Q.— "Assistant Adjutant speaking—Hope you weren't busy; that I didn't interrupt a party, or anything like that; but I just wanted to let you know that, for the present—Can you hear me?" "Yes—go on!" "Well, for the present Scotch will still be eight francs a bottle, and not ten, as we thought it would have to be—Thanks, Blackie—Sorry to have troubled you—Bye-bye!"

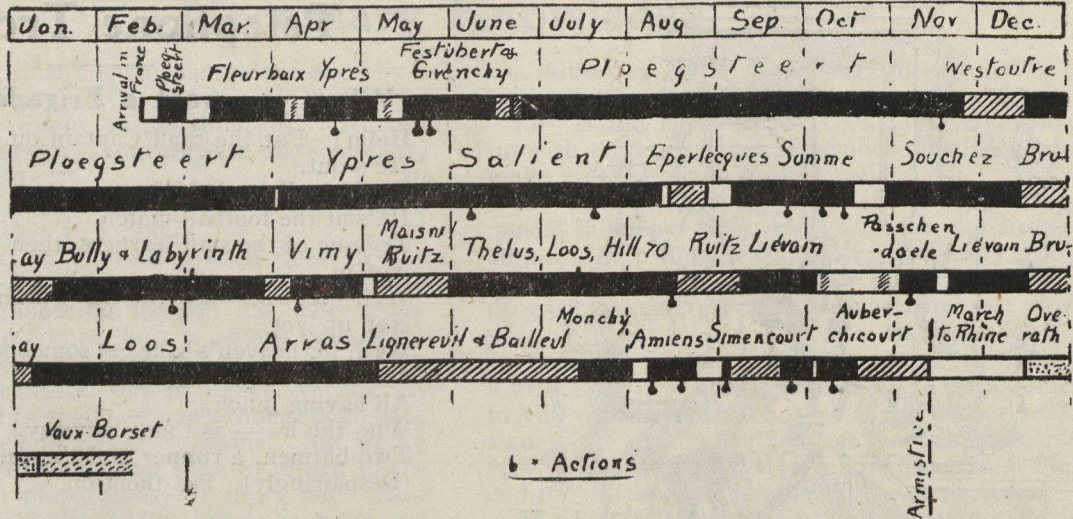

The signaller brought me to my senses. "You're wasting your breath, sir," he said. "He's gone long ago."

Small Boy: "Did you see much fighting in the Great War, Daddy?"
 Daddy (late Clerk): "Well, perhaps not so much as some, but still I had my whack."

NOTICE TO MEMBERS OF THE O.M.F.C.

THE BEST WAY to keep in full and accurate touch with the O.M.F.C. while you are in Great Britain, and with Canadians and Canadian interests in Great Britain after your return to Canada, is to subscribe to

"CANADA," the weekly illustrated paper.

ALL MEMBERS OF THE O.M.F.C. may, before their return to Canada, subscribe for "Canada" at the BRITISH SUBSCRIPTION RATE. Then, if, before they depart from England, they will advise us of their Canadian addresses, "Canada" will be sent to them regularly without any extra charge for postage.

FOR FULL PARTICULARS OF SUBSCRIPTION RATES SEE ANY ISSUE OF "CANADA," OR WRITE TO THE PUBLISHER, "CANADA," CRAVEN HOUSE, 113, KINGSWAY, LONDON, W.C.2.
