MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

C250841

re Manpower and Selective Service

The manpower question will undoubtedly be one of the main, if not the main, subjects of controversy in the forthcoming session. It is very probable that your speeches of March 24th and August 19th will be taken, point by point, by Opposition speakers.

In order to secure the information necessary for replying to criticism, I have drafted a letter to Mr. Mitchell for your signature, asking him to have his officers prepare reports on all the important aspects of the policy as contained in your two statements.

The most widespread dissatisfaction will almost certainly arise over the question of farm labour. In certain parts of the country, particularly Saskatchewan and Western Ontario, the problem is really acute, and has been aggravated because the War Services Boards have ignored the spirit if not the letter of your announcement of government policy permitting indefinite postponements of military service to those normally employed in agriculture.

It might be well to try to anticipate this discontent (which many Liberal M.P's for rural districts will share) by announcing any additional measures to meet the farm labour shortage as soon as possible.

Some little time ago, in a radio forum, Mr. MacNamara stated categorically that the necessary farm labour would be found. It is obvious that if the increased farm production goals announced by the Department of Agriculture are to be met, more will have to be done than is being done now to provide the necessary labour. You might wish to have a supplementary letter to Mr. Mitchell drafted, urging him to have measures formulated to meet the farm labour problem, so that they might receive early consideration by the War Committee.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

Re: Cabinet Manpower Committee Report (Confl)

Attached is a letter from the Minister of National War Services, and a copy of the first part of a Report of the Cabinet Manpower Committee.

Mr. Thorson tells me that the second part of the Committee's Report will be completed later this week. I told him that there would be no opportunity for the Report to be dealt with until next week's meeting of the War Committee and suggested that, meantime, he might wish to have copies of the Report made, so that they might be circulated to members of the War Committee. This, Mr. Thorson is going to do.

Mr. Thorson's letter has been acknowledged.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

Re; Manpower - Report of Cabinet Committee

Mr. Thorson expects to have the second part of the Cabinet Committee Report ready for circulation to members of the War Committee by Saturday morning next.

The first part was presented to the War Committee at last Wednesday's meeting, before you came in. It was agreed that as soon as possible after part 2 had been submitted, a special meeting or meetings of the War Committee be held, to consider the question.

Mr. Ralston, Mr. Power and the other Ministers directly concerned, are most anxious that there should be no more delay than necessary in considering the Report and settling the government policy. A meeting Sunday afternoon was suggested. If this is not suitable, possibly some hour on Monday or Tuesday could be fixed. The regular meeting of the War Committee will be called for Wednesday next.

Memorandum for the Prime Minister:

Re: Manpower survey

I am sending you, herewith, and circulating to other members of the War Committee, the following documents:

(a) Report of the Labour Supply Investigation Committee (Cabinet War Committee copy No.1);

(b) An analysis of the Report which I had prepared by Mr. Ferns to give, in comparatively small compass, the essential points in the Report;

(c) An abstract of the principal statistics contained in the Report, prepared by Mr. Skelton of the Bank of Canada.

I think I should draw your attention to the fact that estimated Army requirements to December 31st, 1942 are based on an Army of eight divisions. (Analysis: Paragraph (6) - Report: Page 40) The eight division Army is apparently mentioned in a Department of National Defence memorandum of July the 24th, 1941. MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

I am attaching copy of a note prepared by the Dominions Office and circulated to other United Kingdom Government Departments following up some informal talks I had with United Kingdom officials about the difficulties created for the Canadian Government by uncoordinated requests for manpower from Canada. I am sending copies of this note, for their information, to the Minister of National Defence, the Chief of the General Staff, and the Chairman of the Committee which is charged with completing a survey of the Canadian manpower situation.

SECRET.

MAN POWER IN RELATION TO DOMINION WAR EFFORT.

In the course of the first two years of war the effort of Dominions has developed to a point where the draft, actual or in sight, on available man-power has begun to reach the maximum. It has thus become a matter of urgency that further calls on Dominions should be very carefully co-ordinated here in order to ensure the best use of the man-power of the Empire as a whole. This applies particularly to Canada.

2. In general it may be said that Canadian policy has largely crystallised and that the major United Kingdom requirements have been made known to the Canadian Government. Personnel sent overseas by Canada in the course of the war fall into three separate categories, viz:-

(a) Military and other formations, for which the Canadian Government have assumed full responsibility and which, in the case of army units, they are providing as part of their Active Service Force. (Under this head falls the Canadian Corps which is being completed by Canada herself on a three divisional basis with a large number of appropriate ancillary units. The personnel of the Royal Canadian Navy and of three Royal Canadian Air Force Squadrons operating in and from this country are other examples).

(b) Canadian air crew personnel coming forward in the numbers and on the financial terms agreed upon between the Canadian and United Kingdom Governments under the Empire Air Training Scheme Agreement. These Royal Canadian Air Force graduates of the Air Training Scheme are partly serving in Royal Air Force Squadrons and partly in the Royal Canadian Air Force squadrons now being formed to the number of twenty-five from the Canadian output of the Empire Air Training Scheme. Under the Agreement the pay and pensions of all this personnel at Royal Air Force rates, their maintenance and transportation to this country, are a charge on the United Kingdom Government from the date of their leaving Canada; and their aircraft and unit equipment are provided by the United Kingdom Government.

/(c) Other

(c) Other units, and personnel not formed into units, which Canada is providing at the special request of the United Kingdom and for which we are making ourselves financially responsible in whole or in part. (A separate note is attached giving details of the requests for Canadian personnel made from time to time by various Departments, service and otherwise, in order to assist us and to relieve the strain on man-power in this country. The list, which should not be regarded as necessarily exhaustive, indicates the response which the Canadian Government have made to our requests).

3. There is evidence that the Canadian Government would welcome a clear indication from us of the relative degree of urgency which we attach to our various requirements. They have recently put in hand themselves an examination, in the light of data already available, of the man-power resources of Canada. This is expected to be completed in some two months' time. Meanwhile they have declined to commit themselves as regards several of our requests, which have been made piecemeal and through various channels at the instance of several different United Kingdom departments.

4. It is understood that the Ministry of Labour in this country is similarly engaged on a comprehensive review of man-power resources in relation to the needs both of the fighting services, of the civil defence services and of industry, and that this may involve the reconsideration of military programmes of expansion and re-adjustments in the allocation of human material to the various branches of our war effort.

5. The number and variety of our recent demands on Canada, and the Canadian responses thereto, have in any case suggested that some method should be devised without delay to present to the Dominion Government a co-ordinated picture of our requirements. The coincidence between the Canadian and United Kingdom reviews of their respective man-power positions seems to underline this need. It is therefore suggested that a complete review should now be undertaken of the present and foresee-able requirements from Canada, whether they fall into the Military or civilian category or relate to specialised or non-specialised forms of employment. This would clearly necessitate bringing into account the development, so far as is known, of the more specifically military effort of Canada in case it became apparent that the total potential effort of the Empire required, for its most economical distribution, a greater or less emphasis on the supply of military as compared with non-military personnel.

6. In considering this question it is necessary to bear in mind certain factors which affect the problem from the Canadian point of view For instance, while there is obligatory service in the armed forces of Canada, there is no compulsion for service overseas which is, and is likely to remain, on a voluntary basis. The future intake for the information or maintenance of units for overseas service is thus to some extent an unknown factor in the problem. Moreover, while civilian labour from Canada might for certain purposes suit us and them as well as military units, there are difficulties to be overcome in providing for suitable control of civilian labour serving outside its country of origin and terms must take into account Canadian wages and other conditions in relation to wages and conditions here and also the hazards of the journey. Recruitment on a voluntary basis is un-favourably affected by such questions of status, pay, living conditions and compensation in the case of death or disablement. Unemployment insurance and the transfer of labour are new questions to Canada. Further the recruitment of women in Canada, except for industrial purposes, is in its infancy and as yet there is little provision in the fighting services for the release by this means of able-bodied men for more active roles.

/7. It

7. It is on the other hand clear that the Canadian Government are disposed favourably to consider the employment of civilians overseas. For some time in fact certain work for the Canadian Corps in this country in the assembly of motor transport brought from North America has been carried out by Canadian civilian labour here. Information is being obtained as to the conditions on which these men are employed. Similar information regarding existing employment in the United Kingdom of United States civilian labour under contract would be valuable.

8. To sum up, the need is for the co-ordination of our demands to ensure:-

(a) that departments here are not acting independently,

(b) that the Canadian Government is informed of the full extent (so far as can be foreseen) of our needs, their reasons and their relative urgency;

(c) generally, that the problem is viewed as a whole with due regard to the programmes and difficulties of both countries, and the requirements and problems of all departments, in order that the Canadian military and industrial effort may be given every chance to dovetail into our own (and naturally of course with that of the rest of the Empire).

9. It seems possible that in certain, probably very limited, spheres, some relief to the man-power problem in this country may be obtained by the employment of military personnel as units on work which is primarily of a civilian character. So far as is known no suggestion of this sort has so far been made to the Canadian Government or Canadian military authorities. It is understood, however, that it has been found possible for our own field engineering units to be allotted to specific reconstruction tasks or to clearance work required as a result of air-raid damage. In specially suitable cases the Canadian Military authorities might entertain suggestions of this sort in order more fully to occupy those of their troops in this country who have already received complete training, but it is understood that there can be no general application of this suggestion in view of the need for keeping military formations as far as possible on a fully self-contained basis.

10. It should be added that similar problems have developed or are developing in other Dominions and that very recently the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia have informed us that a detailed investigation is being made into the Australian man-power situation with particular reference to probable voluntary enlistments for the Australian Imperial Force during the next two years. The Commonwealth Government have already reached the conclusion that certain proposals submitted to them by the United Kingdom for the expansion of their military forces are beyond their capacity. It would therefore appear that the measures suggested above for co-ordinating demands on Canadian man-power should be extended later to other Dominions.

(i) Twenty Canadian Forestry Companies have been furnished at the request of the Ministry of Supply for work in this country. Though they are not engaged on military duties it has been found desirable that these men should be organised in military formations and subject to military discipline. The Canadian Government have recently been invited to provide as a matter of urgency a further twenty such companies, but they have felt unable to help in this direction, at any rate pending the completion of a man power survey now in hand in Canada.

(ii) We have also recently asked on behalf of the Ministry of Supply for 850 Civilian Sawyers to provide the nucleus to eke out unskilled labour for timber production in this country in areas where the use of military units is not thought feasible. The Canadian reply has been similar to that under (i).

(iii) A request has been made for Military Transportation Units, amounting in all to some 3,500 men. This request again the Canadian Government have felt unable to meet, at any rate for the present.

(iv) A Canadian Tunnelling Company stationed in Gibraltar may be said to come under category (b), since it is understood that it has been found necessary to replace the company in the Canadian Corps by the despatch of another such unit.

(v) The Canadian Government have recently been asked for Aerodrome Construction Companies to the number, if possible, of 10,000 men. It is understood that this request also has had to be refused, though we have been invited to consider the alternative of the employment of Canadian constructors with Canadian civilian labour.

OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT

PRIVY COUNCIL
CANADA

AT THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE AT OTTAWA

WEDNESDAY, the 4th day of MARCH, 1942.

PRESENT:

HIS EXCELLENCY

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL IN COUNCIL:

WHEREAS the Minister of Labour reports,-

That having regard to the needs of the armed forces and essential industries there may be a maldistribution of professional engineers, chemists, research scientists, physicists, architects and other technically trained persons in undertakings engaged on essential work;

That the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel, which is responsible to the Minister of Labour, was established by Order in Council to organize the placement of technical personnel in the war industries and to co-operate with the Civil Service Commission in arranging for the placement of technical personnel in the Government service; that the Bureau has considerable information concerning such persons, including their qualifications, occupations, the names of their employers and other particulars and that it is desirable that such information be extended and kept up to date;

That there are such persons employed in undertakings not engaged or only partially engaged on essential work and in some undertakings the number employed appears to be in excess of the number required, having regard to their qualifications, the work on which they are engaged and to the national interest at this time;

That after the war, undertakings now engaged on essential work are likely to suffer such a diminution in operations that the number of such persons required in these undertakings will be much smaller;

That/

The Honourable
the Minister of Munitions and Supply.

That there is reason to believe that where such persons are not employed on essential work they would willingly undertake to perform the more arduous duties on essential work if they were so requested by the Minister of Labour and if they were assured that they would be reinstated in their former employment; and

That it is desirable that there should be similarity of treatment in the matter of reinstatement in employment of those who volunteer for service in His Majesty's forces and those who consent to perform services in an undertaking engaged on essential work.

AND WHEREAS the War Measures (Civil Employment Reinstatement) Regulations, 1941 (P.C. 4758), require an employer by whom any person accepted for service in His Majesty's forces was employed when accepted for such service to reinstate him in employment at the termination of that service under conditions not less favourable to him than would have been applicable to him had he not enlisted.

NOW, THEREFORE, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Labour, and under the authority of the War Measures Act, Chapter 206, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, is pleased to make the following regulations and they are hereby made and established accordingly:

REGULATIONS

1. These Regulations may be cited as the Essential Work (Scientific and Technical Personnel) Regulations, 1942.

2. In these Regulations,

(a) "Director" means the Director of the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel;

(b) "employer" includes the Crown in the right of the Dominion and in the right of any province;

(c) "essential work" means work appearing to the Minister of Labour to be essential for the defence of Canada or the efficient prosecution of the war or essential to the life of the community;

(d) "Minister" means the Minister of Labour;

(e) "undertaking" includes any branch or department of an undertaking.

3. These Regulations apply to the classes of persons described in the Schedule hereto.

4. Any request made by the Minister, any direction given by him or any notice required to be received or sent by him under these Regulations may be made, given, received or sent, as the case may be, on his behalf by the Director.

5. (a) Any person to whom these Regulations apply may be requested by the Minister to perform, in an undertaking engaged on essential work, such services as that person is, in the opinion of the Minister, capable of performing, being services in the performance of which he should, by reason of his qualifications, in the Minister's opinion, be able to contribute most effectively to the carrying on of essential work.

(b) Notwithstanding any provision in the contract of employment between an employer and any person who is requested by the Minister to perform such services as aforesaid and who consents so to do, it shall be the duty of the employer to release the employee from his contract of employment within thirty days after written notice of the proposed change has been received from the Minister by the employer: provided that during the said period of thirty days the Minister shall consider any written objections made to the proposed change by the employer. The Minister's decision in the matter shall be final.

(c) Notice of the proposed change shall be sent by the Minister to the employer or his agent by post and it shall be deemed to have been received at the time when a letter containing the notice would be delivered in the ordinary course of post and in proving such sending it shall be sufficient to prove that it was properly addressed to the employer's place of business and mailed.

6. It shall be the duty of any employer, who employed a person to whom these Regulations apply immediately before that person at the request of the Minister entered into a contract with another employer to perform services in an undertaking engaged on essential work, to reinstate him at the termination of his contract for such services in a position and under conditions not less favourable than would have been applicable to him had he not consented to perform such services. The provisions of this section shall not apply to the Civil Service of Canada or to the Civil Service of any province of Canada.

7. (a) Where the contract of employment of any person to whom these Regulations apply is to be terminated, or is terminated, it shall be the duty of that person and of his employer each to notify the Director of the proposed or actual termination of the contract.

(b) The notices required by this section shall be given immediately after the party giving notice of his intention to terminate the contract of employment has notified the other of his intention.

8. (a) Any employer who desires to engage a person to whom these Regulations apply must notify the Director of the post to be filled.

(b) Any person to whom these Regulations apply who desires to enter into a contract of employment must notify the Director that his services are available.

9. The notices required by sections 7 and 8 shall give the names of the parties and particulars of the business of the employer, the work on which the employee was, or is, to be engaged, his salary, qualifications, and any other particulars considered by the parties likely to facilitate the proper carrying out of these Regulations. The Minister shall have power to require such further particulars as he may consider necessary for the proper carrying out of these Regulations.

10. After the date on which these Regulations become effective, no contract of employment or arrangement for the services of a person to whom these Regulations apply shall be made until it has been approved by the Minister. Any agreement or arrangement for such services which is made without such approval shall be null and void and where such an agreement or arrangement purports to be for services in an undertaking engaged on essential work, the provisions of section 6 of these Regulations shall not apply.

11. Where a person to whom these Regulations apply enters into a contract to perform services in an undertaking engaged on essential work and the contract is approved by the Minister, such person shall be deemed to have undertaken to perform such services at the request of the Minister and the provisions of section 6 shall apply to such person.

12. In any proceedings for the violation of section 6 of these Regulations, it shall be a defence for the employer who employed a person to whom these Regulations apply before that person agreed, at the request of the Minister, to perform services in an undertaking engaged on essential work, to prove,—

(1) that the person formerly employed by him did not, within two weeks after the termination of his contract for employment on essential work, apply to him for reinstatement; or

(2) that, subject to the provisions of subsection (a), he failed without reasonable excuse to present himself for employment at the time and place notified to him by the employer; or

(3) that, by reason of a change of circumstances, other than the engagement of some other person to replace him, it was not reasonably practicable to reinstate him or that his reinstatement, in a position and under conditions not less favourable to him than those which would have been applicable to him had he not undertaken essential work, was impracticable and that the employer had offered to reinstate him in the most favourable position and under the most favourable conditions reasonably practicable; or

(4) that he was physically or mentally incapable of performing work available in the employer's service; or

(5) that he was employed to take the place of an employee who had been previously accepted for service in His Majesty's forces or of an employee, being a person to whom these Regulations apply, who, after the date on which they became effective, undertook, at the request of the Minister, to perform services in an undertaking engaged on essential work,

13. Where an employer has reinstated a former employee in accordance with section 6 of these Regulations, he shall not, without reasonable cause, terminate the employment of that employee and, in any proceedings for violation of this section in any case where the employment was terminated within six months of the reinstatement, the onus shall be on the employer to prove that he had reasonable cause for terminating the employment.

14. An employer shall not terminate the employment of any employee to whom these Regulations apply in the expectancy that the employee, at the request of the Minister, will agree to perform services under another employer. In any proceedings for violation of this section, if the court is of the opinion that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the employment was terminated in violation of this section, the employment shall be deemed to have been so terminated unless the employer proves that the termination was for a reason unconnected with such expectancy.

15. Nothing in these Regulations shall confer on any employer authority to make any contract or arrangement with reference to the period of employment, in any undertaking engaged on essential work, of any of his employees to whom these Regulations apply, and who, at the request of the Minister, consent to perform services in such an undertaking, which he is not authorized to make under any power already possessed by him; but where any employer has entered into an agreement with his employees, being persons to whom these Regulations apply, to restore to their positions employees who undertake to perform services in undertakings engaged on essential work, such agreement shall continue in force to the extent that it is not less advantageous to an employee than the provisions of these Regulations, subject to such interpretation as may be mutually agreed to by the contracting parties.

16. The Minister may make all such orders as he may deem necessary or desirable to carry out the purpose of these Regulations and such orders shall have the force of law.

17. Any person to whom these Regulations apply who fails to comply with the provisions of section 7 or 8 of these Regulations, or of any order made under the authority of these Regulations, shall be guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars.

18. Any employer or official who contravenes or fails to comply with the provisions of section 5, 6, 7, 8, 13 or 14 of these Regulations, or of any order made under the authority of these Regulations, shall be guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, and, where the offence is under section 6, 13 or 14, the court shall, in addition, order him to pay to the person whom he has failed to reinstate, or whose employment he has terminated, a sum not exceeding an amount equal to three months' remuneration at the rate at which he was being remunerated by that employer when he undertook, at the request of the Minister, to perform services in an undertaking engaged on essential work.

Schedule

1. A person who is normally engaged in the engineering profession in a consulting, technical or supervisory capacity in design, construction, manufacture, operation or maintenance and who has had a regular professional training in practice and in theory as an engineer in any of the following branches of engineering: civil, mechanical, electrical, chemical, metallurgical and mining.

2. A production, industrial or other engineer or chemist who normally holds in any engineering works or manufacturing establishment a position of authority involving responsibility for any phase of executive management or control of any technical function.

3. A person who has obtained a degree at any Canadian or other recognized university and who is normally engaged as a teacher of engineering science or of any branch of science at a university or technical college.

4. A person who has been trained, or who is or has been normally engaged, in the practice of any branch of the science of chemistry but not including a registered pharmacist.

5. A research scientist, that is, a person who, by training or practice, is skilled in the independent search for new knowledge of the properties of matter or energy.

6. A person, other than a teacher, who has obtained a degree at any Canadian or other recognized university in Engineering, Chemistry, Physics, Geology, Mathematics, Architecture or in any natural science, or who is a technically qualified member of the Engineering Institue of Canada, the Canadian Institue of Chemistry, the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada or of any provincial association of professional Engineers, Chemists or Architects.

7. A person, not in the classes described above, who, in the opinion of the Minister, possesses technical qualifications and skill which are needed in undertakings engaged on essential work.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER: WW II - Manpower

RE: Statement on National Selective Service

The attached draft statement is based upon the final report of the Manpower Committee as approved in principle by the War Committee. The draft was submitted to Mr. Thorson and Mr. Skelton and revised in the light of their comments.

Its effectiveness could be greatly enhanced if it were possible to make final (and more detailed) statements on the following points:

1. The name of the Director of National Selective Service. In this connection, should consideration not be given to the appointment of a French Canadian Associate Director on the same day as the Director. The appointment of French Canadians as an afterthought is one of the most frequently expressed griefs and is invariably exploited by the Nationalists.

2. Actual concrete measures to increase the availability of female labour. (This would require definite formulation of policy in this regard.)

3. Actual concrete measures to increase numbers and efficiency of male working forces.

4. A more specific outline of the rehabilitation programme to be undertaken by Pensions and Health. (According to Mr. Thorson no final decision in principle has been reached on this matter).

5. The method of administering the bonus to farm labourers. (It is understood that the bonus has not yet been agreed to in principle).

6. A list of the non-essential occupations which able-bodied men of military age are to be prohibited from entering. This would involve a decision on the scope and perhaps the drafting of the actual regulations.

7. The question of a central appeal board to maintain some measure of uniformity in decisions of National War Service Boards.

These points can only be clarified by decisions of Council or the War Committee.

The attached draft statement probably goes to the extreme limit warranted by existing decisions.

AT THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE AT OTTAWA

PRESENT:

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL IN COUNCIL:

WHEREAS the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Pensions & National Health and the Minister of National War Services report that it has been represented that many men, who have been and in the future will be called out for training under the National War Services Regulations 1940 (Recruits) passed under the National Resources Mobilization Act 1940, have been and will be rejected for service on account of physical disabilities of various kinds;

That it is stated by examining medical officers that among such physical disabilities are many which can be corrected by hospitalization, and by medical, surgical, dental, dietary, nutritional, and other remedial treatment, to a point where such men may be placed in a military service category;

That it is considered to be in the public interest to provide such remedial treatment; and

That it is considered that the hospital, medical, surgical and other facilities of the Department of Pensions and National Health can be used to advantage in connection with the reconditioning treatment of such men in the manner aforesaid.

THEREFORE, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Pensions & National Health and the Minister of National War Services and under the authority of the National Resources Mobilization Act, 1940, Chapter 13 of the Statutes of 1940, and the War Measures Act, Chapter 206 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, and notwithstanding the provisions of any other Statutes, Regulations, or Orders, is pleased to make the following regulations and they are hereby made and established accordingly:

REGULATIONS

1. A man who has been called out under the National War Services Regulations 1940 (Recruits), and who has not been notified to report to a military training centre due to physical conditions which do not require active remedial treatment in hospital but only the provision of glasses, dental treatment or nutritional improvement, may, notwithstanding anything contained in the said Regulations or in Reserve Army (Special) Regulations 1941, be ordered, and shall be liable, to report to a Training Centre as referred to in said last mentioned Regulations.

2. A man who has been called out under the National War Services Regulations 1940 (Recruits), and who has not been notified to report to a military training centre due to his physical condition which requires active remedial treatment in hospital, and which condition is deemed by competent medical authority sufficiently mendable to permit, within a reasonable length of time, of his being placed in a medical category in which he would be acceptable for military service, may be notified to report to the Department of Pensions and National Health.

3. Upon so reporting, such man may be afforded the opportunity of accepting and undergoing treatment of any kind prescribed by the Department of Pensions and National Health for the purpose of improving his physical condition.

4. On completion of treatment under the Department of Pensions and National Health, the man shall be immediately available to and shall report to, the Divisional Registrar of the Administrative Division of the Department of National War Services in the Division in which the said man resides.

5. While undergoing the treatment herein provided for, a man, if he has no dependents, may be paid an allowance of $9.00 per week, and if he has a dependent or dependents, an allowance of $13.00 per week. For the purposes of this regulation, "dependent" shall have the same meaning as is given to it under the "Financial Regulations and Instructions for the Canadian Active Service Force (Canada)".

6. (a) A pension may be awarded in respect of disability or death arising out of or directly connected with the treatment herein provided as if the man had been a member of the forces;

(b) The rate of pension shall be the rate set forth in Schedules A and B of the Pension Act as payable to or in respect of a Lieutenant (military);

(c) All claims under this regulation shall be dealt with and adjudicated upon by the Canadian Pension Commission and all provisions of the Pension Act not inconsistent with this regulation shall apply to every such claim;

(d) The Canadian Pension Commission shall be and is hereby authorized to require departments of the Government concerned to maintain and furnish such records and information as in the discretion of the Commission shall be necessary to adjudicate upon any claim made under this regulation and such departments shall comply with and

SATURDAY, the 21st day of MARCH, 1942.

PRESENT:

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL IN COUNCIL:

WHEREAS the Minister of National War Services and the Acting Minister of Labour report that there is a growing scarcity of men available for service in His Majesty's armed forces and for employment in the war industries and that it is necessary for the effective prosecution of the war to take steps to restrict the entry of men who are of military age and physically fit for service with the armed forces into certain occupations which are relatively unessential or can be satisfactorily filled by women or men who are beyond military age or are physically unfit for service with the armed forces;

THEREFORE His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of National War Services and the Acting Minister of Labour and under the authority of the War Measures Act, Chapter 206 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, and The National Resources Mobilization Act, 1940, Chapter 13 of the Statutes of Canada, 1940, is pleased to make and doth hereby make the following order:

- ORDER -

1. In this Order, unless the context otherwise requires -

(a) "Administrative Division" means an administrative territorial division established under the National War Services Regulations, 1940 (Recruits);

(b) "Applicant" means any person who has applied to a National Selective Service Officer for permission to enter into employment in a restricted occupation.

(c) "Director of National Selective Service" means the person appointed as such by the Governor in Council.

(d) "National Selective Service Officer" means, in respect of any applicant, the person appointed as such by the Director of National Selective Service for the area in which such applicant resides.

(e) "Appeal Board" means, in respect of any applicant, the National War Services Board established under the National War Services Regulations, 1940 (Recruits) for the Administrative Division or part thereof in which such applicant resides;

(f) "Divisional Registrar" means, for any Administrative Division, the Registrar appointed for such Division under the National War Services Regulations 1940 (Recruits);

(g) "Restricted occupation" means any occupation described in the schedule to this Order.

2. (1) No male person shall enter into employment in any restricted occupation and no person shall take any male person into employment in any restricted occupation unless such male person has obtained written permission from the National Selective Service Officer to accept such employment or presents to the prospective employer

(a) a birth certificate or other evidence that he is not of the ages of seventeen years to forty-five years inclusive; or

(b) a certificate of honourable discharge from service in one of His Majesty's armed forces; or

(c) evidence that he has applied for active service in one of His Majesty's armed forces during the present war and of having been rejected because of physical unfitness.

(2) Any person may apply to the National Selective Service Officer for permission to enter into employment in a restricted occupation and such National Selective Service Officer may grant or refuse such permission.

(3) A National Selective Service Officer may at any time revoke any permission granted by him.

3. The Director of National Selective Service may issue instructions

(a) prescribing the matters to be considered by National Selective Service Officers in granting or refusing or revoking permission to enter into employment in a restricted occupation, and

(b) prescribing the conditions which may be imposed by National Selective Service Officers in granting such permission.

4. If any question arises as to whether an employment is in a restricted occupation, such question shall be decided by the Director of National Selective Service and his decision thereon shall be final and conclusive.

5. (1) In any case where a National Selective Service Officer has granted, refused to grant, or has revoked permission to enter into employment in a restricted occupation, the applicant, either of his parents, his guardian, his present or prospective employer, a representative of any department of the government of Canada, or a representative of any interested trade union, or other similar organization may, within ten days from such refusal, appeal therefrom by notice in writing to the Divisional Registrar of the Administrative Division in which the applicant resides; and the Appeal Board for the area in which the applicant resides shall forthwith hear and determine such appeal and such decision shall be final and conclusive.

(2) Such of the provisions of The National War Services Regulations, 1940 (Recruits) with reference to National War Services Boards as are not inconsistent with these regulations shall apply mutatis mutandis to appeals under this section.

(3) Any person who appears before an Appeal Board shall do so at his own expense.

(4) No proceeding authorized or pending before an Appeal Board and no decision of an Appeal Board shall, by means of an injunction, prohibition, mandamus, certiorari, habeas corpus or other process, issuing out of court, be enjoined, restrained, stayed, removed or subjected to review or consideration on any ground whether arising out of alleged absence of jurisdiction in an Appeal Board, nullity, defect or irregularity of the proceedings or decision be questioned, revieved or reconsidered.

6. No member of an Appeal Board shall be responsible at law for anything done by him in good faith in the performance of his duties under this order, and no action shall be taken against any member of an Appeal Board in respect of the performance or non-performance of his duties under this order.

7. (1) In any prosecution for entering into an employment or employing any person contrary to this order, the burden of proving compliance with this order shall be upon the person charged with the offence.

(2) In any prosecution under this order, the complaint shall be made or the information laid within one year from the time when the matter of the complaint or information arose.

(3) Sections sixty-nine and seventy of the Criminal Code shall apply mutatis mutandis to the provisions of this Order.

Extract from letter of same date from the Prime Minister to Hon. P. J. A. Cardin:

I gave the strongest reasons why this false impression, and the injustice being done Canada in the eyes of our own people and in the eyes of the world, should be ended as speedily as possible. In those reasons and in the fact that already it is desirable to extend the scope of service under the National Resources Mobilization Act to other parts of this continent and adjacent islands, you will find, I believe, wherein the war situation has rendered necessary the introduction, without delay, of the proposed amendment to the National Resources Mobilization Act.

Memo July 17-42

Copy No.....

Re Manpower

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

C250669

OTTAWA, 16th July, 1942.

H.Q.S. 20-6, Vol. 34 (DAG)

The Minister

1. Arising out of my memorandum of 14th July, 1942 (H.Q.S. 20-6, Vol. 34) you asked for a statement of the men required to achieve the results indicated in paras. 38 - 41 inclusive, i.e.:-

(a) The men required to complete the Army in Canada.

(b) 70,000 trained men fit for overseas by 31st March, 1943, made up of:-

48,000 for present programme.
22,000 Contingency Reserve.

2. As at 30th May, 1942 (the basic date of my memo of 14th July, vide para. 14) the deficiency in the W.E. of the Army in Canada was 55,480 all ranks.

3. Besides completing this deficiency we propose to post units 10% over W.E. wherever this is practicable and this will absorb approximately 13,500 men.

4. The total of the above two figures comes to 68,980.

5. To maintain the Army in Canada, i.e. to meet normal wastage, to 31st March, 1943, we will require an additional 15,000 men.

6. Therefore, we require for the Army in Canada to 31st March, 1943, a total of 83,980 men.

7. But against this we shall discharge back to Civil employment of one sort or another a number nearly equal to our total wastage of 15,000. We estimate that only 3,000 will be totally lost through death or incapacity and that 12,000 will return to industry, agriculture, etc.

8. Therefore the net drain on the National manpower of the Army in Canada to 31st March, 1943, will be 83,980, less 12,000 returned to Civil life, or 71,980 men.

9. Additional to the Army in Canada we plan to produce (vide para. 38 of memo of 14th July) 70,000 trained men fit for overseas, by 31st March, 1943.

10. To produce this number fit for overseas we require to enlist or requisition 93,300 men.

11. These 93,300 will be disposed of as under:-

(a)	To complete overseas programme	29,000
(b)	To meet wastage overseas	19,000
		48,000
(c)	Contingency Reserve of fit, trained men	22,000
(d)	Totally lost by death or incapacity	1,000
(e)	Discharged to Industry, etc.	4,000
(f)	Not available for despatch overseas but capable of absorption into H.W.E. in Canada	18,300
		93,300

12. As at 31st March, 1943 the Basic and Advanced Training Centres will contain (vide para. 40 of my memo of 14th July) about 63,000.

13. On 30th May, 1942 the comparative figure was 40,000.

14. We require, therefore, in the interim to enlist or requisition the balance of 23,000.

15. In addition there will be an increase in the numbers in Trades Schools, etc. of 3,000 and these must be requisitioned or enlisted.

16. Total demand on Manpower to take full advantage of increased training system by 31st March, 1943 - 26,000.

17. Summary

(a)	To be enlisted or Requisitioned by 31st March, 1943:-
(i)	For Army in Canada (para. 6)	83,980
(ii)	To find 70,000 fit men available for overseas (para. 10)	93,300
(iii)	To fill up increased training system (para. 16)	26,000
		203,280
(iv)	Less 18,300 (vide para. 11(f)) which can be applied against H.W.E. of the Army in Canada	18,300
(v)	Net total enlistments or Requisition by 31st March	184,980

(c) Net Total Drain on National Manpower 30th May, 1942 to 31st March, 1943 153,980

18. As regards your second requirement, (vide your para. c) namely a statement from National Selective Service as to the manpower actually available (of the 638,000)

(a) by 31st December, 1942

(b) by 31st March, 1943

I have interviewed the Director of National Selective Service.

19. The Director states that he is not at present in a position to give a firm figure of residual available manpower as at these dates.

20. He further states that a survey of this matter is now in progress and that he hopes to have this information in from six to eight weeks.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

Re: Manpower - Service requirements to March, 1943.

I have had the attached analysis of requirements of the three Services prepared in this office in consultation with the Army Staff, so that the programmes approved in January by the government, the public statement made in the House, and the present estimates of need may be compared.

It will be noted:

(a) that Army requirements for both home and overseas (18,498 monthly) are much heavier than estimated last autumn;

(b) that Air Force requirements are less, having fallen from 6,050 to 4,772 monthly, excluding wastage; and

(c) that Navy figures have risen from 888 monthly to 1,528 monthly, excluding wastage.

The Army figures are very difficult to unscramble, but those given in the attached are confirmed by the Army Staff themselves.

Immediately on receipt of the attached telegram from Mr. Coldwell, I telephoned Mr. Thorson, who states that the allegations are completely at variance with reports he has had, which are to the effect that the Appeal Boards are granting wholesale exemptions during the harvest period.

I have sent Mr. Thorson a copy of the wire; he will reply to Coldwell for his Department and will send a copy here. A copy of Coldwell's will also be sent to Mr. Ralston in connection with the statement about harvest leave.

In the meantime, the attached draft reply is submitted for consideration.

THE NEED FOR A SINGLE MINISTRY OF LABOUR AND NATIONAL SERVICE

1. The calling up of men for military service and deferment from military service, on the one hand, and the recruiting, selection and placement of civilian employees, on the other hand, are two main aspects of a single problem, the problem of allocating and utilizing our total human resources in the manner that will best further our war effort. Each aspect constitutes part of what must be a single plan. This single plan can be administered effectively only under a single responsible Minister.

2. The conclusions in the foregoing paragraph follow from the facts that all competing demands for manpower must be met from a single pool of manpower, that the utilization of this pool to the best advantage must be the subject of central planning in accordance with broad government policy about the war programme as a whole, that the administrative procedures by which individuals are allocated to their most effective uses are substantially the same whether the uses are military or civilian, and that, if the common pool is depleted by different and independent agencies, each such agency will tend to draw from the pool in the light of its own interests and at the possible sacrifice of the interests of other equally important agencies, and of the national interest as a whole.

3. In Great Britain, even before the outbreak of the present war, it was realized that the task of allocating manpower must be assigned to a single Ministry, the Ministry of Labour and National Service. In the United States, there are clear indications of increasing centralization of control over manpower.

4. As in Great Britain, the objectives of a manpower programme in Canada must be:

   a. To build the armed forces to, and to maintain them at, the strength required.

   b. To ensure that the necessary manpower is retained in industry and that the individuals retained are engaged in work of importance to the war effort.

   c. To obtain a flow of manpower into, and a redistribution in, the munitions and other essential industries by (i) transferring labour from less to more essential work, (ii) introducing women into industry in steadily increasing numbers, and (iii) securing the utmost economy in the use of labour.

5. In maintaining the requisite balance between the needs of the armed services and of industry it will be necessary, for example, in consideration of the shortage of skilled tradesmen and the large numbers in which they are required by the armed forces for the repair and maintenance of equipment, to provide that such tradesmen shall be called up for service in the forces only when required in their trade capacity. More generally, the needs of industry must be protected by arrangements for deferment of or postponement of military service when, but only when, it can be established that -

(1) the employer is engaged on work of national importance;

(2) the work performed by the man is essential to the employer;

(3) the man cannot be replaced by someone not liable to be called up;

(4) the situation which would be created by the calling up of the man cannot be met by other means, such as reorganization.

6. In Canada, to-day, the function of calling men from the manpower pool for service with the armed forces is performed by thirteen National War Services Boards, each substantially autonomous. The function of allocating individuals to industry from the manpower pool is a responsibility of private employers and the Employment Service. As long as there was a sizeable reservoir of unemployed or not fully employed manpower, conflicts of opinion between the National War Services Boards and the Employment Service concerning the most efficient use to be made of the services of a particular individual were not especially serious. Whether the individual involved went into the armed forces or into industry made little difference since he could always be replaced by someone from the manpower reservoir.

7. To-day, when there is virtually no reserve of unemployed upon which to call, the growing manpower requirements of both the armed services and war production can be met, as stated above, only by the transfer of labour, the increasing employment of women, and economies in the use of labour. These processes all necessitate closer consideration of individual cases on the basis of a more refined analysis of their occupational capacities and importance than can be applied by the present machinery, and involve greater resort to personal interviews and plant inspection.

8. The only agency of government in any measure qualified to handle a mass job of personal interviews, especially with respect to occupational and industrial importance, and to evaluate the employers' demands for labour is the employment service. It is recognized that the employment service must be extended and improved. A special effort in this direction is already under way to meet some of the immediate needs of National Selective Service, but the present programme of expansion should be designed to prepare the employment service to assume all the duties that will be assigned to it for the duration. To place the service and the National War Services Boards under a single Minister would facilitate the immediate coordination and the eventual consolidation of the two agencies. In the increasingly tight labour situation that faces us the National War Services Boards cannot do even the requisite coarse screening of individual cases without in effect constituting themselves, and performing the functions of, employment offices.

9. Pending such consolidation the present Administrative Boards would continue to be used for call up, subject, however, to direction as to policy in the allocation of manpower. The responsibility for policy rests in the Manpower Committee of the Cabinet but the responsibility for the administration of that policy in all its phases cannot be divided.

10. The announcement that 250,000 men have to be called up to get 25,000 recruits for the army, even with due allowance for physical unfitness, agricultural postponements, industrial deferments and prior voluntary enlistments, suggests the necessity for a new and more selective approach to this phase of the problem. It is not physically possible for thirteen part-time Boards effectively to review, even on the most perfunctory basis, the number of cases they are now supposed to be deciding.

11. The tremendous task of record keeping for manpower purposes will lead to continual duplication of records and staff as long as more than one agency is involved in the allocation of manpower. The transfer of the National Registration Records to the Department of Labour in the interests of economy and efficiency is a tacit recognition of the necessity for centralization of administrative authority and cannot achieve its intended objective without such centralization.

Memorandum for the Prime Minister. C250683

re Mobilization of Manpower.

-- Attached are replies from Mr. Thorson and Mr. Mackenzie to the Prime Minister's letter asking for reports on the working of the selective service measures announced in March.

The following points emerge which would seem to call for consideration by the War Committee or the government.

1. There are growing protests against calling men in much higher age groups in some military districts than in others. Surely the quotas can be adjusted to avoid this discrimination.
-- (See Free Press editorial attached)

2. Mr. Thorson points out that the men who received 30-day training in 1940 have in many cases not been recalled for service for the duration. These men are all in their early twenties and should surely be called back before men in the late thirties are called up. According to the National Defence report for August 22nd there are still 52,842 of these 30-day men in the Reserve Army (this means they have not been re-called for regular service).

Would it not be wise to call back these men exclusively in the September call-up.

3. The policy of re-conditioning men for military service announced on March 24th has been a farce so far as conscripted men are concerned, as Mr. Mackenzie's letter clearly shows.

This is probably because it is not compulsory. It is difficult to see why men who are physically fit should be compelled to serve while men who could be made fit are allowed to escape.

This situation has been criticized in two friendly papers.
(See Toronto Star and Montreal Standard -- editorials attached)

4. The re-conditioning of volunteers is, perhaps inevitably, also on a small scale. But Mr. Mackenzie's letter suggests that no very careful track is kept of these men. It should be possible to improve the situation.

All these points are likely to become increasing sources of criticism of the government, unless it can be nipped in

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

Re: Manpower administration

Robertson, before going away, said that he had shown you a note which Colonel Biggar had written him on this subject. He suggested that I speak to Biggar and find out, more specifically, what he had in mind.

I have now done so, and Biggar has written me as follows:

"My point was that if an effective manpower scheme is to succeed, the State, as a military employer, must, vis a vis the manpower authority which is specially set up by the State, stand in exactly the same position as all civilian employers, including itself.

The core of the scheme now proposed seems to be that the permission of the Manpower Authority is to be a condition precedent to the making of any contract of employment by either an employer or an employee. It is thus that the Authority's control of the distribution of manpower is secured. There must be no gap in that control if the result desired is to be achieved.

It would be fatal to say that the State in its capacity of military employer can exercise a discretion to accept or refuse an individual's offer to enlist on the same principles as would govern the Manpower Authority in giving him permission to do so. That we know could not happen. The views of two independent Government agencies could never be made exactly to coincide. Rivalry and confusion would be inevitable, and the confusion would be worse confounded if each of the Armed Services made its own rules.

Excluding such a division of jurisdiction, volunteering in any practical sense must cease. Since an individual must obtain the Manpower Authority's permission to enlist, and permission will be given only when it is in one of the Armed Services that that individual can best contribute to the war effort, the permission is in effect an order. The will of the Manpower Authority is substituted for the will of the individual. Even if in form there is no compulsory order, there will be compulsion in substance, since no one who should enlist will be given permission to engage in other work. His alternative will be to starve."

Dear Mr._____:

At the meeting of the Cabinet War Committee on December the 9th, 1942, the following decision of direct concern to your department was made:

Manpower - government employees of military age

It was agreed that heads of departments and agencies were to submit to Mobilization Boards plans detailing men in essential positions for whom postponements were regarded as important.

Yours sincerely,

A.D.P. Heeney.

For your information I may add this decision was taken as a result of representations made regarding the difficult position of the government employee of military age who might have been specially trained to fill a key position, but who, on receipt of military call, did not feel that the responsibility of asking for deferment should rest solely with him. I understand that, under the former system, it was not possible for a departmental head to ask for deferment on behalf of such an employee. As a result of the above decision, each head of a government department or agency may submit to the local Mobilization Board concerned, of the Department of Labour, a plan for deferment covering all his employees whom he regards as essential.

We have now reached a position where, with our reserves of manpower largely exhausted, any further expansion of the armed forces and war industry must involve a certain amount of dislocation of the civilian economy. This has been accepted as necessary and agreed to in principle. The problem for us at the moment is to choose between two alternative methods of approach to the same ultimate end. One method of raising ~~554,000~~ men for the armed forces and war industry by April 30th next is simply to proceed directly and immediately to levy men at the rate of ~~some 50,000~~ a month. This can be done but would create a most acute dislocation of the economy - in fact such an extreme dislocation as to threaten a complete breakdown. Alternatively, programmes of curtailment of civilian industry and recruitment of women into industry may be immediately launched and pursued ~~as aggressively as possible~~ with a view to releasing as large a number of men as possible to meet the requirements of armed forces and war industry without causing ~~such severe~~ dislocations as to threaten complete breakdown. The advantage of this approach is that it can be done in a more methodical and efficient way, but the disadvantage is that it cannot guarantee the delivery of any given number of men in a given time. It should be made clear that a very serious degree of dislocation and of inconvenience and hardship will be unavoidable in either case, as the same utlimate curtailment of civilian production will be achieved, the difference being only in the timing of the measures to be adopted and, because of the time factor, in their impact on the economy.

It is essential that the Director of National Selective Service and the Chairman of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board have a clear and specific directive from Council as to which method of approach is to be followed.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER.

WW I - Anglo-Can. Corporation
WW II - Manpower
WW II - Can. Armed Forces

We have accepted for service in the Canadian forces a considerable number of volunteers from the British West Indies and it seems that the Army is satisfied with the quality and usefulness of the men who have hitherto come forward. Organized groups have recently come to Canada from Trinidad and Barbados and there is a trickle of individual volunteers from other islands. The arrangements made with the Colonial authorities place no financial or other liability on Canada until the volunteers are actually enlisted.

I attach a copy of a letter to Wrong from Sir Patrick Duff, dated September 25th, which proposes a larger scheme which would include both the recruiting of tradesmen for the Canadian forces and the use in Canada of West Indian manpower. This letter has been referred for comment to the three Service departments, National Selective Service and Immigration. I infer from the letter that there has been a considerable flow of men from the West Indies to the United Kingdom. This has now been stopped because of the shipping situation.

In view of our own pressing manpower position, I think that we should consider this proposal carefully. The majority of the volunteers previously admitted to Canada have been white but a proportion of coloured tradesmen has been included. Sir Patrick Duff states that if our reaction is favourable the Colonial Office will take steps to secure approximate figures of the number and types of men available for military service or civil duties. Do you wish the matter to be brought up in the War Committee?

OFFICE OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Earnscliffe,

OTTAWA.

25th September, 1942.

510B/16

Dear Mr. Wrong:

Thank you for your letter of 21st September about the status of West Indian volunteers for the Canadian Active Army. I am sending your observations to the authorities in London immediately.

In the meantime we have received a further telegram from the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs on this subject. The United Kingdom authorities have hitherto limited their efforts in regard to the recruiting of West Indians to systematising the informal arrangements which had grown up without encouragement from London or from the Colonial Governments. They have not been anxious to stimulate enlistment from the West Indian Colonies in the Canadian Forces because they did not want to prejudice

(a) the existing arrangements for recruiting skilled tradesmen from this are for the United Kingdom Forces, or
(b) the prospects of other schemes for utilizing West Indian manpower which had been under consideration in London. It is now clear, however, that the shipping deficits as between the West Indies and the United Kingdom will not only preclude schemes under (b) but will also much reduce, if not terminate, those under (a). At the same time the scope for enlistment in the local forces is limited. Yet the desire to serve in the armed forces of the Crown remains strong, and the Colonial Office are anxious that the fullest possible advantage should be taken of it in the interests of the common war effort. It is clearly desirable to use the shipping available between the American continent and the United Kingdom for trained men at present juncture, but it is thought that Canada may wish at the same time to build up her training depots with recruits.

There is also a surplus of civilian labour which is probably increasing as a result of the termination of employment on the construction of some of the United States bases.

The Colonial Office are therefore anxious to ascertain whether the Canadian Government would be prepared to co-operate in a general plan as regards both (a) enlistment of West Indians in the Canadian Forces and (b) the employment in a civilian capacity of West Indian civilian labourers. As regards (a), as a special case, it is known that there is at the moment likely to be available in Jamaica a number of between 1000 and 1500 motor transport drivers who could be employed in driving for the forces. This is a new development resulting from the petrol shortage.

We/

Acting Under Secretary of State

We have been asked to enquire informally of the Canadian authorities whether there is any prospect of the Canadian Government being likely to avail themselves of a general scheme of this nature. If the idea were to find favour the Colonial Office would at once instruct the Colonial Governments concerned to supply the approximate figures and the numbers and types of men who would be likely to be available either for military service or other civil duties.

I should be very grateful to receive your observations at the earliest possible date.

Yours sincerely,

C250694

THE MANPOWER SITUATION

The aggregate demands of the armed forces, war industries and civilian industries for manpower now exceed our available supply. In addition, substantial expansion of both the armed forces and war industry is under way.

That the situation is not now as critical as it threatened two months ago is due partly to normal seasonal declines in employment in some industries, partly to material shortages, partly to less expansion of the armed forces and of war industries than forecast, and partly to the expanded activities of NSS. With one exception these are far from being satisfactory reasons, and on no account must be permitted to give the impression that the seriousness of the situation has been exaggerated.

It might be well to point out now that the prospects for the winter are for continuation of the present situation; that is, for a fairly tight general condition, with some particularly acute local and industrial problems, but not reaching an overall shortage of really critical proportions until spring. The situation will deteriorate, of course, during the winter. Some of the special difficulties which already exist, such as the all-round shortage of able-bodied men qualified for heavy and relatively low-paid work in the base-metal and coal mines, smelters, foundries and steel mills, in branches of the lumbering and agricultural industries (and, of course, for the army), will have cumulatively more serious effects on essential production. But we have still a few months of grace before the situation becomes unmanageable in which to organize to avoid serious curtailment of our military and supply programmes. It is not likely, of course, even should the situation reach this stage, that there will be a spectacular collapse. The prospect is rather, if we fail to make the most efficient possible use of our manpower, that neither the armed forces or war industries will be able to get the additional men they need to expand as rapidly as planned, but that their efforts to get them will cause considerable dislocation of civilian industry and deterioration of civilian supply and an unnecessary attendant amount of individual inequity and hardship, deterioration in morale, and growth of labour unrest.

The problem can be most conveniently discussed first in relation to the supply factors, and then in relation to the demands.

The normal supply reserves are now virtually exhausted. That is, after allowance is made for a normal and fairly constant amount of temporary idleness due to uncontrollable fluctuations, shifts, and dislocations in production; to labour turnover; and to illness or other physical handicaps, there is no significant number of people in the country who can and want to work who are not at work.

New supplies can be developed in three major ways. Women, chiefly housewives, who are not normally in the labour market can, under certain conditions, be brought in. Men and women now employed in branches of industry, agriculture, and civilian services that are not of essential importance can, under certain conditions, be made available for more essential work. The existing labour force can, under certain conditions, produce more efficiently.

It is these certain conditions, in every case, which are important. Some of the conditions are simply competent foresight, planning and organization,. but many involve matters of high policy and require consideration and decision by the Government. The greater the draft, the more far-reaching will be the changes, dislocations and controls which must be imposed on the people, and consequently as the situation develops in degree it changes in kind. We have already reached the stage where, to make one thousand men available, some degree of dislocation is inevitable. To make more available requires more dislocation. Obviously at some point the degree of dislocation required, and the reaction to it, would defeat the very purpose of the policy - but the responsibility for determining that point must clearly be borne by Government.

For example, a certain additional number of housewives can be attracted into industry if full information on openings is available and the Employment Service is operating efficiently, if provision is made for care of children, and if working conditions are appropriate for women. More can be brought in if equal pay for equal work is enforced. More can be brought in if employers are compelled to employ stated proportions of female labour. Still more can be brought in if women are made subject to compulsory service.

Or again, a certain amount of labour will be made available from civilian industries by restricting further expansion, and as a result of rationing due to material shortages. More can be made available by scientific standardization of products and rationalized concentration of production and distribution. Still more will be released if we plan an iron ration standard of living and all supplementary production and services are eliminated including, for example, such non-contributory industries as subsistence agriculture.

Increased efficiency of output would result from further breaking down of jobs, dilution and upgrading, and from intensive training. Greatly increased efficiency would result from improved employer-employee relationships whether through joint production committees or other means of giving labour a voice and responsibility in management. More efficient use of our total manpower would be secured with more selective control of enlistment and provision for release of men with scarce skills from the armed forces when need for their special skills is greater elsewhere.

Examples of the conditions upon which further supply will be forthcoming have been given in some detail to illustrate the very essence of the supply position - namely that the provision of additional manpower will depend upon the Government authorizing measures which will certainly interfere with and possibly damage the individuals affected, which will arouse strong opposition from many vested interests and beliefs, and which will lead to some fundamental changes in our social and economic fabric.

The demand side also presents some particularly thorny problems which Government must take the responsibility of resolving. The present and projected aggregate demands of the armed forces, war industry and all civilian industries, considerably exceed the total manpower that can conceivably be made available. An overall allocation and determination of priorities as between the various demands must be made by the Government - and must, of course, be related to the total supply which the Government thinks it practical to undertake to make available.

The Government decisions on these basic questions of supply and demand jointly determine the national manpower policy. The decisions are not fixed, of course, and the policy must be subject to change as circumstances make necessary, but at any given time the administrative agencies charged with carrying out the Government's manpower policy must have a specific directive before them. The responsibility is then clearly upon them to deliver. Also, responsibility is on these agencies to keep the Government closely advised of developments in the manpower field, and to recommend what they consider appropriate policies.

National Selective Service is the principal agency for carrying out the Government's manpower policy. The powers given to the Director of NSS by O/C 2254, March 21, 1942, are ".....to co-ordinate the policies and activities of the departments and agencies of the Government of Canada which affect or relate to the demand for and the supply of labour requisite to the prosecution of the war in all its phases....". Literally interpreted these powers are so sweeping as to be in fact impracticable. ("To co-ordinate" is "to bring parts into proper relation"; as a practical matter the Director of NSS cannot, and is not the proper person, to bring the Department of Munitions and Supply and National Defence, Agriculture and Finance, for instance, into proper relation on all matters concerning their use of manpower.) The Director is consequently left with great responsibilities but without appropriate powers. This position has proved impracticable in operation and is, in fact, intolerable. The confused organizational condition coupled with growing pressures and strains on the manpower front has produced a critical situation, and clarification is now imperative.

What is proposed is a clarification of the position, functions and responsibilities of NSS. Coupled with this is a detailed statement and delimitation of the Director's powers, in which an attempt has been made to combine clear responsibility with a realistic definition of the scope of his authority. To this end an O/C has been prepared which

(a) defines the position of the Director and the organization of NSS,

(b) consolidates all outstanding NSS Regulations,

(c) includes the regulations governing the call-up of men for military service to go into effect after NSS takes over this function on Dec. 1st, and the necessary provisions for the change-over, and

(d) adds certain provisions which appear necessary to round out the powers of NSS to discharge the responsibilities with which it has been charged.

A brief summary of the salient points of the proposed Manpower Regulations follows.

The Order opens with a consolidation of the necessary definitions of phrases used in it.

Part I sets out the general objectives and responsibilities of the Minister of Labour as the responsible Minister for NSS. Here the Minister of Labour is charged with carrying out the manpower policies of the Government as laid down from time to time, and directed to make any necessary surveys of the manpower resources and needs; to operate an employment service; to ensure efficient use of manpower by private employers; and to attempt to secure the coordination of Government departments on manpower matters. In this last responsibility the Minister will proceed primarily by consultation with and recommendation to the Department concerned (100 (e)) and will also, if necessary, recommend further action to the Governor-in-Council (100 (e)).

Part II is a consolidation of outstanding NSS Regulations. These cover the procedures proscribed to control employment and changes in employment. A new feature is the power given to the Director to pay supplementary allowances to any person or group or class of persons where necessary to maintain or encourage production (212). The present provision for supplementary allowances is limited to special cases in connection with directed or induced transfers in recognition of the important barrier frequently presented by wage differentials to desirable movements of labour. Situations also exist where it is equally desirable to encourage labour to stay on essential work in spite of higher wages elsewhere, or to bonus labour as a production incentive. Freezing is an alternative method of keeping labour on the job, but it cannot guarantee production and, if the wage differential is large, it can create a very inequitable and dangerous situation. Competitive wage increases as a solution would be in complete violation of the Government's anti-inflation wage and price policy. An extension of the power to grant, within limits, supplementary allowances appears to be the most direct and satisfactory method of dealing with the problem.

Appeals (214) from decisions made under the Regulations in this section are limited to the Director.

Part III consists of the present Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel regulations. This Bureau is, in essence, an employment service for engineers and certain other specially qualified technical personnel, and possesses certain control over the employment of such personnel. While logically its functions should be performed by the Employment Service, this branch has not hitherto been equipped to deal with professional men, and the fact that the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel is now an effective going concern, dealing with critically scarce occupations, is adequate justification for preserving it in its present form. At the same time, by making the Bureau responsible to the Director of NSS, provision is made for closely coordinating its activities with those of the general Employment Service.

Part IV sets forth the regulations under which the call-up for compulsory military service in Canada will be administered by NSS after December 1st. In brief, the proposed procedure envisages carrying on with the existing NWS Boards with provision for changes, enlargement or subdivision as necessary. These Boards will be responsible for carrying out policy as laid down by NSS Headquarters. It is planned that as rapidly as the Employment Service can be brought to a satisfactory level of competence it will act as the fact-finding organization for the Draft Boards on questions of economic essentiality to avoid duplication of investigational staffs. The liaison between the Employment Service and the Draft Boards will enable a substantial amount of pre-classification and selection which, it is hoped, will reduce some of the dislocations caused by the present draft system, and which will indirectly exercise a substantial degree of control over voluntary enlistment. An amendment of importance (401(1)) extends the liability for military service to every male, rather than to every single man, between the ages of 19 and 45 inclusive, subject, of course, to the proclamation of the Governor in Council specifying the age class or part of age class of men to be called out.

Part V consists of the present regulations covering the granting of exit permits to persons over 16 who wish to leave Canada to secure employment elsewhere.

Part VI deals with the administrative organization of NSS. In brief, it is proposed to set it up as a Department of Government under the Minister of Labour. Section 601(2) gives the Director of NSS "under the Minister the exclusive management and direction of NSS and he shall for that purpose be the Deputy of the Minister". Rather than attempting to create a new office and define its powers and responsibilities, it was thought preferable to conform to the traditional pattern of responsible government as both the clearest way of defining the Director's position and providing the simplest and most efficient operating mechanism. Provision is made for the appointment of senior officers of NSS by Governor in Council and for the appointment of such other officers and clerks as are necessary in the customary manner through the Civil Service Commission.

The powers of the Director (610) include powers similar to those given to the Combines Investigation Commissioner for the purpose of carrying out any necessary investigation on the manpower situation; power to publish such notices and explanations as are necessary for the proper administration of the regulations; power to set up a committee of an advisory nature in any industry or plant; power "to make representations to any person, body of persons, or Commission investigating or attempting to settle a labour dispute" and to have access to the material with reference to such a dispute; similar power in relation to matters before the National War Labour Board; and power to organize supplementary training projects if necessary. These powers are self-explanatory and are included simply to round out the legal framework of NSS and at the same time to indicate clearly the specific nature of the responsibilities with which the Director is charged.

Provision is also made for the administration of the recruiting programme for the armed forces by the Director of NSS upon agreement with the appropriate Minister of National Defence.

In addition, however, Section 610(o) proposes a new power which in essence incorporates the principle of compulsory transfer. This now appears essential to the efficient administration of Selective Service. This section, in brief, gives the Director power to take action to alleviate any shortage of manpower required for the war effort and, in particular, to require the discharge of any individual employee or group of employees from their existing employment. Such people would then be subject to the existing NSS Regulations empowering the Director to direct an unemployed person to essential work. While a power of this nature is one which would obviously be used only in extreme cases at present, its existence appears necessary as a complement and support to the Wartime Prices and Trade Board's powers for curtailment of less essential industry.

In Section 633 the responsibility is imposed on the Director of reporting monthly to the Manpower Committee of the Cabinet on the manpower situation and the administration of these regulations.

Part VII deals with enforcement and consolidates the outstanding regulations proscribing procedure and the penalties for infraction of the regulations .

Part VIII includes a number of miscellaneous regulations.

An important part (Section 801) restates and clarifies the position of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in relation to NSS and the Department of Labour. It provides for the transfer of the Employment Service of the Unemployment Insurance Commission (which is set up by Part III of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940) to the Minister of Labour for the duration of the war, and for the administration of this Service by the Director of NSS. The insurance side of the UIC's work (as outlined in Part II of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940) remains with the Unemployment Insurance Commission, which preserves its complete autonomy. The control and supervision of all the personnel in the Local Offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission are transferred to the Director, who is instructed to carry out all instructions from the Unemployment Insurance Commission necessary for the local administration of the insurance work. The personnel in the Regional Offices and Head Office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission dealing with insurance matters are separated from the Employment Service organization and are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. This arrangement will preserve the identity and autonomy of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and will make it possible for it to administer the insurance end of the Unemployment Insurance Act efficiently, while it will at the same time give NSS clear and necessary control of its field machinery.

The importance of this latter objective can scarcely be over-emphasized. In the existing state of ambiguous and divided jurisdiction paralyzing confusion and friction are created which neither preserves the independence of the UIC nor gives NSS the efficient instrument it needs. The UIC, the Employment Service, and NSS are all now labouring under serious administrative handicaps, and a clear definition of their respective functions and fields of authority is now imperative.

MEMORANDUM

JWP/PM

C250699

For the Prime Minister to see before signature.

It would appear from the volume of complaint in the press, in resolutions of farm organizations, etc. that in many cases -- the National War Services Boards are violating the spirit, even if they are adhering to the letter of the Order-in-Council regarding calls for military service to persons engaged in agriculture.

One of the principal difficulties seems to be that postponements, when granted, are only for a limited period, with the result that there is a feeling of uncertainty as to whether a further postponement will be forthcoming. Such uncertainty is exceedingly detrimental in agriculture, where planning must be done long in advance. It should be possible to work out some method of checking which does not involve repeating calls at short intervals. Undoubtedly, a great deal of dissatisfaction could be avoided if a clear, precise and intelligible directive to War Services Boards was issued by the Minister of Labour, and at the same time given a wide publicity.

W.W.II - Manpower

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

Re - Wartime Manpower Board

Attached is a draft plan for a Wartime Manpower Board as requested.

The following points would seem to require consideration in this connection:

1. The concurrent abolition of the National Selective Service Advisory Board and the interdepartmental committee on Labour Co-ordination and their replacement by a National Advisory Council on Manpower Mobilization to include representatives of:

Trades unions
Employers
Farmers
Fishermen
Women
The Universities

It might be a good plan to have such a body headed by a University President.

2. Adequate French Canadian representation on the Manpower Board:

The French Canadian Deputy Chairman and the Chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission would provide two members: a third might be found by adding the French-speaking Member of the Civil Service Commission which logically should be represented (it is in the United States).

3. There would seem to be no real need of navy and air representation as long as they control their own recruiting and no impediments are placed in their way.

4. The possibility of placing all voluntary recruiting for the armed forces under the control of the Manpower Board might be considered. In such case Navy and Air should be represented.

6. If the Board is to meet regularly and function effectively, it should have a first rate full-time Secretary. The Secretary might also act as secretary to the National Advisory Council.

Attached for reference are:

1. The Executive Order on Manpower issued by President Roosevelt.

2. An outline of parallels and differences between the U.S. and Canadian machinery and methods.

Suggested Composition

Wartime Manpower Board

1. To follow the analogy of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board and the Wartime Information Board with the Chairman responsible directly to the Minister of Labour.
2. The Chairman to have the rank of a deputy Minister.
3. The Deputy Chairman to be French Canadian (presumably Mr. Goulet, the present senior Associate Director of National Selective Service.)
4. Members to be:
    1. The Deputy Minister of Labour.
    2. The Chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.
    3. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture.
    4. The Chairman of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board.
    5. The Chairman of the Wartime Industries Control Board.
    6. A senior official of Munitions and Supply on the Production side (perhaps Mr. Carmichael).
    7. The Deputy Minister of National Defence or the Adjutant-General.

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5—The text of President Roosevelt's executive order on manpower read as follows:

Executive Order

Providing for the most effective mobilization and utilization of the national manpower and transferring the selective Service System to the War Manpower Commission.

In order to promote the most effective mobilization and utilization of the national manpower and to eliminate so far as possible waste of manpower due to disruptive recruitment and undue migration of workers, and by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and statutes, including the first War Powers Act, 1941, and the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, as President of the United States, and as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, it is hereby ordered as follows:

1. The War Manpower Commission (established by Section 1 of Executive Order No. 9139, dated April 18, 1942) shall consist of a chairman appointed by the President and one representative, designated subject to the approval of the chairman, of each of the following departments and agencies: The Department of War, the Department of the Navy, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor, The National Security Agency, the War Production Board, the United States Civil Service Commission, the National Housing Agency, and such other executive departments and agencies as the President shall determine; and a joint representative of the War Shipping Administration and the Office of Defense Transportation, designated by the chairman of the War Manpower Commission (hereinafter referred to as the chairman).

2. (a) The Selective Service System created and established for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and all of its functions, powers, duties, personnel (including the Director of Selective Service), records, property and funds (including all unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations or other funds available for the administration of said act, as amended) are transferred to the War Manpower Commission in the Office for Emergency Management of the Executive Office of the President, and shall be administered under the supervision and direction of the chairman. The local boards and appeal boards of the Selective Service System shall, subject to the supervision and direction of the chairman, continue to exercise the functions, powers and duties vested in them by the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended.

Selective Service Changes

(b) The functions, powers and duties of the Director of Selective Service, including authority delegated to him by the President under the provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, are transferred to the chairman and may be exercised through the Director of Selective Service and such other officers, agents and persons and in such manner as the chairman may determine.

(c) The Chief of Finance, United States Army, shall act as the fiscal, distributing and accounting agent of the chairman in carrying out the provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended.

3. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall, after consultation with the chairman, determine the number of men required to be selected each month in order to fulfill the total respective requirements of the Army and Navy as approved by the President. The chairman shall furnish the required number of men through the Selective Service System.

4. After the effective date of this order no male person who has attained the eighteenth anniversary and has not attained the thirty-eighth anniversary of the day of his birth shall be inducted into the enlisted personnel of the armed forces (including Reserve components), except, under provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended; but any such person who has, on or before the effective date of this order, submitted a bona fide application for voluntary enlistment may be enlisted within ten days after said date.

Restrictions on Employers

5. In so far as the effective prosecution of the war requires it, the chairman shall take all lawful and appropriate steps to assure that (a) all hiring, rehiring, solicitation and recruitment of workers in or for work in any establishment, plant, facility, occupation or area designated by the chairman as subject to the provisions of this section shall be conducted solely through the United States Employment Service or in accordance with such arrangements as the chairman may approve; and (b) no employer shall retain in his employ any worker whose services are more urgently needed in any establishment, plant, facility, occupation or area designated as more essential by the chairman pursuant to this section.

6. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall take such steps as may be necessary to assure that all training programs for the armed forces (including their Reserve components) and the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, which are carried on in non-Federal educational institutions, conform with such policies or regulations as the chairman, after consultation with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, prescribes as necessary to insure the efficient utilization of the nation's educational facilities and personnel for the effective prosecution of the war.

7. The chairman shall (a) issue such policies, rules, regulations and general or special orders as he deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this order, (b) take steps to prevent and relieve gross inequities or undue hardships arising from the exercise of the provisions of Section 5 of this order in so far as he finds so doing will not interfere with the effective prosecution of the war, and (c) establish such procedures (including appeals) as are necessary to assure a hearing to any person claiming that any action taken by any local or regional agent or agency of the War Manpower Commission pursuant to Section 5 of this order and said Executive Order No. 9139, is unfair or unreasonable as applied to him.

8. (A) The chairman may perform the functions and duties and exercise the powers, authority and discretion conferred upon him by this order or any other order of the President through such officers, agents and persons and in such manner as he shall determine.

Memorandum for Mr. Turnbull

re Announcements on Manpower Policy

Mr. ~~Henry~~ Heaney has shown me the proposals submitted by the Minister of Labour for the consideration of Council.

Certain of the proposals affect both Selective Service and the Armed Forces. This is particularly true of the proposal to release men from the forces for peak labour seasons in agriculture. If there is any significant change in policy or practice in this field, it seems to me most important that the announcement (affecting as it will, more than one government department) should be made by the Prime Minister to the House of Commons.

The public interest in this matter is very great and a routine announcement to the press from Labour or Defence would hardly secure the right kind of publicity or the right emphasis.

It is probable the Prime Minister has not had a chance to examine Mr. Mitchell's proposals. You may, therefore, wish to mention the point to him, as he might like to have a word with Mr. Ralston or Mr. Mitchell.

Attached is a draft submission to Council authorizing the extension of age groups subject to military service under the National Resources Mobilization Act, a copy of a letter setting out recommendations to assist in meeting the manpower problem, civil and military, and a copy of a set of reports and tables, all emanating from the Department of Labour. Copies of these documents are being sent to all members of the Cabinet.

These proposals will be considered at an early meeting of the full Cabinet, when you are present.

Council

C250717

Ottawa, July 12, 1943.

Mr. A.D.P. Heeney,
Clerk of the Privy Council,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Heeney:

Following up the discussions which have occurred in regard to "Manpower", particularly for the Armed Forces, it is noted by your letter of July 8 that recommendations are to be considered by Council.

Copies for distribution of the following are handed you herewith:

(1) Proposed Order in Council authorizing the calling of men 18½ years old, and married men 26 to 30 years old inclusive. This recommendation is now at "Justice" for final approval.

(2) Copies of this letter.

(3) Copies of a set of reports and tables relative to the general situation.

In addition to a decision on the actual question of classes to be made subject to "call-up", I would ask that Council give consideration to the following three recomendations:

1. That the National Defence -- Army, Air and Navy adjust requirements so that (a) Category A men will not be used for Canadian Ground Crew in the Air Force, and (b) that the Navy will not recruit beyond quota requirements.

2. That the Home Defence Army situation be studied by a joint committee representative of National Defence and Selective Service in order to devise a plan whereby the services of men in the Home Defence Army can be made use of to aid in respect to the short labour supply in high priority industries. A plan which might be studied is briefly outlined hereunder:-

(a) That men in the Home Defence Army who have completed 4 to 6 months training be transferred to a Labour Corps if they have not decided to volunteer for general service and that their services be used in Government-owned or operated projects now underway or which could be readily developed such as cutting of fuel wood or operating strip process coal mines. The Fuel Wood Administrator is satisfied he can put 10,000 men at work cutting fuel wood within a very short period. The idea being that men be continued in the Home Defence Army and that they work under the supervision of their officers.

3. That the Air Force and Army be asked to give consideration to the possibility of making available the services of men in the forces who can be released from training for short periods during peak labour seasons, particularly for agriculture. The present method of releasing individuals upon application to return to home farm or to a specific employer is not effective. A method of releasing groups for service when required in areas adjacent to the place of training would be much more effective. In order to encourage men to accept short-period leave, it is suggested that dependents' allowances be continued during period on leave.

The general situation is summarized hereunder:-

Developments and Improvements in "Call-Up" Procedure

1. Mobilization Offices have been expanded and strengthened; Staff has been increased from less than 500 a year ago to something over 1,900. (June 30, 1943).

2. National Registration staff at Ottawa has been strengthened and a much closer co-operation has been developed between (a) national registration (b) armed forces records and (c) District Registrars' Offices.

3. A greater degree of uniformity as between districts has been brought about.

4. A greater degree of co-ordination between Employment Offices and Mobilization Boards has been created.

5. No one can now obtain a job through the Employment Offices in Canada without proving compliance with Mobilization Regulations.

6. Under Compulsory Transfer Orders (being carried out progressively step by step) no employer may retain a man who is within the designated classes unless he has a special permit from the Employment Offices. This system is locating missing men.

7. The Departments of "Munitions and Supply" and "Labour" have joined in conducting a labour supply survey of important "War" plants with the objective of transferring men who can be made available to the armed forces.

8. A survey of Agriculture is being made to satisfy Selective Service that Agriculture is not being used as a shelter for men who should be in the armed forces.

Results re Armed Forces

The Navy has been able to recruit all the men required and during June approximately 1,000 more than the required quota were recruited.

The Air Force is finding it very difficult to recruit the number required for "Air Crew".

The Army - For the twelve-week period (weeks ending April 10 to June 26), the intake in Arny has totalled 22,722, which is slightly less than 900 under requirements of 8,500 per month.

The total intake into armed forces during the twelve-week period ending June 26, 1943 of all three forces has been 40,919 men.

Remaining Pool - There are still to be cleared some 67,000 men within the existing designated age classes, many of whom have to be traced.

Results re War Plants and Industry

Unfilled vacancies as at June 10, 1943:-

Coal Mining	3,367
Ships - Base metals and high priority	19,596
Agriculture	3,263	(does not indicate the true shortage)
Total (very important)	26,226

Total including above and Civilian Services of varying degrees of importance -- 136,720.

The results up to now have met reasonably well the requirements of the armed forces.

The designated classes, while not entirely depleted, are so reduced that the numbers required by the armed forces cannot be supplied in future unless new classes are opened.

From the 18½ year olds - (possibly a total of 50,000) should produce 20,000 to 30,000 for one of the three forces.

From the married group (26 to 30), it is difficult to estimate the number who may be made available. Postponements will undoubtedly be necessary for a high percentage. In this group there is a total of 127,560 men.

Yours very truly,

PROCLAMATION

Deputy Minister of Justice, Canada.

WHEREAS it is provided by The National Resources Mobilization Act, 1940, that Our Governor in Council may make from time to time such orders and Regulations requiring persons to place themselves, their services and their property at Our disposal, as may be deemed necessary or expedient for securing the public safety, the defence of Canada, the maintenance of public order, or the efficient prosecution of the war, or for maintaining supplies or services essential to the life of the community:

AND WHEREAS, under the powers therein contained and the War Measures Act, Our Governor in Council did on the first day of December, nineteen hundred and forty-two, make the National Selective Service Mobilization Regulations to provide a system for requiring men belonging to age classes or parts of age classes designated by proclamation to report for military training, service or duty within Canada and the territorial waters thereof;

AND WHEREAS, all persons required to report for military training, service or duty pursuant to the National Selective Service Mobilization Regulations are liable to perform military training, service or duty pursuant to the Reserve Army (Special) Regulations, 1941, within Canada and the territorial waters thereof, as the Minister of National Defence (Army) may from time to time require;

AND WHEREAS, pursuant to and in accordance with the National Selective Service Mobilization Regulations, we have decided to designate by proclamation for the purposes of the National Selective Service Mobilization Regulations every man who was born in any of the years 1925, 1924, 1923, 1922, 1921, 1920, 1919, 1918, 1917, 1916, 1915, 1914, or 1913, and every man who was born in any of the years 1912, 1911, 1910, 1909, 1908, 1907, 1906, 1905, 1904, 1903, or 1902, who was on the fifteenth day of July, nineteen hundred and forty, a widower without child or children or a judicially separated or an unmarried man or who has since the said date been divorced or judicially separated or become a widower without child or children, but men born in the year 1925 shall not be served with "Orders-Medical Examination" until they reach the age of eighteen years and six months;

NOW THEREFORE KNOW YE that by and with the advice of our Privy Council for Canada we do, by this our Proclamation, for the purposes of the National Selective Service Mobilization Regulations hereby designate every man who was born in any of the years 1925, 1924, 1923, 1922, 1921, 1920, 1919, 1918, 1917, 1916, 1915, 1914 or 1913, and every man who was born in any of the years 1912, 1911, 1910, 1909, 1908, 1907, 1906, 1905, 1904, 1903, or 1902, who was on the fifteenth day of July, nineteen hundred and forty a widower without child or children or a judicially separated or an unmarried man or who has since the said date been divorced or judicially separated or become a widower without child or children, and all such men are required

STATISTICS OF VACANCIES AND REFERRALS

EXPLANATORY NOTES

The tables show the number of net vacancies notified and of referrals made during the week, and the position with respect to vacancies and referrals as of the end of the week.

Net Vacancies Notified =

Number of jobs offered during week by employers by means of employer's orders to employment offices, less number of employer's orders cancelled during week.

Referrals =

Number of persons sent out during week by employment offices to employers to fill notified vacancies.

Unfilled Vacancies =

Number of jobs offered by employers by means of employer's orders to employment offices, which are unfilled as at a given date. A vacancy is considered unfilled until it is cancelled or until the employer notifies the employment office that it has been filled by the placement of a referred applicant.

Unconfirmed Referrals =

Number of cases where an applicant has been referred to a specific job by an employment office and no notification has been received from the employer as to whether the person has been placed or rejected.

Net = Unfilled Vacancies less Unconfirmed Referrals

Unfilled Vacancies overstate the degree of labour shortage because:

(1) Employers tend to place orders for more workers than they actually need.

(2) Employers, in many cases, do not promptly advise local employment offices when a vacancy has been filled by a placement.

Unconfirmed Referrals overstate the degree to which the labour shortage is being met because in many cases more than one referral to a job is required before a placement is actually made.

When the Net figure (Unfilled Vacancies less Unconfirmed Referrals) is obtained, the overstatements in vacancies and referrals compensate for each other to a degree. It is not strictly correct to use the Net figure as an absolute measure of labour shortage, but week to week variations in the Net figure are the most significant measures available of labour shortage conditions.

CONFIDENTIAL

from: Major-General H.J. Riley.

For the first 12 weeks of the fiscal year, 7,957 N.R.M.A. personnel have been enrolled and 14,755 G.S. enlisted - about a thousand less than the requisitions; but, in the last month alone, the Navy has exceeded its quota by more than that number. Week by week the net return is lower.

The first step in mobilization has been taken for all men in the designated classes, with few exceptions. Mopping up is going on, but it is necessarily a slow process and, although it is estimated that approximately 70,000 of the untraced are not in the armed services, many of them are in essential industry and, whatever the vigour of enforcement, it is felt that a sufficient flow of men cannot be kept up without designation of further classes.

The recommendation has already gone in for the designation of those born in 1925. The estimate of the number is 95,000. While the percentage of fitness should be high and of postponement, except as students, very low, this age group is expected to yield more airman than soldiers, which is all to the good. As even volunteers are not available for overseas service until 19, this class will not give a supply of reinforcements immediately.

The latest year of birth out of which married men have not been called is 1916. Married men in that age group are estimated at 22,500 and increase about 5,000 a year - the 1912 class numbering about 45,000. In these classes applications for postponement will be high and difficult to decide. It is felt that it would be unwise to burden the Mobilization Divisions with anything more than a 5-year span.

There are many things which slow up the process of mobilization. Perhaps the most harmful is the disregard of the obligation to notify the Registrar of change of address. Most offenders have gone into one of the services, the merchant marine, or high priority industries. It would be wasteful to attempt to enforce the penal sections of the regulations against these people indiscriminately.

For various reasons the orders issued by the Registrars for medical examination and military training do not get the respect and attention necessary to make the system effective. Generous provisions has been made for postponement. The production of coal and food has priority over the demands of the Army and, by circular memoranda, Boards have been asked to favour logging, the heavy industries, and other high priority labour. Through ignorance or fear, many who would be entitled to postponement do not submit to the regulations. Here again, the policy of selective service must be applied, and it is a difficult job to separate the sheep from the goats.

The Registrars have difficulty in getting and developing even moderately efficient staffs. The work does not attract the intelligent, and the bright ones who come usually are looking out for something better. There is a high turnover and, consequently, many more mistakes than there should be. The Boards are, I believe, conscientiously trying to do their job, but they are bedevilled by the replacement problem. Employment Offices give more attention to filling holes in high priority jobs than to providing replacements for men in similar jobs who are on postponement. Consequently, the movement of men on postponement to the Army is too slow. The Mobilization Survey Committees are, I feel, making a genuine effort to remedy this, but as the last figures I have show unfilled vacancies about as follows -- agriculture - 4,300; coal - 2,500; logging - 22,000; iron and its products - 24,000; construction - 18,000; transportation - 12,000; with a grand total in all industries of about 140,000 -- the way is difficult.

Quebec is naturally the most difficult province. While the percentage of unfit is high and the number entitled to postponement large, there appears to be more manpower available there than elsewhere. The problem of mobilizing this manpower effectively and fairly has not been solved. We have organized to spread information during the summer months, but enforcement presents many difficulties. Most of the usual sources of information are not available and the job is too big for the R.C.M.P. with their present strength. Proper personnel to increase strength are hard to find. Some time ago we asked the Army for 75 French-speaking or bilingual other ranks who could be taken on the strength of the R.C.M.P. We have not yet received any encouragement.

As I said before, the machinery of mobilization is not as efficient as it should be. Some of the difficulties arise from outside sources. Some months ago, at the suggestion of the Army to use available doctors more efficiently, cases for medical revision were sent to Army Boards. This change slowed up revision, but the large majority of cases have been handled. Now, the Army advise that the only Boards available will be those at the 11 reception centres. This means reorganizing our own medical services and more delay and confusion. While the Army advise that their medical reception centres, one for each of the 11 districts, are available to handle all original and revision examinations sent from adjacent areas, the facilities of these centres have not, in general, been developed to the point where they can take care of Army examinations and ours without considerable delay. It is difficult to say when this situation will be completely cured. Incidentally, the rate of rejection at these centres is formidable. They are now rejecting more than half the men sent in, all of whom, after preliminary or revised medical examination, are considered fit for service. Of the rejections, nearly 50% are said to be for mental instability or low intelligence.

The distribution of farm labour has been made much more effective by Dominion-Provincial arrangements. It is hoped that eventually this will provide more men for the armed services. I believe the Boards could and would do more in this direction if men now in the Army were available for peak labour periods. The present method of individual application to return to the home farm or to a specific employer is not considered as rapid or as effective as a method which would allow available men to be placed in areas adjacent to the places at which they are in training. To be of real value the Army would have to act quickly and generously at the critical time.

There are in the ground crew of the R.C.A.F. in Canada many thousands of men fit for service in the Army who could be replaced by men in lower category. The Air Force is willing to take on low category for ground crew, but, as the chief motive for enlistment appears to be the desire to volunteer rather than be drafted, those in categories which are not called do not offer their services. The most effective way of exercising the power of selection would seem to be compulsory transfer between services. If the Air Force did not want compulsory service applied directly, the Army could take on enough low category to provide replacements for high category ground crew selected for the Army. I consider this a very fruitful source. In the meantime, if a real attempt is to be made to fill the Army quota, new classes must be designated.

Enlistment requirements - Aircrew, R.C.A.F.

1. Recently I forwarded to you a brief, a copy of which is attached, outlining in detail the serious situation confronting the Air Force as a result of the alarming decrease in aircrew enlistments and suggesting steps that might be taken to remedy the situation. I must now report that since I prepared that brief the rate of enlistment has not improved and we are now faced with the alternative of presently operating our schools at approximately 60% of capacity or of closing 40% of them completely and operating the remainder at the present rate of intake.

2. Enlistments for aircrew are now averaging 240 per week or approximately 1000 per month as against monthly requirements of 3000. In addition we are now remustering 750 men per month to provide a total intake of 1750 aircrew or 60% of our needs. This makes no allowance for wastage of men who, subsequent to enlistment, are found unsuitable for aircrew training. Although enlistments have been falling drastically since the beginning of the year, we fortunately had 6500 men enlisted on leave without pay at January 1st, 1943, reporting at intervals up to July 1st. This reserve is now entirely depleted and we are depending exclusively on current enlistments and remusterings. The rate of remustering is limited because of the necessity of training ground crew as replacements.

3. The result of this situation is that aircrew now in the Service undertaking basic and pre-aircrew training, together with progressive enlistments and remusterings, will be sufficient to maintain our schools at their present capacity until November 15th of this year, but at that time only four of the seven Initial Training Schools will be maintained. Similarly, at progressively later stages 40% of the Elementary Flying Training Schools, Service Flying Training Schools, Bombing and Gunnery Schools, Wireless Schools and Navigation Schools may be closed for lack of trainees. This forecast, while gloomy, is not exaggerated and is supported by tables attached.

4. I have reviewed the proposed Order-in-Council extending the provisions of the N.R.M.A. and also the memorandum from Major-General Riley to Mr. MacNamara but, while an extension in the age groups to be called up and certain suggestions advanced by Major-General Riley will, if adopted, benefit us to a limited degree, they do not begin to solve our problem and are merely skirting about a problem which must now be definitely faced. If the Air Training Plan is to be a major Canadian contribution to the war and is to be maintained at capacity, this fact must be recognized and acknowledged and a system of priorities must be set up which will assure the Air Force of sufficient manpower to maintain our commitments. The importance of air-power has been recognized by the other United Nations to the point where in Great Britain, Australia and the United States, the Air Force has priority over all other branches of the Armed Services and industry, and enlisted men are allowed to transfer freely if they express a desire for aircrew training. These countries have long realized that air-power is of prime importance, that aircrew must be the very best men with unquestioned motivation and that regardless of their training, such men should be released to the Air Force on their request.

5. Approximately 110,000 men come of age each year in Canada. This is the group from which, under present circumstances, the Air Force is forced to secure its aircrew. Our experience indicates that approximately 40% of this group would be satisfactory for aircrew training. This would meet our requirements provided they were all strongly motivated for service in the Air Force and were available. However, those living on farms are granted almost automatic exemption. University students may enrol for any course, regardless of whether or not the training received is essential to the war effort. Mining, lumbering and war industry all take their quota, leaving the Armed Services to fight with each other for the remainder. We have strong competition for this group from the Army through its Cadet Corps, enlistment of boys of seventeen in the Reserve Army and in special university courses. Therefore, only a small proportion of these men are available when they become of age.

6. Since we cannot depend on the young men coming of age each year to meet our requirements, we must look to other sources. According to a survey made by the Department of Labour there were, on January 30th, 1942, in the industries covered, 356,000 male employees in Canada engaged in non-essential production and services for civilian use. Of this number 174,000 were between the ages 18 - 40. At the same date 196,000 males were engaged in occupations important to civilian welfare but not vital to the war effort. In this group 101,000 were between the ages of 18 - 40. In essential war and civilian industry 646,000 men were between the ages of 18 - 40. It is obvious from these figures that there are sufficient civilian males of military age to meet all anticipated demands of the Armed Services if non-essential industries are ruthlessly curtailed and physically fit men in essential industry are replaced by physically unfit men and women.

7. The Air Force requires less than 40,000 men per year for aircrew training. When compared with the giant armies and industries of the other United Nations, this number of men seems infinitesimal; yet in the R.C.A.F. it is sufficient to make ours one of the great Air Forces of the world.

8. Our recruiting officers are exerting every effort to enlist all available applicants. Every medium of publicity is being used. We are remustering as many men as training facilities, enlistment of women and establishment will permit. But all these efforts are not sufficient. Canada's war effort and commitments must be reviewed in the light of available manpower. The relative importance of industry, agriculture and each of the Armed Services must be determined and manpower allocated accordingly.

9. Although this memorandum may appear to be encroaching on government policy, I would be derelict in my duty if I did not advise you of the situation as it exists and the possible repercussion on the public of Canada if, within three or four months, we are forced to reduce our aircrew training by 40% because of a shortage of suitable trainees.

MEMORANDUM

OTTAWA, 15 Jul 43.

To: The Minister of National Defence

Re: Notes on recommendations made in letter dated 12 Jul 43 by Minister of Labour to Mr. A.D.P. Heeney, Clerk of the Privy Council

Extension of Designated Classes

1. I have repeatedly urged that designated classes be extended to include 18 year olds and married men to 35. The proposal now being submitted to only include 18½ year olds instead of 18 will mean a loss of 50,000 callups. It is pointed out that both U.K. and U.S. commence at 18 years.

2. It is considered that the 18 year old class should be called up. The Minister of Labour estimates 50,000 in the 18½ year old class. Possbily less than 50% of this number would be eligible for service in the Armed Forces because of being of a lower medical category than is acceptable and a large number of those acceptable will already have been pre-empted by Air and Navy, or if not already pre-empted will probably volunteer in either of these two services. (See second last paragraph of the Minister of Labour's letter to Mr. Heeney, where it is stated that from the 18½ year olds should be produced 20,000 to 30,000 men for one of the three Forces).

3. The married group 26 to 30, estimated at 127,560 men, together with the 18½ year old class, will clearly not produce sufficient for the Army's needs after allowing for postponements and rejections. (See last paragraph of Minister of Labour's letter to Mr. Henney). It is obvious that a large number of these men are already in industry and the postponements will likely be heavy, and, therefore, it is important that the married group be enlarged to ensure the required number for the Army.

4. The United States calls up all men 18 - 38, married men with children are deferred but if district quotas are unfilled then local Boards may call up men with dependents. (See Appendix "A" attached).

5. The present intake into the Army is insufficient to meet requirements and unless the numbers enlisted or enrolled are sufficient each and every month to yield 8500 per month (100,000 men per annum), on the basis laid down for reserves considered necessary to meet estimated wastage and battle casualties, the approved Army Programme cannot be maintained. The statement showing the intake into the Army from 5 Apr 43 to 26 Jun 43 indicates a shortage over that 12-week period of approximately 900 men. It is to be observed, however, that in the last 5 weeks of that period, 8255 were enlisted or enrolled, whereas the requirements for that 5-week period on the basis of 8,500 per month would be 9,800, and in my view this downward trend is the true indication of the present position. (See graph attached). The enlistments and enrolments since the 12-week period that is referred to in this memorandum are not showing any improvement. I would point out that the 900 short in the 12-week period is 900 short of minimum requirements - this shortage will be reflected in our trained reinforcements 6 months from now.

So far as the Army is concerned, we can stipulate definitely that our continuing demand, insofar as it is possible to forecast the future, will be an intake of 8,500 men per month, or in round numbers, 100,000 per year. This intake will produce roughly 5,000 men per month for despatch Overseas, 1,500 per month to make up wastage in the Army in Canada, and 1,500 will be returned to civilian life as unsuitable for soldiering. The net drain on manpower is, therefore, about 6,500 per month during the training period.

Married men from 25 to 38 should be called up now as well as the 18 year olds. By not calling such men the country is given the idea of hesitation and reluctance and the need of men is negatived. The effect is to make the country believe there is no great need for men. National Selective Service Regulations are based on the calling up of classes and by extending the age classes a more accurate view of the available manpower is obtained. Moreover, any shortage in the required numbers now affects the number available for reinforcement six months hence. The opportunities afforded by the summer months for extensive training emphasize the importance of maintaining an intake above the average to safeguard against possible deficiencies in later months.

6. Transfer of "A" category Air Force Ground Crew to Army

This matter has been the subject of many conferences with the R.C.A.F. officials and it is understood that the Air Force is no longer enlisting "A" men into ground crew. Arrangements are in process now to secure discharged R.C.A.F. personnel suitable for the Army but no arrangement has been possible for the transfer to the Army of category "A" men in the ground crews of the Air Force.

7. Employment of Army to aid Labour in higher priority industries.

A decision is now being reached relative to troops being employed in agricultural emergencies, but the proposal to release men from the Army for industry after completion of army training would severely disorganize the Army machine. This suggestion shows a complete lack of understanding of the situation. There is no such thing as a H.D. Army only H.D. personnel in the Active Army in Canada. The troops presently employed in operational duties in Eastern and Western Defences, Newfoundland, Alaska, Bermuda, etc., are considered by Chiefs of Staff to be not more than adequate.

The Army in Canada is maintained for the following main purposes:-

(i) The Direct Defence of Canada and obligations to U.S. for Joint Defence.

(ii) To train and administer and service the Forces at Home and Abroad.

(iii) To serve as a source of potential reinforcements for the Army overseas.

(iv) To act as a strategic Reserve to be used if and when required. It must be remembered that the War in the Pacific has yet to be fought.

It is pointed out that H.D. personnel are enrolled to take the place of G.S. men released from Units in Canada to join the Army Overseas, (after further training where necessary). It must be remembered the governing factor is that we must produce 5000 G.S. men for the boat every month. Enlistments are going down and N.R.M.A. men are needed to replace G.S. men who go overseas. The provision of G.S. men in this manner imposes severe administrative burdens and training delays. (G.S. men in many cases have to be retrained to suit the Corps they are reinforcing and the N.R.M.A. men have to be trained to replace them). C250741

8. Men rejected on application for enlistment, certain men discharged for medical reasons and men rejected on call-ups would supply material from which a Labour Corps could be built and these men are all available now to National Selective Service. The Fuel Wood Administrator estimates that he could use 10,000 men cutting fuel wood -- it should not be difficult to find 10,000 men from these sources.

9. Developments and Improvement in "call-up" procedure

It is recognized that the mobilization organization has been expanded and strengthened. This expansion has not yet had time to prove its worth. It is stated that no one can now obtain a job through the employment offices in Canada without proving compliance with mobilization regulations, but the great question is whether employers are living up to the letter of the law. Results of recent industrial surveys indicated that 20% in the designated classes are found without files and a large number of men in this class appear to be able to change employment without applying to the employment offices. Moreover, the problem of locating missing men is not being readily solved. After a survey of the John Inglis plant, March 25, some 291 men failed to respond to Orders-Medical. One explanation was that they had returned to the farms, but there is no verification.

10. Industrial Survey Plan

This plan will prove valuable provided the findings are acted upon with vigor and promptness. They are uncovering many non-registrants and the practical effectiveness of the plan will depend on proper measures being taken to follow up the findings. We have already taken steps to nominate Army officers on the local industrial survey committees and the Army will be represented on the main committee in Ottawa.

The survey of agriculture now being undertaken should also prove of value in redistributing farm labour and possibly increasing the flow of men in the designated class. The improved results cannot be obtained unless the findings are vigorously and properly followed out.

11. Results re Armed Forces

R.C.N. - Owing to the fact that the Navy source of manpower is voluntary, over enlistments in any one month cannot be treated as a criterion of ensuing enlistments. The picture must be regarded in its entirety. An increase in one month might be readily offset in an ensuing month, and the time taken for training must be taken into consideration.

R.C.A.F. - The difficulty that the Air Force is finding in obtaining suitable men for air crew merely emphasizes the point I made earlier - that the new age group should be 18 year olds, not 18½, because it is from the younger men that the Air Force can hope to obtain their requirements.

Army - This has been covered by my earlier remarks - that since May there has been a decided drop in the intake, both enlistments and volunteers.

12. Remaining Pool

Based from statistics on duplicate registration cards and the disposition of the call-ups as quoted by the Minister of Labour in Hansard 4195, 28 Jun 43, it is thought that there is a larger number of untraced men than is indicated. Figures given to us for single men, widowers and married men in the designated class totalled 1,280,000 as compared with the 1,043,000 basis of the Minister of Labour calculations. This difference is now the subject matter of discussion between officers of my Department and National Selective Service.

DISTRIBUTION OF CANADA'S HUMAN RESOURCES, 14 YEARS OF AGE AND OVER

The Table which follows, entitled "Distribution of Canada's Human Resources, 14 years of Age and Over, as at January 30th, 1943", undertakes to show a brief classification of the population in the age class mentioned, in relation to occupation.

Sources: Figures used in the Table are derived from several official sources, including a survey of employment as at January 30th, 1943, made by the Department of Labour; figures compiled by the Department of Munitions and Supply; and figures gathered by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, through the census and otherwise.

Basis: The following explanations regarding the basis of classification will be helpful in interpreting the Table:

1. In Section I "Armed Forces", figures used refer to those in the Forces on January 30th last.

2. In Section II A, "In Industry", figures given under (a), (b), (c) and (d) correspond respectively to classes A, B, C and D in the Labour Priorities system. B. "In Agriculture", as will be seen, includes only male agricultural workers, including farm operators.

3. In Section III, "Farm Women" are set as a class apart, since much of the work of women on the farm goes beyond ordinary housekeeping duties, especially at busy seasons.

4. In Section IV, all students, 14 or over, even though they work during holiday seasons, or engage at part-time work at other times. "Other women (including non-farm housewifes)" would be largely housewives, not gainfully employed. Wives in gainful employment are included in II, "In Industry".

5. "(c) Employable men temporarily not at work", includes those seasonally unemployed and those in process of changing jobs at January 30th.

Priorities: In examining the Table, some of the difficulties of attaining precision when applying priority tables to large numbers of workers, might well be borne in mind. The following illustrations will indicate a few of these difficulties:

Manufacture of a given article for the Armed Forces would carry a high priority -- if for civilian consumption, a low priority. Hence, an estimate of those on high priority work and those in low priority work, within the same plant, must be attempted.

Retail stores in general may rate a low labour priority. If, however, labour shortages threatened to interfere seriously with the distribution of important civilian supplies, a temporary rise in the priority would be indicated.

It is not simple to determine, in all cases, what are "essential" civilian services. Of two services, perhaps one may be dispensed with, providing the other remains: both could be spared only with interference with war production.

Other illustrations might be cited, but the foregoing will serve to emphasize the difficulties in assessing the relative worth in relation to the war effort, of particular lines of employment.

Comparisons: The Table makes comparisons for August 31, 1939; June 1, 1941; and January 30, 1943.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

C250749

Herewith is a note on some problems of National Selective Service administration that John Deutsch and I prepared last month, when these questions were under active consideration by the War Committee. I was not sure there was enough in it to warrant my sending it forward to you, but you may think it worth glancing over. Deutsch has a good deal of first hand information on the subject as he worked with Selective Service on loan from the Department for three or four months last autumn.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

C250750

After listening to two or three sessions of the War Committee wrestling with manpower questions, I have tried to put on paper some general ideas, none of them new, which may be of some interest and help.

The manpower situation in Canada is now tighter than it has ever been. This in itself is an inevitable consequence of ever increasing mobilization for "total war". Every fighting nation is struggling with similar problems. Ours are complicated by the importance of seasonal factors which will make present shortages increasingly severe until the late autumn. Important shortages exist in base metal mining, coal mining, logging, shipbuilding, aircraft manufacturing, fish processing, heavy iron and steel, primary textiles and agriculture generally. The only significant source of additional labour for these industries is to be found in non-essential and less essential activity. The shift in manpower which this involves is a difficult and exacting task for National Selective Service.

The most urgent need is for unskilled and semi-skilled labour for heavy work - in many cases at relatively low rates of pay. This type of labour is not easily found in the less essential industries and consequently if the problem is to be met a considerable amount of re-arrangement and substitution will be necessary. Furthermore, the problems arising out of differences in earnings, changes in residence, losses of benefits, and a great variety of individual circumstances must be faced and provided for. Otherwise the attempts at transfer will accomplish little.

It is clear that careful planning and efficient administration is required. If this difficult job is to be accomplished satisfactorily it is necessary to make some adjustments in the present machinery. Obviously ideal machinery cannot be set up over night nor is it helpful to suggest a far-reaching reorganization. The object should be to make feasible adjustments in the present machinery which would bring important improvements.

The planning and directive organization at the headquarters of National Selective Service does not seem to be adequate. Such organization as had been built up at one time has mostly disintegrated. The first need appears to be for a full-time director of National Selective Service who has full charge of the employment service and is directly responsible to the Minister of Labour. The direction of National Selective Service has become one of the most difficult and responsible positions in the government service and it cannot be carried on satisfactorily by an official who has other important duties.

In order that programmes may be planned and worked out with sufficient foresight and practicability to be effective the director will need a highly competent staff at headquarters to assist him. At present, I am told, there are no more than four or five; twenty-five would be the absolute minimum. Such staff should be built up immediately. It is possible that the other war departments which have passed their peak might be able to make some suitable personnel available.

The employment service of the Unemployment Insurance Commission constitutes the machinery through which the civilian manpower policies are put into effect. During the past two years the role of the employment service has been transformed from an adjunct to unemployment insurance to the main instrument for the allocation of our manpower resources to the needs of war. The organization of the service and the quality of its personnel have not kept pace with this enormous increase in the importance of its functions. The expansion in personnel from around 400 to nearly 5,000 and the increase in the number of local offices from about 60 to over 200 was effected within a framework that was designed for much more limited objectives.

Obviously, it is not feasible to accomplish a rapid and thorough reorganization of the employment service at this late date. However, there are a number of changes which could be undertaken immediately which would bring considerable improvement. I am told that the personnel engaged in the supervision of the local offices is particularly weak and could be strengthened by selective promotion from within the service; the least efficient of the local offices (which includes Montreal) could be taken in hand immediately and put on a more efficient basis; persons with industrial or labour experience who are qualified to assess the labour requirements of industry could be attached to the local offices to advise and assist them in the transfer of manpower from less essential activity. The machinery for the supervision of the service is much too highly centralized. There are five regional superintendents - one for the whole of Ontario. There should be at least twice that many and the areas reduced in size so that problems can be dealt with promptly and with sufficient knowledge of the local circumstances.

Following these changes it should be possible to bring about a general improvement in personnel and methods of operation without causing the machinery to stall. This would require a fairly general reclassification and revision of salary scales. Under the present system and rates of pay it is quite impossible to attract or to retain the kind of personnel that is needed.

I understand that the Manager of the Toronto office receives a salary of $3,600, though he has complete responsibility for every transfer of employment of the several hundred thousand workers in this district. Personnel managers for Eaton's or Simpson's handling perhaps 3,000 or 4,000 workers probably receive two or three times the salary. The establishment approved for the local employment offices did not contemplate the enormously increased responsibility which has devolved upon them and naturally did not provide for recruiting of the type of personnel which their present duties require.

The strengthening of National Selective Service personnel is essential now, but the strain on the organization is not likely to be transitory. The main job of demobilization - both of Services and war industries - that of placing people in new employment will fall upon it. This consideration strengthens, I think, the case for trying right away to build up a really first class placement and employment service, which would be an effective instrument for carrying out National Selective Service policies.

WW II - Manpower
WW II - National Selective Service

re Cardinal Villeneuve's letter

I have made enquiries from Mr. MacNamara. He tells me that the meeting with the University Heads was very satisfactory and its conclusions were concurred in by the University Heads from French Canada.

Mr. MacNamara is awaiting a report from the President of the University of Manitoba (Chairman of Meeting) before making an authoritative report to the Prime Minister and the government. However, he tells me the decision regarding Arts students was to give those who wished to, and were qualified to, embark on Arts courses a postponement for one year in order to do so. This would give them a start on a course which they could continue after the war. It would also help to keep Arts faculties functioning.

If possible I think it would be desirable to delay replying to the Cardinal until the definite report is available, or, perhaps better, to send an interim reply, in general terms, assuring the Cardinal the Prime Minister is interesting himself actively in the matter.

A draft in this sense is attached.

re R. W. Mayhew, M.P. and Shawnigan Lake Lumber Co.

In your letter to Mr. Howe you asked him to let you see the report of the Timber Controller before any word was sent to Mr. Mayhew. It appears, however, from the enclosure to Mr. Howe's letter that the Timber Controller has written direct to Mr. Mayhew.

While the Timber Controller's letter is very friendly it does not deal with Mr. Mayhew's point that there was no shortage of labour at Shawnigan Lake and that the closing of the mill would be a death sentence for that community.

Moreover, the matter is also of interest to Mr. Howe, though not to the Timber Controller, because of the fuel wood supply which is a by-product of the mill and which is badly needed in Victoria.

Do you wish to discuss the matter with Mr. Howe before any further word is sent to Mr. Mayhew?

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ~~PRIME~~ MINISTER

Re Mr. Mitchell's memo to Manpower Committee attached

You asked for a summary. Briefly, the memo suggests:

(1) Transfer of category "A" men enlisted in the Air Force as ground crew to the Army where feasible. for general service

(2) Transfer to the Air Force for ground crew duties of such suitable personnel from Army "trainees" not willing to enlist for general service in the Army.

(3) A joint Army-Air Force Manning Committee to re-assign men.

(4) The immediate establishment of a Labour Corps.

All these suggestions sound feasible and helpful. Would it not be useful to have them considered by the War Committee?

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. HEENEY:

Re. Cardinal Villeneuve's letter

The Director of National Selective Service reported verbally that the meeting with the National Conference of Canadian Universities was very satisfactory and that its recommendations were acceptable to all the Universities represented.

The Minister of Labour has now sent to the Prime Minister a letter to the Director of National Selective Service from the President of the Conference (Mr. Sidney Smith). The gist of its recommendations is contained in the following passage:

> "Under the proposed regulations, male students who are in the normal age bracket for admission to a college or university, may take one year's work therein. Before they can take subsequent years in the college or university each of them who is subject to call under the National Selective Service Mobilization Regulations will be served with Order-Medical Examination unless he is in a course that has been classified as in the national interests, or in aid of the prosecution of the war. If he is in such a course, he will be required to continue his studies in the college or university."

I am not sure how these recommendations are translated into regulations, whether by Order in Council or simply by a directive from the Minister of Labour.

Do you think the Prime Minister should write to the Cardinal before final action is taken or afterwards? If the latter, perhaps we should try to speed up the action.

I assume

J.W.P.

Now I think weight of Smith's letter which seems reasonable – will you draft a reply

MR. HEENEY:

It has been suggested to me that any usefulness the Corps of (Civilian) Canadian Fire Fighters for Service in the United Kingdom might have attained has now come to an end. Please place on the agenda of the War Committee the advisability of having same returned to Canada and demobilised.

The Corps has almost 400 men who, obviously, could be more useful for service in Canada at this time. I understand there is an ample number of national fire service personnel on hand to take care of any emergency that might arise. The Corps presence in England would appear to be a waste of valuable time and manpower. I understand most of its members feel that already a year of their time has been wasted.

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Province of Quebec.

Quebec, October 5th, 1943.

Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ont.

My dear Prime Minister:

I wish to draw your attention to the seriousness of the manpower situation in the pulp and paper industry.

As you know, Canadian mills supply the major portion of United States newsprint requirements, our domestic consumption being an insignificant percentage of our productive capacity. It is therefore obvious that the consequences of any substantial reduction of the output of Canadian mills are borne by American publishers and editors. In the United States, the administration has considered the supply of newsprint of such importance that the pulp and paper industry has been classified as essential.

In this province, the shortage of manpower is especially felt in the woods operations and it is viewed by the operators with real anxiety. Our mills have been built to supply the American market; if the supply fails in an emergency, there are strong indications that after it is over, there will be a demand, in the United States, for the construction of additional mills to supply their domestic requirements. This would, of course, ruin our industry because of the heavy capital investment involved in paper mills and the consequent high fixed charges. Needless to add that this would be a real economic disaster for this province, because newsprint is our largest single industry.

The operators have endeavoured to overcome the labour shortage by employing prisoners of war. This turned out to be impractical because international conventions required accommodation of a type which is not found in our lumbermen's camps. When preparations were made for supplying the accommodation required for prisoners of war, our lumberjacks threatened to quit unless similar accommodation was supplied to them.

I think it is imperative that effective measures be taken at once to remedy a situation which is already serious. In considering amendments to the National Service Regulations, it would be essential to reduce formalities to a minimum. It appears to me that the only thing which would quickly make farmers' sons available in great numbers for lumbering operations would be an express declaration that in so doing, they would retain their present status without having to comply with any formality whatsoever.

I trust this matter will receive prompt and careful consideration and wish to assure you that our officials will always be available to confer with your own officials on this subject.

Yours sincerely,

Adelard Godbout (Sgd)

Re: Manpower shortage for cutting Pulpwood

This was the subject on which representations were made to the Government on September the 21st by a delegation from the Daily Newspapers Association and the Pulp and Paper Industry. Mr. Crerar presided on your behalf, and undertook to see that the matter was placed before Council.

Mr. Crerar told me this morning that he will try to bring the matter up this afternoon, and asked me to let you have a copy of the memorandum I prepared, outlining what took place at the meeting. (I have given another copy of this memorandum with all the exhibits to Mr. Heeney, to be available for you in Council.)

Returned to Prime Minister's Office

Mr. Crerar has also sent me a copy, which is attached, of the letter he wrote to Mr. Mitchell, making a suggestion as to how to cope with the situation. It will be noted that precisely the same suggestion as that made by Mr. Crerar is made by the Premier of Quebec in a letter received this morning.

OFFICE OF THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES

O t t a w a,
October 2nd, 1943

My dear Humphrey,

A few days ago Mr. Robinson, Vice-President of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, came in to see me about their difficulty in getting spare men from the farms to cut pulpwood.

It seems to me that this whole business could be greatly simplified, not only in Quebec but for the other provinces as well. Under the present regulations, a young fellow engaged in farm work can get indefinite postponement from military service because of the essentiality of his farm work, but he cannot leave the farm to engage in other occupations such as wood-cutting for a period longer than sixty days unless he gets a permit from the officers of Selective Service. Now, in many cases, he does not understand this "permit" business; ignorantly perhaps, he - or more often his parents - think that the only way to save him for farm work is for him to stay on the farm.

My suggestion is this: increase the period of two months during which he may work off the farm to a period of five months. I suggest this because at least two-thirds and in many cases three-quarters of the work done on a farm is done in the period between April 1st and October 30th. These are the months during which the plowing, seeding, fencing, haying, harvesting and threshing are done. No military need would suffer. You would remove the fear from the minds of thousands of people in this matter and they would go out as they did before the war started to work in the woods or mines. An announcement well publicised that the period of two months was extended to four or five months would, I am sure, solve the whole problem. It is a certainty that none of these men would be called up during the Memorandum of Meeting in the Prime Minister's Office, September 21st, 1943, between a Delegation of the Canadian Daily Newspapers Association and the Pulp and Paper Industry of Canada, and a Committee of the Cabinet.

The meeting opened at 12 o'clock noon, with the Hon. T. A. Crerar presiding on behalf of the Prime Minister. The other ministers present were:-

Hon. J.L.Ralston; Hon. J.L.Ilsley; Hon. C.D.Howe; Hon. Norman McLarty; Hon. L.S.St.Laurent; Hon. Humphrey Mitchell.

The Canadian Daily Newspapers Association was represented by its President, Mr. Wesley McCurdy; its General Manager, Mr. Ian H. Macdonald; Senator W. Rupert Davies of Kingston and the Hon. Jacob Nicol of Sherbrooke.

The Pulp and Paper Industry was represented by Mr. Paul Kellogg, Acting President of the Newsprint Association of Canada; Mr. F. G. Robinson, Vice-President of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association; Mr. L.J.Belnap of Consolidated Paper Corporation Ltd., and Mr. S.L. de Carteret of Canadian International Paper Co. Ltd.

Mr. Crerar opened the meeting by expressing the Prime Minister's regrets at his inability to be present, and calling upon Mr. Kellogg to introduce the delegation.

Mr. Kellogg pointed out that the meeting was unique in that the Pulp and Paper Industry had joined with the Daily Newspapers Association in making a common submission. At the same time he emphasized the fact that the delegation was not concerned solely with newsprint but equally with the use of pulp and paper for other purposes - many of them vital to the war effort. Mr. Kellogg then called on Mr. Robinson to make the general presentation for the Pulp and Paper Industry. In doing so, he pointed out that Mr. Robinson was speaking for the whole industry, 55% of whose products were not used for newsprint.

Mr. Robinson then read the brief prepared by the Joint Board of the Newsprint Association and the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, of which a copy is attached. He also presented a copy of an accompanying pamphlet entitled "The War Essentiality of the Pulp and Paper Industry of Canada" of which a copy is also attached.

The brief read by Mr. Robinson asked the government to:-

1. Recognize and publicize the general war essentiality of the Pulp and Paper Industry.

2. Extend to woods workers the same deferment of mobilization now extended to agricultural workers.

3. Eliminate Selective Service regulations restricting the flow of workers to the woods, and give greater facilities to the industry's canvassers for woods workers.

4. Provide 20,000 men from the armed forces to work in the woods for 100 days.

5. Assign internees and prisoners of war to woods work.

Mr. Mitchell asked for a break-down of the man-power requirements of the industry and was informed that they could be given in man days as equivalent to one cord per man per day, which would amount to some million and a quarter man days.

Mr. McCurdy then called upon Mr. Macdonald to read the brief prepared by the Canadian Daily Newspapers Association, of which a copy is attached. In the main, this brief stressed two points:-

1. That the newsprint used in Canada accounted for only 2.9% of the total output of the Pulp and Paper Industry for all purposes.

2. That the United States press was largely dependent upon Canadian newsprint and that unless the newsprint was provided, the press of the United States was likely to become increasingly unfriendly to Canada. Signs of this unfriendliness were already appearing.

Mr. McCurdy made supplementary observations in which he pointed out that there was a danger that all the good work which had been done in the United States by the Wartime Information Board (for which his praise was unqualified) would be undone if the good-will of the United States press was lost.

Mr. Howe interjected with a query respecting the woods operations in the United States. He was informed that the proportionate reduction in the United States was as great as in Canada. He thereupon pointed out that it seemed rather gratuitous for the United States press to blame Canada when their own country was doing no better, although it had not been in the war nearly so long.

Mr. Belnap made a verbal supplementary statement in which he pointed out that the shortage of pulpwood would be felt increasingly in the coming year, because inventories had been eaten up and were not being replaced. He emphasized the difficulty the industry had experienced in working out with Selective Service a satisfactory method of recruiting woods workers and particularly finding a means of allaying the fear of farm workers that they would lose their right to postponement if they went to work in the woods. He stated that negotiations with Selective Service had begun in March, and that no solution had yet been found.

Mr. Mitchell interrupted to point out what Selective Service was doing and to draw attention to the fact that the industry now have a thousand canvassers out in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Belnap replied that the delegation were approaching the government in no spirit of criticism, but they wanted help and were merely seeking a satisfactory solution. He pointed out that the Pulp and Paper Industry had undertaken to provide a quantity of fuel wood and it experienced the greatest difficulty in getting labour through Selective Service for the cutting of this wood.

Mr. Ralston pointed out that the present regulations entitled men to leave the farms for 60 days without permits. In reply to Mr. Ralston the view was expressed that 60 days was not long enough.

Mr. Robinson stressed the importance of removing the fears of men in agriculture regarding their mobilization status.

Mr. de Carteret referred briefly to the labour problems of the industry, to the loyal way in which the paper industry and its employees had supported wage stabilization and to the importance, if stabilization were to continue, of providing sufficient pulpwood to ensure year-round operations of the mills.

Mr. Nicol pointed out that at least 80% of the labour required by the industry was available on the farms and could be secured if proper steps were taken to assure farm workers of protection against military call-up. He stated emphatically that this could be done without the slightest impairment of the war effort, since the alternative was for the men to remain on the farms in idleness completely protected from mobilization.

Mr. Kellogg then read a brief entitled "The Pulp and Paper Industry Key to Canada's post-war Economic Stability," of which a copy is attached.

Mr. Ralston then pointed out that by the admission of the delegation itself, 45% of the out-put of the industry was still in newsprint and that it could hardly be argued seriously that the present volume of newsprint production was really vital to the winning of the war. Both Senator Davies and Mr. McCurdy raised the question as to whether Canada was willing to take the risk of losing good-will in the United States by cutting down newsprint production. In reply Mr. Ralston indicated pretty clearly that he considered winning the war more important than appeasing the U.S. press.

Mr. Ralston went on to make it perfectly clear that the army did not constitute an inexhaustible pool of manpower for civilian work, however important, that in his view and in the view of his colleagues, the other defence ministers, the armed forces should have priority in the use of physically fit men of military age.

Mr. Macdonald stated that it was recognized that the principal pool of available labour was on the farms and that it was mainly through the use of this labour that relief was looked for.

Mr. Mitchell expressed the view that means would be found to make the labour on the farms available for woods operations and other essential work.

Mr. Crerar summed up by pointing out that the psychological factor involved in satisfying farm workers appeared to him to be of real importance, and assured the delegation that it and their other representations would be given the most careful consideration; and at the same time stressed the fact that the Pulp and Paper Industry was by no means the only industry in the country which was affected by an overall manpower shortage, which was the inevitable consequence of an all-out war effort.

The meeting adjourned at 2.20 p.m.

A MESSAGE TO MEN WHO WORK ON FARMS and to Those Who Work in the Woods as well as on Farms

Men who work on farms, or who work in the woods as well as on farms, are in exactly the same position as all other citizens: those in the military age classes who desire postponement of their military training must obtain such postponement from their Mobilization Board.

HOW TO OBTAIN POSTPONEMENT

When an order for medical examination is received, it must be obeyed and the medical examination taken as directed.

If the medical examination shows the man to be fit for military service, and no request for postponement has been made, an order will then be sent requiring him to report for military training.

If the man who is ordered for medical examination is needed on the farm, he should at once, and not later than 14 days from the date on the order to report for medical examination, make a written request for postponement to the Registrar of the Mobilization Division who issued the order.

He will be granted a postponement unless it is proven that he is not needed in agriculture.

Any man who fails to comply with any instructions received from the Registrar of his Mobilization Division is breaking the law.

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT TO REGISTRAR

Assistance in making an application for postponement may be obtained from the district representatives of the Provincial Department of Agriculture, Local Farm Production Committees, officials of the local Employment and Selective Service Offices, and the Registrar of the Mobilization Division.

The written request for postponement must give full details covering the following:

Date the farm worker became engaged in agriculture;

Size of the farm;

Number of acres in different crops, wood lot and pasture;

Number and kind of farm animals;

Names, ages, sexes and fitness for farm work of all those working on the farm;

Names, addresses and occupations of those members of the family who are not working on the farm concerned; and

Other questions which may be submitted.

POSTPONEMENT UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE

If the applicant were engaged exclusively or principally in agriculture on March 23rd, 1942, and is essential to agriculture, he will obtain a postponement "until further notice".

POSTPONEMENT FOR SHORTER PERIODS

A man who is now engaged in agriculture, even if he were not so engaged on March 23, 1942, may obtain a temporary postponement. In such cases, it is important that full particulars be given and definite proof be submitted that the man is essential to agriculture.

If the production of the farm does not justify the number of persons working on it, the Mobilization Board may grant the man a temporary postponement and require that he adopt a plan for increasing production or find employment on another farm where he is needed.

The district representative of the Provincial Department of Agriculture, or the Local Farm Production Committee, may advise the man of another farm where he is needed or of ways by which he may increase agricultural production on the farm where he is located at present.

Temporary postponements may be extended from time to time provided a request for further postponement is submitted to the Registrar one month before their expiry date.

The postponement of a man who works on the farm, or who works in the woods as well as on the farm, may be cancelled if he ceases to be essential to agriculture.

FARM WORKERS ON POSTPONEMENT MAY WORK ON OTHER FARMS—OR IN OTHER ESSENTIAL INDUSTRIES SUCH AS LOGGING, LUMBERING, COAL MINING AND FISHING WHEN NOT NEEDED IN AGRICULTURE

It is true that a farm worker must not accept work outside of agriculture if this work interferes with or means a reduction in farm production.

It is also true that a farm worker who has been granted postponement is urged and expected in the national interest to take other work when he can be spared from agriculture.

OCCASIONS WHEN FARM WORKERS MAY LEAVE THEIR FARMS

All farm workers whether, within military age classes or not, may work without a National Selective Service Employment Permit in the following cases when this work will not interfere with farm production:

1. Temporary or regular employment on another farm;
2. Temporary employment for not more than 60 days during a year in logging, lumbering, coal mining, fishing or in any other industry except where the industry is located in a city or town in which the population is over 5,000.

If a farm worker wishes to take work in the following cases, when this work will not interfere with farm production, he must apply for a National Selective Service Employment Permit:

1. Temporary employment for more than 60 days during a year in logging, lumbering, coal mining, fishing, or in any other industry.
2. Temporary employment for any period in an industry in a city or town in which the population is over 5,000.

HOW TO OBTAIN A NATIONAL SELECTIVE SERVICE EMPLOYMENT PERMIT

When a National Selective Service Employment Permit is required, it is obtained from the nearest Employment and Selective Service Office. The district representative of the Provincial Department of Agriculture, the Local Farm Production Committee, or the nearest Postmaster will know the location of this office, and may advise how this permit may be obtained.

MEN NEEDED IN OTHER WORK

Canada needs woods workers as well as farm workers. There are times when farm work is slack. There are also times when a farmer needs all the men he can get to maintain the production of his farm at its fullest extent.

Between times some farm workers can be spared from agriculture—especially in the winter months. IN SLACK PERIODS, FARM WORKERS ARE URGED TO TAKE WORK IN LOGGING, LUMBERING, COAL MINING AND FISHING.

When a farm worker of military age has obeyed the rules specified above, temporary employment outside agriculture will not interfere with his postponement as a farm worker.

ALL MEN WITHIN THE MILITARY AGE CLASSES MUST KEEP THE REGISTRAR OF THEIR MOBILIZATION DIVISION INFORMED OF CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

UN MESSAGE AUX HOMMES QUI TRAVAILLENT SUR LES FERMES

à ceux qui travaillent dans la forêt aussi bien que sur les fermes

Les hommes qui travaillent sur les fermes, ou qui travaillent dans la forêt aussi bien que sur les fermes, sont exactement dans la même situation que tous les autres citoyens. Ceux qui, étant d'âge militaire, désirent obtenir un ajournement de service militaire doivent obtenir cet ajournement de leur Commission de Mobilisation.

COMMENT OBTENIR L'AJOURNEMENT

Sur réception d'un ordre d'appel à l'examen médical, il faut s'y conformer et subir l'examen médical selon les instructions.

Si l'examen médical établit l'aptitude physique au service militaire et si aucune demande d'ajournement n'a été faite, l'appelé recevra alors un ordre de se rapporter pour le service militaire.

Si les services de l'appelé sont requis sur la ferme, il devra immédiatement, et pas plus tard que quatorze (14) jours de la date indiquée sur l'ordre d'appel à l'examen médical, soumettre, par écrit, une demande d'ajournement au registraire mentionné sur cet ordre d'appel.

Un ajournement lui sera accordé à moins qu'il ne soit prouvé qu'il n'est pas un ouvrier essentiel à l'agriculture.

Celui qui ne se conforme pas aux instructions reçues du registraire de sa Division de Mobilisation enfreint la loi.

DEMANDE D'AJOURNEMENT ADRESSÉE AU REGISTRAIRE

Relativement à la préparation de la demande d'ajournement, l'appelé pourra obtenir la collaboration de l'agronome officiel du comté, du représentant de l'Office de la main-d'oeuvre agricole du Québec, du Comité agricole de Production intensive de la paroisse ou du comté, du personnel des bureaux locaux de Placement et du Service sélectif national, du Service de Placement provincial, ou du Registraire de la Division de Mobilisation.

La demande d'ajournement doit donner par écrit les détails suivants:

Date à laquelle l'appelé a débuté dans l'agriculture;

Superficie de la ferme;

Nombre d'acres en différentes cultures, en bois et en pâturages;

Nombre et espèce d'animaux de ferme;

Nom, âge, sexe et aptitude physique aux travaux agricoles de tous ceux qui travaillent sur cette ferme;

Nom, adresse et occupation des membres de la famille qui ne travaillent pas sur cette ferme.

AJOURNEMENT JUSQU'À NOUVEL ORDRE

Si l'appelé était exclusivement ou principalement employé à l'agriculture le 23 mars, 1942, et s'il est un ouvrier essentiel à l'agriculture, il obtiendra un ajournement "jusqu'à nouvel ordre".

AJOURNEMENT POUR DES PÉRIODES PLUS COURTES

Celui qui est actuellement employé à l'agriculture, même s'il ne l'était pas le 23 mars, 1942, pourra obtenir un ajournement temporaire. En pareil cas il est important de donner tous les détails de même qu'une preuve concluante à l'effet qu'il est un ouvrier essentiel à l'agriculture.

Si le rendement de la ferme ne justifie pas le nombre de personnes qui y travaillent, la Commission de Mobilisation pourra accorder un ajournement temporaire et exiger que l'intéressé augmente la production de la ferme sur laquelle il se trouve, ou obtienne du travail sur une autre ferme où ses services sont requis.

L'agronome ou le Comité agricole de production intensive pourra signaler à l'intéressé une autre ferme où l'on a besoin de ses services, ou lui suggérer les moyens d'augmenter la production de la ferme sur laquelle il se trouve.

Un ajournement temporaire peut être prolongé au besoin par un ou plusieurs renouvellements, pourvu qu'une demande de renouvellement soit faite au registraire un mois avant la date d'expiration de l'ajournement.

L'ajournement accordé à celui qui travaille sur la ferme, ou dans la forêt aussi bien que sur la ferme, pourra être révoqué s'il cesse d'être un ouvrier essentiel à l'agriculture.

LES TRAVAILLEURS AGRICOLES BÉNÉFICIAIRES D'AJOURNEMENTS PEUVENT TRAVAILLER SUR D'AUTRES FERMES OU DANS D'AUTRES INDUSTRIES ESSENTIELLES, COMME L'ABATTAGE OU LE DÉBIT DU BOIS, L'EXTRACTION DE LA HOUILLE ET LES PÊCHERIES, LORSQU'ILS NE SONT PAS REQUIS POUR L'AGRICULTURE

Il est vrai que le travailleur agricole ne doit pas accepter de l'emploi en dehors de l'agriculture si cet emploi est nuisible au rendement de la ferme ou occasionne une diminution de production agricole.

Il est également vrai qu'on exhorte le travailleur agricole, bénéficiaire d'un ajournement, à prendre un autre emploi lorsque ses services ne sont pas requis sur la ferme, et c'est ce que l'on attend de lui dans l'intérêt national.

QUAND LES TRAVAILLEURS AGRICOLES PEUVENT QUITTER LEUR FERME

Tous les travailleurs agricoles, d'âge militaire ou non, pourront travailler, sans permis d'emploi du Service sélectif national, aux occupations suivantes, lorsque ce travail n'affectera pas la production agricole:

1. Emploi temporaire ou régulier sur une autre ferme;
2. Emploi temporaire pour une période ne dépassant pas 60 jours dans une même année, à l'abattage ou au débit du bois, à l'extraction de la houille, aux pêcheries ou dans toute autre industrie, excepté lorsque l'industrie est située dans une ville où la population dépasse 5,000 âmes.

Ils devront obtenir un permis d'emploi du Service sélectif national s'ils désirent travailler aux occupations suivantes, lorsque ce travail n'effectera pas la production agricole:

1. Emploi temporaire pour plus de 60 jours au cours d'une même année, à l'abattage ou au débit du bois, à l'extraction de la houille, aux pêcheries, ou dans toute autre industrie.
2. Emploi temporaire, quelle qu'en soit la durée, dans une industrie située dans une ville de plus de 5,000 âmes.

COMMENT OBTENIR UN PERMIS D'EMPLOI DU SERVICE SÉLECTIF NATIONAL

Lorsqu'un permis d'emploi du Service sélectif national est requis, ce permis doit être obtenu d'un bureau de Placement et du Service sélectif national le plus rapproché. L'agronome du ministère provincial de l'Agriculture le Comité agricole de production intensive, ou le Maître de Poste connaîtront l'adresse de ces bureaux et pourront donner des conseils sur la façon d'obtenir le permis.

HOMMES REQUIS POUR D'AUTRES TRAVAUX

Le Canada a besoin de main-d'oeuvre forestière aussi bien que de main-d'oeuvre agricole. À certaines époques le travail de ferme ralentit. Il y a aussi des époques où le cultivateur a besoin de toute la main-d'oeuvre qu'il peut se procurer afin de maintenir le plein rendement de sa ferme.

Aux saisons mortes—surtout en hiver—l'on peut se passer de certains travailleurs agricoles. DURANT CES PÉRIODES DE RALENTI ON DEMANDE AUX TRAVAILLEURS AGRICOLES DE PRENDRE UN EMPLOI DANS LA FORÊT, À L'ABATTAGE OU AU DÉBIT DU BOIS, À L'EXTRACTION DE LA HOUILLE OU AUX PÊCHERIES.

Lorsqu'un travailleur agricole d'âge militaire s'est conformé aux directives indiquées ci-dessus, un emploi temporaire en dehors de l'agriculture n'affectera pas son ajournement comme travailleur agricole.

TOUS LES HOMMES D'ÂGE MILITAIRE QUI CHANGENT D'ADRESSE SONT TENUS D'EN AVERTIR LEUR REGISTRAIRE IMMÉDIATEMENT.

C250776

The purpose of this memorandum is to list with a brief explanation the principal factors of a politico-strategic character to be taken into account in determining Canadian military requirements after the end of active hostilities. These factors can be divided under the three headings of demobilization problems, short-term commitments issuing from the war and long-term continuing aspects.

1. Demobilization Problems.

The reduction of Canadian forces to the size needed to meet short-term and long-term commitments depends on the rate which can be attained of repatriation and demobilization - factors which are partly but not wholly under the control of the Canadian Government.

2. Short-term Commitments.

(a) The only definite post-war commitment so far entered into relates to the provision of army and air forces for occupation in Germany. The size of this commitment has been settled but a final decision has not yet been taken on its duration. The question of Canadian participation in the occupation of Japan is likely also to be raised.

(b) A further factor to be taken into account in assessing the short-term prospects is the possibility of continuing unrest and disorder arising from the war, both in Europe and in the Far East, which might conceivably, if things go badly, lead to calls being made on Canada to furnish contingents for special duties and might thus delay repatriation of overseas forces and the withdrawal of occupation forces.

3. Long-term Factors.

There follows what is merely a list, with a few appended notes, of the chief long-term factors affecting Canadian defence policy.

(a) Home Defence.

This includes such military provision as is necessary for internal security, but it would seem safe to assume that considerations of internal security would not involve any enlargement of the establishments adopted for other reasons. The defence of Canadian territory against outside attack, a primary continuing responsibility of the Canadian Government, is certain to involve closer collaboration with the United States than existed before the war, and decisions on our own requirements will inevitably be influenced by the United States assessment of continental needs. If it is felt in Washington that Canadian provision for home defence is inadequate, Canada may be subjected to heavy pressure either to increase home establishments or to permit the United States to instal and man defences in certain areas such as the Canadian North West.

(b) Commonwealth Defence Responsibilities.

Canada may be asked as a member of the British Commonwealth to assume new responsibilities for Commonwealth defence. It should, however, be within the bounds of possibility to meet in effect any such request through the provision made for home defence (including the local defence of Newfoundland) and through such agreements as are entered into with the Security Council of the United Nations.

(c) Support of the World Security System.

By accepting the Charter the Canadian Government will obligate itself to make an agreement placing at the disposal of the Security Council armed forces, facilities and assistance. It is impossible at this time to forecast the size of a reasonable commitment by Canada in this respect. Canadian defence policy.

(a) Home Defence.

This includes such military provision as is necessary for internal security, but it would seem safe to assume that considerations of internal security would not involve any enlargement of the establishments adopted for other reasons. The defence of Canadian territory against outside attack, a primary continuing responsibility of the Canadian Government, is certain to involve closer collaboration with the United States than existed before the war, and decisions on our own requirements will inevitably be influenced by the United States assessment of continental needs. If it is felt in Washington that Canadian provision for home defence is inadequate, Canada may be subjected to heavy pressure either to increase home establishments or to permit the United States to instal and man defences in certain areas such as the Canadian North West.

(b) Commonwealth Defence Responsibilities.

Canada may be asked as a member of the British Commonwealth to assume new responsibilities for Commonwealth defence. It should, however, be within the bounds of possibility to meet in effect any such request through the provision made for home defence (including the local defence of Newfoundland) and through such agreements as are entered into with the Security Council of the United Nations.

(c) Support of the World Security System.

By accepting the Charter the Canadian Government will obligate itself to make an agreement placing at the disposal of the Security Council armed forces, facilities and assistance. It is impossible at this time to forecast the size of a reasonable commitment by Canada in this respect. likely, however, that we shall be expected to maintain air, naval and ground forces on a scale and in a sufficient state of readiness to enable the despatch of small contingents on the call of the Security Council.

(d) Effect of New Weapons of War.

The impact on long-term defence planning of the development of the atomic bomb and long-range rockets cannot yet be determined. The atomic bomb may in particular change the basis of defence planning throughout the world. As a principal source of an essential ingredient in it, Canada is likely to be called on to play an important part in determining the control and uses of the most terrible engine of destruction which has yet been devised. For the same reason, Canada is placed in an exposed position which necessitates careful examination of the defences of the Northwest Territories.

(e) Reinsurance.

Canada is still most unlikely to be involved in other than a general war, and general wars can only originate in disputes between great powers. The basis Canadian policy should therefore be to do our part to make general wars less likely, and to maintain a reasonable degree of preparation as reinsurance. Canada is likely to be involved in any such war in which either or both the United States and the United Kingdom are participants. With the use of new weapons which greatly reduce the "safe" period for mobilization after the outbreak of war, there will be in all developed countries greater emphasis on preparedness during peace. On the long view, therefore, the most important factor in determining Canadian defence policy must be the estimate of the dangers of the outbreak of general war. Any Canadian estimate will have to take into account the estimates reached by the United States and the United Kingdom.

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

MEMORANDUM for the Prime Minister.

reResolution and Submission of the Mining Association of British Columbia.

The Submission of the Mining Association of British Columbia deals exclusively with labour shortages in the mines in considerable detail.

The resolution recommends the declaration of a state of national emergency in the base metal mines and the provision of special machinery for manpower transfers to the mines to meet labour deficiencies.

You may wish to have the question considered by the War Committee on the first occasion the man power situation is being reviewed.

28/4 - Estimate of situation:

1) despite increasing German pressure, thought that Franco will continue to resist so long as attack on Egypt is successfully held

2) expected there may be some yielding on non-essential questions, including conditional promise of adherence to Axis;

3) if decision to join Axis is taken, and is not followed by disturbances in Spain (which may, however, be apprehended), military co-operation with German forces considered probable to safeguard Spanish claims in Gibraltar and North Africa.

4) Germans evidently attach political importance to an unopposed entry into Spain.

5) Even if Franco yields, an anti-Falangist (Franco party) coup d'etat might be attempted in South Spain or Morocco or Canary Islands. (This might be expected to rally support of Chief Anti-German elements in Spain).

6) U.K. Government apparently would regard resistance to German pressure as of advantage, especially if they were able:

to recognise a separate authority in Spanish Morocco or Canary Islands, and to obtain control of a portion of Spanish shipping.

Moscow Conference

C250795

September 22, 1943

E X T R A C T from:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

.....proposed Four-Power Declaration. The Australian Government has recently developed a new Empire mindedness after going through a period of depression and irritation towards the United Kingdom following the fall of Singapore. This may represent to some extent disillusionment over their hopes of aid and comfort from the United States in the post-war period. In any case Mr. Curtin and Dr. Evatt have, in and after the election campaign, revealed an Imperial consciousness reminiscent of the attitude of some of Mr. Curtin's conservative predecessors. Mr. Curtin has sponsored the development of closer methods of Commonwealth consultation and now in this telegram the Australian Government declares itself in favour of a joint Commonwealth participation in this very important projected declaration.

I think that the telegram calls for a further comment from us addressed to the Dominions Office and repeated to other Dominion Governments. We need not in this argue the question of joint Commonwealth participation and we can confine ourselves merely to pointing out the practical difficulties in the way of this course.

The Australian point about China at the beginning of their telegram is very well taken. The purpose of the Declaration is to secure a commitment from the great military powers to work together towards complete victory and towards the establishment of an effective security system after the war. It is hoped that the Declaration would lay the foundation for an overwhelming combination of force which would end the fear of aggression. On the functional principle, this is primarily a matter for the Great Powers who alone can take the initiative in making long range provisions for international security. In the philosophy of power politics China is an obligation and a danger and not an asset. Inclusion as a party to the Declaration is a question of "face" and a departure from the basic principles as I see it. It is, however, vain to propose the exclusion of China in view of the attitude adopted by the United States Government.

FROM: THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE PRIME MINISTER OF AUSTRALIA, CANBERRA.

TO: THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA, OTTAWA.

CYPHER

NO. 18 CANBERRA, September 18, 1943

..... It appears to us that the positive value of a Declaration of the nature proposed lies in the fact that the three main military Powers, viz British Commonwealth, United States and Soviet Russia would definitely commit themselves to post-war collaboration and to policing the peace settlement.

2. But the terms of obligations are of such a nature that it is extremely doubtful whether China could be regarded as capable of fulfilling them. For this reason the Declaration might lose much of its positive effect if China is included.

3. It may have been politic from the point of view of public opinion in the United States that China should be proposed as a party to the Declaration. It is noticeable that it is not proposed that China should be represented at the Three Power Conference where the proposed Declaration is to be listed and we doubt the inclusion of China in the Declaration.

4. From the point of view of effectiveness of weight and of avoidance of future difficulties, we believe that the three major Powers only should be associated, viz the United States, the British Commonwealth of Nations and the Soviet Union. We appreciate that this entails prior agreement between the members of the British Commonwealth, but if they cannot agree amongst themselves it is obvious that wider agreement is impossible.

.....6.....We consider that in order to agree to it Australia should either separately or as part of the British Commonwealth of Nations be definitely included as one of the parties to act on behalf of the Community of Nations.

Appropriate drafting should make it certain that Australia is included in the connotation of the British Commonwealth of Nations. Our view is that in this and analogous matters it is desirable to give recognition to the British Dominions who have contributed so much to the Empire war effort during the past four years. The view is held to some extent in Australia that this principle is very very important otherwise our status may decline to the position existing before the Treaty of Versailles in 1919. It is desirable to keep in mind that in 1926 the Balfour Declaration asserted the equality of status of British Dominions with the United Kingdom in external affairs.

MOSCOW MEETING OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

Positions Assumed Prior to Convening of Conference

Compiled from Dominions Office telegrams and messages from the Canadian High Commissioner's Office and the Canadian Minister to the U.S.S.R.

MOST SECRET

Mr. Churchill's plan for a conference with President Roosevelt and Marshal Stalin having fallen through because Marshal Stalin's duties kept him at home, while President Roosevelt would have found it difficult to go to Moscow, it was agreed at Quebec (Marshal Stalin later concurring) that a conference of the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R. should be held shortly to formulate proposals which would be submitted for approval to their respective governments. Moscow was chosen as the meeting-place, the conference to begin on October 15.*

In the first week of September M. Maisky explained to Mr. Eden that his government was participating in the conference (a) because it wished to know where the U.S.S.R. would stand after the war in relation to the United States and United Kingdom; (b) because it wanted close contact with both Powers, and a common policy in dealing with minor Axis satellites, and (c) because it preferred a system of general concert to the alternative of separate spheres of influence. He said his government hoped the conference would deal with three categories of subjects:

1. Military matters;
2. Political problems concurrent with military operations;
3. Postwar questions.

Mr. Eden pointed out the difficulty of dealing in any detail with military problems at a meeting of Foreign Secretaries. He thought the purpose of the meeting should be (a) to agree now to work together after the war; (b) to set up some form of international organization for this purpose, and (c) to agree on broad decisions of postwar policy.

Cross-Channel Invasion

The Russians asked for lists of topics which the British Foreign Office and United States Department of State wished to have discussed at the meeting, together with outlines of the proposals they would make in connection with each. No such outlines were sent to Washington or London from Moscow, however, the Soviet Government contenting itself with notifying the others that measures for shortening the war with Germany must be discussed, and that urgent measures should be taken by the British and United States Governments in 1943 to secure a cross-Channel invasion of Europe. Mr. Eden replied that the British and American delegations would include one military adviser each to supply facts, figures and arguments, but that if detailed information was desired as to why a cross-Channel invasion of Europe had not taken place yet, a separate technical mission of Soviet generals and admirals would be given the fullest possible exposition of the subject in London and Washington.

When the conference convened, M. Molotov, its chairman, gave first place on the agenda to consideration of measures to shorten the duration of the war. Mr. Eden was agreeably surprised, in view of advance warnings that the Russians would display considerable toughness in the matter, that in introducing the agenda M. Molotov did not specify that the invasion itself should take place this year, but merely asked that measures should be taken before the end of the year to assure attack and that the validity of previous promises should be confirmed.

Conference Agenda: British and American Drafts

The remainder of the agenda presented to the conference by M. Molotov was a consolidation of items suggested by the governments of the United Kingdom and United States.

covered the following topics:

(a) Italy and the Balkans - exchange of views;
(b) Machinery for questions requiring current and close collaboration; functions and scope of Politico-Military Commission in Algiers;
(c) Question of joint responsibility for Europe as against separate areas of responsibility;
(d) Soviet-Polish relations; general policy toward Poland;
(e) Agreements between major and minor allies on postwar questions;
(f) Agreement in principle as to treatment of Germany and other enemy countries in Europe:
    i. during armistice period - e.g., Control Commission, etc.
    ii. at the peace settlement - e.g., frontiers, military occupation, disarmament, reparations, decentralization of German government, etc. (This subhead to include question of Austria's future);
(g) Common policy toward Turkey;
(h) Common policy toward resistance groups in Yugoslavia;
(i) Peace feelers from enemy states;
(j) Attitude toward French Committee, with special reference to its position in metropolitan France and establishment of an eventual French government;
(k) Future of Poland and Danubian and Balkan countries, including the question of confederation;
(l) Common policy toward Persia;
(m) Postwar economic collaboration with the U.S.S.R.
(n) Draft of 3-power declaration about administration of liberated Allied territory.

The draft agenda proposed by the United States covered much the same ground, but gave first place to the question of postwar world organization and emphasized problems of economic reconstruction not specifically mentioned in the British draft:

1. A Four Nations Declaration to serve as the basis for maintenance of peace and security in the world, the Declaration to provide for consultation and cooperation among the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China;
2.(a) Treatment of Germany and other enemy countries in the European bloc during the armistice period; international military, political and economic control over Germany;
   (b) Steps toward political settlement, length of armistice period, future status of German government, frontiers and other questions;
3. Economic reconstruction:
   (a) Reparations;
   (b) Cooperation in rehabilitation of war damage in U.S.S.R.
   (c) Joint action for assistance to other countries;
   (d) Collaboration on international basis in regard to food and agriculture, transport and communications, finance and trade, and I.L.O.;
   (e) Any specific subject which either of the other governments wishes to raise;
4. Methods for dealing with current political and economic issues and those which may arise as the war progresses.

Four-Power Declaration

M. Molotov's consolidation of the British and American drafts omitted all mention of the first item on the American agenda. The Soviet Government had objected that it would be impossible at a three-power conference to discuss a four-power pact promising cooperation in maintaining peace and security in the world. Mr. Hull succeeded, however, after the conference began, in having the subject accepted for consideration as the second item on the agenda.

Mr. Hull's proposal was a development of a suggestion made by President Roosevelt to Mr. Churchill at Quebec for a United Nations Executive Council and General Assembly to function during the armistice period, the United States, United Kingdom, U.S.S.R. and China guaranteeing by force the fulfilment of armistice terms. In its new form the American proposal was less detailed in its terms but considerably broader in its scope:

1. The four powers would declare their intention to continue united action for the organization and maintenance of international peace and security.

2-3. Cooperation in matters relating to surrender and disarmament of the enemy, occupation of enemy and enemy-occupied territory and violation of terms of surrender.

4. Recognition of necessity for establishing at the earliest possible date a general international organization based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all nations and open to all nations for the maintenance of international peace and security.

5. Mutual consultation and joint action on behalf of the community of nations to maintain peace pending the inauguration of a general system of security.

6. A Technical Commission to advise on military problems involved, including composition and strength of forces available in an emergency arising from any threat to peace.

7. None of the four Powers to employ their military forces within the territories of other States except for purposes envisaged in the declaration and after joint consultation and agreement.

8. Cooperation toward a practicable general agreement for regulation of armaments in the postwar period.

The United Kingdom Government was inclined to support any scheme likely to be acceptable to the Russians which promised United States participation in postwar maintenance of peace if it gave due scope for representation of British Commonwealth interests. To safeguard interests of the Dominions amendments to clauses 5 and 8 were ~~therefore~~ suggested by the British Foreign Office providing for consultation as occasion required with members of the United Nations other than the four principal Powers mentioned in clause 5. It suggested also that in clause 4 the principle recognized should be the sovereign equality of all nations for the maintenance of international peace and security, in which all peace-loving nations, great and small, may play their part. Although the government of the Australian Commonwealth had objected to the inclusion of China in the four-power declaration on the ground that ~~the latter~~ its government would be unable to fulfil the obligations undertaken, the British Foreign Office took the position that the inclusion of China must be regarded as essential in view of the significance attached to it by American opinion. Should the Moscow conference limit itself to a three-power declaration there was every indication that China would be invited to adhere later.*

United Kingdom Draft Agenda: Items in regard to which Mr. Eden hopes for progress at the Moscow Conference

1. Machinery for questions requiring current and close cooperation [Item (b) of British draft]:

This item has been given third place on the Moscow agenda at the special request of Mr. Eden, who is particularly concerned about the effective functioning of the Politico-Military commission now in Algiers. In view of the Soviet suggestion that the work of the Commission should cover not only Italy but liberated Allied territory as well, and Axis satellites which may dissociate themselves from Germany, Mr. Eden is proposing that the work of the Commission should cover the whole of Europe and that its seat be transferred to London, where its Principles enunciated by the Foreign Office for the guidance of the British delegation to Moscow began with statements that Great Britain sought no territorial or other advantage for itself as a result of the war and that the government held strongly to a system of a League of Nations which would include a Council of Europe, with an International Court and an armed power capable of enforcing its decisions. During the armistice period, which might be prolonged, the three Powers and China should remain united, well-armed and capable both of enforcing the armistice terms and of building up a permanent peace structure throughout the globe.

members can more easily keep in touch with European governments.

Mr. Eden intended that the Commission should be composed of representatives of the United Kingdom, United States, the U.S.S.R. and the French Committee of National Liberation. The State Department preferred, however, that the French Committee should not be given a permanent seat on the Commission, and in consequence Mr. Eden is suggesting instead that it be represented on the Commission whenever questions of interest to it are to be discussed.

> The Commission will be given the help of service advisers when necessary, will have access to the Commander-in-Chief and to Allied bodies created to ensure execution of terms laid down for territory occupied by the Allies, and will be kept informed by the three governments. It will have no power to make final decisions, but will report on local developments, advise the three governments, and when appropriate inform the Commander-in-Chief of the advice so tendered.

2. Soviet-Polish Relations [Item (d) of British agenda]

This Mr. Eden regarded as the most significant of the immediate questions coming before the conference. The Poles hoped that the British delegation would do everything possible to have Soviet-Polish diplomatic relations re-established on an unconditional basis before Soviet troops re-entered Poland, so as to lessen the danger of clashes with the population or the setting up of a Soviet communist administration in reoccupied parts of the country. They were most anxious that Mr. Eden should not raise the boundary issue at all at the Moscow meeting, but the British Foreign Secretary did not see how it could be avoided, even though Mr. Hull, with an eye on some 3 million Polish-American votes in the 1944 election, would have preferred to postpone discussion of the question.

It seemed likely that the Russians intended to take over the whole of Poland up to the Curzon line. It was obvious that no Polish government could agree, at least in advance, to the loss of eastern Polish territories, although after the event the attitude might be different. The United Kingdom Government was bound by (a) the Anglo-Polish treaty of 1939, (b) by assurances given to Poland in 1941 when the Soviet-Polish treaty was signed, and (c) by further assurances given in 1942 during negotiation of the Anglo-Soviet treaty. It was thus out of the question to force the Poles to enter into an agreement involving cession of territory, but it would be open to the United Kingdom Government to urge the Poles to come to a settlement with the Russians on the grounds that this was in their own best interests.

Faced by the apparent inevitability of Soviet claims for re-establishment of the 1941 frontiers, the British Foreign Office included the two following principles in the general statement it issued for guidance of the British delegation:

> 1. We reaffirm the principles of the Atlantic Charter, noting that Russia's accession thereto is based upon the frontiers of June 22, 1941. We also take note of the historic frontiers of Russia before the two wars of aggression waged by Germany in 1914 and 1939.
> 2. We should welcome any agreement between Poland and Russia which while securing a strong and independent Poland afforded to Russia the security necessary for her western frontier.

Mr. Eden was prepared to use the ~~inevitable~~ unavoidable cession of Vilna to the U.S.S.R. as a bargaining counter to retain Lwow for Poland. He would suggest that Poland should receive Danzig, East Prussia and Upper Silesia as compensation for territories lost, counting in this on Soviet support. British agreement to such a settlement would be conditioned, however, on the real willingness of the Soviet Government to cooperate in postwar matters in Europe and on the resumption of diplomatic relations between the Soviet Union and Poland--also on cooperation with the Polish and British governments to find a satisfactory solution for outstanding practical questions affecting Soviet-Polish relations.

officials Mr. Eden believed that with the exception of Petsamo in Finland, of which no mention has recently been made, Soviet territorial claims nowhere go beyond the frontiers which existed in 1941. There was no prospect that the Russians would abandon their claim to the Baltic States, held to have voted themselves into the Soviet Union in the 1940 plebiscite. With Finland M. Stalin wanted a mutual assistance pact under which Finnish independence within the 1941 frontiers would be guaranteed by the U.S.S.R. in return for the right to maintain Soviet naval and military bases on Finnish territory. Under this plan Viborg would be lost to Finland. In the south, M. Stalin said, Bessarabia and Northern Bukovina should be included in the U.S.S.R., Rumania being compensated on the west at the expense of Hungary. A Soviet-Rumanian alliance would guarantee Rumania against Hungarian attack, the U.S.S.R. being allowed to maintain bases on Rumanian territory.

Mr. Eden did not intend that his government should reverse its decision not to recognize territorial changes made during the war, but assumed that when the appropriate time came it would raise no objection to restoration of the 1941 boundaries between the U.S.S.R. and Finland, the Baltic States and Rumania. At the peace settlement it would consider any Soviet proposals for alliances or mutual assistance pacts with Rumania and Finland, and even a Soviet claim to Petsamo. He thought it would facilitate the Baltic and Polish settlements to provide that inhabitants of any transferred territories might leave with their movable belongings. If the proposal were made generally applicable the Russians would have less difficulty in accepting it.

4. Common Policy Toward Turkey [Item (g) in British draft agenda]

British policy is aimed at bringing Turkey into the war - not immediately, as the Russians wish, but at a later date. Airfield and base construction work has already ~~been~~ begun and the Turkish army has been supplied with all the equipment it can absorb and the Allies spare. The United Kingdom is trying to persuade the Turkish Government to grant certain facilities appropriate to Allied strategy in the Eastern Mediterranean. Should Turkey fail when the time comes to carry out the treaty obligations hitherto waived by common consent, the supply of further war material would be cut off immediately. Mr. Eden hoped to prove to the Russians that there were no grounds for their suspicion that such material had been supplied to Turkey for eventual use against the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Eden proposed that the delegates should discuss the desirability or otherwise of Turkey's entry into the war as an active belligerent either now or at a later date, and ways in which Turkey might be most useful to the Allies while still non-belligerent. M. Molotov, however, asked for discussion of a suggestion to Turkey that it enter the war immediately. Neither the British nor the Soviet Government desires Turkish intervention in the Balkans after the withdrawal of German troops from that area, although both would welcome Turkish aid in driving the Germans out.

M. Molotov in this connection entered on the agenda a further item - viz., that Sweden be asked to place air bases at the disposal of the Allies for use against Germany.

5. Common Policy Toward Persia [Item (1) in British draft agenda]

Mr. Eden hoped the Moscow conference might lead to a greater degree of cooperation between Russians on the one hand and British and Americans on the other in Persia, where up to the present the Allies have failed to establish satisfactory conditions. Everything possible must be done to ease the strain imposed on the country by its development as a channel of supplies for the U.S.S.R. The economic position is now critical and the country must have financial aid. The Anglo-Iranian Oil Company has advanced royalties and the United States is considering a loan. The U.S.S.R. might aid by revising, for example, the Munitions Factories Contract, which places on the Persian budget the whole burden of arms manufacture in Persian factories for the use of Soviet forces. After the war there should be a rapid withdrawal of Allied controls. Meanwhile every facility should be given the Persian Government and its American advisers to exercise effective administrative control over the whole country, including areas where Allied troops are stationed. It should be possible, Mr. Eden maintained, to overcome many serious difficulties if the representatives of the three Allied governments were willing to cooperate and were able to get the instructions required to this end from their respective governments.

It may be worthy of note that when M. Maisky passed through Baghdad he expressed to the British Ambassador an opinion that it would be necessary after the war to keep open the trans-Persian supply route to the U.S.S.R. He seemed to regret that Americans had taken over control of the railroad as far as Tehran. Furthermore, he observed that the primary objective of the Soviet Government was to prevent disorders in territory adjacent to the U.S.S.R., this being much more important than direct access to warm-water ports.

6. Exchange of Views on Italy and the Balkans [Items(a) and (h) on British draft agenda]

M. Maisky while in London observed that the Soviet Union wanted broad-based, progressive governments in Italy, Greece and Jugoslavia, with all parties - not excluding the communists - represented. Mr. Eden believed there was reasonable prospect that the Russians would coordinate their efforts with those of the British in dealing with the problem of rival guerrilla groups. In Jugoslavia the United Kingdom Government was supporting both Mikhailovitch and Tito, and in Greece a variety of bands, including a left-wing federation of guerrilla groups opposed by the Greek Government but willing to make active trouble for the Germans. In the case of Jugoslavia the aim was to agree with the Russians on a joint policy to urge Tito and Mikhailovitch not to fight each other but to concentrate on fighting the Germans. King Peter assured Mr. Eden in Cairo that if such an agreement were reached, Mikhailovitch would certainly undertake some major operation against the Germans. The Jugoslav Prime Minister, however, seemed to prefer that Mikhailovitch should conserve his resources for the post-German era.

United Kingdom Draft Agenda: Items on which Mr. Eden expects at best only an exploratory approach

1. Postwar Treatment of Germany [Item (f) of British draft agenda]

Of questions on which Mr. Eden expected no definite agreement at Moscow, the two most important, he said, were post-war organization and the treatment of Germany after the war. The first of these has been discussed on pages 4 and 5 above. On the treatment of Germany the Foreign Office statement of principles for guidance of the British delegation made the following points:

> All German (and Italian) territorial expansion under the Nazi and Fascist régimes was repudiated. Nations subjected by Nazi or Fascist violence should emerge with their full sovereign rights at the peace conference, where questions of territorial transference must be settled with due regard to the interests of the populations affected.
> Nazism and Fascism must be extirpated in aggressor countries where they have taken root. Without excluding the possibility of relations with interim governments to avoid unnecessary slaughter, the plan would be to set up democratic governments, based upon the free expression of the people's will obtained under conditions of reasonable tranquillity.
> The future structure of Germany and the position of Prussia as a unit of the German State should be subject to an agreed policy among the three great Powers.
> All necessary measures must be taken to prevent the guilty powers from becoming an armed menace to the peace of Europe, through disarmament and prolonged control of every form of warlike apparatus or organization. But no branch of the European family of nations should be kept in a condition of subjection or restriction except as the general needs and safety of the world required. The authority given by victory must be used to serve the general good and the cause of human progress.

The British and United States Governments were agreed that the Anschluss of 1938 should be declared null and void and that Austria should recover its former status of independence.

The State Department suggested that any declaration on this subject should make it clear that Austrians were expected to make a substantial contribution toward their own liberation. The United Kingdom Government was interested in the possibility of increasing Austria's economic and political stability by including it in some regional European federation or confederation

2. Administration of Liberated Territory [Item (n) of British draft agenda]

In planning for the administration of liberated Allied territory in general, the British Foreign Office proposed the restoration of self-government as soon as possible, either under the Allied government concerned or, where no such government existed, under an appropriate authority capable of exercising governmental powers pending formation of a freely elected, constitutional government.

While military operations were in progress the Allied Commander-in-Chief for the area must exercise supreme authority in civil as well as military affairs, but as the progress of operations permitted this power was to be transferred. Meanwhile administrative and judicial services would be conducted as far as possible by citizens of the country in question who had shown their loyalty to the Allied cause.

3. Government of France [Item (j) of British draft agenda]

In the particular case of France, a plan evolved jointly by the Foreign Office and State Department foreshadowed - subject only to the primary purpose of defeating Germany - the earliest possible liberation of the country and the creation of conditions in which a democratically constituted French authority might take over the civil administration.

When the invasion began, the civil affairs staff of the Supreme Allied Commander would establish relations with resistance groups, trying to hold an even balance between their various claims and securing their cooperation in civil affairs. There would be no dealings with the Vichy régime except to liquidate it. None would be employed in office who had wilfully collaborated with the enemy or deliberately acted in a manner hostile to the Allied cause. Citizens would enjoy the largest measure of personal and political liberty compatible with military security, including freedom of speech, of opinion, of correspondence and of the press. The French flag would be flown on French public buildings.

Military control of civil affairs would be as brief as possible, ending when so determined by the Combined Chiefs of Staff on the recommendation of the Supreme Allied Commander. If circumstances permitted, the transfer of civil authority might be progressive. In the military period the Director of Civil Affairs appointed by the Supreme Allied Commander would be a French officer from the French contingent or from the French Military Liaison Mission. The Committee of National Liberation, moreover, would be invited to appoint to the headquarters of the Supreme Allied Commander a Military Mission on Civil Affairs to assist in drawing up plans and to advise on policy.

4. Great Powers: Joint Responsibility or Separate Spheres of Influence? Agreements between Major and Minor Allies

[Items (c) and (e) of British draft agenda]

M. Maisky was speaking for his government when he told Mr. Eden in September that the U.S.S.R. preferred a system of general concert in Europe to the alternative of separate spheres of influence (see p. 1). The United Kingdom Government did not think it consonant with this principle that the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia should enter into a bilateral agreement now for close collaboration after the war. Such an agreement would be regarded as directed against Poland. It was of no avail to say that Poland might adhere to the agreement, since the latter was negotiated with Czechoslovak, not Polish, interests in mind and would therefore offer no benefits to Poland. It was realized that Dr. Benes was under some pressure from émigré public opinion to hasten conclusion of the agreement, but the British Government felt bound to discourage its signature pending clarification at the Moscow conference of the important issues it raised. Mr. Eden observed that it would even be necessary for Dr. Benes to transfer his government from London to Moscow if in the meantime he signed the Soviet-Czechoslovak agreement without British concurrence.

What Mr. Eden himself proposed to do was to tell the Soviet Government that if at any time the way seemed clear for a tripartite agreement to include Poland as well as the U.S.S.R. and Czechoslovakia, the United Kingdom Government would do everything it could to bring this about. It might even offer to participate in the agreement, since otherwise there would seem little chance of reaching a stable solution of Eastern European questions.

Under the Anglo-Soviet treaty of May 1942 both the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. had promised to collaborate in postwar matters. Since both recognized the importance of securing in the final settlement a just balance between rival claims that would be put forward by other European governments, Mr. Eden now proposed what he called a self-denying ordinance under which the U.S.S.R. and Great Britain would both forego the right to enter into separate bilateral agreements about the postwar period with other European Allies. If the Soviet government agreed to this renunciation, Mr. Eden thought it would be worth while to refrain from proposing or agreeing to any exceptions.

On the wider issue of joint responsibility of the great Powers for the welfare of Europe as a whole, the British Foreign Office prepared a draft declaration for publication after the conference if the Soviet Government agreed.

The declaration opened with references to (a) the common responsibility of the United Nations, (b) the dependence of the welfare of Europe on the widest possible cooperation among the nations concerned, and (c) separate combinations which in the past had spread jealousy and suspicion and had led to economic and armed rivalries. It then asserted the following principles:

1. Each people is free to choose its own form of government and way of life, provided it respects the rights of other peoples equally.

2. States are therefore free to associate themselves with others for their common betterment, if the international body foreshadowed in the Four Power Declaration approves and if the association in question is not directed against the welfare or stability of any other State.

3. Subject to the above conditions, the powers signing the declaration will regard it as their duty and interest to assist other European States to form associations to promote their common welfare and the general prosperity of the Continent.

4. For their own part they will not seek to create any separate areas of responsibility in Europe nor recognize such for others, but rather affirm their interest in the wellbeing of Europe as a whole.

5. Other Items on British Draft Agenda

There were two items on the British draft agenda concerning which the Foreign Office did not circulate any general observations prior to the conference. These were postwar economic collaboration with the U.S.S.R. - item (m) - and peace feelers from enemy States - item (i). A peace approach from Rumania to the United Kingdom, asking for an Anglo-American occupation before the country could be occupied by Russian forces, was reported to the governments of the U.S.S.R. and the United States by the Foreign Office, however, and with the concurrence of Soviet authorities it was decided that the terms of Rumania's unconditional surrender should be referred to the Political-Military Commission.

ANGLO-SOVIET-AMERICAN COMMUNIQUE ON THE CONFERENCE IN MOSCOW OF THE THREE FOREIGN SECRETARIES

The Conference of Foreign Secretaries of the United States of America, Mr. Cordell Hull; of the United Kingdom, Mr. Anthony Eden; and of the Soviet Union, Mr. V. M. Molotov, took place at Moscow from the 19th to 30th of October 1943. There were twelve meetings. In addition to the Foreign Secretaries, the following took part in the Conference:

For the United States of America: Mr. W. Averell Harriman, Ambassador of the United States; Major-General John R. Deane, United States Army; Mr. Green H. Hackworth, Mr. James C. Dunn, and experts.

For the United Kingdom: Sir Archibald Clark Kerr, Ambassador; Mr. William Strang; Lieutenant General Sir Hastings Ismay, and experts.

For the Soviet Union: Marshal K. E. Voroshilov, Marshal of the Soviet Union; Mr. A. Y. Vyshinski, Mr. M. M. Litvinov, Deputy People's Commissars for Foreign Affairs; Mr. V. A. Sergeyev, Deputy People's Commissar for Foreign Trade; Major General A. A. Gryzlov, of the General Staff; Mr. G. F. Saskin, Senior Official of People's Commissariat for Foreign Affairs, and experts.

The agenda included all questions submitted for discussion by the three governments. Some of the questions called for final decisions, and these were taken. On other questions, after discussion, decisions of principle were taken: These questions were referred for detailed consideration to commissions specially set up for the purpose, or reserved for treatment through diplomatic channels. Other questions again were disposed of by an exchange of views. The Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union have been in close cooperation in all matters concerning the common war effort, but this is the first time that the Foreign Secretaries of the three governments have been able to meet together in conference.

In the first place there were frank and exhaustive discussions of the measures to be taken to shorten the war against Germany and her satellites in Europe. Advantage was taken of the presence of military advisers representing the respective Chiefs of Staff in order to discuss definite military operations with regard to which decisions had been taken and which are already being prepared in order to create a basis for the closest military cooperation in the future between the three countries.

Second only to the importance of hastening the end of the war was the recognition by the three governments that it was essential in their own national interests and in the interest of all peace-loving nations to continue the present close collaboration and cooperation in the conduct of the war into the period following the end of hostilities, and that only in this way could peace be maintained and the political, economic, and social welfare of their peoples fully promoted.

This conviction is expressed in a declaration in which the Chinese Government joined during the conference and which was signed by the three Foreign Secretaries and the Chinese Ambassador at Moscow on behalf of their governments. This declaration published today provides for even closer collaboration in the prosecution of the war and in all matters pertaining to the surrender and disarmament of the enemies with which the four countries are respectively at war. It set forth the principles upon which the four governments agree that a broad system of international cooperation and security should be based. Provision is made for the inclusion of all other peace-loving nations, great and small, in this system.

The Conference agreed to set up machinery for ensuring the closest cooperation between the three governments in the examination of European questions arising as the war develops. For this purpose the Conference decided to establish in London a European Advisory Commission to study these questions and to make joint recommendations to the three governments.

Provision was made for continuing when necessary the tripartite consultations of representatives of the three governments in the respective capitals through the existing diplomatic channels.

The Conference also agreed to establish an Advisory Council for matters relating to Italy to be composed in the first instance of representatives of their three governments and of the French Committee of National Liberation. Provision is made for addition to this Council of Representatives of Greece and Yugoslavia in view of their special interests arising out of aggressions of Fascist Italy upon their territory during the present war. This Council will deal with day to day questions other than military preparations and will make recommendations designed to coordinate Allied policy with regard to Italy.

The three Foreign Secretaries considered it appropriate to reaffirm by a declaration published today, the attitude of the Allied Governments in favor of the restoration of Democracy in Italy.

The three Foreign Secretaries declared it to be the purpose of their governments to restore the independence of Austria. At the same time they reminded Austria that in the final settlement, account will be taken of efforts that Austria may make towards its own liberation. The Declaration on Austria is published today.

The Foreign Secretaries issued at the Conference a Declaration by President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill, and Premier Stalin containing a solemn warning that at the time of granting any armistice to any German Government, those German officers and men and members of the Nazi Party who have had any connection with atrocities and executions in countries overrun by German forces, will be taken back to the countries in which their abominable crimes were committed to be charged and punished according to the laws of those countries.

In an atmosphere of mutual confidence and understanding which characterized all the work of the Conference, consideration was also given to other important questions. These included not only questions of a current nature but also questions concerning treatment of Hitlerite Germany and its satellites, economic cooperation and assurance of general peace.

No. 460

CONFIDENTIAL RELEASE FOR PUBLICATION AT 1:00 P.M., E.W.T., MONDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1943. NOT TO BE PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED, QUOTED FROM OR USED IN ANY WAY.

JOINT FOUR-NATION DECLARATION

The Governments of the United States of America, United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and China:

united in their determination, in accordance with the Declaration by the United Nations of January 1, 1942, and subsequent declarations, to continue hostilities against those Axis powers with which they respectively are at war until such powers have laid down their arms on the basis of unconditional surrender; conscious of their responsibility to secure the liberation of themselves and the peoples allied with them from the menace of aggression; recognizing the necessity of ensuring a rapid and orderly transition from war to peace and of establishing and maintaining international peace and security with the least diversion of the world's human and economic resources for armaments; jointly declare:

1. That their united action, pledged for the prosecution of the war against their respective enemies, will be continued for the organization and maintenance of peace and security.

2. That those of them at war with a common enemy will act together in all matters relating to the surrender and disarmament of that enemy.

3. That they will take all measures deemed by them to be necessary to provide against any violation of the terms imposed upon the enemy.

4. That they recognize the necessity of establishing at the earliest practicable date a general international organization, based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all peace-loving states, and open to membership by all such states, large and small, for the maintenance of international peace and security.

5. That for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security pending the reestablishment of law and order and the inauguration of a system of general security, they will consult with one another and as occasion requires with other members of the United Nations with a view to joint action on behalf of the community of nations.

6. That after the termination of hostilities they will not employ their military forces within the territories of other states except for the purposes envisaged in this declaration and after joint consultation.

7. That they will confer and cooperate with one another and with other members of the United Nations to bring about a practicable general agreement with respect to the regulation of armaments in the post-war period.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

C250820

The attached analysis of the results of the Moscow discussion has been prepared by Miss MacCallum. It is, of course, based primarily on the Dominions Office telegrams and on messages received from Wilgress during the course of the Conference. I think you will find it an interesting conspectus of the discussions and the decisions reached. The analysis of gains and losses on the last page is rather over-simplified, but does give an indication of the readiness to make compromises in the common interest which was shown by each of the three Great Powers.

MOSCOW MEETING OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

Discussions and Decisions

Compiled from Dominions Office Telegrams and messages from the Canadian Minister to the U.S.S.R.

MOST SECRET

Decisions of the tripartite conference held at Moscow from October 19 to 30, 1943 are embodied in the following documents, published and unpublished:

Published - Joint communiqué referring to subjects discussed under all general headings of the agenda except the Balkans, Poland, Persia, agreements between major and minor powers, treatment of liberated Allied territory and the question of confederations and separate spheres of influence in Europe.

Texts of four declarations on general security, Italy, Austria and atrocities respectively.

Unpublished - two protocols, one highly secret summarizing military conversations, the other less secret summarizing unpublished decisions about other items of the agenda.

Measures to Shorten Duration of the War

The Russians naturally manifested considerable anxiety to have arrangements made during the Moscow Conference which would shorten the war and relieve demands on the Soviet economy and on the endurance of the Russian people. M. Molotov asked for discussions under three headings - viz., a cross-Channel invasion, immediate entry of Turkey into the war and the placing of Swedish air bases at the disposal of the Allies.

(a) Cross-Channel invasion - Discussions of this subject went much more smoothly than had been anticipated and dispelled Russian misconceptions of Quebec Conference decisions about the urgency of attending to the war in the Far East. After statements to the full conference by General Ismay and General Deane and a more detailed discussion in restricted session the Soviet delegates, although clearly disappointed, appeared to accept the Anglo-American time-table as the best that could be expected in the circumstances. Marshal Stalin is said to have laughed off references to the Soviet press campaign for immediate opening of a second front in Western Europe.

(b) Turkey's entry into the war - Mr. Eden and Mr. Hull deprecated any attempt to force Turkey into the war immediately, Mr. Eden pointing out that the Allies would be unable to provide even a fraction of the air support they had promised to send if Turkey were to be attacked. M. Molotov was insistent, however, that Turkish participation would be less useful at a later stage than now. After consulting his government Mr. Eden agreed that Turkey should be asked for (a) the immediate use of air bases in southwestern Anatolia and (b) for a declaration of war before the end of 1943. Mr. Hull, lacking authority from Washington, was unable to take part in this decision, but it was understood that if possible he would subscribe later.

(c) Swedish air bases - After consulting their respective governments both Mr. Eden and Mr. Hull discouraged M. Molotov's suggestion that Sweden be asked to provide air bases for use against Germany, Mr. Eden on the ground that such bases were not required for the Allied bomber offensive, Mr. Hull on the ground that this was not an opportune moment to make the request. Mr. Eden had already pointed out that Sweden would almost certainly ask for guarantees, which the Allies might not be able to provide. Neither the U.S.S.R. nor the United Kingdom had a long-standing alliance with Sweden, whose attitude would likely be affected by Soviet policy toward Finland. The question was left to the three governments to consider further in the light of the views expressed.

General Security: Four Power Declaration

M. Molotov seemed reluctant at first to have a four power declaration on general security discussed at all at a tripartite conference, but yielded to Mr. Hull's desire to have it entered as the second item on the agenda. He further agreed to the signing of the declaration on behalf of the Chinese Government at the same time as the signatures of the three Foreign Secretaries were affixed.

The declaration pledged the four powers to united action for the organization and maintenance of peace and security after the defeat of their respective enemies (Article 1), and in matters relating to the surrender and disarmament of common enemies (Article 2). They would take measures necessary to prevent violation of terms imposed on the enemy (Article 3). They recognized the necessity of establishing a general international organization for the maintenance of international peace and security which would be based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all peace-loving States and would be open to membership by all such States, large and small (Article 4). The signatories would meanwhile consult with one another and as occasion required with other members of the United Nations, (a) with a view to joint action on behalf of the community of nations (Article 5), and (b) to achieve a general agreement for postwar regulation of armaments (Article 7). They also undertook, after the termination of hostilities, not to employ their military forces within the territory of other states except for purposes envisaged in the declaration and after joint consultation (Article 6).

The United Kingdom Government protested that 'agreement' as well as 'joint consultation' ought to be required in Article 6, but Mr. Eden was unable to persuade M. Molotov to accept the original text in this sense. Neither would M. Molotov agree to retention in Article 2 of a pledge of joint action in matters relating to occupation of enemy and enemy-held territory. At Mr. Hull's request no specific agreement was concluded about preparatory work for the postwar organization mentioned in Article 4, but it was arranged that further conversations would take place, preferably in Washington, the lead in the matter being tacitly left to the United States Government.

Advisory Commission for Europe and Advisory Council for Italy

Whereas the American delegation was primarily concerned with the success of its proposal for a four power declaration on general postwar security, Mr. Eden's chief interest was in securing an arrangement to facilitate continuous collaboration among the three governments dealing with current European problems. He proposed that this be done by expanding the functions of the Mediterranean Commission, which at the moment was confining its attention to Italian affairs, and moving its headquarters from Algiers to London, where it could more easily keep in touch with European governments in exile. Since, however, the Soviet authorities were anxious to participate in day-to-day decisions affecting Italy, for which the London Commission would not have time, it was agreed that this part of the existing responsibilities of the Mediterranean Commission should be handed over to an Allied Advisory Council for Italy.

(a) Advisory Commission for Europe - The Commission which Mr. Eden asked to have set up in London was not to be confused with the so-called United Nations Commission for Europe which the War Cabinet of the United Kingdom had planned in June, to be composed of high-ranking political representatives of the United Kingdom, United States, U.S.S.R., European allies and any Dominions willing to contribute to the policing of Europe. This Commission had been proposed as a supreme United Nations body in Europe to direct and coordinate the activities of armistice commissions, the Allied Commander in Chief and any United Nations civilian authorities that might be created - also to deal with current problems, military, political and economic, connected with maintenance of order. The plan proposed by Mr. Eden at the Moscow Conference, however, was for a planning body representing the three leading powers, whose work would begin immediately and whose proposals would be referred to the three governments for approval. It would provide a medium for closer, more continuous collaboration among the three governments than could be achieved by means of occasional tripartite conferences, although it would be supplemented by such conferences and by diplomatic discussions in the three capitals.

> Terms of reference for the European Advisory Commission specified that representatives of the three powers should hold the presidency in rotation; its seat would be in London. It would be assisted where necessary by technical advisers, civilian and military, and have a joint secretariat.
> It would study and make joint recommendations on European questions connected with termination of hostilities referred to it by the three governments, including detailed recommendations on (a) terms of surrender and (b) on machinery to ensure fulfilment of these terms.

The Canadian Government had suggested that a more broadly based Commission might find it easier to enlist the full cooperation of other governments in the liberation and pacification of Europe. The Netherlands Government had asked for a fourth permanent seat in the Commission, to be held by representatives of smaller European nations in rotation, and the French Committee of National Liberation had asked to be included as well. Mr. Eden proposed, however, merely that representatives of other members of the United Nations should be invited by the three Powers to participate in discussions when the Commission was taking up questions affecting their interests. To inquirers who pressed for wider membership Mr. Eden pointed out that the Commission was an advisory body, a device to make it easier for the powers to clear their own minds, and in no sense intended to be a means of dictating to other nations or of taking final decisions without reference to the latter. A large planning body would be unworkable. Provision was made for revising the terms of reference if circumstances should arise which called for extending the membership and competence of the Commission.

(b) Advisory Council for Italy - M. Molotov expressed some concern about the way things were going in Italy, where the U.S.S.R. was not yet represented, and proposed seven urgent political measures to hasten elimination of Fascist influence and restore democratic freedoms and processes of local and national government. These measures were agreed to and issued as a public declaration at the close of the conference. M. Molotov also hoped, apparently, that the proposed Advisory Council for Italy, on which the U.S.S.R. would be represented, might be given direct authority over Allied control commissions which might include no Soviet members. The British and American delegations refused, however, to allow the authority of the Allied Commander in Chief to be diminished in this sense. It was agreed that he should continue as president of the Control Commission until time came to free the Italian administration from direct military control, after which the Advisory Council for Italy would assume direction of the work of the Commission. Until then the Council would advise the Commander in Chief on general policy connected with the work of control. Its particular duty would be to watch operation of machinery set up to enforce terms of surrender. It would keep itself closely informed of current Italian affairs and advise the three governments and the French Committee on problems other than those relating to military operations. It would not have power to take final decisions.

Germany, Austria and Satellite States

Mr. Hull proposed for Germany a broad-based democracy operating under a bill of rights to safeguard civil and political liberties of the individual and free elections to a federal government, to which the occupying authorities would gradually transfer authority for internal administration. Inasmuch as the British and Soviet delegations wanted to study the implications of dismemberment of Germany by force before they consented to creation of a federal government, the American document, with which in other respects there was general agreement, was referred to the Advisory Commission on Europe for further consideration.

A declaration on German atrocities was adopted for publication in the hope that it might discourage further enemy terrorism - also a declaration on restoration of Austrian independence, which was amended by the Soviet delegation (a) so as to emphasize Austria's responsibility for participation in the war on Germany's side and (b) so as to suggest that in the future Austrians would enjoy a new security not 'in association with' but 'as well as' neighbouring states.

In regard to peace feelers from Germany's satellites, it was agreed that no approach should be considered unless addressed to all three of the Allied governments in the form of an offer of unconditional surrender. This decision was not to be made public.

Czechoslovakia and Poland

Mr. Eden was forced to give up the plans he had made for obstructing the proposed Soviet-Czechoslovak treaty. He had intended to ask the Soviet delegation in the interests of European peace for a self-denying agreement under which the leading Powers would forego the right to enter into separate bilateral agreements about the postwar period with smaller European states. He found, however, that the proposed Soviet-Czechoslovak treaty had been redrafted so as to leave it open to accession by third states and that it contained no reference to boundaries or territorial integrity. M. Molotov told him that Dr. Benes had already been invited to come to Moscow to sign it. In the circumstances, Mr. Eden withdrew his objections. The Foreign Office thereupon instructed him not to proceed with the self-denying agreement, which would have tied the hands of the United Kingdom after the Soviet Government had won its point. Mr. Eden was also asked to use his acquiescence in the matter of the Czechoslovak treaty as a lever to secure re-establishment of normal diplomatic relations between the U.S.S.R. and Poland, without which it would be impossible for the Polish Government either to accede to the Soviet-Czechoslovak treaty or to take part in any discussions of the Advisory Commission for Europe which might affect Polish interests.

M. Molotov, however, would go no farther than to say the Soviet Government wanted an independent Poland, which it would be willing to aid, but that first a friendly Polish government must be established. Mr. Eden thereupon gave up his intention of raising the question of Poland's boundaries, but he left the conference believing it was not impossible that in the friendlier atmosphere now prevailing normal relations between the Polish and Soviet Governments might in due course be re-established.

Policy in Liberated Territories

Mr. Eden hoped for a declaration to reassure inhabitants of enemy-occupied territories which would promise that the three governments would follow the same policy in liberated regions. Mr. Hull, however, insisted that the question was too complicated for the conference to discuss, and M. Molotov felt, similarly, that the question of the administration of France was both complicated and delicate. The matter was accordingly referred to the Advisory Commission for Europe as one of the first it should consider. Mr. Hull said it involved decisions as to how far the three governments would go in maintaining by force governments of the sort they desired. They might want to restore certain refugee governments but perhaps not all of them.

Confederations and Spheres of Influence

Neither Mr. Hull nor M. Molotov warmed to Mr. Eden's draft declaration favouring European confederations and ruling out separate areas of responsibility for the larger powers. Mr. Hull's government had not yet made up its mind about confederations and

M. Molotov thought it was premature to discuss the matter before ascertaining the views of the peoples concerned. Small states should be given a chance to find their own feet after the war. The subject was therefore referred back to the three governments for further study.

Persia

No progress whatsoever was made toward securing a more cooperative attitude on the part of the U.S.S.R. in questions relating to Persia. In spite of strong pressure the Soviet delegation would commit itself to no immediate declaration about closer collaboration, still less to reduction of military and civil personnel after the war. The question was therefore referred to representatives of the three governments in Teheran for further consideration.

The Balkans

Since M. Molotov showed an unwillingness to discuss Balkan problems in the full conference, Mr. Eden took up the subject with him in private conversation. He was unable to persuade M. Molotov to send officers to join the British military mission accredited to Mihailovitch, but agreed to accept and give special facilities to Russian officials who would join the British mission operating with the Partisans in Jugoslavia.

Conclusion

In the give and take of the conference, which was one of the causes of its success, all three delegations won successes to which they attached particular importance and all three succeeded in blocking some measures which they viewed with misgiving. A rough tabulation of what was yielded and won in this sense by the various delegations follows.

MOST SECRET

For the Prime Minister's approval

MEMORANDUM FOR THE UNDER-SECRETARY

Dominions Office telegram D. 1102 of December 14th reports the initiation of discussions between London and Washington on the course to be followed to give effect to paragraph 4 of the Four Power Declaration on security issued at Moscow. The United States have proposed (and the Soviet Government have agreed) that the parties to the Declaration should invite the adhesion of other United Nations to this paragraph, which reads as follows:

> "That they recognize the necessity of establishing at the earliest practicable date a general international organization, based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all peace-loving states, and open to membership by all such states, large and small, for the maintenance of international peace and security."

The United Kingdom without rejecting this suggestion has proposed that there should first be a preliminary exchange of views between the U.S., U.K. and U.S.S.R. In London they favour pressing on withothe establishment of the organization, possibly even before the defeat of Germany.

It is open to question whether we should make any comment at this stage. I do not myself like the United States suggestion that all the other United Nations should merely be asked to adhere to the paragraph quoted above. This would repeat the sort of procedure adopted in the Declaration by United Nations of January 1st, 1942, when the Atlantic Charter was generally accepted, but to take this line now would emphasize the gulf between the Great Powers and the rest in a more direct fashion since the Declaration of January 1, 1942, constituted the acceptance of the Atlantic Charter by the U.S.S.R. and China as well as by the other United Nations. In short the U.S. proposal would be an invitation from the big boys to the little fellows to sign on the dotted line.

It is important that some further development should soon take place of the plans for international security and at a very early stage countries other than the Great Powers should be brought into the picture. I should prefer this to be done initially by an expansion of the Moscow statement rather than its mere repetition. Probably this would have to be agreed on in the first place between the U.S., U.K. and U.S.S.R. and we might, therefore, indicate to London that we support their proposal for further talks before approaching other Governments.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE UNDER-SECRETARY

Dominions Office telegram D. 1102 of December 14th reports the initiation of discussions between London and Washington on the course to be followed to give effect to paragraph 4 of the Four Power Declaration on security issued at Moscow. The United States have proposed (and the Soviet Government have agreed) that the parties to the Declaration should invite the adhesion of other United Nations to this paragraph, which reads as follows:

> "That they recognize the necessity of establishing at the earliest practicable date a general international organization, based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all peace-loving states, and open to membership by all such states, large and small, for the maintenance of international peace and security."

The United Kingdom without rejecting this suggestion has proposed that there should first be a preliminary exchange of views between the U.S., U.K. and U.S.S.R. In London they favour pressing on with the establishment of the organization, possibly even before the defeat of Germany.

It is open to question whether we should make any comment at this stage. I do not myself like the United States suggestion that all the other United Nations should merely be asked to adhere to the paragraph quoted above. This would repeat the sort of procedure adopted in the Declaration by United Nations of January 1st, 1942, when the Atlantic Charter was generally accepted, but to take this line now would emphasize the gulf between the Great Powers and the rest in a more direct fashion since the Declaration of January 1, 1942, constituted the acceptance of the Atlantic Charter by the U.S.S.R. and China as well as by the other United Nations. In short the U.S. proposal would be an invitation from the big boys to the little fellows to sign on the dotted line.

It is important that some further development should soon take place of the plans for international security and at a very early stage countries other than the Great Powers should be brought into the picture. I should prefer this to be done initially by an expansion of the Moscow statement rather than its mere repetition. Incidentally, we have not received from London any indication of their views on the methods whereby the obligations of the League covenant are to be dealt with. The Moscow Declaration is an accurate description of the General character of the League of Nations' plans will have to be made either for winding up the League and replacing it with a new security system or for amending the Covenant so that those United Nations who are not League members will be ready to adhere. The first alternative seems more likely than the second. Should we ask London for a statement of their views on this point which is certain to give rise to some intricate problems? As a basis for further discussion I attach a draft telegram to the Dominions Office.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

Following our conversation last night, I asked Malcolm MacDonald to let his Government know that you thought it would avoid embarrassment for everybody if they were to drop the suggestion that Canada should be associated with the Three-Power talks which are to be held in Moscow next week. At the same time it would be easier for us if the official communique announcing the talks did not make specific reference to the control of atomic energy. I also told Mr. MacDonald that, though you fully appreciated the spirit and intention of Mr. Bevin's instruction to Lord Halifax to approach Mr. Byrnes with a view to associating Canada with the conversations, it was felt here that the suggestion that Wilgress could return to Moscow from London, where he is Chairman of the Canadian Delegation to the Preparatory Commission, was perhaps a shade officious.

I then called Mr. J.D. Hickerson of the Department of State in Washington and spoke to him along the lines of my conversation with Mr. MacDonald, without, of course, saying anything about the appropriateness or otherwise of the suggestion about Wilgress. Hickerson undertook to get in touch with his Secretary of State immediately. He called me back in about twenty minutes to say that the communique had been issued at 8 o'clock that evening and that it was therefore not possible to take up our

Hon. members will be aware that a meeting of the foreign secretaries of Great Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States is opening in Moscow today. (Dec.15) Mr. Byrnes has stated that this meeting is convening in accordance with the decision of the Yalta Conferenc that there should be conferences of the three foreign secretaries at quarterly intervals. In addition to a general discussion of matters of concern and of immediate interest to these three countries, it is understood that the meeting in Moscow will provide an opportunity for an exchange of views among the governments of Great Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union on the subject of the control of atomic energy.

While we try to meet the needs of the present as they arise, we must always keep constantly before our eyes the ever-increasing demands and needs of the future, not only overseas but in Canada as well. We would be assisting the enemy if we failed to take all the measures to meet the needs of the moment. We would be assisting him no less effectively if, in taking new measures to meet the new situation, we abandoned the persistent and far-sighted effort which alone can achieve final victory.

~~Though cities were burnt with fire and lands were made desolate,~~ From the harbours of Dunkirk the bravest men in the world battled their way home to fight once again for liberty and goodness and mercy.

To the making of Canada have come the same chivalry of France and the same gallantry of Britain which fashioned the glory of that triumph of heroism. ~~Every port in Canada will be another Dunkirk before the British Empire bows before the tyranny of darkness.~~

~~My fellow citizens:~~ We shall endure steadfast and unafraid. The flag of Britain will still be the banner of freedom. Come what may as long as there are free men left to fight for liberty, it will never be struck from the masthead of Canada or hauled down from its battlements.

J.T. Stirrett, General Manager, Canadian Manufacturers Association, Toronto, Ontario.

The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Clerk of the Privy Council were also present.

1. Prior to the entrance of the delegation, the Prime Minister read a telegram which he had received from the President of the Canadian Manufacturers Association requesting that a delegation be received, also his reply agreeing to the meeting. The telegram from the Canadian Manufacturers Association embodied a resolution passed at the Annual Convention of the Canadian Manufacturers Association held in Winnipeg.

(See telegram from Mr. Herbert Crabtree to the Prime Minister, May 31st, 1940, and the Prime Minister's reply, May 31st, 1940.)

2. The delegation entered the meeting and were welcomed by the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

3. The President of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, Mr. Herbert Crabtree spoke for the Association, expressed appreciation of their prompt reception by so many members of the Government. The delegation was imbued with the consciousness of their duty in the present critical situation and the anxiety of Canadian manufacturers to be of the utmost service.

Mr. Crabtree read a submission addressed to the Prime Minister and members of the Government of which a copy is attached.

4. The Prime Minister, replying to Mr. Crabtree's remarks, stated that the Government were as anxious as were the members of the delegation to have munitions and supplies manufactured in Canada for the United Kingdom Government. The Government had done everything possible to assist in bringing this about. He proposed to speak with complete frankness, conceiving that the delegation and the Government were imbued with the same desire to best serve the common cause in the present situation, the seriousness of which could not be exaggerated.

Mr. Crabtree had suggested that "misunderstandings existed, which were "responsible for Canada having received only minor orders from the British Government up to this time." Mr. King enquired what misunderstandings were referred to.

5. Mr. Crabtree was unable to answer this enquiry. Manufacturers had concluded that there must be misunderstandings, possibly with regard to Canadian capacity, possibly on other grounds, for they could not understand otherwise why no substantial orders had been placed in Canada after the reception which the Canadian Manufacturers Association had been given in the United Kingdom last summer.

6. Mr. King stated that there were reasons why such orders had not been forthcoming, but that there was no misunderstanding so far as the Canadian Government were concerned. The policy of the United Kingdom Government on the economic front had, in large measure, been dictated by the desire to retain the friendship of neutral countries. Large orders for materials had been placed by the United Kingdom in neutral countries for reasons of policy. It had been felt possibly that you could trust your friends while you had to give orders to likely enemies.

He wished to make it quite clear, however, that the United Kingdom Government were under no misunderstanding as to the position of the Canadian Government. From the time of the outbreak of war, and before, the United Kingdom Government had been made fully aware of the Canadian Government's view as to the desirability and urgency of placing orders in Canada for war materials. The Canadian High Commissioner in London had been impressed with the Government's attitude in this respect and had made it known to the United Kingdom Government.

The Prime Minister made reference to the meeting of June the 28th, 1939, between himself and several of his colleagues and a delegation from the Canadian Manufacturers Association. As a result of that meeting, he had addressed a letter to Mr. Massey the same day, commending the Canadian Manufacturers Association's delegation to the High Commissioner's good offices, and stating that the Government would be glad to assist in the utilization by the United Kingdom of the industrial capacities of Canada for purposes of the British defence programme.

(See copy of memorandum of June 29th, 1939, and copy of Prime Minister's letter to the High Commissioner attached.)

Members of the Government had again met members of the Canadian Manufacturers Association when they had returned from England. At that time, because of the cordial reception accorded them by United Kingdom authorities, they had anticipated that orders would be placed in Canada in large quantity and at an early date.

(See copy of memorandum of September 5th, 1939, attached)

The Prime Minister suggested that the delegation should see the British Purchasing Mission immediately and enquire of them why orders had not been placed in Canada. If the Mission suggested that the Canadian Government had done anything to block such orders he wished to be told. He did not think they would find this to be the case.

7. With respect to the suggestion that a Minister or Ministers be sent to England at once, tp put the situation directly before the British authorities, Mr. King said that he felt that the United Kingdom Government were already aware of the Canadian Government's attitude. Mr. Crerar had been sent to England soon after the outbreak of war and he had impressed upon Ministers and Departments concerned the desirability of placing orders with Canadian plants, and that our productive capacity should be fully utilized. Mr. Rogers had only recently returned from the United Kingdom. While there, he had reaffirmed the Canadian Government's views in this respect. The Prime Minister, himself, since the crisis of the past few weeks, and since the change of Government in Great Britain, had sent a telegram to Mr. Churchill pointing out once more that Canadian Manufacturers were ready to do their utmost to produce munitions and supplies for Allied purposes and that the Canadian Government were willing to encourage and assist in every way. Mr. King read the telegram sent to Mr. Churchill on May the 18th, and Mr. Churchill's reply of June the 1st.

Canada House was in constant contact with the United Kingdom authorities and were fully aware of the Government's attitude in this respect and were constantly bringing the matter to the attention of the Departments concerned.

8. Mr. King referred to the impression which had existed that the Government had discouraged, or were discouraging, orders from the United Kingdom and were not willing to co-operate. The resolution of the Canadian Manufacturers Association in speaking of a "misunderstanding" contributed to such an impression, which was completely at variance with the facts. Could any one person give a single instance of any member or responsible officer of the Government having, at any time, said or done anything which might have given rise to the impression he had referred to?

9. Mr. Black referred to the fact that at the meeting of June the 28th, the Prime Minister had asked the same question of members of the delegation. He could think of only one possible Canadian source of such an impression. In conversations which members of the Canadian Manufacturers Association had had in the early spring of 1939, with the then Deputy Minister of National Defence, Major General Lafleche had informed them that if manufacturers were to make direct approaches to the War Office, they would be referred back to the Canadian Government. On the other hand, two months later, in May, 1939, the then Minister of National Defence had agreed to send cables to the War Office on their behalf, drawing attention to Canadian resources for the manufacture of war material. He understood that in conversations in England, someone highly placed in association with the United Kingdom Government had suggested that Great Britain could better count on Switzerland than Canada as a source of supply.

The fact remained that Canadian manufacturers were ready and willing to undertake the production of war materials which they were capable of producing, as a matter of public duty. It was discouraging to find orders for such materials being placed in the United States at a higher cost.

10. Mr. King suggested that such a remark as that referred to by Mr. Black was not only untrue, but that such a person was performing a disservice, not only to Canada, but to Great Britain herself. Deductions should be drawn from the actions of Canadians not from the reported words of a single anonymous official in the United Kingdom.

In the light of the facts he had described to them, did the delegation feel that a Ministerial Mission to the United Kingdom would be of assistance?

11. Mr. Crabtree felt that such a Mission would help to implement the splendid work which had already been done by the Government, would hasten the fuller utilization of Canadian industrial capacity. The Mission might be accompanied by manufacturers.

12. The Minister of Finance referred to the representatives whom the Canadian Government had sent to the United Kingdom at various times and mentioned the projected visit of Colonel Harrison.

13. The Minister of Munitions and Supply observed that we had had representatives over there almost constantly since the war started, quite apart from the visits of Mr. Crerar and Mr. Rogers. In any event, the situation had recently changed to some extent, and he was more hopeful as a result.

14. Mr. Winslow-Spragge said that the delegation were here to find out what was the matter, why orders were not being placed. They had no doubt that the Prime Minister and Mr. Churchill had their hearts in the right place. The trouble was farther down the line.

In the last war it had been found that purchases in Canada for United Kingdom purposes could best be made by Canadians. English experts had no appreciation of Canadian capacity. He suspected that the delay, unnecessary complications and the unsatisfactory position was due to Canadian conditions being unfamiliar to British representatives, and that the latter had insufficient authority.

15. The Prime Minister observed that the Government and the delegation had the same motives and objects, namely to make the most use of Canadian industrial capacity for the common cause. He was not blaming the British Government, but on the contrary, trying to interpret their position. With their problems he had great sympathy; they were under the greatest pressure at the present time. They had started under many misapprehensions as to the nature of the war, as to its length and as to the industrial capacity of the United Kingdom. For example, in the negotiations leading to the agreement regarding the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan, the British representatives had insisted that the United Kingdom contribution should be in kind, that is in planes and engines. This they conceived to be their best contribution. Had it been refused by the Canadian Government would have been criticized. They had no misgivings then as to their manufacturing capacity to produce the engines and planes required.

16. Mr. Howe observed that the Government had given the Canadian Manufacturers Association delegation last summer a completely free hand; the result had been the arrival of the present British Mission, who took from four to five times as long to place orders for the United Kingdom Government as it required to place Canadian orders. The delegation suggested that the Government appoint an outstanding industrialist to co-ordinate, develop and direct the production of industry engaged in the manufacture of war supplies. He had obtained for his Department, men whom he thought to be the best available. When Mr. Campbell had assumed the duties of Chairman of the War Supply Board he had told him that he would have the greatest possible freedom, and would not be criticized for anything except delay. Orders were placed without even waiting for the authorization of the Minister of Finance.

With respect to British orders, he was glad to say that the situation had now changed. Word had just been received that the United Kingdom Government had approved designs for a heavy tank and had asked that Canadian engineers be sent over to receive full particulars. They were being sent by the next ship. He anticipated within a few days orders for equipment for ten divisions. Equipment was also to be ordered on the part of the French Government.

As to a director of production, he would welcome a person of the qualities described in his Department. If he proved better than those in charge at present, he would put him at the top; if not, he would give him a job anyway and start him to work tomorrow morning.

17. Mr. Gurney said that a Ministerial Mission should be sent only if it were felt that it would help to win the war, that it would result in a better appreciation of the ability of Canadian industry to assist in the problem of supply. It should not be sent only to importune for orders.

18. Mr. King suggested that the delegation might submit a memorandum as to what points they felt should be emphasized in representations to the United Kingdom Government. If they did so, those points would be transmitted immediately in a message to the Canadian High Commissioner with instructions that he bring them to the attention of the United Kingdom authorities at once.

19. The Minister of National Defence, in answer to an enquiry as to whether in representations to the United Kingdom Government it had been urged that the full utilization of Canadian industrial capacity would be an important factor in the extent of Canada's total war effort, replied that he had put this point of view forward emphatically to members of the British Government during his recent visit. He had spoken personally to Mr. Eden and Mr. Chamberlain in this respect, had urged that if difficulties with respect to exchange were a barrier, that a system of barter could be worked out. He had urged that the use of Canadian plants would raise the Canadian national income and hence make possible a greater war effort, and had pointed out the comparative freedom of Canadian plants from the danger of enemy attack.

Sir John Simon had said that difficulties of exchange limited the United Kingdom Government to ordering in Canada only such materials as could not be obtained within the sterling area. It had been assumed that British production could continue at full capacity and foreign exchange be conserved. This had been the attitude of the United Kingdom Government until the past few weeks but the situation had changed with the change in Government.

20. The Minister of Finance observed that in addition to visits to England by Ministers, the Governor of the Bank of Canada had been in England to make arrangements with regard to our financing of British requirements in Canada. Today, Canada had exceeded by several million dollars the amount of Canadian exchange which it had agreed to provide under the arrangements which Mr. Towers had concluded. There had been no holding back on the financial front.

21. The Minister of Mines and Resources recounted his experiences in conversations with members and officials of the United Kingdom Government. They had been following a policy of conserving dollar exchange, and as a result held that orders to Canada must be strictly limited; at that time they held the view that the war would be long, and not of the character which had developed within the past few weeks.

22. Mr. Black drew the attention of the meeting to the large body of trained machinists in Canada; these men were as important as soldiers and full advantage should be taken of their services.

23. Mr. V.G. Bartram said that he had many instances of the lack of proper authority in the British Mission which resulted in serious delay in the placing of orders. The British Government had been, in certain instances, very badly advised by their own officials as to conditions in Canada.

24. Mr. Morrow spoke of the efficient condition of the Canadian steel industry and its readiness to produce, if called upon, any steel which might be required for military purposes.

25. Mr. Bertram spoke of the machine tool industry. His plant had been steadily engaged on work for the United Kingdom Government as a result of advance orders direct from London.

26. Mr. Crabtree expressed the appreciation of the delegation for the reception which they had received from the Prime Minister and his colleagues. They accepted gladly the proposal that they should prepare a memorandum of suggestions that might be communicated to the Canadian High Commissioner in London.

He spoke briefly of the desirability of the removal of restrictions upon the seven-day week in the pulp and paper industry in Canada, and urged co-operative action with the provinces to modify such limitations as a contribution to Canadian war economy.

27. Mr. Simms said that the delegation, as a result of today's meeting, had a new appreciation of the Government's position, a new desire to co-operate and help the Government in the conduct of the war effort, and a new recognition of the responsibilities of industry.

28. It was agreed that the press should be informed that the meeting had taken place in a spirit of mutual confidence, that problems of production of munitions and supplies in Canada had been discussed, and that both the Government and the Canadian Manufacturers Association had found the meeting most helpful.

29. The Prime Minister, in closing the meeting, requested that what had been said should be regarded as confidential, that members of the Government had been completely frank in their description of the situation, and that many of the statements which had been made, if made public, would be misconstrued.

In his view, the fundamental prerequisite of a maximum war effort on the part of Canada was the maintenance of Canadian unity. He regarded it as a primary responsibility to keep the country united to face the serious situation at this time and even more critical days which lay ahead. He urged Canadian manufacturers to co-operate in this common cause.

RESIGNATION OF MR. WALLACE CAMPBELL

Criticism: "Why have no rifles been made in Canada to date for use by our battalions? Why are our thirty-day trainees given only old Ross Rifles, many of which may not be fired? Only those which have been reconditioned may be fired."

(Hon. R. B. Hanson in House of Commons, Nov. 12, 1940)

Reply: Is not Mr. Hanson already aware of what is public knowledge in the U.S.A.?

"In doctrine (but not yet in general practice, because of equipment shortages) General Crerar's Army is ahead of the U. S. in training to combat mechanized foes. Most marked difference: in the Canadian infantry, the rifle is now a sub-ordinate weapon, whereas it is still the basic U.S. infantry weapon. Canada's (and Britain's) substitute: ultra-light machine guns. Canadian Army men would have none of the U. S. Army's famed, controversial semi-automatic Garand rifle—not because it is the Garand, but because it is still a rifle."

Mr. Ralston:

Regarding the manufacture of rifles in Canada; as I told the house in July, the department on its own made plans for the erection of a factory and for production here. The confidence regarding the preparation for and layout of this factory has been fully justified. The completion of the factory and the inauguration of production were handed over to the Department of Munitions and Supply. A company was formed under the direction of leading industrialists and my information is that the factory will be in production by the middle of 1941.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is the minister referring to rifles?

Mr. RALSTON: The rifle factory. My hon. friend asked why Ross rifles were given to trainees. The obvious answer is that we required the Enfield rifles for issue to the active service troops.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): You did not have anything else. That is the answer.

Mr. RALSTON: I am not making any apology for it. I say that we required the Enfield rifles for issue to active service troops. The others did not require these rifles for preliminary training and the Ross had been reconditioned and could be used for the purpose. The rifles sent to Europe for United Kingdom use were Ross rifles.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They have been reconditioned.

Mr. RALSTON: If that is going down on the record, I should like to hear what it is.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I said that wooden guns would do just as well as what you gave the soldiers.

Mr. RALSTON: Apparently the leader of the opposition does not know as much about rifles as I thought he did. The production of ·303 small arms and ammunition will, I anticipate, reach the scale which I envisaged in July and careful calculations by the staff officers assure us that our needs will be adequately met.

SUPPLY (SIGNAL EQUIPMENT)

CRITICISM:

"Why is signal equipment practically non-existent? Mr. Baldwin stressed this in his review of our conditions on October 1."

(Hon. R. B. Hanson, in House of Commons, Nov. 12, 1940)

Hon. J. L. Ralston.

REPLY:

In connection with signal equipment, I indicated in July that Canadian concerns were rapidly producing training equipment made up from standard commercial parts. These are being augmented by some thousands of sets from the United States, and two of the largest concerns in Canada are working in cooperation on the production of the latest British pattern of service equipment which we expect to receive early in the new year.

In this respect, my hon. friend asks why signal equipment is non-existent.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I based that on Mr. Baldwin's statement.

Mr. RALSTON: The answer is that it is not non-existent. We had expected to get signal equipment from the United Kingdom. Because of the necessity for interchangeability we have to use the British pattern; but when it seemed that our supplies could not be obtained from the United Kingdom, we had to get into production in Canada and we arranged with two of the largest Canadian firms to take on the manufacture of this British technical equipment, which consists of wireless sets of different patterns, comprising a most complex variety of supplies. At the same time, we arranged with Canadian firms to give us supplies for training by adapting commercial sets for purposes of the army.

CRITICISM:

"Are there any 25-pounders for our artillery? According to Mr. Baldwin the answer is 'only one.' Our artillery units are armed only with obsolete 18-pounders left over from the last war. Two artillery units in training in my province, one at St. Stephen and one at Fredericton, have never even had a wooden gun with which to train. I talked to the officers personally, and they are just sick about it."

(Hon. R. B. Hanson, in House of Commons, Nov. 12, 1940)

REPLY:

(Hon. J. L. Ralston, in House of Commons, Nov. 15, 1940)

At pp. 167 and 168

Regarding field guns; the leader of the opposition spoke about this and referred particularly to two artillery units. Those which he spoke of are of course reserve—non-permanent active militia units. Naturally, with the large number of Canadian active service force troops we have, our first and primary duty is to distribute guns for their training and operations, and this we have done. It is obviously more useful for training to have guns at our artillery training centres, so that the men can have intensive training, rather than to scatter the guns among non-permanent active militia units. Even at that, already equipments are now ready for issue to about one-third of the non-permanent active militia units and will shortly be in their hands, and arrangements will be made so that the great majority even of those non-permanent active militia units will have guns for training.

Since I dictated this I have been informed that in a week's time distribution will commence.

I can say to the house regarding this matter of field guns that we have sufficient at least to equip a third and a fourth division. As I said in July, our supply was augmented by a further substantial complement, with necessary ammunition. All these are being high-speeded and are, in the opinion of the staff officers, quite sufficient for training and for the needs of Canadian defence until 25-pounders are available.

Production of 25-pounders was undertaken in this country for both British and Canadian account, and while the deliveries will not be as early as expected, my colleague, the Minister of Munitions and Supply, anticipates that a considerable number will be forthcoming in 1941.

SUPPLY (TANKS)

CRITICISM:

"What is the stage of production of tanks in Canada? How far, if at all, have we progressed?

(Hon. R. B. Hanson, in House of Commons, Nov. 12, 1940)

REPLY: (Hon. J. L. Ralston, in House of Commons, Nov. 15, 1940)

In order to facilitate the training, we secured about 200 tanks from the United States. While these tanks are of an old type, they will serve well in training the many specialists and tradesmen required in this sort of formation. As the house probably knows, we had a number of tanks at Borden in addition to this very much larger number which were secured from the United States. Selected personnel are being given special training in the United Kingdom so that when we are ready to expand the initial groups into larger formations capable instructors will be available.

At page 168 :

There has been a great deal of interest in tanks. The design and manufacturing problems in this type of weapon are particularly complicated, but, as is known, work has been going on as fast as it could possibly be done at the Angus shops of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Montreal. We also anticipate that other plants will soon be employed on tank manufacture. This is an instance in which there has been particularly close collaboration between the Department of National Defence, the Department of Munitions and Supply and the British and United States technical authorities.

SUPPLY (MACHINE GUNS)

CRITICISM:

"Why is there such a shortage of machine guns for use by machine gun units?"
(Hon. R. B. Hanson, in House of Commons, Nov. 12, 1940)

REPLY:

(Hon. J. L. Ralston, in House of Commons, Nov. 15, 1940)

At page 167 :

My hon. friend spoke of the shortage of machine guns. He asked why there was a shortage. Obviously, the shortage of machine guns is purely relative. There are as a matter of fact several machine-gun battalions—Canadian active service force machine-gun battalions—and a number of non-permanent active militia battalions. The establishment has been changed and the number of machine gun battalions per division has been reduced to one instead of three—not by us but by the British establishment—indicating apparently that the requirement of machine-gun battalions is substantially less. I can assure my hon. friend that we have enough machine guns, and more than enough, to equip every machine-gun battalion which we have in the field, on the basis of present establishment, although not fully on the basis of the establishment which we originally had and which has now been reduced by the War Office.

Let me say also, in connection with machine guns, that at the moment we do not propose to convert any machine-gun battalions we have into other battalions even though the place for them in the establishment is gone. We cannot tell what changes may develop, and we propose to keep them on as they are for the present. We have issued a certain number of machine guns for training in each of the machine-gun units.

From time to time we are told that production of this and production of that is up to schedule or ahead of schedule, but we hardly know what the schedule is. What is the schedule in connection with Bren guns? We are told that it calls for a thousand guns by the end of next March, a large portion of which are to go to England."

Regarding Bren guns; I have given my hon. friend the number up to the end of September. I am not giving the number delivered each week, but it is a figure which I must say is most satisfactory having regard to what was planned on when production started at the plant. These weekly deliveries are increasing steadily and by the end of the first year of production we expect to have three times as many guns delivered as were called for by the contract.

SUPPLY (AEROPLANES)

C250869

"How far have we progressed in the manufacture of aeroplanes? I have been told that no engines are being made, that it is only hoped to make them at some indefinite time in the future.",

(Hon, R. B. Hanson, in House of Commons, Nov. 12, 1940)

Experimental construction of plastic aeroplanes has been neglected.

(See statement by Mr. Adamson, Exhibit 1)

FORTUNE also notes the deficiencies of the aircraft industry.

(See Extract, Exhibit 2)

REPLY:

Plastic aeroplanes are being considered. Mr. Howe states: "When we were first approached on the subject of plastic airframes we placed an order with the inventor, who was then in production, for three. At the same time we started experiments of our own in the national research laboratories. Both these approaches have been followed up continuously; no time has been lost."

(Unrevised Hansard, Nov. 18, 1940, p.185)

For a statement of aeroplane production, see Mr. Howe's speech attached, Exhibit 3.

Mr. Adamson:

I have a third suggestion to make. My friends the colloidal chemists have repeatedly asked me why no aeroplane frames made of plastics were being turned out. I understand that a year or so ago representations were made to the government to investigate this field. It was pointed out that Canada was a non-ferrous country and that the construction of aeroplane frames would probably be beset with great difficulties because of the lack of trained metal workers. It was also shown that we have an abundance of the ingredients to produce the finest laminated plastics, and that their manufacture even into complicated air-frames does not require great numbers of highly skilled workmen. It is also known that these raw materials are not available to the enemy in anything like our quality or quantity. Surely all possible effort should be given to this work, which may revolutionize the production of aircraft and put Canada right in the van of production. I understand some experiments are being made now, but my criticism of the government is that they should have been made long ago, and either we should now be producing plastic aircraft or we should know that their production is impracticable.

Mr. Howe:

With regard to aircraft production, our aircraft industry is expanding rapidly and is producing planes to meet the requirements of the joint air training plan, and is also building operational aeroplanes for Great Britain and Canada. The output of planes is expanding each week in this new Canadian industry. Existing plants have been extended and new plants have been, and are being, constructed. The industry is in process of being reorganized on a production line basis. Canada is now building complete aeroplanes except for the engines, and, for the present, engines are being purchased either in the United States or in Great Britain. Production covers practically every type of training plane in use in Canada and several types of operational planes.

Hon. members will wish to have an explanation of why Canada has not as yet undertaken the manufacture of aeroplane engines. I must accept sole responsibility for the situation as it is to-day. I think that I cannot fairly be accused of reluctance to undertake large expenditures for war purposes, but I do wish to be sure that any of our undertakings can be brought to a successful conclusion and meet the need for which it is intended. The manufacture of areoplane engines involves an enormous capital expenditure, a very heavy drain on available supplies of machine tools, and a very large number of highly skilled workmen. Production cannot be obtained in less than a period of eighteen months, and, when production is obtained, it will be for only one size and type of engine, whereas Canada uses some ten sizes of engine and two different types. It had seemed to me that in the present state of our industrial production we would be well advised to purchase aeroplane engines outside Canada, rather than to attempt to build them. I am now making a fresh study of the situation in the light of recent developments in the United States. My new attitude has been influenced by the fact that Canada is now in position to produce certain essential components that formerly would have had to be imported, and further by the fact that our machine tool situation is becoming less difficult. Whether we can now undertake to build aeroplane engines in Canada will depend on whether the necessary machine tools can be made available from United States sources.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. ROBERTSON:

C250873

N-305-32
1941 (Confd.)

Re: Senate Order for representations to United Kingdom government.

Senator Dandurand, as you know, asked me in the attached letter, and verbally since, to find out whether any documents might be produced to substantiate his statement in the Senate, based on the statement made by Mr. Howe in the House of Commons on May 22, 1940, that "one of our chief difficulties has been to obtain the latest British designs for mechanical equipment used by our troops in common operations. British industry has not been too willing to part with these designs.....".

The order calls for "all representations, letters, documents, telegrams, or other communications, passing, prior to the evacuation of Dunkerque, from the Canadian Government to the British Government, with respect in any way to the refusal, reluctance or delay of British firms to supply necessary plans, specifications or other essential data to Canadian firms, to be used in the production of war equipment or munitions of any kind."

The cable from the Prime Minister to Mr. Churchill of May 18, 1940, does not fall within the rather narrow limits of this definition, although it draws attention to the desirability of fuller use being made of the resources of Canadian industry and makes reference to various occasions, prior to the outbreak of war, and since that time, when the attention of the government of the United Kingdom had been drawn to the productive capacity of Canadian plants as an alternative source of supply.

Have shown as enclosed

It may, I think, be inferred that the reason no communications appear on the External Affairs file with reference to this matter between the outbreak of war and May 18, 1940, was that a British purchasing mission, later transformed into the British Supply Board, was in Canada throughout that period. No doubt whatever representations were made passed direct from the Defence Purchasing Board, War Supply Board or Department of Munitions and Supply or the Ministers responsible (first Mr. Ralston and later Mr. Howe) to the representatives of British Ministry of Supply at Ottawa.

The record of any such representations would, of course, be in the Department of Munitions and Supply. It would presumably be for Mr. Howe to decide whether these representations are of such a nature that they could appropriately be produced.

It might be considered desirable, before approaching Mr. Howe, to ascertain the Prime Minister's view as to advisability of tabling any documents in response to the Order of the Senate, particularly as it might create a precedent which would be awkward for the future. An alternative suggested by Senator Dandurand was that he might show Mr. Meighen, in his capacity as a Privy Councillor, the cable to Mr. Churchill of May 18, 1940, and such representations as Mr. Howe might produce to substantiate his statement.

I should like to make a brief statement regarding the Order for Return passed by the Senate on April 3rd for a copy of all representations, letters, documents, telegrams, or other communications, passing, prior to the evacuation of Dunkirk, from the Canadian Government to the British Government, with respect in any way to the refusal, reluctance or delay of British firms to supply necessary plans, specifications or other essential data to Canadian firms, to be used in the production of war equipment or munitions of any kind.

As Honourable Senators are aware, the government does not consider that, as a matter of practice, it is desirable in the public interest to make available communications passing between the governments of Canada and the United Kingdom except in circumstances in which such communications are specifically intended for publication. It is considered that adherence to this general practice is particularly desirable, for obvious reasons, in the case of communications relating to war production.. I have with me communications bearing upon the matter which I should be pleased to show confidentially to my Right Honourable friend opposite, in his capacity as a Privy Councillor.

Honourable Senators will recall that a British Purchasing Mission arrived in Ottawa at the time war broke out and that it was shortly afterwards enlarged and transformed into the British Supply Board. The Canadian Defence Purchasing Board and subsequently the War Supply Board and finally after April 9, 1940, the Department of Munitions and Supply acted as purchasing agent for the British Supply Board in Canada. Throughout the greater part of the period Mr. Howe was the responsible Minister. His statement was undoubtedly based on the experience of the Boards and later the Department for which he was responsible.

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

C250878

Following your conversation with Colonel Willis O'Connor, he reported back that arrangements had been made for you to visit the St. Malo cartridge plant at Quebec at 11.00 a.m. on Wednesday next. This was duly reported to you.

The Department of Munitions and Supply suggest that you may also wish to visit the cartridge filling plant, also located at Quebec, on the way to Valcartier. I rather gather from Colonel O'Connor that they had omitted this from their proposed visit because the Governor General has already been out there, and because of the fact that ammunition is actually handled at this point.

However, the two concerns are really part of the same general unit, and to visit one without the other might be looked on as discriminating between the two branches of the same concern. Moreover, the ones who are actually in the filling plant where the ammunition is handled are carrying on a much more dangerous task, and for this reason the Prime Minister might want to visit them. The plant superintendent would be very pleased to supply transportation.

Notes for Use when Visiting St. Malo and/or Valcartier plants of the Quebec Arsenal

Today, the Arsenal produces 1 million rounds of .303 ammunition every day and, in addition, tracer bullets, armour piercing bullets, and ammunition for 18 pounder guns;

The quality of work is so high that the British Government has asked that nearly the whole output be shipped directly to theatres of war;

What is not shipped overseas for fighting purposes is used in aircraft machine guns, because the workmanship is of such a high character that Quebec Arsenal ammunition is a guarantee against machine guns jamming;

The Valcartier plant is regarded by experts as one of the finest of its kind in the whole world;

A high proportion of the 5,000 arsenal workers are women;

Those working in the shell filling plant at Valcartier under condition of daily danger are as much in the front line as any soldier;

The Germans and Italians are dealing not only with British and Dominion soldiers but with the workers of St. Malo and Valcartier.

Re: St. Malo and Valcartier plants of the Dominion Arsenal

The Dominion Arsenal established at Quebec more than a half century ago. Carried on in the production of small ammunitions in modest way up to the beginning of 1914-18, when production increased to approximately 50 million rounds of 303 ammunition per annum. At that time plant housed at Palace Hill, Quebec, with the dangerous work of filling housed in small frame building Cotes Field, adjacent to the Citadel. Ten years ago, this part of the operations removed to Valcartier.

Between 1918 and 1939 production dropped to approximately 3 million rounds per annum. At present time, production approximately 1 million rounds of 303 ball ammunition per day, together with tracer ammunition, armour piercing, 18 pounder ammunition, primers and the ammunition packages. Expected that within next six months production capacity will be doubled.

C. N. R. shops at St. Malo taken over in 1939, existing buildings modernized, new buildings erected, and this part of the plant used for the production of the cartridges themselves, filling work being carried out at Valcartier unit of the plant.

Number of employees has increased in two years from five hundred to over five thousand, with expectation that within next six months number will be seven thousand, of which a large portion is female help.

Total output of plant is being shipped to theatres of operation, as American ammunition is being used for training of Canadian troops here. This use in theatres of war is tribute to quality of output; when not used for direct fighting purposes is used in aircraft guns to guarantee against jamming.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

The following are persons connected with the Quebec Arsenal whom the Prime Minister may meet and with whom he may wish to have a word :

Colonel A. Thériault - Chief Superintendent. Colonel Thériault can be reached at his office in Quebec City, telephone 4-4611, and he will be pleased to do anything the Prime Minister may suggest in connection with an inspedtion of either the St. Malo or Valcartier plants. It would be well for Handy to call Colonel Thériault some time before the visit for the purpose of learning any information calculated to make the inspection more interesting and enjoyable.

Colonel Kirby - Assistant superintendent

Mr. Fuller - in charge of the filling plant at Valcartier.

Mr. Côté - the cost accountant who has done much good work in organizing the plants at St. Malo and Valcartier.

Mr. A. Fleming - Chief Chemist who has worked for many years in the arsenal and is highly respected for his industry and ability.

Mr. B. Newton - ballistic expert. In charge of all experimental work. A highly respected employee of many years standing.

LONDON MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENT BOARD.

Composition and Procedure
Note by the Secretary.

THE object of this Paper is to inform those concerned of the machinery now established in Washington and London for the assignment of finished war material.

"The Agreement".

2. The following agreement was made between the Prime Minister of Great Britain and the President of the United States of America in January 1942:--

"(1) The entire munition resources of Great Britain and the United States will be deemed to be in a common pool, about which the fullest information will be interchanged.

"(2) Committees will be formed in Washington and London under the combined Chiefs of Staff in a manner similar to the South-West Pacific agreement. These Committees will advise on all Assignments both in quantity and priority, whether to Great Britain and the United States or other of the United Nations, in accordance with strategic needs.

"(3) In order that these Committees may be fully apprised of the policy of their respective Governments, the President will nominate a civil Chairman, who will preside over the Committee in Washington, and the Prime Minister of Great Britain will make a similar nomination in respect of the Committee in London. In each case the Committee will be assisted by a Secretariat capable of surveying every Branch and keeping in touch with the work of every Sub-Committee as may be necessary.

"(4) The civilian Chairmen in Washington and London may invite representatives of the State Department, the Foreign Office or production ministries or agencies to attend meetings."

"The Boards".

3. Consequent upon this agreement the Boards have been set up in Washington and London. The Washington Board is under the Chairmanship of Mr. Harry Hopkins, and a copy of the directive issued to it by the Combined Chiefs of Staff is at Annex I. The following is the composition of the London Board:--

4. A number of Sub-Committees have been established to deal with different aspects of the work of assignment. A list of these is at Annex II. The statistics and records of the Board will be kept by a section now being set up.

"Method of Procedure."

5. In the following paragraphs the process of assignment as at present envisaged in London is described. In general, and allowing for the different methods of organisation and working which naturally exist in the two countries, the process is the same, "mutatis mutandis", in Washington.

6. The theory of assignment is that the entire production of Great Britain and the United States of America is pooled and divided among the united nations in accordance with strategic needs. The ideal way of making the division would be for it to be done by one Board, to which all claims would be presented. This is not possible in practice. The main obstacle is the fact that assignment can only be done on very complete information about the operational situation in the various theatres of war, the state and equipment of the troops and of the requirements for training. To gather this mass of information into one centre would not only require the setting up of a very large staff which would be largely duplicating the work of the Service Departments in their home country, but would also mean a vast amount of cabling of details. Geography, therefore, decides that the work must be done by two Boards--one in Washington and one in London.

7. The two Boards work in parallel. For the present, at any rate, it has been arranged that the Washington Board shall assign that portion of the total pool which is produced in the United States of America, and that the London Board shall assign the British production. If the other countries of the British Empire decide to place their output in the pool, it will be necessary to decide whether it would be placed in the Washington pool or in the London pool. (*)

8. Having secured the production figures to be dealt with by each Board, the next step in assignment is to form an estimate of the requirements of all those who have claims on the pool. There are at present some 40 such claimants, and in theory it is open to each of these to approach the London pool and the Washington pool with demands for assignments. If they did this the result would be confusion, since the two Boards would be considering a mass of claims which were duplicated in the two centres, and endless telegraphic correspondence would be necessary to ensure that a double assignment was not made to cover the same demand. While it is important, therefore, to uphold the principle that claimants are entitled to a share in the proceeds of each pool, and to press their claims in any way they like, it is equally important to arrive at a practical working system which will enable the claims to be dealt with expeditiously, and for their merits to be assessed in relation to each other.

9. The system which has been evolved is that, with certain particular exceptions, the whole of the claimants are divided into two groups--a British group and an American group. The members of the British Empire, and the European Allies, fall naturally into the British group. Not only are they equipped almost entirely with British types of military equipment, but from the closeness of their association with the British forces full details of their requirements are readily available in London, and the whole of their circumstances and needs can best be assessed there.

10. China and the South American Republics fall naturally into the American group, for similar reasons. Russia is a special case in that her main needs are at present handled under the Moscow Protocol. Her naval needs, however, are assigned by the British or American Munitions Assignment Boards as is found convenient according to the type of requirement.

11. The requirements of the whole British group are thus ascertained in London. As far as possible, they are satisfied by assignments made by the London Board from British production. The surplus requirements which cannot be met in this way are submitted by the British Representatives in Washington to the Washington Board, where they are considered alongside the requirements of the American group. If desired, any member of the British group can instruct its Representatives in Washington to attend the meetings at which its requirements are being dealt with, and to reinforce the arguments put forward on their behalf by the British Representatives.

12. The Washington Assignment Board makes a bulk assignment to the British group. This bulk assignment is then allocated among the members of the group by the Board in London. If the assignment received from Washington is equal to the total of the demand put forward by the British group, the allocation would normally be the same as the individual requirements. If, however, a lesser assignment is received, then some further examination of the position is necessary in London before this lesser quantity is allocated. Throughout the whole process the criterion is the strategic need as assessed in accordance with instructions issued by the Combined Chiefs of Staff.

13. The process for assignments to the American group is exactly similar to that described above for the British group. The total requirements are received in Washington, and demands for assignments from British production are presented by the United States Representatives to the London Board. It would be open to representatives of other members of the United States group to back their demands if they so desired. The Washington Board makes assignments to the American group from United States production and allocates the bulk assignments received from London.

14. The great majority of the work of assignment is carried out by the Sub-Committees of the two Boards. These are composed of the experts from the Service Departments, who know the technical details of the scales to be maintained, and the wastage to be made good, and who are aware of the state of the forces in the different theatres.

It is to these Sub-Committees that in the first instance the claims of the group are submitted. In the event of any claimant feeling that due consideration has not been given to his demands, or that having regard to rival claims and to the total amount of material available, the assignment made is insufficient, the matter would come before the Board for further examination. The representative of the aggrieved claimant would, of course, receive a hearing at the Board.

15. If a ruling on strategic priority were then required reference would be made to the Combined Chiefs of Staff. At the same time the civilian Chairman would impart to the Board any relevant information as to the policy of the British and United States Governments as affecting the issue. If a satisfactory settlement could not be reached by the Board the matter would in the last resort be referred to the Prime Minister and the President for decision.

16. The aim of the Assignment Boards at present is to make short-term assignments for one month ahead, and provisional assignments for two months beyond that. As soon as it can be managed, this process should be extended so that, at any rate in the principal items, long-term provisional assignments will be available to serve as a basis of planning.

17. There will no doubt be other developments in the proceedings of the Boards as the machinery gets more firmly established, and as changes in the situation take place. For example, it may well be found in the not far distant future that a very important factor affecting the assignment of material will be the ability to ship what it is desired to send to the various destinations. The detailed working of the Boards will have to be adjusted to meet such developments.

ANNEX I.

Text of Directive to Washington Board.

1. In accordance with an understanding between the President and the Prime Minister, a Munitions Assignments Board is hereby established, to consist of the following, or of alternates designated by them with authority to act for them: Mr. Harry L. Hopkins, Chairman. United States representatives - Admiral W.H.Standley, Major-General R.C.Moore, Major-General M.F.Harmon. British Representatives - Admiral Sir Charles Little, Lieut.-General Sir C.Wemyss, Air Marshal D.C.Evill Major-General J. H. Burns, U.S.A. executive. A corresponding Board is being established in London.

2. Working in close collaboration with the corresponding London organisation, the Board will maintain full information of the entire munitions resources of Great Britain and the United States and translate such resources into combat forces and their material reserves. It will submit such statement to the Combined Chiefs of Staff and keep the estimate up to date in the light of war developments and also of variations in production achievements and prospects, as ascertained through effective liaison with the supply authorities. Such periodical revisions will be submitted in order that the Combined Chiefs of Staff may be fully informed and recommend the measures necessary to keep planned requirements programmes in line with--
(a) Strategic policy; (b) changing operational conditions in their effect on war material; and (c) the realities of production.

3. Under such strategic policies, directives and priorities as have been approved, and in accordance with agreements with the corresponding London organisation, the Board will be responsible for making assignments of the stocks and production of finished war material to the United States and Great Britain and to others of the United Nations.

MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARD

W.W.W. Combined Munitions Assignment Board

The United Kingdom have replied to our telegram proposing that Canadian production be pooled in Washington. They adhere to their earlier view that pooling should be in London while at the same time admitting the predominant right of Canada in the disposing of her own production wherever pooled.

They point out that a very great part of Canadian production was planned and developed as part of the Imperial war effort long before the United States became a belligerent and that today far the larger proportion of Canadian output is being delivered to the United Kingdom. This production is still an essential factor in the equipment and expansion of Imperial forces.

They argue that the administrative disadvantages and the inconveniences of pooling in Washington would be very great. Their argument, in fact, is ours in reverse. They feel, however, that their difficulties would be greater than ours because Canadian production to their order is far greater than United States production to ours. For them to go to Washington, therefore, in respect of such production would be more inconvenient than for us to go to London in respect of United States production for Canada.

So far as the joint British Commonwealth bid from London to be made in Washington is concerned, they do not think that this would have any serious administrative disadvantages for us. On the other hand, it would have this advantage, that the Commonwealth would speak with one voice, each member thereof supporting the claim of the others. On the other hand, if we pool in Washington and bid there direct for our American requirements, we will be competing not only against the United States but against the rest of the British Empire.

Furthermore pooling Canadian production in Washington means that a much wider range of equipment of British type will be assigned in two places than if Canadian production were dealt with in London.

While admitting the close relationship between Canada and the United States on defence matters, they feel that there is, also, an extremely close relationship between Canada and the United Kingdom in these matters, in view of the fact that their forces are serving together.

So far as representation on the Board is concerned, they feel that Canada can secure at least as acceptable an arrangement in London as in Washington.

Finally, they emphasize that whatever may be done about the assignment of completed munitions, it is vital that the United Kingdom should be free to make arrangements direct with the Department of Munitions and Supply regarding components of all kinds; otherwise chaos would ensue.

General McCready, who has been in Ottawa, does not seem to agree with the United Kingdom objections, as stated above, Instead he accepts our view that it would be impracticable to table all Canadian production in London. He suggests a compromise proposal by which the Washington Board should assign North American production for Canada's home forces, while the requirements of the Canadian army in England would be submitted by the London Board to Washington as part of a bulk bid made by the British Commonwealth. Inside this bulk assignment, the requirements of our overseas army would be specified and the allocation could only be changed by the London Board after approval by Canadian Military Headquarters in London, having in mind the military situation at the time and the advantage in certain cases of supplies coming from United Kingdom rather than North American production.

This compromise, however, does not deal with the main British objection, namely, the disadvantages and inconveniences of the United Kingdom having to go to Washington for Canadian production ordered by London.

W.W.II - Combined Munitions Assignment Board

CANADA AND MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS

C250895

At the War Committee, Dr.Evatt gave his view that munitions and supplies should be allocated "objectively and impartially" on broad strategic grounds rather than according to "the strongest pressure of the moment". He also stated that they should be allocated to a theatre of war rather than to governments. A percentage of total United Nations production would be determined for each theatre by the Combined Staffs and altered as the situation changed.

Dr.Evatt's thesis is that no member of the United Nations should itself control the allocation of its own finished munitions.

Canada accepted this principle when we agreed to pooling our munitions production with that of the other United Nations. In accepting it, we accept its implications, namely, that if the Combined Munitions Board, acting on directon from the Combined Chiefs of Staff, decide that 500 guns originally ordered for the United Kingdom should go to Australia, we send them there. There remains to be settled (1) whether we should pool with the London or the Washington Board; (2) how we shall be represented on the Boards?

As to (1) the United Kingdom desire Canada to participate in the operation of the London Board as one of the British group of nations; tabling its production there and making its bid on United States production as part of the British group.

We have pointed out that it would be more effective and logical if we tabled our production with the Washington Board, securing our requirements from North American production through that Board.

We recognize, however, that the presence of Canadian forces overseas in close association with British forces might justify a special procedure in respect of such forces. We, therefore, have submitted to the United Kingdom a compromise proposal as follows.

All Canadian production is to be tabled in Washington with United States production. Canadian requirements from North American production to be used for Canada's home forces will be met through the Washington Board. Requirements for Canadian forces overseas, however, from North American production will be met as part of a British Commonwealth bid submitted via the London Board to Washington.

It is anticipated that this compromise proposal will be acceptable to the United Kingdom. As soon as we receive information to this effect, we should clear the matter with Washington.

As to (2), we have told London that, if our compromise proposal is accepted, we expect full representation on the Washington Board and representation on the London Board similar to that possessed by the other Dominions. This means that the Washington Munitions Assignments Board should become a three power Board instead of a two power Board.

When Australia and New Zealand, through Dr. Evatt and Mr. Nash, asked for representation on this Board a short time ago, they were turned down by President Roosevelt on the ground that their countries were, on balance, consumers rather than producers of munitions. This argument cannot, however, be used against Canada. The fact that we are a large surplus producer of munitions for use outside Canada makes it reasonable that we should be fully represented on the top level of the Washington Board. Failing this, we should insist on representation on the Army, Navy, and Air Committees of the Board. This is where the actual work of allocation is done.

We have reason to believe that Australia and New Zealand will support our request for full representation.

Memorandum for Mr. Pickersgill:

Production for the second quarter of 1942 is generally below the forecast for that period. Presumably the forecasts are based on past experience of production, and it would seem that production is, therefore, not what the Department of Munitions and Supply has thought reasonable to expect.

Shipbuilding is very generally below expectations. The production of tanks, armoured cars, scout cars, etc., is generally below expectation, but the production of universal carriers is up to the anticipated figure. The production of heavier calibre guns and artillery of all sorts appears to be well up to expectation, but small arms production is short of the goal set for the quarter. The production of small arm ammunition is below expectation -- as much as 33½ per cent below in some categories. Explosives are generally up to expectation, although the production goal for some chemicals like ammonia has not been reached.

The production of automotive transport has generally exceeded expectation.

While total aircraft production is slightly below expectation, the production of some categories is well above the goal, notably the Anson, about which there was so much controversy some time ago. The production of Harvards, Tiger Moths and P.B.Y. amphibians is below expectation.

Quarterly Production Report
Second Quarter 1 9 4 2

The regular quarterly report on production prepared by the Economics and Statistics Branch includes the principal items in production under the several Branches concerned. Empty ammunition components have been deleted in this report.

The attached tabulations have been prepared by this Branch from information supplied by the Production Branches, and include the principal stores but omit minor components. All production data are based on Inspection Reports and reflect quantities passed inspection and accepted. There is necessarily a small time-lag as between factory production data and Accepted by Inspection data.

The quarterly production report relates to and is intended to supplement the monthly reports and the quarterly forecasts prepared by the Branch.

Memorandum for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Allen Ross of Toronto, who, as you may know, is a friend of Mr. Jack Hamel, called at the office today and during the course of his visit made the following observation:

Mr. Hamel has been for many years a supporter of the Liberal Party and a great admirer of yourself. He has, however, been somewhat estranged in his support first by the erection of the oil refinery near his home in Oakville and secondly by the forecast policy of the government in respect of gold mines.

He has recently sent to you a copy of the letter he addressed to Mr. Ilsley, setting forth his views in regard to the gold mining policy. Mr. Ross says that Mr. Hamel is undoubtedly one of Canada's experts in this field and that any views he expresses are sincere ones, although, viewed against the background of the government's problems, they may not offer the correct solution.

Mr. Ross' suggestion is that you write to Mr. Hamel a personal note suggesting that he come to Ottawa to see Mr. Ilsley and Mr. Crerar, in order to give them the benefit of his views. They would profit by this, but would also have the opportunity to let Mr. Hamel know of any factors of which the government has to take account, but of which Mr. Hamel is not aware. By having the suggestion come from yourself, Mr. Ross is strongly of the opinion that such a word would have a very beneficial effect on Mr. Hamel. I am personally satisfied that this suggestion of Mr. Ross' is put forth in perfect good faith with a desire to be helpful.

If you think well of it, I shall be glad to have a letter drafted which could be shown to Mr. Ilsley and Mr. Crerar before it went out.

Memorandum for Mr. Pickersgill: C250916

Re: Conduct of Members

The following facts are relevant:

1. A judge registering a conviction against a Member charged with a criminal offence is obliged to make a statement to the Speaker, who refers it to a Committee of Privileges for consideration. (Beauchesne, paragraph 179) A course of action is determined by the Committee.

2. Precedent of the British House indicates that Members can be expelled for a variety of reasons which go beyond legal criminality, e.g., conduct unbecoming to an officer and a gentleman. (whatever this means)

3. In the case of Messrs. Garland and Foster in 1915, the Public Accounts Committee found these Members involved in transactions which, though legal, involved fraud and gross maladministration of public funds. Sir Robert Borden denounced these Members in the House, but they did not resign, nor was their conduct further considered by the House.

4. Recently, Flight-Lieutenant R. J. G. Boothby of the British House was involved in a transaction which reflected on the integrity of a Committee of the House. A Select Committee on the Conduct of Members was appointed. No question of a moral or legal offence was involved, and the Committee found that Flight-Lieutenant Boothby had conducted himself in a manner incompatible with the impartial and careful conduct of the business of the House. He apologized. What was really involved was the establishment or reinforcement of a rule of the House governing Members' connections with parties being heard by Committees of the House.

Ottawa, August 30th, 1944.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

Robertson, to whom I have shown the attached draft to Mr. Ralston, feels that you might well take the occasion to write a simultaneous letter, in similar terms, to Mr. Howe.

There is much to be said for this since the production programme should be related directly to the military effort, and, from the financial and manpower points of view there is, perhaps, more danger of over-commitment in the industrial than in the military sphere. The industrial programme also directly affects the problem of demobilization.

I have, accordingly, prepared the attached draft letter to Mr. Howe, using much the same language as appears in the draft to Mr. Ralston. If you decide to send this letter you might, perhaps, add a P.S. to Mr. Ralston's letter, to the following effect:

> "P.S. Inasmuch as the considerations ~~as~~ set out above are directly relevant to the Canadian production programme, I have today written to our colleague the Minister of Munitions and Supply emphasizing the importance of having his officials avoide new substantial future commitments until overall decisions can be taken upon government policy for the period following the defeat of Germany".

Statement by Prime Minister on Mutual Aid Agreement, 8 p.m. March 16.

C250919

By arrangement with the other Governments concerned, I desire to lay on the table at this time, copies of general Mutual Aid Agreements which have been concluded between the Government of Canada and the Governments of the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Commonwealth of Australia. The Agreements with the United Kingdom and Soviet Governments were signed on February 11th and the Agreement with Australia was signed on March 9th. Similar Agreements are in process of negotiation with other Governments or authorities receiving supplies from Canada in significant volume under the Mutual Aid Act, notably China and the French Committee of National Liberation.

These Agreements set forth the general terms and conditions under which war supplies are being transferred under the Mutual Aid Act to the three countries which have so far received the largest quantity of such supplies from Canada. When the Mutual Aid legislation is before the House there will be an opportunity for discussing the terms of these Agreements, if the House so desires. At this time I wish only to give a general explanation of their purpose and contents.

The preamble of the Mutual Aid Act declares that "it is essential to the defence and security of Canada and to the cause of world freedom that Canada should make the utmost contribution to the victory of the United Nations". It continues that "it is necessary that the products of Canadian war industry be made available not only for use by Canadian forces, but also to other United Nations, in accordance with strategic needs, in such manner as to contribute most effectively to the winning of the war." The preamble concludes that "it is expedient that the conditions upon which Canadian war supplies are made available to other United Nations should not be such as to burden post-war commerce, or lead to the imposition of trade restrictions, or otherwise prejudice a just and enduring peace." Since early in the war, the Government has taken the position that the accumulation of large war debts was contrary to the public interest. This policy has been endorsed by Parliament on several occasions. It is to be noted that a similar policy was adopted by the Government of the United States with the passage of the Lend-Lease Act on March 11, 1941, nearly nine months before the United States entered the war. The United Kingdom, which is the third large provider of munitions and war supplies for the use of other United Nations, has pursued a parallel policy in providing supplies to Allied Government unable to pay for them.

These Agreements set forth the general terms and conditions under which effect is being given to our policy. They are in some respects parallel to the Lend-Lease Agreements which have been concluded by the Government of the United States with many of the Governments receiving supplies from that country under the Lend-Lease Act. It is to be remembered, however, that the Lend-Lease Act was adopted when the United States still retained her neutrality, whereas the Mutual Aid Act was passed when Canada had been at war for over three and a half years. The Lend-Lease Act was based on the conception that the defence of the United States would be furthered by the provision of supplies on other than a cash basis to countries at war with the Axis. The Mutual Aid Act was based on a realization that the provision of materials to the common cause was no less vital and no less a duty than the provision of fighting men.

The preamble of these Agreements sets forth their purposes in language similar to that used in the preamble of the Mutual Aid Act which I have already quoted. I do not propose to analyze the Agreements at any length. They are designed to make clear that the recipient Governments accept these purposes and will cooperate in their fulfillment. Article II of each Agreement contains a pledge of reciprocal aid to Canada. Article X (Article IX in the Soviet Agreement) contains a mutual undertaking to pursue international economic policies designed to implement the economic objectives defined in the Atlantic Charter and accepted by all the United Nations, policies which are reflected in the far-seeing philosophy of the Mutual Aid Act. These policies will make it possible for Mutual Aid to prove its post-war value in enabling trade to thrive without the barriers which huge war debts would have imposed.

It has been our purpose in instituting the Mutual Aid procedure to leave at the end of the war no indeterminate obligations arising from the provision of war supplies by Canada, which would have to be settled by subsequent negotiations. By Article VI of our Mutual Aid Agreements it is laid down that the Government of Canada will not require the recipient Government "to redeliver to the Government of Canada any war supplies delivered under this Agreement except as specifically provided" in Articles VII, VIII, and IX. Article VII provides that title to cargo ships furnished under Mutual Aid shall remain with the Government of Canada. Article VIII provides that supplies which, at the end of hostilities in any major theatre, have not yet reached their destination may revert to Canadian ownership. Finally Article IX provides that in certain circumstances the Canadian Government may request the transfer of specified types of supplies still serviceable at the end of the war to other users, for relief purposes or for Canadian forces still serving overseas, and that we may also ask for the return to Canada of serviceable aircraft and automotive equipment if required for use at home.

The Agreements with the Governments of the United Kingdom and Australia are identical in substance. I should explain to the House the reasons for certain minor differences between these two Agreements and the Agreement with the Soviet Government.

Since the German attack on the Soviet Union the war supplies provided to the Soviet Government by her Allies have been settled by a special procedure which is employed in no other case. Annual protocols have been signed between Russia on the one hand and the supplying countries on the other hand, to which are attached schedules listing the stores which each supplying country undertakes to furnish during the period of one year. The parties of the first two Protocols were the United States, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union. Canada is a direct party to the current Third Protocol which covers the supplies being furnished to Russia during the year which will end on June 30th next. Direct Canadian participation in this Third Protocol was made possible by the adoption of the Mutual Aid Act at the last session. These Protocols are of necessity very secret in character, since they contain information which would be of much value to the enemy.

Article III of the Soviet Agreement refers directly to the Protocol procedure, and therefore differs somewhat from Article III of the other Agreements. We have a full opportunity, in the course of the negotiation of the Protocol, to secure whatever information is required to support the requests of the Soviet authorities. Article VII in the United Kingdom and Australian Agreements is not repeated in the Soviet Agreement. It relates specifically to cargo ships, and we have not found it possible to provide the Soviet Government with any cargo ships; hence the inclusion of the Article in the Soviet Agreement is unnecessary. These are the only differences of importance between the Agreements.

Mr. Eden to Sir S. Cripps (Moscow).

Sir, Foreign Office, July 25, 1941.

WHEN M. Maisky came to see me this afternoon I spoke to him of our desire to establish certain consulates in the Soviet Union. I said that your Excellency had already spoken of this matter to the Soviet Government, who, I understood, were considering it. The two posts to which I attached particular importance were Vladivostok and Baku. It was clearly desirable that we should have a consular officer at the former, since we must now expect that important supplies would be going to Russia from British territories by this route.

2. M. Maisky agreed that such a consul could certainly serve a useful purpose.

3. The second place I mentioned to his Excellency was Baku, where also a consular representative would be useful in connexion with the import of supplies from the Persian Gulf and the Caspian.

4. M. Maisky, who seemed to favour the idea, undertook to mention both these suggestions to his Government again. I added that if the difficulty were reciprocity we should be glad to try and arrange for Soviet representatives, if they wished them, in some posts in British territory.

I am, &c.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

Aid to Russia

The announcement in this morning's papers of the personnel of the British Mission under Lord Beaverbrook is likely to raise some question in the press as to why Canada is not participating directly in the discussions which are to take place shortly in Moscow.

During the past three months we have received some hundreds of resolutions from working-class and trade union organizations, urging more direct and visible Canadian assistance to the Soviet Union. This demand has had, I believe, a good deal of editorial support, particularly in Western Canada and in the "Globe and Mail".

We were kept advised by the United Kingdom of their preliminary discussions with the Soviet authorities about Russian needs and means of payment, but we have had no definite word about the results of the discussions which lately have been taking place in Washington between the Russian Mission, the British Supply Council and the United States Lease-Lend administration. In the first report of Russian requirements, it was indicated that in addition to their expected need for planes, tanks and military equipment, they would require considerable quantities of base metals, other industrial materials, plus an unspecified quantity of wheat. We do not know how much wheat the Russians want, where they would take delivery of it, or how they would pay for it. It is probable that the urgency of their direct military needs is such that wheat has been pushed a long way down the priority list, and that the Russians will not make funds or shipping available for wheat until they see a fair prospect of their other needs being met.

Of the things which Russia needs and which we might supply, wheat presents fewer difficulties than aluminum, nickel and cobalt - three metals which have been mentioned as among those most needed by the Soviet Union.

Mr. George Coote of Alberta called at the Department yesterday to enquire whether the Government thought anything could usefully be done at this stage to provide wheat for Russia. He thought that over and above the general desire to sell wheat to any safe destination, there was a pretty strong feeling in the country that Canada should in some way be associated with plans for United Kingdom and United States aid to Russia at this juncture, and that the threatened shortage of food in Russia resulting from the loss of the Ukraine, might give Canada an opportunity of helping Russia and reducing the wheat surplus at the same time. He referred to the statements Mr. MacKinnon had given the press early in July about the availability of Canadian wheat and flour for Russian needs, and thought that our absence from the coming discussions in Moscow might be construed as evidence that the Government did not want to follow up this lead.

I understand from Mr. Master of the Department of Trade and Commerce that Mr. Crerar proposes to raise the question for consideration in Council this afternoon.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

19 Feb. I am enclosing copy of a disturbing letter from the United Kingdom High Commissioner, whose Government is embarrassed and concerned by the successive delays which have held up the delivery to the U.S.S.R. of the Government icebreaker "Montcalm". You will recall that the War Committee approved in principle in October last of the release of the "Montcalm" to help keep the route to Archangel open. Since then her departure from Canada has been deferred for one reason or another. Her last start for Russia was in convoy from Halifax on February 10, but owing apparently to the defective quality of the bunker coal with which she was supplied, she had to leave the convoy and put back to Louisburg.

The United Kingdom Government feel that it would be very difficult for them to explain these delays to the Russians, who may doubt their good faith as agents in effecting the delivery. In the circumstances they ask whether the Canadian Government would be prepared to institute an enquiry into the whole affair.

I have sent a copy of Sir Patrick Duff's letter at once to the Deputy Minister of Transport, whose Department is handling the arrangements. Presumably, however, the question is one which you will wish to raise either at Cabinet or War Committee.

516/187
IMMEDIATE

Earnscliffe, Ottawa,
19th February, 1942

Dear Mr. Robertson,

C250929

You will recall that in November and December last telegrams were exchanged between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs on the subject of the delivery of the icebreaker "Montcalm " to the Russians.

During the last two months the Canadian Department of Transport have made every effort to get this vessel ready for sea and to arrange delivery to Russia. After encountering considerable difficulties they eventually succeeded in preparing the vessel for sea, and she sailed from a Canadian port on 20th January for Murmansk.

As a result, however, of an accident at sea, she was compelled to put back to Halifax, and on her arrival it is understood that sixteen of the crew deserted, and that as a result of a Naval enquiry into the causes of the accident, several were put in gaol for dereliction of duty. The Department of Transport sent their representative immediately to Montreal and Halifax to try and replace these men and made every effort to get the ship away again. Eventually she left Halifax in convoy on February 10th under the command of one of the Department of Transport's own officers.

I was advised yesterday by the Department of Transport that the vessel was ordered in to St. John's Newfoundland "on account of coal and smoke difficulties" and that from there she was ordered back to Louisburg. I reported this at once to the United Kingdom authorities; but before my signal could have reached them I received a telegram from them in which it was stated that they had learned of the vessel being diverted to Louisburg as she was unable to keep station owing to the poor quality of the coal supplied to her. It had also been reported to them that she was short of coal.

The United Kingdom Government are deeply disturbed at this further set-back coming on top of the previous delays, since an additional icebreaker is vitally important for the maintenance of supplies to Russia, and the consequences of these delays may be very embarrassing. They find it difficult to understand that the vessel should have been supplied with bad bunker coal from Halifax, where ample supplies of Welsh coal are available, and the whole incident is most disquieting to them. They anticipate extreme difficulty in explaining the matter to the Russians who, they fear, may begin to suspect their good faith.

I have in these circumstances been asked to invite the Canadian Government to consider whether, in view of the very serious nature of this matter, they would be prepared to institute an enquiry into the whole affair.

I should also be grateful if enquiries could be made as to the earliest possible date on which the vessel can put to sea again.

Yours sincerely,

PATRICK DUFF

Attached for your signature is a reply to Mr. L.A. Wilmot, who wrote to you suggesting that Canadian gifts to distressed countries should be identified by some indication of their Canadian origin.

Mr. Angus' covering note examines some of the possible applications of such a policy. You might wish to have the Board, which will be set up under the Mutual Aid Bill, explore the feasibility of Mr. Angus' suggestion that these Canadian gifts might be commemorated after the war in the countries which received them. I think he is right in fearing that our Canadian aid will be overshadowed in people's memories by the vast bulk of Lease-Lend assistance, and his suggestions for meeting this difficulty have, I think, a good deal of merit.

The passage about the Mutual Aid Act in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Vote of Credit speech was fully reported in the evening newspapers on May 25th and in the principal London morning newspapers next day. Typical headlines in all papers are "Canada has eased burden", "Canada's new aid bill saves Britain's money", "Canada cuts Britain's War Bill 1,500,000 a day", "Canada's Mutual Aid Act Helps United Kingdom", "Chancellor's Tribute to Canadian Help".

Leaders in "The Times" and Daily Express. "The Times" in its second leader said that the Chancellor's tribute to Canada "carries warm endorsement not only of this country but of all United Nations". After describing Canada's commitments under the act, the article said "The greatness of the service is enhanced by the soundness of the principle, which prevents the piling up of crippling indebtedness. Within her smaller compass Canada no less than the United States has become the arsenal and larder of the United Nations; and not that only, for these contributions are only the material counterpart of work which the fighting men of the Dominion are already doing and, even more, are destined to do". The article concludes with a tribute to the R.C.A.F. and R.C.N. and ends with the following words:- "The Canadian war effort makes indeed a memorable record. Not least is the part which allegiance and geography have entitled the Dominion to play in the partnership of the old and the new world--a partnership invaluable in the war, indispensible in the peace to come".

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

C250936

Negotiation of the new Soviet Protocol has now reached the stage where the next step is to transmit our respective offers of assistance to the Soviet Government. The United States Government suggest that they, the United Kingdom and Canada should each send identical and simultaneous letters to the Soviet representatives accredited in their capitals. The American letter, the text of which follows, will be signed by the Secretary of State. They enquire whether this draft text and procedure are acceptable to us. I think we can tell them that they are:-

"Confidential.

"My dear Mr. Ambassador:

"The Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada deeply appreciate the great contribution of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to our common cause, and the continuing vital importance of the Soviet front. They realize the extent to which the war has already consumed or destroyed Soviet resources and they appreciate her urgent future needs. They therefore desire to continue to provide the Soviet Union with the maximum assistance possible in the form of military supplies, raw materials, equipment and food.

"With the concurrence of the Prime Minister of Great Britain and the Prime Minister of Canada, I have the honor to submit to you herewith the proposed Third Soviet Protocol with an attached statement of the supplies and the shipping our Governments are in a position to make available to the U.S.S.R. for the year July 1, 1943 to June 30, 1944.

Cordially and sincerely"

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER.

C250937

The United States and United Kingdom Governments have agreed to present the draft of the Third Soviet Protocol to the Soviet Ambassadors in London and Washington on Tuesday, June 8th. Yesterday the Mutual Aid Board approved the draft Protocol and the Canadian Schedule of supplies. These amount in dollar value to slightly under sixty million dollars. The intention is that the Protocol and the three schedules setting forth the supplies to be furnished by each supplying country should be simultaneously presented by the three Governments. We shall receive on Monday morning the exact and final texts of the United States and United Kingdom Schedules and I shall then have prepared for your signature a covering letter to the Soviet Minister.

In my memorandum of June 3rd I quoted the text of the covering letter as drafted in Washington. This has now been agreed to between Washington and London with the addition of two short paragraphs stating that identical documents are being communicated to the Soviet representatives in the other two capitals and asking the Minister to request his Government for observations with a view to the eventual signature of the Protocol in London.

I am assuming that this course is acceptable to you.

Memorandum on Supplies for China.

C250939

The provision of supplies to China under the Mutual Aid Act is now under active consideration. Both the method of reaching agreement with China on the supplies to be sent and the volume and character of the supplies themselves involve important questions of foreign policy, strategy and finance. It is suggested that these questions should be faced directly on their merits before further progress is made with the negotiations.

The Chinese have presented a request for a lengthy list of supplies consisting in the main of items of army ground equipment for which production facilities exist in Canada. The supplies can be shipped to India in Canadian bottoms. From India to China the only available transportation is by air mainly by transport planes of the U.S. Transport Command. Another service is maintained by United China Air Lines which is equipped with U.S. lend-lease material and in which Pan-American Airways have a large interest. In practice priorities between India and China are understood to be controlled by General Stillwell. The tonnage that can be carried is small amounting in a recent month to around 3,000 tons of which some 1200 tons was aviation gasoline for the use of the U.S. air force in China.

The United States Government thus controls the final stage of shipment to China. It can also itself produce and transport by sea to India all the supplies that can be taken into China in present conditions. It is understood that they are anxious in Washington that these controls should not be challenged and that other countries wishing to send supplies to China should do so in accordance with plans concerted with the United States.

The major questions of foreign policy involved in the promise of Canadian supplies to China are first, our desire to aid China directly in the interest of promoting Chinese goodwill towards Canada and, secondly, our desire to avoid friction with the United States on this issue. If we were to undertake to China to make available in India a fairly large volume of Canadian war supplies, it is probable that friction would result; on the other hand this is what the Chinese Government would apparently like us to do. The United States would not welcome a substantial stockpile in India of supplies from Canada which would lead the Chinese Government to bring pressure to bear for air priorities for these supplies into Kungming where they could dispose of them as they saw fit. Considerable importance seems to be attached in Washington to this point. If we please China we run the risk of displeasing the United States.

From the strategic point of view the dominant consideration must be the effective use made of the supplies against Japan. The creation of stockpiles in India which cannot be moved would be a straight strategic loss; the munitions would be immobilized and the shipping needed to transport them to India would be used to no avail. General Stillwell is now able with some degree of success to keep a string on the incoming supplies and to direct them in accordance with his appreciation of strategic needs. In view of the present condition of the Chinese armies and even the danger of diversion of incoming supplies for use against the Chinese Communist forces in the North (a diversion which would most certainly be contrary to our strategic interests) it seems desirable that we should do nothing to diminish the controls now in General Stillwell's hands.

From the financial point of view it would be foolish to devote Canadian production resources and funds provided for Mutual Aid to manufacture and move to India munitions which might get no further.

It is certainly desirable that China should receive assistance from Canada under the Mutual Aid Act. In the light of current conditions in China and of the narrow limitations of air transport over the final stage, it is also most desirable that Canadian aid to China should be provided in agreement with the United States. Even as a matter of policy we wish to become a rival benefactor we have not the means to deliver the goods. The conclusion is that we should enter into no long-term commitment with China and that we should seek to secure the prior agreement of the United States before entering into any commitment. Otherwise we incur the danger of not only wasting our own resources but of providing a cause of disagreement with the United States without in fact contributing to Chinese resistance to Japan.

It is understood that the United Kingdom Government is not at present sending any supplies into China. They should, however, be kept informed of our intentions.

NOTE FOR MR. ROBERTSON (QUEBEC)

D.527 aug.10

You will have received in Quebec the D.O. telegram on transportation routes to China dated I think August 9th. I have not got it in front of me and do not recall its number. This report increases my concern that we may be wasting supplies, shipping, money and time in extending Mutual Aid to China on any substantial scale. You will notice that there is a reference at the end of the telegram to the creation in India of a Supply Committee of representatives of the U.S., U.K. and China. I attach a copy of a report from the Joint War Aid Committee in Washington which met last Friday mainly to consider this subject. Fraser tells me that the proper interpretation of this report is that the way is now clear for us without further consultation with the U.S. or U.K. to send three shiploads of munitions to India for delivery there to China so long as the total weight does not exceed 12,500 tons. In the light of the D.O. telegram it looks as though these supplies could not move to China for a great many months. I gather that M.& S. intends to go ahead at once in preparing shipments and in approaching the Chinese.

I have never been able to find out just what "the" moral" commitment to China amounted to. I suspect that a fairly definite promise was made and I know that supplies for China are being produced now in Canada, particularly pistols of a calibre that can be used for no other purpose. I shall try to have a talk with Clark or Bryce this week. The administrative machinery for Mutual Aid is not operating at all smoothly. I think we shall have to put onto the subject a capable junior in the Department who has more time than I have to badger Fraser and to try to keep him on the tracks.

If you get a chance you might bring the situation to Mr. King's notice. I do not know how much the U.K. Government know of our intentions. The establishment of the Supply Committee in India raises a new question.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS PRESS RELEASE

Confidential

Not To be used in papers appearing before ~~11 a.m.~~ 12 noon EDT on Tuesday, October 19th, or to be broadcast before that hour.

Signature of Agreement for Supplies to Soviet Union

The Department of External Affairs announces that an Agreement for the provision of supplies to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was signed in London on October 19th between the United Kingdom, United States, Canada and Soviet Governments, by which the first three Governments undertake to supply armaments, equipment, materials and foodstuffs to the U.S.S.R. Two former Agreements of this kind were signed; first in Moscow in Odtober,1941, and second in Washington in October,1942; the present Agreement represents a continuation of existing arrangements. This is the first time, however, that Canada has taken part as a signatory, though supplies from Canada have previously formed part of the commitment of the United Kingdom and in some cases, of that of the United States. The period covered by the second Agreement ended on June 30th; but, although third Agreement has only now been signed, its provisions have been effective for the past three months, and the flow of supplies of all kinds to the U.S.S.R. has continued without interruption. The present Agreement was signed by Mr. Lyttelton and Sir Alexander Cadogan on behalf of the United Kingdom, by Mr.Winant on behalf of the United States, by Mr. Massey on behalf of Canada, and by Mr. Gousev and Mr. Borisenko on behalf of the U.S.S.R.

Australia

C250945

"I am strongly in favour of any scheme which will bring the Dominions into closer consultation and cooperation with the United Kingdom and each other. That cooperation is the very clear intention of Mr. Curtin's proposal, and it will receive from the Government of New Zealand the very careful and friendly examination to which it is entitled. And coming from the Prime Minister of Australia, just after he has received such an overwhelming vote of confidence from the people of the Commonwealth, it is of even greater importance than if made under different circumstances. There are at the present time, of course, daily consultations with Britain on all matters of British Commonwealth and World War Importance, and the Cooperation between the countries of the British Commonwealth and Empire has been very close, effective, and beneficial during the war period. If a scheme for providing a workable basis for a permanent British Commonwealth organization, consistent with the sovereign status of the Dominions is put forward, it will be welcomed by New Zealand."

Mutual Aid

C250946

Extract from "Twelfth Report to Congress on Lend-Lease Operations" - by President Roosevelt, November 11, 1943:

Canada has received no lend-lease aid from the United States. She has paid cash for the supplies obtained in this country. It may be noted, however, that Canada has already made a billion dollars worth of aid available without payment to the United Kingdom and is now engaged in making available another billion dollars worth of aid to the United Kingdom, Russia, China and the other United Nations on a mutual aid program similar to our lend-lease program.

C250949

A REPORT ON MUTUAL AID

I.—THE POOLING OF RESOURCES

1. This war is being fought on the significant concepts of mutual aid and of the pooling of resources. One of the most striking and far-reaching applications of this principle was the institution of the system of lend-lease. In March, 1941, the United States Congress passed an Act entitled " An Act to Promote the Defence of the United States," commonly known as the Lend-Lease Act. Under its provisions, the President was empowered to transfer without payment materials needed for winning the war to the Governments of those countries whose defence was deemed vital to the defence of the United States; the consideration for such transfers, to be determined at a later date, was to be such benefit to the United States, direct or indirect, as the President might deem satisfactory.

2. In the first stages of the war, broadly speaking, we were dependent upon the ordinary peace-time methods of paying for the war materials we needed. Our liquid financial resources were becoming exhausted, and we were faced with the danger that the flow of munitions and food would be reduced through our inability to pay. Some idea of the strain upon our finances is shown by the fact that, despite the help of lend-lease, we have spent some £1,500,000,000 in the United States since the outbreak of the war on supplies of all kinds. These financial difficulties were relieved by the passage into law of the Lend-Lease Act.

3. In Canada we had similar difficulties of payment which were solved by two magnanimous acts, the provision in 1942 of a money gift of $1,000,000,000 for our war needs and, when that had been exhausted, the passage of the Mutual Aid Act in May, 1943, which provides for the transfer to the United Nations without cash charge of the goods they may need for the winning of the war, to the value of a further $1,000,000,000.

4. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have recognised how greatly mutual aid assists the efficient prosecution of the war and good relations between comrades-in-arms. The principle of the transfer of goods and services without charge or calculation is a necessary part of the efficient planning of the war from the point of view of strategy and the economical use of man-power and shipping. It is, therefore, the policy of His Majesty's Government to apply that principle themselves wherever possible, not only to the United States, but also to other allies, and they think it proper to satisfy the public interest in the subject by now reporting to Parliament in some detail on the scope of the various arrangements which are in force.

5. This is the first detailed statement that His Majesty's Government have published on the contribution they are making to mutual aid. It is a large and growing contribution, and this record of it marks a development of the great principle initiated by the President and the Congress of the United States, of whose lead in the matter His Majesty's Government are profoundly sensible.

II.—THE RANGE OF MUTUAL AID

The United States.

6. On the 23rd February, 1942, the Mutual Aid Agreement with the United States was signed (Cmd. 6341). Article II of that Agreement reads as follows:—

> "The Government of the United Kingdom will continue to contribute to the defence of the United States of America and the strengthening thereof, and will provide such articles, services, facilities or information as it may be in a position to supply."

This provision recognised an existing situation. In the early days of lend-lease our chief contribution was to hold the enemy and, meanwhile, to supply defence information, bought with our experience in the war and our intensive research in the immediate pre-war period; we were only delivering to the United States a small amount of defence material. But when the United States was in the war, the picture changed, and our reciprocal aid to the United States grew monthly as the occasion for it increased.

7. The position was further defined in an exchange of notes between His Majesty's Ambassador in Washington and the United States Secretary of State on the 3rd September, 1942 (Cmd. 6389), from which the following is an extract:—

> "The Government of the United Kingdom will provide the United States or its armed forces with the following types of assistance, as such reciprocal aid, when it is found that they can most effectively be procured in the United Kingdom or in the British Colonial Empire:—
> (a) Military equipment, munitions, and military and naval stores.
> (b) Other supplies, materials, facilities and services for the United States forces, except for the pay and allowances of such forces, administrative expenses, and such local purchases as its official establishments may make other than through the official establishments of the Government of the United Kingdom. . . . .
> (c) Supplies, materials and services needed in the construction of military projects, tasks and similar capital works required for the common war effort in the United Kingdom or in the British Colonial Empire, except for the wages and salaries of United States citizens.
> (d) Supplies, materials and services needed in the construction of such military projects, tasks and capital works in territory other than the United Kingdom or the British Colonial Empire or territory of the United States to the extent that the United Kingdom or the British Colonial Empire is a more practicable source of supply than the United States or another of the United Nations."

8. Besides these classes of materials and services for which His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom is responsible under the Agreement, we supply as reciprocal aid a large number of shipping services. Ships are put at the disposal of the United States; troops and stores are carried on British ships; disbursements of United States ships are met in British and Colonial ports; bunker oil from British sources is supplied in these and other ports.

9. By common agreement, raw materials and bulk supplies of foodstuffs (as distinct from rations for United States Forces) were at first excluded from the Agreement, since the dollar receipts from United States purchases were needed to meet our heavy liabilities on pre-lend-lease armament contracts in the United States, which were not covered by lend-lease. But now that those contracts are largely fulfilled, and in furtherance of the general pooling of resources, His Majesty's Government have decided to extend reciprocal aid to raw materials and foodstuffs purchased by the Government of the United States from the United Kingdom and the Colonial Empire which would thus be made available on terms analogous to lend-lease. In addition, His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom will defray the cost of British shipping services for these materials from all parts of the British Commonwealth. Thus a very wide range of additional products and services is brought into the scope of reciprocal aid which is not yet reflected in the statistics given below.

10. The cost of reciprocal aid in the Colonies has been entirely borne hitherto by the Government of the United Kingdom.

11. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom are, of course, not responsible for reciprocal aid as between the Dominions and the United States. The Australian and New Zealand Governments signed reciprocal aid agreements on the 3rd September, 1942, simultaneously with our own, and have given reciprocal aid at their own expense on a scale which is large in proportion to their resources. The South African Government is giving reciprocal aid without any formal agreement; and the same is true of the Government of India, who bear the cost of reciprocal aid given to the United States Forces in India.

12. The goods and services which we furnish to the United States under reciprocal aid are largely different in kind from what we ourselves receive under lend-lease. The aid we receive from the United States under lend-lease can for the most part be measured in terms of large contracts. Our needs for armaments, foodstuffs, raw materials, &c., are brought together in London, and, in so far as they need to be met from the United States, are presented in bulk to the United States Government in Washington. The stores are procured and transferred to us in bulk. All the items go through a regular process of requisitioning before they are supplied. Thus there is no great difficulty in listing and evaluating what is supplied to us.

13. In contrast, our reciprocal aid to the United States is mainly the provision of services both great and small and of a wide variety of items transferred in the daily intercourse of the war effort. It is a decentralised and flexible system designed to meet the needs of armed forces at war in many scattered countries. Where supplies are issued in bulk from some central depot in the United Kingdom it would be possible to make a rough estimate of the value of materials transferred, though there is neither the time nor the manpower to evaluate each separate item. In other cases the depot may be thousands of miles away from headquarters, and no information could reach here for many months. There are also transfers in the field which may or may not be noted, according to the exigencies of battle. Therefore, at no particular point in time can we say that reciprocal aid amounts to so much, or specify all the items which have been supplied or all the services rendered to the United States Forces.

14. One of the earliest and most important forms of aid which we have given to the United States is the steady flow of information and the fruits of research and practice which we have supplied since the earliest days of the war. This is not a service which can be valued in money, but it has cost more in blood and effort than most aid, since its value to the recipients lies in the fact that it is the fruit of battle experience. We have passed on at once all we have learned of the strong and weak points of the enemy's tactics and weapons, and of our own; all our establishments, our experiments and our tests in battle have been open to American experts to watch and learn. While the United States were not yet at war, and later, before they were actually fighting against the German forces, we tried out their prototypes and models in actual combat. These trials helped in the development of the Sherman tank and the Flying Fortress, among others. The value of this cannot be assessed in figures; it is enough to say that the lives which it cost to gain this knowledge have saved American as well as British lives.

15. In view of the great extent of American production of weapons of war by the time American Forces began to reach the battle fronts on any large scale, reciprocal aid has not taken the form of large assignments of ships, planes, guns or other weapons to the United States. Such of these as we could spare from our own production and stocks were made available to the rest of the Empire, to the U.S.S.R., to the French, and to the forces of other allied Governments working from London. Most of our reciprocal aid to the United States has, therefore, been "servicing." It has taken the form of providing transportation, accommodation, airfields, facilities, and local supplies, to American Forces in the British Isles and the Colonies.

16. Within this country and in the British Colonies all transportation costs of the United States Forces are met under reciprocal aid. Apart from this, many hundreds of thousands of American troops have been carried to these islands and to overseas theatres of war by British troop transports. American naval and merchant vessels engaged on these operations, or operating European, Mediterranean and African waters for other reasons, have also been supplied free, as reciprocal aid, with the harbour and repair facilities, fuel, stores, food, &c., which they required, in so far as we possessed bases and stocks suitable for the purpose.

17. In the British Isles, and in British Colonies and Protectorates overseas, we have made available sites and building materials, and constructed airfields, barracks, repair shops, vehicle assembly depots, hospitals, &c., for the accommodation and use of the growing American air and ground forces; we have handed over existing capital installations, adapting them where necessary; and we have assumed the cost of keeping them supplied with light, heat, water, telephone and other services.

18. We also provide as reciprocal aid various foodstuffs, in so far as they are available from local production or stocks, and can more conveniently be provided locally than imported specially by the American Forces from the United States.

19. Apart from the direct requirements of the United States Forces, we have furnished freely as reciprocal aid amenities for the serving man; such as premises for American Red Cross Clubs; many N.A.A.F.I. canteens; equipment for the American Red Cross and the Special Services Branch of the American Army, and many other services and supplies which were needed for similar purposes. According to a recent American estimate, over 80 per cent. of the current stocks of American Army Post Exchanges in this country are being received as reciprocal aid.

20. Another American estimate is that almost 90 per cent. of American army medical supplies in this country are being received as reciprocal aid. In addition, hospitals, some specially built and others, including a large number of civil and military hospitals, turned over as they stood, have been provided, together with ambulance trains.

U.S.S.R.

21. War material has been furnished by the United Kingdom to Russia free of cost since Russia became engaged in the war with Germany. This was regularised in an Agreement signed on the 27th June, 1942. As an example of this mutual aid, it may be mentioned that by the end of May 1943 4,690 complete aircraft (including losses in transit) had been sent to Russia, with appropriate supplies of spares, including engines, airframes and other articles of equipment. We have opened up a route to carry these supplies across Persia, and have sent large quantities of materials by the sea route to North Russia, which has frequently involved a major, and indeed a very hazardous, naval operation.

China.

22. Arms, munitions and military equipment are being supplied free to Chinese Forces in China within the limitations of transport from India, which is at present very restricted. In addition, first in Burma, and then in India, Chinese troops have been given all that they required locally, whether by issue from British Army stocks or by local purchase, including rations, and their pay in local currency, together with cash for their local purchases, on lend-lease terms. These arrangements now cover, amongst other things, the cost of training pilots in India. Sea and land freights for British and American lend-lease military supplies to China are also provided.

Other Allies.

23. Our arrangements vary according to our allies' needs and their resources. Holland, Belgium, Norway and Yugoslavia pay for all we give them. Certain other allies are supplied under credits, but the bulk of military supplies are made available free, only to be returned if they still exist and we want them after the war. In accordance with this principle, we are supplying the Armed Forces of Greece, Czechoslovakia and the French Committee of National Liberation without charge, and similar arrangements have been offered to Poland and Yugoslavia. Military supplies are also being furnished to Turkey free of cost.

24. We have also in the past made available, on special credit terms, considerable civil and military supplies to other allies, notably the French and Turkey. These supplies, though not on lend-lease, represent a corresponding call on British man-power, production and finance.

25. We have also on loan to our allies the following naval vessels:—

1 Cruiser,
17 Corvettes,
14 Destroyers,
6 Submarines,
16 Motor Torpedo Boats,
17 Motor Launches,
19 Mine-sweeping Vessels, and 4 Frigates.

III.—THE AMOUNT OF MUTUAL AID

26. Hitherto, His Majesty's Government have not given to Parliament any estimate of that part of the total of mutual aid furnished by the United Kingdom to which a monetary value can be given. The amount is now so large that they think it proper to present such rough estimates as they can make. But some reservations are necessary.

27. First, the estimates are necessarily broad and incomplete. Moreover, they are not up to date. If all forms of mutual aid were given centrally, it would be easy to measure. But, as has been stated above, it is a widespread and decentralised process. Furthermore, it is almost impracticable to obtain information from operational areas. Where the mutual aid technique is adopted, the services and supplies are transferred without any price attached to them, and no attempt has been made to build up any detailed accounts from the bottom upwards by the introduction for this sole purpose of a process of valuation which would not otherwise be required. It will, indeed, be obvious from the nature of this reciprocal aid that, apart from the fact that mutual aid does not rest upon the principle of the creation of mutual indebtedness supported by detailed accounts, the task of maintaining such accounts would involve a misuse of man-power which could not be tolerated at the present stage of the war. Detailed accountancy over the whole field of our reciprocal aid to the United States alone would require several thousand clerks and accountants.

28. This system does not imply any lack of care in the expenditure of public money. Our allies' requirements are in the main bulked with ours and procured in the same way as ours; and in so far as they are issued from Service stocks they will have been subject to normal control during storage and will have been issued only on proper requisition by an authorised officer.

29. Secondly, if any figures which we give of reciprocal aid to the United States lead to comparison with the lend-lease given to us, such comparison of money values, unless made with circumspection, will lead to a serious underestimate of the British contribution. The estimates of lend-lease and reciprocal aid are made independently by the two Governments in terms of the actual cost to themselves.

30. The price-levels in the United States of the labour and materials most in question are substantially higher than ours. Thus American book costs probably exceed similar British costs by more than 50 per cent. This is not an accurate guide to relative efficiency, after allowing for differences of wage-levels, since the costs in the two countries are computed on bases which are widely different in several respects. But they do afford an approximately accurate corrective for the book-costs as entered up for the present purpose.

31. With these qualifications the cost to us of reciprocal aid furnished to the United States can be classified as follows:—

(i) Capital Installations in the United Kingdom.

The total programme which is in course of being carried out is estimated to cost more than £150,000,000. The estimated value of work done by the 30th June, 1943, was as follows:—

	£ millions.
Barracks, hospitals, &c.	31
Air ports	55
Aircraft repairs depot, &c.	5
Others	1

(ii) Goods and Services transferred in the United Kingdom.

	Up to June 30, 1943.
	£ millions.
Military stores, including equipment and clothing ...	21
Food and other Army supplies	10
Aircraft and aeronautical equipment	20
Industrial, naval and goods	13
Miscellaneous services	18
	82

(iii) Shipping Services.

	Up to June 30, 1943.
	£ millions.
Freight services	36
Disbursements including Bunkers	6
	42

The above figures relate only to transfers and services in the United Kingdom and shipments to the United States. They cover, on the average, a period of about one year. It was only from July 1942 onwards that reciprocal aid became appreciable. The figures relate only to items known to have been transferred and services known to have been rendered up to the 30th June, 1943. They do not cover all the aid actually furnished up to that date.

(iv) Goods and Services transferred in Overseas Theatres of War.

It is impossible at present to furnish even approximate estimates for the total value of these transfers. They relate partly to transfers of war material and partly to a vast number of small items, mostly in North Africa. It is expected that it will be another two or three months before any estimate can be made even of major items such as tanks transferred in Tunisia.

(v) Raw Materials, Food-stuffs and associated Shipping Services.

As mentioned in paragraph 9 above, His Majesty's Government have decided to extend reciprocal aid to raw materials and foodstuffs procured by the United States Government in the United Kingdom and the Colonies, together with the carriage of such materials by British shipping. It is not yet possible to make an estimate of the value of such supplies.

32. The figures of the amounts supplied to Russia under our lend-lease agreement with her are as follows:—

	Up to June 30, 1943.
	£ millions.
Vehicles and tanks	93
Guns, ammunition, &c.	16
Aircraft and aeronautical equipment	65
Industrial materials and naval supplies	5
	179

These figures do not include the very large expenses incurred in conveying these stores to Russia, and keeping open the routes.

33. Most of our lend-lease arrangements with our allies other than the United States and the U.S.S.R. are comparatively new, and the amount given under them is not yet large; earlier on, most of the assistance we gave was in the form of credits. Our credits to all our Allies, other than the United States and the U.S.S.R., up to the 31st December, 1942, together with such lend-lease assistance as we gave before that date, amounted to about £186,000,000.

IV.—THE LIMITATIONS OF MUTUAL AID

34. The amount of mutual aid which a country gives is not a measure of its war effort. It is only a measure of that part of its war effort which is applied as a contribution to the war effort of another country. Some of the United Nations are so close to the enemy or have such small resources compared with their vast needs that almost the whole of their war effort is applied directly. Others, further off, or with more resources, can best help the general cause by putting part of their production in the common pool.

35. If the United States send us aircraft for British crews to fly from British airfields, that is reckoned as lend-lease. If they send such aircraft complete with American crews who fly them from the same field, that is not reckoned as lend-lease. No one would claim that the former was a greater contribution to the Allied cause than the latter.

36. Mutual aid is for the most part confined to the provision by one country to another of its own produce. It does not cover the burdens assumed in theatres of operations overseas, particularly in respect of cash expenditure which cannot be covered by the shipment of goods.

37. Thus, mutual aid falls short of a financial pooling of overseas expenditure. In particular, the pay of troops, and the vast and growing cash expenditure in third countries on military operations and supplies are outside its scope. This burden, of which the United Kingdom has had to bear a particularly heavy share, has to be taken into account alongside mutual aid in considering the financial weight of the war on this country. Up to the middle of 1943 the burden thus assumed by the United Kingdom, in the form of payments made to other members of the United Nations in excess of sums received from them, amounted to over £2,250,000,000. These sums measure the extent to which the United Kingdom has in this way burdened her future commerce by parting with gold and other capital assets and by incurring liabilities to other members of the United Nations.

V.—SUMMARY

38. The part which the British Commonwealth has borne and is bearing in the field of mutual aid cannot be measured in terms of money. Indeed, financial sacrifice is not the most valuable part of what any of the United Nations is called upon to contribute to total war; for the claims of war against each are the same, that they should give all they have. Moreover, many even of the items catalogued above cannot be brought together and be stated in a definite money total. But this should not be allowed to lead to an underestimate of the size of the British financial contribution to the costs of the war all over the world.

39. In order to indicate the order of magnitude of the external financial aid now accorded by the United Kingdom, the following comparisons may, perhaps, be helpful. In the President's Report to the Congress of the 25th May, 1943, he gave figures to show that lend-lease expenditures up to that date made up 12 per cent. of America's total war expenditure. The proportion of British war expenditure currently devoted to mutual aid is 10 per cent. Thus there is a difference in the division of our respective contributions between our own direct effort and our assistance to our allies. But there is not so much difference as might have been supposed. This takes no account of the very large contribution to the external finance of the war made by the United Kingdom in cash expenditures abroad, as explained in paragraph 37 above. Such contribution apart, what we give to the United States as mutual aid in relation to our national income does not fall far short of what the United States give to us as lend-lease in relation to their national income.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

I believe you are seeing Sir William Glasgow, before you leave, to receive a message which Dr. Evatt has asked him to deliver to you personally. Evatt's message has to do with the inclusion in Article X of our Mutual Aid Agreement of a reference to the reduction of tariffs as one of the means of creating international trade and securing fuller employment after the war. (I gave you a copy of Wrong's letter on this subject yesterday).

Attached is a copy of a letter I propose sending Sir William Glasgow to help him reply to Dr. Evatt's objections. You may wish to use some of the arguments of this letter in speaking to Sir William Glasgow.

CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Sir William,

With reference to our conversation of this morning and subject to the views which the Prime Minister may express to you when you see him, I think the following points are the principal ones to be made in reply to the representations of your Government on Article X of the proposed Mutual Aid Agreement:

1. It is regarded as essential by the Ministers concerned to have a general declaration of liberal economic purposes included in the Agreement with Australia and in the Agreements to be made with other recipients of Mutual Aid. It is certain that there will be strong criticism of the Mutual Aid procedure at the next session of Parliament. It is expected that the provisions of Article X will be of considerable value in rebuttal.

2. There is nothing in Article X to which the Canadian and Australian Governments are not already bound, together with all the other Governments in receipt of Mutual Aid from Canada. It does not go as far in some respects as Article VII of the Lend Lease Agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom. Canada has by exchange of notes associated herself with the declaration of policies in Article VII, and Australia is understood to have accepted the whole Lend Lease Agreement. Our Article X is therefore a rather mild reaffirmation of policies already formally in effect.

Major-General
the Hon. Sir William Glasgow, K.C.B., High Commissioner for Australia,
Ottawa.

3. The change in the course of the war since the acceptance of Article VII only makes it more important from the Canadian point of view that the proposed Article X should be included in the Agreement, since interest and concern over post-war economic policies are now much more acute.

4. This article must be included in identical form in all Mutual Aid Agreements and it is impossible to omit the reference to reduction of tariffs from the Agreement with Australia. It cannot be dropped from all the Agreements without weakening greatly the utility of the article as part of the reply to the domestic critics of the Mutual Aid procedure.

5. The article is a declaration of purpose and not a specific commitment. It binds the Australian Government no more and no less than it binds the Canadian Government to pursue liberal international economic policies for their mutual benefit.

Yours sincerely,

N.A. Robertson

MEMO FOR THE UNDER-SECRETARY

Macgregor of Australia told me yesterday that Glasgow had just received instructions from Evatt to see the Prime Minister personally about the language included in Article X of the proposed Master Mutual Aid Agreement and especially to do his best to secure agreement on the removal of any reference to tariff reduction. The article in question reads as follows:--

> "The Governments of Canada and .....reaffirm their desire to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between their countries and throughout the world. They declare that their guiding purposes include the adoption of measures designed to promote employment, the production and consumption of goods and the expansion of international commerce by the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers, with the object of contributing to the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the Declaration of August 14th, 1941, known as the Atlantic Charter."

Glasgow came to see me later in the afternoon. He did not mention that his instructions were to take the matter up with the Prime Minister but it is possible that he will try to see the Prime Minister very shortly. I gave him the text of the latest draft of the article as above. They had previously had an earlier draft but the revisions made apparently did not meet the points made by Evatt.

I explained to Glasgow that the Master Agreement had been approved by the Mutual Aid Board and would come before Council in the very near future. On approval by Council it was proposed to submit it formally to several governments including the United Kingdom, Australia, U.S.S.R. and China. I pointed out that this article was based on Article 7 of the Lend Lease Agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States to which Australia had adhered. As Australia was already bound by the somewhat more extensive provisions of Article 7, I could see no reason why his government should object to signing an agreement containing our proposed Article X.

To this Glasgow could only answer that when they adhered to the Lend Lease Agreement the Japanese were a much greater threat to Australia than they are now; his Government did not wish to enter a fresh commitment in favour of tariff reduction at this time.

I told Glasgow that I thought there was very small chance of any modification being made in the sense desired pointing out that this article had to be included in identical language in all our mutual aid agreements. I asked him whether in fact the reduction of tariffs which restricted markets abroad for staple Australian products -- (such as the United States wool tariff) was not a "guiding purpose" of his government. He admitted this but said that he understood that the chief cause of Evatt's objection was fear of criticism in the Australian House from the very strong protectionist elements inside the Australian Labour Party. He is cabling the final draft to Evatt and he anticipates renewed pressure from him.

When one considers the very general language of this article and the fact that it is included in an agreement covering the free gift to Australia of supplies which may reach a total of one-hundred million dollars in the current year, the persistance of Evatt in objecting to this very mild declaration in favour of general tariff reduction is hard to justify. I attach a copy of this note since you may wish to send it to the Prime Minister in case Glasgow seeks to see him.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER.

C250964

Sir William Glasgow left with me this morning a telegram to him from Dr. Evatt, of which I attach a copy. This reports a definite refusal by the Australian Cabinet to agree to the inclusion in the Mutual Aid Agreement with Canada of a clause mentioning the reduction of tariffs as a desirable mutual objective. The only alternative suggested is that the preamble to the Agreement should be expanded to include a statement that Australia and Canada have accepted in principle the objectives of the Atlantic Charter and of Article VII of the United States Lend-Lease Agreement. As the acceptance of these objectives is already a matter of formal public record, the addition of such a statement to the preamble would not contribute at all to the purpose we had in mind in proposing Article X of the Mutual Aid Agreement.

Australia is already receiving supplies from Canada under Mutual Aid and it is expected that the total value of supplies furnished out of the billion dollar vote will run close on $100,000,000. The unreasonable Australian attitude gives us a very difficult problem. If we refuse to furnish supplies to a sister country of the Commonwealth which is in need of them, we would depart from the general principle of distributing our war supplies in accordance with strategic need. If we let the supplies go forward but require payment in blocked Australian pounds, we would accumulate a war debt inside the Commonwealth. If we give in and remove Article X from the Agreement with Australia, we shall have to cut it out of the agreements with all other countries receiving Mutual Aid and we would thus surrender the political advantages of using the Mutual Aid procedure to secure a series of bi-lateral declarations favouring the sort of international economic policy that we desire.

I think the question should be discussed by the War Committee. I am sending copies of the enclosure to Mr. Howe and Mr. Ilsley.

I agree, but what do you suggest

No. 258. Your No. 230. Canadian Mutual Aid. Text of clause proposed by Canadian Government was carefully and exhaustively considered at a special meeting of Cabinet yesterday. After full consideration of the whole position and of points made by Canadian Prime Minister, Australian Government regrets that it is unable to accept the inclusion within the body of the Agreement of clause referring specifically to the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers.

While the Australian Government would much prefer no reference at all in the agreement to post war commercial obligations it has explored the position with a view to finding some practicable alternative to meet Canadian Government. The Australian Government feels that the solution lies in a suitable statement in the preamble stating that Australia and Canada have accepted in principle the general objectives set forth in the Atlantic Charter and the United States-United Kingdom Mutual Aid Agreement.

Please inform the Prime Minister of the foregoing and assure him that while Government desires to meet as far as practicable the wishes of the Canadian Government,its own difficulties are so real that it cannot see its way clear to go beyond what is now proposed.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER.

C250966

I attach two draft telegrams to our High Commissioner in Canberra on the controversy with Australia over the Mutual Aid Agreement. The question will come before the Mutual Aid Board at a meeting at 2 p.m. tomorrow, and it would be helpful if you could let me know before then whether you agree with this approach. The telegrams have been drafted in consultation with the Department of Finance.

I also attach a copy of the Agreement. It is important that this should be signed by some of the recipients of Mutual Aid, especially the United Kingdom, before Parliament meets. The Agreement has been approved by the Mutual Aid Board and will come before Council tomorrow unless you desire its postponement. We would like to give it formally to the United Kingdom at once and to the Soviet Government next week, when the Deputy Commissar for Foreign Trade, Mr.Sergeev, will be passing through Ottawa en route from Washington to Moscow.

The draft telegrams to Mr. Davis tell the story pretty fully. It seems likely that Dr. Evatt is the centre of Australian resistance and there is some reason to hope that he will give way if we take a strong line. The issue is big enough to warrant an approach to Mr. Curtin in your name.

Ottawa, December 29th, 1943.

Your telegrams Nos. 316 and 317 of December 18th. Mutual Aid Agreement.

1. You have doubtless received text of Australian refusal to accept Article X of proposed Agreement which was communicated by Glasgow on December 23rd. Will you please deliver personally to Mr. Curtin as soon as possible the message from the Prime Minister given in my immediately following telegram?

2. For your general guidance in your discussion with Mr. Curtin our feeling is that the Australian Government has adopted an indefensible position which they will in any case probably be unable to maintain in other connections. If they intend to pursue a course of extreme economic nationalism their commercial relations with Canada will in any event be impaired. We might as well face the issue now when very substantial benefits to Australia amounting perhaps to $75,000,000 or $100,000,000 under the Mutual Aid programme are involved.

3. We have framed our financial policy on the premise that the accumulation of war debts was undesirable and we have, therefore, furnished a great quantity of war supplies to other United Nations at the expense of the Canadian Treasury. We are not seeking to drive any bargain with Australia; we are only supporting policies under which fair trading is possible and bargaining between governments reduced to a minimum. We consider that pursuit of a reasonably liberal international commercial policy after the war is a logical consequence of the wartime methods of furnishing supplies adopted by the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom, which have been deliberately designed to encourage liberal trade policies after the war.

4. The reference in the message to Mr. Curtin to publicity is not intended as a threat. The Mutual Aid procedure will be discussed at length during the next session and the Government will have to explain why no agreement has been concluded with Australia. Such an explanation may well provoke unwelcome discussion of Australian policy here and in other countries, but we do not see how it can be avoided. Public knowledge of the Australian action would be sure to arouse doubts in other countries about the intentions of the Government of Australia, and might well impede progress in developing not only beneficial international commercial relations but also joint action in other matters.

5. For your private information there is some indication that Australia has been seeking unduly large quantities of certain supplies from Canada under Mutual Aid and we understand that the United States authorities have felt it necessary frequently to reduce Australian lease-lend requisitions by very substantial amounts.

CYPHER

Ottawa, December 28th, 1943.

My immediately preceding telegram. Following is message from Prime Minister for Mr. Curtin, Begins:

Your High Commissioner in Ottawa has informed me that the Australian Cabinet is unable to accept the proposed Article X of the Mutual Aid Agreement between our two countries. I greatly regret this decision and hope that you will find it possible to reconsider the position. We have considered the suggestion that there might be substituted for this Article a reference in the preamble to the fact that Australia and Canada have accepted in principle the general objectives set forth in the Atlantic Charter and in Article Seven of the Master Lend-Lease Agreement, but we feel however that we cannot agree to this alternative, as the question appears to us of greater importance than would be implied by a mere general reference of this character.

It seems to us logical and, indeed, essential, that the Mutual Aid Agreements should contain a re-affirmation of the main points of the general international economic policy which we are all pledged to pursue after the war by our acceptance of the Atlantic Charter and by the formal undertakings into which we have entered with the Government of the United States. Our Mutual Aid policy and Act were deliberately formulated to fit into post-war economic international relations of this character and to make them more workable by eliminating the accumulation of large war debts among the United Nations. The Canadian Parliament and the Canadian people have accepted the heavy financial burdens of Mutual Aid with this hope in view.

It is for this reason that we believe it essential that all our Mutual Aid Agreements should contain an assurance that the nations receiving this assistance also look forward to international economic relations of this character. We had naturally believed that Australia and the other countries receiving Mutual Aid subscribed to the principles in question, because they had so declared in their agreements with the United States. If, under these circumstances, the Government of Australia cannot reconsider their decision not to re-affirm their support of these principles, I fear that we shall be compelled to consider that the Government of Australia is out of sympathy with the general philosophy behind the Mutual Aid policy and should obtain its requirements from Canada on some other basis.

We have, of course, no desire or intention that the flow of essential war supplies to Australia from Canada should be interrupted. If, however, your Government is not ready to sign the Agreement, we consider that we must make new arrangements for the financing of these supplies. In those circumstances we should be prepared to provide essential supplies under a credit to be repaid within an appropriate period after the war.

Any such arrangement would, as you will realize, entail a public explanation of the reasons which have prevented us from fulfilling our intention of providing essential supplies to Australia out of the Mutual Aid vote without cost to the Australian Government. Ends.

REVISED DRAFT C250971

November 26th, 1943.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA AND.....ON THE PRINCIPLES APPLYING TO THE PROVISION BY CANADA OF CANADIAN WAR SUPPLIES TO.....UNDER THE WAR APPROPRIATION (UNITED NATIONS MUTUAL AID) ACT OF CANADA 1943

Whereas Canada and .....are associated in the present war, and

Whereas it is desirable that war supplies should be distributed among the United Nations in accordance with strategic needs of the war and in such manner as to contribute most effectively to the winning of the war and the establishment of peace, and

Whereas it is expedient that the conditions upon which such war supplies are made available by one United Nation to another should not be such as to burden post-war commerce, or lead to the imposition of trade restrictions or otherwise prejudice a just and enduring peace, and

Whereas the Governments of Canada and.....are mutually desirous of concluding an agreement in regard to the conditions upon which Canadian war supplies will be made available to .....

The Undersigned, being duly authorized by their respective Governments for the purpose, have agreed as follows:-

ARTICLE I

The Government of Canada will make available under the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Act of Canada, 1943, to the Government of .....such war supplies as the Government of Canada shall authorize from time to time to be provided.

ARTICLE II

The Government of .....will continue to contribute to the defence of Canada and the strengthening thereof and will provide such articles, services, facilities or information as it may be in a position to supply and as may from time to time be determined by common agreement in the light of the development of the war.

ARTICLE III

The Government of ..... will, in support of any applications to the Government of Canada for the provision of War supplies under this agreement, furnish the Government of Canada with such relevant information as the Government of Canada may require for the purpose of deciding upon the applications and for executing the purposes of this agreement.

ARTICLE IV

The Government of ..... agrees to use any war supplies delivered to it under this agreement in the joint and effective prosecution of the war.

ARTICLE V

The Government of .....will not without the consent of the Government of Canada sell to any other Government or to persons in other countries war supplies delivered to it under this agreement.

ARTICLE VI

The Government of Canada will not require the Government of ..... to re-deliver to the Government of Canada any war supplies delivered under this agreement except as specifically provided in Articles VII and VIII and subject to any special agreement which may be concluded in the circumstances contemplated in Article IX.

ARTICLE VII

Title to any cargo ships delivered under this agreement will remain with the Government of Canada and the ships shall be chartered to the Government of ..... on terms providing for their re-delivery.

ARTICLE VIII

Upon the cessation of hostilities in any major theatre of war, any war supplies which have been transferred to the Government of ..... under this agreement and are still in Canada or in ocean transit shall revert to Canadian ownership, except those supplies destined for a theatre of war in which hostilities have not ceased or supplies made available for relief purposes or such other supplies as the Government of Canada may specify.

ARTICLE IX

The Government of Canada reserves the right to request:

(a) the delivery, after the cessation of hostilities in any theatre of war, for relief and rehabilitation purposes, to another United Nation or to an international organization, of automotive equipment supplied under this agreement;

(b) the transfer to Canadian forces serving outside Canada after the cessation of hostilities of vehicles, aircraft, ordnance or military equipment supplied under this agreement to the Government of..... if such war supplies are required for the use of such Canadian forces and are not required by the Government of ..... for military operations; and

(c) the return to Canada after the war, if required in Canada for Canadian purposes, of aircraft and automotive equipment supplied under this agreement which may still be serviceable, provided that when the identity of such Canadian equipment has been lost as a result of pooling arrangements or for other reasons, the Government of..... may substitute equipment of a similar type.

The Government of ..... agrees to use its best endeavours to meet any such requests on such reasonable terms and conditions as shall be settled in consultation with the Government of Canada.

ARTICLE X

The Governments of Canada and .....re-affirm their desire to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between their countries and throughout the world. They declare that their guiding purposes include the adoption of measures designed to promote employment, the production and consumption of goods, and the expansion of international commerce by the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers, with the object of contributing to the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the Declaration of August 14th, 1941 known as the Atlantic Charter.

ARTICLE XI

This agreement will take effect as from this day's date. It shall apply to war supplies furnished to the Government of ..... by the Government of Canada under the authority of the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Act of Canada, 1943, including supplies furnished under the said Act before the conclusion of this agreement. It shall continue in force until a date to be agreed upon by the two Governments.

Mutual Aid

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER. Important C250[illegible]75

Council yesterday deferred until its next meeting, probably on Tuesday, action on the order approving the Master Mutual Aid Agreement. I understand from Wrong, who was called to the meeting by Mr. Crerar, that the chief reason for deferment arose from the difficulty of approving the Agreement in advance of a decision on the continuance of the Mutual Aid procedure by a vote to supplement the million dollar appropriation of the last session. The present vote will probably be expended shortly after the close of the fiscal year in little more than three months. If it is decided not to continue Mutual Aid, there is something to be said for reexamining the draft agreement and perhaps eliminating from it everything which does not relate specifically to the conditions of transfer of the war supplies paid for from the current vote.

In view of this action by Council I have delayed despatching the telegrams to Australia since the arguments advanced to the Australian Government for their acceptance of the proposed Article X would look rather queer if we dropped the Mutual Aid and devised in its place some system of furnishing supplies on credit.

The most important points involved in these issues seem to me to be as follows:

1. We shall have to continue to provide supplies to other countries on other than a cash basis, both as part of our general war effort and because it is impossible to discontinue production in Canada of supplies for export in quantities largely in excess of our Allies capacity to pay without causing grave dislocation at home. As we are already receiving in payment the Canadian dollar receipts of our Allies, the alternative to Mutual Aid for this large excess would be to build up war debts.

2. The discontinuance of Mutual Aid would not affect materially our own budgetary position as we should have to finance the same amount of domestic production.

3. The only alternative to transferring supplies under Mutual Aid would be to furnish them on credit. In the case of the United Kingdom and other parts of the sterling area this would probably mean reverting to the accumulation of sterling balances. In the case of Russia, China and other foreign countries we should probably have to make a Canadian dollar loan. The real value of the obligations which we might receive from recipient countries would be dubious. The repayment of any such debts after the war would have an adverse effect on the restoration of our export trade.

4. Although no commitment whatever has been made to any other country to extend Mutual Aid beyond the current appropriation, it is undoubtedly true that a reversion in 1944 to a payment basis would be generally regarded abroad as a departure from the policy of cooperative effort enunciated in the preamble to the Mutual Aid Act as follows:

> "Whereas it is necessary that the production of Canadian war industry be made available not only for use by Canadian forces but also to other United Nations in accordance with strategic needs in such manner as to contribute most effectively to the winning of the war."

5. Such change of policy would be certain to receive a great deal of unwelcome attention in the United States and might well have a serious effect on the extension of lease-lend assistance.

In general so far as questions of external policy are concerned I think that we can get only one answer: our reputation and influence abroad would be seriously diminished by our discontinuing Mutual Aid. Admitting this one must weigh against it the strength of the domestic criticism, especially in Quebec where vocal elements are strongly opposed to further gifts to the United Kingdom in particular.

It is pretty certain that if Mutual Aid is continued an appropriation considerably smaller than a billion dollars will be needed; perhaps half this amount might suffice to cover both Mutual Aid and the Canadian contribution to UNRRA. The need for Canadian munitions will probably fall off in the next year and our sterling expenditures, with action impending in Western Europe, are likely to increase.

I think that it would be very desirable for Council to reach a decision on the next year's programme as soon as possible as a good many other things depend on this.

MEMORANDUM:

Re: Mutual Aid 1944-45

At a meeting of Council held this afternoon, consideration was given to the continuance of Mutual Aid into the next fiscal year, 1944-45. The meeting heard reports and explanations from the Deputy Minister of Munitions and Supply and the Director of Administration of the Mutual Aid Board, the former submitting the attached statement on "Estimated Value of Production for Mutual Aid Account". The Deputy Minister of Finance was also present.

A number of specific submissions to Council to authorize expenditures from the Mutual Aid Appropriation were considered and referred to the Mutual Aid Board for examination, in the light of the present strategic situation.

It was ultimately agreed that Mutual Aid should be continued into the next fiscal year, that legislation to this end would be introduced at the forthcoming session of Parliament, that the figure requested would be in the neighbourhood of $700 million which would include Canada's contribution to United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation.

1. In the course of casual conversation Hodgson told me that the Government here had decided to refuse to incorporate in Mutual Aid Agreement clause along lines of Article 7 of Lend-Lease Agreement, but was prepared to make some reference in preamble. Otherwise it would refuse mutual aid.

2. Burton, who was Evatt's secretary and accompanied him on last trip abroad, indicated to Pick that Evatt was being obdurate but would likely come around.

3. How he could publicly justify this attitude to Australian public, American Government, or any one else is beyond me.

4. I suppose that our Government will remain adamant.

5. In this event I presume you will advise Australian Government that you cannot see your way clear to alter your position and unless agreement reached you will have to consider issuing full public statement which will be shown to them before being released.

8. I appreciate, of course, that public controversy should be avoided at all costs, but I have a feeling that his attitude contains an element of bluff and that if gently called he will back down.

9. I have not seen the Prime Minister as he has been away since before Christmas and will not return until the middle of the month. I would hesitate to see him except as last resort and under specific instructions, because I believe Evatt would resent very much my going over his head to the Prime Minister, although if I had specific instructions from our Prime Minister to see the Prime Minister here he could not object very greatly.

The attached telegram from Mr. Davis indicates that it is likely that we shall be able to arrive at an amicable settlement of the dispute with Australia over our insistence on including in the general Mutual Aid Agreement with Australia a modest reference to the reduction of tariffs as one of the international economic objectives shared by both Governments. I think that Mr. Davis puts his finger on the cause of the trouble in paragraphs 6, 10 and 11 of his telegram. If in fact all they wish to accept the agreement is to notify us that they interpret this Article on the lines indicated in paragraphs 12 and 13 there remains no serious difference between their position and ours. I think that we should be able to find a formula of reply which would satisfy the Australians if they present a note to us on the lines suggested by Evatt and Davis.

2. I had no discussion with Prime Minister on merits of dispute hor any suggestion by him as to any counter proposals, as he evidently wanted discussion to be conducted by Evatt.

3. He did ask me to convey to our Prime Minister his opinion that letter which I delivered to him from Mr. King was much too strongly worded and contained comments which should not in his opinion have been made thereto.

4. I did not discuss this with him as I felt that it was wiser for me to get from Evatt details of their objections.

5. I saw Evatt same afternoon and his first comment was that they did not like tone of letter to Prime Minister. I got out the letter and we read it and I asked him to tell me what was objectionable in it, and was told that they took exception to inference set out in last sentence, third last paragraph, wherein it was assumed that refusal to agree to Article 10 meant lack of sympathy with general philosophy behind Mutual Aid.

6. I believe what really hurt them was being definitely put on the spot by the letter. I would not follow this up further as Evatt had his say and then set it aside.

7. Evatt was most friendly, conciliatory and agreeable and quite different from his usual attitude.

CANBERRA,

9. He suggested we should make an entirely new approach to problem and forget the past and start again.

10, The whole problem was created here by their unwarranted assumption of construction which Canada would place upon proposed Article 10 and construction which would be placed on Article 7 Lend-Lease Agreement by United States and construction which would be placed on Atlantic Charter by the United Kingdom.

11. They have jumped at conclusion that said clauses and Charter have one meaning and one only namely, that it involves only reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers.

12. They feel here that primary emphasis to be placed upon construction of clause is that there should be international collaboration designed to promote employment, production and consumption of goods and international agreements by which countries bind themselves to pursue domestic policies aimed at full employment and higher standards of living.

13. The whole dispute seems to reduce itself to one constructive clause. As stated they assume we read it to mean that there is only one thing to be done and that is to reduce tariffs. They on the other hand read it to mean primary emphasis on domestic policies to curb full employment and when there is full employment in the world and consequent rising standards of living and greater purchasing power, then it will be possible more effectively to adopt practical measures to lower tariffs and they are in agreement that they should be lowered.

14. Evatt therefore suggests that Article 10 remain in Agreement as draft and that coincident with Agreement a note be delivered to you, the terms of which I hope to send you by telegraph tomorrow.

15. He says that if you are in accord with views set ou in said note and so state that matter ends there, agreement wil

The following tentative arrangements have been made, subject to your approval, for the signature of the Mutual Aid Agreements with the United Kingdom and the Soviet Government. Mr. Malcolm MacDonald is being asked to go to Room 401 in the Centre Block at 4 p.m. tomorrow to sign the Agreement for the United Kingdom. Mr. Tounkin and Mr. Sergeev are being asked to go to the same room at 4.30 to sign the Soviet Agreement. It is being explained that proceedings in the House make uncertain the exact time at which you will be able to sign, and if there is delay the signatories can be accommodated in the Gallery of the House. With respect to publicity, both the United Kingdom and Soviet representatives have asked that no announcement at all should be made until they have had time to concert arrangements with their own Governments. There was some discussion at the last meeting of the Mutual Aid Board and it was then suggested that both Agreements might be tabled with an explanatory statement some time before the debate on the new Mutual Aid Bill will begin. Sir Patrick Duff has asked that we should consult them on the terms of this statement and has indicated very strongly that the United Kingdom Government would prefer us not even to announce now that the Agreements had been signed and would be tabled in due course.

A photographer from the Wartime Information Board will be available as it is probably desirable when the Agreements are tabled to release pictures of the actual signing.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA AND THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS ON THE PRINCIPLES APPLYING TO THE PROVISION BY CANADA OF CANADIAN WAR SUPPLIES TO THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS UNDER THE WAR APPROPRIATION (UNITED NATIONS MUTUAL AID) ACT OF CANADA 1943

Signed at Ottawa, February 11, 1944

Whereas Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics are associated in the present war, and

Whereas it is desirable that war supplies should be distributed among the United Nations in accordance with strategic needs of the war and in such manner as to contribute most effectively to the winning of the war and the establishment of peace, and

Whereas it is expedient that the conditions upon which such war supplies are made available by one United Nation to another should not be such as to burden post-war commerce, or lead to the imposition of trade restrictions or otherwise prejudice a just and enduring peace, and

Whereas the Governments of Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics are mutually desirous of concluding an agreement in regard to the conditions upon which Canadian war supplies will be made available to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics,

The Undersigned, being duly authorized by their respective Governments for the purpose, have agreed as follows:-

ARTICLE I

The Government of Canada will make available under the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Act of Canada, 1943, to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, such war supplies as the Government of Canada shall authorize from time to time to be provided.

ARTICLE II

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will continue to contribute to the defence of Canada and the strengthening thereof and will provide such articles, services, facilities or information as it may be in a position to supply and as may from time to time be determined by common agreement in the light of the development of the war.

ARTICLE III

The nature, quantities, and dates of delivery of the war supplies made available by the Government of Canada to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under Article I shall be determined by negotiation between the two Governments and set forth in protocols or other agreements.

ARTICLE IV

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agrees to use any war supplies delivered to it under this agreement in the joint and effective prosecution of the war.

ARTICLE V

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will not without the consent of the Government of Canada sell to any other Government or to persons in other countries war supplies delivered to it under this agreement.

ARTICLE VI

The Government of Canada will not require the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to re-deliver to the Governement of Canada any war supplies delivered under this agreement except as specifically provided in Article VII and subject to any special agreement which may be concluded in the circumstances contemplated in Article VIII.

ARTICLE VII

Upon the cessation of hostilities in any major theatre of war, any war supplies which have been transferred to the Governement of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under this agreement and are still in Canada shall revert to Canadian ownership, except those supplies destined for a theatre of war in which hostilities have not ceased or supplies made available for relief purposes or such other supplies as the Government of Canada may specify.

ARTICLE VIII

The Government of Canada reserves the right to request:

(a) the delivery, after the cessation of hostilities in any theatre of war, for relief and rehabilitation purposes, to another United Nation or to an international organization, of automotive equipment supplied under this agreement;

(b) the transfer to Canadian forces serving outside Canada after the cessation of hostilities of vehicles, aircraft, ordnance or military equipment supplied under this agreement to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics if such war supplies are required for the use of such Canadian forces and are not required by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for military operations; and

(c) the return to Canada after the war, if required in Canada for Canadian purposes, of aircraft and automotive equipment supplied under this agreement which may still be serviceable, due regard being had to the degree of wastage likely to have been suffered by these articles, provided that when the identity of such Canadian equipment has been lost as a result of pooling arrangements or for other reasons, the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics may substitute equipment of a similar type.

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agrees to use its best endeavours to meet any such requests on such reasonable terms and conditions as shall be settled in consultation with the Government of Canada.

ARTICLE IX

The Governments of Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics re-affirm their desire to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between their countries and throughout the world. They declare that their guiding purposes include the adoption of measures designed to promote employment, the production and consumption of goods, and the expansion of commerce through appropriate international agreements on commercial policy, with the object of contributing to the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the Declaration of August 14th, 1941, known as the Atlantic Charter.

ARTICLE X

This agreement will take effect as from this day's date. It shall apply to war supplies furnished to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics by the Government of Canada under the authority of the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Act of Canada, 1943, or substituted Act, including supplies furnished under the said Act before the conclusion of this agreement. It shall continue in force until a date to be agreed upon by the two Governments.

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

MEMORANDUM

Feb. 23, 1944

For Mr. N. A. Robertson: C250996

Mutual Aid Agreements

The Prime Minister, yesterday, raised a question about tabling in the House of Commons copies of the Canada-United Kingdom and Canada-U.S.S.R. Mutal Aid Agreements.

We told him that the United Kingdom authorities had expressly requested that there should be no publicity at the moment nor, in fact, until an agreed statement had been concerted.

Is this the present situation?

Pickersgill pointed out that Mr. Howe was reported to have said that six Mutual Aid Agreements had already been concluded. The intention may have been to indicate that six agreements were in prospect; but the fact that the six have not yet been signed is probably an additional reason for withholding publicity about any of them for the present.

C250997

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

The Mutual Aid Board yesterday had before it the enclosed memorandum prepared by Wrong suggesting the need for reviewing the policy of sending further munitions to China under Mutual Aid. Mr. Howe proposed, with the concurrence of Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Gardiner (the only other members of the Board present), that the question should be submitted to you for your views before a final decision was taken. The Board agreed to permit the assembly of a second shipment of munitions which would be ready to leave by the end of May but instructed the Director of Administration not to make any shipping arrangements until the Board had considered the matter again. It would be possible to hold this consignment in Canada until there is some evidence that the stores now en route to India can be moved into Chinese territory. If they were held in Canada, we could divert them to other destinations. Once they are unloaded in India they become the property of the Chinese Government.

There has been a great deal of difficulty and confusion over the supply of munitions to China. Dr. Soong and officers of China Defence Supplies have been most vigorous in pressing their claims. The guns which we have sent to them are said to be surplus to requirements for ourselves or other countries and we could also supply from surplus stocks heavier guns, both 25 pounders and 3.7 A.A. guns. Some of the equipment going with the guns, including the range-finders and radio equipment, is not from surplus stocks and I imagine that the ammunition could be directed to other destinations where it would be more likely to be used. The British Army Staff in Washington have raised very strong objections to our provision of motor transport to the Chinese based on the two grounds that this will merely deteriorate in overcrowded depots in India and that motor transport is in short supply. The Mutual Aid Administration maintains that the motor transport which has been shipped is not in short supply.

I think that we might request the chairman of the Canadian Joint Staff Mission in Washington to raise with the Combined Chiefs of Staff the question of the strategic need for these supplies. This is after all the fundamental question under the Mutual Aid Act. The sort of clearance which has taken place with the U.S. members of the Joint War Aid Committee in Washington does not seem to me to be a satisfactory determination of strategic need. If the result of this enquiry indicates that we should discontinue the provision of munitions, we should then investigate other possible means of aiding China by the provision of supplies under Mutual Aid.

Mr. Howe at the meeting of the Board mentioned your discussions with Dr.Soong and Madam Chiang Kai-Shek and it was because of this that he asked Wrong to see that the question was submitted to you before further action was taken.

SECRET

C.M.A.B. DOCUMENT NO. 54

C250999

MUTUAL AID FOR CHINA

1. For the reasons set forth below, it is suggested that Canadian policy for the provision of munitions to China should be re-examined, and that the Mutual Aid Board should consider the following questions:

(a) Is the provision to China of further munitions warranted under the Mutual Aid Act, which requires the distribution of war supplies in accordance with strategic need?

(b) If this question is answered in the negative, are there other grounds which would warrant further shipments, such as the creation of goodwill towards Canada and general considerations of external policy? If so, does the Mutual Aid Act permit the provision of supplies on these grounds?

(c) Although a large balance is outstanding from the original Canadian offer to China, have conditions changed since the offer was made to an extent which would warrant its review? Especially, would we be justified in making no further shipments until we receive some evidence that the stores now en route are likely to be employed in the war against Japan?

(d) If it is decided to continue to ship ordnance and small arms under the original offer, should we continue to ship with them motor vehicles needed for use in other theatres?

2. The first shipments of Canadian munitions to China under Mutual Aid are now at sea. They consist of 5,490 tons of artillery, automatic small arms, vehicles and ammunition, including 108 6 pounder guns, 48 Bofors A.A.guns, 644 trucks, tractors and other vehicles, 7000 Sten and 5,700 Bren machine guns and 2,220 tons of ammunition for the artillery and Sten guns.

3. At Chinese request the munitions will be unloaded at Karachi. This is the base for the proposed north-west highway to China, the route for which runs through eastern Iran into Soviet territory and thence eastward to China across SinKiang. The latest information is that the Russians and Chinese have not succeeded in reaching agreement for the operation of this route, and that the United States are considering the withdrawal of 1,200 heavy trucks given to the Chinese and 2,400 trucks given to the Russians for use on it. The prospects, therefore, seem to be that the Canadian munitions will remain indefinitely in store at Karachi. Once landed they can only be diverted to other uses with the consent of the Chinese Government, since they become Chinese property on delivery.

4. The shipment of these supplies to Karachi instead of to Calcutta as originally expected indicates that the Chinese do not intend to attempt to fly any of the stores into China from India. It also indicates that the stores will not move into China over the Ledo road from Assam into Burma and thence to China if this route is opened successfully; it is now under construction and if all goes well might carry traffic before the end of 1944. As for air transportation the most recent information is that an average of not more than 1,000 tons per month will be carried this year into China for the use of Chinese forces. The chief demand on space is for maintenance of the United States-Chinese Air Forces in China, and this is currently taking around 90% of cargo capacity. This demand will increase, since the United States is expanding both their own Air Force in China and the Chinese Air Force.

5. The United States Government is providing equipment for 30 Chinese divisions, to be trained in India. This is equivalent to equipment for 15 U.S. divisions. Huge stock piles have already accumulated in India, and it seems to be generally agreed that the size of these is entirely out of line with transport possibilities.

6. We have agreed with the United States that Canada will not maintain a stock pile in India of munitions for China in excess of 12,500 tons. We offered to supply the Chinese last August with the following munitions in addition to those mentioned in paragraph 1:

252 additional 6 pounder guns,
48 25 pounder guns,
55,000 additional Sten machine guns,
14,300 additional Bren guns,
180,000 Browning pistols,
50,000 binoculars,
2,000 rangefinders, together with ancillary equipment, ammunition, etc.

7. The total weight of the munitions offered at that time, according to a list received on August 18th from the Mutual Aid Administration was 15,151 tons. No allowance was made on this list for the weight of motor vehicles which were not shown on it. The motor transport just shipped to India, however, weighs 2,380 tons. If transport on the same scale were to accompany the remainder of the artillery, the total weight of our offer would be far in excess of 12,500 tons. At the meetings of the Board and Joint War Aid Committee and in the correspondence exchanged when our offer was being made there were constant references to the restriction of our supplies to China to munitions that could be moved by air. Because of this, we disappointed Dr.Soong by cutting out from our offer 25 pounder and 3.7 A.A.guns which he was very anxious to obtain.

8. The British Army Staff in Washington have raised strong objections to the shipment by Canada of motor transport to India for China. The United States authorities have not taken the same line; indeed, they are shipping equipment on a much greater scale. The British view seems to be that the wasteful despatch of American equipment makes it all the more desirable that Canada should not follow a bad example, especially in the case of motor vehicles which are in short supply.

9. The despatch of Canadian munitions to China was arranged following long continued pressure from Dr.T.V.Soong, then Chinese Foreign Minister residing in Washington. Dr.Soong has now returned to China and has been deprived of his functions as Foreign Minister, head of China Defence Supplies and President of the Bank of China as a result of differences with Chiang Kai-Shek.

10. The Canadian Minister in Chungking has advocated that such assistance as Canada can give to China should take other forms, notably the provision of medical supplies and personnel, arrangements for technical training of Chinese students, establishment of a Canadian Air Transport Service into China and, if possible, the despatch of a Canadian contingent. Dr.Penfield and other Canadians who have recently been in China maintain that medical assistance ih various forms is the most crying need.

11. Reports received from many sources support the view that the delivery of munitions to Chinese military representatives in India is not likely to hasten the defeat of Japan. (The lavish American shipments remain under control of General Stilwell). Apart from the reasons already indicated, the state of confusion, corruption and inefficiency now rampant in China, the virtual cessation of active operation against the Japanese forces, and the inclination of many influential Chinese to regard the Chinese communist armies as the greatest menace, are general factors to be taken into account in deciding what more should be done in extending Mutual Aid to China.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS OF CANADA AND THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA ON THE PRINCIPLES APPLYING TO THE PROVISION BY CANADA OF CANADIAN WAR SUPPLIES TO THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA UNDER THE WAR APPROPRIATION (UNITED NATIONS MUTUAL AID) ACT OF CANADA 1943

Signed at Ottawa, March 9, 1944

Whereas Canada and the Commonwealth of Australia are associated in the present war, and

Whereas it is desirable that war supplies should be distributed among the United Nations in accordance with strategic needs of the war and in such manner as to contribute most effectively to the winning of the war and the establishment of peace, and

Whereas it is expedient that the conditions upon which such war supplies are made available by one United Nation to another should not be such as to burden post-war commerce, or lead to the imposition of trade restrictions or otherwise prejudice a just and enduring peace, and

Whereas the Governments of Canada and the Commonwealth of Australia are mutually desirous of concluding an agreement in regard to the conditions upon which Canadian war supplies will be made available to the Commonwealth of Australia,

The Undersigned, being duly authorized by their respective Governments for the purpose, have agreed as follows:-

ARTICLE I

The Government of Canada will make available under the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Act of Canada, 1943, to the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia such war supplies as the Government of Canada shall authorize from time to time to be provided.

ARTICLE II

The Government of the Commonwealth of Australia will continue to contribute to the defence of Canada and the strengthening thereof and will provide such articles, services, facilities or information as it may be in a position to supply and as may from time to time be determined by common agreement in the light of the development of the war.

ARTICLE III

The Government of the Commonwealth of Australia will, in support of any applications to the Government of Canada for the provision of war supplies under this agreement, furnish the Government of Canada with such relevant information as the Government of Canada may require for the purpose of deciding upon the applications and for executing the purposes of this agreement.

ARTICLE VI

The Government of Canada will not require the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia to re-deliver to the Government of Canada any war supplies delivered under this agreement except as specifically provided in Articles VII and VIII and subject to any special agreement which may be concluded in the circumstances contemplated in Article IX.

ARTICLE VII

Title to any cargo ships delivered under this agreement will remain with the Government of Canada and the ships shall be chartered to the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia on terms providing for their re-delivery.

ARTICLE VIII

Upon the cessation of hostilities in any major theatre of war, any war supplies which have been transferred to the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia under this agreement and are still in Canada or in ocean transit shall revert to Canadian ownership, except those supplies destined for a theatre of war in which hostilities have not ceased or supplies made available for relief purposes or such other supplies as the Government of Canada may specify.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

C251006 WW II - China
WW II - Mutual Aid

I recently sent you a note on Mutual Aid supplies for China, together with a memorandum which had been referred to you for your opinion at the request of the Mutual Aid Board. One or two further items of information on this subject have now come to hand.

We have learnt from Washington that the project for a north-west highway to China based on Karachi and running through Persian and Soviet territory has definitely fallen through. The United States has transferred to their own forces in India 3,600 trucks alotted for use on this highway. Our advice is that while it might be possible for the Chinese to move a trickle of supplies by this route as a result of local arrangements with Soviet authorities it has disappeared as a project for regular transportation of munitions into China. Even if the Soviet Government were ready to lend its full cooperation there are long stretches along the route which are almost impassable.

In the memorandum before the Mutual Aid Board the weight of the supplies now at sea en route to Karachi was given as 5,490 tons. I find that the actual shipping weight was 6,033 long tons.

So far as I can judge from our Departmental records there was throughout an understanding that the provision of any munitions to China was contingent on the development of adequate means of transportation into China.

C25100 Tow 11 - Chinese
Tow 11 - Lease-Lend Agreement
Tow 11 - Mutual Aid

The attached draft statement for use on tabling the Mutual Aid Agreements has been prepared in this Department and checked with Dr.Clark. We have promised to give the text in advance to the British and Australians in time for them to cable it home and make comments on it. I should like, therefore, to know on Monday whether it is acceptable to you. I am also sending a copy to Mr. Howe.

We have told the British, Soviet and Australian representatives here that we plan to table the Agreements at 8 p.m. on Thursday next and we have heard that Dr.Evatt intends to table the Australian Agreement in Canberra at about the same time. The Chinese Ambassador has let me know that he has been authorized to sign an Agreement identical with the United Kingdom Agreement. We could perhaps get this done in time for tabling on Thursday or we could leave it over and table the Chinese Agreement later together with the French Agreement. I think that this does not matter much.

Draft Statement on Tabling Mutual Aid Agreements.

By arrangement with the other Governments concerned, I desire to lay on the table at this time copies of general Mutual Aid Agreements which have been concluded between the Government of Canada and the Governments of the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Commonwealth of Australia. The Agreements with the United Kingdom and Soviet Governments were signed on February 11th and the Agreement with Australia was signed on March 9th. Similar Agreements are in process of negotiation with other Governments or authorities receiving supplies from Canada in significant volume under the Mutual Aid Act, notably China and the French Committee of National Liberation.

These Agreements set forth the general terms and conditions under which war supplies are being transferred under the Mutual Aid Act to the three countries which have so far received the largest quantity of such supplies from Canada. When the Mutual Aid legislation is before the House there will be an opportunity for discussing the terms of these Agreements, if the House so desires. At this time, I wish only to give a general explanation of their purpose and contents.

The preamble of the Mutual Aid Act declares that "it is essential to the defence and security of Canada and to the cause of world freedom that Canada should make the utmost contribution to the victory of the United Nations". It continues that "it is necessary that the products of Canadian war industry be made available not only for use by Canadian forces, but also to other United Nations, in accordance with strategic needs, in such manner as to contribute most effectively to the winning of the war." ~~It~~ the preamble concludes that "it is expedient that the conditions upon which Canadian war supplies are made available to other United Nations should not be such as to burden post-war commerce, or lead to the imposition of trade restrictions, or otherwise prejudice a just and enduring peace." Since early in the war, the Government has taken the position that the accumulation of large war debts was contrary to the public interest. This policy has been endorsed by Parliament on several occasions. It is ~~notable~~ to be noted that a similar policy was adopted by the Government of the United States with the passage of the Lend-Lease Act on March 11,1941, nearly nine months before the United States entered the war. The United Kingdom, which is the third large provider of munitions and war supplies for the use of other United Nations, has pursued a parallel policy in providing supplies to Allied Governments unable to pay for them.

These Agreements set forth the general terms and conditions under which our policy ~~is being given effect~~ effect is being given, is set out. They are in some respects parallel to the Lend-Lease Agreements which have been concluded by the Government of the United States with many of the Governments receiving supplies from that country under the Lend-Lease Act. It is to be remembered, however, that the Lend-Lease Act was adopted when the United States still retained her neutrality, whereas the Mutual Aid Act was passed when Canada had been at war for over three and a half years. The Lend-Lease Act was based on the conception that the defence of the United States would be furthered by the provision of supplies on other than a cash basis to countries at war with the Axis. The Mutual Aid Act was based on a realization that the provision of materials to the common cause was no less vital and no less a duty than the provision of fighting men.

The preamble of these Agreements sets forth their purposes in language similar to that used in the preamble of the Mutual Aid Act which I have already quoted. I do not propose to analyze the Agreements at any length. They are designed to make clear that the recipient Governments accept these purposes and will cooperate in their fulfillment. Article II of each Agreement contains a pledge of reciprocal aid to Canada. Article X (Article IX in the Soviet Agreement) contains a mutual undertaking to pursue international economic policies designed to implement the economic objectives defined in the Atlantic Charter and accepted by all the United Nations, policies which are reflected in the far-seeing philosophy of the Mutual Aid Act. These policies will make it possible for Mutual Aid to prove its post-war value in enabling trade to thrive without the barriers which huge war debts would have imposed.

It has been our purpose in instituting the Mutual Aid procedure to leave at the end of the war no indeterminate obligations arising from the provision of war supplies by Canada, which would have to be settled by subsequent negotiations. There is a difference here between the Canadian position and that of the United States set forth in the Lend-Lease Act and the Lend-Lease Agreements. The Lend-Lease Act prescribes that the terms and conditions upon which foreign Governments receive aid under it "shall be those which the President deems satisfactory, and the benefit to the United States may be payment or repayment in kind or property, or any other direct or indirect benefit which the President deems satisfactory". By Article VI of our Mutual Aid Agreements it is laid down that the Government of Canada will not require the recipient Government "to redeliver to the Government of Canada any war supplies delivered under this Agreement except as specifically provided" in Articles VII, VIII, and IX. Article VII provides that title to cargo ships furnished under Mutual Aid shall remain with the Government of Canada. Article VIII provides that supplies which, at the end of hostilities in any major theatre, have not yet reached their destination may revert to Canadian ownership. Finally Article IX provides that in certain circumstances the Canadian Government may request the transfer of specified types of supplies still serviceable at the end of the war to other users, for relief purposes or for Canadian forces still serving overseas, and that we may also ask for the return to Canada of serviceable aircraft and automotive equipment if required for use at home.

The Agreements with the Governments of the United Kingdom and Australia are identical in substance. I should explain to the House the reasons for certain minor differences between these two Agreements and the Agreement with the Soviet Government.

Since the German attack on the Soviet Union, the war supplies provided to the Soviet Government by her Allies have been settled by a special procedure which is employed in no other case. Annual protocols have been signed between Russia on the one hand and the supplying countries on the other hand, to which are attached schedules listing the stores which each supplying country undertakes to furnish during the period of one year. The parties to the first two Protocols were the United States, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union. Canada is a direct party to the current Third Protocol which covers the supplies being furnished to Russia during the year which will end on June 30th next. Direct Canadian participation in this Third Protocol was made possible by the adoption of the Mutual Aid Act at the last session. These Protocols are of necessity very secret in character, since they contain information which would be of much value to the enemy.

Article III of the Soviet Agreement refers directly to the Protocol procedure, and therefore differs somewhat from Article III of the other Agreements. We have a full opportunity, in the course of the negotiation of the Protocol, to secure whatever information is required to support the requests of the Soviet authorities. Article VII in the United Kingdom and Australian Agreements is not repeated in the Soviet Agreement. It relates specifically to cargo ships, and we have not found it possible to provide the Soviet Government with any cargo ships; hence the inclusion of the Article in the Soviet Agreement is unnecessary. These are the only differences of importance between the Agreements.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS OF CANADA AND THE UNITED KINGDOM ON THE PRINCIPLES APPLYING TO THE PROVISION BY CANADA OF CANADIAN WAR SUPPLIES TO THE UNITED KINGDOM UNDER THE WAR APPROPRIATION (UNITED NATIONS MUTUAL AID) ACT OF CANADA 1943

Whereas Canada and the United Kingdom are associated in the present war, and

Whereas it is desirable that war supplies should be distributed among the United Nations in accordance with strategic needs of the war and in such manner as to contribute most effectively to the winning of the war and the establishment of peace, and

Whereas it is expedient that the conditions upon which such war supplies are made available by one United Nation to another should not be such as to burden post-war commerce, or lead to the imposition of trade restrictions or otherwise prejudice a just and enduring peace, and

Whereas the Governments of Canada and the United Kingdom are mutually desirous of concluding an agreement in regard to the conditions upon which Canadian war supplies will be made available to the United Kingdom,

The Undersigned, being duly authorized by their respective Governments for the purpose, have agreed as follows:-

ARTICLE I

The Government of Canada will make available under the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Act of Canada, 1943, to the Government of the United Kingdom such war supplies as the Government of Canada shall authorize from time to time to be provided.

ARTICLE II

The Government of the United Kingdom will continue to contribute to the defence of Canada and the strengthening thereof and will provide such articles, services, facilities or information as it may be in a position to supply and as may from time to time be determined by common agreement in the light of the development of the war.

ARTICLE III

The Government of the United Kingdom will, in support of any applications to the Government of Canada for the provision of war supplies under this agreement, furnish the Government of Canada with such relevant information as the Government of Canada may require for the purpose of deciding upon the applications and for executing the purposes of this agreement.

ARTICLE IV

The Government of the United Kingdom agrees to use any war supplies delivered to it under this agreement in the joint and effective prosecution of the war.

ARTICLE V

The Government of the United Kingdom will not without the consent of the Government of Canada sell to any other Government or to persons in other countries war supplies delivered to it under this agreement.

ARTICLE VI

The Government of Canada will not require the Government of the United Kingdom to re-deliver to the Government of Canada any war supplies delivered under this agreement except as specifically provided in Articles VII and VIII and subject to any special agreement which may be concluded in the circumstances contemplated in Article IX.

ARTICLE VII

Title to any cargo ships delivered under this agreement will remain with the Government of Canada and the ships shall be chartered to the Government of the United Kingdom on terms providing for their re-delivery.

ARTICLE VIII

Upon the cessation of hostilities in any major theatre of war, any war supplies which have been transferred to the Government of the United Kingdom under this agreement and are still in Canada or in ocean transit shall revert to Canadian ownership, except those supplies destined for a theatre of war in which hostilities have not ceased or supplies made available for relief purposes or such other supplies as the Government of Canada may specify.

ARTICLE IX

The Government of Canada reserves the right to request:

(a) the delivery, after the cessation of hostilities in any theatre of war, for relief and rehabilitation purposes, to another United Nation or to an international organization, of automotive equipment supplied under this agreement;

(b) the transfer to Canadian forces serving outside Canada after the cessation of hostilities of vehicles, aircraft, ordnance or military equipment supplied under this agreement to the Government of the United Kingdom if such war supplies are required for the use of such Canadian forces and are not required by the Government of the United Kingdom for military operations; and

(c) the return to Canada after the war, if required in Canada for Canadian purposes, of aircraft and automotive equipment supplied under this agreement which may still be serviceable, due regard being had to the degree of wastage likely to have been suffered by these articles, provided that when the identity of such Canadian equipment has been lost as a result of pooling arrangements or for other reasons, the Government of the United Kingdom may substitute equipment of a similar type.

The Government of the United Kingdom agrees to use its best endeavours to meet any such requests on such reasonable terms and conditions as shall be settled in consultation with the Government of Canada.

ARTICLE X

The Governments of Canada and the United Kingdom re-affirm their desire to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between their countries and throughout the world. They declare that their guiding purposes include the adoption of measures designed to promote employment, the production and consumption of goods, and the expansion of commerce through appropriate international agreements on commercial policy, with the object of contributing to the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the Declaration of August 14th, 1941, known as the Atlantic Charter.

ARTICLE XI

This agreement will take effect as from this day's date. It shall apply to war supplies furnished to the Government of the United Kingdom by the Government of Canada under the authority of the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Act of Canada, 1943, or substituted Act, including supplies furnished under the said Act before the conclusion of this agreement. It shall continue in force until a date to be agreed upon by the two Governments.

Re: Statement on Mutual Aid

I consulted Mr. Wrong as to the possibility of including in the statement on tabling the United Kingdom-Australia Agreements some discussion of the mutual aspect so far as it related to Canada in (1) providing employment for the people of Canada, and (2) forming a part of the total war effort of Canada.

Mr. Wrong's disposition was to postpone a statement of this kind until the main Mutual Aid legislation was before the House. He thought that advantage could be taken of this occasion to make a fuller statement about the Canadian aspects of Mutual Aid than has so far been possible.

I attach the statement to be made by you at 8 P.M. this evening on the Mutual Aid Agreements and also the documents to be tabled at that time.

The statement has been revised to incorporate the minor changes which you suggested. A further change has been made in the paragraph which begins at the top of Page 4. Two sentences have been cut out which followed the first sentence of this paragraph. They made a direct comparison with the indeterminate obligations to the United States left by the Lend Lease procedure. I think it better that this comparison should be drawn by others and should not be included in the official statement, especially in view of the debate on the renewal of the Lend Lease Act which is already beginning.

They are giving out in London the text of the U.K. Agreement and of your statement with this omission, for use in tomorrow morning's papers. Dr. Evatt means to table the Australian Agreement in Canberra practically simultaneously, and he also has the text of your statement but we do not know whether he will use it. The Russians have been kept informed and have told us that they will publish the Soviet Agreement as soon as the original signed text arrives in Moscow.

This provides rather a complicated story for the Press Gallery and they have been warned that the Agreements will be tabled at 8 o'clock this evening. They have asked whether they could have your statement and the text of the Agreements at 6 or 7 P.M. for their own information and not for transmission until the statement has been delivered. I think this might be useful in getting a decent report in the Canadian papers tomorrow.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

C251021

You have before you a memorandum of March 3rd covering a memorandum on munitions for China on which the Mutual Aid Board wished to have an expression of your views. The question is likely to come up again at a meeting next week of the Mutual Aid Board.

One point was perhaps not made as definitely as it should be in these papers. The Canadian supplies will be delivered at Karachi to the representative there of the Chinese Government and they become from that time Chinese property. These stores cannot, therefore, be requisitioned for other use except with the consent of the Chinese Government although I think it not impossible that if they were badly needed by Lord Louis Mountbatten the military authorities in India might ignore the technicalities. The supplies going from the United States to India for Chinese use remain the property of the United States and are all consigned to General Stilwell and not to the Chinese. They can, therefore, be diverted as the need arises; and the Army equipment is intended in any event to be used by the Chinese forces training in India under Stilwell's command.

The papers sent to you on March 2nd gave the reasons for doubting whether these supplies could get to China within a reasonable time. Apart from the transportation problem, however, there are high questions of policy concerning the use to which the Chinese might put them if they do arrive in China. It is true that they will be technically obligated by the Mutual Aid Agreement which they are about to sign to employ them in the joint and effective prosecution of the war, but we would have no means of preventing their use against the Communist forces in Northwestern China and there would be a strong temptation in certain quarters in Chungking to do this. If delivered in China the Canadian supplies will be the only modern equipment ready for use and complete which the Chungking Government will have at its sole disposal without any strings. If they were used against the Communists (who are said to be quite lacking in artillery and to be short of automatic weapons) we should find ourselves in the unfortunate position of aiding one side in a Chinese civil war in a manner which would be strongly resented by the Soviet Government.

I am wondering, therefore, whether this aspect of Mutual Aid does not contain such serious political problems as to deserve examination with the State Department and Foreign Office.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

The Mutual Aid Agreement with China has now been prepared for signature but I have not yet made any arrangements with the Chinese Ambassador. It is probably desirable to have the Agreement signed next week. Would you, therefore, let me know what time would be convenient for you?

The shipment of muhitions to China now at sea is valued at approximately $9,000,000. Even if we suspend the shipment of further munitions this is a substantial enough amount to warrant our entering into an Agreement at the present time.

I note from the Lend-Lease report covering operations to December 31st, 1943, which has just appeared, that the total value of lend-lease supplies to China to that date was just over $200,000,000. Of this total only $15,585,000 was made up of ordnance and much the largest general heading was aircraft ($78,000,000), which have been flown in to equip the Chinese air force and provided for transport purposes. The report seems to indicate that, apart from the aircraft, the munitions given to China have been mostly used for the equipment of Chinese troops in India. It shows that in addition to the $200,000,000 worth of supplies transferred to China about $190,000,000 worth have been consigned to General Stilwell for eventual use by Chinese forces. These consignments include over $40,000,000 worth of ordnance, $78,000,000 worth of ammunition and about $42,000,000 worth of tanks.

When our Agreement with China has been signed there is no reason why it should not be promptly tabled in the House.

STATEMENT MADE BY DR. H. V. EVATT ON MUTUAL AID AGREEMENT WITH CANADA MARCH 17, 1944

C251023

I have to announe that at Ottawa on 9th March there was signed an agreement between the governments of Canada and the Commonwealth of Australia relating to the provision by Canada of supplies to Australia as aid in the present war. An announcement of the signing of such agreement is also being made to-day on behalf of the government of Canada.

On 3rd September 1942 Australia accepted the principles of the United States-United Kingdom Mutual Aid Agreement and concluded its own reciprocal Aid Agreement with the United States. The relevant documents were tabled in the House on October 8, 1942 as a white paper. The Agreement with Canada has similar purposes and is designed to achieve the same objectives of Mutual Aid between the United Nations.

Under the terms of the Canadian Agreement it is anticipated that Australia will receive from Canada goods to the approximate value 85-100 million dollars (Canadian) per year. These goods will include automotive equipment, trucks and spare parts, ammunition and ordnance aircraft parts, metal and woodworking machinery, communications equipment, chemicals and raw materials including ferrous alloys and nonferrous metals, electrical equipment, lumber and many other goods essential to Australia's war effort.

One of the recitals in the preamble of the Canadian Agreement is a reminder that in this war the United Nations have adopted the farsighted principle of Mutuah Aid rather than the practice of sale and loan between Allies which was followed during the last war. The recital reads "whereas it is expedient that the conditions upon which such war supplies are made available by one United Nation to another should not be such as to burden postwar commerce or lead to the imposition of trade restrictions or otherwise prejudice a just and enduring peace." This recital makes clear that Canada's policy of supply without payment is being adopted in order to avoid the creation of war debts which would dislocate and reduce the flow of trade after the war. Canada's policy in this respect runs parallel to that of the United States and other United Nations including Australia.

The operative clauses of the Agreement proceed to set out the conditions upon which goods, services and information necessary for the prosecution of the war will be exchanged between the Governments of Canada and Australia, the conditions upon which goods so exchanged can be sold and transferred and conditions upon which some particular goods supplied, e.g. ships, will be returned.

There is one article, article 10, of particular interest. This reads as follows: "The governments of Canada and the Commonwealth of Australia reaffirm their desire to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between their countries and throughout the world. They declare that their guiding purposes include the adoption of measures designed to promote employment, the production and consumption of goods and the expansion of commerce through appropriate international agreements on commercial policy with the object of contributing to the attainment of all of the economic objectives set forth in the Declaration of August 14, 1941, known as the Atlantic Charter."

The reference to the Atlantic Charter is clearly to article 5 which provides as follows: "They, i. e., the President of the United States and Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, desire to bring about the fullest collaboration between all nations in the economic field with the object of securing for all improved labor standards economic advancement and social security."

The United Kingdom-United States of America Agreement contained an article, article 7, not dissimilar to this article 10.

The wording of article 10 of the Australian-Canadian Agreement is in strict accordance with the Australian Government's views as to future international economic collaboration. The Australian government stresses the importance of domestic policies of full employment as the basic policy which should be followed in promoting postwar international economic collaboration. Our view is that it is by maintaining high levels of employment and consumption throughout the world and especially in the major countries that prosperity increased consumption of goods and expansion of trade can be effected and the economic objectives of the Atlantic Charter fulfilled. The Australian government, accepting these objectives, regarded article 7 of the United Kingdom-United States Agreement as a further expression of themm. The Australian's government's view is that the objectives can best be attained by attaching primary and indeed supreme importance to the adoption of measures designed to promote full employment and increased production and con sumption of goods.

In our view this Australian approach is particularly important when, in the postwar period, so many nations including Australia will be dependent on the re-establishment and expansion of overseas markets. In 1938 New Zealand's export trade was 35% of her total National Income. Australia's nearly 20%. It will be realized that a fall in the level of employment in countries such as the United Kingdom and the United States is likely to have a detrimental effect on such economies as those of New Zealand and Australia. Such reductions in employment are not unusual. For instance, in the United States of America between 1937 and 1938, there was an increase from about 5.1 million to 7.4 million in the number of registered unemployed workers. The adverse effect of this on the exports of other countries to the United Nations can be observed from the trade figures. The maintenance of a high level of employment throughout the world would undoubtedly have a beneficial effect in increasing trade production and consumption and also in preventing recourse to the methods associated with extreme economic nationalism.

Australia's general policy in relation to international economic collaboration may be stated as follows (1) Australia favours an international agreement by which subscribing countries would bind themselves to pursue domestic policies aimed at full employment and would arrange for an existing organization (such as the I.L.O.) or a new international organization to facilitate the exchange of information and consultation between countries on employment policy and generally to give effect to the international agreement on employment. (2) In the immediate postwar period in which the economic policies of all countries will still be unsettled, Australia would advocate and support such forms of international economic collaboration as should make it unnecessary for countries to adopt policies of extreme economic nationalism. (3) As part of a longrange policy every effort should be made to obtain as a permanent feature of international economic relations a maximum degree of collaboration. This may have to be achieved gradually and as the transition problems are overcome in the first instance, limited agreements should be sought which would provide, at least, for regular consultation between nations. (4) It will be essential that countries which are not fully developed or which are highly dependent on a narrow range of exports should be able, under any international agreement, to use such economic measures as may, from time to time, prove necessary to ensure continued stability. The need for these measures will decrease to the extent that international collaboration proves successful. Further, such countries must reserve power to develop and diversify their industries. (5) The Australian government is of the opinion that it is reasonable to expect that all international agreements on economic collaboration should take into special account the industrial development, the dislocations and the accumulated needs resulting from the prolonged diversion from peacetime production in countries like Australia which have been engaged for a long period in an actual sustained and total war effort.

In the making and future implementation of this Agreement, the Dominion of Canada will be making a very significant contribution to the common war effort. Canadian aid under this Mutual Aid Agreement will constitute aid in very specific directions for the purpose of carrying the war against Japan to a successful conclusion. It is a further step in the pooling of the common resources of the United Nations. In the phrase of Mr. Stettinius it is another "weapon for victory".

(2) of an inquiry being made, as suggested, through the State Department and the Foreign Office.

On a previous occasion, Mr. King told me that he had never given an undertaking to Dr. Soong that any particular kind of munitions or supplies would be furnished. MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER:

C251029

Attached for tabling in the House are three copies in English and three copies in French of the Mutual Aid Agreement with China. It is my understanding that you approved the suggestion that this Agreement should be tabled today and I have informed the Chinese Ambassador accordingly.

In view of your statement of last week concerning the other Mutual Aid Agreements, there would seem to be no necessity of making any lengthy statement concerning the present Agreement. You might simply wish to inform the House that the principles embodied in the Agreement with China are the same as those in the other Mutual Aid Agreements and the text of the Agreement is identical with that with the United Kingdom except for the change in the name of the government concerned.

If an exact citation of the Agreement is required for purposes of tabling, it might be referred to as follows:

AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND CHINA ON THE PRINCIPLES APPLYING TO THE PROVISION BY CANADA OF CANADIAN WAR SUPPLIES TO CHINA UNDER THE WAR APPROPRIATION (UNITED NATIONS MUTUAL AID) ACT OF CANADA 1943

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

Bilingualism in Canada
1000 61 - Mutual Aid

M. Bonneau called at the Department today to say that he had now received instructions to sign a Mutual Aid Agreement on behalf of the French Committee of National Liberation in the form in which we presented it to him. This is identical with the Agreements signed with the United Kingdom, Australia and China except that it was necessary to make some alterations in the language of the preamble and at one other point because the French Committee is not recognized as a Government and is, therefore, not one of the United Nations.

It is desirable that the Agreement should be signed in time to be tabled shortly after the recess of Parliament ends. M. Bonneau has to go to Quebec on Friday afternoon. I think that we could have the text ready for signature on Thursday afternoon or Friday morning if that will suit your convenience. I have not consulted Mr. Howe who will, I suppose, sign with you as in the case of the other Agreements.

The French have pressed very strongly that the Agreement should be signed in both English and French originals and I feel that we should certainly agree to this. Although the Russian and Chinese Agreements were signed in English only, we cannot refuse to sign with the French Committee in one of our official languages. I am, therefore, having the text prepared for signature in both languages.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

C251032

I think it might be useful if you were to mention in the War Committee tomorrow an immediate matter concerning the shipment of further munitions to China. You will remember that, after discussion in the Mutual Aid Board last March, the question of continuing shipments to China was referred to you by the Board for consideration and you agreed that the Canadian Joint Staff in Washington should ask the Combined Chiefs of Staff for their opinion on the strategic essentiality of carrying out the balance of the programme for the supply of weapons to China. The Canadian Joint Staff submitted the question to the Combined Chiefs of Staff on April 7th together with a list of the munitions for which orders had been placed in Canada with the intention of delivery to China.

The opinion of the Combined Chiefs of Staff was dated May 14th. It stated that from the strategic point of view it was desirable that China should receive all the war equipment that could be made available and that could be transported, up to the maximum her forces could employ. The opinion continued as follows:

> "Unfortunately, however, at the present time it is impossible to deliver to China anything in the nature of heavy equipment, and light equipment can only be delivered in such quantities as can be included in the air line over the Himalayas by the Air Transport Command, and China National Airways Corporation. At the present moment there appears to be no immediate prospect of opening a land route into China and little prospect of any large increase in the air left over the Himalayas. The Combined Chiefs of Staff therefore suggest a temporary suspension of shipments under the Canadian Mutual Aid program, except for such items of small equipment which, by prior agreement with the Joint War Aid Committee, it appears probable can be included for air shipment by the Air Transport Command or the Chinese National Airways Corporation and which can be made available without detriment to the requirements of other theatres which may have higher priority."

The Mutual Aid Board at its last meeting on May 19th discussed what should be done, in the light of this opinion, with the munitions which have accumulated at the Longue Point depot for China amounting to a single shipload of something over 5000 tons. The Chinese have been pressing insistently for them to be shipped. The discussion in the Mutual Aid Board is described in the attached message, EX-2112 of May 20th, from Wrong to Pearson. Pearson telephoned yesterday to say that the Washington Mutual Aid Advisory Committee (which includes Mr. Bateman, General Pope, Mr. Plumptre and himself) had considered this communication and were unanimously of the opinion that the shipment should not go forward without further clearance in Washington. The Committee agreed that General Pope should discuss the matter informally with Sir John Dill and General MacReady. The attached message from him (WA-3156 of May 23rd) quotes a report from General Pope that both Sir John Dill and General MacReady felt that "it would be most unwise on our part to proceed with this proposed second shipment without further reference to Washington."

I believe that the Mutual Aid Administration is taking steps to move the shipment as soon as possible. I suggest that you might propose in the War Committee that the Mutual Aid Board should reconsider the position in the light of the report from Washington, in the very near future. It looks quite probable that the verdict will be for the shipment to go forward with the concurrence of the military authorities in Washington, but it certainly seems desirable that their concurrence should be sought as otherwise our relationship with them may be seriously prejudiced.

No. EX-2112

Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins:

Mutual Aid Board yesterday afternoon considered question of despatch of further military supplies to China in light of the answer of the Combined Chiefs of Staff. The ~~only~~ point under discussion was whether the second shipment of approximately 5,000 tons, which is now assembled and ready for despatch at Longue Point depot, should go forward. The Chinese Ambassador saw me ~~enquired~~ on Thursday (to ask) about the reasons for delay in making this shipment and General Kiang also took the matter up at length with Mr. Ralston.

The decision of the Board, after discussion, was that this shipment should go forward (at once) and that it should be regarded as the final shipment, at least until conditions change, except possibly for small consignments for carriage by air. It was stated that much of the equipment in this shipment was specially manufactured for Chinese use and could not be employed elsewhere.

I told the Board that, in my view, the proper interpretation to be placed on the opinion of the Combined Chiefs of Staff was that no further shipments should leave Canada, except after a fresh clearance (limited to ~~of any~~ items of small equipment) through the Joint War Aid Committee. The opinion was expressed that adequate clearance had already been given to this (whole) consignment which, incidentally, includes some 3,700 tons of trucks. (I understand that you or Allen has received a list of the components of the shipment but I shall try to send you a revised list which Fraser has promised me).

I suggested to the Board that, in any case, orders to move this consignment should not be issued until General Pope, yourself and the other members of the Washington Advisory Committee had been consulted, and commented that I feared there might be repercussions on our working relations with the Combined Chiefs of Staff and the American side of the Joint War Aid Committee. A majority of the Board, however, approved the taking of steps to despatch the goods as soon as possible. I was authorized to inform you, at once, and I should welcome your comments and those of General Pope particularly.

A single ~~shipment~~ load of munitions for China is not a matter of much moment and if, by letting it go, we can get clear of the business until transportation is assured, that will be a substantial relief. My chief concern is whether, having sought the views of the C.C.O.S., we shall now be regarded as acting against their opinion. Ends.

"As agreed, this afternoon I informally acquainted Sir John Dill and MacReady with the subject matter of Mr. Wrong's message to you, External-2112 of 20th May.

"Both were definitely of opinion that, having so recently sought the advice of the Combined Chiefs of Staff in the matter of Canadian Mutual Aid to China, it would be most unwise on our part to proceed with this proposed second shipment without further reference to Washington i.e. the Joint War Aid Committee.

MacReady was further of opinion that, as this was proposed to be our last shipment until a road to China has been opened, a favourable reaction might be expected.

"I need hardly add that I entirely agree with the foregoing. I would add, however, that I believe Ottawa to be in error when it expresses the opinion that adequate clearance had already been given to this whole consignment./ The Combined Chiefs of Staff letter

THE COMBINED CHIEFS OF STAFF HAVE CONSIDERED YOUR LETTER OF 7 APRIL 1944 ASKING THEIR VIEWS AS TO THE STRATEGIC ESSENTIALITY AND OF THE FEASIBILITY OF THE CONTINUED DELIVERY OF CANADIAN WAR SUPPLIES TO CHINA. FROM THE STRATEGIC POINT OF VIEW, IT IS DESIRABLE THAT CHINA SHOULD BE SUPPLIED WITH ALL THE WAR EQUIPMENT WHICH CAN BE MADE AVAILABLE AND WHICH CAN BE TRANSPORTED TO HER UP TO THE MAXIMUM SHE CAN EMPLOY IN THE COMMON WAR EFFORT AGAINST JAPAN. UNFORTUNATELY, HOWEVER, AT THE PRESENT TIME IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO DELIVER TO CHINA ANYTHING IN THE NATURE OF HEAVY EQUIPMENT, AND LIGHT EQUIPMENT CAN ONLY BE DELIVERED IN SUCH QUANTITIES AS CAN BE INCLUDED IN THE AIR LINE OVER THE HIMALAYAS BY THE AIR TRANSPORT COMMAND AND CHINA NATIONAL AIRWAYS CORPORATION. /AT THE PRESENT MOMENT THERE APPEARS TO BE NO IMMEDIATE PROSPECT OF OPENING A LAND ROUTE INTO CHINA AND LITTLE PROSPECT OF ANY LARGE INCREASE IN THE AIR LEFT OVER THE HIMALAYAS. /THE COMBINED CHIEFS OF STAFF THEREFORE SUGGEST A TEMPORARY SUSPENSION OF SHIPMENTS UNDER THE CANADIAN MUTUAL AID PROGRAM, EXCEPT FOR SUCH ITEMS OF SMALL EQUIPMENT

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

The United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office has informed us that Lord Keynes will arrive here from Washington on Sunday next, November 19th, in order to resume discussion of the financial problems between Canada and the United Kingdom during the period following the defeat of Germany. (When he was here in August the assumption was that Stage II, or the Japanese war, might begin around the beginning of the next fiscal year but it now, of course, looks as though heavy fighting might still be continuing in Europe during the early part of the next fiscal year).

Keynes who has spent nearly two months in Washington discussing there similar problems with the U.S. authorities knows, of course, that Parliament will be meeting on the 22nd and that it will be very difficult to get ministerial consideration while Parliament is sitting. We shall, however, have a good deal to discuss with him on the official level. He has sent us copies of the extremely able general statement of the United Kingdom position which he presented to the United States. We do not yet know in full the results of his talks in Washington but I gather that they have not been unsatisfactory from the British point of view. I am attaching a copy of his document which was sent to me by the U.K. High Commissioner with the request that it should be passed on to you.

1. The British members of the Combined Committee hope that their American colleagues will adopt the following main conclusions of policy, as being in accordance with the Quebec decisions:-

(i) Munitions should be made available on Lend-Lease during the first year of Stage II on a scale sufficient not only to provide those categories of requirements which only the U.S. can produce in the time, but also to make possible the release of manpower from munitions production in the U.K. to the extent explained herein.

(ii) In the sixth year of war the British civilian is entitled to such moderate easements as are practicable without interfering with the prosecution of the war, both by some release of manpower in the U.K. to increase production for civilian use, and also by a Lend-Lease programme, especially for food, which will allow some raising of standards.

(iii) There should no longer be any restrictions or avoidable handicaps on the recovery of the British Export Trade so that the U.K. may begin to be more self-supporting in respect of overseas payments at the earliest possible date.

The British members also hope to establish that:-

(iv) It is in the mutual interest that the British reserve of gold and dollars, which is already dangerously inadequate, should not suffer by the end of 1945 any significant deterioration below its present level.

2. For the sake of simplicity in presentation, our programmes are based on the assumption that the first year of Stage II will be co-terminous with the calendar year 1945. If the German war continues well into 1945, our munitions requirements for that year will be different from those herein presented. In this event there may also be some additions to the non-munitions programme. Nevertheless, in any event, it would be convenient in our judgment to act on the assumption that the new arrangements (apart from specific war requirements affected by the above contingency) should be put into force as at January 1, 1945.

3. A study of the following chapters and the annexes thereto will give some picture of the position of the United Kingdom after five years of war, and indicate the nature of our requirements during Stage II. The British members of the Combined Committee are ready to expound in further detail the arguments by which these general conclusions can be justified, and to provide the American members with any further information they may require in addition to what is contained in this paper. Meanwhile a brief introduction may be in place here.

4. During the last five years the British people have thrown everything into the prosecution of the war regardless of the effect on the future of the country. The British people, with the Dominions, is alone amongst the United Nations in having been in the front line from the first to the last day of the German war. It has expended itself in the effort, and unlike most others of the United Nations, it has endangered its actual means of livelihood in the transition period after the war. After the end of the German war the country must continue not only to fight the Japanese war for a period of uncertain duration, but besides that to face a heavy burden in occupying Europe, and in policing wide areas in the Middle East. The other European nations, liberated countries, neutrals, and even enemies, will be at peace, and, returning to the arts of peace, can restore their civilian life and their export trade in competition with ourselves. Even in the best circumstances and even after five years of incessant fatigue and many severe discomforts and privations, it is certain that a number of restrictions on civilian life must nevertheless continue for a long time. The British Government feel, therefore, that it is essential to allow some let-up for the civilian population, some relaxation of effort, some more variation in food, some additional supplies of clothing and household goods, and at least a beginning of rehousing and the repair of buildings. Some progress can be made in this direction by the release of manpower from the work of munitions to the replenishment of civilian supplies; and an important improvement in the variety of diet would follow from the acceptance of the food programme on Lend-Lease proposed in Chapter 2.

5. Since our population of 47 million people is congregated in a very small territory, about one-third the size of Texas, we could not have developed out of our own resources the war effort which we have made in all quarters of the globe. To make such an effort possible, it was, therefore, inevitable that we should be forced to seek large assistance from abroad. That assistance has been given through Lend-Lease from the United States to an amount of $22-1/2 billions, through Mutual Aid from Canada to an amount of $2-1/2 billions, through the disposal of British-owned overseas assets to the amount of $4 billions, and through credits advanced by neutrals and (mainly) by other members of the United Nations, to the amount of about $10 billions, - a grand total of $39 billions altogether up to August 1944.

6. While this assistance has enabled the British people to concentrate on the war their man and woman power and the whole of their efforts to an extent greater than in the case of any of the other United Nations (no less than 67.5 per cent. of the working population being engaged on Government work in 1944), it has greatly distorted our economy and faced us with problems the full seriousness of which is not generally understood. When normal life is renewed, the British people cannot feed and employ themselves without imports of at least the amount they secured before the war, at present prices about $6 billions a year. These imports we were enabled to pay for in the past through our exports, visible and invisible. During the war we have been able to throw our export trade to the winds and to turn over the manpower normally thus engaged either into the Armed Forces or into the munitions factories, precisely because Lend-Lease and other assistance from abroad has been providing us with food and other means of life and production. It is just because so great a part of our contribution has taken the form of providing fighting men and the munitions of war over so long a period that we shall have exceptional difficulty in returning to the normal equilibrium of economic life. For while our need for imports on the pre-war scale has not decreased, our visible exports have sunk to less than 30 per cent. of what they were in 1938, and our income from invisible exports has been largely reduced through the loss of overseas assets and of shipping and in other ways. Thus we shall end the war with an immense gap between the volume of necessary imports and the means to pay for them. This is the outstanding problem facing the United Kingdom which will press upon us with all its force at the end of the Japanese war.

7. For this reason it is imperative that the United Kingdom should again be entirely free to begin the recovery of our export trade, which is for us a matter of life and death. To reach equilibrium we shall need exports five times as great as the scale of our exports in 1944. How far and how fast this recovery can be made is uncertain. It depends not only on our own efforts, but upon prosperity and stability in the rest of the world. What is vital at the moment is that a beginning should be made. One main objective, therefore, in the proposals made in this paper is to allow, first, the release of manpower sufficient to permit a substantial recovery of production for export, and, second, the greatest possible freedom for British exporters to find a market for this production. The supplies requisite to help release the necessary manpower are discussed in Chapters 1 and 2, supported by the calculations in Annex C. The question of maximum freedom of the British export trade is examined in Chapter 5.

8. The fourth purpose of the following proposals is to prevent any significant deterioration in the British reserve of gold and dollars during 1945. A further large increase in overseas liabilities is inevitable. But it is not inevitable that the present volume of our reserves, which are not much above danger point, should be depleted.

9. During 1943 and 1944 our reserve position has been sensibly improved through dollar receipts on account of the pay of American Forces in the United Kingdom and elsewhere in the Sterling Area. With the end of the German war and with the movement of the Pacific war further from the shores of Australia, this source of income will largely dry up. According to our latest estimates, our net reserves are likely to have reached their peak in the latest return which we have made to the U.S.

Treasury, that is to say, at the end of August 1944, when the net reserves of gold and dollars stood at $1,748 millions. Experience shows that it is extremely difficult to forecast the state of our reserves much in advance of the facts; for this balancing figure represents the difference between two large items, namely, our outgoings and our incomings, so that small proportionate changes in the two latter items may have a large proportionate effect on the difference between them. The latest estimates from London, however, indicate that by the end of this year the net reserves will have fallen from $1,748 millions to $1,485 millions, largely as a result of the falling off of receipts from American troops previously based on the U.K. and in Australia. This adverse factor will be accentuated in the course of 1945 and the forecast of the reserves at the end of 1945, as shown in Annex A, is for a reduction to the dangerously low level of $1,130 millions; that is to say, a reduction of no less than $600 millions from the last reported figure as at August 1944. This is little above the minimum level of $1 billion below which, as is indicated in Annex A, we could not go except in circumstances of the gravest emergency. Meanwhile, our overseas liabilities will have been increased by (say) $3 billions. These figures are given under the reserve that they are partly based on what at this date can only be conjectures which can easily be falsified by events, by the course of military dispositions in 1945 and by the measure of our success in recovering our exports. Nevertheless, the trend is clear, and we regard it is essential that some means should be found to reverse this trend from which otherwise serious consequences may flow.

10. The exiguous amount of our reserves and the changes they have undergone compared with the situation in the United States, is well illustrated in the following table:-

	U.S. net gold reserves $ millions	U.K. net gold & dollar reserves $ millions
31st August, 1938	13,136	4,200
31st August, 1939	16,646	2,450

relatively larger reserves but have no important overseas liabilities against them. For example, the reserves of certain countries are believed to be as follows: -

Russia	$1.6 billions
France	2.25 "

The gold reserves of Russia by the end of 1945 should very considerably exceed the figure reported above.

11. If such a serious reserve position as is forecasted above is actually allowed to develop, the Government of the United Kingdom will be precluded on financial grounds from taking a share in many responsibilities for which it would be to the mutual interest of the United States and the United Kingdom Governments that they should be jointly responsible. Perhaps it is scarcely necessary to enlarge on the consequences of the United Kingdom finding itself at the end of 1945 in such financial straits as those here indicated. The weakness of the reserves in relation to the liabilities, coupled with the prospect of at least three years during which there will be a large running deficit on current account, presents a problem of formidable dimensions which cannot easily be remedied. The dangers of the situation have been accumulating gradually, and unless there is a radical change in handling the position, such as the Quebec decisions contemplate, much worse than inconvenience will ensue. We lay great stress, therefore, on some action on the lines of the proposals in Chapter 3 below.

12. The aggregate of Lend-Lease aid under the headings dealt with in Chapters 1, 2 and 4 below amounted, in 1944, on the basis of the accepted programmes for that year, to about $10 billions. It is believed that the amount of aid asked for in these chapters under the programmes for 1945 will aggregate about $6 billions, on a basis which, except in the case of oil, the figure for which has not been netted in 1944 in respect of oil received on Lend-Lease and subsequently returned on Reciprocal Aid, is on a strictly comparative basis. In relation, however, to both these figures it should be explained that, as noted in paragraphs 7 and 8 of Chapter 1 and the first section of Chapter 4, there are additional items which no dount would be chargeable against the Lend-Lease appropriation. These cannot be so large as to distort the general picture, but we are not in a position to estimate them accurately. The aggregate of $6 billions above takes no account, moreover, of the proposals to be made in Chapter 3 below, to which, as has just been mentioned, we attach special importance.

13. The programmes proposed in the following chapters set forth a particular detailed pattern by which the estimated results can be reached. While the pattern is the best which we have been able to devise, we recognise that in certain categories some agreed variation in detail may be both desirable and possible without impairing the over-all result.

14. In conclusion we ask that the objectives outlined herein should be agreed in principle and in terms of aggregate aid. If, in the event, the basic assumption that the first year of Stage II will begin on January 1st 1945 is falsified, such adjustments as are then necessary in specified war requirements may be jointly discussed within the broad cover of this general agreement.

ANNEX A.

STATISTICS BEARING ON THE DIMENSIONS OF THE UNITED KINGDOM'S PROBLEM OF EXTERNAL FINANCE IN THE TRANSITION.

I. BRITISH OVERSEAS LIABILITIES AT THE END OF JUNE 1944.

1. The grand aggregate of the net liabilities (i.e. after deducting similar British assets abroad) amounted to $11,223 millions at June 30th 1944, compared with $8,588 millions a year earlier. This can be broken up into the following main groups, certain of which are clearly much less burdensome in the near future than others:-

(a) United States and Canada (including governmental loans)

Canada	$ 640.0	millions
United States	367.2	"

(b) The Special Account Balances owing to South America and Neutral Europe

Portugal (a gold liability)	$ 266.4	millions

2. The chief difficulties in the early post-war period are likely to arise from the last three categories above. All these countries will seek to spend their sterling balances on a considerable scale as soon as goods and shipping are freely available, in so far as they are free to do so. Under the existing arrangements, the countries in the sterling area are free to spend their sterling balances anywhere in the Sterling Area without restriction, and to obtain external currencies on condition that they are required for essential goods which cannot be obtained from the Sterling Area. It is only the shortages of goods and shipping which have made it financially possible to continue these arrangements unchanged during the last three years, and it is not anticipated that a similar latitude to spend sterling balances outside the Sterling Area can be continued much longer. On this assumption, and provided the Sterling Area countries are prepared to continue to sell their exports to the U.K. on the present basis, no acute financial problem will arise in the early period. The balances will have to be repaid, as and when it becomes possible, through British exports. Thus the existence of the above large volume of sterling balances affects the financial position of the early post-war period much more because they affect the amount of the further sums which the U.K. can afford to borrow, than because the U.K. can be called upon to repay these monies immediately, since in the nature of things this is impossible.

3. Nevertheless, there must be some exceptions to the restriction of the use of the abnormal balance. The members of the Sterling Area have placed at the disposal of the London Exchange Control all their earnings of external currencies, more particularly dollars. Moreover, the majority of them have entrusted the whole, or nearly the whole, of their currency reserves to London, thus enabling the British Government to pay their way over a considerable part of the world in terms of paper backed by sterling Treasury Bills in London. When the holders of this paper are again in a position to purchase goods, there will be a heavy moral responsibility on the British Government to do anything which lies in their power to operate the above system with as much moderation and as much regard to the freedom of international trade generally as is financially possible. Some part of the British gold reserves, though in present circumstances it may have to be a very small part, must, therefore, be regarded as available for the use of the rest of the Sterling Area. Equitable and satisfactory means of allocating the amounts, if any, which may turn out to be available when we know the size of our reserves at the end of Stage II have not yet been worked out. Those Colonies which are not themselves substantial dollar earners, and the entire currency reserves of which have been accumulated in London, would seem to have a particularly strong claim to any ration of gold or dollars which can be spared.

4. It is not the purpose of this memorandum to offer, or to debate, the ultimate solution. Nevertheless there are certain general principles to which we must hold henceforward with the utmost resolution, if we are to face realistically the consequences of the overseas financial policy which we have adopted during the war. We do not intend to seek outside assistance in meeting the war debts which we have incurred to the other Sterling Area countries and to neutrals. We propose to meet these over a period of years in the shape of British exports and perhaps, to a small extent, by a further disposal of our pre-war investments in their territories. But we shall ask those concerned to agree that, in view of the origin of the debts, the interest element shall be reduced to a minimum or altogether extinguished. That is to say, it is the capital sum which we shall endeavour to repay. Furthermore, subject to only minor exceptions, repayment must take the form of direct British exports, additional to what we need to pay for necessary imports, and cannot take the form of free exchange, of which we see no prospect of possessing a sizeable surplus in the foreseeable future. The abnormal war balances can be made available to those who own them only by instalments and only subject to these conditions. During the transitional period we hope to be able to allow certain transfers of indebtedness between our creditors within the Sterling Area. But in general we cannot agree to borrow outside currencies in order to make sterling war indebtedness available to buy exports from outside. For we should have no sufficient expectation of being able to repay such loans. All this is rooted in the inescapable necessities of the case.

5. It has been indicated above that the willingness of the United Kingdom to borrow will be a limiting factor, as well as the willingness of other countries to lend. The United Kingdom have already entered into obligations for the purposes of the war on so vast a scale that their capacity of repayment even over many years will be gravely strained. It is not the intention of the British Government to enter into further obligations on a scale or on terms which might jeopardise the security of ultimate repayment of the capital, either of existing or of subsequent loans. Even if the interest element can be kept down to an insignificant figure, this consideration may well impose a narrower limit on the aggregate of future credit facilities than is set on the other side of the account by the willingness of lenders to lend. The British Government are determined not to borrow more or on more onerous terms than they have a reasonable expectation of being able to repay over a term of years.

II. THE GOLD AND DOLLAR BALANCES OF THE U.K.

6. A year before the outbreak of war our reserves were substantial and stood at $4,200 millions. The expectation of war led to a large-scale withdrawal of foreign balances, and at the outbreak of war we were reduced to $2,450 millions. Shortly after the commencement of Lend-Lease (April 1941) we were practically cleaned out, having gold and dollar reserves of $264 millions with $252 millions gold liabilities against them, so that our net reserves were down to $12 millions. Thereafter came the R.F.C. Loan; the old (pre-Lend-Lease) commitments had been substantially met; almost all our current requirements from United States were for a time lent-leased; and the Sterling Area was beginning to gain substantial earnings from the United States troops; with the result that our reserves began to rise quite steadily. They reached a peak of about $1,750 millions in August 1944. Unfortunately, a livelier awareness by the United States Administration of this recovery in our reserves than of the much greater increase of our liabilities led to a substantial curtailment of Lend-Lease facilities, and at the same time a reduction of our earning power corresponding to the increase in reverse Mutual Aid, with the result that we became unduly dependent on precarious earnings from the United States troops in the Sterling Area. With a reduction of these earnings as the U.S. Forces move into Europe and as the war in the Pacific becomes based to a lesser extent on Australia, our dollar account is already on the wrong side, so that our reserves have begun to fall.

8. Nearly the whole of the very large decrease in reserves between the end of 1939 and the end of 1941 was used to pay for war expenditure in the U.S.. The net increase in Reserves during the Lend-Lease period up-to-date from March 1, 1941, to September 1, 1944, was not the result of our receiving Lend-Lease assistance on such a scale that the U.K.'s normal current earnings of dollars exceeded its requirements. For example, the normal dollar earnings of the U.K. fell short of its own dollar requirements by $287 millions in 1942 and by $240 millions in 1943; and its total dollar earnings, including pay of U.S. troops in U.K., fell short by $237 millions in 1942 and $50 millions in 1943. The increase in reserves was partly due to the disposal or pledging of capital assets and partly to the dollar earnings of the rest of the Sterling Area, the chief sources from which we obtained the increase in our Reserves, after the commencement of Lend-Lease, being as follows. At the end of August 1944 when our net reserves reached their peak of $1,748 millions, the cumulative increase since the commencement of Lend-Lease on March 1, 1941 (when our reserves stood at $169 millions) was $1,579 millions. During this period the following amounts of gold and dollars were obtained from capital transactions:-

	$ millions
Gold from South Africa against sale of securities	307
do. do. sterling balances	83
U.S. $ from sales of securities to U.S.	255
Viscose sale	54
R.F.C. Loan less amortisation	307
B.A.T. Loan	17
	1,023

The balance of $556 millions was found from the excess of the current dollar earnings of the rest of the Sterling Area (the dollars thus acquired involving a corresponding increase in our liabilities to the countries handing them over to us) over the current dollar deficit of the U.K. No exact analysis of these receipts is available for the broken period of 1941 or for the broken period of 1944. But, as it happens, the net excess thus earned in the latter of these two periods almost exactly balanced the net deficit in the former of them. Thus it was the excess earnings of the rest of the Sterling Area in the years 1942 and 1943 over the dollar deficit of the U.K. in these two years which almost exactly made up the difference, namely, $556 millions, between the total growth of reserves and the capital receipts specified above.

III. THE LOSS OF PRE-WAR OVERSEAS ASSETS.

9. The above aggregates of war indebtedness incurred by the U.K. take no account of loss of pre-war overseas assets disposed of during the war in order that the growth of war indebtedness might be correspondingly less. The amount of such disposals was estimated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in April last at about $4 billions. The balance which remains is largely unmarketable and only realisable, if at all, by special arrangements, so that it is not easy to estimate its capital value. A recent attempt, however, has been made to estimate, both what has been lost and what still remains, on an income basis, as follows:-

Net Income from Investments Abroad ($ millions)

1938		1943
Lord Kindersley's estimates of amounts distributed as interest and dividends to U.K. residents	740	Bank of England provisional estimates on a similar basis to Lord Kindersley's	456
Undistributed profits, U.K. office expenses, etc.	120	Undistributed profits, U.K. office expenses, etc.	104
	860		560
Less, payments to non-residents on their investments in U.K.	60	say	40
U.K. Net Income	800		520

10. It would be unwise to capitalise the income for 1938 and for 1943 at the same rate. Dividends on equities are probably now higher than in 1938, and the fall in capital outstanding no doubt somewhat greater than simple comparison of the two incomes would indicate. Nevertheless the broad conclusion seems to be that about one-third has been disposed of or otherwise lost as a result of hostilities. If the pre-war value was around $14 billions, the remaining value is now around $10 billions.

11. Against this, we have to reckon with a net indebtedness on short term of $12 billions as at the end of 1944. The year 1945 will add $2-1/2 to $3 billions to this, and the post-war transition, on the basis of the most optimistic assumptions, will add not less than another $4 to $5 billions. (This calculation neglects both the small excess of reserves over net short term liabilities at the beginning of the war and the unpredictable level of reserves at the end of it.) Thus the U.K. will have entered the war with a net creditor position of (say) $14 billions and will end it with a net debtor position of (say) $9 billions, showing a net deterioration of $23 billions in the overseas position. The other side of the medal is that almost every other country in the world, apart from the enemy and occupied countries, has improved its overseas position to an extent, in the aggregate, approximately equal in amount. It may be mentioned that the liabilities of $19 billions, with which we shall come out of the transitional period, represent the total exports of the U.K. for a period of six years on the basis of their pre-war volume.

IV. THE U.K.'S PROSPECTIVE BALANCE OF OVERSEAS TRADE

12. An attempt has recently been made to forecast the prospective balance of trade in 1945 more fully than has been attempted hitherto. Any such estimates in time of war are necessarily most precarious. The following summary, which is the best we can do at the moment, is submitted subject to all reservations. Particular attention is called to the comments which follow overleaf, which mainly relate to the more difficult and uncertain items.

COMMENTS ON PRECEDING TABLE

(i) The above table excludes munitions received from the United States and Canada, on the requirements side, and also excludes munitions manufactured in U.K. and delivered on Mutual Aid on the receipts side. It does not relate, however, quite strictly to non-munitions, since Item 10, War Expenditure, includes some payments for munitions from other parts of the world, e.g., India, and Item 15, Military receipts from Empire Governments other than Canada, includes what is in effect some reimbursement for munitions manufactured in U.K. supplies to Empire Forces.

(ii) No deduction has been made in respect of non-munitions supplied on U.S. Lend-Lease or Canadian Mutual Aid. The Lend Lease aid for non-munitions proposed in other parts of this paper amounts, in round figures, to $2.75 billions. The amount of Mutual Aid from Canada is not yet determined, but it is at present contemplated to propose some figure in the neighbourhood of $600 millions Canadian to cover non-munitions. Thus if these proposals were to be accepted, the remaining cash deficit would be of the order of $3 billions, which would have to be met by the further disposal of assets or by incurring further debt.

(iii) The above shows that, after allowing for $2.75 billions of Lend-Lease aid, there still remains more than $900 millions of U.S. dollar expenditure which the U.K. would have to meet in cash out of its dollar earnings and other resources. Certain proposals relating to this have been made in Chapter 3.

(iv) There are, moreover, further liabilities not covered by the above table. In particular, it includes nothing for liabilities incurred through the use of military currencies in Europe, e.g., credits thus created in favour of Allies on account of military currencies to meet the pay of British troops.

(v) The most formidable abnormal item is, of course, Item 10 for War Expenditure. As already pointed out, this excludes munitions on Lend-Lease or Mutual Aid and also expenditure in military currency. It is made up as follows:-

Egypt	240	"
Australia	160	"
Palestine	100	"
South Africa	80	"
Persia	60	"

Throughout the past three years this has been the main cause of the growing indebtedness of the U.K. It is not generally appreciated that, quite apart from the large quantities of stores which are shipped to British Forces overseas, more particularly in the Middle East and in India, very large cash expenditures are incurred in those areas. The United Kingdom has in fact borne the main cost of the war in so far as it involves local expenditures over a very large area stretching from North Africa to Burma. It will be seen that even in 1945 such expenditure in the Middle East countries is estimated at $400 millions. Not long ago it was running at double this rate. It should, however, be emphasised that these estimates are particularly precarious. They are based on the latest figures provided by the War Office as to the personnel which present strategic decisions will require us to keep in the areas in question. But they are capable of considerable modification upwards or downwards in accordance with changing strategic decisions consequent on the course of the war.

(vi) The receipts entered in respect of exports need further explanation. In recent months British exports have been running at the rate of about $80 millions a month. For the year as a whole it is expected that they will not quite reach $1 billion. The proposals relating to manpower set forth in another section of this paper should, if they are carried fully into effect, release sufficient manpower in the course of the year to increase exports by about $1 billion, approximately doubling them. The estimate in the above table assumes that in spite of inevitable time-lags this is carried fully into effect, and is arrived at as follows. It is estimated that British exports will reach a figure of $2,000 millions. To this is added $40 millions for diamonds not of British origin shipped to U.S.A. From this is deducted $200 millions for time-lags in payment, and $100 millions for relief exports through UNRRA, etc, which will not be paid for, leaving estimated cash receipts of $1,740 millions. We believe, however, that this figure is highly optimistic. A great deal depends on whether British exporters can be immediately released to take orders. Otherwise there is a serious danger that manpower which is released will find its way into making goods to satisfy the hungry home market. It will, therefore, be a great achievement of organisation if the figure here estimated is actually reached.

(vii) Item 17, Other Receipts (unidentifiable), is difficult to explain. It includes certain sources of invisible income, such as insurance and commissions, but in the main it reflects the inability of the British statisticians to identify all the sources from which our income has reached us in recent years. An analysis of past expenditure shows that a balancing figure of about this amount is required to reconcile the results. It may come from the disposal of capital assets which have not been separately reported as such; or it may be merely a balancing figure which results from various items of expenditure having been over-estimated, and various items of receipts under-estimated. It is dangerous to rely on so uncertain a source, which may be the product of erroneous statistics in the past, but so far its analysis has baffled all enquirers.

V. THE U.K.'S GOLD AND DOLLAR RESERVE POSITION AT THE END OF STAGE II

13. The U.K.'s balance of trade with the U.S. in 1945, as estimated in IV above, on the assumption of Lend-Lease assistance for non-munitions on a scale not exceeding $2.75 billions, shows a net deficit with the U.S. on U.K. account of about $400 millions, which is considerably larger than in any year since Lend-Lease came into operation (the corresponding deficit in 1942 was $287 millions, and in 1943 $240 millions, the figures for 1944 being not yet available). Receipts from the pay of U.S. Forces in the U.K. in 1945 are estimated, for obvious reasons, at the greatly reduced figure of $60 millions. 1945 is the first year in which the requirement of cash payment for a number of articles previously on Lend-Lease and the delivery of raw materials on Reciprocal Aid coincide with diminished receipts in respect of the U.S. Forces.

14. The British gold and dollar position depends, however, not merely on the U.K. balance with the U.S., but also on the gold and dollar receipts and outgoings of the rest of the Sterling Area. In previous years these sources have come to the rescue on an important scale; for example, in 1943 we received nearly $515 millions from these sources. In 1945, on the other hand, it is expected that the rest of the Sterling Area will contribute no more than $100 millions. This also is due to a combination of two circumstances. The increase in Reciprocal Aid in food and raw materials, which only comes into full effect in 1945, has the effect of substantially reducing the dollar earning power of these countries and will turn the commercial balance of the rest of the Sterling Area with the U.S. into a deficit of $100 millions. At the same time, the heavy earnings from U.S. Forces, which previously made this scale of Reciprocal Aid possible without excessively adverse results, are falling away and are estimated in 1945 at no more than $200 millions.

The estimated balance sheet of the gold and dollar reserve position as a whole in 1945 is as follows:-

	$ Millions
U.K. earnings from U.S. Forces	60	U.K. deficit with U.S. on balance of trade account	400
do. for rest of Sterling Area	200	do for rest of Sterling Area	100
Net receipts of gold	160	Dollar payments to third countries	225
	420	Increase in gold liabilities	50
Reduction of reserves	355
	$ 775		$ 775

The estimate of earnings from U.S. Forces in the Sterling Area is conjectural. Receipts in the U.K. are put at $60 millions. This is on the assumption that Stage II begins at January 1, 1945. If the German war drags on this figure will be somewhat, but not much, larger. The Australian Government inform us that they expect no significant income from this source. In fact, the American army acquired an excessive amount of Australian balances in the first half of 1944, and are expected even so early as the second half of 1944 to withdraw something like $40 millions from the balances already set up, rather than increase them. Receipts in India on this account depend on how far outgoings are met by sales of gold on behalf of the U.S. Treasury. At one time such sales of gold largely absorbed this source of dollars. More recently such sales have been on a much smaller scale. It is a matter of policy at what level of price it is decided to press sales of gold on a larger scale. Provisionally, without knowing accurately the strength of U.S. Forces in India over successive dates in 1945, we estimate rather doubtfully $200 millions from this source, which may easily turn out too high. As regards gold, we have had to abandon the policy of assisting the Government of India and other Middle East Governments in their anti-inflation campaign by providing a certain amount of gold for sale in these areas, and the estimate of our net receipts of gold is on the assumption that sales of gold in India and the Middle East, which are now coming to an end, will not be resumed in 1945. Dollar expenditure on account of third countries includes payments for sugar and oil from dollar sources in the Caribbean and Venezuela and certain refunds to Canada of U.S. dollar expenditure incurred on our behalf.

15. If these estimates, which are necessarily based in part on conjecture and can easily be falsified by the progress of events, are correct, the U.K. will enter the year 1946 with liquid reserves amounting to $1,130 millions, and overseas liabilities (which are, however, in terms of sterling and cannot be freely converted into gold or dollars) of between $14 and $15 billions.

16. The serious reversal of the trend of the reserve position as shown above is due, it will be seen, to a combination of circumstances which were always likely to produce that result in the long run. During the period when the Sterling Area had considerable earnings from the U.S. Forces, a number of marginal items were taken off Lend-Lease and the scale of Reciprocal Aid, particularly for raw materials, was greatly increased. The above result was bound to follow if the latter measures were to continue into a period when our income on the former account was falling away. It is for this reason that the proposals in Chapter 3 are put forward.

17. Our need to hold liquid reserves is based on a number of different considerations:-

(a) We must hold a minimum reserve against grave contingencies such as war, which cannot be put below one billion dollars.

(b) We must hold working balances adequate to cover our short term requirements in international commerce in conditions of normal trade, after our external balance of trade is substantially in equilibrium.

(c) We must hold reserves against the needs of the Sterling Area, particularly in the case of those countries of which we keep the currency reserves so that their external resources wholly consist of sterling balances in London.

(d) We must hold reserves against our needs in the transitional period of Stage III, in which our balance of payments will still be heavily adverse, since we must expect to have to cover in gold some part at least of our deficit with the rest of the world.

As regards (a) and (b) above, no more need be said. As regards (c), it must be emphasised that the reserves of the United Kingdom constitute broadly speaking the reserves of the Sterling Area as a whole. No other countries of the Sterling Area (with the exception of South Africa, which as the world's greatest gold producer is in a special position) have any appreciable holdings of gold or of foreign currencies other than sterling. Their foreign currency receipts have gone into the United Kingdom pool, and they have looked to us to meet their essential foreign currency needs. All these countries are short of goods, and will have problems of reconstruction and restoration of civilian economy to face. They will seek to convert some part of their accumulated sterling balances into foreign currencies for these purposes. Whether and how far their demands can be met will depend on the adequacy of the reserves we then hold. So far as the early transitional period is concerned, our main anxieties relate to (d). It is impossible at present to give any close estimate of the prospective drain. Some indication of its possible magnitude, however, can be obtained by looking back to the estimated balance of overseas trade in 1945 set forth in paragraph 12 above. This shows, on the assumption that Lend-Lease and Mutual Aid come to an end with the end of Stage II, that we shall enter Stage III with a deficit running at the rate of about $6 billions a year. To what extent can we hope that this will be reduced during the first year of Stage III?

18. To begin with our import requirements.* There will be a large reduction in the case of oil, and we shall no longer have to buy raw materials and food for Reciprocal Aid, making an economy of (say) $400 millions altogether. On the other hand the size of the adult population requiring food and raw materials for employment will be increased by the demobilisation of the Forces; so that whilst the character of our imports will be to a certain extent changed, the aggregate may be more rather than less. The imports we should like to have are not likely to be much less than $6 billions. By extreme economy, however, the use of stocks and strict import control, it is possible that the figure might be kept down during the first year nearer to $5 billions.

19. The other main items on the debit side of the account, namely, the use of non-British shipping and war expenditure overseas, which are at present costing about $3-1/2 billions between them, should be very greatly diminished in due course. Nevertheless, these items of expenditure will not cease immediately. For there will be a period of uncertain duration during which our Forces are being brought home from overseas, and perhaps a longer period during which we remain responsible for policing certain extensive areas of the world. In addition there will doubtless be many deferred liabilities in respect of earlier dates which will be brought to account against us for payment in the first year of Stage III. Whilst, therefore, we must take steps to reduce these outgoings as fast as possible, they are bound to remain high in the first year of Stage III, and are likely to continue on a significant scale at least into the second year.

20. On the credit side of the account, military receipts from Empire Governments and from the pay of U.S. and Canadian Forces in the U.K. will rapidly disappear, approximately offsetting the gain under 18 above.

21. There remain, however, two items, namely, shipping and exports, where we must hope for a large and progressive increase in income. Nevertheless as regards shipping we cannot expect the improvement which should be ultimately possible, until we have rebuilt our mercantile marine. In 1938 the net income from U.K. shipping earnings was some $400 millions. By end-1944 it is expected that U.K. tonnage will amount to some 12 million gross tons of ocean-going shipping, compared with 16 million gross tons in 1938. Even if by, say 1950, we rebuild our mercantile marine to its former level, and freights are assumed to rise by 60 per cent. compared to 1938, U.K. shipping earnings in terms of money in 1950 would be no more than 55 per cent. above 1938. On this basis a net income of $640 millions as compared with $400 millions in 1938, might be a reasonable estimate. Since, however, we are already taking credit for $500 millions, no significant improvement can be expected on this heading so early as 1946. The effective saving in 1946 is that already mentioned, namely, in our outgoings in respect of shipping which we do not ourselves own. The prospects of exports are dealt with separately in the last section of this Annex.

22. Taking one thing with another, it would seem very optimistic to expect that the net deficit could be brought below $3 billions in the first year of Stage III. Nor are we likely to reach equilibrium in the second, or even in the third, year of Stage III. We shall have managed very well if the accumulated deficit in Stage III before we reach equilibrium is less than a figure between $4 and $5 billions.

23. It will be observed that this figure is reached on the assumption -

(a) that no part of the abnormal sterling balances is repaid during this period, which probably means in practice that the rest of the Sterling Area could not spend in gold and dollars more than their current earnings in gold and dollars;

(b) that no significant part of our exports is on credit terms; and

(c) that the reorganisation and pacification of the world will not make on us any financial claims whatever.

24. It is unlikely that no additional obligations will fall on us under any of these heads. Thus the sums which we shall be required to raise after the war to meet current expenditure are likely to exceed $4 or $5 billions. Even if, as we hope, arrangements are made during Stage II which will enable us to maintain our reserves near their present level, not more than half a billion of these reserves will be available during the early years of Stage III towards meeting the above deficit.

25. Particular attention has already been called in the Introduction and in Chapter 3 to the embarrassments which may arise affecting the U.S. as well as the U.K. Government, if the latter is unable to finance the political and other obligations arising out of the war and the peace which otherwise it would be natural for her to share and to assume. It is not desired or intended on this occasion to discuss the question how the financial problems of Stage III will be best handled when the time comes. The present discussions are limited to Stage II. Nevertheless, it is relevant to Stage II arrangements to emphasise here that it will be particularly difficult in Stage III to replenish the U.K.'s stock of liquid cash in the form of gold and dollars. Such credits as become available on suitable terms are likely to be tied to particular exports, and cannot always be married against pressing demands of another kind and in another quarter of the world. It is, therefore, of the highest importance to maintain the British liquid reserves above the danger level during Stage II, when the conditions will be such that by proper arrangements this is possible.

VI. BRITISH EXPORTS IN STAGE III

26. At the present time British visible exports are not sufficient to finance one-tenth of our total overseas requirements. Even after full allowance has been made for Lend-Lease, and Mutual Aid from Canada, British exports are not currently sufficient to finance one-seventh of our remaining overseas requirements. The heavy deficit forecast for 1945 is after making the very optimistic assumption that our exports in the course of 1945 will be running at about double their figure in 1944. It is obvious, therefore, what a vast scale of industrial reorganisation will be required to raise exports sufficiently to restore equilibrium.

27. The whole lay-out of the British war economy was dominated during the formative period by one supreme consideration: for a time we and the Commonwealth were alone in the war, and alone capable of bringing military weapons to bear upon the enemy. By the sale of the gold and foreign assets that had been accumulated over a century, we could call for aid upon the industrial effort of nations which still remained neutral. It was wise and it was necessary that the British military effort should be inflated far beyond any level that could be maintained by our own unaided industrial efforts, even (which then was far from the case) when they reached full fruition.

28. In the first weeks of the war, the extent of our gold and foreign assets and the current rate at which they were being dispersed were surveyed. It was immediately decided that measures were necessary to conserve them, not only by drastic limitation of less essential imports, but also by an export drive.

29. Before the war there had been about 1,750,000 persons engaged in the production of British exports - about 1,300,000 were in actual mining and manufacture, and about 450,000 of those in transport, distribution and other occupations were performing services ancillary to export. At mid-1940 these figures had been appreciably reduced, but the total engaged in direct export was still in excess of 1,000,000. The supersession of Cash and Carry by Lend-Lease in the spring of 1941 was the chief cause of an immense change between mid-1940 and mid-1942. By the latter date, only some 440,000 were still engaged in mining or manufacture for export, and by mid-1944 there were only about 300,000 so engaged. Thus the effect of Lend-Lease, together with other similar aid from Empire countries, the disposal of British assets and the accumulation of sterling liabilities in London, has been to make possible the transfer to the war effort of some 1,400,000 former workers in the export industries. These measures enabled the United Kingdom very greatly to increase the impact upon Germany at a critical phase of the war. But the transfer from export to munitions was only possible because we were enabled, through Lend-Lease and Mutual Aid, to receive a great quantity of imports without corresponding exports; and our economy is now organised on that basis. The process took time to establish, and will take time to reverse. The result is that we are not, and cannot for some considerable time to come, be in a position to pay for our minimum and inescapable import needs.

30. In other words, it is precisely the operation of Lend-Lease and Mutual Aid which, by making it possible for us to carry on the war without substantial exports, allowed us to pursue the policy of abandoning any effort to maintain them. Thus our prospective difficulties are an actual consequence of the means by which we have been enabled to devote so large a proportion of our total manpower to war mobilisation.

31. Since the following trade statistics have not been made available previously, it may be worth while to give them in some detail. The value of British exports fell from $1,884 millions in 1938 to $928 millions in 1943. When allowance is made for the rise in prices the quantity of exports was reduced to only 29 per cent. of the 1938 level:-

1944 (estimated on basis of nine months)	960	28

NOTE: The figures for 1942 and subsequent years exclude military aircraft munitions as such and military motor vehicles (but not tyres which are included). On the other hand they include exports on Reciprocal Aid ($15 millions approximately in 1944) and some exports to N.A.A.F.I., Y.M.C.A. and other organisations for sale to British troops abroad ($12 millions approximately in 1944).

The figures also include exports of war requirements to Russia and other Allies to an amount estimated at $92 million for 1944. These exports however must be regarded as in some sense abnormal, since in some cases they are supplied on special financial terms, and in many instances they are not of a character which will build up future trade by establishing markets.

The result of these qualifications is to increase the distance which we shall have to cover to reach the target for future exports which we have set ourselves. But, since the precise effect of the qualifications is, in the main, highly speculative, they have not been taken into account in the rest of this paper.

Attempts have been made, as far as possible, to export goods which do not make great demands on manpower or on shipping. Thus, exports of spirits have, in comparison with other items, been kept at a high level. Exports of textiles, which are produced mainly by female labour, have declined heavily, but less than those of engineering products. The export of motor cars and commercial vehicles has virtually ceased since 1941 and the amounts of iron and steel manufactures, machinery and coal sent to overseas markets have been drastically cut to the minimum quantities essential to the war effort.

*The figures for 1942 and 1943 exclude, whereas those for previous years include, exports of military vehicles. For commercial vehicles and chassis, total exports in the first six months of 1942 were 2,410 while non-military exports were 117; for motor cars, all exports during the first half of 1942 were non-military.

32. It has been already explained that we are aiming, probably too optimistically, at doubling the volume of British exports in 1945 as compared with 1944, reaching a total value, apart from a time-lag in payment, of about $2 billions. This assumes a price level in 1945 of 180 to 185 per cent. of the price level in 1938. Later calculations confirm an estimate, first made some time ago, that in order to reach equilibrium, apart from repayment of war debt, the volume of British exports must rise 50 per cent. above 1938. If we assume a price level of 180 per cent. of pre-war, this means in terms of money an export trade of about $5 billions. Thus in order to reach equilibrium, the level of exports in 1945, the target for which is already double the 1944 figure, will have to be more than doubled again. This great task will involve not merely reconversion on a great scale, but also the problem of developing markets as soon as the shortage of goods prevailing immediately after the war has been overcome. It is for this reason that the British Government feel that complete freedom of export must be resumed immediately, and that any avoidable handicaps in beginning the task of reorganisation should be removed at the earliest possible date.

BRITISH REQUIREMENTS DURING FIRST YEAR OF STAGE II

Dollar payments to third countries in 1945 are there estimated at $225 millions. Further enquiry into the basis of this estimate was invited, since it was not easy to see how so large a total could be built up. It now appears that certain items have been included originally payable in terms of dollars but subsequently recoverable also in terms of dollars, thus causing no net dollar burden. We are now informed that the correct net figure should be $167 millions. Of this, $118 millions consists of payments to the Caribbean and Central America for sugar and oil; and apart from certain small sundry items, the balance is substantially represented by reimbursements to Canada for U.S. dollar payments incurred on our behalf through Canadian agencies.

ANNEX B

CIVILIAN LIVING STANDARDS

I. THE GENERAL LEVEL

1. The British civilian has had five years of black-out and four years of intermittent blitz. The privacy of his home has been periodically invaded by soldiers or evacuees or war-workers requiring billets. In five years of drastic labour mobilisation, nearly every man and every woman under 50 without young children has been subject to direction to work, often far from home. The hours of work average 53 for men and 50 overall; when work is done, every citizen who is not excused for reasons of family circumstances, work, etc., has had to do 48 hours a month duty in the Home Guard or Civil Defence. Supplies of all kinds have been progressively limited by shipping and man-power shortage; the queue is part of normal life. Taxation is probably the severest in the world, and is coupled with continuous pressure to save. The scarce supplies, both of goods and services, must be shared with hundreds of thousands of United States, Dominion and Allied troops; in the preparation of Britain first as the base and then as the bridgehead, the civilian has inevitably suffered hardships spread over almost every aspect of his daily life.

2. This is the price of total war, which the British are well satisfied to pay. But the cumulative effect over a period of years must necessarily be a severe strain. The blitzes of 1940-41, the flying bomb of 1944, the food difficulties in the Spring of 1941, the man-power mobilisation step by step from 1940 to 1943, the steady disappearance of manufactured goods from the shops -- these are a cumulative pressure upon civilian standards which cannot indefinitely be maintained. It is impossible to measure the pressure precisely; only a part of it can be measured at all in material elements which make up the civilian standard of life. This Annex is mainly concerned with the period to the end of 1943, but in 1944 the position is not significantly different from that of 1943, some minor increases being more than balanced by contractions elsewhere and by the general pressures arising from the increased Service population.

3. Estimates of the change in civil consumption are precarious. The technical difficulties of a meaningful comparison are considerable. The whole validity is in question when allowance should be, but in fact cannot be, made for the increased needs of a population in which more people are at work; for the fact that a substantial quantity of consumer goods and services is consumed either by institutions - N.A.A.F.I., canteens, hospitals, etc. - or by British and other soldiers of the United Nations in the United Kingdom; for the very considerable wartime changes of quality, which make a railway ticket, a pint of beer, or the rental of a house an essentially different commodity from its peace-time equivalent; for limitations on the freedom of choice through rationing and shortages; for the fact that in a number of fields - furniture, clothing, house-hold goods in particular - the permitted consumption is in part that of people who need to replace goods destroyed by enemy action. For what it is worth - and it is not worth much - a straight comparison, corrected for none of these things, shows a real expenditure in 1943 (and 1944 differs little) about 80% of that of 1938.

II. HOUSING

4. The change in housing conditions has been dominated by war damage, by requisition for Services and by billeting, by the drastic reduction of facilities for normal repair and by cessation of house-building (300,000 houses were built yearly before the war). Some indication of the degree of loss due to war damage is given by the fact that of some 13 million dwellings in the United Kingdom, some 170,000 had been totally destroyed before June, 1944, and 80,000 so seriously damaged as to be uninhabitable. In total, there had been 3.4 million cases reported of damage of some kind, some affecting the same house on more than one occasion. Many houses have not yet received complete repairs; much even of the repair which is "complete" for the time being will later have to be re-done or supplemented. The flying-bomb attacks on London have created new damage which at first outran the rate even of first-aid repair, and special measures had to be taken to bring building labour into the London area in order to tackle the rapidly growing arrears, even at the expense of essential government work elsewhere. During these attacks a further 23,000 homes were totally destroyed, and it is estimated, on the basis of the known results of the first stages of the attack, that in all 1,100,000 have been damaged, of which 100,000 are uninhabitable without extensive repairs.

5. In certain areas, entire villages have been requisitioned by the military authorities; heavy demands have been made on rural house-room by the Services and evacuees, and in the industrial areas of the Midlands and the North by the need to billet war-workers.

6. Normal house-building has been at a standstill since 1940; the labour engaged upon running repairs, painting, etc., for all premises has been reduced from 300,000 in 1938 to 140,000 in 1943 (excluding War Damage repair), and it is estimated that in the three years 1941-43 only eighteen months' normal house repair was done.

7. War conditions increase domestic requirements of fuel and light. In a drab life of black-out, dull food, damaged and draughty houses, with the family feeding at different times because of their various shifts and civil defence responsibilities, more fuel is needed for heating, lighting and cooking, and the lack of it has a disproportionate psychological effect. Furthermore, the administrative difficulties of controlling fuel consumption are very great; the diversity of household patterns makes actual rationing impracticable; there have, however, been severe restrictions on coal deliveries for household use.

III. TRAVEL

8. An appropriate measure is the relation of public travel facilities to wartime needs. In certain respects more travel is needed than in peacetime. There have been the periodic evacuation waves, and consequent visits by parents to their children in the country; workers are directed to work further from their homes; others have to move their homes, either because of enemy action or because of a new workplace; Servicemen's wives must visit their husbands; millions of British and Allied soldiers must take leave; there is, in addition, the great volume of military passenger movement. On the other hand, holiday facilities are greatly restricted. It is the custom of the British people, none of whom live more than 80 miles from the sea, to spend their holidays at the seaside-- and the whole of the South and East coastal areas have been restricted since 1940 from time to time; those holidays which war-workers have been able to secure have been for the most part spent at home, a very real sacrifice not only for the war-workers themselves but even more for their wives.

9. On balance, there has been an increase since 1938 in the total number of passenger journeys on the British railways by about 10 per cent; including troop trains. But the total number of passenger train-miles has fallen by nearly 30 per cent. This in itself is an indication of the way in which the railways have been compelled to herd the passengers into the trains; it is said, indeed, that if the passengers were animals, the railway companies would be prosecuted by the humane societies. In the summer of 1944, as part of the reasures to clear the railways for the invasion, there were new and drastic cuts in long-distance passenger services, equivalent to a further reduction in train-mileage of some 10 per cent. Furtherrore. the almost total disappearance of fast trains, restaurant and sleeping cars has imposed considerable hardships.

10. The shortage of petrol and tyres and drivers has led to drastic cuts in public service road transport, especially over long distances. Fuel consumption of vehicles in these services has been cut by about 40 per cent.

11. Private rotoring has, of course, been cut much more severely. Since June 1942, petrol has been available to private motorists only on proof of need; a ration is permitted only to doctors, officials travelling on business and the like. The weekly consumption of petrol by private cars and motor cycles had thus been reduced from 47,600 tons in 1938 to 6,000 tons in 1943, or about one-eighth of the pre-war level; if purely personal consurption be considered, excluding professional and business use, the cut is from 513 million gallons in 1938 to 7.6 in 1943, or to a corparative level of 1½ per cent. The number of cars licensed has fallen fror 2,034,000 in August 1939 to 735,000 in May 1944, and the nurber of motor cycles from 418,000 to 117,000.

12. The supply of new bicycles has been reduced by 55 per cent, but the usage of the existing stock has greatly increased, and the supply of tyres of inferior quality to cyclists has nearly doubled. This is an inevitable result of the curtailment of public transport and the drastic cut in private motoring.

IV. CONSUMER GOODS

13. Total Supplies. Supplies of manufactured goods have become progressively scarce. Some, such as clothing and soap, are rationed; others, such as furniture, are obtainable only by permit; others tend at intervals to disappear from the shops altogether; in some cases (e.g. kitchenware) the supply must then be stepped up; others again, such as newspapers, are in reasonably plentiful supply, but either the buyer gets a much smaller article for the pre-war price or the product is taxed very heavily. Rationing and price control limit expenditure on necessities, and the great volume of public purchasing power eats up the supply of uncontrolled goods as it appears, the State taking a rake-off both in purchase tax on such products up to 100 per cent. and by 100 per cent. Excess Profits Tax.

14. Change in quality and indeed of the nature of goods supplied to the public makes measurement difficult, but the following table shows the estimated personal expenditure on manufactured goods:

Changes in the Volume of Expenditure on Consumer Goods

($ millions at 1938 prices)

	1938	1939	1940	1941	1942	1943
Clothing	1788	1788	1500	1108	1092	1036
Household goods	1096	1040	812	592	416	352
Total	3760	3704	3084	2332	2024	1888

These expenditures were made by a civilian population some 7½ per cent. smaller than in 1938. But they include all purchases made by members of the British and Allied armed forces, i.e., everthing which Servicemen in Britain do not receive in kind; they also include all supplies to N.A.A.F.I., canteens, hospitals, ships' stores, etc. Purchases made to replace blitzed possessions are, of course, included

15. Broadly, purchases of manufactured goods had fallen by one-half in 1943; the 1944 supply may not be very different. But the actual level is not the whole story; supplies have now been very scarce for three years, and as wardrobes and domestic stocks become exhausted, the effects of shortage grow cumulatively. In 1941 it was not difficult to manage with a clothing supply of 60 per cent. of pre-war; in 1944 the whole order of hardship is different. In the five years of war, assuming 1944 the same as 1943, the population has received only three years' normal supply of clothing, something over two years' supply of household goods and some 3½ years' supply of other goods. This shows a backlog of re-equipment, towards restoring some parts of which a beginning must soon be made.

16. Clothing. Clothing rationing was introduced in mid-1941, and the aggregate volume of consumption was, in 1943, about 42 per cent. below pre-war. Boots and shoes, however, fell by only 28 per cent. The following table shows the average numbers of certain garments purchased on the current ration by adults not receiving the industrial supplement. This is expressed as a rate of purchase; as stocks are now pretty constant, this reflects accurately current production possibilities:-

	Men (18 and over)	Women (18 and over)
Overcoats and rainwear	1 in 4½ years	1 in 2-3/4 years
Outerwear (i.e., suits; or jackets with odd trousers; costumes; dresses; or odd skirts or slacks with jacket or blouse)	1 in 2½ years	1 in 9 months
Shirts	1 in 9 months
Under garments(all kinds, including corsets)	1 in 9 months	1 in 4 months
Socks and stockings	1 in 5 months	1 in 2½ months
Nightwear	1 in 4½ years	1 in 4 years
Footwear(all types, including slippers)	1 in 13 months	1 in 8 months

The ration in 1944 is 48 points, or 58 for industrial workers, with special allowances for certain types of worker. It is estimated that supplies will have to increase to permit a ration of at least 100 points a year before it is possible to stop rationing.

17. Household goods. Consumption of household goods - furniture. hardware, hollow-ware, crockery, soap, electric lamps, etc.-- had by 1943 fallen below one-third of the 1938 level. These supplies had to meet the demand of hospitals and other institutions, as well as that of personal users; personal supplies had to cover the losses of existing stocks through enemy action. Many types of goods, especially those of the best quality, are no longer available, and the range of designs from which the consumer can choose is much narrower; both these factors tend to make the consumer's position even worse than it appears from the reduction in total supplies.

18. Supplies of furnishings (including furniture, upholstery, carpets, curtains, etc.), were by 1943 only some 20% of the pre-war level. Curtains, towels, kitchen cloths have all to be met within the units of the personal clothing ration. The production of furniture for private households is confined to wooden "utility" models, none of which are upholstered. This is issued only to people setting up house, including those who have been bombed, or to parents needing a bed for a growing child. Even then, an allowance to a bombed out couple, for example, would be exhausted by the purchase of only one double bed, one kitchen table, four upright chairs, one dressing chest, one armchair, one set of book-shelves. Even this scanty allowance is reduced where applicants have some furniture; and generally demands cannot be satisfied without considerable delay. Supplies of wool carpets and rugs have been cut to 4% of the pre-war level, felt base to 16%, linoleum and substitutes to 17%, woollen blankets to about 33%. The production of sheets would provide only one pair per person in 30 years.

19. Supplies of domestic hardware in 1943 were about one third or pre-war. The manufacture for civilian uses of most electrical household appliances, aluminium hollow-ware and lawnmowers is, of course, prohibited. Only simple forms of electric-light fittings are permitted, and refrigerators may be licensed only on urgent medical grounds. A limited output of cookers (7% of the pre-war level), fires, kettles and irons was permitted in 1943, almost entirely for institutions. Production of domestic hollow-ware was reduced too far in 1941-42, and it was necessary in 1943 to restore supplies to about one-half the pre-war level; the 1943 supplies, on the assumption that two-thirds of the output went to private consumers, were equivalent to one kettle for each household in 3½ years, one saucepan in 1 3/4 years, and one bucket in 4 years.

20. Supplies of table-knives in 1943 were 18% of pre-war, and of spoons and forks 10%; at this rate, each private citizen could buy one knife, spoon and fork about every 20 years. Other household goods in short supply include china and glassware, household brushes and brooms (40% of pre-war), and matches (55% of pre-war).

21. In the picture of household goods, the lack of material for repair-work, and the acute shortage of spares and materials is significant. When a household appliance breaks down, an interval of weeks may elapse before it can be repaired. It is extremely difficult to get supplies of timber and other materials for work about the house.

22. Other goods. The heterogeneous collection of "other goods", which in 1938 represented nearly one-quarter of expenditure on manufactured goods, has followed diverse patterns. Production for civilian use is prohibited over a wide range, including gramophones, pianos, cameras, golf and tennis balls, many types of leather goods, nearly all fancy goods, jewellery (excepting wedding rings), and many types of toys. Some licenses, however, have had to be issued to cover small-scale production by people who were considered unsuitable for transfer to more essential work.

23. Among goods of which production is still permitted there have been cuts of varying degrees. For example, supplies of lead pencils are 70% of pre-war, razor blades 62%, gramophone records (mainly for institutions) 55%, toothbrushes 54%, shaving brushes 24%, penknives 23%, fountain pens 21%, umbrellas 10%. The 1943 supply of radio valves for replacements for a radio population of 9.6 million sets, was 3½ million.

24. Clocks and watches were nearly all imported from Europe before the war, and supplies for civilians have been almost negligible for some years. The shortage of alarm clocks was so serious that supplies had to be imported under Lend-Lease, being released at first only against permits issued to people on essential work who regularly had to rise before 5 a.m.

25. Expenditure on books, magazines and newspapers has increased; the annual number of newspapers bought per adult civilian has risen from 180 to 208, but the number of magazines has fallen from 28 to 26; the number of books sold is probably not much less than 85% of pre-war, but the maintenance of sales has been possible only by the virtual exhaustion of pre-war stocks. The size of these publications has been drastically cut; the daily newspaper has 4 pages, sometimes rising to 6, and the consumption of newsprint is less than one-quarter of the pre-war level; likewise the book trade has been maintained on a 43 per cent. paper allocation.

V. DRINK AND TOBACCO

26. The same tendency is very marked in the purchases of drink and tobacco. These are the anodynes against the stress and boredom of war, and the volume of consumption has increased by some 7 per cent, despite increases in taxation which have raised the price of a packet of 20 cigarettes from the pre-war 1s. (20 cents) to 2s.4d. (47 cents), and the price of a pint of beer, depreciated in quality, from 8d. (13 cents) to 1s.2d. (23 cents). Expressed on the appropriate per head basis, the consumption of alcoholic liquor (adult civilians plus all armed forces in the United Kingdom) expanded by 7 per cent, and that of tobacco (adult civilians plus British armed forces in the United Kingdom) by 17 per cent. So powerful is the pressure of purchasing power into unrationed channels, even of depreciated quality, that in 1943 expenditure on drink and tobacco exceeded $4,000 million--only slightly less than that on food--and it yields the Exchequer a revenue of $2,828 million, a sum not far short of the total pre-war revenue of the State.

VI. FOOD

27. The food supply in the last five years has been enough--but only just enough--to sustain health and strength on a monotonous diet. The Fifteenth Report to Congress on Lend-Lease Operations describes the present position:

> "Even with the help of Lend-Lease goods, however, this result--to have enough to eat to sustain an intensive war effort--has been attained only by very strict rationing. The British people eat far less well than the people of the United States. Compared to the average American civilian, the average Britisher in 1943 was able to obtain only 76 per cent as much milk and milk products, 76 per cent as much meat, 68 per cent as much poultry and fish, 56 per cent as many eggs (and in Britain's case these were almost entirely dried eggs), 23 per cent as much citrus fruit and tomatoes, and 50 per cent as much other fruit and fruit products. The only important foods the British civilian gets more of than the American civilian are potatoes, such vegetables as carrots and cabbage, and bread."

28. At the period of greatest shortage in the first half of 1941 calorie supplies fell to 90% of the pre-war level, animal protein to 77 per cent and fat to 81 per cent, and there were indications that the diet was inadequate. Since then, so far as bulk and nutrients are concerned, supplies have been maintained at an adequate level, thanks to Lend-Lease shipments from the United States and Mutual Aid shipments from Canada. The average calorie intake in 1943 was only 5% lower than before the war, and total protein supplies were a little greater, although of course, the proportion of animal protein had declined. Supplies of vitamins and minerals have been well maintained, largely through the increase in the extraction ratio of flour, the addition of calcium to the flour, the fortification of margarine with vitamins and the increased supplies of vegetables and milk.

29. But the nutritional adequacy of the British diet has been maintained only at the expense of a marked change in its composition. This is illustrated by the following table, which shows the changes forced upon us by the war in the consumption of the main foods. While it refers to 1943, preliminary estimates for 1944 do not appreciably differ.

Supplies of meat, fish, eggs, butter, fats, sugar and fruit have been greatly reduced, and the British consumer has been forced to make up the deficiency by eating more potatoes, vegetables and bread. Before the war only 51% of the weight of food consumed by the British public consisted of grains, potatoes, pulses and vegetables; this proportion has risen to 65%. There has also been an increase in milk consumption, but this has gone to priority classes, such as children and expectant mothers; and supplies to the normal adult consumer have been severely restricted.

31. The overall adequacy of the country's food supplies in terms of nutrients has been proved by experience. What cannot be stated in statistics of vitamins and calories are the loss of variety and palatability, the disappearance of familiar dishes, the house-wife's struggle to provide a main dish each day, the substitution of mass-feeding in canteens for domestic meals.

32. Meat and bacon, butter margarine and cooking fats, cheese, tea, sugar and preserves are rationed; distribution of eggs and milk is controlled to ensure preferential supplies to priority classes of consumers; tinned goods and many other foods (e.g. dried fruit, breakfast cereals, rice, biscuits etc.) are rationed on a points system; chocolate and sugar confectionery are on a separate personal points system; fish, though not rationed, is scarce. Bread and potatoes and most vegetables are the only major food-stuffs in unrestricted supply. The rations are meagre when considered by themselves: a week's ration of meat (1s. 2d. worth of beef, veal, mutton, lamb or pork) could well disappear in a single pre-war steak--but is supplemented by ration-free offals, when procurable: a week's ration of bacon (4 oz.) would not leave much over from a good pre-war breakfast; in winter the supply of eggs shrinks to one a month; and so on. To a limited extent rations are supplemented by "eating out" in canteens and restaurants. It has been the policy of the Ministry of Food to give priority supplies to industrial canteens. School children, mothers and young children have also had preferential treatment. The people who suffer most are those who are confined to their houses by age or infirmity; the sick and convalescent whose appetites need to be stimulated.

33. Rationing has secured a more even distribution of essential foods over all income groups. But to ensure that all can obtain their share of the rationed foods prices have been strictly controlled. This has only been possible by means of subsidies which impose a heavy burden on the Exchequer. Rationing, however, has its own peculiar drawbacks and vexations for the customer, and for the trader it imposes additional work upon depleted staffs; we cannot hope to be rid of these vexations for some time to come.

VII. SERVICES

34. There has, of course, been a vast contraction of manpower in the service occupations. This, indeed, is a major deprivation of which every middle-class Englishman is conscious at every turn. Employment in the distributive trades has fallen by about one-third; employment in miscellaneous services, such as hotels and restaurants and entertainment and laundries has fallen by about one-quarter, the number of people engaged in private domestic service has been reduced from about 1,400,000 to less than 400,000; only an insignificant fraction of those between 18 and 60 years of age is allowed, on grounds of hardship, to remain in such employment. At the same time there has been the inevitable flow of surplus purchasing power into this field--expenditure on entertainments at constant prices has increased by some 16 per cent., and the Exchequer receipts from the entertainment tax have risen from $32 million a year to $160 million a year. Here even more than in the supplies of actual goods, the public has felt the impact of demands of the armed forces upon the very limited accommodation available.

35. The result is, of course, that the standards of amenities and general services available have deteriorated enormously. The cut in the distributive trades has not been more severe than that in the quantity of goods to be supplied to consumers, but it has meant a disproportionate diminution of service--the closure of tens of thousands of small shops, considerable effective restriction upon choice of retailer and the disappearance of all customary amenities such as domestic delivery. There are the same number of families to be supplied, although with less goods, and about two-thirds as many people to supply them, at the same time as the machinery of rationing imposes more work upon them. In the hotels and restaurants, places of entertainment and the like, the demand for services is out of all relation with the supply. Laundries cannot take more customers and have a slow service, doubly difficult when wardrobes and linen cupboards are running low. The medical men who are still practising at home are pressed harder than before, and in some districts are definitely insufficient - there are now only some 31,700 in civilian practice as compared with before the war. The postal authorities cannot maintain their pre-war service, as they must cope with increased traffic with depleted staff. Repair work of all sorts (cars, bicycles, clocks, watches, etc.) has become difficult.

36. These are generally losses of convenience rather than of necessities, but they all serve to increase the burden upon the ordinary civilian, who has more work to do, more duties to perform, less food to eat, less supplies of all kinds, and the possibility of being bombed out as well. They press more heavily still upon the women of the community, trying to run their homes and their jobs at once, and forced at the same time to endure hours of waiting and queueing and worry of all kinds which the service occupations are designed to save. The shortage of goods is tremendously more important than the loss of service amenities; but the lack accentuates the drabness and difficulty which is the central feature of the ordinary citizen's life at the beginning of the sixth year of the war.

THE BRITISH MANPOWER PROBLEM

IN STAGE II

I. THE DISTRIBUTION OF MANPOWER

1. At mid-1944 there were in employment in Great Britain about 22,015,000 men and women of normal working age, as compared with about 18,480,000 in 1939. Their distribution, between various industries and services at these dates is compared in the Table below and the present estimates of needs in Stage II are also shown:-

(b) The figures for Stage II are based on the estimates of requirements under each head put forward by the responsible Departments. These have been adjusted in the cases of the Services and Munitions to take account of the Quebec decisions.

(c) The figures of 1,150,000 and 200,000 for munitions in 1939 represent a substantially greater volume of munitions production than in an ordinary peace-time year.

(d) "Other Manufactures" include textiles, clothing, leather, wood-working, paper, printing, bricks, pottery, glass, etc. "Non-Manufactures" include Commerce, banking, insurance, finance, professional services, hotels, restaurants, laundries, entertainment, etc.

2. The figures in the above Table call for certain comment. First, in measuring the extent to which it may be possible to find the manpower to achieve our objectives, allowance must be made for the difficulties of transferring workers. At mid-1939, there were 1,345,000 unemployed; at mid-1944 the figure was no higher than 102,000. There is no possibility that we can negotiate all the difficulties of the Stage II transitions without some substantial increase in unemployment, at least for a time. If the figure were no more than 500,000 (about 2½%), the gap between the present target figures of numbers required to be employed under each head at the end of the first year, and the probable total of manpower in employment would be of the order of 800,000, a large part of which would probably fall upon the planned increase in the Home Market and General Services.

3. Second, the targets for the end of the first year of Stage II and the estimates for the average of that year, broadly represent what we would wish to achieve. On the other hand, the British Government exercises only limited powers over the employment of a large proportion of its citizens. It will no longer be possible to direct older women, or women with household responsibilities; those who have been working away from home for three years or more must be allowed to return if they wish. It is not proposed to exercise powers of direction over the men who are demobilised from the Forces, save where they are released on urgent industrial grounds rather than age and length of service. Many of the men released will have rights of re-instatement in industries which are, for immediate purposes, less essential.

4. Thus in Stage II the British Government will have only limited powers to make the manpower pattern conform to its own intentions. It may be unable to prevent a rise in distribution or non-manufactures to a higher level than it would wish. The present estimates for those categories represent the minimum figures to which it may prove possible to hold them; they may be proved by events to be under-estimates.

5. Third, the above figures do not show the full volume of employment on Government or Export work, or, in consequence, the full measure of the war-time changes in those serving the Home Market. The whole of mining, transport, public utilities, commerce and other general services, are shown under the head of Home Market and General Services, even when they are in fact ancillary to Government or Export Work.

6. We have estimated the division of the employed manpower between Government Work, Export and the Home Market, after assigning to each of the latter its approximate share in these general services; the result is as follows:-

SOURCES OF MANPOWER ON GOVERNMENT WORK

	Millions
Increase in Total Labour Force	2,50
Reduction of Insured Unemployed	1,25
Reduction of Employment on Exports	1.35
Reduction of Employment on Work for Home Market	5.80
Already employed on Government Work at mid-1939 (a)	4.10
	15.00

Note:- (a) There was already a substantial volume of munitions production and construction of facilities on government account at mid-1939. The normal peacetime figure for government work is nearer to three millions.

II. EXPECTED MANPOWER SUPPLIES IN STAGE II

8. The available manpower will decline in Stage II for two reasons. First, there is already a decline in the total number of men available as the result of casualties, and of women workers in industry, through industrial wastage. In the second half of 1944, for those reasons, the total available manpower is likely to decline by about 294,000. Secondly, in the first year of Stage II this ordinary process of decline will be increased still further through the withdrawal of married women and others who cannot be directed to work and who have only entered industry as a war measure. At mid-1944 there were nearly 50% more women at work than at mid-1939; the number of married women aged 41 - 59 in industry has increased from 400,000 to over 1,000,000; of all single women aged 18 - 40 as many as 90% are in industry or the Services, and of married women aged 18 - 40 without young children as many as 80%. In all there are now 2,600,000 married women in industry as compared with little over 1,000,000 in 1939. These very high figures cannot be maintained once the immediate dnager is past. The net losses from all causes in 1945 are estimated at 1,280,000, even with the maintenance of the present school leaving age. After taking account of all these factors, the total available manpower, employed and unemployed, at the and of the first year of Stage II, is not expected to exceed 20,544,000.

III. EXPECTED MANPOWER REQUIREMENTS IN STAGE II

9. The Military Needs of Stage II: (i) Forces. The strengths of the three Services to be sustained from recruitment in Great Britain at mid-1944, and as now estimated for the end of the first year of Stage II on the basis of the Quebec decisions, are as follows:-

	Strengths of the Services (Men and Women)
	Mid-1944	End of First Year of Stage II
Navy	853,500	670,000
Army	2,918,000	1,514,000
R.A.F.	1,177,400	666,000
Nursing Services	19,300	(a)
	4,968,200	2,850,000

(a) included in totals above.

10. These figures represent the provisional estimates of the British Chiefs of Staff of the minimum forces necessary to discharge the tasks laid upon them.

11. The Military Needs of Stage II: (ii) Munitions. The sources of British Empire munitions supplies at various stages during the war are estimated to have been as follows:-

SOURCES OF BRITISH EMPIRE MUNITIONS SUPPLIES

	1939 (Sept. Dec.)	1940	1941	1942	1943	1944 (Jan. June)	Total (Sept.39 June 44)
U.K. Production	95	77	78	72	59	60	68
Canadian Production	-	4	6	10	11	11	9
Eastern Group Production	1	1	2	2	2	2	2
U.S. Production (Cash or L/L)	4	18	14	16	28	27	21

Note: While the proportion of British Empire munitions supplies produced in U.K. fell from 95% in 1939 to 60% in the first half of 1944, the manpower employed in U.K. on such production in the same period was nearly quadrupled.

12. The numbers in the Forces will fall progressively, and on the average of the first year of Stage II over 80% of the present Forces of the British Empire are likely to need to be maintained. It is estimated that this will require a total volume of munitions production for the British Empire, after allowing for use of stocks, of about 62% of the 1944 level.

If the British Empire had to provide the whole of this without external assistance, there could be little relaxation in their scale of munitions production.

13. At mid-1944 the manpower in the munitions industries (iron and steel, engineering, chemicals and shipbuilding) employed on work for the three Supply Departments was as follows:-

MANPOWER IN MUNITIONS INDUSTRIES AT MID-1944

Admiralty	950,000
Ministry of Supply	1,493,000
Ministry of Aircraft Production	1,832,000
	4,275,000

14. The British production programmes are estimated to require the following numbers of workers in the first year of Stage II:-

ESTIMATED MANPOWER IN MUNITIONS INDUSTRIES IN FIRST YEAR OF STAGE II

	Estimated Average of Year	End-Year Target
Admiralty	850,000	800,000
Ministry of Supply	960,000	693,000
Ministry of Aircraft Production	1,230,000	830,000
	3,040,000	2,323,000

15. The British manpower on munitions is thus expected to fall by the end of the first year to about 55% of its present level. The average employment on munitions in 1945 will, however, greatly exceed the end-year figure, and may be estimated at 3,040,000. The output of this labour force, allowing for all considerations including a reduction from the present working week of 53 to 54 hours to the normal level of 47 to 48 hours, may be put at about 66% of the present level.

16. The Needs for Export. We have set ourselves the long-term target of raising our exports from their present level of about 30% of pre-war to 150% of that level. The immediate programme aims at raising the numbers engaged directly in export from the present 300,000 to about 1,150,000 by the end of the first year of Stage II.

17. Over-all that represents a return to a little under 90% of the 1939 manpower. This does not, however, mean that in the first year of Stage II we should be able to export 90% of our 1939 exports. It has been estimated that the planned labour force on export will raise the production of exports from their present level of around 30% of the pre-war volume to about 60% during the first year of Stage II. There is reason to think that this estimate allows too little for the difficulties of transferring labour, of re-converting or re-opening capacity, of obtaining orders and preparing designs.

18. Moreover the increase cannot be evenly spread over the whole field, since the use of capacity to meet Japanese war needs, or more immediate problems of recruitment and training of the labour forces, present obstacles that cannot in all cases by overcome. The immediate increase is likely to be greatest in those industries whose type of product and level of output has not been substantially changed by the war. It will be less in those where plants have been closed down and labour forces dissipated. The increase of export in the first year will be relatively slight in coal-mining, where the labour force has considerably fallen during the war.

19. The Needs for Building. The extent of the war damage to housing which requires to be made good has been indicated in Annex B. Apart from enemy destruction, the war has brought a complete cessation of all normal house-building since 1940; about 300,000 houses were built annually before the war. In addition, over the past three years, there has been barely half the normal repairs to houses.

20. The present building plans provide for the completion during the first two years after the war of 200,000 permanent houses and 150,000 temporary houses. Well under 100,000 houses of all sorts will be completed during the first year. Such a figure would not replace half the houses destroyed by enemy action.

21. The present manpower plans provide for an increase of the total labour force to be employed in building and civil engineering, from the 623,000 at which it stands at mid-1944 to 1,100,000 at the end of the first year of Stage II. This figure compares with 1,310,000 in employment in these trades at mid-1939, apart from the substantial reserve of unemployed building labour which then existed. Within this total, there will be a great increase of employment on civil house-building and repairs, and a substantial reduction in military construction. Such a provision is the absolute minimum that could be contemplated.

22. The Needs to make good Arrears of Maintenance. The need to make good the war deficiencies of industrial and public utility maintenance is urgent. Since 1940 maintenance on normal standards has been impossible, and four years of increasing arrears has left both industry and public utilities with much of its plant in a condition in which continued working depends on a substantially greater allocation of manpower to provide for proper overhaul and repair.

23. The problem does not lend itself to over-all statistical measurement. It is very roughly estimated by the Departments concerned that maintenance during the war has been at between one-quarter and one-half of the normal peace-time rate. A few illustrations will better indicate its importance, and the steady accumulation of arrears.

24. The engineering industry has been relatively well placed and the position will be eased by the new capacity created. On the other hand, very little repair and maintenance have been done in iron and steel, in the chemical industries, and in all the textile industries. In all of these the position is now serious and maintenance cannot be much further postponed.

25. From 1939 to the end of 1943, the railways have set aside about £ 450 millions to cover normal depreciation; of this they have actually been able to spend only £ 350 millions, and the difference of about £ 100 millions broadly measures the shortfall in maintenance. As a result they have been able during the war years to renew an average of only about 980 miles of track annually as against an average of 1400 miles for the four years before the war. There are now 15.1% of all locomotives not available because of need for repair; there are 8.2% of all railway-owned wagons under or awaiting repair - about twice the normal peace-time programme.

26. The condition of buses and other road-haulage vehicles has deteriorated sadly. Despite an allocation of about 2000 vehicles a month for civilian use, the maintenance of minimum essential services is difficult, and, through shortage of repair staff, the present state of most of the vehicles is lamentable.

27. The demands for electricity have increased greatly, and there has been an increase from an average of 2,031 million k.w.h. per month in 1938 to 3,267 million k.w.h. per month in the first half of 1944. This increase of over 60% has been met with no more than a 33% increase of capacity. Moreover, because the new demands are far more continuous than peace-time demands it has been difficult to find the usual opportunity, during the Summer months, for the urgently necessary over-hauls. Partly as a result of this, partly because an increasing proportion of all capacity is now overdue for renewal, there is currently some 17% of all capacity out of commission through breakdown, as compared with a figure of about 5% in the pre-war years.

28. No specific manpower allocation has been made for the increase of maintenance and renewals of plant. But the present Departmental estimates include a provision for an increase of the labour force in iron and steel, engineering, chemicals and shipbuilding serving the home market by about 1 million. This would raise the average number employed during the first year to a level only about two-thirds of that of 1939.

29. The Needs to Raise Civil Standards. The effects of the war on civilian consumption have been outlined in Annex B. The target which we have permitted ourselves in Stage II is that of restoring production in the general field of civilian consumption goods to a level about half-way between that of 1938 and that which prevails in 1944. Having regard to the long time that Britain has been at war, and the state to which most households and wardrobes have now been reduced, we believe that to be a reasonable objective. Over the past five years British men and women have been able to buy only three years' normal supply of clothing and two years' supply of household goods. The Departmental estimates have made provision for increasing the group of "other manufactures" for the civil market (textiles, clothing, leather, wood, paper, pottery, glass, etc.) from the figure of 1,024,000 at which it now stands to 1,682,000.

30. Even so, the supplies of these goods actually available for consumption will not in the first year of Stage II rise from the present level of around 45% of 1938 to the level of about 75% that the manpower can ultimately produce. Plant will only by degrees be released and reconverted. Labour will only progressively become available. When both are available, production must start from the beginning, and work in progress be gradually built up. We shall be fortunate if, during the first year, the volume of consumption goods coming into the hands of retailers carries us one-quarter of the way back to 1938. And the retailers themselves will have to re-stock their denuded shelves. The effective rise in consumers' standards cannot be great or rapid.

31. In the remainder of the field covered by civilian final consumption, part of the rise of standards will be the automatic result of reduced government demands; this particularly affects railway and other transport, public utility services, coal supplies and (through reduced demands of Allied Forces) a large variety of services. Part will come from an increase in the supply of consumption goods, as well as capital goods, produced by the engineering and chemical industries. Part will result from expected increases in the manpower in distribution and "non-manufactures". In those two categories, however, the target increases have been kept to a minimum in order to enable manpower to be used to the greatest possible extent on more vital needs.

32. Taking the whole field of the Home Market, the manpower, after excluding workers performing general services ancillary to government production and export, is now about 55% of 1939 and provision is being made to increase it to a little over 80% by the end of the first year of Stage II. But the civil home market sector will have to bear a substantial part of the deficiency in the total manpower available to meet all needs, and it is, for that reason, unlikely that these targets will be achieved in full.

SUMMARY

In very broad outline, the planned changes between mid-1944 and the end of the first year of Stage II are indicated by the following balance sheet of expected increases and decreases in different categories.

I. ADDITIONAL MANPOWER DEMANDS.	Millions of Workers
(i) Exports: To raise manpower directly on exports from the present level of less than 25% of pre-war to about 90% of pre-war by the end of the first year:	.9
(ii) Building: To start programme of 200,000 permanent houses and 150,000 temporary houses in two years:	.5
(iii) Industrial Maintenance: To undertake most urgent maintenance and renewals of plant neglected during war: (say 75% of increase in engineering etc. for Home Market):	.7
(iv) Consumer Goods: To raise manpower on consumers goods from 50% of pre-war to 75% by end of first year, and output over year by about half that: (remainder of engineering etc. and whole of "other manufactures" for Home Market):	.9
(v) Miscellaneous: To cover minimum additions to public utilities, mining, distributive trades, services, professions, etc. etc:	.4
Total of Additional Demands:	3.4
II. EXPECTED LOSS OF AVAILABLE MANPOWER
(vi) Casualties: Our manpower will be reduced between mid-1944 and end-1945, after allowing for returned prisoners by about:	.3
(vii) Normal Wastage: Between mid-1944 and end-1945 the normal net wastage is expected to be about:	.6
(viii) Loss of Women after End of Stage I: It is expected that there will be a net loss of non-directable women giving up work amounting to about:	.7
(ix) Possible Increase of Unemployment: No precise figure can be given for the probable increase of transitional unemployment. For present purposes it may be put at:	.4
	2.0

III. ESTIMATED ADDITIONS OF MANPOWER

Millions of Workers

Against the above Demands and Losses may be set the following estimated Supplies:

(x) Armed Forces: In the light of the Quebec decisions the reduction in the strength of the Armed Forces and Civil Defence may be estimated at: 2.3

(xi) Munitions: A total of about 66% of the current output of munitions andother military stores over the first year would permit the manpower to be reduced by the end of the year by about: 2.3

Total of Additional Supplies: 4.6

IV. NET CHANGES IN MANPCWER

Additional Supplies	4.6
Less Expected Loss	2.0
Available Supplies	2.6
Additional Demands:	3.4
DEFICIT	.8

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS OF CANADA AND INDIA ON THE PRINCIPLES APPLYING TO THE PROVISION BY CANADA OF CANADIAN WAR SUPPLIES TO INDIA UNDER THE WAR APPROPRIATION (UNITED NATIONS MUTUAL AID) ACTS OF CANADA 1943 AND 1944

Signed at Ottawa, November 17, 1944

Whereas Canada and India are associated in the present war, and

Whereas it is desirable that war supplies should be distributed among the United Nations in accordance with strategic needs of the war and in such manner as to contribute most effectively to the winning of the war and the establishment of peace, and

Whereas it is expedient that the conditions upon which such war supplies are made available by one United Nation to another should not be such as to burden post-war commerce, or lead to the imposition of trade restrictions or otherwise prejudice a just and enduring peace, and

Whereas the Governments of Canada and India are mutually desirous of concluding an agreement in regard to the conditions upon which Canadian war supplies will be made available to India,

The Undersigned, being duly authorized by their respective Governments for the purpose, have agreed as follows:-

ARTICLE I

The Government of Canada will make available under the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Acts of Canada, 1943 and 1944, to the Government of India such war supplies as the Government of Canada shall authorize from time to time to be provided.

ARTICLE II

The Government of India will continue to contribute to the defence of Canada and the strengthening thereof and will provide such articles, services, facilities or information as it may be in a position to supply and as may from time to time be determined by common agreement in the light of the development of the war.

ARTICLE III

The Government of India will, in support of any applications to the Government of Canada for the provision of war supplies under this agreement, furnish the Government of Canada with such relevant information as the Government of Canada may require for the purpose of deciding upon the applications and for executing the purposes of this agreement.

ARTICLE IV

The Government of India agrees to use any war supplies delivered to it under this agreement in the joint and effective prosecution of the war.

ARTICLE V

The Government of India will not without the consent of the Government of Canada sell to any other Government or to persons in other countries war supplies delivered to it under this agreement.

ARTICLE VI

The Government of Canada will not require the Government of India to re-deliver to the Government of Canada any war supplies delivered under this agreement except as specifically provided in Articles VII and VIII and subject to any special agreement which may be concluded in the circumstances contemplated in Article IX.

ARTICLE VII

Title to any cargo ships delivered under this agreement will remain with the Government of Canada and the ships shall be chartered to the Government of India on terms providing for their re-delivery.

ARTICLE VIII

Upon the cessation of hostilities in any major theatre of war, any war supplies which have been transferred to the Government of India under this agreement and are still in Canada or in ocean transit shall revert to Canadian ownership, except those supplies destined for a theatre of war in which hostilities have not ceased or supplies made available for relief purposes or such other supplies as the Government of Canada may specify.

ARTICLE IX

The Government of Canada reserves the right to request:

(a) the delivery, after the cessation of hostilities in any theatre of war, for relief and rehabilitation purposes, to another United Nation or to an international organization, of automotive equipment supplied under this agreement;

(b) the transfer to Canadian forces serving outside Canada after the cessation of hostilities of vehicles, aircraft, ordnance or military equipment supplied under this agreement to the Government of India if such war supplies are required for the use of such Canadian forces and are not required by the Government of India for military operations; and

(c) the return to Canada after the war, if required in Canada for Canadian purposes, of aircraft and automotive equipment supplied under this agreement which may still be serviceable, due regard being had to the degree of wastage likely to have been suffered by these articles, provided that when the identity of such Canadian equipment has been lost as a result of pooling arrangements or for other reasons, the Government of India may substitute equipment of a similar type.

The Government of India agrees to use its best endeavours to meet any such requests on such reasonable terms and conditions as shall be settled in consultation with the Government of Canada.

ARTICLE X

The Governments of Canada and India re-affirm their desire to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between their countries and throughout the world. They declare that their guiding purposes include the adoption of measures designed to promote employment, the production and consumption of goods, and the expansion of commerce through appropriate international agreements on commercial policy, with the object of contributing to the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the Declaration of August 14th, 1941, known as the Atlantic Charter.

ARTICLE XI

This agreement will take effect as from this day's date. It shall apply to war supplies furnished to the Government of India by the Government of Canada under the authority of the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Acts of Canada, 1943 and 1944, or substituted Act, including supplies furnished under the said Acts before the conclusion of this agreement. It shall continue in force until a date to be agreed upon by the two Governments.

WWII - Anglo-Can. Cooperation (Economics)
WWII - Mutual Aid

We have just received from the Department of Finance the Minutes of the meeting on December 1st between Lord Keynes and the Ministers who sit on the Mutual Aid Board about which you were enquiring. The circulation of these Minutes has been delayed in order to permit the making of some corrections which have been incorporated in this copy.

I also enclose some papers which I have received from Malcolm MacDonald which correct and supplement the large document entitled "British Requirements for the First Year of Stage II" that I sent to you some time ago. This document was prepared as the basis for discussion between Lord Keynes' mission and the United States authorities and the corrections now enclosed should be added to it. They are -

(a) a revised estimate of the balance of payments between the United Kingdom and the United States in 1945 (non-munitions).

(b) a revised statement of United Kingdom gold and dollar balances in relation to United Kingdom liabilities, together with a copy of Lord Keynes' covering letter to Dr.Clark.

NOTES OF MEETING IN OFFICE OF MINISTER OF FINANCE, OTTAWA, DECEMBER 1, 1944, TO CONSIDER STAGE 2 MUTUAL AID PROGRAM

A meeting was held in the office of the Hon. J. L. Ilsley, Minister of Finance, at 9.30 a.m. Friday, December 1, 1944, for the purpose of having Lord Keynes, Sir Robert Sinclair and others of the United Kingdom Delegation present to Mr. Ilsley and his colleagues the U.K. proposals regarding their requirements from Canada during the first year of Stage 2 (i.e., following the end of substantial hostilities against Germany) and various possible means of financing them. Those present included:

For the United Kingdom:

Lord Keynes,	United Kingdom Treasury
Sir Robert Sinclair,	Ministry of Production
Mr. Stephen Holmes,	Deputy High Commissioner for the United Kingdom
Hon. R. H. Brand,	United Kingdom Treasury
Mr. Gordon Munro,	United Kingdom Treasury

For Canada:

Hon. J. L. Ilsley,	Minister of Finance (in the chair)
Hon. C. D. Howe,	Minister of Munitions and Supply
Gen. the Hon. A. G. L. McNaughton,	Minister of National Defence
Hon. L. S. St. Laurent,	Minister of Justice
Hon. J. G. Gardiner,	Minister of Agriculture,
Hon. J. A. MacKinnon,	Minister of Trade and Commerce
Dr. W. C. Clark,	Deputy Minister of Finance
Mr. Hume Wrong,	Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
Mr. Karl Fraser,	Mutual Aid Administration
Mr. R. B. Bryce,	Department of Finance.

MR. ILSLEY explained that he had called this meeting to enable his colleagues on the Mutual Aid Board to hear from Lord Keynes and Sir Robert Sinclair the information and proposals which the latter had put forward to Mr. Howe and himself at an earlier meeting and to discuss these proposals. The main proposals under consideration were the U.K.'s estimated requirements from Canada in the first year of Stage 2, which is taken as being the fiscal year commencing April 1, 1945, and the means of financing them. In addition, it was proposed to discuss three specific questions: the terms on which locomotives would be provided for the Indian State railways, the liability of the U.K. for cancellation of contracts in Canada for the production of munitions for the U.K., and the proposed contracts for the purchase of bacon and beef by the U.K. in 1946. He asked Lord Keynes to introduce the general subject from the point of view of the U.K.

LORD KEYNES began with an exposition of the physical aspects of the problem, emphasizing the high degree to which the U.K. has been mobilized for war purposes and the necessity for some "moderate easement" in Stage 2. In addition he emphasized the necessity for commencing to rebuild the U.K.'s export trade in order that she might support herself externally after the war. In order to carry out the war effort in Stage 2 upon which she agreed at Quebec and secure an easement in civilian standards and some increase in exports, the U.K. is dependent upon aid in her war effort from the United States and Canada. In the discussions just concluded in Washington, the U.S. had undertaken to supply nearly all that the U.K. had requested from her, with the exception of certain items which could not be provided because of the limitations on available supplies. The U.S. had not refused any supplies on financial grounds. It was emphasized, however, that there was a limit to the war supplies which the U.K. could obtain from the U.S. in Stage 2, because of the types of supplies involved and the fact that types hitherto produced in the U.K. and Canada but not in the U.S. could not be put into production for the first time in the U.S. during Stage 2. While the U.K. is ceasing to get certain types of supplies from the U.S. under Lend-Lease, she will get certain other types of goods under Lend-Lease that she has not been obtaining recently. Lord Keynes emphasized that the U.S. war production and war effort as a whole in Stage 2 would be a high proportion of that in Stage 1 -- probably of the order of 75% -- and that the assistance which she is giving the U.K. will enable the latter country to reduce her war effort in Stage 2 proportionately.

The program being requested of Canada provides for at least a proportional reduction in Canada's physical war effort, even though the U.K. requirements of food and raw materials are as a total maintained at approximately the level of Stage 1. In fact, it appeared that Canada's direct war effort and war production could be reduced by at least as much as, and possibly more than, that in the U.S. and the U.K. Consequently, it would not appear that the U.K. is asking Canada to undertake more than her share of the common effort in Stage 2. By contrast, Australia and New Zealand cannot expect any degree of relaxation in Stage 2, because of the substantial requirements of the fighting forces in the Pacific and the need for those countries to maintain their own fighting forces.

LORD KEYNES went on to point out that the program asked of Canada was physically convenient for her as well as fair in proportion to the other. The munitions program for the U.K. is reduced to about 70% of the current year and permits a tapering-off in munitions production. MR. HOWE concurred in this. The food program, while possibly requiring some effort to maintain bacon production, was on the whole convenient as a continuing market for the expanded Canadian farm production.

LORD KEYNES went on to say that the difficulty arose when one attempted to translate the physical program into financial effects and to overcome the financial difficulties. He said that during the current year the U.K. is receiving approximately $2 billion from the Canadian Government, but nearly three-quarters of this is in the form of receipts from the Canadian forces overseas, i.e., something over $1400 million, while only the remainder -- something over $500 million -- is in the form of Mutual Aid. Next year, however, the receipts from the Canadian forces will be very greatly reduced -- probably by about $1 billion -- amounting only to something over $400 million, and even this amount is highly uncertain, depending as it does on the rate of repatriation of Canadian troops in U.K. and the bases and equipment for the R.C.A.F. squadrons. Consequently, even though the requirements of the U.K. in Canada for munitions are reduced by approximately $350 million, it appears that Mutual Aid will be required on the scale of approximately $1200 million for the sterling area, apart from anything which other countries may require. That would be double the Mutual Aid which the sterling area is obtaining this year.

MR. ST. LAURENT inquired of Lord Keynes whether there would not be a counterbalancing benefit to the U.K. in the reduction of the expenditures of the Canadian forces in the sterling area, since these payments were made for goods and services and consequently the U.K. would be relieved of the need to furnish goods and services to the Canadian forces in an amount that must represent the physical equivalent of the total of $1 billion in expenditures. This should itself allow a considerable alleviation of the stresses on the U.K. economy and public. LORD KEYNES said that, broadly speaking, this was correct, but it should be borne in mind that it is the whole pool of resources contributed to the U.K. which is relieved, part of which they have met by borrowing in the past. Moreover, the U.K. was asking Canada and the U.S. to contribute less to that pool than in the past, so that both these countries were getting some relief from the reduction in the total calls upon the pool. SIR ROBERT SINCLAIR pointed out that the relief afforded by the lower demands of the Canadian troops had already been taken into account in the ~~fiscal~~ physical program on which their requirements had been based.

LORD KEYNES stated that the U.K. Government feel that the creation of debts during the war is not a proper means of settlement among Allies. The U.K. were having to borrow from certain sources, notably India and Egypt, but there were intelligible if not entirely convincing reasons why this is necessary, despite the principle to which London adheres strongly. If, for the sake of argument, this view of the U.K. Government can be accepted, the question then arises: what is the most convenient form in which to finance the excess of the U.K.'s requirements in Canada? This was, of course, a Canadian matter, but, said Lord Keynes, Mr. Ilsley had encouraged him to present to the group the suggestions which had previously been discussed. MR. BRAND stated the underlying assumption is that Canada is a full partner of the U.S. and the U.K. in the war against Japan. MR. ST. LAURENT questioned whether the Canadian people were prepared to agree that Canada's interest in the Pacific war was sufficient to justify that assumption. Canadians felt that in the European war they should and would exert themselves to the full, but they did not feel that that was necessary for Stage 2. LORD KEYNES noted that both the U.K. and the U.S. were going to do less against Japan than they were doing in Stage 1, and the principal question is how much less and in what proportions the relaxation will be distributed. The British population has suffered a great deal more up to date than any on this continent, and it is now a question of how far they should be forced in Stage 2, and how far North America is prepared to give them some support and contribute to a fair division of the relaxation in the total effort that can now take place. In subsequent discussion Lord Keynes indicated that if Canada felt unable to supply the food which the U.K. requested, it would likely mean a poorer diet for the British public. If there was a moderate reduction in the munitions which Canada could supply below those requested, it would probably have to be made good from British production, with a consequent limitation on production for civilian purposes or exports. If there was a large gap between the munitions which the U.K. were requesting and those which Canada was able to supply, or if Canada, for example, felt it necessary to reduce substantially the number of air squadrons which she could provide, then the need might arise for a revision of the strategic decisions taken at Quebec.

LORD KEYNES, at Mr. Ilsley's suggestion, went on to outline the apparent alternative methods of meeting the sterling area deficit. The first was to go on as in the past, in which event the sterling area requirements for Mutual Aid would appear likely to amount to approximately $1200 million. This would require considerable explanation and justification in relation to the reduction of Canada's direct war expenditures and participation in the fighting, because it would appear disproportionate. The second alternative was the suggestion which the U.K. had put forward in a memorandum some weeks previously, submitted by the High Commissioner and Mr. Munro to Mr. Ilsley. This was that military and munitions efforts should be pooled, the Canadian forces supplying to the U.K. forces what equipment and services the latter required from Canada, and the U.K. forces likewise supplying to the Canadian forces what they required from the U.K. This would enable financial accounting to be dropped in respect of the military effort. Had such an arrangement been in force this current year, he said, there would have been an approximate balance between what Canada received and supplied. Next year, however, such an arrangement would benefit the U.K., as the Canadian contribution of munitions would be much higher than the supplies and services received by the Canadian forces. Lord Keynes later made clear that he included war services in the items which would be supplied without financial accounting, as well as munitions. He stated that the U.K. and the U.S. have abandoned a meticulous accounting between themselves in respect of military items. The U.S. forces furnish through Lend-Lease machinery the requirements of the U.K. forces, and the U.K. furnish to the U.S. forces anything which they ask for within reason. It was not suggested that Canada should go as far as the U.S. in this regard, but as far as possible under the circumstances. If this were applied in the coming year, it would appear to involve Canada's providing to the U.K. about $900 million worth of ammunition, plus roughly $100 million of associated services, while the Canadian forces would receive perhaps something of the order of $350 million in services and supplies from the U.K. As MR. ILSLEY pointed out, this would mean a net addition to the Canadian War Appropriation of some $650 million, leaving about $550 million (the remainder of the $1200 m. mentioned above) required as Mutual Aid in the form of food and raw materials, of which about $60 m., Lord Keynes suggested, would be for parts of the sterling area other than the U.K.

In support of this pooling arrangement LORD KEYNES cited several arguments. The first was its ease of presentation and explanation, the emphasis being put on the essential point of pooling military efforts without accounting. On the other hand, he recognized that the change to such a system at this stage would be hard to explain and justify and there would be danger of arousing suspicion. Secondly, the amounts to be required by the Services on both sides can only be estimated with great uncertainty at this stage, and if the precarious estimates provedwrong, difficulties might ensue were a Mutual Aid Appropriation based upon them. On the other hand, the food and raw materials items once decided upon can be forecast with relative accuracy and the amount of Mutual Aid required can be estimated fairly readily in advance.

Some discussion took place at this point regarding the forecast of the overseas expenditure of Canadian forces and the relation of such expenditures to bases and equipment used by the Canadian Army and the R.C.A.F.

LORD KEYNES went on to mention certain alternative suggestions which had been previously discussed by which part of the program might be differently financed. In the first place, he mentioned Mr. Howe's suggestion that the various naval vessels being produced for the U.K., including the victualling and maintenance ships, might be taken over by the Canadian Navy rather than the Royal Navy. If this were done, it would relieve the Mutual Aid Appropriation or pooling arrangements of costs to an amount of perhaps $250 million. There was a brief discussion of this suggestion, but no attempt to reach a decision. Lord Keynes then went on to point out that the U.K. was bearing a large proportion of the costs of maintaining prisoners of war in Canada. He suggested that there appeared to be little reason to justify the U.K. assuming this expense, and that it was instead reasonable to suggest that that country in which the prisoners were held should bear the cost of keeping them there. He said the amounts involved up to date for prisoners appeared to be something of the order of $25 million, and it was possible that the amount next year might also be $25 million. There was some discussion of this proposal as well. A third and somewhat similar item was the cost of the Joint Inspection Board carrying out the inspection of munitions production. The United Kingdom are paying about $30 million a year toward this cost at present. LORD KEYNES said his party believed it would be satisfactory if inspection became a wholly Canadian responsibility and Canada bore the costs of it. In answer to MR. HOWE, he said that the Ministry of Supply had indicated their agreement to this, although he had not heard from the War Office. GENERAL McNAUGHTON stated that he was definitely in favour of this suggestion and believed that it would be an improvement from the point of view of organization. He said he thought the War Office would agree to it, and that it was in accordance with a tendency which had been developed in Canada and the U.K. This change would help to make the channel of authority clearer and ensure finality in decisions regarding inspection. General McNaughton used this occasion to emphasize that he thought Lord Keynes was taking the right approach in saying that we should look first at the physical proposals and see that they are practicable and fair and that the organization is simple, and then we should let the financial arrangements follow.

LORD KEYNES stated that if these miscellaneous suggestions were followed, they would look after perhaps $300 million in expendatures and bring the apparent Mutual Aid requirements for the sterling area down from $1200 m. to $900 m. In this case, $1 billion might suffice to cover total Mutual Aid requirements. There was then some brief discussion as to the possible scale of Mutual Aid requirements outside the sterling area.

A brief discussion arose at this point regarding the alternatives of a Mutual Aid Appropriation to cover the total amount required, and the suggested pooling plan for military requirements. MR. ILSLEY also mentioned the possible alternative of lumping all requirements into the War Appropriation and allotting such funds as were required from time to time for Mutual Aid purposes. The discussion covered as well possible magnitudes of the war budget as a whole in Stage 2 and its relation to the degree of relaxation in the war effort in Canada and the U.K.

The meeting did not endeavour to reach a decision regarding the amount of Mutual Aid or its equivalent to be provided by Canada nor the form it was to take.

LOCOMOTIVES FOR INDIA

LORD KEYNES, at Mr. Ilsley's request, then took up the several specific questions which they wished to raise, the first being the means of financing Canadian production of locomotives and other rolling stock for India. He explained the great need of rolling stock in India and stated that Field Marshal Wavell had placed it in the first order of priority in Indian military requirements for Stage 2. He acknowledged that the rolling stock in question, particularly the locomotives, would undoubtedly last well beyond the end of the war, but he emphasized, as he had emphasized to the United States in regard to the same issue, that the residual value of the rolling stock at present being ~~maintained~~ obtained would be very much less than the very great additional depreciation which Indian rolling stock was suffering as a consequence of the war. He stated that the U.S. Government had agreed to provide under Lend-Lease the difference between the cost of the rolling stock required by India and the estimated value of the rolling stock to India at the end of hostilities, which was estimated to be approximately one-half the cost. He noted that the Canadian Mutual Aid Board had ruled that rolling stock is not a suitable type of supply to be provided as Mutual Aid, and in regard to one request at least had specified that rolling stock must not be purchased out of Canadian dollars accruing to the U.K., since that would increase the amount of other supplies requiring to be provided on Mutual Aid. The U.K. Government do not wish to press further for a supply of rolling stock as Mutual Aid, but they do wish to have the right to purchase this rolling stock out of Canadian dollars currently accruing to the sterling area. They take this attitude in view of the urgent need for war purposes of such rolling stock and their desire to avoid the incurring of debts for war purposes. The Indian Government and Indian Railways would, of course, pay cash for the rolling stock when they receive it, under such an arrangement.

LORD KEYNES said that he feels it is too tough to require that such rolling stock be paid for in U.S. dollars, which would have to come from the U.K.'s gold and dollar reserves which are already lower than they feel is desirable and are being further depleted. He emphasized that the United States had already agreed to provide half the cost of American rolling stock to India on Lend-Lease terms, and it would worry the U.K. greatly if they had to use the U.S. dollars saved by this action of the United States Government in order to pay for Canadian rolling stock.

MR. HOWE suggested that the earlier Canadian suggestion of making a loan for the financing of this rolling stock should be considered, and he felt that the objection in principle which the U.K. Government felt to war debts should not apply in this case, where borrowing is undertaken for a purpose that is normally covered by borrowing both in peacetime and wartime. LORD KEYNES stated that the objection to borrowing did not come from India, which was prepared and able to pay cash for these rwquirements, but came rather from the U.K. Treasury, who felt it would have to find the Canadian dollars required in the future to repay any loan incurred now for this purpose.

The meeting did not attempt to reach a conclusion on this matter.

CANCELLATION CHARGES

MR. ILSLEY opened the discussion on this item by stating that the liability of the U.K. in respect of costs incurred by Canada in the cancellation of contracts for the production of war supplies for the U.K. was not clear. The relevant documents did provide that balances in the U.K. Cash Receipts Account could be used for the purpose of meeting cancellation charges and the agreement under which Canada had taken over U.K. contracts in this country also provided that cancellation costs on such contracts would be met from U.K. funds if and to the extent that there were funds available in the U.K. Cash Receipts Account. Beyond this limited extent, however, there was, so far as he knew, no undertaking or definite understanding in regard to the degree to which U.K. would bear cancellation costs. At this time, when large scale cancellations may shortly occur, it seemed desirable to clarify the situation and reach some understanding.

MR. HOWE explained how it was that cancellation costs arose, and in particular the importance of the flow of parts and materials to production. He thought that the cost of cancellation was incidental to the contract itself and to production of the supplies and should be considered in discussing who should stand such costs. DR. CLARK pointed out that cancellation costs heretofore on contracts for supplies to be provided by Mutual Aid had been charged to the Mutual Aid Appropriation or To the U.K. Cash Receipts Account.

LORD KEYNES said that cancellation costs will likely be substantial at the end of Stage 1 and later in Stage 2. He said that he understood Mr. Howe has regarded U.K. requests for supply as firm orders, and Lord Keynes stated that, in a sense, they were. On paper the position, however, is as Mr. Ilsley stated it and the U.K. believed it was desirable to straighten it out. Lord Keynes went on to emphasize that whether the costs of cancellation are covered in the Mutual Aid Appropriation or otherwise, there is much to be said for it being Canada's responsibility, so that Canada can take account of all the economic and social considerations involved in cancelling or cutting back production. The U.K. Government take account of these considerations in their own production and do not think simply of what will save the most money. If it were the U.K.'s responsibility to decide regarding Canadian production and if they were responsible for the costs, it would be natural that they would take the cheapest course, which might, however, be the wrong course in view of wider considerations. If the pooling proposal were followed, the responsibility and mechanics would be clearly in Canada's hands. If it were not, the mechanics would be more complicated, and the U.K. would have to inform Canadian agencies as and when they would not require further supplies.

MR. ST. LAURENT said that if Canada were going to accept responsibility for cancellation costs, it would involve more Canadian responsibility in the placing of the orders, and the Canadian Government would have to exercise more discretion at that time. He felt it was apt to be confusing if one Government initiates the orders and another is responsible for paying not only costs of delivery but any costs of cancellation if the first government decides it does not require the supplies. LORD KEYNES said that Mr. St. Laurent's conclusions seemed to him correct as to the additional responsibility that would be put upon the Canadian authorities, but he emphasized that the cancellations normally resulted from decisions of the joint Chiefs of Staff, to whose decisions we were all subject. MR. HOWE emphasized that the additional responsibility which Canada would be assuming under this arrangement included any decision to taper off production as and when it appeared likely to be sufficiant. SIR ROBERT SINCLAIR suggested that this responsibility would have to be exercised by Canada in consultation with the U.K. authorities. MR. ILSLEY thought that Canadian responsibility for cancellation costs, together with pooling arrangements, would take the brake off U.K. requisitioning in Canada. Already the responsibility of the Canadian Government was heavy in accepting these orders and making commitments, particularly commitments extending beyond the current fiscal year. It was true that Canada must decide whether or not to accept the requisitions and whether or not to discontinue or taper off production; it was true that Canada had discretion in the matter; but Mr. Ilsley emphasized that it was exceedingly difficult for Canada to check up on the essentiality of U.K. requirements. He said he had to take the view that because Mutual Aid was limited, we could depend on the U.K. doing their utmost to keep Canadian requirements to bare essentials. If through a pooling arrangement the extent of assistance Canada would give on munitions were not subject to such a limit, there would not be this check and it would be more than ever necessary for Canada to attempt to weigh the essentiality of British requirements. He felt the Canadian Government was now in a poor position to dispute the need for any request placed by the U.K. in the way in which they might dispute or refuse a request put forward by a Canadian Department for additional equipment or other expenditures.

GENERAL McNAUGHTON emphasized this point and said that the difficulty of the Canadian Government, he believed, arose from their lack of information regarding strategic and operational requirements. He felt if Canada were to exercise the responsibility which would be involved in deciding whether or not to put supplies into production, and whether or not production should be stopped or tapered off, the Canadian Government would need much more information on which to base its decision of strategic essentiality and military requirements. The Canadian Government would have to exercise this substantial responsibility on the basis of the best and most responsible advice it could obtain. should be given any information it required to make a proper decision on these matters. He pointed out that Mr. Berry, who had recently been in the U.K. to discuss the munitions program, had been given the whole picture, and that the requirements had been carefully explained to him. Sir Robert felt that General McNaughton and his officers should be able to obtain from the U.K. all that they required to know in order to ascertain the operational justification of the U.K. requirements. LORD KEYNES agreed with this view, and said that he believed Sir Robert Sinclair and himself ought to recommend that Canada be given full information on these matters to enable it to exercise the responsibilities for deciding what ought to be produced and when and how production should be curtailed.

BACON AND BEEF SUPPLIES FOR 1944

MR. GARDINER, at Mr. Ilsley's suggestion, outlined this problem. He stated that up to last year meat supplies for the U.K. had been provided on the basis of contracts extending over a year, but that last year, two-year contracts were entered into for bacon and for beef. We have now come to the end of the first year, and if production is to be maintained for U.K. purposes, it is necessary to restrict our products for shipment to U.S. markets and to give our producers the necessary assurance that will enable them to place production for 1946 as well as 1945. Because of the long period of production involved, it was considered desirable now that each year negotiations should be entered into for the sale of bacon and beef products not only during the next succeeding year, but the one following that as well.

LORD KEYNES stated that the Ministry of Food agreed with Mr. Gardiner's views on this and were prepared to enter into contracts for the purchase of beef and bacon from Canada and had come to the Treasury for approval of them. The Treasury had pointed out, however, that financial arrangements are not made two years in advance, and the Treasury could not approve the Ministry of Food entering into commitments for 1946 unless they were able to get some assurance regarding their financial position in 1946. This was particularly difficult at the present time, because it was anticipated that 1946 would include a considerable post-war period in which Mutual Aid could not be expected. For this reason the U.K. Treasury felt that the U.K. Government should not sign firm contracts for the year 1946. Lord Keynes said that he felt in practice there is no doubt that finance will be arranged by one means or another, and he had been assured by the Ministry of Food that bacon and beef would receive high priority in the U.K.'s import requirements. They would not be marginal requirements likely to be dropped if the amount of finance available was something less than sufficient for all requirements. Lord Keynes said that they were expecting to borrow from Canada to finance requirements from Canada at the end of the war, but they did not know at this stage how much or on what terms. He felt that they should not enter into this question of borrowing or other financial provision in respect of one particular item such as this, but should rather take it up as a general arrangement later. In the meantime, he felt the best they could do would be to sign a contract establishing purchase prices for bacon and beef and the minimum quantities involved, (but subject to ~~finance being available~~ the financial arrangements which may be made at that time). In addition, they were able to give the Canadian Government the assurance he had mentioned, that bacon and beef would have a high priority among the U.K.'s various import requirements. He added that he had inquired specifically regarding the relation of these bacon requirements to the position of Denmark and had been assured that notwithstanding what might be done in regard to Denmark, the Ministry of Food would require this Canadian bacon in 1946.

There was some discussion of the points raised by Lord Keynes during his exposition. MR. TOP SECRET

1. REVISED ESTIMATE OF THE BALANCE OF PAYMENTS BETWEEN U.K. AND U.S. IN 1945 (DISCUSSIONS)

1. The table on Page 10 of Annex A has been revised by dividing the requirements under the several headings into three categories, namely:-

(i) those which have been asked for on Lend-Lease terms.

(ii) payments in the United States for which cash is required on the present basis.

(iii) certain dollar expenditure in third countries included as U.S. expenditure in the previous table.

Also, a further break-up is provided of certain items.

2. This amended statement has also provided the opportunity to include certain revisions.

NOTES

(a) Item 10. An entry in respect of exports on Reciprocal Aid appears for the first time. It was found on further investigation that benzol and coal tar acid which are given on Reciprocal Aid had been included in the estimated figure of 120 for U. K. exports to the U.S. in 1945. It is, therefore, necessary to offset this item on the receipts side, since it will not in fact bring in cash.

(b) The above table mainly represents items of account with the U. K. proper. But there are certain items relating to the rest of the Sterling Area which it has become normal for us to include in this table, particularly certain items relating to oil and shipping and immigrant remittances from Eire.

(c) In the previous statement there was double counting affecting certain dollar expenditure in third countries, which was included both in the table on Page 10 and in the table on Page 14. On the other hand, there was also a substantial item of double counting the other way, inasmuch as the income from the pay of U.S. troops in U.K. was included both on Page 10 and on Page 14.

(d) The British Group were asked to examine whether the estimate of receipts of $120 millions from exports to U.S. in 1945 was sufficiently high. This matter is fully discussed in a separate section below. Further examination appears to justify the figure already given.

4. On the above basis, the table as given on Page 14 of Annex A of the British Statement of Requirements should be revised as follows:-

Rest of Sterling Area earnings from U.S. Forces	200	U.K. cash deficit with U.S. (see above table)	332
Dollar receipts from 3rd countries(Russia&Spain)	17	Rest of Sterling Area deficit	100
Net receipts of gold	160	Dollar payments to 3rd countries, as shown in table above	135
	377
Estimated reduction of reserves	303	Refunds of U.S. dollars to Canada	63
		Increase in gold liabilities	50
	680		680

NOTES

(a) The reduction of reserves as now estimated at 303 compares with a reduction of 298 previously given (355 in the original statement reduced by 58 as reported in the supplementary statement).

(b) Discussion with the American Group indicates that the estimate of 200 for Sterling Area receipts from U.S. Forces, after allowing for sales of gold on behalf of U.S., may be over-estimated.

(c) The estimate of net receipts for gold assumes gross purchases of $290 millions (South Africa $210 millions, other countries $80 millions) as against total gold sales of $130 millions. The estimate of gold purchases from South Africa is based on the amount of the assumed deficit on current account in 1945 between South Africa and the United Kingdom, and does not assume any special receipts, such as were received in 1944. No allowance has been made for any exchanges of dollars for gold, which, of course, leave the total reserve of gold and dollars unchanged on balance. The estimated gold sales of $130 millions assume that the agreements with third countries necessitating gold payments operative in 1945 will be of similar effect to those operating in the third quarter of 1944. Negotiations have, however, been initiated with a view to reducing the burden of such gold sales, though such alternative arrangements will mean a corresponding increase in the external obligations of the U.K. No allowance is made for possible receipts of gold from the Western European Allies. The estimate also assumes that there will be no further gold sales on U.K. account in India or the Middle East.

(d) The increase in the gold liabilities assumes that there will be no change in our present arrangements with Portugal, etc. But here also negotiations will be entered upon shortly with a view to making better arrangements.

5. The best hope for an improvement in the above position is offered by the prospect of revised arrangements with neutral countries, which now require payment in gold or gold liabilities, though, as pointed out above, the revised arrangements, if successful, will involve an increase in the growth of British overseas obligations. As against this, the assumed earnings from U.S. Forces in the above tables may be optimistic. The most dangerous item, however, is the estimate of $100 millions for the deficit of the rest of the Sterling Area. Further research indicates that this figure is almost certainly too optimistic. In the last quarter of 1944 it is believed that this deficit was running at an annual rate of $160 millions. This figure will almost certainly become worse as shipping and goods are more easily available, unless there is much more stringent restriction than hitherto on the use of dollars by the rest of the Sterling Area. The position would, however, be eased if additional Lend-Lease assistance were given to Australia, New Zealand and India in respect of certain requirements of those countries which are at present excluded from lend-lease under the rulings as to end use and for other reasons. Details of such requirements are being communicated separately.

6. In a recent telegram, the Bank of England adhere to the estimate of a total reduction of reserves in 1945 of $355 millions, as shown on Page 6 of the original statement. This figure is the result of more recent work than the original versions of the balance of payments on Page 10 of Annex A. We have no itemised details other than those given above which lead up to the figure of $303 millions shown above. Nevertheless $355 millions is still believed in London to be a better guide to the probable order of magnitude of the loss of reserves on the various assumptions set forth above. Having regard to the probable inadequacy of $100 millions as the estimate of the deficit of the rest of the Sterling Area, and the complete absence of any provision for unforeseen contingencies, it is improbable that we can get nearer to the prospects than by an estimate for the reduction of reserves of some figure between $300 and $400 millions subject always to the various qualifications and assumptions mentioned above, and to the reservations already emphasised arising out of the inevitable precariousness of any such forecast. This could mean a total reduction in the reserves of between $500 and $600 millions from the figure at the end of August 1944.

Dear Clark,

C251128

You will remember that I sent you up from Washington, certain statistical material. In paragraph 7 of the document headed Annex "A", there was a statement setting out the U.K. gold and dollar reserves in relation to our liabilities.

We have been in touch with London on this subject and I now enclose for your information, copies of a revised table which London have prepared after some further research by the Bank of England.

We have inserted in this table, as you will see, the equivalent figures from the table as given in paragraph 7 to Appendix "A" so that you can tell at once what the effect of the revisions is. The new table includes for the first time a figure for the 31st December, 1940.

We have been assured that as far as possible the prewar figures have been compiled on a basis comparable with the later figures. The figures for reserves as at the 31st August, 1938, were assessed on the basis of the gold and dollar exchange rates prevailing at that date. In order to facilitate the comparison of prewar figures with the later figures, an estimate of the private holdings of gold and dollars which were requisitioned after the outbreak of war was added to the prewar figures.

It should be noted that the figures for the gold and dollar reserves exclude in all cases both the dollar balances of authorized dealers and the balances in retained accounts.

I ought perhaps to add that the difference between our original figure of 11,223 for total liabilities at the 30th June, 1944, and the figure of 10,685 now given is due to the fact that the earlier figure was an estimate made before the actual figures for the period ended the 30th June, 1944 became available. Owing partly to the difficulty of forecasting the effect of D day, etc. and partly to an actual error in calculation, the estimate proved wide of the mark.

Yours sincerely,

-sgd- Keynes

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER C251130

Attached is a translation of Mr. Zaroubin's letter enclosing the Soviet reply to our offerings under the Fourth Protocol.

On the whole the Soviet Government accepts our offerings in the quantities either submitted originally or subsequently agreed upon. The figures given in the Soviet proposal combine, in certain cases, Schedules I and II of our offerings.

Foodstuffs are down in the Soviet proposals from 300,000 tons we offered to 215,000 tons because of shortage of shipping space. They reserve the right, however, to take our total offerings provided they can obtain additional shipping.

Mr. Zaroubin's letter does not mention the question of guarantees regarding industrial equipment which will be ready for delivery when the war with Germany ends.

EMBASSY OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS
O T T A W A

C251131

Dear Mr. Robertson:

In connection with the offerings of the Government of Canada under the Fourth Protocol, which were handed to me as a supplement to the letter of the Department of External Affairs of September 11, 1944, I have the honour, on the instructions of the Soviet Government, to inform you of the following:

The Soviet Government duly appreciates the assistance which Canada is rendering to the Soviet Union in the cause of waging war against the common enemy, by providing military supplies, equipment, raw materials and foodstuffs on the basis of the United Nations Mutual Aid Act.

In these efforts of Canada the Soviet Union sees an acknowledgment of the great significance of the contribution which the Soviet Union is making to the struggle for the defeat of the common enemy.

In submitting to you the attached proposals concerning the programme of supplies under the Fourth Protocol, I wish to state that the Soviet Government agrees with the offerings of the Government of Canada, with the exception that (in the Soviet proposals) the scale of supplies of foodstuffs is somewhat reduced in proportion to the scale of commitments accepted by the Government of the United States regarding the allocation of shipping tonnage under the Fourth Protocol.

In connection with the above, the total programme of listed supplies is set at 476 thousand short tons, including the programme of shipments to the amount of 356 thousand short tons and the unshipped balance of supplies to the amount of 120 thousand short tons.

Basing itself, however, upon the statement of the United States Government that the quantity of shipping tonnage specified by them is considered a minimum and that the United States Government admits the possibility of this minimum being exceeded, the Soviet Government is counting upon obtaining additional shipping tonnage for transporting from Canada to the Soviet Union the total quantity of foodstuffs offered by the Government of Canada.

Enclosure: Proposals of the Soviet Government regarding the programme of supplies under the Fourth Protocol.

Yours sincerely,

(sgd) G. Zaroubin

International Economic Policy
WWII - Anglo-Can. Cooperation (Economic)

DRAFT MESSAGE TO U.K.--TRANSITIONAL PERIOD FINANCING

1. The Canadian Government and people have taken a very keen interest in the series of international conferences which have been held over the past several years with reference to post-war economic, financial and commercial co-operation among the nations of the world. These discussions and the specific agreements which it is hoped will grow out of them are of vital concern to Canada, which depends so largely upon export industries to provide domestic employment and upon imports to maintain a high standard of living. In addition to our own particular interest, we are convinced that no nation in the post-war world will be able to achieve full employment, at any rate on any but a very low standard of living, unless international agreement can be reached on measures to achieve the freest possible flow of world trade, and the most efficient development and use of the world's resources.

2. In these discussions and in the text of such agreements as have so far been reached, the special problems of the transition period immediately after the end of hostilities are recognized, at least to the extent of postponing or suspending the operation of certain clauses until rehabilitation and reconstruction have been largely achieved. The Canadian Government feel that this negative attitude to the international problems of the transition period is insufficient, and that positive constructive measures must be taken in order that the countries most directly concerned may surmount the special difficulties of this period as quickly as possible. We believe it is of the utmost importance that such difficulties should not be permitted to result in a narrow, restrictive commercial policy which would, both in the immediate post-war years and for an indefinite period thereafter, frustrate the attempt to re-establish international trade under freer conditions and in larger volume than before the war. We realize that the basic reason for any such undesirable development would be financial necessity, and in the course of this communication we shall develop certain proposals designed to overcome the financial difficulty, at least as regards trade between Canada and the sterling area.

3. It is clear that to restore her industry and re-establish her position as a great trading nation, as well as to raise the standard of living of her people substantially above the level to which it has been reduced in wartime, will be impossible for the United Kingdom except with the assistance of a very high volume of imports during the immediate post-war years. Conversely, Canada would be faced with extraordinary problems of readjustment and reduced activity if she were not able to maintain a high volume of exports during this period. A large portion of such exports would be expected to go to the United Kingdom and other parts of the sterling area. We realize, however, that the United Kingdom will not be able to pay for all of such imports during the period when her exports have not fully recovered from wartime restrictions and dislocations, except through the medium of international loans. Even for the bare minimum of the most essential requirements, the United Kingdom will have during this period an adverse balance of trade and a deficiency of current supplies of foreign exchange with which to pay exporters in other countries. Consideration of the amount of credit which will be required and of the nature and terms of repayment seems to us to stand in the forefront of the whole problem of the transition period.

4. The Canadian Government realize that the United Kingdom Government will be anxious to restrict its overseas borrowing after the war to an amount within its capacity to pay, but it would be most undesirable for all concerned if this were taken to mean that the United Kingdom had to confine itself strictly to an "austerity" level of imports at a time when it is quite possible that abundant surplus supplies of food, raw materials and manufactured goods will be available from North America and other exporting areas. Such an approach would unnecessarily hamper economic recovery in the United Kingdom and contribute to economic disorder throughout the world. Nor would it be desirable for the United Kingdom Government to seek merely to obtain loans of the conventional type with rigid repayment features under which, in adverse circumstances, technical default might occur for reasons entirely beyond the control of the United Kingdom. Loans of this character, presumably restricted to comparatively small amounts, would not meet the real needs of the transition period. On the other hand much larger loans, adequate to facilitate a more rapid and successful revival and expansion of peacetime trade and employment would be well within the ultimate capacity of the United Kingdom to repay, if the terms of repayment were sufficiently realistic and flexible, and recognized the dependence of such international debt payments upon conditions of expanding world trade and ample markets for United Kingdom exports. Loans of this character, indeed, would themselves aid in creating the very conditions upon which their ultimate liquidation depends, and by encouraging an expansive attitude to international trade both in the transition period and subsequently, would strengthen borrower and lender alike and assist in the attainment of high employment and in the development of liberal commercial policy throughout the world.

5. In pursuance of these objectives the Canadian Government would be prepared to discuss ways and means of financing Canada's prospective surplus of exports to the United Kingdom and the rest of the sterling area over its imports from that area, during the transition period immediately following the termination of hostilities against Germany and Japan, in such manner as to encourage the largest possible flow of trade in both directions and remove any necessity for discrimination against the goods of either area in the markets of the other.

Under the plans we have in mind, Canadian dollars would be provided to the sterling area for expenditure in Canada over a period of several years, by a long-term credit which would be repayable by annual instalments commencing, say, 10 years after the termination of the transition period. The terms of the credit would recognize that such repayment in Canadian dollars, or in gold or United States dollars in lieu of Canadian dollars, depends upon the making of purchases of goods and services from the United Kingdom and the rest of the sterling area by Canada and other countries outside the sterling area. If in any year sufficient foreign exchange for debt repayment were not available to the United Kingdom from such sources and from its reserves of gold and dollars over and above its minimum requirements for working balances and reserve for emergencies, such inability to pay for reasons beyond the control of the United Kingdom would automatically cause the payment due in that year to be postponed, without the United Kingdom being considered in any way in default, until such time as payment could be effected in the manner contemplated.

6. The adoption of such terms of repayment of the proposed credit would, we feel, constitute a realistic approach to an otherwise most difficult situation, and would base the financial arrangements on those conditions of world trade in general, and of trade between the sterling area and Canada in particular, upon which they necessarily and in fact depend. We believe that agreement on these matters could readily be reached so as to put our post-war commercial relations on a firm and satisfactory basis, and so as to remove any need for the United Kingdom or other parts of the sterling area to feel that they have to discriminate against imports from Canada in favour of imports from within the sterling area itself, or from any other part of the world. Similarly, Canada would expect to obtain imports from the United Kingdom and the sterling area on a non-discriminatory basis, and in increasing volume as supplies in such countries became available in the course of rehabilitation of their export industries.

7. We should like to commence discussions directly with you at an early date. In addition, however, we realize that it would be of the greatest importance to our own two countries and to the world as a whole if the United States were willing to enter into arrangements of a more or less similar character, and we should be glad to collaborate on this wider basis in the event of discussions to this end being held between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States.

AGREED DRAFT PART I OF MESSAGE TO U.K. RE MUTUAL AID AND COMMERCIAL POLICY

(Part II to follow re Post-War Loan, and Part III, P.M. to P.M.)

1. The Canadian Government has considered at length the substantial requirements in Canada of the United Kingdom during the fiscal year 1945-46 and the request of the U.K. Government to receive sufficient assistance in the form of Mutual Aid or its equivalent to enable these requirements to be obtained without the U.K. having to incur debt to Canada during that period. The Canadian Government is prepared to recommend to the Canadian Parliament provision for Mutual Aid on the scale requested. Pending a Parliamentary appropriation for this purpose, which may be delayed if a general election precedes the next session of Parliament, the Canadian Government ~~will~~ would continue to place contracts and make other commitments in order to maintain the flow of essential supplies from Canada during the early part of the next fiscal year, in the expectation that Parliament ~~will~~ would approve the policy which it has been decided to recommend. Expenditures required for Mutual Aid or equivalent purposes which cannot be covered out of the existing appropriation before Parliament meets again will be provided during this period in the same manner as other expenditures for war purposes.

2. In communicating this decision, the Canadian government feels it necessary to emphasize that Canadians have expected that Mutual Aid, together with similar arrangements extended by the U.S., the U.K. and other nations, would make it possible to finance the transfer of war supplies between nations in such manner as not "to burden post-war commerce or lead to the imposition of trade restrictions or otherwise prejudice a just and enduring peace", to use the words of the Mutual Aid Agreement between the United Kingdom and Canada.

It is in the belief that Mutual Aid is an essential contribution to these ends as well as to the winning of the war, and that through it and other forms of collaboration these purposes can be achieved, that the Canadian Government has reached the decision concerning the provision of Mutual Aid during the coming fiscal year upon the scale proposed. Following the end of hostilities in Europe, the U.K.'s shortage of Canadian dollars and need for Mutual Aid is expected to increase in size rather than diminish, and to a degree it will assume a somewhat different complexion. During this period Mutual Aid will contribute to the prosecution of the Japanese war on a scale which should make possible some improvement in the low wartime standard of living in the U.K. and a more rapid rehabilitation of U.K. export industries than would otherwise be possible. This draws renewed attention to the post-war implications of Mutual Aid, and links the policy of Mutual Aid directly to the development of commercial policy.

3. In these circumstances the Canadian Government must express its concern over the implications of the policy being followed by the sterling area in discriminating against the purchase of Canadian products and in favour of purchases within the sterling area. The reason for this policy during the initial period of the war, when conservation of dollar exchange was so vital to the U.K., was understood. During recent years while Lend-Lease and Mutual Aid were being developed, this policy has been overshadowed by the limitations imposed by scarcities of shipping and supplies. As these limitations recede, following the end of hostilities in Europe, the policy of restricting purchases from Canada more severely than purchases from the sterling area and of providing dollars to other countries in the sterling area only if they are required for essential goods which cannot be obtained from the sterling area, is certain to result in many instances in which trade will be diverted from Canada to sterling area countries. If continued, this policy will undoubtedly set the pattern for the commercial policy of the post-war world. It is the evident direction of this policy, rather than the results of it up to date, which is disquieting. It is scarcely necessary to say that neither wartime collaboration nor nearly fifty years of preferential treatment of U.K. exports has prepared the Canadian public for such a development. It would be completely at variance with the intentions of the Canadian Parliament when it took the steps within its powers to halt the growth of intergovernmental debts. No Canadian Government could view it, economically and politically, save with the gravest concern for the future of the Commonwealth.

4. The limitation of sterling area purchases from Canada to essential goods which cannot be obtained anywhere in the sterling area, creating a new system of protection, will, particularily as new capital investment is possible, give rise to vested interests in this diverted trade, which will frustrate attempts to develop under a code of commercial policy that wider area of world trade which is of equal concern to the U.K. and to Canada.

5. During the period in which Mutual Aid is to be in effect, Canada by this means will be meeting all, or substantially all, the requirements from Canada of the U.K. and the sterling area as a whole, over and above what can be paid for out of current sterling area receipts from Canada. It does not appear that discrimination against purchasing in Canada is necessary in order to restrict U.K. and sterling area requirements to an amount which can be financed in this way. The Canadian Government feels, therefore, that during this period discrimination in purchasing as between the sterling area and Canada is inappropriate. Such a policy is inconsistent with the spirit of Mutual Aid and will make it increasingly difficult for the Canadian Government to maintain the provision of Mutual Aid. If, under a policy of non-discrimination, the requirements to be financed by Mutual Aid nevertheless appeared likely to rise to a level at which the Mutual Aid funds available would be insufficient, the Canadian Government would be prepared to consult with the Government of the U.K. and other authorities in the sterling area regarding measures that might be taken to meet the situation. Under conditions of wartime shortages, even with such alleviation as will be possible in Stage 2, we should not anticipate any large increase in Canadian exports to the sterling area as a result of this suggested alteration in policy.

6. Accordingly the Canadian Government urges the U.K. Government to follow a general policy during the period in which Mutual Aid is in effect of non-discrimination as between imports from Canada and from the sterling area. It is the view of the Canadian Government that this policy should apply in respect of imports ~~made~~ purchased by individuals or authorities in other parts of the sterling area as well as in the U.K. It is also felt that if the U.K. Government or the appropriate authority in any other part of the sterling area should consider it necessary to restrict public or private purchasing in Canada for exchange reasons, the Government of Canada should be consulted before action is taken.

7. It is desired to take this opportunity to express appreciation of the way in which the U.K. has endeavoured to maintain its exports to Canada during the war period, despite all the difficulties that have arisen. The Canadian Government, on its side, hasgreatly reduced and in some cases completely removed tariffs on U.K. goods entering Canada in order to facilitate these exports, and has in many cases paid subsidies to enable essential goods to be brought into Canada and sold at ceiling prices. Further means of facilitating increased imports from the United Kingdom, both immediately and after the war, are under study by Canadian Government Departments. Action along these lines, and even the retention of the lower tariffs already temporarily in effect, will be made difficult if Canadian exports are being excluded from U.K. markets.

8. While this message has been centred primarily upon policies to be followed before the end of hostilities, it has been intended to make evident the Canadian Government's concern over the apparent trend of developments bearing upon post-war commercial policy, particularly in the so-called transition period. A second message dealing specifically with this question of commercial policy and related financial measures in the transition period is being sent forward today.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER

Eleventh hour difficulties have developed about the contents of the United Kingdom and the United States Schedules of the Fourth Soviet Protocol, which it was planned to sign in Ottawa on Saturday. The difficulties in the United Kingdom Schedule are slight and will probably be ironed out within the next day or two. The difficulties in the American Schedule, arising from additional last minute requests from the Russians, are more considerable, and the American reply to the Russian request will probably have to be referred to Moscow for consideration before the Soviet representative is authorized to sign the Protocol.

I have discussed with Mr. Zarubin the chances of his being able to sign on Saturday as contemplated. We came to the conclusion that, in the circumstances, it would be better to postpone the signing and the Government dinner, and to do so at once rather than on Saturday, as a last minute postponement might give rise to rumours that serious differences had developed.

MUTUAL AID AND INTERIM CREDITS
STATEMENT TO HOUSE OF COMMONS
BY THE HONOURABLE J. L. ILSLEY

C251144

Mr. Speaker:

I believe it is desirable to take this first opportunity to inform the House of the action the Government has taken in regard to Mutual Aid and to means of ensuring the continued flow of essential supplies to our Allies following the end of hostilities.

It has been understood from the beginning that Mutual Aid was purely a wartime measure, intended to make possible the most effective prosecution of the war and to end when victory was achieved. The Government has always endeavoured to make this clear to Parliament and the Canadian public, as well as to the Allied nations receiving Mutual Aid.

Immediately upon receiving word of the readiness of the Japanese Government to surrender on the terms offered them, the Canadian Government notified the governments of countries receiving Mutual Aid from Canada that transfers of supplies as Mutual Aid would cease at the end of hostilities. These recipient governments were asked if they wished to continue to receive foodstuffs and other civilian supplies which they had expected to receive as Mutual Aid, had hostilities continued, and we indicated our willingness to continue to ship such supplies on the understanding that any of those transferred after the end of hostilities would be paid for. In order to avoid useless and wasteful activity, the production and delivery of munitions and other military supplies were halted immediately it was evident that Japan was going to surrender, although the governments which were to receive such supplies were informed of our action and given an opportunity to say that they would like production to be continued for their account. Exceptions to the policy of immediate cancellation were made in a few instances where manufacture was nearly finished and it was considered more sensible and economical to complete production in the hope of being able to sell the finished article for some useful purpose. There was no interruption in the production, procurement and shipment of foodstuffs and other civilian supplies during the course of these re-arrangements. I should also add that the provision of supplies to UNRRA for relief and rehabilitation has not been affected by the termination of hostilities.

The date of the end of hostilities for the purpose of terminating the transfer of supplies as Mutual Aid has been taken as September 2, the day of the actual surrender of Japan.

Under the provisions of our Mutual Aid agreements with all countries other than the U.S.S.R., the Canadian Government may decide whether supplies which have been transferred as Mutual Aid and which are still in Canada or in ocean transit at the cessation of hostilities shall be repossessed by Canada or allowed to go forward to the countries to ~~whom~~ which they were transferred. The Government has decided it will retain title to such supplies as had not been loaded on ship board before September 2, but will not repossess supplies which were in ocean transit on that date.

The end of Mutual Aid transfers will not end or delay the flow of essential civilian supplies to our Allies. The Government has offered to continue to buy such supplies for Allied Governments if they request us to do so and undertake to reimburse us for the costs so incurred on their behalf. Already several governments have made such requests and purchases and shipments are continuing.

Most of the countries which have been receiving Mutual Aid from Canada will require credits if they are to continue to obtain what they need from this country. Negotiations are proceeding with several with a view to the provision of credits under the Export Credits Insurance Act, passed by Parliament at the last session. It would be out of place for me to make public the nature of these negotiations until a later stage.

The United Kingdom and the sterling area generally constitute a special case, because of the magnitude and complexity of their trade and financial transactions with Canada. There will be a problem of some difficulty in working out satisfactory means of financing the deficit of the sterling area in its trade and other transactions with Canada during the period of the next few years when Britain is rebuilding and developing her export trade, which has been sacrificed almost entirely to war production in recent years. A similar problem, of course, will exist on a larger absolute scale between the United States and Britain and other parts of the sterling area. Lord Keynes, representing the British Government, has been in Ottawa for several days, discussing with other Ministers and myself the financial and trade problems arising from the sudden conclusion of hostilities. We have not endeavoured at this time to devise arrangements or negotiate terms for the financing of Britain's trade and that of the rest of the sterling area with Canada over the whole period of transition, which undoubtedly will last for several years. Full discussion of that problem must be deferred until later. Our conversations have so far been confined to the problems that will exist over the next few months until more definite agreements can be worked out. Fortunately it appears that, as a result of the settlements still to be made in respect of past transactions, as well as the continuing expenditures of the Canadian forces overseas, Britain and the sterling area will be receiving sufficient Canadian dollars during the next few months to finance all or nearly all of their requirements in Canada. Consequently we anticipate that the question of providing for a deficit will not arise during this interim period. If there should be a small deficit, it might be covered simply by postponing for a few months payment by the United Kingdom or other sterling area countries for supplies received during this period through Canadian Government procurement agencies, or possibly by other purely temporary expedients. These would be ~~purely~~ interim arrangements made in anticipation of a definite agreement which has not yet been considered.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER.

C251149

It seems desirable to send to Mr. Attlee a reply to the message from him arising from the termination of Mutual Aid which Mr. Malcolm MacDonald delivered to you on August 18th. I enclose a draft which has been prepared on the assumption that Council will today agree to extend the effective date of termination from August 15th until the signature of the terms of surrender. This was discussed in the Mutual Aid Board on Monday and the Ministers present favoured a notification to the United Kingdom Government on the lines of the second paragraph of this draft. It makes it clear that we can contemplate no general extension of the Mutual Aid system barring the moving forward of the effective date of termination and that we feel that the discussions with Keynes next week should be concerned with interim finance on some sort of a payment basis.

Ottawa, August 28th, 1945.

Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins:

Mr. Malcolm MacDonald delivered to me on August 18th your message setting forth some of your difficulties arising from the cessation of Mutual Aid and Lend-Lease consequent on the sudden ending of the Japanese war. He has, I know, informed you of his discussions on this subject with the Minister of Finance and myself and I need not now traverse the same ground. Arrangements are in progress for the cancellation of the shipment of Mutual Aid supplies which you no longer require and I understand that the shipment of other items in the agreed programme is continuing without hindrance. We were able to ensure that no publicity was given to our own decisions before the announcement in Washington of the policy adopted by the United States. We intend, indeed, if possible, to refrain from public announcement here until early in the session of Parliament.

2. I understand that Lord Keynes will be arriving in Ottawa early next week for discussions on his way to Washington. We shall be glad to take up with him the methods of interim financing which might be adopted pending the discussion of more permanent arrangements. We shall also be glad to discuss with him the possibility of extending the effective date for the termination of Mutual Aid from August 15th until the date of the formal signature of the surrender of Japan. I am afraid (quite) it is out of the question

Plans have been concerted for the joint conduct of the year and for a united approach to the problems of the transition from war to peace. The United Nations have been taking council among themselves (?).

The government will devote continuous attention to the study of plans for the future settlement of Europe. It will build upon foundations laid at the recent conference at Moscow and will take council with allies. Matters of great importance for the future of the allied nations have been considered at international discussions. Opportunity of exploratory conversations on the future of civil air transport.

Very heavy expenditures required by the war have been met with due regard to social and economic interests of the country.

Sacrifices that we and our allies are making impose upon us all a sacred obligation to see to it that out of this war we and our children will gain something better than mere survival.

There are many vital questions concerning the future peace that were discussed at Moscow, etc. in an atmosphere of complete candour and harmony.

Security is the one supreme objective of the future. That means not only physical security which provides safety from attacks by aggressors; it means also economic security, social security, moral security in a family of nations.

We want resumption to peaceful progress by all peoples - progress toward a better life. Freedom to develop lands and resources, to build up industry, to increase education and individual opportunity and to raise standards of living. The best interests of each nation, large and small, demand that all freedom-loving peoples should join together in a just and durable system of peace.

A basic essential to peace is a decent standard of living for all individual men, women and children in all nations. Freedom from fear is eternally linked with freedom from want.

Special groups are opposed to the basic interests of the nation as a whole.

We have come to learn how interdependent upon each other are all groups and sections of the population.

If ever there was a time to subordinate individual or group selfishness to the national good, that time is now.

Nothing less than a total mobilization of all our resources of manpower and capital will guarantee an earlier victory and reduce the toll of suffering and sorrow and blood.

In all journeys the last mile is the hardest.

It is for the final effort -- xxxx the total defeat of our enemies -- that we must mobilize our total resources. This is the most decisive phase of the nations' greatest war.

DOMINION GIFTS TO U.K.

Lieut.-Commander Hutchison asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will issue a statement giving a list of the monetary gifts received from the Dominions of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa between 1st August, 1945, and 1st April, 1947, and showing the dates when such gifts were received, their value in sterling and the specific purpose to which they have been applied.

Mr. Dalton: (1) Mutual Aid. Mutual Aid from Canada to the United Kingdom continued to 1st September, 1945. The total from 1st April, 1945, to the 1st September, was 670 million dollars, equivalent to £150 million. There is no separate figure as from 1st August, 1945. The United Kingdom for the most part received munitions and military supplies foodstuffs and farm products. (2) Writing off of liability under British Commonwealth Air Training Plan. Under Article 7 of the financial Agreement between this country and Canada of 6th March, 1946 (published in Cmd. 6904), the Canadian Government agreed to cancel an amount of 425 million dollars, equivalent to £96 million, owing by the United Kingdom in respect of the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan. This Article was brought into effect by a Royal Proclamation in Canada dated 16th July, 1946.

Australia

On 5th March, 1947, the Australian Government announced a gift of £A25 million, equivalent to £20 million, as a contribution to the war costs incurred by Britain in and around the Pacific. This sum has not yet been received, but will be applied to the redemption of debt.

New Zealand

The Government of New Zealand on 5th March announced a gift of £N.Z.12½ million equivalent to £10 million, in recognition of the magnificent and unprecedented effort of the United Kingdom in maintaining freedom and making possible its expansion in the years to come, and of the enormous burden that the United Kingdom have carried and are bearing during the post-war period. This sum was paid over on 25th March, 1947, and is being applied to the redemption of debt.

South Africa

A gift subscribed by the people of South Africa amounting to £1,180,000 was presented by Field-Marshal Smuts to the Prime Minister in October last.

The above takes no account of further contributions raised by private subscription or on private initiative, of which no comprehensive record is available.
