I would like to say in this regard that when we are setting guidelines, it is very important that we take the long look at what is in the interest of the country and what is in the interest of public life. During the time that I was a provincial Premier and the Leader of a Party, I was aware of the problem of attracting business people into Government. I believe that other active Members of the Parties represented here have also been aware of this problem. Dissociation from their profession or business carries financial penalties for people who come into public life long after they become Ministers or Members of Parliament. Nevertheless they make a free decision to come here for the honour and satisfaction of public service, and they certainly should be prepared to make that sacrifice. They realize when they leave their business or profession to come here that they are not only leaving their business in the hands of someone who is perhaps not as dedicated and experienced and that their income will not be as good during the intervening years, but they also realize that when they go back to their business or profession they will have to rebuild and less income will be generated for years to come. But people do make that sacrifice for public service, and I believe that is very good.

However, after they have ceased to be Ministers and have left this place, to ask them to have fewer rights than any other citizen of the country to deal with Government is something else. I believe that is something which requires a great deal of consideration. I suggest that that is contemplated by the guidelines which presently exist.

I remind Hon. Members that the guidelines do not, and should not, say that former Ministers cannot deal with Government. The guidelines say specifically that "in any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds, or the appearance of grounds, for allegations of improper influence". In today's complicated world, with Government into so many things as it is, there are few businesses which people can return to where there will not be some occasion for that company for which they work to be involved with Government.

Some Hon. Members who have spoken here in recent weeks suggest that former Ministers become non-persons, that they not have the ability to work for a company which has any connection with Government at all. I believe what is important is that Ministers of the day, senior civil servants of the day and Government in general treat all citizens the same, that there not be special privilege for anyone. I believe that is what Governments in this country have strived to do. I consider it a shame that elected representatives cannot deal with an issue like this, which over the years affects all sides because Governments come and go, in a non-partisan way. But the hard, cruel facts are that they cannot.

Mr. Huntington: Send it to committee.

Mr. Regan: A committee is made up of Members of this House, elected politicians. Debates in this House in past weeks have shown that Members cannot put aside partisanship to try to deal with this issue. The temptation to play politics is simply too great. For instance, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition again this morning came back to what he calls Coalgate, yet he has not been able to show, nor has anyone else, that there was one ounce of special treatment for Mr. Gillespie on this project that he and Premier Buchanan brought to the federal Government for a grant under an existing program which was available to any citizen.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain suggests that the guidelines and how a person complies with them should be made subject to the authority of Parliament. This, in my opinion, confuses the role of Parliament and that of the Government answering to Parliament. It seems to me that the voice of faction is seldom hushed here. If the House ruled on who is going to remain in Cabinet or who was in breach, or allegedly in breach, of guidelines, there would be—

Mr. Nielsen: They would all be gone.

Mr. Regan: —a constant flood of partisan charges. Obviously it is not in the nature of Opposition Members to think that a Minister of the day, whichever side happens to be here at a particular time, is as efficient and as exact in carrying out his duties as perhaps the Minister himself and the public would think. There is a vested interest in the Opposition obviously trying to become the Government and therefore trying to make the Government look bad. So I think when the Hon. Member suggests that guidelines be part of the Standing Orders of the House, that is not being realistic in relating the circumstances in which we would have the best impartial judgment on how these things should operate.

Surely the best answer is the parliamentary system we have. The Prime Minister of the day sets his guidelines for Ministers, and if his Ministers do not comply then he dismisses them. Remember this, that if the Prime Minister is found to be not doing that well in the judgment of the public, or if the Ministers are not complying, then it is the role of the Opposition to bring forward charges, as they have, and try to establish the merit of those charges. Indeed, if they have merit then the judgment is made on the Prime Minister and those Ministers by the electorate in the next election. But quite aside from the argument whether there is merit in what the Ministers are doing or not, let us not ruin the parliamentary system by trying to make it into something that it is not and make it even more partisan than it is.

Miss MacDonald: What have you done over the years?

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, the speech that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition gave this morning is again proof positive that the House or a committee thereof is not the right forum for determining what the guidelines should be. In any event, it is, as we have said, a non-confidence motion and it is impossible for the Government to vote for it without a defeat. I suggest that it is a Government Leader's prerogative—the Prime Minister, Premier or whatever—with regard to the people he appoints, Ministers or senior civil servants, to decide what those conditions should be and to answer to the public as to how they are dealt with.

The Prime Minister is interested at all times in seeing that the guidelines are improved. However, he is dismayed that former Ministers are supposed to become non-persons. Government is so complex today that it is very difficult for a former Minister to be in the position of never having any dealings with Government. Indeed, often there is a tendency for people, if they have spent many years in a particular line of work, either criticizing in Opposition or administering in Government, to continue in the area in which they have achieved expertise when they go back to private life. Governments, Conservative, NDP and Liberal, have often appointed former Ministers to positions where they could continue to use the experience and expertise they have gained. I do not find that unusual. It is a way of avoiding wastefulness. If the person is not worthy of it, then again there will be public criticism.

I think the sort of publicity which has been given to this issue, Mr. Speaker, is not going to make it easier to attract people to public life. The guidelines have been interpreted and misconstrued. It may be that they need to be clarified, but I think the important thing is that the guidelines as they presently exist provide that you must withdraw from the profession or business that you are in, that you must give up directorships, that you cannot manage assets and you cannot be active in unions or accept gifts over a certain amount without a public declaration. The Ministers of this Government have complied with those requirements. They have established blind trusts. They have dissociated themselves from the professions.

I think the important question is whether those guidelines are exactly the ones that should or should not exist. I think a consideration for any Prime Minister is whether there are some guidelines that do not exist but should and then perhaps the Members should suggest what they are.

Mr. Nielsen: In committee.

Mr. Regan: I think they have the opportunity to make that suggestion at any time.

In the few moments I have left I want to say that in my 20 years of public service I have seen many, many people of different Parties in elected positions who, at the end of their years in public life, are poorer financially as a consequence of their years of public service. I have been hard pressed to find someone who is richer. If their progress in their own profession had paralleled the success they had in public life—and I could use examples from both sides of this House—then they obviously at the time of their death would have left a great deal more than was otherwise the case.

I believe it is unfortunate that again and again Hon. Members opposite come back to the so-called Gillespie question without bringing forward any evidence. Along the lines of what I outlined before, I presume the Prime Minister would look at a question of that type in this way. In determining whether there was any merit to the charges he would say this: Did others consider the project good or was it just to the advantage of one person? Was it competing against other projects? The fact that Nova and Gulf put big money into that project, the fact that the Conservative Premier of Nova Scotia backed it very strongly, that it was good enough for Mr. Buchanan, would I think be one test.

A second test would be whether it was done secretly. No, it was not. Indeed, there was a public press conference three years ago. Would the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) and other people involved have had Mr. Gillespie participate in a televised press conference in Port Hawkesbury, or would they have had someone from Nova or Gulf up front and him in the background if there was anything wrong with the situation?

Mr. Deans: What has this got to do with it?

Mr. Regan: It has to do with something the Leader of the Opposition dealt with in his remarks. So I suggest that not only was there no merit in that charge or the other matters brought up, but one has to ask: Why was it not brought up three years ago? Why now? Why not then?

• (1220)

I suggest again that the New Democratic Party is caught up in this matter, unfortunately for its members. The matter is brought up now because the Conservatives are leaderless. They are in the process of holding a convention and need a diversion.

Miss MacDonald: The Government has been leaderless for years.

Mr. Regan: It is important for them to try to undermine the integrity of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who is doing such an outstanding job, because they are fearful of the good budget he is going to bring forth. They beat the subject to death because they have no other issues. I hope they will consider some of the thoughts I have given them this morning so as not to harm further the attractiveness of public life to the people that we need to attract.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have one question for the Minister. By unanimous consent, the House can do anything. The Leader of the New Democratic Party has requested unanimous consent to suspend Standing Order 62(9) which, of course, is the non-confidence nature of the vote. We have given that consent. If consent were given by the Government, the matter could be voted on by Government Members secure in the knowledge that they would not be voting the Government out of office.

Why is there this great reluctance on the part of the Government to provide that consent to the suspension of the Standing Order so as to enable its Members to vote as they please in support of this motion?

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, I want to say two or three things to the Hon. Member in answer to his question. If he listened to my remarks he heard me say that I do not think it is a question of what the guidelines should be. That can best be determined by people who have the day by day, partisan involvement that we all have here in this House. I think it is the responsibility of whoever is the Leader of the Government of the day. If Parliament does not like the way he carries things out, it can defeat him.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is interjecting and criticizing the parliamentary system. If he has a question I will deal with it later but I should like to deal with the Leader of the Opposition's question now.

First of all, in my view a committee is not the proper place for this matter to be considered, so my inclination is against the motion per se. Second, this is an opposition day and because the Leader of the Opposition was speaking, he was in the House at eleven o'clock this morning and not away on other business. Otherwise he might not have been here. I suggest he may want to take the question up with the House Leader at three o'clock this afternoon. It could be more definitively dealt with at that time as our House Leader is not here at the moment. If he has a supplementary question perhaps he could put it at that time.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Opposition, however, why he did not give notice of this question on Friday when it was established that this matter would be coming forward today as a non-confidence motion. Why did he not say something like, "Look, we are putting this down as a non-confidence motion but we would really like it not to be a non-confidence motion"?

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I was almost convinced that the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) was to be believed when he suggested earlier that it would be up to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to decide this because the rest of us were too political. I was almost convinced but not quite. Then when I heard him respond to the question put by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen), I became even more concerned about what he was saying. He suggested that really the Prime Minister was the best person to make the judgment because he was not political, that playing politics is a disease that is only caught by Members of the Opposition, and further, that while the public has an opportunity to judge the Prime Minister every four years or every election—

Mr. Nielsen: They are the Ajax knights.

Mr. Rose: —our behaviour is not equally judged every four years. That is an interesting line of argument.

I think the Minister is not only a Minister of the Crown but is also something of a novelist or story teller, a bon vivant and all the rest. The inclination to play politics is not confined to Members on this side. The determination of what is a reasonable allegation or a prima facie case of conflict of interest and what is a smear is frequently divided by a very thin line. Most of the time Members on this side have to go on a fishing expedition. We do not have access to information, we are denied documents, and then the Government and the Prime Minister close ranks. Mum's the word. So that is the reason we are concerned. When something like this comes up I think, given the proper motion, that the Committee should consider it automatically and be given the relevant documents.

If these things can be ventilated, and the Opposition is inclined to raise doubts in the committee, so will Members of the Government—which has the vast majority of its Members on Committees—be inclined to put the best possible light on it.

In the Coalgate affair, when we questioned the Minister of Finance we did not question his honesty at all. What we questioned was his judgment. What he did, in our view, was a really dumb thing. It was blown out of proportion, in my view—and I have great respect for the Minister—because the Government closed ranks to the obvious set of facts and said there was nothing wrong at all. The difficulty here—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The difficulty of the Chair at this point is trying to apportion the time to the various Members who are seeking the floor. Does the Minister care to reply to the question?

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) that I had never hoped to achieve such heights as to convince him. So when he told me that I came very close to it, I was pleased.

I would say again to the Hon. Member that the temptation to play politics is a human element, particularly for people involved in politics. I have never been able to find a Member of any political Party without human weakness—not even the NDP.

When the Hon. Member says that the House should decide whether there has been a breach of the guidelines by a Minister, is he saying that Ministers would be dismissed by a decision of the House rather than by a decision of the Prime Minister? That is the logic that flows from what he says. It goes to the heart of the system. The Prime Minister must make those decisions because he appoints or dismisses Cabinet Ministers. He must answer to the House and eventually to the electorate about whether he does it well.

The Hon. Member spoke of the Minister of Finance with affection. Let him keep in mind that not one iota of evidence has been placed before the House to suggest that Mr. Gillespie and those associated with him, including the Premier of Nova Scotia, received anything that was not available to any member of the public who applied for a common public program.

Mr. Deans: That is not true.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Again, the difficulty of the Chair is to try to apportion time. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is seeking the floor.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a short question to the Minister. In the course of his remarks he suggested that it is completely inappropriate for a committee of the House to consider the question of rules or guidelines relating to conflict of interest for Ministers or public servants. As has been pointed out by previous speakers, the words of this motion are the words of a motion that was previously accepted unanimously by the House. Indeed, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), speaking with respect to conflict of interest guidelines for Ministers, said: "That is why the Government has placed its proposals related to Members of Parliament and Senators before the House for its consideration. We would hope that after a study of the problem in Committee and after having received comments from Hon. Members, an Independence of Parliament Act will be introduced and passed in this House. The announcement of the Government's policy is, then, a first step only."

• (1230)

If it was all right in 1974 for Members of Parliament to consider this matter, now that we know the Prime Minister says there is no sanction against former office holders and that that is a weakness in the conflict of interest guidelines, why is it wrong for Members of Parliament to consider conflict of interest guidelines for Ministers and former office holders now? What does the Government have to hide? Why does it fight this with all its vigour as the majority in the House of Commons?

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quoting situations here in 1974 under different circumstances. That was following a Green Paper which was referred for consideration. That is a very different matter.

This is the second day we have spent on the matter, plus endless questions and mini-debates in the House all arising out of smear efforts in relation to Mr. Gillespie's legitimate business dealings with the Government. I reiterate that of course Hon. Members of the House should be able to give their opinions. They will do so in this debate in relation to what they think the guidelines should be, what should be included and how they should be enforced. Of course they will do that; of course they are doing it in the debate.

I do not happen to think that guidelines should be established by a Committee of the House or by the House. I think they must be established by whoever is Prime Minister of the day from time to time, that they must be to his satisfaction, and that he must answer to the House and the electorate for them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period of questions and answers has expired. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) on debate.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I may say with a degree of sadness that nothing could more clearly indicate the Government's complete lack of comprehension of what this issue is all about than the remarks and comments made by the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan). He does not seem to grasp what the debate before us today is about. He said that he had difficulty understanding our position. He talked merely of it being a question of ins and outs. He said we should be discussing other issues. I say to that Minister and to every other Minister sitting on the Liberal benches that there is no greater issue before the country than that Canadians have trust and confidence in their parliamentary institutions. This is what the debate is about today.

On February 24, 1983, the combined Opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party, failed in its motion to censure the Government concerning the same events which have precipitated the debate today. We failed not because of the efforts of the Opposition, but because the Government had too much in the way of a majority and too little in the way of parliamentary integrity.

It may be that today's motion will also fail. If the Government was not persuaded as to its moral responsibility on February 24 by the clear and incontrovertible proof that was offered concerning the abuses of the conflict of interest guidelines, then I do not imagine it will be compelled by arguments today. After all, the Government has no less of a majority today than it did then and I would argue that it has no more integrity than it did then.

But let us be under no illusion. The failure today, if such it be, will not be the failure of an Opposition motion. It will be the failure of the Government of Canada to live up to the basic tenets of parliamentary democracy. Indeed, it will be seen as a failure of the whole Parliament of Canada to conduct itself by the same standards and code of morality which it seeks daily to impose upon its citizens through the process of formulating, revising and passing the laws of the country.

As has been pointed out repeatedly by Ministers over the past number of weeks, the guidelines which lie at the heart of this debate are to them just that—merely guidelines; they are not law, they are not binding. Indeed, by the cynical actions of the Ministers and their votes, they give proof positive to the view that the guidelines have no moral authority.

The present guidelines have been in effect for several years now. It was thought that Cabinet Ministers understood them, that they grasped the impact of their message. Now these same Ministers suddenly stand before us and say that they find the language in which the guidelines are couched to be confusing. In recent days the House has been treated to a redefinition and an ongoing change of meaning of many words, words which we thought were understood, words like "lobby",

"persuasion" and "influence". Those of us on this side of the House have never experienced difficulty understanding the guidelines, neither their language nor the moral authority and responsibility attached to them. They are very simple, they are very clear. They have been read time and time again in the House. Yet obviously the guidelines are not clear to the Government, because they were not followed when they should have been put into effect. They are not clear because when they were broken, as indeed broken they were, those responsible refused to shoulder their responsibility. The guidelines as such are simply not being adhered to, so obviously they must be reviewed.

The scope seized by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues to misinterpret or to distort the meaning of the guidelines at their convenience dictates that they must be rewritten in language which cannot be mistaken. It must be determined once and for all if there is such a thing as ministerial accountability and in what circumstances it should apply. It is equally obvious, to those of us on this side of the House at least, that this process of review, of consideration and recommendation, can only take place under conditions of all-Party scrutiny.

When the Coalgate incident first came to our attention, we were prepared to see the Government conduct its own investigation in accordance with its guidelines and to act honourably on its conclusions. This as we know was asking the impossible. Thus we requested that the Assistant Deputy Registrar-General, the official responsible under the guidelines, be authorized to conduct the investigation. That, too, the Government rejected.

Since then we have had hints from the Prime Minister that he might initiate some sort of review of the guidelines. Given the abysmal record of the Prime Minister's sensitivity to this very fundamental issue, that method of proceeding is simply not acceptable except, of course, to some Liberal apologists; but this escapist method is certainly not acceptable to Members of the Opposition. Even more important, it is not acceptable to the majority of Canadians.

The task before us is not to muddy the waters further, as would happen if we allowed the Prime Minister himself to review the guidelines. Rather, our task is to restore the principles of integrity and accountability to our political process, not to undermine them further as the Prime Minister would do. Therefore, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections must be given the authority to conduct any review of ministerial and Public Service guidelines on conflicts of interest. In its deliberations, the Committee must reconfirm not only to Members of this House but, more importantly, to the people of Canada that the Government of Canada is not a law unto itself, that the Government shall be held no less accountable today for its actions and the actions of its Members than has been the tradition in the past.

There is a doubt in our nation today, a deep and persistent doubt, doubt in our Government, doubt in our leaders, doubt in our institutions, doubt even in our system of parliamentary democracy and in its ability to meet the demands of a rapidly changing society. These doubts persist and grow precisely because of incidents such as Coalgate, precisely because Ministers do not accept their responsibilities, especially those Cabinet Ministers whose authority, such as that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), makes it doubly imperative that no taint of even moral negligence should attach to them. These doubts persist and grow because we, the Members of the House of Commons, are seen to be impotent to compel Ministers and senior civil servants to act otherwise. It comes down to a question of trust, the trust between those who govern and those who are governed, the very pillar upon which Parliament is built. Today that trust stands in jeopardy.

How can the people of Canada believe anything if they see those guidelines account for so little when they are put to the test, when they are called upon to come into play and are ignored? How can the people of Canada believe their Government rules in the best interests of the whole nation when time after time we see example after example of gross misconduct, whether it is a pay-off for past political debts with the chairmanship of a Crown Corporation or the appointment of a personal friend to a plum contract or to a seat in the Senate; whether it is up front in the open or a backroom deal between the backroom boys who really pull the strings of power and patronage in this Government.

These are all abuses which strike at the very heart of the credibility and trust from which this or any other Government draws its moral authority to govern. These are all abuses, as is every broken promise that this Government has left in its wake, of which there are so many. Without some sense of public morality, some understanding of the traditions of parliamentary accountability and collective responsibility, without some code of personal honour, how can any individual or group of individuals hope for very long to exert moral authority over their offices? How can there not be cynicism among the Canadian people when they see the rules by which they must conduct their lives flaunted by those who stand before them as models of probity and integrity? If you think that worries me, sir, you are absolutely right, it does. It should worry all of us because it does make a difference. These things matter.

I have always believed that there is a contract between those who govern and those who are governed. That contract is not hammered out in some lengthy bargaining session or in closed door sessions. It is a contract openly and freely arrived at based on mutual trust and respect.

The people of Canada fulfil their part of the contract with their Government. They pay their taxes. They obey the laws as is demanded of them. They serve when they are called upon, as is their duty. If they do not do these things, then they pay the penalty imposed upon them.

But where is our federal Government's duty? Does it not, too, have its obligations to honour the promises it makes, to govern all of its subjects equally and fairly, without prejudice or favour; to obey—no less than its citizens—the laws of the land and the rules it has itself established? Does it not have an even greater obligation to fulfil these duties simply because it is the Government? Of course it does.

We look to Government for leadership. We look to it for integrity. We look to it, not to be as good as the people it serves, but better. We expect Government to set an example. In trusting it to do these things, we grant it authority over us.

This Government, however, has failed. It has failed to lead, be it by example or otherwise. Its integrity has been as scattered to the winds as are its promises. It has broken the trust, the trust that has to exist between the people and the Government.

To those of us on this side of the House, this comes as nothing new. To much of the Canadian public it is nothing new. Public confidence in our parliamentary institutions has been steadily eroding for years. There is an increasing skepticism about our ability to determine and influence the course of events. Politics itself is increasingly the object of scorn and suspicion. It matters little who or what it is to blame for this lack of confidence, this lack of credibility. But we and our parliamentary democracy are all damaged by it, regardless of our Parties and political persuasions.

In the eyes of the general public we are all tarred with the same brush. The public sees the lobbying and the special interests at work. They read of the huge sums of money circulated around Parliament Hill in favour of this or that proposal. They do not stop to question whether such activity is necessary, whether it is legal or whether all Members of Parliament are susceptible to the arguments and favours of such interests. The public see us all as inhabitants of the same honey pot and they suspect us all of having sticky fingers. The public see the almost incestuous relationship between our leading financial, industrial and commercial institutions and former Members of the Government, and they cannot but question the independence of Government.

People see the special quirks and privileges, the appointments of commissioners at $800 a day, the special consultant fees, the advisory boards, the Crown Corporations whose directorships read like a who's who of past and present Ministers and their public servants. They hear such largesse justified by the Prime Minister as "just making a living". When 1.5 million Canadians and their families have to make a living on their Unemployment Insurance benefits and they hear comments like that coming from the Prime Minister of their country, how can there not be some questioning of the values of Government today? To much of the Canadian public, Parliament has become an extravagant irrelevance. It is a circus show acting out its own fantasy in a make-believe world where neither money nor morality seem very real any more.

I need hardly tell Members of Parliament how dangerous such a perception can be. If our society cannot believe in its own political institutions and will not accept their moral authority, we are well on the road to social anarchy. It is incumbent upon all of us, therefore, to act in a way that will restore faith in our political process. It is essential above all that the credibility of Parliament be strengthened and upheld.

Edmund Burke wrote that Government is a contrivance of human wisdom to provide for human want. As the creation of all too imperfect man, Government itself cannot fail to fall short of perfection. It is a contrivance, this artificial creation to which we entrust dominion and authority over our lives.

But just as we must never forget the ultimate objective, this contrivance called Government to provide for human want, so too must we never cease in our efforts to make it as perfect as is humanly possible. It must strive to represent what is best of that human wisdom. We must prove to ourselves and to the Canadian public that we still do have the ability to police ourselves; that we accept to place ourselves within the same confines of law and public morality as we expect of our citizens.

I remind Members of the Government opposite of the oath they took upon accepting office. It is the Privy Council oath. It is not a mere formality, an anachronism or a trivial touch of pomp and circumstance. It is a living and binding code that its Members swear to uphold, not just while they are in office but throughout their lives.

I remind all Members of the House of the oath they took upon becoming Members. We are sworn to uphold the traditions and the integrity of Parliament. We are sworn to uphold the laws of Canada, the unwritten moral laws no less than those inscribed upon the statute books. Our collective authority to govern and legislate the laws of Canada, our collective authority as Members of the Parliament of Canada, must be reaffirmed if we are to meet what the Canadian public is demanding of us.

By granting to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections the right to consider and make recommendations on the conflict of interest guidelines, we as Members of Parliament will go a long way to reaffirming the trust and confidence that Canadians must have in their parliamentary process.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are any Hon. Members rising to ask questions?

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I feel that I must comment on the statement by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) to the effect that 2.5 million people were drawing unemployment insurance benefits in Canada. I think she is mistaken, and perhaps she would like to rectify her remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I note that according to the Parliamentary Guide, the Hon. Member was elected in 1972 and was re-elected since then—my congratulations. Could the Hon. Member inform the House whether during that time she ever refused to intercede in any way for friends with the federal departments?

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member did not understand what I was saying. I meant what I said with very real sincerity. Obviously, we are here to assist people in our constituencies who are in difficulty.

That is not the question that is being debated today. The question being debated today is whether or not we restore credibility and integrity of the House through the means of reaffirming, strengthening and understanding ministerial guidelines. I happen to have sworn that ministerial oath on one occasion. It begins in this way:

Know you that reposing special trust and confidence in your loyalty, integrity and ability, we do hereby constitute and appoint you—

I want to assure the Hon. Member that I have never in any way broken that oath which I took on that day.

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I gave the Hon. Member an opportunity to make a rebuttal after my own comments on the figure of 2.5 million unemployed workers in Canada, that is, the number of people receiving unemployment insurance benefits, and she has failed to comment on this, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look at my blues. If I made a mistake in the figures which I quoted, I will certainly correct them.

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member inform the House whether there are indeed 2.5 million unemployed? That is what she said, or perhaps she would care to contradict me. Are 2.5 million people in Canada receiving unemployment insurance benefits?

[English]

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, apparently the Opposition is not willing to suggest what changes they would want in the guidelines until the subject matter goes to the committee. Can the Hon. Member explain to me why there is no willingness now to discuss what changes the Opposition would want in the guidelines?

Miss MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I thought the Hon. Member understood that the motion concerned referring the subject matter of the guidelines to the committee for discussion. That, in fact, was the proposal that was put forward by the Hon. Mitchell Sharp in 1974 and reiterated by the Prime Minister at a later time. We could bring the subject matter to the committee for discussion. I feel that that is where the proposals should be put forward.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I return to my question. Apart from the motion on the floor of the House, if there is dissatisfaction with the guidelines, why can we not be informed of what the Opposition would prefer to see in the guidelines? Why are the Opposition so secretive about what they would want to change? Surely if they could bring something to our attention that would have some real importance, we might even be inclined to see it discussed in committee.

At the moment they are suggesting sending it to committee first. In all sincerity, I do not understand why they would not disclose what they would want to see in the guidelines and why they say the guidelines are inadequate as they are.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I suppose one of the very obvious reasons why we consider the guidelines ineffective and in need of review is that there seems to be no agreement among Ministers on the front bench opposite as to what they really mean. They have different interpretations of the words "lobbying" or "persuasion". They have different interpretations as to whether or not sanctions apply or could apply.

These are matters which make it very difficult for Canadians to understand what the Government believes the guidelines are all about. Therefore, we suggest getting those to committee so they can be written in terms that not even the Government wil find confusing.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions to ask of the Member for Kingston and the Islands. It seems to me that she is arguing that the whole question should be referred to a committee. The Clark Government, of which she was the Secretary of State for External Affairs in 1979, brought out guidelines which were essentially similar to those which are in effect today, yet there was no move at that time to refer them to a standing committee. What has changed since then? If it was really important to have strengthened guidelines, why did they not bring forth strengthened guidelines in 1979?

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has argued very strongly about pay-offs, broken trust and loss of integrity. She mentioned the figure of $800 a day being paid for a royal commission when, in 1979, the chief counsel for the Mississauga train disaster inquiry was in fact paid $100 an hour, with a maximum of $6,000 per week.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but it is now one o'clock. I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENERGY

INDUSTRIAL SABOTAGE AT JAMES BAY—QUEBEC PREMIER'S INTERVENTION—ALLEGED THEFT OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, we are being told that Premier René Lévesque has allegedly pinched $31 million from Quebecers. He was the one who ordered spokesmen for the Société d'énergie de la baie James to settle for $200,000 a $31 million claim resulting from the March 21, 1974 wrecking at James Bay. The Premier intervened in the normal proceedings of a legal suit launched under the Bourassa Government. What is utterly ridiculous is the fact that, through such a settlement, the Premier made the SEJB lose $600,000 because, even if it did get $200,000, the SEJB had already spent $800,000 in legal fees. Premier Lévesque thus intervened personally to give $31 million to the QFL without any authority from the National Assembly or Cabinet. In my opinion, that was tantamount to looting the public coffers. Quebec hydro consumers must pay for secret agreements based on mere political partisanship. Either Mr. René Lévesque is not telling the truth or he is acting like an idiot when he claims that no one on his staff took part in the negotiations even though 12 meetings were held in their offices. I think that Premier Lévesque owes Quebecers an explanation about this.

HORTICULTURE

A GIFT OF DAFFODILS—PLEA FOR PROTECTION AGAINST SUBSIDIZED IMPORTS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, today, March the 21, is the first day of spring, believe it or not, with snow and freezing rain covering the Ottawa area. However, the daffodils from my riding of Esquimalt-Saanich, which I am pleased to make available in the lobbies to all Hon. Members, are not just reminders of spring. Through these daffodils I hope to catch the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and some of his colleagues, as I have done regularly in the past, and to plead that they provide greater protection to Canada's horticultural industry.

Canada's producers of horticultural products can meet their competition from offshore, provided that that competition is not heavily subsidized. Canada's horticulturalists are not seeking subsidies. All they ask is protection against overly subsidized produce from offshore, and relief from burdensome taxation.

Fruit and vegetable producers are already given some protection against subsidized imports. Canadian flower producers deserve similar protection through seasonal and regional tariffs applicable when Canadian products are at their peak. They also deserve protection against imports from countries where unusual market practices prevail. "Dumping" needs redefinition. Finally, they deserve relief from onerous federal tax levies on fuels used for heating greenhouses. Such taxes might be written off as legitimate business expenses. The Minister of Agriculture should therefore work out—

Madam Speaker: Order.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

DELAY IN IMPLEMENTING NEW BRUNSWICK PROJECTS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, despite Government announcements that the facilities necessary for the efficient performance of federal Departments will be built in New Brunswick, there are no major federal capital works projects under way this winter or this spring.

Announcements have been made concerning a lead-zinc smelter at Belledune, the transfer of a federal pay directorate to Chatham, a federal maximum security prison at Renous, a military training centre complex at Canadian Forces Base Gagetown, a divisional headquarters of the RCMP at Fredericton, and the Government is holding up construction of the maritime forestry complex at the University of New Brunswick.

The federal Government has allowed subsidiary agreements under the general development agreement between New Brunswick and Canada to lapse. A tourism agreement, highway agreement and industrial agreement are among those which have lapsed. Route 11 along the north shore of New Brunswick is a major developmental highway that should be completed.

With severely high unemployment, the Government should exercise the political will to move these projects forward out of the various planning stages, and create some badly needed jobs and badly needed facilities now.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FLOODING ON PEGUIS RESERVE IN MANITOBA

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, time after time band members from the Peguis Indian Reserve of Manitoba have tried to get the Department of Indian Affairs to do something to rectify the reserve's perennial flooding problem. Only last July the Minister wrote to me and said that as soon as he had received a report from the Band about the Fisher River flooding, his office would promptly advise the Peguis Band about what would be done to get Treasury Board approval for a flood rectification project.

There have now been five studies of this flooding, but still nothing has been done to prevent it in the future. So the band members are forced to prepare themselves again for the possibility of another spring flood, for the social and economic disruption it brings, and the costly clean-up that follows.

The Peguis Band approached the Department of Indian Affairs in good faith to do something about their flooding problem; but now the Director General of the Manitoba region has told them that the Government is not willing to fund a major flood rectification program. All Peguis can expect is possible funding for a program of ring dykes around reserve buildings; but ring dykes are no solution at all. The Band will still have to evacuate when the Fisher River overflows its banks, its water supply will still be polluted, and its farm land will still be carried away by the flood.

The Peguis Band is right to feel that it has been duped by the Department of Indian Affair's promises to do something to rectify the flooding on the reserve. With that kind of track record, it is small wonder that there is little trust of the federal Government among Canada's Indians.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF QUEBEC REGULATIONS ON NEW BRUNSWICK JOB OPPORTUNITIES

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 21, I raise a serious matter which is developing in New Brunswick, involving the border of the Province of Quebec, and relating to employment matters. I would certainly invite the Minister of Labour, (Mr. Caccia) to get in touch with the Premier of New Brunswick, the Minister of Transportation of New Brunswick, and other related Ministers, with regard to what is being interpreted as an injustice involving employment opportunities, especially with respect to forestry and lumber matters and the truckers who are bringing pulp material to the IP mill at Dalhousie and to other lumber-related operations. However, it goes beyond that.

Hospital and office employment opportunities are being placed in serious jeopardy. These would normally be available to New Brunswickers. This is because of the strategic location of that part of the Province between the town of Dalhousie, the city of Campbellton, and the Province of Quebec. It is becoming a crisis because of the licensing regulations on the Quebec side, the attitude of the particular Government, and the lack of any protection of New Brunswickers who are seeking employment on the New Brunswick side. Therefore, I would certainly—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR RELATIONS

EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS DISPUTE—EFFECT OF APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, on Friday last the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) indicated to the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) that a preliminary meeting between the mediator and both parties in the EPA dispute had taken place on March 17. The Minister will by now be aware that this meeting did not in fact take place. The Minister by now will be in receipt of a telex from EPA officials setting forth their concern over the appointement of Mr. Gordon Easton. At the time of naming the mediator, the Minister also signed a consent allowing CALPA to take the question of bad faith bargaining to the Canada Labour Relations Board. Under normal circumstances it would be quite likely that this very same mediator would be called to give evidence at such a hearing.

It strains credulity to expect EPA not to object. This dispute is long past the point at which it should have been resolved. By his actions over the past ten days, the Minister has ensured even greater delay in bringing the two parties back to the table.

Atlantic Canadians deserve better treatment than they appear to be receiving. Mutual trust between the mediator and both parties is always essential. Because of the mediator's past involvement with CALPA, he, himself, should have refused the appointment and suggested to the Minister that he seek another name.

Will the Minister not now intervene and bring this overdue long strike to a peaceful settlement?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LEVEL OF BUDGET FUNDING FOR MANITOBA REGION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in my statement I would like to refer to a couple of letters that I have received. One is from the Regional Director General of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in Manitoba. It is to the Chiefs of the Province of Manitoba. In part it states:

—it has become apparent that Regionally the Department of Indian and Inuit Affairs will not be in a position to sustain the level of budget as compared to the current year.

I would also like to quote from a letter to the Minister from the All-Chiefs Budget Committee, dated March 9, 1983. It states:

From the beginning of our negotiations in May, 1982, you have stated your agreement with the critical necessity of reforming the DIAND budgetary system, with the soundness of the Manitoba Chief's specific reform proposals.

● (1410)

Mr. Minister, ten long months of arduous, frustrating negotiations with you on the form and content of this agreement..have left the Chiefs with the clear perception that your real attitude to negotiations has been one of duplicity, deception, lack of will and a betrayal of your trust obligations to the Indian people of Canada.

While we have been negotiating in good faith and trusting your empty assurances of support, the Department of Indian Affairs has proceeded to implement unilaterally a 1983-84 budget plan that strikes tragically at the heart of already under-funded services to Indian people—

Madam Speaker: Order.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF PROGRESSIVE TAX ON QUEBEC FARMERS

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, some time ago in Quebec a united movement started to protest against the tabling by the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) of a working document claiming on behalf of the Quebec Minister of Agriculture that its purpose was to ensure the survival of the agrifood industry in Quebec.

Madam Speaker, there is in Quebec an escalating tax on energy which has fattened the Quebec government's treasury by as much as $900 million. It is also a well known fact that the agrifood industry accounts for some 25 per cent of all the economic activity in the province, which means that through that escalating tax, Quebec farm producers have been deprived of tens of millions of dollars. Madam Speaker, I feel that we should be concerned about these escalating taxes which empoverish Quebec farm producers much more than their counterparts elsewhere in Canada, because this sort of tax is outright dishonest for Quebec farm producers.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

STATUS OF NATIVE WOMEN UNDER CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, native leaders left Ottawa last week hoping that at the very least the Constitutional Conference had opened the door to a new spirit of co-operation and trust between the Government and native peoples. Imagine their horror when they found that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and other Government officials had deliberately deceived them by failing to amend the Accord to entrench equality between native men and women, after promising to do so.

Despite the attempts by some provincial Ministers of Justice to change the wording in a meeting Tuesday night, and a promise by the federal Minister of Justice to native leaders on Wednesday afternoon, the final Accord laid before the native people in the last moments of the Conference was not changed. What has now been entrenched in the Constitution is a clause guaranteeing native rights and their equality for men and women, as they now exist. Everyone knows, however, that our existing statutes and the Indian Act clearly discriminate against native women, and the new Accord therefore is meaningless. The Accord that had been agreed to by all participants was deliberately and without further consultation changed to suit the Government's own needs.

Canadians everywhere have the right to expect a higher standard of morality on the part of their Government officials. The betrayal of provincial Ministers and native peoples alike is a shame on the Minister and his Government.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PLEA ON BEHALF OF THE UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I am ready to admit that I have done quite a bit of thinking about the debates in this House of Commons in which I started to take part more than 40 years ago. I may say that, even before then, I was active for ten years or more in the politics of those days. I think about the period of activity in this country for the past 50 years. I think we have done something. We have made some important gains with Old Age Pensions, health care, allowances for children and so on. There are things of which we can be proud, but there is something that we have failed to do again and again.

There are people in this country who are lacking employment, who do not have a useful part to play in making life great in Canada. We must make that one of the aims in our effort to make life in Canada really worth-while. We have to make that effort. I would say, Madam Speaker, that for heaven's sake, we should do it now.

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. A Canadian Press wire story handed me just a few minutes ago quotes the Minister as having told national student leaders today that he can offer nothing but faint hope in the face of the mass unemployment among youth from coast to coast: "Students can expect a lot more of the same, more unemployment."

With 600,000 Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24 out of work, and with another 600,000 about to enter an uninviting labour market from the educational institutions of the country, is the Minister suggesting in his quotations, to which I have made reference, that the Government is not going to include anything in its forthcoming budget to address the most important major problem in the country at this time?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should know by this time that it is very unwise to try to base a question about Government policy on a quote from a newspaper story. I did not give any such quote. I did not say that we would not do anything to help. In fact, in the meeting I had with the students this morning, the purpose of the meeting was to discuss and decide how we could work together in a common fashion to deal with what is a very serious and major priority of the Government, and should be of this country, that is, to help young people get jobs, and to go back to work.

I point out for the information of the Hon. Member that for this year we have increased our funding for summer student employment by over 40 per cent. That is a very clear sign and indication that we do have summer employment for young people as a very high priority. In the meantime, members of this caucus have been working for several months on developing other kinds of options and initiatives that could be examined as part of an undertaking that we can put forward as a way of helping young people get jobs. I both discount the story and the Member's question.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM—STRATEGY FOR YOUTH

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, the Minister can discount my question, but he cannot discount the fact that there are 600,000 Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24 without work. The Government's 1983 student summer employment program, to which the Minister made reference, will create only 70,000 jobs, when the need is for ten times that number. Moreover, those jobs are only temporary. They do nothing to provide students and other youth with on the job training for more permanent skilled work. In light of that, will the Minister give serious consideration to the urgings of the Canadian Federation of Students, with whom he met today, that the Government's band-aid, ad hoc approach to job creation be replaced with a strategy for youth employment geared more to creating permanent skilled work of the sort that these students very much need and want?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very surprised at the question of the Hon. Member. If he had taken the time, and perhaps the interest, to have read the material that we put out concerning the summer employment program, he would recognize that a large portion of that program is dedicated to the internship strategy which combines work and training. We offer direct grants to private employers, non-profit organizations and federal agencies to combine training over a period of two to three years with the direct summer work program. All the Member's question demonstrates it that he does not know what that summer youth employment program contains. Before coming to this House to ask questions, the Member should take the time to inform himself so that he can ask questions based upon what is, and not on what he thinks the program to be.

FUNDING FOR TRAINING

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is for the same Minister. The students themselves are very familiar with the details of those programs. They are aware, too, of the inadequacies of them, and of the fact that they are faced with unemployment the likes of which we have never before seen in this country. They are also aware of the fact that the Minister's Government is slapping its six and five restraint program on funding for universities and community colleges. In light of that, would the Minister tell the House and, through this House, the young people of the country, why the Government is choosing to slash expenditures in the areas of training and education when those two things constitute such an important part of any rational, vital approach to youth unemployment? Why is the Government slashing funding in the very areas of public policy which are necessary to turn this tragedy around?

• (1420)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the topic we are addressing is unquestionably a very serious one. That is why it is disappointing that the Hon. Member would again provide information which is inaccurate.

When he talks about the so-called slashing of programs, the Hon. Member does not realize that we added 20 per cent to the training program in this year alone. Our budget went from $800 million to over $1 billion. We are providing training programs for over a quarter of a million Canadians. In that training program, Madam Speaker, we are providing, under the Skills Growth Fund, direct investment to community colleges in the Hon. Member's own Province, which is enabling them to modernize their facilities and equipment substantially in order to provide new training positions in high technology areas for the offshore industries and the marine industries. Once again, Madam Speaker, what we are facing is an Opposition which simply does not know what is going on.

LACK OF TYPING SPEED—TRAINING OF WOMEN

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I hope he will answer my question a little more positively. Numerous women in the service industries are losing their jobs. Through industrial retraining programs they are trying to upgrade their skills for other work, particularly in the word processing field. But, even when eligible for a word processing course, they cannot qualify because they lack the required 50 words per minute typing speed, and there are no typing courses available. Will the Minister look into this gap in the training program and see what can be done to help those caught in this particular situation?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would be very pleased to look into the specific matter which the Hon. Member has brought to my attention. I would like to point out, however, that under the National Training Act we do make available pre-skills training programs to local community colleges and organizations which want to sponsor pre-skills pre-trades programs where they can help individuals get up to a certain level of competence, whether it is in mathematics, English, or other basic skills, so that they can become eligible for the longer-term training programs. We are prepared to help with funding under that program. I would be very pleased to provide information to the Hon. Member so she could pass it on to those in her own constituency who might want to start such programs.

REFUNDABLE EMPLOYMENT TAX CREDIT PROPOSED FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Almost one-half of single-parent families headed by women are today living in poverty. The rate of unemployment among these women has increased by 60 per cent over the last year. Will the Minister consider a targeted refundable employment tax credit, or wage subsidy program, for this particular group? This is a concept which has been put forward by my colleagues on other occasions, and which has been endorsed in general terms by the Economic Council of Canada.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I shall take the Hon. Member's suggestion as a representation for the purposes of the budget, and it will be considered accordingly.

BANK OF CANADA

ADVICE GIVEN BY GOVERNOR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. If the Minister were one of the nearly two million people unemployed, or one of the two million people on welfare, or one of the tens of thousands of people who are living daily under the threat of layoff, or one of the small-business men going bankrupt these days, or one of the hundreds of thousands of students who are about to enter the job market in a few weeks, and if he had listened to Governor Bouey's speech on Friday when the Governor advised the Minister of Finance to stay on course, to ignore the high unemployment levels, or to accept them, to accept the high levels of bankruptcy, to ignore the human tragedy going on, would the Minister of Finance not agree that the Governor of the Bank of Canada has entered the never-never land of Peter Pan and has really lost touch with the people of Canada and the realities of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is wrong on several points. The Governor of the Bank of Canada did not make a speech last Friday. He gave a press conference. Also he did not state what the Hon. Member attributes to him. I have read the transcript of the Governor's statement, and he did not say what the Hon. Member says he said.

REQUEST THAT ANNUAL REPORT BE LAST SUBMITTED BY GOVERNOR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, Governor Bouey's advice to the Minister of Finance in his annual report is very clear. He is advising more of the same. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he is going against the advice of Canadians who are asking the Government in the upcoming budget to be bold, to be thoughtful, to take action to provide some stimulus to create jobs and get Canadians back to work. Considering that the advice of the Governor of the Bank of Canada is contrary to the advice of most Canadians, will the Minister of Finance assure this House that the Governor of the Bank of Canada will never again submit an annual report such as the one he has just tabled for 1982?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: That is what the people of Canada feel about it. Will the Minister ensure that Governor Bouey will never submit another report again?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker.

POSITIONS OF GOVERNOR AND MINISTER

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance, if I can get his attention away from the daffodils which we have today from the West Coast. The Minister has recently indicated that, if he is going to stimulate the economy in his April budget, the deficit could rise to an unprecedented level of $30 billion or more. We have the Governor of the Bank of Canada now warning very clearly that our economic problems cannot be resolved by vigorous use of financial stimulation, since this could only lead to further inflation, a point which the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap has ignored. Are the Finance Minister, who is responsible for fiscal policy, and the Governor of the central bank, who runs monetary policy, on a collision course?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker.

[English]

FINANCE

RATIO BETWEEN GOVERNMENT DEFICIT AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Minister of Finance. We understand his appetite for deficits, but I believe it is unfair to suggest that the Governor of the Bank of Canada is wallowing in the same sty. The Minister has made the point that the deficit would be financed by borrowing from Canadians, and that would help create jobs. I would like to point out that, when the deficit was $10 billion, the unemployment rate was 8 per cent. This current year, when the deficit is estimated at $27 billion, the unemployment rate was 12.5 per cent. Why should Canadians lend this Government an amount equal to half their savings in order to help create jobs, when historically this approach has not worked? When is the Minister going to introduce more effective measures?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I hope that these measures will be contained in the next budget. I would like to remind the Hon. Member—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Is there a revolution in the New Democratic Party over there?

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that I indicated that if there were no budget, if nothing were changed, because of lower revenues than anticipated, particularly resulting from lower anticipated oil prices, the deficit in 1983-84 would be around $30 billion. That is before any particular changes are made by way of a budget. As far as what specific measures will be contained in the budget are concerned, I invite my hon. friend to wait for the budget.

As the Hon. Member well knows, the Government goes to the market for borrowing. No one is obliged to lend money to the Government. This happens on an open market and, up to now, Canadians have had greater confidence in Canada and the future of Canada than the Hon. Member seems to have.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD RESOLUTION—PROPOSED OFFICE OF CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Would the Minister tell us when it is the intention of the Government to bring forward the resolution flowing out of the Accord signed at the Constitutional Conference? Could he also comment on how the Government intends to use the new proposed Office of Aboriginal Constitutional Affairs which is being set up in the Prime Minister's Office?

• (1430)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, wo do hope to bring forward the resolution in the near future for consideration by the House at the appropriate time. I think my hon. friend will have to wait with respect to the new office which is to be set up for that to be done, and for the announcement to take place. At that point he will see what is the scope of that office.

USE OF PROPOSED OFFICE

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, could the Minister then assure the House that it is not the intention to link the new proposed Office of Aboriginal Constitutional Affairs with the Indian Liberal caucus that was set up at the last Liberal convention? Can he also confirm they will not use this new office to flow economic development funds through to ridings where they think they can gain Liberal Indian friends, or to swing ridings that are called Liberal swing ridings?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as a result of the leadership this Government has shown with respect to native rights, it does not need any artificial aids in enlisting the support of native people across Canada.

TRADE

HOUSTON TRANSIT AUTHORITY—REJECTION OF BID BY CANADIAN COMPANY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of International Trade, in follow up to questions asked by my Leader on February 9 about a decision made by the Houston Transit Authority of Texas to purchase some 130 rapid transit cars for their subway system from a Japanese company over a bid submitted by a Canadian company. The Canadian company was CanCar of Thunder Bay, and its bid was some $29 million lower than the Japanese, but despite that the Japanese got the contract.

Has the Government yet determined why we did not get the contract when our bid was so much lower than the Japanese, and will he give Parliament a report on what he has done as the Minister in charge of trade in an attempt to try to rectify this situation and save hundreds of jobs for Canadians?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a commercial tendering in Texas whereby Hawker Siddeley was one of a number of companies which bid on a rather substantial sale. It is true that its bid was the lowest of those submitted. However, the authorities in charge of awarding the contract ruled that Hawker Siddeley was unresponsive to many aspects of the requirements of the bid document and it was disqualified on that basis. We have had contact with the company and have also made inquiries of the relevant authorities through our representatives in Texas. I think that is all I can usefully say on the subject at this time.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

CREATION OF NATIONAL DEFENCE JOBS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration about a fraud which is being aided and abetted by his Department. Last week it was announced that under the NEED Program 242 short-term jobs would be created in the Department of National Defence in British Columbia. At the same time, at Victoria dockyards, 54 term employees, some with over three years seniority, were told they would be laid off effective March 31 of this year. Will the Minister personally look into this situation and ensure that this fraud, this injustice, does not continue? Will he ensure that his Department will not destroy full-time jobs in order to create fraudulent statistics about job creation?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is using the word "fraud" in a very loose—and unfortunate way. I think he should perhaps be more careful in the kind of allegations he makes in this House. It is not the purpose of the NEED Program to replace existing workers. A very clear criterion we have under the Program is that any jobs provided are incremental to the normal work force. That is certainly the case in the area of the Defence establishment, and I have had the assurances of my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, that the NEED Program is not replacing jobs that would be ongoing but ones that were under normal term contracts in any event.

REQUEST THAT DOCKYARD LAY-OFF NOTICES BE RESCINDED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Canadian people can decide what fraud is, and they will want to look at this pretty carefully.

The base commander has indicated that the jobs being terminated are necessary for the ongoing operation of the dockyards. Taking away one job in order to create several part-time jobs represents a new low, even for this Government. Will the Minister ask the Minister of National Defence to rescind the lay-off notices for the 54 dockyard employees and ensure that the 242 jobs under the NEED Program represent new jobs, not jobs stolen from other workers?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think, before the Hon. Member gets carried away by his own rhetoric, he should recognize that in this particular case, according to information I have from the Minister of National Defence, there is no replacement with jobs provided under the NEED Program of jobs that were there under the winter-term operation. Those jobs will be replaced by a further term contract over the summer months. The NEED Program jobs are incremental to both those levels of jobs.

SHIPBUILDING

FRIGATE PROGRAM—CONSIDERATION SOUGHT FOR NEW BRUNSWICK SHIPYARDS

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, I would like to return to questions relating to the economy of Atlantic Canada. My question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services and has to do with the much discussed future employment opportunities at shipyards in Saint John, New Brunswick, under the defence requirements for frigates and new frigate construction. Since this matter is being pursued vigorously now and we anticipate an early decision, can the Minister indicate, with the support of all Members in the Atlantic area, some due consideration for this firm which has shown an expertise in this area so that we may provide additional jobs in an area where they are much needed now?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I trust that Members on all sides of the House will support the frigate program as soon as it is underway. In fact, the two finalists have submitted their tenders, and I expect we shall be announcing to whom the contract has been awarded at the beginning of this summer. I also trust, Madam Speaker, that the economic spinoffs will be acceptable to the Members of this House.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

WORDING OF CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—STATUS OF NATIVE WOMEN

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and is with regard to the constitutional Accord he will be laying before the House for ratification. The Minister is aware of a most serious discrepancy between the Accord agreed to by the federal and provincial Governments, and by native leaders, and the Accord that was agreed to in two meetings away from the plenary session, and actually laid before the members for signature. Moreover, the Minister was aware of the discrepancy on Wednesday morning and committed himself to correcting what he called an oversight before the document was presented for signature. Why did the Minister choose instead to deceive the native peoples deliberately, who thought they were acting in good faith, and which version of the Accord will he bring to the House for ratification?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is being mislead, I am sure innocently, by a very garbled version of the facts relating to the particular section in question having to do with the equality of men and women. The conference document reflects exactly the agreement reached among the participants. It was not only my ruling as chairman at that meeting, but it was so understood and, I believe to the best of my knowledge, all the Provinces have confirmed that was exactly the understanding reached at the meeting. There seems to have been an innocent mistake made by some of the participants on behalf of the Native Council of Canada that a proposal they made was actually accepted by the meeting, but that was not in fact the case.

We took soundings across the country from the Attorneys General on Friday to see, first of all, whether or not the communique we believed was exact was in fact exact, and the answer was, yes, it is; secondly, whether or not it would be possible to have an agreement to a further variation or a new variation which would now be agreed. A very large number of the Provinces were against that, and at the moment it appears that the version we will be laying on the Table in the House will be exactly the one which was presented at the end of the conference which, as I said, was the agreement reached at the conference.

POSITION OF PROVINCES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I have in my hand not only a copy of the Accord that was signed but also a copy of the minutes of the meeting that dealt with this particular section. The wording that was laid before the meeting and that was written into this Accord that was reached behind the scenes was written in by Roy McMurtry of Ontario. It differs substantially from the version that was presented for signature.

The Minister undertook with the native people that he would discuss with the Provinces what their understanding is of this—as if there could be any doubt, as it is all committed to writing. What is the result of these discussions? What changes is the Minister going to propose to the provincial Ministers to correct what he alleges to be an oversight and a misunderstanding?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is quite right, there cannot be any misunderstanding. But despite that, I am afraid that he has misunderstood. As I indicated in my answer to his first question, his quarrel is not with me, it is with all the Governments of Canada. All of them take the view that the conference communique represents exactly what was agreed on at the conference. I do not know where he got the minutes, but the Provinces have agreed with us that the published text is the text that was agreed on. We have not only ascertained that, but have asked them if they would be prepared to make, as a variation, what the Native Council of Canada asked. Too many Provinces are opposed to that for us to be confident that it is possible.

BILINGUALISM

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON MAKING CANADA A FRENCH STATE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen a few days ago which reports remarks delivered at a meeting by the Secretary of State. He said that his role as Secretary of State is to further his ambition of making Canada a French country both inside and outside Quebec and the task of making Canada a French state.

I wonder if he would explain what he means by making "Canada a French state".

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member has given me an opportunity to explain what I meant. The passage he has read is quoted out of context. What I told my audience and what I wish to repeat today is that Canada has a very clear linguistic policy. It specifies that French and English are the two official languages of Canada and have equal rights, status and privileges. Consequently, Canada should reflect the reality of the French fact in its policies as much as it has reflected the reality of the English fact throughout its history.

[English]

MINISTER'S MEANING

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State said that his comments were taken out of context as referred to in the Ottawa Citizen. Today I obtained a French copy of the text of his remarks and I should like to read it and ask him the same question.

[Translation]

—because everything we undertake and everything we do so that Canada will be a French state—

[English]

I wonder if the Secretary of State of Canada would explain what he meant by that. It is not taken out of context but it is taken directly from his remarks as supplied to me by his own office.

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, as I explained earlier, the Constitutional Act of Canada provides in Section 16 that Canada must reflect the reality of its French and English identities in its decisions and policies. When this principle received the approval of all the parties in this House, it was clear for everyone that the government and the people in charge of Canadian affairs in general must make every effort to put French and English on an equal footing. This is why we have proposed, in the House, a series of programs designed to support official language minorities and contribute to various activities which can guarantee Canadians access to the Canadian government in either or both official languages. Is is in this context that I told my listeners that, because of these objectives, Canada should be as French as it is already English and that its policies must reflect both the French and English realities in Canada.

CRIMINAL CODE

ACTIONS OF ANTI-SEALING SHIP—INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE PROSECUTION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Attorney General of Canada. I have given him notice because the question relates to a rarely used section of the Criminal Code in the Chapter dealing with piracy, Section 76.

In his capacity as Attorney General of Canada can the Minister tell the House why a charge has not been laid against the converted trawler Sea Shepherd, of foreign registry and dubious ownership? The ship is currently in Canadian waters with the express intent of breaking Canadian law, specifically Sections 76(b) and 76(d) of the Criminal Code of Canada.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the federal Government, mostly through the Department of Transport and the RCMP, is closely monitoring the situation that my hon. friend described. The role of the Department of Justice has been primarily advisory. I can tell the Hon. Member, however, that if charges were to be laid in this case they would be laid by the Attorney General of Newfoundland as is prescribed by the Criminal Code. In some circumstances the consent of the Attorney General of Canada would also be required, but the action would be taken by the Attorney General of Newfoundland.

It certainly would be possible that an offence might be committed under the law against piracy that the Hon. Member refers to, although it is not obvious that would be the most relevant Section of the Criminal Code. There are many other possibilities involving either deliberate or accidental harm.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I am not a lawyer, although I am something of a sea lawyer.

REQUEST THAT LAW BE ENFORCED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that the ship is beyond the jurisdiction of Newfoundland because it is outside the three-mile limit, but it is within the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of Canada. Why would he not lay a charge? The ship has been there for some considerable time with the express intention of breaking the law. Section 76(b) provides:

> 76. Every one who, while in or out of Canada,
> (b) steals or without lawful authority throws overboard, damages or destroys anything that is part of the cargo, supplies or fittings in a Canadian ship—

It also provides that anyone who counsels or procures a person to do so is guilty of an indictable offence. The owners of the vessel and all those on board the vessel are clearly in violation of Canadian law. They have announced their intention to break the law.

I want to know and the Government of Newfoundland wants to know why the Minister has not enforced the law and arrested the ship.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend is so concerned, and I understand his concerns, he can address his concerns to the Attorney General of Newfoundland. According to Section 433 of the Criminal Code, he is the Attorney General who has jurisdiction in such cases. If some of those involved are not Canadian citizens, he will also require the consent of the Attorney General of Canada. He has not so far sought that consent.

I repeat to my hon. friend, it is not obvious that the most applicable section for a charge of this kind is either Section 75 or 76, which deal with piracy. There may well be other Sections under which the Attorney General of Newfoundland would decide that it is more appropriate to take action.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

REGISTRATION OF PESTICIDES—REQUEST FOR TRANSFER TO DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and I have given him brief notice of it. Last fall a 20-year old farm worker in the Fraser Valley died as a result of pesticide poisoning. Last week a coroner's jury concluded that Jamail Singh Deol died as a result of inadequate government regulations on the use of pesticides. A Matsqui-Abbotsford Community Services survey shows that the problem is so widespread that 55 per cent of farmer workers have been directly sprayed with pesticides while working.

I should like the Prime Minister to consider the recommendation of the coroner's jury to transfer the responsibility for the registration of pesticides from the Minister of Agriculture to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has once again been made apparent that the health of farm workers is not being protected by the current registration process.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member was good enough to inform me at the beginning of Question Period that he would raise this matter, which gave me a chance to discuss it with the Minister of Agriculture.

It appears that the Hon. Member is making a suggestion for change of Departments at the federal level. Of course I am prepared to consider the Hon. Member's suggestion and to examine it. But I would point out to him that the recommendations of the jury, some ten of them, were essentially addressed to the provincial Government. Whether it is Agriculture or Health that regulates and authorizes the existence of a pesticide, it remains up to the Province to train and license the users of that product. Therefore in this case I do not see that a change at the federal Government level would improve the licensing or training by the provincial Government, and it seems to me that that is where the problem should be first addressed.

Mr. Rose: Perhaps my supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture might be more convincing to the Prime Minister.

UNITED STATES TESTING OF CHEMICALS—REQUEST THAT PESTICIDE REGISTRATION BE SUSPENDED

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, British Columbia farm workers are being hit by a double-whammy. On the one hand they will have more difficulty obtaining unemployment insurance at the federal level and, on the other hand, the Socred Government at the provincial level will take away their right to workers' compensation safety standards—they will be exempted if they work on farms.

My question concerns the registration of pesticides, many of which are lethal. Based upon test data from Industrial Bio-Test Laboratories in the United States—and this company has been charged with criminal fraud for tampering with the results and for falsifying test results—43 of these chemicals are being used in Canada without any retesting. Monitor, one of the pesticides which caused this death, is on the list of 43 chemicals. Will the Minister of Agriculture change his mind and agree to suspend registration of these 43 chemicals until retesting in Canada is completed? That is what the coroner's jury wanted, and that is what the coroner's jury requested.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, as I do, that some of the representatives of the British Columbia workers are in Ottawa today and that I am meeting with them after Question Period. We will discuss this and we will explain our position in detail to them. To the Hon. Member, I say there is no country in the world which has as strict a use of pesticides as we do. For instance, some of his constituents from British Columbia shop in the United States. Its rules and laws are much more lenient than ours.

As far as the use of the pesticide in fields, et cetera, is concerned, that is under provincial labour laws. We have arrangements with some Provinces where they have passed very strict laws on how to use any kind of pesticide where any human will come in contact with it, as a matter of fact where animals may come in contact with it, especially after it is sprayed on fields, crops, and this type of thing.

We are concerned, but I would challenge the Hon. Member or anyone else to find a more strict regulatory program than we have in Canada. He knows full well that we are retesting and that we have spent several million dollars buying our own equipment to retest all chemicals which are brought into Canada and were tested by this company. In way over half of them, the tests are proving accurate. Many are starting that IBT tests were all fraudulent. Over half the tests are proving to be very accurate. It takes some time.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Whelan: This chemical about which he is talking—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT EFFORT TO HELP FARMERS—INQUIRY WHETHER FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS HAVE BEEN ADVISED OF GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister is aware that last week, the House agreed to refer to committee a proposal to help farmers who are being threatened with bankruptcy. In the circumstances, has the Minister asked his department and his officials to advise financial institutions that the Government will be making a special effort to assist farmers who are having trouble with their bank payments, and to enable banks to be a little more generous and a little less pressing with respect to payments to be met by farmers?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that thousands of farmers have been helped, not only by the Government but by lending institutions also. I am sure he is aware as well that some people in rural Canada need special attention. We have also helped people in positions which are not the kind they desire to be in, namely, the economic conditions in which they find themselves. Certain production entities, mostly confined to the red meat industry, whether pork producers or beef producers, are the ones in the greatest financial difficulty. We are doing everything humanly possible to assist them.

But I am sure the Hon. Member agrees with me that we cannot just finance them out of the difficulty they are in. Some of them need better marketing conditions, better returns for their commodities. Because the commodities they are producing have shown a decreased level of income for them, they are wanting some kind of stabilization. Most of the countries with which they are competing, for instance, their greatest competitor, the United States of America, have no such program for their producers at all. We have an agricultural stabilization program here, ASA, which provides some assistance. They say it is inadequate at the present time. How quick we will go forward with another program depends on what the Provinces want. I offered a program—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture. I did not ask him what the Government has done for farmers. We know that. I simply asked him whether he was prepared to ask the banks . . . Last week, all three parties in this House agreed unanimously to refer Bill C-653 to committee, to make recommendations to the Government for the purpose of helping farmers being threatened by bankruptcy. The farmers' bankers should know that the Government and Parliament are prepared to make new proposals to help them get through this difficult period, especially in view of financial requirements for purchasing seed, and so forth, in cases where the bank no longer is prepared to lend them money. In the circumstances, my question is as follows: would the Minister, in view of the unanimous will expressed by the House last week during the debate on Bill C-653, could the Minister at least ask the banks to be less rigid in pursuing payments owed by farmers, since the Government has actually decided in favour of making new proposals. I am not asking what the proposals will be, but could—

Madam Speaker: Order!

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that I support the Bill. I hope his Party sees fit to give it speedy passage through Committee so that that Bill can become law.

Also I say to the Hon. Member that if his Government had not withdrawn the legislation or the type of program I had provided for income assurance for farmers—and his agriculture critic said in the Standing Committee the other day that it was too rich and too costly—there would have been no farm bankruptcies now at all.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CANADIAN POSITION ON GENEVA ARMS CONTROL TALKS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I have only one question, which is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the visit to Ottawa this week of U.S. Vice-President Bush. Will the Government of Canada be putting before the Vice-President any proposals which would contribute realistically to the nuclear negotiations in Geneva so that an acceptable solution can be found to the nuclear arms question, which is the principal concern of people all over the world?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is the intention of the Prime Minister and myself to hold discussions with the Vice-President. Among the topics for discussion will certainly be the arms control situation and the negotiations that are currently under way at Geneva. We hope to be making known to the Vice-President our concern that success be attained at these negotiations. Also we will be expressing our views on various proposals which have been made public with respect to these negotiations.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ZIMBABWE—OBSERVANCE OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. There is growing concern for another area of unrest and it has to do with the Lancaster House Agreement and the independence of Zimbabwe. I have written to the Minister for almost a year now concerned about developments there. In his last letter about a month ago the Minister said that "The common judgment was that the judicial system at present operated as an effective part of the constitutional framework, and that there had been significant improvements in the observance of human rights since Zimbabwe became independent". In light of recent new developments, and news stories breaking, does the Minister still stand behind this statement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we have been increasingly concerned about recent developments in Zimbabwe, and we have expressed these concerns to the Government and the authorities. Recently a member of the administration of that country was in Ottawa and these concerns were expressed to him personally. My letter, obviously, has had reference to developments since the beginning of independence and the new Government, and did not cover these recent events which are a cause of great concern to Canada and to other countries.

Madam Speaker: I just want to tell the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) that I do not know how he can call the question he just asked supplementary to the one posed by the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche).

An Hon. Member: It was External Affairs.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member did get in on that little trick, but it will not work every time.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Point of Order—Mr. Andre

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ANDRE—PROVISIONS IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C), 1982-83—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I would like to rule on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). It concerns the procedural acceptability of two votes in the Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983, namely, Vote L11c under Fisheries and Oceans and Vote 10c under Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Hon. Member argued that these two votes seek to appropriate money for purposes not authorized by Parliament. The Chair would like to express its appreciation to the Hon. Member and to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) for their contributions on this important matter.

The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre raised, as his first point, Vote L11c under Fisheries and Oceans, the object of which is to increase the borrowing limit of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, as set out in Section 17 of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act. The Hon. Member submitted that this vote is out of order in that it seeks to amend legislation by means of an item in the Estimates. He indicated that the borrowing limit was previously extended by Appropriation Acts from $5 million to $20 million but that rulings in 1974 and subsequently have made it abundantly clear that such a procedure is, in fact, out of order.

The Hon. President of the Treasury Board stated in rebuttal, although with little notice for study which the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre conceded, "that there are many precedents setting out the acceptability of the procedure with respect to Vote L11c, involving as it does not a request to authorize the Government to spend money, but simply to increase the level of borrowing authority".

In reviewing this matter with great care, I have noted that the borrowing limit expressed in Section 17 of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act was extended in 1970 and 1974 by Appropriation Acts. The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre now challenges this procedure.

I should like to bring to the attention of the House my ruling of June 12, 1981, wherein I stated, having taken cognizance of the opinions of my predecessors, and I quote:

> Finally, it seems clear that it is in order to extend the purposes of an item in an Appropriation Act by means of an item in the Estimates provided that it does not amend any other legislation.

This is further supported by Citation 485(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which says:

> Items in the Estimates which are clearly intended to amend existing legislation should come to the House by way of an amending bill rather than as an item in the Estimates.

In the present circumstances, it is clear to me that Vote L11c seeks to amend Section 17 of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act and is therefore out of order.

The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre also objected to Vote 10c under Industry, Trade and Commerce. I agree with the Hon. Member that here the real issue is not the method used to transfer money from the Treasury Board Contingencies Vote to Vote 10c, but rather the purpose of the program for which the grant is intended. As outlined in the Estimates, the grant is to provide payments under the Small Business Investment Grant Act which is now before the House in the form of Bill C-136.

I can only repeat what I said in my ruling of June 12, 1981, that "the Appropriation Act should only seek authority to spend the money for a program that has been previously authorized by a statute." Vote 10c clearly anticipates legislation and, in that sense, seeks to establish a new program in the absence of other legislative authority and seeks also the funds to put it into operation. In accordance with rulings by my two predecessors and myself, I must agree with the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre that Vote 10c is also out of order.

Accordingly, Vote L11c under Fisheries and Oceans and Vote 10c under Industry, Trade and Commerce, being improperly before the House, shall be deleted from the Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983, and I so order.

As a consequence of this ruling, the two notices of motions standing on this day's Notice Paper under Opposed Items Nos. 7 and 8 and seeking concurrence in Vote L11c and Vote 10c, cannot be part of today's proceedings and the main motion to concur in the Supplementary Estimates (C), 1982-83, standing in the name of the President of the Treasury Board, will be put to the House in an amended form.

I must tell Hon. Members that because of the very short time which stands between now and the time at which we will vote this evening, it will not be possible to reprint the Bill, but hand corrected copies will be circulated among Members.

[Translation]

Today being the final allotted day for the supply period, as usual the House will proceed with the study and adoption of the supply Bills. In keeping with the recent practice, do Hon. Members agree that copies of those Bills which will be introduced later today be distributed now? Following the ruling by the Chair, a few copies of those Bills are available, as I just said, and they will be distributed because the House will vote on them later on this afternoon.

[English]

Does the House agree?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FRIESEN—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION ASKED DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, on a question of privilege, I want to explain my question earlier today when you corrected my motive.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of privilege. The Hon. Member may have another chance to explain himself but I suspect he wanted to say it was supplementary in the sense that it was a question about Mr. Bush's visit. That is not a supplementary either. At any rate, he does not have a question of privilege.

MULTICULTURALISM

INTERNATIONAL DAY FOR THE ELIMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, Hon. Members, today was proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly in 1966 as the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. It commemorates the anniversary of the massacre of unarmed people who, on March 21, 1960, were demonstrating peacefully in Sharpeville, South Africa, against that country's racial laws.

Canada is one of the signatories to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination which came into force in 1969, and since then we have reported six times to the United Nations on our adherence to the provisions of that instrument.

Here in Canada, our Charter of Rights and Freedoms as well as the fact that our Constitution does acknowledge the principle of multiculturalism demonstrate clearly to what extent we want all Canadians, regardless of their culture or race, to enjoy equality and justice.

[English]

The policy of multiculturalism, adopted by Parliament over a decade ago, committed Canada to the concept of cultural pluralism within a bilingual framework. One of the basic thrusts of that policy is to assist all cultural groups to overcome cultural barriers to full participation in Canadian society. Discrimination against certain cultural groups is certainly a barrier to such participation. The "visible minorities", that is native peoples and people with origins in Asia and Africa, face particular difficulties in this respect.

While we in this country are making progress toward eliminating these barriers, much still remains to be done to achieve the goal of full and equal participation for all our people. In the area of racial discrimination we have begun to open up a constructive dialogue among Canadians in various fields to seek ways in which such discrimination can be eliminated in our society.

The Government of Canada has taken a number of initiatives in this area over the last few years. The most important of these are multiculturalism's tenth anniversary conference in 1981 which brought together at the national level for the first time, to begin this dialogue, leaders of business, labour, the media and visible minority groups. The symposium on Race Relations and the Law in April of last year similarly brought together leaders to deal with issues of the use of the law to fight racial discrimination.

A National Conference on Visible Minorities and the Media was held in the fall of 1982. Key representatives from the advertising and broadcasting industries and visible minorities discussed how Canadian media can better reflect and portray the diversity of Canadian society in its advertisements and programs. The Government of Canada has set an example in this area by adopting guidelines on the portrayal and depiction of minorities in federal Government communications.

Within my own ministry, I have established a race relations unit within the multiculturalism program to identify areas which we as a society have to address to remove racial prejudice and discrimination and to promote positive communications and relations.

We all recognize that the promotion of better understanding, tolerance and harmony among our diverse communities is a long-term undertaking. Canada is firmly committed to this undertaking.

[Translation]

I firmly believe that we can forge a multicultural and multiracial society which is creative, dynamic, fascinating and harmonious so as to set an example for others. Canadians have enough goodwill for that and they are ready. We must derive maximum benefits from their constructive approach and the progress we have made so far.

[English]

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms, with its explicit inclusion of the principle of multiculturalism, its preservation and enhancement, is a proclamation of a promise for the future. It is up to all of us to ensure that the promise is fulfilled.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege to respond on behalf of my Party to the statement that has just been delivered by the Hon. Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Fleming).

When I was told an hour ago of the Minister's intention to make a statement, my immediate reaction was that we were moving closer to a general election because, as we know, multiculturalism is a very seasonal public policy with this Government. One never hears of a Minister of Multiculturalism until it is necessary for the Government to assure itself of the electoral support of those whose privilege it has not been to inherit Canada by birth but who have made their personal choice to live in Canada and share in its richness, the splendour of our natural heritage and the generosity of the people.

I can speak with authority and personal experience when I say that many of our most recent citizens made their commitment to Canada, as well, on the grounds of the official public policy and the commitment of succeeding Governments to the concept of cultural pluralism and multiculturalism. I also speak with authority and experience when I say that these commitments are often betrayed and the expectations many of us brought to Canada, together with our industry and resources, were disappointed.

The Minister's statement was prompted by the United Nations proclamation dating back to 1966 which set aside this day as the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. This Government now feels that the Accord that was reached in the process of patriating our Constitution and the lofty ideals that are now entrenched within our Constitution are sufficient to eliminate overnight all forms of discrimination on the grounds of race, religion and colour.

It is naive in the extreme for the Government to believe it to be possible to legislate the attitudes of its citizens. We shall never be a truly multicultural society that appreciates and respects the rights of all its citizens, including those of the visible minority, until multiculturalism is recognized in our schools, in our municipal and provincial institutions of government and by all departments and agencies of the federal Government, not just the seasonally adjusted Department of Multiculturalism for which the Minister is responsible.

If the Government is serious about removing the barriers which prevent all Canadians from participating fully in the mainstream of life in our country, and if the Government is serious about progressing toward total elimination of discrimination on the grounds of race, religion and colour, it should consider the advisability of relieving the Minister of a responsibility which has traditionally been exercised purely in political terms and shifting such responsibility to a commissioner of multiculturalism who, like our Human Rights Commissioner, would ensure that all departments and agencies of the Government are held to the Government's commitment and, indeed, that the inducements necessary to ensure that the policy is understood and respected by private institutions as well are provided.

In the future, it will not be good enough for the Government merely to make available a few million dollars to cater to the various ethnic newspapers in the form of advertising Government programs in the different languages or to hold conferences of the type to which the Minister has alluded. If Canada is truly to be a multicultural community and if the Government is to take its Constitutional Accord seriously, we have to progress from the talking stage to a program of action. We will have to invite Canadians to share with us our compassion and understanding for those who live among us and find it difficult, initially at least, to assimilate to those aspects of Canadian life which are dissimilar to their own culture and religion. We will have to invite Canadians to discover the riches contained in the multicultural framework instead of the diversity.

This goal will not be achieved through meaningless discussion but through deliberate action aimed at bringing about a better understanding among all Canadians, and through public policies which are to be implemented over time, not through intimidation or coercion, but through the creation of a public spirit shared by everyone, one that will assure us that no reasonable person is left out. Only then can we travel around the world proclaiming the United Nations principles to which we are committed with a clear conscience and with our heads held high.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, it is indeed a great privilege to rise on the occasion of the Minister's statement with regard to the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. I am delighted that the Government is taking the opportunity to make use of ministerial statements. I only wish some of the other Ministers would take advantage of the opportunity so that we could respond and ask questions on these occasions.

I also wish to thank the Minister for providing me with an advance copy of his statement so that we may know what policies on multiculturalism the Government is proposing.

The Minister stated that Section 27 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms discusses the enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians. It is my hope that the Minister will use his good offices to ensure that a similar provision is included in the amendments to the Official Languages Act so that that document will also reflect the multicultural heritage that we have as Canadians.

I suspect that if the Minister had more time to make his statement he would also have mentioned that Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms dealing with equality rights also states that there shall not be discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age and so on.

I believe it is important for us to raise the profile of multiculturalism. I believe that many people have not understood multiculturalism. Some of those people may be scholars who have written books such as "The Vertical Mosaic" and who have considered that perhaps there is no place for multiculturalism in an egalitarian society which is concerned with individual merit and upward mobility. However, in the process they have failed to realize that there are group or collective rights in Canada. We have a policy in Canada which is different from that in the United States or any other country which has a "melting pot" policy.

I would like to illustrate what I mean when we talk about Canada being multicultural rather than a melting pot society. I am reminded of an article written by Palmer in 1973 in which he describes a graduation exercise in the Ford Motor Company where English was being taught. At that time there were some 500 graduates from this particular English class. They marched off a large immigrant ship and passed into a gigantic melting pot. As they came off the ship, they were dressed in their national costumes. The teachers stirred the pot and, as the graduates came out of this melting pot, they were waving American flags and wearing the American clothes of that particular era.

This is not the type of multiculturalism policy that we in Canada are interested in. However, I would like to urge that when the Minister considers policies here and discusses the whole question of race relations in Canada, he should not deal with this problem of multiculturalism at the expense of eliminating any kind of funding or work which has been done concerning cultural retention in relation to some of the more established groups which have had the requirement of seeing that their heritage has been preserved. I think that is important when dealing with the whole aspect.

At this time I would call upon the Minister to press for an institute of multiculturalism in Canada so that we might have a Canadian institute which would examine these issues. It is not something new. We do have the ethnic chairs, as the Minister well knows. We have certainly received more requests concerning this whole area. However, it is time that the Minister was cognizant of some of the requests which have been made by various scholars throughout Canada that there be such an institute whereby we could have an examination of questions such as race relations, and could also study some of the other aspects of Canadian history. I would point out to the Hon. Members that Australia, which has half the population of Canada, has twice as much funding for multiculturalism.

Madam Speaker, I see that you are giving me the high sign, but I did want to make those brief comments because it is important that we ensure a higher profile for multiculturalism. I thank the Minister for his statement this afternoon.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): I would like to ask a brief question of the Minister, Madam Speaker. Would the Minister undertake to look into the following problem. In my constituency, people speak languages which were spoken thousands of years before English or French was spoken on this continent. What is happening is that federal Government offices in villages and settlements are not only putting up signs in English, which everyone speaks as a lingua franca, but they are also putting them up in French, though not in the local languages. This appears to be an exercise in insensitivity. People are asking: "Why did they put signs up in the French language, which no one understands, and not in the language which everyone speaks here?"

Would the Minister undertake to review this matter and see whether it is possible to put the signs up in the local languages as well?

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, that question is interesting. I am sure it is of serious concern to the people of those communities, but it is quite far beyond any responsibility of mine. Concerning the question of heritage languages, outside the school system we do have a fund of moneys on a per capita basis to provide money for teachers. We do give assistance to the Inuit to some degree, starting in the last year and a half or so. However, with respect to signage, I suspect that that would relate to the municipalities or the regions—

Some Hon. Members: The federal Government.

Mr. Fleming: —and relate through to the Minister responsible. Signage and languages of signage are not part of my responsibility.

Mr. Lewycky: Madam Speaker, I would like to address a short question to the Minister. As he knows, when dealing with race relations one of the big problems is attitude. In response, for example, to visible minorities in Canada and the United States, there have been slogans like "Black is beautiful". People such as the Inuit have rejected the label "Eskimo", which means "eaters of raw meat", in favour of "Inuit", which means "people" and so forth. There are many attitudinal changes which are necessary if we are to deal with race relations problems.

I am wondering if the Minister is currently handling any kind of studies dealing with these social and psychological aspects of self-image and identity which would assist Canadians, as a multicultural nation, to deal with problems relating to the elimination of race discrimination.

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member, as I mentioned in my statement, we now have a race relations unit. As the Hon. Member knows, I believe about two years ago for the first time we granted moneys specifically to carry out research on race relations. The Hon. Member probably received a statement this morning that Cabinet has agreed to double my ongoing grants and contributions budget over the next 24 months. Part of that amount, about an additional $2 million, will be used to study the various ways of overcoming racial tensions in the country. I cannot specifically tell him about that kind of research because I do not have the details, but I can point out and, in fact, list for him what projects are under way at the moment.

MR. MUNRO—PERMANENT AND PROVISIONAL STANDING ORDERS—REQUEST FOR INDEX

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Two months ago today, on the first day we came back after the New Year, I rose on a point of order to ask when we were to have an index for the new Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders. I have risen once since, and I just hope that it will not be necessary, in the third month, to rise again to ask for the index. The Table of Contents is really not very helpful. I do hope that when the index is provided, it will provide a cross-reference with the old Standing Orders so that we will have a full reference under these Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders available to us and will be able to find our way through them with a great deal more ease.

Madam Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for reminding me that he had not received the index. I was under the impression that he had. We will publish an index with the Standing Orders when they are published again after the changes have been made. However, we do have a separate index. I am sorry that the Hon. Member has not received it, but I will ensure that he does receive it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I am not sure that anyone in this Chamber has received a copy of the index and, if the Hon. Members have not, I do not hope it will be distributed generally.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, I thought it was ready. It will be ready in three or four days and all Hon. Members will be receiving it.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 4,559 and 4,567.

[Text]

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Question No. 4,559—Mr. Thomson:

1. Are compound interest Canada Savings Bonds the only type of bond available for purchase through payroll deduction and, if so, for what reason?

2. What is the percentage of sales between compound interest bonds and fully registered bonds?

3. What percentage of compound interest bonds are sold after one year's ownership?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. Yes. Regular interest Canada Savings Bonds are not available on these plans because the registration information for regular interest bonds must be received by the Bank of Canada no later than August in each year in order to ensure the timely delivery of the approximately two million interest payments on November 1. Bonds purchased on payroll savings plans are not registered until payments have been completed by the purchaser, normally in October. Purchasers may, however, exchange compound interest bonds for regular interest bonds at any time.

2. For Series 32 to Series 36 inclusive, compound interest bonds average 48 per cent of total sales and varied from a minimum of 42 per cent to a maximum of 61 per cent.

3. It has been assumed that the question relates to bonds redeemed after one year from the issue date. In this respect, for Series 32 to Series 35 inclusive, the par value of compound interest bonds redeemed within the first 13 months after the date of issue averaged 40 per cent of the total of compound interest bond sales and varied from a minimum of 32 per cent to a maximum of 55 per cent. For comparative purposes, regular interest bonds of these series redeemed in the same period averaged 41 per cent of total regular bond sales and varied from a minimum of 27 per cent to a maximum of 72 per cent.

CONFECTIONERY PRODUCTS

Question No. 4,567—Mr. Hawkes:

1. Did the Minister of National Health and Welfare write a letter to Mr. E. J. Korhonen, President, Confectionery Manufacturers' Association of Canada, dated October 14, 1982?

2. In the letter, did the Minister ask the members of the Association to cease importing, manufacturing and distributing certain products as soon as current stocks were exhausted and, if so (a) by what authority does the Minister believe she has the power to ask this of Association members (b) how does the Minister intend to pursue the matter if the members of the Association do not voluntarily cease such importing, manufacturing and distributing?

3. (a) Were 36,233 metric tons of confectionery sugar imported into Canada in the quarter period ended September 1982 and, if so, is the Minister aware of this fact (b) is the Minister planning to monitor all such imports to determine if her orders are being carried out and, if so, how will she do this?

4. (a) What will happen to Canadian manufacturers if they fail to cease importing, manufacturing and distributing such products (b) what will happen to others who continue these activities but who do not belong to the Association and will their treatment be different in any way?

5. Is the Minister aware that the importation, manufacturing and distribution of such products is permitted by law?

6. Is the Minister aware that recipients of letters such as this might feel they are being threatened?

7. Was the decision to send this letter a decision taken by full Cabinet or by a Cabinet Committee or by the Minister acting on her own?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, the Minister wrote to Mr. E. J. Korhonen, President, Confectionery Manufacturers' Association of Canada, on October 14, 1982.

2. The Minister, in her letter, stated: "I am increasingly concerned that the availability of confectionery products that resemble pipes, cigars and cigarettes may encourage children to take up the smoking habit in later life, a habit that creates serious health risks".

"I would therefore appreciate it if you could ask the members of your association to cease importing, manufacturing and distributing such products as soon as current stocks are exhausted".

(a) The Minister of Health and Welfare is responsible for the health of Canadians and for implementing the health policies of the Government. (b) The Government would have to consider other options available to it. In this connection, the Minister has instructed the Department to prepare options for her consideration.

3. (a) The Government is aware that substantial amounts of sugar are imported into Canada. (b) The Minister prefers to depend upon the voluntary co-operation of the industry.

4. (a) The Government would have to consider other options available to it. (b) Both importers and Canadian manufacturers will be asked to consider ceasing these activities.

5. Yes.

6. The Minister does not believe that appealing to public responsibility constitutes a threat.

7. The Minister has acted according to one of the mandates of the Department which is to promote healthy lifestyles for Canadians and to enhance the program objectives of the "Generation of Non-Smokers".

[Translation]

Mr. Fisher: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—CONFLICT OF INTEREST

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nielsen:

That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to consider and make recommendations upon the subject-matter of Ministers and Conflict of Interest; and Public Servants and Conflict of Interest.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I now rise to speak to the motion which is before the House and to remind Hon. Members—

[English]

Miss MacDonald: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands rises on a point of order?

Miss MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I do not mean to interrupt or delay the Minister, but when we broke at one o'clock p.m., I was in the middle of answering questions of the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: My understanding was that there was no one rising to ask further questions at that point.

Miss MacDonald: I was in the middle of—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: She was in the middle of answering but she was cut off.

Miss MacDonald: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I was in the middle of answering a question from the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau), who had asked me whether or not I had used the figure of 2.5 million people on Unemployment Insurance and whether that was correct. I undertook to check the blues and, in fact, found that I had used the figure in error. I would like to point out that I had intended to use the figure of 1.5 million.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West rise on a point of order?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I just wanted to find out what the ruling is with respect to questions. If we are finished with statements—

Mr. Ouellet: We are finished.

• (1530)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No one rose further at that point and the incumbent of the Chair, Madam Speaker, recognized the next speaker on the other side of the House to the one who had just spoken. Accordingly, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has the floor.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think it was clear that the ten minutes allowed for questions had elapsed and that it was time to proceed with the debate and recognize the next speaker.

I am pleased with this opportunity to remind the House that it is the second time in four weeks that the Opposition is spending a full day of Parliament's time on the subject of conflict of interest. I thought the Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) would have used this second day of debate to bring forward new elements and to present evidence in support of the as yet unwarranted allegations and accusations they made repeatedly in their speeches and comments, both today and a few weeks ago, when a full day was spent on the same subject. I think it is most unfortunate that Members on the other side of the House, and especially Progressive Conservative Members, should be raising a storm about the so-called Coalgate scandal.

Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, using this expression the Progressive Conservative have tried to instil an element of mistrust in public opinion, and this attempt to discredit not only politicians but former politicians is truly reprehensible, because in fact, there is not a shred of evidence that Mr. Gillespie was given preferential treatment in this matter. Nothing that was said during the first debate or this morning during the second debate could lead anyone to believe or could prove that the former Minister, Mr. Gillespie or the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) have been involved in a dishonourable operation. I therefore say quite honestly that on the part of the Progressive Conservative Members, this constitutes a smear operation that is unfortunate, unwarranted and unjustifiable in the circumstances.

When the Member for Kingston and the Islands made her holier than thou statement to the effect that the public must be able to trust men and women in public life and when she referred to the public's concern about the integrity of politicians in the present Government, I would remind her that this entire story was a complete fabrication contrived by the Opposition parties a few weeks ago, while the fact of the matter is that the circumstances were known to the public and to the press, that events took place in full view of the public many months ago, namely, the announcement of a project in Nova Scotia sponsored by the Conservative Premier of Nova Scotia, an announcement that was made publicly and openly, and no one at that time or since then has tried to doubt the integrity of the people involved in this matter.

However, it is not the public that is worried or has any doubts about the integrity of Members of the Government. It is the Official Opposition that is having misgivings about its political objectives. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands talks about integrity and credibility, but in my opinion, she ought to look in a mirror and ask herself whether she is really showing integrity and a sense of responsibility when she raises unfounded questions as she did today, and as the Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Yukon, did a few weeks ago and again this morning.

Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that men and women in politics must be honest, but what is dreadful is that certain politicians hide behind parliamentary immunity to raise doubtful issues, knowing full well that they do not have a shred of evidence to back up their allegations. When they use their parliamentary immunity in this manner, not only do they reflect on the reputation of the people they attack, but they also do great harm to Parliament itself and to all those who work within Parliament.

I hope that this second day of debate will bring us somewhat closer to reality and enable us to draw sound conclusions on the sense of responsibility which must prevail on both sides of the House. We want to make sure that when politicians choose to accuse someone, they will at least have the decency not to do so under the cover of parliamentary immunity, but rather to make their accusations clearly in public outside the House and be prepared to suffer the consequences should their allegations prove to be unfounded. We are witnessing a flagrant abuse of parliamentary immunity to cast aspersions and throw mud at certain politicans, which inevitably reflect on the integrity of Parliament as a whole.

Indeed, I should like to talk about conflict of interest guidelines, Mr. Speaker, because I am the Registrar General of Canada. Shortly after implementing a conflict of interest policy applicable to each Minister of the Crown, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) requested the Office of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General to administer most of the guidelines.

Hon. Members will recall that the Prime Minister set forth that policy in July 1973, the day after the tabling of the Green Paper entitled "Members of Parliament and Conflict of Interest" prepared by the Government and presented by the then President of the Privy Council, the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, now Deputy Prime Minister. The Government was not afraid to table that document and set conflict of interest guidelines.

In December of the same year, the Prime Minister explained in the House the guidelines applicable to public servants and senior officials appointed by Cabinet. The Public Servants Conflict of Interest Guidelines fall under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Board which made the Deputy Minister responsible for ensuring that civil servants in the various departments follow the guidelines. I can say that since then all departments have provided additional codes of ethics governing certain aspects of the official duties of their staff. Some Crown corporations and agencies have also drafted additional guidelines. And the office of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General has on different occasions helped several of those departments and agencies to draw up their own code. The guidelines on conflicts of interest for officials are used as models to set up the other codes. Indeed seven principles have been stated and in fact constitute the very basis for the lines of conduct of all individuals who have assumed responsibilities within the administration. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that in those allegations, in those half-truths and statements by Members opposite reference was never made to any misconduct as disrespect of standards by a Minister or an official. The entire so-called Coalgate affair had to do with a preferential treatment said to have been granted to a former minister who had been out of politics for many years and who at the request of a provincial government had endeavored to launch, in co-operation not only with government provincial authorities but also with private interests a job-creating project in an underdeveloped area of the country. And all those pieces of gossip and those alleged scandals have nothing to do with the people who are now governing the country and are abiding by the standards governing conflicts of interest. I would like to mention briefly those seven principles because it is essential that they be kept in mind.

The first principle is as follows: An individual holding an office with responsibilities in the Civil Service should not only comply with the law, but his conduct must be such as to withstand the most thorough investigation. In addition, those people should have no financial interest liable to come in conflict in any way whatsoever with the carrying out of their official duties. That is the first principle. It is interesting to examine that principle and see whether the individuals involved have violated that principle, as alleged by the Opposition. It is entirely out of the question. After considering the situation, one realizes that the principle has not been infringed upon. Now, the second principle: There must be no conflict nor any appearance of conflict between private interests and official duties. Once appointed, the officials should manage their own affairs so as to avoid any conflict of interest.

Third principle: Public servants should exercise care in the management of their private affairs so as not to benefit, or appear to benefit, from the use of information acquired during the course of their official duties, which information is not generally available to the public.

Fourth principle: Public servants should not place themselves in a position where they could derive any direct or indirect benefit or interest from any Government contracts over which they can influence decisions.

Fifth principle: All public servants are expected to disclose to their superiors, in a manner to be notified, all business, commercial or financial interests where such interests might conceivably be construed as being in actual or potential conflict with their official duties.

Sixth principle: Public servants should hold no outside office or employment that could place on them demands inconsistent with their official duties or call into question their capacity to perform those duties in an objective manner.

And finally, seventh and last principle: Public servants should not accord, in the performance of their official duties, preferential treatment to relatives or friends or to organizations in which they or their relatives or friends have an interest, financial or otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, those principles adopted in 1973 have never been amended, neither by this Government nor by the Official Opposition when they were the Governement in 1979. Indeed they were used by the Progressive Conservative Government in 1979 to develop guidelines for their Cabinet Ministers. As I said earlier, an office within my department is responsible for administering on behalf of the Prime Minister the guidelines to be observed by Ministers of the Crown concerning conflict of interest situations. Those same guidelines apply to a number of designated ministerial staff members. Indeed, besides ministers of the Crown and designated personnel, more than 250 persons are subject to the guidelines and had to follow the procedures provided for in order to be protected. The Assistant Deputy Registrar General confirmed to me over the week-end, Mr. Speaker, that all subjected personnel, Cabinet Ministers and others, have followed the prescribed procedures and obtained either from the Prime Minister, or the Assistant Deputy Registrar General approval for the procedures they had to follow in order to meet the requirements of the guidelines. In some cases, of course, it is quite easy for a young assistant, for instance, to comply. But some people have had to make enormous personal sacrifice in order to meet the requirements and enjoy the privilege of working for the Government. No doubt, when our friends opposite formed the Government, they faced the same difficulties. I remember the former Minister of Finance and his wife had difficulty accepting such guideline requirements. But it is important to stress one thing that our friends opposite have totally sidestepped in their discussions and allegations, namely that those who must relinquish certain freedoms in order to serve the Government must know that in so doing they will not become the targets of malicious attacks or innuendoes when after serving the Government they go back to the private sector, resume some of their activities and undertake to work once again on their own. Clearly, if there are to be trials of intents, if all those who at one time or other have served as Cabinet Ministers within the Canadian Government are to be maligned, many men and women currently in the private sector who could enter politics and play an interesting role serving their country, who could make a significant contribution, will be most reluctant to do so, if we are to go on tolerating that kind of innuendoes and ill will as are now faced by some former Ministers who served their fellow Canadians with honour and dignity within the Canadian Government.

I submit that such trials of intents at this point, when there is no evidence—and I stress no evidence whatsoever—that those people enjoyed preferential treatment clearly are an unfair and unwarranted attack that does not serve the public interest and most certainly undermines the feeling some citizens could have for public life. And I suggest that those Hon. Members of the Opposition who are making these accusations and innuendoes are taking on a very heavy responsibility and they should have a guilty conscience for misleading the public in this way and for ruining the reputation of politicians who, Heaven knows, do not deserve to be treated in this way, for they have very difficult, exacting and demanding duties to carry out.

To conclude, therefore, I suggest that today's motion once again misses the point. I remind Hon. Members that in 1978 the Government had introduced a Bill respecting the independence of Parliament and conflicts of interest. At that time, the Opposition in its usual fashion, had not deemed necessary to let the Bill pass. The legislative calendar then was very heavy, just as it is today. There were then a great many good bills which died on the Order Paper because of filibustering by the Opposition. If that Bill had been adopted at the time, there would not be such a debate today.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to the Minister and his rather emotional and defensive defence, if I might be permitted to put it that way, over this very innocent and worthy motion we put forward for debate today. I cannot for the life of me understand what the concern is on the Government side. They rant and rave about this motion having something to do with an attack on the integrity of politicians on the Liberal side, yet the motion is very straightforward and simple. It makes no reference to Mr. Gillespie or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). It makes no reference to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). It makes no reference to Donald Macdonald, who took an appointment to the Board of Directors of McDonnell-Douglas Corporation within the two-year period when he was negotiating with the former Department of the Minister of Finance with respect to the F-18 aircraft. It makes no mention of Mr. Judd Buchanan with respect to his transaction in Banff

National Park and matters before the Treasury Board within two years of the time he was President of the Treasury Board.

We are not dealing with these various matters, but we have put this motion forward on the basis of answers received from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other Government Ministers as to the deficiencies in the conflict of interest guidelines. We have asked that the matter be referred to a committee. Now, what can be wrong with that? What can be wrong with a reference to a committee, especially when the Deputy Prime Minister, who has answered questions about the Coalgate matter and conflict of interest guidelines, back on July 17, 1973, said, with reference to conflict of interest legislation:

> What I consider to be central to the success of the others is the recommendation that a standing committee of each House be designated and charged with a permanent reference to investigate all questions of conflict of interest, to provide Members on request with advisory opinions and to advise the House on a regular basis of any changes which are needed in the rules governing conflict of interest.

These are not the words of the Opposition, they are the words of the Deputy Prime Minister, who now sits next to the Prime Minister of this country—

Mr. Ouellet: What year?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This was said in July, 1973.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair recognizes that a number of Hon. Members, especially on his own side, are seeking to be recognized.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will ask a question. It is just that I am amazed that this does not go through without debate.

Why is the Minister now so defensive about a straightforward reference to a committee dealing with the substance of conflict of interest? Is it that the Government has something to hide? Secondly, why does the Minister take a position diametrically opposed to that of the Deputy Prime Minister who supported a permanent reference of conflict of interest matters to a standing committee?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer this question from the Hon. Member. It is clear that the Government has absolutely nothing to hide, and if it had not been for this trick of Parliamentary procedure which the Opposition pulled at the very last minute last Friday afternoon, we would not be dealing with this motion which may jeopardize the Government's very existence. This is a motion dealing with conflicts of interest which could bring down the Government when it is put to a vote later today; it is imperative, therefore, that we, on the Government side, should vote against it. We have no choice. We are not quite as naive as Hon. Members opposite when they were in power to propose a vote and insist that such a vote could bring about the Government's demise. We are not going to vote in favour of our own downfall; we are, therefore, unable to accept the terms of the motion as moved with reference of the subject-matter of the motion to a Parliamentary committee, for it would bring the Government down.

That is the reason why we will vote against this motion. That notwithstanding, when the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) wants to know why we refuse to do what the Deputy Prime Minister had recommended in 1973, I must say to him that the circumstances now are quite different. In 1973, we had just received the Green Paper which had been tabled in the House on July 17, 1973, and which had to be considered in committee. That was the first time the Government was tabling a Green Paper on the subject, so it was quite in order to refer the subject-matter to a Parliamentary committee, which was done. However, the Hon. Member is trying to create—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! I am sorry but I have to interrupt the Hon. Minister, for several Hon. Members are anxious to direct questions to him.

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that this motion is an attack on the integrity of Liberal Cabinet Ministers. The motion was first drafted by the former President of the Privy Council, the Liberal Cabinet Minister, Mr. Sharp. Whom was he attacking?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I repeat that when the suggestion was made quite a while ago in this House, it involved introducing a Bill following publication of a Green Paper. This was suggested during a first discussion on this subject some time between February and May 1975. A first Bill, Bill C-62, was then introduced in the House of Commons, in June 1978, I believe. During the following session, this same piece of legislation was introduced again as Bill C-6 in October 1978. Obviously, as the Hon. Member has noted in his question, the subject had to be referred to a Committee for consideration, and the Bill was indeed referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections between February and May 1975.

This is why the proposal was justified at the time. At this time, it would not be justified to refer this question to a Committee when those who have spoken, the Leader of the Opposition as well as the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Once again, I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Minister. When questions are lengthy, answers may also be lengthy. However, the last question was rather brief and I want to recognize the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister is very sensitive. I doubt that he respects parliamentary traditions, but I may be wrong. He now has an opportunity to prove his good faith by agreeing to refer this motion to the Committee so that the guidelines may be examined. Why is he afraid?

Mr. Ouellet: I am certainly not afraid, Mr. Speaker. I think that it is the Opposition who is afraid because it had a choice. It did not have to call for a non-confidence vote. When the Opposition introduced the motion now under consideration, it could have ensured that there would not be a vote at the end of the debate today, and especially not a vote which might result in the fall of the Government. I do not think that the Canadian people will be fooled. The Hon. Member and her colleague for Saskatoon-West (M. Hnatyshyn) mentioned a few names earlier. They say that the motion does not refer to anyone in particular, but they still give names; they talk about Coalgate and give a whole list of former ministers. I call this a witch hunt and I believe that the Members opposite are afraid to be consistent, of going outside the House and making specific charges against certain individuals. To simply insinuate certain things does not take much courage. The Hon. Member has asked me why I am afraid. I shall ask her the same question: Why is she afraid? Let her rise and put her seat on the line and make a formal accusation against someone! We shall see whether she is afraid or not!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question period has now expired. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

• (1600)

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, the House has heard a number of comments on this important question which is the subject of a motion put by my party today, and therefore, following the comments made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), I should like to remind the House that there is indeed justification for bringing this motion forward today.

I do not think the purpose of this motion is to go over the so-called Gillespie affair again. However, considering what has been going on in the House for a number of months and especially in the last two or three weeks, I think in the light of this information, the Opposition had a duty to ask the questions it did on a subject which in fact was directly related to what are also known as the conflict of interest guidelines.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should recall how at first, the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources refused to answer any questions. Perhaps we should also recall that he misled his Prime Minister, and that as a result, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), misled the House. Excuses were made, and indeed, how easy it would be for anyone who wanted to do something wrong to excuse himself afterwards in the House. Sure, I stole this or that from you, but I am sorry, I needed it or may be I had some other reason. In the circumstances, I think we had a duty to put this question regarding the guidelines and the policy that were tabled by the Right Hon. Prime Minister himself.

Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians ought to know whether the Members of this House really intend to provide that credibility which Canadians have a right to expect. I think that is the question before the House today, and we are giving Hon. Members an opportunity to take part in the debate and to support a motion that would simply be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for an in-depth study, and the Committee would then formulate recommendations for the House. It should not be left up to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada. Furthermore, today, the guidelines and recent events have proved without a doubt that the Right Hon. Prime Minister is actually both judge and party to the case. Let him judge himself whether he should ask for or demand the resignation of a Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), who tells us that as far as he is concerned, it is a matter of conscience. Therefore, if the Minister who spoke earlier told the House that the public is not easily misled, that is absolutely true, and all this business will unfortunately make the Government lose its credibility and give the public the impression that politics is an unsavory profession.

To restore confidence in this institution so that it will get the respect it deserves and have the credibility it needs to govern the country and make it progress, we are presenting a motion that is entirely non-partisan. We are asking that this matter be referred to a Standing Committee of the House, where all three political parties will have an opportunity to make sensible recommendations so that it will not be left up to the Right Hon. Prime Minister to judge whether his Minister did or did not do wrong.

Depending on the importance of his Minister, the Prime Minister might not always give us the same opinion. Had the whole Gillespie affair involved a minister of State without portfolio, how long would the Prime Minister have stood by him? The general public has the right to wonder about that. We know perfectly well that due to the circumstances, everybody decided to back up the accused and reached the conclusion that it is a matter of conscience and that the guidelines are flexible enough to allow for some leeway in their application. One must realize, Mr. Speaker, that the people have not been fooled. We were right to keep at it during Question Period because the more questions we asked, the more we came to realize that something was wrong with the application of the guidelines. Members of the Liberal Party held that same view in the past. It was said earlier today that Mr. Sharp had let it be known at the time that he wished to propose a policy under which Parliament would have and would have been in a position to compel all former Ministers, all civil servants and Members of the Government to comply with the guidelines.

Today, we propose this motion and I do not think I am wrong when I say to the Minister who tells us that our motion automatically entails a non-confidence vote, that we did give the Government this morning the opportunity to waive the no-confidence aspect of the motion in order to avoid to put the Government in a difficult situation. We were ready to do it, as was the New Democratic Party, and with the unanimous consent of the House, we could have avoided that no-confidence motion in order to get the Government Members to vote in favour of the motion and refer the matter directly to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Government rejected that offer. The Minister neglected to say that earlier. The Government refused to waive the no-confidence aspect of the motion. In my opinion, if the Government had wanted to show some credibility and honesty vis-à-vis the people who are listening to us today, it would have accepted our proposal this morning. Therefore, Members who truly want to restore to this institution the credibility it deserves and to the respect they its Members deserve also, would have been given that opportunity.

In view of this refusal, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Government does not want to change its way of operating and that the Prime Minister still wants to assume responsibility for the enforcement of these guidelines. When we see all that is going on, Mr. Speaker who is going to believe and ask the public to believe that the Government deserves the confidence it is asking for today. It is outrageous, Mr. Speaker! We are simply asking that the matter be referred to an non-partisan committee which will make recommendations to the House that would come into force should someone act improperly or at least to make sure that Parliament is protected from any impropriety. That is the purpose of today's motion. It is very well drafted, in a non-partisan way. One has only to read it to feel the deep desire of the Progressive Conservative Party, today, to give the general public all the safeguards they are entitled to when it comes to the credibility and integrity of this Parliament.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I repeat once more that I shall support this motion without hesitation. I deeply regret that the Government has rejected the proposal that was made at the outset of the debate this morning, which would have allowed it to support this motion without jeopardizing its own future. In doing so, they would have proved that they were not afraid to give a mandate to the Standing Committee of privileges and elections with a view to establishing guidelines regarding conflicts of interest. The Government refused, Mr. Speaker. This refusal by the Government proves its bad faith. It does not want any committee to be responsible for establishing guidelines because they would be much less partisan than they are now, or at the very least, they would be assessed by a non-partisan committee and not by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada.

I have been in politics for over 15 years, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think that I could have any confidence in the Prime Minister of Canada if he were to guarantee that his guidelines would be applied in a non-partisan manner. It is impossible. We have seen certain things in this House. The fact is that we not only can, but must question certain actions of this Government. When I hear the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) complain and try to criticize the Opposition for its lack of objectivity or honesty, all I can say is that it is our duty to ask some questions and I shall never believe that the Government would expect the Opposition to stop raising controversial issues one fine day. It is our duty to do so to ensure that this country is well governed, and the results that we have seen both with regard to the administration and the behaviour of the Government towards certain individuals, urge us to be even more aggressive and demanding. I believe that the public want us and order us to be more particular about the administration and the judgments of this Government recently. This is why we introduced this motion, so that the Government may take some action if it truly wants this institution to regain the credibility that it is now losing because of the conduct of its Members.

Having in mind this objective that we all share in this House, we have introduced this motion so that the people may have confidence in this institution and in the men and women who have decided to work on the political scene. Of course, certain periods are more difficult than others for the Government, but if the Right Hon. Prime Minister had applied the rules as they were written at the proper time, Canadians would be able to trust this Government. However, the Right Hon. Prime Minister refused to apply the rules as he had said that he would. Instead, he has decided to be lenient to a Minister who lied to him in the House and misled him, because of which the Right Hon. Prime Minister had to recognize that he had himself misled Parliament. He said that he was sorry and washed his hands of the whole affair: "I said I was sorry and that is all there is to it."

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we have to be more exacting than that. If the Right Hon. Prime Minister is willing to allow his ministers to apply the rules as their conscience dictates, I for one cannot accept it and I do not believe that the Canadian people will accept that every Minister can apply the rules according to his own conscience. I believe that this kind of flexibility is unacceptable and reprehensible, and this is why we can no longer trust the people who govern this country. We are asking that the three political parties represented in this House and this Parliament can at least have their say about the implementation of the guidelines. What should the guidelines be? How can we make sure that there is no conflict of interest? That is important for the credibility and sound management of this country, and that is why once again we recommend that motion today because we were hoping that Hon. Members would find a way to refer this whole issue to a non-partisan Standing Committee. We have provided the Government with an opportunity to do just that, but they refused. Of course, we will be forced to challenge the Government by holding a vote later today, and that will justify Government Members to defeat our motion because otherwise they would be the architects of their own downfall! The one and only justification for the Government to reject our motion was to refuse that we delete the non-confidence feature of the motion. Had they accepted, we could have voted regardless of party lines and very objectively on the need to change the guidelines, and I am convinced that many Members on the other side are convinced as I am that they need to be changed. The Prime Minister can talk about changing the guidelines! But why all of a sudden does he agree to change the guidelines if we were wrong to raise questions on this issue for the past 15 days? I suggest that our attitude in the House forces the Prime Minister to say that he is prepared to make some changes. What would they be worth if the Prime Minister were to act as both judge and jury with respect to the implementation of those guidelines? People pass judgment on the attitude of the Prime Minister these past few days. Let him tell me that he will indeed change the guidelines! But if he maintains that only he can make recommendations concerning their implementation, that would not leave me any more confident than I was 15 days ago, and the people have absolutely no guarantee that such changes would restore the credibility we are seeking.

Therefore, if we are to have a thorough review of the application of these guidelines, we think it should be done by a Standing Committee of the House and that is why we are putting a motion to that effect today. We had hoped, and we shall continue to do so until the vote is held, that Hon. Members would understand the impact of this motion. It is a motion that is very important to all Canadians, a motion that is non partisan and whose aim is to restore the integrity and the credibility of Parliament and respect for the individuals who sit as Members of Parliament and represent their parties.

That is why we are putting this motion today. We thought the Government would have been serious, courageous and honest enough to accept our motion, in view of our aims and to provide Canadians with a profound sense of honesty and fairness. The Government has refused or will refuse, and at 5:45 p.m., Canadians will be the judge of the Government's actions, and we shall remind Canadians that the Government is entirely unwilling to take any kind of corrective action that might restore to Parliament the respect it deserves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Any questions? In that case, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Ethier) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is also my privilege to speak on the motion of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) which reads as follows:

> That the Standing Committee of Privileges and Elections be authorized to consider and make recommendations upon the subject matter of Ministers and conflict of interest; and public servants and conflict of interest.

I intend to restrict my comments to Ministers, Parliamentary Secretaries and their exempt staff, and individuals appointed by Governor in Council. I said that it was my privilege to speak on this subject, and I mean it sincerely. At last I have an opportunity to tell my fellow Canadians the alarm and dismay I feel with respect to the unjustified and often vicious attacks on the integrity of my fellow colleagues, colleagues who work tirelessly and assiduously in the service of Her Majesty's Government, often at a great sacrifice to their personal health and families.

The extent of this attack is unparalleled. Is the Canadian public really to believe that such honourable and distinguished Canadians as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), Alastair Gillespie, the late Robert Andras, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) and Norman Cafik are guilty of engaging in some as yet unknown dishourable activities? These men have devoted the main part of their lives to public duty.

It is my contention that the Opposition has deliberately misinterpreted the content and intent of the Government's conflict of interest and post-employment guidelines and has engaged in a ruthless, unfounded and unprecedented attack on the good character of both current and former Ministers of the Crown. I will leave it to others to speculate why, but I think it is obvious.

However, the Opposition has the effrontery to suggest that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections should both consider and make recommendations upon the subject matter of Ministers and conflict of interest guidelines. Why should the House even contemplate such an absurd suggestion? For the last month the House has heard allegations of wrong-doing by current and former Ministers of the Crown but not one scrap of evidence.

I submit that this House has had enough of these unwarranted and slanderous attacks. Referral of the guidelines to a committee at this stage would only continue this partisan charade and prolong the unnecessary suspicion and humiliation of innocent Ministers and their families.

If the Opposition is sincere in its suggestion, then I would suggest they participate fully in any of the committee hearings with respect to the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey). It is important that the House renew its confidence and that of the Canadian public in the basic integrity of all Members of Parliament. This integrity is the cornerstone of democracy and is absolutely essential to our Canadian system of Government. Parliament, and I say Parliament, must cleanse itself, and quickly, from any lingering image of shadowy or unscrupulous dealings that may have been created by the series of malicious and unfounded allegations. Further review by a parliamentary committee would lead to the continuation of virulent and partisan attacks on the integrity of public officials and further undermine the faith of Canadians in their democratic institutions.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Members of the Opposition Parties have deliberately misinterpreted the guidelines. In addition, they have repeatedly confused the requirements of present Ministers of the Crown with respect to the cooling off periods required of former Ministers. As Members of the Opposition should know, Ministers, Parliamentary Secretaries, Governor in Council appointees, public servants, and exempt staff members may not accord preferential treatment in relation to any official matter to relatives or friends or to organizations in which their relatives or friends have an interest. In addition, in any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

I would like to remind all Members that the guidelines do refer to official dealings with former office holders. They do not, as many of the Opposition spokesmen have continually tried to imply, prohibit contact with former office holders. The guidelines applying to employment and commercial activities of former Ministers were established pursuant to the principles set out in the conflict of interest guidelines and were to be applied in accordance with those principles and with the aim of protecting the individual liberty of former Ministers to the fullest extent possible.

The question of post-employment guidelines is a complex area, as I am sure other Members now realize, and involves the questions of judgment by both Ministers and Members. The prime requirement of Ministers, either former Ministers or those still in office, is that they must at all times ensure that they act and provide the appearance of acting in an impartial and objective manner. These principles are of vital importance in a parliamentary democracy, and I believe that all Ministers including. I sincerely hope, former Ministers of Conservative Governments, do take them seriously. However, what saddens me about the latest controversy is the low regard in which Members seem to hold the integrity of their fellow Members.

The guidelines prepared by the Government require interpretation by the individual involved and the ultimate onus is on the individual. It is an individual judgment, and it should be an individual judgment. The integrity of the individual, and particularly of the Member of Parliament, is the cornerstone of our present democracy. I do not believe that a parliamentary committee should be the forum of further unfounded attacks on the most fundamental principle of our system of Government.

I would contend that it is obvious that the Opposition has run out of steam and would like to establish a review of the conflict of interest guidelines by the parliamentary committee solely to engage in a scandalous and unproductive witch hunt. The Government has nothing to fear and nothing to hide but it can see no useful purpose in such a review. It is also well aware of the adverse impact that a review would have on the image of all Parliamentarians, but most important the attention of Members and of all the Canadian public would be diverted from our most vital problems, the economy and the unemployed. I and my colleagues do not feel that Canada deserves or can afford further diversions of the minds of its elected Parliament from the pressing problems of the day.

History will record this passage in the time of the House of Commons as an irresponsible and expensive waste of the taxpayers' money and of the opportunity to develop responsible programs and policies for all Canadians. There have been no improprieties, only unfounded, partisan and slanderous allegations.

All discussions were conducted openly. No pressure of any kind was ever exerted on officials, and most important, at no time were any former Ministers, whether Mr. Gillespie, Mr. Andras or Mr. Cafik, their partners or colleagues, treated any differently from the way any other citizens would have been.

I would also remind Members that in two of the recent allegations, those with respect to Mr. Gillespie and the late Bob Andras, provincial Governments were intimately involved in all the dealings, yet not once has the Opposition suggested preferential treatment on the part of the Provinces. I submit that in both these cases it was an Opposition tactic to take precious time from the House to tarnish reputations—

Mr. Lewis: You cannot tarnish Gillespie's reputation. It is impossible. He has done it himself.

Mr. Ethier: —while being protected by parliamentary immunity, and above all to draw the attention of the public in the hope of bolstering the image of one candidate in the leadership of the Tory Party, namely, the past Leader, the choice of the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The Opposition is engaging in political vaudeville. I would laugh, if I could, but when I think of my former colleague, the late Hon. Robert Andras, being deliberately defamed, I can feel only shame. What has this House come to? Members of Parliament attacking a former respected, honest and hard working colleague, strictly for political gains.

Mr. Nielsen: That was the media.

Mr. Ethier: I urge my fellow Members to stop this unnecessary scandalmongering and return to the country's business. We must restore the integrity of the House, which has been so long under attack, and confirm Canadian's longstanding support of their democratic institutions.

The Opposition has alleged over the last month that former Ministers have contravened the guidelines with respect to lobbying within the two-year time period. I would like to stress that the intent of the guidelines was that wrongdoing should be prevented, not that former Ministers should never receive information from their former Departments.

If the intent of the guidelines was "no contact" then that is what the guidelines would have said. In fact, the guidelines specifically refer to the line of conduct Ministers must observe "in any official dealings" with former office holders. Members should remember that the responsibility for policing the guidelines is solely individual conscience. There is no enforcement mechanism, nor should there be. It is not incumbent upon Ministers or Members of Parliament to question the moral integrity of their former colleagues. The integrity of the conscience of every individual Member of Parliament is the cornerstone of our parliamentary democracy, and I cannot accept that this integrity is in any way eroded upon leaving Parliament.

I believe that our policies with respect to former Ministers are sound. May I quote from the Prime Minister's letter to Ministers on October 18, 1976, which was tabled in the House of Commons on December 17, 1976 with the draft guidelines. It reads:

> The new policy reflects the delicate balance that we have struck between our desire, on the one hand, to respect the right of the individual to use his or her knowledge and abilities for economic gain and personal development and, on the other hand, the requirement of protecting the right of the public to have reasonable assurance that the public interest will not suffer in the process. In adopting this policy, we have been keenly aware of the fact that measures designed to remove every opportunity to act unwisely would require a severe reduction of the traditional rights enjoyed by all Canadians, and place us in jeopardy of losing the spirit, competence and perhaps even the integrity itself of the Canadian public service, which have been so painstakingly nurtured over the years.
> We must also avoid the danger of reducing the public benefit which results from the movement of individuals among the various sectors of society—governmental, commercial, industrial, academic and professional. The real concern and focus of our policy is to protect the integrity of government service, and to prevent private exploitation of the public trust.

Many may interpret the Opposition's criticisms as a plea for the prohibition of all contact between Ministers and former Ministers. I would ask all Members to consider what kind of Parliament would result from the implementation of such guidelines. Only the most independent and wealthy individuals could stand for public office under such strict regulations. The pressures to retain office would be inordinate, to the consequent detriment of our system of Government. Perhaps the Opposition would favour such a development, but I personally find it repugnant.

In a true democracy, the elected representatives should be drawn from all walks of life and not the privileged few. Surely my colleagues on both sides of the floor realize the magnitude of the personal and family sacrifices involved in political life. I would humbly suggest that those of a Cabinet Minister are even higher in terms of the demands for work and time. Now more than ever Canada needs its ablest minds in Cabinet. Can we afford to put even further limits and impose greater sacrifices on these individuals? I say no.

There should never be preferential treatment for former office holders, Ministers, Parliamentary Secretaries, the Ministers' exempt staff and senior Governor in Council appointees, but surely they cannot be denied the basic right of Canadian citizens to access to the federal Government. The present guidelines adequately protect the public interest during any period of contact with the Government. I cannot envisage any workable system of the type implied by Opposition critics that would prohibit contact of any kind.

I would suggest that if the Hon. Leader of the Opposition or the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) were at least serious about their motion, they would have consulted the Government House Leader. If they were in fact serious about the suggestion they made at the opening of today's debate, they would have contacted someone in our Party. They chose instead to bring this motion on the floor of the House in the form of a non-confidence motion. That is how we will deal with it, and we will put an end to this witch hunt which seems to be the sole preoccupation of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Knowing the limited knowledge the Hon. Member for Yukon has on economic matters, perhaps that justifies his continual witch hunting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions?

Mr. Blenkarn: Would the Parliamentary Secretary tell us what he is asking for? He said that Parliament must cleanse itself, and then he said that the Government has nothing to fear and nothing to hide. If that is the case, why would the House not approve of this motion? This motion is in exactly the same terms as the one put to the House in 1974 by a former and respected Member of the House, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp.

If the Government has nothing to fear and nothing to hide, and if Parliament must cleanse itself, why would the House not want this matter to go to committee to be dealt with there? Or, is there something to hide?

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, I think I anticipated that question and I answered it before I sat down. I told them that they did not have the decency to consult with anyone in our Party before presenting that motion of non-confidence. That is how it will be treated, as a non-confidence motion.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the terms of the motion are identical to the motion that the Government itself put to the House in the past. Surely it is unusual for the Opposition to suggest to the Government to vote as if this was not a non-confidence motion. Does the Government insist upon this being a non-confidence motion? We are prepared to treat this motion as not being one on a matter of confidence.

The Parliamentary Secretary must have something to hide because he is quite at liberty to vote against it. We will not treat this matter as a matter of confidence.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, I find that difficult to understand. We have to keep repeating our view, but they never seem to understand or want to understand. They could have brought this matter up on any other Opposition day without its being a motion of confidence. The Opposition chose to proceed in this manner and we are now dealing under their rules. I find it very strange—the House Leader smiles—

Mr. Nielsen: I am not the House Leader.

Mr. Ethier: The Canadian public knows by now his ability to come to the House and play these tricks. But I do not think that we will buy it.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary tell me, since the House unanimously passed their motion on December 10, 1974, and they are now objecting to passing their motion which was not dealt with after it was passed by the House, why the Government is objecting to passing it unanimously on this occasion? What has changed between then and now?

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, nothing has changed. It is the way it was introduced today by the Leader of the Opposition. Let him introduce it on any other way and we will see what we do then. But introducing it as a non-confidence motion is inviting us to the gallows.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Hon. Member used the word "absurd" in relation to this motion, stating that it was an absurdity to have it presented. He presumably supported the motion when it was introduced by Mr. Sharp because it was passed unanimously. Did he support a motion eight years ago that he now thinks is absurd and is now voting against? Which side is he on?

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Hon. Member is putting words into my speech that I did not use. I did not use the word "absurd" as to the motion.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. I gather from what he said that because Cabinet Ministers work so hard and sacrifice so much, there is no difficulty with their contacting other sitting Cabinet Ministers after they have finished their tour of duty, either voluntarily or involuntarily. Is the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary saying that there is no problem with contacting sitting Cabinet Ministers and negotiating deals? I almost brought out the violins when he was saying how they sacrificed.

Every Member sacrifices in the House. Hon. Members realize the sacrifices they must make, and they should not be treated any differently from the honest businessman who is trying to get a contract with the Government to proceed with a project which he may have.

Is he telling me that there is nothing wrong with a Cabinet Minister contacting other Cabinet Ministers, especially because they worked so hard and are special? Is that what he was trying to say in his speech?

Mr. Ethier: I said that every Member of Parliament works very hard and their jobs are demanding on their families and themselves. I said that these demands are even greater on Cabinet Ministers. I would say that again.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, due to the Parliamentary Secretary's experience in the Chair, I am sure that he will realize that no suggestion can be made on the debate of a non-confidence motion until it is called. For that reason we immediately agreed with the NDP, in the interest of having this matter examined so that the reputations of reputable people like Mr. Gillespie can be untarnished, that it be examined in committee. Since this was the Government's motion back in 1974, and it has not changed at all, what we on this side cannot understand is why the Government is stonewalling attempts for the truth to come out.

Mr. McDermid: Cover-up.

Mr. Ethier: I find it very strange that the House Leader of the Opposition, himself, gets into this matter, asking these questions. I say, in all courtesy, that he is the one who should have called the House Leader for our Party over the weekend. He could have called him and suggested what he is suggesting this morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: I am not rising on a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blais: I would like to ask a question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for—I recognize the Minister of Supply and Services.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether he, in effect, is not aware of the fact that today is basically the end of the Supply period. On this day, the Opposition is permitted to present a non-confidence motion in accordance with the rules. In effect, that non-confidence motion must be voted upon, and if it is not, we are, of course, infringing the rules. Under the circumstances, is he not aware of the fact that—

Mr. Blenkarn: Nonsense.

Mr. Blais: —that if the Opposition motion, in effect, is voted and if the Opposition wins that particular vote for one reason or another, then the Government must resign?

Mr. Blenkarn: Not so. There is supply to vote after, and that is the non-confidence.

Mr. Ethier: I understand it quite well, no one understands it more than the Leader of the Opposition or the House Leader of the Opposition, and that is why the Opposition brought it in this morning.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the distinguished Parliamentary Secretary, who has occupied the Chair so often in the past, readily admit to me that he is having his leg pulled a mile by the Minister who just spoke? Because, as he well knows, and I am asking him to agree with me, if the Government side consented, as requested by the Leader of the NDP, and it was agreed to by us, the provisions of Standing Order 62(9) could be suspended. That was the purpose in asking for consent, and the Government side is refusing that consent. Please tell us that the Minister is all wet.

Mr. Blais: No, he is not. He is as dry as anything.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Leader of the Opposition is all wet. We will not fall into the games that he wants to play and the tricks that he brought in this morning, and we will be a responsible Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): I have been following the debate today with some interest. I want to address my remarks to some of the questions which have been raised by Government Members, in particular by the apologists for the Government who oppose, and I think in an unthinking way, a very serious and very straightforward proposition, that is to say, that the House of Commons be given a mandate, through its Committee on Privileges and Elections, to review the present state of conflict of interest guidelines which were first brought down as a result of parliamentary inquiry, investigation and reference by this House ten years ago.

On a number of occasions we have attempted, as a Party and as individuals in the Opposition, to make this request. The Parliamentary Secretary who just spoke said that there should have been consultation as to whether the motion should go through as a matter of consent between the Parties. On different occasions, the question was asked in Question Period of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) as to whether or not they would consider a reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. On each occasion, the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister refused to agree to that during the course of Question Period.

Therefore, there was only one course of action which could be taken by any responsible Opposition which felt that the honour and dignity of this institution were at stake with respect to these important matters involving conflict of interest, that is, to bring forward a motion on the first available Opposition day. We went further this morning, when the Leader of the New Democratic Party stood in his place and suggested that unanimous consent of the House be obtained. We sought such unanimous consent, and we in the House agreed that the motion would not be taken as being a motion of confidence, and would thus allow every Hon. Member, including those on the Government side, to vote in favour of the motion without any fear of the Government falling as a result of its passage. That has been denied, not by this Party, because we have agreed, through our House Leader—

Mr. Nielsen: Nor by the NDP.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —nor by the New Democratic Party, not by the backbenchers of the Government Party, but, rather, by Government Ministers. They were the ones who stood up and blocked this very reasonable reference—

Mr. Riis: That's right.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —of a motion to a committee.

Mr. Nielsen: It was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Riis: A shameful act.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Blais), that great defender of integrity and politicians. He was the one who said, "Nay".

Mr. Nielsen: Maybe he wanted to call for advice.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I say that it was tantamount to contempt of Parliament for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to have taken that position.

I also want to point out that it is important that we have a review at this time—

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blenkarn: You will get an opportunity at the end of the speech to ask questions.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. gentleman, in accusing a Minister of contempt of Parliament, is behaving in a way which the Chair ought not to accept. Indeed, those are very serious allegations which ought not to be made lightly. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman withdraw that statement.

Mr. Lewis: Nonsense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to indicate what was visually obvious to the House, that is, that I have just taken my place in the Chair following the departure of the Deputy Speaker. While I was being seated, I did not hear the Hon. Member's remarks. I would have some concern over an accusation that an Hon. Member has attempted to make before the House. However, before I go further, I would say that it is only a concern and not to be considered as a ruling.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for this institution. When I say one has contempt for the institution, if I believe that to be the case, I do not believe that that is an unparliamentary term. If I believe that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has shown contempt for this institution by the position he has taken on this issue, that is a strong contention on my part. If it is unparliamentary, I will certainly withdraw it—

Mr. Nielsen: No, it is a contemptible position.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —because I respect this institution and everything for which it stands as being the last court of appeal for the people of Canada against arbitrary action on the part of a Government supported by a majority.

Mr. McDermid: Say it again.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I want to make the observation that everyone publicly agrees that there are many good reasons for conflict of interest guidelines. The Prime Minister has spoken in very high terms on why there should be guidelines for Cabinet Ministers. He has mentioned this in the House and repeated it outside the House. In addition, all Hon. Members on this side of the House fully subscribe to that view. It is fundamental, going to the roots of the faith we have in our elected officials, the way in which they conduct official business and the way mistakes are dealt with if they are covered up by the Opposition or, indeed, by the press.

The fact is that if there are weaknesses in that system of guidelines, then it is incumbent on us, as Members of the House of Commons, to consider in a committee of the House ways in which these guidelines can be made more effective. Let me just make a couple of points as to why we should have these guidelines and where they are defective.

They are defective, as I see it, on the basis of debate which has taken place, particularly as they relate to former office holders. One reason is that we have seen instances of communications, of dealings between former office holders, former Cabinet Ministers, and their former Departments. I mention a couple only by way of examples, not that I am trying to make this a personal reference. However, the fact is that these are cases in point.

Mr. Donald Macdonald was Minister of Finance before his resignation. The guidelines stated that there should be no dealings with one's former Department for a two year period. Within a period of two years of his resignation, Mr. Donald Macdonald was placed on the Board of Directors of the McDonnell Douglas Corporation, which was involved in negotiating the fighter aircraft contract with the federal Government. A major player in the negotiations with respect to the awarding of that contract was the Department of Finance. What was wrong with Members of the Opposition at that time raising questions as to whether there was a breach of the conflict of interest guidelines respecting a former office holder?

In the case of Alastair Gillespie, which we have recently gone through, a similar situation obtained. There is no question as to the facts. Mr. Gillespie was in touch with his former Department, clearly dealing with Government assistants in putting his promotion through, which led him to a profit situation. He profited from the transaction. He profited from moneys being paid to the consortium. I do not draw any conclusion. I am only saying that these are former office holders who have clearly, on the face of it, breached the conflict of interest guidelines.

We asked the Prime Minister what he could do about the situation. The Prime Minister said he could do nothing. The question is very simple: what should we be doing? Should we review the situation as to how to handle breaches of the conflict of interest guidelines by former office holders? The answer to any reasonable observer of the scene should be, yes, there should be an opportunity to look at them.

The second consideration may well be this: is it good enough under the present circumstances for the matter to be left completely at the discretion of the Prime Minister whenever there is an allegation or charge made of conflict of interest breaches? The Prime Minister and the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), who started off for the Government side on this motion, argue that that is the way our system works, it is the way it should be, and it should be left with the Prime Minister to decide whether there have been any breaches and what action should be taken with respect to current office holders.

These same arguments were used with respect to the whole concept of freedom of information, the concept that the Government will be judged on its actions as to whether it releases information to the public, that if people are unhappy with the way the Government deals with the matter, they will vote against it. In every election there is an opportunity for Canadians to exercise their franchise with respect to how the Government operated while in power. It was only after very diligent pursuit by the Opposition that the Government finally agreed to the concept of an independent judicial or quasi-judicial officer who would be able to pass judgment as to whether or not Government documents would be released to the citizens of this country.

This is an analogous situation. It is something that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections could consider. Do we now require an independent officer who can receive complaints with respect to conflict of interest situations and have the full power and ability, quite independently of the Government, to investigate those charges?

What is wrong with that kind of situation, analogous as it is to the freedom of information legislation? There is nothing wrong with it. I find a growing feeling among the public that the time has now come to have a very close review of the guidelines and the sanctions available or not available, as well as the question of whether legislation should or should not be introduced.

What can be wrong, after an experience of some ten years following the time when the matter was first raised, for a standing committee to be given the authority to review what is happening? I direct my remarks to the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) because he raised these questions in an earlier part of this debate. I will give him some examples of questions that could be considered by the Standing Committee on Elections and Privileges.

First, should there be an independent quasi-judicial official established by legislation to deal with these matters? Second, what are the sanctions that can be applied in terms of former office holders if they do breach the guidelines? Third, should we consider legislation to deal with sanctions that should take place if there is a breach of the guidelines by current office holders? That will be a fairly full plate for any standing committee. It is germane and legitimate.

As I indicated, this debate follows an episode which, in my opinion, can only be described as a flagrant breach of the Prime Minister's own guidelines. I referred earlier to Donald Macdonald, Alastair Gillespie and Judd Buchanan who was involved in dealings with the Banff National Park. It involved negotiations with Treasury Board of which he was President, and it was within a two-year period. I am not charging any illegality, but the guidelines say that there should be no perception of preferred access or treatment with Government Departments by a former office holder.

How could any of us, or in fact any citizen of Canada, have these matters addressed? The only way for them is to write to the Prime Minister and say they think it is wrong. If the Prime Minister replies that he has considered the matter and does not agree with them, that is the end of it under the present system. Do Members on the Government side understand that this is not a question of partisanship, a question of the Liberal Party versus the Conservative Party or New Democratic Party?

Circumstances change. Indeed, it is my expectation, based on the very sound advice I get from the people of Canada, that after the next election, the Conservatives will be sitting on the Government side and the Liberals will be sitting here. That does not make the argument any less relevant. In fact, it is more relevant. We should be accountable. The highest standards should apply to any Government in which I serve. I say that regardless of which side of the House we are on.

There are other examples of cases that have arisen with respect to former office holders in particular. I will not name them. Quite apart from the situation that we have, there is some serious question about the activities of current office holders.

It is time to look at where we are going in terms of morality in Government, the question of whether a Government can, with impunity, reward its friends through a system of turning the other cheek when former office holders come back to deal with their former Departments. That time has long since passed. The people of Canada will not tolerate that kind of activity. They want Parliament to address this matter. There are no names attached to this motion. It allows the committee to deal with the matter in a very dispassionate way in order to see exactly what steps should be taken.

There have been other examples of committees of this House which have worked very well. The Select Committee on Procedure and Organization is doing an excellent job. It is now attempting to bring our rules up to date to suit these modern times. It is acting as a group, considering what should be done, and making representations and recommendations to the House. The same can be said for the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. This motion would allow that Committee to see what we should be doing in terms of conflict of interest. Indeed, it would be following a fine tradition.

Some ten years ago we had the consent of the whole House to refer this same said subject matter to the Committee. The Parliamentary Secretary who spoke before me was in the House at that time and his name is recorded in the vote on that issue. We did not hear him stand up at that time to say to Mr. Sharp, the then Government House Leader, that he did not agree with him because he thought it was a shoddy business and might affect the reputation of some members of Cabinet. At that time he said "ready, aye, ready", as did all Liberals. He did not say anything in the House.

I do not understand why Government Members who have supported the concept of more power for individual Members of Parliament do not take advantage of the offer now being made available to them. It would make this House, both Members and Cabinet Ministers, more accountable for their actions. They could speak independently rather than under the threat of the Government whip. They have the suggestion of the House Leader of the NDP who said he was prepared to move with unanimous consent to have this matter regarded as a non-confidence motion.

I would like simply to deal with a couple of aspects with respect to the background of this matter in order to make abundantly clear what has transpired in the history of this matter, so there can be no misunderstanding as to where we are today in terms of parliamentary history in Canada. Hon. Members will remember that on July 17, 1973, a statement was made by the President of the Privy Council, the present Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs, with respect to conflict of interest of Members of Parliament when he tabled a Green Paper entitled, "Members of Parliament and Conflict of Interest". On July 18, 1973, the Prime Minister made a statement regarding conflict of interest in relation to Cabinet Ministers, at which time he urged the House to consider this matter through reference to committee, indicating his intention to bring forward conflict of interest guidelines at that time with respect to Cabinet Ministers. On December 18, 1973, the Prime Minister made a further statement on guidelines for public servants and Order in Council appointees. On December 9, 1974, the then President of the Privy Council, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, had an agreement with the Opposition House Leaders, through a proposed special order, relating to the allotted day of December 10, 1974, on conflict of interest. The proposal received unanimous consent of the House. That motion, Mr. Speaker, was identical, couched in absolutely identical terms, to the one we are now debating today. So that December 10, 1974, was the allotted day under Standing Order 58(10), when the Green Paper was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the Committee was asked to make recommendations with respect to Ministers and conflict of interest and public servants and conflict of interest. The wording is identical. The motion was adopted by all Parties of the House.

On June 10, 1975, the Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, Mr. Speaker, yourself, that is to say the present occupant of the Chair, presented a fifth report to the House of Commons endorsing the principles set forth in the Green Paper and recommending the proposal, subject to amendments in the fifth report.

The committee sat from February 20, 1975 to June 4, 1975. In July, 1976 the Senate Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee made a report to that body. On June 26, 1978, Bill C-62 was introduced in the House and given first reading. On October 16, 1978, Bill C-6, the Independence of Parliament and Conflict of Interest of Senators and Members of the House of Commons Act, was introduced at first reading. It was the revised Bill C-62. On March 8, 1979, Bill C-6 received second reading.

That is the chronology, Mr. Speaker. As we stand now, the matter has never been resolved with respect to the whole question of conflict of interest. It is still a current topic which is extant, still before us, never finally resolved, and is a matter which I believe this Committee, indeed, should take seriously.

As there was willingness in 1974 to deal with this issue, let there be willingness again today. It is a subject of immense importance to Parliament and Parliamentarians, for if this House is to have any meaning or any relevancy, it must be able to scrutinize the executive and draw the rules under which Ministers of the Crown conduct their affairs. As I have indicated before, today it affects Liberal Ministers; tomorrow it will be Ministers from this side of the House. In that sense, when it comes before Committee it will not be a particularly partisan issue, but undoubtedly will be treated with the same degree of concern and co-operation as the current committee on parliamentary reform. We on this side of the House have again sacrificed another Opposition Day to this issue, as we did in 1974, and I urge Government Members to accept this motion as we have presented it today.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who has just spoken is a Member of the select Committee on Procedure and Organization, as he has indicated, and, therefore, is very well aware of the Standing Orders of this House. I believe it is quite appropriate to put the question to him since the motion proposed today has been proposed under Standing Order 62(9), dealing with non-confidence motions, and since Standing Order 62(9) clearly states:

On the last day appointed for proceedings on a no-confidence motion—

The vote shall be proceeded with forthwith. If the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West is sincere, and if the other speakers from his Party who preceded him are sincere, why did they not put today's motion under Standing Order 62(11)?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question because it gives me an opportunity again to reiterate a point which I made. First, we attempted through the Question Period and other opportunities to get the agreement of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister to have this reference to the Committee made without the necessity of a debate on an allotted day.

Second, this motion was brought forward in reaction to a refusal by the Government, and it was the only method which we had as the Official Opposition to indicate our strong feelings that the Government was wrong and that it was a matter of confidence, as far as we were concerned, because it was so serious.

Third, we did not propose that the House agree. We did not initiate the proposal that the House agree by unanimous consent to waive the motion under Standing Order 62(9). Indeed, it was the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) who stood in his place on a point of order and asked the House for a waiver of that particular rule for the purposes of this debate. At that time there was quick consultation by Hon. Members of this side of the House. Our House Leader, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), stood on behalf of the Conservative Party and said that we were prepared to agree to the proposal put by the Leader of the NDP. It was then up to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), who refused that unanimous consent, as well as the Minister of State for International Trade, who was the first Government speaker.

Mr. Herbert: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, whatever agreement was made, we have a Standing Order, and the Standing Order is quite clear. On Friday of last week, the Official Opposition decided to pursue today's proceedings under Standing Order 62(9). Whatever the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) might have suggested, it was not he who was responsible for proposing today's motion under Standing Order 62(9). That was the choice of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I repeat again, if that Party was sincere in what it was saying today, why was today's motion not proposed under Standing Order 62(11)?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speak at cross purposes. I am trying to deal squarely and precisely with the question raised by the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil. The point is this: this is the final Opposition day in this period of supply. We were obliged to bring forward the motion under that rule because it did require a vote.

Mr. Herbert: Why?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is the last opportunity in a supply period. That is a technicality which we, as it turned out, on the suggestion on the New Democratic Party, were quite prepared to overlook and not hold the Government to confidence on this particular vote. There are other opportunities where we will pursue our right to bring the Government down. In this instance, we thought the matter would be of such importance and of such relevance and of such a non-partisan nature, we were prepared to accept and agree with the proposal made by the Leader of the NDP.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, just to conclude this point, Standing Order 62(9) says:

—not more than two Opposition motions shall be no-confidence motions against the Government.

Therefore, the Opposition has the choice to let one non-confidence motion go. Today's motion did not need to be called under 62(9).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, all I can do again is just repeat myself. Maybe the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil and I should exchange memos on this very learned point. All I can tell him is that I have great faith in the House Leader of my Party and in the mover of this motion, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen), that if there was any way they could have made it easier for the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil to vote for it, they would have done so. But they were obliged by the rules to bring in this motion in the form in which it was. If that is not clear to the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil, I can make another couple of suggestions; he can absent himself from the House if it is causing him too much humiliation to have to oppose this most reasonable motion, as many of his colleagues can, and let the matter go through and we will have an election. But we do not want to cause him that trouble. We want the matter dealt with, and that is why we are doing what we are doing today and being very reasonable to boot.

• (1710)

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, they repeat and repeat all day that we can vote for this motion and that would not be considered a vote of confidence. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), said, you could have introduced the motion as other than a vote of confidence. But you chose to do it this way, and I think you have been misleading Canadians all day. I asked a while ago if Hon. Members were sincere in their motion. I would ask them now if they are honest in that motion. Tell the Canadian people exactly what it is. In voting for the motion, you are voting to defeat the Government. It is a vote of confidence. Say it in those terms. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is saying it is.

Mr. Blenkarn: We are not voting to defeat the Government. We will defeat you on the Estimates.

Mr. Ethier: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is saying the same.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I do not have a blackboard because I would like to put it down in writing. If anyone over there is listening and able to understand simple logic, what we are saying in the proposal put forward is that we can accomplish anything with unanimous consent. As a former Deputy Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary knows that. By unanimous consent we can agree to anything in any procedure we want to. What has happened is that an opportunity was proposed by the NDP, agreed to unanimously by Members of the Official Opposition, for this motion to not be a vote of confidence. A vote would be taken, and if the motion was carried, it would not be considered a vote of confidence in the Government.

I just want to explain one more thing. The Parliamentary Secretary will remember, because he was sitting in his place watching all this, that much to my surprise and probably to the surprise of thousands of Canadians who were watching, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs refused to give unanimous consent, as did the Minister of State for International Trade. It was not indeed anyone on this side of the House, but rather Government Members themselves who refused the opportunity of carrying on with this vote so it would not be a vote of confidence. We did our best, we tried to make it easy for Members on the Government side, but unfortunately their leaders have let them down again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) in debate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, they are going to like what I am going to say because this motion is a motherhood statement, and everyone knows that. Please do not tell me that anyone in this House would dare vote against this mouthful of motherhood. Just listen to it, Mr. Speaker:

> That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to consider and make recommendations upon the subject-matter of Ministers and conflict of interest; and public servants and conflict of interest.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask you who in his right mind, what self-respecting Parliamentarian could be against that particular mouthful of motherhood?

Mr. Blenkarn: You are.

Mr. Simmons: I am. I am against it.

Mr. Blenkarn: You are not self respecting.

Mr. Simmons: I will tell you why I am against it, Mr. Speaker. It is because I know a Trojan horse when I see one, even a clumsily built Trojan horse. I can recognize even a poorly crafted Trojan horse when I see one.

Mr. Lewis: Did one kick you in the arm?

Mr. Simmons: This motion gives itself away, Mr. Speaker, by its very simplicity and sweet innocence. The whole purpose of the motion, we are told, is to have a nice, civil, academic exercise about conflict of interest as it relates to Ministers and public servants. Do they think we are too green to burn over here, Mr. Speaker? Do they really expect us to believe that elementary nonsense? That clumsy obfuscation, that transparent doubletalk from the Tories today, do they really expect us to believe that?

Now, who is the author of this motion, Mr. Speaker? Who is the carpenter foreman who built this Trojan horse? None other than the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen), the Hon. Member for Yukon. The kneecapper. Old "kneecapsen" himself. We know his record in this House, his self-appointed smear assignment, his lifelong crusade to undermine, to drag in the mud, to tear to shreds the good reputation of any who dare to call themselves Liberals. That in his eyes is their crime, their only crime. The only required crime. We are asked to believe that the Hon. Member for Yukon crafted this innocent sounding motion for innocent reasons. Of that, Mr. Speaker, he is totally incapable. He is totally incapable of crafting this motion for innocent reasons. That would be absolutely out of character for the Hon. Member for Yukon. Let us see this motion for what it is, for what the Leader of the Opposition intends it to be, a licence to conduct another witchhunt, to unleash the venom, the bile of the Hon. Member for Yukon in the guise of a study by a parliamentary committee.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I for one will not give him consent to do that. I will not acquiesce. I will not aid and abet his vicious and voracious appetite for jugulars. If he has charges to make, let him make them like a man. I invite him to contain his invective. I appeal to him to put a lid on his cowardly and unprincipaled innuendo.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Simmons: I appeal to him to stop the low theatrics and to allow the legitimate work of this House to proceed. What the Opposition is asking for in this motion is a kangaroo court.

Mr. Blenkarn: Payola to continue.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What have you got against Australians?

Mr. Simmons: I cannot oblige the Opposition's request because I do not believe in kangaroo courts and I will not be part of one. I tell the Leader of the Opposition and his merry band over there that the lynch mobs went out over a century ago. They may want to turn back the clock a hundred years or more but they cannot expect my blessing to do so.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the most touching moment today was when the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) decided to participate in the debate. Old sweet innocence himself, the Hon. Member for Joliette. This is the same fellow who said, when he was in Government in 1979, that he would see to it that the Tories would get all the gravy. He would see to it that the Tories got preferred treatment. He would ensure—and he said this publicly because I have the clipping if someone would like to check my facts—that the Tories in Quebec got all the Government goodies. Today, Mr. Speaker—he stands for impartiality. He is on the side of truth and fairness today. He is on the side of academic purity. How perfectly touching. How completely heart-rending.

Now, Mr. Speaker, who is this honourable crowd, these crusading Tories who are suddenly seized by a concern for conflict of interest guidelines? Who are they? They include my good friend, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). When he was Minister in the Government of 1979 he told his Prime Minister publicly that he could not live with the guidelines.

Mr. McDermid: But he did.

Mr. Simmons: He said he had no intention of doing so. He stuck by his word and did not live by them.

Some Hon. Members: He did.

An Hon. Member: Who are they?

Mr. Simmons: My good friend, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) may not like the truth, but I would ask him to check the record. I have the clippings. The Hon. Member for St. John's West said he would not abide by the guidelines, and did not do so.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is deliberately misleading the House. The Hon. Member for St. John's West in fact—

Mr. Pinard: Withdraw that.

Mr. McDermid: —did live by the guidelines.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I thought the Hon. Member rose on a point of order to question the issue of parliamentary language. Unfortunately, if that was his intention, he began his comments with unparliamentary language as well.

It is with regret that I have to advise the Hon. Member that he should withdraw the expression "deliberately misleading". I shall then recognize him for the point of order.

Mr. McDermid: Thank you for the correction, Mr. Speaker. I do withdraw those words, but the Hon. Member is misleading the House. The Hon. Member for St. John's West did in fact live by the guidelines.

Mr. Simmons: As you will clearly see, Mr. Speaker, it is my word against that of the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown.

Mr. McDermid: It is your word against the record.

Mr. Simmons: Perhaps we could leave it at that, Mr. Speaker, because that speaks for itself.

Mr. Blenkarn: Tell us where he broke the guidelines.

Mr. Simmons: These crusaders for the conflict of interest rules include my good friend, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), who also said publicly at the time that he was going to have real difficulty living by the guidelines.

Mr. Blenkarn: But he did.

Mr. Simmons: Those crusaders include the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) who had some real reservations about the guidelines.

Mr. McDermid: But he did live by them.

Mr. Simmons: Those same crusading Tories who are now seized with concern for conflict of interest guidelines, a concern they have come to very lately—

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh, no!

Mr. Simmons: —include my good friend, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), who said publicly at the time that he would have to rethink his whole commitment to public life if he were to be obliged to live by the guidelines brought in by the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) who was then the Prime Minister. These are some of the people—

Mr. Blenkarn: Who live by those guidelines.

Mr. Simmons: —who today want to point fingers. The jig is up, Mr. Speaker.

I ask the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) to compare notes with the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who spent the last 20 minutes of what was, for the most part, a very good speech, saying that he was all for sweet innocence, for a non-partisan approach. He said that finger-pointing was not part of his approach. The Hon.

Member for Mississauga South has just said, for the record, that he is for finger-pointing.

Mr. Blenkarn: At you.

Mr. Simmons: He is for looking for skeletons in closets and is for dragging them out in public. He is for conjuring up wrongdoings.

Mr. Blenkarn: Tell us where they broke the guidelines, you muckraker.

Mr. Simmons: If the Hon. Member for Mississauga South does not agree with me, then I am pleased. The day I say things that he agrees with I will be in deep, deep trouble.

My good friend from Saskatoon West gave what I thought was a rather good speech. Although I do not agree with many of the points he made, I listened with interest to what he had to say. He said that this is not a partisan issue for him. That is the calibre of man that makes this House worth-while. Even behind a hideous motion such as this there are people like him who are prepared to divorce themselves from finger-pointing and skeleton-hunting. He is prepared to say what really is on his mind. I think it took great courage for the Hon. Member to divorce himself from the despicable intent of the motion.

For the record, he said that he was not for a partisan approach to this particular subject. Where was he during the past month or so when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) was doing exactly that? In very partisan fashion he was off on another of his search and destroy missions. That Hon. Member had few qualms about whether the issue was going to be partisan or not. Once again we find that the Tory Party embraces so many different points of view—those who are for something and those who are against something, those who like finger-pointing and those who do not. It is a great Party. I would not want to belong to it, though.

Mr. Lewis: No chance!

Mr. Simmons: They can hold the invitation, Mr. Speaker. I am not going over there. They can hold their breath.

I say to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West that his professed naivete on this motion does him no credit at all. While he spoke from a sincere heart saying that he did not want the partisan approach, he should realize that he is surrounded by a bunch of professional with-hunters. They have spent so much time in opposition that they are not comfortable unless they are calling others names or impugning the reputation of someone. As long as they can make charges and use innuendo or invective, they never let the facts stand in the way of an accusation.

We are spending another whole day on this when thousands of Canadians are looking to us to address the job situation in the country. But the Tories are playing the same old, tired game. They are hallucinating again about skeletons in closets. Such hallucinating, such spiteful daydreaming, such clumsy plotting does nothing about the real problems in the country. There are the problems of the unemployed, the problems of housing needs, the problems of poverty, and they are passing up the opportunity to do something about these things. Their priorities are as badly mixed up today as they were in Winnipeg. They would rather hunt skeletons than solutions.

The old lynch-mob approach to politics and to life went out a long time ago in this country—except for the Tory Party. There it is alive and well, as the Hon. Member for Yellowhead must know. Because they have practised dissecting people in their own Party, is that justification enough for the country as a whole to be subjected to the same kind of despicable performance day in and day out? Do they have an over-all objective? Is there something that motivates them other than hate? Is there something that keeps them ticking, other than a passion to destroy or drag people's reputation in the mud? Do they all get their jollies from contriving some new and warped way to destroy innocent people?

Mr. Lewis: Name one.

Mr. Simmons: Name one what? Name one person who gets his jollies from impugning reputations? The Hon. Member for Mississauga South is one.

An Hon. Member: Joe Clark.

Mr. Simmons: I could name others. Is he talking about victims or assailants?

I realized that this would be a very sensitive subject for the Tories. I realized that they did not expect the people of Canada to see through the device of a very simplistic, motherhood, butter-melt-in-your-mouth type of motion or resolution which says, "let us have another committee, let us look at conflict of interest guidelines, let us see how they apply to Ministers and to public servants". Mr. Speaker, you have to take off your hat to the kneecapper, the Hon. Member for Yukon. He was able to restrain himself for a sufficient period of time to craft that fun-loving motion, but we know him too well. We have seen too often his performance in this particular House. It is always the same. If you understand the real intent of this motion, Mr. Speaker, you have to see it as a Trojan horse and you have to realize that the Hon. Member for Yukon was just proceeding to the next step in his ever vicious campaign, a campaign which he carried on in Question Period for the last few weeks while ignoring the problems of the country.

There was not a question for a week and a half in Question Period, for an hour a day, day in and day out, week after week, about a single item of concern—about the poor, the unemployed or the elderly of the country; about the economic situation generally. There was not a whit of concern because he was on a witch-hunt. Now somebody has said to him in caucus one day, "You had better package it differently. You are looking too transparent." People are beginning to say to us Tories as we go back to our ridings, "When will you get back on the problems of the economy?"

Mr. Blenkarn: That is not what they are saying.

Mr. Simmons: Then they came up with this simplistic device today—a motherhood motion, a Trojan horse, a weak, transparent attempt once more to mislead the people of the country. There they are, all seven, eight or nine of them over there—eight and a half anyway—who have dragged themselves into the House this afternoon to support this great crusade for purity once again! I want them to know that they do not have the market cornered on purity. I tell them that the last thing the House needs right now is another academic exercise. I would like to get on with the business of the House. Why do we not do that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers and comments. Is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) rising upon questions and answers during the ten-minute exchange?

Mr. Blaikie: No, to make a speech, Mr. Speaker. There is no one else rising.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will wait a moment to determine if there are others rising on questions and answers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Who wants to ask him a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am not sure which Hon. Member made the comment, but I would think that the House vests the requirement in the Chair that it is its responsibility to determine whether or not there are questions and answers during the ten-minute period. I certainly do not mind advice, but I would like any Hon. Member who seeks to advise the chair to have the courtesy to rise and do so on his feet. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, am I being recognized for debate, for the purpose of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): My apologies. I think I now see the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on the questions and answers section.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) just a moment ago and I must say as a—

Mr. Blenkarn: What is the question?

Mr. Tobin: I will put my question, but I will make the same kind of preface as do Hon. Members opposite. I will make a quick comment. As a first-time elected Member of Parliament, one who came here with great expectations and one who was taught immediately that I was part of a—and I am not talking in a partisan sense, but in the sense of service to the country—very unique club. By that I do not mean this caucus; I mean the House. I must say that I found my bubble has not been burst, but it has been a discouraging experience for me these last weeks to see the kind of practice and approach which has been exercised opposite by Members, who as my Hon. colleague and friend from Newfoundland so aptly put it, are in the business of kneecapping rather than in the business of representing the needs, the concerns and the voice of the people of Canada in the House.

Some Hon. Members: What is the question?

Mr. Tobin: Sometimes one must yell to be heard. I understood that I would be allowed a comment first. Am I allowed a comment? May I carry on?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to remind all Hon. Members that it is not an issue of whether there is a question, answer, debate or comment. The new reformed procedures of the House of Commons refer to "short and sharp questions, answers and comments". My concern in the chair is not as to whether it is identified as a question, a comment or an answer, but rather that it be short and sharp. A good indication of short and sharp would be taken as 90 seconds.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I am looking at the clock and trying to gauge it. With these new rules we need a second-hand on the clock. It is very difficult to see 90 seconds from here.

My question is quite a serious one which I put to the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons). I ask him, because, obviously he has taken a great deal of time and a great deal of sincerity in looking at the motion put today, whether he can even conceive of one positive thing being accomplished by it. The Hon. Member has a reputation of having a balanced view; he is one of those individuals who will always explore in great depth every side of an issue, so I know he has looked hard at this motion—45 seconds and counting, Mr. Speaker. Can he conceive of one positive thing being accomplished by having this kind of motion accepted by the House?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes or no?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that there is a positive side of this particular motion. I was remiss, really, in making my remarks to the House and not pointing out what is the positive side of this motion. Clearly the positive side of it is that it allows the people of Canada to see the Opposition for what it is. I believe this afternoon that anyone who has watched this particular debate with all the rhetoric of Members of the Opposition—and I must exclude my good friend, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West because he gave what was a courageous speech and dissociated himself from the motion in many ways; he is the only one I heard doing that—will see the charade which the Conservative Opposition is carrying on. If we serve that purpose, at least we spent some worth-while time this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill on a point of order.

Mr. Blaikie: No, I am rising to participate in the debate, Mr. Speaker, but it is obvious the Government does not intend to allow me to have my opportunity to speak. That is why we have trained seals like the Member from Newfoundland getting up to ask another Member from Newfoundland a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

Mr. Blaikie: I had the floor, Mr. Speaker; I had the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have no difficulty—

Mr. Blaikie: Nobody else was standing, Mr. Speaker, and I rose to debate; then we had this idiot getting up here and asking—

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Blaikie: It is an absolutely disgusting show of one Liberal asking another a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I think the best contribution I could make to the House at the moment—

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The best contribution I could make at the moment is to attempt to put aside what are remarks being made across the floor and are not officially coming to the Chair. I want to explain something to Hon. Members. There is no question but that the Chair is obligated under the Standing Orders to recognize any Member who rises on questions, answers and debate during the ten-minute period, regardless whether that Member comes from the same Party as the previous member.

Mr. Blaikie: And no one did.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I have applied that rule since January 1 and unless I receive instructions otherwise from the House of Commons, I shall continue to apply them.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) was recognized by the Chair as he was beginning to stand up. I think I was reasonable when I suggested that I saw another Member at that very moment rising during the ten-minute question period. I understand the difficulty of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill and I understand the difficulty of any other Member who may feel time is going by and they are being denied the opportunity to speak. That is a political issue. As a procedural issue, I will continue to recognize any Hon. Member who rises on questions, answers and comments during the ten-minute period. May I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill in that regard?

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I will not be long because I want to hear the Hon. Member opposite. I want to say that when the Hon. Member exploded with the little bit of poison that spurted across the way—

Mr. Lewis: I do not blame him.

Mr. Tobin: —I was rising to leave the House.

Mr. Blenkarn: Well, why don't you leave?

Mr. Tobin: I want to say to the Hon. Member that it is obvious by his explosion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. That is precisely—

Mr. Tobin: —that he has the same respect for the rules—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I would like the Hon. Member to sit down. That is precisely what I do not want to hear as a point of order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, if there is no one rising on a question, may I speak to the debate? In my view, this is what I could have done some time ago.

The Liberals have made a point this afternoon, I think, of missing the thrust of the motion. They presented us with two very different Catch 22s. If there is a general motion, then they say there is something terrible behind it. If it is a specific motion, it would be muckraking. The second Catch 22, Mr. Speaker, is that Liberals cannot accept the motion because it is a motion of non-confidence. On the other hand, there is no other way that we could bring it before the House except in this form. Now that it is in the House in this form and we ask the unanimous consent for it not to be regarded in the form they object to, they refuse unanimous consent. Therefore, we have a couple of convenient Catch 22s operating in favour of the Government, which, as far as I am concerned, pushes us back upon the larger question of confidence. This is the question I was hoping to speak to this afternoon but which cannot be dealt with in the short time frame. One of the reasons it cannot be dealt with, so I will not even try at this point, is the fact that my time has been used up by a Member of the Liberal Party asking another Member of the Liberal Party a question—which I quite admit is within the rules of the House of Commons and is within the rules as set up in the experiment, but I contend the quality of the question was such that it constituted an abuse of the rules because it was quite clear they were simply trying to use up time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, as I am, is a member of a committee which recommended to this House that we ought to have 20 minute speeches followed by a ten-minute intervention from various Members. My friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Tobin), carefully waited until there was no one from other Parties to rise, and he then rose.

Mr. Blaikie: I was standing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. There are seconds remaining. If the Hon. Member wishes to make a point of order, I would ask that he do that immediately.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, the point is that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill does not have the right to question the quality of questions put during the ten-minute question period—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): But the public does.

Mr. Tobin: —especially when the quality was so high.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I consider it appropriate for Hon. Members to comment on exchanges that take place during the question and answer period. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, there is no time left. What happened between those two Liberal Members of Parliament who used up the time in which I had hoped to make some helpful comments is an example of why we have to move these kinds of motions and why the whole bunch on the other side are so corrupt that they are beyond redemption.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to say.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: Withdraw or resign.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair is having some difficulty. I wonder whether the snow storm is responsible for this, but I have to explain to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill that it is considered to be unparliamentary language to use the word "corrupt". I will give consideration as to whether or not I should make a request that he withdraw it immediately. I think the easier way would be if perhaps the Hon. Member would take another moment and withdraw that word. That would be helpful. Otherwise, in due course, I will have to make a ruling.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am not an expert on what constitutes unparliamentary language. But I referred to Members on the other side collectively, as a bunch. I did not refer to the character of any individual Member of Parliament. I stand by my description of the Liberal Party and its Government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is not unparliamentary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I point out to Hon. Members that by an order made earlier the House is now expected to consider the question before it. Is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans rising to contribute to a point of order on the word "corrupt"?

Mr. Tobin: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In that case, I thank the Hon. Member. I believe we should proceed as follows. Over the evening and tomorrow, I will consider the use of the word, and I will take counsel in that regard. It is possible that other Hon. Members may wish to contribute. I would suggest that that be done tomorrow. At this point I ought to put the question before the House. Accordingly, it being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 62(10), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of Supply.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Nielsen) which was negatived on the following division:

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved:

That Vote 2c, in the amount of $816,400 under the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—Metric Commission—Operating expenditures, in the Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983, be concurred in.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, there have been discussions amongst House Leaders and I believe you will find that if you were to put the question on the first item and have the division recorded on that item, and then put items Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 9, you will find there is a general disposition among the Parties to apply the division taken on item 1 to the subsequent six items, and that that division be recorded in Hansard on each of the items Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 9. Thus Members will avoid having to rise that many times.

Madam Speaker: That will be very helpful.

The question is on motion No. 1. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-143, to provide Supplementary Borrowing Authority, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved:

That Bill C-143, An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 19 and 20 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"exceeding in the whole, one dollar, as may be required for public works and".

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is the third time that I have risen in the House to debate Bill C-143, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the Government of Canada. In the past we have expressed our concern over the size of the borrowing authority which the Government is asking Parliament to approve. We have expressed alarm over the apparent lack of accountability by the Government in requesting permission to borrow $19 billion without, in our view, adequately presenting a valid case.

Today I want to stress the adverse effects that this Bill may have on the fragile recovery which may be stirring in the Canadian economy. In particular, I want to outline some of the dangers inherent in this Bill which might start interest rates on an upward course again, a course which has proved so destructive in the last two years, which has wreaked so much hardship on people and their families and their plans for the future, and which has proved so damaging to the national incentive to sustain our farms, our plants, our jobs, and our hope for the future. It is a concern which is apparently not shared by the Government.

There has been considerable debate on this Bill, Mr. Speaker. It has already been through first and second reading and we have debated it in committee hearings until two o'clock in the morning. We are now at report stage and our Party alone has at least 25 MPs who are anxious to discuss its implications for our country and our constituents. We are no closer to the answers we sought than we were when we started. We have been asking all the right questions; let me repeat some of them.

Why does the Government need to borrow billions of dollars in a Bill of this magnitude? Where are the Government's financial forecasts to show how this borrowing fits into an over-all fiscal framework or game plan? Exactly how is this borrowing going to affect borrowing in the private sector? How will borrowing on this scale affect the ability of Provinces to borrow funds for their deficits? Will the Provinces and the private sector be crowded out of the money market, the source of much of the required financing? Is it all the Government requires in the fiscal year which is facing us? Exactly how will the Government arrange this borrowing in the time frame it has set? Will it strangle or choke off the uncertain and diffident recovery which may be under way? Why can the Government not split this Bill into smaller stages, returning to Parliament to borrow as the money is required?

The answers we have gleaned from the Government to date have been all the wrong answers. They have been vague and simplistic. At best these answers have been evasive. At worst they have been openly hostile to Parliament and to the parliamentary process.

Let me give some examples. When asked why the Government needs to borrow $19 billion now, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) simply says "to pay the costs incurred by the recession". When asked for its fiscal forecasts, the Minister says simply to wait until spring when he may introduce a budget. When asked how this borrowing is going to affect the economy, the Minister says neither he nor his Department has done the necessary studies to identify the kind of impact which could be generated on interest rates.

When we express our concern over the ability of the private sector and the Provinces to raise money from the limited resources available to them in Canada, the Minister states that corporations are not borrowing anyway and he implies that the Provinces can look after themselves. He dismisses any possibility of crowding these potential customers out of the money market.

Faced with his own statement that the Government has been borrowing at the rate of roughly $500 million a month, the Minister states flatly that he expects to borrow in the neighbourhood of $2 billion between now and the end of March, which is only seven working days away.

When asked how he is going to raise the $16 billion which he is seeking authority to borrow after March 31, including the roll-over, the Minister and his Department of Finance officials simply say they do not normally announce their borrowing plans in advance.

When asked how he can, in effect, double his current volume of borrowing without adversely affecting interest rates, the Minister said, and I quote: "You do not broadcast your plans well in advance to those who are loaning the money".

When asked specifically to detail the nature of the analysis which has been made by his Department of the impact of this borrowing on interest rates, the Minister told the Finance Committee that there was no specific analysis made of the impact of interest rates on this particular borrowing.

When asked whether he fears that borrowing of this magnitude in a short time frame—the Minister told us in Committee that he expects to have spent this money by mid-summer—will lead to higher interest rates, the Minister simply said he does not believe that there is any danger of that happening in 1983, and if he is still Minister of Finance in 1984, he will be happy to let us know his views at that time.

When asked why the Government does not split this Bill and borrow part of the money before the budget and the rest of it later in the year, the Minister says he will be back for more money later in the year as it is. He implies that he does not trust Parliament to approve his borrowing requirements. In fact his whole stance before the Committee seemed to indicate that it was easier to borrow the whole batch now rather than subject the Government to parliamentary scrutiny again in the near future.

The only emphatic stance he took at Committee was to underline his need to get the whole $19 billion through now. For instance, when I asked him if he was going to exhaust the $14 or $15 or $16 billion by summer, that that implies that he was going to borrow an awful lot of money in a limited time, the Minister said "absolutely".

These are not the kinds of answers which inspire much confidence in the Minister as a prudent and knowledgeable manager of the fiscal side of the economy. They are not the kind of answers which inspire confidence in the hearts of businessmen who must plan now for plant improvements or possibly even plant expansions in the future.

People have been so stung by the vicious swing in interest rates in the last little while, their fingers have been so burned, their pocketbooks so emptied and their credit ratings so strained, that they want—they demand—some sense of stability about interest rates in the future. They want, and increasingly they demand, some guarantee that they will be able to pursue their plans, that they will be able to invest their money, that they will be able to place their orders for new equipment and materials without suffering the shocks they incurred during the great recession.

There is some evidence that this reluctance to proceed on the basis of future growth is already threatening inflationary pressure on the economy. Recently leading economists have told me that even though there are encouraging signs of recovery, businessmen are still reluctant to call back laid-off workers, or to restock their inventory, or to start producing enough production runs to meet anticipated demands. It is clear that consumers who are still saving at the rate of about 13.4 per cent of personal disposable income are not rushing out to spend their hard-earned savings on new cars, new appliances or a whole variety of consumer goods.

Statistics Canada predicts that the Canadian economy could show real growth in the first quarter of this year after declining steadily for six quarters and contracting a full 5 per cent in 1982. Statistics Canada is suggesting that a cyclical upturn may be at hand, if it is not already under way, but we know that this recovery must be nursed with tender loving care. We know that a national recovery plan is imperative if we are to put people back to work and to hire the young Canadians who are entering the labour force.

Yet at the same time we know that the size of the deficit in the coming fiscal year will be about 8.5 per cent of GNP. That is the highest percentage in the industrial world, with the exception of Italy. We know that the $30 billion deficit, which the Minister has indicated he may require in the fiscal year, amounts to roughly half the total savings of Canadians.

We know that employment in Canada dropped 5.5 per cent last year compared with only 1.5 per cent in the United States. We know that the amount which the Minister and the Government is asking Parliament to approve is equal to the size of the entire budget of the whole country ten years ago.

We feel that the Government can send a clear signal that it plans to regain control over Government spending, that it will attempt to master the country's economic problems, that it will mount new and effective job-creation programs by measures targeted at increasing economic growth without resorting to unlimited borrowing. That signal would be a move by the Government to split this borrowing authority. That would be a responsible course of action, one for which Canadians are waiting.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, once again I am very pleased to rise in the House to address Bill C-143, an Act to borrow $19 billion, only to realize that this is a totally impossible request which the Government is making of the House of Commons. The reason I say it is a very impractical request is that I believe we are seeing across the aisle a Government which is essentially adopting the Christopher Columbus school of economic theory.

I remind the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) that it was Christopher Columbus who set out on a mission on borrowed money. As a matter of fact, not only was it borrowed but it was borrowed from a foreign country, and he was dependent upon foreign decision-makers as to what he could do. He set out and on the way he lost some ships because they were buffeted by winds, just as the Government is obviously buffeted by the winds of public mood. One day the ship of state is lurching in one direction; the next day it is lurching in another direction.

When Christopher Columbus got to where he thought he was going, he was not certain where he was, and he was not certain where he had been when he returned. I remind Hon. Members opposite that when Christopher Columbus actually arrived in the new world, he did not bring new technology, new approaches or golden riches. He brought syphilis to the new world. That is the kind of contribution Christopher Columbus made to the Caribbean countries. To apply Liberal economic planning to the Christopher Columbus school of economic theory is an apt comparison.

Today the House of Commons is expected to support the borrowing of $19 billion. I must say that we in the New Democratic Party will be supporting the amendment before the House to reduce that $19 billion request to $5 billion plus $1. There is no question in the deliberations we have had that the Government requires $5 billion to get through this particular fiscal year, to bring us to the end of the month of March. That is a fait accompli. That is something of the past. We are prepared to co-operate to that level.

To think that we are going to approve the borrowing of $14 billion when still to this day the Minister of State for Finance, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) himself, have refused to outline in any definitive way how this money will be utilized is simply asking too much at this time. I do not think it is an unfair request for Members of Parliament to expect to have some indication of what the Government is going to do with this $14 billion. I do not think that is unreasonable at all.

We keep hearing the Government Members say that we have to wait until the budget comes down, to have faith in it because it will be a good budget and then everything will be fine. I want to remind the Minister of State for Finance that we have just heard from the Government's top financial adviser, Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada. The other day Governor Bouey went out of his way to describe what he felt was the solution to our economic problems. He said ignore the fact that there are nearly two million people unemployed in this country today from every single region and from every sector of the economy. He said ignore that and ignore the fact that there are nearly two million people on welfare in what has to be the richest country in the world. He said ignore the fact that there are hundreds of thousands of young people about to enter the job market, many for the first time, in the next few weeks who are bound to be disappointed because there are no jobs. He said to ignore those young people and ignore the people who are living daily under the threat of lay-off and plant closure. He said ignore the thousands of small and medium-sized businesses that are either in the stages of receivership or foreclosure, or are being threatened by bankruptcy. He said ignore the farmers who are being requested to sell off their property so as to access any operating capital for spring planting. He said ignore the poor of Canada. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, one begins to wonder whether the Governor of the Bank of Canada has not lost touch with reality.

We hear Members of the Official Opposition and Members opposite say that a recovery requires the business sector to invest money, to expand plants, to expand operations. We hear them say that a recovery depends on Canadians spending their money on goods and services.

There is absolutely no way that economic recovery can occur in this country when businessmen are being faced with the threat of bankruptcy in every corner of the community. This is no environment in which to expand or to invest in the future. There is no incentive for consumers of Canada to buy new goods and services and to spend their hard earned money when they see their relatives—their brothers-in-law, their sons and their daughters—out of work and their friends probably being threatened on a daily basis with loss of work.

There is a fear in this land. There is a fear in the business community and among the consuming public. This fear can be abated only when the Government of Canada brings forward a budget that will show the Government is prepared to accept its leadership mandate given to it a few years ago and that it will provide some bold, imaginative and creative schemes for serious job creation in that budget.

In other words, the Government should bring in a program that will put those two million people who are out of work back into meaningful positions so they can make a contribution to Canadian society and to the Canadian economy. But I hear the Governor of the Bank of Canada telling us to ignore that, just bite the bullet and wait it out. He says there are positive signs and recovery is beginning.

I would ask any Ottawa Member in this House who has been in his riding in the last two or three weeks to identify those sources, the indicators of any serious economic recovery. I suggest that the closest one can get is to identify two or three sectors where there is some slight, moderate or barely perceptible indication that things may be turning around. For every sector where that slight and feeble indication of recovery is taking place, I suspect one can identify a number of sectors where the situation is continuing to deteriorate and others where there is simply a bottoming out. I believe it is improper and unnecessary for anyone to suggest that recovery will take place in Canada by simply standing by with our hands in our pockets and waiting for someone else to solve our problems and create confidence in this country. Quite frankly, when one considers the human tragedy and suffering that is occurring in this country, that approach to solving our economic problems, I suggest, is quite immoral.

Mr. Stevens: How are you doing in France?

Mr. Riis: Let us consider the fact that the bankers and business leaders in 1931 were saying the same thing as bankers and business leaders are saying today. They said at that time that there were all kinds of indicators which showed that recovery was around the corner. They were asking people to be patient because the stock markets were active. Imagine the President of the United States at that time having an adviser like Governor Bouey. Imagine what the "new deal" in the United States would have been like. I suspect we would still be climbing out of a depression. However, there was an adviser who suggested that the country take action and be bold.

I want to tell the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) that I am not suggesting that the Government should be spending money like a drunken sailor. I am suggesting that it is time for the Government to begin acting like any sound businessman who would borrow money to invest in the future of his corporation and country.

This country needs an investment in infrastructure. We need to improve our rails, our port facilities and our municipal works. That is the kind of investment that this country requires.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the debate which commenced this morning on the motion put by the Opposition did dwell for a few moments on the debate which occurred with respect to the Government's request for additional borrowing authority to meet its ongoing support for the economy and those social programs which we all recognize are necessary due to the present state of the economy.

In order to remind Hon. Members, I think it is important to put on the record the amount of debate on the Bill which has occurred thus far. To this point, Members have spoken on this legislation for over 29 hours and there have been six days of parliamentary consideration of this borrowing request by the Government. In six days of debate there have been 14 speakers for the Government, 61 speakers for the Progressive Conservative Party and 21 speakers for the New Democratic Party.

Considering the amount of debate and attention given to the Bill by Parliament, I was somewhat disappointed to see the type of motion that was moved by the Opposition this morning. I was dismayed by the lack of imagination and constructive, biting analysis that one would have expected from the Opposition after 30 hours of debate. What was their proposition? It was that the borrowing authority for the operation of the Government be reduced to $1.

It is quite apparent that the Opposition does not intend to debate seriously the plight of Canadians who are looking to the Government either for unemployment assistance or for assistance in maintaining employment. It is quite obvious that the Opposition either has no intention or is unable seriously to debate the Government's request to continue the economic management of this country because of the particular problem within their own Party at this time. It is rather obvious that a significant number of Opposition Members are concerned only with their jobs or their aspirations regarding the job of Leader of the Opposition. It is quite apparent that those who are left in the ranks of the Opposition have but one thought in mind, and that is to attempt to distract the attention of the country, the Government and others who are observing, from the plight of the Conservative Party, with its preoccupation with the job of one Canadian in this country.

Mr. Riis: It's the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cosgrove: How else can one reconcile the intent of the motion that the Government of Canada be closed down, that the Unemployment Insurance offices in this country be closed, that the Regional Economic Expansion offices be closed, that the total—

Mr. Mayer: You know better than to make stupid statements like that.

Mr. Cosgrove: —Government support to Canadians now in need be shut down.

Mr. Blais: Forgive them, for they know not what they do.

Mr. Cosgrove: As the Hon. Member for the NDP has signalled, Canadians in need are looking for Government assistance, for unemployment benefits, for welfare assistance and for job training assistance. Concerning the NEED Program, the Government's initiative of $500 million has been taken up by some Provinces so that that Program is now providing, this day, jobs to Canadians looking for jobs. The Government has committed the expenditure of some $2 billion toward getting the housing industry moving and doing other things. Funds have been committed toward regional and economic expansion. The suggestion of the Opposition is that we close down those operations. Its members say to Canadians looking to those programs for help: "That is too bad, but we are really concerned about our problems, the problem of finding a leader and the more serious problem, no doubt, of finding some type of policy which will address the future".

Mr. Blenkarn: You need more than a leader.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is what the Opposition has proposed, as I say, through a motion that we restrict spending to $1 and that we close down assistance which the Government of Canada is offering to Canadians at this time. It is obviously not a serious proposition.

However, then there is the difficulty which the Opposition faces. Are there perhaps a dozen candidates for leadership? There are a dozen suggestions as to how the problem should be approached. I warn that every Member of the Opposition who now stands will have a different theory to contradict the 12 other theories that we have heard from 12 different candidates as to what Canada should be doing now in addressing the future and addressing the recovery which is now under way.

Mr. Mayer: Tell us where you stand.

Mr. Blais: He's not running for your leadership.

Mr. Mayer: He doesn't stand. He's supposed to be a responsible Member, but he doesn't stand for anything.

Mr. Cosgrove: The Hon. Member who has had responsibility in this House as Finance critic of the Opposition Party, at least for a week or so, has indicated that there are no signals, that the Government has not indicated where these expenditures are directed, notwithstanding our commitment to these social programs. What is the record of the Government in addressing the efficient management of the economy, the efficient management of—

Mr. Stevens: A very poor record.

Mr. Cosgrove: —the funds for which we are requesting borrowing authority? I am very happy that the Hon. Member who had responsibility for the Treasury Board operation of the former Conservative administration is present in the House. He well knows that when the Conservatives took control following the Liberal administration, they carried on with these programs upon which I can just barely touch in the few moments remaining to me, where the Government took initiative, addressing Government efficiency and concern for proper management of the expenditure of funds.

I refer, of course, to the policy and expenditure management system which was put in place in 1979 by the Official Opposition while in Government. This is a program where spending is broken into ten expenditure categories. Cabinet committees take responsibility for expenditure management within this envelope system. Each envelope is provided with a policy reserve and it functions as a bank account with unallocated funds. Priorities must be struck and, for any expenditure from those funds, a careful study must be done and all Ministers affected must express an opinion. This envelope system helps to ensure that Ministers trade off a request for new expenditures with ongoing priorities.

I would like to draw a second matter to the attention of Hon. Members. Of course, I am also glad that the Hon. Member who was the Minister responsible for the Treasury Board while the loyal Opposition was in power is here because he knows that the Main Estimates and Supplementary Estimates are placed before Government. They have been introduced by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) with a detailed, minute breakdown, comprising hundreds and thousands of pages, showing the allocation of the expenditure of funds for which borrowing authority is requested.

Within the Government, the Treasury Board itself, in its ongoing, every day operation, rigorously examines all requests for spending authority by Government Departments and agencies. I remind Hon. Members that the office of the Comptroller General has substantially added to efficiency in Government programming and evaluation. I think of the improvement in the Management Practice and Controls Program, again a Program which was adopted by the Opposition during its brief period of responsibility in Government.

Another example of control of expenditures is that the Auditor General carefully examines the Government's financial statements and reports to Parliament on his findings. The Government and Hon. Members opposite, Parliamentarians, then have the opportunity to taking the report and the Estimates through detailed study and, in committees of Parliament, have an opportunity to review Government spending.

Continuing on to a new point, I remind Hon. Members that in 1975, as a matter of policy, the Government announced that it would endeavour to hold trend growth in expenditures to no more than trend growth in the economy. All of these—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to inform the Minister that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Blais: Consent to continue.

Mr. Cosgrove: I would not add to my comments, except—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Is the Minister seeking unanimous consent to continue his remarks?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, I would, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is agreed.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to sum up, not by introducing anything new, but merely by recounting the fact that the Government has set out in detail the ways in which the borrowing authority and moneys sought will be expended. I have attempted to outline, in point form, the ways in which the Government, throughout the last year, has detailed its plan for efficient management of its expenditures. I believe that in fact Hon. Members are not surprised by any of this material.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Chair would normally be prepared to recognize the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Blais: It's hard to miss.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): However, it finds itself in procedural difficulty. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South was the mover of the motion which is presently being debated, and the Hon. Member, at the time he moved the motion, chose not to speak. Therefore, it is presumed, under our rules and practices, that the Hon. Member has spoken, and there are a number of precedents which the Chair would be prepared to quote in support of that argument. However, the difficulty could easily be resolved if the House were to give its unanimous consent to recognize the Hon. Member for Mississauga South at this time.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I gather that there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, involvement with another matter made it necessary for my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), to speak before me.

We have witnessed what I consider to be a disgraceful performance on the part of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove). He gave a sad explanation of the Government's fiscal stance. The Minister confused in his remarks borrowing with spending, with unallocated funds, and said that we have hundreds and thousands of pages of Estimates showing where the money is to go.

That is not what we are here to discuss. We are here to discuss the question whether a Government should be entitled to borrow money without presenting a fiscal plan for that borrowing for the fiscal year commencing on April 1 next. We are dealing with an amendment to Part II of this Bill, which deals with borrowing which is to take place in the fiscal year 1983-1984. We in this Party have moved an amendment to reduce that borrowing authority for that fiscal year to one dollar. We made that motion after a great deal of soul searching and thought as to where this Government and the Parliament of Canada should go.

I first of all want to quote to the House what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said on October 27, 1982, as reported on page 20081 of Hansard. On that date the Minister said:

> In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

The Minister finally, after a great deal of persuasion in Committee, gave us a reasonable explanation of the economic position of the country with respect to the current fiscal year. He has absolutely totally and completely refused to give us any proper projection with respect to where we are going in the year 1983-1984, as he promised to do.

Therefore, it would be totally improper for this House to authorize that Minister to go to the public of Canada and borrow money for some cause for which he has no plan and, for some method of proceeding for which he has no direction from this House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, we are not so naive as to believe that the Government can get along without money. We are not so naive as to believe that we are somehow, by halting the Government in its tracks and, by opposing the borrowing under Part II of this Bill, going to stop what is going on in the country and prevent old age pensions being paid, the NEED Program being carried on, and the like. We must take a look at the financial situation of the country as it presently exists. That is what I would have thought the Minister would have dealt with this morning. But the Minister did not do that.

On March 18 the Minister had on deposit with chartered banks in Canada $4,310 million. The Minister has already borrowed illegally, as we all well know, by taking advantage of Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act, $1,100 million from the marketplace. This Bill, as it now proceeds, will give the Minister an additional $3.9 billion in borrowing authority.

If we add what the Government has presently in the bank to the borrowing authority here, the Government will have, should this Bill with the amendment pass, the right to borrow or have at hand a total of $8,210 million. That is more than enough to carry this Government through, at least until the May 24 holiday. And that is all the freedom this Government should have. This Government has an obligation to present to the people of Canada a budget, and it can do that. The Government promised to do that, and we call upon it to deliver on its promise.

Mr. Blais: So let us pass the Bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: We will not pass a Bill that allows the Government to get out of its promises. This Government promised to come before the country early in 1983. We are already into the spring of 1983.

Mr. Cosgrove: It looks like winter to me.

Mr. Blenkarn: We have no indication when it will bring forward a budget. It would be totally wrong for this House of Commons to allow the full borrowing set out in Part II of the Bill to proceed. We have suggested in our amendment that it be reduced to one dollar, that is to say, no borrowing without a budget. The Government does not need any borrowing without a budget. It has enough money to carry on well into May and it has ample opportunity to produce a budget tomorrow, next week or immediately on April 11 when we come back here. It has ample opportunity to produce a budget, ample opportunity to give a proper financial accounting to the people of Canada and ample opportunity to give the people of Canada projections to show where it is taking us. Indications so far this year are that it is taking us down the road to total and complete financial collapse.

In the Estimates produced by the Minister of Finance on November 12, 1981 for this current this fiscal year, the Minister forecast revenues as being in excess of $80 billion. The Minister now forecasts revenues of only $66 billion, a drop in revenues of over 17 per cent, yet we are expected to approve borrowing without a forecast of what the revenues will be and without even a forecast of where the Government is going to constrain expenditures. The Government expects to just produce an estimate of what it would like to spend and tells the House of Commons that it is entitled to borrow it—borrow it or borrow more—and maybe print it. Our party has real concern about the fact that since November of last year the Bank of Canada has monetized to the extent of $1 billion, which is nearly 10 per cent of the cash available in the country.

We must be responsible, as Members of Parliament, to make sure that our country is managed properly. It is totally ridiculous and utterly unfounded to allow the Government to come to the country and say that it is entitled to borrow $14 billion without a budget, without a projection, or without a statement in any form as to where we are going.

We would have opposed Part I of the Bill had the Minister of Finance not made reasonable disclosures to us in Committee. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the debate in this House ran on for many days and was finally terminated by closure. That debate would not have had to be terminated in that way had the Minister of Finance come clean with the people and with us when he made his statement on February 17. Had the Minister of Finance produced on February 17 the kind of figures and analysis that he produced in Committee, the debate with respect to Part I of this Bill would not have needed to be nearly as long. It was only because we dragged it out of him at the Committee hearing, which lasted until almost two o'clock in the morning, and then for half a day again; we finally persuaded the Minister to give us the projections of what was going to happen this year. There were no projections for next year, yet he demands $14 billion toward next year without even a whisper of where we are going. It is unconscionable to ask this House of Commons to approve Part II of the Bill.

Therefore I say to you, sir, that it would be totally improper for this House to allow Part II of the Bill to remain as presented. I call on Hon. Members of this House to act as responsible Members of Parliament and to vote for the amendment.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, this morning we are discussing the Government's borrowing authority. I just heard the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—an excellent Member of Parliament, I may say—make a speech in this House on the Government's finances and the budget. A marvelous speech, I must say, but I think the Hon. Member has, unwittingly, strayed very far from the actual needs of Canadians. Clearly, the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is more interested in the speeches he is making here in the House and in those he could make if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) had tabled a budget a few weeks ago. The Hon. Member would have been able to turn on his eloquence for Canadians, and I must admit that he is a past master of the art. However, if we look at what a budget really is for, it is to inform people what the Government is doing with their money. Today, Mr. Speaker, Canadians certainly do know what the Government of Canada is doing with their money. In the Bill before the House today, the Government is asking for authority to borrow $19 billion. This may seem like a lot. It is nearly $1,000 for every person living in Canada. I know that many people are wondering where these deficits are going to lead us, why they exist and whether there is any risk involved. I think that as politicians, we have a duty to speak up, and I think there are several reasons for doing so. First of all, we must help Canadians understand that this country of ours which in my mind is a country that, although it is only a little over 100 years' old, is way ahead of any other country in the world, because of its principle of sharing. In this country, people have never been forced to have only one language, one colour, one race or one philosophy. This is a great country, and its aim has been to give the people who live in it—wherever they may be in this immense territory which is the second largest in the world—an insurance policy, as it were, giving people the right to life, health, liberty, food, housing, education and all kinds of benefits which make life livable, even in its darkest moments.

Today, the Government of Canada is obliged to borrow more than usual, because all those policies that have been established in the past to assist Canadians who are in need were not meant to be there only when Canadians did not need them. They were meant to be used by Canadians when they needed help. Mr. Speaker, it is all so very simple. After going through the first great depression in the thirties, Canadians said: We will never let people go through that experience again. Never again are people going to be homeless because they are out of work. Never again will they be stripped of their self-respect.

Mr. Speaker, I realize there is a limit to the amount of money one can borrow. When the Government is the borrower, and the Member for Mississauga South is aware of what is involved here, I believe people should be informed about the consequences of Government borrowing. If the Canadian Government were to borrow outside the country the $30 billion it will probably need when the next budget is brought down, I would be worried. I would also be worried if more than fifty per cent of the money in this country were concentrated in the hands of a few individuals or families. But what does the Canadian Government do when it borrows $30 billion? It gets the $30 billion from the Canadian banks and from the Canadian people through Canada Savings Bonds. And what does that mean? That means sharing, Mr. Speaker. I know people who are going to buy Canada Savings Bonds this year. Part of the money they will spend on Savings Bonds will be used to pay for the Canada Savings Bonds they purchased ten or twenty years ago.

That is one way for generations and individuals to share the wealth. The strength of our state, of our country, and especially of each and every Canadian lies in the fact that there is not a single Canadian who, by saying that he will take his money out of the country, can seriously jeopardize our economy because the money in Canada belongs to everybody. The richest Canadian is poor in terms of the total amount of money which belongs to all Canadians. That is what matters, Mr. Speaker, and over the years, Canadians have shown that they were prepared to share with others, and that is why people in my riding can survive. I thank all Members of the House as well as those who were here before me who voted for sound policies, I thank them sincerely. Right now my region is going through difficult times. It has developed since the turn of the century thanks to industry. That industry is now in a slump, the unemployment rate is very high, but the people in my riding know that the Canadian Government now spends over $1 million in weekly unemployment benefits in a small town such as Alma alone, with a population of 30,000 and not even that much. I wonder how we would manage if our pensioners had smaller old age security payments. We often forget that the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation is the only agency in my region which makes mortgage loans and, if the Government had not provided that tool for Canadians, how much would people in my region have to pay for the mortgage loans which they now get at ridiculously low rates?

I should mention our young people who are given help through welfare payments, unemployment insurance benefits or job creation programs, and who are still free to plan their future as they see fit. Soon a youth hostel will open in my region thanks to the tens of thousands of dollars spent by the Canadian Government. Why? To give young people an opportunity to become independent, to express their views and to meet one another. That is what the Government wants to achieve through its various policies.

The Canadian Government is handing out huge amounts under the various health programs—$17 billion this year in equalization payments to the provinces—not to mention direct payments to the people through grants to the agricultural and industrial sectors or direct job-creation programs. And why do we do that? Simply to keep the economy going.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the worst enemy of any country is the narrow-mindedness of some people, and, unfortunately, I have come to realize that Members opposite are often narrow-minded. How easy it is to say that one is against the metric system or for the 6 and 5 program, but that it should not be implemented, and what not. That is what we are fighting against and what Canada has fought against. Those billions of dollars end up in the pockets of Canadians somewhere. That is where they end up and, in my opinion, Parliament ought to give the Government an opportunity to help Canadians weather the difficult times we are now going through.

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have been following with some care but some difficulty the kind of verbal convulsions coming from the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel). But we are used to his kind of verbal convulsions. I recall about 18 months ago he defined for us in the House what constitutes a Liberal. It was quite a definition and he ended up by saying that anyone could be a Liberal even if it takes being a communist. You could be a Liberal and a communist at the same time.

Mr. Fisher: We are democratic. We do not try to keep people out. We are open-minded.

Mr. Friesen: Well, Mr. Speaker, Hansard records what the Hon. Member said at that time. I listened with care to his theory of economics today. I must confess I believe he got his theory from Marx, but it was not Karl Marx, it was Groucho Marx. What he had to say about what constitutes economic theory was nothing short of humorous.

He said, and I believe I quote him accurately: "A budget merely tells the Canadian people what the Government is doing with the money". I suspect that that might be one of the functions of a budget, but certainly, Mr. Speaker, it is a lot more than that. I hope on reflection the Member will recognize that the budget sends some very definite signals to the business community as to the intention to involve the co-operation of all other aspects of the Canadian economy in the business of the country.

I have with me, Mr. Speaker, the current issue of the Surrey Chamber of Commerce "Bulletin", and it so happens that it contains a quotation from the former President of the Treasury Board, the current Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), the economic czar of Canada. He said:

> My concern is the desperate need we face in this country to find more equity, risk money, to finance new ventures, and indeed to reduce the present excessive dependence of business on bank credit. It is new investment in capital equipment and technology that generates productivity gains, brings down our costs, and improves our international competitive position. To the extent that equity replaces borrowed capital, it reduces the upward pressure on our interest rates. A number of proposals to encourage investment have been put forward. The president of the Toronto Stock Exchange proposes tax credits for the purchase of treasury shares in Canadian corporations. Everyone in the business wants something done about the capital gains tax, and I must say I have sympathy for this plea—particularly from the point of view of recognizing and allowing for the inflationary content in long term gains.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the problems the business community faces is the confused signals coming from the Government benches. If a trumpet gives an uncertain sound, how can one prepare for battle? On the one hand, you have those so-called rigid economists like the former President of the Treasury Board, who say that Government borrowing hurts the business community. On the other hand, you have all the other Ministers of this Government saying we have to borrow more money, as the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean says, in order to be compassionate. As long as the Government speaks with two voices there will never be a clear, dependable signal to the business community as to how it can arrange its own projections.

The fact is that the former President of the Treasury Board is exactly right. When the Government borrows money the way it is today, $30 billion for one year, most of it from Canadian citizens, the Government enters into direct competition with the business community for that capital. Now, as soon as the Government competes with the business community for money it puts pressure on interest rates. In my community one lending institution sold $1.5 million worth of Savings Bonds because the interest rate the Government offered was so high that it was more attractive than what the business community could offer. In one day it took $1.5 million which could have been lent to the business community. Then you have $30 billion being borrowed by the Government this year alone in order to run its affairs, and that is $30 billion which could have been used by the business community in Canada. In doing so the Government has narrowed the option of the business community so that it cannot function properly. That is the first bad effect of this borrowing.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it appeared to me that borrowing at the level this Government borrows is neither democratic nor compassionate. I know that all of us in this House want to be democratic. We believe in democracy in the election process, but we certainly do not believe it in the borrowing Bills. I see the Hon. Member taking notes here; I expect a response. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have a country in debt to the tune of $120 billion to $130 billion and we can safely assume that not one Member here in this chamber is going to help pay off that debt. Not one of us. Yet we are today discussing increasing the indebtedness by another $19 billion, which not one of us will help to pay.

Now, presumably a democratic principle is that those people affected by a decision should be able to vote on that decision. Yet none of us are going to pay this debt. Probably our children will not pay it. Very likely the first people who will have to pay this debt will be our grandchildren who are not even around today.

The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean says we have a whole new list of rights guaranteed to us. He forgot one. It is a new right which has now been passed on to all succeeding generations in Canada, the right to be in debt for thousands of dollars, immediately on birth, to the Government of Canada. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is it democratic to impose on children not yet born something they have no voice in, something about which they cannot choose? I ask Hon. Members, would you in your own household incur the kind of indebtedness that you are forcing on your children and grandchildren? No, you would not. Yet as a Government you seem to think it is moral and upright and democratic to do this. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this kind of indebtedness, which produces nothing and returns nothing, has the aura of democracy but has no democracy at all. It has the shell of compassion but no content. It simply produces anxiety and anguish for future generations.

The third point I want to make is that my friends to the left and their spokesman, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), want to increase Government indebtedness by another $10 billion. On the one hand, they want to increase the indebtedness by that much; on the other hand, they do not want any more borrowing. On the one hand, they want to be the champions of small-businessmen, their new-found crusade. They want to help the small business community. On the other hand, they want to increase the indebtedness of the Canadian taxpayer by another $10 billion and again put pressure on the small business community by increasing the competition for the money that community needs to increase productivity.

Well, they cannot have it both ways. Either they want to have a Government which is accountable for its spending and limits its expenditures in such a way that it lowers its indebtedness in time and frees up money for the business community, or it carries on in its own merry way, as it has historically. They cannot have it both ways. They cannot be the friends of small business and the friends of higher Government debt at the same time. The two just do not mix. Sooner or later they are going to have to make an ideological choice, and sooner or later the people of Canada are going to—well, they have already when you look at the last poll—catch on to that little gimmick dreamed up by these people. So we have to see this borrowing Bill for what it really is. It represents competition with the business community in the free marketplace for funds which could be used to increase productivity. It is taking that money to be used by a non-productive entity, namely the Government. It is borrowing which is neither democratic nor compassionate.

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, I feel that in this debate on legislation to determine the Federal Government's borrowing authority, a number of points have been made, and I would like to start by commenting on the point argued by my hon. colleague that the Government, in stating its intention to borrow this very substantial amount is going to reduce the private sector's room to manoeuvre to the point that small and medium-sized businesses and large multinational or Canadian corporations will no longer be able to find in this country the risk money they need to carry out their projects. My hon. colleague can rest assured that I am very concerned about the extent of the federal deficit. Like my hon. colleague opposite, I am indeed concerned about the economy's ability to support these projects. In fact, I am preparing a study on the availability of risk capital in this country.

However, in 1983, now that the Government will probably be bringing down its next budget very shortly, perhaps we should go beyond these generalities and provide some figures. I may say that the very grave concern I can read from my hon. friend's face is unfounded, because if we look at the present availability of savings capital in Canada—I think there are probably various approaches to the question—there is no danger that either the Federal Government or the Provinces, who will be borrowing as well, will bring about a crowding out of financing in Canada. The total amount Canadians are expected to save next year will be a little over $60 billion, and that is after consumers have met their own borrowing requirements. This means that once the Federal Government has borrowed $30 billion and the Provinces and municipal governments have borrowed $15 billion, we still have $15 billion left for the private sector, and unless the private sector wants to invest in some megaprojects or other ventures, which does not seem very likely if we look at their present investment plans, there will certainly not be the kind of problem described by my Opposition friend.

However, we should be concerned about this, and I think that when the next budget is brought down, I will comment on this particular point. However, something must be done now. We must have guidelines and we must set up criteria. We must find out how the Government could and should reduce the deficit in a very radical way as soon as the economy recovers, since the deficit, far from being structural, is linked to the economy. If we look at the room for manoeuvre ... I was listening just now to my colleague who seems to be saying: The Government is not taking the situation seriously and it should cut its expenditures. Nevertheless, none of the Opposition Members, and that includes my hon. colleague, were able to suggest a single program where we could make cuts. On the one hand, I entirely disagree with my friends on the opposite side of the House who talk about billions the way other people talk about nickels and dimes, and on the other hand I note that my hon. colleague opposite has failed to identify a single program where the Federal Government could make cuts that would substantially reduce the deficit. Should cuts be made in unemployment insurance benefits? Or should cuts be made—

Take, for instance, transfer payments to individuals or the Provinces, if there is no room to manoeuvre as far as debt payments are concerned: when we wanted to bring equalization payments to the Provinces back to more reasonable proportions, the Opposition Members told us that we were destroying the fabric of Canadian federalism and abdicating our responsibilities. Yet, this cutback was necessary because the idea behind these transfers, whether for health insurance, hospital insurance, post-secondary education or social services, is that the Federal Government will guarantee equivalent services, for all Canadians, by paying 50 per cent of all costs.

This is the principle of transfer payments to the provinces, but even by simply limiting the rate of growth of transfers—and this does not mean a reduction of the payments in absolute terms—and even though the transfers will increase only by 11 per cent a year over the next five years, in spite of these cutbacks, the Federal Government this year will pay just over 60 per cent of the costs of post-secondary education, a little over 50 per cent of health and 50 per cent of social services costs. Is this normal? For our part, we tried to trim the Federal share to fairer and more equitable proportions which would be more in keeping with the spirit of co-operative federalism. Yet, when we announced the cutbacks, there was a general outcry on the other side of the House.

We cannot cut back on our equalization payments to the provinces, and are told that we cannot reduce unemployment insurance benefits or old age pensions—a fact which we are fully aware of—and have no say in the market-set interest rates, while hoping that the various Governments would never try to distort the rules of the market when borrowing—for all those reasons our freedom of movement is reduced by 70 per cent and we are left with about 30 per cent of federal expenditures directly related to programs under our jurisdiction.

This is the only room we have to manoeuver. This is the situation because, regarding the first three elements which make up 70 per cent of our expenditures, we have had no suggestions as to how we could cut back on our spending. As for the remaining 30 per cent, can anyone tell us which programs are ineffective and in which ones we could make substantial cutbacks? Even if we accept cutbacks due to the economic situation and if as my colleague for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) put it, we must show some compassion for hard pressed Canadians in this difficult period, we must cast aside any partisanship and ask ourselves how we could bring down the present deficits to more acceptable levels as soon as the economy recovers. Indeed at that time even more so than today, the private sector will need some risk capital, and I hope that federal expenditures will be directed at sectors about which my colleague mentioned non-productive borrowings earlier. One important issue in Canada at that time will be to turn around the present trend concerning productivity to ensure that we can maintain our position as an exporting country because with our small market of only 24 million people, we have to be able to compete with other countries. That is the challenge that we must face. I think that, together, the 282 Members of this House should look ahead to the next two, three and four years to reverse the situation properly and leaving behind the present crisis find means to make sure this will never occur again.

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it was a great pleasure to listen to the Hon. Member for Verchères (Mr. Loiselle). He asks what we would do differently to present programs. On other occasions I have pointed out to Hon. Members opposite that the indirect subsidy to Petro-Canada is $1 billion per year, direct grants and add-ons amount to $400 million, and the PIP and LEAP Programs bring it even higher. You can get up to $2 billion without even trying, with those kinds of expenditures.

• (1220)

We on this side of the House have asked why the Government is so determined to increase the size of the House of Commons by some 30-odd Members at a cost of millions of dollars. Also we on this side of the House have asked whether it is really worth while to have a man like Donald Macdonald working on the public payroll at $800 per day when we will not even provide pensioners with $800 per month. We on this side of the House have asked whether it is really necessary for the Government of Canada to spend in excess of $100 million per year on Government advertising to promote, by and large, the Liberal Party of Canada.

If the Hon. Member opposite is really sincerely interested in the issue of public policy spending choice, I suggest he read the speeches which have been made in the House in the last two and a half to three years. I ask him and Members of his Party why they stood in the House in December, 1979 and turfed out a Government which was creating jobs at the rate of 30,000 per month in the private sector, which was reducing the borrowing requirements of Government by 30 per cent in the first year, which would have taken the pressure off capital markets, which would have kept the pressure off interest rates, which would have kept inflation down and would have kept Canadians employed.

When we stop and examine history, it is clear that it is the history of Government by the Liberal Party of Canada which has taken us to the situation of today. When the Hon. Member says that the problem is not structural, he is wrong. It is structural. It has been built in by the Liberal Party of Canada.

The election of 1972 was the beginning of that structural problem. In relative terms those were good times in Canada. The electorate of Canada sent a minority Government to the House, and it was a Liberal minority Government. The Liberals jumped in to bed with NDP Members. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appointed as Finance Minister a man named John Turner. In those very good times the Liberal Party of Canada, along with the New Democratic Party of Canada, decided to start borrowing money, decided to start bribing the voters of Canada with borrowed dollars. That is when it began. There were huge expansions of programs and budgetary increases under John Turner of 30 per cent a year for the two years he was Finance Minister. Those budgets were supported by the NDP and the Liberal Party. We did not need to expand Government services in that period of time for any sane, common-sense purpose, but they were expanded for political purposes, for political gain and for the purpose of bribing Canadian voters.

What the Liberal Party and the NDP said to Canadian voters in that period of our history was: "We will give you more services, we will give you more goodies, and we will not raise your taxes". This seems like magic until we look behind it and see that they were giving away those things with borrowed dollars. Canadians can fool themselves for some limited period of time that life is better. They can go down to the bank and, if they have any assets, they can borrow money and spend it. They can eat supper out every night, take marvellous vacations and spend beyond what they earn. But some day the bailiff will show up at the door, their possessions will be repossessed, they will be declared bankrupt and they will be in an awful mess if they do that for any length of time.

That is the history of what brings us to the House at this time. It was the minority period of 1972-73 when the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party acted together and borrowed money. We did not need to expand programs we did not need, and this has caused the structural problem of today. We lived through the five-year period from 1974 to 1979 when the Liberals were the majority, and they continued to expand programs but not expand taxes. They continued to expand the deficit in good times.

Here we are today in bad times when we really need those dollars to provide assistance to people in trouble. Instead, where is the money going? An absolutely huge portion of it is going to pay the interest on the public debt. It is not available for UIC claimants, small businesses or farmers. It is going to pay the interest on the money which the Liberal Government borrowed when we did not need to borrow. That is the reason for the difficulty we are in today.

To compound that error, we had a short-lived Government, the government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). What was its record? On the job-creation side, not only did it create over 30,000 jobs per month on average in its nine-month period of time, but it put Canadians to work and turned them into taxpayers. Those jobs were not created in the public tax-spending sector of the economy. For the first time in a decade jobs were being created in the goods-producing sector of the economy. If we chart labour market statistics in the country, it was the only time in a decade when jobs in the productive sector of the economy were growing faster than jobs in the service sector, and it was the only time when jobs in the public sector were declining slightly. Right there is the prescription for economic health in Canada.

What did the Conservative Government find when it laid out a budgetary plan, not for a single year but for five years ahead to get us out of the borrowing cycle and to economic health and continued job creation? We found that the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party together had four more Members in the House of Commons than the Conservative Party of Canada. They stood in the Chamber on the first confidence day on that budget and turned the Government out of office. Then they ran election campaigns claiming that 18 cents per gallon of gasoline was too much, and we stand here three years later knowing that prices have increased well over $1.

This reminds us of the 1974 campaign promise that 90 days of wage and income controls were too much, and Canadians got three years. Three years when 90 days was too much; over $1 when 18 cents was too much. Those kinds of election promises are very consistent with the kind of moral attitude that would borrow money in good times, with a minority Government from 1972 to 1974, in an attempt to bribe voters with their own money. I guess it is a sad commentary on the Canadian people that it has succeeded and that perhaps its success has led us to a kind of moral turpitude which is problematic for all of us in the House.

If we were the Government tomorrow, could we stop the borrowing requirement of the Government? The answer is no. It is in there structurally and it is a long, slow, difficult process to turn it around. But if we were to demonstrate a little common sense and a great deal of determination to turn it around and to move the country back toward a balanced budget, then out there in the land people who are aggressive would take some hope, and with that hope would stick out their personal necks a little further and start to create jobs and employ Canadians. If that psychological turn-around were to occur, we would be creating more taxpayers and fewer taxspenders. If we were to create more taxpayers and fewer taxspenders, we would be well launched on a path toward deficit reduction.

If I were standing in the House today with a full budget that laid out the spending plans of Government, and if the cornerstone of that budget was to borrow money to create infrastructure or permanent, lasting things in the country, then I would be able to look at the deficit in a somewhat different light. Instead, I cannot think of a single example where this Government has tried to cut down on waste, but instead is forcing us to vote for increased borrowing, in the face of this lack of determination to cut out waste I urge every Member of this House to stand when the moment comes and deny the Government the borrowing opportunity it seeks.

• (1230)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in this Bill we are addressing one aspect of an economic package. Let us be clear; the economy in Canada is not where we want to see it today. We have not yet had that resurgence of consumer confidence which so many have told us is the key to economic recovery.

Let me point out that this borrowing authority is necessary in these weak economic times because it is critical that there be stimulus from the public sector. I have not heard any concrete alternatives proposed by the Opposition. The Opposition has talked about cutting back on Government waste. We are all in favour of that.

Mr. Huntington: Why don't you do something about it, then?

Mr. Peterson: I would like to see the Opposition come to us with its list. There are like-minded people on all sides of this House who are prepared to get away from useless expenditures and see that money is directed toward job creation. But with what specifics has the Opposition come forward? There has been absolutely none, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thacker: Name yours.

Mr. Peterson: Until the Opposition is prepared to come forth with concrete alternatives, I do not feel its Members have the credibility to stand up and say: "There is waste, and therefore we will not vote for this Bill". Let the Opposition come forth with concrete alternatives.

Mr. Thacker: We have.

Mr. Peterson: I have some ideas I would like to try on Members in this House. First, consumer confidence is critical.

Mr. Shields: There is none.

Mr. Peterson: I think there are signs of a turn-around. We cannot guarantee that this economy will turn around. Many people think that the secret of our economic recovery is based on what will happen in the United States. Yes, a turn-around there will be helpful. Does that mean that we as Canadians should not attempt to be better in our own country? Does this mean that we should not attempt to be more competitive and that we should not endeavour, each one of us, to bring to our jobs and daily tasks a new-found attitude of commitment and desire to be better? We can do that. That is something the Government cannot legislate. It is something that we have to do as Canadians.

I believe we could be doing something to help restore consumer confidence. We have many excellent manufacturers in this country, people who make good products, products which when given the right boost by our consumer markets could take off and become world leaders. The Science Council of Canada identified 200 threshold firms who were on the verge of take-off and have developed a competitive edge and demonstrated excellence in their production. We could be giving these firms an added lift if all Canadians as individuals were to engage in a "Buy or shop Canadian" program. Canadians could say to themselves: "In the past we have been looking to foreign producers to give us the goods we want to buy; could we not find those same goods in Canada?"

Let me refer to farm products. Our farms are highly mechanized and competitive. Some of the most competitive and productive industries in Canada are our primary industries, bar none in the world. Canadians should be looking to Canadian produce. Why do we always have to have fresh foods imported at high cost during the winter months from foreign countries? Why should we not support our own primary manufacturers to a far greater extent?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: Why should we as consumers not say: "Yes, we have preserved that old car and the old car has seen better days but let us take a look now at cars produced in Canada by Canadian workers". Many automobile producers in Canada have demonstrated that they can downsize models, be competitive and produce cars which consume less fuel and others that run on natural gas and propane. Why cannot Canadian consumers say: "We are going to take a fresh look at what the North American producers have been doing and what our workers have been building in our own plants in Canada"? These decisions consumers can make and they are important.

One of my colleagues talked about the lack of incentive for infrastructure production. Where was he when we were talking about the NEED Program that we have brought in, encouraging municipalities to come forth with infrastructure projects which will contribute to the long-run productivity of Canada? More important, it will be producing more jobs in the short run for the people who need them most. Here is a directed program. Has the Opposition come up with a better program for creating jobs? It is not perfect, of course, but have we heard better alternatives from the other side?

Mr. Huntington: You are the Government.

Mr. Peterson: Until the Opposition comes up with a better program, let the Opposition look to the infrastructure projects that we are prepared to create with our NEED Program.

I believe there are other areas where we could take advantage of our great strengths. Our service sector in Canada is without parallel in the world. Our financial institutions, our lawyers, our insurance companies and our accountants have a collective reputation unmatched by any other country in the world.

Mr. Thacker: That does not hold for the Government.

Mr. Huntington: We need all those people just to interpret the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Peterson: Are we doing everything possible? I hear a lot of babbling from the other side, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious that Members over there feel that maybe they have not come forth with the concrete alternative which they know they owe to their constituents.

Mr. Huntington: You are the Government.

Mr. Shields: Get rid of the National Energy Program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Peterson: Let me talk about the service sector and how we can be more productive. I believe Canada's reputation in the service sector—

Mr. Huntington: Is disgusting.

Mr. Peterson: The Hon. Member opposite says that the reputation of our service sector is disgusting. That is an insult.

Mr. Huntington: Our Armed Services are in terrible shape.

Mr. Peterson: That is an insult to our service industry. He has not worked in that sector. Could we not take these service sectors and parlay their reputation into making Canada a headquarters for the multinational corporations—

An Hon. Member: The only service you create is bigger government.

Mr. Peterson: —whereby they could bring in more foreign capital, service it here, add value and then serve as a base for funnelling it around the world. This would require some amendments to our tax system. We would have to look at our tax treaties and the way we should tax foreign income coming into Canada to be the conduit tax principle, and that flows out again. This is a way in which we could utilize to even greater advantage the skills and abilities of Canadian firms and institutions.

This does not mean I have total confidence in everything that all of these sectors are doing during these tough times.

Mr. Shields: What about the Government?

Mr. Peterson: We all have an obligation to ensure that Canadians who are working and striving to keep their businesses, their farms and their homes are given every benefit of the doubt during these tough times, so that when we emerge from this recession we will be able to meet the demands of the new technologies that will be necessary for Canadians to compete in the decades ahead.

None of us like this period. We are not proud of it but we are fighting to cope with it. When we emerge from this period we want these sectors, our home owners, our business people and our farmers, to have their capital intact so they can perform the functions required of them in this country. It is not this borrowing authority, it is the lack of any concrete alternatives put forward by the Opposition that I stand and condemn today.

• (1240)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson). He talked about the need for stronger Canadian input into the automobile industry and about control of or more direction in foreign ownership in this country. As I listened, I asked myself what he is doing on that side of the House. Has he forgotten that there has been a Liberal Government in Canada for the last 20 years? Has he forgotten that for most of the last half century it has been the Liberal Party which has been running the country, and running it into the ground? Our automobile industry, our forest industry and our oil and gas industry have been ruined. They have been ruined by a Liberal Government that has not taken control of the economy or provided the very leadership that that Liberal Member talked about.

Mr. Shields: Supported by the NDP.

Mr. Murphy: I would say to my strange friends to the right that I listened to their last speaker, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). Like so many Tories have done in the House, he whined and cried about the fact that in December of 1979 the Liberals and the NDP brought down the Government. The Social Credit Party, who were their allies in the House, would not vote with them. They forget that two months later the people of Canada voted against the Conservative Government which was under the leadership of the Prime Minister of the day. It is interesting to note that the Conservative Party is now throwing out the same leader that we and the people of Canada disposed of. I tell them not to blame us. They are finally realizing the situation and taking the same action themselves.

Our Party supports the amendment which would limit the Government's borrowing authority. I support the amendment for all the reasons that were given by our finance critic, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I believe it would be criminal to give the Government $14 billion in addition to the $5 billion that it has already spent and is asking for in this legislation without first receiving any economic rationale or indication of how that money will be spent. Members of Parliament should not allow the Government to have that money without knowing whether it will be spent on jobs, pensioners, small business development or whether it will be used to hire more Government appointees, provide grants to the Liberals' friends, or for more advertising to promote the Government Party rather than Government programs. That $14 billion should not be granted unless we know how it will be spent.

The Government's lack of economic planning is evident from its NEED Program. The Government announced that Program in its budget of last October. We have heard that Program defended by many Members on the Government side over the last six months. But let us see what has happened with that Program. In its October budget, the Government talked about creating 50,000 jobs for Canadians. It spent four months promoting and advertising the Program while the Minister of Employment and Immigration travelled across the country bragging about it, but it was four months before any information was given to those groups who are eligible to apply under the Program. It was four months before the Government completed the brochures that it would send to those eligible groups such as native communities, unions and small businesses. The Government spent much time advertising and promoting its Program but did little to take concrete action to provide jobs. As a result, almost six months after the Program was announced, only 4,000 or 5,000 jobs have been created. Canadians have spent a dismal winter of unemployment, and Unemployment Insurance benefits have been lost at a rate of up to 70,000 a month. However, in that same period the Government has created 4,000 or 5,000 jobs through that widely promoted Program.

We in the New Democratic Party believe that the Government does have a role to play in the economy. We believe that there must be job-creation programs implemented and that many Government workers are honestly trying to do a good job, despite what some Conservatives say. However, they are not being provided with the necessary leadership to make these programs work. The groundwork and preparation for the NEED Program should have been completed when it was announced in October. The Government should have been ready to proceed and create jobs for the winter we have just gone through. Once again, those jobs were not available because the Government failed to do the work that was initially required.

For that reason, the NDP cannot support this borrowing Bill. We cannot sanction giving a blank cheque to a Government which did not provide the proper leadership for the expenditure of the money it had last winter.

We have no knowledge of where this money will be spent. Will it be used to help the pensioners? We have already seen White Papers and Green Papers and pronouncements by Ministers on the needs of pensioners, but there has been no pension reform. Will the money be spent on medical services? We have heard announcements from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) about the need for a better health Act in the country. We have heard much about what she would do about extra billing and about doctors who opt out of medicare plans. Will the $14 billion be used to improve medical services? Will the Government use this, rather, to send out its message through news releases and other means about what it might do five years or six years down the road? If that is what it intends to do, then the money would be wasted. While the money is needed for pensions, medical services and jobs, we have absolutely no knowledge of where the Government's priorities lie.

Another indication of the Government's lack of planning is that this Bill has been brought before the House before we have seen the budget. Members should be aware of the Government's plans before giving it borrowing authority. We should not give the Government a blank cheque without knowing what it will do with the money.

We in the New Democratic Party want action and leadership for Canadians and direction for the Canadian economy. We want to help the unemployed in Schefferville, those people who have been laid off by a heartless company which had a heartless president. We want jobs for the people who have been laid off in Sault Ste Marie, Sudbury, Port Alberni, Leaf Rapids, Kamloops, Sydney, Windsor, Hamilton and Gimli. We want security for those in Winnipeg, Regina, and Toronto who fear losing their jobs. We want the Government to respond to the need for jobs and help those who want to keep their jobs. That help is not coming from the Government.

Action must be taken to help the farmers, such as the De Mings family in Manitoba whose farm is being foreclosed by the Royal Bank. That is a bank that has not paid one cent in federal income tax in the last year and has a $20 million tax credit which it can use to defer or prevent it from paying taxes in the coming year. Farmers are losing their farms to banks which are making record profits. At the same time, small businessmen are losing their businesses.

In closing—because I realize my allotted time has almost expired—what we are saying is that there are a number of Canadians who are facing a very difficult financial situation. They are losing their jobs, their customers, their farms, their offices and their businesses. We have sympathy for those Canadians, but we want more than sympathy, we want leadership from the Government. We do not want to give the Government money without any leadership. If it provides the leadership, then we will help to provide the dollars; but until then, we say "No, no, no" to more Government spending without a purpose.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cosgrove: Shame, shame, shame.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-143, through which, as Your Honour knows, the Government is requesting $5 billion to take it to end of this month, and then $14 billion as an interim advance on next year's deficit. Your Honour will know that this Party is opposing this Bill and that we have proposed an amendment to reduce the $14 billion to $1. The $5 billion plus the carry-over will take the Government well into May, even into early June, and at that time it can come back to the House and quite properly request funds with documentation as to how that money will be spent.

Before the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) leaves, I want to address the point which he raised. He asked why Canadians cannot buy Canadian cars. The reason Canadians cannot buy Canadian cars is that the Liberal Government made a decision back in the early seventies that we would not go to the world price in energy. By that one decision made in the early seventies to hold down and subsidize the price of oil in Canada, the Government is now taking away jobs from the automobile workers in Oshawa and southern Ontario.

Mr. Cosgrove: Do you want to charge them more for fuel?

Mr. Thacker: The reason is that that Government decision sent a message, sent signals to us as ordinary Canadians, to buy big cars and to the manufacturers to continue to produce those big cars. That is what the marketplace does.

Mr. Blais: What about the Americans? Tell us about the Americans.

Mr. Thacker: The United States made exactly the same mistake. Meanwhile, Japan, Germany and the other—

Mr. Blais: The Americans went to world prices.

Mr. Thacker: —countries that had to go to world price immediately turned their engineers and technicians toward building cheaper, more efficient cars, so that eight years later they were just whipping us in the marketplace because their cars were more fuel efficient.

If the Government gives a subsidy of 15 per cent, I can absolutely guarantee that that subsidy of 15 per cent will become an inefficiency of 15 per cent. Therefore, as those automobile workers line up in the unemployment lines and as they turn to welfare, as they must in some cases, they should know that that is the direct result of the Liberal Government's decision in the early seventies that we were not to be blackmailed by some Arabs. It was felt that that was an artificial market and that we were not to be subjected to that. However, there is an international marketplace, and now Canadians are paying to realize that lesson.

Your Honour remembers that Bill C-143 was closed out on second reading. Marathon sessions were held during the committee stage which finally ended, I believe, at two o'clock one morning. Now we are at the report stage and we have proposed the amendment to reduce the $14 billion to $1.

What is the purpose of Parliament? What was the historical reason for the development of Parliament? The reason is that there were monarchs. Power and decision-making was basically concentrated in a group comprised of the king and a small number of advisers. The people who were not within that small group, which received all of the benefits, were suffering. Therefore, gradually, over many hundreds of years, they rose up and called for representation. In fact, people fought and died for the power to be able to say to the monarchs, "No, you cannot place that tax on us". That is how Parliament came about. The primary purpose was to control the purse strings.

Nothing is different today. The primary purpose for our being here, each and every one of us, including those on the Government side, is to be able to go back to our constituents and account for every penny for which the Government is asking. Today the Government is asking for $14 billion, and neither you, Mr. Speaker, nor I can go back to our constituents and say: "The Government wants the $14 billion because of this, this and this". The Government will not tell us, and that is what is wrong with it. That is why each of us must stand up as individuals and say: "No way, Cabinet; we will not give you a cent until you tell us how you propose to spend it". That is our duty.

Liberal Members opposite will stand to defeat our amendment which is in line with that long, historical development. In the past, those who spoke for the people had their heads chopped off. In representing the people and Parliament, they went to the Crown and said: "No, you cannot have what you ask for", and so the monarch chopped off their heads. It is our duty to speak out today. I can assure the House that we will honour our duty to the people of Canada. However, one can be sure that Liberal backbenchers have given up their independence in order to keep a Cabinet in power which should have long since gone down the trail.

Mr. Cosgrove: I think the Hon. Member has lost his head.

Mr. Thacker: The nation is in deep trouble, but it was not always that way. Nor does it have to be in the future, because we have great resources. If we can elect for ourselves a Government which will free up people to get out and build, we can take off.

We must remember that in the late sixties, before the present Government came to power, there were balanced budgets. The national debt was just a drop in the bucket, yet at that time we had a sound post-secondary education system, hospital insurance, medicare, Old Age Security and Family Allowances. In short, we were a sound country. We were highly respected in the world and we were charging up the mountain with a great future ahead of us. Each of us, as young people graduating in those days, had half a dozen to a dozen jobs to choose from. It was a great place to be.

Now, some 15 years later, under the Liberal Party and Government, where are we? The yearly deficit is now over $30 billion. The accumulated national debt, if one adds in the Crown corporation debts, is over $2 billion. Almost one in every three tax dollars goes toward servicing the debt, which then concentrates wealth into the hands of people who already have money and lend it to their Government. Our post-secondary educational system, our hospital insurance, our medicare, all of those social infrastructures, are in deep trouble. Our senior citizens are having to pay for the mistakes.

The Government failed to realize those ancient lessons of history. We are not the first nation in the world to have gone through this situation. Many nations before have gone through it and have left their writings, going right back to the Bible, setting out the reasons why there should not be high interest rates. It is no accident that usury is a prohibition in the Bible. It is because people actually lived under it and experienced it. It was very horrific to them. Their Bible, written at the time through divine revelation, addressed the problem, stating that high interest rates were usurious. We know that high interest rates simply come from deficits. Government deficits lead to inflation, which leads to high interest rates, which lead to collapse.

We are at the point of collapse because those idiots opposite fail to comprehend the lessons of history. They thought they could do as a Government what we all know within our own hearts we cannot do. They put a penalty on our children and on our grandchildren for which they will pay. There are seven million young Canadians between the ages of 18 and 33 who clearly see the penalty which has been put on their shoulders because of sheer stupidity and the grab for power—there is no more polite way of saying it. Like the monarchs of old, the Government is trying to concentrate decision-making. We, the people, will not put with it. The Government is going down the tube the minute there is an election.

I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should inform the Hon. Member that his allotted time has expired.

It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Madam Speaker: I have the honour of laying on the Table of the House the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages for the calendar year 1982, and I may remind Hon. Members that pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 46(4), this report shall be deemed to have been permanently referred to the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—PROCESSING OF GRANTS FOR REMOVAL FROM HOMES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, it has been estimated by Government officials that it now costs between $9,000 and $10,000 to remove urea formaldehyde foam insulation from a home, while the maximum grant allowed by the Government for this purpose is $5,000.

As of March 1, out of a total of 30,500 applications on file, only 3,200 grants had been processed and returned to the home owners, with another 1,000 in the processing stage. This is very slow progress indeed and should be rectified as soon as possible.

This may be an important factor in why an additional 30,000 such eligible home owners have not registered for the grant. It could be, as well, that they are not aware or have not been made fully aware of the potential health hazard of urea formaldehyde foam, and therefore their concerns have been minimal.

Taking all this into consideration, I would like to recommend to the Government that it extend the final date of registration past the deadline of June 30, 1983, to give more opportunity to those eligible home owners to register for the grant. This extension was recommended by the Health, Welfare and Social Affairs Committee.

Hopefully the Government will reverse its decision and take the advice of the Committee and, as well, give active consideration to increasing the grant so that it covers the full cost of the removal of the offensive insulation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—PROVISION OF UNITED STATES MILITARY ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, President Reagan has recently stated that he might increase the number of American military advisers in El Salvador, as well as increase U.S. military assistance to that unfortunate country.

This comes at a time when flagrant human rights violations continue to take place, as exemplified in the recent killing of Marianella Garcia Villas, President of the El Salvador Human Rights Commission and a Vice-President of the International Federation of the Rights of Man, and after continuous denunciations by Pope John Paul II of foreign backing for the war in El Salvador.

In my view, the situation in El Salvador is indeed very critical and, if negotiations with all sides to this conflict are not initiated very soon, then the danger of increased escalation from outside forces, including those of the United States, will continue.

I, therefore, would like, on the eve of the visit of Vice President Bush, to call on the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Canadian Ambassador to the United States to make genuine and forceful representations to the present administration in the United States to increase their efforts in the search for a negotiated, rather than a military settlement in El Salvador.

EDUCATION

AMOUNT OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, the Liberal Party proclaims its commitment to our post-secondary education system. This commitment, however, is not reflected in reality.

Statistics show that education was the single largest item in Government expenditures during 1970-1971 at 22.1 per cent. By 1979-1980 it was 17 per cent, and it has dropped even more today.

The Liberal decision to impose a six and five curb on post-secondary education translates into a further cutback of the money allocated to universities, $100 million in 1983-1984 and $250 million in 1984-1985. Indeed, last year the Government cut some $300 million by way of the revenue guarantee.

Canada needs more research development and highly qualified manpower to boost the economy's recovery. The Liberal decision to pass the brunt of budget cuts onto the post-secondary institutions renders its commitment meaningless and hypocritical.

For the past 15 years Canadians have been suffering the Liberal experiment with the economy. When it comes to attacks on education, the core of our very nation, it is important that we all say, "No."

THE ECONOMY

BUY CANADIAN PROGRAM URGED

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, two divergent approaches have been taken to curing the economic problems of the industrialized nations. At one extreme is Reaganomics. It finds many supporters in the Official Opposition.

An Hon. Member: And in the Liberals.

Mr. Peterson: But Americans have taught Canadians that monetarism and supply side economics are not the answer.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why are the Americans doing so well, then?

Mr. Peterson: At the other extreme is the French theory that Governments can spend a country out of recession. The NDP is a convert to this approach. The result is increased inflation and interest rates in France and an 8 per cent devaluation yesterday. This is a time for sanity.

Mr. Nielsen: Right.

Mr. Peterson: Our approach has been a dramatic decline in both inflation and the interest rates.

An Hon. Member: And the dollar.

Mr. Peterson: We know there is no quick fix. We can only earn our way to a more prosperous future. But can we do better? Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: Not you fellows—over here.

Mr. Peterson: And herein lies our hope.

To start with, each of us, as consumers, can shop Canadian. Why buy foreign food when our farm produce is the cheapest in the world? Why buy foreign cars when we make quality vehicles in Canada? Why should we not buy Canadian shoes and clothes?

Mr. Nielsen: And steel pipes.

Mr. Peterson: Made in Canada is a proud label. As consumers, each of us can help create new jobs in Canada; each of us can contribute to our economic recovery. We can help ourselves by helping our fellow Canadians.

Mr. Epp: We want Peterson in the cabinet.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HONDURAS AND NICARAGUA—RECOMMENDATIONS TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, as of this past week the heaviest fighting has taken place in Nicaragua since the overthrow of Somoza in 1979. The troops who are bringing the fighting into Nicaragua from Honduras are ex-Somozista guards. Newsweek and The New York Times have documented the fact that they are being supported by the CIA with finances, weapons, and advisers.

Today, Madam Speaker, I propose to the Government of Canada that Canada must seriously consider whether it should withold Government to Government bilateral aid to Honduras as long as Honduras permits these forces to use Honduras as their base against Nicaragua.

Secondly, I would ask the Government of Canada to put some muscle into the co-operation that it has promised to Mexico and Venezuela to bring about a ceasefire on that border.

Thirdly, I propose that the Government of Canada strongly protest to Vice President Bush tomorrow when he visits Canada about the U.S. involvement on that frontier.

Finally, I ask that the Government of Honduras sign the United Nations Agreement on Refugees. At the present time Honduras has not signed this agreement, which makes it very difficult for the U.N. to get inside that country where there are literally hundreds of thousands of refugees from several conflicts in the area.

In the light of that, and realizing that Honduras is the poorest country in Central America, I would hope that some of these recommendations that I have just made will be put into effect to promote peace in that country.

APPOINTMENT OF NEW HEAD OF U.S. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, yesterday it was reported that President Reagan had appointed as head of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency the man who had been its original administrator at its founding 12 years ago, Mr. William Ruckelshaus. I am sure that all of us who have a deep and critical interest in environmental matters welcome this appointment.

As you know from my many interventions in the House, Madam Speaker, environmental concerns, particularly the question of acid rain, are of pressing importance in my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. For this reason I have repeatedly urged the reconstitution of our own Subcommittee on Acid Rain, a step which this House saw fit to take last week. So now we have, on both sides of the border, a strengthening of the forces pressing for a resolution of these problems. I and my constituents take great satisfaction in this, Madam Speaker.

I want to commend the Minister responsible for his past efforts, and I want to call upon him to take advantage of these factors which have so quickly changed what had seemed to be a situation of deadlock. It is my hope that he will be meeting with the new head of the EPA in person in the very near future so that progress may be made toward what is, I am sure, our common goal of cleaner air and water all across our common continent of North America.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

WELFARE

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO NATIVE PEOPLE IN MANITOBA

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Just recently, Madam Speaker, I received a letter from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). In his letter, which was in reply to one I had sent him, the Minister outlined his policy regarding welfare payments to native people under the Canada Assistance Plan. This plan is cost-shared by the provincial and federal Governments with announcements on increases made by provincial officials.

By law, federal Government adjustments to native people receiving welfare must be made within two months of provincial adjustments. At the beginning of this year, welfare recipients in Manitoba received increases ranging from 7 per cent to 29 per cent based on the size of the family and the ages of children in that family. These increases became effective January 1 for everyone, except native people, who did not receive increases until March 1.

In reply to my question the Minister said that these increases will not be provided retroactively to cover the two-month period because of "the extensive work entailed in affecting rate changes". What this means in human terms is that native people, whose cheques are administered by the Winnipeg DIAND office, are being denied money paid to every other welfare recipient in the Province. I was extremely disappointed to learn the Minister's position on retroactivity.

We have heard a lot in recent weeks about the Government's desire to bargain in good faith with native people on constitutional matters. Those are important matters, Madam Speaker, but I would like to know when the Government and this particular Minister intend to act in good faith on bread and butter issues such as this one.

CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, Canadian agriculture is facing its most severe crisis in the history of Canada. Thousands of farmers have suffered forced sales and bankruptcies due to the crushing squeeze of soaring fuel costs, feed costs, and interest rates, against reduced prices for their goods. There is real concern about the continuing viability of the industry as a whole.

My Party has urged the Government to provide relief for our farmers by way of improving capital gains tax legislation, interest rate subsidies, agribonds, exemption from the excise tax on farm fuels, and a moratorium on foreclosures. Every suggestion falls on deaf ears. This Government has offered absolutely no relief for farmers and no hope for the agricultural industry.

My colleagues, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), and the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), have repeatedly requested action from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

Dairy farmers in northern Alberta have lost their market share quota, in many cases through no fault of their own, and are being heavily penalized to the extent of $28 per hectolitre for any production outside the market share quota. This is affecting almost 40 per cent of the producers in Northern Alberta. The Minister was asked to try to alleviate this problem by making recommendations to his Department. The Minister again abdicated his responsibilities to Canadian farmers and chose to ignore the problems of the very people he is supposed to represent in Cabinet.

It has become obvious that the Minister should resign and should be replaced by someone who is genuinely—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

ENERGY

SIGNING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN QUEBEC AND U.S. NORTHEASTERN STATES

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, last night, on the CBC news, I heard that the Premier of Quebec attended the signing of an agreement yesterday in the United States—in the northeastern states to be exact—for the sale of electric power by the Government of Quebec to our American neighbours, for the sum of $5 billion.

I am of course pleased that our power surpluses are being used, but what really worries me is that this is a long-term twenty-year agreement for the sale of a steady supply, not surplus power, to our neighbours to the South who will probably use it to expand industry in the states concerned.

I am very worried, Madam Speaker, especially since today Quebecers are paying exorbitant prices for their very own electric power. The Canadian Government has made a number of attempts, through legislation, to bring industry to Quebec and to the rest of Canada. In return, instead of taking advantage of the industrial potential of its electric power supply to attract the same companies, the Quebec Government is talking about a long-term contract for power sales over a period of twenty years, at a price guaranteed to be 80 per cent of the cost of producing the same power, using other sources of energy, in the United States.

I am concerned about my constituents, because I think we need the power, and furthermore, I fail to understand why the Leader of that Government who himself accused Maurice Duplessis of giving away our iron ore to the Americans, why he is now giving away our electric power, our only made-in-Quebec source of energy.

I therefore ask the Canadian Government to be—

Madam Speaker: Order.

THE ECONOMY

FORECAST OF INCREASED UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON JOB CREATION PROJECTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Today the Conference Board of Canada reports that, while recovery is under way, it will be so modest that unemployment will rise even higher. One of the reasons for this is that Canadians are running scared that the tentative recovery which may be under way may be sabotaged by excessive stimulation which might reflate the economy and start interest rates rising again. People are afraid to call back workers, and they are afraid to hire new ones.

Informetrica has identified 73 projects due to start this year which are worth about $7 billion and could create at least 140,000 jobs. Will the Minister sit down with his officials and identify what action the Government can take to get these projects off the drawing board?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this is what I have been doing in preparation for the budget. We are examining what steps will be appropriate to ensure that the recovery which is taking place will be even stronger than what is anticipated. What those steps will be, will be announced in the budget.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Minister of Finance. My point is that some of these projects do not require a dime, or else very little money from the federal Treasury. They do not involve massive expenditures and stimulation in borrowing. Some of them involve the settlement of jurisdictional disputes. Others involve the removal of obstacles in the regulatory procedure, and they include such items as the natural gas pipeline in British Columbia, petrochemical and methanol plants in the Prairies, a water line in Saskatchewan, and the Hibernia-related projects in Newfoundland. Why does the Minister not identify the government actions which could take place and which could get the private sector started on these measures now with limited cost to the Treasury?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is nothing to prevent the Hibernia project from proceeding if the promoters are convinced that they are ready to proceed. They would only need to put an application before the National Energy Board and follow the normal procedures which are required. As far as the natural gas pipeline in British Columbia is concerned, again this is a decision which has to be taken by the Government of British Columbia, to begin with. As the Hon. Member knows, the Government of British Columbia has not yet decided what is the preferred option and is examining the matter at the present time.

I am happy that the Hon. Member recognizes that many of those projects do not necessarily require government funding. It is a matter for the sponsors to proceed with the necessary authorizations which are required, in some instances from the provincial Governments and in some other instances from the appropriate federal regulatory authorities. At the present time, as she knows, for instance, with regard to Hibernia, it is not the regulatory process which is delaying those projects at all.

GOVERNMENT BORROWING LEGISLATION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It would be an absolute tragedy to lose the ground which we have already gained, at such a terrible cost to Canadians in terms of lost jobs and lost incomes, by reflating the economy. One of the reasons those projects are not going ahead is because of fears that the Government will take action to start interest rates rising again. If the Minister is so unconcerned about this matter, could he tell us why he has before this House a Bill to borrow $19 billion, on which he has told us his Finance Department officials have done absolutely no impact studies? Why is he attempting to borrow $19 billion without any study on the impact of that borrowing on interest rates in this country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all, the Bill is being debated in this House, and the Hon. Member knows that questions are not usual in terms of Bills which are currently being debated before the House. I have no hesitation in telling her, however, that the reasons which she alleges for some of those projects not proceeding at the present time are completely wrong. It is not a matter of fear that interest rates might rise again that some of those projects are not proceeding.

Some of those projects are being delayed because of lack of demand for the product, for instance, in the mineral field. Some other projects are being delayed because the promoters are not convinced that they are ready to proceed with them or the provincial Governments concerned have not yet decided that it is appropriate to proceed with them, such as the natural gas pipeline in British Columbia. And I can mention a number of other projects.

[Translation]

If the Hon. Member has some specific projects which she would like the Government to consider, and if she has in mind specific examples of undue delays caused by administrative setbacks, I will be pleased to look into them and discuss them with her. But unless she can provide me with solid evidence, I maintain that her allegations are unfounded.

INVESTMENT IN CORPORATE SECTOR

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance who will know that many companies in Canada are chronically short of capital and that, even if they were to get new orders, they would have a very difficult time employing more people and enlarging their facilities. Therefore, what action is the Minister intending to take or will he take to make it possible for people to invest in companies? What will he do to encourage new investment in the corporate sector?

Mr. Deans: How about the unused capacity?

Mr. Blenkarn: For example, will he abolish capital gains tax on new investment?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would suggest that my colleague wait for the budget speech to know what action I intend to take. He will then be able to make up his own mind as to whether the measures advocated will be adequate to cope with the problems which seem to cause him some concern.

[English]

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO PROMOTE INVESTMENT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, we have been waiting. For example, on December 13 the Minister said:

> We will also be proceeding with draft legislation for a registered shareholder investment plan under which the taxation of capital gains will be limited to the real after inflation gain. The Lortie Committee, to which I have referred already . . . endorsed such a plan—

He went on to say that he was going to adjust business taxation for inflation. How long do we have to wait for the Minister to carry on these explorations and studies? When will the Minister produce something which will make investment and growth possible again?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it would help a lot if the Opposition, rather than filibuster the income tax amendments, would pass that Act and ensure that we can send $6 billion worth of refunds to the Canadian people. It would also help very much if the Opposition would agree to pass the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Small Business Investments Grants Act, which again they are filibustering and refusing to pass. I think these are very important steps that would help small business and help the Canadian consumer. I invite my hon. friends on the other side among the Conservative Party to assume that responsibility, and support the passage of those pieces of legislation on an urgent basis, because Canadian businessmen and consumers are waiting for those measures.

ADVICE GIVEN BY PRESIDENT OF WORLD BANK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the President of the World Bank acknowledged that Governments' battles against inflation have been extremely costly in terms of lost jobs. It also appears that he advised the Government not to stimulate the economy. Will the Minister tell the House what advice was given to the Government by the President of the World Bank, and what was the Government's response?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can confirm that I had an hour and a half meeting with the President of the World Bank and his associates. I can tell the Leader of the New Democratic Party that there was no request for advice from the President of the World Bank as to what policy the Government of Canada should adopt, and the President of the World Bank did not volunteer any particular advice to the Government of Canada in that regard.

I understand that the President of the World Bank was asked a question in a press conference and volunteered some information, to which the Hon. Member is referring. But I can tell my hon. friend that the purpose of the meeting had to do with the problem of financing the World Bank, particularly its aid program, and how developed countries could take steps to ensure that they could continue to support the World Bank in its activities relating to the problems of developing countries. This was the purpose of Mr. Clausen's trip, and these were the issues discussed in the course of our meeting. At no time was there any discussion with me as to what was an appropriate policy for the Government of Canada in the current circumstances.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S BUDGETARY INTENTIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, despite the fact that certain institutions and people, including the Government, are saying that there are signs of recovery in the present year, there are others such as, most recently, the Conference Board, who have indicated, quite accurately, that unless there is a significant change in Government policy the current high levels of unemployment will be maintained or they may actually get worse this year.

In preparing his budget will the Minister assure the House that there will be two kinds of distinctive measures in that budget—one set of specific measures to create immediate jobs in the short run, and another set of measures which will deal with serious structural problems in the Canadian economy and provide for some long-range changes guaranteeing long-range job security?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I should tell the Hon. Member that forecasters both here and abroad expect the unemployment rate to remain high not only next year but for a number of years after that, be it in the United States, in Europe or in Canada. According to most forecasters, the recession has brought about not only a high level of unemployment but also some structural changes which make it difficult for workers to adapt themselves. This phenomenon is now common to all industrialized countries. I can tell my colleague that it is an issue which causes me serious concern in the preparation of my budget and that I will try to find solutions.

As to whether the measures proposed are likely to meet the two objectives indicated by my colleague, again I urge him to wait for the budget, and I hope that the measures I will announce then will satisfy him and meet his objectives.

• (1430)

LONG-RANGE POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my last question concerns the long run. In 1980 the Liberal Party promised an industrial strategy, but shortly after the election it was abandoned and, in its place, there was a series of ad hoc measures which, to understate it considerably, have not produced the kind of job opportunities that Canadians desire. Is the Minister, when he answered as he did just a minute ago, now telling the people of Canada that when we get the budget after Easter he, as Minister of Finance, will lay down for the first time in Canada a long-range policy whose purpose is to deal with the serious structural problems in the Canadian economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): What I have said, Madam Speaker, is that the Hon. Member will have to conclude for himself, when he hears the budget, whether it meets that objective or not. However, I have already indicated in several answers in the past that, in my view, we were risking looking for the Saint Graal if we were hoping for the development or presentation of a totally integrated industrial strategy. I felt that probably the better solution for Canada and most other countries was to work on industrial strategies, that is, we had to work at various sectors, identify our strengths, and try to build on those strengths and propose policies which would further strengthen those strong elements of our economy. I think this is probably a more realistic and more effective way of addressing this particular issue.

As to whether the budget will address this appropriately, I again invite my hon. friend to reach his own conclusion when he hears the budget.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTIONS TO VARIOUS PROVINCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the joint statement made last week-end by Messrs. Jacques Léonard and Jacques-Yvan Morin, respectively Minister of Municipal Affairs and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs in the Quebec Government, to the effect that Quebec municipalities will not be allowed to receive direct subsidies from the Federal Government, I would like the Right Hon. Prime Minister to give Hon. Members the assurance that federal subsidies will always be identified with the Government of Canada and paid directly, so that Canadians living in the province of Quebec or elsewhere in this country may know of the Federal Government contributions to various provincial programs, something Quebec and a number of other provinces consistently refuse to do.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that the practice he is recommending is exactly the one which we have followed for some time and which we will continue to follow. That is a practice which I had fully explained at the Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers last year, and I can tell the Canadian taxpayers that they have a right to know where their tax dollars go, and that if the various provinces, especially the province the Hon. Member has just mentioned refuse to identify for the benefit of Canadian taxpayers the federal contributions to federal-provincial projects, we will find a way to spend these funds without their co-operation.

EDUCATION

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT GUIDELINES ON ACCESSIBILITY TO UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. He will be aware that last summer his predecessor made a commitment to the Canadian Federation of Students to introduce a $250 million federal bursary program as additional aid to post-secondary students in Canada. On Friday the Secretary of State changed that promise. He offered merely to guarantee $60 million of additional bank loans to Canadian students.

Since the Government will stand to save some $350 million by putting the EPF transfers under the six and five program and, as was mentioned in the House yesterday and today, graduates face record levels of unemployment, how can the Minister claim to be encouraging greater accessibility to Canadian universities and community colleges?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, in the last few months, I have had many contacts with the provincial Ministers of Education, and at our meeting of January 23 in Victoria, we agreed on a formula for supplementary assistance to students, which seemed to us mutually acceptable in the present budgetary circumstances. On February 8, the Ontario Minister of Education sent me a letter in which she confirmed provincial acceptance of last January proposals. It is true that this matter was negotiated, discussed and examined by representatives of the provinces and the Canadian Government for a few months, but within the present budget, the support provided by the Canadian Government will be amply sufficient to meet whatever additional requirements have come to light during the last year.

[English]

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State responds to the dialogue with the Provinces but ignores the dialogue with the students of Canada and the promises and commitments that were made to them.

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. Since so many students do not have any hope of employment and since an announcement has been made without any definition of how that fund, limited as it is, and acceptable to the Provinces as the limited amount might be, will be applied, when will the Minister give us a definition? When will the amendments be tabled in the House so that student aid award officers and students planning their future with this meagre amount of money can get on with it?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that he is forgetting the additional amounts which were announced by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, only 15 days ago and which will increase the aid to student employment next summer from $100 million to $170 million. Moreover last year, this House was asked to approve supplementary estimates of $30 million in addition to the $120 million already provided in the estimates and that we have just proposed a further increase of $60 million dollars over a period of two years. Consequently, I do not believe that the Government has failed in its obligation to meet students' requirements. On the other hand, the Hon. Member has alleged that I have not heeded the students' requests. However, I have met with them a few times in the last few months to inform them about my discussions and negotiations with the provinces and they have never been left in the dark.

Finally, with regards to the particular conditions which will apply to these $60 million, I am having discussions with my colleague, the Government House Leader, to have the details of these amendments tabled at the first opportunity so that the House may debate them and these measures can become effective at the beginning of the next term this September.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—REDISTRIBUTION OF EXPROPRIATED FAMILY FARMS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works I should like to address my question to the Minister of Communications because he has a great deal of knowledge about the subject. Part of his riding is known as Mirabel. In that riding there has already been a thousand subdivisions of family farms that have been split into either two or three units. This has been done by Mr. Goyer's Canada Lands Corporation. I wonder if the Minister of Communications could request the Minister of Public Works to stop this breaking up of the original family farms and not allow Mr. Goyer to break them up into small pieces as he is doing.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that the Government is working with local people, including farmers, municipal authorities and people living in the Mirabel area. As for his specific question, as soon as the information is received, it will be sent to the Hon. Member. However, I can give the House the assurance that Members from the area are keeping a close watch on the development of Mirabel.

[English]

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister, and point out to him the immorality of what is transpiring in the Province of Quebec. Farms are being broken up into three pieces. Homes are being sold to civil servants and, in turn, are being sold again. Would the Prime Minister please request the Minister of Public Works to have a full parliamentary commission on the disposition of the 80,000 acres at Mirabel?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I apologize. I had not heard the previous exchange, but I will certainly take notice of the question.

BANKS AND BANKING

USE OF BANKS' PROFITS IN CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. He will be aware that Canada's five major chartered banks earned $1.5 billion in profits and paid a tax rate of about 8 per cent, which was the same tax rate as was paid by Canadians who lost their jobs last year and who had to spend the entire year on UIC.

He will also be aware that recently bank officials have been very concerned that the amount of interest they will recover from last year's loans may make their profits go as high as $2.6 billion, which is more than $1 billion over last year. Last week the Minister of Finance defended these high profits and low tax rates by saying that he was interested in having his Government "create an environment in which the private sector will continue to invest and to create jobs for Canadians". The Government has been told that the private sector has indicated that it will invest less this year than it did in 1982.

Will the Minister of Finance tell Canadians how he intends to see that the profits accruing to the banks will go to create jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am happy to see that today my hon. friend is neither in a book ripping or book burning mood. He raised a question last week concerning the chartered banks. I indicated that a lot of the profit results from the arrangements that have been made whereby banks were allowed to make loans at very low rates, to the small business sector in particular. The rates were well below the going rate and were offered in exchange for the non-taxation of interest on loans that were made to the small business sector.

Those loans have been made to the Canadian small business sector, have benefited the Canadian economy, are benefiting the Canadian economy at the present time, and are contributing to maintaining and creating jobs in the small business sector.

In addition, because of the seriousness of the recession, the banks have had to provide for large potential losses on their loans. Those credits against potential losses have resulted in a lower income from the banks subject to taxation. If the banks are not going to face those losses, obviously that money is going to come back into the profits that will be subject to taxation. But these have been made under current accounting practices for the banks to maintain their viability and to secure the confidence of people in the banks in Canada. If losses are not occurring, they will go back into profits and be taxed.

Mr. Riis: The Minister of Finance knows full well that the small business community in attempting to obtain Small Business Bonds finds it an impossibility. I will bet him an autographed picture of Governor Bouey that he cannot find a single bank which is prepared to offer him a Small Business Bond, because they are simply not doing it.

PROPOSAL TO IMPOSE WINDFALL PROFITS TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, the interest rates whereby the banks are collecting these huge profits have destroyed the lives of many Canadians who have lost homes, jobs, businesses and farms, while the banks have continued to argue that they could not afford to reduce the amount of interest they have been collecting. If there is any justification for the outrageous imbalance between the cost to individual Canadians and the profit to Canadian banks resulting from high interest rates, will the Minister of Finance at least agree to recapture that money from the banks through a windfall profits tax so that it can be funnelled into helping Canadians to regain lost jobs, to pay off their mortgages, and to restore some semblance of fairness to our tax system?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will take the Hon. Member's representation as a suggestion. I will certainly examine it, but for the record I would like to read back to him the report of the parliamentary Committee which studied the situation of the banks a few months ago.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: That Committee of the House reported that "high profits were not earned to the detriment of Canadian consumers or businesses" and that "the most consistent and comprehensive data at the Committee's disposal indicates that Canadian banks are not overly profitable when compared to banks in the rest of the world". That is a report from a Committee of this House, on which there were Members of Parliament from all sides of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: If the Hon. Member does not even want to have respect for the work of the Committees of the House, I think it is a judgment on himself.

DISARMAMENT

PROPOSAL TO LIMIT NUMBER OF NUCLEAR MISSILES

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last summer at the IMF talks in Geneva, Russian and American negotiators came to a private arrangement whereby only 75 launchers or missiles would be deployed on each side.

Miss MacDonald: Why the IMF?

Mr. McRae: Apparently this was accepted by the joint Chiefs of Staff from the United States, was rejected by the Reagan Government, and then subsequently rejected by the Russian Government. However, it is still considered to be a very viable proposal.

When the Minister is talking with Mr. Bush tomorrow, would he put this kind of proposal before him and suggest to him that it has far more chance of success than virtually sticking to the zero option?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the proposal or the ideas which were developed between the two negotiators have been rejected, as the Hon. Member knows, both by Washington and by Moscow. The ideas of their own negotiators did not find favour in their respective capitals. Tomorrow, in our discussions with the United States Vice-President, we intend to raise this particular proposal and others which may have merit, in an effort to break the deadlock that now appears to exist at the talks in Geneva.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEXICO—ATTACK ON CANADIAN TOURIST

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week officials from his Department met with police authorities in Acapulco, Mexico, to discuss recent attacks on Canadian tourists. I ask the Minister what was the outcome of that meeting? What guarantees did he get from Mexican authorities to protect our citizens while visiting that country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, if I recall accurately, the Hon. Member is referring to a particular case of a Canadian who was attacked in Acapulco while walking on a beach. Obviously there are some of these incidents. We are taking our responsibilities seriously in drawing them to the attention of the Mexican authorities. Nevertheless, the preservation of law and order and the enforcement of the law are matters for the Mexican authorities. We are raising these points with them as occasion warrants it.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): What the Minister stated about the incident that occurred last week is true. This man can be described as a very happy-go-lucky man. He is a constituent whom I know very well, but I think too many Canadians are being received very shabbily and attacked by people.

PROTECTION OF VISITORS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, in a country with which we have as close a relationship as we have with Mexico, I think the Minister's Department should be a little more forceful in bringing a matter such as this to their attention. We grant Mexicans in this country respect and protection by the laws of our country. We should ask them to do likewise.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is perfectly right, that we expect the authorities of other countries to protect our citizens when they travel in those countries as they have a right to the same treatment in Canada. But, even with the best of intentions, there do occur attacks, there do occur woundings, and in some cases murders. We have some instances in Canada where terrorists have come to this country and have particularly sought out representatives of the Turkish Government for attacks. Even though our authorities are doing their very best, sometimes it is not possible to avoid these very unfortunate incidents.

I certainly appreciate what he has to say, but I do not think we can have a total commitment from any Government, including our own Government and our own police authorities, that no incidents of that type will happen, either to visitors or to citizens of this country.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSAL TO BUILD MONORAIL FACTORY IN CALGARY

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He will know that a firm wants to build a free monorail in Calgary which involves a factory and several hundred Canadian jobs. The difficulty is that the approvals from the Department of Transport have been slow. There is now some danger that we will lose that factory and those jobs to Philadelphia. Can the Minister tell us what he is doing to speed up the approvals and keep those jobs in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will not deny the validity of the judgment passed on this particular item, but a meeting will be held in Ottawa next week and decisions will be made at that time.

Mr. Hawkes: I am glad to hear that from the Minister.

DELAY IN HOLDING MEETING

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, may I ask why it has taken six months to have that kind of meeting?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have not gone personally into the details of it, but apparently the conversations which took place were too long.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL PRICE OF GRAIN

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The other day I asked him whether there would be an announcement about the initial price of grains. Since then the Senator responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board has indicated that farmers will not be receiving a 6 per cent or even a 5 per cent increase but that they will be receiving a dramatic drop of 70 cents to 80 cents per bushel of wheat.

In view of the fact that there are no increases in the price of grain, no assurances of an absence of strikes so that deliveries will continue, and in view of the beating farmers have received as a result of energy costs and interest rate increases, does the Minister want to proceed at this particular time to provide guaranteed revenues to railways and fertilizer companies, even though farmers cannot afford fertilizer themselves? What does he intend to do for farmers who will go bankrupt, and where does he intend to place them, in view of the high unemployment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, of course I will only reply to the question pertaining to initial payment. The question raised a few days ago by my hon. friend was on that subject. The answer to it is that Cabinet is being seized now of suggestions by the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board.

Mr. Nielsen: It has been seized for three years now.

Mr. Pepin: If the usual speed is observed in this particular instance, we will have a decision in the coming days which will be earlier than in some years and not as early as in others.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF CHANGE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that in 1980 federal subsidies for transport totalled $2.4 billion, of which $278 million went for grain, $971 for air; $335 million for marine, and $547 for VIA Rail and CN Marine, and since the Prime Minister promised in the 1980 election to doubletrack—

Mr. Broadbent: Doublecross and doubletrack.

Mr. Korchinski: —but he did not mention anything about tempering with the Crow, does the Minister not think that the Government has an obligation on the basis of his promise not to proceed with any development, to await any tampering, pending any mandate the Government might receive in a future election?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am sure you will not allow me to debate this afternoon which sector of the Canadian economy is most subsidized by the Government. I think the majority of the people will recognize that the grain industry has had its fair share of government support in the past. Be that as it may, that share will be increased substantially when the Bill, about which everybody is talking, is passed by this House in due time. The degree of support of the Government would then be raised to close to $1 billion a year, which is pretty high by everybody's standards.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In his talks with United States Vice-President Bush tomorrow, will he make it as clear to the Vice-President, as he has to this House, that the Government has not agreed to Cruise missile testing, nor is it committed to such testing, and that, if in the future the Government should refuse a request made to it to test the Cruise, such a refusal would in no way breach any of the Government's commitments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think from previous answers the Hon. Member can rest assured that I would be repeating myself if I told the Vice-President that there had been no cabinet agreement not to test the Cruise. But I doubt whether the Vice-President will argue the contrary. After all, the Americans have signed an umbrella agreement which makes it quite clear that, if they want to test certain arms systems, including the Cruise, they would have to come to us and ask for it.

INQUIRY RESPECTING CANADIAN COMMITMENTS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I specifically asked the Prime Minister if in the event of such a request, and assuming Canada refused it, in refusing the request to test would the Government in no way at all be breaching any of its commitments. It is on that specifically I hoped to have an answer since the U.S. Ambassador to Canada has suggested we would be breaching our commitments.

While the Prime Minister is on his feet, would he be good enough to explain a response made by the Deputy Prime Minister yesterday. In conversations with the U.S. Vice-President tomorrow on the Geneva negotiations, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said Canada would be putting forth its views? Could the Prime Minister tell us what those views are? Does Canada now agree with NATO Secretary General Luns that the zero option is unattainable? I would like to know what Canada's views will be in these discussions with the U.S. Vice-President.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the first part of the question I can reassure the Hon. Member that if a case arises I would say that I am prepared to say publicly that, if we do not agree to test the Cruise, there will be no reneging on any commitment, because I have said repeatedly there is no commitment to test the Cruise.

As to the second part of the question, there are many aspects to the views that we will be putting forward. Some of them are contained in statements made by myself or by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I made some in the course of last year, on disarmament. I made some at the United Nations and some at Notre Dame University. They all emphasize the importance for both sides to be negotiating very seriously toward disarmament, in other words, that the first track of the NATO decision of December, 1979, was extraordinarily important to us if we were going to be expected to look at the second track.

In so far as the zero option is concerned, I remember arguing at Bonn that the Canadian position was not necessary that the zero option had to be the result of the negotiations. It was a starting point. It was ideally, probably the best, that there be no weapons on either side. But we staked out our position quite carefully that it was not the only position and that it should not be used to prevent a meaningful negotiation.

Miss Jewett: Unattainable.

ALBERTA EDIBLE OIL PROCESSING FACILITY

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Minister has been considering an application under the nutritive processing agreement for an edible oil processing facility in Wainwright, Alberta. Could the Minister tell us whether he has completed his assessment of that application? Could he tell us when a decision will be made and, if a decision has been made, could he indicate to the House the status of his decision?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the nutritive processing agreement has been an excellent example of the co-operation between the Province of Alberta and the Government of Canada, creating something like 1,500 jobs over the past six years and over 300 applications. The application on whose behalf the Hon. Member, both in the House and previously, has made recommendations, as well as his provincial colleagues, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Economic Development, is one on which I hope we can have a positive solution in our negotiations this week.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

PREPARATION OF DEPARTMENTAL GUIDELINES AND PROCEDURES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. It has to do with the implementation of the Freedom of Information Act, namely, Bill C-43. Is it the intention of the Government to allow each individual Department of Government to prepare its own directives, guidelines and procedures, or will those guidelines and procedures be prepared by the central agency, namely, the Treasury Board? If the latter is the case, when they are prepared will the hon. gentleman arrange for their tabling in the House of Commons?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the approach I am taking is to have a high degree of centralization of the rules and procedures. I will get to my hon. friend as soon as possible about the possibility of tabling the information.

PROCEDURES APPLICABLE TO REGIONAL OFFICES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, one of the problems one can foresee is the fact that a great deal of the information under the control of a Department or Government is in the regional offices and other components which are spread across the country. Can the hon. gentleman assure the House that steps are being taken so that information in the regional offices of Departments and agencies will be just as available upon an application, say, under freedom of information, as information is in offices in the National Capital district?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, this is the approach we are pursuing in the context of the Act as adopted by Parliament. I think the Hon. Member has raised a very useful point in that regard.

MAISLIN INDUSTRIES—ABILITY TO MEET FINANCIAL COMMITMENTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of—I am sorry I have forgotten his portfolio. Is it International Trade?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: It is Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you. I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It has to do with Maislin, Madam Speaker. Can the Minister tell us whether he has received any indication as to whether Maislin is in a position to meet its financial commitments or otherwise? If so, what indications has he received?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I would like to respond to the Leader of whatever title he holds.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: The answer is that I have no indication at this point in time that Maislin will not meet its present financial obligations.

SECURITY OF GOVERNMENT LOAN GUARANTEE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, is the Minister at all concerned about the $34 million commitment in taxpayers' dollars this Government has given to Maislin, and will he take an interest and make inquiries as to the financial position of that company? Will he take an interest and see whether or not, on behalf of Canadian taxpayers, that $34 million is in any jeopardy of being lost to them?

• (1500)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we take a very serious interest, not only from the taxpayers' standpoint with respect to the Government guarantee of $34 million but also the 2,000 jobs that are very important to this country. There is an interdepartmental committee which is chaired by one of my officials who is in communication with Maislin on a monthly basis.

Obviously, like a lot of other trucking companies, they are experiencing financial difficulty. That is why they had to come to the Government of Canada in the first place. I share with the Hon. Member our concern over the survival of that company.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE INQUIRIES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Minister take a sufficient interest to make inquiries of his official and to inform the House tomorrow what the indications are of the financial stability of Maislin, and thus perhaps give some reassurance to Canadians that their $34 million is safe?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I indicated in answer to a question from one of his colleagues last Thursday or Friday, I believe, the new president of the company is preparing a five-year forecast because we did not find the previous five-year forecast acceptable. I believe that will be available some time around the first of April.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACKASEY—PAID LOBBYIST ALLEGATION IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE"—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I wish to rule today on the question of privilege which was raised in the House by the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) in which he alleged that false and libellous accusations against him had been published in the Montreal Gazette.

This case, which is certainly a serious one, poses a number of difficulties for the Chair. The first difficulty that I have is, of course, the time at which it was raised but, for obvious reasons, I will not take that into consideration at the present time.

A reflection upon the reputation of an Hon. Member is a matter of great concern to all Members of the House. It places the entire institution under a cloud, as it suggests that among the Members of the House there are some who are unworthy to sit there. An allegation of criminal or other dishonourable conduct inevitably affects the Member's ability to function effectively while the matter remains unresolved.

In this connection I would quote from a memorandum submitted by a parliamentary expert, Mr. L. A. Abraham, to the British Select Committee on Parliamentary Privilege which reported in December, 1967, the following:

> The object of an action for defamation is to obtain for the plaintiff compensation for the loss of that esteem in which other people previously held him. But when the House proceeds against a person who has published a libel on a Member in his capacity as a Member it is not moved by concern for the injury to the Member's reputation, nor is its object to secure reparation therefor . . .

No, the reason for treating libels on Members in their capacity as Members as contempts is their tendency to obstruct Members in the performance of their functions by bringing them into hatred, contempt or ridicule . . .

Bearing in mind the dilatoriness and uncertainty of litigation, the possibility of the defamed Member's succeeding in an action for defamation cannot be regarded as an adequate substitute for the summary infliction of punishment by the House itself as a means of preventing Members from being obstructed in the performance of their functions.

On the face of it, this argument would appear to be conclusive justification for a finding that a prima facie case of breach of privilege exists following the submission of the Hon. Member for Lincoln. However, against this the Chair must take into account the full scope of parliamentary privilege and weigh the special rights of Members of Parliament against the rights of their fellow citizens.

The effect of parliamentary privilege is to place a Member of Parliament above the law in circumstances where it provides his only protection in the fulfilment of his duties as a Member. It is not designed to create a privileged class of citizens as such. The Member enjoys his privileges on behalf of those he represents, not for his personal advantage. Defamation of a Member of Parliament certainly falls within the ambit of privilege. However, where a Member has a remedy which would be available in similar circumstances to other citizens, he would as a general rule be well advised to seek that remedy rather than invoke parliamentary privilege.

I should like to read an extract from the report of the British Select Committee on Parliamentary Privilege to which I have already referred. Referring to cases which defame a Member or an identifiable group of Members in respect to their parliamentary duties, the report had this to say:

This has in recent times been one of the more publicized occasions for the exercise by Members of their right to invoke Parliament's penal jurisdiction. Your Committee cannot, however, accept that in normal cases it is an essential protection for the House or its Members that they should be able to invoke this jurisdiction when it is open to them, as it is to any other citizen, to take proceedings for defamation in the courts of law. Libels of the character described are, it is true, often couched in intemperate language. But the grosser the libel, the heavier the damages which the courts are likely to award; and if the libel is likely to be repeated, the courts have ample power to prevent the repetition by injunction and, if need be, by committal. Your Committee recommend that in the ordinary case where a Member has a remedy in the courts, he should not be permitted to invoke the penal jurisdiction of the House in lieu of or in addition to the exercise of that remedy.

The report goes on to say:

For example, a Member who has been libelled may be met in the courts by a defence of "justification" or "fair comment upon a matter of public interest". In Your Committee's opinion it would be an indefensible abuse of power if a Member could evade such a defence by invoking the penal jurisdiction of the House.

The citizen has prima facie a right to make fair comment upon such activity of a Member as is a matter of public interest; his right is even stronger to speak and publish the truth of a Member's conduct. These rights should not in the normal way be defeated by the use of the penal jurisdiction of the House. The exceptions to this general principle are likely to be rare. But if the rights of a citizen, though enforceable in the courts of law, are so exercised as to be likely improperly to obstruct the Member in the performance of his Parliamentary duty, it must be within the power of the House to restrain him.

The question for the Chair to determine, therefore, is whether the Hon. Member for Lincoln should seek his remedy through the courts, or whether, in order to bring the matter to a swifter resolution, the Chair should accord this question of privilege precedence over other business.

I should like to quote from a ruling of my predecessor given on July 23, 1977, which conforms to the main thrust of the British Select Committee Report. He said:

I have said many times that the intent and clear purport of the language—the language referred to being that of the Select Committee Report I have just cited—is that the protection of an elected person against unwarranted or intemperate publicity, even abuses or defamatory publicity, is precisely that which is enjoyed by every citizen before our courts. No more, no less.

Searching further into our own precedents I find that on July 24, 1975, my predecessor found a prima facie case to exist as a result of an article, also published in the Montreal Gazette, which claimed that an Honourable Member had leaked budget information to certain businessmen.

In another case raised on April 22, 1980, another Hon. Member raised a question of privilege concerning his interest in a Winnipeg hotel and certain transactions which had taken place relating to it. In that case, although the Chair had not rendered a decision on the issue of prima facie, the subject matter of the question was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections with the unanimous consent of the House.

One point I think should be emphasized. If this matter is referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, whatever its findings they would in no way prejudice the rights of the litigants in a possible action for defamation.

On March 17, 1983 the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) drew the attention of the Chair to the possibility of the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Lincoln being sub judice because of certain bankruptcy proceedings currently before the courts. While I appreciate the point raised by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I would point out that the House has never allowed the sub judice convention to stand in the way of its consideration of a matter vital to the public interest or to the effective operation of the House and its Members.

Given the precedents I have studied, it is clear to me that while the Hon. Member could seek a remedy in the courts, he cannot function effectively as a Member while this slur upon his reputation remains. The process of litigation would probably be very lengthy and there is no knowing how long it would take before the issue was finally resolved.

I have therefore decided, in spite of the reservations I have expressed, that this complaint should be given precedence as a prima facie case of privilege in order to provide the Hon. Member with the speediest possible route toward the re-establishment of his reputation. I am prepared to entertain a motion to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith):

That the allegations in the Montreal Gazette on March 10, March 11 and March 12 of 1983 that the Hon. Member for Lincoln owned 109609 Company Canada Limited and, through that company, while being a Member of the House of Commons, was a paid lobbyist, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the said motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, we have now had an opportunity to hear Your Honour's ruling, and I am sure the House will appreciate the fact that when this matter was first raised by the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), our Leader in the House indicated his concerns as a Member of this House with respect to all the obligations falling upon this House to treat an Hon. Member fairly. I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that people on this side of the House want this matter to be dealt with fairly.

In the interests of seeing that what the Hon. Member wants done is done, I would suggest to the House and to my colleagues, the House Leaders for the Government side and for the New Democratic Party, that before we proceed into debate we should have a 24-hour moratorium on debate so that we can get together and discuss the terms of reference of the motion, the rounding out of the motion.

Quite frankly, in reviewing the motion prior to today, we wondered whether in fact the motion did all that the Hon. Member wanted it to do in terms of clearing his name of the charges the Gazette alleges. I point out to the House that in my own case, after study of three articles, I found some ten instances giving me cause for concern as to whether a motion such as that which the Hon. Member has presented to the House would in fact do what he wants it to do. Therefore, from that standpoint I say to the Government House Leader that if the House wants to clear the Hon. Member's name—that is obviously the object of the exercise in speaking to the motion—we feel that the motion should be broad enough to do that in a way which is fair to the Hon. Member and, I would also suggest, fair to the members of the Committee. It seems to us, after reviewing the precedents, that the Committee would be delving into some new ground. We feel that if this is so, it should delve into that new ground with a motion which does what the Hon. Member wants and with terms of reference which do what the House wants, which is to clear the air.

Madam Speaker: I am in the hands of the House. If the House unanimously agrees to the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North, I can entertain the suggestion; otherwise, of course, the only other choice of the Chair would be to open debate on this particular motion and to entertain such amendments as Hon. Members deem necessary.

Does the House unanimously agree to the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North that there be a delay of 24 hours before debate on this particular motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I do not want to inject my personal views into this matter, as I did not anticipate it would be raised. However, I would be interested in hearing the views of the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) as to whether or not he feels the motion which he has moved, which affects his privilege, is one which he would like to see held over and discussed among House Leaders before the debate ensued. I have no particular objection to waiting until tomorrow or another day for the debate to take place, and I am sure that none of my colleagues do, either. However, I think that since the matter is very much one which ought to concern the Hon. Member for Lincoln, perhaps he would like to tell us what he would like to see.

Madam Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Lincoln starts debating this question—

Mr. Deans: No.

Madam Speaker: If he is telling us whether he likes the motion or not, he will be debating the question.

Mr. Deans: On a point of order—

Madam Speaker: Just one moment. I am simply warning the House against beginning the debate before dealing with the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. Since that seems to be the wish of the House, I will allow the Hon. Member for Lincoln to make a very brief statement with regard to the question posed by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Mackasey: Madam Speaker, you would agree that your statement was quite logically lengthy, and legalistic, as it should be, and very important to all Members. I specifically rose from my seat a week ago—this is not debate—and at that time pointed out what I thought to be the allegations which, to me, were libellous. I specified them and Your Honour read them out. If any Hon. Members of the House think that I am guilty of anything beyond those two points which have been raised, they are perfectly free to rise in the House and refer any allegations which may occur to them, beyond those set out in the motion, to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I welcome them, if Hon. Members are prepared to do so. It is an entirely different issue. I want that motion to be read before the House today, as Your Honour has suggested is my right.

I repeat that this in no way prevents any Hon. Member opposite who wants to widen the matter from rising tomorrow to say anything which bothers them about the Hon. Member for Lincoln.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: You're blowing it.

Madam Speaker: This point having been made, does the House unanimously consent that there be a 24-hour delay?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Tabling of Documents

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I listened carefully the other day when the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) spoke. I listened carefully to Your Honour's judgment, and I just listened carefully to what the hon. gentleman said now. The hon. gentleman has made it very clear that he wants the matter to be dealt with now. If there are to be any further dealings with it, the hon. gentleman has said that he is quite content that they be dealt with a little later on.

I just want to make it clear to the hon. gentleman that if one is looking upon privileges, he ought not to think of himself as being on trial. I think the people who would be on trial with respect to this matter would be those who are alleged to have breached the privileges of a Member of Parliament. That is what I understand the matter of privilege to be. He is not on trial. He has made his statement in the House of Commons. I worry that the hon. gentleman couches his remarks on the basis that he is on trial. He is not on trial.

The question now is whether or not someone else has breached the privileges of the Hon. Member, and that is the purpose of this matter. That is what I understood the hon. gentleman had in mind. Therefore, I wish the question would be put today and that we would get on with the matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to.

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS RESPECTING SCOTIA COAL SYNFUELS PROJECT

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, in addition to the documents already tabled under the provisions of Standing Order 46(2), I wish to table, in the spirit of the Access to Information Act, a list of documents pertaining to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project, found in the files of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I recently referred to this list in an earlier response to a question of the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). I am now in the process of seeking third party agreement to tabling those documents, but without breaching commercial confidentiality.

PETITIONS

MR. MURPHY—TAXATION OF NORTHERN ALLOWANCES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my petition today is in regard to the taxation of northern benefits and northern allowances. The petitioners, who are supported by the Canadian Teachers' Federation, oppose the taxation of these benefits. They point out the high cost of living in northern communities, the high cost of travel, transportation costs, living costs, etc., and ask that the Government, through the House of Commons, rescind its decision to tax these benefits.

MR. ANGUISH—FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING ACT

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I am presenting a petition to the House of Commons today signed by fishermen from the Athabasca Basin region, consisting of that area and communities such as Camsell Portage, Uranium City, Fond-du-Lac, Black Lake and Stoney Rapids. They are requesting that they be allowed to opt out of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act which they say has practically destroyed their industry in this far northern area. There is documented evidence here to back up that allegation.

I would like to say that I have been attempting to meet with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) concerning this petition since January 27 to discuss the very important problems outlined herein, but in those two months he has ignored my requests. On that basis, I would hope that this petition will be found in order and referred to the Fisheries and Forestry Committee where it will get its due and proper consideration.

MR. LEWYCKY—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, this afternoon I am presenting a petition signed by some 205 residents of the federal riding of Dauphin urging the retention of the historical Crow rate. These petitions are presented by people in some 19 places in the Dauphin constituency, and these are in addition to the 1,312 petitions that I presented to this House on June 23, 1982.

SKIDWAY AT CHERRY HILL, N.S.

Question No. 4,515—Mr. Crouse:

1. Has the skidway at Cherry Hill, Lunenburg County, Nova Scotia, threatened with removal by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in September, 1982, been removed and (a) if not, has the skidway and the land on which it was constructed been purchased by the Government (b) if so (i) who owned the land on which the skidway was constructed (ii) what amount was paid by the Government for the land and skidway (iii) what was the total amount paid initially towards the skidway by the Government?

2. What is the name of the government official who approved the construction of the skidway on land to which the Government did not have a clear title?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. The skidway at Cherry Hill has not been removed, nor was it ever "threatened" with removal by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. The owner of the land on which part of the skidway was constructed had demanded its removal.

(a) The land on which the skidway was constructed has been purchased by the Government.

(b) (i) The land on which the skidway was constructed was onwed by Mr. W. K. Allen. (ii) $25,000. (iii) Originally, $20,000 in material support was provided to the project sponsor by Samll Craft Harbours Branch, under the Canada Works Program. The labour content of $7,000 was provided by the Job Creation Branch of the Department of Employment and Immigration.

2. In 1976, CEIC approved the project as being acceptable under the terms and conditions of the Canada Works Program. At that time, the project sponsor, Mr. S. Conrad, indicated that the skidway could be constructed at a site on which he operated a fish store. Small Craft Harbours agreed to support the material portion of this project, which was constructed by local fishermen for their use. It is within the mandate of Small Craft Harbours to support projects sponsored by the Canada Works Program and the Canada Community Development Program, even if they are not at scheduled harbours.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Blenkarn (p. 24001).

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that Bill C-143 and the amendment thereto presents considerable concern not only to Members on this side of the House but to the people of Canada, because the borrowing authority required under this Bill is of such magnitude that it raises the question that the taxpayers and citizens of Canada in general have been asking as to how far reaching is the borrowing that the Government has been doing. I would like to go into that today in detail because I think it is so important to the direction that our country is taking and particularly the direction in which this Government is leading this country.

The first question that I would raise in the House is, what is the size of the debt, the magnitude of the debt? I would like to read some figures into the record. The gross debt, the total liability of the Government of Canada, includes not only interest-bearing debt such as bonds, but accounts payable, pension funds and liabilities, and several other items. At the end of the 1981-1982 fiscal year, the gross debt was $134 billion. By the end of this current fiscal year the gross debt could be as high as $160 billion. I think that is a shocking figure that faces the Canadian people and the Canadian taxpayers.

In comparison, the gross debt at the time the Trudeau Government took office in 1968 was $31 billion. If you look at the magnitude of the problem that we face of debts and borrowing by this Government, it is horrendous. The gross national debt less the assets at the end of last March, the net debt, was $94 billion and it will climb to $118 billion by the end of the current fiscal year. This compares to $16 billion in 1968 when the Trudeau Government took office.

Loans and securities, in effect money raised by the financial markets, including treasury bills, bonds, Canada Savings Bonds, unmaturing loans and securities, totalled $93 billion at the end of March, 1982, compared to $21 billion when the Trudeau Government first took office.

I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this presents a very, very serious problem for the Canadian people. An amount of $16.7 billion is required just to pay the interest on Canada's national debt. We might today well ask the Government, what is the cost to the Canadian people? In the year 1968-69, one tax dollar in nine was needed to service the debt. Today, one tax dollar out of three is needed to service the interest on the debt which has been incurred by this Government.

I suppose the next question we would ask is, was all this necessary? And it is unfair to ask that question if we do not have some positive solutions as to how this tremendous deficit could be deferred. First of all, I believe we have to realize that in the Bill which is before us the $5 billion is needed immediately. We all recognize that. Whether it is the fault of the Government is another matter, but that money is needed to carry on the affairs of the country.

What about the additional $14 billion the Government is asking for? That is important because I believe that shows the direction which this Government has taken down through the last 15 years, and without being too critical, it is because of years of financial mismanagement by this Government. Here we have the Government coming to the House of Commons and asking for authority to borrow an additional $14 billion which they do not need right away, and without bringing down a budget in this House. I believe the people of Canada want to know how the Government of Canada is going to spend their money. The debt the Government has incurred on behalf of every man, woman and child in this country is $700. Every taxpayer will have to pay $1,700 to pay off the incurred deficit of this country, so every taxpayer, every man, woman and child in this country, has a right to hear from the Government on just how it is going to spend their money.

Having cited the size of the debt, Mr. Speaker, and having referred to the magnitude of responsibility which it has placed on each Canadian, I suppose the next question would be, what can be done about it? One of the Hon. Members who spoke earlier today referred to the fact that something had to be done for the farmers, for the small-businessmen and for job creation, and I agree with that. I believe also the Government must take a very close look at how it has been spending the taxpayers' money. I will cite a few examples of how the Government might have saved millions of dollars, even billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, if it had been a little more careful with its expenditures. One example is the national energy policy which cost this country billions of dollars. There is a new proposal by Mr. Pepin with respect to farmers which will be every bit as devastating to the incomes of this country as the national energy policy. There is also the area of small business. I could go on and on about the Government's mismanagement, and about the lack of incentives for small business, for farmers, for industry and for energy production in this country. But if we are ever going to solve these problems, Mr. Speaker, it is most important that we take a positive look at where the Government intends to go and where we would like it to lead this country.

I would suggest that the greatest problem is lack of confidence. The people of this country have no confidence in the present Government. If we are going to get back to productive incentives which must come to all areas of business in this country, there will have to be some confidence in this Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Order. Before recognizing another Hon. Member, the Chair would like to remind Hon. Members that reference to their colleagues in the House should be by way of the name of the constituency or Department, and not by the proper name.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, despite the short time allotted each Member to speak to the Bill before us today, I am pleased to have the opportunity again to register my objection to the approval of this Bill. Just before closing at the lunch hour, the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) closed his speech by making a statement which shocked me. He said that the trouble is not the borrowing but rather the lack of concrete alternatives from the Opposition. Can you imagine that statement coming from the Government side, blaming the Opposition for the $19 billion borrowing and for our lack of concrete alternatives? The Government sat there for three years, bereft of ideas, and the Hon. Member admitted it had no idea about what to do with the huge deficit with which we are confronted in this country.

This Bill will give the Government permission to borrow $19 billion and, in its typically arrogant fashion, the Government seeks Parliament's permission to borrow the money but it does not have the courtesy or decency to explain why it needs the money or where the money will be spent. But we know where it is going to be spent, Mr. Speaker. It is going to pay the interest on our massive debt. Is this Government worthy of our trust when it has so badly mismanaged our economy to the point where business bankruptcies and unemployment are at all-time highs, and when the GNP is at its lowest level since 1933? Is this Government worthy of our trust when its own Ministers and former Ministers make a mockery of Cabinet guidelines? No, this Government is not worthy of trust. As my colleague just said, there is a crisis of confidence in Canada. I do not believe there are too many Canadians right now who would trust this Government with $19, let alone $19 billion. The Government is directly responsible for the bankruptcies of hundreds of businesses across the country, and now it finds itself in much the same boat. It has had to resort to Governor General's warrants to obtain money, something which generally occurs when Parliament is not in session. And when the Government cannot collect funds through normal or quasi-normal channels, these same fellows just dust off the presses and print more money. Recently, the Government authorized the issuance of $500 million in new Treasury bills, without either having borrowing authority or being in an emergency situation, and the legality of this move has been brought into question.

The Government is in obvious financial trouble, Mr. Speaker, and Hon. Members of this Government, unlike other Canadians facing similar circumstances, simply have no comprehension of basic economics, or the Hon. Member for Willowdale would not be saying that it is the lack of concrete alternatives from the Opposition. Well, for a start, the budget of the former Conservative Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), was a concrete alternative and if we were still the Government, the country would not be in half the mess it is in today.

Canadians elsewhere understand the delicate and demanding balance between earning and spending, and the need to establish priorities when the balance is upset. The home owners have to face it. The low-wage earners have to face it. But the Government will not. If the money you earn cannot cover your bills, you simply examine your spending habits and eliminate or reduce spending in certain areas. In other words, you cut out the frills, you cut the fat. That has not been learned across the way.

I wish I had more time, Mr. Speaker, to produce all the documentation which I could produce on how the Government could cut the fat and how the economy has been mismanaged, by advertising, by parties, by mountain climbing, by fireworks, by office plants, and hundreds and hundreds of examples of waste; Haiti, CIDA, bilingualism, and on and on, in a non-productive area of society.

To take our attention away from these and other more serious issues, let me point out that from time to time the Government appoints a Royal commission to find out why it created such a mess. In the case of the latest Royal commission, the "Big Mac"commission, the man appointed to head the commission was a former Minister of Finance who was one of the main causes of the problem, he and John Turner with his 30 per cent a year increases. Here again is something that could be done and has not been done. Nothing has been done except to add to the deficit and inflation.

I would like to point out that when others, notably in the private sector, come forward with ideas which would lead to job creation and economic stimulus, the Government obstructs rather than helps. I would like to give you a couple of illustrations from my riding. The Volkswagen automobile plant is a case in point. Over two years ago Volkswagen came to the Government seeking assistance to locate in Canada. They wanted to come to Ontario, and in particular to Barrie, Ontario, in my riding. The plant would employ 500 people and its establishment in the region meant as many as 6,000 jobs over-all. They approached the federal Government asking only for inclusion in the duty remission program, something without which they would not have located anywhere else. What happened? Well, the feds got in the act and under pressure from the Government the company's German task force, which had already studied plant sites all over Canada, had to fly back and inspect a site in Montreal. After two years of delay when interest rates were nothing like they are now, nor anything else, the Government finally gave its approval for location of the plant in the one place Volkswagen wanted to go to begin with, namely, the City of Barrie. But now the whole thing is up in the air because of financial considerations, when it could have all been done and finished with. All of that is so unnecessary.

Civic and business officials in my riding are also aware of the problems encountered by prospective employers who have to deal with Government, particularly with FIRA and the anti-U.S. policies which have come from across the way, when what we so desperately need in this country is investment. On at least two occasions, potential employers were discouraged from pursuing plant establishment in my riding because of the nature of questions and obstacles erected in front of them. However, with assistance and encouragement from those local officials we have had some of it done at no extra cost in money or time.

I would like you, Mr. Speaker, to take a look at the way we are chasing away investment in this country and the way we are throwing money at problems. In my area, General Tire spent an estimated $17 million on expansion to build radial tires. What did the Government do? It gave a $51 million grant to another plant in Nova Scotia. That is what the Government wants to do, it wants to take away from the private sector and give it to the public sector. Why? What we need is jobs, new industry and productivity. What we need is renewed confidence in the Government. The Auditor General's Report reveals that the Government is the second most profligate spender in the entire free world, second only to that of Italy. Much of this spending is by the Government created sub-Governments which the Auditor General calls Crown Corporations. They are unaudited and ludicrous. Big budgets lead to big deficits, like the $19 billion borrowing that we are talking about here, and they lead to big unemployment. But this big Government has not learned, so it continues to spend and spend and borrow and borrow. We as Canadians must realize that we are in a period of low productivity. We need reduced spending and then tax incentives to stimulate an increased productivity, not studies and "Big Mac" commissions.

There are only two ways in which we can stimulate a sluggish ecomomy, that is by getting the taxpayer to spend on consumer goods, and by using research and development and other things which are at hand to increase our exports. It is not accomplished by dead-end, make-work projects, Mr. Speaker. Our problems are not solved by throwing money at them. It is done, as I said, by incentives, by increasing consumer goods production and by increasing our export markets.

Every Government makes a lot of changes to benefit someone, but as much Government interference as we have seen in the last 15 years in Canada, particularly in the last three years, costs a lot more than it benefits. This Government wants $19 billion at a time when it has interfered again and again, just lately in Bill C-139. It has interfered with a National Energy Program, it has interfered with the banks, and has stimulated nothing. It is readily bandied about that Government spending now amounts to some 40 per cent of the Gross National Product. This adds up very succinctly to too much Government intervention and Government spending. This last decade in particular has seen massive Government interference in the Canadian economy, to our great detriment. That is why we are now looking at another borrowing Bill of $19 billion. The Government bought a private corporation, Petrofina, for $1.7 billion. Canadair was assisted to the tune of $1.5 billion.

I could go on and on but I see you are giving me the nod. Well, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is: keep borrowing and borrowing and spending and spending and you will be placing a legacy of debt not only on my children, the children of other people here in this Chamber and all Canadians, but on our grandchildren, all because we will not face the fact that we need to increase productivity and cut out waste.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak at report stage of Bill C-143, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority in the neighbourhood of $19 billion, $5 billion of which has already been spent. But the Government has not told us what it plans to do with the balance of $14 billion. Certainly we on this side of the House in the NDP will not authorize the Government to spend an additional $14 billion in the way it has been spending in the past, not without a budget to outline the programs the Government is planning on initiating. We must remember that the Board of Directors of the Bank of Canada, who are closely associated with the other banks and the railways and so on, are advising the Governor of the Bank of Canada, and for him to come out and say the policies of this Government must remain in place is unbelievable, especially for the unemployed across Canada, the people in need of an industrial strategy which will bring about the stimulation the Government has not seen fit to provide.

Recently the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has been coming before the committee and making statements across Canada about some very basic changes in the transportation system. While we agree that these programs must be updated, we do not agree with the method the Government is using of abolishing the Crowsnest Agreement and giving hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars to the railways for upgrading, without receiving any equity or any firm commitments from the railways.

I have in front of me a copy of CP Rail News which shows some of the programs they are planning. They talk about how $39 million funded by the federal Government will be spent to continue the rehabilitation of prairie branchlines. This has been going on year after year. It says, as a prime example, that since 1968 the railways have been receiving branchline subsidies which cover operating costs as well as overhead and profits to be reinvested in rail lines, amounting to $278 million.

We have a situation, Mr. Speaker, where the Minister of Transport, in his announcement to the press, is saying that up to $900 million a year could be provided for the next three or four years in railway upgrading funds. That would be paid for by the Government and the taxpayers of Canada. We cannot accept those kinds of proposals by the Government without some commitment of some kind as to what is going to take place. The railways talk about expansion and what they intend to do. The Government should tell the railways firmly that the transportation system needs to be upgraded in an orderly fashion, that they have the franchise to do it, and if they do not have the necessary funds they will be provided and then the Government will have equity in the railway system. As the system is improved and returns a profit, the equity would be to come back to the Canadian people. Instead, the Government makes proposals without any firm commitment.

• (1550)

In its announcement about upgrading its facilities, CP Rail has said that it intends to go to tender for the main tunnelling work at Rogers Pass toward the end of 1983, assuming that the Crow legislation is in place and that economic conditions improve. That is the type of thing that has been going on for years, Mr. Speaker. We do not have a policy that will meet the needs of a transportation system such as the Government of the early 1900s had with its vision of a transportation system across the country. Ultimately it was built. The Government should look at transportation in a more realistic way and spend money in a more responsible manner.

When the railway is upgraded and the system is able to carry twice the present capacity twice as fast and twice as efficiently with less diesel power and fewer grades to be navigated, there will be a profit and there should be a payback.

I should like to deal with another project in British Columbia with which the Government is involved, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds of millions of dollars of federal and provincial moneys have gone into a northeast coal project, to set up infrastructures and new communities. In southeast British Columbia, however, over 20 million tons of coal per year are being shipped from the Kootenays, but 2,000 employees have been laid off. How can we watch municipalities being put out of business while new competing ventures are financed by the federal and provincial Governments? It does not make any economic sense that the Governments would finance a new venture that would put an existing operation in another part of the Province out of business.

The changes to the Crowsnest Agreement will mean that the Government will be caught up in the process of swindling more than $450 billion worth of coal deposits out of the Province of British Columbia. There are 50,000 acres of prime coal land that have been turned over by the Province to the railways and in turn, through the Crowsnest Agreement, to the federal Government. These are now held in the name of the federal Government. If the Crowsnest Agreement is changed in any way, the lands should revert to the Province of British Columbia for the benefit of the people in the Province.

These are the kinds of things that the Government is getting into. I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) whether he had been approached about the development of those coal lands in southeastern British Columbia. He said that at this time there was no demand for the coal but that there had been three or four applications or requests for information about the coal lands. I purposely asked him if the Fording Coal Company, a subsidiary of CP Rail, was one of the applicants, but I did not get an answer. It seems to me that this is another indication of the federal Government's dancing to the tune of the railway system, especially CP Rail. This is wrong, Mr. Speaker. The country must have an economic expansion plan with regard to transportation, manufacturing, employment, and so on, in order to ensure that Canadians get the best possible value for their tax dollar.

The Government of Canada has a responsibility to every Member of Parliament to present a budget that they can scrutinize. They should be able to put forward their views and hear from the Government how it intends to deal with a very serious situation caused by years of poor management on the part of the Government.

Students leaving school today are offered only a band-aid program in which the Government sets aside some money for student employment programs which are underfunded. In my riding $216,000 has been allotted to student employment programs, but there are applications for over $600,000 and they are still coming in. Students want to earn some money so that they can return to school in the fall. It is a sad situation in this country when over two million people are out of work and close to that number are on welfare, unemployment insurance benefits are running out, and the Government has no concrete proposals to offer that would deal with the very serious situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby).

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks on the report stage of Bill C-134, the Borrowing Authority Act, by underlining the effect of this measure not only on the Canadian economy but on Canadians. By permitting the Government of Canada to borrow an additional $19 billion to finance the escalating spending deficit—now over $26 billion and headed for $30 billion—Parliament is increasing the national debt to $160 billion and pushing this debt toward the $200 billion level. Let me remind Canadians that the national debt was $31 billion when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was appointed—not elected—to his office.

What does a national debt of $200 billion mean in real terms? Simply this: every Canadian, man, woman and child, must, on average, pay $8,000 to eliminate this debt. But we know that many Canadians have no financial resources so we must place the burden on the ten million Canadians who are employed or have taxable resources. This would increase the effective per capita debt loan of working Canadians to $22,000—but that is not all. Each of these 10 million Canadians lives in a Province of Canada or the Territories and, in nearly all cases, they must share in carryng a further debt at the provincial level. For example, in the Province of Nova Scotia, the per capita debt is now $5,224. That is divided among all Nova Scotians. For the taxpayers in Nova Scotia the debt burden would approximate $12,000 for a grand total debt—federal and provincial—of $34,000.

I am sure most Canadians would consider that a staggering amount. I remind the House that the average income for these Canadians who are faced with this massive debt, is $15,800. Within that figure, Canadians must find the ability to pay off this massive debt.

Let me stop there and remind Hon. Members that according to a 1980 analysis, Canadians pay 45.8 per cent of their income in taxes. That is, a Canadian family which in 1980 had a cash income of $22,500 would have paid taxes of $10,306 or 45.8 per cent. That includes all taxes, federal income tax, provincial sales tax and so on.

This points up the fact that the taxation of Canadians is at a maximum level, it cannot go any higher, yet Canadians must face the problem of paying off the national debt at the levels I have indicated. That is to say, Canadians with an average income of $15,800 must assume a debt in the area of $34,000 on an individual basis.

If that does not establish the serious effect of our mounting public debt in Canada, let me add this statistic, Mr. Speaker. In the current fiscal year one dollar of every four income dollars will be applied to service this debt. What is the problem? Of course the problem is Government spending. Government spending for the current fiscal year 1982-83 is projected at over $90 billion. Last year it was $75 billion. That is an increase of $15 billion or 20.5 per cent on a national accounts basis.

What does all this spending mean? When compared with the income and resources of Government, it means that the Government of Canada has virtually abandoned the concept of the balanced budget, that is, equalizing revenues and expenditures. The solution is equally clear. The Government must redirect its programs and its policies so that it gets us back on the road to a balanced budget. It is difficult, if not impossible, to raise the current level of taxation, as I have already indicated. The only hope in this area is to generate and promote economic activity so that the amount of taxation revenue will be increased but not the level at which that revenue is taxed.

I want to direct some attention to the possibility of decreasing Government expenditures—not to eliminate immediately the deficit because that is a virtual impossibility, but to reduce it substantially and to start us on the road back to a balanced budget. Let us now consider how Government spending might be reduced. First, let me address the economic problem in clear terms. As I have said, we have expenditures of $90 billion with revenues of less than $60 billion and a budgetary deficit of over $26 billion and approaching $30 billion. The challenge is clear. How will we work toward a balanced budget?

As I have indicated, we could do two things. We could raise taxes or cut expenditures. There is no way at current levels that we can raise taxes, so let me consider some specifics. We have heard time and time again in the House the fact that Crown corporations are running out of control in terms of financing by the Government and in terms of the amount of moneys spent in relation to the amount of moneys received in revenues.

Let me take the Canadian National Railways company. This month CNR announced that its deficit for its 1982 operations would exceed $223 million. That is its worst loss in the 61-year history of the corporation. I point out very quickly that the biggest item in that $223 million loss is the $62 million CNR was forced to write off in connection with its investment in Euro-Canadian Shipholdings Limited which operates the Cast shipping line. That was an investment in a foreign corporation to build ships and other facilities outside Canada. That is $62 million of taxpayers' money which has gone down the drain, and this was from one of our most effective and most responsible Crown corporations over the years. When we find that kind of expenditure of public funds taking place in Canadian National Railways, we wonder what is happening in other Crown corporations.

Let me look at Air Canada. In the March 18 edition of the Citizen of Ottawa, an article was headlined, "Air Canada Anticipating Record Loss". The report indicated that in the first quarter Air Canada lost $27 million and, projecting that over the rest of the year, the losses of Air Canada will be in the nature of $100 million. Add that to the $223 million lost by Canadian National Railways.

Recently Canada Post has been in the news because it has been successful in cutting a $600 million deficit down to a $400 million deficit in the current year, but it can look forward to a greater deficit in the subsequent year. But in the case of Canada Post, as in the cases of Air Canada and Canadian National Railways, it has drastically increased the price to consumers, which include all Canadians.

Also we have Petro-Canada with $1.4 billion invested in the Petrofina oil company. Not only that, the other day it got provision to spend $900,000 on one of its subsidiary companies, Canertech. Then we have the CBC with its $900 million, Michael Pitfield with his $1 million pension, Ian Stewart with his six-month sabbatical, and Donald Macdonald with his $800 per day. It goes right from Crown corporations down to individual Crown officers. The point is that the spending goes on and on, and we have to stop the spending. But we cannot do it unless we adopt a principle to guide us. The principle which must guide us in these matters is the common sense of a balanced budget. That has to be the standard which guides Parliament and Government in conducting the financial affairs of the country. They must make revenues and expenditures match and thus balance the budget, because it is only in that way that we can assure an economic future for Canada.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-143, to provide Supplementary Borrowing Authority, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motion No. 1 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate, I would like at the outset to make two very important points. First, one must never depart from the very basic point that the cost of Government to the people of Canada is what Government spends, not simply the receipts it takes in the form of taxation. The rest of the expenditure which is not covered by taxation is either a concealed tax in the form of inflation or a deferred tax in the form of borrowing. This is really what we are dealing with today. We are dealing with a hidden form of taxation which is concealed through the provision of borrowing.

My second point is that Canadians are not adverse to paying taxes, provided they are assured of obtaining their money's worth. The Government takes in money and redistributes it to various sectors of society, in particular those who are less fortunate than those who are able to produce, and Canadians have demonstrated a compassion and a penchant for sharing. They demonstrate that in support of charities such as programs for the underprivileged, the Cancer Fund and the Heart Fund, etc. Basically, Canadians are a charitable lot, but the point I must make is that today taxpayers do not believe that they are getting their money's worth out of the money spent by the Government on their behalf. As a result, we see that reflected in Revenue Canada statistics in terms of increases in notices of objections to tax assessment, in the number of appeals and in the cost of collecting taxes through Revenue Canada. There is a general lack of support. The whole system is coming increasingly under attack.

I think we have some very serious problems because the integrity of the system is somewhat at stake. What the Government spends on behalf of the people of Canada and how it spends it are surely two of the most important issues which should be addressed in the House of Commons. Unfortunately, this is not the case because the Government gets its spending authority primarily through closure. Closure has been moved in this particular session of Parliment no less than 20 times. In the majority of those times the issue at hand concerned a financial Bill, a measure of taxation, borrowing or something to do with the financial affairs of the country. The Government is spending money through closure and borrowing money through closure. What is happening is that Parliamentarians do not have the opportunity to examine critically and to challenge effectively the expenditures of Government. The financial management of this country flounders and becomes progressively worse. I heard the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) talk about the responsibility of the Government to manage the financial affairs of the country. I submit to you, Sir, given this kind of borrowing Bill and the projection of a $30 billion deficit, it is quite clear that financial management is out of control.

Since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has taken office he has managed only once to balance the budget, that was in the 1969-1970 fiscal year and we had a little bit of a surplus in the amount of $393 million. As the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) noted, the Prime Minister has accumulated some $160 billion worth of debt for the people of Canada. When the Prime Minister assumed office, that debt was at $31 million. The lunatic spending of the 1970s and the deficits of the $10 billion, $12 billion, $15 billion, $20 billion and now $30 billion have in some ways tempered Canadian society. They have tempered the shock, the outrage and the anger which should be prevalent today. Today when we talk about a $30 billion deficit as freely as we do, and the NDP talks about increasing it by another $10 billion for further job creation, one wonders where we are going. Where are we going in this country? Who would have ever dreamed ten years ago that we would have a $30 billion deficit?

In 1970, the last time we had a balanced budget—indeed, we had a surplus—total Government spending was $13.5 billion. There seems to be the feeling that only Governments can create jobs. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) cited today some 70-odd projects that could be started if the Government did not provide money but, rather, facilitated the development of these projects which would create jobs.

While Canadians have been tempered in their outrage, they are deeply annoyed. The hard facts are that the tax paying public is not convinced it is getting fair and good value for the money being spent. The current Auditor General is not convinced of that either. He drew attention to many areas of Government spending which have gone out of control. Crown Corporations, which he called a form of sub-government, are not held accountable to Parliament. He went on to say the following at page 13 of his Report:

> Revenues of Crown corporations in the most recent fiscal year were $31.9 billion, and expenses were $33.6 billion. Most of these corporations are virtually unknown even to the best informed members of the tax-paying public. Yet, in the aggregate, they represent a hole in the taxpayer's pocket, resulting, as they often do, in a consistent negative return on investment.

The former Auditor General, in his continuing crusade on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada, said in a recent interview, as quoted in The Edmonton Journal for Friday, March 18, 1983, the following:

> The '70s saw the biggest spending spree in Canadian history; in the '80s we are going through "a horrible hangover in the sobering-up process," said Macdonell.

Further down in this article we find:

> Macdonell explained that bureaucrats operate under a strange system where the bigger their staffs and the more money they spend, the more power they have. There are no incentives for good management, since there are no penalties for bad management.

I could go on. What about Petro-Canada which is a $7-billion service station, refinery and exploration enterprise financed by the taxpayers of Canada? It has over 3,000 service stations. Then there is Petro-Canada International, a $250-million subsidiary to provide money and expertise for selected energy projects. It is to explore for oil—where? In Jamaica, Tanzania, Senegal and Pakistan. That is going on while our own oil industry, particularly the service industry associated with it, is floundering. What about Canagrex? Canadians wonder whether we need these things. They wonder whether we need a Canagrex. It is not needed. What is needed is an export credit assistance program and ways and means of assisting and promoting Canadian agricultural products abroad. We do not need to spend $12 million or $60 million to set up another Crown Corporation.

What about the Royal Commission on the Economy? Canadians question whether we really need to spend $10 million to find out what is going wrong with the financial affairs of this country. We have several privately funded organizations that do that work on a day-to-day basis. For instance, the C. D. Howe Institute, the Canadian Institute on Public Policy; the Fraser Institute, and our own Economic Council of Canada which was commissioned by this Government and which is largely ignored by this Government.

What about the advertising budget? It is well over $100 million, and it could be cut by at least one-third. Advertisements, such as the one I have in my hand which reads: "Complete energy security for Canada is this close!" cost the taxpayers of Canada $1 million. I have another advertisement. The Canada Service Bureau is going to spend some $2.6 million this year on setting up kiosks to explain to Canadians how they can get service from the Canadian Government.

There are many areas in which the taxpayers of Canada clearly question the validity of Government expenditure, such as propping up losers, and its contracting practices. Furthermore, Canadians across this country question the burdensome level of taxes on their petroleum products of over 65 cents a gallon. What value are they receiving?

Finally, if Governments expect the economy to turn around in this country, they must lead and demonstrate by example. In that connection, we note that public sector salaries have risen at a level of 15.9 per cent while those in the private sector have risen by 5.8 per cent. Canadians basically do not believe the Government and its agencies are fairly sharing the burden of this recession. That is why this additional Government spending is not needed. It should not be awarded to the Government of Canada until it cleans up its own act.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak to Bill C-143, to allow the Government to borrow $5 billion this year and another $14 billion next year.

In November, 1981, the Minister of Finance of the day predicted that there would be a budgetary deficit in the upcoming fiscal year of $10.5 billion, with accompanying financial requirements of $6.6 billion. One-half year later, we saw drastic revisions in the same Minister's June, 1982 budget. At that time the deficit was increased to $19.6 billion, with financial requirements jumping to $17.1 billion. As a result, Bill C-125, asking Parliament for authority to borrow needed funds was passed on July 22, 1982.

In just three months from that date the deficit was further revised to $23.6 billion, an increase of $4 billion. To cover this gaping hole in the Government's finances, the Government introduced Bill C-128 to authorize the borrowing of the extra $4 billion. The Government's borrowing authority now stood at $21.1 billion in new loans. And now we find that even this amount is not enough to feed the empty stomach of the Government. Parliament is being asked to pass Bill C-143, which gives the Government authority to borrow an additional $19 billion, less than ten days from now. This brings the total borrowing requirements for 1982-1983 to $26.1 billion, with a deficit which may total $30 billion before we are through.

We must look at the reasons behind this abysmal spending record. The Minister has said that three-quarters of the Government's financial shortfall exists as a result of higher than expected debt charges and lower than expected tax revenues, and that one-quarter of the shortfall is the result of additional spending on income-support programs, such as Unemployment Insurance and welfare payments.

The first of those reasons, that there have been higher than expected debt charges, is very difficult for me to understand in the light of the very significant tumble in interest rates lately. How can the Government be paying unexpectedly more when interest rates have been in decline? When interest rates were rising, the Government blamed its rising deficits on unexpected debt charges. Now that the rates have fallen dramatically, they are still using the same old excuse, although the situation has changed completely. The other two reasons, the lower than expected tax revenues and the greater spending on income support programs, are a direct result of the recession in which we find ourselves mired. Again, I wonder how much of that could not have been foreseen with prudent planning?

• (1620)

In the past year, whenever the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or his predecessor appealed to Parliament for more money, it has always been accompanied by the excuse that the recessionary effects were more powerful than were first thought. For example, let me quote from the budget speech of the former Minister of Finance on June 28, 1982. He said:

> The recession has caused a serious worsening of the Government's fiscal position. The sharp fall in federal revenues is the inevitable consequence of the decline in production, employment and income.

He went on to say:

> Federal spending has also been affected by the recession. Higher interest rates add to the costs of Governments as well as firms and individuals. Public debt charges are expected to be $1.1 billion higher than originally forecast.

Similarly, we find this statement in the October 27, 1982, economic statement of the present Minister of Finance:

> The recession has been deeper and longer lasting in Canada than the Government anticipated when the June budget was presented . . . I must report today that further weakening of the economy in the intervening months has aggravated this deterioration. The budgetary deficit was then projected to be $19.6 billion. I am now estimating it at $23.6 billion. About 70 per cent of this slide is directly attributable to the impact of the recession on anticipated revenues.

We now have the familiar ring of the Minister of Finance telling us that the economy's depressed state simply was not fully appreciated yet again. As a result, Parliament is being asked to authorize the borrowing of an additional $5 billion for this fiscal year. How many times will the Government's financial ineptitude force it back to the public trough? It is obvious to all Members on this side of the House that something is drastically wrong when a Government, because it is so inaccurate in its estimates, must revise them every three or four months.

As I see it, the reason that this Government has been so consistently wrong in its forecasts is that the Government itself, as a very powerful agent in the Canadian economy, has done very little to alleviate the recession. It has offered some limited help to the victims of the recession, but it is too much like mopping up blood while the wound is still bleeding. The wound does not look as bad, but nothing has been done to staunch the bleeding.

There have been only two budgets since the Great Depression that have attempted to leech our economy while it was already weak. Those were the last two budgets of the former Minister of Finance, and we are still suffering from their effects. Only now is there a glimpse of evidence that the worst is behind us, yet Statistics Canada warns us not to be too sure, saying that, "it is uncertain whether these gains mark the formal beginning of a sustained recovery."

I can accept the Minister's concern that too much stimulus will overheat the economy, but what is needed desperately is a program of short-term stimulus that will act as a jump start to the economy and serve as a bridge to a more secure and prosperous time. A successful short-term stimulus would pave the way to a full economic recovery. First, it would persuade Canadians to spend more of their disposable income instead of saving it. Second, it would encourage new investment in Canadian business and by Canadian business.

With respect to the first point, it must be noted that last year Canadians had a personal savings rate of 13 per cent. This means that $87 was spent and $13 was saved of every $100 of disposable income. One reason for this extremely high personal savings rate is the uncertainty felt by all Canadians with regard to the economy.

If we are to get the economy moving again, the budget must remove that uncertainty felt by Canadians. This can be done by assuring Canadians that the time to spend has arrived as a result of instilling the Canadian consumer with confidence in the economy.

One of the cornerstones of such a short-term program should be an extension of the $3,000 grants offered to buyers of new homes in the Canadian Homeownership Stimulation Plan. The program is due to finish at the end of April, and I have heard nothing from the other side about their considering an extension.

I was especially interested to hear the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) join this debate when he spoke of the housing programs of his Government. Although he recognized how important these housing programs are to the recovery of our economy, nowhere in his speech did he indicate what the housing policy will be after the Minister of Finance brings down his budget. One part of his speech reminded me of a similar speech given by his predecessor, the present Minister of State for Finance (Mr Cosgrove), just after the budget was brought down in June of last year. I would like to quote from that speech, which was reported at page 18994 of Hansard of July 5, 1982, as follows:

> Some housing analysts have been predicting housing starts will be in the order of 110,000 to 125,000 this year. I would like to see starts this year reach the level of last year—

In 1982, Canada's housing starts for all areas totalled 125,000 units, which is a far cry from the Minister's ambitious target of matching 1981's total of 178,000 starts and far below the 210,000 units per year that CMHC has said Canada needs if we are to stave off a housing shortage.

I see that my time is almost up. I would like to conclude by saying that while the dark cloud of the recession that has descended upon Canada for two long years is beginning to lift, we still have two million people out of work. Now is not the time for complacency. If the Government chooses to bring down an austerity budget—which we hope it does not—rest assured that we will be back here again in a few months listening to the same pleas for more money from a Government that has once again underestimated the depth of this recession.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words about the borrowing Bill before us today. I will say at the outset that I believe it is a sad reflection on the state of this nation's economy when the Government has to return to Parliament to borrow so much money to continue the operations of the Government and its programs. Of course, when we are presented with a Bill such as this we are faced with the choice of either increasing our deficit or cutting services. When I am faced with that decision, I obviously do not want to cut services and make matters more difficult for the ordinary Canadian. Therefore, we have no choice but to see a deficit budget in the country.

I suggest that merely arguing about whether the merits of a deficit are right or wrong is really evading the main issue. We should be concerned about why we have such a large deficit in Canada in the first place. We should be considering what we as Parliamentarians can do to ensure that the fiscal and monetary policies of this country are put in better order. I suggest that to do less than that is like putting a band-aid on a broken leg. It may ease the problem temporarily but it will not heal the leg.

As Members of Parliament, we should be searching for ways to revive the country and looking for methods of increasing productivity and enlarging the pie to provide a better standard of living for the ordinary working people, farmers and other citizens of the country. We do not seem to have that type of vision in this country. We seem to be lacking that leadership. As a result, we appear to be drifting.

Canada needs an economic policy that will make us a nation of producers who realize that the new world of technology is upon us. We should be in the forefront of that reality. We also need a policy which makes us economically independent and sovereign.

That is why I am puzzled when I hear speeches such as the ones given in the House today or statements like the one made yesterday by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) when announcing his candidacy for the leadership of the Conservative Party. He stated in an interview that Canada must open its borders to more U.S. investment in order to grow, and that Canadian economic nationalism will doom the people of this country. I wonder if Mr. Crosbie is running for the leadership of the Conservative Party and the Prime Ministership of Canada, or whether he is running to be governor of Canada, because from—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member should refer to other Hon. Members in the House by the names of their ridings, please.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if he is running for Governor of Canada or, indeed, Prime Minister of Canada, because I believe one of the reasons this nation has not been a more productive nation, and also why we are so far in debt, is that we are the most foreign-controlled of any industrial state in the world. We are the most foreign-dominated. That foreign control and ownership has made us poorer as a nation. It has lost us jobs, research and development, and it has lost and cost us sovereignty and part of our nationhood.

Some 26 per cent of our economy is foreign-owned. In the United States, France and Britain, it is less than 3 per cent, and in Japan it is less than 1 per cent. I think the time has come, when we are discussing borrowing Bills and why we are in such dire straits today in terms of the economy, that we as a nation started considering some of the real structural problems and started correcting them.

When it comes to determining the extent of foreign ownership and control, one can consider many of the realities. We find, for example, that the report of Statistics Canada last November showed that in 1981, foreign-owned firms in Canada imported four times as much as Canadian-owned firms, which means that we lost tens of thousands of jobs because of the tremendous amount being imported by foreign-owned firms. If one considers research and development, one sees once again why we are not a nation of producers. We find that our level of research and development in Canada was only about 1.2 per cent in 1981, or less than half of that carried out in the United States and about half of that carried out in many western European countries. If one considers who does the research and development in Canada, one finds that it is the Canadian firms. Foreign-owned firms do very little research and development. If one considers Canadian firms, one finds that they probably do about as much as firms elsewhere in the world. In the sector of high technology, our deficit last year was some $8 billion and, in computers alone, it could hit about $10 billion by the year 1990. I think it is about time that we as Canadians started to control our own economy and our own destiny.

When it comes to exports, there are a number of facts and figures which show that many of the branch plants in Canada are operating under tremendous restrictions in terms of their exports, and some under outright prohibition. There are documents from the 1960s which show that we lost much wealth in this country and much potential productivity because some 75 per cent of our firms were prohibited from exporting. We have a Cabinet document which the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, currently the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), tried to get through the Cabinet in 1980, but he was turned down. Once again, he was discussing the problem concerning our branch plants not being able to export into the world market. In 1972, when the Gray Report was tabled, it was said that of the foreign-owned firms which were exporting, some 58 per cent were operating under some kind of export restriction, once again losing Canadians all kinds of potential wealth and jobs which would make this country much stronger and much more equal to other nations.

One could go on and on and mention our tremendous deficit in manufacturing. It was $21 billion in 1981. We could mention the tremendous deficit in the auto industry. The accumulated debt in the auto parts industry is now some $41 billion. It was $5 billion in 1982 alone. We can consider the outflow of capital, the outflow of dividends in Canada. Between 1976 and 1981, the net outflow of dividends and direct capital and interest payments was some $38 billion. As regards the oil and gas industry alone, between 1975 and 1979 it was some $3.7 billion. The reason I am mentioning this is that I think this is one of the areas where, structurally, our economy is faulty. We are the only nation in the world which allows so much of our economy to be run and dominated by foreign interests, in the interests and for the benefit of foreigners.

The facts and figures speak for themselves in relation to the net outflow of money, the net outflow of jobs, the little amount of research and development, the restrictions and prohibitions being placed on our branch plants in terms of their export policy, and the imports of goods which could be produced in this country. Therefore, what we must do is to take control of our own economy like other nations in the world have done. We must assert ourselves, assert our sovereignty, so that we do things in Canada which other countries around the world take as being natural and normal.

The other point I want to mention is that it is very strange to hear Hon. Members of the House stand and say, "We need more and more foreign capital because it will solve our problems for us".

Mr. Malone: Who says that?

Mr. Nystrom: Historically, that has not happened at all. We heard that from a Tory backbencher just this afternoon, and from the Hon. Member for St. John's West yesterday when he was announcing his candidacy for the governorship of Canada. He does not want to be Prime Minister or Leader of a national Party in this sovereign state. However, when one considers the facts and figures, one finds that not only does foreign ownership really dominate in Canada, but that as well we as Canadians have financed the vast majority of the foreign takeovers ourselves, with our own funds, our own moneys and our own banks.

There was a breakdown in the report entitled Foreign Direct Investment released back in 1972 which I think would shock you, Mr. Speaker, being a citizen of New Brunswick. From this breakdown we find that between the years of 1946 and 1967, there was an expansion of foreign-controlled enterprises in Canada to the tune of some $43.9 billion. Seventy-eight per cent of those funds were Canadian funds. Only $22 billion came from abroad. Between 1960 and 1967, when foreign expansion amounted to $21 billion, only 19 per cent of those funds came from abroad, and 81 per cent of those funds were Canadian funds.

In reality, we are financing the sellout of our own country with our own moneys. We are financing the sellout of our sovereignty with our own funds, from our own banks, from retained earnings of companies which already operate in Canada, from the pension funds of Canadians, and that is not right. We should use those funds to invest in Canada so as to ensure that those industries are controlled by Canadians, by the ordinary workers, farmers and people of this nation. Then we would become a nation of producers and it would not be necessary for us to borrow such vast amounts of money at high interest rates, saddling the ordinary people with debts for years that are yet to come.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on the legislation before the House today, a Bill that is clear proof of the utter bankruptcy of a Government that has led the country during the past fifteen years. I can understand the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), given the manner in which things were done during that time. Others before me have commented extensively on and given examples of, the poor administration and the wrong choices made by this Government, all of which have made Canadians extremely worried today. The Members on this side of the House cannot trust the Minister of Finance and cannot respond to his invitation to approve his request for the modest sum of $19 billion for this year and the next.

If we look at the situation, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to provide a few figures. In 1968, the national debt was less than $30 billion, and today, in 1983, it will rise to $160 billion. I wonder about the validity of the line of reasoning followed by Government Members who claim that this borrowing authority will help create jobs through new programs. Our national debt has gone up from $50 billion to $160 billion, and while in 1968 the number of unemployed workers was 350,000, we now have nearly two million Canadians out of work. In the circumstances, I think it is a clear-cut case of poor administration. Perhaps we should recall that in 1968, the interest on the national debt cost Canadians $1.27 billion, and that in 1983-84, we shall be paying $18.57 billion, in other words, an increase of 1,500 per cent over fifteen years.

I think those figures, which have been published and officially recognized, speak for themselves, and that the public should be able to judge very easily and very accurately that this Government has lost its credibility and it would then ask us to withdraw our confidence in this Government.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the present economic situation is the result of insufficient funds for research. We have been speaking about this for 15 years and we are well aware that, because the Government has refused to increase the amounts allocated to research, there has been an inevitable loss of thousands of jobs in the traditional sectors. I am not alone in saying and repeating it. The Minister of Finance is the only person who, while requesting a borrowing power of $19 billion, dares to speak about an economic recovery. I find it somewhat strange, not to say dishonest on his part, to speak about economic recovery when we all know that every forecast indicates that there will still be at least 1.5 million Canadians unemployed over the next 12 months in spite of all the efforts that the Government can make. If the Government had at least demonstrated that these borrowings and putting the country in debt could alleviate unemployment, we would perhaps be forced to admit that this legislation was positive. But it is clear that the greater the debt the Government creates for Canadians, the more people have become unemployed. Because of this, I do not believe that we can respond positively to the Government's request and I must say that I shall consider it a special duty to oppose this borrowing power because we now have evidence that the Government is leading the country into bankruptcy for the first time in its history.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, how could we not blame the Government for refusing to protect at least our most vulnerable sectors when the whole country is faced with high interest rates? Hon. Members will recall that, for our part, we had tried to help homeowners and prospective home buyers by proposing a very special formula which would have eased the present crisis. I repeat that the Government's inaction and utter lack of interest in the traditional sectors such as the shoe and clothing industries and agriculture—which were faced with enormous difficulties because of the policy of high interest rates and the lack of Government assistance—as well as small and medium size businesses for whom the Government refused to stimulate the building industry at the proper time, have created thousands of unemployed.

The Minister of Finance told us five months ago, on his appointment, I believe, that we could make very positive projections. After a few months, because of the mistakes of his predecessor, he himself has realized that his estimates are very far off. We are now talking about a deficit of $30 billion for next year and yesterday, I think, the Minister of Finance said on television that he could not reject the possibility of an even higher deficit than $30 billion. Mr. Speaker, understandably Canadians are shocked by such statements and are convinced that the Government has lost all control over the affairs of this country. The Minister of Finance says that there has been one unexpected problem in particular after implementing policies which have increased the number of unemployed, he tells us that the Government will have lower tax revenues than expected this year.

The Minister of Finance apparently has overlooked the fact that with 2 million people out of work, Canada's tax revenues could not remain at their previous levels. Mr. Speaker, it was clear that with such high level of unemployment, we would lose revenues. And the Minister of Finances seems to imply that he has overlooked the loss of revenues associated with the current high level of unemployment. There we have the undeniable evidence that the minister is incompetent, as were his predecessors.

Under these circumstances, therefore, it was understood that if we were going to choose the high unemployment approach revenues would decrease. It was clear also that these unemployed people who are costing a lot of money and who are becoming a source of unproductive manpower would be costing still more money.

The energy policy implemented by the government has proved to be a total failure both in terms of investments and in loss of jobs. For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can support this legislation, even though the government keeps saying that it needs this borrowing power to administer the country. Over the past 15 years, the government has demonstrated that the more money it has, the more it squanders.

At the same time, the Minister never realized that with its deliberate unemployment policy the government would bring about a major loss in the purchasing power of every Canadian. Because of that reduction in purchasing power, our Canadian industry is the one to suffer.

I am really wondering what those Ministers of Finance have been up to in the past 15 years, failing as they did to realize that the lack of research funding is a severe blow to the future prospects of Canada. The choices they did make were bad, and State intervention coupled with direct competition with the private sector is a very expensive proposition. And today the Government is again seeking authority to borrow $19 billion to pay for past mistakes.

This morning I heard the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) say that we have a wonderful country, and that we must combine our efforts and pool our energy to help all Canadians. The Government is urging Canadians to get into debt, it is on the verge of mortgaging the future of all Canadian children and it wants us to help pay for its mistakes. Our answer is a flat no, and I think there is nothing else we can say to a Government which has been so incompetent and which is driving the country into bankruptcy. That has been the prevailing feeling especially in the last three or four years, and yet the Government wants to prolong the agony of a bankruptcy which indeed will be increasingly costly.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, we will not give our vote of confidence to the Minister of Finance whose policies have undermined the trust of the majority of Canadians. We have no intention either of accepting the Government's proposal to go on spending the taxpayers' money as wantonly as it is doing now.

It is obvious that the Government has lost all control over the administration of the country, it is obvious that it no longer deserves the confidence of Canadians and, finally, it is obvious that it does not deserve ours either.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the normal course of dealing with expenditures and the needs for money in this House is well known. There is the budget in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) proposes the means by which he is going to raise the funds, and the books on Estimates in their various forms, as they exist now, outline the Government program for expenditures. That will show that 60 per cent of total Government spending is statutory and, outside of amending statutes, a Government is powerless to change or reduce those expenditures.

But we are today discussing, and this may sound a little academic, the third feature of Government financing, and that is the borrowing authority. Obviously the Government cannot match up moneys coming in with moneys going out, therefore it has to borrow. Parliament has the right, and the Government has the responsibility, to come to Parliament to establish that balance of borrowing.

As far as Government backbenchers are concerned, they give Government carte blanche. This Bill, instead of calling for an expenditure of $19 billion, plus a carry-over of $2 billion, might just as well say $35 billion. There would still not be one word of comment from the Government backbenchers. They could not care less. The only time they participate in debate is in fixed-term debate so as to use up time which the Opposition would not have.

Today we are on the narrow question of the amendment put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), which in effect eliminates Part II of this omnibus borrowing Bill. The transcripts of evidence, I acknowledge, reached my office today. I think the staff did a good job. And after the fuss I raised last week, if they had not been here, I can assure you that this morning there would have been a very tempestuous protest, because we would not have had the evidence which was given in the Standing Committee. I am quite anxious to see the Minutes and Proceedings of the twentieth meeting, dated March 17, which was the last sitting at which the Minister appeared before us.

When discussing the matter with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the Minister said, "Well, if the Opposition is not satisfied with the Government's spending program, why does it not put forward its own spending program? Why does it not put forward its own estimates and then put them before the public and choose?" That comment reflects the sort of simplistic confrontation-type of philosophy which governs this administration. There are hundreds of thousands of employees in the Government who provide the information. It is distilled and comes forward ultimately in the Estimates. For the Minister of Finance to allege that the same resources are available, or that because Bill C-34 has been passed, we have access to the information and would be able to compile the same sort of Estimates, is, of course, absolute folderal. As a matter of fact, this would tend to deceive the public, or it would be an attempt to deceive the public.

There is no way that Opposition Members can put forward alternative programs. The Hon. Member for Verchères (Mr. Loiselle) this morning was challenging Hon. Members of the Opposition to say which programs should be cut and by whom. He conveniently forgot that 60 per cent of expenditures are statutory. He asks, "How would you reduce expenditures?" Well, I would say the first one would be the $1.6 billion for the purchase of Petrofina, which came ultimately out of Government coffers. That was a vast over-expenditure. There are a great number of over-expenditures by Government. If the Government followed the recommendations of the Auditor General, there would be value budgeting, control of programs, and the whole bit, And when you look into the administration itself, there are supervisors galore, there are a great number of people far in excess of what is required. There are a number of things like that happening because there is improper management.

We are dealing with a total budget of close to $80 billion. In the lexicon of the average citizen, $10 million would be a fantastic sum but, frankly, it is not a great deal when one envisages $80 billion. That is 80,000 million dollars, Mr. Speaker! I am talking about saving $10 million or $20 million in reforming certain administrative practices. That is very attractive and I believe it should be encouraged. On the other hand, we have reached $80 billion, and we see suggestions for more and greater expenditures on the welfare side, and the tax Bill C-139 is also going to add tremendously to taxation.

Hon. Members across from me realize what they are doing in eliminating IAACs and turning over to the Government all the funds which formerly were provided to private industry through Income Averaging Annuity Contracts. The Government is jumping to, shall we say, a once-in-a-lifetime surge of capital because it needs the money so badly. The issue, Mr. Speaker, is whether we should now give this Government authority to borrow $19 billion before we have the budget promised last fall. I say, no, let the Minister determine and tell us how he is going to spend this money. Then we will tell him how much he can borrow.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I must say again that this is a very important debate. We are dealing with the kind of things in the House that this House is designed to deal with, and that is, money. We are not suggesting, as the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) said this morning, that the Government not borrow any money. We are not suggesting that the Government be irresponsible and renege on its commitment to unemployment insurance and all of the other social programs which the Government finances on a day-to-day basis. We are simply suggesting in this amendment that Part II of the Bill be deleted and the Government be allowed to borrow $5 billion to meet its obligations to the end of this fiscal year, which is going to come about in approximately two weeks. And until the Government can come forward with some details as to how it intends to spend the additional $14 billion, we suggest that that borrowing authority be withheld from it. I find that logical.

I find the statements made by the Minister of State for Finance this morning rather incredible in the sense that he appears not to understand what the amendment is all about. Beyond that, the question can be asked, why should the Opposition be concerned about borrowing or about Government spending? I submit we must concern ourselves about spending and about the kinds of taxation which this Bill essentially grants—because that is what it is. It is deferred taxation. Every time a Government borrows monay, in effect it is deferring taxation to a later date at which this money will be repaid. Therefore, if we did not concern ourselves about this Bill, I submit, essentially we would be irresponsible. Not only that, but when you consider the level of borrowing which this Government is asking Parliament to authorize, it then becomes even more of a concern.

I will repeat what I said at another time in commenting on this same Bill: every $1 billion which the Government either spends or borrows, amounts to $40 per capita. So that with the current deficit of approximately $30 billion, you are looking at about $4,500 for a family of four. That is a horrendous amount of money. If we take the $80 billion anticipated Government spending just referred to by my colleague from Edmonton and relate that to a family of four, you come very close to $13,000 per family of four in Canada. That is a very significant amount of money in anyone's life, let alone the average Canadian wage earner. In fact, in many areas the Government is going to be spending on behalf of that family of four in the coming fiscal year the same amount of money the major wage earner in that family earns. That gives you a bit of an idea of the amount of money we are talking about. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if those of us elected to this place did not express our concern over the level of Government spending when it is that high, we would be totally irresponsible and find it very hard to go back to our constituents and explain why we did not at least raise an objection to what is going on.

• (1700)

As I said, it is not the fact that the Opposition objects to Government spending, it is the fact that the Government has given no indication of what the spending is for. If it is going to be for some very useful projects to help create employment and generate tax dollars to replace the money being spent, that is fine. But if it is going to be used essentially to pay for yesterday's groceries, then I think that is something we should look at. The only way we can do that is through a budget. On the one side is Government revenue, or earnings, although I hate to even use that word because Government has no money itself. The only money it has it takes away from taxpayers. So the Government does not earn money. On the other side, we know Government expenditures have been going up at the same time that revenues have been going down, so naturally you have a deficit. What we are saying on this side is that if we are going to address the problem of Government deficits, hence the large borrowing Bill we have here today, we should certainly take a look at a budget to see what the Government is going to do or what direction it is going to take in order to increase productivity so that in fact there are more taxpayers and the Government has more revenue. That would make sense to anyone, yet we do not see this.

We were told that we were going to have a budget very quickly after the first of the year. It is now over two months since the House came back into session on January 17 and we are told that the budget is still weeks or months down the road. We are facing a very critical time as far as Canadian farmers are concerned, and it would be nice to know what the Government plans to do to ease some of the tax burden the farmers are going to be faced with in getting the crops in the ground this spring so that, hopefully, we can give them some encouragement to stay in business and plant another crop. It does not make any sense to me to see the level of fuel tax raised so high that it effectively puts farmers out of business. They end up having to draw some kind of social assistance to survive, and they certainly are not paying any taxes. Where this money is going to be used is what we should be discussing. How is it going to be used across the nation to create jobs? How is it going to be used regionally?

There are some very pertinent questions we could ask concerning my own area, Mr. Speaker. We want to know what is going to happen to the Rivers air base. It is a small matter relative to the problems across the country, but it is a major concern for an area in my constituency and it would be nice to know if the Government has any plans there. We would like to know where the money is going to be spent on upgrading of many of the branch lines in western Canada. That is a major concern to a lot of people. Yet we cannot get this information. I have written letters to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), but we do not seem to know what kind of priorities the Government has as far as the upgrading process is concerned. In fact, we do not know which lines are going to have money spent on them this year or what the long-term prospects are.

The last Throne Speech was made on April 14, 1980, close to three years ago, and we are still in the same session. In that speech the Government talked about the Western Development Fund. We do not know what happened to that. There was supposed to be $4 billion for that fund, but it was cut down. Really, I think the only money which supposedly came out of the Western Development Fund was money for compensation payments as the result of the embargo put on grain sales to Russia after the invasion of Afghanistan. I think it is stretching things considerably to think that that should be part of western development. Many of us in western Canada looked forward to the Fund, and yet we see no sign of that money being made available to develop western Canada. What we do have is a situation where we are looking at reforming the Crow rate, but we do not know when the Government is going to table that legislation in the House.

I am trying to point out to the Government that if we could see some of its spending plans and what it intends to do in the budget, I think the Opposition would feel much better about approving the Government's request to borrow some $19 billion. All we are saying in this admendment, in lieu of that, is that the Government should have $5 billion to the end of the fiscal year, but then we should wait until we see a budget and an over-all expenditure plan before the authority to borrow the additional $14 billion is granted. That to me is a very reasonable kind of approach.

The Minister of State responsible for finance talked this morning about all the programs the Government has in place to assist people in this very trying economic time. That is fine, no problem with that, but it seems to me to be sensible for the Government to put some emphasis on creating jobs and encouraging people to get back to work so that they could become taxpayers and add to Government revenues instead of detracting from them and increasing the deficit.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) talked about foreign capital, and he said that we did not really want foreign capital in this country. I would simply like to point out to him that he comes from a part of Saskatchewan settled by people from other parts of the world. They came there and brought with them foreign capital and foreign expertise. None of us are native to this country, or very few of us. We brought that expertise and capital to this country, and that is what made it great. I am not concerned about where that capital comes from, but I am concerned that we control it as Canadians once it gets here and that it be used to benefit all Canadians.

Those are the kinds of things we would like to see in the budget, Mr. Speaker, and the sooner the better, not only for this House but for all Canadians.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in this particular debate I think it is very important that we come to some agreement about fundamentals. I think the first fundamental that we should bear in mind is that the borrower gets into debt. Borrowing means debt, it is as simple as that. But the Government seems to have forgotten that. That is the simple, straightforward notion of which I think we ought to remind ourselves in this debate. Borrowing means debt. If you have sufficient revenue, you do not have to borrow, and then everything is fine. But if you engage in enterprises beyond your capacity to pay, you are going to have to borrow. It is as simple as that. Engaging in enterprises beyond your ability to pay will get you into debt. This is a simple principle that every householder, every wage earner, has to observe. He may have to go to the bank if he wants to finance his house, but he realizes that he is going to have to pay it back. One is bound to ask oneself, Mr. Speaker, why Government should be different. Why should Government act in a different fashion? Within certain limits, of course, they have to, because Governments do have to have the latitude to borrow to deal with crises when they occur. Governments must have that freedom, and this is recognized by all citizens and taxpayers. Limits are difficult to define, and I am not sure that it is even possible to define them; but they should be watched.

When we examine the course of the spending by the Government over the past 10 or 15 years, we see increased indebtedness all the time. In about 1968-69, there was balance, but since then the indebtedness has been mounting. The figures appear in Government publications. In 1977-78, it took $5.56 million or 12.6 per cent of the budget just to service the then existing debt. Today, it takes over 20 per cent of the budget to service the debt. The deficit has risen from $5.5 million in 1977 to $18.5 million today.

The Government ignores the fundamental principles of how domestic housekeeping should be done. If we become too involved in expenditures that are beyond our ability to pay, then we are incapable of dealing with the budget. We must set limits.

I should like to give some figures from the Financial Times of February 28. An article on the front page describes the degree to which the country has increased the net federal debt. The article pointed out that in four years the Government will have more than doubled the net federal debt of $68.6 billion as it was in 1980. The total debt accumulated since Confederation, from 1867 to 1980—is $69 billion. If we go on the way we are going, in four years the accumulated debt will be $152 billion. It will have trebled in that short period.

We are talking in sums that are incomprehensible to most people. When I spoke on second reading of the Bill I tried to bring home to people the magnitude of the borrowing that is proposed in the Bill. I have another idea which I think is within the grasp of most people. We all watch football and know that the size of the field is 110 yards in one direction and 65 yards in the other. If you covered that field with $1 bills, the total amount required would be $1 million. The bills might lap a little over the edges. But one million $1 bills would cover, more or less, the football field. If you had packets of one thousand $1 bills and stacked them up, the field would be covered four inches deep at a cost of $1 billion. If you covered it a foot deep, it would take $3 billion—one million times one thousand. The Government is asking for $19 billion which would mean that the football field would be covered to a depth of six feet, four inches. That is the magnitude of the request made by the Government in this Bill. The amount of the borrowing is conceivable, in those terms.

Hon. Members opposite are always asking Members on this side what we would cut to reduce expenditures. The Auditor General made a very good study of the expenditures, but of course we learn about them after they have taken place. Someone already mentioned the $1.7 billion spent to acquire a fleet of gas stations. This did not increase the amount of petroleum available to Canadians at all. The company that acquired Petrofina at the cost of $1.7 billion now pays $18,000 per day, and will pay that for eight months, to rent a vacant building in Calgary. That will come to four and a third million dollars for unoccupied space.

These are the things that ought to be cut, Mr. Speaker. I could cite thousands of other examples if you would allow me another 10 or 20 minutes. I see you are going to rise to recognize someone else, and I thank you for the courtesy of allowing me these ten minutes.

[Translation]

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, since I last spoke to this Bill, I have listened carefully to what was said by my colleagues in the Official Opposition. I believe that the $19 billion are so important to Canadians that this should be debated in both official languages of our country, and that is why I intend to speak to the House in French today. Since I am from Southern Ontario, my French may leave something to be desired. However, with the co-operation of my colleagues, including the Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), the Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), the Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) and the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), I feel that I will be able to explain in the other official language and to all Canadians throughout the country, why we on the Opposition side are speaking against and will be voting against this borrowing authority for $19 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment for a few moments on the Government's financial planning. Generally speaking, individuals and businesses draw up budgets for a period of one year, according to a logical and rational procedure. This includes estimating income and calculating fixed expenditures. The difference between those two figures, if it is positive, can be used to defray any unforeseen expenses. If there is no surplus, however, the business or the family must borrow additional funds to meet its financial requirements, bearing in mind that the debt must be paid back later on. That is the procedure followed by individuals, by families and by businesses because it is, after all, a sensible one.

• (1720)

What does the Liberal Government of Canada do, Mr. Speaker? It is asking us to give it a borrowing authority for $19 billion which is more than the total government expenditures at the time the Prime Minister came to power. The Government prefers not to tell us why it needs the money or what its estimated revenue and expenditures are. We are not entitled to that information, and the Government is simply asking us for the authority to borrow the money. We all know that the spineless Government backbenchers will approve the Minister's request without a second thought. Then we are told that this figure is merely an estimate of what the Government is going to spend, but it is not the real figure, Mr. Speaker. What we have here is a perfectly ridiculous situation. At the end of February, the Government gave us an estimate of its expenditures for the coming year, in the Main Estimates. These expenditures are to start at the end of March, and at the end of June, the House will have a chance to say whether the Government is authorized to spend that money. But between now and the end of June, Mr. Speaker, the Government will have spent one third of the total amount before the House has even given its approval. This absurd situation is possible because the Government can count on its spineless backbenchers.

Finally, the Government may be bringing down a so-called budget corresponding to the revenue side of the entire budget balance. It was first promised for the beginning of the year, and then sometime before the first of April, and now there is a possibility that it will be brought down some time in April, but who knows, we may have to wait until May or June. Maybe this budget will never be brought down, because we are still considering the income tax legislation arising from a budget that was brought down a year and a half ago.

Mr. Speaker, what is $19 billion? I would like to quote an article in the Globe and Mail, which gives some idea of what $19 billion exactly represents. I would like to read the following into the record, and I quote:

> What is $19 billion? This is what it means. It was the total federal budget for 1973-74. That year, Government revenue was $19.3 billion and Government expenditures were $20.04 billion. It was the total national debt, the cumulative deficit from Confederation until 1974-75.
> In fact, the steadily increasing deficits of the Liberal Government since the middle of the 70's have now reached the point where not the national debt, but the interest payments on that debt exceed the overall budget expenditures at the time Pierre Trudeau came to power.

That is what $19 billion means, Mr. Speaker. What does it all come down to? The Government, the Department of Finance and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) simply admit their total incompetence. On November 12, 1981, just 15 months ago, they told us that the deficit for the current fiscal year ending on March 31 would amount to $10.5 billion. That was the estimated deficit. That is the amount the Government economists anticipated for this year.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that I am rapidly running out of time and I would appreciate it if the House would allow me one more minute to conclude my remarks.

Canadians who have to live on unemployment insurance or welfare have difficulty imagining what $1 billion represents, let alone $19 billion. Mr. Speaker, I for one have no idea what $1 billion represents. I will probably never have a million dollars or even one-tenth of a million. Therefore, one could say I am an amateur when it comes to discussing such a sum of money. But I want to say that, as a taxpayer, I am outraged to see the sums of money that the Government is ready to borrow. From the bottom of my heart, I will vote against this borrowing authority, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate my colleague.

[English]

With regard to the Bill presently before the House, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) rose in his place on February 17 to ask for borrowing authority for some $19 billion, I was certain that a full budget would only be a few days away. No Minister of Finance, no matter how profligate that person might be, would want to borrow that amount of money without giving a full accounting, without an accounting that would only come in the form of a budget, or so I thought. The budget would be brought down, the Government's proposals for additional revenues would be detailed, the country would be reassured that fiscal responsibility was still a commodity which even this Government recognized; in fact, all normal procedures would be followed.

How hopeless to think this would actually take place. Now a month later we have no more precise idea of when the budget will be presented to the House than we had when the Minister of Finance first came before us requesting some $19 billion. The Minister seems to feel no obligation to share this information with the House in general or with the Canadian public. He feels no sense of responsibility to give a fiscal accounting of the Government's balance sheet.

One is forced to ask, therefore, is it because the Minister is unaware this must be done that he refuses to say when a budget will be forthcoming? No, I think surely that has to be discounted. Is he afraid, then, that the bad news of his budget will send the economy into another tailspin? No, I think that has to be discounted as well because this resilient nation, having withstood so many shocks and blows from the present Government, can show once again it can absorb whatever even this Government has to offer.

What is the reason the Minister of Finance seeks to borrow another $19 billion? What is the reason he fails to put it in the context of a budget or fails to explain why he wants Parliament to offer him this blank cheque? The only reason, Sir, I can see why the Government procrastinates and dawdles and delays with regard to a budget is that it simply cannot decide on which way it wants to go. Stimulate the economy and increase the deficit say one half of the Cabinet members, and the other half say no, restrain expenditures and increase taxes.

The see-saw battle goes on. The Finance Minister meanwhile alters his forecast of a budgetary deficit daily. It mounts and mounts. The country, unfortunately, is allowed to drift into an ocean of fiscal uncertainty. How sad for the country, but how very predictable of this Liberal Government.

Eventually we will have a budget. Eventually we will know why the Government needs an additional $19 billion. Eventually we will learn which faction in the Cabinet has won the fiscal battle. Eventually the Government will learn it can no longer duck its responsibilities. In the meantime this borrowing Bill is a catalyst for the fears and concerns that animate the business community from one end of this country to the other. To many, this Bill is the signal of a return to higher taxes. They see it as more Government rapaciousness in the capital markets which means a scarcity of capital for the private sector. And that in turn will lead to an upward movement in interest rates. That is what causes fear.

Nothing strikes greater terror in the hearts of business people, farmers, home owners, and job holders than that this Government will once again resort to its interest rate policy which drove so many Canadians and so many businesses into bankruptcy. And so people are asking: is this what this borrowing Bill signals? Is this the overture to the budget objectives? Obviously Governments need money to pay for legitimate expenditures for social programs, job creation, research and development and other legitimate items.

But how frequently, Mr. Speaker, have we seen this Government almost deliberately exacerbate, drive up, those very expenditures by putting into place ill-conceived and ill-timed economic policies without any consideration of what the social costs will be? The November, 1980 budget with its infamous National Energy Program wreaked havoc on the petroleum industry in this country and threw thousands of people out of work. This occurred not only in the oil producing regions but, as well, in the manufacturing and secondary industry sectors, sectors that would have produced the equipment for megaprojects and small exploration projects alike.

When the National Energy Program was being dreamed up, did anyone on the Government benches consider for a moment that its NEP could conceivably throw thousands of Canadians out of jobs, that it could cause Unemployment Insurance payments to soar, that it would result in lost homes and lost hopes? Did anyone give that a moment's thought?

When the November, 1981 tax reform budget was brought before the House, did the then Minister of Finance pause to consider the turmoil and uncertainty he would be creating in the private sector, the damage he would be doing to the motor of this country, the private sector that truly generates the growth rate of Canada? Did he even pause to contemplate that those ill-considered measures would bring plans for expansion and development, whether in a corner grocery store or in a major industrial plant, to a crashing halt? In that climate of uncertainty and fear, interest rates soared, and record numbers of businesses and individuals were driven into bankruptcy. And, more important, countless others were driven out of jobs.

In the human debris and fall-out from these two ill-conceived budgets lies the tragic proof that this Government conceives its economic policies in total isolation from any consideration of the social costs that may ensue.

Thousands of Canadians have paid for these mistakes in lost jobs, lost homes and lost individual and family security. Unemployment Insurance and provincial welfare programs have been strained to the breaking point. Social agencies that deal with abused children, alcoholism and marriage breakdown report significant increases in these problems. These widespread social problems are the direct result of the wrong economic policies applied at the wrong time.

Mr. Breau: Not so.

Miss MacDonald: I ask the Hon. Member to take a look at it so he can see that that is what is resulting. If he says it is not happening in his area of New Brunswick, I can tell him I will go there and find out that many people are out of work as a result of these policies.

Misguided economic policies have produced a crisis for Canada's social programs. When the cost of these programs soars, as indeed it has, the Government comes before the House seeking greater borrowing authority, as it is doing now. This situation should never have happened. How much better, Sir, how much more humane, how much more sensible if the Government had seen the error of its way before it threw the country's economy into a tailspin at its recent attempts at budget making.

We pray that in the next budget it does not follow the same route.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member accept a question, if there is time left?

Miss MacDonald: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Breau: Does the Hon. Member realize that when she says and others say to people that the causes of alcoholism, drug problems and social problems are related to the economy—and I am very close to some of these problems in my constituency and elsewhere—it is mostly people who are the victims of economic circumstances who are alcoholics and drug addicts? Does the Hon. Member realize that she is offending these people? The facts show that problems of alcoholism and drug addiction have absolutely nothing to do with the economic state in one area. Quite the contrary, sometimes these problems exist where the economy is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is making an argument. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) does not seem to know what is going on in this country, and he does not seem to know the tragedy unemployment is bringing to hundreds of thousands of people across this country, and he does not seem to know how closely it is related. I tell him to speak to the social agencies and visit them. If he does not have time to do that, he should get out of this House and go and discover for himself—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, yet again I must rise to speak on this Bill, and this time I want to direct my words to Members opposite, or at least to those who are not at the same time members of the Cabinet, such as it is. Would it be presumptuous of me to remind them that they were elected not to represent the interests of the present Cabinet but those of their constituents and the Canadian people?

Would I be going too far back to basics if I were to observe that our country is not a representative democracy but a responsible democracy, and that as such it demands of its Members of Parliament not a blind vote but, rather, the full value of mind and conscience, for the exercise of which they will be judged at the next electoral opportunity?

We have before us a demand for an endorsed cheque. It is a demand for an endorsed cheque in the amount of $19 billion. For what purpose is it and what is the money to be spent on? These are not unreasonable questions for a prospective investor to ask, for that is what we are, including all Members on both sides of the House. Parliament is being asked to invest $19 billion of someone else's money and they are the people of our constituencies all across the country.

The Cabinet either cannot or will not tell us what its proposal is. The Cabinet, quite rightly, insists that any corporate borrower must issue a prospectus before it may do its borrowing. It and its provincial counterparts even insist upon a very rigid standard of disclosure for that prospectus. Yet the Cabinet has placed before us Parliamentarians, who have been charged with the ultimate responsibility for the protection of the public purse since the time of King Charles I, a demand for the provision of money with no questions asked.

I am not speaking now as a Progressive Conservative or a Member of the Loyal Opposition; I am speaking as a Member of Parliament. I am speaking as one whose final responsibility is not to a given political Party or even ultimately to a given institution, but to the political system as a whole. In that capacity I am not only saying that this is a bad Bill and that it is one that is inherently dangerous in principle, I am saying that while all of us here realize that, many of us are trying to avoid facing it.

I would ask Members to bear with me since I will have to be somewhat partisan to back up the point I am about to make. Between the years 1968-69 and 1982-83, federal Government spending, calculated on a national accounts basis, rose by 624 per cent. During that same period, costs in the private sector, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, rose by 192 per cent. That is to say that during this period, federal Government spending rose three and one-quarter times the rate that the cost of living went up, despite the fact that this was the most inflationary period that most of us have ever known.

Since the Cabinet re-established itself in February of 1980, federal Government spending has risen by 68 per cent while the CPI has risen by 37 per cent and the GNP by 33 per cent.

In 1968, ours was a proud and stable country. In the period since that time, while the private sector and private citizenry alike struggled to maintain and recover that pride and stability and finally to find a base from which it might eventually be recovered, the Cabinet has been hellbent on a midnight ride of its own choosing, dragging us and the country helplessly behind it.

Canadians have always been so trusting that we have never seriously questioned this. I suppose that does not apply in this place because those people in the Cabinet were of us and were members of our group. This has not been challenged by others in the country, except perhaps by some members of what we probably thought was some extreme fringe. But we as Members were here to take care of that sort of thing for them.

We are now faced with a ruined economy for which the Government assures us it is not to blame. While the Government blames someone else, that responsibility varies from time to time depending on political considerations. While our traditions and parliamentary principles are in tatters, we are faced with a Government Bill which is demanding $19 billion for the Government's private and undisclosed purposes.

According to 1982 figures, federal Government borrowing already accounts for 51 per cent of all net new security issues placed in Canada. In layman's terms, that means that less than half the money that should be available for private sector expansion and job creation is left after the Government, following the policies of the Cabinet, has had its way. Of course, the Government has had its way because money has been no object to it since it is ours and not theirs. If the Government or a private sector borrower wished to borrow money, the Government would simply raise the price since the taxpayer apparently can afford anything.

The Government now wants to borrow another $19 billion but will not tell us why. It did not have to ask for this money in one sum. It could have split the Bill in two and obtained our authority to borrow enough money to see it through to the end of the fiscal year, then brought down a budget and introduced another Bill to borrow for its remaining requirements. As well, it could have produced explanatory material along with this Bill as it stands. It could have brought in yet another of its celebrated mini budgets, of which we have seen so many since the fiasco of November, 1981.

Of course, several other Members have mentioned that a budget has been promised to be delivered on various dates. I understand that the budget will probably not be brought down until early May.

Since the Government could have taken any of these steps, why did it not do so? Is it that the sinister suggestions of some of the public at large are correct? Is it that the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) musings on yet another occasion were correct and that in his eyes we are just a bunch of nobodies? Perhaps so, but we are still the last and sovereign authority over the public's pocketbook. They, our electors, have assigned us that responsibility, and it is to them that we are finally accountable.

Parliament once fought long and hard, and bloodily I might add, to be the sovereign authority over the public purse. We do not do service to either our for bears or our successors if we surrender that privilege lightly now. Perhaps the Cabinet has lost so much control of the economic, political and every other situation with which it is faced that it has just lost its grip. Perhaps that is closer to the truth.

The point is that for whatever reason this Bill is being brought forward in this fashion, there is no justifying it if we are collectively to fulfil our moral responsibilities to our electors. Whatever the reason for introducing this Bill, even if it be simply incompetence and lack of control, it militates against our continued confidence as the appointed delegates of our constituencies in this Cabinet's management of the country's affairs.

There comes a point at which every person must consider the true interests of those to whom he is ultimately responsible. I would suggest to all of us here that this Bill must mark that point.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the context in which we enter this stage of debate on Bill C-143 is that the only sector of our economy that is not practising restraint and setting intelligent spending priorities is the federal Government. In that context we are being asked to make a great leap in faith. In the same context we are being treated daily to new and more senseless examples of the Government's free wheeling spending. The Government is oblivious to the strains being placed on the backs of Canada's taxpayers.

The Government has come before us today to ask for authority to borrow $14 billion for the taxation year 1983-84. Of that, $5 billion is being requested to see it through this current fiscal year. Under what terms are we being asked to vote for this authority? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) asks us to trust the Government. He has said that the Government will not even allow us to continue debate so that the public may hear us, and will impose closure. He says, "Trust us". We are asked this on the basis of a sheet, a Bill, one page with a little bit of print, compared with the Bill on tax increases, Bill C-139, which was nearly two inches thick.

Just a few months ago, let me remind the House and those who share this concern about the financing of our nation, the Minister's predecessor in the Finance portfolio very emphatically told the House:

> I would not expect the House to act upon an additional request for borrowing authority without providing it with detailed information on the economic situation and the implications of that situation on the Government's fiscal situation. I do not think that it would be appropriate to ask the House for additional borrowing authority until I have laid out in some detail an update on both situations . . . I will certainly be doing that before I would come back to the House for additional borrowing authority.

Where are the explanations? Now we are told, "Trust us. Wait for a budget, which may be late in April or may be now in May. In the meantime, we will close off any debate and discussion on the matter".

I will not go back to my constituents in the Waterloo riding and tell them that I voted for Government authority to borrow $19 billion when it would not give the country any idea as to how it planned to use it. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that those in the Mennonite culture which I represent, the people of Germanic and Scottish ancestry in the Waterloo region, do not understand what it is to vote for something concerning which they are given no details.

I will not trust the Government with that authority when it has already spent over $1 million on newspaper ads to tell us just how close we are to energy security. I am reminded, as I speak in the House today, that nearly 7,000 homeowners in the Waterloo region have seen money spent by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to let them know that this same Government approved of the use of urea formaldehyde foam insulation in their homes. Certainly, those taxpayers have so little regard for the word of the Government, so little trust in the Government which is asking to borrow $19 billion, that many of them, I find day by day, will have nothing to do with the new Government-approved programs to remove urea formaldehyde foam insulation from their homes.

I refuse to go back and tell the post-secondary graduates of Conestoga College or the University of Waterloo or Wilfrid Laurier University that I voted to trust the Government which has overseen an economy which cannot provide thousands of these capable and trained young people with employment of any kind, much less in fields in which they have long studied. They have already trusted that the Government would be of some help, would find some context so that they could feel they were contributing to our Canadian society. However, what do they find? They have almost no hope of jobs. Make-work programs give them little sense of satisfaction and little hope that they can build families and futures. What trust has the Government earned from the 14.2 per cent record unemployment in Waterloo region, as reported by Statistics Canada last month? These 22,000 people, out of an area work force of 152,000 cannot be expected to trust the spending habits of a Government which has overseen its record reliance on jobless benefits and welfare.

In the last 15 years, Government spending has risen at an unprecedented rate of 59 per cent, a sad commentary on those who support the Government for practising restraint. For every $4 it spends, the Government must now borrow $1, and the borrowed money must still be paid for. The cost of interest on the debt during the last fiscal year was forecast at $16.7 billion, the equivalent of one revenue dollar in three. Is it any wonder that our young Canadians look with concern to their future? Is there not some point at which responsible representatives must say, "I will no longer give carte blanche to a Government which has no compunction about mortgaging the future of my children and their children's children."? Yet the Government, in its hunger for more and more money to spend, refuses to listen to smart spending suggestions.

It has already agreed, in the person of the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), that this country's voluntary sector can create lasting jobs by spending far less of the taxpayer's money. The Government admits that it must spend an estimated $120,000, while the voluntary sector has already demonstrated, as the Secretary of State has admitted, that it can create the same job for just between $35,000 and $40,000. Even the proven capacity of the voluntary sector to train and retrain unemployed Canadians in new job skills remains virtually ignored, untapped, by the Government's own admission. Its answer is, "We can do it ourselves", and in terms of the future of the country, it states, "We will not stimulate either the private or the voluntary sector".

In this morning's Globe and Mail, under the heading "Ottawa, business warning to deliberate spending boost", in a column by Thomas Walkom, we see these comments:

> There are two levels of objection to Government deficits. The usual economic criticism is that deficits soak up savings that otherwise might be used by private borrowers. This process, called crowding out, is said to force up interest rates. At the limit, this criticism blends into the monetarism of U.S. economist Milton Friedman, which holds that increased spending for lower taxes don't help the economy anyway and that governments should concentrate on the growth of the money supply.

The article continues:

> The other level of objection to Government deficits is more fundamental. It is based on the view that nations, like corner stores, should balance their books and pay their debts. This is a view founded on a profound mistrust of government as an economic actor. It is virtually untouched by the ephemeral winds of economic boom and depression.

In conclusion, in opposing the Bill, let me say that we are faced with a Government which has abandoned the concept of a balanced budget, and we are faced with a Government which is not prepared to clean up its own act. Therefore, I and many others in this House cannot trust the Government with $19 billion for which it will give us no design as to how it will be spent.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, we often start by talking about the pleasure of speaking, but it is certainly not a pleasure to speak one more time on one more borrowing Bill. The Government, drunk with mismanagement, is asking for another $19 billion, $5 billion for this fiscal year, and another $14 billion for which there is not even a plan. There is no budget and no stated intention as to how that money is to be spent. What we have in front of us is simply a request, a request under the threat of closure.

The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Mosquito—

Mr. Nystrom: He's a real bug.

Mr. Malone: —or Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), said to us a little while ago that following King Charles, the purpose of this Parliament was to control the King's purse. This Parliament has lost such control. Parliament does no longer control the finances of this country. We are under the threat of closure to borrow money and we are under closure to spend money.

I see that Your Honour is rising. May I call it six o'clock and continue tomorrow?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—ZIMBABWE—OBSERVANCE OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have a large investment in the success of the experiment in democracy in Zimbabwe. If we take our minds back two years or more to the great Lancaster House Agreement, we will recall that Canada, along with many of the other nations of the world, wished the very best for that country, which had endured a great struggle for its independence, in its great experiment in democracy. For us in Canada it was an affront to our sense of representative Government to have a minority ruling the majority. So we invested in that great transition from a minority ruling the majority. We invested by sending one of our key representatives over there to monitor the election, Mr. Gordon Fairweather, our Commissioner of Human Rights. He came back with the report that as far as he could determine the elections had gone very well considering the relative upheavals in the country. He was satisfied that the elections themselves were democratic. As the headlines of that day indicated, Mr Fairweather came back with an emotional appeal for quick aid to Zimbabwe. That aid was forthcoming. Something like $1.3 billion in aid was promised that country, part of which was given by Canada. Possibly some people felt it was not enough. We promised at least $60 million in aid at that time, but there were other kinds of aid.

For example, I have here a press clipping of the Ottawa Citizen, May 13, 1981, which I read in part:

> The Zimbabwe government has turned to Ottawa's medical experts for advice in rehabilitating almost 5,000 of its war-mutilated soldiers. Dr. Sidney Dinsdale, head of psychiatry at the Royal Ottawa Hospital's new rehabilitation centre, will fly to Zimbabwe Friday to share with doctors his expertise in the handling of amputations and other disabling injuries.

That is the kind of outpouring which took place around the world to that country. Canada invested, in terms of CIDA, something like $50 million, and then in excess of another $10 million or $12 million in teacher aid, as well as other kinds of support.

At the same time we were hearing concerns that the country might turn to a one-party rule. It was precisely because of that concern that there was a sense of urgency on the part of western nations that aid should be forthcoming as quickly as possible, and that they should encourage the viability of the economy in that country and the viability of a multi-party system in that Government.

About a year ago I had lunch with a Member of Parliament from Zimbabwe. I found that he was in fact a Member of Parliament in exile and that he was travelling throughout the world pleading the cause of not only himself but of a colleague of his in that assembly, expressing a concern for many of his other compatriots, white and black, who were faced with the fear of oppression because the intelligence agency of that country was intimidating people around the country.

That stimulated my concern about Zimbabwe, and I had documented evidence that there was reason to be concerned. I began writing to our Secretary of State for External Affairs, (Mr. MacEachen) expressing these concerns. His original correspondence indicated that my fears were somewhat on the alarmist side, that there was no substantiation to them, and that there was no real need of concern, but that, according to their reports, everything was going well.

As I persisted in my correspondence I became increasingly concerned that our officials in Zimbabwe were not as observant as they might have been. The latest press reports indicate, as they have indicated in the past week or ten days, that not only has there been oppression of the elected Members of Parliament in that country, but there seems to have been oppression of people throughout the countryside. We hear press reports of shallow graves throughout the area and that there has been harassment. We now have the Leader of the Opposition fleeing to England for security.

What is even more alarming is that the Ministers of the Crown in the ruling Party are calling for the annihilation of the Opposition Party. I am speaking of the Party, not the people in the Party. That gives cause, Mr. Speaker, to believe that they are moving to a one-Party state, and when I hear press reports confirming what I knew a year ago, that the North Koreans are training an elitist guard in Zimbabwe, we have cause for concern.

My simple question to the Parliamentary Secretary is, can we put any kind of pressure on this Zimbabwe Government to make sure that the aid we are giving to that country will be aid for the citizens and not to help the Government continue its oppressive tactics on the population?

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to thank the Hon. Member for raising this issue. I would like to reassure him that we, as a Government, have conveyed his message and also the message we received from the press as to certain activities in Zimbabwe.

Last week we had a visitor, a Member of that Government, with whom we had a long conversation concerning the circumstances surrounding the events which happened over the past Christmas holiday. We understand that the Government subsequently sent police and military units into that region in order to counter such dissident activities. It appears that in the course of these operations, a considerable number of people in the area suffered injuries or lost their lives.

We were very concerned about these reports and we have drawn our concerns to the attention of the Zimbabwe authorities at senior levels. We conveyed the hope that peace and reconciliation would replace conflict. We have been assured by the Zimbabwe authorities that national reconciliation remains a primary objective. The Government of Zimbabwe has also informed us that a three-man team has been designated to carry out an inquiry and to receive briefs from the general public and non-governmental and church organizations. Although this is not a formal Commission of Inquiry, it has been established at the direction of Prime Minister Mugabe and is empowered to recommend remedial action. We shall, of course, follow the situation closely in view of our close ties with Zimbabwe. That is why we say that, as friends and supporters of an independent Zimbabwe, we share high hopes for the country and its people. All the funds we have committed up to now are currently committed to joint projects with the Zimbabwe Government, and we intend to honour these commitments. We are, however, following the situation very closely.

TRADE—EXPORT RESTRICTIONS ON BRANCH PLANTS—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS. (B) ROLE OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT IN PROHIBITING EXPORTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I asked questions of the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) about the restriction on some Canadian firms vis-à-vis their exports. I would like to pursue that for a few moments.

We stumbled across some documents from the 1960s which revealed that trade commissioners had said to the Government of that day, that up to 75 per cent of the branch plants operating in Canada were operating under some form of restrictions on their exports, thus losing Canadians literally hundreds of thousands of jobs over the decade. Since that time I placed some ads in the classified columns of several newspapers and I have been soliciting information from ordinary citizens about the export practices of branch plants, or companies which are licensed by American or other foreign firms.

I asked specifically about a case with respect to a licence agreement between Nelson Industries Inc. of Wisconsin in the United States and Nelson Muffler Canada, Inc., which is established at Burks Fall, Ontario. I ask about this company because in the licencing agreement that I have here, Mr. Speaker, I find a number of clauses which really make me shiver as a Canadian patriot. I find, for example, on page 4, section 3, a clause entitled "Rights outside Territory". It says:

• (1810)

The rights granted to Licensee—

Which is of course the Canadian plant.

—under paragraph II shall not be construed to include any of the rights or licences outside of (Canada) except as may be arranged in writing between the parties hereto.

In other words, they cannot export anywhere outside Canada unless they have it in writing from the U.S. firm. This, as I said, was a licence agreement in mid-1982 between two firms which manufacture things such as mufflers and exhaust systems. I find it to be a real attack on Canadian sovereignty when a plant in Canada cannot export without the written consent of the head office in the U.S.

There is another clause which I am sure you, as a Canadian, will find scandalous, Mr. Speaker, the "trade prohibition clause". It says:

Without limiting the generality of any provisions in this Agreement restricting the grant of any right or privilege to a specified territory, Licensee—

Which is the Canadian plant.

—may not without prior written consent of Licensor—

That is the American office.

—sell, directly or indirectly, the Products for export to a place or person located within any nation, or to any territory or purchaser to which shipments may be prohibited by the United States Government without such consent.

It is understood that the Licensor's—

That is the American company.

—power to give consent to such sales is limited by the United States Government and that in some cases Licensor will be forbidden to give such consent.

That Clause says that in some cases, even if we did find a market elsewhere in the world for these exhaust systems or mufflers, and even if the U.S. company which granted a licence were to concur, it may not concur in some cases because it would be a country to which United States firms cannot export. I find that to be a real violation of our sovereignty because we are an independent state and in such a case American law could prohibit export of a Canadian product produced in a Canadian plant. I find that wrong.

One does not have much time in these proceedings, Mr. Speaker, but I want to refer the House to the 1972 study on foreign direct investment in Canada. It refers to the problems of branch plants and the problems of licencing arrangements. I think everyone here knows that we are talking about a licensee which manufactures. The report says on page 168 that a number of licencing arrangements were studied and it was found in 1972 that the export limitations of licenced plants was very, very high. Of the ones studied it was found that only 5 per cent had no export limitations at all. Only 5 per cent could export anywhere they wanted to in the world. It was found that 58 per cent were licenced to produce for Canada and Canada only, and that 18 per cent were licenced for Canada and the U.S. In other words, only 5 per cent could export wherever they wished to.

It is also pointed out in the report, Mr. Speaker, that these are arm's length licencing arrangements between supposed Canadian firms and lead offices in the United States, although I think we all know that in the specific case, it is almost like any other branch plant, Canadian in name only; in reality it is totally dictated to by the head office in the U.S.

The report also refers to licencing arrangements between parent companies and Canadian subsidiaries. It goes on to talk about all of the restrictions on trade, such as the limitation on plant size, the licence not giving them a mandate to export, and so on.

I want the Government to tell us whether it will do something to make sure that Canadian subsidiaries, plants that are licensed, will act as Canadians and respect our sovereignty as Canadians. We want to increase Canadian jobs and create wealth and productivity in the nation.

I also want the Government to release the studies that have been referred to in the report, as well as a Cabinet document released in the summer of 1980 in which the then Minister of Industry called for action to break down some of the barriers in the branch-plant system when it comes to export. So far the Government has not made those documents public, but I think we need them in order to have a useful debate on this matter.

No other sovereign nation in the world would tolerate this kind of foreign domination, or the taking away of their nationhood. I do not know why we have not grown up and asserted ourselves as have our friends in the United States, in Japan or any country in Europe.

During an election campaign, in 1980 the Government promised to expand FIRA in order to make sure that all foreign expansion in this country was screened and would be of significant benefit to Canadians. The Government campaigned on that promise, but after three years it has not delivered. It knows that foreign ownership has cost us jobs and made us poor. This has been shown in many studies. I should like to know why the Government has failed to act, and I am sure all Canadians would like an answer to that question.

This report pointed out that 81 per cent of all foreign expansion in the 1960s was funded from Canadian sources and only 19 per cent was funded from foreign sources. In other words, we are financing foreign expansion in this country with our own money. It is about time we stopped that, showed that we are proud to be Canadians, and intend to promote growth in the country for and on behalf of Canadians.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his concern. We on this side of the House are also very concerned about the problem the Hon. Member has raised.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the point raised by the Hon. Member is indeed a problem for the Department, that is, to find out whether companies are preventing foreign branch plants of those companies from exporting outside the country. We were very pleased to receive the information relating to the point raised by the Hon. Member, and the Minister of State (International Trade) (Mr. Regan) is already having a complete check done as a result of the question put by the Hon. Member.

It is of course a fact that it is often very difficult to know what the actual intentions of such companies are, and to judge to what extent artificial competition may be involved. I feel it is therefore important to get to the bottom of this question in order to ensure that the objectives of the Foreign Investment Review Act and FIRA are indeed being observed. We often hear many comments from people who disagree with the objectives of FIRA. The Hon. Member has just asked that not only the objectives but also the mechanisms of FIRA be expanded. There is some controversy on this point, but what we must bear in mind at this point in the debate is the need to ensure that when foreign companies allow branch plants to set up in Canada, such action is beneficial to Canadians and the Canadian market, and also that a real export market exists. In fact, the Act is very specific in that respect, Mr. Speaker. The Act says among other things, that normally in the first case, the Government would ask foreign controlled companies to, and I quote:

> Make an effort to obtain a full international mandate in terms of innovation and market development, when they can thus increase their effectiveness by specializing in profitable activity.

Secondly, the Government asks branch plants to, and I quote:

> Be active on all markets, both abroad and in Canada; to be prepared to develop new markets.

I think what the Hon. Member is asking is that we ensure that branch plants play a truly active role in Canada in creating jobs and seeking new markets by every possible means, and that they stop hiding behind a smokescreen of artificial competition which runs counter to Canadian interests, both with respect to the manpower aspect and international trade.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I would like to say that our concern about artificial restrictions imposed on branch plants of foreign companies is justified. The Hon. Member has provided my colleague, the Minister of State (International Trade) with a copy of an agreement according to which such restrictions were imposed. The Hon. Member has received the assurance that an exhaustive enquiry will be held, and the Minister will of course be communicating the results to the Hon. Member as soon as the enquiry is completed.

AIR CANADA—STATUS OF RCMP INQUIRY INTO TRANSFER OF HEADQUARTERS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I put a question to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) on March 7 last, but he chose to remain seated and let the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) answer the question. I asked the question very simply and in the public interest to find out about the status of the RCMP inquiry ordered by the Minister of Justice into the transfer of Air Canada's Montreal headquarters.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should say that, with a view to obtaining more information, I put a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on December 9, 1982 concerning the transfer of the head office following offers made by real estate developers, and that this deal was probably going to cost $10 million more than it should have. The Minister told me on December 9 that this amount of $10 million was pure fantasy. I also asked him that question because the Trizec Company was so sure to get the contract that it had advertised in The Gazette that it would have an important announcement to make the following Thursday. So, Mr. Speaker, it is fair to presume that interested parties kept a close watch on that deal. The same day, December 9, I asked the Minister whether he was aware of an RCMP inquiry into that contract. The Minister never did confirm that there was an inquiry, and he simply said that he was keeping the matter under close consideration, that there was nothing to worry about, and that the $10 million was pure fantasy.

Again on December 21, 1982, I asked a question to the Minister to find out whether he had asked for an inquiry into the Air Canada head office transaction because of the huge difference between the two proposals by Trizec and Gagnon and Archambault, whereas the day before, December 20, he had acknowledged in answer to questions of the Leader of the Opposition that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was indeed making an inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, since $10 million are involved and the public has a right to be kept informed, especially in view of the fact that the Government is now speaking about the need to borrow $19 billion, we are entitled to ask why Air Canada chose the second lowest bid which was $10 million higher than the lowest one.

I also wonder why the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) refused to tell me that an investigation had been undertaken. I still want to know why Air Canada deemed it preferable to rent its new headquarters at $140 a square foot rather than at $85 a square foot, which represents a difference of $10 million. The Minister told me that he expected Air Canada to make a statement justifying the choice of Beaver Hall Place and that if I was not satisfied, he would add to this statement. Air Canada has given no explanation for its decision. Mr. Drabinski told the newspapers: We are not willing to discuss publicly the various bids submitted to us. The company does not want to speak about figures which are so far apart. Mr. Drabinski of Air Canada also refused to give any details in reply to our second question which asked for the rationale behind the choice of Beaver Hall Place at a clearly higher cost.

In view of the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think the public and myself are entitled to know why Air Canada will not publicly account for its choosing a building for its new headquarters which will cost the taxpayers $10 million more than it should and the reasons why the Minister refuses to tell us what is now being investigated. We shall continue to pry into this. The contract is obviously under investigation. This was admitted publicly. The Solicitor General refused point blank to rise in this House to reply to my question. The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) stated that he would have nothing to say as long as the investigation has not been completed and he also refused to say whether the results of this inquiry would be made public. In my opinion, since Canadians must pay $10 million more than they should, they are entitled to know the reasons for the investigation and, even more important, its results. We are also entitled to know why Air Canada decided to transfer its headquarters and chose a bid which was $10 million higher than the lowest offer. These are all questions to which we would like a reply for the sake of the Canadian people. I believe that the Government should not wait any longer before giving us the information to which we are entitled.

• (1825)

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond on behalf of the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. MacGuigan) to the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

It is Department of Justice policy of long standing that unless someone is charged as a result of a police investigation the results of the investigation are not made a matter of public record. This policy is dictated by considerations of ordinary fair play. If a charge is preferred, the position is quite different. A person charged with an offence must be given an opportunity to defend himself before the courts and in accordance with the rules of law.

It is well known that in the course of investigating the commission of alleged offences peace officers receive innuendo and dubious allegations of wrong doing which fall far short of what the law requires to launch criminal proceedings. Is that kind of thing to be made public? How and where is the individual who is the subject of innuendo and allegations of the kind just mentioned to defend himself or herself? To make reports prepared by RCMP investigators public in the absence of the preferring of charges could amount to nothing but character assassination and the abuse of police power.

The unequivocal position of the Attorney General of Canada is that he has not the slightest intention of allowing RCMP reports to be used improperly and unfairly, to the possible detriment of anyone in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

REINSTATEMENT OF SECTION 16 OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGULATION

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Madam Speaker, the Fédération des producteurs de pommes du Québec, the Quebec Farm Producers Union and a number of other agricultural organizations in Canada recently asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to reinstate Section 16 of the Unemployment Insurance Regulations, which defined the conditions under which farm workers became eligible for deduction of unemployment insurance premiums. Section 16 prescribed that farm workers had to work a minimum of twenty-five days or earn $250 in wages before premiums could be deducted under the Unemployment Insurance Regulations. Because this provision no longer exists, workers will now qualify for premium deductions from their wages after only fifteen hours of work or earning $70 in wages.

Madam Speaker, although the new regulation simplifies forms for farmers and allows exemptions of up to seven days for farm workers, it is highly impractical for apple growers, because it cannot be properly implemented. The large number of pickers who work on a daily basis and picker turnover during the short harvest season makes it impossible for apple growers to keep proper records for each worker.

Madam Speaker, I would therefore ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to reinstate the provision of Section 16 of the Regulations that was ideally suited to apple growers and farmers in general.

HEALTH

TRAINING OF HEARING-EAR DOGS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, let me tell you about a wonderful idea from a remarkable constituent of mine. Jacqueline Harbour loves dogs, and she has devoted her life's work to making the lives of the deaf and hard-of-hearing much more tolerable through her hearing-ear dogs.

The lady's concept is simple. If a person is blind, you know it. If a person is deaf, you may not know it. The hard of hearing hide it, or they become experts at lip reading. Blind people frequently find "sight" through seeing-eye dogs.

As Jacqueline Harbour says, dogs always answer the door anyway. Her dogs have been trained to answer the front door bell, notify someone when a baby is crying, or alert deaf people to anything from a telephone ringing, to a timer on a stove, to a smoke detector going off. All you need to do is teach them to respond to any sound. Hearing-ear dogs can be trained to lead those people who are deaf out of the fear of moving about and living in a world of silence.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I would urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and this House of Commons to use whatever means possible to ensure that hearing-ear dogs are accorded the same privileges and treatment as seeing-eye dogs.

Jacqueline's mother, who is deaf, offers this pertinent and poignant quote:

> People should be helped in a way that allows them to remain on their own. It's a lot cheaper for the Government, and better for them, than putting them into hospitals and homes. If a dog like this can help them manage on their own, they should be allowed to have one.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

COMMISSIONER'S ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, the Official Languages Commissioner of Canada, in his annual report released yesterday, points out that Canada's Constitution is being violated constantly with respect to the guaranteeing of language rights. Bilingual service in areas where they are warranted are often not available at federal Government agencies. For example, Air Canada has refused to install French-speaking staff at its offices in Timmins, Ontario, even though 37.4 per cent of the residents are francophones.

[Translation]

Corporations such as Petro-Canada and Via Rail have seriously breached the legislation on bilingualism, and the Federal Government must insist that the law be complied with. In a bilingual country such as ours, that principle must be respected and enforced. Minority groups, be they French, English or of another culture, are puppets in the hands of politicians when that is politically profitable. Otherwise, they are ignored.

[English]

The federal Government should take a long, hard look at Mr. Yalden's report, with a commitment to acting upon the recommendations contained therein, and also look at the area of multiculturalism and pursue a more vigorous policy in that regard.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT FUND CREATION OF EMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Madam Speaker, the $220 million Canada-Quebec agreement with respect to the immediate creation of jobs has been scuttled because once again the Quebec Government has failed to honour its signature of December 23. The purpose was worthwhile indeed, but there is a question we must ask ourselves as Federal Members of Parliament and representatives of Quebec ridings: why should the Federal Government always disregard its own requirements and let the Parti Québécois force Quebecers to behave as if they were separated from the rest of Canada?

Indeed, Madam Speaker, even though certain features may be considered as peculiar to Quebec, and even particular status to a certain extent, the fact remains that Québec's Péquiste Government too often acts as if the province had already separated, and because it is behaving as such, and all the more so because it does not have that mandate, we federalist Members and all our supporters have to admit that the Canadian Government cannot be so cooperative as to shirk its own responsibilities towards Quebecers and other Canadians alike.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is to be commended for his courageous decision not to wait any longer for the Quebec Government, and we urge him to give Quebecers the funds earmarked for immediate job creation.

I deeply regret however that municipalities are now excluded because of the Quebec Government, and yet they could use assistance under the NEED Program and they would be ideal partners to provide services in our respective ridings.

SMALL BUSINESS

APPEAL FOR STIMULATORY MEASURES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, with unemployment in Canada at an all time high and growing, it is painfully obvious that the Government has failed to come to grips with this very serious problem.

We have seen the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) pump millions after millions of tax dollars into costly, temporary, and non-productive make-work programs, only to have these temporary jobs cease to exist upon the termination of such programs.

In the meantime a survey by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business yesterday concluded that 700,000 to 800,000 permanent jobs have been lost in the small and medium-sized business sector as a result of the Liberal Government's lack of positive programs and policies for that sector.

This only confirms what we in the Conservative Party have been saying for years, namely, that small and medium-sized businesses form the backbone of our economy and, with realistic and effective policies, are Canada's No. 1 potential employers.

I therefore appeal to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to adopt in his forthcoming budget specific policies which would encourage employment, expansion and start-ups of small businesses by way of employment incentives and other forms of tax incentives, in order to stimulate this most important sector of our economy.

Then, and only then, will it be possible to move forward on the road to economic recovery and permanent job creation in Canada.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FULL INDEXATION OF OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Madam Speaker, the announcement made recently by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) regarding the full indexation of Old Age Security pensions for the second quarter of 1983 is certainly good news for Canadian senior citizens. The six and five legislation will not apply in the second quarter of 1983, thanks to the continuing decline in the rate of inflation which stood at 7.4 per cent in February.

When the federal Government introduced the six and five legislation last summer, many people were quick to judge, charging that senior citizens would suffer greatly by the new legislation. At that time we assured Canadians that people who needed help the most would not be affected by the six and five legislation. And now the Government has shown that it too can be fair. Because the inflation rate has dropped so dramatically in recent months, the Government can now provide full indexation on Old Age Security pension cheques.

It is my hope that we will continue to see the rate of inflation fall over the next few months, in order that we may continue the full indexation of Old Age Security pensions in the third and fourth quarters of 1983.

SPORTS

CANADIAN WINNERS OF WORLD AMATEUR BOXING TITLES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, two young Canadians just recently won credit for themselves and recognition for our country, but few of us, and indeed few Canadians, are aware of it. In the world of boxing last week at Reno, Nevada, Sean O'Sullivan of Toronto defeated the Russian defending champion Koshkin, to become the world light middleweight amateur boxing champion. In the same tournament, Willi DeWitt of Grande Prairie, Alberta, won the heavyweight gold medal by defeating another defending champion, Aleksandre Yagubkin, also of Russia.

Through a long and painful apprenticeship these young athletes are now world amateur champions in their chosen sport. In most countries this would have been front-page news. In Canada such ranking in most any other sport would have warranted substantial sports-page coverage, pictures and all.

Money alone does not win Olympic or world championship medals. It takes a dedicated athlete, supported and encouraged by an appreciative nation. That is hardly the kind of support accorded these two young winners.

SMALL BUSINESS

SURVEY BY FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, a survey by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, an organization which represents a large cross-section of small businesses in the country, indicates that the impact of the recession and the Government's tight money and restraint policy has cut small-business employment by 700,000 or 800,000. A full 51 per cent of respondents to the survey had laid off employees, representative of a majority of small and medium-size businesses in the country. This large portion of the unemployed related to small business indicates the large role this sector could play in an economic recovery.

Small business in Canada is fully up to the job of putting Canada back to work, if it is given the chance it deserves. Some 70 per cent of respondents to the CFIB survey indicate that more consumer spending, lower interest rates at or below the level of inflation, and investment expenditure are essential before any growth in employment can come about. Meanwhile they hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Governor of the Bank of Canada talk of restricting stimulus and tightening the screws.

Bill C-139, now before the House, legislates the restrictions to Small Business Development Bonds. Measures are needed to expand employment, not to restrict it. The Government's lack of will and blind callousness are maintaining our high rate of unemployment.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INQUIRY RESPECTING MEASURES TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday in the House the Minister of Finance, in reply to questions regarding the seriousness of the unemployment situation, indicated, as reported in Hansard, that we can "expect the unemployment rate to remain high not only next year but for a number of years after that", meaning of course that the Minister's budget will not contain any quick fix to the unemployment situation.

I remind the Prime Minister that this is a question which is seizing the imagination and certainly the compassion of Canadians everywhere, given the long-term nature and the high rate of unemployment in the country, causing serious social problems such as family breakdown, alcoholism, and serious disruptions within our society. As head of the Government, can the Prime Minister tell me what the Government is doing to address this unprecedented situation, unprecedented indeed since the last election?

• (1415)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at the question when it is phrased in terms of what we are doing. We announced in the last budget, and in the last economic statement, that some $2 million plus would be spent in order to create jobs to train young people, bring them into the work force, and to increase the number of jobs available. We addressed particularly the problem of those people who had exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits. We are in the process of and have concluded with the Provinces the funding of projects to create jobs which will ensure greater employment for the unemployed. I think the question of what we are doing is a rhetorical one.

As far as the concern for facts as foreseen by the Minister, that unemployment will remain high, I think the Minister is avoiding the creation of illusionary remedies, quick fixes, as the Hon. Member says. I think it would be cruel to tell the unemployed that there will suddenly be a quick fix which will reduce the unemployment by half, because that is not likely to happen. That is what the Minister is saying. But certainly we will be addressing the unemployment problem as a very high priority in the next budget.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, it is even more cruel to leave 2 million Canadians out there without the hope of a job, and that is what I am concerned about. That is the dimension of the problem which the Prime Minister and his Government do not seem to be able to appreciate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, we have 824,000 Canadians who are now classified as long-term unemployed. They have been unemployed for more than three months. That is 52 per cent of the total of those unemployed. I might add the percentage is 9 per cent higher than last year. Added to that, Madam Speaker, there will be another 600,000 students coming into the job market soon, looking for permanent jobs. Behind every one of these figures there is the potential for human tragedy. Can the Prime Minister not grasp the meaning of what it is to be unemployed, what it is to have your unemployment insurance benefits expire, and what it is to have to go on welfare? Surely we, as a compassionate society, owe something to these people, because we created this unemployment in the first instance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not sure what the Hon. Member means when he says "we created this unemployment." If he figures he created it, I do not think we would want to admit that this Government created it. It is perhaps an admission the Hon. Member can take to his breast. But anyone who looks at the reality of the world crisis, with more than 30 million unemployed in the OECD countries alone, that person would realize it would be difficult to think that Canada is putting people out of jobs in the U.S., Britain, France and Germany and all those countries where there is very high unemployment.

It is a world crisis. In our country we are not trying to absolve ourselves from any responsibility to deal with it. Once again, I think it would be cruel to take the line proposed by the Hon. Member, which seems to presume that some quick fix would give jobs to all these people. If the Hon. Member knows this fix quick, I am surprised his Party did not promote it when it was in power and when its Minister of Finance was announcing unemployment of 10 per cent for several years ahead. If the Tories had a quick fix, why did they not use it? If they have one, why are not the various leadership candidates putting it forward now?

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, surely the Prime Minister must realize and appreciate that we have today in this country a social crisis of unprecedented proportions. We have to address that crisis and I am not talking about any economic quick fix. I am talking about the social crisis facing the two million unemployed and their families, and the fact that 36 per cent of families are directly experiencing unemployment. Half of them expect to be directly affected by unemployment. This places a burden on the families, the municipalities, and the Provinces. Surely we have a responsibility to address that problem.

• (1420)

I make this appeal to the Prime Minister who, I believe, to be a compassionate man. Will he at least agree to form a parliamentary task force so that we can get out of this ivory tower which we are in, and see for ourselves just exactly what we are doing to the unemployed of this country who are left out there by the Minister of Finance, without hope?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I want to return the compliment to the Hon. Member. I believe he is also compassionate. I am surprised that he feels the need for a parliamentary task force to express that compassion.

The problem is, what do we do with this very severe social and economic problem? For the past two years this Government has been saying that in order to regain our markets, create jobs in Canada, and make investment attractive to those who have savings, we must bring down inflation. When inflation has been lowered, investment will then become more attractive and we will then be more competitive in the world markets. We will be able to sell more in Canada and abroad.

Following the budget of the present Secretary of State for External Affairs last June, we have succeeded in getting the Canadian people, the Provinces, the municipalities, and the federal Government to pull together to bring down inflation to its goal of 6 per cent. That is why we are beginning to see the signs of revival. Just this morning we heard that we have the first surplus in ten years in our automobile trade with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: That is because demand is picking up in the United States since Canadians are becoming competitive.

We have brought inflation down. Our interest rates have come down with it. That is our approach. It is perhaps less verbally compassionate than that of the Hon. Member, but at least it has tackled the problem and brought a solution to it. I have not heard anything close to that from the Hon. Member or his Party.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF SHORT-TERM JOB CREATION MEASURES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who will know that, unfortunately and tragically, unemployment in the last number of months has risen to the point where we face almost two million unemployed. One of the impacts of this recession is that thousands of people, particularly young people, have had to apply for welfare. For instance, in Metro Toronto alone, one-fifth of the total welfare case load concerns young people under the age of 25 years who have to get by on less than $300 a month. They are losing hope.

Yesterday, the Minister indicated that in his budget proposals there could be measures to deal with immediate job creation in the short term. Will the Minister please bring those measures forward immediately, rather than forcing these people who might be affected by the programs to wait another four weeks or six weeks until the Government gets its act together? Will he bring those programs in now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, one way of helping many Canadians would be to pass the Income Tax Act amendments that the Opposition is filibustering. I wish to inform the hon. lady that there are 11.2 million Canadians who have filed for tax returns. The refunds to which they would be entitled would total probably $6.5 billion. That money would be returned to Canadians in the next few weeks and months, and most of that money would be used for consumption and to help create jobs, and to act as a stimulant to the economy.

So I invite my hon. friends opposite, as a first and immediate step that they could take, which could also speed up the presentation of the budget, to pass the Income Tax Act that has been in the House for weeks and was considered by a parliamentary committee for months. The Conservatives are blocking, filibustering and preventing the House from proceeding with the legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, what the Minister is saying to the House is that he does not give a damn about the young people who are out there in the country suffering and losing hope in this country, because he and his colleagues will not bring in programs that are designed to help create jobs. Last October he announced the NEED Program, which was to create 60,000 jobs, but to date, five months later, that Program has created only 15,000 jobs. That is the kind of delay that new programs must face.

• (1425)

What I want to know from the Minister is this. If he has programs, will he present them to the House now, or is he in the position of saying to these people, "Carry on in your despair, carry on in your hopelessness, until I get around to introducing the programs at my convenience"?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's statement is a perfect example of the hypocrisy constantly displayed in this House by the Progressive Conservative Party over the past few days in its filibuster of the Income Tax Act amendments. The passing of this legislation would make it possible for the government to send refunds to some 11 million Canadians and provide them over the next few weeks with $6.5 billion in returns they could spend. This legislation would have quick and immediate results and would put money in the pockets of Canadian consumers; yet, the Progressive Conservative Party has been fighting tooth and nail for months to prevent its passing.

It is clearly that party's responsibility and every Canadian can see how they are preventing Canadian taxpayers from getting their Income Tax refunds which they could spend on consumer goods thereby stimulating the economy. In this instance, the Progressive Conservative Party is definitely the culprit.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PLACE DECISION BEFORE PARLIAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The majority of Canadians have indicated that they are opposed to the testing of the Cruise missile. We in this Party have indicated our clear opposition. The Prime Minister says that the Government has not yet made up its mind, but has signed a framework agreement which will permit the Cabinet, on its own, to make such a decision.

Will the Prime Minister demonstrate a clear commitment to democratic requirements by promising the House that, if the Government decides to go ahead with the testing of the Cruise, it will bring that decision to Parliament, not only for a debate but also for a vote?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question has been asked before, and I suggested that if Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party thought the subject to be of any importance at all, they might be able to use one of their Opposition days—

Some Hon. Members: We did!

Mr. Trudeau: —with a vote, and they might see the result of that vote. There would be a debate on the subject, and we would be able to hear views from all sides.

We were happy to have that debate, and we are happy to have it again. I hope that in the course of that debate the Leader of the New Democratic Party will tell us why he is so opposed to the testing of the Cruise. However, we never heard from him when the Soviets were testing—

Mr. Stevens: Good point.

Mr. Trudeau: —and putting in place the SS-20s, of which 350 are employed in Europe now, each with three nuclear warheads. We never heard the demonstrations. We did not see the NDP leading the masses with signs to protest this. It was a clear escalation of the nuclear arms race.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, first of all, I remind the Prime Minister, who does not pay much attention to what takes place in the House, that we already had a motion in opposition to the Cruise, and we voted against the testing. We want the Government to live up to its obligations and bring back a motion after it makes a decision. Second, I would point out that we were not silent concerning the Soviets' treatment of the Poles, unlike the Prime Minister.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question concerning a serious nuclear matter. Outside the House, at the United Nations and on other occasions, he has left the impression that he is genuinely concerned about debate and information and peaceful resolution of differences, which would lead to disarmament. Considering the fact that two-thirds of the Members of Parliament have not told their constituents where they stand on the Cruise issue, considering that his own Minister of National Defence has said that Canadians opposing the Cruise are "victims of misinformation", does the Prime Minister not think that he has a responsibility, when he reaches such a decision, to bring it back to Parliament for a decision of all Members of Parliament who are elected from all across Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, one of the reasons we have not yet authorized the testing of the Cruise is because the debate has not been completed and the debate has not been joined. We are in the process of discussing that whole subject. We are discussing it today with Vice-President Bush. The NATO Allies are expressing views upon it, and the debate is still going on.

• (1430)

The Hon. Member wants to have that debate in the House. He just says that there was a debate and the vote was taken. I do not know why he thinks that the next vote would be any different. If a whole new series of facts come out, if the debate proves that there should be re-examination of this, as the Government is constantly re-examining it, then the Hon. Member can ask the question again. But I put to him the fact—and the talks about the Soviet treatment of the Poles—if indeed he is sincere in referring to that, if he thinks that the Soviets can be so abject, if I can paraphrase him, why is he not a little bit concerned about the SS-20s? What was the reason for the deployment of this new weapon of terror on western Europe? Does he not think that there should be some process of negotiation which would get the Soviets to withdraw that weapon of terror? What is his position on that? I did not hear him mention it in the debate in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: You were not here for the debate.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROMOTE DEBATE

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. For the last 15 days a young Canadian named Karen Harrison has been sitting in the gallery of this House while fasting, to demonstrate her concern over this whole issue of the Cruise missile. This concern is shared, as my Leader has pointed out, by over half of the people in the country.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not he believes that he has a responsibility to respond to the Miss Harrisons of Canada by allowing, indeed even promoting, a Government day debate, a debate that is not tied to a confidence motion as the Prime Minister tied the last vote—a debate in this House on the whole issue of our country's participation in the development of the Cruise missile.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, of course the subject is important, and of course it is being debated all across Canada. It has been debated in this House. It has been debated in the dozens of questions from the Opposition that I have answered on this subject. I do not say that it should not be debated. I say, like the Hon. Member, that we have debated it and, if it is necessary, it can be debated again. But I do not like the simplistic approach of suddenly discovering that our side is testing a weapon when we know, because Mr. Andropov said so much in so many words in his December address, that the Soviets are testing too. They are testing the Cruise.

Mr. Broadbent: I never said that.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the New Democratic Party has some kibbutzing, Madam Speaker. We will hear what he has to say. Has he written to Andropov to tell him to stop testing the Cruise? Has he? He laughs.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why do we not send him to Moscow?

THE ECONOMY

SURVEY BY FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Finance Minister. I am sure that the Minister of Finance is now aware of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business survey which reveals Liberal economic policies have cost some 800,000 Canadians their jobs with small and medium sized businesses. In my riding some of the hardest hit are the welding, fabrication and machine shops, and small foundries. The workers affected are highly skilled tradesmen and technicians. These are people with years of experience.

Can the Minister tell me what hope and encouragement he can offer to the operators of these businesses and the thousands of workers across Canada who have lost their jobs because of the Government's inability to deal with the economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to note that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has shown more judgment and more intelligence than the Hon. Member in analysing this situation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: They have indeed mentioned the severe impact of the recession, but they have not tried to tie it to any particular Government or any particular Party. They know that the recession which we have seen has been international.

Mr. Wilson: Come on, give the people credit for more intelligence than that.

Mr. Lalonde: They know that there are 35 million people unemployed in the industrialized countries at the present time, and they have put their representations and their views with a much broader perspective than the narrow, partisan view of the Hon. Member.

I can tell him that I have had many meetings with representatives of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. We have already in operation a number of measures and programs. It would be very helpful if the Conservative Opposition, in particular, were to pass the Small Business Loans Act—

Some Hon. Members: Call it, bring it on.

Mr. Lalonde: —and the Small Business Grants Act, and support what they have asked for. The Conservative Opposition has been dragging its feet on that.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Bring it on. We will debate it.

Mr. Lalonde: I can tell him that in my discussions with the CFIB I have examined with them further steps that could be taken in order to help small and medium-sized businesses. If the Conservative Opposition can pass the economic business before this House—

Mr. Nielsen: Bring it on.

Mr. Lalonde: —I will be very happy to introduce a budget which will come to the help of business in this country. I hope by then that the Conservatives will be less hypocritical about it.

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, my question is again directed to the Finance Minister. We are 24th out of 24 in OECD. I say to the Minister, bring the Bill on; bring the Bill on to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BILINGUALISM

INQUIRY RESPECTING AMENDMENT OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In his annual report for 1982 published yesterday, the Commissionner of Official Languages states the following about the language of work in the Federal Public Service:

> There can be little real progress on language of work while the legal basis and exact scope of this right remain in question—

In view of the accuracy of the assessment by the Commissionner of Official Languages, could the Minister tell the House whether the Government plans on proposing amendments to the Official Languages Act in the near future to specify the executory nature of the right to work in the official language of one's choice as recommended last June by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to inform the Hon. Member that we have been working for some time at the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada on updating the official languages policy statement which my predecessor made public in 1977. As soon as the Cabinet has approved the revised policy, it will be made public. I suppose that it will then be referred to the appropriate Parliamentary Committee so that it may call witnesses, debate the matter and make appropriate recommendations. I share the concern of the Hon. Member and I believe that it is time to review and update the provisions of an Act which has served Canada well up to now and must continue to do so in the future.

GOVERNMENT AID

CANADA-QUEBEC AGREEMENT—NEED PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT FUNDS BE SPENT IN QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada. Since the Canada-Québec agreement on the $220 million promised under the NEED program has hit a snag with respect to Quebec's municipalities since Quebec intends to exercise its jurisdiction in that area, could the Right Hon. Prime Minister give the House the assurance that the $170 million earmarked for the Province of Quebec will be spent in that province, as originally intended?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, although we regret that the Péquiste Government rejected an agreement we thought would be acceptable to them and under which the Federal Government would be spending the $170 million, at least partly, through the municipalities and according to priorities determined by the municipalities. We regret this, but we are firmly resolved to see that the $170 million is spent in the Province of Quebec just the same. However, it will not be in co-operation with municipalities and that is unfortunate. We shall find ways to spend these funds usefully, in the federal public sector and certainly in the private sector in the Province of Quebec, in order to stimulate economic recovery and create jobs in that province.

REQUEST THAT PROVINCIAL JURISDICTIONS BE RESPECTED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. I am very pleased to hear the Prime Minister's assurances that the people of Quebec will get the $170 million, because they need it. Yesterday, the Prime Minister said, in answer to a question by the Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry, that in cases where agreement could be reached with a province or provinces, he intended to subsidize municipalities directly. The Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs seems prepared to spend the funds to be provided by Quebec under the NEED programs for municipalities, since they come under his jurisdiction. Has the Prime Minister, who implied that the Federal Government had decided to subsidize municipalities directly, now decided to respect provincial jurisdictions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in his first question, the Member for Joliette seemed to be showing a great deal of flexibility, because he was particularly concerned that these funds should be spent in Quebec. My answer yesterday to the Member for Valleyfield was given with the assurance I had at that time that the Péquiste Government would continue negotiations and agree to sign the agreement in question, which would allow us to provide direct assistance and to deal directly with the municipalities. Now that is no longer the case, I am not sure what the Hon. Member means by respect for provincial jurisdictions. I am sure that the other Provinces who allow us to give direct assistance to municipalities will not take any unconstitutional action, and if it is a political decision by the Péquiste Government which does not want us to deal directly with the municipalities, in any case, the Hon. Member's first question and my answer indicated that we were prepared to spend the funds in the Province of Quebec in a legal manner, but we can no longer do so in the manner I referred to yesterday.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

POSITION OF NATIVE WOMEN—WORDING OF CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. As the Minister realizes, Mr. Charlie Watt, of the Inuit Association, has added his voice to those of other native people who claim that there was a switch in the constitutional provision which would provide sexual equality for both men and women under the aboriginal clause in the Constitution. Mr. Watt also claims that the reason for the switch is that the original wording which was agreed upon by the federal Government would in fact guarantee federal benefits to thousands upon thousands of women and children in Canada, and that the new agreement will not do that. Will the Minister stand in this House and deny that there was a switch and, second, confirm that the new wording will not deny benefits to a number of non-status women and their children?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, this is the same question that I was asked the other day by a Member of the Official Opposition. The facts are exactly the same, that the agreement which was made public was the agreement that was reached by the committee. We have asked all of the Governments of Canada and all of the other groups about their recollection of the events. The Governments are unanimous that the written agreement represents the agreement that was reached in the committee. Some of the Native groups are of the same opinion.

There seems to be a genuine mistake of fact on the part of some of the native groups that the proposals they put forward were accepted when they were not. There was no debate of them and they were never accepted. That mistake in fact is unfortunate, but it remains. What we plan to do is to encourage the early discussion of this issue in the ongoing process. I understand that the Native Council of Canada is prepared to accept that solution.

REQUEST THAT TRANSCRIPT OF MEETING BE TABLED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the Minister says there is some confusion over facts. Some native groups claim that when they put forward the proposition which they claim was agreed to, at best what can be said for the federal Minister responsible, the Minister of Justice, is that he mumbled.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: That is the charitable position, that they do not know what he agreed to or disagreed with. In order to clear the air, will the Minister table in this House a transcript of what was said and what the Minister replied in those meetings?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, maybe the Hon. Member would like to take this up with the other Governments in Canada. This is not a position that the federal Government alone is advancing. All the Governments in Canada are agreed on this. Why does the Hon. Member not contact his own provincial Government and see what its position is on this?

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REPORT ON MEETING IN PORTUGAL

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Minister of National Defence is at present attending a NATO meeting in Portugal where, according to UPI, United States Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger is "to consult the allies on controversial NATO plans to deploy United States Pershing II and Cruise missiles in December". Can the Prime Minister assure the House that, on his return, the Minister of National Defence will make a statement on motions to inform the House and the country what Canada's current position is on this very important subject?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can certainly promise that the Minister will be making a statement to Cabinet. Whether a statement will be made to the House or not at that time is something that we will decide when the time comes. I think the Hon. Member realizes that, while this is being discussed in Portugal, it is also being discussed today in Ottawa with Vice-President Bush and his officials. It is this very subject that we discussed for a few hours this morning. I think that we are making great progress.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister will surely agree that the country is greatly puzzled over our position on this matter. He did not help matters very much yesterday when in an answer to a question he said:

—I would be repeating myself if I told the Vice-President that there had been no Cabinet agreement not to test the Cruise.

If there is no agreement not to test the Cruise, one cannot be surprised at the Minister of Justice believing that there had been an agreement to test it, which he has maintained over the last year. I wonder if the Prime Minister might take the opportunity tomorrow, after his discussions with the Vice-President, to clarify this matter and make a statement on motions.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member heard me answer a like question to the Leader of the New Democratic Party five minutes ago. I put it to the Opposition that, if they think this matter is serious enough to warrant debate in the House, there are 13 Opposition days between now and the end of Supply in June. There will be some confidence votes in amongst those 13 days. If the Hon. Member's Party is really interested in having this question debated, I would think its Members would see their way clear to taking one of these days, during which the Minister of National Defence, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or myself would be able to repeat our positions or state them as they then exist.

If there was a double negative in yesterday's quote, and I do not have Hansard before me, I think the meaning of it was clear, because I have said it many times. I repeated it this morning to Vice-President Bush, that there has been no Cabinet decision to test the Cruise. In fact, I have said before in this House that the United States have not yet asked us to test the Cruise. They asked us whether we would sign an umbrella agreement permitting the testing of weapons systems. The answer is yes, they have asked, and we have indeed signed such an agreement. I have made it clear that before we test the Cruise there will have to be a decision of Cabinet, which has not yet been made.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LOSSES IN 1982

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport regarding the financial state of Canadian National Railways. The Minister knows that Canadian National recorded record losses in 1982 of $223 million, and that $62 million was lost as a result of an imprudent investment in Cast Shipping which was used to purchase six foreign vessels. Has Canadian National proposed a new financing of any kind or requested government financial assistance of any kind? I remind the Minister that the Government has bailed out CN on other occasions.

• (1450)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think, in talking about CN losses, one has to indicate that a certain number of these losses result from nonprofitable activities of CN such as CN Express, Terra Transport, et cetera. On the subject of the future of the relationship between CN and Cast, it is being discussed now, and I am not in a position to report on the conclusion of these negotiations.

REPORTED PROPOSAL TO ACQUIRE SOFATI CONTAINER LINE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the Minister mentions ongoing negotiations between Canadian National and Cast. There are published reports that CN Rail proposes to acquire Sofati Container Line which utilizes the Port of Montreal. This of course means that Montreal will have an unfair advantage over ports like the Port of Halifax. Can the Minister give some assurance that CN will not be allowed to take any steps to acquire Sofati Container Line or any assets of Cast until the Canadian Transport Commission has investigated the relationship between Cast and CN and made the appropriate rulings? Can the Minister stop CN from further investment in this disastrous transaction?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I cannot accept the foundations of the question. Very few people will accept the proposition that what is happening in the Port of Montreal has a direct effect on the Port of Halifax. As a matter of fact, there is a debate on this subject, and many people say that the future belongs to multi-modal facilities in the field of transportation. CN cannot ignore that. I see that the United States has a similar movement—taking place now.

Another factor to take into consideration is what CP does in the Montreal area. CN can hardly stay idle while CP establishes a position that would give it a tremendous advantage over CN.

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF SECTION 16 OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGULATION

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and it has to do with section 16 of the Regulations which has recently been cancelled by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Would the Minister use his influence with his colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration and ask him to restore Section 16 because this is prejudicial to agricultural workers and Canadian farmers and more specifically to apple growers?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I have had discussions with my colleague.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH GRAIN VOLUME LIMIT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Bearing in mind the comments he made in Winnipeg with respect to his proposals for a change in the Crow rate, how does he justify putting a cap of 31 million metric tonnes of grain on which farmers would receive some transportation assistance as opposed to paying the total cost thereafter, also bearing in mind that we are almost at that level of production now? Why would he apply a dissentive to grain production when four-fifths of the world are suffering from malnutrition and there is a tremendous need for cereal protein to be disbursed around the world?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the idea of establishing a volume limit is not mine. It is the result of discussions held by Gilson and the shippers some months ago. The idea came from those meetings. It is postulated on the basis of economies of scale. If you reach the production of a given volume of a certain commodity, it is generally felt that additions to that volume will cost less. In the statement I made at the time of the announcement of the government western rail initiative, I indicated that, for example, for a spending of $40 million more for transportation of grain, western farmers would be in a position to gain $400 million in revenues. That is the justification for the volume limit. There would still be an incentive for the western farmer to produce more.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, it does not matter who thought of the idea; the idea is wrong because economies of scale cannot be applied just to the Prairies as a whole. They must be considered with respect to each farm family's economic unit.

EFFECT OF INCREASED TRANSPORTATION COST

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, with respect to the Minister's position on an open-ended cost, why will he not tie any increase in cost to the farmer's ability to pay—in other words, some percentage of the bushel or tonne value of the grain? How can he justify his position when, according to his own projection, half the cost of grain will go to pay for transportation by the year 2000? While he is on his feet will he tell us when he is going to table—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, first of all I do not agree with the statement made by my hon. friend. What is valid on a collective basis is also valid on an individual basis with respect to the savings from volume.

On the subject of the relationship between the cost of transportation of grain and the international price of grain, the idea is again in the Gilson Report, and Gilson says it is one worth studying and suggests that it should be the object of the 1985-86 review. So that is where we stand now. The idea is a reasonable one, but there are some disadvantages to it also because, should you guarantee the international price of grain, obviously there would be a similar demand from producers of other goods for a guaranteed price also. A snowballing effect is one which we cannot accept lightly.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

STOKES POINT DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As he knows, the Gulf application concerning Stokes Point came in on March 11 and he has another 30 days to make a decision. I am sure he is also aware that the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee announced this morning that, if the Government goes ahead in approving the application, they will go before the Federal Court. My question to the Minister, as he leads the charge of the oil brigade to Stokes Point into lands which were withdrawn from exploration in 1978 following the very expensive and very lengthy Berger inquiry, the recommendations of which were supported by all Members of this House and by the National Energy Board—and those lands were withdrawn for three very specific reasons, those being the settlement of land claims—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Could the Hon. Member please ask his question? It is very close to the end of Question Period.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, would the Minister tell this House whether the 1978 withdrawal of those lands was public posturing, a bill of goods, or was it a serious Order in Council?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, despite the unnecessary and rather insulting preface to the Hon. Member's remarks, it is totally false. May I say it was a serious Order in Council.

USE OF PUBLIC LANDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister on one of his favourite topics, conflict of interest. I would like him to comment on a conflict of interest his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, finds himself in, in that the 1978 Order in Council was very specific. Those lands were for settling land claims, they were for a national park, and conservation purposes. Would he tell this House whether or not he believes that 1978 Order in Council was in fact bona fide? Was it in the interests of the people of Canada, or is his Minister in a conflict of interest in giving away the land to Gulf?

The Late J. J. Macdonell

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, there is no conflict of interest whatsoever.

Mr. Broadbent: There never is.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The situation is that I am in possession of a legal opinion which would indicate that I have the authority to give a land use permit on a temporary basis—this is for exploration—to Gulf Oil Company. For exploration. It is quite true that if it were more than temporary, if it were for a permanent site for transportation of production of oil, an amendment to the Order in Council would be required. Since it is temporary, however, my legal advice is that it would not be necessary to get that Order in Council withdrawing these lands for park purposes, amended. I am advised that I do have the authority.

• (1500)

May I quiet the concerns of the Hon. Member by telling him that I have no intention at the moment of approving even any temporary land use permit for a site at Stokes Point, even for exploration purposes. I have not decided to do so, and I have not decided not to do so either; I simply have not decided this question at all. I am going to undertake, as I should, consultation with the native groups concerned. I am sure the Hon. Member would approve of that.

THE LATE JAMES J. MACDONELL

TRIBUTES TO FORMER AUDITOR GENERAL

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I seek the unanimous consent of all Members of the House to make a brief statement or comment with respect to our late Auditor General, James J. Macdonell, whose untimely death yesterday shocked all of us.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, yesterday we lost a great Canadian and a great friend of many Members of this Chamber and, I might say, a great friend of the Canadian people, the late James J. Macdonell.

When Jim Macdonell came to Ottawa in the early 1970s he already had a record of many accomplishments. He had been a successful and prestigious auditor and a renowned management consultant. He came here and I think achieved what was probably the greatest accomplishment of his career, as our Auditor General. He brought new ideas to the position, he brought enthusiasm, he brought energy, and perhaps above all he brought dedication and preoccupation with the concept of providing Canadians with value for money. He believed that the taxpayers of Canada should receive full value for the disbursement of public funds. In that light and for that purpose he introduced the concept of comprehensive auditing to our system.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, it was mainly Mr. Macdonell's work that had instigated the establishment of the Lambert Commission, and that has provided Canada with an accounting system for dealing with public funds the efficiency of which has been without precedent.

[English]

He reminded us constantly, as Parliamentarians, that the funds we appropriate in this House are funds of the taxpayers of Canada and are to be disbursed and accounted for accordingly. Indeed, Madam Speaker, Jim Macdonell has left all Canadians a very rich legacy.

[Translation]

To his family we extend our deepest sympathies.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the death of James J. Macdonell, former Auditor General of Canada, comes as a shock to this House and to all Canadians. He was a good servant of the House and of all Canadians.

His reports on the financial procedures of the Government from 1973 to 1980 identified the problem of over-spending by Government and, as the Minister has said, introduced the principle of value for money, a principle totally foreign to the methods of the Government then and now.

To quote the wisdom and words of the former Auditor General, recently he pointed out that Canada in the 1970s "indulged in the biggest spending spree in the history of the country". This statement corresponded fully with the views of the Opposition, although it has still failed to win recognition in the House.

J. J. Macdonell, born in Calgary, sprang from the ancient Highland stock which settled in Glengarry County not far from the capital, Ottawa. A namesake was aide-de-camp to General Brock at Queenston Heights. Perhaps it was this combination of Scottish canniness and dogged dedication to duty that made him a formidable foe of waste and extravagance by the federal Government. He fulfilled his difficult mandate with distinction.

His memory deserves well of this nation and this House.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I should like to join with my colleagues from the Government and the Official Opposition and, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, offer condolences to the family of J. J. Macdonell and say a few brief words about his accomplishments.

As a member of the Public Accounts Committee, I first came to know Mr. Macdonell in early 1980. I had heard of him before but had not previously had the opportunity to meet and work with him. The time that I spent on the Public Accounts Committee when he was Auditor General is time that I will cherish. I found him not only to be a person very concerned about the public purse and the way taxpayers' money was spent, but also to be a very warm person. He was quick to offer assistance to all Members of Parliament who wished to come to him to take advantage of his insight into the way that the taxpayers' money was being spent.

I am sure he will be long remembered for his accomplishments. He pushed for the establishment of the Comptroller General's office, he was responsible for the revised estimates that sprang from it, and, as the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) mentioned, was responsible for putting comprehensive audit into place.

I am sure Mr. Macdonell will be long remembered as one who brought much to Canada and to Parliament. On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I wish to offer our condolences to his family.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, as one who had the privilege of serving as a chairman of the Public Acccounts Committee while J. J. Macdonell was Auditor General, I should like to join in expressing to his family my condolences and those of members of that Committee many years ago.

He was able; he was experienced; he was conscientious; but above all he had a bulldog-like tenacity to see an issue or a problem through to its successful solution, no matter whose toes were stepped on. I believe that he will be remembered not only for his well-known reforms in accounting and auditing procedures and concepts, but also for his ability to attract the services of excellent people to assist him. He served the taxpayers of the country well and we all honour him.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, thank you for allowing me to add a few words to those of my colleagues and particularly those of the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston).

I was also a chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts that served under J. J. Macdonell. Those who knew him well knew that he would pass away with his boots on, which was his will.

I think the mark and style of the seventh Auditor General of Canada was described best in the language of Damon Runyon by the late Hon. Robert Andras, who was responsible for some of the great advances Mr. Macdonell was able to give to Parliament and the country, when he referred to his mark and style as being "Ottawa's oldest, established, permanent floating crap game". That more or less describes the vigour with which negotiations proceeded.

• (1510)

He will be remembered as the person who, at the pinnacle of an outstanding professional career, put all aside to lead the design of a system of accountability essential to the continuity and quality of the parliamentary form of Government. Value for money management concepts, the new Auditor General Act, the office of the Comptroller General of Canada, systems in place to measure effectiveness, the new form of the Estimates and comprehensive auditing were all products of that game which was the mark and style of James J. Macdonell.

The conclusion of his great effort rests with us in the House, the backbench Parliamentarian and the Government, that is, to deliver a Committee system which will allow us to use effectively the information system he did so much to put in place.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, as the current President of Treasury Board, I want particularly to associate myself with the sentiments expressed by my predecessor, now the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston).

The late J. J. Macdonell made a very important contribution to the public life of Canada. I will not take the time to repeat his many achievements and interests. I might say, however, that while I did not serve, as some of the people who have spoken, on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts during his time as Auditor General, I had the opportunity to have a number of discussions with Mr. Macdonell on a personal basis about his concerns and the initiatives connected with them.

There is no doubt that he has made a very important contribution, as I said, to the public life of Canada. I join with the other Hon. Members of the House who have spoken at this time in expressing my sincerest sympathy to his family and friends on his passing.

Madam Speaker: I am sure the House will want me to convey to the family of the late J. J. Macdonell the sympathy of the House on his untimely death, a sense of gratitude for his remarkable contributions to parliamentary accountability and a recognition of the gentle and firm manner in which he prompted all of us to be more accountable.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. LEWIS—PRIVILEGE OF MR. MACKASEY—OFFENDING MATERIAL NOT TABLED

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to the reference yesterday to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of the allegations contained in The Gazette of Montreal of March 10, 11 and 12 concerning the activities of the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) with respect to 109609 Company Canada Ltd.

I made some reference yesterday to our concern about the sufficiency of the motion, but be that as it may, quite apart from the question of the sufficiency of the motion, it is our concern that the practices of the House have not been followed with respect to a complaint made of a newspaper.

It is my understanding that when an Hon. Member rises to complain about statements made in a newspaper, the offending words should be read into the record. Furthermore, United Kingdom practice indicates that complete copies of the newspaper or newspapers in which the offending article or articles in this case, appeared should be filed with the Table.

We would contend that until such time as these articles are put on record, the House is not seized of them. To suggest otherwise would be to suggest that anything put in print anywhere in Canada would be a matter of record in the House of Commons.

My case is based upon Citations 83 and 332 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which deal with questions of privilege based on published material. Citation 332(2) of Beauchesne reads as follows:

> It is in order to quote a newspaper reflecting on proceedings in the House if the quotation is followed by a privilege motion.
> When a complaint is made of a newspaper, it is the practice in the House of Commons for the Member to rise on a question of privilege and point out that he has been libelled or misrepresented. He may read as much of the article as is necessary to prove his case but he cannot go further. He is bound to confine himself strictly to the question of privilege.

The root of my argument now lies in Citation 83 of Beauchesne, page 25, which reads as follows:

> Should a question of privilege be based on published material, the article in question must be submitted and read at the Table.

As a further example of the established practice of the House in this regard, I refer to Appendix D of the first report of the Special Committee on Rights and Immunities of Members, which was laid before the Thirtieth Parliament on July 12, 1976. It indicated that during questions of privilege raised in 1956, 1964 and 1968, newspaper articles criticizing Members were read into the records of the House. These instances can be found in Hansard at page 4528, pages 4431 and 4432 and page 9855.

The Canadian practice is further supported by references in Erskine May to the practice in the United Kingdom. I could provide the Chair with the references for that, but on page 164 of Erskine May, in a rather large paragraph, there appears the following sentence:

> When the Member has concluded his complaint the Speaker desires him to bring the document to the table and, when the document has been brought to the table, directs the Clerk of the House to read the passages complained of.

Without trying to interfere with what has gone forward, we would submit that the actual articles have not been read into the record. Therefore, the Committee that is trying to proceed has nothing firm upon which to proceed until they are either read into the record by the Member or by the Clerk. It seems clear to us, if we are to follow proper procedures in dealing with questions of privilege and newspaper articles, and in order to be fair to the Member, to the Committee and to the newspaper involved, that the articles complained of should be read into the record.

I am talking about past practice. Since the matter of privilege has been decided and has gone to Committee, I suggest that for our purposes we would in this instance be prepared to have the articles printed in Votes and Proceedings; but in no case should the Committee start its proceedings without knowing what exactly it is the House of Commons is directing it to review. That can only be done if the articles in question are read into the record, tabled or in some way become a firm part of the record of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): I have three points to make, Madam Speaker. First, there is no appeal from a decision of the House. Yesterday, the House supported unanimously a motion for referral to committee, and if I am not mistaken, my hon. colleague's party was unanimous in supporting this motion. We cannot criticize or appeal a decision once it has been made by the House, so that the referral may not be changed in any way.

Second, the motion is now before the committee and according to our parliamentary procedure to which my learned friend was referring, no comments may be made on the motion until a report is received from the committee. That is not the case, and I submit that this discussion actually contravenes our Standing Orders, because we may not discuss a matter once it has been referred to committee. Third, the remedy for what was implied by the Hon. Member is in the Standing Orders. I may refer the House to Standing Order 69(8), which, except when the House otherwise orders, empowers the committee not only to hear witnesses but also to produce papers and records, and therefore, if it is relevant and it seems to me that is the case, but I would rather let the committee decide since it runs its own show—the committee has the authority to demand production of the newspaper articles in question. For the purposes of our discussion, I would like to read Standing Order 69(8), which is very clear on this matter, and I quote:

> Standing committees shall be severally empowered to examine and enquire into all such matters as may be referred to them by the House, and, to report from time to time, and, except when the House otherwise orders.

And incidentally, there has been no order to the contrary. I shall continue the quote:

> —except when the House otherwise orders, to send for persons, papers and records, to sit while the House is sitting, to sit during periods when the House stands adjourned, to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by them, and to delegate to subcommittees all or any of their powers except the power to report direct to the House.

The fact of the matter is that there has been absolutely no order to the contrary preventing the application of Standing Order 69(8), which empowers the committee to produce any relevant papers or records, including the newspaper articles to which my learned colleague referred, and in addition to ordering production of such papers before the committee, it can also, according to the Standing Order from which I read, print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the committee. Therefore, these documents will appear in the committee's proceedings, and eventually, it can be assumed that the committee's report will certainly make some reference to the proceedings and the documents.

Therefore, as a practical remedy, if the Opposition is really serious when it says that it wants fair treatment for the Member who proposed the motion, well, I think they should respect parliamentary procedure, refrain from using points of order to cast all kinds of doubts on the validity of the referral, and respect the Standing Orders, which are very clear on this matter. There will be every opportunity according to our procedure, and the committee is able to do so, if it is relevant, and the Progressive Conservative Members on that committee will also be able, to request the tabling before the committee of all relevant records, including the newspaper articles referred to by the Hon. Member.

Therefore, my three points, and I shall not repeat them, are quite simple. A decision rendered by the House cannot be appealed. The matter is before the committee. No comments may be made before the committee reports to the House, and third, the remedy exists in our Standing Orders.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I listened to the words of my colleague with interest. I would point out that we are certainly not challenging the ruling of the Chair or the motion that was passed. What we are trying to do is to perfect the proceedings of the House. I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, with respect, that we perfect the proceedings of the House, and under the Standing Order to which my colleague referred, we perfect the matter "as may be referred to them by the House".

In other words, we want the Committee to do its work. We made that very clear at the outset and we made it very clear yesterday. Surely we should have the articles before us. I am not suggesting the articles in question be read in full. It would be satisfactory to us to have copies of the Montreal Gazette for March 10, March 11 and March 12 tabled. Nor are we asking for a delay while the Clerk reads them. But to perfect what this House is doing, we are making this suggestion so that in future when someone asks what was done in March, 1983 on a very important matter of privilege—whether or not it was done before or after, at least before the Committee starts its proceedings—those following us will be able to say: "Yes, the articles were read in and became part of what was referred to the Committee". That is the point we are making.

Mr. Nielsen: Those are the facts.

Madam Speaker: The desire to protect the proceedings of the House is certainly a very laudable one. I would concur with anything that would contribute to that perfection. I thank the Hon. Member for raising this question. As we debated or discussed the proceedings yesterday, there did not seem to me to be any kind of anomaly in the way we did proceed. If there had been, I suppose we would have to recognize that the House did give its unanimous consent to whatever we did. However, if there is any way of perfecting the process, and if there is any avenue open to me in order to do just that, I would, of course, want to do it. Therefore, I will take that point of order under consideration.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MURPHY—NOTICE OF POSSIBLE QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I would like to reserve my right to raise the subject matter of answers I received today from the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan). I do not have a copy of those answers but I would like to review them. I believe he seriously misled the House with regard to the position of the Province of Manitoba on the issue of equality for male and female persons.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member does not need to give any kind of notice of this type in the House. If upon reading the blues he realizes that he has a point to make, he can do so tomorrow.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I rise today to present a petition on behalf of 73 parishioners of the St. Thomas-Wesley United Church in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Because of the possible testing of the Cruise missile on Canadian soil, your petitioners call upon this House to oppose the testing of the Cruise missile.

MR. MURPHY—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have a petition to the House of Commons signed by a number of Manitobans opposing the announcement of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) that he would end the statutory Crowsnest Pass freight rates. The petitioners are concerned about how farmers' agricultural organizations, local and provincial Governments, trade unions, and many others will suffer as a result of the Pepin-Gilson plan. The petitioners have also had an opportunity to examine the position of the New Democratic Party's alternative plan and suggest the House of Commons adopt that instead of the Government's proposal.

Therefore, at the next sitting of the House I shall propose a motion pursuant to Standing Order 82 to allocate one sitting day to each of the said stages of the said Bill.

BEAVER CREEK CORRECTIONAL CAMP, GRAVENHURST

Question No. 3,923—Mr. Lawrence:

SENIOR CITIZENS COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury) moved that Bill C-521, an Act respecting senior citizens, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Madam Speaker, in my remarks today I would like to draw attention to a very serious and pressing social issue which, to some degree, affects all of us. The Bill before us may be one means of addressing this issue; perhaps there are other and better means which Hon. Members will want to suggest. At any rate, I think it is essential for Parliament to be giving serious and earnest attention to the needs of the elderly, and specifically to the problem of abuse of the elderly in our old age homes and other senior care institutions throughout this country.

Since this Bill was first introduced I am happy to see that the Government has produced, in consultation with provincial and territorial representatives, a helpful and well documented report on aging. This report, which was initially prepared to serve the Canadian delegation to the United Nations World Assembly on Aging, discusses a number of humanitarian issues related to the aging population including income security, housing, health and social welfare.

But its purpose is informational rather than critical and reflects the perspective of Government officials rather than the elderly themselves. As such, it does not in any way address the inadequacies of care and facilities or the more serious injustices and abuses which affect so many in our aging population. References to institutional care are, in fact, relegated a few pages and there is a conspicuous absence of any allusion to the attitudes of the elderly themselves to the level and quality of institutional care that they receive. This is, in short, a report neither by nor for the people who are its ostensible subjects. Their own voice does not emerge.

There is, however, a growing witness from other sources that incidents of elderly abuse, like other forms of social abuse and violence, such as parents against children or husbands against wives, for example, constitute a social problem of significant proportions and one which can be expected to worsen as the number of elderly in our society increases and economic pressures grow.

In October, 1980 the Ontario Advisory Council on Senior Citizens made an extensive survey of attitudes of the elderly concerning certain of their most pressing needs and problems. Many of the criticisms outlined in this report entitled "Through the Eyes of Others" were specifically directed against nursing homes and institutions.

A recurrent theme underlying many of the survey's detailed findings is the resentment of seniors of the segregation and isolation which they experience in these facilities. They do not want to be shut away or cut off from their community or deprived of normal relationships and activities. They want to be recognized by their own names and for their own qualities and character as persons, to be valued for their lifelong contributions to society and respected as continuing members of that society.

But personnel and staff are often alluded to as insensitive, impatient, patronizing and thoughtless of basic needs for privacy and personal dignity. It was reported that there is an assembly line approach to care and that facilities operate for the convenience of staff rather than the residents.

The survey indicates a high frequency of complaints about overcrowding in rooms and inadequate bathroom facilities. Lack of special facilities for handicapped seniors attracted comment: countless minor daily inconveniences and frustrations are caused by drinking fountains that will not accommodate wheelchair patients, for example, or taps that are difficult to turn.

Theft of personal effects was alluded to as a frequent problem, with clothes and other personal items vanishing from rooms or blankets and the like sent by relatives never reaching their intended recipient.

Quantity and quality of food were generally regarded as far from adequate. One woman complained, "My husband is six feet tall and weighed 179 pounds when he went in. Now he weighs less than 100 pounds and has bed sores. There are other men in there who beg for food".

There was a good deal of bitterness about the lack of an effective inspection program or of remedial measures even when problems were detected. Inspectors frequently announce their intention to visit facilities in advance and staff are able to make short-term changes to save appearances. As one senior complained, "The homes make good money by cutting corners on staffing, food and good maintenance care, but they can put on a good show when the inspectors come. The residents are helpless to defend themselves."

Perhaps the most devastating published critique of nursing homes to date comes from author Daniel Baum in his book called "Warehouses for Death". I would like to read a paragraph from that book:

> People are there to die. Once they walk through the nursing home door they will not walk out again. They are stripped of their assets, given a small personal allowance, promised minimal nursing care, regulated severely in their routine and medicated to institutional compliance. In a very real sense they are encapsulated and warehoused for death. They are removed from the community, and the community accordingly does not have to see either old age or death.

Such comments may make us uncomfortable and defensive, which they certainly make me, but they cannot be ignored.

The subject of abuse of the elderly is roughly at the stage where that of wife-battering was ten years ago. There has been far less research into this problem than into any other aspect of aging, and most of the evidence of abuse which has surfaced in the last few years has come from investigative journalists and concerned groups of citizens who have made private inquiries of their own.

Some systematic research has been conducted in the United States but no statistics on abuse of the elderly are yet available in Canada. The Government of Ontario has just launched a major inquiry concerning abuse in nursing homes, the results of which should be available about a year from now. Other provincial Governments have undertaken similar studies. For the most part, however, we have to content ourselves with impressions and isolated accounts, as well as a few studies published in foreign journals.

Initial studies in the United States have indicated that the problem of elderly abuse is widespread and takes many forms. The first major study, "The Battered Elder Syndrome", listed physical abuse, psychological abuse, material abuse, violation of rights, medical abuse and failure to provide a sanitary environment as major aspects of mistreatment of the aged at the hands of their caretakers. The study indicated that most of the abuse was psychological rather than physical, centering on verbal assaults, taunts and threats. Physical abuse for the most part involved neglect and blows resulting in welts and bruises rather than broken bones, "slapping, shoving, and shaking rather than hitting with a fist".

Another study by Lau and Kosberg entitled "Abuse of the Elderly by Informal Care Providers" included in its definition of abuse: physical abuse, neglect, and emotional and psychological abuse. Lau and Kosberg found that over 75 per cent of the cases that they investigated involved physical abuse, consisting of lack of physical care, lack of food, lack of medical care and lack of supervision. Over 50 per cent of the cases involved psychological abuse, including mistreatment such as theft or misuse of residents' money or property.

There are certain obvious factors which contribute to abuse of the elderly, including lack of trained personnel in senior care facilities. But two additional and more pervasive sociological factors may also contribute to this phenomenon. They are agcism and negative attitudes toward the disabled.

Agcism, or bias against the elderly, is widespread in our society. As one scholar has expressed the prejudice:

> Old is ugly, young is beautiful. Old is useless, young is worthwhile. Old fashioned used to be an accolade; now it has become a pejorative ... the derogation of the aged is subtle and often subliminal, which makes it hard to combat.

Negative attitudes toward the disabled are also prevalent, and since many elderly persons are to some extent disabled, they are victimized by this prejudice as well.

Further research may well establish that the misconceptions and distortions which contribute to ageism and bias against the disabled are also contributing factors in creating situations of abuse. If this is seen to be the case, then we must take them into account in education and employment training programs.

On December 1, 1982 a group calling itself "The Concerned Friends of Ontario Citizens in Care Facilities" issued a report on elder abuse in Ontario. The information was compiled through observations by group members and through informal chats with home operators, employees and ministry officials, and provides a disturbing picture not only of inadequacies in the quality of home care but also of serious violations of residents' rights and personal wellbeing.

The members gathered information from 30 of the 40 homes in Metro Toronto and from other homes across the Province. They repeated frequently heard charges that the industry cannot easily get a fair assessment of this situation in many institutions because inspections are generally prearranged and staffs are able to cover up.

Among the chronic abuses outlined in the Concerned Friends' report, several are particularly unsettling, and I would like to tell Hon. Members about them. They include cries for help going unnoticed; failure to monitor conditions like weight loss; consistent bed sores and physical injury; indifference to personal difficulty; paralyzed residents being left sitting in wheelchairs in the hall, unable to cover themselves; and cursory visits by doctors. One doctor said he visits 41 patients in one morning each week. There is apparent indifference to appropriate care needs. Rather than giving bowel training or using adult-sized diapers which require effort, one resident complained, doctors usually order catheters for immobile patients. There are also unsanitary conditions. Some homes were reportedly infested with cockroaches.

Critical questions confront lawmakers who seek to make a legal response to such problems as these. Although there is a growing body of evidence of outright violence against the elderly, the problems seems &ed425;-1 more often to be one of neglect and deprivation and of emotional and social maltreatment, rather than physical abuse as such.

Apart from the obvious fact that such situations are often hidden and it is as difficult to remedy as to detect, they also pose a quandary: can we legislate care and concern for our senior citizens? Could we realistically expect that any such laws would be enforceable? Genuine solutions will require a much deeper understanding of the problem than we have now. We must inquire whether our knowledge of the etiology of abuse of the elderly is sufficient to enable us to legislate wisely. Our investigations must inevitably take us to a further consideration of abuse of the elderly in non-institutional settings, even within the family itself.

If mistreatment of the elderly is shown to be largely a function of stress due to the difficulties of living with the elderly, voluntary programs which provide services to help the elderly maintain independence or resources to lessen the burden on the nursing home staff or on families can be implemented. An interim measure could consist of drafting an elder abuse prevention and treatment act, which would make it mandatory for nursing home personnel to report cases of elder abuse and neglect and would make renewal of a nursing home licence subject to a clean record with respect to elder abuse.

Whatever measures we might take, we must ensure that laws designed to protect the elderly are sufficiently enlightened that they do not inadvertently contribute to stereotyping of the aged by treating them as incompetents who cannot make decisions with regard to their own welfare.

As Your Honour can see, I have not come with many answers today, but, rather, with a deep sense of concern and responsibility and a desire that we at least begin to ask the right questions concerning this significant social problem. I think it is time to invite the elderly themselves into the conversation. Many of them have been subjected to or have witnessed the kinds of abuse to which I have referred today. We need to hear from them if we are to be able to take measures which will speak to their real needs.

Abuse of the aged is, in the words found in one article on this subject, "everybody's nightmare". I think it should be a matter of urgent priority for this Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity today to speak to Bill C-521, introduced by the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie). Like him, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has great concern and respect for the needs of senior citizens. I also have those same concerns, coming from the older suburbs of the eastern part of Metropolitan Toronto. We have the largest number of seniors in Scarborough in our particular riding.

In recent weeks, I have had the honour of being elected Chairman of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I have also had the privilege of being appointed, in recent days, to the new pension task force on pension reform. I am looking forward to taking a very active part on both the Committee and the task force in the months ahead.

However, in reading Bill C-521, and in listening to the comments of the Hon. Member this afternoon, one wonders what the proposed Senior Citizens' Commission could be expected to accomplish. The Bill states that the Commission is to study and identify the needs of senior citizens and make recommendations concerning these needs to the Governor in Council. A Commission such as that proposed would more appropriately be a matter involving action by the Provinces. I may say in passing that I think the Hon. Member confirmed this in devoting many of his comments today to the real problems in nursing homes. However, to my recollection, nursing home jurisdiction is almost completely in the hands of the Provinces. Although I am not downgrading his comments in that respect, as this should be of real concern to all of us, I think we should be speaking in terms of the provincial legislatures and not Parliament, or not to the same extent anyway.

Indeed, a number of provincial Governments have already made appointments and others are considering the appointment of bodies to identify the needs of older persons, to make recommendations as to how these needs can be met, and to serve in an advisory capacity in the establishment of programs and services to meet needs, identify gaps in information and services, promote research and, in some cases, carry out research. Called by any one of several names—senior citizens' commissions, provincial advisory councils or provincial senior citizens' councils—they are appointed by Government and responsible to a provincial Minister of the Crown.

Several Provinces have bodies operating under voluntary auspices, either as independent councils on aging or as components of provincial social planning councils. In some urban centres, similar structures have been organized locally. In addition, some Provinces have an office, bureau or division on aging, usually located in the Department of Social Services. Two Provinces have secretariats which serve to co-ordinate the programs and services related to aging and the aged being developed by several Departments. Finally, the appointment by Governments of provincial gerontologists to provide advice and consultation to the provincial Governments, academic institutions, service agencies, research projects and other endeavours, has augmented the work of the aforementioned bodies in identifying the needs of older people and in establishing or co-operating in establishing services for them.

At the federal level, the National Advisory Council on Aging was established by our Government in May of 1980. Perhaps the Hon. Member's Bill was filed before we went back in April of 1980. A number of things have occurred here since the Bill was filed, and the establishment of a National Advisory Council was one of them. Its 18-member Board of Directors, all appointed from outside Government, serves as an advisory body to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Its other main role is to serve as an advocate for the aged. Within the Department of National Health and Welfare itself, the Office on Ageing was established in November, 1980. Designated in the Department as the focal point on aging, it serves both the health and welfare sides of the Department and carries a major responsibility in co-ordinating the Department's work on aging.

At the international level, the World Assembly on Aging was convened by the United Nations in Vienna last summer. All Hon. Members of the House received a copy of the Canadian Governmental Report on Aging, which was prepared by a federal-provincial territorial committee and endorsed by all Governments involved in its preparation. Each member country of the United Nations was invited to prepare such a report describing the current situation and outlining the issues respecting the aged to be faced over the next ten to 15 years in the country concerned. The Canadian report has received international recognition for its detailed analysis of the situation. The issues raised and the needs to be met are in accord with those identified in the International Plan of Action prepared by the World Assembly and later endorsed by the General Assembly of the United Nations. The Canadian Conference on Aging is to be held in October of this year as a follow up to the initiatives started by the World Assembly and will further extend Canadian efforts at that time.

Such developments are not surprising when the needs areas of older persons are considered—and the Hon. Member speaking previously has referred to many of them—economic, physical and mental health, nutrition, living arrangements, transportation, leisure activities, education, employment and retirement, and spiritual well-being.

The federal Government's responsibility in the economic sphere is fully recognized. The presentation made earlier in this House when the Green Paper entitled "Better Pensions for Canadians" was tabled need not be repeated, nor any prediction attempted about those that will be made to the Special Committee of this House embarking upon its own investigation into pension reform. As mentioned before, I am pleased to be on that task force. Income security in old age is our concern. Further, federal financial participation with the Provinces in the development of health and social services, as well as the construction of housing and institutional care facilities, has been in effect for many years.

The fact is that health and social services, housing, institutional care facilities, including the nursing homes that the previous speaker spoke so long about, education and so on, are all under provincial jurisdiction. Thus facilities, programs and services to meet the needs of the aged must be planned, organized and developed at the provincial and local levels.

There are those who argue that if older people were provided with enough money, they could look after their own needs. This is a fallacious argument. It assumes that the services needed are available, that they are accessible, and that, whatever their cost, old people could afford to pay for them regardless of the quantity required or the length of time the services were needed. Recognizing the lack of supportive services to help elderly persons live independently in their own community, despite socio-economic and physical problems, was the motive behind the federal Government's initiative in establishing the Canada Assistance Plan which, although not specific to the aged, is important to thousands of them who benefit from services cost-shared by the federal, provincial and territorial Governments.

The problems of the aged and the aging are as diverse as those which afflict all of society. We know, however, that the aged of the 1980s are very different from those of the 1960s and 1970s, and that those of the 1990s will show even greater differences. It is estimated that about two-thirds of those aged 65 and over have no single identifying characteristic except age. They mingle largely unnoticed in the community. Indeed the majority of older people can function in the community if society permits and encourages them through the provision of special services. Thus, an integral part of the planning process should be the provision of services and resources which will provide opportunities for senior citizens to participate in the community.

The New Horizons Program of the Department of National Health and Welfare, with which we are all very familiar, was established ten years ago to help and encourage retired people to engage in activities of benefit to themselves, each other and their communities. The result has been a dramatic increase in the number of community groups established by, and for, retired and elderly persons. In my own area of Scarborough West, we have between 20 and 30 of these groups, and the seed moneys that are used for their facilities represent some of the wiser expenditures that have ever been made by this Government, and are very wisely spent by the seniors involved.

Many of these groups have joined provincial and national senior citizens' organizations and these organizations have become extremely effective in speaking on behalf of their members. In Scarborough we have the Scarborough Senior Citizens' Council which co-ordinates the seniors' activities in this borough of more than 400,000 people in Metropolitan Toronto. They are a first rate group of people and no one could be more thoroughly familiar than they are with the needs and aspirations of retired and elderly people. On many occasions these organizations meet with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Hon. Monique Bégin, to discuss their concerns and to present their recommendations for improving the quality of life for retired Canadians. Many of their proposals have been incorporated into Government programs for pensioners, and there is a continuing dialogue between the Department and the spokesmen for senior citizens' organizations. Ways of making this dialogue even more effective are being considered.

It is worth noting that it was as a result of the groundwork laid by a group of very knowledgeable seniors from across Canada, funded by New Horizons money through an independent study of the kinds of structures that might be most effective as a focus for concerns about aging at the national level, that the National Advisory Council on Aging, mentioned earlier, was established. The majority of the members of the Council are older persons. They and their peers have proven themselves quite capable of identifying the needs of senior citizens. The possibility that a Senior Citizens' Commission, as proposed in the Bill before us, would contribute anything of significance to the many efforts already under way appears unlikely.

The paradox in respect to the older population is the tendency to view success as a problem. It is a particularly frustrating irony that progress in man's search for a longer life should produce the "problems of aging". In fact, the very successes in economic, social, medical and industrial progress that now permit such a large number of people to reach old age have also produced the changes that make elderly people a generally "dependent" group and have robbed them of their most important and traditional functions, roles and statuses.

Since World War II, scientific and technological advances with increasing industrialization have changed both the way people live and the ways by which they earn their living. The impact of population growth, urbanization and industrialization on the lives of older people has been heightened by the fact that these changes are occurring rapidly. Coupled with these rapid changes has been a new phenomenon—retirement. For the first time in the history of the world, thousands of persons each year leave the labour force and enter retirement. But it is here that difficulties have arisen. The right of persons to spend their later adult years not tied to the demands and responsibilities of the working world has become accepted, but we have failed to take steps to provide people with systematic preparation for their retirement years. Preparation for adulthood, and particularly for work, is an institutionalized part of the system; preparation for the later adult years is left to the individual, and as a result is haphazard and often incomplete.

With the end of the work role, the value of the older person's contribution to the family, the church, the neighbourhood and voluntary associations has been downgraded. Society has developed negative attitudes toward the aged and the aging. Older people now carry these attitudes, developed earlier in life, into their own retirement with the result that they have negative attitudes about themselves and their peers. The previous speaker spent some time in his speech talking about these negative attitudes. I think he was very correct as far as he went in that regard.

Overcoming the negative attitude society has concerning the aged and the aging is the challenge we face. Like all age groups, older people have problems and we must continue our efforts to solve them. But we must not allow our efforts to aid the helpless to become synonymous with the whole spectrum of aging. Stress on the negative side of aging has contributed to the stereotypes and the myths which have grown around it. Most of us have in some way contributed to the false picture that has been created.

Until we come to terms with our own aging and accept it, we will continue to endow the later years with all the misconceptions and untruths that society has built up, particularly over the past 30 to 40 years—insidious and ultimately dangerous in terms of society's acceptance of its older citizens. There are older people, many who are frail and not in the best of health, who are demonstrating that chronological age, in itself, is a meaningless measure. They continue to contribute to society, to their families and to grow as individuals. When we see them, aging takes on a new dimension. Mr. Speaker, we all know such people and indeed there are a few in this House of Commons.

But changes in attitudes cannot be legislated. These will only come about through teaching in the homes, the schools and in the training of professionals who will be working in the community with the aged as well as other age groups. Each of us as individuals has a responsibility in this. Older people themselves have a responsibility. Increasingly, they will have to demonstrate that they remain socially responsive and responsible, that they can and do continue to contribute to society, that there are new roles which they are willing and able to assume. We have to help them find these new roles. We have to provide the aged themselves with opportunities to do so.

The forthcoming Conference on Aging mentioned earlier, which is being convened by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and will involve the federal, provincial and territorial Governments, as well as the non-governmental sector in its planning, has been designated as a working conference. It has two major goals: to address the issues of most urgent concern in an aging society over the next 10 to 15 years and suggest proposals and strategies for consideration in resolving them; and also to consider the means whereby continuing dialogue and planning can be most effectively furthered.

The hard work before us now is finding solutions within our human and economic resources to the problems that have to be resolved if the needs of the aged are to be met. To the extent possible, duplication has to be avoided and statutory authority respected.

No one denies that there is much to be done. No one denies the challenge that faces us as such a large segment of our population continues to age. We must, however, deny that a Senior Citizens' Commission such as proposed in Bill C-521 can undertake the tasks that should be undertaken.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) for giving the House the opportunity to discuss this very important matter. The Bill is rather straightforward and relatively simple. It calls for an Act that would be cited as the Senior Citizens' Commission Act. The major object of this Act would be to establish a Commission to study and identify the needs of senior citizens. Once those studies have been completed, the Commission would make recommendations to the Governor in Council with respect to the needs of seniors.

It is in the best interests of the work that has been done in the past that this Bill be referred to a Committee and not be talked out in this House, and for the very reasons that the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead), attempted to persuade the House that it should not. The problems and solutions have been well-known to anyone who has been interested in the whole question of aging. In fact, the United Nations World Assembly, to which the Hon. Member for Scarborough West referred, took place at the end of July and beginning of August of last year. I was a Member of the Canadian delegation which attended that World Assembly. One of the seniors who is on the Canadian Advisory Council on Aging, Mr. Chuck Bailey from British Columbia, spoke to me at the end of that UN Assembly. He said: "When you guys get back to Canada, you will probably hear that another assembly will be held, that another conference on aging will be held to discuss the problems that senior citizens in the country are faced with".

I did not realize it at the time, but I have come to realize that all the information that I received as a delegate to that assembly provides all the arguments required to make the case that finally work should begin to be done rather than being spoken about again and again. Mr. Bailey said to me that all that anyone would require to gain full knowledge about the problems that elderly people face, and which we will all face when we reach that magic age of 65, is in the report of the National Advisory Council on Aging, which was the non-governmental organizations' report to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in preparation for that assembly. He told me that the other document that would give me full information was the Canadian Government report on aging, which was also considered by that assembly, as well as a copy of the address made to the assembly by the leader of the Canadian delegation. Those three documents list every argument, every problem and every solution required to solve the crisis that people face at age 65.

I would like to see this Bill referred to a committee so that Members of this House can begin putting together programs to address the real problem that people face when reaching age 65. It is not enough to say that all programs that can benefit people at age 65—and I will come back to this in a moment—must be dealt with by the Provinces. I do not accept that at all. I appreciate that many of the programs in place are cost-shared between the provincial and federal Governments, and in some cases with municipal governments or regional authorities. It is not right to slide out from under our responsibility to deal with those problems in a factual way, sloughing it off to some other level of Government. From my examination of the problems I conclude that we will be abdicating our responsibility as Members of Parliament and as responsible Canadians if we do not address them in a very real way. That is why I would like to see the Bill finally go to a committee in order that we can begin that kind of work.

A year or so ago the Members of this Party, both in caucus and at convention, recognized that we live in an aging world, that by the year 2000 the average population is likely to be quite elderly as opposed to that which exists today. For that purpose we established a task force to look into the problems of older women in particular. Our past experience, and certainly the one that exists today, shows that while most elderly persons at age 65 look forward to spending the balance of their life living in poverty, statistics show that elderly women in particular look forward to a harder life than males.

There are some two million Canadians now over 65. According to Statistics Canada, with 3.7 million people now aged between 25 and 34, the number of people over 65 will more than double when the "baby boom" generation begins to retire. By the year 2015 and the following decades, the global population of elderly will reach a staggering one billion, or approximately the size of China's population today. In 20 years the number of women over 65 in Canada will reach two million, outnumbering the men of the same age by two to one. Yet older women, especially single older women, are more likely to experience poverty than any other group in society.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada labour force studies confirm that age discrimination persists where workers over 45 have longer bouts of unemployment than younger workers and only 27 per cent of workers over 55 have any jobs at all. As to retirement income, the same statistics tell us that 43 per cent of the Canadian population has no investment or private pension income. So for very many of them, retirement means poverty. Fifty per cent of people over 65 live on less than $6,000 a year. After 11 provincial and federal task forces, various Royal Commissions, reports on pension reform including the recent federal Green Paper "Better Pensions for Canadians", reform for the elderly is still very remote in the sense of providing an adequate retirement income for most people at age 65.

To minimize and indeed attempt to dismiss the fact that elderly Canadians have problems at age 65 is really quite surprising. I know the Hon. Member for Scarborough West is a gentleman who would not do that lightly, and the facts show quite differently. You can hardly look at any media coverage on the personal examination of a person or persons over 65 without becoming quite concerned. For example, a recent study in Ontario showed that Ontario's older women who are widowed, divorced or separated and living alone are the most disadvantaged group in society. In the metropolitan Toronto area alone there is an estimated 36,000 of these older women living below the federal Government's poverty line. That particular study shows that the median income of these women was $5,645 a year in the 65 to 74 age group, and only $4,964 per year for those aged 75 and over. This is an area to be somewhat concerned about.

In another article which appeared in the Toronto Star recently, written by Steve Kerstetter, for example, it was pointed out that Ottawa pays a Guaranteed Income Supplement to people over age 65 with little income other than the federal Old Age Security. It also pays spouse's allowance to people between 60 and 65 in similar circumstances. However, in January close to 1.3 million senior citizens received the supplement and officials say about half the recipients are so poor they qualify for 80 per cent or more of the maximum supplement. The number of people receiving spouse's allowance was nearly 88,000 in January of this year. Even the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has said that the plight of the elderly poor is particularly severe because they are mostly unable to get extra cash from full- or part-time jobs. So the problem is indeed serious and it bears further examination by Members of this House. If it was referred to a committee we would have a better opportunity to do so.

Another area which I was not really familiar with, and perhaps I should have been, is that studies coming out of some other jurisdictions show that there is an increase in the incidence of violence against elderly people. In fact, I believe that a study done by the Department of National Health and Welfare warned this violence was increasing. There is also an increasing incidence of suicide of people over the age 65. That is not some alarmist statement coming from a Member of the NDP or the Official Opposition; these are statistics produced by the Department of National Health and Welfare. That is something we should be concerned about.

One of the figures I saw was that it was predicted that the incidence of violence against elderly Canadians and awareness of it is probably at about the same stage as violence against children was ten years ago. I know of a case in my own riding which concerned not only violence. It involved an elderly person who, because of age, has become forgetful and whose attention span was not what it used to be. She became easily confused by everything that was going on around her. An individual in an elected position—no doubt in my view in an attempt to assit this lady and ensure that no one took avantage of her—ended up acting as a trustee for her bank account. Unfortunately, this woman ended up leaving the amount in her bank account to this person who was acting as a trustee.

Now, I am not suggesting any bad motives on the part of the individual involved, at least initially, but the point is that when that happened, and it received wide attention in the press, other members of my community came to me and told me about similar cases on their own street where neighbours were going into elderly persons' houses to see how they were and were walking away with half the house.

I know of another case just around the corner from where I live in my constituency where there is no question but that a real estate agent convinced this woman, who was 72 or 73, to sell the house to him. This was only about three years ago. The houses in my area cost anywhere between $80,000 to $120,000. He convinced this woman to sell the house to him for $10,000 and he would allow her to live at a relatively low rent in the second half of the house.

That happens I think more frequently than it comes to our attention as Members of Parliament. It is shameful, Mr. Speaker. But what it shows, I think very clearly on the part of society generally, is that first of all there is an attitudinal problem towards elderly people. When you become age 65 you are no longer considered to be a productive member of society so you are shunted away and forgotten about. No one pays any attention to you or what happens to you or even cares about what happens to you. I think that is how these incidents arise; no one pays any special attention to the elderly person who is living on their own. Society is changing so rapidly that very often people, without thinking about it too much, I suppose, become so concerned about surviving on a personal basis that they forget about people in society who are no longer able to care for themselves.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that at the United Nations Assembly on Aging, the difference in attitude between the so-called developed countries and the so-called Third World underdeveloped countries towards elderly people is like night and day. People in the Third World can show us an awful lot of things about how we should treat elderly people. People in Third World countries view the elderly as being rich in experience and wisdom with a valuable contribution to make to society, particularly to the children. It is only now, through some private projects in this country, that we are beginning to realize that when people reach age 65, rather than being dumped they should be encouraged to make a contribution to the community and to society as a whole. In the Niagara Peninsula through an excellent project, elderly citizens are encouraged to participate in the community with daycare and that sort of thing, and this has been very successful.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but I do not want to appear to be helping to talk out the Bill. I think it is too important to society generally, not just elderly people, that we take a hard look at what we want to do to assist seniors to continue to participate in the mainstream of Canadian life.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be pleased to make a few comments on this Bill but, like my colleague the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) and the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), I want it to go to Committee. I wonder how much time is left before the hour is up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should inform the Hon. Member that the debate began at 3:30 p.m. so we have approximately eight minutes left.

Mr. Darling: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to be the one who is accused of talking out the Bill.

I should like to commend the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury for outlining in detail many of the problems that face senior citizens. I suppose that in order not to get into trouble I should declare a conflict of interest immediately. I am a senior citizen myself and, I think, one who is reasonably active.

I share the concern of Hon. Members for senior citizens, some of whom find it difficult to get along financially and others who are not treated as well as they should be. It is probable that a good many of the latter live in the more heavily populated areas of the country. In the smaller towns and villages, senior citizens usually have friends and relatives who help look after them.

Some senior citizens who are 65, 70 or 75 are probably more alert and active than a good many people in the 35 to 50 age group. Just two or three days ago I had the privilege of sending a letter of congratulations to a couple in Parry Sound, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Greer, who will celebrate their seventy-first wedding anniversary on March 25. They are still living in their own home and looking after themselves. That shows how conducive the environment in Parry Sound is to good health!

In the smaller areas apartments are provided for senior citizens. As the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) mentioned, a good many of them are provincially sponsored but the federal Government has done an excellent job through CMHC of providing co-operative or non-profit apartment units for seniors. This enables some people to move out of the large house they have lived in but still be together in an apartment.

The Hon. Member for York-Sunbury has suggested that a commission be established. Of course, it could be claimed that there have been too many commissions already but perhaps senior citizens could be appointed to this one from seniors' groups across the country to act in an advisory capacity to the Government.

In the past week or so someone suggested that a senior citizen's parliament should be inaugurated so that their wisdom could be used. Perhaps they would not need to meet for as long or as often as we do, but I am sure they could contribute some excellent ideas and give good advice on legislation that even this august body could take into very serious consideration.

I feel that the New Horizons Program is very important, Mr. Speaker, as it makes senior citizens feel that they are wanted. Through that program equipment is provided for club rooms, among other things. In the past few months I have had the privilege of visiting three or four senior citizens' club rooms in my riding for which the Government provided the equipment. This is very useful and people like to congregate there.

As the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury said, there is also the other side of the coin and that is care for the people who are in nursing homes which, as he pointed out, come under provincial jurisdiction. Prior to becoming a Member of this House I had the privilege of sitting on the board of directors of a senior citizens' home in my riding. It is a provincial home and a beautiful one where excellent care is given. The staff there does an outstanding job. There are three senior citizen homes in the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka and I have visited all of them. I can assure Hon. Members that they are well run by a board of directors made up of municipal officials and concerned citizens. There is no way there could be any mistreatment.

A few days ago I received a letter of complaint about the treatment of certain senior citizens. It was claimed that they were tied in their chairs, but when I checked with the director of the home, I was told that they had to be tied, otherwise they would fall out. The senior citizen homes are doing an excellent job, Mr. Speaker.

I hope the Government will give consideration to sending Bill C-521 to committee and to appointing the commission. This would not cost any money.

I see there are only a few minutes left, Mr. Speaker, so I hope we can put the question now.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it surprises me to learn from Hon. Members opposite that they are concerned about talking out the Bill. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) took his full 20 minutes, allowing little or no opportunity for other Members to participate in the debate, and the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) ran the clock out telling us about the situation in his riding rather than dealing with Bill C-521.

We have to ask if we need another commission to do more study. Clause 3 of the Bill reads as follows:

The objects of the Commission are to study and identify the needs of senior citizens.

It is the position of the Government that we wish to implement the recommendations being put forward rather than give birth to more studies. It surprises me that Bill C-521, which is identical to Bill C-218 which received first reading on October 31, 1977 during the third session of the Thirtieth Parliament, has been reintroduced.

I have the greatest respect and sympathy for the motives of the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) because the well-being of senior citizens is of great concern to all of us. It certainly is to me. The well-being of these people is part of our concern in the House and the Government's programs are well known to the people of Canada and to Members of the House.

● (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding No. 164 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AN ACT RESPECTING THE RECOVERY OF ALIMONY AND MAINTENANCE

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier) moved that Bill C-364, an Act respecting the recovery of alimony and maintenance, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I must say I am very pleased with this opportunity of presenting in the House a Bill that has been before the House since May 1980. Patience is a virtue that in this case is its own reward, since this afternoon, we shall at last have a chance to consider a subject that is very important to single-parent families in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think that a few statistics will demonstrate the seriousness of the problem we shall be discussing this afternoon. Not long ago, we were given the latest Statistics Canada reports. According to the last report, there were 653,440 single-parent families in Canada. This means that for 11 million, or more accurately, 10,959,000 family units where both the father and mother are present, there are 653,000 families with only one parent to look after the children. Mr. Speaker, I also would like to point out to Hon. Members that since in most cases, parents are responsible for the education of their children and for supporting the family, the parent who is responsible for the children's education must have the necessary resources. However, from what we have seen, and according to reports submitted in the House and various groups who are studying the problem, it seems that nearly 50 per cent of court judgements based on existing legislation are not enforced. Mr. Speaker, why is it that multinational corporations have no such trouble with court judgements, while thousands of orders, and thus judgements, obtained legally before the courts are so difficult to enforce? There is of course the administration problem, but I believe we should also deal with the principle of the matter, since the majority of these women—most of the time, single parents are women—live below the poverty line, on the meager resources at their disposal under our welfare legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this is a matter of joint jurisdiction. In fact, for the benefit of those who are interested in the matter, I asked the Library of Parliament's research branch for a study that is available to all Canadian citizens and deals with the constitutionality of federal intervention in the alimony and maintenance field through a federal or joint system. This study, which is fairly long and I have no intention of reading all thirty-seven pages here in the house, demonstrates the seriousness of the problem and also explains the jurisdictional aspects.

However, Mr. Speaker, we are not dealing with a problem of jurisdiction, but a human problem confronting hundreds of thousands of individuals in Canada who are indeed being deprived of their dignity because they are not entitled to income payments directly related to the family. The main objective of my Bill is to pave the way for more effective enforcement of court orders.

Mr. Speaker, I think that my colleagues will agree with me that my Bill should provide for the possibility of alimony payments being transferred to a Government. Since the Federal Government is present throughout Canada, I would suggest that in case of default, the order could be transferred to the Federal Government. My Bill would amend the Income Tax Act with a view to authorizing the Minister of Finance to enforce the order for alimony or maintenance payments in favour of the spouse. The necessary mechanisms to collect the money are already there, and I know that it is obviously easier for a Government to collect payments on a debt than it is for a spouse who has children but no income.

Mr. Speaker, my Bill also features an amendment to the Divorce Act. It is not a major amendment since the question is now under study, in any event, but still I think it is important to amend the Divorce Act so that once the order has been registered we will be in a position to take action. Naturally, a law is effective to the extent that the penalties are effective.

I have also included in my Bill a provision to amend the Criminal Code. My colleagues will undoubtedly recall that Criminal Code section 197 is entitled "Duties Tending to Preservation of Life", duty of persons to provide necessaries. It states that every one is under a legal duty as a parent and all other qualities which make the alimony necessary—must provide himself with necessaries of life . . . and others towards whom he has an obligation. Every one who commits an offence under subsection (2) is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

Mr. Speaker, we have noted that this provision is not really effective and is rarely used because the courts are reluctant to deprive the breadwinner of his earnings, and of course, spouses often do not really want to start criminal proceedings.

I have proposed amendments to Section 289 rather than to section 197 so that, as is now the case in Germany, it would now be considered a crime if a spouse is shown to have robbed the other spouse by not paying alimony. Some will say that this is rather harsh. It probably is, but we are now facing a very serious problem affecting hundreds of thousands of people, which has not yet been solved and is still being negotiated and discussed by the federal and provincial Governments.

Mr. Speaker, according to the figures for 1978-79, female heads of households and women in general in Canada who are lucky enough to earn their living have an average income of $7,600 compared with $14,900 for men. This means that even those who work and can do something to feed their family already have problems.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, according to the most recent report of Statistics Canada which provides figures for 1979, there were 59,474 divorces in that year, and this does not include legal or de facto separations. We have a very high figure of nearly 60,000 divorces, which means nearly 60,000 maintenance orders.

In view of these figures, Mr. Speaker, we cannot ignore this issue because we are faced not with human problems, but simply with an issue that still has to be resolved. I must say in this regard that Quebec and Ontario have both taken major steps to help spouses with dependent children to support their family when the other spouse does not keep up his payments.

I must congratulate the provincial legislators for taking such action. Yet, Mr. Speaker, while these measures are relatively effective, hundreds of millions of dollars are still being paid through the welfare system because the spouse has moved to another province and cannot be reached.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court made a ruling recently. In fact, this is why I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) that my Bill be referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. This ruling has just been made. It means that even if we could go before the courts, obtain an order and have it registered in another province, we would need a reciprocity agreement if the spouse leaves the country.

The case submitted to the Supreme Court involved a university professor who had left his province to live in Florida. He owed over $100,000 in alimony, which means that he had practically never made a payment, and he finally left the province with an accumulated pension fund of over $150,000. Under the present legislation, the Supreme Court was unable to seize the pension fund and to force compliance with the alimony order. The husband, who was responsible in this case for the maintenance payments, moved to Florida, a state with which we have no reciprocity agreement, which means that it is just about impossible to go through the whole process in Florida all over again and begin proceedings under private international law, which would be quite complex and costly.

Even in cases of this importance where an order called for up to $100,000 in alimony, we can see that there is no compliance with the law and that thousands of rulings are not obeyed in this country, which I consider quite unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, we took a first step in this House during this session to amend the present legislation concerning the recovery of alimony and maintenance. I feel this must still be stressed by addressing the issue, and I start with Bill C-38, an Act to provide for the garnishment and the diversion of pension.

Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize that it took Canada well over 100 years to allow for the diversion of pensions of every employee within the Canadian government. We may have been slow to act in this respect, but at any rate it is a reflection of our times that the Government, the Parliament of Canada has taken action, as the Bill already has been enacted.

My proposal, Mr. Speaker, does respect the arrangements that may have been agreed upon between spouses, because in cases of separation there may be an arrangement, and where there is a divorce, of course, there is a court decision. But in all cases there is failure on the part of individuals to comply with the arrangement of court order.

Over these last few months, according to the information provided by the Department of Justice, the Federal-Provincial Committee dealing with the implementation of these procedures has been meeting regularly, but if my Bill could be considered by our learned colleagues from the ten provincial legislatures and territories, we could ensure a little more dignity for single parent families, and a little more respect for our laws and our courts.

I am afraid it is too easy to get caught in legal wrangles, the reference being that this is a provincial matter, but as a member of this House, Mr. Speaker, I cannot indulge in federal-provincial bickerings that penalize families, the children and ultimately, the future of thousands of individuals. I cannot accept that.

I would ask my colleagues to consider very seriously the proposals now before them, and if I am so allowed, I would also invite at a later date, the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, of which I am a member, also to consider very seriously my proposals and even to bring in amendments in order to help solve the problem that exists regarding alimony and all monies that may be affected.

Mr. Speaker, when we enshrined the Charter of Rights in the Constitution, when we enacted a clause on equality, I submit that what was intended was both equality of rights and equality of responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, we must realize that in this country, there has been no dearth of responsibilities for heads of single parent families. Those have been very great, and indeed the Canadian people as a whole have been called upon to assume part of those responsibilities when the spouse failed to do so. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we maintain single parents in a totally unacceptable situation simply by forcing them to show up at welfare offices to be harassed, as is often the case, by allowing legal action to be taken against them or simply by perpetuating the long-standing controversy within the family unit, which has already been dismantled. Mr. Speaker, such a situation should not be allowed to continue in a modern, responsible and advanced society such as Canada.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues to forget about the situation of relatives or friends for they might be tempted to pass judgment. I am not passing judgment on any of those thousands of divorces. I simply recognize that there is a problem we must address. We are faced with 600,000 family units which all have an equal right to respect and dignity, yet there can be no respect without a decent income. Mr. Speaker, I believe everyone of us will recognize that in order to raise children, one must at least have a minimum of resources which means providing them with the food, clothing and lodging they need. And I do not think that we can no longer tolerate that the great many women who are heads of single-parent families should live for 20 years in a state of permanent anxiety because 50 per cent of all orders to pay alimony are not enforced. And, as I said, the situation is the same, whether these women are separated or divorced. In cases of divorce, I do not think there are any problems, as far as jurisdiction is concerned.

The study I referred to a while ago dealt with the issue of alimonies granted following legal separations, which is a matter which comes under provincial jurisdiction. We will see, however, that matters can be worked out under the present Constitution because of a legislation which provides that 50 p. 100 of all social welfare funds everywhere in Canada come from the Federal Government and that these funds must finally be spent by the neighbour who, for all intent and purposes, assumes the responsibility of a particular family.

Mr. Speaker, I think we must see to it that all Canadian children grow up in the most healthy family environment possible. And I think also that both spouses share and should continue to share equal responsibilities in this regard, and the very purpose of this bill is to ensure that court orders are strictly enforced.

[English]

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) for bringing this important issue once again before the House.

• (1650)

I think Hon. Members might be interested in knowing some of the history of this issue and the dedication that backbench Members from all three Parties of the House have given to this issue. It remains an issue only because the Liberal Government of Canada apparently whishes to postpone this tragic issue and prevent its resolution, something which it could quite easily do if it had the will.

Let me go back to the Twenty-ninth Parliament when Mr. Danson, who subsequently became the Minister of National Defence in the Thirtieth Parliament, had a private Members' Bill in the House on this particular issue. His Bill died on the Order Paper. During the Thirtieth Parliament I went to Mr. Danson to ask him if he had any objection to my taking the spirit and thrust of his Private Members' Bill through the Order Paper again in a rewritten Bill. He encouraged me strongly.

The Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier says that she has been very patient with respect to Bill C-364 since May 2, 1980. The point I am making is that this issue was debated in the twenty-ninth Parliament and again in the Thirtieth Parliament. At that time I brought in a Private Members' Bill, Bill C-203, which was extensively debated and talked out by the Government. On May 2, 1980, I brought in Bill C-250, an Act to amend the Divorce Act, alimony and maintenance orders, which has some six months of background work applied to it by outside lawyers who were interested in seeing a resolution to this most serious condition which exists across the country. The parliamentary counsel advising the Members worked over Bill C-250 of May 2, 1980, and put it in a form that would be acceptable in the context of the procedures of the House and would be acceptable to the Government.

I noticed under the Clause dealing with amendments to the Divorce Act in Bill C-364, that the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier has thought well enough of the subject matter and amendments to the Divorce Act that were in my Bill, C-250, in May of 1980, to have taken Clauses 15 and 15.1 and incorporated them into her Bill as amendments to the Divorce Act. I am pleased that she has thought well enough of the work which was put into those Clauses to do so.

I also note that an essential element has been left out. It is the Clause concerning payments into court which states that moneys payable by Her Majesty are attachable. I assume that the Hon. Member believes that the other two Acts which she is seeking to amend cover the particular points in that Clause.

While I am still dwelling on the history of this much needed legislation, may I remind Hon. Members that when Bill C-250 was being debated in the House—I was advised just prior to its debate in Private Members Hour that the Government was going to talk it out—the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) was most disturbed that this subject matter would not be allowed to go through to the standing committee.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: That is not true.

Mr. Huntington: You were not here. Sit and listen. The Minister of National Health and Welfare was most anxious that the subject matter of Bill C-250 should go to the standing committee for discussion. However, the Minister of Justice at that time said that the Government would not let it go through because a Government omnibus Bill was to be introduced which would amend many of these issues and that this issue would be one of the items dealt with in that amending omnibus Bill. This happened back on February 10, 1981 when the then Minister of Justice, in my presence, gave that answer to the Minister of National Health and Welfare behind the curtains on the Government side. He said that this issue would be dealt with in an amending omnibus Bill and that the matter would be cleared up then.

It is now March 23, 1983, and this tragic issue still exists in every Province, city, town and other parts of Canada. It still exists in this "just society". There are spouses who are left alone as single parents and have as many as four children whom they are trying to educate, clothe and keep warm. All across the country there are court judgments for maintenance orders which last for one, two or three months and then cease, with no further payment to the spouse who is trying his or her best to bring their children up so that they may have a chance in this land of opportunity. There are companies that pay extra moneys to single parent employees because these court maintenance orders are not being enforced and children are being prevented from having a better opportunity to be educated, clothed and provided with shelter. There are people on the verge of nervous breakdowns every time that a maintenance cheque does not arrive because they do not know what to do.

Bill C-250, which was a partial amendment to the Divorce Act which is in Bill C-364, was very simple. All that needed to be done was to repeal Section 15 of the Divorce Act and replace it with two Sections that allowed that, "Any order made under Sections 10 or 11 by any court may be registered in any other Superior Court in Canada and, when registered shall be deemed to have been made by that Superior Court and shall have the same course and effect as if the order had originated from it". We were simply attempting to amend the Act in order to allow maintenance orders to go through.

Further, Bill C-250 sought the inclusion of Section 15.1(1), which stated:

Notwithstanding any law or practice to the contrary, every court making an order under Sections 10 or 11 and every court deemed by Section 15 to have made such an order is responsible for the enforcement of the order within the Province where the court has jurisdiction.

It also sought the inclusion of Section 15.1(2) concerning no special default proceedings, which stated:

Without limiting the generality of subsection (1), the court shall not require a spouse to initiate a procedure for garnishment of wages or seizure and sale of property or any other procedure in order to compel enforcement of an order described in subsection (1), but shall, through its officers, upon default under such an order, issue such continuing orders and initiate such further action as it may, under the circumstances, deem necessary.

Section 15.1(3), dealing with payment into court, stated:

To better ensure the enforcement of its orders, the court may require that all moneys owing pursuant to an order made under section 10 or 11 be paid into court, whereupon the court shall forthwith transmit the moneys so paid to the spouse on behalf of whom or on behalf of whose children the order was made.

Section 15.2 also allowed them to attach and garnishee wages of people working for the Crown.

Why can backbench Members of all Parties in the House not be heard by the Government? Why can we not address this very serious social issue? Why can we not put some heart into our activities here and address this issue?

The United States has taken a much more detailed look at this issue than the Government is prepared to do in Canada. There are income withholding laws in the United States where some States move in and seize the entire bank account and take some serious and drastic actions. Why is the Government postponing action on some simple requests for amendments to the existing law which would give some heart and compassion to this growing segment of our society and would allow children of single parents to be brought up in some decency? I suppose I would call it pride of seed. I would hate to think that I was ever responsible for abandoning a child to another person unable to fully support that child. Where has our sense of pride, dignity and decency gone? Has it gone from the people of this country? We are dealing with a breakdown of the whole family unit. We have a rising number of cases of single parents trying to bring up their children and get them through the educational process, and it is a very difficult task. We should not allow that task to be made more difficult by court orders for payments being ignored, payments which are relied upon to carry out this human function. This has been causing the high levels of anxiety which are being experienced all across Canada.

The statistics are available in Canada. The Family Law Reform Commission has written extensively on the matter, and there is serious debate on the subject in the United States. It simply seems that here is one other Hon. Member proposing a series of amendments to three Acts, when the essential issue concerns the maintenance payments for children being looked after by single parents.

In its working paper on divorce, published in 1975, the Law Reform Commission of Canada stated that "one of the most serious problems facing a divorced spouse is the inability to enforce an existing maintenance order by some simple, quick and inexpensive procedure". That is what I was trying to do, and that is what Mr. Danson was trying to do back in the Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth Parliaments. Yet here we are, still facing this issue. The Commission reiterated the conclusion expressed in its working paper on the family court, that it is necessary to establish services and procedures whereby the court, through its officers, can directly secure the enforcement of its orders.

That is what these amendments were trying to do. That is what the amendment to the Divorce Act through this Bill, Bill 364, is trying to do. It is that simple.

The Province of Ontario, I understand, receives the money and delivers it out to the payee. However, the courts in Ontario will ensure that cheques arrive on time every month so as not to interfere with the maintenance needs of single parent family units. The court then pursues the person against whom the order is made. Therefore, why can we not agree to these amendments to Section 15 which are in Bill C-250 and which are now carried forward in Bill C-364? Can we not address this serious cancer which is out there, this condition which causes so much anxiety concerning growing children? Single parents often face the anxiety of having to go back at least two, three or four times a year for another order, which is not enforced. It does nothing but increase the level of our tolerance to law and order, to the rule of law.

It is time that we got rid of the havens in Canada. Someone can leave a family in Vancouver, out in British Columbia, and move into the Province of Quebec, and the laws of Quebec will offer protection against the moral obligation to support the family left behind.

Mr. Blaikie: Let's get rid of tax havens, too, Ron. How about tax havens?

Mr. Huntington: I am not referring to tax havens right now. That is your worry, and I am surprised—

Mr. Fisher: That's your next Bill.

Mr. Huntington: —that you are interrupting on a subject as humane as this one, because I know that you are a very humane person.

Mr. Blaikie: There's a moral analogy, that's all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Hon. Members should address their remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Huntington: Hon. Members of the NDP are worrying about tax havens. I guess this might be included as a tax haven, because it certainly is a dodge to move across provincial boundaries, and particularly into the Province of Quebec. As a result, there are all kinds of examples of great hardship being caused, because courts from other Provinces cannot attach the assets of such persons.

If we were to consider Bill C-364 seriously and went back to the Bill presented on May 2, 1980, Bill C-250, we would see that there are some ways in which the federal Government could move in this respect. There are some amendments to existing Acts which should be made. The omnibus Bill should come down or this Bill should go through to committee, and the Minister should be forced to do something about it.

I would urge Hon. Members to start taking this issue very seriously. I would be surprised to find very many of us in this Chamber who have not come across examples of the tragic trauma being experienced by all too many single parent families across this land. Why do we not get on with it and do something about it? Must we sit around and wait for another four or five years before something humane is done to correct this growing problem in a society which is losing the value systems which sustain family units? We seem to be going off in all directions, and most particularly toward more single parent families. All too many parents seem to want to escape the obligations they undertook when they conceived and brought children into this life.

If we are to do any leading and to address anything as serious as this problem, it is time the subject matter got through to a committee and we forced the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to do something serious in the way of addressing amendments to the laws. One cannot handle the detail on the floor of the House, as you know, Mr. Speaker, but in committee we should certainly be able to hear the family law experts and some of the people involved with Bill C-250 so that we can put in this amendment and do much to relieve or even remove this whole problem caused by the breakdown in our courts' ability to sustain the even flow of maintenance payments stipulated in their orders.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also extend congratulations on the part of our Party to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette). I am very pleased that there is unanimous consent to refer this Bill to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. It seems a very practical step toward helping to solve a very grave problem about which we are all very concerned.

Bill C-364 will authorize the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) to enforce maintenance orders by compelling employers to deduct maintenance money or alimony owing to a spouse from an employee's paycheque. These moneys, as we know, would be deducted from the employee's paycheque, remitted to the tax department, and then forwarded as maintenance payments to the spouse and the children, the spouse usually being the mother.

Recent statistics from Statistics Canada show the urgency of this situation because of the very dramatic increase in the number of marriages ending in divorce and the number of children, of course, from those marriages, who need to be assured of regular maintenance care. We were recently told that 40 per cent of marriages end in divorce, a 500 per cent increase since the divorce laws were liberated in 1968 in Canada. This involves some 500,000 children of separated parents who need ongoing support. In 1976, however, we were told that there was a 75 per cent default in payments on the part of spouses, again usually the fathers, who were responsible, through agreement, to pay maintenance for their children and families.

On the other side, of course, is the tremendous expense incurred by spouses who need maintenance payments if they must go to lawyers at $500 a throw in order to follow up and have something done to ensure payment. Therefore, it is a very urgent situation, both as a human problem and also as a financial problem. It involves a great cost to society, as well.

This Bill appears to be a very practical step toward overcoming the very high incidence of non-payment of maintenance to families, payments which are really in default because there is no way in which Provinces or women can now enforce court orders.

Many women who are divorced or separated suffer very severe economic and emotional pressures. I am sure these are reflected in their children in most cases, because support moneys which they need to receive from their husbands or ex-husbands are not forthcoming. We know that in many situations women who are unable to receive support from husbands must resort to applying for welfare, although they are very reluctant to do so. We know of course how inadequate welfare payments are. The very high cost of living, particularly of housing, makes it extremely difficult to survive on welfare payment.

Those women who are working, of course, carry a very heavy and unfair burden and financial responsibility if they are raising children as single parents. We know how inadequate the pay is for most women. They are usually ghettoized in the lowest paid jobs. Many who have been raising children have not been in the work force for long or have been in and out of the work force, and they certainly do not receive equal pay for work of equal value to which they are entitled and which is needed to raise a family and pay for all the costs of child rearing.

So we know that this situation creates extreme hardships for families, in terms of security, and this results, I am sure, in very hostile family relationships. As the wife waits for maintenance payments to pay for rent, food and education, she certainly must feel anything but good about the father of her children, and I am sure this is transmitted to the children.

This Bill is long overdue. It is unfortunate that Members have had to wait three years for it to be introduced as a Private Member's Bill. I am sorry the Hon. Member is not here at the moment, but I commend her in sisterhood for her initiative.

The proposed payment arrangement of Bill C-364, which would treat maintenance payments as an income tax deduction, will benefit society as well as the families concerned.

The Hon. Members seem to be somewhat worried about jurisdictional questions. I would think that this Bill would be received very positively on the part of the Provinces. As a former social worker, I know that this proposal would certainly relieve provincial family courts of repeated costly appeals on the matter of unpaid maintenance. It would also reduce welfare costs in many cases, such as when the husband is working and can pay support, and the related costs of the administration in these two systems. It would also relieve the cost and the frustration and worry that provincial Governments and their agencies have when they cannot enforce maintenance payments. Social service departments have to go from Province to Province trying to cut down errant husbands who are Province-hopping spouses, who really are responsible for repaying welfare costs and very rarely are able to do so.

I would think fathers also may be relieved at this procedure for paying maintenance costs regularly. Use of the income tax system would be a very neutral, business-like kind of arrangement which would avoid domestic disputes. It is a way for a father to pay for children's support routinely, relieving his feelings of guilt, which I am sure many fathers have, and showing his children that he cares for them. If he does not earn enough to pay income tax, this also will be documented objectively and help to relieve the guilt or misunderstanding within the family.

The federal application of this maintenance enforcement also is essential since it provides for uniformity of payments across Canada and standard access to all families, regardless of what Province either the family or the supporting-spouse lives in. The present system of court orders for maintenance of a dependent spouse or a child is, for all practical purposes, often not worth the paper it is written on. The enforcement of maintenance obligations is the weakest link in the legal chain, we are told by legal authorities. A 1980 Law Reform Commission study paper states that without a doubt the most effective method of collecting maintenance would be to employ the machinery of the tax collector.

Is it any wonder that women often give up and either resign themselves to be dependent on welfare or accept a standard of living for themselves and their children which is far below that which fairness and justice entitles them to, to say nothing of the law, of course? We feel very strongly that this Bill is needed. Reciprocal inter-provincial arrangements which are now in place have not operated effectively. Often it takes years before the defaulting spouse pays anything, and children and wives have to eat in the meantime. Existing garnishment of wages also is not good enough. It is necessary to repeat the process for each month's maintenance payment, which can result in prohibitive costs to the judgment creditor.

Although Manitoba has proposed some effective alternatives, we believe that to have a uniform system across the country this Bill is certainly of great value. There are intolerable frustrations, undue technicalities of procedures, expenses and delays, and the intransigence of men who seem to refuse to meet their obligations, especially to their children. In Canada of course, as we know, and especially those of us who live in the west, we have a very high geographic mobility rate, so there are very many spouses who are not living in the same Province as their families are.

Of course there are limitations to this Bill and we should see it as a start but not as a complete solution to adequate maintenance payments. For example, there is no assured maintenance for families where the responsible spouse does not pay income tax. We know of course there will be many, many people who are unemployed now who simply are not earning enough to pay income tax and therefore cannot pay support and would not be able to pay this through the Income Tax Act.

This whole question of support for children would not be nearly as urgent a problem, of course, if women themselves were paid more equitably for the work that they do, and if, like men, they earned enough to be independent and to be able to support their own children if they chose to do so. This is a very major social problem and an inequity in our whole economic system to which we must address ourselves. Although it is a band-aid solution that would help, it is certainly not to be forgotten that many women themselves want to be able to raise their own children and not necessarily have to depend completely on the spouse.

Therefore, we must continue to press for affirmative action programs. We have repeated this over and over again in this House, and the Government listens very little to our requests for mandatory affirmative action. We must also have decent paying jobs with access to promotion for women in the same way as we do for men. We must also make sure that equal pay for work of equal value is not just a principle to which the Government gives lip service and then ignores. We have to make sure that this is enforced so that women have adequate incomes and that the many, many women who raise their children on their own will be able to afford to do this.

Another limitation in the Bill is the fact that it may be a double jeopardy for many poor families, where both the man and the woman are poor. There is a very excellent article I would like to refer to in the March 22 issue of the Citizen by Leonard Shifrin in which he refers to the statistics that I have just mentioned, that in 86 per cent of divorces involving children their custody is awarded to the women. He says that although the man is ordered to contribute to their financial support, "Husbands default on these payments with regularity and impunity." Forty-two per cent of single parent families headed by women are living below the poverty line, and that is a good place to start, Mr. Shifrin says.

Mr. Shifrin goes on:

The underlying problem is that most ex-husbands remarry, and few earn enough to support two families.

That leaves the first family dependent on a woman's earnings. And these, on average, are only 60 per cent of what men make.

He said that the Law Reform Commission estimated that three-quarters of the men who should be making maintenance payments are in default. We talked before about the high incidence of the divorce rate which is rising.

Mr. Shifrin concludes by saying:

The new reality is arriving rapidly. The 1981 census reports that in the preceding five years the number of single-parent families increased at more than three times the rate of the two-parent version.

What lies ahead may well prove grim. But, if so, it will be because, like dinosaurs, we fail to adjust to the new reality.

• (1720)

We know that when poor families are broken in half, they become even poorer. Both partners have a limited income to cover two households, sometimes with chidren. Unemployment and illness also make it difficult for people to keep up maintenance payments. It is important that we support this Bill as one step in the right direction, but we must not forget that a much more comprehensive social policy is needed to ensure adequate incomes for families. We have talked about this a number of times in this House. This Party is doing intensive research in an attempt to find a solution to the whole question of tax reform as it affects families and how we can gradually replace the regressive child tax deductions with increased Family Allowance payments. That would certainly be one solution.

We must begin again to establish a guaranteed income system. It is more important than ever before, as we look at the full technological revolution and the fact that many people will not be fully employed as they may have been in the past. Family law requires comprehensive reform.

This Bill has particular relevance to the very urgent and dangerous situation facing battered wives. I again refer to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs and the study, of which we are all aware, which shows that one out of ten wives in Canada today is battered. Most of these women remain in deplorable situations because they have no other means of support, nowhere to go, no refuge for themselves and their children. They know that it is very unlikely that they would receive maintenance payments and support from their husbands. In fact, they may feel too intimidated to return to the situation. However, if they knew they could receive regular maintenance payments through the income tax system, they might feel less trapped. In fact, I am sure they would feel they had more choice. Undoubtedly they would take the difficult step of leaving in the interests of their own physical and emotional health, and in particular the welfare of their children if they could be assured of adequate support after they left the violent family situation.

I refer Hon. Members to a report presented to the standing committee by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, prepared by Debra Lewis. It reads:

On top of this, the economic reality means that battered women, who must for their own safety leave their marriages, must choose between a life of fear and one of absolute or relative poverty for themselves and their children. There is no need for us to once again cite the evidence to show that women who are alone are significantly more likely to live below the poverty line. Even women who may manage a somewhat higher standard of living for themselves still know that it may be considerably less than if they stayed in their marriages. Most women are prepared to take the consequences of this decison for themselves. However, it is much more difficult to decide that their children too must go without comforts or even necessities in order to escape the violence. The fact that husbands in general do not generally comply with child support or maintenance payments certainly makes this economic reality worse—

Homelessness is an extension of the fact that battered women do not have adequate financial resources at their disposal. The National Council of Welfare report "Women and Poverty" demonstrated clearly that almost half of single parent families headed by women live below the poverty line. Separated and divorced women in general seldom receive adequate child support and maintenance payments. Enforcement mechanisms for even court-ordered maintenance and support are generally non-existent.

In referring this matter to the Justice Committee, I hope that the Committee will look at the report from the Standing Committee with regard to the situation of battered wives. I suggest that they look at two recommendations, in particular having to do with the jurisdiction of federally appointed judges over family matters.

Recommendation No. 15 states that a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada has called in question the right of provincially-appointed family court judges to issue civil orders designed to exclude a spouse from the family home or prevent him from harming his family. We hope the Committee will look at this recommendation which is directly related to federal court jurisdiction.

Recommendation No. 17 states that, in light of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada referred to in recommendation 15, the proposed federal-provincial conference should also address the problem of establishing a validly constituted civil court which is able to issue orders affecting the possession of the family home and prevent a man from harming his wife, at least as quickly and with as little cost to the wife as provincial courts do now.

In closing I wish to say that the NDP supports this Bill. We do not see it as a final solution. We would like to take a very comprehensive look at the whole question of support for separated familes, particularly those with children, and income support generally. We ask that some of the recommendations in the study on battered wives be considered by the Justice Committee at the same time because they are related. The situation in Canada is very serious. The number of single-parent families is increasing. Under the present system, there is absolutely no way of enforcing regular maintenance, particularly for women with children. Again, we commend the Hon. Member for introducing this Bill in the interests of the children of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to offer my warmest thanks to my distinguished colleague from Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) for the interesting piece of legislation she has put before the House today. Indeed, it is with great satisfaction that I note the deep interest showed by the hon. member in the matter of the recovery of alimony and maintenance. Undoubtedly, several of our Members, including the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), are equally interested in this matter.

[English]

It had been my intention to say some words this afternoon about the enforcement provisions of the laws affecting divorce matters, particularly with regard to those who abscond or who in other ways default on court orders which, as several Members have noted, are enforced by the provincial courts. However, given the limited time available, I shall not attempt to enter into the details of the Bill before us including various legal questions that the Bill raises. I shall simply note that there has been some consultation, and I believe agreement, among Members today to the effect that the subject matter, although not the Bill itself, be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Accordingly, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Verdun-Saint Paul (Mr. Savard):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-364, an Act respecting the recovery of alimony and maintenance, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs".

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion, as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill is withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Notices of Motions preceding No. 87 be allowed to stand by unamimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

TRANSFER OF PORTIONS TO UNITED NATIONS FUND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government, in pursuance of a policy of peace and peace-making, should consider the advisability of allowing residents of Canada who pay income tax to transfer a portion of their tax to a United Nations fund that is used for peace research and of having this amount calculated by taking the percentage of the national budget allocated to defence, which is currently 8.8 per cent.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first of all, on a point of order, I presume that there will be an extension of time to provide the full hour for debate on this motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Under the Standing Orders governing our proceedings, the Chair has no choice but to put the adjournment question at six o'clock.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity, even though time is short, to debate this motion calling on the Government to establish a fund for peace research. Today is a particularly appropriate day to debate such a motion. First of all, it is appropriate because of the visit of the United States Vice-President, George Bush, who is twisting Canada's arm to secure permission to test the Cruise missile on our territory. Secondly, it is appropriate because in the United States Congress today there is a continuing debate over the size of their defence budget, whether or not some $9.3 billion should be slashed from the $230 billion currently being allocated. Yesterday would also have been an appropriate day to debate this Bill because yesterday the death train arrived at Bangor, Washington, carrying nuclear warheads for the Trident submarine base. Last week would have been an appropriate time to debate this Bill when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) spoke before the committee to defend his Estimates and refused to rule out the possibility of a first-strike nuclear attack by NATO. In fact, he explicitly reserved that possibility. In short, Mr. Speaker, this is an appropriate day to debate this motion because, like every day, the arms race proceeds apace. Unless we take action to stop it, our world is indeed doomed.

The motion asks the Government to allow Canadian taxpayers to earmark the percentage of income tax which would normally go to the Department of National Defence and divert that money into a United Nations fund for peace research. The important thing here is the principle; it does not need to be a United Nations fund. A Canada peace tax fund or a list of recognized non-governmental organizations with peace research activities could be established. The important thing is that Canadian taxpayers should be able to transfer tax money from so-called defence to purposes of peace.

This proposal is designed for two groups of people. These groups are not mutually exclusive, but rather one merges into the other. First of all, there is the group of conscientious objectors. There is a long association of people associated with the historic peace churches and conscientious objection to war. Conscientious objectors have won the right not to have to serve in the Armed Forces but to give alternate service during time of armed conflict. This principle should also apply to the paying of taxes. Already in Canada a group of people who have objections of conscience to paying money for militaristic purposes have established a peace tax fund. It is based on the principle of freedom of conscience, which last year we formally recognized in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

This peace tax fund has a growing list of adherents, Mr. Speaker. It is not yet recognized by Government, but I believe it should be. In addition to those who are conscientious objectors, there is a wide class of people who do not oppose all use of force by the state but who object very strongly to the present insanity of the arms race. They are a group of people who believe that their money can contribute much more to Canada's security and world peace if it is directed toward such things as peace research, international exchanges and visits to promote understanding, goodwill and trust, and toward pilot projects which could lead to reconciliation in areas of strife. They believe the money could do more good if it could be used to endow peace research chairs in universities. At present the Department of National Defence supports some five chairs in strategic studies. Why do we not do something in terms of supporting peace research? They believe that their money could be better used for some kind of independent analysis of the arms race.

We often hear criticism of Canada's Armed Forces, Mr. Speaker. Just this last week a United States source criticized our navy as a collection of miscellaneous cats and dogs. Yet this next fiscal year we will spend some $7.8 billion on defence, an 11 per cent increase over the $7 billion spent last year. It is a fact that 8.8 per cent of our tax dollars goes to defence; that is over $300 for every man, woman and child in Canada. But still this is not enough to satisfy those people who look to our Armed Forces to provide us with the kind of security we need to live a decent life. It is true that it is not enough and it will never be enough, and we only need to look at the United States right now and the debate whether over $230 billion is enough to understand that we can continually escalate the amount of money we spend on defence and it will still not be enough. The simple fact of the matter is that we do not find security through armaments. Whether we limp or whether we sprint, the arms race is not the answer to our problems.

I would like to read just a couple of short paragraphs from a speech given by the late Lord Louis Mountbatten on May 11, 1979. He said:

> Next month I enter my eightieth year. I am one of the few survivors of the First World War who rose to high command in the Second and I know how impossible it is to pursue military operations in accordance with fixed plans and agreements. In warfare the unexpected is the rule and no one can anticipate what an opponent's reaction will be to the unexpected.

So much for some of our planned limited nuclear warfare. He goes on:

> As a military man who has given half a century of active service I say in all sincerity that the nuclear arms race has no military purpose. Wars cannot be fought with nuclear weapons. Their existence only adds to our perils because of the illusions which they have generated.
> There are powerful voices around the world who still give credence to the old Roman precept—if you desire peace, prepare for war. This is absolute nuclear nonsense and I repeat—it is a disastrous misconception to believe that by increasing the total uncertainty one increases one's own certainty.

• (1740)

We cannot increase our security as a nation by increasing the insecurity of our world.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has talked about suffocating the arms' race, but if anything has suffocated under his leadership it is our halting effort at disarmament. The ambassador of disarmament has a budget of $300,000 per year, which is approximately what the Department of National Defence spends on its magazine. That is what I call suffocation, Mr. Speaker.

This past winter, in 130 communities 75 per cent of the people voted in one way or another for disarmament. On the specific question of Cruise missile testing in Canada, 52 per cent of Canadians are opposed. The Government pretends that these figures do not mean anything. It claims that it is easy to vote for disarmament, and it asks how serious the commitment is behind that 75 per cent.

This motion challenges the Government to give people the opportunity to vote with their money. If only 1 per cent of Canadians chose to divert 8.8 per cent of their income tax to peace research, that would bring in approximately $2.7 million. That money could go into peace research and should be compared with the measly $300,000 that is presently allocated to the ambassador for disarmament.

I should like to deal briefly with some objections raised by people who say that the peace research fund sounds like a good idea but that it would be difficult to administer. There are many ways it could be administered. All Members of the House have benefited from provisions in the Income Tax Act that allow people to make contributions to political Parties and to claim tax credits for them. We could have a similar provision to allow people to make contributions to the United Nations fund or to recognize non-Governmental organizations and claim a 100 per cent tax credit.

The second objection is that anyone with an axe to grind concerning some Government expenditure would want similar provisions. For example, someone who objected to the official languages policy might demand that his money not be used for that purpose. The critics fear a hodge podge where everyone opts out of paying taxes for one project or another.

In answer to these criticisms I propose that the Government should bring in a Bill to alter the Income Tax Act and make this diversion possible. The issue of national security and world peace is the most serious issue of our times. Such a provision demands the time and attention of Parliament. It would rule out the possibility of less serious issues receiving the same consideration.

The third objection is that the arms' race would continue in any event. In a sense that is true. The danger of the arms' race is not likely to end overnight, but with this proposal a significant number of people would be able to register their disapproval of it in a way that the Government understands. They would be able to make a positive contribution to peace and work toward that time when the arms' race would no longer be necessary. It depends upon mutual distrust, but if we accept this motion we can begin to build trust and understanding. In the long term, this would lead to a reduction in the arms' race.

The final consideration that many people raise is employment. With two million people already unemployed, we do not want more people laid off from DND establishments or defence-related industries. I admit that this is a most valid concern in today's economy, but two factors need to be considered. First of all, in the foreseeable future, Canada will continue to need the Armed Forces for United Nations peacekeeping duties, for establishing and maintaining territorial sovereignty, air-sea rescue facilities and dealing with disasters. There would be no immediate dismantling of domestic facilities.

As well, it is important for Canadians to realize that more jobs per dollar are created through peace-related industry and activity than from military-related activity. One of the areas of research that the peace research funding should be directed toward is the transition from a military to a peace economy.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to accept the motion and to recognize its importance. By accepting it we would implement in a political manner the Prime Minister's suggestion that we suffocate the arms' race. We would recognize that Canada's way to security is not by limping along behind the United States but that our security can only be found through world peace. A peace research fund such as I and others have proposed would be one small step in that direction, and I urge the House to take it.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to challenge some of the statements made by the Hon. Member who proposed the motion. He has raised a number of issues that cannot all be answered in the short time available to me.

The first of these is the statement made by a naval officer in the United States, Commander Byron, who happens to have expressed a personal opinion which has not been confirmed or substantiated by the United States Navy or their external affairs officers. He is a submariner and has a very periscopic view of forces. He sees the force only as a submarine commander does, with a very narrow and limited view. He would like to see the Canadian navy converted essentially into a submarine supporting agency for the United States Navy. This has never been the intention nor has there ever been any suggestion of it by NATO commanders. The three submarines that we have are training submarines and take part in submarine detection.

I would prefer to quote a former commander of the Atlantic supporting units of NATO who indicated that there is no better marine unit in the world than the Canadian marine unit in detecting submarines. He has given them full credit for a job well done, particularly emphasizing the professionalism of the men who carry out the duties allotted to them. The safety of transportation across the Atlantic depends on the submarines, surface vessels and the Aurora planes.

The statements made by Commander Byron are not indicative of the true state of our navy. It has been allotted a task by NATO, but it must also protect the sovereignty of our islands, protect our fishery patrols, support whatever needs there are in search and rescue, as well as take part in the collective security of the country, along with our commitments to NATO.

However, as far as the Hon. Member's motion is concerned, while doubtless prompted by the highest of motives, it is one which I suggest it would not be prudent for the House to support. The course of action which the motion would have the House advocate is one that it would be irresponsible for the Government to follow. The fault lies not in the motion for more peace research or indeed in relation to support of the United Nations. The fault lies in the implicit idea that our efforts to come to grips with the causes of international conflict are an alternative to, or a substitute for, Canada's efforts to preserve our security by the maintenance of our contribution to collective defence.

Some Members may say that the motion does not necessarily call for a transfer of resources from the defence effort to anything else. This is quite true. It does not. However, it relates one activity to another in a way which could create an utterly false impression that the Government's defence policy is in some mysterious way not concerned with peace—the making of peace and the keeping of peace. Members will be aware that Canadian security policy has been and continues to be aimed exclusively at the maintenance of world peace and, in particular, the prevention of a war that would engulf Canada.

As the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) stated recently, we have achieved our aim by providing, in concert with our allies, a believable and therefore effective deterrent to the threat of aggression which we have seen the Soviet Union and its allies as potentially raising against us. At the same time, we have pursued with vigour and persistence the objective of arms' control and disarmament arrangements which would produce equal or greater security for all, while lowering reliance on military power, particularly nuclear power, for that purpose.

The Government is convinced that as long as there is a threat to our security at home by way of a nuclear attack on North America, or there remains a threat of aggressive action against any of our European NATO allies, the preservation of our collective security must be found first in collective deterrence and defence measures. Unattractive as a policy of deterrence may be for keeping the peace, it has the advantage of having worked. It is also likely to continue to work as long as there is as much thought given to preserving a deterrent as there is to finding means to get around it. As costly as defence measures may be, there is no substitute for them in a world in which the application of military force is an option in the pursuit of national objectives. What we seek is stability through a balance in the potential for the use of force between states in order to make resorting to force an unattractive option.

The Government accepts its responsibilities to see that Canada bears an appropriate share of the collective defence and deterrence burden. But the Government knows that arms alone will not provide certainty that a military balance will remain stable and reliable in the long term. Lasting security and simple common sense require that the attempt be made to create a stable military equilibrium at the lowest possible level by means of balanced limitations of military potential. We have seen that such agreements, if they are to be of any value, must take into account the military efforts of the other side. They must also provide for unreduced security by maintaining a balance of deterrent and defence capabilities at every stage of moving toward lower levels of military effort. As has been said many times, the Government sees arms' control, disarmament measures and deterrence by military means as mutually reinforcing elements of a policy having security and stability as its basic objectives.

I am sure Members of the House will have heard how, in pursuit of security and stability at lower levels of military effort, Canada plays a full role in the work of the United Nations and the Committee on Disarmament. The pursuit of an easing of tension between East and West is an important objective of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, CSCE, in which Canada also participates. As a Member of NATO we also take part in alliance consultations on the bilateral Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty, START, and the Intermediate-range Nuclear Force Treaty, INF, nuclear arms negotiations. We participate directly in the Mutual and Balanced Force Reduction, MBFR, negotiations. In short, we continue to believe that our current approach of attempting to maintain a stable military balance, coupled with active pursuit of negotiations to reduce the levels of both nuclear and conventional forces, offers the best possible prospects for peace now and for the foreseeable future. This is the policy for peace which the Government has long pursued and will continue to pursue.

There is another aspect of the peacemaking process in which Canada as a country and the Canadian Forces as instruments of Canadian policy have been particularly active for many years and to which I would draw the attention of Hon. Members. Among the more significant achievements of the international community since the Second World War has been the development of the concept of peacekeeping—the use of truce supervisory bodies, military observers or larger military forces to prevent or control conflict among nations. The concept evolved in a pragmatic and ad hoc fashion. Soon after the establishment of the United Nations, it became clear that fundamental political differences among great powers would preclude close co-operation among them to maintain international peace and security.

Peacekeeping techniques were developed as a means of enabling the international community, with full consent of the Governments directly concerned, to take positive action in disputes threatening international peace and security. Since 1945 Canada has participated in ten United Nations peacekeeping operations. It has also been a member of the International Commissions for Supervision and Control in Indo-China, which were established outside the framework of the United Nations.

Our service personnel continue to serve in the following significant United Nations missions: United Nations Truce Supervision Organization, where 20 Canadian military officers are deployed with other nationals in Israel and surrounding countries; United Nations Disengagement Force, where approximately 220 logistics, signals and observer personnel serve in a multinational contingent, and this contingent is supported by regular CF strategic airlifts; and United Nations Force in Cyprus, where an infantry unit of approximately 550 personnel serves as part of a multinational contingent which maintains the security of the border area between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots. The Canadian contingent is rotated every six months and resupplied weekly by Canadian Forces strategic airlift. Also, Canadian Forces continue to maintain one infantry battalion and supporting elements on standby for these such other peacekeeping operations as may be undertaken by the Government.

In conclusion, it is the Government's view that Canada has made and will continue to make a significant contribution to peace through the implementation of its defence policy. Canada's national security and the security of our allies require action on many fronts. We must make it clear that an attack on us would be a venture too costly to be justified, no matter what the aggressor might hope to achieve. We must pursue means of reducing the risks of devastation through deliberate or inadvertent action by arms' control and disarmament arrangements.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2), be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commence my remarks on third reading of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, by looking at some general principles underlying the Government's approach to the income tax system. The Government wrote the amendments with the basic premise in mind that the Canadian tax system is better with lower rates and with tax levied on a broader base. The desired result of lowering taxes by spreading the load over a wider base is reflected in a number of benefits to be enjoyed by the average taxpayer once the amendments are passed, hopefully as quickly as possible.

For instance, the Bill will bring into law the lower personal income tax rates proposed in the November, 1981 budget for the 1982 taxation year. These reduce the tax in many income brackets and represent a significant total saving of $1 billion a year for an estimated 5.8 million Canadians. Thus the general approach.

To benefit one-earner families in low and middle-income brackets, the federal tax reduction has been revised to a flat $200 per taxpayer, plus up to $200 for a dependent spouse as was proposed, again, in the November, 1981 budget. When the new system is in place, it will result in a tax saving of $200 per taxpayer with dependent spouses and incomes of up to $20,000.

Of course, there is more good news for taxpayers with children whose healthy appetites and ability to grow out of clothing are a constant reminder to parents of necessary budgetary considerations for both national and household budget preparation. The refundable Child Tax Credit is increased in this legislation by $50 to $343 a year per child effective for the 1982 tax year. The Government is conscious of the fact that some of the taxation proposals contained in the November, 1981 and June, 1982 budgets would create hardship on the average Canadian during current difficult economic times. That was the reason motivating the Government not to proceed with some of the proposals in the earlier budget. I would quickly refer to the initial proposal to tax benefits received by employees whose employers contribute to health and dental plans. Had it been enacted, the cost to taxpayers would have been an estimated $100 million. We have indicated that we would not proceed with that proposal.

Small business, one of the cornerstones of our society, will gain a number of incentives in the Bill, signalling the Government's appreciation of the difficult challenges facing small business, particularly at this time in light of the world-wide recession. Let me give a few examples of some of the sections in the amendments before us. Provisions for the Small Business Bond program which encourages assistance to small firms in financial difficulty are extended to the end of 1983. The program had been designed to expire at the end of 1982; it is now extended for a year. It reduces interest rates by 6 per cent to 7 per cent through the provision of a tax exemption to lenders.

The limit on annual income qualifying for the low small-business tax rate is increased to $200,000 from $150,000. The total accumulated income that can qualify is raised to $1 million from the present amount in the legislation of $750,000. The tax rate of 12.5 per cent on dividends paid by small business corporations will apply only to income generated in years commencing after December 31, 1982. This, we believe, and other changes, will simplify the tax while it will address concerns expressed by small business groups and Members of the House of Commons who, for example, participated in the hearings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Businessmen generally, Mr. Speaker, will benefit from a number of changes proposed in this legislation. For example, the rules governing taxation of work in progress for professionals was modified to exempt certain categories after study by the Committee, including doctors, dentists, lawyers, accountants, veterinarians, chiropractors; and, in addition, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has indicated the Government's intention to add to that category notaries for the Province of Quebec.

Interest expenses incurred for productive purposes will not be restricted. Reserves will continue to be permitted within specific time limits on the instalment sale of assets. This proposal will specifically benefit farmers and small-businessmen.

A new system of forward-averaging was introduced which simplifies the averaging process and eliminates payment of commissions. Exemption of small business to the corporate surtax is continued, and the surtax rate of 1983 is reduced to 2.5 per cent. The taxable benefit for an employee with a company car will be 2 per cent of the cost of the car or two-thirds of leasing costs. This is a reduction from the original proposal in the 1981 budget presented to the House.

As the Minister of Finance told the House of Commons in speaking to the Bill, it is of great importance not only because of the many positive changes it proposes in the tax system but also because its passage will end the uncertainty that lingers on through this process of consultation since this legislation was first introduced. He added that the Bill also provides an important example of the mechanism of consultation in shaping a tax system that works better for all of us. Indeed, the Minister carried on that process in the first months of this year in preparation for the upcoming budget and met with a wide variety of Canadians representing a particular interest in the community right across the country.

The time span covered by the process, that is from the original introduction of the 1981 amendments to date, reflects the degree of intensive and comprehensive consultation that was followed. Department of Finance officials met directly with a wide range of individuals and organizations who had advice to give on tax issues. In addition, Members of the House of Commons and the Senate gave consideration on both a formal and informal basis to many of the issues before they were finally brought forward in Bill C-139.

The Finance Committee of the House worked through the summer. It reported in the early fall. The Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce also held hearings on the original Ways and Means motion which signalled the contents of the Bill. Members individually and through their Party representatives held meetings across the country and solicited input to the original proposals.

The Lortie Commission, comprised of private sector individuals, made recommendations on the matter of inflation and the taxation of personal investment income. Several other groups of outside tax experts and members of the business community were appointed to examine important tax proposals. I submit that the proof that this consultation was for real is in the legislation which we have before us. Indeed, we solicited and received much advice and the proof of the pudding that we listened to the advice are the amendments before us which have taken that advice into account.

As I indicated earlier, the basic premise of the Bill is that the Canadian tax system is better with lower rates of tax levied over a broader base. In order to broaden the base, we decided to apply a principle that supposedly has been the cornerstone of the income tax system. It is that the purpose of income tax in Canada is to tax income.

However, we all know that there are certain segments of the economy where this framework has not been applied or has not been applied as strenuously or diligently as it should have been. There were certain tax advantages enjoyed by some Canadians investing in various financial instruments, such as guaranteed investment certificates, term deposits, bonds, deferred annuities and certain contracts of life insurance.

Therefore, in November, 1981 and again in June, 1982 the Government signalled its intention of taking a new direction in the matter of taxation by broadening the tax base but, at the same time, lowering tax rates. In tightening the system, it became apparent that as we eliminated tax advantages in some areas, the purchase of life insurance purely as an investment instrument for tax deferral purposes was becoming increasingly attractive, particularly to those Canadians who had a good background of disposable income available for those investment purposes. The Government was then faced with the task of preventing unfair advantage being taken of the situation without losing sight of the fact, of course, that most Canadians who buy life insurance as protection for their dependants should not be penalized in the process of the adjustment that we had recommended.

As an indication of the Government's success in approaching this difficult aspect of balancing the interests of taxpayers and those in the life insurance industry in particular, I would like to refer to an article in the December 18 issue of The Financial Post of which the headline states: "Life Industry Comes Out on the Bright Side". The report begins:

> For whole life policy holders, life agents and life companies, Ottawa's package of Income Tax Act amendments last week was well worth the wait—all sides seem to have scored little victories.

This was done, I might add, after lengthy and productive consultation with the life insurance industry and I would like to highlight the results, if I may.

The most important point to keep in mind at the outset is that the legislation does not affect any policies purchased before December 2, 1982. The vast majority of policies purchased after that date will not be taxed on accumulating income on a regular basis. This is the result of the amendment that defines an exempt category which people in the industry indicate will exempt the broad base, up to 90 per cent, of anticipated business in the industry.

The policies exempted from tax are essentially those paid for by premiums over 20 years or more. This was a major concession on the part of the Government. There is an income build-up in policies exempted as there is in other policies, but by saying that this income will never be taxed if the policy is held until death, the Government is providing an important incentive for the purchase of life insurance protection. The life insurance industry has played an important leadership role both in Canada and in many other countries. It is in recognition of this very important role which the life insurance industry has played that the Government has moved to that exemption.

I would like to say a few words about this issue of complexity and the time it has taken for this legislation to be processed through the House of Commons and its committees in the normal legislative process. Some Hon. Members argue that the legislation is too complex and that the amount of time for consideration is inadequate. There is no doubt but that the amendments are voluminous. There is no doubt but that they are difficult to understand. However, as I have already indicated, the amendments have been examined by Members of Parliament, they have been examined by Senators in committee, and they have been extensively examined by the public for the last 16 months.

Since the introduction of the Bill on December 7, 1982 this House has heard over 99 Hon. Members speaking during second reading stage alone.

Mr. Smith: Filibuster! Shame!

Mr. Cosgrove: We are now moving to third stage consideration of the Bill. At second stage there were 99 Hon. Members of this House who spoke on the legislation.

Mr. Malone: How many for the Liberal Party?

Mr. Cosgrove: Seventy-four of the Hon. Members who spoke were from the Official Opposition.

Mr. Malone: How many?

Mr. Cosgrove: Seventeen were from the NDP.

Mr. Thacker: You don't care. That's your trouble.

Mr. Cosgrove: I would argue, in reason, that there has been ample time, ample opportunity and ample debate, no matter the complexity and the length of the amendments which are before the House.

Mr. Young: You must be joking, Paul.

Mr. Cosgrove: Why, then, do we need passage of this legislation? Why does the Government urge quick consideration and a final disposition of the legislation? The Canadian taxpayer and the Canadian economy, I submit, are waiting for the tax refunds, refunds which will total $6.5 billion and which are important to the Canadian economy at this time.

Mr. Thacker: Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. Cosgrove: Those refunds will be enjoyed by some 11 million Canadian taxpayers. That will be a significant contribution to the movement of goods, the purchase of goods and the manufacture of goods in the Canadian economy.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why did you take it off them in the first place?

Mr. Cosgrove: In addition, we in this House all know that Canadian businessmen have requested an end to the uncertainty, the process which began 16 months ago—

Mr. Thacker: Eighteen.

Mr. Cosgrove: —with the introduction of these amendments to the income tax legislation.

Almost every business group which made submissions to the Minister of Finance in the last two months, as he began his consultative process in preparation of his next budget, indicated their wish that this House conclude disposition of these amendments to the Act as quickly as possible. Private sector entrepreneurs have asked for and need passage of this legislation to plan their actions, their investments in Canadian industry, investments which we know will create jobs.

Finally, we need passage of this legislation in order to move this House to consider new legislation, new business. The budget is being prepared by the Minister who is awaiting disposition of this Bill.

Mr. Thacker: It will be a dandy.

Mr. Cosgrove: Other legislation is before the House, including the request for interim borrowing authority pending production of the next budget, pending consideration by the House and by the public of the budget with which the Minister is now engaged.

We want to get on with this new work and with the task of preparing a foundation for recovery. We have many signals indicating the start of that recovery. We feel that it is important that we now assist that process of recovery. We believe that the business to which the House should address itself is that new business which will look to the future. We cannot allow the promise and the promising signs which are now apparent in the economy to slip from our fingers.

Some Members of Parliament have argued that the process, the complexity of this legislation by itself, creates delay and uncertainty. I would argue that this is simply a rationalization. Uncertainty, I argue, is created when legislation is stalled or when it is forced to stand in limbo through deliberate delaying tactics and political point scoring. The shame is that it is not Hon. Members who suffer as a result of that game playing, it is the ordinary Canadian and the ordinary taxpayer. It is the unemployed person in Canada, and there are too many of them, many of whom are awaiting return of refunds which cannot be made until this legislation is passed.

There has been ample time for debate and examination, in my submission. There is a real urgency to the passage of this legislation. I urge all Members of the House to get on with the task at hand and move this legislation as speedily as it can to a vote.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this Income Tax Act we have before us represents the most major change in our income tax system since 1971. It brings with it a philosophical change in how we determine income. The previous tax Acts treated income as income when received. When you earn the income, when you have the income in your hands, you pay the tax. Now a new philosophy has been brought forward. We tax income when we impute income to you; not when you earn it, not when you have it in your pocket to pay the tax, but when we impute that you have it in your pocket to pay the tax.

Secondly, we used to encourage people to save. We encouraged them to save for their old age, to save for their business, to save for expansion and to save for creativity. We now discourage saving. We discourage Registered Retirement Savings Plans, we discourage deferred profit-sharing plans and we discourage saving through life insurance. We wipe out the possibility of saving by buying an annuity.

This is an Income Tax Act that has a philosophy of grab, of take—get it as quickly as you can no matter how you get it and no matter what damage you do in getting it. We used to have an Income Tax Act that encouraged the formation of capital. We now have an Income Tax Act that discourages the formation of capital. We used to have an Income Tax Act that encouraged people to invest in shares in companies. We now have an Income Tax Act that adds another burden of taxation if a dividend is paid from a company.

This is an anti-productive Income Tax Act. It is an anti-entrepreneurial Income Tax Act. It is an Income Tax Act that is anti-saving. The Minister said that 74 Members of the Opposition spoke at second reading. Let me tell him that 65 Members of the Official Opposition travelled across Canada and held public hearings for three weeks in their vacation period in the winter of 1982. They took their own time and spent their own money and held those public hearings, and they heard from the people of Canada what they thought about this Government and its tax system. To say that 74 spoke and that that somehow is wrong, when 65 of them used their own time, their own weeks off to hear public evidence, is to indicate that this Government really wants to hear no input.

The fact is that this Act had but five days in Committee of the Whole House. It was not as if the Committee was not moving along quickly. Indeed the Committee covered over 75 pages of this monstrous statute. The Government stonewalled any reasonable opposition or any reasonable amendment. Indeed, it did not even make the amendment necessary to look after notaries in Clause 16 of the Bill, because it wanted to ram the Bill through. Even though the Government promised in this House to include the notaries, it did not get around to it because it wanted to force a vote. Even though it was told that this Clause had to be amended to include the notaries, it did not do that.

I want to tell the Minister that we will be moving in the Senate of Canada an amendment to Clause 16 of this Bill to include not only notaries public from the Province of Quebec, but notaries public from all across Canada. If our amendment should pass, they will be treated as a profession and included in Clause 16. We say to the Government that with its promises now made in this House, it had better support that amendment in the Senate of Canada. Since the Government would not make the amendment, we will make the amendment.

This Government used closure to ram the Bill through Committee of the Whole. It refused to listen. I want to tell Members of another Government that did listen. In 1979 the Government was faced with the obligation of putting through uncompleted parts of the Chrétien budget. It was not a Progressive Conservative budget, yet the Liberal opposition debated it in Committee of the Whole for five days. We did not bring in closure, we let them talk. We let them debate the Bill properly and it passed through Committee of the Whole with due consideration.

This Bill, the most massive change to the Income Tax Act in well over a decade, a complete change in philosophical approach, is rammed through by closure. The Government even made the mistake of not putting in its technical amendments to a number of Sections, making it a perfect piece of legislation for the courts of this country.

Let us talk about the great representation made to the people of Canada that they cannot receive their income tax refunds unless this Bill goes through. That is the most shoddy representation to be made in this Parliament for some considerable period of time. What is an income tax refund? It is money that this Government took out of somebody's pocket improperly. The money was taken through its deduction system, the forced payment system under the Income Tax Act. This money was taken from people who are now unemployed, people who need the money now, but the Government will not give it back. It was taken when we had a weak economy, when people were going out of business because they could not organize enough sales. It was taken improperly from the purchasing power of Canadians, yet the Government will not pay it back. The Government does not want to obey the law.

Let me read from Section 152 of the Income Tax Act. I quote:

> The Minister shall, with all due dispatch, examine a taxpayer's return of income for a taxation year, assess the tax for the year, the interest and penalties, if any, payable and determine
> (a) the amount of refund, if any, to which the taxpayer may be entitled by virtue of sections—

The Government has determined the refund, but does not want to give it back. It says it cannot give it back because the statute has not passed. What drivel, what deceit, what misrepresentation of the truth.

The Government says it can demand the collection of tax from people on weasly Ways and Means motions, but it cannot pay refunds even though the statute requires them to be paid. Even though the Government took more than it was entitled to, it says it cannot now give some of it back because this statute is not passed. There is not one Clause in this Bill before us that has anything whatsoever to do with refunds to anyone.

Some people would say that the Minister is a fraud. I would not say that because it would be unparliamentary. Some people would say that the Minister acts with wilful deceit. I am not saying that because it would be unparliamentary. Some people say the Minister acts like a thief. I would not say that because it would be unparliamentary. However, I would think it.

We cannot trust the Ministers of this Government to follow the law. With ample money in the till, they use Governor General's warrants to borrow money on the street when they know they are not entitled to do it except in emergency situations. Even though the Income Tax Act demands that the Government pay refunds to those who have been overtaxed, it does not do it. It does not obey the law because it believes it is above the law.

Mr. Smith: Wrong.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Parliamentary Secretary says wrong, but he still acts as if he is above the law.

Mr. Smith: Why don't you go to court?

Mr. Blenkarn: A lot of good that would do with the Government paying all of the costs; fight City Hall if you will, take them to court. Perhaps someone should take them to the real court, the court of public opinion in an election. That is the court case we will win. It is the court case that will determine that the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) and the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) will not be in this House again.

In the few minutes left to me, I want briefly to go over some of the issues that we were not able to deal with in Committee of the Whole because the Government brought in closure. First, let me deal with small business. If any Bill has done incalculable damage to the small business community, it is the Bill before us. It gutted the small Business Development Bond concept and left us with a bank bail-out bond. In a challenge to the Minister, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said: "Please show me where a bank has advanced fresh funds for one of these bail-out bonds. Give me one example." The Minister could not give an example of fresh funds being advanced on even one of these banker bail-out bonds. He said it may result in a saving of 6, 7 or 8 per cent in interest. With the interest factors today, a person would be lucky to save 4 or 5 per cent.

Let us deal with the 12.5 per cent special tax on dividends. A company that has paid corporate tax will be further taxed on the distribution of profits to its shareholders. That is double taxation. It is taxation that applies years after when the company is to be wound up or when there is to be a takeover or change in direction or management. It discourages small businesses more than anything. On top of the 12.5 per cent tax, it eliminated the possibility of a small business reaffirming or recreating its cumulative deduction account. As soon as a small business has earned the maximum $1 million in profit and paid tax on it, it is automatically deemed a large business. No matter what dividends it has paid out in its history, it is automatically a large business. There are some businesses—the Minister knows this but will not admit it—that remain small businesses, profitable but small, which will be that way forever—small stores, garages, small construction companies. We have had evidence of this before the Committee. To treat one small business differently from another just because over its history it has earned $1 million in income is to be totally unfair and anti-productive.

As for the question of indexing, we had in our Income Tax Act the principle that if there was inflation we would not tax that inflation. We now have the six and five principle brought into this Bill. I say to you, sir, that that principle is not necessary. Inflation is already dropping dramatically and there is no need to change the principle of indexing. We would not oppose the six and five principle on taxation the way it was, in the sense of increasing the income to Government. We believe that if you are going to do that, you do it by amending the Income Tax Act, by increasing the rates of taxation; but to attack the principle of indexing, as this Bill does, is to take away the fairness which our Income Tax Act had, a fairness that was recognized almost throughout the world. We should have had an opportunity to debate that principle here in the House, but we have not had that opportunity.

Perhaps one of the meanest things this Bill does it to destroy the possibility of an employer lending to an employee money for the purpose of buying a home or for some short-term help. The present Act has a de minimis rule of $500 in it. If I want to lend an employee of mine $500 to pay for, perhaps, an airline ticket to fly to another part of the country to attend a funeral, and even if I am going to take it back out of his or her pay over a period of time, whether I charge interest on it or not, that loan is income and the instant that employee receives that loan he is subject to income tax on it. Housing loans have become income. If a housing loan is made it has to have an interest rate imputed to it at the imputed interest factor determined under the Act, even though these housing loans have been shown in every bit of evidence which we have ever heard, either in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs or in our own committees travelling across the country, to have been used to increase the productivity of businesses, mines, farms, stores, and companies of every nature. A housing loan is deemed to be an improper employee benefit.

The Minister also boasts about averaging. In the Income Tax Act we have right now—which we will not have soon—is the most fair system of averaging there could be. It applies to the little people of the country. If a fellow had a good year and his income went up from $5,000 to $15,000 all of a sudden, he got general averaging. The new system of averaging only helps the fat cats, the Government's friends. Only if you are in a tax bracket where you pay the 50 per cent rate, 34 per cent federally plus the full provincial rate, is forward averaging good to you. Otherwise, you must pay your tax at the 50 per cent rate if you want the averaging at all. So it is only the wealthy, the big wage earners, who can take advantage of forward averaging. The others are hurt. They are harmed. Young persons just out of school and starting a new career are harmed. A senior citizen who happens to sell his cottage in one year and must bring into income a capital gain in that year is harmed. The person who gets a bonus from his employer for an especially well done job in one year is harmed. An artist who manages to sell more paintings than ever before in one year, but not enough to get him into the 50 per cent bracket by a long shot, is harmed. The Government harms the little people. It does the big people the big favours.

With respect to capital gains reserves, it harms the little people again. The man who wants to sell his summer resort, unless he can get himself conventional financing usually has to take back the paper on that resort himself. Yet he has to bring into income, as if it was all cash, the gain on capital made from this sale with respect to lands and buildings within a five-year period and within a three-year period with respect to the inventory and goodwill. To expect a person who has not received the money to pay the tax is wrong. It is harmful to the economy of the country and is anti-savings and anti-entrepreneurial.

I see my time is almost up. I would have liked to be able to carry on the debate with respect to soft costs, where a manufacturer who wants to increase the size of his plant, to put an addition on his building, must capitalize all of the interest and account for all of the interest on borrowed money during the course of that plant expansion, and he must add that interest and architects' fees, and the like, to his capital cost. We can increase his expenses for creating that addition to his plant by 20 per cent and 25 per cent quite easily that way. That is, apparently, fairness. That is the way we want to build a country.

That type of erosion, as has been pointed out, is in this Bill, and it has been pointed out by many people. Yet this Government refuses to listen. There is no reason for that refusal to listen if it wanted to help Canada grow. And while our airlines are losing money, we have a special tax on aviation fuel applicable only to our airlines. We have a special tax to make it more difficult for our steel companies to process iron ore.

I could go on and on, sir. This Bill should have received further and fuller consideration. Most of the Sections in this Bill are wrong. They are anti-entrepreneurial. They are anti-Canada. I say to you, sir, that the people of Canada will be the judge in that great court case of which my friend talked. The people of Canada will be offered a taxation system which will have some decency, some simplicity, which will be readable and which will abolish almost every one of the changes in Bill C-139. We make that pledge to the people of Canada today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers, comments.

Mr. Cosgrove: When this Bill was brought into the Committee of the Whole for Clause by Clause examination, Mr. Speaker, I indicated at the outset that it was the Government's intention to add to the category of doctors, dentists, lawyers, accountants, veterinarians and chiropractors the category of notaries public so that that profession would also be exempt from the rules governing the taxation of work in progress.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), representing, I take it, the Official Opposition, refused to permit the introduction of the amendment at that time. Subsequently, on four different occasions which are recorded in Hansard, two of them on the last day on which the Committee deliberated, I again specifically requested the consent of the Hon. Member to introduce an amendment to include notaries in the exemption, but again was refused.

Following the Hon. Member's comments this morning, I should like to ask him what happened in the interval between the Committee hearings and today. What has changed the view of the Official Opposition so that it is now in favour of the amendment? Does it have anything to do with the fact that it is involved in a leadership compaign and is attempting to enlarge support across the public among the category of notaries? Is that why it is supporting the Government's proposed amendment?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, you have never heard such a stupid and ridiculous question as that. If the Minister would pay attention he would realize that the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and I raised the question of notaries in December, 1982 and that has been confirmed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

The Minister should also know that on three occasions while we were dealing with Clauses 3 and 16, I specifically pointed out the problem to him. He was so interested in keeping his ears shut and getting the Bill through that he refused to listen to any amendment, any suggestion or any alteration to the Bill.

The next day we advised his boss. Having read the Bill, his boss took him behind the curtain and thrashed him. Then he came pleading across the floor of the House and asked us to let him put it in. I said that we would look at it when we got to Clause 125. He was so interested in closing the House of Commons down that we never got to Clause 125, Mr. Speaker.

Next he asked me in the House if we would allow it to be dealt with after closure had been imposed. I said that if he wanted to open the Bill and drop closure we could deal with his amendment, but that if we were having closure that move would be improper and we would allow Parliament to deal with it.

The Minister was delighted. He thought the only House of Parliament was this House. He forgot there is another House, the red chamber at the other end of this building. The other night I said to him, and I say it again now, that the amendments will be introduced by this Party in Parliament—in the Senate of Canada, and his Party can vote for them there or not vote for them there.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is with no great pleasure that I rise to discuss this Bill today. So far it has not been handled in a way that could please anyone. The use of closure at Committee of the Whole stage has made it impossible to effect the kinds of amendments ands changes that the Bill needs. We had prepared a great number of amendments in an attempt to improve the Bill or make it more acceptable. Since we went through Clause by Clause consideration in Committee of the Whole as is the custom, we never got to any of the Clauses that we proposed to improve or amend.

This is a massive Bill with some 134 Clauses, indicating, in almost every case, changes to the income tax laws of the country. It is several hundred pages long. We had what amounted to a few hours of debate on Clause by Clause consideration. It is very difficult to be pleased with the process or feel that there was an opportunity for Members to take part in formulating the tax policy of the country in such circumstances.

In addition to closure at two stages of debate on the Bill, we have watched the Government attempt to put outside pressure on Members of the House. Taxpayers who prepaid their taxes or overpaid their taxes were held as hostage. The Government threatened to withhold their refunds until such time as the House passed the Bill. I do not think there is any precedent for that, Mr. Speaker. There have been similar circumstances before but the rebates went out before the relevant Bill was passed. This year the Government says that will no longer be possible and that until the Bill receives Royal Assent, no rebates will be paid.

The Bill has brought about a number of basic changes to our tax system. I think the change that we most object to in principle is the one which we perceive to be a move away from the principle of progressive taxation. That is supposed to be the principle that this country follows although evidence of that is not always clear. It is the principle that is espoused on election platforms and in speeches on taxation policy.

We perceive progressive taxation to be the most fair and equitable because it follows the "ability to pay" principle. There is plenty of evidence to indicate that people who have higher incomes use more Government services and subsidies than people on lower incomes. There is another reason for a progressive style of taxation. Not only does it comply with the ability to pay increasing tax rates, but it also fits in with the calls on the public purse made by the various income levels.

I would remind those who may doubt that statement that it is generally people on higher incomes who use the subsidies that go to the airlines and the airports. People on low incomes do not travel by air so much and do not use the kind of subsidies that are available in that area.

We could probably cite many more instances but what I want to do today is to spend some time discussing the proposals for change that we would have made by way of amendment to the Bill had we had the opportunity.

The first change about which I want to talk concerns the provision in the Bill for a new system of forward averaging. We are proposing an amendment that offers the same sort of averaging, previously known as general averaging. It would react to a decline rather than an increase in income. In a sense it would be a mirror image of the old averaging formula. Our proposal is unlike the forward averaging proposal offered by the Government, in that it would be automatic and would require no designation of income above a certain threshold or payment of tax at a higher level in order to participate in the averaging process. Our forward averaging would be useful to retiring farmers or someone with a large sum of extraordinary income. We are adding automatic averaging to the existing provision of the Bill, for example, for a taxpayer who might have suffered a drop in salary for 1982. The cost of the proposal to the general revenue of the country would probably be somewhat less than the $2.6 billion which the Government expects to save by dropping general averaging over the next four years, assuming that the economy recovers or at least does not worsen in the meantime.

Our measure is progressive in the very best sense of the word because it reduces income tax for someone who was laid off or had a bad year. It is not as elitist as the existing forward averaging provision because it is automatic. Under our automatic averaging proposal, for example, with a fairly average income earner who earned incomes in the last five years of $17,000 in 1978, $19,000 in 1979, then $22,000, up to $25,000 in the following year, and suddenly a bad year of $16,000, the tax without the averaging provision for 1982 would be $2,610. With the averaging provision, his tax payable would work out to $2,404 or a saving of $206. We argue that that rebate of $206 during a year when income has dropped would be most welcome and would assist in evening out uneven incomes.

I might point out that farmers still have a five-year averaging provision, but we think that in these hard economic times when people are earning good incomes one year, then are laid off or their incomes are drastically reduced, an averaging provision such as the one we propose would make sense and be equitable to Canadians. The tax system has been and is continuing to work less to the benefit of ordinary individuals in the country.

Returning to the equity position, in the 1950s federal and provincial income tax worked out at almost 50 per cent paid by individuals and 50 per cent by corporations. I will take a shortcut rather than presenting all the figures. When we reached 1980, federal income taxes combined in that year fell 76.6 per cent on individuals and 23.3 per cent on corporations. There has not been a diminution of control or influence by corporations in that period of time. Almost any study at which we look, even without spending much time on analysis, indicates that the corporate sector was gaining far more control over the economy during that 30-year period. The amount of taxes they are being asked to pay by way of provincial and federal income taxes is proportionately down from what it was in 1950. I just wanted to put those facts on the record.

I would like to spend a few moments discussing some of the amendments we propose affecting small businesses, and farmers in particular. As we all know, the Bill does away with the income averaging annuity contract, restricted reserves and also halves the capital cost allowance for the first year of purchase of new machines. It proposes to do nothing to alleviate the burden of capital gains tax on retiring farmers. Despite that being one of the few planks in the current Liberal Government's platform back in the 1980 election campaign, there has still been no attempt to address that particular promise. I remind Hon. Member opposite that the promise was to change valuation day to the end of 1974 from the end of 1971. This period is quite useful because in those three years land values increased at a very rapid rate.

Our proposal is slightly different. We think it provides some equity among taxpayers at all levels. We are proposing that there be a special exemption for farmers from the first $100,000 of capital gains tax. We argue that this is equitable because farmers generally do not have residences which can be classed as being free from capital gains tax, unlike most other individuals in society who own homes and can accumulate capital gains from the time they were purchased to the time of their sale for their old age. If they want to retire into apartments or retirement homes, they can pocket all the capital gains which accrue. But most farmers live on their farms and the problem is that the market value of their farms usually does not vary—sometimes not one iota—whether or not there is a house on the land. What is being sold is the productive assets—the land and to some extent the buildings, if it is a factory-type operation. The house itself has very little value in the transaction, so there is no real accrued capital gain which can be set aside for farmers. We are proposing a $100,000 tax exemption from capital gains in recognition of the fact that houses on farms are usually of very little value on the market.

An Hon. Member: They are exempt anyway.

Mr. Althouse: I hear my hon. friend. I admitted that before I began my dissertation. Had he been listening, he would have known that I was pointing out that even though the houses are exempt, they are of very little market value when the land is sold. Those who live in Ottawa should check land values and asking prices in the Ottawa area. They will realize that once they get 20 miles or 30 miles out of Ottawa, parcels of 100 acres, whether or not there is a good house on them or no house, are worth very much the same amount of money. An exemption would give similar recognition to farm homes as given to houses in towns or cities.

From the time the first budget was presented and for the last year and a half, we have argued that the income averaging annuity contract should be reinstated. This provision allowed farmers to spread their taxes over a few years rather than having to pay a large lump sum up front to Revenue Canada as required under the Bill.

When the then Minister of Finance presented the initial taxation proposals, we had a number of individuals who were caught in the position of having sold their land, property or business on a five or ten-year repayment plan. They were caught in the position of having received a downpayment which they had put into a retirement home, but the sudden change in tax law forced them to sell that home and borrow money in order to put the money up front required by the changes proposed in this Bill, leaving them with nothing on which to live for a couple of years. However, some of that inequity was corrected in subsequent announcements.

It is still, we think, a necessary condition of the taxation law of this country, since it is so complex already, to leave the income averaging annuity provision alone for those people who want to use it as a way of spreading income over subsequent years. We proposed an amendment to reinstate that provision.

In addition, we proposed amendments which would have reinstated the old reserve provisions. The former reserve provisions were popular in cases when a retiring farmer was selling to a person in a community, allowing cash up front. It helped the young person, and it helped the farmer spread out capital gains over a number of years.

These provisions have been drastically trimmed. Young people now must go to a bank or a trust company for more money because the person selling out has to have most of his cash up front. This forces buyers to go to lending institutions instead of dealing on a one-to-one basis with the farmer or the businessman and it is commercializing the transfer of property and assets from one generation to another to an extent that has not been common in Canada.

We were also proposing an amendment which would have restored the full capital cost allowance in the year of purchase. As you know, Mr. Speaker, that has now been cut to half in the first year of purchase. I suppose in an ideal world the proposal the Government made might have been sensible in so far as it would discourage unwise spending, which has got some farmers and some businessmen into trouble, I do admit. However, we are not in the kind of economy where everything is going well. People, including businessmen and farmers, are not spending very much money. This provision further inhibits the ability of farmers and small-business people to buy equipment, which, in turn, hurts the manufacturing industries.

While I am on this matter and before I conclude, I would like to point out that the farm machinery dealers across Canada have made very able presentations to Members of the House and to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). They have pointed out that an investment tax credit, which now exists on new equipment, should be extended to used equipment and be restricted to the difference paid between the value of the purchased piece of equipment and the piece of equipment being traded in. These people have pointed out that there are tax benefits to the Government. Also it would provide some equity in terms of selling machinery and in terms of people who must, for financial reasons, buy used equipment.

I notice that my allotted time has come to an end and I will not be able to finish speaking about all the amendments we were proposing. May I say, however, that I regret the Clause by Clause stage did not progress through the House so that these very useful amendments could have been made in the proper fashion.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, when I rose to speak to this Bill on February 21, I drew the attention of the House to the inequity of the present tax structure as it applies to those in the agricultural sector. In particular, Section 31 of the current Income Tax Act appears to have the potential of financially wiping out hundreds of thousands of farmers and ranchers across the country. Since I raised this issue on February 21, I have learned that Revenue Canada has targeted its auditors at those engaging in agriculture, particularly those whom they regard as suspicious. Under this blitz, known as Project L, auditors are fanning out across the nation and assessing some farms up to four years in back taxes. In my riding alone over 300 ranchers and families have been audited since the end of January and many of them will have to sell out.

This procedure is a direct assault on the Canadian agricultural sector and the family farm. This callous Government is vigorously enforcing an unjust and an ill-defined piece of legislation in order to fill its empty treasury, while at the same time kicking a good portion of the agricultural community when it is down.

Let me briefly outline how this situation arose. In 1952 the Government amended the Income Tax Act so that three classes of farmers were established for tax purposes. These were full-time farmers, part-time farmers and hobby farmers. Full-time farmers can write off 100 per cent of their losses. For part-time farmers, the amount they can write off is limited to $5,000 a year. Hobby farmers cannot write off any losses against income, which is fair enough, I grant you that, Mr. Speaker.

Nevertheless, this section of the Income Tax Act has not been amended since it was introduced in 1952. The $5,000 a year deduction allowed to part-time farmers has not been updated to reflect inflationary increases in the cost of production over the past 30 years. If this item had been indexed, Statistics Canada estimates the deduction would be worth at least $20,000 a year. This, however, is only part of the problem with Section 31 of the Act.

According to Mr. Doug Eckel, a chartered accountant who was interviewed on March 13 on CBC's "Country Calendar", the wording of Section 31 is so ambiguous that only the original draftsman of the Bill could be certain of its meaning. He said that it is impossible accurately to interpret the intent of Section 31 and that it should be cleaned up, or better yet dropped entirely from the Income Tax Act. This poorly drafted legislation has allowed Revenue Canada to determine arbitrarily into which of the three categories a farmer falls.

As an example of just how arbitrary this ruling can be, I discovered when I returned to my riding last week that Revenue Canada's auditors are now using a figure of 100 beef cows to determine if a rancher is ranching on a full-time or on a part-time basis. In other words, if a rancher has less than 100 cows, he faces being reclassified as a part-time rancher, regardless of any other factors. According to Statistics Canada, the average size of a Canadian beef cow herd is 30.8 cows. It takes over three Statistics Canada renchers to make one Revenue Canada rancher. Clearly Revenue Canada's determination of what constitutes a full-time rancher is at odds with the Canadian reality as reflected by the Statistics Canada figures.

Originally, the intent of Section 31 was to prevent people from using a farm as a tax dodge. However, because of the ambiguous wording, Section 31 is now being used against quite legitimate full-time farmers. What has really complicated an already impossible situation has been that, because of the recession, farmers have been forced to find employment off their ranches and farms to help cover the cost of operating. There are now about 125,000 farmers in Canada who have off-farm jobs. For a variety of reasons, this often results in the farmer making more from his off-farm job than from this agricultural operation. At this point, Revenue Canada reclassifies him as a part-time farmer in spite of the fact that his other occupation is merely an attempt to keep his operation solvent. This is grossly unfair and leads to a "heads the tax man wins, tails the farmer loses" proposition.

If a farmer takes a job off the farm to help pay his bills, he will then be regarded as a part-time operator who is only eligible for $5,000 a year deductions. As well, some farmers are finding that they are being reduced from the second category to the hobby farm classification, which is even worse. In many cases, the only option left is to sell out to pay the tax bill. That is an alternative that is readily endorsed by the tax auditors. If a farmer has the audacity to suggest to the auditors that he would like to take the issue further and appeal it, the auditors tell him that it will cost too much and would be cheaper just to pay the tax bill and forget it. That is the kind of advice farmers are receiving from Revenue Canada.

To an individual who regards himself as a farmer or rancher, this is a disastrous blow which is akin to drought, disease and fire all wrapped into one. It is just as dramatic as a prison sentence for a born and bred farmer to be forced to sever connections with the land and move into town.

One of the greatest problems faced by farmers when dealing with Revenue Canada auditors is that very few auditors even have a basic understanding of agriculture. Revenue Canada does not hire or train auditors who have specific expertise in agriculture. It is possible for an auditor to be auditing a manufacturing company one day, a local pharmacy on another day and a ranch the day after. As a result, most auditors are unqualified to pass judgment on the viability of agricultural operations.

One of my constituents graphically described this lack of knowledge of Revenue Canada auditors in very telling terms. Auditors came to his ranch during the spring thaw to look at its operation and the books. The owner happened to look out of the window and saw one unfortunate auditor trying to pick her way through ankle deep mud wearing high-heeled shoes. He said that he almost felt sorry for her. The auditors did not even look at the owner's books but simply looked around the yard adjacent to the house. My constituent volunteered to take the two auditors on a thorough tour of the ranch. However, they declined.

A neighbour of this constituent said that he had observed the auditors earlier in the day driving slowly past the ranch attempting to view the property from the main road. How could people possibly assess an agricultural operation without being provided with a thorough tour of the premises by the rancher? How could they be expected to comprehend how a ranch was operated when they did not even know enough to wear the proper footwear during spring breakup?

This ignorance extends beyond the technical details of running a farm operation. Revenue Canada assumes that if a person has a full-time job, he or she would obviously not be putting in many hours on the farm. I suggest that this is a reflection of typical bureaucratic mentality where an individual works for eight hours or less a day and then goes home. A farmer or rancher who is trying to keep his head above water does not have that luxury. He will put in his first eight hours in the off-farm job and then often put in a further eight hours or more on his farm. Weekends and holidays are also spent improving the farm so that the off-farm job will eventually not be necessary. The farmer's spouse and children also put in long hours to make the ranch viable.

I would like to cite a quotation from the March 9, 100 Mile House Free Press that illustrates the problem:

Farming and ranching is just not everybody's idea of a good time anymore. With few vacations, hard work, crazy interest rates, hypersensitive market conditions, bizarre weather trends, livestock disease, increasing government intervention, and now—the auditors—some are wondering just how much more they can stand, economically and personally.

Such is the case with Terry and Ann Trip, Canim Lake farmers who have just been officially told by Revenue Canada that their operation is no longer considered a farm and that they will have to pay backtaxes for the years 1978, 1979, 1980 and 1981. The Trips, who have been developing their 266 acres of land since 1974, may be required to pay as much as $12,000 and the only way to do that will be to sell the spread they call home.

For the Trips it all started with a phone call on Feb. 10 from Revenue Canada officials who said they would be in the area from Feb. 13 to 25 and would be dropping by to audit the couple's farm books. There were a few missed and postponed appointments, but finally two . . . young men arrived on Feb. 21.

After a brief walk around the place, rather desolate at that time of year, they perused the books, checking totals and correlating bills with entries. They also examined the Trips' personal expense account to make sure everything had been kept above board.

Ann Trip said the men were surprised to see her books in good order. The auditors checked back to 1978, but didn't bother to go through 1982 figures, which Terry feels is a shame . . .

The auditors were part of an eight-person team which centered itself in Williams Lake and made forays into surrounding agricultural territory. They appeared to select their targets at random.

These auditors show a surprising lack of knowledge of agriculture. One auditor did not even know that a cow usually only has one calf per year. Another said that there was no viable agricultural enterprise in my riding. I will have you know, Mr. Speaker, that we have some of the largest and most successful ranches in North America in my riding. These people are so ignorant that I would really like to go out there and personally strangle them.

Lest one thinks that this kind of hardship as a result of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act is a recent phenomenon, I would like to read part of a letter sent from the then Minister of National Revenue, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), to the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose). The letter dated June 2, 1972 says:

As a result of representations received from you and several other Members, I have reviewed departmental policy relating to the disallowance of certain losses claimed by 'part-time farmers'. As you are aware, the Department has been disallowing losses in cases where farming operations have had no reasonable expectation of profit. Such ground for disallowance are valid under the provisions of the Income Tax Act. However, I recognize that in a number of instances, the application of this policy has created hardship inasmuch as some taxpayers, whose deductions of farm losses had previously not been questioned, were later faced with an assessment of tax involving a disallowance of more than one year's losses.

I have, therefore, directed that a review be made of each case that has been referred to my attention. If, following the review, it is concluded that the departmental policy has been correctly applied to a taxpayer, I have asked that the disallowance of losses be limited to the most current of years under review. This basis of assessment will be continued in all subsequent applications of the departmental policy relating to losses claimed by part-time farmers so that only the loss for the one year is disallowed.

In 1972, the then Minister of National Revenue acknowledged that assessing farmers for more than one year's back taxes would create considerable hardship. It is creating much more hardship at this particular time. Furthermore, I repeat that he stated: "This basis of assessment will be continued in all subsequent applications of the departmental policy relating to losses claimed by part-time farmers so that only the loss for the one year is disallowed."

Clearly, the present Minister of Revenue is reneging on a promise made by his predecessor, the current President of the Treasury Board. Revenue Canada's Project L not only reneges on the assurance given by the present President of the Treasury Board, but goes against the spirit of his written statement to the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody.

Some of my constituents have been assessed for as many as four years in back taxes. This is inexcusable. I am surprised that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has not publicly risen to the defence of these vulnerable and unprotected farmers and ranchers. The farmers of this country are used to the Minister of Agriculture misrepresenting his position by pretending to be the farmers' friend. He is a hypocrite and a deceiver. He misleads the agricultural community by passing himself off as an ally. Now we know why he wears his green hat: he pulls it down over his ears so he cannot hear and over his eyes so he cannot see. Unfortunately, his mouth keeps working as he travels back and forth across the country on his mobile manure spreader.

A good example of his deception occurred just the other day when he was on CTV blaming the Tories for dragging their feet on Bill C-653, which is a Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson). That Bill seeks to provide a simple and inexpensive procedure for farmers to rearrange their affairs when cash flow becomes insufficient to meet current obligations as they become due. The Minister said it was us who were dragging our feet. That was a lie. If that was a lie, then the Minister is a liar.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think it would be preferable, for the record, that I recognize some Hon. Member who takes objection to the language. I will then rule on it.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, if we look at the exchange between House Leaders a week ago last Tuesday, I think it is very evident from Hansard that the House Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Lewis) asked for additional time to consult with his caucus before coming forward with a decision as to whether to give this Bill speedy passage on second reading and reference to committee. Therefore, in that context, I object to the word used and would ask the Hon. Member to withdraw it.

• (1230)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): First, let me say that I sometimes wonder if it is the responsibility of the Chair to intervene when unparliamentary language is used or whether the Chair perhaps ought to wait until there is an objection made. For that reason, I tolerated the word "hypocrite", which is unparliamentary. However, I think that when we are concerned with an accusation that an Hon. Member is a liar and has lied, we must become attentive. Therefore, the procedure which I would follow is to now ask the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) if he would be so gracious as to withdraw those words.

Mr. Greenaway: I withdraw the fact that he may be a liar, but I think he is a hypocrite.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. Again, if the Hon. Member asks me to do so, I will check the authorities on the subject, but I think the Hon. Member can rely on my recollection, which is to the effect that the word "hypocrite" is not acceptable either. Perhaps I will again prevail upon his graciousness and ask him to withdraw that word.

Mr. Greenaway: Well, he is hypocritical, Mr. Speaker. I mean, we all know that.

Mr. Daudlin: I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member recognizes that the practice in this House is that if, in fact, the Chair has ruled that a particular phrase or word is unparliamentary, it is not a matter of explanation or a matter of trying to slide around the word but, rather, a matter of exercising some graciousness in withdrawing the word. The Chair has given some indication that, in fact, the word "hypocrite", or the phrase "to be a hypocrite", is unacceptable and unparliamentary. I would ask that the Hon. Member withdraw the words, as is expected of any Hon. Member in the House. If he tries to find something else which is within parliamentary practice and procedure, that is fine. However, I think that the proper procedure is to withdraw the remark, and I would ask, through Your Honour, that that be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I do not think there is anything further that I can add for the edification of Hon. Members. It seems to me that when I indicated to the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin that some words were not acceptable, he evidenced his willingness to stay within the acceptable language limitations under our procedures. I do not want to pursue the point too often. The Hon. Member has now found a third word, "hypocritical". Again, I say that if he insists I will review the authorities on the subject and determine whether or not that is also unparliamentary. However, if he wishes he may rely on my recollection that it is unparliamentary, in which case I would have to ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. Greenaway: What kind of a Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker, would allow people to lose their farms, and not even make any—

An Hon. Member: Throw him out!

Mr. Ouellet: I rise on a point of order. I think it is very clear that the Hon. Member has only one thing to say. He can either say "I withdraw the word", or he can tell us that he will not withdraw the word. It is not necessary for him to start to make a long speech to qualify another Hon. Member of the House.

I appreciate the fact that it might be painful for the Hon. Member, but I think that in all courtesy and for the good order of the House of Commons he should just very clearly and simply say that the word has surpassed his thinking and he should withdraw the word and continue his speech. However, I think clearly he has only one choice offered to him, which is to withdraw his remark. If he does not, the circumstance will become more difficult. We do not think, for the good order of the House, there should be situations where Hon. Members are impolitely qualifying other Members in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin will have realized that I am attempting to provide every opportunity, in the most pleasant fashion possible, for this matter to come to an end. However, the Chair reaches a position, particularly if some Hon. Members ask that the rules be observed, where my responsibility becomes, in effect, to enforce the rules.

I listened to the Hon. Member's speech and it is quite notable that he feels very strongly about some of the subject matters which he was raising. Sometimes these expressions slip out in the anger of the moment, and my hope is that they are withdrawn after a brief period of consideration. Therefore, I would invite the Hon. Member, if he would be so kind, to withdraw the expression "hypocritical" as well.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, I do not at all mind withdrawing the word "liar". However, I did not realize that "hypocrite" or "hypocritical" was unparliamentary language. I know I should have read Beauchesne to find out. However, I do think the Minister of Agriculture is a hypocrite, and I will not withdraw that word.

An Hon. Member: Throw him out! Chuck him out!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is a procedure in this event. I want to explain to the Hon. Member—

Mr. Fisher: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin. I have spent some time with him to be a man of some conviction. I would simply urge him, one last time, to remember that forceful arguments and evidence might be better than impoliteness or a lack of flexibility. If it is useful to Your Honour, I would appeal to my friend to use forceful arguments and evidence in the time remaining rather than to use words which will only reflect on him in the end.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have been checking Beauchesne. I find that on various occasions the word "hypocrite" or "hypocritical" has not been found to be out of order. However, the overriding principle stands, and it is the responsibility of the Chair to consider the mood of the House, to consider the expressions used and, to consider their context. I am of the opinion that when the Hon. Member calls another Hon. Member a liar or indicates that he believes that person has lied, and when he uses the word "hypocrite" or "hypocritical" in the same connection, then the responsibility of the Chair is to find that that is unparliamentary language. I so find.

Therefore, I will explain to the Hon. Member that tradition calls upon the Chair to extend to the Hon. Member every possible opportunity to consider whether he wishes to observe the requests of the Chair by withdrawing his remarks, in the sense of good order. If the Hon. Member refuses to accept the ruling of the Chair, then I have a further responsibility, and that becomes the business of naming the Hon. Member, with which I think he is familiar. The whole matter is an unpleasant task for the Chair, and I do not think really does much for the institution itself.

Therefore, I would ask the Hon. Member if he would be so kind, pursuant to the ruling of the Chair, to withdraw the remarks or the word, to which we have finally come to a conclusion, and that is either "hypocrite" or "hypocritical". If he would be so kind as to do that, we can get on with the business of the House.

Mr. Greenaway: I respect what you are saying, Mr. Speaker, and I respect the argument of the Parliamentary Secretary. However, last week people came to my office in tears. I have written to the Minister of Agriculture. He has done nothing. As far as I am concerned, he is a hypocrite and you can do what you want with me.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I appreciate the position of the Chair, but over the years there have certainly been unparliamentary expressions used in the House, and I think they are clearly spelled out in Beauchesne. My understanding is that the word "hypocrite" is not found in the list of unparliamentary terms set out in Beauchesne. I would submit that in the absence of the word being specifically spelled out in Beauchesne as unparliamentary, then while the word is not a particularly complimentary one, an Hon. Member is entitled to make use of that word.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Essex-Kent on the same point of order.

Mr. Daudlin: Mr. Speaker, I think we now find ourselves in a double difficulty. I think the Chair has in fact found, in the context and circumstances of the use first of the word "liar" and then as a substitute therefor the use of the words "hypocrite" and "hyprocrisy", that in the circumstances this constituted, in the Chair's opinion, a disorder and, as a consequence, a ruling was made of disorder and the request was made for withdrawal.

I think that it is too late, quite frankly, to make the argument that the word is, is not, should not have been so declared and, as a matter of fact, to do so constitutes a reflection on an Order of the Chair, which clearly is a disorder and unacceptable in this House.

As a consequence, I put to you, Mr. Speaker, the unfortunate circumstance that we either have to move forward with a withdrawal, which the Hon. Member unfortunately appears to prefer not to do—and again I call on him to do so—or otherwise we are left with the unfortunate provisions of the rule which you, Mr. Speaker, are called upon to make use of.

I did want to enter the debate purely to reflect on the fact that an Order of the Chair now exists, and as a consequence it would be a disorder, in my view, to reflect on that Order or that finding.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), withdrew the use of the word "liar", apologized to the Chair and said that he would withdraw that word. So really that does not enter into the debate at this time. He then used another word, "hypocrite" or "hypocritical", which the Hon. Member has found is not in Beauchesne. I submit that inasmuch as he apologized and withdrew the word "liar", the Hon. Member should be allowed to continue his speech.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, this has been called a long, complicated and confusing Bill. Just about everything possible has happened to it since the ideas were originally introduced in November of 1981. Perhaps it would be only appropriate if we end up our debate on third reading by having this kind of confrontation involving a Member and a Minister, neither of whom really has anything directly at stake in this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If I may sum up, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) raised the issue as to whether or not the word "hypocrite" or "hypocritical" is to be found in the authorities. I think that in the actual words that he used, he indicated that the word is not found in Beauchesne. That is not correct; the word is to be found in discussions in Beauchesne as to what is parliamentary or not. I think I understood the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw to make the point that it is not to be found in Beauchesne as a prohibited word. More accurately, it used to be a prohibited word and seems to have shifted toward a situation where it is in some occasions, in any event, not a prohibited word.

It is the responsibility of the Chair—and this Hon. Members will find through any of the texts on the subject—whether the word used or in question is on a forbidden list or not on a forbidden list, to point out that what is essential to a ruling on the question of whether a word must be withdrawn is the context and the mood in which the language is used. That is a responsibility of the Chair. The fact that the word was used immediately contiguous to the accusation of lying is what has brought me to the conclusion that the Hon. Member should be reminded that, despite his evident concern for the subject matter that he has been talking about, nonetheless debate is thought to be not improved by making use of words of that order.

I have gone on at some length hoping that perhaps the Hon. Member will change his mind and, as a courtesy to the rest of the House, withdraw the word "hypocrite" and I would invite him to do so. If he does not, then the procedure apparently is to name him. As I said, I do not find that a very pleasant situation. I had hoped that the Hon. Member, partly on behalf of the House and partly in courtesy to the Chair, would not bring me to that situation.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, I really respect what you are saying, but I have literally hundreds of people in my riding who are being kicked off their farms. If I thought I could get Hon. Members on the other side to pay some attention to me, I would go along with this. But I have written to the Minister of Agriculture about this problem and have received two or three lines back; but nothing has happened. He is supposed to be the Minister of Agriculture. He is supposed to be behind the agricultural industry of this country, and a lot of these people are producers. The Act is screwed up, there is no doubt about it. It is not only happening in my riding but it is happening right across the country. As I said in my speech, 125,000 farmers are working off their farms to try to make supplementary income to pay these high costs that they are incurring, and now we are hitting them with back taxes.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I understand that you have made a decision and asked the Hon. Member to withdraw. The only thing to be decided is either he withdraws or he does not. He is not entitled to make a speech.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In the time before I came to the Chair, I have seen in several instances the practice of Mr. Speaker Jerome wherein he gave the Hon. Member in question every opportunity to consider his remarks. I have been doing that, and if I thought that a further appeal to the Hon. Member would work, I would do that again.

It is appropriate, I think, at this point to ask the Hon. Member if he would rise and withdraw the word "hypocrite", failing which I will take the necessary procedures.

Mr. Greenaway, I have to name you for disregarding the authority of the Chair. Under Standing Order 30, I will now ask you to withdraw from the House.

And Mr. Greenaway having withdrawn:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I see the Minister is on his feet. I would like to contain these matters. I cannot, and obviously will not, disregard the Minister or any other person who may wish to put a motion, but as far as the Chair is concerned I would think the issue has now been resolved. If there is a feeling that matters should proceed further, that is in the hands of the House.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I as one Member would be delighted if that was the end of it. However, I am not at all sure now what has happened. The Member has left. Is he free to return at ten minutes to one? Is he free to return at two? I want to know exactly what has happened here.

I listened most carefully to what went on preceding his deciding to leave the House, but I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that his decision to leave the House was not his to make. The only decision open to the Member, and I am not happy to say it, was either to withdraw or not to withdraw the words that were considered by the Chair to be unparliamentary; beyond that there is no other decision to be made. I suggest that the action that has been taken, humane though it may have appeared to be, was quite inappropriate.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, seconded by Mr. Cosgrove, I move:

That the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) be suspended from the service of the House for the remainder of today's sitting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion is in order. It is not debatable. I would ask the House if there is agreement to the motion put forward by the Minister? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In that case, call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Ouellet), which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried. Accordingly I would ask the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) to withdraw from the House.

And Mr. Greenaway having withdrawn:

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I think it is only fair to point out that when four Members, two on the Opposition side and two on the Government side, hurried back to vote as they were supposed to, they were prevented from doing so because they arrived just as the vote was being held. However, I would like to have our presence recorded. These Members are: the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence), the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel).

Madam Speaker: Order! Names of Members present have been recorded and I do not think it is necessary to raise the matter again.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB OPPORTUNITIES BANK—INSCRIPTION OF CHIEF OF PARTY

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, we are all aware of the high rate of unemployment in Canada. Perhaps that is why there are so many candidates for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party. Maybe we should ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to have this new position of Leader of the Opposition and Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party included in the Canada Employment Commission's job bank, so that more people could apply for the job—

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

[English]

I cannot hear what the Hon. Member is saying.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue has the floor.

Mr. Tousignant: Madam Speaker, this is very important. This new job should be posted with the job bank so that more Canadians could apply for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party. At the same time, however, some indication should be given that it is a high risk job with a high rejection rate, and that at some time in the future, applicants will have to express their views on certain questions. Running for the leadership is all very well, but they are going to be asked what their position is on missile testing, the Crow Rate, Petro-Canada, and so forth. So in that case, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

NATIONAL REVENUE

AUDIT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA FARMERS' INCOME

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, in the interior of British Columbia Revenue Canada is currently auditing hundreds of farmers and ranchers to determine if they should be assessed back taxes. Central to the determination of whether or not back taxes are owing is the Section 31 classification of an agricultural operation as, first, full-time farming, second, part-time farming or, third, hobby farming.

Because of the current recession, many full-time farmers have been forced to seek employment off the farm in order to meet high costs. In some cases, income off the farm has far exceeded on-farm income, as prices for livestock, especially cattle, have been depressed. Revenue Canada auditors are presently reclassifying these operations as part-time, thereby limiting the losses a farmer can deduct to $5,000 a year. They are also moving farmers who were in the second class into the hobby farm class where no losses are deductible. In many cases, four years' back taxes are being assessed.

This situation is clearly inequitable. The farmer or rancher who has tried to adjust to the recession by establishing an alternate source of income in an attempt to remain solvent, is suddenly hit with taxes he can ill-afford. Many will be forced to sell out to pay this unexpected tax levy. The federal Government is unfairly profiting from the devastation wrought upon those in the agricultural sector by the recession.

Information provided by those who have already been audited indicates that Revenue Canada has no clear guidelines by which the three classes of farmers can clearly be delineated.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

YOUTH

REQUEST THAT SUBSIDIES FOR KATIMAVIK PROGRAM BE INCREASED IN NEXT BUDGET

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, yesterday, several Hon. Members had the opportunity of meeting the young people who were taking part in the Katimavik program, I believe that we should ensure that when the next budget is brought down, substantial amounts are added to the funding for the Katimavik program which has done so much for young people and which deserves the unqualified support of the House of Commons. I would appreciate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) considering this possibility. In addition, during International Youth Year in 1985, it would perhaps be a good idea to have public hearings where young people would appear before the House of Commons to air their views. What youth is should be defined by young people for young people. I think it would be very interesting if here in the House, we could take a close look at their aspirations, because as was said earlier by the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant), we must consider what we are going to do about job creation, especially since within the Progressive Conservative Party, there are already several people looking for a job.

THE LATE LEONARD NICHOLSON

TRIBUTE TO FORMER RCMP COMMISSIONER

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, Canada lost an outstanding citizen on Tuesday, when Leonard Nicholson, Commissioner of the RCMP between 1951 and 1959, died in hospital in Ottawa.

• (1410)

Canada can be grateful and proud to have had such a man in such a position of influence at such a critical time, in the aftermath of Gouzenko. New Brunswickers can be proud of a native son who played such a prominent role in this country, not only in the maintenance of law and order in this country but quite as importantly in respect for the law—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind the Hon. Member that statements at this time are not to be used for this kind of tribute to a person, no matter how worthy that person may be. If the Hon. Member does not have a statement on an issue which he feels is important, I am afraid I will have to declare him out of order.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I do think it is important to pay tribute to a man who has been Commissioner—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry. There are provisions whereby, in other places and other circumstances, this can be done. I sympathize with the Hon. Member, but I cannot allow it at this time.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN PERSONAL EXEMPTION FOR RETURNING CITIZENS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, on June 30, 1981, I moved a motion in this House. I want to repeat it because of correspondence that I have received lately.

In view of the fact that Canadians travelling abroad on returning home after prolonged vacations are permitted $150 worth of duty-free purchases per person if a person has been out of the country for seven days, and in view of the fact that this amount has been badly eroded by inflation over the last decade and barely covers vacation expenses in most cases, I had moved, seconded by the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), that the Government give serious consideration to increasing the duty-free purchasing abroad to $250 per person if a person has been away for seven days or longer.

Since most Canadian foreign travel is to our neighbour, the United States of America, and since Canada has a very favourable balance of accounts with the United States, I ask that the Government give this matter serious consideration and bring forth such an adjustment in the next federal budget.

Such reasonable considerations will serve to reduce the increasing tensions arising between our two nations.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—A VOICE FOR THE VOICELESS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, on March 24, today, I would like to pay tribute to Archbishop Oscar Romero who died three years ago, a victim of an assassination.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ogle: I will speak to the question of justice that he died for. Archbishop Oscar Romero stood for the poor, the poor who have been calling out—

Madam Speaker: Order. Unless the Hon. Member discusses an issue, I cannot allow him to continue. He must discuss an issue in these statements before the House.

Mr. Ogle: I speak simply to the question of justice. In El Salvador, most of the people are poor. Most of the people do not have a voice. Once in a while in the history of mankind a person comes along whose voice begins to speak for the voiceless. Today I would like to join my voice with those who have gone before us speaking for those who do not have the power to speak for themselves.

Powerful nations, powerful Governments, and powerful armies sometimes come to a country and say they are speaking for the people. This is false. In tribute in this last minute, I would simply like to say that the person we are remembering today, said moments before he died—

Madam Speaker: Order.

AGRICULTURE

POTATO EXPORTS—INVESTIGATION BY UNITED STATES COMMERCE DEPARTMENT

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. According to a decision made by the U.S. Trade Commission on March 22, allegations made by the State of Maine Potato Council that Canadian potatoes are being sold on U.S. markets at prices lower than in Canada, thereby damaging the potato industry in Maine, are to be further investigated by the U.S. Department of Commerce. American potato growers have asked that penalizing duties be imposed against potato imports from Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Is the Minister aware of this situation, and what does he plan to do to protect potato growers in P.E.I. and New Brunswick from this type of harassment and uncertainty?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows the procedure that is followed in the United States of America. They followed that procedure by a split vote in their commission that investigated the charges that their producers made. They decided to go ahead with the inquiry. The study and inquiry will take place. If I understand correctly, it has to be completed by August 1. We have received representations from the potato producers through their official organ, the Canadian Horticultural Council. They have asked us to assist with regard to fees for solicitors, et cetera, which are estimated to cost $100,000. We are very much concerned about it. We feel it is a form of harassment and that is the procedure they will follow. I understand that hearings will be held in Charlottetown, Fredericton, and probably one other location during the coming weeks and months.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE IMMEDIATE ACTION

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, the estimated value of the potato industry to P.E.I. and New Brunswick is $32 million. It is critical to the economy of both those Provinces. The farmers of P.E.I. and New Brunswick can get little assurance and relaxation from what the Minister has just said. I again ask the Minister what immediate steps he plans to take to create some certainty in the potato industry in P.E.I. and New Brunswick.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that meetings have been held in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and the other eastern potato-producing provinces, Ontario and Quebec. Other meetings will take place next week. They have been talking about forming a better marketing system for potatoes for the past several years. They put forward seven papers on what kind of plan they want for marketing. If they had that plan at this time, they would not have to worry very much about what the United States or anybody else is doing.

IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES POTATOES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I do not believe that the establishment of the organization proposed by the Minister will in fact change the world market price of potatoes, which he is suggesting it will do. Inasmuch as the basis of the decision is the fact that the State of Maine has stated that we have damaged their potato industry, can the Minister now tell this House what parts of the Canadian potato industry are being damaged by imports from the United States? Is he in the mood to take any comparable action against the movement of potatoes northward?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is talking about the potato industry in British Columbia which is being affected in a very harsh economic fashion by cheap imports from the United States. British Columbia producers have lowered their price twice. Potato shippers in the United States have met that competition. We feel they are now dumping potatoes in Canada, and we have already started an investigation.

AMOUNT OF CROSS-BORDER TRADE IN POTATOES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister what action he thinks should be taken with regard to potatoes which are coming into Canada, not only in British Columbia, but which will be and perhaps are now coming from all parts of the United States, as they come season by season to supply the Canadian potato market until such time as the Windsor area begins to produce potatoes in Canada.

The market movement of potatoes into Canada in the last ten years has shown that, pound for pound, we have imported more than we have exported. What case is the Minister prepared to present to show that this is in fact a seasonal exchange of product that they, in dollar terms, and usually in weight terms, have an advantage in their marketing in Canada versus our marketing in the United States? Will that bear no weight in their ultimate decision or in the presentation which the minister will make to the U.S. Government?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well what the voice for the potato producers of Canada has said at the annual meeting held recenty in Ottawa. I refer to the Canadian Horticultural Council. Their motion, in very simple terms says "You in the United States produce enough potatoes for yourself, we in Canada produce enough potatoes for ourself; you keep yours, and we will keep ours". That, in very plain terminology, is what it amounts to. That was the voice for the potato producers in Canada. We work very close with them in what they are suggesting.

I met with the western potato producers in Winnipeg. I met a delegation here when they were attending the Canadian Horticultural Council meeting. They are meeting today and tomorrow in the United States with potato producers from the northwestern United States. There will be representatives from all of Canada there to decide how to work out a better trading program among themselves.

POTATO INDUSTRY INQUIRY

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Since we had committed ourselves some three years ago to an inquiry into the potato industry in Canada, why has that not been done and why is it that our potato industry is now being investigated by Americans south of the border, who seem to want to investigate every aspect of Canadian economic activities these days? Why are we not investigating the Canadian potato industry here in Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that there have been several hearings taking place in Canada about potato marketing. If the Hon. Member is suggesting a Royal Commission—and I heard applause from the other side, yet they always condemn these Royal Commissions—I do not believe a Royal Commission is appropriate, but there have been hearings and decisions have been made. The National Farm Products Marketing Council has held hearings on potato marketing, on how it should be helped. That is why they are recommending the kind of a marketing system which is wanted. It has been endorsed by Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and, Madam Speaker, is being endorsed by the western Provinces. The western Provinces say they are ready to move faster than the eastern Provinces on this very similar kind of condition.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

PROPOSED TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Both he and the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated last week, and earlier this week, that the Cruise testing would be looked at in light of progress made at the Geneva talks, and also that declining to test the Cruise would not be a breach of any of our commitments. He said that the day before yesterday in the House. Last evening, at his dinner for U.S. Vice-President Bush, the Prime Minister not only did not make any connection between testing and progress of the talks at Geneva but, even more seriously, he said that refusing to test would in fact be a breach of some of our commitments. Which of the Prime Minister's statements is the Canadian public to believe?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I repeat that when I said there would be no breach of any commitment, that is the only thing I could say, because there has been no commitment. I believe that has been made clear repeatedly in the House. The Hon. Member says I said last night that there had been a commitment. I should like to know where and how I said that. If she has any text, I would be happy to hear it from her.

CANADIAN COMMITMENT TO NATO

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister clearly wants to have the public continue in a state of absolute and complete confusion on this subject. He said last night that we would not be in breach of any commitment if we tested the Cruise. What I am asking him is how does that square with him saying that we would be—I am sorry, he said that we would be in breach of our commitment—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Jewett: —if we tested the Cruise. How does that square with his earlier remark that we would not be. He is saying one thing one day—and he has me confused and he has everyone in the country confused about this. If the Prime Minister refers to a commitment to Europe, Madam Speaker, if that is the commitment he says we would be breaching if we decline to test the Cruise, will he explain to me why it is possible for Norway not to test or deploy nuclear weapons and still remain a member of the alliance, and for Belgium possibly to refuse to deploy nuclear weapons? Would the Prime Minister explain to me why Canada has no independent initiatives in the alliance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that I did not say there was a commitment to Europe to test the Cruise. There was no commitment to the United States and there is none to Europe.

What I said last night it seems to me is reasonably clear, if the hon. lady looks at the transcript. I was saying that there was a two-track decision made by NATO in December, 1979, to which all the members of NATO, including Canada, subscribed. One of those two tracks was an undertaking to deploy in Europe, in certain countries—not necessarily every one of them, Norway or Belgium, but in certain countries—to deploy Euro-missiles. That was a commitment which Canada made with the others.

My argument last night was that those who oppose the Cruise testing in Canada are really asking us to renege on a NATO commitment made by the Europeans to their North American partners. That is the logic I was putting forth last night. It does not mean that there has been an agreement made. I told the House before that we want to make sure that both tracks are being pursued, in other words, that the negotiations with the Soviet Union are being pursued at the same time as we are preparing for the deployment of the Euro-missiles, and that our judgment of how the other track was proceeding would influence us in deciding whether we would go with the Cruise or not. Indeed, that other track is what we discussed very extensively with Vice-President Bush yesterday.

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has said we are doing this because Europe has asked us to do so. That is a direct quote from last night. Now he is saying that Europe has nothing to do with it, it is not their request. Indeed, it is a request from the United States for the air launch Cruise missile testing, from the B-52 bombers. That that is what the request is all about. I wish he would make that clear.

UNITED STATES POSITION

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): My final supplementary relates to the speech of President Reagan last night. Following on all the discussions about arms reductions with Vice-President Bush yesterday, we hear President Reagan announce what can only be described as a frightening escalation of the nuclear arms race, an escalation which could well violate the rather fragile arms agreements we already have. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, particularly in light of the fact that the U.S. Congress has reduced the President's defence request from a 10 per cent increase to a 4 per cent increase, is there any inclination on his part, and the part of the Government, to stop doing exactly what President Reagan wants, and to take its lead from the U.S. Congress instead, or is the Canadian Government more susceptible to pressure from the White House than is the U.S. Congress itself?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, until now I respected the hon. lady's concern about this matter. I wonder if I will continue maintaining that respect after her interpretation of my speech last night. She misquoted and misstated what I had said in the first part of her question just now, and then she seems to have omitted completely anything else I might have said in that speech where I urged the Americans very strongly to try to return to a more flexible attitude in seeking progress in the INF talks.

I urged them to try to recoup the spirit which had existed for ten years, between 1962 and 1972 after the Cuban missile crisis, when there had been an immense amount of progress on anti-ballistic missile treaties, on hotline treaties, on non-proliferation treaties, on partial test-ban treaties, and on various confidence building measures. I said that that was a very productive period and we were worried that since, perhaps, ten years there has been nothing positive coming out, and particularly the fact that the United States has not ratified the second SALT II talks. These are things which worry us. Therefore, the whole thrust of my statement last night, it seemed to me, was to urge the United States on in the direction in which I thought the Hon. Member herself was interested. Now she seems to be more interested in trying to misinterpret my speech than in seeking progress in this matter.

NATO DECISION IN 1979

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. It applies to his previous response where he was discussing the 1979 two-track decision taken at the NATO ministerial meeting. He seemed to imply—and this is what I would like clarification about—that the decision as to whether or not there would be testing of the Cruise guidance missile system in Canada was also taken at that time. I would like him to tell the House that it is his understanding that the decision which was taken in 1979 applied to the arms control talks and to the deployment of the Cruise and Pershing missiles in Europe only, and had nothing to do whatsoever with the testing of any guidance missile system here in Canada.

• (1430)

PROPOSALS TO AID GENEVA TALKS ON DISARMAMENT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On Monday the Secretary of State for External Affairs, commenting on the forthcoming visit of Vice-President Bush, said that the Canadian Government would be putting its views forward on various proposals with respect to the Geneva negotiations.

May I ask the Prime Minister what proposals the Canadian Government advanced with Vice-President Bush yesterday that would make a significant contribution to solving the dilemma of the Geneva negotiations, so that true progress can be made on mutual balanced and verifiable nuclear disarmament in the world?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, essentially the Ministers and I made two proposals. They were both stated publicly in my toast to Vice-President Bush last night. I summed up the second proposal in my answer to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway—

Miss Jewett: I have a new riding now.

Mr. Trudeau: Vancouver-New Westminster—

An Hon. Member: That is close.

Mr. Trudeau: Somewhere in British Columbia, Madam Speaker—the other side of the mountains that those people do not climb enough.

Madam Speaker: It is New Westminster-Coquitlam. I have some sympathy with the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Beatty: I don't.

Mr. Trudeau: The thrust of the proposals has to do with something I said in the House the day before yesterday in answer to a member of the Opposition, to wit, that we thought the zero-zero option was the ideal option, one which would certainly be better if there were no Euro-missiles at all in Europe, but that we were not certain it was a realizeable goal, and that we were urging the United States to look at compromise or intermediate solutions. That is the essence of the message we gave to Vice-President Bush.

INDUSTRY

ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—ELIGIBILITY OF SERVICE INDUSTRIES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He will not be surprised to know that I want to raise with him the issue of the Maislin trucking bailout, a company that has been the beneficiary of $34 million of taxpayers' money that was pledged against its indebtedness.

Last summer the Minister's predecessor, in response to questions from Members of the Opposition and, indeed, from Government backbenchers, said on August 30 that if people came forward with applications and made their case on the merits, they would certainly be considered. Last week, on March 18, the Minister said, as reported at page 23908 of Hansard:

> As funds were limited at that time we made the decision not to proceed with service sector applications.

Am I correct in understanding that the only service industry, trucking or otherwise, that will be the beneficiary of government largesse will be Maislin Trucking, under the Enterprise Development Program?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, to my knowledge that is the only company under the ED Program, but there could be some, for example, in the tourist industry under different programs. I will get back to the Hon. Member with a specific response to his question.

MAISLIN COMPANY APPLICATION

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I hope I do not accuse the Minister's predecessor wrongly, but he referred to the merits of the application. As the Minister well knows, dozens of applications have come to his Department from service industries, including the trucking industry and others, under the Enterprise Development Progam. No matter what the legitimate merits of the applications are from these service industries, are we to understand that the only successful applicant over the last year has been Maislin Trucking?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my predecessor, in an effort to assist a number of companies that came before the Government at the time, made a very sincere effort to look at those applications. Unfortunately, there was also a substantial increase in demand from companies in the manufacturing and processing sectors which the program was originally designed to assist. Because of the fiscal restraint that we were under, plus the increased number of applications subsequent to my predecessor's willingness to consider service sector applications it was decided that it was more appropriate to handle the manufacturing and processing applications first. They obviously had the priority as the program was designed for these sectors.

CRITERIA FOR ELIGIBILITY

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, just so that we can be absolutely clear, may I ask the Minister whether the only service industry that would qualify with any optimism, or that would apply with any optimism for a government handout or a government pledge of $34 million, or even a lesser amount, is a service industry that would fit these qualifications: one so mismanaged that the Government insisted on a new chief executive officer; one in such a precarious financial position that government officials advised against any government involvement; the majority of whose employees are in the United States and are not citizens of Canada; and one that is a friend of the Liberal Party? Is that the bottom line for service industries in this country to apply to the Government for aid?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I get the impression from the questions coming from the Official Opposition in the past two weeks that they are looking forward to having the Maislin Corporation go under. As a fellow Member of Parliament I find that attitude unacceptable, and regret that the concern for the jobs at stake is not taken more seriously by Hon. Members. I expect a little more from them in this regard.

NUMBER OF JOBS PROVIDED BY MAISLIN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. We all have trucking companies in our constituencies and they all need help, but only one got help. That is the point.

Earlier this week the Minister advised the House that, like a lot of other trucking companies, Maislin is experiencing financial difficulty. But Maislin was the only trucking company to get assistance, presumably on the basis of the number of jobs that would save. Can the Minister confirm or deny to the House that, of the 2,000 jobs mentioned in his predecessor's press release of July 31, only 800 remain in Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will check that question and get back to the Hon. Member with the specific number of jobs involved.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF MAISLIN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, earlier this week the Leader of the Opposition asked the Minister to inform himself about the financial stability of Maislin, and then inform the House. Media reports indicate that Maislin has been making monthly and quarterly statements to the Minister's Department. Can he tell the House what the financial situation of Maislin is in regard to profits or losses in the last quarter, from October 1 to December 31, 1982, so that the House, and the taxpayers of Canada who have bailed out Maislin, may know what the situation actually is?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is a chartered accountant, a profession for which I have a great deal of respect. As such, he knows that Maislin must publish an annual statement according to the law of this country. When that statement is issued, everyone in Canada will be able to see the financial figures.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS WITH MAISLIN

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, in an article in today's Financial Post a government source is quoted as saying:

> We're talking to the company almost every day and see them about twice a month—

If that is the case, surely the Minister can inform the House whether the company is suffering continued losses. Can he not go that far and inform the House of the health or non-health of the taxpayers' $34 million investment in the company?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Leader of the Official Opposition knows, Maislin is a public corporation. Their shares are traded on the stock exchange and as such they will be making their corporate financial statements public, as required by law. With his years of experience, the Hon. Member knows that. I do not think it is either appropriate or responsible for me, as a Minister of the Crown, to make those corporate financial statements public when it is provided under the law, under the Canada Corporations Act, I believe, that the company must do so.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am not asking the Minister to make financial statements available now. I am following up on the line of questioning of yesterday and today. Surely the Minister has to take a sufficient interest in the taxpayers' $34 million to keep himself informed of the stability of the company? All he is doing by that kind of answer is stonewalling.

INQUIRY RESPECTING LOSSES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Financial Post article goes on to say:

> There is no lack of acknowledgment by government spokesmen that close tabs are being kept on the company—

If that is the case, why will the Minister not inform us of the extent of the losses of this company on a month-by-month basis? I suggest that he knows what those losses are and he is not informing the taxpayers who put up $34 million to bail out the company.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): As I said to the Hon. Member the other day, Madam Speaker, we treat this case very seriously because of the Government guarantees and also because of the job creation element. I also think my responses should be much more responsible than that, since we have a public corporation whose shares are traded on the stock exchange. It would be irresponsible to respond specifically to every single question regarding the financial capability of this particular corporation. I do not think that is in the best interests of the future of the company or the stability of the jobs in the Corporation, or the indirect jobs created by the company.

BANKS AND BANKING

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF HIGH MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will recall, and I am sure be aware of the fact, that there are still significant numbers of people who took out mortgages during the very high interest rate period and who are locked in for a year, two years or sometimes even longer, with interest rates in excess of 19 per cent. Given that the banks have recently announced that they are making a substantial recovery with regard to their profits, is it not reasonable for the Government to approach them and ask whether they would consider reducing the very high levels of interest rates being charged to those few Canadians who are locked in, in order that they not be put in such a financial bind?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, obviously any borrower can renegotiate with the lender arrangements made under a particular loan agreement. Obviously in these arrangements there are generally penalties to be incurred if the loans are called or reimbursed before the expiry date.

In my discussions with the Canadian Bankers' Association, I have already drawn attention to the fact that it should show a great deal of responsibility in that regard, take into account the particular situation of individuals and try to accommodate individual situations. I would be very happy to pass the further representations of the Hon. Member on to the Canadian Bankers' Association and the banking community generally.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE TO ASSIST HOME OWNERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister of Finance indicated that people are able to renegotiate downward the level of interest they pay. He knows full well that the penalties charged, generally speaking, are far beyond the ability of the majority of citizens in terms of capital outlay at the moment.

We still have substantial unemployment and many people with mortgage interest rates they simply cannot afford, well in excess of 19 per cent. Surely it is not too much to ask of the Government, having made representation and having been rebuffed, that it take action to say to the banks, since they have made a substantial recovery during this first quarter and the substantial recovery they have made is clearly one they expect to continue, that they must now deal with people locked in to very high interest rates over which the people themselves have no control, and over which the Government exercised absolutely no control at the time?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have heard the Hon. Member's representations and indeed I will bring them to the attention of Canadian bankers.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

UNITED STATES PROPOSAL TO DEVELOP OUTER SPACE WEAPONS SYSTEM

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Last night when he was dining with the Vice-President of the United States, the President of the United States made a statement indicating that its Government would proceed toward developing a satellite anti-ballistic missile laser system, much against the outer space treaty which we signed in 1967, and very much opposed to Parliament's Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence which unanimously opposes such an idea. Would the Prime Minister review the statement of the President and convey to the United States Government the concern of Parliament about this very dangerously destabilizing proposal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must admit that I have not heard or read the statement of the President. I understand the Department of External Affairs is discussing it with the Minister. I expect to enter the discussion at some point. Therefore, I would not want to comment beyond saying that we will study it very seriously.

I get from the question the concern about anti-ballistic missiles. I agree that that was a very important part of SALT I, but my understanding is that this is something for a great distance in the future and will not affect present negotiations for nuclear arms limitation and reduction. That is the aspect of it about which I am satisfied, that it will not affect present negotiations. The Hon. Member raises a real concern. I will undertake to look into it.

FISHERIES

FISH PLANT QUOTA ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Atlantic fish processing companies are now operating on three-month quota allocations that are due to expire at the end of March, which is just about seven days from now. In view of the uncertainty this action is creating among fishermen and the processors who are unable to reopen closed plants, resulting in continued unemployment, when will the Minister extend the long-term enterprise allocations these companies need to become economically viable?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would like to say to the Hon. Member that it was at the request of the different Atlantic Ministers of Fisheries that the decision was taken at the end of last year not to renew the enterprise allocations, pending the solving of the restructuring question. For a temporary period of time what has been decided is to prolong for three months, or a little more than that, enterprise allocations, until the new configuration of the industry is decided upon, whereby afterwards we will be able to discuss the enterprise allocations program.

Mr. Crouse: I thank the Hon. Minister for that reply. I hope he will make the next three-month allocation known very shortly.

GOVERNMENT MARKETING POLICIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The main unresolved question following the tabling of the Kirby report concerns the four recommendations in the marketing section, numbered 34, 35, 36 and 37. Since these recommendations, if implemented, will give massive power and control to the federal Government over the fishing industry, a threat which is causing considerable apprehension throughout the entire industry, when can it expect a final decision from the Minister with regard to the Government's marketing policies?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member that we do not have the same interpretation of the Kirby recommendations on marketing. I would even tell him that we invited the Government of Nova Scotia to give us its official point of view. I also have some ideas that I shared with them. On the question of marketing, not only do we have the structure one can think of, but more fundamentally the question we must ask ourselves is: in view of the increased supply which we will have between now and 1987, how will we together expand the fishing market?

If Canada and the United States would consume one pound more per year per capita, it would amount to over 300 million pounds. We are a way down compared with Europe, on fishing consumption. We must expand the market, otherwise it might be wiser to leave the fish in the water than to depress prices, as we might have downside pressure for the next few years. There are many initiatives upon which the Government will be embarking, as I have announced, after its decision on the Kirby report.

TRANSPORT

URBAN TRANSPORTATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—ERNESTOWN TOWNSHIP, ONT. PROJECT

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Could the Minister give any indication as to the status of a request for funding assistance under the federal Urban Transportation Assistance Program for the proposed mainline CN rail grade separation in Ernestown Township. It is my understanding that Urban Transportation Assistance Program funds are currently fully committed in Ontario. Considering the extreme importance this arterial road project will have, for local industrial development, has the Minister discussed with his Cabinet colleage, the Minister of Finance, the level of funding in the upcoming budget for UTAP?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is either one of two things. Either this project has already been approved by the Government of Ontario, my Department and by the CTC and, if that is so, I will check and inform my hon. friend. If it is a new program, then I will have to tell the Hon. Member—and he seems to know—that Ontario has used all its funds in the UTA Program which ends in 1984. With respect to the future, I have a paper before cabinet now, which has not yet been studied, having to do with the creation of what I call the "son of UTAP". The decision as to whether it will be born or not is still to be made.

REQUEST THAT PRIORITY BE ASSIGNED TO PROJECT

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, again my question is for the Minister of Transport. It is my understanding that this program has been approved by the Ontario Government and that it is funding from the federal Government that is holding it up. Will the Minister make this a priority in the upcoming budget for the next fiscal year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, sometimes the Government of Ontario approves a program under UTAP for which there is no money in the bank. That, of course, is not a real approval. But again, I will check on the Hon. Member's case. If it is a matter of there being no funds available, then I am sorry but my hon. friend will have to count on the Government of Ontario to carry the program alone, or he will have to wait to see if we will have the "son of UTAP".

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENT PROTEST AGAINST CREATION OF MILITARY JOBS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): My question, Madam Speaker, is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Today, students from his own university, the University of Winnipeg, and students from the University of Manitoba, are demonstrating in front of the Canadian Forces Recruiting Base to protest what they consider to be a waste of federal funds for military summer jobs because they feel these jobs are unrelated to their education. They propose that the funds should go into career internship and community development, fields which are related to their own areas of education. Would the Minister give some very serious consideration to the protests from his own university?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, we have spent a good deal of time meeting with students over the past week and, in fact, over the past several months. I have also had a number of conversations with members of our own caucus concerning the various ways in which we can try to assist young people get employment. There is no question this is one of the most serious issues facing the country and that we will try to provide support for them in a way that we can.

We have inaugurated certain pilot projects, as the Hon. Member may know, in those two universities to provide work-study programs which enable the students to attend school and at the same time get job experience. There is no lack of different, useful proposals. The question is what packaging or balancing of options will most effectively help young people during this very difficult recessionary period.

REQUEST THAT STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM BE EXPANDED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, the President of the University of Winnipeg Student's Association has predicted that unemployment for university students in Winnipeg, and I am sure the same is true in every other university city and town, will be over 25 per cent this summer. This means, despite everything that has been done by the federal and provincial Governments, that not enough has been done. Will the Minister indicate whether the Government is giving any consideration to more new programs that will cut down that very serious rate of unemployment, because many of those students will not earn the money to go back to school next September? Will he discuss with his colleague, the Secretary of State, the possibility that the student loan program will be expanded so that these students can get some loans this fall in order to go back to school?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that just a few weeks back we announced the addition of $50 million for the summer employment program, an increase in funds of some 40 per cent. We hope that will provide some leadership and direction for other provincial Governments and people in the private sector to employ students during this period.

This summer we will also be opening some 400 offices across Canada. They will provide direct placement services for upwards of 200,000 or 300,000 young people during this period. We are trying to make an effort to assist students. But we recognize at the same time that young people in the job market will be going through a particularly strenuous period and, as I have said before, their is a matter of very active discussion and concern among members of our own caucus as to how we can best help students over the next year and a half.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE APPOINTED TO ENFORCE LEGISLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. This week the Commissioner of Official Languages tabled his annual report, in which he highlighted continuing violations of the Official Languages Act. He cited several flagrant examples, such as those of Air Canada in Timmins, and Petro-Canada in Quebec. These Crown Corporations are not giving adequate services to the official language minority. Since the problem appears to be with the enforcement of the Act in the various Departments and agencies, will the Prime Minister consider designating a Minister with sufficient power to enforce the legislation in all Departments and agencies in order to avoid a continuation of this type of violation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will certainly take notice of the question, because we are concerned with the facts as stated by the Commissioner of Official Languages. I will inquire into the best ways of ensuring that all Departments are more zealous in applying the requirements of the Official Languages Act. I have not had time to consider whether I should again consider designating a special Minister, or whether I should use some other mechanism to ensure that, but I will look into the matter very seriously.

HARBOURS

REPORTED FUNDING FOR QUEBEC MARINAS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, if I may. Last week there was a report in the paper that the Government had put up some $9 million for a chain of marinas along the St. Lawrence from Baie Comeau to Quebec City. Could the Minister confirm that particular report?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, that question should be asked of the Minister of Tourism or the Minister of State for External Relations. It is not an activity of my Department.

Oral Questions

APPLICATION FROM SIDNEY, B.C.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, since the Department over which the Minister presides has within it a branch of small craft harbours from which funds of this sort normally come, I wonder why the Minister is backing away from it. He should know that for a number of years from Sidney, British Columbia, there has been a request to his Department for much less money than this for a breakwater to provide one marina in Sidney, B.C. Why has the Minister abandoned his responsibility and turned it over to some other authority?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is confusing two issues. For the regular program of the small craft harbours, cabinet has instructed me to consult with the different participants to get their views on the level of expenditure for that program.

As for the other program, which is not at all related to my Department and which is not costing my Department one cent, it is administered by my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE, and relates to the tricentennial anniversary of the discovery of Canada by Jacques Cartier, which is an international event. This is why it is funded by another budget, not from the budget of my Department.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FUNDING FOR EASTERN ONTARIO DRAIN PROGRAM

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, if I could get his attention. He is aware of my concern because I have telephoned his office on a number of occasions and I wrote a letter to him last December 23. My concern is with respect to the drain programs under the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement, an agreement which the Conservative Government introduced in 1979. This was an attempt to bring a resolution to the problem we had with the ARDA Program. Would the Minister give a commitment that the $2 million for the drain program under the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement will be provided so that these drain projects for the farmers can commence?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Member of Parliament who worked for four years almost all by myself in preparing that sub-agreement with the Province of Ontario, I am very familiar with the programs, and I also know of the Hon. Member's interest in this specific aspect of the agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: Unfortunately, the provincial Minister of Agriculture has written an erroneous letter to all municipalities in eastern Ontario indicating that the federal Government was not forthcoming with their share of the funds for drainage. Once the Minister checked with his officials, he discovered that it was at the Province's request that we held back the funds for all individual drains because of the Province's desire to finance three major drains. I have since received apologies from the Government of Ontario for that letter that was erronerously sent out under the Minister's signature.

● (1500)

I have since decided that we will approve all the individual drains until such time as the funds have been depleted. However, the three major drains that were proposed, and for which the Province originally asked to hold back the funds, will probably not have the cost-sharing because it is expected that all the funds will be needed for the individual farmers' drains in the counties of eastern Ontario under the agreement.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. LEWIS—PRIVILEGE OF MR. MACKASEY—OFFENDING MATERIAL NOT TABLED—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I would like to rule on the point of order which was raised in the House yesterday by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) relating to the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) on the question of privilege which was ruled upon and proceeded with by the House.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North referred to citations from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition and the Nineteenth Edition of Erskine May. He asserted that the Hon. Member for Lincoln, at the time he presented his motion, should have made available to the Table certain newspaper articles which were documents relating to the complaint which led to his raising of the question of privilege.

The citations which the Hon. Member offered to the Chair were very interesting and they did deal with the case before us. However, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that at Westminster, as here, there is a certain discretion allowed the Chair in these matters. I, too, will quote from Erskine May, which states as follows:

> Where complaint was made of a series of articles in several newspapers, the Speaker said that if he called upon the Clerk to read all the articles, he should be trifling with the House, and that he should therefore take leave to depart from the ordinary course.

That indicates that there is a discretion, and in some cases it is even thought advisable to do away with that practice. It seems to me that the Hon. Member is raising his point of order a bit too late. Perhaps it might have been dealt with differently if it had been raised at the time the motion was put.

Of course, the purpose of having these documents read is to give the Speaker and the House enough information upon which to make a decision. Clearly, I did have enough information. I do not say that it would not have been valuable to have more information, but I did have enough to make that decision and I ruled. The House subsequently gave its decision to send the matter to the Committee.

I wish to refer the Hon. Member to a case in our own House from January 24, 1975, concerning the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) when he raised a similar question of privilege. The Hon. Member did not then quote passages from the newspaper articles in his statement to the House. His motion at page 7937 of Hansard of July 23, 1975, only mentions "articles contained in the July 24, July 25 and in subsequent editions of the Montreal Gazette".

Furthermore, the Chair must emphasize that it is not the articles mentioned by the Hon. Member for Lincoln that have been sent to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, but the entire matter; that is, the specific question of privilege.

Finally, while the Chair took this point of order very seriously, the Chair would like to point out that the point of order should have been raised before the House pronounced itself. Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 237, is quite clear on this:

A point of order against procedure must be raised promptly and before the question has passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place.

However, it is a very good reminder to the House if Members, from time to time, would point this out to the Chair. It also reminds the Chair of how proceedings can be dealt with more completely. I am grateful to the Hon. Member for having raised the matter.

Therefore, I must say that the matter is properly now before the Committee and, of course, ought not to be discussed any further.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, this being Thursday, I would ask the Government House Leader if he could give us the House some idea as to the course of business for the balance of this week and next week.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, today we will debate a motion very soon and there is an understanding that after the vote is taken on that motion, questions to dispose of third reading of Bill C-139 will be put and we will dispose of third reading this afternoon.

There is also an understanding that tomorrow we will give final approval to all remaining stages of two Bills: first, Bill C-130 dealing with international financial institutions; and second, Bill C-144 with relation to the Small Businesses Loans Act.

[Translation]

As far as the business of the House for next week is concerned, Madam Speaker, and assuming that the motion to limit debate on Bill C-143 is adopted, on Monday we shall consider and complete the report stage of Bill C-143, the Borrowing Authority Bill, and Tuesday we shall continue the debate on the same Bill, the third reading stage this time, which we shall be completing at the end of the day, so that we shall have two votes on Bill C-143, one vote at 5.45 p.m. on Monday and another at 5.45 p.m. on Tuesday.

Wednesday is the day designated for Private Members' Business, and as provided under the new Standing Orders, we shall adjourn for Easter at 6 p.m. on Wednesday and return to the House on April 11, 1983.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have two matters which I wish to raise with the Government House Leader. The first and easiest matter concerns a question with regard to the Standing Committee on Labour. I have been informed that the Committee has not yet had its organizing meeting. There are matters that I think Members from this corner of the House, at least, would like to see considered by the Committee. Would the Government House Leader perhaps bring the matter to the attention of the appropriate persons and have some action taken in that regard?

The second matter concerns Bill C-141, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act. I understand that the Minister of Justice has agreed, after prolonged negotiations, to take out of Clause 14, Subclause (2) a clause that many people found offensive. With that in mind, and since it now appears to deal with the dispute that had arisen both in the House of Commons and out, is it possible for the Government House Leader to tell the House when Bill C-141 might be called and disposed of in order that those people most affected by it can have the benefit of the law protecting them?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, with respect to the Hon. Member's first question, I will inquire about the organization of the Committee on Labour. It is news to me but I will look into the matter.

In relation to the second point raised by the Hon. Member concerning Bill C-141, it is correct that there have been negotiations among the three Parties. There was an amendment moved by the Official Opposition deleting Subclause (2) of Clause 14 of Bill C-141. We are in agreement with that amendment and we are also willing to call that Bill next week, most likely next Tuesday during the lunch hour between one o'clock and two o'clock, as negotiated between the House Leaders and provided that all recorded divisions, if any, are deferred until the end of that day.

As the Hon. Member well knows, this matter has been raised and discussed. It seems that if all Parties can agree to it at the beginning of next week, it will likely be called next Tuesday between one o'clock and two o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Government House Leader for his answer and advise him that we are looking into Bill C-141. The House will know that we put down the amendment that was asked for by the association because of our concern with respect to that amendment. I will be getting back to the Government House Leader with respect to the appropriate day and how we will handle it.

The Government House Leader may have overlooked one thing. Would he give the House some idea whether or not it is the intention of the Government to prorogue immediately after we return? What is the Government's plan of action?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am a bit surprised by the question since my hon. colleague knows the list of Bills that have to be dealt with. I wrote to him in January. The fact that we are disposing of some legislation at this time, in this semester of the year, does not mean that we are satisfied with the progress being made. There are other Bills at report stage concerning which we would like to vote before we consider proroguing. We will hold a meeting next week, after which time I will be in a better position to indicate what the business of the House will be when we come back.

Mr. McRae: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Government House Leader. Some time ago there was a discussion in the House concerning a debate on disarmament. There had also been some requests for a debate on affairs in Latin America, particularly in Central America, El Salvador, which I think is very much related. I wonder if there has been any consideration to each of the Parties giving up one of their Opposition days after the recess, and perhaps the Government could do the same, so that we could have a debate on this general area.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member speaks in terms of the Government giving one day. I think it is well known, or it should be well known, that after we come back, in between April 11 and June 30 there will be 57 sitting days, out of which we will have to allot 13 days and subtract 12 Wednesdays dealing with Private Members' Business. It is most likely we will have a budget and will have to subtract six additional days for a debate on the budget. Therefore, I think it is very difficult, with only 26 days left for Government business—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He was ready for that one!

Mr. Pinard: —to talk in terms of devoting one day to anything other than business to be dealt with by the Government. My colleague is also speaking of an additional eight days for a Speech from the Throne, if any. That would mean that we would have only 18 days in which to deal with Government business from now until June.

That is the reality. If we want to prove that the experimental parliamentary reform is working, we must demonstrate that this institution is more productive and efficient. I call on the goodwill of my colleagues on both sides—

Mr. Epp: You've got our goodwill.

Mr. Pinard: —to make it very evident that parliamentary reform should stay. Therefore, the message is well given and, I hope, well taken.

However, in so far as debate on the subject raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, certainly with 13 Opposition days the Opposition will have a good opportunity to raise the matter. If it will make it easier, I will consider allotting two days in a row for the Opposition very shortly, when we come back, so that it might consider dealing with this matter very shortly after Easter.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I can assure the Government House Leader that the goodwill of the Opposition is always here, but it does not extend to granting one of our Opposition days to an Hon. Member of his Party.

Mr. Deans: It is not a matter of granting anything to the Hon. Member who raised the question. The issue which he raises is important. It is an issue, in fact, which I myself raised with the Government House Leader privately some weeks ago.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I find it interesting that the Conservatives are not eager to discuss it. However, that is not a problem. If we can accommodate having a reasonable debate on important matters such as this, we will consider it very seriously.

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, I would like to propose somewhat of a compromise to the President of the Prive Council. As he will likely know, because I have communicated with him, my Private Members' Bill is entitled "An Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone". I would like to ask the Government House Leader whether or not, in view of the fact that next Wednesday is a Private Members' day, if my Private Members' Bill could be moved up into the—

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Anguish: —place which is designated for another Member of the NDP, who has agreed to a change so that we may discuss my Private Members' Bill. I think it is of some urgency. In fact, not only does it involve a global emergency, but it is also of concern within this House.

We know that a young person by the name of Karen Harrison has been fasting in the galleries for quite some time. She says that she will not break her fast until there is a commitment for debate on this matter within the House of Commons. Will the Government House Leader give consideration to seeking consent from his Party to debate my Private Members' Bill on Wednesday instead of that of the other NDP Member? This is a very important matter.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, that is a matter relating to the Private Members' hour. The Government does not interfere with the Private Members' hour. What Government Members might do individually is something that we could discuss. In the event that the Hon. Member does know of another Hon. Member who is prepared to yield his position, he would need unanimous consent of the House. Hon. Members of this side may be disposed to agree. I could not speak for the other side. However, I would be prepared to discuss it with him privately.

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, I am seeking unanimous consent so that we may enter into debate on my Private Members' Bill.

Mr. Stevens: No.

Mr. Anguish: I did, in fact, consult with an Hon. Member who is willing to yield so that this Bill may come up on Wednesday—Mark—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: A rose between two thorns.

Mr. Anguish: —and I would like to seek unanimous consent of the House that this Bill be introduced on Wednesday.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I think it would be appropriate for the Hon. Member to seek that consent on Wednesday. Traditionally, Hon. Members on this side of the House have not objected when one Hon. Member was prepared to yield his spot in Private Members' hour to another Hon. Member. I suspect that that would be the case in so far as this side of the House is concerned, However, the Government does not interfere with Private Members' hour, and that is the sort of motion which would be appropriately made next Wednesday during Private Members' hour.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I would like to support the position taken by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. We on this side take the same position with respect to Private Members' Business. It is something which is private to the Hon. Member who brings forward a Bill. We feel that the sequence of Bills should be respected. However, I agree that if the Hon. Member wants to make that request next Wednesday, then that is the time to do it. It is the business of Private Members, not of the Government or the Official Opposition.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I substantially agree with the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary and by the Government House Leader. However, so that an orderly debate can take place, it seems reasonable to inform Hon. Members of our desire to seek that unanimous consent on Wednesday next—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You've done it.

Mr. Deans: We have not yet done it and we are now doing it. At any rate, it would be our desire to substitute the legislation standing in the name of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake for that which stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody for debate during Private Members' hour on Wednesday next. I do not want anyone rising next Wednesday and saying: "If only you had given us notice, we might have considered it".

Mr. Stevens: Well, the answer will be no.

Mr. Deans: Oh, the Hon. Member here, "Mouthy," says the answer will be no. That tells us something about the attitude of the Conservatives.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I rise on a point of order. I heard the Government House Leader and the House Leader for the Opposition say that it was no business of the leadership of the Parties, that it was Private Members' Business. I have now heard the House Leader for the New Democratic Party intervene in the debate and make it his business. I suggest that if the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody is here, it is his business because it is his Bill. He is not here now. Therefore, we appreciate the notice, but I do not think we could ever say that consent had been given until it had been appropriately requested by the Hon. Member.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McCAIN—REPLY OF MR. WHELAN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, I am not permitted to debate any answers which Ministers may give to questions, no matter how little they comprehend the problem mentioned in the question. However, I do wish to say that the lack of comprehension of the international potato trade, as it relates to eastern Canada—

Madam Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order, and the Hon. Member is debating.

• (1520)

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, if I were permitted to debate I would use perfectly parliamentary language which would make earlier criticisms appear grossly complimentary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

NATIONAL CAPITAL ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE NUMBER OF COMMISSION MEMBERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-677, an Act to amend the National Capital Act.

He said: Madam Speaker, at present every Province in Canada has a representative on the National Capital Commission, but the Northwest Territories and Yukon are not represented unless a person from one of those two Territories happens to be appointed as a member at large, as was the case, for instance, with the late Paul Kaeser of Fort Smith who served so ably for so many years.

My Bill would right this wrong by increasing the number of Commission members to provide for the mandatory appointment of one member from the Northwest Territories and one member from the Yukon.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-143

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I move:

That, in relation to Bill C-143, An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: Madam Speaker, on March 8 when I addressed second reading of Bill C-143, An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, I described the Bill as a measure required by the Government for prudent financial housekeeping. I might add that since debate began on this Bill more than a month ago, we have spent more than 33 hours, involving nine days, to take the matter to this stage. This total includes an aggregate of close to 24 hours of debate in this House, and a further ten hours before the House Standing Committee on Finance.

Again as I pointed out at that time, the interim borrowing authority we are seeking is normally a routine procedure which gives the Government economic leverage in the marketplace. Without this authorization, the borrowing activities of the Government would be constrained in the early months of the new fiscal year, which is traditionally a period in which the Government usually faces heavy cash requirements stemming, for example, from payment of income tax refunds and from other seasonal factors.

What we have attempted to point out during this protracted debate on this matter is that if borrowing powers are limited during this crucial time, the Government would be precluded from the prudent planning of its debt program and would not be able to take advantage of developing market situations. This would be costly not only to the Government, but could impact upon provincial Governments in their borrowing activities and could impact also upon the private sector in the market, and therefore be disruptive in the capital market generally.

I would remind Hon. Members that in the tabling of the Main Estimates more than a month ago, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) did give ample indication of how the money under discussion would be spent. I would remind Hon. Members as well that almost two-thirds of those budgetary estimates are slated for statutory expenditures based on continuing authority given by Acts of the current and previous Parliaments which determine the basis whereby individuals, businesses, provincial and other Governments in Canada become entitled to receive federal funds.

The Main Estimates show in great detail the wide variety of programs being carried on by the Government of Canada in meeting its responsibilities of assisting Canadians in a very difficult time. We know that the signs are that this has been a struggle that seems to be paying off, that there is an improvement in the economy, but it is a struggle against a world-wide and very, very difficult recession.

The Estimates reflect a 21 per cent rise in cash payments under the Established Programs Financing Act whereby the federal Government contributes to such things as financing of hospital insurance, medicare, extended health care and post-secondary education. They indicate a $2.9 billion allocation to Unemployment Insurance, as we anticipate a slow recovery in employment prospects during our gradual recovery from the recession. The Estimates show a further 21 per cent increase in federal contributions under the Canada Assistance Plan. This plan provides, for example, for a 50 per cent payment by the federal Government of eligible costs of provincial and municipal expenditures for assistance payments, welfare services and health programs. In addition, we cover one-half of the cost of child support services such as foster care, daycare and a broad array of other family and social support services used by Canadians on an ongoing basis.

If Members opposite are still wondering how the money will be spent, I would mention that the Main Estimates also spell out a number of new initiatives undertaken by the Government, including this Small Business Investment Grant Program and the New Employment Expansion Development Plan called the NEED Program, which was touched upon by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) today.

I want to touch upon another criticism that has been raised by Hon. Members in the discussion of this legislation before the House. I am talking about a claim made that the expenditures of the Government, as witnessed by the documents tabled by the President of the Treasury Board, or the funds sought in this legislation, reflect that the Government is not managing or controlling expenditures.

I would remind Hon. Members that the policy and expenditure management system was put in place in 1979 following receipt of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, the Lambert Commission. That system is in place and is functioning. It was adopted by the Official Opposition when in Government. As Hon. Members are aware, this is a program where spending is broken into ten expenditure categories, with Cabinet committees taking responsibility for expenditure management within an envelope system.

Each envelope is provided with a separate policy reserve which functions as a bank account in which unallocated funds are kept. Cabinet committees can add to their policy reserves by cancelling or cutting down on existing programs. Ministers have to vie, argue and debate for the prudent expenditure of funds. Priorities must be struck, and for any expenditure from those funds there is a check and balance.

There are other controls as well. All budgetary appropriations of funds must be approved by Parliament, and the Government supplies very detailed information in the form of Estimates. For example, I have been before the Finance Committee to report on and account for the Department of Insurance which falls under my responsibility, as every other Minister does for the expenditures of his Department.

Parliament must authorize all taxation and borrowing activity by the Government. Within the Government, the Treasury Board rigorously examines all requests for spending authority by Government Departments and agencies. It is constantly on the lookout for inefficiency or impropriety and screens the submission it receives very carefully. I do not think I have to remind Hon. Members of the office of Comptroller-General and the role that he plays in the scheme of things in terms of official management of expenditures of Government.

The Auditor General examines the Government's financial statements very carefully and reports to Parliament on his findings. We were saddened this week with the sudden and unexpected demise of Mr. Macdonnell who took such leadership in this area. He performs a watch-dog function which helps provide further assurance that Government will function according to Parliament's dictates and as efficiently as possible.

Finally, the Government announced in 1975 that henceforth it would endeavour to hold the trend growth in its expenditures to no more than the trend growth in the economy. Over the period from 1975 to 1980, the Government was successful in meeting this objective. In 1981 expenditures rose more rapidly, no doubt a reflection of high interest rates and the consequent effects on public debt charges.

In conclusion, I urge Hon. Members to give speedy disposition to Bill C-143 to permit the Government to meet the real needs of Canadians which I have expressed. We hope this will be done in a most expeditious manner reflecting the efficiency which I detailed in my comments.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate, I do so with real sorrow. I feel that while the Government has the right to use closure which it is now proposing that the House accept, this is not the time to be using closure on such an important matter as the borrowing requirements of the Government.

I say I rise somewhat in sorrow because, having listened to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), it is abundantly clear to me that he, and presumably his Cabinet colleagues, have just lost control of the situation. He attempted to justify the use of closure today on the basis that it is inevitable spending, that somehow they have done their best. To be specific, he said that we put a spending policy in place in 1979 and he feels that things have not been too bad since that scheme was put in place.

Let us not forget the facts. Since this Government took office in February, 1980, just after the 1979 approach that he referred to, Government spending has increased by 68 per cent compared to an increase in the Consumer Price Index of 37 per cent and nominal Gross National Product growth of only 33 per cent.

There can be absolutely no doubt that the public of Canada want and are entitled to a fair debate concerning the Government's borrowing needs, yet we are being denied that. The Minister of State made the comment that after all, Parliament has had 24 hours to debate this matter. I am not too sure whether his arithmetic is correct, but if we divide 24 into $19 billion, we find that he is talking about $800 million per unit. The inference seems to be that after having talked that length of time, let us get on with it.

The Minister is totally ignoring that while there may have been a debate for several hours or days, and I doubt whether it was that long a debate, the fact is that in committee we were denied answers to question after question concerning why the Government needed not only these new funds, but what it had done with some of the funds it has already borrowed. The whole purpose of this forum, this talking House, if you like, this House of Parliament, is that we can debate and hopefully arrive at some consensus as to where suitable changes can be made.

We felt that if the Government needed the $5 billion it was asking for in the current fiscal year, perhaps it should have that authorization. However, we felt there was no need, without understanding more fully what it was going to use the $14 billion for next year, to give it that authority carte blanche. That is our position. To simply say that we have made our point, that somehow or other we have had enough days of debate and the Government is going to bring in closure to get on with it, takes away from Parliament one of its most sacred rights, control, not only of spending, but of borrowing that the Government proposes to do in the name of the people.

The only thing of real substance to which we are entitled in the House is to control Government spending and borrowing. Day in and day out we do not see true democracy in the sense of representative Government but, rather, an elected dictatorship, a dictatorship that goes to the country when they think they can get re-elected on trumped-up issues, so-called charisma. It is an attempt to hoodwink the Canadian public so that they can get back in control and run the country down further and further.

That is why I hope that for once Members will vote the way their conscience tells them to vote on this issue. I hope they will say on this particular point to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of State for Finance that Parliament should be allowed more time, and that, hopefully, some amendments can be agreed to. I say that because it is most dreadful to look at this Government's handling of our economy.

Let me put this on the record: Looking at the public accounts data for the fiscal year ending 1982-83, we find in the November, 1981 budget the budgetary deficit as a percent of the Gross National Product would be minus 2.8 per cent. That is partly what we are talking of today, Mr. Speaker, this borrowing need, the Government's financial requirement for budgetary deficit. They told us at that time it would be minus 2.8 per cent. In the budget of June, 1982, it was up to minus 5.4 per cent of our GNP. In the financial statement of October, 1982, it was at minus 6.7 per cent of our GNP. And in the update of February, 1983, it had arrived at minus 7.8 per cent of our GNP. Yet we are told that, regardless of how it has misled this House and the public with respect to the current fiscal year, the Government would like us to sign a blank cheque for another $14 billion to get it through, we are told, until about the summer. The Government is not sure how far this money will take it into next year, but it would like to have it in hand.

The Minister of State for Finance asks how we dare delay passage of this Bill because it may impede the Government's borrowing, taking it for granted that the Government has some right to go out and borrow, and taking it for granted that there should be no questioning of the expenditures which have led us into the malaise which I partly indicated from reading the Government's own figures. But we are now at the point, Mr. Speaker, where one tax dollar in four is used to pay interest on this Government's debt alone. It is phenomenal. If you would like to look at it another way, we are at the point where for every dollar of revenue which the Government now has, it is spending $1.50. One-third, roughly, of the total expenditures at the federal Government level today is being borrowed to pay for it. That is totally wrong.

I have certainly heard Government Members say, "Well, this is what Keynesianism is all about". They believe that somehow if you are in a wrong economic time or in a slump, you should be willing to go into a comparatively larger deficit in order to bring yourself out. But let us look at the facts, Mr. Speaker. If a bigger deficit was going to help, you would think we would have one of the most booming economies in the world. The fact is that in the November, 1981 forecast, the 1982-83 deficit was said to be $10 billion. In June they said it would be $19 billion. In October they said it would be $23 billion, and then finally it was $27 billion. In short, this Government has allowed, in one fiscal year alone, its spending to go from an estimated $10 billion in the red to $27 billion, and what is now touted possibly a $30 billion shortfall.

I mention these things, Mr. Speaker, because I believe when Hon. Members are asked to muzzle Parliament concerning the Bill which is before us, they really must ask themselves why. Why has the Government led us into such a high deficit position? Certainly, our socialists to the left like to talk about these short-term deficits. They, of course, have been one of the supporters of these big deficits which we are now living with. But the fact is that if it is looked upon by the Government, or the socialists, as short-term, we must bear in mind that this federal Government has not balanced its books since 1970, and as the projections indicate, they will be adding another $140 billion in deficits over the next five years.

Since the Liberals have been in power since 1970, the deficit is certainly not a short-term problem. To have a deficit which has added to our net debt in this country some $120 billion in 18 years is a disgrace, and it is certainly the best evidence which we could offer to the Canadian public of the total incompetence and mismanagement of this Government.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I found the comments of the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) interesting, but passing strange. I found it strange that he should rise and claim that the opportunity for debate was about to be muzzled, when not half an hour ago, when we suggested that on a day next week we would like to have a particular matter debated rather than another, it was he, the Hon. Member for York-Peel, who said, "Absolutely not. You will have no unanimous consent from me to allow that debate to take place". If an Hon. Member had not been thrown out of the House today for saying someone was a hypocrite, there is no telling what words I might have uttered.

In any event, I would like to deal with the problem before us today, that the Government has mismanaged the finances of Canada. The Government has failed to provide the kind of direction in terms of the investment of the finances of Canadians, whether it be finances currently available through taxation and other means, or whether it be finances resulting from borrowing. The Government has failed to establish the proper priorities. Unlike the Hon. Member for York-Peel, who is somewhat myopic about these things and seems to have a serious case of tunnel vision, I do not believe that borrowing in itself is necessarily a bad thing. I am sure that every single Hon. Member of the House of Commons probably has at some time in his life gone to a financial institution and borrowed money. The majority will likely have taken on a mortgage at some point in order to purchase a home, and they have probably been in the process of paying it off over many years. The interesting thing about that is that that kind of borrowing, I would suggest, is appropriate. However, that is not the purpose for which this Government borrows. The Government does not borrow for those kinds of reasons. It has borrowed because its income has fallen off dramatically and, among the many reasons, there is substantial unemployment in the land, which has reduced the tax paid into the coffers of the Government of Canada. Unemployment has reduced the purchasing power of a significantly large number of consumers, and the reduction of that purchasing power has resulted in a decrease in the manufacturing of consumer products in this country. That decrease has resulted in a decrease of the profitability of a large number of small, medium and large companies, and that has resulted again in a reduction in the taxes payable to the Government of Canada. The end result of that has been that while the Government's commitments remain not only substantial but grow daily as a result of the high unemployment in the land, its revenues have dropped off dramatically.

If the Government were to come to us and say, "We have in mind a large number of investments which would be undertaken on behalf of the taxpayers of this country." For example, "We intend to rebuild the port facilities, both inland and on the coast. We intend to take a hand building homes at a price that people can afford. We intend to embark upon a program to ensure that the farming community will replace obsolete farm implements and equipment." If the Government would come forward with programs to join with the automobile industry and the Provinces in order to stimulate the capacity of that industry to meet competition and provide a better standard of vehicle at a competitive price for the Canadian public, and that for this purpose, among others, it was going to have to borrow money; if it said it was going to have a complete East-West pipeline built more rapidly than was anticipated so that we could be absolutely self-sufficient in energy in the not too distant future; if it were to say it was going to embark upon a railway redevelopment program for the movement of freight and passengers and to meet the requirements of the next generation; if it came to this House of Commons and said it needed to borrow against future earnings in order to undertake all these things, I think it would find sympathy and support for its request.

I know that, having studied these matters Mr. Speaker, you would undoubtedly agree that a major housing program would put two or three hundred thousand people, now unemployed, back to work during this calendar year. The cost of such a program would be recovered because of the taxes paid by workers and unemployment insurance not paid. The benefits would flow to the community through additional purchasing. The money invested in those homes would be recoverable through mortgage-term payments and rents.

If you were to look beyond that, as I know you have, Mr. Speaker, you would appreciate that if we were to put money in place to encourage the farming community to replace obsolete and inadequate equipment, not only would we be in a better position in the years ahead to meet our commitment to this country's need for food, but to meet our export commitment as well. In addition, people would be put to work at Massey-Ferguson, International Harvester and all the other plants. They would be taken off the unemployment rolls and put on the taxpayer rolls, and would be made a vibrant part of the community. This would instill confidence in the nation.

If we were to engage in the development of the East-West pipeline we could put hundreds if not thousands of steel workers, who are currently unemployed in Saskatchewan and eastern Canada, back to work.

If we were to look at those kinds of programs, if we had a Bill before us to facilitate the borrowing necessary to undertake them, and if we were to measure those undertakings against what it costs now to keep people unemployed, it would be worth what it would cost to have those projects under way now so that when the recession ends we could get back to building Canada. If we could see that prospect, then the Government would have no trouble; it would not need to move time allocation. We would agree to pass the legislation because the benefits would be both long and short-term. The reason we are so reluctant to hand over the money that the Government is seeking is that it has not provided the justification that we are asking for. We know that its commitment is of little substance. We know that it does not intend to go ahead with projects that will make Canada a better place in the future and make it easier for people to earn a living here.

This not a blind opposition because Hon. Members opposite happen to form the Government and are a bunch of useless Liberals. The Hon. Member for York-Peel's view is so narrow that he cannot see that in any normal business practice, which he constantly refers to, it is quite common to borrow against future needs.

Last night I noticed an announcement that the Steel Company of Canada is issuing new stock options in order to raise working capital, and that other companies are doing likewise.

Mr. Kempling: Because it lost $97 million.

Mr. Deans: What the Hon. Member for York-Peel is arguing against is normal business practice. What is wrong with what we are being asked to do is that we do not have a clear indication that the money will be used to develop the country and create the infrastructure that is necessary if we are to achieve the greatness that is our destiny.

I suggest to the Government that it should seriously consider a change in attitude toward the House of Commons and the future of the company.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be taking part in today's debate on the Borrowing Authority Bill and I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to address a matter that has my special interest, namely, the situation of young people in Canada. Ever since I became a Member of this House, Mr. Speaker, I have felt that because of my age, I had a duty to tell our elected representatives, to tell all our colleagues in the House what Canada's young people think and what their concerns are, and to try to be a catalyst, as it were, that would have some effect on the decision-making process.

Mr. Speaker, during these few years, I have had an opportunity, within our existing structures, to propose a series of projects that would to some extent meet the needs of Canada's young people, and the first one on my list is of course the creation of a youth bureau. I am a little disappointed, because we have been discussing the matter for months, for several years even, while our colleagues in the National Assembly have already taken action in this respect, perhaps because they had heard about our ideas or perhaps because their system works faster than ours.

Mr. Speaker, I think that as a Government, we shall very soon have to take a comprehensive view of the problems of young people. Band-aid programs are not going to help. How are we going to respond to the expectations of 600,000 young Canadians who will be looking for jobs this year in June, who will lose any illusions they had about society and the opportunities it was expected to offer, who will realize that their guidance counsellors have misled them and that in the final instance, society is telling them: Listen, you don't have any experience, so why not wait for a while. Wait until the labour market can provide alternatives. Wait until the economy gets back on steam. Meanwhile, however, these young men and women are more or less trapped. They are not entitled to unemployment insurance because as students, they cannot earn unemployment insurance stamps, and so the only alternative they have, unless their families can support them, is to go on welfare.

Or become a Member of Parliament, as my friend Mr. Maltais would say. In Quebec today, there are 75,000 young people who have to live on $140 per month. You know, Mr. Speaker, on $140 per month, you would be a lot thinner, and I think all Hon. Members would be hard-pressed to make ends meet.

Mr. Speaker, with a youth bureau, we would be able to develop a youth policy, once and for all. In 1970, the then Secretary of State, Gérard Pelletier, ordered a committee to prepare a study which was called "It's your turn", and that study has been shelved by the Department of the Secretary of State since 1970. Although I hope it will not take until 1985 before we start looking at the problems of young people, I do hope that 1985 will mark the culmination of a series of successful activities. I am counting on the support of my colleagues on this side of the House, youth being a subject that is very rarely discussed in the House, except by the Liberal caucus.

Our colleagues opposite talk about young people only when their Young Progressive Conservative delegates are in the gallery. Our friends opposite are only concerned about youth when they can make electoral gains, because they know it is not their traditional constituency.

Mr. Speaker, I urgently ask the House to reflect on this subject and to take action. In the weeks to come, we shall have the Speech from the Throne. We shall also have, at least I hope so, the budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has promised us. I am convinced it will be possible to instil some innovative thinking in the Throne Speech, and I know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) and many others have submitted a series of proposals to the Minister of Finance that are aimed at easing the strain for these young Canadians who have been disappointed by economic realities.

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker, I know this is not a time for extraordinary expenditures, but I am sure that within the Government ... More than a year ago, an inventory was made of Federal youth programs. I am sure very few young Canadians are aware that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Canadian International Development Agency, the Department of Agriculture, and so forth, have programs that are aimed specifically at young people. The intentory lists eighty-seven programs. Just imagine all the funds earmarked for those programs which could easily be redirected to meet the priorities of the Government and young Canadians.

I would not, however, want to make the same mistake as our provincial friends did, which is to impose programs from the top. I believe that before defining new programs, we should benefit from the experience of those people who would be prepared to work with us and advise us, and this would include groups of young people and others with a lively interest in the problems of young people, who could give us their advice. I am convinced that if the Government and all Hon. Members were to designate a committee of the House that would address itself specifically to the problems of young people and invite them to appear before the committee across Canada, we could certainly redistribute funds to a series of programs that would respond to their priorities.

Mr. Speaker, our education system is experiencing very serious problems, because the dreams of tomorrow have become a nightmare and because after 18, 19, 20 or 21 years of formal schooling, people are unable to obtain jobs. Last week, I was told that 67 per cent of the students who passed their bar examinations were unemployed this year.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Manicouagan has a great sense of humour. I am told that thousands of university graduates who thought they would be able to repay their loans and bursaries, make a career and perhaps get married and have a normal family life, are unemployed and living in poverty.

Mr. Speaker, there is another set of programs relating to physical fitness and amateur sport, and I had the privilege of serving as Parliamentary Secretary in that field. I finally realized that those programs are only helping the sports elite and that a guy from St-Joachim who wants to learn to play soccer or has a local team cannot apply to the Canadian Government for assistance unless he is outstanding. People talk about the search for excellence, and that bothers me. Today, hundreds of thousands of Canadians need help and they have to get it from their Government, whether it is for recreation, employment or education, and you would think there was no open door policy and no central office for receiving the requests of these young Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I hope we shall very soon be addressing the youth problem in a comprehensive way and that we will avoid taking hasty measures to resolve temporary problems in band-aid fashion. I am sure that if all the Members of this House used their imagination, we would be able to find solutions without having to ask taxpayers for more money. Many programs are not sufficiently known, and that is unfortunate. There is tremendous potential within the Federal Government itself. I hope that there will be some restructuring so that young Canadians who had confidence in their Government and still do will not be disappointed.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that our young people will be heard as well. If they are not, our programs will smack of authoritarianism. I think we should avoid the paternalistic or "maternalistic" approach that others have taken. From what young people have been saying across the country recently, it is clear they want to be consulted and to be part of the new economic order. I believe this is a challenge that all of us have a duty to meet, and I urgently ask the House to accept some of our suggestions and to address itself to the problems at the top of our priority list.

[English]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who went on in his usual way and said, "It is all right to borrow; after all, everybody else does". I could not help but think of the man who was falling out of the airplane and said, "It's all right, it is not the fall that hurts, it is the impact with the earth; that is the part that hurts". We are at the moment of impact and we are hurting. We are hurting because of the direction in which this Liberal Government and previous Liberal Governments have taken us.

Also I listened with some interest to the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who said that great things would happen for the young of the country. I too entered the House at what I consider to be a relatively young age; I was in my twenties. I remember fighting the campaign of 1957 and I remember a comment C. D. Howe used. After all, I used it in the 1957 campaign. He said, "What's a million?"

Mr. Cosgrove: He did not.

Mr. Deans: No, he did not.

Mr. Korchinski: It was nothing, it was nothing. But at that time we could not quite comprehend what was a million. It was beyond our power of comprehension because we were dealing, if anything, in terms of thousands of dollars at best. Today we are dealing in terms of billions.

I would like to make a demonstration to the House. I have a few dollar bills in my hand. If I started counting one per second—one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine and ten—I would count $60 in one minute, $3,600 in one hour, $86,400 in one day and $31,536,000 in one year. To count $1 billion it would take me 31.7 years. That is all of my adult life, day in and day out, 24 hours a day for 365 days. That is $1 billion. To count $19 billion would require 602 years. That is even more than Abraham's lifetime. We would have to get some of his "begats" to keep counting.

• (1610)

Mr. Cosgrove: Why don't you ask your teenagers for their computers?

Mr. Korchinski: In order to count to $90 billion, which this Government is going to spend, would require 2,853 years. Methuselah, it was said, lived for 965 years. It would take three of his lifetime to count out the $90 billion which this Government is going to spend this year.

Let us look at it another way. Assuming every one of these pieces of paper was $10 billion—and remember that the Government has committed us to $90 billion in expenditures this year—out of that $90 billion we have to set aside two notes, worth $10 billion each, just to service the debt, which is interest on money borrowed.

We are borrowing the equivalent of $30 billion, so we set aside another three of these pieces of paper, and what do we have left? We have $40 billion. That is all we can afford to spend on ourselves today.

What brought us to this situation? I was interested in the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Shefford. He commented on the youth and how he was concerned about them. Let me tell you about my concerns, and let me tell you about my grandparents. When my grandparents came to this country they did not ask the Government for anything except for a chance to work. They did not ask another taxpayer to help them. They tried to stay off the welfare rolls. They were quite prepared to pay their way.

But what has happened in the intervening years with a Liberal Government in power? No matter what we have heard, the Liberal Government has taken us down the road that has led us to where we are today.

Mr. Lapierre: What about John Diefenbaker?

Mr. Korchinski: I will tell you about John Diefenbaker. I have a few things that I can tell you about John Diefenbaker. In John Diefenbaker's time inflation was under 2 per cent. What do we have now? I can tell you a few more things about John Diefenbaker. I have all the facts here if you give me enough time.

My grandparents came to this country. They were quite prepared to pay their way. But what is happening here today? The Hon. Member says he is concerned about the youth. But who will pay for this borrowing? The youth who are coming onstream are going to be paying. The Hon. Member points to himself. But you are also going to have to point to every young boy or girl in diapers today. They are the ones who are going to have to pay for this. It was all right for any grandparents to pay their way. It is all right for any grandchildren to pay their way, but heaven forbid that the present generation should pay its way.

What is wrong with this society? I have watched what has happened. The last year we had a surplus was in 1969-1970. What happened after that? We have been in a steady decline with deficit after deficit after deficit. From 1958 to 1964 inflation was below 2 per cent. What happened in the 1970s? Hon. Members will remember that Mr. Turner was the Minister of Finance in 1972. Do you remember what happened, Mr. Speaker? He got into an argument with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) because the country was going downhill. Perhaps Mr. Turner knew about it, but he did not stay to fight. He took off into the wild yonder. He left the country to the mercy of the Prime Minister whose only objective was to get elected and throw money at the people telling them that deficits are no problem.

Are deficits no problem? I have already told Hon. Members that in 1969-1970 we had a surplus of $493 million. But in 1970 to 1971 there was a deficit of $372 million. But 1972 the deficit had risen to $702 million. By 1975 John Turner realized the deficit would reach $1.7 billion and he said, "This is enough. I am getting out. I cannot take the responsibility."

Then along came Macdonald, and he said "I will fix it. I will take over." He was given a lot of credit for a lot of intelligence. And so now he has been appointed to solve all our problems. Mr. Macdonald took over as minister of Finance in 1975 and left office in 1977. In two years the deficit jumped from $1.7 billion to $6.2 billion. Now he is going to take three years to tell us what is wrong. I can tell you in two minutes what is wrong. All you have to do is to look at where we are going and where we have been. The only thing the Government has said all along is, "We have to get elected." In 1972 the Liberals ran around the country and said the Conservatives did not have anybody to lead the country. They said to compare Minister for Minister, the Liberals ridiculed the Conservatives. Yes, they ridiculed us.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Korchinski: I have fought every campaign since 1957 and I know the stories and how we were ridiculed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Harquail): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) but his time has expired.

An Hon. Member: Let him carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Harquail): First, I would like to deal with the matter as to whether or not there is unanimous consent in order to allow the Hon. Member to continue. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Harquail): The Hon. Member for Mackenzie has the agreement of the House to continue for a brief period.

Mr. Korchinski: Unfortunately brief, Mr. Speaker, because I have so many notes here I could go on for an hour pointing out inadequacies.

Mr. Malone: Carry on. It's a good speech.

Mr. Deans: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: What this country needs is someone with a business-like approach for once. When the Conservatives were in office they projected and indicated that the deficit in 1979-1980 had dropped from $12 billion to $11 billion.

An Hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Korchinski: Yes. We had just a few months. But our projections were that the deficit would go down.

If you look at the graph you will see that as the projections for the deficit go up, so do interest rates. Compare the deficit of $700 million in Mr. Turner's day, which kept on rising, and the interest rates that went all the way up to 21 per cent. When Mr. Turner was here the deficit was $700 million and the interest rate was 6 per cent.

Now let us look at bankruptcies. We have seen 30,000 bankruptcies listed. That situation corresponds and relates to the amount of money the Government spends. Let me remind Hon. Members that the Auditor General told us the Government had lost control of spending.

The cause of the problems that we have today is not the fault of just one Minister; it is the Liberal attitude over the years that has brought this country to its knees. Canada is listed as twenty-fourth of the 24 industrialized countries. How can the Government tell us today that the depression we are in is the fault of the rest of the world? We have heard that statement day in and day out from the Liberals. Successive Liberal Governments, no matter which one is thrown out of office, will continue in the same way. We need a change of Government, a change in attitude, and to make a new start for the sake not only of young Canadians but of all Canadians.

• (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think the Hon. Member may be rising in relation to the ten-minute question and answer period which applies in some instances but does not apply now. However, if the Hon. Member is rising on a point of order to request consent of the House for a brief and single exchange, that would be in the hands of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the point just raised by the Hon. Member. He said that the Liberal Party is responsible for all our deficits, but I should like to point out to him that the Iron Ore Company at Schefferville, in my own riding, was headed by a Conservative who had to close down the whole town, but I do not think the president of the company was at fault if the town closed down, it was because of the economic situation. I would be very grateful if the Hon. Member would suggest a solution which would make it possible to reopen the iron mines in Northern Quebec and recall all the workers who were laid off because the town of Schefferville was forced to close down.

[English]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that it is the fault of the Liberal Government and not the management of the Iron Ore Company or the management of other companies. People in this country have operated businesses for many years, and it is not through lack of experience that bankruptcies are occurring. The Hon. Member cited one example. I have cited 30,000 bankruptcies. Surely 30,000 company managers cannot all be at fault when there were only several thousand bankruptcies a few years ago. The Hon. Member cannot isolate one case.

I am suggesting that the attitude in this country must be changed because it was the Prime Minister who travelled throughout the country to tell young people that they did not have to work. He said, "You can sit there and gaze at the stars or enjoy the flowers." It was the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) who, in 1972, advocated higher unemployment insurance saying, "You do not have to work." He is still being penalized for that by sitting on the side benches. He knew how to quell the imminent revolt since the people were restless, as they should have been. Instead of providing jobs and developing beneficial policies, the Government emerged with a handout. As a result of those handouts, employers today are being asked to pay some $12 per week, and employees are being asked to pay some $8 per week. That is because the Government is $3 billion in the hole. In other words, the Government could not afford it. Whom is it trying to fool? It cannot fool these people because they will have to pay for it.

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would explain why the Progressive Conservative Party last winter was against awarding the New York contract to Bombardier, and was first to denounce the agreement signed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) which created jobs for young people in Quebec in the field of new technology. The Progressive Conservative Party does not agree, but we on this side of the House have made concerted efforts to create jobs, and yet the Opposition Party objected to the kind of financing required to create jobs. I would like to know what Members opposite would do to create jobs, because we on this side used our imagination and managed to land a major contract with the private sector.

[English]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, surely the Hon. Member must realize that pouring money into a firm in New York will affect the employment in New York and not in Canada. I do not mind spending money in Canada, but when we were enjoying prosperous years, the Government was pouring out the money. Now that it might be the time to spend money, the Government has already spent it during the period when there was prosperity and there was no need for it other than the fact that the Prime Minister was preoccupied with the Constitution and unconcerned about the economy. He decided to pour the money out to these people as long as the Liberals would get elected. That was their main objective.

What sort of jobs were created by PetroCan, for example? Not one extra job was created as a result of the money that is being fleeced from the people who use gasoline in Canada. What was the advantage of that action?

Was the Government in a hurry to listen to the NDP? The NDP is wondering why they are so far down in the Gallup Polls. The reason is that the Liberals were taking their policies to heart and implementing them.

The people are not stupid. They know why they do not have jobs. For instance, one of our Members was evicted today because he rose to protest the fact that Revenue Canada is rearranging the furniture and setting up an entirely new set of rules and breaking the backs of those people who toil on the land, in order to generate some revenue for the stupidities and mistakes made by the Liberals.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House will recognize that other Hon. Members are seeking the floor. The decision is normally made by unanimous consent. If there is unanimous consent and Hon. Members want to continue, I will recognize the Parliamentary Secretary again. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-143

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove:

That, in relation to Bill C-143, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I believe that my remarks in this debate will be of a more positive nature. Of course I respect the right of the Hon. Member who just spoke to dissent in any way he wishes. I believe, however, that in times of difficulty we must not turn our backs on those who are in need. If I understand the Hon. Member's suggestion to be that we should not have that amount of money invested in Unemployment Insurance, I must disagree. If he is suggesting that we should not be using medicare to take care of the people in Canada who are ill, then I must disagree. If we are not going to live up to our commitments to see that our elderly in Canada are taken care of during hard times, then I cannot agree with the Hon. Member's views as he stated them.

This afternoon I would like to address myself, in the short time that I have, to some of the more positive steps that are being taken with the money that the Government is borrowing. I refer generally to the NEED Program and more specifically, to my riding of Welland which is in the Niagara Peninsula.

My riding is basically made up of heavy industry where there is the steel industry and a great number of people who work in the automobile industry. As a result of the decrease in the purchase of cars, the steel industry, automobile industry and other suppliers in the area have slowed down. For that reason there was very high unemployment in the Niagara Peninsula, the St. Catharines region and specifically my Welland riding.

The Government has addressed itself to this problem in two ways. The first way is through the NEED Program. I would point out to Hon. Members that since the NEED Program went into effect, and indeed since December 21, 1983, we in Welland have been the fortunate recipients of moneys to put our people who are exhaustees—those who have run out of Unemployment Insurance benefits—back to work so that they and their families could live normal lives.

Let me refer to the time between December 21 and March 4 when there were 1,785 work weeks created for the people in my riding. In real dollars, this amounted to some $754 thousand without which many families would have gone on welfare. Without this assistance, the savings of many would have been eaten up before they even went on to welfare. These are proud people. If what is being suggested is that the people of Canada do not want to work, then I surely disagree. I do not accept that as a premise. I do not agree that the Government is totally at fault. It goes without saying that we must accept our responsibilities. However, I believe that other segments of our society must also accept their responsibilities.

• (1630)

Rather than shouting at one another back and forth across the floor, there should surely be some constructive proposals. I compliment the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who suggested that we do need moneys to stimulate the economy moderately. I do not think that the Government has all the solutions and I do not think that unions are all to blame, nor are businessmen. I think that if we put our heads together, we should be able to come up with some solutions.

In the NEED Program, of the $754,000, some $278,000 was for municipal works. Since March 4, another $226,000 has been allocated for municipal works and the non-profit sector, which was at $393,000 on March 4, has also been increased.

I would like to direct the attention of the House to a very exciting project which has been going on in the Welland riding for a year and a half. I hope that some of the moneys being borrowed will be used to further this particular project. I refer, of course, to the Welland Canal Parkway, which is a development project for the city. About a year and a half ago, the Welland Canal Advisory Group was formed to advise City Council and the federal Government, after having held extensive public hearings to determine exactly how these Canal lands should be developed. The Canal was rerouted some 20 years ago, I believe. One part which we now call the old Welland Canal, is approximately eight and a half miles long.

Mr. Malone: What does that have to do with borrowing $19 billion?

Mr. Parent: This is ideal for tourism. The Hon. Member asks, "What does this have to do with the borrowing authority?"

Mr. Malone: Nineteen billion dollars!

Mr. Parent: I am specifically referring to some of the moneys which are to be borrowed and which I hope will be invested in this particular area.

Mr. Malone: I hope not one penny goes there.

Mr. Parent: The Hon. Member said he hopes that no moneys will be going into my area. I guess I would prefer, of course, to have another area where the unemployment was not quite as high. I would gladly trade his unemployment for mine over here.

Mr. Andre: It's tough to find those kinds in Canada.

Mr. Parent: Hon. Members opposite go on shouting at us, not permitting us to say what we have to say here, saying that only they have the right solution. I would like to hear some of their solutions, besides simply bad-mouthing the Government.

Mr. Mitges: You are the Government. You are supposed to have all the solutions.

Mr. Parent: We are the Government and we do take responsibility. May I direct my comments to the Welland Canal project in the hopes that the Government will consider, in its borrowings, allocating some of the money to the project to help create jobs. After extensive deliberations, a group headed by Mr. Willard Wright, in conjunction with Mayor Stranges and the City Council, decided that this is where we should make some investments of the talents of our people. To this end, we believe that it not only beautifies the city of Welland—

Mr. Malone: So what?

Mr. Parent: —but it will also be a tourist attraction which, in itself, will—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It's irrelevant.

Mr. Parent: —create jobs. We are some 15 miles from Niagara Falls. We believe that if people who do come into the area will only stay a little longer and come down into the Welland Canal Parkway, this will help to create jobs.

Last year we had a water skiing school. The development has brought in a great number of tourists as well as people interested in sports.

Mr. Malone: So what?

Mr. Parent: What does this mean to our people, restaurateurs, people with small shops and small businessmen? It means that they are able to continue operating under adverse conditions. It means that they still have a chance to do as well as people in other parts of the country.

[Translation]

Admittedly, Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in our region would very likely be a lot higher than it is now had we not received assistance from the Federal Government in those cases. In my opinion, all Hon. Members ought to know that we share that responsibility, it is not ours alone on this side, and we urge our colleagues opposite to make constructive suggestions so that we might do even more for all Canadians throughout the country. I sincerely ask them to give some thought to those who do not have as many opportunities as they have and to see to it that we too remain in good economic health in order to help the people in our riding and our region.

[English]

I think that these moneys that are to be borrowed will be beneficial to the people of Canada. I accept the responsibility of being in the Government and having taken part in the decisions which were made over the years.

The Hon. Member who spoke previously said that we were so preoccupied with the Constitution that we never had time for anything else. I respectfully suggest to Your Honour and to all Hon. Members that, notwithstanding the great seriousness of the economic position in which we find ourselves—indeed, in which the whole world finds itself—there is one bright light which has shone in the time we have spent here in the last three years. I, for one, consider the process involving the writing and the passage of the Constitution to be one of the more important processes in which I have taken part as a Member of Parliament.

I would hope that the present Government would indeed go ahead with its borrowing and help those people in Canada who are in need of its help at this time.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise today because we have before us a closure motion involving the borrowing of $19 billion. The Government is now borrowing money by closure and spending money by closure. The Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent), who spoke just before me, referred to the beautification of cities. He spoke about parkways becoming pretty and about jobs associated with programs such as the summer work program. We must bear in mind that fact that $19 billion, the sum which is being requested in this borrowing authority Bill, is as much as the total budget for the country when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first became Prime Minister. That debt, in one lump sum of borrowing, is an inexcusable expense, not just to us but also to tomorrow's children. Our future, our tomorrow, has become indebted. Children yet unborn will incur a debt of such magnitude that they will hardly be able to escape. They will bear an extraordinary burden.

In effect, the Canada summer works program is one which all Members of Parliament should stand to oppose, irrespective of the good work it may do in their community, such as the moving of grass, the pruning of trees, the fixing of golf courses, the painting of graveyards, the fixing up of the halls. That is an absolute waste of money. This country needs an engine, and the Government has killed the main engine of this country's economy. It has killed the oil industry.

The Government, with its former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his new National Energy Program, drove rig after rig out of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I believe that many persons did not even know what we were talking about when we spoke of moving an oil rig out. They thought that maybe a truck left with a derrick on it. Consider some 16 to 20 big, long liner trucks, with compressors, costing $500,000 a move to go from Alberta into the United States. We lost half of our drilling capacity within just a short period after that program was announced. Government killed the engine of society.

It has been said, "Well, that is Alberta. Who cares? What does it matter if Alberta is killed?" I bring to Your Honour's attention the fact that one tar sands plant, in 25 years of production, promotes $108 billion in direct spending in the Province of Ontario. It does that in steel; it does that in transportation equipment; it does that in its spin-off of manufacturing. And the Government killed the engine. What is the Government's response? How do we justify borrowing $19 billion?

• (1640)

The Hon. Member for Welland stands up and says the Welland Canal Parkway might get some more money out of this borrowing. He is hoping that if we borrow more money his community of Welland will look prettier. Who cares if it looks prettier? What this country needs is to get the engine of this country working so that the people in every community will have the capacity to make their communities look prettier and to do that out of their own initiative, not out of borrowed money. We are in the position today in which every time we pay a tax dollar, 25 cents goes to pay the interest on our foreign debt. Out of every four dollars, we have to pay a dollar for nothing, for nothing except to pay for interest, and that, Sir, is not worth making communities pretty. We have to have more capacity than that to develop our country.

We are in a situation today in which the only reason we are surviving is because we are an educated nation that is resource rich. Our per capita debt is seven times greater than that of Latin America. If you look at Mexico, Brazil, Venezuela—any one of those 22 nations in the southern hemisphere or the Latin American block, including Brazil, a Portuguese-speaking country—you will find Sir, that we no longer may use loosely the expression that we are a "banana republic". Our debt is sevent times greater per capita than that of Latin America and, countries such as Mexico, with a population many times larger than that of Canada, which have an accumulated debt of only $80 billion. Here we are with a debt of $140 billion to divide among 24 million people.

We should be ashamed. Debt upon debt upon debt, borrowing upon borrowing; virtually every few months this Government is back asking to borrow more money. Now they are borrowing more money, and $14 billion of the $19 billion that they are borrowing are to be spent at some future time, in a new fiscal year, for which there is not a budget. What is a budget? A budget is a plan for how you are going to spend your money. They are asking us, under the threat of closure, to authorize $14 billion, and they have not even outlined to the people of Canada why they need it or how they are going to spend it. Then they became hostile and upset and they burn with indignation and say that we are holding up the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, why was this House of Commons started in the first place? It started because at the time of the Magna Carta, more than 700 years ago, the subjects of the time, when the king was all-powerful, did not like the fact that he wanted to build a new castle and tax the already over-burdened subjects one more time. They rebelled against him. They gave him a choice, and the choice was that he was to be stripped of power and power was to come to the common people, and if it did not, he would lose his head. Being a wise king, he chose the former. We had common people with power, and that is why we are a House of Commons, because we are a place of common people. This is no longer a House of Commons and it is no longer a Parliament of power because the power is not among its individual Members who represent their constituencies; it is among those 30-some people who sit in the Cabinet. By closure they borrow, and by closure they spend. They do it by closure. They strip from the people of Canada their base of power, and now they want some $19 billion without a budget, without a plan, without a reason or a rationale. They are simply saying to us that they want some more money because the Cabinet believes that they have a way for spending more money. That, Mr. Speaker, takes us from the role of citizen to the role of subject. It is not now what the Parliament and its representatives believe is right, it is what that Cabinet thinks is right; it is the king again. It is back to King Charles I—whatever he wants. This Cabinet believes that they have this almighty power to dream whatever they want to, whether it is fixing up the pretty flowers in Welland or any other community, just to borrow more money, the justification for $19 billion. What a terrible excuse the Hon. Member for Welland has put before us today for the borrowing of some $19 billion!

The Auditor General, just a few years ago, was telling us that this Government had lost control of the public purse and, more recently, the Auditory General is telling us that not only do we need to be concerned about the waste and the over-expenditure of Government, but that there is a whole sub-Government starting, and a sub-Government that is not accountable, he said as he pointed his finger at Crown corporations. There are some 480 Crown corporations wholly or partially owned by the federal Government. There are 274 Crown corporations wholly owned by the federal Government. With a record like that, obviously, with those Crown corporations not accountable to our Public Accounts, not coming before Committee and not standing the test or the scrutiny, naturally this Parliament remember that the reason it was formed was for the control of the purse—has lost that power, and that fact is stripping power from the citizens of this country. That is where power should be, in the House of Commons, for common people. Instead, what we have is a Cabinet that borrows under closure and spends under closure, assuming unto itself all rights and all privileges.

Mr. Speaker, that defies our history; it defies our rationale; it defies the purpose of this place and it defies, most of all, the individual Canadians from coast to coast and their Gob-given right to presume that in democracies they are powerful. In fact what has happened is that that group of some 30 persons on the other side has now made it so that our debt is seven times larger than the per capita debt of Latin America. We are strong today for only one reason and that is that we have resources of which any nation in the world would be jealous.

And so, Mr. Speaker, they sell out tomorrow; they mortgage children yet unborn; they put a debt on them for the purpose of existing to make Welland pretty today.

If we started to build the engines of this economy—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I might well start with the beautification of Welland, why we would be concerned with the beautification of Welland, and why this Government should be concerned with summer employment plans that will have young people out cutting grass, painting and fixing things up.

I think that the previous speaker, while he spoke about a Canada from coast to coast, seemed to concentrate on one area of the land, without thinking in the broad perspective of what Canada is all about.

First of all, it is a young country, still growing, and, as a growing country, it has required a lot of extraordinary investments. More important, I believe that we need the money that we are asking for today and we have to put some time allocation on the debate because it is necessary to have that money flowing, for very good reasons, as soon as possible.

I think Canada is what it is today because we have learned, in our peculiarly Canadian way, that somehow we can find ways for each region of the country to help out other regions, recognizing that it is the totality of the land, working together, and the interaction that has come out of necessity between Governments and the private sector, that have brought us to the stage at which we are today. When I look around, I do not think that we have done all that badly by any standard.

To go back to the employment program, which I am anxious to see re-started in northwestern Ontario this summer and in all parts of the land, the previous speaker spoke about the engine that fueled the economy and said that we have killed it. What really fuels a country is people. The Hon. Member made reference to how well educated we are. I cannot find fault with a plan that creates an opportunity to beautify the land, something which has an aesthetic value, a morale-building quality, and a pragmatic value. This is particularly so as one of our prime industries is tourism. In order to have a tourist industry, you must have an attractive package for the tourist to view.

I cannot see anything wrong with a program of giving some kind of assistance to young people who will be returning to their studies in the fall. They will be those well-educated people of whom the Hon. Member spoke. They will in fact give even greater impetus to the future of our country because they are better educated.

I hope that their education will include learning about the area in which they live, whether it be Alberta or southwestern

Ontario. The charge is sometimes made that that education is lacking in this country. I regret to say it is sometimes lacking in this House. I repeat, education must include a recognition of the regions of this country.

Much has been made about the National Energy Program. It has been said that it caused the death of that very important industry and, to quote the previous speaker, the country does not give a damn. We must remember that the oil industry grew up in this country because the people of Canada supported and promoted it. People seem to quickly forget the large tax advantages given to that industry. I do not regret that because this did help to build the industry. We sometimes neglect to see that most of what is going on in that industry, which is depressed world-wide, which includes our friends to the South who are having immense difficulties, is the result of the National Energy Program, because Petro-Canada is taking a lead role in this area.

We are in the position of having to ask to borrow a great deal more money. Along with every other Member in this House, I regret the necessity of a deficit, of not having enough money in the bank to do all the work at this time. I believe that, by and large, the money spent by the Government over the last few years has been done in a reasonable and equitable fashion across this land in order to accomplish a number of things. It has helped those Members of our society who are neglected to enjoy a fair and reasonable share of the wealth of this land. We have tried to help our senior citizens who did not have the opportunity to build a pension plan or the wherewithal to take them through their twilight years. We tried to use some of the resources to help people with medicare and other programs of that nature. It is expensive. Had we not taken those actions, the hardships in this land would be far more severe than they now are. I refer to the Unemployment Insurance plan. The Government and the people of Canada are in the difficult position of having declining revenues at a time when we need to carry on this very necessary service. This necessary growing deficit position has been created for a brief period of time.

I believe that some of the programs for which this money will be used will hasten our extraction from our present difficult position. That money will flow into such programs as the NEED Program which assits those whose benefits have run out, the summer employment program, and other programs of that nature. In addition, it is tremendously important because it will help provide the infractructure to enable us to continue to grow more quickly in the future. The dollars that we provide through such programs as the NEED Program, meagre as they may seem at times, create a spin-off. If a dozen people are employed on a project in downtown Nipigon make purchases to complete their work, it will create a spin-off effect for that business community. The number of dollars may seem small because so often we deal in such large sums of money. However, to a small community, these supposedly small sounding amounts are big dollars. They make the difference between success and failure.

I would love it if we were in a position of not having to borrow more money. However, I support the idea of having these funds on hand to meet current obligations so that we can continue carrying out programs that assist the economy. As the economy grows, we can then concentrate on reducing the deficit.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for this Bill referred to the great number of Members of Parliament who had spoken on the Bill. I had the privilege of speaking before. I now want to say a few words on closure or time allocation, the more gentlemanly term which means the same thing.

Those of us in Opposition are well aware that this is a bad Bill. If some of those on the other side would think on a purely non-partisan basis, they would raise their eyebrows about a Bill which demands of this House $19 billion. We have demonstrated that a borrowing Bill of this size and nature is clearly unprecedented, either in Canada or elsewhere in the parliamentary world. We have shown time after time that it is a bad Bill, one that promises to mortgage the future of Canadians to a greater extent than either we, or indeed most certainly they, are aware.

The list goes on. These are all bad things. We all realize that, and once again that must include Members of the back benches across the aside. After all, they should think seriously about the matter and consider it objectively.

Being a bad Bill does not make it an anomaly among Bills put forward by this Government. Anything but! Certainly it being a bad Bill is not enough to get me on my feet so often. There is more. This Bill goes right to the heart of what we Members of Parliament are here for. It strikes right at the roots of the parliamentary system and the principles upon which it is based.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) mentioned earlier that in 1649 a king was executed. It was the only time in my memory that such a thing has been done by due process of law in the history of our monarchy. Why was this terrible thing done? It was because the King, Charles I, had been the loser in a struggle over who was to control access to the public purse. It took a civil war to establish that henceforth in the parliamentary system, Parliament, and Parliament alone, would have the authority to allot moneys which came from the pockets, the livelihood, the sweat of the body and the fruit of the brains of the taxpaying public. What is more, this was not to be a token control, to be voted at the whim of the executive, be that executive of Royal or of Cabinet form. Parliaments everywhere, until the introduction of this Bill, have jealously guarded the right to examine the purposes toward which it is being asked to vote public money.

Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that I am not claiming this authority for the Official Opposition, nor for the Opposition as a whole. This is the authority, this is the right, this is the sovereign right of Parliament. And that places a very heavy onus upon us all, but perhaps especially upon those Members of the Government who are not bound by the bonds of a Cabinet oath. I sympathize with those Hon. Members. I sympathize with them very much, because, having sat in this place with them for as long as I have, I know what a strain they must be under, as they ponder the relative weights of their twin responsibilities; to their Party and its long tradition of valuing the exercise of power above all else, and to the parliamentary and democratic system and what their support of this Bill will do to it.

Above all else, Mr. Speaker, we are establishing a parliamentary precedent with this Bill. If we pass it, we are saying that 300 years of parliamentary history—over 100 of them spent right here between these four walls—are for naught! We are saying that no longer does Parliament rule supreme, nor do the people, whose only legitimate representative we collectively are. We are saying that Charles I rides again in the persons of the Liberal Cabinet of the Member for Mount Royal, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). More specifically, we are saying that we shall have to codify exactly the behaviour which we expect from our Governments in the future, because any Government that follows the precedents established by this one, will refuse to be controlled by any traditions, precedents or codes of behaviour which are not written down, preferably on stone. We are gathered here to authorize, or more accurately to rubberstamp, the purloining of more money from the public pocket than was paid for the entire operation of the federal Government, its activities, its programs, all that it did, a scant dozen years ago.

This is in the form, not of a budget but of the authority to borrow on the public markets, with no further questions asked, $19 billion, which will have to be repaid with high interest out of the public pocket, and most critically for the future of the system of Government we profess to espouse, with no indication whatsoever as to what purposes the funds are to be put. Mr. Speaker, I am not a dogmatist, nor am I dyed-in-the-wool reactionary who will fight against change purely for the purpose of maintaining the status quo of the good old days. That type of thinking surely has no place in these times of such fast-paced changes. But the record of this Government, this Cabinet, in matters of constitutional self-discipline is not encouraging.

This is the Government of a Prime Minister who, when asked how far he would go in suppressing human rights in response to a kidnapping in Quebec, replied, "Just watch me". This is the successor Government to one which, having been defeated in the House, decided it was all a joke and rewrote the "gentlemen's agreement" upon which such things had been based until that time. This is the Government for whom, more than any other, time allocation and closure have become a way of life. Seventeen times so far have they been applied during this session alone, and more to come. This is the Government whose Leader described Members of Parliament as "just nobodies when they are 50 yards away from Parliament Hill". Be that as it may, "nobodies" or not, we are the men and women who are charged by our electors with the protection of their purse. No one else has that authority. No one else has that responsibility. Regardless of our Party affiliations, if we support this Bill and allow it to pass, we are spitting in the eyes of those who sent us to this place.

Some of you, more particularly those who are trying desperately to ignore the constitutional implications of the Bill, will be trying to pretend that I am making a mountain out of a molehill. You will be trying to tell yourselves that all of this constitutional nonsense is just that, nonsense. Yet, no longer than a few hours ago, the division bells rang loud and long, calling us to vote on the heinous matter of a Member having used "unparliamentary language". That is a parliamentary no-no. Yet we all now what he meant, and his alteration of the words he used to say it really could not have mattered less. But we went through the song and dance of a vote. Is it not of much greater importance to protect the right of the taxpaying public and let them know why their money is being taken from them before the deed is done? I ask you, Parliamentarians on all sides of the House not to let this Bill pass.

There was a very sad announcement in this House that a former Auditor General, J. J. Macdonell, had passed away suddenly. He had been a great servant of the House. I believe it was mentioned earlier this afternoon, that he had pointed out forcefully that Parliament had lost control of the public purse. Whether this can be blamed on Cabinet or whether it can be blamed on the bureaucrats who are the ones bringing forth this legislation, we are still faced with being asked for a blank cheque for $19 billion, and we should say an emphatic no to this.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part in this debate on the closure motion with respect to the borrowing authority of $19 billion which the Government has put before us to be approved. The Government is asking for this borrowing authority so that it can borrow money and possibly put us further into debt than we already are. The accumulated national debt by the end of this year will be somewhere in the area of $160 billion. I believe that is a sad state of affairs, and I can honestly say that I do not know that it is a political problem, to a large extent. I believe that could happen today under almost any Government in Canada, as sad as that may be.

It was mentioned in the debate a little earlier, Mr. Speaker, that the people of the country are really the most valuable resource of the country, and I agree with that. The people are the most valuable resource that we have, but it seems to me that they have less and less input into what is happening within this country through their representatives in Parliament. I do not put any blame on the Liberals or the Conservatives, necessarily, but I believe that we are rapidly coming to a point when many Canadians are losing faith in the institution of Parliament, and in having their vote really count for something when they send a Member of Parliament to represent them in the federal House of Commons, to speak on their behalf and to have a hand in dealing with the affairs of the country.

There seems to be a real lack of democracy within this institution when we have a majority Government elected, as we do now, because a majority Government in Canada can do anything it wants. It can change Saturday to Sunday, if it so wishes. It could call a dollar a metric tool. Anything can happen here because there is no check and balance beyond this House, as there should be, and that would be the upper House or the Senate of Canada. The reason that the Senate is not a check and balance to this Government is that by far the greatest number of Members in the Senate are appointed because of their partisan contributions to a political movement within this country. That is a sad state of affairs, Mr. Speaker. We should have an elected Senate. Perhaps that would ensure more democracy under a majority Government. I will have more to say about an elected Senate later.

• (1710)

First of all, I should like to point out that in this Chamber, Members of Parliament have little, if any, influence. Of course, we work on behalf of our constituents and assist them with pension or immigration problems and all the concerns that they have when dealing with the Government. People often approach their elected representatives for help with those problems and in many cases we are successful in helping them. But we have very little influence in this House, Mr. Speaker. In reality, we can do nothing this afternoon to stop this closure motion from passing, even if that were the will of most Members of Parliament.

The changes that have taken place over the years have a great deal to do with the media, I believe, and with the transportation system that we have built up in the country. For example, I would be surprised if there were more than two or three Members of Parliament in the House at the moment, listening to what I am saying.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is not right.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anguish: In the early days, things were much different. From the time of Confederation until World War II there was not a great media coverage of the country, nor was there rapid transportation such that Members could travel from the Atlantic to the Pacific in one day. Until World War II, if a Member of Parliament made a speech in this House, the other Members took a great deal of interest in it. In that way a Parliamentarian was able to deliver a message to Members from other parts of the country. They listened because they were concerned about the country. Now, with rapid communication and rapid transportation, Members do not have to really listen to each other. They can pick up the morning paper and read the report of a journalist from some other part of the country, or they can hop on an airplane and travel to any part of the country to witness an event at first hand.

That is a sad situation, Mr. Speaker, and it points out that in a way this institution has become archaic and that some of the systems with which we operate should be changed. I do not think it is just a matter of changing Governments—that one Government would be more efficient or administer the country better than another; it is a matter of changing the systems under which we work.

One thing that would improve our systems and enhance democracy in this country would be an elected Senate. In the House of Commons we have representation through population, and that is fair. But in a country as large as this, it seems to me that there should be some regional representation as well so that areas with the majority of population cannot impose something on outlying parts of the country without some check and balance being in place. One way to achieve that would be to have an elected Senate with equal numbers of Senators from each Province and the Territories elected to serve in the Upper House. When legislation passes this House, particularly when there is a majority Government which may not have listened to opposing views, the Senate could examine it from a regional perspective and make any changes that might be necessary. If that were the case I do not think that today we would be arguing about whether the Government should be able to borrow money when it does not have a plan or does not tell us the plan or because, some would say, it is incompetent—I think if all that were set aside we could get on with running the country in a more democratic way.

Democracy seems to prevail only at election time. Between elections there is very little democracy in the country. That is a sad state of affairs for this institution and for the country. Democracy is a basic right. People must have some say in the systems that run the country, even in cases where they disagree.

Members of the New Democratic Party—and I was one of them—opposed the testing of the Cruise missile. When we spoke about that this afternoon in the House some Hon. Members said that they did not want to debate it in the House. I think that is wrong, Mr. Speaker. In a democracy we listen to everyone. People must have a forum in which to express their concern. As we have seen in other countries, when this is denied them, revolutionary forces spring up. I hope we never see that in Canada.

The ancient philosopher, Voltaire, said something to the effect that, "I may disagree profoundly with what you have to say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." We should keep that in mind, Mr. Speaker, and not criticize each other's motives in this House. We should listen to each other and try to make the country a better place to live and prosper. No country in the world has the potential of Canada. As a Member of Parliament, I would not want to be part of anything that would destroy that future for my children or their children.

We should get on with doing the job and look for new systems under which we can operate more effectively rather then apportioning blame. That is not actually the problem.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) was probably practising a speech that he might have wanted to present in a mock parliament. He brought in the question of the Cruise and everything else except Bill C-143 which we are discussing this afternoon. I do not know where the Hon. Member gets his information. It seems to me that there is no higher court in which to exercise democracy than the House of Commons. He missed an excellent opportunity to do that during debate this afternoon.

The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) also missed an opportunity to make some points and explain his position. He took ten minutes to speak of some beautification project. I do not know how that relates to what the Government is trying to do. Surely he could have taken a couple of minutes before coming into the Chamber to decide what he wanted to say about the Bill and the importance of borrowing these moneys at this time. Instead, he elected to spend the total time attacking the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent).

Had the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake been in the House when his Acting House Leader spoke, he would have heard him support the Government's request for borrowing. He took exception to the narrow view presented by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). As usual, the Acting House Leader for the NDP made an eloquent presentation. He certainly was that when he involved himself with what the Hon. Member for York-Peel had to say. In the course of his presentation he went on to say that there was a need for these funds. I support that view. I want to pick up on what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) said when he, so effectively, established his position this afternoon. Right-thinking and positive-thinking Members mentioned the needs and what we will do with these funds. I see the Hon. Member from Carleton—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Nepean-Carleton.

Mr. Harquail: I am sorry. I see the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), who is usually in his place, so attentively nodding in agreement with what I have to say this afternoon. It encourages me to go on and to talk about housing, the increase in housing construction which is creating jobs that we all said were needed in this country. Also we want to encourage and find dollars to support job-creation programs. We know that with the employment situation as it is in Canada we must carry on with the CDP, Community Development Projects, and with the NEED Program, particularly for the youth, the young people in the labour market today who are having difficulty finding job opportunities.

Also I support the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre). This afternoon he took the opportunity to make a contribution in the House dealing directly and specifically with the need for job opportunities and job creation for the youth of the country. I applaud his contribution and support him in everything he had to say. This is the type of concern that we on this side of the House share. It is why we support this measure at this time.

Turning to development, some mention was made of regions. We have regional concerns. We have the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), and we have the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) who also has responsibility for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I place a great deal of importance on the programs which these Departments will administer.

I would like to name some of the projects we want to see completed and hopefully addressed out of these borrowings or funds. There are such items as the completion of the section of highway between Moncton and Campbellton in my own Province of New Brunswick. I would not want to miss the opportunity to stress that important project because of its significance to our region and its fundamental link to economic development. It is fundamental to us that our seaway ports, airports, pulp mills, infrastruture and various plants have the necessary transportation links to the communities.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Hear, hear!

Mr. Harquail: I appreciate that support from the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton. Recently, in the Standing Committee on Transport I talked with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). I asked him, as I did also the Premier of New Brunswick and the Minister responsible for transportation and highways in New Brunswick, to keep the promise they made 12 years ago and get on with the project.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Send him a copy of your speech.

Mr. Harquail: I hope that will be done in due course. He sat with us in a public meeting with engineers, elected MLAs and all the other representatives. We all agreed. The Premier said that it was a provincial responsibility and that they would complete the highway between Moncton and Campbellton. I am sad to relate this afternoon that there are portions yet to be completed. I refer particularly to the portion between the airport at Charlo and the mining area at Belledune.

We are asked what is left to be done and why we need these moneys.

Mr. Young: To finish your road.

Mr. Harquail: Yes, but let me refer to a topic which is of interest to everyone, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Everyone has individual views about the Corporation, about its policies, about its budget allocation and the way it spends money. Would all Hon. Members not agree that in 1983 at least the Corporation should tackle the problem of the installation of adequate, modern television production facilities in the Province of new Brunswick? The Premier himself has appeared at least four or five times before the CRTC. Everyone has supported this case. We have all made presentations to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), to the CRTC, and we are still awaiting that allocation by the President of the CBC. Those are some of the items I wanted to put before the House this afternoon.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to correct the Hon. Member. He said that I supported the legislative proposals before the House. I did not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The point is well taken.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am afraid we are engaging in debate at this time.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, when you said that the point was well taken, I take it that I might respond to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Harquail: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Anguish: Sit down.

Mr. Harquail: Behave yourself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I should remind Hon. Members that it is a Member's right and privilege under the Standing Orders to rise and have the record corrected if, as the case may be, he was misquoted or the facts were not as he laid them before the House. That is quite in order.

It being 5.25 o'clock p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82 have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Cosgrove) which was agreed to on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

SUMMER WORK PROGRAM

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, on March 15 I addressed a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) in respect to the make work programs which are in place for the various constituencies of Canada. I asked that question in this House because I had received a letter on February 25 from the Minister advising me that the last date that applications for any of the Summer Works programs should be in was March 4. March 25 happened to be a Friday and the letter arrived in my office after I had left. I therefore did not learn of the closing date until the following Monday.

Mr. Speaker, in a constituency such as yours and mine, a great deal of the information is circulated via the weekly paper. There was no way at the time of that late announcement that I could advise the people of Carleton-Charlotte that the closing date for the summer works type of program would be March 4. I therefore asked the Minister, inasmuch as it was impossible for the constituents of Carleton-Charlotte to know of the closing date in time to get applications in, would he extend that date by two weeks.

I then went to the trouble of asking of the weeklies and of organizations if they had had any notice of any kind as to when the closing date was for applications for this program. The answer was no, they had had no notification. I then called the officials of the Department, for my constituency, and was advised that there would be no extension after that date of March 4. This meant that many organizations had no way of knowing that the closing date was in fact March 4.

I repeated my question later in the House and again asked for an explanation. I was again advised that I should be the individual to advise the constituents of Carleton-Charlotte and all its organizations that the closing date was to be March 4. That was impossible. This has rendered a hardship to the constituents who might have applied, as well as to the various organizations that might have applied.

I think Hon. Members know that the various organizations promoting the interests of our native people have pretty good communication with the various Ministers, first through the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), and then through their own information centres, as to when they can apply for the benefits of programs.

Last week an Indian Chief from New Brunswick was in my office. He stated that he had not been notified of the closing date, that he had not made an application and that he was advised by the officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration that there was no way that an application from his Band could be accepted for projects for summer work. In addition to that, and this is a side issue, he was advised that his budget was being sharply reduced by the Department of Indian Affairs. He stated that a combination of the two situations wreaked very serious hardship upon him, his Band and his officials.

I was not the only one who did not know. I took the opportunity on the first Tuesday in March to ask other Members if they knew of the closing date for applications for the summer employment programs. The answer was no in every instance.

I mentioned in my question, and I repeat it again, this Government has budgets known to be in the vicinity of $300 million for advertising. The cost of advertising through the various little pamphlets that come out far exceeds that item. I submit it is incumbent upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration in the future to properly advertise any program and the closing date for applications, giving not less than three weeks public notice of that closing date. This is in the best interest of the people we are trying to serve, particularly the student population of Canada which does not have a hope of getting in those applications to get the work they so badly need.

When this program was originally initiated, it allowed a Member of this House to appoint a ministerial advertising board—the name changed later—which gave geographic representation within a large constituency. It made it possible for the citizens, mayors, councillors, teachers, lawyers and other professional people in the constituency to give advice as to—

Mr. Lapierre: No problem.

Mr. McCain: Yes, there is. I could not do that. They advised how the moneys would be allocated. I was advised the Minister did not want that.

Something else that gives me difficulty is the geographic distribution of the money. First, I do not have advance copies of the applications. Consequently I get the notice on the day or maybe the day before I am to meet with the officials. Don't shake your head and don't criticize my truthfulness in this House. If you do, you criticize the truthfulness of my staff, and I will rise to their defence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. McCain: Can I have another minute in view of the interruptions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There were no interruptions. I simply ask the Hon. Member to address his remarks to the Chair. I hope the record will not indicate that the Speaker was shaking his head; that is the way it sounded to me.

Mr. McCain: No, Mr. Speaker, I referred to the gentleman opposite.

• (1810)

Mr. Lapierre: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am sorry, the Chair cannot entertain points of order during these proceedings.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, there is no way that I can properly represent my constituency without advance notice, so that my constituency can make proper representation to the staff of the Department, without the ministerial advisory board. Exactly the same situation exists in other large constituencies in Canada. I appeal to the Minister to advertise in weekly papers in rural Canada the beginning and closing dates of programs, giving at least three weeks' notice. Without ministerial advisory boards in the large constituencies, and without proper notice, all organizations in rural constituencies suffer from this lack of information.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes at my disposal, I shall try, to the best of my ability, to give some explanations to the Hon. Member in connection with his complaints about the advertising of the Summer Canada program. First of all, perhaps I may say that I too represent a rural constituency, and that the problems encountered by the Hon. Member in his own constituency are perhaps even greater in my own, considering its boundaries which include the Magdalen Islands, where communications are certainly a problem.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister announced the Summer Canada program in December. He made it clear that the program was available to students across Canada, that application forms would be available in all Canada Employment Centres and that starting in the middle of January, all Canada Employment Centres and their officers would be asked to promote the program in their respective areas.

The advertising campaign in our dailies and weeklies throughout the land started on February 14, and I think it was clearly indicated that the closing date for applications would be March 4. Following this advertising campaign, our officials visited most ridings to promote this program and show the students how to submit applications. It is true that the Hon. Member asked the Minister in the House for an extension of the application period, which was granted. The Minister later announced that applications would be accepted until March 14 from coast to coast. Moreover, all our officials and Canada Manpower Centers were advised that the closing date had been postponed and that they should make sure that all interested parties were made aware of that extension.

This question was asked in the House, Mr. Speaker, and was answered by the Minister, Mr. Speaker, precisely to make sure that Hon. Members would refer to Hansard and would read the announcement made by the Minister, so that in turn they could advise all those concerned. It was very difficult, in that ten day period, to return to the newspapers, especially the weeklies, and ask them to carry this announcement. That is why the Minister chose the House, a public forum, to inform Canadians that the closing date for submitting application had been postponed.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS—CANADIAN POSITION ON GENEVA ARMS CONTROL TALKS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) what proposals Canada would be putting forward when Vice-President Bush came to Ottawa, which he did yesterday, in connection with the Geneva negotiations on intermediate nuclear missiles. The Minister said that Canada would be putting forward some proposals. He was not specific.

• (1815)

When I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today what those principles were he referred me to the speech he gave last night in which there was a suggestion that Canada would support something less than the famous zero option previously proposed by President Reagan. It seems clear that the zero option is not going to be accepted and that something new will come along. What is the change, Mr. Speaker? What would Canada propose to solve the terrible difficulty of avoiding the nuclear precipice that the arms race has hurtled us toward?

In his speech last night the Prime Minister further confused the issue by talking about the Cruise missile, this time suggesting the Government had an obligation to NATO. This is a change from the previous presentation of the issue in which it was presented in bilateral terms as a request from the United States. At one stage we heard that a request was made and, indeed, the former Secretary of State for External Affairs said a commitment had been made in principle. That was later denied by the Prime Minister and the present Secretary of State for External Affairs.

We do not know whether the Canadian Government has given serious consideration to testing the Cruise missile vehicle delivery system because, by the words of the three Ministers I have named, the Government has deliberately obfuscated the issue so that now the Canadian people have no clear idea of where we stand on the nuclear arms question.

There is a tremendous surge of public opinion in the country, of which, undoubtedly, the Government is aware. However, I think the Government is remiss in its duty to give leadership to the Canadian people on this extremely important question. It is also negligent in not taking an initiative as one of a group of nations forming part of NATO that wants to put pressure on the two super powers having 95 per cent of all nuclear technology and armaments between them. The rest of the world is being held hostage today to the never-ending arms race.

Last night the President of the United States gave a new version of Star Wars—that so far has been fiction—but now in the closing years of this century, we are going to be hurled into a form of outer space use of laser beams in a defensive capacity. That would only lead to an increase in armaments, when the central point of all of this is the negotiations now going on in Geneva, and what is being done to put pressure on both parties on behalf of humanity. That is the question I put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and to the Prime Minister. But we do not get any answers.

There is total confusion on the issue of the Cruise. On the essential issue, I believe Canada should put forward initiatives that would be realistic, given the over-all premise that existing nuclear capabilities in the world are sufficient to ensure the credibility of nuclear deterrents, and that nuclear modernization, beyond where we are now, could lead us to a new round in the strategic and nuclear arms race. In other words, if we are going to support a strategy of suffocation, then I believe we must be true to that.

If Canada wants to put forward some proposals, we should propose that the United States and the Soviet Union jointly announce a bilateral moratorium on the flight testing of all nuclear weapons' systems. Such a moratorium would remain in effect during the Geneva negotiations on nuclear arms reductions between the United States and the Soviet Union. That is an essential policy that would drive straight to the heart of the matter and stop all this fooling around about whether to test Cruise missiles and what our obligations are.

Our obligations are clear, Mr. Speaker. We have an obligation to participate in NATO but we also have an obligation to mankind and to the human condition. Today, as an important leading nation in the world we must make realistic proposals. I believe that at the United Nations Canada should support the proposals that have already been made.

The first proposal is an immediate halt by all nations to the testing, deployment and production of all nuclear weapons and delivery systems, pending major reductions in nuclear arsenals. The second is that there be negotiations aimed at achieving a world treaty for simultaneous, balanced, verifiable and enforceable arms reductions, eventually to the minimum level of police forces required for internal security. That was at the heart of the document produced by the First Special Session on Disarmament of the United Nations in 1978. That document contains a comprehensive program for disarmament in the world. Sadly, it has not been implemented because of a continued escalation of the arms race, rather than the nations of the world, Canada chief among them, banding together to force progress in negotiations in Geneva and, indeed, in all five sets of these ongoing complicated negotiations.

In his first report, the Secretary General of the United Nations, Mr. Perez de Cuellar, said, "We are perilously near to a new international anarchy". I believe the Canadian Government ought to be listening to that man and acting accordingly.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am always very interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Edmonton South, but I would like to put this discussion in the proper context.

In 1977, the Soviet Union deployed its first intermediate-range nuclear missiles, the SS-20s, which were equipped with three nuclear warheads and had a range of 5,000 kilometers, and by so doing threatened all Western European cities. At the request of the European Allies and my Hon. colleague mentioned earlier that this was a bilateral agreement but it was certainly at the request of our Western European Allies, NATO decided in 1979, under the Government of my Hon. colleague, who is now trying to take the side of virtue and motherhood, to deploy new intermediate-range missiles to replace shorter-range missiles because of the threat posed by the SS-20s. At the same time, NATO suggested to the Soviet Union that mutual restrictions be negotiated on these missiles.

There is therefore nothing new about the theories of my hon. colleague. The visit of Vice-President Bush gave us an opportunity to discuss the progress which was accomplished in the negotiations now under way in Geneva. In 1979, the members of NATO had suggested the zero-zero option, which would consist in eliminating completely the entire class of intermediate-range missiles, both on the side of the Soviet Union and the United States. We are still convinced that this would be ideal since this type of missile would be completely eliminated. NATO never considered this solution impossible or inflexible. In consultation with the other members of NATO, we are now examining the feasibility of proposing a new approach to bring about a compromise agreement which would not be all virtue and motherhood, but which would at least allow the negotiations to proceed so that balance in this type of arms can be achieved at the lowest possible level. If NATO decides to take this new approach, we plan to keep in mind the ultimate objective of wiping out these missiles completely. We hope that there will eventually be a second agreement to this end. At the meeting between Mr. Bush and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), we expressed the concerns of this Government and the people of Canada and the wish that the negotiations will now proceed more quickly. As this might involve greater flexibility, we are now consulting our allies in this regard and we hope that such flexibility can lead to profitable negotiations and the maintenance of world peace if possible so that we may never face a nuclear war.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

STATEMENT ON MORALITY

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, in the March 18, 1983, Ottawa Citizen the head of the National Research Council of Canada was reported as saying, "Man is a moral creature and what he does is necessarily moral." He then went on to say that moral concerns should not restrict scientists in their research.

Society must play a part in the moral concerns of scientific research, and we as legislators must play our part. But, Madam Speaker, our scientists must not abandon the moral implications of their research. To do so would be tantamount to accepting the gruesome, despicable experiments that have taken place throughout history.

We must all take responsibility for our work, whether we are scientists, legislators, or society in general.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

ARCTIC PILOT PROJECT HEARINGS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, some months ago the National Energy Board suspended its hearings into the Arctic Pilot Project on the grounds that the proponents did not have a confirmed market for their gas. Might I now add my urging to that of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) that the hearings be reconvened.

If successfully brought to fruition, the Arctic Pilot Project would create many much-needed jobs in Canada, as well as contribute sizeably to the nation's export earnings. The potentiality of prolonged delay must be jeopardizing sales negotiations with offshore customers.

There are many facets of the project which ought to be addressed by the National Energy Board and which, in reality, are largely independent of the final customer. For example, the determination of whether Arctic gas is surplus to Canadian requirements, safe production and transportation methods, northern shipping routes, environmental concerns, and the maximization of Canadian and particularly northern benefits, do not rely on who the customer is to be.

When the national priority is the restoration of the Canadian economy—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GRENADA—THREAT TO SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, on Wednesday night President Reagan accused Grenada of being one of three Caribbean countries that is installing Soviet weapons and installations. To support his accusation against Grenada he showed an aerial picture of the partly built new Grenada international airport, claiming that it was taken by a United States spy plane.

As is well known, Grenada is building an international airport to support one of its major industries, tourism. Plessey Airports of Great Britain is participating in the construction with a $6.5 million contract, and France, Finland, and Venezuela have pledged assistance. The runway length, which President Reagan attacked as being too great for legitimate Grenadian use, is less than the length of the runways in the Bahamas, Curacao, Dominica Republic, Guateloupe, Martinique, Puerto Rico, Trinidad, and Barbados.

In light of the many U.S. backed invasions of Caribbean countries, such as Guatemala, Dominican Republic, Cuba, and Nicaragua, and U.S. naval manoeuvres in the Caribbean, Grenada is justifiably alarmed at the President's sabre rattling.

I, therefore, call upon the Government of Canada to state publicly that Canada will oppose any move by the United States to interfere with the sovereignty of Grenada and to assure Grenada of our support in the event of any attempt to invade that country.

GOVERNMENT AID

QUEBEC'S REFUSAL TO PARTICIPATE IN NEED PROGRAM

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Madam Speaker, I am taking advantage of the provisions of Standing Order 21 in order to express to the House and to the Canadian people my feelings of dismay at the refusal of the Quebec Government to take part in the NEED program. Everyone knows that in all Quebec constituencies, there are hundreds, and in some cases even thousands, of unemployed workers who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits and are now struggling to make ends meet on welfare. For young people, that means $147 per month. The Provincial Government's constitutional nitpicking is certainly not going to help these people, who were probably hoping that the municipal authorities in their areas would at least be able to create jobs for carrying out community projects as needed. Consequently, Madam Speaker, I do hope, and I want to assure these people, that other bodies will be able to submit projects under the NEED program and that the Federal Government's $170 million will be available immediately. Yesterday, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) announced between 300 and 400 projects. I hope that municipalities that have already submitted projects will be able to switch sponsors quickly and get organized to create jobs in their communities. These jobs are urgently needed by many people, and especially those most sharply affected by the recession.

SMALL BUSINESS

NEWSPAPER EDITORIAL ON GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I have been on my feet several times so far this month alone, and in most of those interventions I have been expressing my concerns about the Government's indifference to the plights and problems of small business. An editorial in today's The Globe and Mail underlines my concerns.

Close to half of Canada's unemployed, the editorial states, are the former employees of small and medium business. It goes on to say that "Canadians have been told of the big layoffs by big business. They have personally observed and felt the lay-offs in small and medium-sized business."

While the Government was trumpeting its leadership in economic restraint, but in fact awarding 40 per cent of its public servants raises of 10 per cent and 9 per cent, the small-business sector had imposed upon itself restraints that, in more than 30 per cent of cases, had owners taking less out of their businesses by way of personal income than they had the year before, and in another 30.6 per cent of cases taking out the same amount as they had previously. The Government's self laudatory propaganda has thus been exposed for what it is.

The depressing spectacle of Bill C-139 has, for better or for worse, passed beyond us here. It is now time for the Government to act, and act firmly, to restore confidence and credibility in the marketplace.

I urge the Minister and the Cabinet, if they wish to create recovery with the stamina it will need to sustain itself—

Madam Speaker: Order.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a matter that has concerned me over the last 24 hours. I read with interest and heard of the altercation that occurred yesterday outside the Chamber between those who guard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the media.

Without passing judgment on the altercation itself, since I did not see it, I would suggest that the public has the right to know what their leaders think, and what their leaders' views are on matters of public interest. There are very few ways in which this can be achieved. One method of gaining that knowledge is through the media.

It is generally acknowledged that the Prime Minister has not been dealing with the media of late and has not been making himself available for discussion or questions about matters of public interest. In my opinion, that can only lead to further altercations of the type that was reported to have occurred yesterday. I think the Prime Minister has every reason to set down some limits as to accessibility, but he must be accessible. It is an obligation of leadership that one must be accessible.

Madam Speaker: Order.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR TAX REVIEW—INJUSTICE AGAINST QUEBEC

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the unfair situation of Quebecers with respect to the price of gas. I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of Canada (Mr. Chrétien) to get in touch with his Quebec counterpart with a view to looking into the possibility of reviewing the matter of the progressive tax—the Parizeau-Lévesque tax. Only in Quebec are motorists paying on average 59 cents for a litre of gas, as compared with 33 cents in Calgary. Quebec now levies a 16-cent tax on each litre of gasoline.

In my opinion, Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of Canada ought to make sure that Quebec does protect the interests of Quebecers because, the way it works out now, a Quebecer shells out $10 in direct taxes to the Province of Quebec each time he fills up his gas tank. That is definitely unwonted. Our energy policy is based on the fact that all Canadians ought to be paying the same price. Keeping in mind the fact that Calgarians buy a litre of gasoline for roughly 33 cents whereas Quebecers fork out about 59 cents, we are forced to conclude that the energy policy is very good, except in Quebec where the present Government again makes all Quebecers pay for its inept administration.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

ATTEMPT TO ENSURE SERVICE MONOPOLY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, all Canadians want a sound and efficient postal system. Canada Post seemed to have this as its objective. However, reality shows that its real goal is to assure for itself exclusive rights over the mail.

Canada Post's definition of a letter, with all its absurd implications, is but an attempt to solidify its absolute postal monopoly. Business and financial communities at large, including the insurance industry, with their time sensitive and urgent internal communications, will be hit the hardest in terms of reduced efficiency, added cost, and lessening of security.

Canada Post should be reminded that, despite socialistic oriented policies of the Liberal Government, we still continue to live in a free enterprise country where competition is essential to our economic growth and social well being.

It is imperative that Canada Post meets its competitors head-on instead of seeking monopolistic advantage by Government regulation. The public interest requires that Canada Post had better concentrate on improving the quality of its services and abandon policies jeopardizing our business communities already struggling to survive under the chaos introduced by the Government.

Let us hope that Cabinet will apply common sense when it considers the revised definition of a letter.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NUMBER OF YOUNG PEOPLE EMIGRATING

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question was to be directed to the Prime Minister but, in his absence, I will direct it to the Minister responsible for employment.

According to the latest available figures on Canadians leaving Canada, some 40,000 young people between the ages of 25 and 35 moved out of this country in the two years from 1979 to 1981.

Mr. Lalonde: The Conservative regime threw them out.

Mr. Cooper: I think it is safe to assume that a great many of those young people left the country in order to find work. Can the Minister tell us what is being done to remove this destructive drain of young Canadian manpower and Canadian brainpower?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think we should first analyze the basic proposition put forward by the Hon. Member to determine whether people leaving the country are necessarily young people looking for work. In fact we have, on average, and have always had, about 70,000 emigrating from Canada to other places for all kinds of reasons, some for work, some to go south for retirement, and others simply to move to other locations. I would point out to the Hon. Member that, at the same time, double that number has been coming into Canada, many of them also young people coming into this country to find work and to settle here. Therefore, I really cannot answer his question when the premise is all wrong.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, the Minister mentioned that 70,000 Canadians left. In fact 40,000 of those were young people between the ages of 25 and 35. If we consider the next figures, I think we will know why.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister and relates to the fact that this spring over 500,000 students will be looking for their first full-time jobs. They will be competing with the 1.5 million Canadians already looking for work, and that may explain why 40,000 left. What will the Government do about it?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think that is a much more serious question, and I appreciate the Hon. Member bringing it forward, because there is no doubt but that the issue involving how we can help young people, those graduating from schools, to find their first jobs, is really a major national priority. I do not follow the concern raised by the Hon. Member at all. The question is: what is the best way of doing it?

We have taken a number of steps to try to provide new openings and opportunities for young people in the job market. As the Hon. Member knows, we have substantially increased training programs. We increased budgets for this fiscal year by about 20 per cent. We have substantially added to the training in the high technology and high trades areas, where there are still many job opportunities. Second, with the provincial Governments we are considering ways in which we can combine our efforts to deal with unemployment.

Last January I met with provincial Ministers and put forward a policy paper for discussion. We have now held meetings with senior officials following those discussions, to find ways in which we can link up with provincial Governments in a combined effort. As I pointed out in the House yesterday and at times before, members of this caucus have been working very actively to consider a variety of ways by which we might provide incentives to the private sector, ways in which we can use federal Departments and agencies to provide first-time job opportunities.

Mr. Nielsen: They're so great.

Mr. Axworthy: Therefore, I would say that we are not immune to the issue. It is a serious issue. However, the fact is that we should recognize that the Government cannot solve the problem all by itself. It will also require major involvement by the private sector and by provincial Governments.

Mr. Nielsen: Sit down.

Mr. Axworthy: We hope that we can bring about that co-operation.

If the Leader of the Opposition is not interested in youth unemployment, then he has no business being in his seat.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Sit down!

NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, the fact is that many of the programs which the Government has brought forward are no more than paper programs. Sixty thousand jobs were promised through the NEED Program, but to date it has created less than 15,000 jobs. Time is running out and unemployment is rising. When will the Government get after the problem and do something serious about it?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would again like to take the opportunity to correct the Hon. Member. The NEED Program is designed to provide jobs on an ongoing basis over an 18-month period.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: For exhaustees.

Mr. Axworthy: We have been providing jobs at a level of 2,000 authorizations per week to ensure that we can provide work opportunities for those who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits. At the same time, through the Community Development Projects, of which the Hon. Member's own riding is a major beneficiary, we have also provided over 50,000 jobs during that period of time, so that we can provide an underlying floor foundation of direct employment opportunity.

• (1120)

Under the PED Program we provide incentives to the private sector to provide for wage subsidies to hire people, and another 20,000 people are employed in those programs. Now, I do not know about the Hon. Member, Madam Speaker, but for the over 150,000 people for whom we are providing employment through direct federal forms of assistance, they are very thankful that we are providing work, rather than simply the rhetoric that they receive from the Official Opposition.

RATE OF YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question as well is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and is very basic.

If the Minister is so confident that his new and innovative programs are so effective, why is it that youth unemployment is rising disproportionately to the general unemployment rate? In 1979 the youth unemployment rate was 10 per cent; now it is 19.3 per cent. Of the 328,000 jobs that the Minister hopes to create this year, we already know that 20 to 25 per cent of those are five-day and two-week and three-week jobs. There are really no new ideas.

What is the Government doing to rearrange its priorities to make it possible for our young people to regain confidence in the future of the Country, and to find an employment opportunity to restore the hope and the confidence that they have a right to expect to have in this country?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member says there are no new ideas and no new programs. I would like to point out that in the past year we introduced a work-sharing program whereby we have signed 12,000 agreements with private firms and groups of employers right across Canada that now cover close to a quarter of a million Canadian workers. We have been able to avoid over 102,000 lay-offs, and the evaluations that we have just completed indicate that that program has been supported by over 80 or 90 per cent of its users.

When the Hon. Member says that nothing new or helpful has been put in place, I would point out to him that the work-sharing program, a unique program introduced by this Government, has provided major support in guaranteeing job security.

At the same time, I do not quarrel with the concern that Members of this House have expressed about young people coming into the job market. It is unquestionably one of the most serious issues we face, and the reason is because we are still in the midst of a recession, a world-wide recession, where companies, rather than hiring a first-time worker, will be hiring people that they had laid off. Those people will be given the first opportunities, and therefore the companies will not be giving the first-time workers a chance to get on the job.

We must find ways of dealing with the problem; there is no question about that. But I will argue and quarrel with the Hon.

Member's statement that nothing has been done. We have been sitting down with provincial Governments and with private business to find how we can recruit and enlist their co-operation. We would do the same with Members opposite, as we would like to be able to get ideas from them. Rather than their being simply critical, if they have good ideas we are prepared to listen to them, because we have a number of ideas coming from our own caucus.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, our frustration stems precisely from the fact that the Government has refused to accept any new and innovative ideas from us, and examples from other countries.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, of all the countries with which we compare our statistics—

An Hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Oberle: —our record is definitely the worst in terms of youth unemployment. There will be 600,000 young people flooding out of the gates of our schools and universities during the next few weeks. Very few of them will find a meaningful first work experience.

Why is the Government so stubborn? Why has it not accepted some of the innovative suggestions that we have made to it to stimulate and entice the small business sector to make work for young people and, in so doing, find a means to survive the economic holocaust that the Government has created?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, one of the reasons is because we find the suggestions coming from the Hon. Members opposite to be so confusing. One day they say that the Government's deficit is too high, that it is spending too much money, that it should slash its programs and cut its expenditures. The next day the Hon. Member is saying that we should bring in new programs and make more expenditures.

As soon as the Official Opposition is able to decide what it wants to do, then we would be more prepared to listen. But as long as its members are speaking with 12, 13 or 14 voices, we cannot figure out what they mean.

• (1125)

At the same time I would point out to them that, in terms of working with the private sector, the NEED Program has received applications, and something like 20 or 30 per cent of the work programs are now working with private sector firms. I could give one example. The Hon. Member for St. John's East is not here, but we just signed an agreement with a company in his constituency. They are putting up $4 million and we are putting up half a million dollars. We are putting 120 people back to work, working with the private sector. That is the kind of leadership we are giving, not simply the noise from the left-hand corner of the Chamber over there.

FINANCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I will not ask the Minister to repeat his answer.

Mr. Nielsen: He will anyway.

Mr. Broadbent: I have a question for the Minister of Finance. There are two bits of alarming news in the press today. First, the chief economist of the Conference Board indicated that real unemployment is about 18 to 20 per cent, which means that there are approximately 700,000 more Canadians unemployed than the Government figures indicate. The other information comes from Statistics Canada. More particularly, an official speaking on that data said that the so-called recovery that is to come in 1983 will be the lowest since World War II. Both of these mean that unemployment in 1983, unless the Government does something quickly to stimulate the economy, will be as bad as it has been for the past year.

Will the Minister tell us the date of the budget, and will he promise that there will be major measures in his budget to stimulate the production of jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as far as the date of the budget is concerned, I certainly hope to be able to inform the House before we adjourn for Easter of the date for the budget speech. As far as the Hon. Member's second question is concerned, I am working on a budget that I hope will stimulate the economy, help with the creation of jobs in this country, and speed up the recovery. With regard to the premise of the Hon. Member's question, I remind him that there are many economists with many views.

Mr. Broadbent: There are many economists with many views, and almost without exception all the reports that come from private sector sources, as well as Government information for the past two weeks, say one thing, and one thing only, that more than two million Canadians will remain without a job in 1983 unless the Government starts to act. That is what they agree on.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REDUCE OIL PRICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister in terms of action the Government could take now to stimulate the economy. It concerns energy pricing. The Minister's colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources, has indicated we may have to wait until July to see enforcement of the oil-pricing agreement, which means that prices for the Canadian consumer which should now be about ten cents a gallon lower, will not be brought down until then at the earliest. If we enforce that agreement now, ten cents a gallon could translate into about 33,000 additional jobs for Canadians. Will the Minister tell us why he is waiting until July? Why is the Government postponing this action? Why does it not take steps to bring down those prices now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first, the desire for action is indeed very widespread. As the Hon. Member knows, the problem, whether it is between economists, business people or forecasters, is that there is a very large amount of disagreement as to what steps should be taken. Some say enlarge the deficit, some say don't. Some say have more Government spending, some say no, let the economy—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What do you say?

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member will have to wait for my budget to find out what I have to say.

I do not think it is fair for the Hon. Member to assume that the points of view expressed are as uniform as he attempts to indicate. As far as the agreement with Alberta is concerned, surely the Hon. Member knows that the agreement specifically provides that there is an adjustment of prices every six months, whether the prices come down or go up. When prices were going up, Alberta was asked, and agreed, to wait six months. Twice a year there were adjustments in the price of oil. That still applies, whether the prices go up or come down. Surely the Hon. Member is not advocating that we should unilaterally break an agreement, not respect our word and commitment in that regard, and not abide by the agreement. We intend to abide by the agreement. My hon. friend will have to wait until July for the particular decisions to be taken.

• (1130)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, first of all, as to the agreement, the Minister, as I have understood him, is incorrect. The agreement does provide procedures which would enable the Government to move upward in terms of prices, if the world price changed in an upward direction, every six months. It also permits action to be taken during that six-month period if Governments want to act. The Minister knows that there would be no violation of the agreement at all if the two Governments involved took action now to bring down those prices to what Canadian consumers ought to be experiencing at this point.

REQUEST FOR NEW JOB CREATION MEASURES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like now to come to my last question. Each week there are approximately 20,000 men and women coming off unemployment insurance. Many of these thousands of people are being driven to welfare. Quite independently of those who are being forced to go on welfare, there are thousands of other Canadians who, for different reasons, are going on the welfare rolls. Does the Minister and the Government not recognize some urgency to take action in terms of job creation? Can he not announce some additional specific measure before the Easter break, instead of us having to wait for the budget, in order to get some more jobs in our economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member admits we should not take unilateral action with regard to the agreement. He says that the Governments are obviously free to agree to make a change to the agreement—

Mr. Broadbent: Not a change to the agreement.

Mr. Lalonde: —or to agree to proceed with price changes under the agreement. But it requires the agreement of both Governments. I can tell the Hon. Member that the Government of Alberta and the other producing Provinces have not agreed to such changes at the present time. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, met with his colleague, the Minister from Alberta, last week. Further discussions are taking place. If and when any decisions are arrived at, I am sure the Minister of Energy will be very happy to communicate them to the House.

As far as the announcement of additional programs, or additional expenditures, is concerned, I remind my hon. friend that we have already some $2 billion worth of direct job creation programs in one form or another, or training programs, in operation at the present time. There are funds which have been approved and the processing is taking place of the various applications, as the Minister of Employment and Immigration has announced. We are trying to speed up that process as much as we can in order to accommodate the largest possible number of unemployed. We are quite conscious and quite concerned about the situation raised by my hon. friend. We are trying to cope with it as fast as we can. If there are other measures to be announced, however, they will be part of the budget.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY STATION AT MINAKI, ONT.—POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. For about the last six to eight months there have been negotiations going on between the Minaki Corporation, CN, Via Rail, and the Department of Transport over the transfer of a former railway building at Minaki to the Minaki Corporation. I am sure the Minister will agree that eight months is a long time for Crown corporations to get their act together. With the opening of Minaki Lodge taking place within the next month, could the Minister say whether he will intervene to make sure that this charade is ended?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, Via has been preparing a program for the restoration of stations for a number of months, if not years. It is a rather expensive proposition. This program has not been approved by the Treasury Board yet, but realizing the urgency of the matter put forward by my hon. friend, and realizing that the Government of Ontario has restored the Minaki Lodge and would like to have control of the station, I have made a very dramatic decision, a strong decision.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: As usual. Discussions are going on now between CN and Via Rail for the transfer of the station. In the coming weeks, then, there will be an agreement, I dare say, between Via and the Government of Ontario in order to accommodate the desire of the government of Ontario to lease the station.

FINANCE

ISSUANCE OF TAX REFUNDS—GOVERNMENT RESOURCES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister has stated that the Government owes 11 million Canadians about $6.5 billion in tax refunds, and now that the Income Tax Act has passed the House the tax refunds will go out next month. Does the Minister have the cash on hand to pay the tax refunds which he owes Canadians, or does he have to borrow it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the borrowing authority Bill which is before the House has a good chance of being passed by the end of this particular part of the Session, that is, before Easter. Thanks to the generosity of Parliament, I am sure there will be plenty of money. As to whether that money comes from money borrowed or from money coming in from tax receipts, we do not stamp dollars saying that it is a borrowed dollar, or that it is a tax dollar. The money will come out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. My hon. friend need not worry; she will get her tax refund if she has applied for it. I will not be able to tell her, however, if it is coming from borrowings or from actual cash reserves of the Government.

Mr. Nielsen: What reserves?

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT BORROWING

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Canadians can count on the fact that one dollar out of every three dollars the Government spends is a borrowed dollar. The Government is so broke that it is borrowing money under emergency powers which, as far as we can determine, have never been used before. By next Thursday the Government will have borrowed, through the back door, about $2.3 billion without the authority of Parliament. What steps is the Government taking, aside from seeking to borrow another $19 billion, to get itself out of this emergency situation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. lady is creating a phony emergency. The money which has been borrowed has been borrowed under the authority of Parliament. It has been borrowed under the Borrowing Authority Act, Section 39. It has been passed by this Parliament. The action which has been taken has been taken completely under the authority provided by this Parliament.

I am also pleased to inform the Hon. Member that the Receiver General has advised me that he currently has $5 billion in cash to pay a good part of those refunds, so I do not believe she has to worry. We will not go bankrupt over the weekend. We will still be here next Monday. And we will have plenty of time to pass the borrowing authority legislation. The Hon. Member need not fear. I wish her a very good weekend.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED PURCHASE OF CAST CORPORATION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister will know that the CTC scheduled hearings to inquire into the benefit of, or the detriment of the participation of CNR and Cast as fellow businessmen. In the last six months CNR obtained two delays of those hearings to determine whether or not this was in fact a good thing for Canada. Will the Minister confirm that, while these delays were taking place, the CNR has in fact purchased Cast, and this has been announced by Lloyds Registry of Shipping in London, England?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend, and others, always speak as if the CTC has never looked at the Cast acquisition, or the CN participation in Cast. The CTC has done that twice, and has agreed with it, generally speaking—at least once, I must correct myself. On the subject of the discussions between CN and Cast and Sofati, at this time I am not in a position to answer. I do not think there has been any conclusive decision yet. I would like to repeat, though, very emphatically, that whatever decision is arrived at is subject to the approval of Cabinet and is subject to the approval of the CTC.

QUERY RESPECTING ROLE OF PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, the trend and policy of the Government have been to encourage socialist participation in the transportation industry. I would now like to direct another question to the Minister of Transport.

When is the Minister going to establish a climate in which private enterprise might participate in the deep-sea shipping interests of Canada, and when is he going to investigate the viability which has already been proven, but should be announced, of the Ports of Saint John and Halifax for 12 months of the year as open Ports, windows to the international world of trade for Canada on a very viable basis, and recognize as well the socialist tendencies of the CNR and their interests?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is not much that has to do with philosophy here. The two reasons why CN is interested in being in Cast or in an organization of that type are simply because of the importance of multi-modalism in transportation today. Everyone will tell you that it is very important for a carrier to be associated with others, or to own others in other modes of transportation, if you want to have the door-to-door service for which Cast was known. That is one point, and I repeat, it does not have anything to do with theology or philosophy. It is reality.

The second reason is that in the Port of Montreal today CP has acquired a very strong position, both on rail and on water. So if my hon. friend does not want CN to be left behind, CN has to compete, and it has to compete with CP on similar terms, hence the interest of CN in staying in Cast or in acquiring other facilities.

BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT'S ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment. Unemployment in British Columbia has reached 196,000, and communities like Kamloops should be declared national disaster areas for purposes of emergency job creation. The Minister is aware that the B.C. Government is exploiting this human tragedy with misleading, exaggerated, and inaccurate public advertising, claiming the credit for thousands of jobs which do not exist, and also for federal programs for which it has not had the responsibility.

In view of this Socred misrepresentation of federal programs, has the Minister written to the Premier of British Columbia demanding withdrawal of this dishonest political advertising for which B.C. taxpayers are being forced to pay?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think someone once said that imitation is the highest form of compliment that can be paid. The fact that the B.C. Government is using federal programs to extol the ability of government to create jobs demonstrates the fact that we must be doing something right, contrary to what we heard just a few minutes ago.

It has been drawn to my attention that the B.C. Government has taken out a number of ads talking about how work sharing has saved thousands of jobs in the Province. It has also saved thousands of jobs in other parts of Canada. We have been in contract with the B.C. Minister of Labour to point out that, if he is going to be so kind as to draw the public's attention to the virtues of that program, he may also draw attention to the fact that it is the federal Government which provides it.

Mrs. Mitchell: The Minister is almost as misleading as the Socred Government. He should be telling people that job-sharing does not create new jobs. In fact, it does not really maintain existing jobs full time.

INDUSTRY

NORTH-EAST BRITISH COLUMBIA COAL PROJECT—PROVINCE'S ADVERTISEMENTS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The B.C. Socred Government has been forced to withdraw its dishonest claims about thousands of day-care centres it has claimed to have created, but it is still claiming the creation of 10,000 to 16,000 jobs in B.C.'s north-east coal project. In view of the negative predictions about future markets for north-east B.C. coal and the layoffs which he knows are now occurring in the mining of south-east B.C. coal, does the Minister agree that few, if any, additional jobs are being created in B.C. coal production at this time, and does he not also agree that these ads are grossly dishonest and should be prohibited?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I have not seen those ads as yet, so I do not want to make any comment. All the federal Government did was to assist the Province of British Columbia, at the Province's request as well as that of the coal industry, to aid in the development of the infrastructure to ensure economic development in that part of the Province of British Columbia.

INCOME TAX

DELAY IN ISSUANCE OF 1981 REFUNDS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I have a short supplementary to my colleague's question on income tax refunds. Can the Minister of Finance assure us that, not only will the 1982 tax refunds go out, but the 1981 tax refunds still owing to a number of my constituents will go out as well, with top priority?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think that where the Hon. Member is referring to Canadians who have not yet received their tax refunds for 1981, these are a limited number of very specific cases where there was some problem with the tax return or changes had to be made. The vast majority of income tax returns for that year have been processed, with very few exceptions.

AIRPORTS

WINNIPEG AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL CENTRE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Transport management in the Winnipeg region and Ottawa headquarters have prepared and support a detailed proposal to build a new Winnipeg area air traffic control centre. Can the Minister tell me when construction will start on this new centre?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am afraid I will not be able to do so this morning, but I will make enquiries and give the Hon. Member a reply before three o'clock, either by telephone or directly.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the haste with which the Minister is going to give me the answer, because we want to keep those 250 controllers and their families there.

SITE AND PLANS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I ask the Minister of Transport if he has a proposed building site on Crown land, and immediate access to detailed building plans from Edmonton, Montreal or Moncton? Would he tell me if the funds are available, and what is the earliest possible date for construction to start?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would really have appreciated notice of these questions. Simply put, there are in Canada about 100 airports for which I have some responsibility. There are also 350 ports. I cannot memorize the program for each one of them, so I would appreciate it if the Member would give me notice before asking me what is the state of a project at a particular airport. So again I say, this time in Latin, bis, to the previous question, and I will answer this afternoon.

GRAIN

UNITED STATES PRICE CUTTING POLICIES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who, I am sure is aware of the serious difficulties Canadian grain producers are facing as a result of low world prices and the price cutting policies of the United States and the European Economic Community. This has led to the threat of a massive reduction in the initial price of grain paid to prairie producers. Is the Minister's Government actively considering taking any action in this particular area and, if so, what action is being contemplated?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I see three parts to the answer. The first one is that, indeed, we take exception to some of the marketing tactics that the Americans have used, particularly in Iraq, for example, which is a cash market, and where they have made sales recently using blended credit. We do not think that is cricket, so we have made a protest on that subject.

The second point is that, contrary to the impression given by my hon. friend, recently there has been in the grain markets of the world a certain strengthening of Canadian Red Spring No. 1, for example, which sold at $204 a ton about ten days ago, is selling at $217 today, and at $222 the day before. So there has been an interesting upward trend. I do not want to make too much of it. On the surface one of the reasons is the limitation of cultivated acreage in the United States. Another reason has been the apparent relatively poor crop in the Soviet Union. "Le malheur des uns fait le bonheur des autres".

Thirdly, on the subject of initial prices, indeed we studied the subject yesterday in committee of Cabinet, so it is on its way to Cabinet now and an announcement should be made in the coming days.

LEVEL OF INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, in light of this so-called strengthening in the market can we expect that the initial price will remain at the level of the 1982-1983 initial price, or higher? Secondly, what action, in addition to a mere protest, is the Government taking to encourage co-operation among the major exporting nations of the world so that there can be some stability in the pricing arrangements for the grain industry as a whole?

• (1150)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, on the second question, I have nothing much to add to what the Hon. Member knows. Canada constantly makes an effort to bring producer and consumer countries together internationally, but without great success in recent years. One has to add the years when my hon. friend was Minister of Transport in terms of the lack of success in recent times.

On the subject of the level of initial payments, my hon. friend is very learned in these matters. I am aware of that, and compliment him occasionally. He knows that initial payments must express the right balance between too high and too low. The Government cannot risk too much, and it is always good for farmers to have a bit of a surprise on the positive side, as occurred this year, when they realized that the final payment would be $500 million more than they had received in the initial payment. My colleague, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, has balanced all these factors, now, and the results will be known in a few days.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION STATUS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Would he advise the House of what steps he is taking to see that the present abuse of charitable tax status by some of the 58,000 designated organizations is brought under control? There is an abundance of examples where groups, particularly supporting aims of the Liberal Party, are registered, and those that do not are refused registration. For example, the Fraser Institute was agreed to by the Minister, but the Centre for Policy Alternatives was turned down. In Quebec, such groups as Young Canadians for a Christian Civilization was registered, and its sole purpose seems to be to attack the Government of France. There are others, such as the Canadian Unity Council and the Confessional School movement, which are simply political fronts for the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: Would the Minister refer this matter, at the very least, to a House committee for investigation, or does he intend to allow this kind of activity to continue?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, to hear the laughing and joking going on on all sides of the House, I think Hon. Members have already passed jugment on the reasoning behind the Hon. Member's question. Perhaps he should have stopped to realize that more than 50,000 groups are licensed to issue receipts on behalf of the Department of National Revenue, and that by using two or three of these groups to make a snap judgment on their affiliation, he is basing his judgment on a very small number of people. Department officials who are responsible for administering this provision of the Act do so on the basis of documentation they are given by the groups in question, and they exercise the greatest possible objectivity in this respect.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: The Minister seems to find a great deal of humour in it. The fact of the matter is that some of these groups are flagrantly violating the law.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, if the Minister does not believe that, will he refer the law and the documents relating to those 58,000 groups to a House committee? If he is not prepared to do that, will he get his colleague, the Solicitor General, to have the commercial crime squad of the RCMP go over and do a random sampling, and advise the House or the Minister responsible just how many of those groups are flagrantly violating the law?

Some Hon. Members: Name them.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I would urge the Hon. Member to follow current events more closely. He would see that from some of the groups that are turned down every year, we receive a great many representations telling the Department of National Revenue that it is far too severe in its enforcement of the legislation, and that is because we insist that the criteria for interpreting the law are to be strictly applied. The Hon. Member seems to be saying that we are too lenient in our interpretation, but representations I have been receiving from Members on both sides of the House seem to indicate that most Members and the public in general think that our approach is too strict.

FINANCE

EXERCISE OF GOVERNMENT BORROWING AUTHORITY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. A few moments ago when he was responding to questions by the finance critic for the Opposition, he informed us that present Government borrowings made under its emergency powers were being made under Section 39 of the Borrowing Authority Act. I take it that he meant Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act. Will the Minister inform us whether the powers contained in Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act have ever been exercised in the past by any Government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. I was going to rise on a point of order at twelve o'clock to correct the reference to the Financial Administration Act rather than the Borrowing Authority Act.

As for the previous use of the power, I cannot recollect an instance, although in a parliamentary committee I was informed by a Member of the Conservative Party that it was used around 1962. I have not verified this matter. I do not know whether or not it was used at that time, but it was volunteered by someone on the Conservative side that it had been used.

The point is rather irrelevant. Parliament has provided that specific power under Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act. Surely, if Parliament put it there, it was because it expected that the Government would use it when needed some day. This is what has taken place. It has been very helpful and very well received by the financial community as a responsible act, while the Opposition was filibustering the introduction of that other particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad the Minister made reference to 1962 because I was here during that time, and he was not. I can tell him that indeed in 1962 the borrowing authority was exercised—he referred to filibustering—by virtue of the fact that the Liberal Opposition of the day held up Supply for 49 days while they filibustered the Government of the day.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: I think that filibuster record has never been exceeded since that date.

REQUEST THAT ORDERS IN COUNCIL BE TABLED

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, Section 39 sets forth that the Minister may borrow for a period not exceeding six months. It requires an amount to be stipulated, and terms, and interest rates. What authority does the Minister have from the Governor in Council with respect to the period of the borrowing, with respect to the maximum amount of the borrowing, and with respect to the interest rates authorized by that Order in Council? Will he undertake next Monday to table the Order in Council which provided the Minister with that authority to borrow under Section 39?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can inform the Leader of the Opposition that all borrowing carried out through the issuing of Treasury bills was done pursuant to an Order in Council passed specifically for this purpose by Cabinet. I should be happy to look up the Orders in Council, if they have not already been published in the Canada Gazette, but in any case, I should be happy to give the Hon. Member the information as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

NEW BRUNSWICK HIGHWAY PROJECT

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the strengthening of highway linkages in New Brunswick, which touches upon the economy of New Brunswick and the Atlantic Provinces. We have been awaiting that for some period of time for a section of main Highway 11 in northern New Brunswick. With the budget discussions and the warmer summer weather coming for construction, I wonder whether the Minister of Transport could give some indication of discussing with Premier Hatfield and the Minister of Transportation of New Brunswick the implementation of their plans to finish the construction of the section between Belledune and Charlo on Route 11, in that Province?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would appreciate notice of these pointed questions, however important they are. We negotiated an agreement with the Maritime Provinces a year ago. We negotiated with the Government of New Brunswick for selection of different routes, and emphasis was given to Route 11 as a preoccupation of Members of Parliament on this side. The Government of New Brunswick was quite accommodating, and I expect that to continue. On the specific point, I will have to telephone my hon. friend this afternoon.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

SERVICE AT MANITOBA OVERLAND PORTS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. He will be aware that there is some concern in a number of overland ports, especially in Manitoba, that the United States Government is considering reducing the number of hours at their overland ports which, of course, would affect ours.

Could the Minister give an indication of what steps the Government is taking in order to provide, not only the service, but also the commercial activity that is obviously enhanced with the longer hours at those ports?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, we have been advised that the American Government has been making a number of proposals to shorten the time during which certain ports of entry between the United States and Manitoba are open, and we have reacted to these proposals. At the present time, there are two controversial points, one concerning opening time in the morning, and the second the fact that time two ports of entry would be closed by the Americans in the morning between 7.00 and 9.00 a.m. Our position is that if the Americans are unable to provide regular service on the border, they should at least keep the barrier open so that northbound traffic can proceed and we can continue to operate the ports of entry.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY REPORT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, first of all I want to thank the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) for remaining in the House. As he knows, a report was released yesterday which had been funded by the Department of Communications to look into the impact of information technology on Canadian society. It speaks of fundamental changes and a number of other things that it is important for the House to consider, such as employment, technological change, science and technology, research and development, and so on. They will affect every part of the lives of Canadians over the next 20 or 30 years.

Is it the intention of the Minister to table that document in the House, and perhaps refer it to the appropriate committee in the event that the committee may wish to look into the matter?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the report that was made public yesterday is a report of a sub-committee of the Canadian Videotex Consultative Committee, which is a consultative committee to my Department. I would be pleased to table the report in the House, but I would point out that that does not automatically refer it to a committee of the House under the new Standing Orders since it would not be tabled pursuant to a legal obligation to do so. However, I will be pleased to table it and to discuss the matter with my House Leader.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT (FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS) CONTINUING ASSISTANCE ACT

AUTHORIZATION OF CONTINUING FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-130, to authorize continuing financial assistance to be provided to certain international financial institutions, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South) moved:

That Bill C-130, An Act to authorize continuing financial assistance to be provided to certain international financial institutions, be amended by adding immediately after line 13 at page 2 the following:

11. For the purposes of this Act, "sitting day of Parliament" means a day on which either House of Parliament sits."

and by renumbering the subsequent Clauses accordingly.

He said: Madam Speaker, we are taking up the report stage of Bill C-130 and discussing the amendment which stands in my name on the Order Paper and presented on behalf of this Party. At the outset, may I say that the wording of the amendment was arrived at following discussions. I believe it is the intention of the Government to accept my amendment. In a few moments we will hear from the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party, and I have some reasons to believe that that Party also finds the amendment acceptable. In this case, I believe it would be in the interests of speedy passage of the legislation if my intervention were brief.

Bill C-130 was debated on second reading in November and extensive discussions were held in committee in December. We are now going to discuss the amendment and what it seeks to do to the Bill.

Let me remind the House that the principle of the Bill is to provide for transitional payments of some $442,000 to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue fund, and $117,040,000 to be issued in the form of non-interest bearing, non-negotiable demand notes to the eight regional lending institutions listed in the Schedule of the Act.

One of the reasons for the importance of debating this legislation is the fact that it is a very rare occasion when the House is seized of any sort of debate on these matters, let alone dealing with legislation having to do with Canada's role in international development. As we know, CIDA has been operating through the years without an Act of Parliament. The only time we deal in any substantial way with CIDA does as the main proponent of Canada's role in international development, is at the time of the Estimates. I am afraid that all Members of the House are too well aware of the inadequacy of the rules concerning the examination of Estimates that preclude the full treatment that important spending programs require.

Spokesmen for this Party have previously expressed the basic support that we bring to the Bill. We believe that the sums mentioned in the Bill, and indeed the Bill's thrust, are in harmony with Canada's role in international development. It reflects the concerns of many Canadians that Canada play a proper role in international development, both bilaterally and multilaterally, not to mention the role of supporting non-governmental organizations that, in my view, perform perhaps the most valuable work toward human development programs in the world on a dollar for dollar basis.

Nevertheless, this Bill deals with part of Canada's commitment to multilateral agencies and specifically to international financial institutions. Since we have made commitments to those institutions, there is no doubt that the correct procedure to follow would be to pass this Bill after recognizing the work we have done in the House today and the consideration we have given to its principles and limitations during the second reading and committee stages.

We are now seeing an important qualification. The Bill as presented to us would have allowed the Government to change the names of financial institutions by Order in Council, particularly the eight that are named in the Bill. For the purpose of the record, I should briefly refer to those institutions. They are: the African Development Fund, the African Development Bank, the Asian Development Fund, The Asian Development Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, the Fund for Special Operations of the Inter-American Development Bank, the Caribbean Development Bank and Special Development Fund, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and now the new Common Fund for Commodities that has evolved from the discussions of UNCTAD over the past few years.

The amendment before us addresses itself precisely to the problem of how the names of those institutions would be changed. As I have said, whereas the present Bill would allow the Government to do this by Order in Council without its being subject to the scrutiny of Parliament, the amendment would provide that if the Government decided to alter that list, to add or substract, but particularly to add, it would bring such an order before Parliament and put it in the form of a motion to which Members of Parliament could address themselves. To do this, 30 Members of Parliament would be required to sign a statement that would call for a special three-hour debate, to be followed by a vote. That procedure would allow Members of Parliament to fulfill at least a modicum of responsibility in scrutinizing where Canada's money is going.

As I have indicated, the wording of the amendment was arrived at after consultations and discussions. I believe it to be a good amendment. Moreover, there are several precedents for such an amendment which provides that 30 Members of Parliament sign a statement calling for debate on a motion that the Government is required, by legislation, to bring forward when it seeks to change certain Bills that have been passed by the House in any substantive way.

The precedent for my amendment is found in Bills C-102 and C-123. The wording in both those Bills is almost identical to that found in the amendment before us. Those amendments have previously found favour with the House and have established a precedent which I believe the House would be wise to follow today at the report stage of the present Bill. Having said that, I want to make two brief comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)): I regret that the time allotted to the Hon. Member has come to an end. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues. I will continue for a couple of moments. As I have indicated, it is not my intention to debate this Bill at length because it has received full treatment. I believe there is a common desire to process the Bill through its final stages immediately.

I think the House would be interested to know that there were several questions raised in committee about the procurement by Canadian business from those international institutions to which we are subscribing funds. Subsequent to the committee hearings in December, I received some very interesting information from Mr. Bill McWhinney, the Acting President of CIDA, which I think is useful and ought to be put on the record now. I am informed that the returns to Canada from the money that we put into these international financial institutions amounts to a 66 per cent return. The latest figures that are available show that Canada has received some $930.4 million in procurement which is related to Canadian contributions of $1.4 billion.

I would also bring some additional information to the attention of Hon. Members which relates to the downstream commercial benefits to many firms that have tendered and received contracts from international financial institutions. I specifically refer to the study done by the Asian Development Bank that confirms that although the level of Canadian bidding remains low on a relative basis, the success rate of Canadian bids tendered is generally high. More important, it is noted that there is an ongoing effort to generate interest and increased awareness by Canadian companies in the IFI financed projects through a series of conferences, seminars and promotional tours across Canada by IFI procurement officials.

The World Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the African Development Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank have all conducted tours within the last 18 months. Financial assistance to Canadian firms seeking export contracts, including those financed by the IFI, is also available.

Therefore, we see that some progress is being made on procurement by Canadian firms, although I do not believe it is yet at a substantial level. I urge the Government to do more to help Canadian business achieve those contracts and obtain that legitimate business that follows from the greater flow of Canadian assistance and contributions in the form of loans and grants into the multilateral institutions. If we are to play a greater role, as we have been asked to do in the Brandt Report and the many professional studies that have been conducted, we will have to ensure that Canadians, and particularly Canadian business, receive their fair entitlement to the benefits that will increase development throughout the world. This will be done when we recognize the need for increased international financing today to solve the debt crisis, when we recognise the need for the doubling of the bases of the IMF and the World Bank and the increase of facilities to make more of the world's liquidity available in those areas of the world that are pressed for development now and are caught in the international debt crisis.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to take part in the debate on Bill C-130 for several reasons. The most important of these is my involvement in the area of international development and the study my colleagues and myself have made on all aspects of our relations with the countries of Latin America and the West Indies.

Mr. Speaker, another reason why I wanted to take part in this debate concerns the selection or evaluation of the borrowing projects which have been submitted by various countries. What I mean, Mr. Speaker, is that I am concerned that the ministers of the various countries which contribute to the international financial institutions are not really in charge. The politicians are not sufficiently involved in the selection and evaluation of the borrowing projects. Very often, Canada finds itself in a situation where one of the institutions to which we contribute funds grants a loan to a country which, at least in our opinion, is not sufficiently respectful of human rights. Because of this, Canadian contributions to these international institutions are often used to help countries which we should not necessarily be helping and I find it unfortunate that the politician responsible, whether the Minister of Finance of Canada (Mr. Lalonde) or the Minister of External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), would be directly involved in the selection and assessment of loan proposals which are made to us through those financial institutions.

[English]

Also, this legislation provides for continuing financial assistance by Canada to a number of international financial institutions which play a vital role in Third World development. My predecessor and friend, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), gave the list of the institutions. I will not repeat them. I am confident that the vast majority of Hon. Members of this House understand and appreciate the importance of international development and the seriousness of the crisis facing the Third World countries and people as a result of the current economic recession. To take only one example, Mexico is undergoing harsh and severe adjustments as the result of its balance of payments problems.

I am equally confident that most Hon. Members now understand that it is in Canada's self interest, as well as being our moral obligation, to remain firmly committed to development and improved North-South relations. It is particularly worthy of note that leading members of the Canadian business community have been drawing attention to the importance of these matters. For example, Mr. William Mulholland, Chairman of the Bank of Montreal, recently observed that "loans to the developing countries represent investments in the future health of the entire world's trading system".

The first thing to be noted about these financial institutions is that they are not in the business of giving money away. They are carefully managed institutions, mostly dealing in loans to the Third World countries. The record of repayment over the years has been excellent, which is why the banks are able to raise capital themselves on the most favourable commercial terms.

At the same time, the regional development banks, such as the World Bank, have special funds or "windows" which provide loans at lower than commercial rates to the poorest countries in the world. In this way and in their project selection they attempt to deal with the problem of mass poverty. As the parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations concluded, investment in the overcoming of poverty and misery is one of the best long-term investments we can make.

One measure of the competence and effectiveness of the international financial institutions was provided by a 1981 study by the U.S. Treasury Department of the World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, the Asian Development Bank and the African Development Fund. I think all Hon. Members will agree that the U.S. Treasury Department is not a soft-hearted or soft-headed organization, and yet this study found that the institutions were generally well run and effective in promoting development. It concluded that continued U.S. participation was justified by a fundamental national interest in a more stable and secure world.

During the course of my own work over the past three years with the parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations and the Subcommittee on Canada's Relations with Latin America and the Caribbean, I have had occasion to study and meet with officials of many of the institutions listed in Bill C-130.

While I have no doubt that there are areas of their work which can and should be improved, I am also convinced that they serve important Canadian interests. I would summarize these as follows: First, they serve to expand private financing and investment through co-financing and participation in projects for which they do the basic staff and analysis work. Second, they encourage efficient use of local resources. Third, they are in the forefront of research on development problems and policies, particularly in the area of basic human needs. Fourth, they expand and enhance the value of Canadian aid through CIDA's participation in large-scale projects planned by the international financial institutions. Fifth, the regional banks provide excellent opportunities for Canada to develop commercial and other contacts with Latin America and the Caribbean, Africa and Asia. These regional markets are among the most promising for long term expansion of Canadian trade. Sixth, they provide an immediate market for Canadian goods and services. While it has been noted that the Canadian procurement record is poorer than that of some other countries, studies show that Canadian suppliers and consultants do very well when they bid on contracts. In short, we need to get out and hustle for this business.

I would conclude as I began, by arguing that immediate self-interest as well as our fundamental commitment to development should and will lead this House to give strong support to Bill C-130.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we have agreed that there will be just one Hon. Member speaking per Party, covering both report stage and third reading stages of the Bill. On behalf of the New Democratic Party I say that although we are supporting the Bill as we did on second reading, and certainly supporting the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), we do, and I do particularly, have some quite serious reservations about it.

At the time of second reading I requested the Government to bring to the standing committee a detailed report from the Canadian perspective on the operation of each of the eight institutions mentioned in the appendix to the Bill, and particularly concerning the operations of the Inter-American Development Bank. However, we received no detailed reports on the operations of the institutions concerning which we are voting today to replenish the Canadian contribution. There was nothing in writing prepared and there was nothing verbal offered.

Referring to my speech on November 9, 1982, during second reading stage, I expressed some of our Party's very serious reservations which, in effect, concerned the political criteria being used in deciding, with particular reference to the Inter-American Development Bank, what countries would be granted loans. I suggested that the Minister might bring to the Committee a more detailed review of the criteria used in the granting of loans. Again, there was no satisfactory response to this concern, a concern which is shared by other Members of the House as well.

The Hon. Member who just spoke mentioned but did not elaborate upon the situation of large loans going to countries engaged in massive violations of human rights. That was one of the criteria that I asked about. A second one that I asked about was when loans are in effect being used by Government forces, so-called security forces, to further engage in a civil war or in a war of aggression against a neighbour.

I wanted to have some analysis from the Government as to whether or not we should be engaging in the support by a multilateral institution like the Inter-American Development Bank when that is the kind of way in which the money is being used. I had already written to the Minister about this in connection with the loan to Guatemala.

The third point on which I had requested further enlightenment was whether we should be looking to see whether the loans were really directed to satisfying basic human needs and whether they should be conditioned, to at least some extent, on the degree to which they satisfied these basic human needs and addressed the problem of the very serious maldistribution of income in many of the countries that are recipients of loans.

I was really extremely disappointed on the fact that the Government has failed to address these issues seriously. The Minister of course paid no attention to them whatsoever, but I was sorry that the Department or CIDA did not address these requests a bit more fully. In fact, they hardly addressed them at all.

That being the case, although we will support report stage and third reading of this Bill, I think it only fair to say that we do it now with really very great reservations for the reasons I have given. By the way, Mr. Speaker, my reservations have increased because of new evidence that the Inter-American Development Bank is becoming, I am sorry to say, an agent of White House policy in Latin America and particularly in Central America, and the recent loans to El Salvador, to which we have contributed, give ample evidence of this.

I am sure some Hon. Members will have already read the report, which was mentioned by The Globe and Mail on March 24, 1983, of James Morrell of the Center for International Policy in Washington, a centre which monitors U.S. policy in the Third World. It is quite clear from his report that indeed political considerations are becoming even more critical in the final decision on who gets what loans from the Inter-American Development Bank. The political considerations, I am sorry to say, seem to have nothing to do with human rights violations; they have nothing to do with redistribution of income and they have nothing to do with whether or not the money is being spent on arms. All they have to do with, it seems, is whether or not the recipient country is one that is favoured by the U.S. State Department in its, to put it mildly, reactionary policies vis-à-vis Central America.

We must look more seriously than we have done at the Canadian contribution to loans being given to various countries by such an international financial institution as the Inter-American Development Bank, and ask some very serious questions. It is not good enough for the Minister to say, as he did to me, that they do not consider political considerations in the granting of loans, when it has become very clear that when the Americans say no to Inter-American Development Bank loans to Nicaragua but yes to loans to El Salvador, a political consideration is in fact being made.

I think that the amendment which the Hon. Member introduced, and which we support, that the Government cannot add to or subtract from the list or the schedule, is a useful amendment and will, if 30 Members so request, give us an opportunity for debate. However, I now feel that since there was such an inadequate response to my concerns and to the concerns of other Members on the criteria used in the giving of loans, we have to find some other method, before we are next asked for a Canadian replenishment, of ensuring that we get complete reports on the activities of every agency, and that we follow them with a careful and thorough examination and discussion of the criteria that are used in the granting of loans and, finally, that we ascertain that in fact political considerations do not enter into what are supposed to be neutral decisions.

We have agreed on one speaker, so I guess I will not get my answer now, but I would hope that the Government will take my suggestions very seriously into consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pepin (for Mr. MacEachen) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pepin (for Mr. MacEachen) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT (NO. 4)

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND TERMINATION DATE FOR LOANS

The House resumed, from Friday, March 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rompkey that Bill C-144, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (No. 4), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I assumed that one of the hon. gentlemen opposite might want to lead off the debate on Bill C-144. It is a subject in which we on this side are very interested, the matter of small business and finance for small business, and we assumed that they might be equally interested, but apparently that is not the case.

Mr. Smith: No, we are.

Mr. Nickerson: The objective of the Bill before us, which it is our intention on this side to support and deal with expeditiously so that it can be dealt with in the appropriate Committee, is to extend the provision of the Small Businesses Loans Act for an additional period of two years. The provisions of the Act were to have expired on March 31, 1983 and the intention of this Bill is to extend that period of time to March 31, 1985 and to allow the volume of loans to be guaranteed within that period to be made up to a maximum of $1.5 billion.

• (1240)

What I just said should have been said by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey), whom I see in his seat, in order to show the real intention of the Bill. I want to address one point fairly briefly, that is, the difference in philosophy on this side of the Chamber and the other side as to how we might have handled things differently. On the specifics, other Members on this side will go into the details.

The Minister of State responsible for Small Businesses knows what is happening. He was formerly the Minister of National Revenue. His revenue procedures worsened the plight of small businesses, and today he is trying to put that right. Today he is paying his penance, so to speak. The idea of the Government, in its grab for more and more revenue, is to hit hard the business sector of Canada. It is supported in this by our friends to the extreme left, only one of whom is here today because they do not like the idea of business making profits.

We saw this in Bill C-139 which was enforced by closure yesterday. This will hurt small business. We see the 12.5 per cent small business dividend distribution tax and the way that will affect small-businessmen. The provisions of Bill C-139 and the budgets will no longer permit small businesses to participate in certain deferred profit-sharing plans. That will affect the revenues and profits of small businesses. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has stated that he intends to tax benefits that are commonly accepted in Northern parts of Canada, such as Labrador City represented by the Minister who will be speaking later today.

I want to speak specifically on the taxation of northern benefits. They affect large corporations such as the Iron Ore Company of Canada. This is one more straw on the camel's back in those types of operations. It will affect federal, provincial and territorial Governments which will have to find additional moneys with which to recompense their employees who will be subject to this additional taxation. Probably more than anything, it will affect the small northern businessman, the guy whose profit is limited, whose every dollar counts.

When new taxes are placed on the employees or the proprietor of a small business, it makes life doubly difficult. I suspect that a disproportionate number of northern small businesses will go into receivership compared to the number elsewhere in Canada if this provision in the budget announced last year by the Minister of Finance goes into effect.

Other Members on this side will speak of the necessity for skilled help, certain financing arrangements which could be worked out, the regulations and paper burden placed on small businesses, the way that Government purchasing and procurement policies could be used to assist small business. On one hand the Government is putting an additional burden on small businesses, whether it be a financial burden by way of additional taxation or more regulations and paper work, grabbing all it can and taking it away, and with the other hand with this type of legislation trying to give a little assistance back to them.

My preference is allowing market forces to operate on their own. It would not be necessary for the Government to bring forward complicated pieces of legislation designed to assist businesses, small businesses in particular, if it were not taking everything away from them at the same time. The market would operate much more smoothly. We cannot protect every small-businessman. Some will go out of business. Some are in the wrong business, some do not work as hard as others and some experience bad luck. The small business sector as a whole would be healthier and more productive if we as Parliamentarians, people who impose legislation, were to rearrange our thinking. We should allow the market to operate freely and smoothly instead of impeding it, sometimes with good intentions.

In the remaining minutes I want to bring to the attention of this House some matters that affect small business and banking, particularly in the area I represent, the Northwest Territories. A lot of what I will say has been brought to my attention by my constituents, but may be equally applicable in other northern areas of Canada, and in fact throughout the country. There is suspicion in my area that those who control the banking operations from head offices or regional offices in the South do not really appreciate the special needs of business in northern Canada. Take the present economic climate over much of southern Canada and in parts of the North, and you find that business is at a standstill. One can understand the reason why a banker would not want to force more loans on people, if they ever do that, and why people are a little more cautious than normal. However, in areas such as the Mackenzie Delta, the Mackenzie River and Norman Wells, where there is a lot of oil exploration and development gearing up for production, the businesses there need more money. They can handle further indebtedness in a prudent manner. This would allow them to expand and take advantage of the increasing economic opportunities which exist in that part of the country. It is suspected that this is not known in southern head offices of the banks. Local loan offices are not permitted to authorize on their own account sufficient funds required to operate a business where it is necessary to keep large inventories because of the transportation difficulties and high transportation costs. For example, the freight on a truckload of flour from the mills of Edmonton or Calgary to the Mackenzie Delta is about $10,000, which is the maximum amount a local loan officer can authorize. Therefore, a baker cannot buy a truckload of flour on credit without the banker contacting the head office in Edmonton or Calgary. He cannot pay the freight on that truckload of flour, let alone purchase the contents.

Mortgage money is especially hard to come by in northern parts of Canada. That has been made known to me on several occasions. In some areas there are no banking services whatsoever. For example, in the hamlet of Fort Rae-Edzo, with a population of 1,500 to 2,000 people, there is no bank. The nearest bank is 60 or 70 miles away. I believe there is a tremendous opportunity for one of the chartered banks to move into a town like that. There is more and more money all the time coming into these towns, and there is a tremendous opportunity to grow with them. It might take a few years before the branch of the bank makes a profit, but there does exist an opportunity for the banking community, an opportunity which should be seized, and which will also provide proper banking service in locations where that is not presently available.

There are cases, and one of these happened very recently in the Town of Inuvik, where a previous bank manager had been suspected by his head office of being a little too lenient and giving out too much money to business, small business in particular, by way of loans. He was subsequently replaced and the new manager was told to tighten up right away. It may be true that the previous manager was handing out too much money, but I believe investigations are showing that this is exaggerated. However, when someone new comes in to a small town bank and immediately changes the policy, refuses to allow extensions to lines of credit, calls in loans, or starts bouncing cheques, the whole business community suffers the repercussions.

You can imagine what would happen if this were to occur nationally, because any banking system which relies on fractional reserves is inherently insolvent. Once that sort of thing starts happening, the very thing which the banking industry most fears is precipitated. Unless credit policies are changed gradually over a period of time, the local business community is subjected to much greater difficulty than it should experience, and there are real problems and occasionally bankruptcies.

Another complaint has been made known to me by people who deal with oil companies which are the recipients of PIP grants. The Government has decided that it is in the national interest to pay large numbers of taxpayers' dollars to oil companies in order to allow them to operate in remote areas. This is deemed to be in the national interest. Effectively, therefore, companies such as Dome Petroleum can be operating with what amounts to 25-cent dollars, and in the days of the Gallagher amendment and super depletion it was a lot less than that. In turn, the local small business community feels that those recipients of Government largesse should help to spread some of that wealth, instead of taking such a hard line and insisting that everyone be absolutely competitive. Because they have been given assistance themselves to operate in remote areas, it is believed they should in turn assist those permanent resident businesses in the same way. This is not always seen to happen.

The Federal Business Development Bank has received a number of suggestions as to the way they could improve their operations. The penalty which they charge on an early repayment of a loan is said to be excessive. I know a number of people who, because of the economic circumstances, have been forced to draw in their horns and liquidate some of their assets, with the idea that they could pay off some of their indebtedness. However, they found they were not able to do so because of the very heavy penalties imposed by the FBDB on the retirement of their loans. I understand the other side of the argument presented by the FBDB, that it itself has had to borrow money at high rates, but I am sure that some kind of accommodation could be worked out to allow the early retirement of loans without this penalty, or to allow loans to be rolled over more easily without the penalty provisions which presently exist. A lot of businessmen got themselves into trouble by borrowing money at the very high rates of interest which existed a year and even six months ago. Now because of the drop in the level of interest rates they would like to roll over those loans so that their payments are much reduced. To enable them to do that would be to their benefit.

The last comment I would like to make is one of a general nature. It is in respect of the relationship between banks and borrowers. If you are a large corporation which borrows hundreds of millions of dollars, or if you are a country or state which borrows hundreds of millions of dollars, or on occasion billions of dollars, it is pretty easy for you to negotiate with your bank. When you owe your bank that much money, it is in your power. We have seen cases in the recent past where countries in actuality, Sir, have defaulted. I know that that is a bad word to use and banks do not like any suggestion of "default" when moneys of that magnitude are involved. However, for loans of that magnitude it has been relatively easy for the borrower and the lender to sit down together and re-negotiate a schedule for repayment. Bansk have had to do that. But when it comes to small business, that is not the case. The head office of the bank will issue a blanket policy, and each manager and each local loan officer will be obliged to put it into effect. There is not too often much of chance to re-negotiate a repayment schedule, and the line of credit is very often unilaterally cut off. If the system can be improved—and I am not really suggesting legislation because the more burdensome regulation we put on both the borrowers and the lending institutions, the more difficulty there is in the long run. Any decrease in efficiency caused by legislation or regulations ends up ultimately in an increase in the price of a loan. There is no doubt about that. I am suggesting, however, there are many ways, especially in the more remote parts of Canada, where the relationship between small business borrowers and the banking institutions can be improved.

We look forward to the swift passage of this legislation because we on this side feel that even if it does not go far enough, it will, to a limited extent, help the small business sector of Canada, that very important small business sector.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the House, may I call it 1 o'clock and ask to be recognized at 2?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)): It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) (Mr. Cousineau) had the floor.

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) (Mr. Rompkey) explained his reasons for tabling this Bill. This afternoon, for the benefit of Hon. Members, and through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to highlight the objectives and impact of the Small Businesses Loans Act, a measure that is being used more and more by small businesses.

The Small Businesses Loans Act was passed by the House in 1961, to make it easier for small businesses to obtain longer term financing. The Act, which provides guarantees against all losses for the lender, was initially intended to be effective for three years only. There have been several extensions, however. The Act now in effect will expire next Thursday, on March 31, 1983.

Mr. Speaker, since 1961, many amendments to the Act have been made, and I shall mention some of the most important ones. In 1974, the maximum amount of the loan that may be outstanding to anyone firm rose from $25,000 to $50,000. In 1977, the maximum was increased to $75,000, and in 1980, to the present limit which is $100,000. In 1977, the maximum annual turnover allowed for a business to be eligible was increased from $1 million to $1,500,000, and finally, in 1978, the administration of the Act was entrusted to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the maximum interest rate chargeable was now based on the bank's prime or basic rate plus 1 per cent, more commonly referred to as prime plus one.

One of the most attractive aspects of the program is that loans are negotiated directly by the businessman or woman with the private sector lender. No prior authorization is required from the Government, since the latter only guarantees the loan. Today, loans to small businesses are made for the purchase of fixed or movable equipment, improvement or modernization of premises, purchase or construction of new premises and the purchase of land.

Loans are made in accordance with normal banking practice. They are fully guaranteed and are to be repaid over a period not exceeding ten years.

Mr. Speaker, as a program, the Small Businesses Loans Act has been favourably received both by borrowers and lenders, and its national impact is considerable. According to our statistics on geographical distribution which are fairly representative of the distribution recorded since the program came into effect, loans, expressed in percentages, break down as follows:

British Columbia: 20.5 per cent; the Prairies: 18.8 per cent; Ontario: 21.6 per cent; Quebec: 33.3 per cent; the Maritimes: 5.5 per cent, and the Northwest Territories and the Yukon: 0.3 per cent.

I would like to pause here, Mr. Speaker, and comment on statements made by the Minister responsible for Industry in the Quebec Government, who said that the Canadian Government never does anything for small businesses. I may refer Hon. Members to a statement the Minister made before a meeting of Provincial Ministers of Industry was held here in Ottawa. The Minister said, and he referred to a plan known at the time as the Biron Plan, he said in the National Assembly, and I quote:

The Biron Plan was established a year ago—

I am quoting from an article in Le Droit, dated February 19, 1983:

The Biron Plan was established a year ago, when the Federal Government refused to create a special program to help small- and medium-sized businesses. Today—"

—the article goes on—

—we can say that we have reached our objective," said Mr. Biron, who pointed out that his plan had helped over 500 businesses employing nearly 25,000 workers, and involved funding of over $100 million. Since then, Mr. Speaker, we have asked for the addresses of these 500 companies which received assistance under the so-called Biron plan and we are still waiting for replies.

As for the Quebec Minister of Industry, he always says that the Federal Government never does anything whether it concerns transport or agriculture; the various Quebec Ministers, also share this view. According to them, the Federal Government never does anything!

In this regard, I must say that we have to ask ourselves seriously what is the main purpose of the recent controversy about the NEED program, and I do hope that this program will not fail. Of course the Quebec Government will not recognize the efficacity of this program because according to them the Federal Government can never do anything good. The Quebec Government wants to control the funds provided by the Federal Government. It does not work that way. The Federal Government wanted it known that these were Federal funds really provided by all Canadians. But it is always the same, Mr. Speaker.

I am mentioning all this because it is extremely important for the Quebec people to realize that they have had enough of such statements. I would like to give another example. Hon. Members are aware that the Federal Government contributes to the building of low-cost housing everywhere in Quebec and in the other provinces. Why a supposedly responsible Government be fair and give credit where credit is due? Everywhere you go in the province, and especially in my constituency, it is the same. For instance, the other day I went through Val des Bois and saw a sign which said "Quebec Housing Corporation, low-cost residential construction" written in large letters, and underneath, in small print "with the co-operation of the Val des Bois municipality and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation". On Marengère Street in Pointe-Gatineau, there is similar sign on which the Quebec Housing Corporation is mentioned in large letters, followed by the words "with the co-operation of the City of Gatineau and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation" in small characters.

This should be pointed out to the Opposition Members because the little game that they play in Quebec is childish. Why not give its due to the Federal Government? On September 7—

• (1410)

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is why I gave you a flag.

Mr. Cousineau: I thank the Hon. Member for that. That is right, he gave me a flag. Some Quebecers are happy about that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is good, I am too.

Mr. Cousineau: Maybe not for the same reasons.

[Translation]

On September 7, 1982, there was a ground breaking ceremony on Marengère St. in Pointe-Gatineau. Here is the press release which the Quebec Housing Corporation issued on that occasion and which reads:

Visit of a housing project on Marengère St. in Pointe-Gatineau, in the Chapleau Riding. 48 housing units will be made available to low-income families at a cost of $2,225,000.

Mr. Bernard Landry, the Minister, was there, together with Messrs. Michel Gratton and M. Kehoe, the Quebec MPPs for Gatineau and Chapleau respectively, Mayor John R. Luck and Alderman Michel Séguin, who is responsible to the other aldermen for municipal housing projects. Yes, I was there, and when the time came for the sod-turning ceremony, I got into trouble because I hit a huge rock with my shovel.

An Hon. Member: In spite of the fact that you were the one footing the bill.

Mr. Cousineau: Yes, I was the one footing the bill. Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize this point: The Federal Government, through the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation, is participating in this project to the tune of $2,224,800 in guaranteed loans—$2.5 million makes a rounder figure—-an amount which represents the total cost of the project. Moreover, the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation will provide on a continuing basis a subsidy of over $306,463 a year. The Canadian Government therefore pays between 72 and 75 per cent of the operational deficit at the end of the year—I should not say 75 when it is 72 perhaps, I would not want my separatist opponents to call me a liar—and the balance of 28 or 25 per cent is shared by the municipality of Gatineau and the Provincial Government.

I have not checked this with my Quebec colleagues, but here the story is always the same with respect to signboards: the name of the Société d'habitation du Québec appears in 6- or 8-inch high letters, and "with the participation of the town of Gatineau and the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation" is acknowledged in letters measuring about three quarters of an inch, maybe an inch. Why? It is the same thing on our buildings where people have to go, not to beg but to get social benefits because they have been hard hit by the current recession. The flag of Quebec is displayed, but the fact is that the benefits handed out by that department are paid at the rate of 50 per cent by the Federal Government and 50 per cent by the province, be it Ontario, Manitoba or any other. Unfortunately, Quebec will not admit that the Federal Government pays its share.

Perhaps I am slightly out of order when I say that, but my point is that when Industry Minister Biron comes along and states that he has spent so many dollars to help small businesses, I would advise the people of Quebec to check before quoting those statements, because sometimes they are half-truths. I would not say that the Minister is telling lies, but he does get carried away now and then and he does not always speak the truth.

Well, Mr. Speaker, back to the piece of legislation we want to adopt today. Besides being available in all regions of Canada, the program has enabled the Government to give assistance to a wide range of businesses. According to the 1982 figures, the service industries got 40.3 per cent of the total amount of loans, followed by retail outlets with 24.9 per cent, manufacturing companies with 11.4 per cent, construction firms with 9.4 per cent, and transport companies with 9.8 per cent. Other companies in the communications and wholesale sectors received 4.2 per cent of the loans.

At first, only chartered banks were allowed to act as lenders under the program. Over the years, the program was extended to other lenders, and today, in addition to banks, the list includes trust companies, mortgage companies and savings banks, while hundreds of credit unions, caisses populaires and branches of the Alberta credit union network also make loans. The number and amount of the loans contracted in 1981 and 1982 demonstrate how important the program is to small businesses, whatever Minister Biron, the Separatist Minister of Industry in the Quebec Government may have to say about it. In 1977, only 4,894 loans representing a total amount of $96 million were granted. In 1981, the number of loans had risen to 17,378 and totalled $516 million, while the preliminary figures for 1982 are almost identical, namely, 16,843 loans representing a somewhat smaller amount, namely, $435 million. These figures are ample proof of the importance of the Bill we are considering in the House today.

I would like to end on this note, Mr. Speaker, because otherwise I would be tempted to make a few more references to Mr. Biron, but I think he has had enough attention for today. Nevertheless, it is very sad to see someone from my own Province trying to sell the people a bill of goods. In any case, as far as small businesses are concerned, I heard my good friend from up North—I am not too sure what his constituency is—saying that we should not forget small businesses. Well, I do not think we are forgetting them today, and we have wanted to pass this Bill for a long time. Therefore, I hope that my colleagues opposite will do their share to show Canadians that this Bill is really going to help them, and I would also invite the Members of the New Democratic Party to vote for all stages of the Bill this afternoon, so that we will be able to tell Canadians that the Act is not going to expire on March 31 but will be extended for another two years.

• (1420)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The rules permit a ten minute question and answer period at this point. Are any Hon. Members rising to ask questions? If not, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie).

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-144, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. The effect of this will be to extend the termination date for loans to be guaranteed from March 31, 1983 to March 31, 1985. I hope that this will assist small business. Today, they have a great problem with red tape and trying to obtain loans from the banks.

The Government could help small business in the Province of Manitoba which is not receiving its fair share of public works expenditures. That is why I am pressing the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to build a new air traffic control centre in Winnipeg. In 1982, Manitoba received only $4 million public works grants. I hope the Minister will make an early appearance before the Treasury Board to request funding so that construction can be started on the air traffic control centre so that 250 air traffic controllers and their families will not have to move away from Winnipeg.

I am glad that the Minister is in the House this afternoon. I hope he can provide me with an answer before three o'clock, as he promised in Question Period, as to when construction will start. He complained that I did not give him notice of questions. Mr. Speaker, I did give notice last week to his Parliamentary Secretary in the adjournment debate. It would appear that he did not get the message. I hope I hear from the Minister before three o'clock on when construction of the new air traffic control centre in Winnipeg will begin.

I want to deal with the difficulties that small businesses have in obtaining loans in Manitoba. It is not only Government red tape and regulation that hampers them but they also experience great difficulty in obtaining help from banks.

A constituent who had applied for a small business loan wrote to me as follows:

> I spoke several times with our bank—Toronto Dominion. They refused on the grounds that we are financially not stable enough.
> Then I requested to get the Government bond for small business from our bank. They refused on the grounds that we are financially not weak enough to qualify.
> I spoke several times with the Federal Development Bank about obtaining an interest break on a loan to help set up the food store. They refused on the grounds that we had purchased used equipment. In order to qualify we would have to have bought new equipment.

I hope the Government will change that ridiculous regulation.

> It was only because we were able to purchase good used equipment that we were able to get the food store going, new equipment was just out of our reach.

That is a roadblock that the Government places in the way of this small businessman and probably of others in Canada. He went on:

> I also went to the Economic Department of Manitoba. There they refused on the grounds that we did not start operating before June, 1981.

That is a New Democratic Party Government which is supposed to assist small business, but it is throwing up roadblocks here as well; it has imposed a worker's tax on Manitoba businesses which hampers them. With that regressive NDP tax many small businesses have to lay people off. It can be described as an anti-employment tax. It will not help with the unemployment problem. This gentleman went on to say:

> As you see I did not get anywhere with all my inquiries. Your help would be much appreciated since time is running out.
> To set up the food store I had to take out two second mortgages of $28,000 each at interest rates of 5 per cent above prime. Then a $25,000 loan with the Federal Development Bank at 4.5 per cent above prime. At present I have to take out a mortgage on our cottage of $37,000 at 12.25 per cent. At this rate it is hard to survive.

It is hard to believe that he did not just throw in the sponge and give up. With these regulations and the problems with the banks, it is almost impossible for small business to survive in Canada today.

In January, 1983, a newspaper put out by a small business called Mandate had an excellent article on the problems being experienced by Canadian experience. It stated that the average Canadian bank manager has less and less time available to service small business clients because of the literally hundreds of other bank services he or she must manage. It quoted Patricia Johnson, Vice-President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, as saying that excessive collateral requirements are used to paper over the fundamental structural problems in Canadian banking.

In some highlights the article pointed out that Canadian banks provide far less staff training in commercial lending than do banks in the United States, Japan or West Germany. It said that bank staff trainees in Japan call on business clients weekly to pick up deposits and loan payments, and if a business is facing difficulty, the bank may send in a rescue squad, at its own expense, to help the firm.

The article went on to say that two-thirds of U.S. banks have at least one officer designated for small business lending and about 40 per cent of there give special training to small business officers.

According to the article, in the Netherlands the largest small-business banks keeps credit officers in the same branch for a minimum of four years, maintaining continuity of service to small business clients. Canadian banks should provide the same service to Canadian small business, Mr. Speaker. The Government should show leadership in this area by having discussions with the banks to make sure that they improve their services and assist small business in Canada instead of sloughing them off.

On March 23, The Globe and Mail carried an article entitled "Survey depicts recession impact". The article began:

> The economic impact of the recession on Canada's small and medium-sized businesses accounts for 700,000 to 800,000 fewer jobs, or nearly half the country's unemployed workers, according to a survey by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

Restraint measures—including layoffs, reduced wages and cuts in investment—have severely hampered the performance of the small business sector. A survey in February conducted by the 64,000-member organization revealed the extent of the recession on small and medium-sized businesses since January, 1981.

The 14,171 companies that responded were forced to cut employment by 42,470—which, if extrapolated to cover the entire small business community, means 700,000 to 800,000 fewer jobs across Canada.

You can see the difficulty that small business is having, Mr. Speaker. The banks and the Government will have to put their heads together to find new ways to assist small businesses, and not throw roadblocks in their paths.

• (1430)

Here is another example from one of my constituents in Winnipeg-Assiniboine. He points out:

We have been trying since early August to obtain our bank's approval for an interest-reduced loan. The Government Information Centre who we were referred to said 'Go to your bank manager.'

The problem is the banks have no information that authorizes them to give loans under this program.

That is unbelievable. We are here debating this small business Bill today and I feel that it will have very little impact in assisting small businesses in Canada. These Bills, Government advertising and bally-hoo sound great politically. The letter continues:

Sounds great politically—but how do we go about getting it from our bank?

Trust you will look into this on our behalf. My home is in your constituency.

I made representations on behalf of the gentleman. We were able to get some action taken for him. However, many small businesses must come to their Members' Parliament who then have to go after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister responsible for Small Businesses (Mr. Rompkey). This takes weeks of letter-writing, and in the meantime the small businessman is left to hang out to dry, waiting in anticipation.

I wish to cite for the record a number of problems that small businesses are facing. The Government has tried to raise revenue through measures that will hurt the small business community. The half-year convention will hurt the cash flow of business, and this is covered in a paper called "The Evolving Budget, A Background Paper on C-143".

The 12.5 per cent small business dividend distribution tax will punish those small businessmen who have dared to become successful enough to pay a dividend. You get more penalties if you make a profit.

The Small Business Development Bond has become a bail-out bond with an interesting "catch 22" situation. People cannot apply unless they are in trouble and if they are in trouble, the bank will not lend them the money.

Small-businessmen will no longer be able to participate in new deferred profit-sharing plans. That is another penalty.

Increased taxes on employment benefits will place increased wage demands on employers and make it hard to recruit employees in remote areas. I have also referred to the NDP tax in Manitoba, the employee tax, or perhaps unemployment tax would be better terminology.

With regard to skilled help, the recession has temporarily helped to resolve the shortage of skilled help, a problem often faced by small-businessmen. Steps should be taken now to ensure that recovery does not mean the return of skill shortages.

With respect to financing, the focus of recent Government policy has been to assist in debt financing. Assistance is needed but not forthcoming in the area of equity financing. The Government should encourage Canadians to invest in small business.

Another problem concerns regulation and paper burdens. Small businessmen are forced to comply with a complex series of regulations and requests from various Government agencies for statistical and other information. The owners of small businesses spend about half of their time filling out the most complicated and silly business forms and questionnaires imaginable. All this time they spend on those forms detracts from their business.

As well, in regard to the Government purchasing policy, Government contracts are far too often too large for most small businessmen to bid on, or the specifications may be written in such a way that only a few larger firms may meet the requirements.

We hope that the contents of this Bill will assist small businessmen, but there is much left to be desired in the way the banks are dealing with small business. There is too much Government regulation and red tape. I hope the Government and the banks will get together and eliminate many of these regulations and the red tape. I hope the Government will insist that the banks hire professional help to go out and assist small businesses to survive in Canada.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Bill which is before us extends the period under which the provisions of the Small Businesses Loans Act will be available into the year 1985.

The Minister is taking the opportunity once again to extend the Small Businesses Loans Act which has, since January, 1961, provided the Government with an excuse to claim that it has done something, however little, for the small business sector in Canada.

Our Party does not intend to delay this Bill since the Government has indicated that to do so would be futile. It will not allow improvements to be made to the very weak provisions of this Bill. Its provisions were weak when the legislation was first proclaimed over 20 years ago. They have been made even less important as they have been seriously eroded by inflation.

The shortcomings of this and other Bills which are supposed to help small business have been well documented by organizations such as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. We believe that the Government's refusal to make improvements is perhaps more indicative than anything else of the Government's attitude toward small business. It is obvious that the Government's view of small business is one of disdain, tokenism and, indeed, sheer lack of interest.

The fact of the matter is that the Government has not even considered amending this Bill in order to give the Small Businesses Loans Act some real impact. The Government says that it is deeply concerned about the economy. It has made much of its determination to cut the wages and salaries of workers in order to deal with inflation. However, why does the Government not increase the $100,000 loan limit which has been provided for in this Bill for a number of years when both the cost of living and the cost of doing business have increased very markedly? It is apparent that the Government is not prepared to move at all.

The Government says that it is concerned about the alarming rate of bankruptcies in the business community, which it should be. We have seen a string of Government bail-outs of the big corporations in this country, such as Dome Petroleum, Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler and others over the last year. But what has it done for the small business community, which makes up over 97 per cent of Canadian businesses? The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has estimated that in the last year 80,000 small businesses either went bankrupt or closed down before being forced into bankruptcy.

It would be relatively simple to reduce the bankruptcy rate of small businesses by extending the Small Businesses Loans Act to include loans for working capital, broadening the range and impact of this now very restrictive program and allowing thousands of small businessmen, who are now on the brink of bankruptcy as a result of the current depression and the Liberal Government's destructive interest rate policy, to obtain loans for badly needed working capital to keep people working. That was the type of proposal made by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and rejected completely by the Government.

The present legislation provides loans for the purchase of fixed or movable equipment, land for the operation of the business or the construction of new premises. But this can only be done up to the legislated limit of $100,000. Hon. Members need only to think of cities in their ridings to realize that it is difficult to find a single family home in many cities in Canada that does not cost at least $100,000.

Does the Government really expect a loan program which was established in 1961 and later extended to the upper loan limit of $100,000 to provide any real incentive to small businesses in 1983?

Another aspect of the program which I feel deserves the attention of the House is the prime role which banks play in deciding who gets loans. The reputation of the chartered banks of Canada for making huge loans to big corporations and then allowing those corporations to have interest-free holidays from those loans is well known. We know, for example, that in the last couple of years, the chartered banks lent billions of dollars to some of our largest corporations, mainly for takeovers of other corporations, takeovers which added little, if anything, to our productive capacity.

We know that a few months ago the banks were carrying $4.2 billion, or $4,200 million, in what they called non-productive loans. Those were loans which large companies had made on which they could not even pay the interest, let alone the principal. However, these banks, the big five, increased their profits by over 40 per cent in the first quarter of this year. The total profits were $1.6 billion, on which they paid the magnificent tax of only $132 million. That is an average tax rate of just 8.1 per cent. Two of the banks, the Bank of Montreal and the Royal Bank, paid no tax at all in 1982. In fact, they received a tax credit. I wonder which of our constituents would not love to have a tax rate on their income of just 8 per cent.

At the same time the banks were dealing with the large corporations, as I have indicated, small businesses requesting loans were being asked to put up collateral of anywhere from 200 per cent or 300 per cent of the value of the loans. It is therefore no wonder that when the Canadian Federation of Independent Business appeared before the appropriate committee of the House of Commons, it made the statement that in its view, banks, as they operate today, do not understand the problems of small business and have very little sympathy for small business.

We say that when the Government puts programs such as this into place, there should be consideration for the possibility of going outside the banking system to deliver such programs in a more direct and clearly much more beneficial way to the small business sector. One must only consider the squeeze which the banks have put on the consumers and small business borrowers in order to carry the big corporate loans to see whom the banks are really interested in servicing.

In this country, we have a small business sector of over 600,000 private enterprises, yet to the end of 1981, the Small Businesses Loans Act had provided less than 100,000 loans, representing slightly less than $2 billion. That is in over 20 years. In comparison to that, the small business sector is estimated to borrow close to $9 billion a year from private sources, from the banks, the credit unions and insurance companies. Therefore, we see the over-all insignificance of the small businesses loans programs.

Big business in Canada is 48 per cent foreign-owned. The small business sector represents about 96 per cent of Canadian ownership and over 50 per cent of the private sector jobs which have been created since 1971. Small business provides 40 per cent to 50 per cent of all the jobs at which Canadians work outside of the public sector, yet the assistance that small business recieves from the Government is miniscule as compared to the help which big business routinely receives from the federal and provincial Governments. Small business deserves more than the highest bankruptcy rate since the depression which it has experienced in the last year.

We have some specific proposals as to what should be done instead of what will be done as a result of passage of the Bill. We believe that the $100,000 limit on the program should be increased to bring it more into line with the real cost of business start-ups and business operation in 1983. We believe that the program should be broadened to reflect the need of small businesses for working capital to keep their operations, which are now hard-pressed because of the recession, going and to keep them out of bankruptcy which has been increasing in numbers over the last couple of years.

We believe that the delivery system for this program, which has been channeled through the chartered banks which, as intermediaries, have been sitting in judgment on small business loan decisions, should be reconsidered. Why should it not be possible to have a loans screening body in which small business would participate and have some say, rather than leaving it entirely to the banks which have failed so lamentably to meet the need of small business?

Lastly, we need a program to help small business which will include a package of economic initiatives to stimulate the economy and further lower the interest rates to the real rate of inflation, rather than 4 per cent, 5 per cent or 6 per cent above prime rate, which small business has been expected to carry in recent years.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a few comments on the record today with regard to Bill C-144 because it is a timely topic for debate by Hon. Members of the House, and it is timely for Canadians who are involved in small business. First, I think we must be a little careful concerning the words "small business". In fact, I had lunch with a "small businessman", in the words classified under the Act, just today. I was discussing with him, as a businessman, the advantages and disadvantages of his business at the present time. It is sometimes good to get back to the grass roots to find out what the very people who will be affected by legislation before the House are saying with regard to it. He is involved in a service industry in my riding. His first real comment concerned the definition of small business. The vast majority of those involved in small business, at least those in service industries in rural Canada, will argue that the definition is too broad and that at the upper end, in terms of size as set out in the definition of small business, in fact they are often not considered to nearly the degree they should be, in relation to the number of jobs they create in the economy.

It is also important that we as Members of the House keep in mind the impact of small business on our country. We discuss the unemployment rate and speak of one and a half million Canadians being unemployed. We hear those comments in the House, we consider the statistics, and we view the tragedy. Today in the House there were comments as to how we should create, or develop jobs. I think that "develop" is a more accurate word than "create". For instance, how are we to develop jobs for young people as they come on to the labour market?

How should we develop jobs so that these people will not face despair or, more important, feel as they enter the market that the economy will not give them the opportunity to either create their own jobs or to fit into the job market? It is important for us to address this matter in the debate today as well. However, it is important to keep in mind that the owners of businesses to whom we speak as we go into our ridings, the people on Main Street, Canada, the fellows with whom we have coffee around the horseshoe, are people who can create jobs in our community. These are the small business people, and we all know them. We can give various names to these people, because they are friends, neighbours and are very often our community leaders.

We must keep in mind that in this period of unemployment, it is small business which is most often labour-intensive. Today, a number of small businesses, as they are facing the spring and summer of this year, are considering expansion of their businesses. As they do this, they automatically think of the creation of work, the hiring of people in their community. Small business is labour-intensive. Also, by all definition, we find that in small business there is a higher ratio of job creation relative to investment per job as compared to larger businesses. Therefore, it is a good use of money, a good investment. I am obviously trying to build the case that we in this House have not paid enough attention to these facts, to small business or, in my view, to the country.

Also, small business creates more opportunities for workers with limited skills. That does not say that they would not develop their skills in the workplace, but I am speaking of initial hirings. For example, very often small business is more ready to hire people with limited skills, and then develop those skills in the workplace, than larger industry is.

Today more than 90 per cent of our businesses in Canada are employing less than 200 people in their business. For a lot of us from rural Canada, a business of 200 employees is a fairly large business. We have some of those businesses in my riding, but a lot of us would welcome that kind of size in our riding.

I hear references made to anti-profits, anti-business, "We are going to get the corporate welfare bums and we are going to get all of these people". I keep on saying that we have to roll out the red carpet to these investors; we have to start rolling out the red carpet to these risk-takers. It is an attitude that I believe we have to change very dramatically.

I am not trying to be critical today but I am trying to analyze the situation to see how we can have some positive direction. Governments of all Parties put a great stress on the concept of megaprojects, be it energy or manufacturing, but especially in energy we have talked about megaprojects. The investment per job is very high. I am in favour of megaprojects; I am in favour of business; I am in favour of creation of wealth through that kind of investment, but I do not think Governments have given the same stress to smaller businesses and what they mean to the economy. For instance, how much time do we spend in this House discussing megaprojects? How much time do we spend in this House talking about small business? Yet if we say that 90 per cent of business is small business, I think we have to re-examine our priorities.

In our Canadian economy, the economic engine is small business, and I include farming in small business. The reason I put farming into that category is that I speak to farmers in my constituency and they are business people with a myriad of skills, not only in farming. Today if a farmer wants to survive he also has to have business acumen second to none, equal to the person operating on Main Street, Canada. I put them in that category as well.

I have been interested for some time in the psychological relationship between business and financial institutions, and maybe that is a topic that does not excite the House too much, but I think it is important for us to analyze what other countries have done relative to business, and what we have done and why. Maybe there are some answers in other countries that we could apply to help the economy in Canada.

When I make these points about other countries I am not saying that other countries have these motivations exclusively and that Canada has none of them. I am strictly talking about stress and emphasis. But there is no doubt that in the United States there has been a great emphasis on the spirit of enterprise. Some people would say "free enterprise", some people would say "the market economy". Teenagers today use the term "Go for it". I think that term possibly explains that attitude, that spirit of going for it, having the confidence, being willing to take the risk, going for it and enjoying the benefits of success. I guess that is what enterprise means; that is the modern term.

There has been a great reverence in the United States for the common person, a reverence for that drive that I have already talked about and a reverence for the contribution of the individual to the larger whole. When I say that, I do not mean that we in Canada are devoid of that. I am not arguing that point. I am simply talking about emphasis of that point.

So when I look at Government agencies in the United States, despite the fact that so often we talk about economies of scale of ten to one, United States to Canada, I find a very deep interest and a stress in U.S. Government circles on small business. They call it commerce; that is the word they like to use. We say that we have to generate business.

So what is happening? As I look at it there, for instance, I see they have created a banking system quite different from ours. I am not here today to criticize the banks. I know that is a common and easy hobby-horse, but I want to look very specifically at why there is that difference. One thing I notice in their system is that they have a different banking mix than we have. They have different banking services. The percentages of national or large banks, that is, relative to the amount of deposits, is lower in the United States than it is in Canada, compared with our national chartered banks. They have many more local banks. They might call them savings and trusts, but they are local banks. I know the first argument that I am going to get is that it is too risky. But that is the secret of enterprise, taking risks, not unqualified risks but taking risks.

Mr. Pepin: Not much enterprise for the person who suffers from that risk.

Mr. Epp: I am not saying as well that there are not negatives on that side. I am asking, is our mix askew, too much on the other side? That is the point I want to make, and I think it is a point that we could look at.

Mr. Pepin: The search for balance.

Mr. Epp: The search for balance, as the Minister of Transport says. I am wondering whether our search for balance in terms of the safety nets which we talk about so glibly, means that we have gone to the other side.

Let me give you some examples, Mr. Speaker, if the House will indulge me. Today, in Canada, chartered banks dominate the financial markets in our country by holding about 74 per cent of all deposits in banks or in trust companies. Roughly three-quarters of all deposits are held by the major chartered banks; mortgage and loan companies have approximately 5 per cent—I am rounding off the figures, Mr. Speaker—trust companies, 12 per cent, and just recently we have had again an exercise in the trust companies where people are saying: "Is my money safe?" There will obviously be a question as to whether that is the best way to invest. Credit unions have approximately 10 per cent.

In my limited experience from my riding, where we have had strong credit unions, and I speak to bank managers frequently about this, the banks have been better for it.

Mr. Fennell: Competition.

Mr. Epp: It is competition, and I am not saying that it need be a credit union, it could be a savings and loans company or a trust company, but the competitive nature of the financial marketplace has the same laws as enterprise in other business. That is the point I am trying to get across.

Looking at the United States, we find that the larger commercial banks, and for our purposes here today we could compare them to our national chartered banks, instead of 74 per cent, are down to about 57.5 per cent or 58 per cent. But also, their banks are more commercially oriented, not in all cases, but I believe the majority lean more toward the commercial end of banking. Some people would argue that, with the economies of scale in the United States, obviously that is larger business. The only point I am trying to make today is that according to the psychology that we have developed in our own country it would appear to me that we have possibly erred on the side of safety as against the willingness to take risks.

When we look at loans for small business in Canada, we make the case strongly that loans are made on the basis of what is referred to as formula lending. In other words, when a businessman or woman goes into the banking institution to ask for a loan, first there are the standard questions of collateral investment. When speaking to some business people, they say they would sure like to get their hands on the little black book from which decisions are often made. These decisions are often not made at the branch level. In the national banking system there is a much larger network of branches, depending of course on the district or the central bank.

While we cannot forget about formula lending, I suggest the banks would be well advised to re-examine some of their mix. I believe their profitability could be increased by greater involvement in small business. It seems to vary from branch to branch. There are branches in my riding that are excellent in commercial activity and small business. The local branch manager has experience, expertise and the confidence of the local business community. It is a secret that we must look at. On balance, our banking system serves well, but I hope it will look at the mix, the balance, more carefully when considering small business.

Having said that, what about Government? How is Government helping small business? The arguments about Government, the lack of interest and the disincentives towards small business are legendary. We hear about them every day in this House.

Earlier today the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) talked about Manitoba. Right now approximately 37 per cent of Manitoba's total budget is federal-provincial transfer payments, and it is going up. As a citizen of that Province, that is a trend I do not particularly cherish. I would like to see the figure go the other way. I would like Manitoba to be a have Province, an engine of enterprise.

One of the great advantages in that Province has always been relatively low-priced electrical energy, hydraulic energy. There was a freeze on hydro-electric increases. Why? We wanted to attract businesses. When you are mid-continent, you must provide some reason for companies to locate there rather than somewhere else. When you have one million people in a given region, you must give a reason why a business should establish there rather than somewhere else where there is a larger population. Those are economic facts; we have to deal with them.

When you take away the incentive of stable and competitive prices for energy, then the reasons of distance and space become more important in the decision-making process. Today for every dollar we pay to Manitoba Hydro, over 50 per cent goes for debt forgiveness. Where is the incentive to establish more business, attract new business or the psychology of taxes?

We now have a payroll tax in that Province. It is 1.5 per cent of gross payroll. Some people will argue it is not very high in terms of actual payment, but what it does for the psychology of creating new employment is devastating.

I say let us look at good loan programs; they are much better. I suggest we have competitive loan programs which allow for profitability and expansion rather than all kinds of grants which result in paper work, questions and disincentives.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to follow my colleague from Provencher (Mr. Epp). What amazes me today, and this is very serious, is that although there are between 700,000 and 800,000 people unemployed in small and medium-sized businesses, the Minister is not even in the House and the Parliamentary Secretary is smoking behind the curtain. They do not have enough interest to listen to some ideas. They keep accusing us, asking what are our programs. I am shocked that the Government does not show more interest. This Bill has been around for a number of years.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We should be fair. The Minister has been here throughout the day. He has a long-standing commitment for tonight which he has to keep. His plane leaves at three o'clock. I think we should be fair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would like to intervene and point out that the practice of referring to the presence or absence of Members is not considered good form in the House.

Mr. Fennell: The only reason I mention it is that even though our Party is very involved in extracurricular activities, there are more Members of this Party in the House than there are across the way. We are talking about a very important issue, jobs. I am concerned about jobs. People are losing their jobs. We are constantly accused of not coming up with any ideas. Perhaps if somebody listened, they would hear some.

I support what my colleague for Provencher said, that grants and give-aways do not do anything for this economy. Reasonable loans are the solution. We are being requested to renew an old Act. When the amount was increased from $75,000 to $100,000, I stated that that was still not enough, that it was too little. When you consider that today it costs between $75,000 and $100,000 to create a job, that amount will only create one job.

I take exception to the Government's practice in small business. They have the Small Business Development Bond. It was our idea. They have abused it and torn it apart. They only allow it as a last resort. There is the SBLA we are now talking about, and the SBIG which is the beginning a very sound program. It is a patchwork.

There is the FBDB. The normal rate is 2 per cent over prime; it does not even qualify for 1 per cent over prime program. Then there are the DREE grants. Everytime DREE money is given to a needy part of the country, the funds funnel back to the industrial heartland of Canada. It does not benefit the part of the country for which it is intended.

There is the Enterprise Development Program which has been very successful. The Minister is now going to intervene and remove the right of the businessmen who have been on the board of the Enterprise Program across this country. Government intervention will probably destroy it.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) comes from the business world, and I respect that, but why is he getting public servants involved in running businesses and providing incentives? Next we have the great patronage program. Maislin is a classic example. The Government can give $34 million to Maislin, but cannot consider giving a $250,000 guaranteed loan to small business in this country.

The record shows, Mr. Speaker, that these loans have been very successful. The cost has been minimal to the Government, and what a bonanza it would be today to create jobs.

Government has gone into research and development on a hit and miss basis. It has no programs. If they hear something one day they go into it. There is no total, global program for these people. Then we have the miscellaneous Government grab bags. There are so many I cannot keep track and I do not know how industry does. The Government does it this way: there are consultants in Ottawa to whom you go to find out where you can get your money. That, to me, is an economic waste. Surely one solid industry and trade program can be set down, one simple program. Let us not talk about $100,000 for this one and $500,000 for that one. Let us go big and think big. Let us start perhaps at between $2 million and $5 million maximum, because that is what you need today. You need much larger sums of money because industry is that much more capital intensive.

When we give this money, we should not, as a Government, have to guarantee 100 per cent of these loans. We should process them entirely through the banks and let the banks accept 50 per cent of the risk. They make the profits. Why should they not accept a portion of the risk? If that is done, it could be very effective for a new corporation or a new expansion by reducing the interest rate until the building is built and the turnover is at a level where the industry can afford to start repaying interest. What has happened in this country, Mr. Speaker, is that we have capitalized interest to the point where we are no longer competitive.

I am very concerned about that when I look at the international competition we must deal with. There are many examples right in my riding. I received a phone call last week from a company by the name of Whitby Welding. It is a very old, well-recognized and established company which exported over 50 per cent of its products. That company is being put on the ropes by the bank because during the high interest period when it had growth, the company kept paying these interest amounts out, and when sales dropped off because of lack of demand, they had already built up the cost by building up the plant and its equipment. But they still have the interst rates to contend with. If there was a flexible interest rate policy where interest rates would go up and down depending on the economy, we could pay for the subsidized interest rates very simply out of saved Unemployment Insurance benefits and welfare benefits. Furthermore, and this is something that is really close to me, the people would feel better about themselves if they were employed rather than sitting at home drinking beer. This is the key.

To go back to Whitby Welding, if they would have had a fixed low rate of interest, or a flexible rate of interest, they could have survived, but the bank not only pushed them for the interest, they demanded repayment of all their loans. I have not heard from this company in the last week, but I hope they found some relief through Industry, Trade and Commerce, because they are a fine company. They are wonderful men who run it, and they are very good supporters of mine, I must admit. Furthermore, the president happens to be one of my major fund raisers, and I really need him back on track. But, you see, Mr. Speaker, that is what we represent. This Party represents small industry and those people get behind us because they believe in free enterprise, freedom of ownership and the individual.

We are letting this country down, Mr. Speaker, because of our policies. We are not being fair to the people. We are saying that unions are no good instead of trying to encourage co-operation between Government, the employer and labour, giving some form of incentive for productivity. We are not looking in that direction.

Let us look at what other countries have done so successfully. I have great admiration for Japan but, Mr. Speaker, you have heard me in my place argue against letting any more cars into this country from Japan because it is going to hurt employment in my area. The Government has not given any incentive to our producers to change over to high technology. However, in Japan a small-businessman can lease from the Japanese Government one or two robots. He does not pay any rental on those robots until he perfects the process. Then he leases them on a long-term scheme at an increasing scale so that he can afford to become more productive in his industry.

Mr. Bosley: Sounds like the Liberal Cabinet Ministers.

Mr. Fennell: Well it may sound like some Cabinet Ministers, but I am talking about people.

Mr. Smith: We are people.

Mr. Fennell: I know you are people, and you have people you represent. What I am trying to get across, however, is that by working together in this House, surely we can come up with a solid policy which would save us billions of dollars in Unemployment Insurance benefits and welfare benefits and give the Canadian people a feeling of worth. People who are unemployed, Mr. Speaker, do not have a feeling of worth. The 700,000 people who have run out of Unemployment Insurance have less of a feeling of worth. That is what I am talking about, a feeling of worth for the worker and the entrepreneur.

We have been talking about banks, Mr. Speaker. We brought in foreign banks and then we put a tremendous limitation on them so that they could not grow beyond a certain size. That is because there is very powerful bank lobby in this country. We should double the number of banks we allow to come in. I know they are increasing slowly, but we need a lot more financing. If we are not going to allow foreign ownership in this country, then we need a lot more lending power.

As my hon. colleague the Hon. Member for Provencher mentioned earlier, we need savings and loans associations. We need trust companies. I would qualify that, though, by saying that we must get them under the Bank Act. We have seen the problems we are getting into with financial institutions under the provincial Acts. Let us get them under the Bank Act, but let us not make it so difficult. For instance, National Trust is big enough to become a savings and loans institution, as well as Canada Trust. Prior to this time, Crown Trust qualified but because they were not controlled federally and did not come under the Bank Act there was trouble.

Beyond banks and savings and loans institutions, there are individuals who I believe would want to invest in pools of money which could not only be venture capital but also could be debt capital. We also, Mr. Speaker, must attract foreign capital into this country.

Another new organization which has just come into my riding is Makita Tools. They are putting 65 per cent Canadian content into the tools and exporting over 50 per cent of the product line. Well, Canada is ahead and we have created 100 jobs. Every time we create 100 jobs we are that much better off.

I spoke about a flexible rate and fixed rate and working something out. We also have the SBDC in Ontario. People do not really understand them because it is another Government-operated program. Perhaps we should only lay the groundwork and let the private sector do the entire funding. Perhaps the other side is that Government's only purpose is to maintain a fixed or flexible interest rate and get right out of money lending.

We used to hear, Mr. Speaker, that big is beautiful. Well, big is no longer beautiful. I remember that in 1979 the Chairman of Northern Electric said there would only be three large high technology companies in the world. Well, to this point he has been proven quite wrong because there are hundreds of high technology companies in Canada and thousands in the United States. Some will succeed, some will fail, and that is free enterprise.

Comparing the United States to Canada, why is everything in Canada in the large cities? In the U.S. you have small towns with businesses. Throughout the whole mid-west you see the small towns with little businesses. That is because there are local banks. The local banker did not move from one town to another and that is how it started. He owns that bank and was on the board of directors of the company, so he got the financial statement every week. We have to get that type of tie-in but we have to do it through the private sector. I have not had a chance to talk to the Minister about this, but he has stated that he does not have enough control in this area. I think it is wonderful when a Minister does not have too much control.

I have spoken about the budget a number of times and there are many negative factors there which hurt small business. The standby charge for company-owned, employee-driven cars was doubled. It was not doubled on a depreciated basis; it was doubled on the original cost basis. That is inequitable. Those are people who make their living selling Canadian products from small Canadian plants.

Another thing I object to in the budget was the 12.5 per cent tax on dividends for small corporations. That is a deterrent. We have to encourage people to invest in this country. This is a great country. People want to work. They do not want to leave but they are being forced to leave this country because they are not given an opportunity to be part of an organization of which they can be proud.

That is an area where the Japanese have done something very unusual. Perhaps it is because of their culture, but they are proud to work in their plants. They are proud of their country. Part of the reason they enjoy working in their plants is that their bonuses are based totally on productivity. It is not how many weeks you stay on strike but how many units you produce per day. We have to be competitive with these other countries. We have to be in a position where we can compete.

We are in a very difficult period right now, Mr. Speaker. People do not realize that unemployment is not going to drop down below 12 per cent or 13 per cent very quickly. The more productivity you get from high technology, the less employment you have. You lose people on the production line, but you gain the employment of technical people, repair people and maintenance people. In time it will balance out. We will go through a very difficult period of adjustment, but that is only with respect to older workers on the line, not the younger ones.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-144 has been discussed at length in some detail but perhaps it would be useful if I put on the record for those who will be following this debate at home the history of the Bill.

The Small Businesses Loans Act has been around for some years. Originally it was introduced in 1961. One of the fascinating parts of the Bill before us today is that when it was last before us for amendment in 1981 the loan ceiling was raised from $850 million to $1.5 billion, being the maximum outstanding debt covered by the Act. It is ironic that in this year of 1983, when we are asked to extend the life of this Bill from the middle of 1983 to the middle of 1985, the Government has not contemplated it being necessary to increase that ceiling. I honestly do not know why there has not been an increase. I suspect that the reason there is not an increase is that Government Members opposite, and I am sure the departmental officials, know that what is likely to happen in the next couple of years is that people who qualify for these loans, new businesses or businesses increasing are expanding their operations—I note in passing that debt restructuring or the consolidation of existing debt is particularly not allowed under the SBLA—those people are not likely very many.

That is the tragedy of the recession we are in. There were some figures in the business section of The Globe and Mail yesterday which indicated the views of businesses in Canada as to their potential for expansion and new spending or even getting back to where they were before the recession began. While I do not have the figures with me, if my memory serves me very few businesses in Canada of any size, small, medium or large, foresee that they will be increasing their capacity. Very few businesses are likely to undertake expansion programs over the next few years. That is understandable, if sad, if you simply look at the crisis of confidence which I find, at least in my area of Toronto, the majority of businessmen feel about this country.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I come back to the original point: it is not surprising that the Bill to extend the life of the borrowing guarantee does not at the same time increase the maximum capacity of the borrowing guarantee. That reflects, I believe, a recognition that there is unlikely to be a good deal of borrowing.

A number of Members today have put on the record, Mr. Speaker, their concerns about small business. My chief reason for rising is to add my few comments to that debate. There is not a Member in this House who does not have a very substantial small business community in his riding. Therefore, it is, I am sure, one of the areas of debate common to all of us. There is no reason or necessity to be partisan on this question. I do not think there is a Member in this House who is not experiencing every day and every month the misery of bankruptcy in his home town or community on the part of dozens of people and dozens of businesses. There would be no point trying to make partisan points on an issue such as that.

Perhaps Hon. Members opposite will understand that some of us are trying to encourage the Government to recognize that the small business programs it has in place today are really just ways of further bandaging the wounded in the hope that they will some day be able to get back into the economic war. It is really not meant in a partisan manner. It is a plea to recognize the general thrust of Government policy on the small business community at a time when that community has never been more needed by the Canadian economy.

Some of us have been pleading since the beginning of this session for some relief on the mortgage interest question. We have been requesting some form of relief, whether it be straight tax deductibility, tax deductibility with a cap or property tax relief for home owners. Hon. Members opposite have pooh-poohed it, but it is particularly appropriate in today's discussions because the largest small business sector is the construction sector. While small businesses comprise about 24 per cent of Canadian industry, in the construction sector small businesses make up 55 per cent of it.

When other Hon. Members and I raise this issue, we raise it precisely in the context of what the Government could do to get the construction industry going without a great deal of cost to Government at a time when unemployment in that industry is 35 per cent. Also companies simply cannot use a vehicle such as the one before us today because they are not in a position to invest in new plant or equipment since no business is being done and there is no real prospect of a great deal of new housing construction. That is the tragedy of the recession.

I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the Star. I do not often refer to that newspaper because it does not have a lot of sympathy with the things with which I have sympathy.

Mr. Dick: Is that the Windsor Star?

Mr. Bosley: No, I am referring to The Toronto Star.

Mr. Epp: Oh, that one.

Mr. Bosley: Yes, that one. I am only referring to that article because it is equally illustrative of the problems confronting small business. I confess to not being particularly aware of the current status of the bankruptcy legislation. I am told that Bill C-12 has not yet had second reading or been referred to committee. I was unaware of that. I am saying it has not yet had second reading because the article indicated yesterday that a spokesman for the Government House Leader was quoted as saying that the Government placed a high priority on the bankruptcy legislation and hoped to see it passed by the end of the session. That was a remarkable comment to make about a Bill which has not yet been before the House for second reading, let alone sent to committee. It has been on the Order Paper since April 12 and it is a follow-up to the original legislation introduced in 1980. The suggestion in the newspaper article that the Government places high priority on the bankruptcy legislation is unlikely to be true.

Mr. Epp: To turn a phrase.

Mr. Bosley: Yes, to turn a phrase. I am grateful to learn something, one hopes, at least once a day.

Mr. Nystrom: Shame.

Mr. Bosley: I am happy to learn something. My goodness, another NDP Member appears to have joined the Liberal ranks without giving notice. Without any formality at all, he walked across the Chamber and sat down. I suppose the House should take note that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) appears to have given up his provincial leadership aspirations and joined the federal Liberals. That is remarkable.

I am never afraid to admit when I do not know something, but one of the major issues involved in debt restructuring, which is the current major issue for small business, is the inability of businesses in major debt situations and facing bankruptcy to obtain restructurings of debt, without getting into all the technical language in the article, because of the stature of the federal Government itself.

Again I refer to the article because it is one in which a number of chartered accountants urged and pleaded with us to deal with the issue because they believed particularly that amendments to the Bankruptcy Act would have the largest possible impact upon avoiding bankruptcies of small businesses, and that right now it was more of an issue than granting additional credit to small businesses which cannot find anything to secure it against.

Mr. Bloomfield: Be careful when quoting from newspapers.

Mr. Bosley: I appreciate and accept the recommendation of the Hon. Member. I am careful when quoting from any newspaper, particularly this one. I appreciate that my comments may not be directly on Bill C-144, but I think they come much closer to the rules of relevancy than some of the other aberrations which have taken place. The article reads in part:

> The Act's main drawbacks are that secured creditors and landlords now have powers that can actively prevent a reorganization. Also, preferred creditors including Governments and employees—whose claims rank behind those of secured creditors and ahead of unsecured creditors—must be paid immediately if reorganization takes place.

That point is critically important, because the article refers to a small business which at the time was trying to reorganize itself in order to avoid bankruptcy and obtain a chance to get back into the ranks of profitable companies, presumably to be able some day to take advantage of the legislation which is before us today.

I return momentarily to my first comment, that this is at least as important an issue as the legislation before us today which itself, by not raising the limit, recognizes that there are not likely to be a great number of applications for that form of relief.

The article continues:

> In the case of Hi-Fi Express, several creditors had asked Price Waterhouse to create a debt restructuring proposal ... But it was not possible because of potential trouble with landlords ... and because Government debts totalled at least $250,000.

Now, $250,000 to a big business is not a lot of money. To a small business it is an incredible amount of money. To a business which spends $87 billion per year, called the Government of Canada, it is a tiny, tiny drop in the bucket. Therefore, the effect of that legislation is that the Government of Canada is itself the reason a business going bankrupt cannot be restructured to try and survive. I literally did not know that. In fact I am quite stunned that we would be dealing with other legislation rather than resolving that issue. There is no question that the extension before us today is important. As little good as it will do, at least it will do something.

I was astounded yesterday when I read the suggestion that the other Bill, in layman's language, could have a tremendous impact. I am referring to that one item alone, not necessarily the entire Bill. When the Government is owed tax, it should recognize that it would be wiser to avoid putting people on the unemployment and welfare rolls and simply postpone the debt in a re-arranged structure to give the owners and employees the right to continue working and a chance to pay the debt rather than put them out of business.

It amazes me that that legislation has not yet been before the House, at a time when the issue is not as much finding new sources of borrowing money for small business as helping them restructure. When I was thinking about some comments to make in today's debate, I was a little perplexed to discover that the Government has been sitting on a piece of legislation which I think my small businesses need more than the legislation before the House. If anything, small businesses need both, yet the Government's priority over debt restructuring legislation and amendments to the Bankruptcy Act is the sports pool or lottery Bill to help fund a very important event, the Calgary Olympics due to take place in 1988. That has a higher priority today for the Government of Canada than amendments that would help small business to survive. I think you will understand, Mr. Speaker, if I find that more than moderately astounding.

When we are dealing with this question it seems more appropriate to ask the Government to remove whatever the roadblock is on that particular provision of that legislation and allow us to deal with it as expeditiously as we have agreed to deal with the two items that are before the House today. I do not believe that any Member of the Government has fewer problems in his small business constituency than a Member on this side of the House. I appeal to Hon. Members opposite to move at least that piece of legislation forward as quickly as possible. I do not think they want to see any small business go into bankruptcy if there is a way to prevent it. To find that the Government is an agency that is creating bankruptcy is terrifying in these times.

One could speak at great length about other dilemmas but I want to put on record one small matter, Mr. Speaker, and that is the 12.5 per cent tax on small business dividends paid to shareholders and owners. This is a technical matter for most Canadians who do not receive dividends. The Government's proposals on that matter have excited more comment from owners and operators of small business in my constituency than any other in the budget, however. It would be inappropriate if I did not take this opportunity to register their concerns.

Finally, I should like to say to the Government that its willingness to bring the legislation forward at this time and have it go through is to be commended.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset what a great pleasure it is to follow the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) who, by the force of his oratory, has caused Members from all sides of the House to come in and listen to his speech. I look across the House and see phalanx upon phalanx of the Liberal Party who have stayed to hear me and I am grateful. I look through the maze of faces and see the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau), my colleague on the Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform. I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) who shares with me the responsibility of representing a seat within the National Capital. I look to my right and see row upon row of Members of my own Party. I look to my left and see row upon row of Members of the New Democratic Party. All are here to express interest in small business.

I want to say that I am glad you are in the chair today, Mr. Speaker, because on another occasion you have demonstrated your ability to handle tumult in the House. Before I launch into the burden of my speech, I want to make an apology to the security staff in the House of Commons who have had so much difficulty handling the crowds that have been lured into the House by the speeches of the Hon. Member for Don Valley West and others in the debate today. A crowd of this size is unusual on a Friday afternoon in the House of Commons, so I want to express my thanks to members of the general public for coming to hear this debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is the largest round of applause that has occurred in the House all day, Mr. Speaker, and it is an indication of the interest there is in this debate.

It is an important debate, Mr. Speaker. We are talking about the segment of the business community that is being hurt very badly. The Hon. Member for Don Valley West, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) have spoken about the problems that they face in their constituencies. I am sure you share those problems in your constituency and I know that the Minister of Transport shares them in his. We all know that there is no part of the business community that is hurting more than small business. We understand that from our mail and we understand it from the visits we make to the premises of small businesses in our constituency from time to time. The Hon. Member from Provencher spoke of instances in his riding.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, as could every Member of the House, but I think it is important that the debate be concluded today so I shall not take up the time of the House. I do not want it to be said, however, that because a problem is left unspoken, the problem is not an important one.

In my constituency I attended a meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. In Canada, agriculture has been one of the most stable of small businesses but last year the rate of bankruptcy had increased 65 per cent over the previous year. That is a startling phenomenon, Mr. Speaker.

Although there are many doubts about what the House achieved with the Private Member's Bill to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangements Act introduced by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson)—and which the Government had to be shamed into moving—there is no doubt in the agriculture sector of the business community that something has to be done.

As a result of passage of this Bill, amending the Small Businesses Loans Act, the ceiling for the period which has been extended from March 31, 1983 to March 31, 1985 for loans that can be guaranteed will be $1.5 billion. I share the view of the Hon. Member for Don Valley West that the ceiling is probably too low, just as the ceiling on the Farm Credit Act is too low. There is a crisis in agriculture, Mr. Speaker.

I do not mean to be partisan. For example, I do not believe that there is any room for crass partisanship in relationship to the economy. With the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), Mr. Speaker, you and I attended a meeting in Toronto of the Canadian Construction Association attended by representatives of companies large and small in the construction business. These businesses operate in the constituencies of every Member of the House. Those people spoke of their situation with despair.

This Bill allows the rate of loans for small businesses to continue. In some manner it compensates for what I am sorry to say is the foolishness of the budgetary policy of the Government. To that extent it is supportable.

Close to half of all Canadians presently unemployed were formerly employed by small and medium-sized businesses. That is what The Globe and Mail reported today. They represent close to half of the unemployed in Canada. In February, there were 1,585,000 people unemployed in Canada. According to the same report, the small business sector employs between 700,000 and 800,000 fewer Canadians than it did in January of 1981. That is a sad statistic. There is no place for partisanship when dealing with these statistics.

• (1550)

The other aspect dealt with in this same report is that few of these industries that were surveyed in this large survey that was conducted by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business have any plans to increase either hiring or investment. Of those industries surveyed, 66.7 per cent expect to retain present employment levels. Those are levels which have fallen off by almost a million from a year and a half ago. The fact that 9.1 per cent would be rehiring laid-off workers shows just how small the prospect for advancement is as we deal with this matter. Only 7.9 per cent will be hiring additional people. What impact will those little glimmers of optimism have on the 1,585,000 unemployed, half of whom were employed in small business? Is it any wonder that this Bill is important and we want to pass it tonight? I do not think so.

What reason did those surveyed give for this happening? They admitted that the recession is world-wide, a fact with which we are all aware. They say that much of the cause has been the result of a combination of damaging federal policies and intergovernmental bickering.

I would like to stop there for a moment and talk about damaging federal policy. There is no Member over there who is unhappy to see the MacEachen budget gutted piece by piece by the former Minister of Finance himself, who brought it in, and then the final crowning insult, swift and merciful death at the hands of the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). No one was unhappy about that. The Hon. Member for Gatineau was overjoyed to see it gutted. It cut the mail from his constituents by over 85 per cent.

Something which has characterized the national life of Canada and which I believe has been damaging not only to the country but to the sense of national will to achieve goals is the fact that there has been bickering among the Governments in Canada. In a federal state, co-operation, consultation, consensus, understanding and compromise are the catch words. Co-operation is essential whether we are applying it to how we treat the native people of Canada and deal with those problems, whether we are talking about an assault on the problems of agriculture or the environment, whether we are talking about transportation or attacking the problems of big business and the challenges facing the country. Co-operation is possible because we have co-operated before.

Last night, I met a man at the Infotech Display at the Sportsplex in my riding, which is an exhibition giving a view into the future of the computer and micro-technology industry in the National Capital area. He reminded me and the group I was with of this national will that we talk about. He reminded us that Canadians had a purpose during the war. We had a job and the will to achieve something. We built airfields within a period of time that no one thought possible. We built airplanes at a rate at which no one said it could be done. We built ships, hangars and other installations.

I say to those people who are pessimistic about the country and feel that it is drifting with no hope that there is hope. In all the dismay and despair over the economic situation we are facing today, there is a challenge. It is the challenge of creating the national will. It is a challenge in which the Government must take the lead but, I am sorry to say, it has not done so. I do not say that in any partisan way. I suppose we are all to blame in one way or another. Government, in the broad sense, is to blame.

The battle which exists between labour and business in this country has been caused by an adversarial atmosphere. It is an atmosphere we will have to change because our competitors are changing. If there is new technology, we will either have to buy it or develop it because our competitors are buying it and developing it.

I believe that this country is capable of doing anything it sets its mind to. We are told of the riches and resources of our country. Of course we have riches and resources. We are fortunate never to have been scarred by war. We have never had to rebuild an institution. We have never had to rebuild a major transportation facility.

We are rich in something else. We are rich in talented people because we have one of the highest educational levels in the world. This is another challenge that we must face in the future. What will we say to those young people, some of whom are in school because they cannot get a job, when they graduate? What will we tell them if we have not taken up the challenge of creating a better atmosphere for them as they look to careers?

The new technology developing right here in the National Capital area shows promise for expansion not just in this area but in the country. Expansion is not only possible for that industry but new industries as well. When will we recognize the fact that it is a growth industry which has potential and one which cries out for investment capital? In order for that investment capital to come forward, a certain atmosphere and climate is required which the Government can set. That industry has told the Government what it needs, and I need not repeat it. The way out of the despair is by taking up the challenge.

There are many things which can be done with respect to that challenge. If anyone does not believe that there is a challenge to the country, let them know that an average of 40 Canadian businesses went bankrupt every working day last year. When the dust of those bankruptcies has settled, those firms will show debts totalling $2.3 billion. Let the Government consider figures like that if it is concerned about its revenues. Figures now indicate that the jobless rate in Canada is perhaps 20 per cent. If there was ever a time for us to emphasize our efforts on small and medium-sized businesses, it is now because it is an historical fact that the greatest sector to play a part in creating jobs has been the small business sector. That is where the jobs are created.

My speech today is likely the last one I will make on an economic matter prior to a budget since the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) announced today that he will shortly bring in his budget. I want the Minister of Finance to consider that evidence. I am sure that he will. I want the Minister of Finance to know that in terms of the position in which the country finds itself and what must be done about it, I do not believe there is crass partisanship. There may be differences, but there is no crass partisanship. There is no Canadian on either side of this House of Commons who does not want success from the budget and from economic policy. There is no Member of Parliament who relishes the thought, for whatever reason, of row upon row, line upon line, day after day, with his or her office being filled with young people who cannot get work and small business people who are worried.

I believe, as we were told at the Construction Association meeting in Toronto, that it is important to the country that the right answers be found by the Minister of Finance, that the right balance be struck by him, so that we do not destroy the battle against inflation which has been fought with a single-minded purpose, to the extent that small business has been ground into the ground, as well as the manufacturing sector. We do not want to forget the importance of that. However, we equally must not forget that, aside from the statistics on joblessness, we have a social problem. It is for that reason, because the Bill assists in that important sector, that we intend to support the Bill and allow it to go through today.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether all of the interest expressed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), has shown how the crowds have rushed the other way. Certainly Hon. Members have debated the Bill on two Friday afternoons. As I start my remarks, the debate has been going on for five hours. What is it about this Bill which requires five hours at second reading? Yet it is of importance. I am astounded that besides the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey), only the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) has spoken from the Government side. They profess to be greatly interested in the operations of small business, and they know that Hon. Members, particularly those from the Province of Quebec—

[Translation]

—particularly in Quebec, where the small business sector is the pivot of economic development, but in view of the lack of participation by Quebec Members, I wonder how interested they really are in this instrument which has proven so effective in the past to finance small businesses. After all, the figures which the Hon. Minister has tabled give us a good idea about the number of small businesses in Canada and their quality. A business may include only two persons. It may also include about 50 employees working for a family business. Because of this, there is not a single village or small community in Quebec or elsewhere in the country where there are no small businesses. The lack of interest shown by the Quebec Members is therefore surprising. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, and this is even more surprising, when we examined Bill C-139 to amend the Income Tax Act, the Government Members remained completely silent and accepted a 12.5 per cent tax increase on the distribution of small business profits. It is right here in Bill C-139!

[English]

Why is that torpedo included in the Bill? It is part of the Government philosophy, demonstrated by the Minister of Finance who, in his budget of November 12, 1981 said: "We will increase the tax on small business dividends by 12.5 per cent. That will raise the taxes of the owner of the small business to about that of a salaried employee." In other words, the owner of the small business receives nothing for his worry, for putting up the money, for having to meet payrolls. For all of the responsibilities of running a business, he gets absolutely zilch. That is what the Government considers shall be the reward of running a small business. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is a shame. I know that our friends over in the New Democratic Party talk long and loud about small business, but as soon as the word "profit" is mentioned—

[Translation]

As soon as we speak about the profits or the profitability of a business—

[English]

—they jump on it with both feet as being quite immoral that anyone should make a profit out of business, particularly their love of soaking it to corporate profits.

As I said, corporate profits can be a partnership of two men or women or a combination, or a few individuals who have "Ltd." or "Inc." behind the name of their business. Their profits are considered to be immoral. But surely to goodness, is it not a cliché merely to say that small business cannot get on without profits? There must be profitability in order to pay the owner or owners their return, because they, too, are entitled to a fair return for their labours and worries.

This Bill extends by one year a form of loan operation with the chartered banks and other credit-granting institutions. We have heard lot of nonsense about the chartered banks neglecting small business. The reason I am speaking this afternoon is that I am primarily interested in the operations of the chartered banks, trust companies and other financial institutions in this country.

I recall last year when the Finance Committee, following a motion of this House that bank profits be examined, had before it as witnesses representatives of all of the major chartered banks, some of the trust companies and some other organizations. I recall the words of Rowland Frazee, the President and Chief Executive Officer of the Royal Bank, which is Canada's largest bank. Mr. Frazee was able to show indisputably that the major portion of that bank's business is with small business. Small business is not just 15 or 20 accounts, but tens of thousands of accounts where financing is required.

We have seen high interest rates, the recession and the National Energy Program. In my Province, Mr. Speaker, how that Program caused small business to take it in the neck, across the back, across the knees and stomped on both feet. That was the result of the immediate and then cumulative effect of the National Energy Program. My colleagues from Saskatchewan, many of them whose constituencies are in oil-producing areas, saw the same thing happen.

Those businesses were the type of businesses that one just loved to see. It was hard work, it was risky, but the men and women involved were quite prepared to go out on the limb for heavy equipment for a few dollars down and hundreds of thousands of dollars of financing, and they made it pay. We saw population move to the western Provinces to participate in this economic boom. Certainly there were some large corporate entities that were there. They always have to be there, but the big bulk of the service industry, the drilling, the pipelaying, the road building, the list of jobs and types of operations are legion. That was all small business.

Then the plague hit, and what a sorry picture it has left. And we wonder why. The rest of Canada has suffered doubly from that. Ontario industry, machines, equipment, the steel industry, the automobile manufacturers, who lost tens of thousands of vehicles per year, all as a result of those dark days of 1981. Now we are trying to pick up the pieces.

Hopefully with a changed picture for the banks, since they will be able to use the Small Business Development Bonds, we have to give these people an opportunity to finance. No one has the cash. They cannot be expected to have the cash, and when their profit margins have been trimmed, there are no reserves. There are no socks or no bundles of money tucked under mattresses. We have to see that the legislation is available for those who want to act.

I do not want to see grants, because they become conditional, so give them incentives either by lower term loans or some incentives through the Income Tax Act so that those who want to do may do, those want to shake may shake, and we will get that fundamental, basic industry that is represented by all facets of small business back in motion.

Then we will see the ranks of the unemployed go down, not by make-work programs through the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). They will not deal with unemployment. We need small business to get back on its feet and employ those hundreds of thousands; in fact, there are well over a million people employed in small business.

For that reason, I hope that we would now be able to agree to this Bill going to Committee for Clause by Clause study. That should not be long, and then we will take the report stage.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak on the Bill, if it is not past that time.

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Cousineau) on a point of order.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say only one thing. The Hon. Member who just spoke mentioned that the Act would remain in force for one year, but in fact, it will for two years.

[English]

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate. I do not know what has happened since the Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) spoke, but the Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has spoken as well as the Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and I find myself virtually alone. I do not think I will change that either way, Mr. Speaker.

Bill C-144 may have had adequate discussion but it certainly has not had lengthy discussion in the House. We heard from the Government benches a week or so ago that they wished this Bill to be passed in one day, passed immediately. I could understand that if this Bill to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act were Bill C-44, but when it is Bill C-144 I do not think that shows a great deal of urgency on the part of the Government.

It is a Bill that will extend something that is used, hopefully, by a lot of small businesses in Canada, by enterprisers and people who wish to contribute to the economy of Canada, hire fellow Canadians, expand and do what we all hope can be done in this country, which is to provide a better country to live in, a country in which people are not left without the dignity of employment, especially when we have over two million people in Canada right now who are left without the dignity that I know they want and that we have expressed to the Government that they want.

This Bill basically extends its life for another two years, and we endorse that. It has attached to it a consultative committee that is to advise the Minister as to what small businesses should be able to apply for loans and what small businesses should be allowed to accept loans. This committee is made up of members of small businesses and members of the financial community.

The imbalance that we have now in debt equity in small firms is very apparent to all Members who have consulted with firms in their constituencies and have kept an eye on the state of the economy in Canada over the last number of years. When the small business consultative committee makes its report, I would be very interested in seeing it tabled and made available as soon as possible to the Members of this House and the small business community throughout Canada.

The largest contributor to employment in this country is small business. There are over 645,000 small businesses in Canada. They employ 42 per cent of the work force and make up 25 per cent of our GNP. The enterprise spirit of these risk-takers provides productivity to our economy.

In 1982 there were close to 150,000 business start-ups. Unfortunately there have been some failures. Those people have the enterprise, spirit and will to risk their life savings and in many cases the life savings of their families, friends and relatives. They should not be ridiculed for their failure. Without that spirit and desire to go ahead, our country would not be what it is today. Unfortunately, in 1982 there were 10,765 business bankruptcies, 410 farm bankruptcies and over 30,000 personal bankruptcies. Losses to business and farm bankruptcies in 1982 amounted to $2.33 billion.

That is very unfortunate. A lot of those people who failed in 1982, given the opportunity and environment, because they are enterprisers and risk-takers, if allowed to have the reward for their endeavours will take the risk again. They will continue to strive for success. If the Government provides the environment and the ability to those people to start again as we, hopefully, come out of this recession, they will survive and contribute to the employment of this country.

Under this Bill, any small farm can have $100,000 outstanding at one time. Let us look at what $100,000 does when used by an enterpriser, a small-businessman. Each $100,000 of equity capital invested in 1979 averaged $310,000 in exports for this country, $100,000 in expenditures for research and $11,000 in corporate, property and personal income taxes to the different levels of Government. That is what $100,000 taken in equity and placed in a small business generated in 1979 in Canada.

By drawing this to the attention of the Government, we are not criticizing this Bill. Indeed, we support it. However, there is one shortfall that could be drawn to the Government's attention. The money available under this Act cannot be used for operating expenses. It cannot be used to carry inventory. For many small businesses, the total cost of their operation is in their inventory. If this Bill could be changed so that small businesses can borrow against their operating cost, it would certainly help.

When I look at this $100,000, I think of all the small businesses in my riding that would be assisted by the injection of that amount of money. Service stations, small grocery stores, welders, farming operations, any number of small businesses, welders, could benefit. If they are going to invest this money and have this assistance from the Government, why in the budget which the Government brought forward did it cut in half the capital cost allowance for the first year for investments? The total cost to small, medium and large businesses is estimated to be in excess of $3 billion. That $3 billion is taken right out of businesses in this country. Where was it put? In the midst of this recession, we pray that businesses will invest, continue to expand, upgrade their production and modernize their plants, but the Government cuts $3 billion out of that operation.

Even worse, every other industrialized country went the other way and allowed a larger capital cost allowance to their businesses. In the United States, for example, the margin will be increased by 34 per cent by 1985 for allowances and equipment and furniture, 42 per cent for automobiles and light trucks and 15 per cent for buildings. That is the difference between the United States and Canada for the operator of a business.

We wonder about capital costs. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) was here a few moments ago. The capital cost allowance for business was cut in half, but an extension of the capital cost allowance, a tax concession, is being proposed for the railroads. The railroads will receive an extended tax credit, a capital cost allowance over the next five years, while farmers and small businesses see their capital cost allowance cut in half. Important as the railroad system in this country may be, it does not compare to the importance of small-businessmen and farmers.

When talking about this Bill, we wonder about the criteria that are established and a lot of the red tape that is involved when making application for these grants. I cast my mind back to last June when a trucking company by the name of Maislin had over $34 million guaranteed by this Government, indeed by the taxpayers of Canada. Maislin was given $34 million in guarantees on unaudited financial statements for the year 1981. That was in July, 1982. On September 14, 1982, over a month later, the Government received the first audited financial statement for that company. That can only happen to friends of the Government. It does not happen to those men and women who operate small businesses and risk their capital.

Over 2,000 employees of Maislin are employed in the United States and 800 are employed in Canada. Therefore, Canadian taxpayers are subsidizing the American teamsters driving Maislin trucks. The operators in the United States are subsidized by taxpayers in this country who are struggling to get ahead and have to use this Small Businesses Loans Act to borrow funds.

When we consider employment and ability to expand, the truckers of Canada are only operating at 60 per cent capacity. Therefore, one has to wonder why it was one company, the only company in the trucking industry, the only service company in Canada, which received a loan guarantee of $34 million from this Government.

I know we will be moving quickly along with this Bill, Mr. Speaker, but I would just like to suggest that in a country as large and expansive as Canada, if you wish to cut the costs—because movement is so important in our country—one place this Government could start which would assist every single business in Canada would be to reduce the take by the federal Government of the tax on fuel.

I would just like to talk briefly about one gallon of fuel. On one gallon of fuel which a farmer now uses in Canada, 69 cents, or 44 per cent, goes in federal tax. Excise tax is seven cents a gallon. Granted, that is refundable. You have to go through a lot of red tape; you have to fill out a lot of forms; you pay it out and you wait for it. Then the people from Revenue Canada come out and do an audit to make sure you are not telling a story. But eventually you get your seven cents. But there is a 9 per cent federal sales tax, which is 15 cents a gallon. There is a petroleum compensation charge which is 18 cents a gallon. That is a familiar figure, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian ownership charge is 4 cents a gallon. Petroleum and gas revenue tax is 7 cents a gallon. And the corporate tax is 18 cents. There are two 18-cent charges in there. That comes to a total of 69 cents a gallon, Mr. Speaker. If you deduct 7 cents a gallon, that is still 62 cents a gallon which is a federal tax. If this tax was removed, in a country the size of Canada, where movement of goods and people are so important to the economy, it would do more good than any other Act that I can think of which we have debated lately in this House.

I would like to move now, Mr. Speaker, that we proceed to the Committee of the Whole and continue the study of this Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am acting in the place of our House Leader today, a situation where I want to be demoted immediately after I finish! Before the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader left, he and I had some discussions about what would occur if we managed to get through the three readings of the Bill today. We have now reached that stage on Bill C-144. We agreed that if we made that kind of progress, it might be appropriate if we called it five o'clock now. I wanted to indicate that agreement and understanding to the House. I have indicated this informally to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) who is representing the Government today. Perhaps he might comment; I assume he is still agreeable.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that that is the agreement which was reached by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) and I am authorized to indicate consent on behalf of the Government. We were quite anxious, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation be enacted today. Indeed, it was one of the reasons we did not offer speakers this afternoon. We concur with the situation as put by the Acting House Leader for the Opposition.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I thank the hon. gentleman. I do not want to correct him, but for the sake of my friend, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau), I must say he did take part in the debate, and a very good part. I listened to his speech with great interest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to now call it five o'clock?

Mr. Cousineau: Now that the Acting House Leader for the Tories has resigned for today!

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous agreement we will now call it five o'clock. This House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 4.39 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

The House resumed, from Tuesday, March 22, 1983, consideration of Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Blenkarn (p. 24001).

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, while it takes some time to get organized on Monday morning, we are here to discuss Bill C-143, which is a Bill to give the Government more borrowing authority. It is not a pleasure to speak to this Bill. We are reminded once again that our national financial affairs are in a sorry state. Those who are supposedly in charge of the country and fiddling while Canada groans.

When I spoke on this Bill during another stage of its debate, I dealt with many of the problems that are becoming even more persistent and critical than they were at that time. Many of my colleagues have discussed other aspects of the Bill from their own perspective. We are now faced with another stage of debate on this Bill to grant additional borrowing powers to the Government for an exceptionally large amount of money which, I understand, is the largest amount to be asked for in our history.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House a statement made by the present President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) back on October 23, 1979. At that time he stated that the Government—speaking of the Progressive Conservative Government at the time—should move quickly to present its budget. He said that it should be a budget which contained measures of a focused and specific nature designed to help our economy become more productive and efficient and deal with our deficit in current accounts.

I suggest that that is a very significant statement. The Government at that time seemed to be very concerned about some of these problems, whereas the present Government seems to have allowed those issues and concerns to fade into the background rather than dealing with them specifically at a time when it has the opportunity to do so.

There are two specific areas of concern to which reference has been made. The first concern is that of productivity. When I spoke to this Bill on Tuesday, March 1, I made reference to this particular aspect of the problem. I believe it is absolutely essential that an emphasis on increased productivity be made a priority. If productivity cannot be increased in Canada, we will not be able to deal with other problems effectively and efficiently.

While there has been a great deal of discussion about Government policies and the allocation of funds to various programs, we must remember that the Government will only be able to do this through the redistribution of funds from the resources that are already available unless productivity is increased. Instead of raising the standard of living and increasing the viability of our economy, the funds will just be spread around a little more and will therefore reduce the average standard of living of the people of Canada. Therefore, I am afraid that the Government has done little, if anything, to achieve an improvement in the productivity of the country.

The second phase as set out by the Minister at that time addressed deficits. He said that the budget should contain measures to help our economy become "more efficient and to deal with our deficit in current account". The only way the Government is dealing with it is by increasing it. This is certainly not acceptable to the Canadian people at the present time. If the Government continues with its deficits, as it is doing, and if it increases taxation and all the ill-effects of such a program, then it will not improve the economy, as it must do.

Mr. Lang: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Patterson: Increasing and continuing deficits—

Mr. Lang: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the Hon. Member unintentionally gave an erroneous figure to the House. The current account is presently in surplus by $2.7 billion and it is a record surplus.

Mr. Patterson: If we take the average over the period of time, then we find that there is little hope or expectation on the part of the business community that we will see any definite improvement in the total situation. That is the point I am making.

If the Government continues with deficit financing as it has been doing, there will be an ever-increasing interest burden on the Canadian people. I will not take time today to place on the record the comparable figures with respect to the interest that we are paying on the national debt, because they have been placed on the record a number of times.

One of the costs is the ever-increasing interest burden. Then there is the loss of flexibility because in many respects, the Government is pretty well boxed in and unable to respond to the various situations which arise.

The third cost arising from such a program involves private sector borrowings which are crowded out. I think there has been an attempt to indicate to the House that the Government believes that the private sector is the engine of growth. There is no need to re-emphasize the fact that we in this Party certainly agree. However, when the Government borrows to such a massive degree, it reduces the available capital. Therefore, the private sector is not able to borrow its money at reasonable rates. Of course, as a consequence we once again face an upward spiral in interest rates.

Then, of course, there is the loss of confidence on the part of the Canadian people. This is another serious ill effect as far as continuing deficit financing is concerned. An article in the Ottawa Citizen of February 21, 1983 states:

> The more the federal Government is forced to spend in bad times, the longer better times will be delayed: the money needed to finance Government deficits will be found at the expense of the private sector, and the resulting competition for funds will drive up interest rates.

I should like to point out that some time ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a statement that a new morality must be established in dealing with international affairs. I suggest that there ought to be on the national level, as well. I would ask: Because a particular Party in the House has a majority, is it moral for it continually to overspend and then force Canadians to bear an ever-increasing burden of taxation to support unconscionable borrowings to finance the Government's profligate spending? I would answer no.

Secondly, is it moral to build up a staggering burden of debt for our children, our grandchildren and generations beyond that, which they will be called upon to bear, as well as financing the affairs of Government in the particular period in which they live? Again, I say no.

Therefore, as we consider this particular Bill today, I would take the same stand I took before, and that is that I believe that the Government has not established any credibility and does not deserve our authorizing borrowing authority for this amount.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, there is no way, without inviting criticism, that any Member of this House of Commons could with clear conscience vote for this Bill at this moment in time.

Let me cite some of the reasons it is impossible for me to support this Bill. In view of the imbalanced expenditure which is, first, exercised in respect to the fisheries in the Province of New Brunswick, my criticism is not of the extent of the expenditure in other constituencies than my own. My criticism is that my own constituency has been neglected in this expenditure, particularly in the small craft harbours structure. When we look at the Estimates that are presently before the Committees of this House and see that $5 million and $6 million projects have been undertaken on the northeast coast of New Brunswick, while there is not an expenditure of consequence, which will even be listed, on the Bay of Fundy shore of New Brunswick, I submit to you that the inferences are obvious and do not have to be specified in my remarks.

This is causing fishermen in my constituency to fish from moorings which are just not up to standard, which are damaging their boats and which are detrimental to the development or even the conduct of the existing business which takes place on a very significant scale among thousands of my constituents.

Secondly, in respect to the fishery, let me point out that regulations are changed without notice to the fishermen. The latest example is that lobster fishermen in my constituency had been authorized to set their traps and to fish between the traffic lanes of the deep sea traffic which goes in and out of the port of Saint John. The stipulations, when they were first given permission to fish there, were as follows: "Yes, you may fish there and, secondly, you are strictly at your own risk. The Department or the Government at large will take no responsibility for the safety of the people, the safety of the boat or the gear itself. But under those conditions you may fish between the shipping lanes in the Bay of Fundy as they lead to Saint John."

About ten days ago the Department of Fisheries, without any notice, after lobster gear had already been set, notified the fishermen that they must get out of that space between the traffic lanes in the Bay of Fundy. This brings on new and unnecessary hardships to the fishing industry of my area. And I am supposed to vote for that?

Let me also point out that surveillance by the Department of Fisheries is lax and incompetent. Last week, on one day, two large scallop draggers from the United States were fishing five miles within the recognized fishing line between Canada and the United States. If our surveillance is so bad that we cannot in fact apprehend boats which are five miles within Canadian waters, well outside the legal limits for any American ship, then there is something seriously wrong.

Let me indicate the consequence of such an infringment upon our rights. There is no fishery which is as profitable at this moment as the scallop fishery, and there is no area where better scallops exist than in these beds. We are allowing these scallops to be taken illegally, without any apprehension or any charges laid, day after day in the area of fishing as it relates to my constituency.

Not only are the regulations coming without notice and infringing upon the rights of our fishermen, but the regulations are not consistent, nor are they consistently applied.

Another item with respect to the fishery is that the Department of Transport has without notice chosen to widen one of the traffic lanes by one and one half miles. When you are working from an island, with very little sea space in which to fish, and you lose a mile and a half of it without notice, you have certainly lost a lot of fishing opportunity. Those on the other side of this House want me to vote for a Bill to borrow more money to govern in that fashion? No way, Mr. Speaker.

• (1120)

I want to mention the potato industry. There is in process under the leadership of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) an effort to organize an eastern Canadian potato marketing agency. There are questions unanswered which must be answered. They are drawn from the examples which have been set by the Canadian Dairy Commission and by CEMA, the protector of the egg industry in Canada. What are those words that I have?

Under the Canadian Dairy Commission, there have been several instances of processors of cheese saying they could not get enough milk under this structure to produce their historic quantity of cheese, nor could they get enough milk to make cheese to supply the demand which they presently have. If that is the way quotas are to be allocated under a marketing system, it just will not work for the potato industry.

When we come to the egg industry, we find that there are those who have made an effort to export eggs from Canada. They have not even had consideration by the various provincial boards, nor by the national board, whether there is an opportunity for egg exports. There are on occasion surpluses of eggs in Canada. We should be ready to explore the export market. These surpluses of eggs are burdensome and costly to the producer and consumer alike. I do not want to see the same situation develop in the potato industry.

In the egg industry, there is a regulation whereby you can raise X number of hens which you may market outside the agency. If such a regulation is to be introduced into any eastern Canadian potato marketing board, there are questions we have to ask. What is the minimum number of acres of potatoes which can be produced without coming under the regulation of the quota? If there is such a regulation, how many members of how many families will be able to plant up to that amount of potatoes? I would assume for the moment that it might be five acres of potatoes that could be produced without regulation under such a marketing principle as CEMA or the way the dairy board presently functions. If that be the case, how many members of a large family will be able to produce potatoes on five acres and what impact will this have on the market?

The next question is, how can you regulate the production and marketing of any agricultural product when only God, who controls the weather, can tell you what your yield will be? You do not know that until you harvest because He does not tell you in advance. How are you going to handle the situation in which you have unusually good crops of any fruit or vegetable across Canada, particularly potatoes? How are you going to supply Canada in the years when you have an unusually poor crop across Canada? Production has been known to fluctuate by as much as 25 per cent in two years in Canada. That is the exception. It may be 25 per cent up or 25 per cent down from the historic rate of production, not necessarily because of more or less acres but because of weather conditions as they exist in the areas in which the product is produced.

We are now having meetings in Atlantic Canada trying to establish an eastern Canadian potato agency. I want the Minister of Agriculture to answer these questions. What is he putting forward besides propaganda for these people to work with in reality? What is he doing to them except constraining the payments which historically have been made to underpaid farmers for their production? All the Minister is doing is constraining those payments in order to compel hard-up farmers to join the eastern potato agency. How on the basis of the cheese factories and egg marketing can a processor of potatoes be assured of a given supply of potatoes for his business? How is he going to be able to support an export market which he may have developed and which may be, and probably is, a fluctuating market requiring different sizes of demand? He cannot know in April of any given year what he is going to require from the potato crop in his area 12, 13, 15 months down the road, which is the supply he must accommodate during his producing years.

How are we going to know if we have to abandon the seed export markets, which are also variable? How are we going to achieve a balance which will supply our table requirements? Are we going to ban imports into Canada entirely for the table market? If so, of course, we ban the opportunity to export from Canada. Without proper storage capabilities, how are we going to supply Canada 12 months a year?

I would like to ask something else, which I have repeatedly asked in the House because of my deep concern. What voice is Atlantic Canada going to have? Will it be a five-Province organization with a vote each, or will it be an organization which, in any other structure outside of Government, would grant to any area the number of votes which relates to their productivity? With respect to the stock they hold in the business, roughly 50 per cent of the area is supplied by New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Are they then to have roughly 50 per cent of the voting control? If they do not, New Brunswick and P.E.I. will be in serious shape.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, we have reached a deficit and borrowing crisis because this Government is labouring under the illusion which has pervaded western economic thought for the past 40 years; that is, that the demand for goods creates its own supply, that the demand for goods can be increased by increasing the purchasing power of individuals by deficit financing or money creation. As a result, the deficit today is equal to 28 per cent of all Government expenditure. For every four dollars which the Government spends, it must borrow one more dollar to finance that spending.

There are only two ways to finance this deficit, either by printing money and debasing the currency, which has currently fallen to a base of 80 cents U.S., or by borrowing more money and thus ever increasing the deficit. This is a pattern which has been followed year after year, in good years and in bad years, this constant borrowing and escalation of the deficit. The interest burden on financing the deficit costs each individual—and that is just interest alone—$700 per year, or $16.7 billion. This constitutes in itself 4.8 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product.

It is interesting that in fact this interest burden is equal to the loss in GNP which we experienced during the last year. This effectively reduces private sector stimulation of the economy which is, of course, the engine of economic growth. It does this in three ways: first, it increases the tax burden for Canadians; second, it crowds out the private sector borrowing which is a proven job creater; and, third, productivity and growth are hampered by a crisis in confidence in the investment community instilled by the actions of a fiscally confused and irresponsible Government which continues to debase the Canadian currency through excessive Government borrowing.

Government borrowing for job creation is working effectively to ensure that real jobs, based on economic growth and increased productivity, are in fact being squeezed out, and will continue to be squeezed out as long as we keep this deficit process building, growing and increasing at such a ridiculous rate. As a result of this, the dollar falls, the cost of living goes up, interest rates continue to be high and job-creating capital investment seeks more friendly and lucrative atmospheres.

What is the way that Canada can redress this fiscally irresponsible philosophy? How can we bring economic prosperity and growth and, therefore, social justice to this land? Is the answer to be found in a Government which believes in a program of taxing and spending the country to the brink of bankruptcy? Is that the policy? I do not think so. Is the answer to borrow more and more to pay ever-increasing deficit payments on which you must keep borrowing again and again to pay in ever-increasing spirals? No, Mr. Speaker, these are not the answers. These are the policies of the Government, but they are not the answers to the economic crisis which is facing us today.

Creating jobs and ensuring humanitarian social assistance to those in need in these difficult recessionary economic times will occur if the Government concentrates on ensuring that real revenues rise. That is the only way it can happen. You cannot just keep borrowing; you have to create a climate of productivity, and from that tax revenues will flow to the Government. That is the way the problem has to be cured, rather than by borrowing and borrowing. The answer does lie in productivity and growth.

This country is a land of great human and natural resource potential. It can recover, but only if we reverse current Government economic trends. The way to do that is by changing the entire thought process, the mindset. What is important is not the creation of more money, but rather the creation of more real wealth. The essence of a sound, prosperous economy is not the quantity of money but, rather, the quality of money; the purchasing power of the dollar is more important than the number of dollars you in fact have. So many of us have experienced that personally or through our constituents. They perhaps have or make a lot of money, but what does it buy for them? Virtually less and less each year.

The key to economic recovery and prosperity for Canadians is, therefore, not for this Government to borrow more and spend more, because the mindset of this Government is impoverished by the lethargic, self-serving, bureaucratic and unproductive growth that hampers the true growth of the Canadian individual. Instead of taxing and spending, we have to put more money into people's hands which they can spend on consumer products and create jobs to get the economy and the Canadian people working again. The wrong people are borrowing and spending; the wrong people are, directly and indirectly, saving and investing, and lending to, the wrong people in the wrong institutions. People are lending their money to financial institutions; the institutions then tend to lend it back to Government, and then Government tries to redistribute it to the people of Canada. That process has to be reversed. What has to be done is for the Government to create a climate of confidence so that the people who are putting their money into savings right now will have enough confidence in the private sector, the individual small-businessman, to put that money into his hands to create more real jobs, more growth and more productivity.

We hear a lot about the plight of farmers, Mr. Speaker. Well, that is a very real plight. We have had a special emergency debate on this subject. I think that was important and I support it. But what about the small-businessman who is in exactly the same position? Our institutions and Government in turn are taking the small business generators of real jobs, growth and productivity, and just pulling them under faster and faster through bankruptcy and receivership.

It is time to give small business a chance. They have been creating jobs for 20 years and it is time for the Government of Canada to encourage borrowing by those small businesses to help them survive the economic crunch. Just get them over the next six months and then we can tag on to the American recovery, which is where part of the answer to our own growth problems lies. But the Government will not create that needed climate of confidence by taking more and more out of the economy through increased borrowing. That is not going to work. It is not the right measure at this time.

The key to economic recovery and prosperity for Canadians is to increase productivity itself. I think if I just stood here and said that the key is to increase productivity itself, and repeated it 5,000 times, that might be the way to create the kind of mindset we have to create in the Government. Productivity will occur once we cut the Gordian knot of Government growth and private sector stagnation. Canada's Gross National Product has the potential to be the most impressive of the OECD nations, but we are outstripping them all only in our own dismal performance of being twenty-fourth out of 24 nations. The growth in our GNP is a grotesquely negative 5 per cent, a full 1.5 per cent less than the next worse nation.

I want to know how this additional borrowing of another $19 billion is going to improve our performance. I do not understand how it will and I have not been told by anyone on the Government side. These GNP figures mean jobs have been lost for Canadians as the unemployment lines swell to 1.6 million, or 12.4 per cent of the work force. In British Columbia the figure is even higher at 14.2 per cent, and that is the very lowest estimate rather than the reality. The number of people looking for work is much, much higher.

These people, Mr. Speaker, must be given work so that they can fulfil themselves as individuals and help this nation prosper and grow. The American economy is starting to recover; 1983 will be a year of economic success due to lower tax rates, interest rates and energy prices. Canada has the opportunity to ride this wave of prosperity but instead the Government is borrowing its way into penury and poverty. The Government is flirting with the danger of structural deficits which will be endemic to our economic system and mortgage the future of our children and grandchildren. We can prevent this. We can bring prosperity and growth, jobs and economic renewal to this land by going back to the basics. This Bill is a further step away from sound economic policy and a better way of life for all Canadians, and on that basis I am unable to support it or the philosophy which has placed this unfortunate tragedy on Canadians.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have always listened intently to the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). Sometimes I hear things I like to hear, sometimes things I disagree with, but one way or another I always react. I must say to him as one who has spoken very loudly and clearly in support of Reaganomics that the world recession we are in—and it is a world recession, not a Canadian recession—can be blamed in large part on the policies of the U.S. Government, particularly those of the Reagan Government and its failure to get interest rates down at the rate I think they should come down.

I must say that the tax cuts the U.S. Government brought in have a very large bearing on the U.S. deficit. Studies that I have seen, particularly one done by a group at the University of Toronto Institute for Policy Analysis, indicate that our deficit is a recession deficit and that if the recession had not happened—in other words, if we could go back to 1979 when we had a reasonable growth picture—we would actually have a small surplus this year. The U.S. Government figures are quite different. The tax cuts and very large defence expenditures increase have created a situation where they would have a deficit in the order of $90 billion to $100 billion in any given year.

Mr. Wenman: Which is less than Canada's, on a proportionate basis.

Mr. McRae: That second figure was produced by the congressional budget office. We should understand that three out of every four dollars of increase in our deficit is caused by declining revenues, not by heavy expenditures. This is a debate that I always have with the Hon. Member and I hope we are approaching it in a genuine manner. I would advocate an increase in surplus over a short period of time in order to create employment and to stimulate the economy which, in the long run, should reduce the deficit. Some economists—and Informetrica is one—have conducted studies which indicate that the deficit will be reduced this year by about $5 billion because the economy is beginning to show some degree of improvement. I do not think stimulation will hurt the economy but, rather, will do some good.

• (1140)

I am also concerned about the fact that we have a long-term unemployment problem which must be faced. Even if the deficit were brought back to zero this year by a large growth factor, most economists tell us that 11 or 12 per cent of the population would still be unemployed, more or less on a permanent basis. The real problem is how to change that to not more than perhaps 6 or 7 per cent unemployment, taking into account those people who move between one job and another. With the present unemployment rate of 12 or 13 per cent, which we are told could continue for an indefinite period, we know that a large percentage of the population is not plugged in to the labour market. That means that basically they are not part of our society. The real problem is not the case of someone who is laid off for a few months, collects Unemployment Insurance benefits, then finds a job and is back in the labour force but, rather, those people who are not able to plug in to the labour market and who may be deprived of being part of the mainstream of Canadian life for most of their lives.

When we talk of unemployment we must take into account the young people in the 17 to 25 age bracket where the unemployment rate is about 30 or 35 per cent. We are talking about the young people coming on the labour market who do not find jobs and thus do not become part of the mainstream of society.

This is the real damage that is being done by the monetarists who claim that the economy must be slowed down to prevent inflation and all this unemployment. I have no problem with their concern about inflation. It is the cause of high interest rates and it creates all kinds of serious problems. However, there are other ways to eliminate inflation. One method is through the control mechanism. Another is to let the dollar float downward if necessary in order to keep interest rates down.

The problem that must be faced right away in this country is the large number of people who cannot find jobs. In my community of Thunder Bay the unemployment rate has been between 15 and 18 per cent for the last four or five months. It is rather difficult to interpret the figures because samples are very small, but a large number of people in the community just cannot find work at all. There is some hope that the housing market will take up and 200 or 300 apartment units will be built this year; but we must find some meaningful work for the large number of young people coming on to the labour market.

An example of what we might consider, although not the only one, is short-term public works, projects. We do not want to build a long-term structural deficit into our system but rather to infuse the economy fairly quickly and get a lot of things done.

In northern Ontario, New Brunswick, some parts of Nova Scotia, parts of the Prairies and certainly in British Columbia, forestry is a key industry. Foreign sales produce revenues of $22 billion to $23 billion per year, so there is no question that it is an industry that is vital to the country. During the last 30 or 40 years, however, our forests have been seriously abused. In northwestern Ontario large tracts of forest land are no longer productive. They have been cut over and have not been reforested in an intelligent way. This is a labour-intensive industry, Mr. Speaker, and sylviculture and refurbishing our resources in northern Ontario would require a tremendous amount of labour. We should begin projects like this immediately in order to restore confidence in the young people who form 17 or 18 per cent of the population and who are not able to plug in to the mainstream of our society.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the amendment put forward by the Conservative Party, this is the second time I have had the opportunity to make an intervention on Bill C-143. When I first addressed the Bill I spoke about the unemployment problem and the transition the country is going through, from the traditional industrial base that we have known for the last hundred years to the informational or high-tech aspect of our society.

Today I want to refer to one particular industry in order to give some idea of how short-sighted and wrong the present fiscal and monetary policies of the Government are with respect to borrowing. I refer to the farm implement industry which affects my riding, among others. Agricultural machinery used to be built not only in Brantford but in Chatham, Hamilton, Winnipeg and other centres in the country, so this is not a problem of central Canada but a nation-wide problem. Of course, the parts industry is also affected.

In 1982, the last year for which we have figures, we had a net deficit in agricultural implements of $985.4 million, just short of $1 billion. This is an absolute disgrace, Mr. Speaker. In 1981 the deficit was almost $2 billion, but the reduction is due to the fact that farmers do not have enough money to buy farm machinery. The roughly $1 billion which is represented here represents about 10,000 jobs in the agri-industry that should have been created in Canada but were not, even in a severe depression year, such as in 1982.

We often talk about the auto pact and its deficiencies. Generally speaking, over the years Canada has been a net loser in the auto pact as you can see if you go back to the mid-1960s, Mr. Speaker. We are also net losers year over year in farm implement manufacturing. I do not know why. We have a long record of making farm implements in this country. We can go back to the early days of the Masseys, the Fergusons, the Harrises and the famous Cockshutt family from Brantford. We have made very fine implements and yet we have a net deficit in this industry. Last year we lost 10,000 jobs. When we talk about unemployment and the loss of 10,000 jobs or 20,000 jobs, it really does not mean an awful lot unless you relate those numbers to a certain community. Let me take Brantford as an example. We have had on balance for the past two years, at any given time, except perhaps the spring of 1982 and the spring of 1981, some 5,000 agricultural implement employees out of work. That situation affects approximately 15,000 to 20,000 people in a community whose total population is 75,000 and is an absolute economic disaster. It is also a social disaster in many respects as well. The Government's policies allowed 10,000 jobs in that farm implement industry to be exported out of the country because of our net deficit of approximately $1 billion, but we could have handled easily half of the lost 10,000 jobs in Brantford with 5,000 on lay-off. That may be an oversimplification of the situation, but in terms of figures half of those 10,000 unemployed could have found work in the City of Brantford.

While we have 5,000 people on chronic, long-term unemployment, we have another very interesting situation developing. Again I am referring to my own constituency of Brantford which has two major industries, Massey-Ferguson and White Farm Implements. If those two industries were in financially better shape they would be using the time of the recession and their capital resources to tranfer into the high-tech field. Perhaps they could go into high-tech assembly, robotronics or micro-processing. There is no doubt in my mind that if either one or both of those industries survive, that is precisely what they will be doing in the next four or five years. It is estimated not only in farm machinery manufacturing but in all major manufacturing that at least 40 per cent of all assemblers now on lay-off will suffer permanent lay-off. In Brantford, 40 per cent represents about 2,000 workers.

Let us look at some other figures. For 1983-1984 the federal Government has budgeted $5.2 billion for research and development, most of which will be in high-tech. As I said when I spoke a couple of weeks ago on this same Bill, only $230 million has been budgeted for the skills programs, which in a sort of way addresses itself to the need for retraining in high-tech.

I will give you some specific examples, Mr. Speaker. If you are laid off at Massey-Ferguson today, whether you are an assembler, a mechanic or whatever, you may qualify first for a skills orientation program. If you are still on Unemployment Insurance, that Unemployment Insurance does not run out before the ILAP designation on July 27 and you find a seat at Mohawk College, you can remain on Unemployment Insurance at $200 a week. If you are married and have a couple of kids, you can probably just get by on that $200 a week. However, should you not be able to find a seat at Mohawk College at the Braneida campus or in Hamilton before July 27-and in all likelihood you will not because every seat is taken for the next six months—and your Unemployment Insurance runs out, when you do get placed in a skills program for upgrading and high-tech training, your income while on that program drops to a maximum of $104 a week for a married man with two children. That is how seriously the Government is taking the situation in my constituency of Brantford, which has an ILAP designation.

On the industrial side, things have been very successful. Some $13 million of federal funding has been allocated, with $37 million from the private sector to relocate or expand in Brantford, for a total of $50 million, which amount could possibly double between now and when the ILAP designation runs out on July 27. However, on the labour adjustment side we have fewer than 200 employees on long-term lay-off who are able to take advantage, or who can literally afford to take advantage, of the skills upgrading program or the program to introduce laid off assemblers to the new industrialism of the micro-chip.

The other major problem of trying to retrain foundry workers and assemblers at Massey-Ferguson, White Farm or other industries in Brantford—apart from the fact that there are not enough seats at Mohawk College, either at the Braneida campus in Hamilton or in Brantford—is that those retraining facilities are woefully inadequate. The staff, the counsellors and the teachers are doing everything they can to accommodate the need, but we just have not been spending the money on plant expansion in high-tech training facilities, not only in southern Ontario, where most of the manufacturing takes place, but also across Canada.

I would like to see even more money, if necessary borrowed, invested in high-tech retraining in all industries, not just farm implements. When the recession is over perhaps we can have jobs for at least most, if not all, instead of having a community of permanently laid off people amounting to between 12 per cent and 15 per cent of the labour force.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), I find this is the second time that I have had the privilege of talking to this piece of legislation. I am thankful certainly to Members of the PC Party who moved an amendment allowing us to continue on with this very important discussion. I hope in some small way, at least, we will be able to impress upon Members of the Government the need to change in terms of asking for such a tremendous amount of money, as represented in this particular Bill under debate.

The Hon. Member for Brant touched upon a very important area on which I will elaborate. I am speaking of the whole question of the farm machinery industry and the effect the recession has had, coupled with short-term Government policies, on that very important Canadian industry. This industry has a direct bearing on the part of the country from where I come, that of western Canada and a farm-oriented kind of riding. The Hon. Member talked about the economic hardship which farm machinery manufacturers face.

In my part of the country we do not see that economic hardship to the same extent, but we certainly see the effects of it. Over the past few years we have seen the closing down of many farm machinery dealerships. Farm machinery generally is not selling well because of the recession, low grain prices, low agricultural prices, and the uncertainty created by the Government in the over-all economic climate.

It is refreshing to see the other side of the question, which concerns the machinery manufacturer and the plant workers who are affected as much as the machinery dealers in western Canada who are going out of business and the farmers who cannot afford the buy that new machinery which they so desperately need in the next year.

Members are not so much concerned with the borrowing requirements in this Bill, which are substantial and, in fact, the largest in the history of the country, as with the arrogance shown by the Government in asking for this amount of money without giving us any reason for its expenditure of that amount. Any reasonable, thinking Member of Parliament cannot accept that request without knowing where the money will be spent.

A very good analogy to use in this case would be to consider what would happen if a small-businessman, farmer or housewife were to go to a bank and ask for $100,000. The bank manager would probably give that individual the $100,000 provided he received a guarantee on how the money would be paid back and whether the individual had any assets. Since Canada has enough assets with respect to borrowing the amount of money we are concerned with in this legislation, that part of the analogy is irrelevant; but if the person borrowing the money from the bank, Credit Union or Caisse Populaire totally refused to explain or vaguely explained how the money was to be spent, on what it would be spent and how it will be paid back, I do not believe that many managers of a financial institution would accept that type of request.

Similarly, as responsible Members of Parliament who are elected from all across the country to scrutinize as much as possible how the taxpayers' money is spent, we should be given some indication how it will be spent. We must remember that this money does not belong to the Government but to the taxpayers. The Government does not have any money other than what it receives from the taxpayers.

The Government has indicated that it intends to bring down its budget toward the end of April. This Bill will have been passed by that time. It is improper for the Liberal Government to proceed in this way, and that is why it has received strong opposition not only from the Opposition Party but across the country.

The effects of this legislation have left Canadians with a sense of uncertainty. They are as uncertain as we in the House about the direction in which this Government is heading. In fact, many people across the country are even more uncertain at this time—they are desperate. The Hon. Member for Brant told us of some of his constituents who are desperate at this time due to the Goverment's lack of direction or lack of assistance.

This desperation can be seen throughout the entire Canadian economy, but I would like to deal with that desperation as it affects agriculture. The agricultural community is in very serious difficulty at the present time. I would like to talk briefly about a Bill that was introduced by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) which attempts to deal with that situation. The Hon. Member was making an honest attempt to address the issue that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and, I assume, Members of the Treasury benches of the Government were not willing to address.

The Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex brought forward a Bill which is designed to take a different approach to farm foreclosures and bankruptcies. He should be given credit for taking the initiative to bring Bill C-653 forward. It is obvious that there are a small number of farmers who could use additional emergency protection to prevent foreclosures on their farms. Bill C-653, which has moved from second reading and into committee, is an attempt to provide that assistance and at least gives an indication that Members from all sides can get together and expedite legislation if we so desire.

Bill C-653 will be carefully studied in committee. While its intent is admirable, there are some grave concerns over the effects it will have if it is passed without any amendment. It could eliminate long-term lending by banking institutions in this country over the next number of years. I do not believe any Members of Parliament wish that to happen since it would be, to use an old saying, like cutting off our nose to spite our face. We must carefully consider the Bill since agricultural organizations have already indicated some concern over it; and since the banks are also properly concerned about it, Members of Parliament should be very concerned.

In my opinion, the role that banks have played in their dealings with agriculture should be both criticized and applauded—which does not happen too often in the House. While no one can see into the future, the banks certainly gave too much encouragement to farmers to borrow money during the latter part of the 1970s. However, I want to compliment the banks, which have in most cases been fair about lending money to farmers. When the Farm Credit Corporation is coupled with this measure, hopefully we will come through the current economic situation with which we are faced.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, once again we are under the guillotine as the debate on Bill C-143 draws to a close. I do not particularly like speaking with a guillotine over my head but I suppose we must do so when we are faced with a Government such as the one opposite, which is not particularly concerned about how matters are debated in the House. The Government makes no effort to listen to what the Opposition says and act upon that advice. Instead it comes forward with a Bill with the intention to bull it through, no matter what arguments are made by the other side.

The amendment which we are debating today would have the effect of allowing the Government, within what remains of this fiscal year, to borrow the $5 billion that it requests. We do not really quarrel with that since most of that money has already been spent. However, we would like to see the Government give more thought to its request for an additional $14 billion which it says it needs. In our opinion, the Government has not given enough consideration or thought to the effects of excessive borrowing.

In the few minutes that I have I would like to examine the effects of excessive borrowing. First, we must consider the cost of repayment, because I do not think the Government always takes this factor into account. It simply says that it needs the money and then asks to have authority to go to the capital markets of the country and borrow that money. But what about five or ten years down the road? The Government does not think about the consequences of its immediate action today.

The fact is that as one borrows and borrows and piles up more and more debt, the cost of servicing the debt goes up year by year. A couple of figures might be of interest. In the 1968-69 year, interest payments on the national debt amounted to 2 per cent of Gross National Product. I think that is a fairer way of putting it, rather than in dollar terms, because dollars have been affected by inflation. However, in the 1982-83 fiscal year, the interest on the debt will be 5 per cent of Gross National Product. We are pretty sure what it will be because we are nearly at the end of the fiscal year. The cost of repayment or the cost of interest on the public debt has increased by two and a half times since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office. The interest payments now amount to $1,700 per Canadian taxpayer.

Let us consider it from a slightly different perspective. Again, in 1968-69 one dollar in nine from federal revenues went toward debt servicing. In the period which is just ending, the 1982-83 fiscal year, it has been necessary to use one dollar in three from federal revenues solely for debt servicing. I wonder how much longer can we carry on along this road to ruin?

I was carefully listening to a speech given a few days ago on this very subject by the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain). He said that the Government is leaving a legacy of debt in Canada for generations and generations to come. It is doing this without proper thought or consideration.

It is funny that in Canada, a country which is so inherently wealthy, we are taxed to the hilt, yet we, speaking collectively, as Government, find ourselves with no money to spend. How can that be? There are billions of dollars generated from public revenues, but the Government never seems to have enough. That is obviously because it has not given proper consideration to the management of public affairs, and particularly to the management of public financial affairs in Canada. This is due to this borrowing which has taken place, greater and greater amounts each year, since 1968. Thirty per cent or one-third of all the money which is now coming in is going toward servicing the debt which has piled up over the years since 1968.

This is why our social programs and services are going downhill and why we find ourselves without sufficient financial resources to maintain the health care standards to which we have been accustomed in this country. This is why useful public works are at a standstill.

I was listening carefully to the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) and he mentioned the fact that useful capital expenditures, which would pay dividends in the years to come, are not being made. They are not capable of being made because we have no money with which to make them. All that money, all that public revenue, has been used to service the debt. If we had looked after our affairs since 1968, public revenues would have been sufficient to make these necessary capital investments in roads, bridges, colleges and hospitals. In so doing, if that money had been invested for those purposes, it would have created the desperately needed employment in Canada.

Right now we are experiencing the worst of both worlds in this country because of past mismanagement. We are saddled with very high unemployment and we are unable to make those public investments which would have cut into that unemployment and created jobs for Canadians.

Another effect of the excessive borrowing of the present Liberal Government is that private borrowing is crowded out. In this country, there is at all times a bidding match going on within the capital markets for the available dollars, for the available savings. If Government comes into this market with such requirements as it has, $19 billion in this instance, and is prepared, because it must, to pay the high interest rates in order to attract that capital, then it is self-evident that there is no money left over for the private borrower, or he or she is forced to compete with these excessively high interest rates to get his or her share of the available savings. When the Government has a new bond issue, it must make the rate on that bond attractive; otherwise, people will not buy it. It must inch up the interest rate so as to attract people to lend money to the Government.

Most of the money the Government borrows, whether it is through Canada Savings Bonds or other obligations of the Government, is the accrued savings of Canadians. The Government is not using those savings for capital purposes; it is using them for current account purposes. What is actually happening in Canada is the destruction of capital. Canadians save and put by money, dollar by dollar perhaps $100 a month, and then the Government borrows that money. Instead of using it for capital purposes, it uses it for current account purposes, thereby destroying the accumulated capital. Private borrowers are priced out of the market.

Am I correct in assuming that my ten minutes has already expired? That being the case, I will give Your Honour the next thrilling instalment of this debate when my time comes up again tomorrow on third reading.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister, in his various remarks over the last week, has been referring to consultation with regard to the budget and, shall we say, the whole of the Government's economic program. However, let us examine that in light of the requirements of this particular Bill. The Bill seeks borrowing authority of about $19 billion.

As my colleagues have said, we have no real quarrel with the $5 billion in Part I of the Bill; that is, the balance for this particular year. However, the Government has used the provisions of Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act. We have seen publicity in the newspapers to the effect that this is an obscure Section of the Financial Administration Act and that the process is perhaps somewhat strange or not often used. In terms of the Act, it merely states that the Minister, with the consent of the Governor in Council, may borrow, for periods of up to six months, those sums which are required to pay Government obligations and for which there is insufficient money in the general revenue fund. There is nothing gravely strange about that; it has been used before.

The Government, as the Minister said, has been going to the Treasury bill market every week. There is a reason why the Government has been going weekly to the Treasury bill market. These are short-term Treasury bills, usually a maximum of six months, but the Government is using this procedure, along with actions by the Bank of Canada, to control the movement of the interest rate. These are being used as a tool basically at the present time to keep the interest rate in Canada sufficiently higher than the interest rate in the United States so as to buttress the level of the Canadian dollar.

The Canadian dollar has been floating since 1971. Canada is not involved, as France was last week and indeed has been for many months prior to the events of last week, in trying to defend a certain level of the Canadian dollar against the fixed amount of the reserve U.S. dollar or against part of the monetary snake in Europe.

I say frankly that the Minister is conning the Canadian public by what he says about consultations in what was talked about by the former Minister of Finance in the budgetary statement of June 28. Consultation is consultation pure and simple. It is not talking things over after the event. Last summer's process of hearing public representations on the Ways and Means motion was not consultation. There were changes but that was not a result of consultation. Instead, it was hearing representations after proposals had been set down in quick-setting cement.

The Minister talks about consultations now in various areas with regard to the budget. How is that different from previous years? National associations, such as the Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and any number of other groups, have filed briefs with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on the subject of budgetary provisions precisely as they are doing now. Maybe the minister is talking more, he may be talking in public more, but that is not the consultation that we would like to see.

It is unfortunate that the public is not aware of what was said by both the questioners and the Minister during the Committee hearings on Bill C-143, because there the Minister simply adopted a stonewall, hard-nosed attitude. He did not try to explain. He did not even say that he had changed his mind. He told us in October that he would present a budget some time during these weeks after which he would ask for borrowing authority, and that is a proper sequence. Somehow or other he has become enamoured of what is a bad practice by this Government, and I am surprised in some ways that it was accepted by the Chair, that it could come forward again with an omnibus Bill.

My colleague for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) had an amendment which would have eliminated Part II of the Bill, and that is precisely the position we are taking. We want a budget showing how the Minister proposes to raise the moeny to face those $88 billion of Main Estimates and loans for fiscal year 1983-1984. Then in the normal course, he would say that he has to borrow. We know he has to borrow, but how much? The Minister is asking us for carte blanche, in asking us for $14 billion. As a matter of fact, he can carry over $2 billion from the Bill of 1982-1983 into 1983-1984. So in effect he will have provisions for $16 billion.

He does not tell us when he is going to come forward with another borrowing Bill. The year 1982-1983 gave us the rather untidy spectacle of the Government coming forward for borrowing authority four times. But 1982-1983 was possibly one of the most disastrous years in Government fiscal planning in that the estimated budgetary deficit was $16 billion, if I remember rightly. As a result of escalations along the way, this figure could now reach approximately $29 billion. There are economists and other monetary authorities in the country who say that, notwithstanding the fact that the Government has quoted a figure of approximately $26 billion, the actual figure may be closer to $29 billion.

Based on the performance of the last two years where Department of Finance officials have been proved to be so wrong in their forecasts, I am rather inclined to go along on past performance and say that those independent economic authorities, with their estimates of $29 billion or thereabouts, will likely be more in the right than will the experts in the Department of Finance.

My colleague for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and others have indicated why we would oppose this Bill. I am opposed to giving the Government a blank cheque at this time, and I would vote against this stage of the Bill.

• (1230)

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be speaking today to Bill C-143. The House is now considering an amendment proposed by the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) which would in effect cut the borrowing authority requested by the Government by about $14 billion. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) asked the House for a borrowing authority of $19 billion because the borrowing requirements for the financial year ending this week amounted to $5 billion, and because the projected deficit for 1982-83 was higher than expected. The Minister is asking for authority to borrow $14 billion more because he wants to ensure that the Government is able to carry out its debt program without disrupting financial markets. The Minister is requesting an additional authority of $14 billion for the first part of the 1983-84 financial year, not because he wants, as the previous Member told the House, a blank cheque, not because he wants Parliament to authorize him to borrow money he has no right to spend. Parliament must still authorize the Government's expenditures, and Parliament must determine how the Government is going to spend this money.

With its amendment, the Opposition is telling the Goverment that next week, when the next financial year begins, it will have to come back to Parliament to ask for another increase in order to be able to borrow $14 billion. Therefore, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) needs $19 billion and not just $5 billion. The Minister explained why in his speech to the House on February 17 of this year. He wants to ensure that when the Government starts borrowing on the money market, it can do so in an orderly manner without being obliged, as might happen, to borrow excessively large amounts during several weeks and thus put pressure on interest rates. Any Member of this House who is aware of the economic situation in this country at the present time will have to admit that between now and the months of June, July or August, 1983, it would be impossible to conduct Government operations otherwise than in a deficit situation. For instance, 72 per cent of the increase in the deficit since October last year was caused either by interest rates that were higher than expected when the loans were contracted or by a drop in Government revenue. In a recession, companies are making less money and as a result paying less in taxes. More workers are working shorter hours, and also paying less income tax. Many people are unemployed, so there are fewer people paying taxes, and as a result, Government revenue is not as high. It is the only way to change the situation by June, July or August, 1983. In fact, the Opposition wants to give the impression that the additional $14 billion requested by the Government for the next financial year is supposed to cover all the Government's borrowing requirements for 1983-84, which is not the case at all, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance made it clear in his speech on February 17 that it was only to cover requirements up to this summer, because whether we like it or not, the Government's deficit for 1983-84 may be as much as $24 or $25 billion. We hope that the recession has bottomed out and that we are now on our way to economic recovery. If that is the case, and if the encouraging signs we have seen, especially since the beginning of this year, mean that companies will make more profits faster, that people will go back to work faster and be paying taxes at a faster rate than expected, perhaps the deficit will not be as high as was expected a few weeks ago.

On the week-end I read that people were now predicting that the deficit for 1983-84 might be only $24 or $25 billion instead of $30 billion. However, next fall, the Government will have to come back to Parliament for another increase in borrowing authority. Thus, if the Opposition were to cut the Government's borrowing authority by $14 billion, which is what the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) intends to do in his amendment, it would mean that in the next financial year, there would be only about $2 billion left to conduct the Government's operations. That will not make sense at all. The Government would have to come back to the House, probably within a month or six weeks, for further borrowing authority. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and all the Members of the Opposition who know anything about economics know perfectly well that the Government is going to be in a deficit position by June, July and August of this year, and they also realize that Parliament will have to authorize Government expenditures. If Parliament does not want to do so between now and June, July and August of this year, then it should not, so why should we waste our time and run the risk that the Government intervention on the money market will not take place in an orderly fashion? It means the Government would have to introduce another Bill in the House in April or May, instead of waiting until this fall, when another request will be necessary in any case, because the present borrowing authority will not cover more than June, July and August, since it represents about half the deficit projected for 1983-84.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Government is acting wisely by increasing its deficit in a recession, because otherwise, the full weight of the recession would fall on the people and regions that are most vulnerable in this country. Some areas are particularly sensitive to the effects of a recession, and my riding is one of them. If the Government had not decided to carry a large deficit at a time of economic recession, it would mean that those regions and those people who are particularly vulnerable in our society would carry the full weight of the recession. I think that in the present economic situation, it makes sense to use this country's financial resources to ensure that the cost of the recession to economically vulnerable individuals, groups and regions will not be as heavy and I therefore think that the Government is very sensible in taking advantage of the credit available in Canada to stimulate the economy.

Another factor we must not forget is that in a recession, although unemployment is higher than usual, there are still people working. In Canada, there are still people working and saving money. In a recession, there is a psychological reaction that makes people afraid to spend. In Canada today, 13 per cent of disposable income is invested in savings. If the Government did not intervene to borrow these funds and to reinvest them in the country in order to stimulate the economy, it would delay economic recovery, because today, companies and businessmen, as well as individuals, are afraid to invest. They are afraid to borrow substantial amounts of money. Therefore, if governments and not only the Federal Government but also the Provincial Governments, did not borrow this money which represents 13.5 per cent of the disposal income of Canadians today, it would be necessary to invest those savings elsewhere, outside Canada, and that would delay the recovery of the economy.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, it follows almost naturally and automatically that in a situation like this one, governments, and this includes the entire public sector, should borrow while ensuring that programs are directed towards those who are affected by the recession and at the same time, that Government action should be taken to invest in economic development, which will boost economic recovery. These funds will be borrowed to provide for continued economic activity in this country. Consumers sometimes complain that the deficit is too high in a recession. These are the people who would probably get us into a really big depression.

Mr. Speaker, that is why the Government's deficit is higher today, and I shall repeat, it is because Government revenue has dropped and certain expenditures must be maintained in the country to encourage economic recovery.

[English]

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter this debate and to support the proposed amendment of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I do not tend to agree with his economic policies too often, but in this case it is an intelligent way to deal with the proposed borrowing of the Government, which is completely out of control. What is really at issue here is whether it is realistic for such an unprecedented amount of money to be voted into the hands of the Government without a budget before us. I do not think at any time in the past has a Government ever asked for so much and given so little information to Parliament as to what those expenditures are really for.

Bill C-143 is the fourth major borrowing in eight months. We had Bill C-111 in June of last year for $6.6 billion, C-125 in July, 1982 for $7 billion, C-128 in November, 1982 for $4 billion, totalling $17.6 billion in borrowing during that period. When we add Bill C-143, it totals $36.6 billion in borrowing in less than a year. This borrowing alone as proposed by the Government is in excess of $1,000 for every man, woman and child in this country.

The few Government speakers who have risen, including the Hon. Member who just finished, Mr. Speaker, have not given us any reasons why Members on the Opposition side should vote to allow the $14 billion to be borrowed without the Government putting forward a strategy, or at the very least some kind of outline of a budget.

With respect to the $5 billion, I believe most Members of the House can glean from the Supplementary Estimates, and from the Main Estimates of the last year, some idea of what those expenditures are for. But to ask for $14 billion, however, which takes us from April 1 to October, 1983, is really quite irresponsible. The request of the Government for that kind of a blank cheque must be turned down by any Member of this House who is seriously representing his or her constituency. I heard a Liberal Member saying that we can have a look at the Main Estimates. Well, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) is here. He and I share the knowledge from our discussion of the Main Estimates that the intended expenditures of the Department of the Environment are not all included in the Main Estimates now. We both know that.

I believe it is irresponsible for any Member of this House to vote through a borrowing of $14 billion without expenditures being tacked down. Certainly I know that if the New Democratic Party were sitting on the Government side, there would be much howling from the Liberal Members of "Give you guys $14 billion? We don't know what you are going to do with it." And the Tories would be doing the same thing. Yet when the Members of the Liberal Party rise to speak about it, they say: "Oh, it's fine, you have the Main Estimates; you know what we are going to do".

I will point out a few things on the record, Mr. Speaker, which will give you some idea why Members on this side, both the NDP and the Conservatives, are pretty concerned about the unsound economic strategy of the Liberal Party. Tom Walkom of The Globe and Mail said just last week: "While it is not unheard of for a Government to ask for some interim borrowing authority, a $14 billion request without a budget is unprecedented". The Government would borrow $5 billion, $6 billion and $7 billion without a budget, but we are being asked for $14 billion, almost $1,000 for every man, woman and child in the country.

The question is, Mr. Speaker, can this kind of action continue, the ever-increasing borrowing, without the Government providing some detail of its intended use? Surely, what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is proposing here is to turn Parliament into a rubberstamp for out of control Liberal pork-barrelling. Just over a year ago, Mr. Speaker, in the committee on energy matters, this same Minister, "Old ironclad", came in and asked for a $100 million write-off from Canada's taxpayers for another Liberal blunder, which was heavy water production with the Candu system. With no prospect of sales and no predicted sales, the plants are still running in full operation. In the riding of the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), they have just written off $130 million again for this year just to keep 700 jobs producing a commodity which has had no major sales in or outside of Canada in the past four years. I believe Canadians have a right to know, Mr. Speaker, that those 700 jobs are being underwritten by $200,000 a year, when in other areas of Canada, such as my riding or the riding of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), where we have 40 per cent unemployment, all we get for various Government programs is a couple of hundred thousand dollars. That is how much it costs to create one of these heavy water jobs, and it is what we get to provide sustenance and food on the table for thousands of people in our ridings.

We must ask, Mr. Speaker, how much hard-earned capital can be diverted into industries in some areas where Liberals try, and in some cases successfully, to obtain their places in this House through the diversion of taxpayers' money. And what about the billions of dollars owed in back taxes by the corporate sector, now roughly equal to the present deficit? Why are not the Government Members, and for that matter the Tories, clamouring for it to be paid in? Is it now so close to election time that it might jeopardize the chances of Tweedledum and Tweedledee for election donations? Why is the Minister not proposing a dramatic increase in taxes? Why shift the tax burden to the young and the unborn generations? The answer to that is quite clear: if the Minister of Finance and the Liberals were proposing to increase taxes in this country by the rate at which they are intending to borrow, and workers came home with $100 or $200 a month taken off their pay cheques, there would be chaos in this country and that Liberal Party would not be governing for very long.

Instead of doing the honest thing, which is to explain what it wants the money for, the Government is trying to go through the back door and the debt is simply going to be passed on to Canadians as yet unborn. I wonder how high a debt the Minister of Finance plans to leave as a legacy to his own children, whether $10,000, $20,000, $100,000, simply so the Liberals can continue to float what is clearly recognized in this country as an unsound economic policy. What is the money for? Is it for the Liberals to try to buy voters' confidence back? We know they are not doing it through a sophisticated industrial strategy which would decentralize the economy, encourage conservation, allow us to pursue a soft energy path now recognized by many scientists as the only way to go, which would allow us to revitalize our rural communities, put our forestry workers back to work, replant our ravaged forests or clean up our environment. Even though 75 per cent of Canadians now would support a lowering of their standard of living in order to have a cleaner environment, we see the federal Government doing very little either to clean up the Great Lakes, stop acid rain or deal with those very important matters.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, the money is going, at the rate of $800 a day, to Donald Macdonald to help write off the $100 million loss on Consolidated Computers and to continue paying the tens of millions of dollars on Mirabel Airport, when small airports, particularly in western Canada, can no longer get any money even to pave the potholes on the main runway. The money will continue to go to grants, including 80 cents on the dollar to many oil companies which already have large profits and which, as demonstrated by a report prepared by Consumer and Corporate Affairs, have ripped off consumers for hundreds of millions of dollars. Yet the Government does nothing to try to recoup that massive rip-off and try to help consumers with their cost of heating oil or gas.

What is there for home owners and renters? There have been no Government speakers who have risen and said: "There will be something for home owners and for renters". There is nothing for them, Mr. Speaker. What did the elderly get? They got it right in the neck. They got a 6 per cent and 5 per cent cut in real pension income. This is denied, of course, by Government Members, but any pensioner who takes a look at what he should be getting in terms of the present rate of inflation knows that he has been ripped off. They get nothing, Mr. Speaker, for building the country. The Liberals talk a lot but when it comes time to put cash down, the cash goes to the corporate sector.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, what the unborn will get in terms of just the $14 billion debt unless Members on the Government side accede to the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, which is a very realistic proposal and should be supported by anyone in this House who understands economics and what Parliament requires in order to vote properly on such a massive borrowing. Young Canadians will get a cut in Family Allowances. Those in schools, college, training schools and universities also get a cut, thanks to the shortsightedness of this Government's policy.

But where is the $14 billion going—setting the $5 billion aside for a moment? We need to know this, Mr. Speaker. It is irresponsible to ask for unbudgeted funds. What banker would lend anyone an amount of even $14,000, let alone $14 billion, without knowing what they are going to do with it? What federal bureaucrat, even under that Government administration, would lend or grant any money without at least some temporary guidelines? Where will the money go? It will go to corporations like the CPR in order to pay for the Prime Minister's doubletalk on double-track, while increasing by five times the cost to farmers for grain movement by 1990. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) wants to give hundreds of millions of dollars to the CPR while destroying the Crow rate. We know that only 6 per cent of Canadians are farmers now. The number is down dramatically from even ten years ago. The average age of farmers this year will creep up to the age of 60. Is it Liberal policy to turn farms in this country over to the corporate sector? We love to hear the Tories and Liberals screaming that the NDP would land bank all the property, but it is interesting to see what the right-wing strategy in terms of farming is. That is certainly what the changes to the Crow rate are.

With two million unemployed and with borrowing at $2 billion a month, I believe it would only be responsible for all Members of this House to support the amendment now proposed, which is to reduce that borrowing from $14 billion to $1 on behalf of all future generations of this country.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): I would like to respond today, Mr. Speaker, specifically to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). I do not know what it is, but I believe there is some revolution in medical science which has occurred which not many of us have caught on to yet. Because somehow decent-meaning people get elected on the other side of the House, something is taken out and a cassette is put in, and what would otherwise be grossly illogical becomes parroted; and the attempt appears to be to sell that as both logic and true.

Let me refer to two specific comments made by the Hon. Member for Gloucester. His argument was that we should not be concerned about a proposal to borrow $14 billion for the next fiscal year in advance of receiving a budget because, after all, it is not for the whole year. It is not as though the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), said the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), was trying to borrow everything he needs next year; he is only trying to borrow part of it. The fact that that in itself is a violation of Parliament's basic tradition and right does not seem to fuss him. It should as a Parliamentarian, but it does not seem to.

• (1250)

Mr. Breau: Your Party did the same thing in 1979.

Mr. Bosley: No, we did not. The interjection is that we tried to do a $14 billion borrowing in 1979 without a budget. That is nonsense and the Member knows it.

The other statement made by the Hon. Member for Gloucester should be repeated on the record because it reminds me of a statement made by another Liberal Member a long time ago about what it is to be a Liberal. You will remember that statement: anything goes. The Hon. Member's statement was to the effect that if the Government did not borrow the $14 billion, economic recovery would be impeded.

Mr. Breau: That is right.

Mr. Bosley: He went on to say that after all, Canadians would not loan that money to Canadians, they would ship it out of the country. The only borrower in this country in which the lending institutions have any confidence is the Government of Canada. That is the implication of suggesting the money would not be invested in Canada if the Government did not borrow it.

Mr. Breau: You know that I did not say that.

Mr. Bosley: I know exactly what the Hon. Member said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) does have the floor.

Mr. Breau: Unfortunately.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I am never concerned about being heckled, I can assure you. When one is dissecting doubletalk, it is not surprising that the person who originated it in the first place wants a second kick at it.

The simple fact of the matter is this. To my knowledge, and the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) put it on the record a minute ago, no Government has ever had the audacity to come to the House of Commons and ask for anything like $14 billion without a clear budgetary statement for the year ahead.

For the sake of the Hon. Member for Gloucester I want to deal with why that breach of the traditions of Parliament is so important, why we oppose it, and why we support the amendment of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Let me remind the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, that last June I believe it was, or whenever Bill C-125 came before the House, when the Government's financial needs were estimated to be roughly $17 billion and it tried to borrow $21 billion, this Party fought that and the Government agreed to reduce the provision to the then known borrowing requirements. The Government agreed to a proposal made by our side that the Bill be reduced to $17 billion and that, if later the $4 billion was needed, this Party would support a limited debate on the $4 billion. That turned out to be necessary, which is not surprising because, after all, this Government's economic policy is just to keep borrowing and spending and never worry about who is going to have to pay the bill.

Mr. Breau: There was a recession.

Mr. Bosley: That the recession was coming was not unknown, except perhaps to the Hon. Member for Gloucester. At that time, Mr. Speaker, Members of the Government talked about what good Parliamentarians they were in agreeing to defer the debate on the $4 billion at the time not known, in budget terms, to be necessary. At the same time we were told: "You are right, we ought not to come to the House of Commons for further borrowing authority unless we have presented a budget". Now, six months later, because the Government does not dare bring in a budget, because it does not have the courage to bring in a budget, Mr. Speaker, the Government tries an end run around the traditions of 110 years of this House of Commons. That end run is this: we do not know what our budget is going to say, we do not know what our spending is going to be, we do not know what our revenue projections are going to be—

Mr. Breau: Look at the estimates.

Mr. Bosley: —so we will table something called the Main Estimates, which every Member of this House knows is out of whack in any given year, under this Government anywhere from 5 per cent to 15 per cent. The Government calls that its spending estimates when everyone who watches Parliament knows that is not reliable, particularly under this Government.

Then the Government invents a new tradition. It says: all we have to do to justify borrowing is table a document where we may spend, without any commitment to a budgetary document, without any debate or any of the normal ties attached to a budget vote. It is a shameful way to avoid presenting to the House of Commons the Estimates in a budget context for the next fiscal year.

That is absolutely clear to parliamentary watchers, and that is why members of the media, particularly business columnists, are so astounded. I refer again to what the Hon. Member for Skeena has read into the record from a columnist in The Globe and Mail. That is why those analysts are so astounded, for the sake of the Hon. Member for Gloucester, Mr. Speaker, that this end run is being tried.

Let me put it, if I can, in a different context that perhaps even the Hon. Member can understand. Can he get up in his place and tell me or any Member of this House what precisely the period of time the $14 billion in borrowing—in other words, $14 billion in deficit—is to cover? Does anyone know? The answer is that nobody knows. The Minister of Finance knows full well that if he got up in this House and said: "Well, that is for the next four months", or five months, three months or six months, he would be signalling what he expects the deficit to be in budget year 1983-84. Of course he is not going to do that, because once Canadians discover precisely how bad the financial situation of this Government is, they are going to be equally astounded.

The Government has to learn two important points, Mr. Speaker. That is best exemplified by the fact that last year the Government of Canada was in the securities market for a total of 51 per cent of the net securities issued in Canada. You cannot borrow your way out of the problems we have in this country.

Mr. Breau: What about the Americans?

Mr. Bosley: The Government is going to have to learn that.

The second point, Mr. Speaker, is that each year under this Government the interest alone on accumulated debt climbs as a percentage of the Gross National Product. In fiscal 1982-83 it comes out at 4.8 per cent of the Gross National Product, up from 2 per cent when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first took office. Somewhere along the line the Government is going to start coming clean with Canadians, coming clean with the House, and understand and honour parliamentary traditions. But most importantly, somewhere along the line this Government is going to have to learn the basic lessons of economics, that if you go on spending what you do not have, trying to fool people with their own money, eventually you will lose because the people know better.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, would it be reasonable to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

AGRICULTURE

NEW CEREAL GRAIN TRANSPORT POLICY—MAINTENANCE OF QUEBEC BENEFITS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Last Saturday, in Quebec City, Madam Speaker, the Quebec wing of the General Council of the Liberal Party of Canada unanimously adopted a motion on the new grain transport policy announced on February 1.

The delegates have asked the Canadian Government that compensatory guarantees be written in the legislation so that Quebec farmers will not be unfairly treated should the equity rules in Canada be no longer respected once the new policy has been implemented. The delegates have also asked that the dairy policy be established on a lasting basis so that spokesmen for the agricultural sector will not be forced each year to make numerous representations to the Canadian Government in order that the program be maintained. The delegates also want the Livestock Feed Board of Canada to be given more extensive powers with a view to offsetting the major role of the Canadian Wheat Board in Canada.

Although the resolution dealt with many other aspects, its main purpose was to maintain the rights acquired by Quebec in a sector of the economy where, in recent years, the Canadian Government has contributed to the improvement of the situation. Some delegates expressed grave concern about the scandalous distorsion caused by Mr. Parizeau's progressive energy tax which has created a gap of tens of millions of dollars to the detriment of the overall economy of Quebec.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—LOBBY AGAINST CHANGE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, the representatives of the White Crow Movement, who are in the gallery today, have one purpose and one purpose only—the retention of the present statutory Crowsnest Pass freight rates. Hon. Members are being lobbied by these representatives today and tomorrow. These farmers will be seeking a simple "Yes" or "No" answer to the question of Crow retention. From the New Democratic Party they will get a unanimous "Yes" for Crow rate retention, and they will get it in Parliament and across the country in every Province.

I am certain the Conservatives will tell these representatives that they oppose the Pepin plan. But opposing Mr. Pepin will not keep the Crow. We hope our lobbyists will be seeking a clear position from each Conservative MP, because there is no provincial Conservative consensus in the West. The federal Liberal Party seems committed to Crow change, but provincial Liberal Parties in Saskatchewan and Quebec want the Crow kept and they are putting pressure on their Members here.

These citizens with the White Crow Movement have come 2,000 miles to tell us how the loss of the Crow rate will affect them as farmers, members of communities, and as producers in the larger Canadian economy.

Their message is a compelling one. The New Democratic Party position is clear. We would keep the Crow. I trust all Members will give the White Crow people a thorough hearing.

PENITENTIARIES

OVERCROWDING AT DRUMHELLER INSTITUTION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Drumheller Institution was built to handle a maximum of 400 prisoners; it now houses 560 inmates.

The Institution was widely advertised when it was built as medium security, to house young offenders. Its population now includes inmates of all ages, and about half of the prisoners should be in a maximum security institution.

The Drumheller Institution has no segregation cells and, with little work available, most of the prisoners are in the open room at the same time. This, along with double bunking in seven foot by nine foot cells, and insufficient places for the inmates to eat, creates an inflammatory situation. As a result, young offenders who are serving their first sentence for non-violent acts that forced no one else to do anything wrong, and who are not really criminals at all, who realize that they made a mistake and want to put that behind them and start a new life, are now being harassed by older inmates to a point that is hardly bearable. This situation is most unfair and is certainly doing nothing to rehabilitate the young offenders. It is actually breeding criminals.

I call on the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) to commence at once to move the maximum security type prisoners to a maximum security institution where there are facilities to handle them, and to grant early parole to first-time offenders who committed non-violent mistakes.

The situation is so tense now that we could have another Archambault if action is not taken.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLIGHT OF UKRAINIAN, YURI SHUKHEVYCH

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I wish to make a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21 regarding an issue that is very important to many in my constituency of Parkdale-High Park.

The Ukrainian Canadian Committee has named this Yuri Shukhevych Week—a week hat has come to mean a great deal for the Ukrainian people. Yuri was first arrested in 1948, at the age of 14, and sentenced to ten years of imprisonment in Vladimir Prison, for being the son of Roman Shukhevych, the Commander in Chief of the Ukrainian Partisan Army (UPA). By the end of his prison term in March of 1987, Shukhevych will have spent 35 years in prison and exile. Hence, he has come to represent much more to the Ukrainian people than simply another dissident in a concentration camp; he has come to represent their aspirations for a free Ukraine.

It is fitting that we remeber Yuri today, for today is his birthday.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. These statements should not be used for congratulating or commemorating someone. I understand the Hon. Member's feelings, but unless he has a statement to make on a particular issue, I cannot accept his statement.

Mr. Flis: As Chairman of the Canadian Parliamentary Helsinki Group, I urge the Department of External Affairs to make representations to the Soviet Union Government, through the appropriate channels, for the immediate release of Yuri Shukhevych and others who find themselves in a similar predicament.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REDUCTION IN SENTENCE FOR RAPE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, last week the Court of Appeal of Alberta reduced the sentence of a man convicted of rape, from eight years to four years, for reasons that must be abhorrent to all decent pepole, and especially this Parliament which recently passed amendments on sexual assault.

The victim of the sexual assault is crippled by polio, has braces on her legs, and uses a crutch. She met her assailant, a former neighbour, in a bar, and went back to his apartment for beer and marijuana. Surely we should not have to explain that accepting the invitation to a legal beer or illegal marijuana does not imply acceptance of sexual assault.

The judgment states that "sexual intercourse took place after a short time", but the better word is assault, for, as the judgment notes, "the jury found that it was without her consent and violence was used". The accused was, at that time, serving a three-year sentence for a previous rape.

According to the original trial judge, "I've sat on the bench for ten years, and the circumstances of this crime, I can say, without exception, are the worst I've ever seen."

A four year sentence is not inconsequential, but we must take exception to the reasoning, to wit: "We think the circumstances are such that it would not have been surprising to that young woman that something might well happen to her going up to the man's apartment between two and three o'clock in the morning—"

The courts must learn that "No" means "No" at two o'clock in the morning, three o'clock, or high noon.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELEASE OF RAPIST IN VANCOUVER

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, the Government seems to be losing sight of the perspective that society must be protected against anti-social behaviour and those convicted of it; that the public, too, has rights, along with convicted felons; that the penalty for crime is punishment; and that, even though we temper punishment with compassion and mercy, we must accept the fact that certain cases are above redemption and rehabilitation.

In Vancouver this weekend a convicted rapist, described by the Chief Justice of British Columbia as "a menace to society", has been set free by a court when it ruled the Parole Board acted illegally by arresting him upon his release on mandatory supervision. The B.C. Chief Justice also said "the liberty of the subject has to be waived in juxtaposition to the safety of the public at large."

I realize that the Supreme Court of Canada is dealing with the issue on May 17, but I just want to put the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) on notice that Canadians have had their fill of animals being returned to society to strike again.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FUTURE OF "REACH FOR THE TOP" PROGRAM

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I should like to call attention to the fact that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation may cancel one of its better programs, "Reach for the Top". The Canadian content of this program is 100 per cent. It features outstanding Canadian students—intellectual stars at the teenage level.

Everyone agrees that our most precious Canadian resource is our young people. I am certain that all Canadians want "Reach for the Top" to continue. Let us hope they will write to the CBC and let it know. As Members of Parliament, let us see that the CBC gets the message when we are studying the estimates.

We suggest that this program be continued. We are advised, however, that both regional and network program directors made a recommendation that the series be cancelled. They gave the reason as "not reaching the intended target audience". I would suggest that all that is required is a little imagination—a change of format and possibly more play-offs, more short-term competition. Surely the minds at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation can find a way to save this all Canadian, young peoples' show.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

AGE OF RETIREMENT POLICY

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, today in Montreal a matter involving RCMP Corporal Zephreim Fortin is being heard by the Federal Court.

The issue is an important one for many RCMP members, involving the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which seems to be violated by the discharge or retirement procedures of the RCMP which, coincidentally, were changed last Thursday by administrative bulletin AM536. Very briefly, the issue which is being joined by a writ of prohibition by counsel for Corporal Fortin, involves the existing practice of retiring RCMP members at a lower age level if they have a lower rank, or perhaps to put it differently, on the basis of rank rather than ability.

● (1410)

On October 20, last year, the Commissioner of Human Rights, Mr. Fairweather, expressed his views on this procedure in the case of Sergeant Entwhistle of Fredericton, New Brunswick. However, the problem of differing ages for differing ranks regarding their length of service continues to upset members.

I ask the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to review this general practice even though the relevant section of the Charter of Rights will not be operative until 1985. It does represent an obvious and contining injustice and concerns the service representatives and the members of the Association of 17 Divisions who are looking for changes in this manifestly unfair practice.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

CANADIAN EQUIPMENT ON NEWLY LAUNCHED SATELLITE

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform this House that scientists at the Department of National Defence, Department of Communications, and at Spar Aerospace Limited, have successfully launched a satellite today to be used in search and rescue operations in Canada. Canadian designed equipment was launched today at about 11 o'clock our time aboard a U.S. weather satellite from Vandenburg Air Force Base in California. This search and rescue equipped satellite joins two similar Soviet satellites, the first of which has already contributed to the successful rescue of 17 North Americans.

This important addition to Canadian search and rescue capabilities is part of an international experimental program in which Canada has been a leading member along with the United States, France, and the Soviet Union. As well as saving lives, this satellite system should also reduce the risk to search and rescue forces who often operate under severe and dangerous conditions.

By participating in this high technology program Canadian industry will continue to remain in the forefront of this sector of space technology.

This successful launch today marks another important milestone for Canada in a very important, humanitarian program, and enhances internationally our already well established capabilities in space communications research and development. It also underlines the Government's commitment to improve search and rescue services continuously by every means possible, for all Canadians.

The issue in question is the justification of spending—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

FINANCIAL PLIGHT OF FARMERS—REQUEST THAT BANKS SHOW TOLERANCE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I take this opportunity to remind Hon. Members that the House has unanimously agreed to expedite Bill C-653, an Act, to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. I take also this opportunity to remind lending institutions which are at times rather over-anxious to be paid back that Parliament has acted unanimously. Tomorrow, the committee will start sitting again; beginning April the 11th, it will hold public hearings and will hear witnesses who will make representations concerning ways and means to avert a great many farm bankruptcies.

I simply raise this issue to urge lending institutions to show a little more understanding toward our farmers who may have fallen back in their payments, for they are perfectly aware that Parliament will accept unanimously, as it did in the case of Bill C-653, any recommendation aimed at preventing the bankruptcies of several farmers.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

START OF ANNOUNCED LAY-OFFS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, on May 1 the hundreds of lay-offs which the CNR announced last January will be taking effect. I would like to take this opportunity to encourage the Minister of Transport and the Government to prevail upon the CNR to cancel these lay-offs.

We all know that when the economic recovery comes we will need a railroad and the equipment, and if we do not put these people to work now, three years hence the railways will be whining and snivelling that they do not have their equipment ready and in place. The railroads are now laying people off for short-term budgetary reasons when there is work waiting to be done. Hundreds of people will be laid off on May 1 if the Government does not lean on the CNR to change its mind.

The railways led many people to believe that the lay-offs were related to the Crow and that they needed changes in the Crow rate. Now we have propsals made by the Government to change the Crow, and yet the lay-offs are to go ahead. If the railroads want to bargain in good faith with the Canadian people they ought to cancel the lay-offs for May 1, and, of course, at the same time accept the NDP proposal to keep the Crow, a proposal which would give them the same amount of money but would keep more people at work and solve many problems which the Pepin-Gilson proposal does not solve.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO STIMULATE JOB CREATION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, Madam Speaker. The Conference Board in Canada is today estimating that, if you add the discouraged workers to the 1.6 million unemployed reported for February, we would have a real unemployment rate in Canada of 19 per cent as opposed to 12.5 per cent.

This prompts me to ask the Minister of Finance, given that range of unemployment unprecedented in our country why is he not bringing in measures to stimulate employment now rather than waiting until the budget? The Minister knows that when he does bring in the budget with these stimulative measures there will still be a substantial time lag, which means the situation will get worse. Why does the Minister not bring in these measures now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am advised the Conference Board estimate is to the effect that, had it counted discouraged workers, the unemployment figure would rise by 6 per cent or 7 per cent, but it is 6 per cent or 7 per cent of 1.5 million, not 6 per cent over and above 12 per cent. Therefore, the Hon. Member's mathematics are not fairly representing the point of view of the Conference Board. Be that as it may, the number of unemployed is indeed very high and if we include the discouraged workers it would certainly add to the total number.

I indicated to the Leader of the NDP on Friday that we already have $2 billion worth of direct job and indirect job stimulation at the present time in the economy.

The Senate is now considering the Income Tax Act. I hope this Bill will be passed before Wednesday, at which time we will be able to send refunds to Canadians, meaning that over the next two months some $6.5 billion will be injected into the economy in direct money that Canadians can spend. As I indicated, I expect to be able to bring forward the budget reasonably soon after we return in April.

I think the adoption of the Income Tax Act and the programs already in effect will play a significant role at least in alleviating the difficulties which many, many Canadians are facing at the present time.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I doubt whether any of the 2 million unemployed, certainly the discouraged workers, the long-time unemployed workers in this country, can look forward to any tax refunds. That measure is a matter of complete indifference to them.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ESTIMATED COST OF BENEFITS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. I can cite economists who are predicting that unemployment payments could rise to $12.3 billion this year from $8.6 billion in 1982. Could the Minister confirm that this is a correct estimate? Could he also tell the House whether it is his intention to bring in a further increase in unemployment premiums in addition to the 40 per cent increase in premiums last year which, in itself, is a disincentive to creating jobs in the private sector?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking me to confirm some predictions made by a private organization. I already indicated I was not going to spend my time discussing predictions from various institutions, for the simple reason that such predictions change constantly.

As far as our own predictions are concerned regarding the Unemployment Insurance Fund deficit for next year, I myself or some of my colleagues will be dealing with this matter during the budget debate. I do not know whether my hon. colleague would or would not want us to increase unemployment insurance premiums but whatever his position is, namely, whether he is prepared to see the Unemployment Insurance Fund deficit increase or whether he wants us to bring that deficit down, I should be happy to hear his views and consider them in the light of the budget.

I can inform the Hon. Member right away that as far as we are concerned, we are not now considering an increase in unemployment insurance premiums.

FINANCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows full well that another increase in unemployment insurance premiums over and above the 40 per cent last year would be a disincentive to job creation in the private sector.

Since we are told that we have to wait until the Minister brings in his budget, would he at least tell us the date of that budget today? Would he at least tell us, in view of the estimated increase in the amount of unemployment insurance benefits being paid out, and because of the seriousness of the unemployment insurance situation, whether he intends to bring in a further increase in unemployment insurance premiums? If he does, what stimulation does he intend to add to that in order to offset the disincentive this would represent to the private sector, especially to small business, in creating jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend may have misunderstood what I said in French. I have indicated that the Government is not considering increasing the contributions to the unemployment insurance fund. That is the Government's view.

I indicated that if my friend's Party has a different view, I will receive their representations if they want an increase. As far as this side of the House is concerned, we are not considering an increase in contributions to the unemployment insurance fund.

With respect to the date of the budget, I would be pleased to announce it before the House adjourns on Wednesday, assuming that the borrowing authority Bill will have been passed by the House in the meantime.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR JOB CREATION MEASURES FOR WOMEN HEADS OF FAMILIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am sure that he will know that more and more cases of hardship and suffering in this country being reported, either to Members of Parliament or social agencies, concern single parent families headed by women. I am sure he will also know that it is among this group where the increase in long-term unemployment has been about the highest. It has gone up 106 per cent since this time last year, among single parents who are women. Half of those families are living below the poverty line.

Therefore, is the Minister targeting any special job creation programs for this particular group of single parent families headed by women, in the same way that the NEED Program is targeted toward a specific group?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the fact is that a very large percentage of women have been included in most of the job creation programs that we have put forward. The general estimate during 1982-83 is about 55,000 women, I believe, who are involved in our job creation programs.

Where we have special targeting is under the Canada Community Services Program which is especially designed to provide job creation initiatives in the community service area. I believe that about 80 per cent or 85 per cent of the participants in this Program are women.

The NEED Program itself involves a large percentage of women because it is not designed exclusively for those who have exhausted unemployment insurance but also for those who are on social assistance or have other forms of need.

We have tried to ensure that women have full and equal access across the board in our job creation programs. I think the figures bear that out.

Miss MacDonald: I was trying to bring home to the Minister the fact that this specific group is really an extreme case. The number of long-term unemployed in this group has gone from 61,000 last year to 126,000 now. Many of those women who have children are living on approximately $450 a month and are paying more than half of that on rent. That is the situation I want to bring to the attention of the Minister.

TRAINING PROGRAMS FOR WOMEN

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, will the Minister consider whether specific arrangements can be made under the National Training Act to target training places for this group of people so that they will have an opportunity to guarantee themselves a place in the jobs of the future in the high-tech industries of the future? Will the Minister target this group for special training places under the National Training Act?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has pointed to an area where some significant progress can be made by enabling women, and single parent mothers in particular, to gain those skills necessary to make them eligible for the various types of work and occupations that are emerging.

I would point out to her that the National Training Act was designed specifically with that in mind. Not only do we have special incentive allowances for private employers—up to 75 per cent of cost—to train women on the job under both the Critical Skills Training Program and the Industrial Program, we have also reserved special places for women in all the training places that we buy. In fact there is a special category set aside for them.

Third, under the National Training Act we have opened the invitation to a wide variety of sponsors, whether they are YWCAs, women's organizations, or community colleges, to use the Skills Growth Fund to establish specialized training facilities, equipment and programs to enable women, particularly those with poorer skills, to acquire basic skills and move into high-tech and high trade jobs. To a large extent the utilization of the Skills Growth Fund is dependent upon the imagination and creativity which exist in the country. We are certainly open to those kinds of proposals.

REQUEST FOR DEPARTMENT'S FORECASTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. Having heard the litany of programs available, particularly for those women who are the heads of single parent families and households, could he give us his Department's projections of the reduction in unemployment among that particular sector over the next fiscal year?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as I have pointed out in the House many times, the primary objective of this Department is to create employment for people. We do not get into the kind of numbers games and statistical gymnastics which are all that the Members of the Opposition ever offer to the House. They never offer any concrete or constructive suggestions.

PROGRAM ESTIMATES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): The Minister knows how many tens of thousands of women who are the heads of households are on unemployment. Without trying to trigger the Minister into another diatribe in terms of partisan politics, what is the projection of the success rate of the litany of programs he just enunciated? What is his projection as to the reduction in unemployment among that group? Please do not interpret this question as an attempt to score partisan points. What is the forecast relief in human misery among the group of whom the Minister has spoken, and about whom I have posed the question?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, certainly no one on this side is trying to score points on such a sensitive issue.

Mr. Jarvis: Oh, come on. Take a lesson from Cullen. You are a disaster.

Mr. Axworthy: Does the Hon. Member want an answer to the question, or does he want to spend the afternoon bellowing out these various comments?

The point that we are trying to make is that we are trying, in the programs themselves, to provide a variety of incentives not only to bring women into the work force but permanently into the work force so that they will be eligible for the kinds of jobs created by the new technologies we face and the new occupations that are coming forward.

In one case I would point out that under the PED Program, where we provide a direct wage subsidy to private employers, particularly in the small business sector, to provide jobs in that area for people, we estimate that 70 per cent of that program's recipients will be able to be retained on those jobs on a fulltime basis. A large percentage of those coming under that PED Program are women.

JOB CREATION FOR WOMEN—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I also have questions concerning women and employment. I am sure the Minister of Employment and Immigration is well aware of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, representing 230 women's organizations, which met this weekend. One of the priorities about which they were very concerned was the whole question of access to job creation and employment generally for women, particularly for women in low income groups and who are sole support parents, as mentioned by the previous speaker.

NAC is particularly concerned that women are not getting into programs such as NEED, over which the provincial Governments have a fair degree of control. As well, there is no built-in affirmative action requirement. I would ask the Minister, on behalf of the NAC group, if he is prepared to fight for a significant increase in federal funding for direct job creation in the budget which is being prepared now. Second, will he also make sure that half the jobs which are created by federal initiative are reserved for women?

• (1430)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that in the 1983-1984 fiscal year we in fact increased the amount of money going into creation of direct employment by 50 per cent. We had a substantial increase to well over $1.2 billion from the budget of around $580 million. As a result, we will be in a position to offer close to 200,000 different places under our job creation programs across Canada under the direct employment programs that we offer, both the NEED program and the other programs like the Canada Community Development Program.

Where we have put forward applications for sponsorship by a variety of community groups or municipalities we have required that each of those applications must be accompanied by a positive action statement, whereby the proposed employer who will be using federal funds for job creation would indicate to what extent that employer is providing equality of access, with particular reference to women and to minority groups. As a result of that we have been able to increase substantially the number of women participating in the direct employment programs of the federal Government.

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, the record is just not good enough. That is what we are saying, and that is what women's groups are saying. We have to work on this together so that there will be equal access for women in these programs.

NATIONAL TRAINING ACT

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): The National Action Committee also is very concerned that many of the existing training programs are really not accessible to women with the greatest need. For example, there are many, many women who had children early in their lives and who have maybe grade 8 or grade 9 education. These women really cannot get into the training programs or the upgrading programs, because the coverage is not long enough. They need a year or so for much of the upgrading that would help them to become more employable. Many of the courses are at night, and these women do not always have babysitting services available to them.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mrs. Mitchell: I certainly do, Madam Speaker.

Will the Minister change the National Training Act to provide longer and more flexible upgrading programs for women, including life skills as well as computer literacy programs which require little of the formal education to which I referred?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, there is no need for changes under the National Training Act because those changes have already been made. They were part of the National Training Act. The fact of the matter is that, under the present Act, training courses can be extended beyond a 52 week period. They can go for upwards of two or three years, in fact.

What we have tried to do under that particular new piece of legislation, working with the Provinces, is to link up the basic skills training program which provides the basic literacy that the Hon. Member is interested in, to tie those into higher skills training programs so that there can be a full escalator along a training path both to allow them to reach certain stages of development and certain stages of acquisition along that way.

In addition to that, as I previously pointed out to the Hon. Member, we have also put in place access to the Skills Growth Fund so that specially designed or tailored programs for women in those circumstances can be designed.

What we do need now is a partnership by groups and organizations across the country to come forward with applications and proposals for the Skills Growth Fund. It really has to be an act of partnership in order to make the full utilization of the National Training Act work effectively for women.

Mrs. Mitchell: The Minister talks great in theory but, Madam Speaker, I can tell you women are not getting into those programs because they are not adapted to their needs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA LABOUR CODE

APPLICATION TO WOMEN USING VIDEO DISPLAY TERMINALS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary is directed to the Minister of Labour. Will the Minister introduce changes to the Canada Labour Code to protect women workers from the tremendous impact of technological change? In particular, will he ensure two things: first, that full participation of all workers in all decisions relating to the introduction, implementation and the monitoring of technological change is a part of that Code, and will he also adopt the recommendations of the Task Force on Micro-Electronics and Employment which proposed a five-hour daily limit for those working at video display terminals? What does the Minister say?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, we are in the process of consulting both labour and business on all of the recommendations contained in the "Chips" Report, including the ones that the Hon. Member has just mentioned. We are having a good look at them and we will be able to come to some conclusions in the not too distant future.

Some of the issues that have been raised are very complex; they are subject to change because of technological change and improvements in manufacturing and because of the nature of high technology. Before we would want to include any proposition in the Code, we would want to make sure that we had the right answer.

EDUCATION

RECOGNITION OF FUNDS PROVIDED BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. The House is aware that last week was a week of good news for official language minority groups. Ontario announced that all French-speaking students were entitled to receive a public school education in their own language. The Province has promised to introduce legislation this fall that will establish a public elementary and secondary education system available to all francophones. The Secretary of State announced the renewal of a number of federal-provincial agreements on education, and more specifically, support programs for second language teaching and for the education of official language minority groups. My question regards the breakdown of and accountability for, federal funds spent by the Provinces to support these areas of education. Could the Minister inform the House whether all Provincial Governments have made a firm commitment to the Minister that they will publicly account for the funds granted by the Federal Government?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I have had previous meetings with provincial representatives, and especially with the provincial Ministers of Education, and I have had an opportunity to discuss how Provincial Governments can account for the manner in which funds transferred to them by the Parliament of Canada are spent. One of the essential conditions for renewal of the agreements is that the Provinces undertake not only to demonstrate that the funds are indeed spent for the purpose for which they are given, but also to indicate the Government of Canada's participation to all fund users, so that all Canadians are aware that the funds are made available to them by the Parliament of Canada.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS BY PROVINCES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. There is implicit in the previous question and answer that some provincial Governments in Canada have not been using the funds allocated to them for second language training for that purpose.

Is the Minister in a position today to identify the Provinces that have not so complied with the purposes for which the funds were given, and to what extent they have not complied? Would he be able to table a document in the House of Commons which would indicate the extent to which Provinces have not complied with the purposes for which those funds were given?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, it is impossible to determine exactly how or on which part of the program these funds were spent. This requirement did not exist in the past. The Government was unable to ask the provinces to account for the way they used these funds. We simply gave them a certain amount and generally identified the purposes for which it should be used. This is why, since 1979, all my predecessors have tried to develop a formula which would give us more information about the way these funds are used. I was indeed happy to be able to report to the House that we have now come to an agreement with the provinces about a formula which will provide real guarantees that the funds are in fact spent for the purposes for which they were allocated. However, at the present time, it is impossible to trace back the funds since we have no legal power to force the provinces to provide detailed information about how they spent this money in the past.

[English]

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S KNOWLEDGE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, there must have been some concern in the mind of the Government about the accountability for these funds, and there must have been some evidence that the Government relied on to come to the conclusion that the funds were not being used for the intended purposes. I happen to support the proposition that the funds be specifically earmarked, I want to tell the Minister that. What evidence does the Government have that heretofore they were not being used, beyond suspicion, gossip, and so on? What concrete evidence, if any, does it have that they were not being so used?

• (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has given part of the answer himself. It is a fact that many Members on both sides of this House have tried to obtain better guarantees about the use of these funds. In addition, many representatives of linguistic minority associations, both French-speaking and English-speaking associations, especially in Quebec, have asked that much more accurate information be given concerning the use of these funds. It was to satisfy the Members of Parliament and the users of these funds or those for whom these funds were meant that we have tried to obtain the agreement which has now been reached. I am happy to be able to report to the House that our negotiations have been successful.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DETERMINATION OF BENEFITS BASED ON RESIDENCE FACTOR

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On December 22 last I asked the Minister a question about discrimination regarding the payment of unemployment benefits by reason of the place of residence of an unemployed person. In Hamilton you need ten weeks of employment to be eligible for benefits, and in Burlington, right next door, you need 16 weeks. At a recent seminar of Stats Canada officials in Hamilton, they stated that they could not separate the economic statistics, of Hamilton and Burlington—that they consider it all one region for their purposes. When will the Minister move to do something about this inequity?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as I explained to the Hon. Member at the time, we have divided the country into 40 regions under the unemployment insurance system. When you do that division, you have to draw the boundaries somewhere. Usually they are drawn according to the longer term historical pattern of the unemployment rate because, as the Hon. Member knows, we have to gauge the various entrants requirements and other qualifying requirements according to those longer term trends. It is quite true that, during this time of recession, the area of Burlington has experienced more severe unemployment, but generally it has been a high employment area with a very stable workforce.

As I indicated at that time, all of the boundaries are under review. We cannot make one boundary change because, once you make one, it has a domino effect and affects every other boundary in a region. Therefore, they have to be balanced out. We are trying to look at what the longer term trends will be and adjust them, if adjustments are necessary, according to those trends, not simply responding to the short term circumstances that we are now experiencing.

TREATMENT OF HAMILTON AND BURLINGTON AREAS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I guess it depends on where you live in Canada. The Minister of Finance, speaking at a meeting in Rivière-du-Loup some time ago, announced changes of the boundaries of unemployment insurance regions so that the claimants of that region need to have a minimum of ten weeks of insurable employment in order to collect unemployment benefits.

The Hamilton-Burlington-Niagara area is a disaster area as far as employment is concerned. The process is silly. If you call Burlington information, you get the Hamilton office. It is all monitored through Hamilton. The statistical information gathered says it is all one region. Why does the Minister continue to do this, and when is he going to do something about it?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I want to dismiss any suggestion that the Hon. Member left that there was some preference given from one region to another. That is simply not the case. The determination of boundaries is set upon very clearly defined statistical indices that are developed by Stats Canada which represent the labour supply and labour surplus figures over a period of three to five years. The circumstance in the Burlington area is something that has emerged only within the last year during a time of recession. We, along with the Hon. Member, hope that that situation will turn around and that that area, which has provided such a very strong focus of economic growth in the past, will continue to do so in the future.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—SASKATCHEWAN DELEGATION OPPOSED TO CHANGE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Sometime ago in this House the Prime Minister said that he would not fiddle with the Crow rate as long as there was not a consensus on the Prairies. We have with us today a group of farm men and women who have travelled from Saskatchewan to present to this House a petition containing over 15,000 names, asking us to keep the Crow rate for the Prairie Provinces. There is a consensus. The consensus is to keep the Crow. In light of that, and in light of the Prime Minister's promise that he would not fiddle with the Crow rate if there was such a consensus, will the Minister now listen to the people and abandon his promise to abolish the Crow rate?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have already explained my view on the subject. There are people who will not agree with everything that is in the Bill on the western rail initiative. It will usually be for different reasons. I will have many occasions in future months to explain the policy. I will demonstrate that it is not a black and white situation.

The increase in the cost of transportation is a reasonable one; two times the Crow in three or four years, five times the Crow by the end of the decade. It is reasonable. Some months ago the pools were willing to accept two times the Crow now. It still remains at a very low level in terms of the cost of transportation with respect to the price of grain internationally. I will demonstrate that often.

In return, the western farmer will be the only one in Canada to be guaranteed a less than 6 per cent inflation rate, a privilege second to none in society today.

In return, the western grain grower will get the best railways in the world. Consequently, he will be in a position to grow more and pay less for storage, demurrage and so forth. It will be a very interesting debate.

REQUEST THAT REFERENDUM BE HELD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, the Minister has been to western Canada. He knows what the people think. Sometimes he is a fair minded man. I want to know whether he will consult the people. For example, is he willing to have a referendum held among permit book holders so that the farmers can decide whether they want to go with the Hall Commission recommendations or with his recommendations? If he is a fair minded Minister, he will not be afraid of going to the people. Will the Minister go to the farmers in a referendum and listen to what the farmers want to do with the Crow rate?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have been in the West many times this past two or three years. I will be there very often in the next two or three years. I remember vividly the reaction of people to whom I was saying that we needed a task force or a commission. They told me that that transportation problem had been studied enough. Enough was enough. Now is the time to make a decision on the subject, and my hon. friend will have to go with it like everybody else.

INCOME TAX

PROVISION AFFECTING MINERS IN ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Mines. I am sure the Minister is aware of the deemed income provision in the last two budgets which is attacking mining companies and, in particular, employees in isolated or semi isolated communities. At the present time they are receiving interest free and low interest loans and, indeed, subsidized housing. What has the Minister done to assist these people as a result of this very negative tax that is being imposed?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is very much aware of the work that has been conducted by myself with the officials of the Department of Finance to look into this matter. It has received a great deal of consideration. These benefit provisions are being phased in so as not to affect the employees adversely and in order that they will have a chance to build these costs into their future contracts. It is being done very equitably.

Mr. Shields: For our benefit, the Minister is doing nothing and has done nothing. She is too interested in attacking the spousal income deductions.

TAXATION OF NORTHERN ALLOWANCES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is the Minister taking into consideration the representations made by myself and the resource mining industry as to the very important provision usually provided to attract key employees to isolated communities for the development of our North? Is the Minister looking at that in his new budget?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I always consider seriously every suggestion made to me, even those made by the Hon. Member, in spite of his lack of elementary courtesy for the Minister of State for Mines.

HOUSING

NEW HOME BUYERS GRANT OF $3,000—RECOMMENDATION THAT CMHC ACCEPT APPLICATION MADE BEFORE DEADLINE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works, who is also responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As he is aware, we have nearly reached the expiration date for the $3,000 grant on the purchase of new housing. The Minister also knows that certain provincial statutes concerning the environment or agricultural zoning could prevent a purchaser from beginning to build his house before the expiry date. In view of these circumstances, would the Minister be willing to recommend to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation that it accept as valid the applications made by people who cannot begin construction because of a provincial statute, on condition, of course, that the application is made before the final date? Will such people at least have the guarantee that they can benefit from this very useful grant?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, we have tried to be as open as possible and to interpret the rules as flexibly as we can, regarding housing construction. I am aware that there are some difficulties in this regard because Members on this side of the House have also raised the specific problem of zoning permits in Quebec. We are trying to develop a formula to solve the problem. I hope that the provincial authorities will also be a bit more flexible in this regard.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have already made representations to the Quebec authorities. I have been told that when it comes to their own files, they are not certain that they will be able to process all the applications they have received. This is why I am very objectively asking the Minister whether the CMHC could at least relax its rules and ensure that Canadians will not be penalized because of a provincial statute which, without any lack of good will being involved, might prevent building permits from being issued. I hope that all Canadians who obey the legislation introduced and implemented by the Federal Government will be eligible for this grant.

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, I have already indicated that we are trying to interpret the rules concerning this program as broadly as possible and that we shall continue to do so. I hope to be able to give a more detailed answer to the Hon. Member within a few days.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

EQUALITY OF NATIVE WOMEN

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. As the Minister knows, the Inuit, the Native Council of Canada and the Native Women's Association of Canada all agree that the equality clause in Section 35 should read:

Notwithstanding anything in this Part, the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

Since the equality clause now included in Section 35 is quite different from the above, and in fact denies to non-status Indian women and their children their rights to equality, will the Minister assure the House that she will make every effort to see that a genuine equality clause is included in Section 35 of the Constitution?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that we went to considerable trouble to see that the equality clause was included in Section 35. It was negotiated with the Provinces, and she has heard the answer the Minister of Justice has offered. However, I would like to add further that, as far as I am concerned, all of the women in this country are protected by the original Charter.

POSITION OF NON-STATUS INDIAN WOMEN

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister that, unfortunately, the rights of the aboriginal peoples Section is outside the Charter and, therefore, I am afraid Clause 28 will not apply.

An Hon. Member: Yes, it does.

Miss Jewett: Well, I hope it does apply, but Clause 28 applies only to all the rights in the Charter. Section 35 is outside the Charter and, therefore, I would like to pursue with the Minister her point that equality rights are guaranteed in Section 35. They are not. Therefore, I would repeat to the Minister that only existing rights are going to be protected, and ask her again: since non-status Indian women and children do not have existing rights, will the Minister work to ensure the changing of the equality clause in Section 35 in such a way as to make it a genuine, full equality clause?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, we have made it absolutely clear that the clause as it stands now must stay because it has been supported by the Provinces and the Government. I would like to state further, however, that this Government is looking at changing the Indian Act, as the Hon. Member knows, and that is in the preparation stage now and the problem the Hon. Member is referring to will be addressed. Again, I repeat, the Indian women of this country are not outside the general Charter. I repeat that. That is why the Indian Act must be changed and come into effect before the three-year moratorium closes.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S BILL TO AMEND INDIAN ACT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question directed to the same Minister. Since she, herself, has stated that the Government must begin by amending the Indian Act, and since there is a Bill standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, which would remove Section 12(1)(b), a highly discriminatory clause in that legislation, will the Government bring forward that private Member's legislation upon the assurance that it will get immediate passage through all stages?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, we will be bringing in our own more comprehensive legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OFFER TO PASS PRIVATE MEMBER'S BILL

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister has the opportunity, if she and the Government are acting in good faith when they say they want to remove discrimination from the Act, to agree to our suggestion that they bring on that private Member's legislation immediately and pass it through all three stages forthwith in order to remove one of the most invidious Sections which ever saw the light of day from this Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, we will be bringing our own Bill forward, and I trust we can count on the unanimous approval of the Hon. Members opposite.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BANKS AND BANKING

PENALTIES IMPOSED FOR RENEGOTIATION OF MORTGAGES

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Several of my constituents have found themselves in a closed mortgage situation where they are paying 18¼ per cent, and I believe all Hon. Members will find this is a typical situation. When they try to open these mortgages they are told they have to pay a three-month penalty. I believe most right thinking Canadians are prepared to accept that. Unfortunately, the trust companies and the banks are now saying that they want something in addition to that amount, as much as $7,000 on a $40,000 mortgage. Is the Minister of Finance prepared to direct the presidents of the trust companies and the banks, or meet with them and ask them if they could accept their social responsibility? They have made 18¼ per cent for two years on these mortgages. That is a handsome profit. It is time they limited themselves to a three-month interest penalty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Indeed, Madam Speaker, the point raised by the Hon. Member seems very worthwhile to me, and a three-month penalty would seem reasonable to me under the circumstances. In addition, I would suggest that, if there are other cases such as those mentioned by the Hon. Member, they should be brought to my attention, and I undertake to have them submitted to the institutions involved, either by the Inspector General of Banks or any other appropriate agency, so that they will be closely scrutinized, in an effort to prevent financial institutions from being unfair to some citizens.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FRENCH ISLANDS—NEGOTIATION OF MARITIME BOUNDARIES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has to do with the relations between Canada and France. Can the Minister give us any indication of the progress being made, if there is any progress, in negotiations relating to the maritime boundaries around Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, several weeks ago there was a further meeting between Canadian and French officials at which both the boundaries and the fishing problems were discussed. The Canadian side has asked for a period of further examination before resuming these negotiations. Just recently there was a communication from the Government of France, which we are presently considering. It is not apparent to us at the moment that Canadian interests would be advanced by an immediate resumption of negotiations, but we are considering the matter.

• (1500)

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, is the Minister suggesting there is a linkage between the fishing rights of the French fishermen in the area and the 200 mile limit territorial boundary negotiations? If he is, can he say now whether he feels it can be done on a bilateral basis or whether it is going to have to go to the International Court the way our boundary disputes with the United States have gone?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not drawing a link between the nature of the settlement of the international boundary and, for example, the ability or willingness of Canada to provide quotas to the French fleet now or in the future, especially when the moment comes that the French fleet loses its fishing possibilities in the Gulf. There is a link, however, operationally in how enforcement might be undertaken. There has been an understanding between the two Governments as to how enforcement will take place in disputed areas.

Finally, with regard to the last question, it would not be my desire to search for a way to bring this matter to the International Court. As the Hon. Member knows, we have a very massive case there presently, affecting the Atlantic coast, and it would not be my wish to add to that.

PETITIONS

MR. NYSTROM—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I have the honour today to present a petition on the Crow rate. I have had a chance—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Out!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members know that it is not allowed to make displays in the House. Would they please immediately remove those displays and will the guards please help to remove them.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the guards please remove the displays?

Mr. Nystrom: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Remove the Member, too.

Mr. Nystrom: I have a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order? I should not think so.

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members who have been sitting in the House for such a long time should know that this kind of display is specifically prohibited by our rules. I would appreciate it if Hon. Members would not try to smuggle in these displays for publicity purposes. The House of Commons is not a place for publicity, it is a place for debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I have had a chance to read very carefully the Standing Orders of the House and also Beauchesne. I have read very carefully the section on exhibits, and I have also read very carefully the section on petitions. What I have tried to introduce in the House today on behalf of some 15,000 farmers in Saskatchewan is a petition written in the proper form.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order or is he presenting a petition?

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I was rising on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: I will listen to a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: I was rising on a point of order to put forth the point of view that I have had a chance to read Beauchesne and what it says about exhibits. What it says on page 117, citation—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. What it says about exhibits is pretty clear and I will read it to the Hon. Member:

> Speakers have consistently ruled that it is improper to produce exhibits of any sort in the Chamber.

That is quite clear and I do not see what the Hon. Member can add to what I have already said.

Mr. Nystrom: That citation, if I may, Madam Speaker, goes on to read:

> Thus during the flag debate—

Mr. Nielsen: Shame.

Madam Speaker: Order. I have ruled on the point of order and I have also ruled on the fact that exhibits were brought into the House. If the Hon. Member has a petition to present, the Chair will be very pleased to hear that petition, but nothing else.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I think that constitutes a point of privilege. I did not have a chance to put forth my argument—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is now invoking a point of privilege. There was a point of order raised, which the Chair ruled on and that is final. If the Hon. Member wants to challenge that ruling he can, but there are other ways of doing it, not through a question of privilege.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask your advice as to how I can do it if I cannot do it through a point of privilege. I did not have the chance under my point of order to make my argument.

Madam Speaker: My advice to the Hon. Member is to present his petition right away because his point of order has been addressed. He does not have a question of privilege, or in any event he has not raised one, and the only thing he can do now is present his petition if he has one.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, in that respect I have had a chance to get a photocopy of parts of the petition which we wanted to present this afternoon. I do not have all the 15,000 or 16,000 names here, but I have most of them. I have examined it very carefully and it is in the proper form. I want to present it to you on behalf of some 15,000 to 16,000 people in the Provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta who have signed it in a fight to save the Crow rate.

The petition calls upon the federal Government to keep the Crow rate as it is. It says that western Canadian farmers have paid some $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in the 1981-82 crop year and this grain in turn has contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned, Madam Speaker, believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy. The final sentence in this petition is that western farmers will pay one times Crow; in other words, no change.

Madam Speaker, I present to you the photocopies of the names taken from the original petition, which many people went to great expense to present to the House of Commons.

MR. BLENKARN—LAW RESPECTING CRIMES OF VIOLENCE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to rise today on behalf of 172,075 Canadians from across Canada who have petitioned the Government. The Government has not given this matter any consideration so they have asked me today to present to the House of Commons their petition demanding immediate withdrawal of the automatic early release program; that people convicted of violent crimes be imprisoned for a maximum period; and that there be an immediate change in the law with respect to violent crime.

They respectfully submit that this petition be addressed to the House of Commons and its committees, and on that basis I am honoured to present their petition to you. It is rather cumbersome. It is not a display or anything, but it does contain the names of 172,075 Canadian citizens.

MR. REID (ST. CATHARINES)—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, in a very much less dramatic way I have the privilege, as the Member of Parliament representing St. Catharines, to present a petition signed by some 203 citizens, representing different church and concerned citizen groups, submitting their objection to the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada.

• (1510)

MR. ANGUISH—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, we would like to present to this House 16 sheets with signatures from many farmers and concerned people in western Canada, mainly from Saskatchewan, protesting any change in the Crow rate. Those sheets happen to be cut in the form of a crow, which you have ruled this afternoon as being an exhibit.

We would like to table those 16 crows in the House of Commons, if you find them acceptable, as a petition against any change to the statutory Crow rate.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone.

He said: Madam Speaker, this Bill is entitled "An Act to Declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone". I hope to receive unanimous consent to have the Bill brought up on Wednesday under Private Members' Bills when I hope it will be traded for the position of another Bill on the Order Paper in the name of the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), who has so agreed.

The Bill would do two things, Madam Speaker. First, it would declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone, which would effectively stop the Cruise missile from being tested over or on Canadian territory. We hope there will be a free vote of the House of Commons on this, so that those Members who wish to air their concerns about nuclear weapons can do so without being tied to a vote of confidence in the Government. It would not be viewed this way under Private Members' Bills.

Second, the Bill would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to go to the United Nations at some future date and put forth a resolution asking the United Nations to conduct a world referendum on nuclear disarmament and to work toward some sort of multilateral agreement on the elimination of and freeze on nuclear weapons.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Madam Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member who just introduced his bill is one of the jokers who showed disrespect to Parliament just now by bringing all kinds of items on the floor of the House. He implied that he would ask the unanimous consent of the House to obtain a favour. I can inform the House right away that we shall not give in to this kind of blackmail, since that would be conferring our seal of approval on his disgraceful behaviour. On behalf of the Government and my colleagues, I can inform the Hon. Member that we do not intend to accede to his request for having the bill he just tabled considered before it is his turn.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret the way in which the Government House Leader leapt to his feet on this matter. He is not making it easy for us to deal with Government business if he interferes with Private Members' time on a Wednesday. I should like to suggest to him that he reconsider, in light of other agreements that he will be seeking in the future.

Mr. Kempling: Blackmail!

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, my hon. colleague knows very well that I was speaking as a Private Member who will not consent to support the lack of respect shown by his colleagues. It is a lack of respect that he seems to have tolerated and that is unacceptable in such an institution.

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, I feel I must respond to this. I did not participate in the events this afternoon concerning the statutory Crow rate as any matter of disrespect to this House, and I mean that sincerely. The farmers of western Canada, particularly in the Province of Saskatchewan, drew up what they thought would be a petition to impress upon the Government their concern—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. The Hon. Member has made his point about the comments made by the Hon. Minister but I cannot allow him to debate the question.

Mr. Lewycky: Madam Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Government House Leader will want to withdraw his comments. I participated with total decorum this afternoon, as I usually do. For the Government House Leader to make that type of statement in the House and attack me in that way is not conducive to the operation of this House. I am sure the Hon. Member will want to withdraw that remark. I seconded that particular motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am most aggrieved to see that the Hon. Member took part in this inappropriate bit of fun. I know him very well and I am rather disappointed. I know he does not intend to do it again. In any case, I do not intend to withdraw what I said about the Members of the New Democratic Party who showed disrespect to Parliament by taking part in actions that are prohibited by our Standing Orders.

The Hon. Member cannot expect me to approve such thoughtless and irresponsible action. On the contrary, I repeat what I said. I deplore not only the attitude of his other colleagues who acted in this way, but also the fact that he took part in action which, once again, constitutes a total lack of respect for this institution, and I am sure that the people in the gallery who watched this tasteless display were not impressed with the tactics used by the New Democratic Party to debate the issue or improve the debate and the policy. I am sure that the people who witnessed these disgraceful goings-on were not impressed, and I think I would be accused of being soft if I were to withdraw what I said since it was not unparliamentary and was entirely appropriate as far as parliamentary procedure and the Standing Orders are concerned.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I must say that I resent the inference contained in the statement of the Government House Leader. There was no tactic involved. The people of Saskatchewan presented—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: —what they considered to be a petition on a matter of some considerable importance. They did so—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order, order.

Mr. Deans: —in a form that might well be acceptable to the House of Commons—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Deans: If you had not interfered this would not have happened.

Madam Speaker: The manner in which the petition has been presented has been dealt with. I will have no more debate on that particular question. I warn Hon. Members, it must not be on the manner in which the petition was presented. I have ruled on that. I have told the House what I felt about the situation and that is over.

Mr. Deans: What did you do with the Tory petition on metric?

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, I do not rise to speak about the way the petition was presented. I rise to speak on the conduct of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). He got up a second time and referred to this as being a joke and a matter of disrespect for the House. I assure you, there was no matter of disrespect meant to this House. It is a very important issue. The fact is there was no disrespect because we immediately removed—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Smith: You knew they were out of order when you brought them in.

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members know that the only way to conduct debate in the House is to do so according to the rules. Petitions may be presented to the House with a very short statement, but no display should accompany those petitions.

Mr. Deans: Those were the petitions.

Madam Speaker: That is not the form in which petitions are presented.

Mr. Deans: You do not decide the form.

Mr. Lewycky: I rise on a question of privilege. The Government House Leader made the accusation that I participated in the presentation of that petition when I did not. I tried to make that clear to him but he seems to be deaf to that, and he seemed to be blind when it was being presented.

I said that I seconded this motion about having this Bill presented in the House. The Hon. Minister ought to withdraw his comments because they certainly do not apply. He should open his eyes and ears next time, because that is a slur on my actions. No such thing occurred.

• (1520)

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, I do not see how the President of the Privy Council—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order? Hon. Members should tell the Chair why they are rising at this particular point. If it is on a point of order, I can hear it, but there is to be no more debate on this question.

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, it concerns the introduction of the Bill that I brought into the House this afternoon. How can the President of the Privy Council tie one activity to another very important activity in this House and act like a child in not giving his unanimous consent for something like this?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will hear no more comments on this particular incident. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) rose and commented on a certain situation. He is allowed to do that but we cannot debate it indefinitely.

Motions.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Lewycky: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lewycky: Madam Speaker, I ask the Government House Leader to withdraw his comment that I did something in the House when I did not.

Madam Speaker: That is not a question of privilege. I regret to tell the Hon. Member that he does not have a question of privilege.

BUREAU OF MANAGEMENT CONSULTING

Question No. 4,719—Mr. Kilgour:

1. How many professional persons does the Bureau of Management Services employ in Ottawa?

2. Has the Bureau participated in foreign projects during each of the past three years and, if so (a) how many (b) what was the total dollar value (c) how many man-years were involved by the Bureau (d) in how many of the projects were management consultants from the private sector eligible to compete with the Bureau for the work?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1 and 2. The Bureau of Management Consulting employs 110 professional persons in Ottawa. The Bureau's participating in foreign projects during the past three years is as follows:

Year	Number of Projects	Dollar Value	Person Years
FY 80/81	5	$176,150	1.2
FY 81/82	10	$425,500	4.6
FY 82/83	9	$471,000	4.7

The Bureau offers an optional service to Canadian Government Departments and, through External Affairs and the Canadian Commercial Corporation, to foreign governments and international agencies. Since the service is optional, clients always have the freedom to offer their consulting assignments to private sector consultants. If the Canadian private sector is invited to bid, the Bureau, as a matter of policy, will either not compete or will withdraw if a proposal has already been made.

In the foreign projects noted above, the Bureau was approached by the various agencies on the basis of their perception that the Bureau had the expertise to solve the problem. They had already decided not to use the Canadian private sector and to negotiate a government/international agency to government contract. In fact, on the 24 foreign assignments during the years 1980/81 to 1982/83, the Bureau used, on a sub-contract basis, 15 consultants from the Canadian private sector.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Blenkarn (p. 24001).

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, I shall try to give you less trouble than you had in the last five or ten minutes.

Mr. Anguish: Hypocrite.

Mr. Halliday: I do, however, feel constrained to make an observation on the petition raised by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). He had 172,000—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt my colleague, but I believe the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) just called my colleague the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) a hypocrite. I ask him to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair did not hear the remark.

Mr. Smith: We heard it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Did the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake make the remark to which reference was just made? If he did, I invite him to withdraw it because the language is unparliamentary.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I did say that. However, I believe what I stated was incorrect. I should have said the statement which the Hon. Member was making was hypocritical in light of the fact his Party kept the House of Commons bells ringing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has indicated that he has withdrawn the unparliamentary remark. The Hon. Member for Oxford has the floor.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, I will not pursue that. I did not hear what the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) said, and as my friend across the way said, it is a waste of time.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South presented a petition containing 172,000 names and in the preface to his presentation of the petition he indicated people were showing their dissatisfaction with the refusal of the present Government to listen to what they, the people of Canada, are saying. I notice my friend the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) is about ready to leave the House. I have watched him and he has looked very sad all morning. He is now smiling for the first time today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard).

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), but I would like to correct something I have just said. It is important that I do so while the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) is in the House.

The Hon. Member for Dauphin has just told me that he did not support the demonstration but was supporting the Bill. Therefore, what I said about his colleagues who participated in that sad demonstration does not apply to him. I want to be fair to the Hon. Member for Dauphin. I appreciate that he did not support the demonstration and I understand that he can support the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oxford.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have another chance to make my speech.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Halliday: Returning to the concern of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South regarding the attitude of the present Government toward the wishes of the Canadian people, it is quite clear that Canadians are feeling more and more that the present Government has not shown a willingness to listen to them. As we debate Bill C-143 today, I note that this Wednesday marks the sixth week that the Bill has been before the House. Many of us in the Opposition have spoken more than once on this Bill precisely because we feel the Canadian people, and ourselves, need to be listened to by this Government.

This Government is asking for a sum of money that we think is unreasonable: it is asking for $19 billion. Most of us accept the fact that it may be necessary to give the Government $5 billion, which is needed for this present fiscal year; but most of us have reservations about the need for us to give the Government authority to borrow another $14 billion on top of that.

I had occasion to speak on this Bill some three and a half weeks ago. At that time I chose to comment mainly about some of my perceptions and views regarding the present Government. I was concerned about some of the characteristics that have been exhibited over the last several years in this House. I mentioned the deplorable characteristic of this Government's untrustworthiness. As I mentioned, that applies to the attitude concerning Bill C-143.

We had been told previously by two cabinet Ministers that we would not be given this kind of borrowing Bill until we were told more about how the money would be spent. In the Government's untrustworthy manner, this has not taken place and it is most regrettable. In spite of the many demands from this side of the House, we are still not being given any information as to how this $14 billion will be spent.

When I spoke on March 4, I indicated that I was concerned about the characteristics of arrogance and secrecy and the general contempt the Government has shown for Parliament in general. That observation could be a speech in itself. There are many ways in which we can see how this present Government really does not trust Parliament and does not want to see Parliament functioning.

That brings me to a point on which I want to elaborate today. I do not pretend to be a student of parliamentary government although I am very fascinated and interested in it. If what I say is wrong, I would like to be corrected by some Hon. Member. My perception of the parliamentary system is that the Government is there to govern. There is a real role for the Opposition as well, particularly the Official Opposition. The Opposition is given certain defined terms of reference, one might say. The Opposition is there to protect the public from the tyranny of a majority Government, and to protect the public in particular against the unwise use of their money. I sense more and more that the present Government is showing that kind of disrespect to which I have just alluded. This Government is refusing to accept the fact that the Opposition Party has a real role to play in holding up this kind of unnecessary and costly type of legislation to spend the taxpayers's dollars. Since the Government has known for the last six weeks that Members on this side of the House were concerned about how the Government would spend the taxpayers' money, there is no reason why it could not have made an amendment or change to the borrowing authority Bill.

Let us review what the Government actually said when it presented the Bill on February 16. We received a press release from the Department of Finance which explained that the first part of the Bill asked for authorization to borrow $5 billion for the immediate fiscal year, and the second part of the Bill asked for $14 billion for the next fiscal year beginning in April, at the end of this week.

The reason given for asking for this borrowing authority was that the Government was unable to anticipate the drop in revenues which occurred and the increased debt charges. It said that those two phenomena, the decrease of revenue and the increase in debt charges, accounted for 72 per cent of its problems. The other 28 per cent accounted for "recession related expenditures". It referred to the rising cost of Unemployment Insurance. While that increase is understandable, the press release did not mention the other increases involved in that 28 per cent. I did not mention spending $1.5 billion for Petro-Canada to buy Petrofina. It did not mention the $800 a day being paid to Donald Macdonald which we have heard so much about. We were not told about those shady deals, in my view, for which they have to borrow money from the Canadian people.

Before I discuss the details of the Government's request for the extra $14 billion, let me talk about the Government's inability to predict what its needs will be. On November 18, 16 months ago, the official prediction for our deficit was $10.5 billion. In June of last year, which is less than a year ago, the Government predicted that deficit would be up to $19.6 billion, which has almost doubled in seven months. As of October of last year the prediction had gone up to $23.6 billion. As recently as last month the prediction went up to $27.2 billion. In approximately 16 months, the deficit had risen by at least two and one-half times from what the Government had anticipated. That is the incompetence Canadians are faced with from the Government.

When such lack of competence in a Government is evident, it is no wonder that the Opposition becomes worried and feels the responsibility to put pressure on the Government to give a better explanation of its operations.

I would like to take a couple of more moments to elaborate on the statement made by the office of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The press release stated that one reason the Government had to bring in this borrowing authority Bill was in order to permit the Government to continue with an orderly debt program. I become concerned when the Government talks about an orderly debt program because I am not in favour of debt programs at all. I believe that we should avoid having some of these debt programs. If this is an orderly debt program, I would hate to see what a disorderly debt program would be like if we did hot have this particular Bill.

Another interesting fact which evolved from the Minister's news release was that this interim authority was meant to give Parliament adequate time to consider a new borrowing Bill based on the financial requirements for 1983-84 that would be set out in the forthcoming budget. We have heard much about the forthcoming budget and are given to understand that it will be introduced at the end of next month. The last sentence of the news release states:

> It is the intention of the Government to introduce such a Bill shortly after the next budget.

If the budget is to come down in April, the Bill would likely be introduced some time in May, which is reasonable. If we are to see the next borrowing authority Bill introduced shortly after the budget in April, surely it would be reasonable for the House to authorize borrowing for the months of April, May and possibly June, which would represent about a quarter of the year's deficit. We are being asked, instead, to authorize $14 billion which is more than half the deficit for this current fiscal year.

There is a reason why we seem to be holding this legislation up. We see no reason why the Government should be asking for more than $5 billion or $6 billion for the next fiscal year since it is promising to bring down a budget and introduce another borrowing authority Bill soon after the budget which we can debate more thoroughly at that time, we are told. If the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) were here I would ask him how much time he intends to give us to debate the next borrowing authority Bill. I doubt the time would be adequate when compared to what we think would be necessary.

On this final day of debate at report stage of Bill C-143, I suggest that the House should accept the amendment before it now to reduce the borrowing authority. Before we finish debate on this Bill I hope that the Government will see fit to reduce its demand from $14 billion to a more reasonable amount such as $5 billion or $6 billion.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it is not only a matter of concern to Members of the Opposition but to those on the Government side as well when borrowing becomes necessary at any time. During a time of recession when there are so many unknown factors in the economy, one must almost be gifted with ESP to be able to make a prediction beyond three months or four months. It is unfortunate that while Opposite Members recognize this fact, they do not accept it and, instead, espouse so much of what is political rhetoric in their speeches. The Opposition is aware that borrowing is necessary in order for the Government to meet its cash requirements.

The Hon. Member who preceded me indicated that the Opposition did not have information, that the Government was being arrogant in asking for the money, and that we will spend it as we see fit. He said that although he knows that this is not the case at all. If anything, there is a surfeit of information on the subject. Estimates were tabled recently, there are some 10 or 12 explanatory booklets from the various Departments, and we understand that that will be doubled in the future. Those Members of Parliament who have a sincere and honest interest in knowing where the Government will spend the money and why the borrowing is necessary will have the information at their fingertips if they are prepared to do some homework.

It would be pleasant, particularly for the Government, if we knew that the revenues we secure from income and other taxes meet the Government's spending requirements. However, knowing the facts, which the Opposition Parties should know if they have done their homework, we have seen the Government revenues dropping off.

The Opposition Parties must recognize, and they do so, that the Government can meet this particular requirement for spending by proceeding in two ways. One would be to raise taxes significantly, and the other would be to borrow in the short term to meet its cash requirements. Since the Opposition is arguing so vehemently against the approach of short term borrowing, which is absolutely necessary at a time of recession, surely the opposite is true, namely, that they advocate higher taxes. The Liberals find this approach particularly inappropriate at a time of recession. It is not the best method to follow if we are to consider the interest of average and low income Canadians. Raising income taxes is a very easy administrative way of doing things, but I think it would be inappropriate at this particular time to say to people who are hard-pressed as a result of the depression that we are going to increase their taxes by a significant amount in order to meet the requirements of the Government and the requirements of the ordinary Canadian. The benefits under the Canada Pension Plan or the Unemployment Insurance Program are designed to meet the needs of people by way of a form of safety net. That is why these programs were put in place and that is why we need the money at this time to prove the worth of the programs that we have in place.

I have had the privilege of being the Minister of Employment and Immigration and had to take a long, hard look at the Unemployment Insurance coverage. At that time we found that the UIC program was in a small surplus position, that later it dropped to a small deficit, and then back to a surplus again. But it was, by and large, in balance. The feeling of the contributors was that we should keep the payments at a particular level, not to have a large deficit but not to benefit too much from a large surplus which the legislation makes impossible in any event.

Now we have the situation where people are benefiting this year to the extent of approximately $8 billion. That is not money that is going into a sock or a bank account. It is money that is going into the economy. "Thank heavens", say the barbers and the retailers and the butchers and the bakers of this country, because it is not only supporting the unemployed worker, it is supporting the people who are in the business community. This money is going back into the community and is being used by Canadians to help them at this most difficult time.

I would say that Canadians, by and large, are kilometres ahead of the Opposition Parties because they recognize that we are in a recession, that we are in difficult times and that we simply cannot go out to the Canadian public at this time and say that we need more money and therefore we are going to increase their taxes right across the board. We cannot say that in order to meet our short-term requirements we will have to increase those taxes in a significant way. I just cannot believe that the Opposition Parties are advocating that kind of an approach.

Now we have the Opposition Members saying that there is another way of doing it, and that is, to cut Government spending, but every single time that the Government takes a measure that in a significant way reduces its cash requirements, it meets opposition from the Opposition Parties. When we brought in the block system for the transfer payments to Provinces, as a sweetener to that, because the Provinces were somewhat apprehensive that the amount of money that they were going to receive would not be as much as on a per capita or per person basis, the Government said that, on a one shot deal, it would put $5 billion into the program so the Provinces would not only have the increase but would have this $5 billion to distribute, so that they would know that they were not being short-changed. That was explained at the time as a one shot deal, as a sweetener to convince the Provinces that no one was trying to short-change them on the transfer payments. When the second round of payments came about and the Minister indicated that the increases would still be a significant amount of money, not only did the Opposition Parties say that we were paying less money, which of course was incorrect, but they were basing their case on this $5 billion payment, indicating that the Government should, out of hand in a transfer payment way, make another $5 billion available to the Provinces, which was clearly inappropriate.

When one looks at the way that my own Province, for example, spends the money that it receives on the transfer payment and does not use it for education, and when the federal Government finds itself at the post-secondary level paying something between 60 per cent and 70 per cent of the cost of post-secondary education, my question is, is my Province really spending the money the way it should be spending it and where it was meant to be spent, that is, on the educating of our young people, particularly those at the post-secondary level? So a tough decision was made not to put this further $5 billion into the kitty. That was a way of cutting spending, admittedly, but we did not get any support at all from the Opposition Parties.

Now, we said we should make Canada Post self-supporting, to the extent that it can be. It has to meet needs across the country where it obviously is uneconomic to do so. On that basis we established a Crown corporation, of which everyone approved, I believe. We asked them to operate in a businesslike way, recognizing that there are significant deficits, somewhere between $500 billion and $700 billion. Then it was necessary to increase the cost of postage stamps in order to meet some of this indebtedness. That in fact was done. That was another means of cutting Government spending in a significant way, but the Government received nothing but castigation from the Opposition Parties, who said that this was inappropriate.

When the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) had the guts and the determination to make the changes with the VIA Rail passenger service so that we could have a viable passenger service in Canada, there was nothing but criticism from the Opposition Parties, notwithstanding the fact that this particular railway probably would have gone significantly in the red, and maybe to the point of having to be cancelled because these particular changes were not made when it was necessary.

So I ask you, Mr. Speaker, where really does the Opposition Party stand? They are not in favour of borrowing of money; they are not in favour of cutting Government expenditures. They only have one alternative left, and that is to say to Canadians that in order to meet these particular programs like Unemployment Insurance, like the Canada Pension Plan, like payments to old age pensioners, that are helping out at this time, the only way the Government can get its money is by raising taxes, because they have eliminated the other two possibilities.

The Canadian public knows this reality and they accept it, but they also know the reality of the Official Opposition, that they really have no policy. Can you imagine having a policy conference, called specifically to talk about policy, but not having any votes on policy or making any determination whatsoever? Where do they stand on this particular issue? Where do they stand on any of the issues, except negatively? When tough, hard-nosed, positive decisions must be made, they have been found lacking.

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to speak, not for the first time in this debate, but to follow a very good friend and respected colleague, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), who was a great disappointment to me today. This is one of the few times that he has disappointed me in any debate in this House in the last ten years.

I think the Hon. Member heard, during Question Period, when I, ill-advisedly and in the heat of debate, and I make no pretence or apology for saying things sometimes on which I have second thoughts, suggested to the current Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) that the Government would be much better served were the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton in the position that he had held and, I though, discharged very, very well. I do not take that back, even though it was said in the heat of debate because I thought that when the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton fulfilled that particular onerous responsibility he did so, first of all, with integrity, and I think with a sincere desire to fulfill a very, very difficult responsibility indeed, even in those days. I think he will be the first to agree that the pressures of that particular portfolio today exceed those that existed during his tenure.

I had intended to develop another theme in this debate, but I hope the Hon. Member will find it somewhat complimentary if I put aside my notes and deal first at least with some of the things that he said. I had never perceived that Member as having a snapshot view of Government. However, when he focused his attention on an issue that existed today, he did so to the exclusion of either the past and, more important, the future, because he talked about needing the gift of ESP when forecasting necessary borrowing, and he spoke about money going back into the community because we are paying Unemployment Insurance benefits. That is not the perception I perceived the Hon. Member as having when he was in Cabinet.

If I had to take him to task for his Cabinet responsibilities, I would remind him that he sat in that room when John Turner brought in those budgets. He is shaking his head no. If I am wrong, he is excused, because I would have found it very hard to believe that, without having an electronic bug in that Cabinet room, of all Members of Government that Member would have accepted the philosophy that existed in at least two budgets during my earlier years in this House, that commenced a spending spree for which now the Hon. Member is put in the embarrassing position of having to defend an enormous borrowing Bill. I do not think it is consistent with his philosophy, that of his constituents, or of any of us who share that geographic area in southwestern Ontario.

• (1550)

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member placed me in the Cabinet when the Hon. John Turner was Minister of Finance. I must say that I was proud to have served as his Parliamentary Secretary when he introduced the de-indexing which saved Canadian taxpayers billions of dollars.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Hon. Member is sufficiently defensive to rise on a point of order. It certainly discloses what I believe to be his true character. I say that with great respect.

What troubles me when I accuse the Hon Member of being guilty of a snapshot approach to the problem, is that he is saying that if the Opposition is in favour of borrowing, it must be in favour of increased taxation. If he is going to take that tunnel-vision approach, maybe he can justify that accusation.

Let me talk about something that the Hon. Member and I share. We share constituents with generally the same philosophy, ambitions, fears and possibly prejudices. He talked about money going back into the community in terms of funds paid for Unemployment Insurance. I am sure he will be the first to agree that for every dollar that of necessity goes to our fellow citizens who are so unfortunate as to have to rely on the Unemployment Insurance payments to pay for their heating, light, food and other necessities, there are likely tens or hundreds of other dollars that are not going back into the community. This is simply because his constituents and mine do not have sufficient confidence in themselves, the community and the country to take the risk that has been the tradition and history in our area.

I remember well many constituents, whether they be urban or rural in my riding and, I am sure, in the riding of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), who a year ago in October or November would not take a risk because of that lack of confidence. Instead of putting money back into the community, they put it into Canada Savings Bonds at 19.5 per cent interest. That did not create one job. Instead of a new milk house, as improvement to a small business, a renovation to a home or a multitude of other projects that are, traditional and historic in our community, our constituents invested their money in Canada Bonds.

When talking about money going back into the community, let us consider the millions of dollars shared between those two comparable ridings. The Hon. Member did not deal with interest rates specifically. However, I wish to do that. This Government seems to take some perverse pride in or credit for a reduction of interest rates, which was one of the major barriers to investment in the community, that job-creating investment that has been traditional not only in southwestern Ontario, but from Newfoundland to British Columbia.

What has happened with interest rates? I do not think anyone in this House will disagree with the virtually unanimous position of the economists who have commented recently. They have said without reservation, equivocation or qualification that interest rates, even at today's level, are much higher than they should be. They have given three basic reasons to explain the situation. First, the recession created a shortage in demand. It is as simple as that. People are not borrowing money to expand. In the view of entrepreneurs in this country, there is no demand for increased productivity. Second, there has been a sharp decline in interest rates in the United States. I presume that any increase in that country will be reflected within hours or days in this country. Third, the current economic recession hit Canada much more severely than it has most of our western industrialized trading partners. Those are the three reasons.

For whatever reason, and it is to the everlasting credit of Canadians, there still continues to be a part of our community that we have tagged as the risk-takers who continue to take risks. Unfortunately, the numbers have declined dramatically. It is a simple fact of life. The number of risk-takers has declined, but there is still that constituency that says, despite every economic argument to the contrary, that they are going to take a risk and start a new venture.

Given the extraordinary diminished number, once you have a risk-taker, what is that risk-taker, doing? I know quite a few of them. There is one in my family about whom I worry pretty well every day. That risk-taker is going to defy every prediction, rule and economic fact, take the risk and try to make a living.

Therein lie two factors. First, we must complement and support the person who intends to open up a small business and make a living on his own. The other side of that coin is that is it not consistent with Canadian risk-takers. Canadian risk-takers not only say they are going to make a living—I see you are getting nervous, Mr. Speaker. My time is up. I am sorry the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton provoked me and I had to use most of my time trying to set the record straight. I believe there is another stage in this debate in which I can participate.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to this Bill today. The legislation before the House consists of two flimsy pages with few words on them. It is not a heck of a lot to present to the House of Commons when seeking to borrow $19 billion. That is why Members on this side of the House have demanded from the Government a rational explanation of what it intends to do with these borrowed funds. That is a legitimate request. The Government should have responded to it before coming to the House asking for this borrowing authority. We should have had a budget for a request for this vast sum of money.

The important point in the debate is why the Government is in need of such a large sum of money. Fundamentally, it comes down to the fact that the Government has been mismanaging the economy, putting its economic focus in the wrong place. Therefore, we have an economic slowdown and record high levels of unemployment, which obviously means the Government revenues drop and the need of the Government to borrow increases dramatically. That is why the Government is seeking unheard levels of borrowing on such flimsy information.

When it comes to economic policies, the priorities of this Government are out of whack. Government emphasis has been on inflation. The six and five program was intended to bring down inflation. What it did was to reduce the amount of money in people's pockets, and, therefore, reduce their purchasing power. It reduced the demand in the economy and served as a further break on economic activity. It contributed to the drop in revenues from which the Government is presently suffering. It added to the need to borrow the large sum of money for which the Government is now seeking authority. The request of the Government to borrow $19 billion is really an admission of the failure of its economic policies. It is a clear indication of the need for an alternative set of economic priorities and economic policies. This includes not only the whole question of how the Government should intervene in the economy, but also includes the whole matter of tax reform, in other words, how the Government would raise revenue. Obviously, if a Government is running a deficit, it must have something to do with how it is raising its funds as well.

I would like to make a few central points, Mr. Speaker. The first point is the fact that the present recession in terms of economic activity in this country, and, certainly, depression in terms of unemployment, really points to a long overdue need for a real industrial strategy, some intelligent thinking and action about where private and public investment in this country is going to go. We need an industrial strategy in order to ensure that we have a strong economy and one that can produce jobs, which in turn would produce revenue for the Government, thereby reducing the need for the large kinds of borrowing which the Government is proposing today. We need an industrial strategy which is based on the principle that the public has a right to have some say about what kind of investments are going to be made within the country and what kind of economic activity is going to make sense, not only in terms of profit, but also in terms of employment, and it is through the Government that the general citizenry of the country has a chance to have some say about the economic direction of the country.

In spite of this obvious need for an industrial strategy, the Government has been backing away from Government intervention in the economy. It is starting to echo the Conservatives in terms of their "hands-off" economic philosophy, in other words, to leave the direction of the economy to the private sector in the hope that somehow the private businessmen all by themselves will know better how to manage the economy, how to create wealth and how to provide employment.

The experience which we have had in this country with that philosophy and that approach has been dismal, Mr. Speaker. It is really on the basis of that philosophy of leaving the fundamental management of the economy to the private sector that we have arrived at the present economic morass in which we find ourselves today. Also it is as a result of the application of this philosophy in the United States that we are suffering from our present economic difficulties. President Reagan was elected on the basis of a philosophy which said there was really no place in economic matters for the Government or for the public, and with this philosophy he reduced public spending and Government intervention in the economy which resulted in the predictable world-wide recession from which we are suffering today.

I must remind the House, Mr. Speaker, of the extent of our economic suffering. We cannot forget the fact that we have some 1.5 million people officially unemployed in this country and, obviously, every unemployed person reduces the revenues which can go to the Government because they are no longer in a position to pay taxes. We have 1.5 million people unemployed, but we have to add to that number those people who have just given up looking for work because they just cannot find any. They have become discouraged and given up. On top of that we have to add those people working part-time and those who are not working at full capacity because they cannot find the kind of employment they are qualified for. When you add those people in, you find the real level of unemployment in this country to be over a couple of million people. It has been reported that the real unemployment rate in this country is actually something like 19 per cent rather than the official rate of around 12 per cent.

The fact that the Government is before us today, Mr. Speaker, asking for record borrowing authority of $19 million should not be any surprise because the Government has been putting emphasis on bringing down inflation—at least, has been taking credit for bringing down inflation—and has been ignoring the need for job creation in any significant way. It has not put the necessary priority on employment. And when I say "priority on employment", what I am talking about is the fact that a humane society, as was pointed out by the Bishops not too long ago, really has to adopt the objective of full employment. In other words, every person who is capable of working and desires to work has the right to work. It is just not good enough to run the economy in a way that leaves a couple of million people out of work. By running the economy in that way, the Government is left with reduced revenues and, therefore, with a larger deficit. What the Government is saying by its actions is that it prefers to have people on welfare and on unemployment insurance benefits, rather than employed, creating wealth and engaging in productive and fulfilling activities.

It is a well-known fact in this country, Mr. Speaker, that over the last few decades the burden of taxes in this country has fallen more and more heavily on the individual rather than the corporation, and that the income tax in this country is no longer progressive; for example, those who earn more do not necessarily pay more taxes. In order to supply revenue to the Government so that it can do those things it needs to have done such as job-creation programs, there must be a decent and fair corporate and income tax system.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, it is now pretty obvious that this House must, in fact, pass the borrowing Bill. I believe that the debate which has characterized this consideration so far has been a good one. I believe the last three speeches have contributed matters of substance, and I certainly enjoyed them. However, in my opinion, the very fact that the Government is in such desperate financial straits that it must exhibit the desperation which is so apparent in order to get this money shows its lack of long-term planning and financial expertise. Did you know, Sir, for example, that some of the RCMP "A" Division members in Ottawa had their pay cheques retrieved last Thursday? Some of these cheques were passed out in advance for administrative convenience, then had to be retrieved ostensibly, I suppose, because it was feared they might present these cheques inadvertently, or otherwise, a little early for deposit or payment. This kind of financial precariousness illustrates, I believe, the lack of foresight which the Government has exhibited in managing the affairs of the nation.

The last time I spoke, Mr. Speaker, I indicated that there had been a veritable parade of Ministers of National Revenue and Finance since 1979, four in each Department, as I recall. On the other hand, despite the feckless disregard for good financial spending which has characterized some of the past Ministers, and indeed much of the Prime Minister's own personal technique when it comes to looking after our country, I would like to say something in a positive way this afternoon. I believe many Hon. Members are heartened by the fact that beneath this musical chairs act of Ministers there have been various Presidents of the Treasury Board in recent years, and Auditors General, such as the late Mr. Macdonell to whom I would like to pay tribute this afternoon as I know many Hon. Members would and have already done, who have in fact finally grasped the enormity of the fiscal and financial mistakes which were made in the 1970s.

I believe perhaps the turning point came with Mr. Macdonell in 1976, when he made the statement that the Government's finances were out of control. This even attracted the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and, to his credit, as I recall, the Lambert Commission was then instituted to look into the fiscal and financial acceptability of Government.

About this time Hon. Members will recall the Prime Minister had another small period of educational bliss thrust upon him by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of Germany, to whom he was paying a visit. He then came back and made some Hilltop declarations on fiscal responsibility to the then Minister of Finance, now the Minister of Energy (Mr. Chrétien). This provoked a brief flurry, mostly counterproductive because of lack of planning, and the Departments which were most in need of money did not get any. The Departments which were sloppy and over-allocated did not mind losing some. In any event, we then saw another progression toward accountability when we had the Comptroller General, Mr. Harry Rogers, appointed upon the presentation of the report of Mr. Lambert's commission. I think our late colleague, Bob Andras, subscribed to this kind of fiscal and financial accountability. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) has certainly contributed a great deal toward bringing forward in the public consciousness the sort of value for money, special procedures and cost effectiveness concepts, which finally, I believe, are bringing some financial accountability to this Chamber.

So at a second level, Mr. Speaker, beneath the apparent futility of some of the Ministers who have occupied these portfolios which are so sensitive and where, as the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) indicated, the reversal of policies and confusion have contributed to the lack of business confidence, at another level there has been progress made in the House toward fiscal and financial accountability. I think, in fairness, the Government has to be given some credit for doing this. As well, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), when he was President of the Treasury Board, also subscribed to this kind of improved financial accountability.

Now, the former Minister of Employment and Immigration, in his remarks this afternoon, which inspired some very appropriate comments from the Hon. Member for Perth, indicated that the Opposition has no policies. Well, of course, we all know that this is largely rhetoric. The obvious thing to do in a period of falling revenues, when the Government may be caught by as much as a $6 billion shortfall because of a miscalculation of revenues from the National Energy Program, which I think itself has contributed to this situation because of that program's retrogressive effect, the Government obviously has to spend less and spend more intelligenty. As well, it has to look for alternate sources of revenue.

I do not know why, for example, the Government does not simply abandon the Macdonald Commission. It is not going to report for some years, has already cost $1 million, and it follows right on the heels of another McDonald Commission which cost the taxpayers of this country $10 million and which has produced very little if any benefit so far, except uncertainty for the Security Service, and which was almost a duplicate of the Mackenzie Royal Commission. The Maritimes Pollution Claims Fund, Mr. Speaker, is another source of potential revenue for the Atlantic region, provided the statutory changes were made to allow this $50 million fund to be used for purposes relating to marine stimulation, perhaps for the fishing industry or for shipbuilding subsidies. There are other indications as well that if the Government would simply manage its long-term commitments in a more astute way, it would not always be caught short to the point where it is constantly harassing Members of this House to pass legislation and today give them $19 billion so we can pay the Members of "A" Division of the RCMP here in Ottawa. Surely it is almost an absurdity that the Government is reduced to this kind of short-term and obvious hand-to-mouth financing when it comes to running the affairs of our country.

Now, Sir, there is obviously a great responsibility on all Members of Parliament to make sure that the Government, when it is considering accountability and the spending of such vast amounts of money, pay greater attention to ongoing programs. Right now in the Department of Public Works the Minister has to grapple with the effects of the mortgage management portfolio system which has turned out to be a horror show, but which he inherited. It has wasted tens of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money. There are also indications that the Auditor General, Mr. Dye, is going to take another extraordinarily practical step in combating this kind of waste, as well as the item like the $100 million or $200 million, I forget which, overspending in the Montreal postal terminal debacle, which the Minister of the day denied even existed when I asked him about it. Obviously the Auditor General will have to institute an ongoing audit for large capital projects so that when he sees these kinds of excesses, based on political or other reasons, which are causing taxpayers to be ripped off for millions, he will have the authority to step in and give a little bit of guidance, or at least demand some explanations. In the past, Auditors General have had to wait until literally the horse was stolen before they went into the barn and announced the bad news to the taxpayers. Now, perhaps, if these trends can be carried on which the late Mr. Macdonell instituted and which Mr. Dye appears to be consolidating and expanding, we can get a more selective, astute and efficient spending of the hundreds of millions of dollars that many Departments waste each year.

Just to show you, Mr. Speaker, how the Government has grown, I think it was Peter Newman in Maclean's Magazine last summer who indicated that Sir John A. Macdonald had approximately 12 or 13 Cabinet Ministers and about 300 civil servants. Today each of the 36 Ministers in this administration, if you average it out, have approximately 17,000 civil servants under their administration. That is a tremendous increase. While it is unrealistic to advocate wholesale cuts in the Public Service, and I certainly do not, I think it is realistic to advocate a more selective approach to the use of consultants, a practice which costs the country hundreds of millions of dollars every year and in many cases only supplements or bolsters the expertise of many civil servants whom we are already paying very well for doing the same job which apparently has to be sanctioned again by consultants who are usually more notable for what they have done in the past for the Party in power than any great expertise they bring to the job.

I for one, Mr. Speaker, would not advocate delaying this measure any more. For the reasons mentioned, I think the Government needs the money. I hope that in the future it will use it more judiciously than it has in the past. I hope we can expect the same degree of conscientiousness from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) we now have, that has existed in some of the recent Ministers in the job. I hope the Government will seriously consider searching for some new sources of revenue, such as the Maritimes Pollution Claims Fund, and as well will consider changing some of the tax provisions which are counterproductive. Certainly nothing so stultified the industry, ingenuity and ambition of Canadians as the imposition of the capital gains tax which this Government brought it in years ago. At the present time the continuing existence of this tax, unindexed, only fosters confiscation by the state of property that people have accumulated and which has only increased in value because of inflation, but is taxed, none the less. I see you are indicating my time has expired, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on February 28, I spoke on this Bill and one of the amendments before us at that time. Now, a month later, I come back to the same subject again. Like the Hon. Member who has just spoken, I am going to try to be constructive, if I can, in helping the Government consider different ways of getting out of the trouble it is in. I suspect the Government already knows these ideas are worthy of consideration. For instance, in my speech a month ago I suggested two ideas they could look at to be put into committee. One was that we should use the Bank of Canada to help us get over this pressure we are under now with this present Bill which calls for the borrowing of a total of $19 billion. Now, I did not hear any comments in the press about these proposals, and I am used to that, so I am going to make them again. What did I mean by using the Bank of Canada? Well, if you read the Bank of Canada Act, which is 50 years old, you will realize that it was put in at a time when Canada was in terrible trouble on fiscal and monetary policy. We were at the beginning of what turned out to be a Depression of nearly ten years. The Government set up the Bank of Canada, took away from the commercial banks the power to control the money supply and gave it to the central Bank. For long periods in the Depression the Governments under Bennett and Mackenzie King, quietly used the Bank of Canada to pay the costs of operating the Government because they were not collecting the taxes. At that time there were so many people unemployed and there was so much unused plant capacity that there was no inflation. In the view of many people, we are not far from that situation today, Mr. Speaker.

A month ago I suggested that we use the Bank of Canada, and then just last week I heard that the Government is using emergency power. I assume that these emergency powers are the Governor General's warrants approach. I do not know the final answer, although I will eventually find it, but I wonder if the Government is not using the key to this type of approach. Certainly, the purpose of the Governor General's warrants is to carry the Government in an emergency such as when an election is called before the money has been voted. That is almost the situation today. The Act makes it very clear that no interest is paid to the Bank of Canada in that case. One of the heaviest loads that any Government carries today is the cost of interest at the present high rates.

I put that forward at this late stage of the debate and ask Members of the Government who are present to find out if the Bank of Canada is being used. If that is the case and there have been no evil results, then perhaps we should follow the precedents of Bennett and King and use it more. I do not think that would cause inflation if there is a labour supply, unused plant capacity and, above all, a not too fast circulation of money. The velocity of money flow is not included in our monetary activities at the present time, although I think it should be.

Perhaps the Government has stumbled on something that is in harmony with what I said a month ago. It certainly should consider this matter again because it may do a great deal of harm if it tries to borrow $19 billion on the market in the next few months. That could create the impression in the minds of business people and investors that we are about to enter another inflationary period. In that case, interest rates would rise immediately and undo the achievement of the declining interest rates of the last six months.

I should like to suggest that the Government ask those who have the power to inquire, whether this technique of using the Bank of Canada is being followed. The trick is to do it quietly and get over the situation of having to borrow $19 billion at high rates.

The other proposal that I made a month ago was that the Government not borrow at rates of 10, 11 or 12 per cent but at about 3 per cent. That is all that money is worth. People will lend it at that rate if they have a guarantee that if there is inflation this year—and there will be some—the interest at the end of the year will be indexed for the year. But the principal will also be indexed, to keep its real value. If an investor of the type who puts his money in Government bonds as a rule, wants to lend money at 3 per cent, he just wants to be sure that he will get it back without any loss in value. This idea probably sounds kooky, but it should be tried to see what happens.

I suggest it would not give the impression that a lot of inflation is expected. If $19 billion is borrowed at an interest rate of 10, 11 or 12 per cent for three or four months, then the country may be forced back into the recession from which we are just emerging.

In the last two or three years, the basic problem of any government in any country has been getting interest rates down. I repudiate those monetarists who suggest that interest rates are the tool to control the economy of the country and the external value of our dollar. Let the markets decide those things. We should quit fooling around with fine tuning. I think that getting interest rates down would be accepted by everyone. Even the lenders of money know that if they destroy their customers they destroy themselves.

There are several things the Government could move on, Mr. Speaker. Let us put the old Farm Credit Corporation back to the terms that existed in 1933. In statutory form, the maximum interest rate under the Farm Credit Corporation was 5 per cent, and it was given power to lend 20 times the amount of capital. The same thing could apply to small business, to export business, and so on. We could move on that.

There are other ways of achieving this, such as through the principle of the Small Business Development Bond, as suggested in the Crosbie budget. This could be applied without cost but would give a tremendous impetus to business without altering the ways and means of the budget.

Finally, the mining industry, the energy industry and the forest industry have taken a terrible beating in the last few years. We must face the fact that what is set out in the Government's reports is correct. There will never be another low-grade mine developed in Canada, the reports say, under our present tax structure where two Governments are gouging the industry. I think we must revert to the way things were done in the mining industry years ago. Because it was a capital intensive, high-risk operation, no taxes were paid until the debts were paid off. There was a three-year holiday. Today, instead of the three-year proviso, I would stipulate no taxes until the debts are paid off. There would be enough money left for both levels of Government and to give a return on capital and make the risk worthwhile to the mining entrepreneurs.

The same principle should be applied to energy companies. They are highly capitalized and have a long pay-out period so they cannot operate at present interest rates. They were not even operating very well when interest rates were 4 or 6 per cent. High-risk, low grade propositions such as natural gas, heavy oils, tar sands and so on, should be subject to the same rule as is applied to the mining industry—the Government gets off their backs until debts are paid off. The volume of business would mean that there would be something for everyone even at a low rate of tax.

That is all I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker. These are some simple proposals that can be considered although some of them may be thought to be kooky. At times like this, however, we had better consider every type of scenario.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in report stage debate of Bill C-143, the borrowing authority Bill. I have only been in the House of Commons for four years but in the last year I feel that all we have debated is borrowing Bills. This is the fourth one this year, and there have been seven or eight in the whole session, so we have spent a considerable amount of time talking about borrowing money.

This year the Government will borrow $26.2 billion, and I am sure it will be back next year asking for authority to borrow more money, even though the $14 billion requested in this Bill will take it into next year.

This is the largest borrowing Bill in the history of Canada. The figures do not mean too much to the Canadian people because no one can relate to $19 billion. Take a look at the remarks which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) made in the debate on second reading of this Bill. He said:

• (1630)

This Bill is one in a series of necessary steps being taken to deal with the extremely difficult economic situation facing this country.

When you take a look at a statement like that and you realize who has been running the country for the last number of years, and you realize that not only has there been deficit financing every year, in good times and bad, but also increases in the deficit from time to time, then you understand the hollowness of that statement. Another statement of the Minister's is as follows:

—I want to emphasize that financial requirements have risen because of unexpectedly harsh cyclical forces. The Government of Canada remains committed to its longer term goal of systematic restraint of its expenditures as a proportion of the GNP, and to systematic reduction of the deficit as well.

Let me read that last little phrase again:

—and to systematic reduction of the deficit as well.

We have seen no evidence of that in the last decade and prior to that. There has, however, been one exception. That exception was the budget brought in by the Clark Government in 1979. It laid out very clearly the method of reducing the deficit over a period of five years and beyond. The one and only time this was done over the last number of years was done by a Progressive Conservative Government. For the Minister of Finance to say that he is dedicated "to systematic reduction of the deficit as well" is a very hollow statement indeed. We can take those words, I think, very lightly, because there has been no proof of it from the other side.

The spending of this Government over the last 15 years is staggering. It is very difficult even for a Member of Parliament to grasp the tremendous increase in spending around here. The Liberals do very interesting things. I can give an example of what has been done right in my own constituency of Brampton-Georgetown. This Government in its wisdom has decided to move the Citizenship Court from the regional seat of Brampton where it has been located since 1976 to Mississauga. Prior to 1976, everyone in our area had to go to Toronto. But the Government has decided to take an established court, which has been in Brampton going on eight years, and establish a brand new court in Mississauga in the riding of Mississauga North. This is a high rent district. It will cost the Government a tremendous amount of money, more than was spent in Brampton. I believe the problem is numbers, because this court services close to 400 applicants every month. It is an extremely busy court. There is room in the building in Brampton to expand and this would cost much less than it is costing in Mississauga. Yet the Government made this decision to move the court. It will cost the Government a tremendous additional amount of money. The location of this court in Brampton is central to the areas it services. This court is now being moved to the south end of the area that it serves.

Mr. Blais: It is consolidation.

Mr. McDermid: It is not consolidation at all. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) said it is consolidation, but it is not. The court in Mississauga was established some six years later, as a matter of fact, last year. Incidentally, it is still not in full operation. Therefore, this is not consolidation at all. It is the transfer of a court from one area to another within the same region. As I said, it will cost a tremendous amount of additional money to establish this new court which is being located in a high rent district. It does not have to be there. There is no sense to this move at all. I might add that the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) who is responsible for the courts promised two months ago to give me an answer, but to date I have not received one. This move is a waste of money and it is completely unnecessary. But the Government went ahead just the same.

I am sure there are examples after examples of this type of misspending of funds. I know my colleagues can cite many more.

In the limited time I have I want to talk about the Department of National Revenue for a moment. I guess this Department is known in Canada, quite rightly, as the most effective collection agency in the country. I do not think there is any doubt about that. It is, "You are found guilty and you must prove your innocence later on." These people from Revenue Canada just come in and grab the money.

There is a very disturbing procedure going on in our country today. I am very concerned, as I know a number of my colleagues are. The auditing force of this Department is—and I will use the term advisedly—harassing the farming community in Canada. We hear the auditors are in British Columbia now auditing farmers. They have been into Ontario. I can give an example of an individual who was setting up an operation which would eventually have turned into a full-time one. He had received funding from the Federal Business Development Bank. He set up what I and many consider to be a very fine operation. The Department of Revenue did its audit, checking back five years. It forced the individual into bankruptcy. The Department completely destroyed this individual and his operation. The Department forced him to sell his farm at a much lower rate than it was worth, and it forced him to sell good top breeding stock at bankrupt sale prices. This forced him to the wall, and now we have an individual, who was preparing to go into a full-time operation and was deriving some of his revenue elsewhere, who is now completely defeated. He is disspirited. The Department of National Revenue did a real number on this individual, instead of trying to cooperate and help him. That situation is being repeated time and time again.

In Farm and Country, for Tuesday, March 22, 1983, the headline on page 3 reads, "Farmers battle tax grab." This article is about farmers being put upon by the Department of National Revenue. Because this Government is so hungry for tax money, this is what is going on today in our country, and it is a sin.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity today to express a few thoughts regarding the supplementary borrowing authority which the Government is seeking through Bill C-143.

I believe the proper allocation of authority is vital to the survival of Parliament. By whose authority then are expenditures to be approved and laws made? Is it to be done according to the traditions of this country and of other representative democracies throughout the free world? Or is it to be done through Orders in Council in the lofty ivory tower of the Finance Minister? No, Mr. Speaker I think not. It is to be discussed here in the House of Commons before people elected by the citizens of this country where decisions should be made to safeguard the best interests of the populace in mind. These decisions are not—I repeat—not to be made with the narrow, partisan interests of the governing Party in mind. Yet, time and time again in the House, we see gross examples of political engineering and maneuvering instead of face-to-face negotiating on these very important points of borrowing authority and expenditure approval. Would any self-respecting bank manager lend money without having a fair idea of where that money is going and how it would be paid back? Of course not. Yet the Finance Minister (Mr. Lalonde) hides behind his friendly smile and assures the House that this budget will be coming soon.

• (1640)

We are getting rather tired of being assured. Why not do things in the proper order and let us know how these moneys will be spent before requesting capital for, as the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) puts it, "prudent financial housekeeping". Any of our nation's homemakers would say that they would never stay afloat with this kind of financial housekeeping.

I want to focus on a few more remarks made by the Minister of State for Finance in defence of the Government's request for additional borrowing authority. The Minister's remarks on Thursday of last week seemed to indicate that he is satisfied with the amount of time which has been taken in debate and in committee on Bill C-143. We on this side are not because too many questions remain.

The Minister of State appears deeply concerned that he will not have the necessary capital to handle, as he puts it, "heavy tax refunds". This is rather interesting. Let me remind my hon. colleague that income tax refunds are funds which have already been paid to the Government. Where have they disappeared to? We do not even receive interest on the millions of dollars that are deducted at source during the previous year. This is a financial bonanza for the Government and one of the few sources of income on which its borrowing costs are nil. Yet it cannot even put aside for future reimbursement the small percentage of income tax received which is earmarked for refunds. No, it takes those funds as well and throws them into the trough for any and all Government enterprises to dip into.

It is rather like a lawyer who takes his client's cash to the racetrack. He throws it down on PetroCan in the fifth, Dome in the ninth, and loses his shirt. The only difference is that lawyers can be disbarred. Governments can carry on until their mandate is up, sinking more and more into the comfortable ooze of authority. Hopefully, the client—the citizens of Canada—will call a halt to the game-playing in the very next election. In any case, we in the Opposition are still wondering how the money requested will be spent. It is true that we do have the Estimates. We see the requirements for funding for the Small Business Investment Grant Program and the NEED Program which should ensure a few more Liberal votes. But these programs fail to come to the heart of the problem.

Why are such programs needed? A healthy economy would cure unemployment problems and ensure the development of a prosperous small business sector. However, band-aid programs aside, we are still awaiting the bag of tricks forthcoming from the Minister of Finance. After all, it is in the budget that we see not only the proposed expenditures but how that money will be raised. We shall see what new and devious schemes will be proposed to squeeze yet more funds from the depleted pockets of Canadians from coast to coast.

If we see wonderful and equitable programs emerging from this budget, if creative means are revealed therein which point the way toward economic recovery and a loosening of the regulatory stranglehold on free enterprise, then we shall wholeheartedly approve such expenditures as will be required to meet the needs of these programs. But we will definitely not give voluntary blanket authority to patchwork, stop-gap, finger-in-the-dyke borrowing. We will not do so when one out of every four dollars raised is used to service the national debt.

Any business which operates in this fashion would be long out of business, with padlocks on the doors and plywood on the windows. The Government cannot operate indefinitely on such a huge deficit. Where does it stop? There are too many handouts and too many golden handshakes. Until it stops, the deficit will continue to grow, until eventually our citizens are taxed to death, the nation goes bankrupt and our dollars will become worthless souvenirs, like the deutschemark of bygone days when a wheelbarrelful would buy a loaf of bread.

As was indicated last week, supposedly in defence of Government monetary policy, Cabinet committees are taking responsibility for expenditure management, following guidelines set out by the Lambert Commission. Glowing words were spoken about checks and balances on spending. If these checks and balances are in place and functioning, why did the Auditor General have so much to say in his recent report?

There was more than one indictment of overspending in Government Departments, thus making a mockery of such statements by the Minister of State for Finance as:

> The Treasury Board rigorously examines all requests for spending authority by Government departments and agencies. It is constantly on the lookout for inefficiency or impropriety and screens the submissions it receives very carefully.

If such were the case, would the deficit be what it is today?

In the past few weeks, we have heard abundant eloquence from the Government benches justifying the supplemental borrowing authority on the grounds that it is inevitable spending, and that they have somehow done their best and we should accept it. Well, their best is certainly not good enough.

Figures abound to confirm the fact that Government spending has risen much faster than the Consumer Price Index or the Gross National Product. There can be no arguing there. Therefore, why will the Government not give clear and honest answers about why these funds are needed instead of generating vague responses about new programs and seasonal needs? The citizens of Canada are entitled to a fair debate on this issue. Were we elected in order to sit here and watch while their best interests are continually shoved in the background for the purposes of expediency? Is not the whole purpose of Parliament to have such discussion? Without responsible debate we might just as well shut this place down. Without input from elected representatives, our country will eventually be run by a Cabinet committee advising a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with his emperor-like powers. How close are we to getting to that stage right now?

It was pointed out last week by my hon. colleague, the Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), that the reasoning for deficit spending is a fallacious one and that going deeper and deeper into debt will not help bring about economic prosperity. To that opinion, I add my overwhelming support.

We hear about finance companies which consolidate one's debts by substituting several small payments into one, huge crippling one. Any way one looks at it, one is still in debt. Similarly, adding to the deficit is economic suicide, yet in seeking this supplemental borrowing authority, the Government is doing just that.

Deficits are only short-term and meant to provide funds for programs to stimulate industry and commerce. That is the platform of my friends to the left, and increasingly of my hon. colleagues across the floor who seek to imitate them. However, that is not my Party's policy. We endeavour to cut spending, cut borrowing and cut the deficit because it is a Canadian tradition. That is how our forefathers operated. They built this country up by the free enterprise system and the cash payment system. It worked for them.

Let us not turn this country into another Sweden where free enterprise is virtually dead and where the tax burden is indeed unbearable. That is where we are headed with a Government that borrows increasingly and expects carte blanche to do so.

In conclusion, it is my belief that the Government must exercise more responsibility in dealing with the financial affairs of this nation. One way for it to do so is to determine now that it will make an effort to cut down on the deficit, first, by cleaning house and following the recommendations of the Auditor General. The second way is to encourage participation of Parliament in fiscal affairs and by declining to muzzle dissident voices through premature closure on Bills such as C-143. After all, the welfare of Canadians is at stake.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a privilege to stand today to speak to Bill C-143, and particularly the amendment which has been proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Bill C-143, an interim borrowing Bill, comes in two parts. There is $5 billion for the ongoing expenses to cover the shortfall in federal revenue until the end of this fiscal year. Then we are being asked by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to do an unprecedented thing, and that is, to provide through this borrowing authority $14 billion which is really, if one looks at the Estimates in the Blue Book, the shortfall in Government revenue for the first seven months of the fiscal year, from the month of April through to the end of October. The Minister comes in blatantly asking for this kind of borrowing authority from the House of Commons, from the people who are representing, or supposed to be representing, their constituents at home, when he is probably two weeks away from a budget that will tell the people what the $14 billion is going to be spent on.

• (1650)

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has clearly stated in the amendment that we will authorize borrowing authority for $1 to the Government, forcing the Government to be accountable to the people so that when they do need the money and they are prepared to tell us what this money is going to be spent on, they will then come back to the House of Commons and to the elected representatives of the people across the country, and say, "This is what we need the money for and this is how we are going to spend it."

Mr. Speaker, it is becoming increasingly frustrating to sit in this House and to have a Government so callous and so brazen that it would come in with this Bill C-143. It does not even shock people anymore that a Minister of Finance would ask this House to willy-nilly pass a borrowing authority Bill that will give him $14 billion for the next fiscal year. This in essence gives him carte blanche to spend the money the way he wants to until the end of October, with no accountability to the taxpayer or to the people of this country. Imagine asking for this sum of money two weeks before he brings down a budget that will tell us how he is going to spend the money!

I had the pleasure of speaking a little while ago to one of my constituents in Fort McMurray who is a true pioneer, Clare Peden, who settled the northern country, who has worked with his hands, who drove a CAT 400 miles through the bush breaking trail so that he could go up and start a construction firm in Fort McMurray years ago, years before there was an oil-sands plant. He has slowly seen his tax dollar, his way of life and his confidence in the Government absolutely and totally destroyed because of actions like this.

I urge all Members, from the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party, to listen to what your constituents are saying to you. They are saying: "Enough is enough!" The waste of spending millions and millions of dollars in advertising across the country saying our energy dollars are working and we are only that far from energy self-sufficiency in this country is beyond belief.

The Government is wasting millions and millions of dollars doing studies to find out why the economy is stagnating. The economy is stagnating in Canada because the present Liberal Government has an attitude similar to that of the present Minister of Finance who says: "Hey, we can borrow $14 billion. We will not even tell the people of Canada. We will not even tell the taxpayer in Canada where that money is going to be spent. They do not need to know. We will tell them when we are good and ready." That is what the present Government is saying, and all Members should recognize that. That is what the Minister is saying when he requests from this House the authority to go out and borrow $14 billion.

I know, and all Members of this House know, that to operate a Government or to operate a business, there are times when you have to borrow money. Of course you have to borrow on your assets, you have to borrow on your projected revenues, you have to borrow to run the Government. We recognize that. But it is discourteous and it is totally ignorant for a Minister of Finance to come forward and say that the Government wants to borrow $14 billion, and when asked what it is going to use the $14 billion for, to intimate that it is none of our business.

My colleague who spoke just before me asked how one could go to a bank and expect to borrow money and not tell the bank manager what it was needed for. It is the bank's money. The bank manager represents the bank. The bank represents shareholders, it is their money and they want to know what the borrower is going to use the money for. I recently made a loan at the bank. They wanted detailed copy of how the money was going to be used and how I was going to pay it back, where the revenue was coming from. They wanted to know the cashflow.

The people of Canada want to know where the $14 billion is going to go. They do not want the Members who are sitting in this House to give the Minister of Finance carte blanche authority to spend $14 billion on the kinds of things that he has spent it on in the past. They want to know if he has an oil company in mind that the Government wants to buy. They want to know if he wants to buy a pulp and paper mill. They want to know if the money is going to be used to bail out a Massey-Ferguson or a Ford or a GM. They want to know if the money is going to be used to assist the farmer, to assist the unemployed, and they have a right to know because you and I as Members of Parliament representing constituents are accountable to those constituents. We have to go home and say to our constituents, yes or no, this is why it is being spent and this is why it was authorized.

We in this House know that this Bill is going to pass. We know that it is going to go through because there is a majority Government. I have yet to see a Member from the Government benches stand up, give us an analysis and tell us where this $14 billion that is being requested is going to go. All we are asking in this amendment is that the Hon. Members on all sides of the House vote yes to the first part, the $5 billion, which has to be allocated to finish off this fiscal year, but that the $14 billion be denied that Minister of Finance with an insatiable appetite for spending money. We ask that it be denied now, and when it is required, that a Bill be brought before this House detailing exactly where this money is going to be spent so that we can then go back to our constituents and be able to account for it.

It is paramount that this amendment go through, and it should go through with all Hon. Members' blessings because, in the final analysis, our duty is to our country, our duty is to our constituency, and then our duty is to our Party, and it is not the other way around.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read briefly from a letter received from a valued constituent, Mr. Reed Naylor of Okanagan Falls. He says in part:

• (1700)

There are obvious areas of out-and-out waste and it is rapidly ruining us. I still hope that someone will organize a blacklist of Government waste to which anyone who sees examples may contribute. If such a program could be made to snowball, it might develop sufficient credence to indicate to Government some of the flagrant absurdities of their wasteful policies. It beats me to see my taxes spent on repeated advertising on CTV by federal Departments such as Environment, Metric Commission, Parks Canada, etc. etc. I counted five in one 60-minute period a few days ago.

It is no wonder the subject of waste in constantly raised. No wonder the subject of Government advertising often occupies the attention of Members. Spending by the Metric Commission on a program that practically no one in Canada wants is repeatedly raised. We are becoming a nation of cynics. The Government is asking for an unreasonable blank cheque so that it can continue its extravagance. It is creating an image, and people no longer believe in the integrity of Government.

Last Friday afternoon I flew from Vancouver to Penticton. A young lady sat beside me. She was from New Brunswick, now living in Coquitlam where she is working for the provincial Government as a dietician. This lady supports her parents who still live in New Brunswick. She made a remark that I believe is the typical reaction of the majority of Canadians. She said she was willing to make sacrifices for her country and was prepared to accept a salary freeze if necessary, but that she was offended by what was going on in Ottawa where restraint is spoken about but the Government is not prepared to restrain its own spending.

That is a common reaction in Canada today. People are prepared to sacrifice for their country, but they are offended by a Government that carries on a practice of waste, extravagance and patronage. It looks after its interests and those of its friends, to the disadvantage of those not so classified. This is why we are becoming a nation of cynics.

Just last week in Penticton, which is in my riding, Greenwood Forest Products was put into receivership. This was a busy milling operation, the largest employer in the area. It had a record of innovation. It was a productive enterprise, one that had developed a lucrative European market for lodge-pole pine panelling, competing with Scandinavian products.

That company had too much debt at too high an interest rate. The shutdown threw 250 employees out of work, placing them on the unemployment roll. This will have a domino effect on logging contractors, suppliers, engineering firms, in fact, the whole community. This is the most catastrophic incident to happen in the area.

Why did it happen? One reason over and above what I have mentioned was that the assistance offered to Greenwood Forest Products by the federal Government through its Enterprise Development Program was too slow in coming and imposed conditions just not acceptable to the parties.

This is in comparison to what the Government of Canada did for Maislin Trucking of Montreal. It guaranteed a $34 million loan with almost no strings attached. The treatment of Greenwood Forest Products has been unworthy and discriminatory. No wonder people are becoming cynical with this uneven treatment by Government, a Government that looks after its friends to the exclusion of those not in that category. Maislin had friends in Government. Greenwood Forest Products did not have friends of equal influence. It is this type of situation which offends Canadians and makes them cynical about Government.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses disclosed that close to half of Canada's unemployed are former employees of small and medium-size businesses. It conducted a survey which showed that 51 per cent of responding businesses had reduced the number of their employees since early 1981. It is significant that most businesses that responded had reduced salary demands, below 6 per cent; 38 per cent gave no salary increase to their employees; and 6 per cent had actually reduced wages. Compare that to the federal Government's six and five approach for which it takes credit for all kinds of miraculous happenings in the economy. It has killed the economy. It makes it impossible for economic activity to take place. The Government says the six and five programs has broken the back of inflation. The other day I said it was like a farmer going into his chicken house, killing all his chickens and then taking credit for the fact that the weasels are no longer getting his eggs.

Mr. Bulloch says the private sector is leading the Government in restraint and wages. He points the finger at the Government in other ways. He said and I quote from the newspaper account:

> Mr. Bulloch did say that while the recession was worldwide, "much of the cause has also been the result of a combination of damaging federal policies and intergovernmental bickering." He condemned the "collection of ill-conceived and ill-timed tax proposals" ... and the malignant growth of the federal budget deficit.

It has an impact on people in many different ways. A widow telephoned me the other day to say that she is receiving phonecalls from a collection agency about her son's student loan. Her son made payments as long as he was working, but he is now out of work. He advised the bank that he could not make further payments until he resumed work. The bank sent the official letter, after which it can call on the Government to pay the loan under the Government guarantee. The Government then proceeds to put the matter in the hands of a collection agency. This collection agency is saying to this recently widowed friend of mine who is living on a widow's allowance, "You have a responsibility. Mortgage your house so you can pay off your son's loan. It is your responsibility to look after this." I suppose none of us likes the fact that there are 100,000 student loans in default. That represents something like $200 million. However, I do not believe that the Government should be so cruel and so insensitive to the realities of life that it will put a collection agency onto a widow who is a responsible person, and suggest that she has an obligation to pay her son's indebtedness.

I think that is symptomatic of something which is happening in the country, that we have a Government which is out of control and which is putting the squeeze on everyone but itself. In so doing it is making, as I said before, cynics of Canadians.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the blanket which the federal Government is placing over Canadians is going to smother a society which we have known for 100 years. It is a great misfortune that Members on the Government side are not prepared to rise and take a stand on issues which are going to destroy our country if something is not done about it. When this Prime Minister took office, Mr. Speaker, 15 per cent of the GNP was all that was required to finance Government's operations. This year the expenditure will take 23 per cent of the GNP. The increased costs of financing Government since 1968 have multiplied 12 times. Canadians, I believe, are now starting to realize just exactly what is happening. For a long time a lot of Canadians would tell politicians they would far rather have a Government going broke than their businesses being broke. Now, Mr. Speaker, we are finding out they are both broke. The total debt for which the federal Government is responsible is approximately $250 billion. People are now starting to realize what the consequences of that may be.

A few months ago the Government deficit was supposed to be $10.6 billion. Then the Minister of Finance said it would be $18 billion. Then it got to be $23 billion. Now at the end of this fiscal year we are finding it is well over $27 billion. Never in the history of Canada have Estimates been so far out of kilter. We must hold the Government responsible for this and we must hold the Minister of Finance responsible. This kind of attitude toward inappropriate action on the part of any governing body will ensure that we are going to enter into a disastrous situation.

Who is going to pull Canada out of the problems with which we have to deal? Government expenditures have outgrown and outstripped the growth in GNP. Let me impress upon you, Mr. Speaker, that deficit spending is just deferred taxation. What we are really doing is shoving a debt load onto our children and our grandchildren. They are going to have a great deal of difficulty trying to deal with it, and I am sure that they are going to be very unforgiving when they find out exactly what is being done to them. We have this rapid escalation of debt, yet the Government wants to borrow $14 billion more. My goodness gracious, Mr. Speaker, $1.5 billion in 1968 paid the cost of financing our national debt. Today it is $18.6 billion. That amount does not include any of the costs of our Crown corporations. In 1968, our debt cost 13 cents of every dollar which the Government spent. Today it is 20 cents. This is money which the Government is spending, not just taxation dollars which are taken in.

We must realize, Mr. Speaker, that we are in a terrible situation as far as our balance of finances are concerned and we must be cognizant of that. The Canadian people are now starting to realize just exactly what the situation is. The total debt, as I said earlier, for which the federal Government is responsible, is in the area of $250 billion. If we work that out among our Canadian people, it is $10,000 for every man, woman and child. A family of four, which is the average family in Canada, is facing $40,000 debt because of the position that their federal Government put them into.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, with the taxation policies of the Government, is that it is trying to grab more and more. Just the other day I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) if he would not consider cutting the excise tax on fuel and energy which is required in the production of our food. The Minister retorted, "Well, the Government has to get some money from some place." Far better, Mr. Speaker, for the Government to cut the cloth to fit the pattern. The Government should cut some of the expenditures which are not required. My colleague, from British Columbia mentioned one of them, the Metric Commission, still doling millions and millions of dollars out. There are many other programs over which the Government seems to have no control, or does not seem to have the desire to exercise control. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), mentioned earlier today the former Auditor General, Mr. Macdonell, who did a tremendous job when he was Auditor General, and he told the Government at that time that to all intents and purposes expenditures were out of control. Nothing has changed since that time. Government expenditure is still out of control. The only difference is that it is worsening, and Government has less control today than it has ever had in Canadian history.

I believe we are falling further and further behind in competition with other nations because of the fact that we are allowing our nation to drift further and further into debt. This national debt is being placed on our businesses, and our businesses are being forced out of business. I fear that if we stay on our present course we will continue to be hewers of wood and drawers of water. It is the responsibility of any Government to establish a climate in which our business community can progress and develop and in turn develop business. Small businesses supply 60 per cent of our jobs in Canada today. If we allow the Government to put the small businesses into bankruptcy, then we are all going to suffer the consequences. What happens when you put small business out of operation? They lay off people. Those people, instead of paying income tax, are then drawing Unemployment Insurance. What a lot of the Government's programs are actually doing is taking people who have been on welfare for a while or have exhausted their UIC benefits, and giving them a job for long enough to qualify for UIC. This is not very productive, Mr. Speaker, and it can be done in a better way. The Government should realize that this is its responsibility, and this is why this Government is being so irresponsible in not recognizing the benefits which can accrue when all Canadians are working together.

I do not think the Government should be asking the Canadian people for another $14 billion because it cannot afford the finance its present debt.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this Bill for a few minutes. This borrowing Bill is the fourth of its kind in the past eight months. Since $14 billion of the amount requested is to keep us going for the rest of the year, this Bill amounts to the Government's asking for a blank cheque to keep it going. The Government is asking us for money for programs which it has not even placed before the House, programs which have probably not even been thought of yet. In addition, a large percentage of this money goes to service existing Government debt, a good portion of which was brought about because the Government proceeded for the last 12 or 13 years with very little planning. It has approached government on a kind of day-to-day, session-by-session basis without any long-term planning. So what this Bill is actually doing, Mr. Speaker, is asking the people of Canada to pay for the lack of planning by this Government.

There are other examples of bad planning by Government which I could give this House, Mr. Speaker. One year after the present Government of Saskatchewan came into power, it had established a deficit of $220 million, considerably more in one year than all the previous Governments of Saskatchewan had managed to accumulate in the previous 77 years. But without planning, Government expenditures get out of hand. This Government's spending record is like a snowball going downhill. We have all seen those comic strips where a snowmobile starts small at the tope of the hill and as it goes down it picks up increasing amounts of snow, until at the bottom of the hill it ends up looking like a very large snowball. This snowball analogy is very apt, Mr. Speaker, because the big spending started back in 1970. That is when it started to snowball down the hill. The present administration had regular expenditures with very little planning until we got to the point, the bottom of the hill, that it had a huge deficit.

Just as a matter of interest, Mr. Speaker, back in 1973 the accumulated deficit of this Government was $51 billion; in 1976, $59 billion; in 1979, $98 billion; in 1982, $134 billion. But that does not include all those other debts the Government has run up, the debts of Crown corporations for which the Government is responsible, the letters of credit for which the Government is responsible, or letters of comfort as they are sometimes called. If you added all those together, the deficit would be well over $200 billion, Mr. Speaker. In 1970 we had an accumulated deficit of $900 per capita. By 1982 it reached $3,883 per capita. In other words, this particular Government has increased the per capita debt four times.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are times when deficits have a value. But what was the value of a deficit in the period from 1970-71 to 1974? There was no reason for deficits at that time. Right now deficit spending has a possibility of increasing the number of jobs. But basically we should use deficits only when they are of direct value to the economy, and that is the only time.

I know our Party is often called the spending Party. Well, as an example of what good spenders we are, I would point again to Saskatchewan and the 30 years of CCF and NDP Government. In that period of time it established an outstanding record of social services and expenditures that were good for the Province and for the country. It made those expenditures without once establishing a deficit. That is a good use of money, Mr. Speaker.

In the same period of time the federal Government increased the per capita deficit of the people of Canada fourfold from under $1,000 to approximately $4,000.

I should like to return to the reasons for the borrowing request, Mr. Speaker. It is required for programs that have not been placed before the House. An increased amount of money is to be expended on the railways, and I agree that there is a need for that but not at the expense of the farmers. The Government plans to ask farmers to pay for part of that rail expansion. It has already committed a lot of money to the railway, but has not come before Parliament with this proposition. That is one reason it is asking for more money, and there are other reasons such as Mirabel and Pickering and other bad expenditures made in the past. If the Government planned its spending better, then there would be no need for these borrowing Bills.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on Bill C-143, the supplemental borrowing authority Bill to authorize the Government to borrow up to an additional $5 billion in new money for the current 1982-83 fiscal year. It will also provide further authority to the Government to borrow up to $14 billion for fiscal year 1983-84, for a total, Mr. Speaker of some $19 billion.

Without question, Mr. Speaker, the total borrowing authority of $19 billion granted in this Bill is the largest borrowing in our country's 116 year history. To add fuel to the fire, Mr. Speaker, this is the second time this year that the Government has sought to increase authority by more than the requirements that had been projected in its most recent financial forecast. The deficit today Mr. Speaker, is 28 per cent of all expenditures. In other words, for every $4 the Government spends, it must borrow a little more than $1.

Mr. Speaker, the Government keeps telling us that the federal debt is $134 billion. However, as the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) and I have stated on earlier occasions, and when one adds in the total debt of the Crown corporations of $55 billion and the $49 billion in pension funds that the Government has appropriated, the total debt is closer to $240 billion.

The June and October budgets of 1982 failed to provide economic and fiscal projections for the current fiscal year. Experts tell us that that is dangerous because it creates uncertainty and leads to unwarranted speculation and disruptive speculation in the financial markets as to the state of the federal Government's finances.

No banker, Mr. Speaker, would grant a line of credit to a financially crippled business that refused to provide cash flow projections. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, a private industry or enterprise with revenue that equalled only 70 per cent of expenditures and a gross debt that was more than triple the value of its assets, would be forced into bankruptcy. The federal Government, Mr. Speaker, cannot declare bankruptcy because it has no place to file.

There is no question that the poor economic performance will continue to have a negative impact on the finances of the Government, as the cost of social assistance rises and revenues stagnate or fall. Any recovery that may occur, Mr. Speaker, is likely to be a weak recovery, and as such will only have a moderate impact on the current fiscal dilemma. Even if we have a moderate recovery it may not be enough to bring the federal books into balance.

Unless measures are taken to control spending and to create economic growth, it can be expected that the present situation will not readily improve. By controlling spending, Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Government is committed to carrying out its obligations in financing our important social programs, such as Old Age Security, Spouse's Allowance, medicare, and many other worthwhile programs. These are obligations and duties that must not be reneged upon. But, Mr. Speaker, there are many, many other areas of spending that should be seriously looked at, that should either be curtailed or should be eliminated entirely.

One only has to go through the Auditor General's annual Report to see areas of unproductive spending, areas of mismanagement, areas of unaccountability and cost over-runs which, when totalled, amount to millions and billions of taxpayers' dollars wasted and gone down the drain.

I am not here to castigate and chastise individuals or Department officials, Mr. Speaker. I believe that most of them are dedicated people and are trying their best to do the best job possible. However, Mr. Speaker, because the money that they handle and the money that is their responsibility to spend wisely is not really their own, I do not believe there is the same judicial care exercised to spend the taxpayers' money more prudently.

I have in my possession a document that really spells out this problem in detail, but in the brief time at my disposal in this debate, it will not be possible for me to read this document into the record because of its length. However, perhaps I could draw the attention of the Chair and the Members to a couple of examples. One has to do with over-runs—spending over budget.

Environment Canada, experienced cost over-runs on 153 out of the total 223 projects to the amount of $283 million. This is a glaring example of poor budget planning, which would have resulted in wholesale firings if it had happened in private industry. But we all know that public servants rarely get fired. If something goes wrong, the punishment is usually a promotion to get him or her out of the Department.

In the other extreme, Mr. Speaker, on July 1, 1982, two days after announcing the need for more restraint, the Government paid $430,000 to provide 16 cities with fireworks. Really, Mr. Speaker, where is the common sense?

Common sense should tell us that we are heading for rocky shoals if this trend in spending continues. It is a case, Mr. Speaker of this Government's continuing to flounder around, pulling the wrong levers and greasing the wrong skids. The Government must readjust its priorities to get our economy rolling again. Money must be spent wisely to get our economy back on track. We must regain our strong economic base. Our industry must modernize in order to grow and expand. The Government should be encouraging such undertakings, not penalizing businesses with disincentives and by drowning incentive by the myriads of discouraging regulations that private enterprise is forced to contend with.

There must be a dovetailing and equity and partnership between business and Government. Harmony will bring about better economic results while, on the other hand, working at loggerheads with each other only ends in chaos and bankruptcy.

Over the years we have heard common arguments used by the Liberals to defend the Government's record on spending, debt and the deficit. One of these is, "Deficit spending is good for economic growth". Common sense should tell them that deficits do not necessarily occur as a consequence of measures to promote economic growth. The truth is that most of the existing deficit is the result of the failure to achieve economic growth. For example, in November of 1981 economic growth was projected by the then Minister of Finance to be 2.2 per cent. The projected deficit was $10.5 billion. In June of 1982 the Government predicted a negative growth of 2 per cent, and the projected deficit was forecast to be $19.6 billion. For the fiscal year 1982-83 the Government is forecasting a decline of 4.4 per cent, and the expected deficit will likely be around $30 billion.

It can be readily seen, Mr. Speaker, as the deficit has grown from year to year, that Canadians have become more and more aware of the damage that continuous deficits inflict upon the economy. We must be aware as well, Mr. Speaker, that our excessive borrowing is one of the reasons for the weak dollar and for the recent very high interest rates that have been necessary to support the dollar.

Another fallacy, Mr. Speaker, that we hear from the Government is, and I quote, "There is a deficit because of the positive initiatives the Liberals have taken over the years to assist Canadians." The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that the many examples of unnecessary spending by the Liberals have been an unnecessary drain on the Treasury. That red herring, Mirabel Airport, has cost the taxpayers of Canada $700 million. As I mentioned earlier in my speech, the Government has consistently failed to exercise adequate cost control on projects and programs. It was discovered in October, 1979 that cost over-runs for ongoing projects initiated by the Liberals totalled $1.1 billion.

In 1978, the Unemployment Insurance Commission paid $290 million to those not legally entitled to receive benefits. Another fallacy projected by this Government is: "There is nothing wrong with having a large national debt. We only owe the money to ourselves, and there are assets to offset the debt."

The major problem with the Government's debt is that it must be serviced. One tax dollar in four is used to pay interest on the debt. Interest on the public debt will cost the taxpayers of Canada $16.7 billion in the fiscal year 1982-1983. That represents $700 per capita or $1,800 per taxpayer. The assets of the Government are dwarfed by its debt. In March, 1982, the Government had $40 billion in assets, compared to a total official gross national debt of $134 billion, which we know is not quite right, it is closer to $200 billion to $250 billion.

Another fallacy enunciated by the Government is: "There's nothing wrong with a short-term deficit." The federal Government has not balanced its books since 1970, and it will not do so in the next five years. The Liberals have maintained since 1970 that the deficit is only a short-term problem. There is nothing short-term about 17 years.

I could go on and on but I think the Government has to take account of itself. I am sure Canadian taxpayers have been very patient with this Government for a good many years, but I am afraid their patience has run out. I think the time has come to place a new sign on Parliament Hill reading, "Under New Management."

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people are paying for the sins of the Liberal Government. During the good years the Liberal Government had all kinds of chances to put money aside. Revenues were good. We had good returns from the country. But the Government spent wildly. It lived high off the hog. The Government did not prepare for the day when there would be a shortage. Today we are paying for that. The Government has brought in a Bill to borrow $14 billion. The Progressive Conservative amendment is to cut that borrowing down to $1.

I want to tell you today, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian people have to begin to realize that when one borrows $14 billion today, one pays far more than $14 billion in taxes tomorrow. We will not get by with $14 billion. Interest rates will go up and down. It will be $16 billion, $18 billion or $20 billion which the Canadian people will have to repay. That shows the kind of irresponsible Government we have in this country today. It is irresponsible because it did not put money aside when it had the chance to do so.

Mr. Blais: Question.

Mr. Taylor: The Government did not provide for the future. It did not put any grain in the granary. The government spent everything. It lived high off the hog. Now the Government is expecting the people of Canada to pay. I want to tell Members on the other side who are supporting this Bill that you cannot borrow yourself out of debt. That cannot be done. Liberal Members are just as silly as the man who stood on the street corner who tried to raise himself by pulling on his shoe straps. He pulled and pulled but he could not raise himself. The Government cannot borrow itself out of debt. I say to the Liberal Members that you are propelling the nation further and further toward bankruptcy. This Government has done that to the small business, the farmers, and even to some of the big businesses. Just the other day, a business had an opportunity to provide farm machinery to be exported all over the world. The company went into receivership because of this Government's policies, including its high interest rates and the refusal to assist with guarantees to help unemployment.

The Government is taking money out of the pockets of the farmers by introducing a new type of Bill whereby the farmers cannot even hire a casual labourer as they have been able to do for years. Now farmers have to pay an additional amount if they want to hire the neighbour's boy or an Indian. Yes, you cannot borrow yourself out of debt. The Liberals have ruined this country. The Liberals have ruined our industry. I say to the Liberals, you should recognize what you have done and resign.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude my comments on this legislation by addressing three areas under the following headings: Why is the Government requesting authority to borrow at this time? What will the money be used for? How does the Government control these expenditures, and indeed expenditures generally?

I remind Hon. Members of the financial statement of October 27 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) wherein he made the following comments:

> I have also made it clear from the estimates I have presented that further borrowing authority will be required before the end of this fiscal year. In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-1984 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

The Minister of Finance has indicated that he will set the date for the upcoming budget within the next few days. Addressing the first part of the Bill, in the interim and, second, in the immediate period of the budget and post-budget, interim borrowing authority is sought. That is the purpose of the legislation before us.

What about the funds which are sought under this request for authority to borrow? We know that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) tabled in this House some 6,000 pages of Main Estimates. This is an indication of the expenditure program of the Government, which is an annual event for programs established under authority of legislation of Parliament. In tabling the estimates, the President of the Treasury Board signalled that two-thirds of these budgetary estimates are slated for statutory expenditures based on continuing authority by Acts of Parliament. These estimates show in great detail the wide variety of programs being carried out by the Government, living up to its responsibilities under the legislation I have just indicated, and assisting Canadians during this very significant downturn in the economy.

The estimates reflect a 21 per cent rise in cash payments under the Established Programs Financing Act whereby the federal Government contributes to the financing of hospital insurance, medicare, extended health care and post-secondary education. They indicate a $2.9 billion allocation to Unemployment Insurance in order to assist in this recessionary time in the economy. The estimates demonstrate a 21 per cent increase in federal contributions to the Provinces, for example, and to the Canada Assistance Plan.

The federal Government pays for 50 per cent of eligible provincial-municipal expenditures for assistance payments, welfare payments and a number of health programs. We also cover 50 per cent of the cost of child support services such as foster care, daycare, and a broad array of family and social support services. I do not have to remind Hon. Members of the continuing and pressing need for funding in this area. That is what the Government intends to address through the funds sought by the authority in the legislation before us today.

More than that, scarcely a day goes by, Mr. Speaker, but that we are reminded of the initiatives taken by the Government, again signalled in the October 27 statement of the Minister of Finance, for example through the NEED Program, job-generation programs which are designed to assist people whose Unemployment Insurance benefits are terminating. The funding for that program is assisted by the request for authority presently before the House and in the legislation for which we seek approval today.

With respect to the comments which have been made that the expenditures are not wisely or efficiently accounted for—and this is the third point I wish to draw to the attention of Hon. Members—I remind them again that this Government accepted the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, the Lambert Commission. This Government, together with the former Conservative Government, has accepted the procedure whereby expenditures of the Government are split, in terms of Cabinet responsibilities, into a number of envelopes. Within these envelopes, Ministers of kin responsibilities are obliged to set priorities and to set off against one another claims for expenditures in their areas of responsibility.

There are other controls as well, Mr. Speaker. All budgetary appropriations of funds, of course, must be approved by Parliament, and we have the system of a very detailed examination of the estimates through the Standing Committees of the House. For example, on two occasions I have been before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to account for, explain and give detailed responses to detailed questions of Hon. Members as to the expenditure in the Department of Insurance. Therefore, each Minister of the Government is called before Standing Committees of the House to answer and to account for the expenditures of the Government, not only for the funds which are sought today in this legislation, but all other operations of the Government.

We know as well, Mr. Speaker, some of us only too dearly, that Treasury Board is a mechanism of the Government, this Government and the preceding Conservative Government, which guards jealously the actual implementation and expenditure of funds under general programs. We know as well that the Auditor General examines the Government's financial statements and carefully reports to Parliament on his findings. I would like to repeat again what I said earlier in our deliberations on this legislation, that so much good work was done by the former Auditor General, Mr. Macdonell. He showed such leadership in strengthening the controls and the overview of Government expenditures in that part of Government operations through the exercise of the office of the Auditor General.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in a broader policy range, in 1975 the Government announced that it would hold the trend growth of its expenditures to no more than the general trend growth of the economy. I remind Hon. Members that over the period from 1975 to 1980 the Government successfully met that objective. In 1981, of course, with the deterioration of the economy, expenditures rose more rapidly and that was witnessed by the Government's response, for example, in increasing its commitment to Unemployment Insurance payments and, unfortunately, as well, calling for a similar increase in contributions by the private sector in order to meet a situation which, as I have indicated, was caused by the downturn in the economy.

• (1120)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I have attempted very briefly, under three headings, to address what I believe to be three important points that Hon. Members will take into account when considering the request by the Government for the borrowing authority in the legislation before us this morning.

I have attempted to explain, first, that the Government requires this authority to meet pressing needs of Canadians. That, I think, in normal times would have been explanation enough; it is to meet the ongoing expenditures of the Government particularly at this time of year.

Second, I have indicated that the Government through the estimates, in thousands and thousands of items, has detailed the expenditures.

Finally, I have attempted to outline the controls and safeguards that guide the Government in its attempt, efficiently and in a businesslike way, to manage the expenditure of funds, not only in this authority to borrow but in all Government expenditures. I urge Hon. Members to conclude this debate and to vote, enabling the Government to proceed with this authority as quickly as possible.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt that the Government has so mismanaged the economy of the country that it is now broke. It is utterly broke. It has exercised emergency powers under Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act for the first time in our history.

Last Friday when I raised the matter with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in the House, he tried to draw a parallel between what he was doing in exercising the powers granted to him under Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act and circumstances which occurred in 1962. There is no relationship whatsoever. This is the first time in our history that the Government has gone to emergency borrowing powers, once a week, and has borrowed in excess of $2.5 billion according to orders in council tabled in the House yesterday. That is a shameful situation, Mr. Speaker.

We find statements of the Minister of Finance such as those which appeared in The Globe and Mail recently, when he said that the federal Government deficit is like an accordion, to be a very curious view of the deficit. He should learn to play better than he sings. In his hands the deficit has been more like a balloon which is constantly being inflated by the Government and which, at some point, must burst.

The Minister's role as an accordion player is very appropriate. It conjures up the image of the organ grinder. And what does that make the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove)? Is he the one who carries the tin cup? The problem between the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance is that it is difficult to know, from time to time, who is playing and who is dancing. I can tell the Minister of State for Finance where the majority of Canadians would like to see him and his colleagues on the Treasury benches these days, and it is not where they presently are.

We confront this Bill among gathering clouds of uncertainty and the highest unemployment rate since the great Depression. It is in this context that the Government seeks authority to borrow $19 billion to meet its cash requirements, in the meantime exercising emergency powers to stay afloat. As has been pointed out time after time in the House, of the total amount, $14 billion relates to the coming fiscal year, to budgetary demands, to fiscal and monetary policies of which the House has not yet been given an inkling. We are being asked to finance policies that we have not yet seen and to underwrite programs which we know nothing about.

• (1125)

The most serious issue in this country today, sir, is the two million Canadians who cannot find jobs. Another 600,000 students and young people are coming on to the labour market in the next month or two with no hope that there is going to be employment in this land which used to be a land of plenty before these rascals did it in. There is no indication, sir, that this Bill will in any way address the problems of those two million unemployed Canadians and the 600,000 young people coming on to the job market this summer. This Government, sir, has shown itself to be totally unconcerned about the unemployed. It has taken an utterly cavalier attitude towards unemployment.

This, sir, is the Government that turned off the tap, that froze out foreign investment, that obstructed the oil and gas industry, that fumbled the megaprojects. This is the Government that accorded special treatment to its friends. It put one former assistant of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the head of the Canada Development Investment Corporation with powers of life and death over a multitude of companies and corporations, and another Minister to whom the first must report. The Prime Minister showed his concern for the unemployed when he relegated the discussions on the economy to a dinnertime chat with the Premiers and then put it back to the evening prior to the opening of the constitutional meeting in mid-March. He had an in depth discussion of the unemployment problem in this country, an in depth discussion of the serious economic problems facing the country, and in depth, detailed discussion between the vichyssoise and the filet mignon. To hundreds of thousands of unemployed Canadians, the signal is clear: beware the Ides of March. That, sir, is not good enough.

The Conservative Party, in the face of the enveloping crisis rending this country on the jobless issue, would call a national conference lasting from two to three days and bring in the Premiers with representatives of business and industry to organize a concerted attack on the problem of unemployment. The Minister has said he needs the borrowing Bill to pay Unemployment Insurance claims which are speculated to be in the order of $12 billion and to pay welfare and create jobs. If the Government had not turned off jobs in the first place with negative and destructive policies like FIRA and the NEP, we would not have these enormous cash requirements.

Mr. Fisher: Are you against those, Erik?

Mr. Nielsen: I trust that the Member who opens his mouth from his seat more than he does when he is standing will participate in this debate.

Mr. Fisher: More than happy to. Are you against these—

Mr. Nielsen: I am saying to the Hon. Member that those buffoons that he supports have adopted policies which have created two million unemployed in this country, with another 600,000 students coming on the job market this summer with no hope whatsoever. That is what those people on the Treasury Board benches have done. I cannot understand why he, among other backbenchers, continues to support these rascals.

Mr. Fisher: Are you against FIRA?

Mr. Nielsen: Obviously, they are supporting policies of unemployment.

Mr. Fisher: Are you against FIRA? You just attacked it; have the courage to answer the question.

Mr. Nielsen: I join the millions of Canadians who say that this Government is doing a rotten job, and the sooner they get off those Treasury benches, the better.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister knows very well that one of the major reasons for this unusual demand of $14 billion in the coming fiscal year is to service the huge borrowing already undertaken by this Government. Sir, they are borrowing to pay their debts. The Government's debt charges now represent nearly a fifth of all its expenditures. When a Government reaches that point, insolvency is no longer just a word. I emphasize again that the Government's cash requirements in the coming fiscal year should be outlined in budgetary form. That is the practice of this place; that is the tradition of this place; that is the history of this place.

• (1130)

This Bill should be accompanied by a budget in which the Government sets out the specific purposes of the expenditures, the reasons for these huge cash requirements, and outlines the fiscal and monetary positions which it intends to take in order to restore the country's economy. A few moments ago the Minister of State for Finance was lauding the Committee system and the number of times that he and other Ministers appeared before Committees to examine these expenditures. I see him nodding his head in the affirmative. What time do Members of Parliament get in this great Committee system to question in detail about expenditures of this nature? Five minutes for $14 billion!

Mr. Fisher: One of them was five hours.

Mr. Nielsen: Then Members, like that yappy one over there, dragged red herrings throughout the whole process of the Committee system, taking up time and making excuses for a Government which does not know where it is going or where it has been.

The House and the country are also entitled, as a concomitant of this Bill, to an outline of the taxation policies which the Government intends to impose in order to raise funds to meet these pyramiding debt charges. That is why we need a budget. The country is entitled to know where we are going. The reason we do not know where we are going is that the Government does not know where it is going. This House is entitled to have full information and we get the least.

The reason the Government has not seen fit to fill in the budgetary blanks in its fiscal and monetary position is very simple. The Government cannot tell the House where it is going because it does not have the least idea. There is another reason that it does not tell us. It is because it does not want Canadians to know the deep trouble into which it has plunged the country. It is quite obvious that the Government, in coming here with its hand out for a blank cheque covering the coming fiscal period, without the usual explanations and with no true indication of the present state of the economy, is desperately trying to keep from Canadians the raw truth about the serious difficulties in which we find ourselves.

We are entitled to a full budgetary background to this Bill. We do not have it because the Government does not dare to give it. To do so would be to let the cat of fiscal mismanagement out of the bag. The Government does not dare let Canadians know how close to the edge of economic insolvency it is now hovering.

The Minister talks glibly of letting the deficit grow and of spending to stimulate the economy. This is another example of that peculiar irresponsibility by which Members of the Government are afflicted. How could any Government in this country spend more than this Government has spent? They are heading for total expenditures, I believe, of $90 billion. How could they possibly make the deficit any larger? If anyone could accomplish it, they are the gang who can. It is now moving up to $30 billion. If there was any way of stimulating the economy, would it not have been stimulated by the enormous expenditures of the Government? The economy is certainly not suffering from understimulation: it is suffering from raw, bad management. It is suffering from waste, extravagance, lack of direction, confusion and the application of ideological nostrums to our economic problems.

Without exception, every policy application by the Government in the past three years has had a negative impact. Another wave of reckless spending by the denizens of the Langevin Block will not restore investor confidence one iota. A further demoralization of our fiscal standing will not bring back the megaprojects. The only cure for the condition in which the country finds itself is the removal of this Government and a return to coherent, practical policies directed to the realitites of our economy, which those fellows just choose not to recognize.

Turning to just one area of the Government's stumble-footed approach to the economy, let me point out that in the United States oil companies in the private sector pay substantial fees into the federal treasury for the privilege of undertaking exploration. In this country continuing Government interference has destroyed the confidence of entrepreneurs to the point where those who have not pulled up stakes are now being paid incentives by the Government to undertake exploration. What a topsy-turvy fiscal policy!

This is not a sign of lack of confidence in Canada; this is a sign of a total lack of confidence in the Government. It is clear that foreign investment will not come into the Beaufort Sea, to give one example, in the very large amounts necessary as long as the Government's centralist and interventionist policies continue to operate. Therein lies the tragedy of our situation. That is why unemployment is at an all time high. All this is spite of the fact that expenditures have increased under the Government since 1968-79 by some 630 per cent.

Then you ask, sir, where are the jobs? Where are the jobs that should have resulted from this enormous stimulation of the economy? The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) will tell you, sir, of the thousands and thousands of jobs he has created, paper jobs. The Minister of Finance will talk of the billions he has poured into job creation. Where are the jobs which have resulted from these enormous expenditures? If they had created one-tenth of the jobs they claim, there would not be a single unemployed person in the country.

It is the duty of the House to vote down this Bill until such time as Parliament has full information. Certainly we in the Official Opposition intend to do just that. To do otherwise is an insult to nearly two million unemployed Canadians and a smack in the face for 600,000 young people coming on to the job market this summer.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am not pleased to rise today to speak during time allocation on a Bill which asks Parliament to approve the borrowing of $19 billion. In fact, $19 billion is the largest borrowing authority the House of Commons has ever witnessed. We are debating this matter today under time allocation, which is a euphemism for closure, for muzzling Parliament, for cutting off debate and for stopping the Opposition from raising critical points. That is what closure or time allocation is all about.

We are seeing a Government which says that it can no longer take the heat, that it can no longer stand the points raised by Opposition Members; so it muzzles the Opposition and makes a mockery out of the House of Commons. The people of this country have felt very strongly about this institution of the House of Commons. We have come to respect the Mother of Parliament in the United Kingdom and Canadians have respected the House of Commons for many generations. Recently, however, the Government of Canada has made a mockery of the House of Commons.

The role of Parliament is to collect taxes wisely and spend them wisely. We have just witnessed the spectacle of Bill C-139 being introduced in the House. Once again, Parliament was muzzled and debate terminated by the Government's closure motion because the Opposition was criticizing the tax system. We said that we did not believe that 139 changes in tax legislation were appropriate at this time and that grabbing more taxes was not an appropriate step. We said that we did not believe that raising taxes for low and middle income Canadians in this country while giving tax breaks to the rich was the approach to take. We were speaking against that Bill until the Government muzzled us in Parliament and eliminated our criticisms by its closure motion.

Today we are once again asked enthusiastically to endorse the borrowing of $19 billion without knowing precisely how the money will be spent. I suggest that if any individual Canadian or Member of Parliament were to go to a bank, credit union or caisse populaire and ask the manager for $2,000, $20,000 or $200,000, we would then be expected to explain how we would use that money. That is not an unreasonable request. A prudent bank manager would expect to be told how that money would be used and repaid.

That is all that Members of the Opposition are asking the Government. We simply want to know how it will use the $19 billion because past experience does not give us much confidence in simply writing the Government a blank cheque. However, many Members on the Government side have stood up to say that they will not tell us how the money will be spent. They either do not know or have any faith in what they will do, but they will not tell us. It is unrealistic for the Government of Canada to ask us, as concerned Members of Parliament, to endorse a borrowing authority of $19 billion without illustrating very clearly how that money will be used.

Two million people have lost their jobs in this country. Many of those jobs will not be reinstated when the recovery eventually occurs. As well, there are hundreds of thousands of Canadians living daily under the threat of job loss and wondering whether they will be receiving termination or lay-off notices at the end of each week or whether they will be cut back to three or four working days a week. An increasing proportion of our population live in an atmosphere of uncertainty and fear.

One of the most disgraceful acts that I have recently witnessed occurred when the chief financial adviser to the Government, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Gerald Bouey, said that the question asked by the two million unemployed Canadians and the some 600,000 young Canadians who will be graduating from vocational schools, universities and colleges without prospects of employment about what the Government will do about unemployment was the wrong question. His response was that the question should not concern what the Government will do about it or how it will put these people back to work but how soon will the inflation rate be reduced.

Can you imagine anything more ridiculous in your life than to go to an unemployed person who has worked for many years of his or her life in a plant, factory, office or shop, only to find themselves unemployed through no fault of their own and with likely no prospect for work in the future, and say that he or she should not be asking why they are unemployed and how the Government will assist them, but should be asking how the Government will reduce the rate of inflation.

Since he is the one who is giving advice to the Government, it is little wonder it is stumbling, fumbling, and falling all over itself in terms of its fiscal and monetary policies. Obviously, the Government does not know what to do. It is afraid to venture out boldly and show that now is the time to invest in the productive capacity that will not only create jobs today but result in revenues coming to the senior levels of Government in the years ahead.

Let me give two examples. Every industrialized nation but two has launched an aggressive policy of railroad electrification. Those two exceptions are Canada and the United States. For all intents and purposes Canada is not interested in actively pursuing railroads electrification. Our hydro-electric potential in most regions of Canada is so extensive that there is export potential for generations into the future. It is a renewable and clean resource and one which Canada should be developing as part of its railroad system. Sweden has 99 per cent of its railroads electrified and countries like Switzerland, Austria and West Germany have 70 per cent of their railroads electrified. The Soviet Union, which is comparable to Canada, has recently electrified approximately 100,000 kilometres of its rail lines.

I must give the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) credit since he has recently taken the initiative to provide some millions of dollars to assist the Province of British Columbia in electrifying the railway which moves coal from the northeast deposit sites down to the railroad systems.

Mr. Parker: And destroys southeastern British Columbia.

Mr. Riis: As my colleague indicates, there will be some problems in terms of coal in the southwest, but the point is that I give the Government some credit for giving an indication that railroad electrification is a matter which should be considered. But what better time than now to launch a program of railroad electrification in this country? If such a program were started now, it would put people back to work in the manufacturing sector and on the railways. Since all the tunnels in western Canada will have to be increased in height, hundreds of thousands of steelworkers and miners will be put back to work for up to three years. That is the type of investment the Government should be considering now. That would not be wild Government spending but an investment in the future of the country. It will be done in the future but it will never be cheaper than it is today, and the employment is needed immediately.

Let me make another proposal, since Government Members opposite often accuse Members on this side of criticising the Government and not offering suggestions. I have just made one suggestion and I will make another one. Now is the time to launch a bold, imaginative and creative program in municipal public works across the country. Every municipality in the villages, towns, cities or metropolitan areas have plans on their books for new sewer systems, water systems, streets, sidewalks, parks, recreation centres, cultural centres, docks and marinas. Those plans exist and the implementation of those projects will put people to work immediately. They are not frivolous make-work projects since those projects will have to be undertaken eventually. They will not be any cheaper than they are now and the need for work will never be greater. They will result in returns to local, provincial and federal Governments in the future.

These projects represent investments in Canada's future. Members of Parliament, particularly from the NDP, have stated that the stimulation of our economy is the route the Government should follow. Let us see some serious and thoughtful stimulation not only in terms of short-term job creation but long-term job creation as well.

I want to say that we are not calling for the kind of make-work projects to which too often the Minister of Employment and Immigration relates and we are not talking about a project simply to cut a trail for six months or to clean up a beach for six weeks. Those things can continue. We are talking about investment in Canada's future, investment in sound economic development proposals. One could go on and on with a litany of things. We have day after day laid out various proposals, but what do we hear from the Government and Members opposite? Are they concerned about the two million unemployed in this country? If they are, they ought to demonstrate what they are going to do about their plight. They ought to identify as a goal, in this budget that is coming in the next two weeks, full employment.

Canada is a country with 24 million people. It is the second largest land mass of any sovereign nation in the world and we have more resources per capita than any country in the world. If we cannot have a legitimate goal for employment, then no one can. Yet I do not hear Members opposite talking about a full employment option for Canada. Quite frankly, with all due respect to my Conservative colleagues, I do not hear them calling for a full employment option, a goal or an objective for this country. It is time to send a very clear signal to Canadians that full employment is our goal and outline the strategies to accomplish that goal.

However, we become rather disappointed when we hear time and time again that we cannot stimulate our economy, that we cannot take aggressive and bold measures to get Canadians working and to develop our economy in a serious way. We hear about restraint instead. It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, when you look at those folks advocating restraint and who say "Don't stimulate the economy; don't get Canadians back to work", that almost inevitably they are some of the most highly paid in Canada who are very secure in their jobs. One example is the head of Bell Canada, who said recently that Canadians are living with an unrealistic expectation syndrome. It sounds as though he has been coaching Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada. Governor Bouey also spoke recently about Canadians having too high expectations.

However, two million Canadians simply want a job. Six hundred thousand young Canadians simply want to find a decent job for the first time in their life. Small businesses simply want to expand their operations. Farmers with small farms and ranches simply want to expand their operations or, as some of my colleagues say, they simply want to survive. Is this an unrealistic expectation? But notice that the man who says that Canadians should not be striving for these kinds of things makes only $600,000 a year as head of Bell Canada. Governor Bouey, the man who says "Hold off, bite the bullet, Canadians", tells two million people just to wait it out, that all is fine, and that they are asking the wrong questions anyway. He says to 600,000 young Canadians: "Just relax; eventually things will turn around". Granted, because he is protected by a salary in excess of $104,000 as he is hunkered down in that glass bunker of his protected from the real world, he can say those kinds of things.

It is a sad day when you hear people you should respect, people who ought to know better, suggesting to Canadians that these are the things they have to accept. I say that Canadians do not have to accept these kinds of situations. Canada does not have to accept two million people out of work, a number that will increase as time goes on. Canada does not have to accept increasing personal bankruptcies, business bankruptcies and farm bankruptcies.

Back in 1972 the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), and more recently the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), pointed out what the Government of Canada was doing to the small farmer and small rancher. Because of the high interest rate policies of the Government of Canada, these people have been forced to leave their farms and seek employment elsewhere on a full or part-time basis. Perhaps a person has a small ranch in Central British Columbia, a family operation. The family consists of a husband, wife and two or three children. Perhaps they have 80, 90 or 100 head of cattle. They are trying to provide Canada with foodstuffs from one of the most critical sectors of the economy. They are trying to provide Canada with a vibrant, realistic and creative operation. Yet because of high interest rates, people like this have to leave the farm and find work in municipal work programs, in logging camps, on railroads, on highway crews, or wherever they can find work to subsidize the banks, to help meet those interest rate payments.

Then along comes Revenue Canada. These tax people who have sat in rabbit warrens in Ottawa for too long are now conducting audits across the country and saying to people: "This is not a full-time farming operation, it is part-time. You make more money off the farm than you do on the farm. Therefore, we have to tax you differently. You cannot have the tax deductions of a full-time ranch operation." Yet nothing has changed in terms of the operation. Just because these people are now seeking work outside, they cannot use the traditional deductions. The auditors tell people: "We are going to cut down your deductions." This will make it impossible for these people to be food producers and it will make it impossible for the family ranch to continue in operation. It will make it impossible for this most critical sector of the agriculture community to survive.

That is happening in western Canada today. I have received dozens and dozens of letters from people. My colleague the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin has probably received more because of the number of ranchers in his constituency. The Hon. Member from Mission-Port Moody is experiencing the same thing. He has had letters from people saying they are being audited one, two, three and four years back.

What is the Government of Canada trying to do? The Government is trying to come before Parliament day after day to borrow more money. We are told that the Government is not going to indicate very clearly how the money will be spent. We hear Liberals say that they do not know what to do about the unemployment situation in this country; that they do not know how to build consumer and investor confidence. But it is unrealistic to expect Members of Parliament to support this legislation at this time. It is unrealistic of the Government to expect Members of Parliament to endorse that kind of a non-policy. We listen to non-speak all the time. Now we have non-policy.

Members of the Opposition will simply refuse to go along with this type of Government during these very critical times. What this country needs is strong leadership, a Government with some vision of what this country should be. The Canadian people know what this country can be and ought to be. It is time the Government took that clue itself and gave Canada a vision. If the Government cannot do that, it should look to political parties with a vision for what this country can and should be, and call an election so we can provide an opportunity for the people of Canada to choose the option they see fit.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, we are today addressing the last phases of a borrowing authority Bill which asks us without a full statement to give this Government, the most incompetent, the most careless and the most wasteful in the history of Canada, the right to borrow $19 billion. This Government wants to borrow $14 billion without even a statement as to how the money is to be raised and without even a statement as to where we are going in a budget.

This is a Government that decided to abandon all formal criteria in connection with coming to the House of Commons for borrowing authority. I remind the Government that it was only on May 31, 1982 that the former Minister of Finance said:

> I would not expect the House to act upon an additional request for borrowing authority without providing it with detailed information on the economic situation and the implications of that situation on the government's fiscal situation. I do not think it would be appropriate to ask the House for additional borrowing authority until I have laid out in some detail an update of both the economic situation and the fiscal situation, and I certainly will be doing that before I would come back to the House for additional borrowing authority.

• (1200)

The information with respect to the situation for this current fiscal year of 1982-1983, the year ending on March 31 next, was finally pried out of Government at Committee. But the Government has not given us one iota of detail with respect to where we are going in 1983-1984. It is with that in mind that I thought I would address the House this morning, because we cannot in all justification, as elected Members of Parliament, properly vote for a Bill where all previous practise indicates that no such Bill should be produced. We cannot in all conscience, fulfilling our oath of requirement to our electors, allow the borrowing of money without accountability. We cannot allow the borrowing of money without a budget. When we do so we break with the whole tradition of parliamentary control over the financing of Government.

I think we should look at where we are going. We must look at the history. This Government has been in office for some 14 years now. Only one year in the past 14 has it managed not to show a deficit. In good years it borrowed and borrowed and borrowed, and when we have a recession in some countries and a depression in this country, it borrows more and more and more.

The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the Leader of the Official Opposition, indicated today that we were, in effect, in bankruptcy. The Government has driven us to the point where perhaps we must look at the fact that our currency may not any longer be sound. In Committee yesterday, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) indicated how, in comparing the credit of Canada with the credit of other sovereign nations in the world, Canada had been reduced by all indicators from fifth in the world to seventh in the world. The OECD did a comparison of our economic strength last year. There are 24 countries in the OECD and we managed to rank 24th.

Mr. Fisher: What is the answer that you heard last night?

Mr. Blenkarn: The Government has done it to us. My friend from Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) asks what is the answer to that. We could not get an answer from the Governor of the Bank of Canada last night because the Governor of the Bank of Canada has become an apologist for the performance of the Government or incompetent Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair should remind Hon. Members that it is against procedure to refer to matters before Committees of the House. A matter cannot be before a Committee and in the House at the same time.

Mr. Blenkarn: I want to advise you, sir, that this matter is before the House, but it is sometimes necessary that we get information in the Finance Committee of the House, and the other Parliamentary Standing Committees of the House.

My friend from Mississauga North is trying to defend the impossible. He knows that it is not possible really, but he tries. He is a good Liberal, though I do not know what a good Liberal is. Perhaps a good Liberal is someone who will sell his country out or borrow his country out. That is his purpose. He can face the electors with that purpose and we will see what happens.

Mr. Fisher: I will be happy to face the electors.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, what we have to do today and through the next month is determine where we are going as a country. What we have to do is determine what obligations there are for a Government to perform. I think we would all agree that it is necessary for Government to defend its people from foreigners, to protect its soil, to protect the integrity of its country, to make sure that law and order are in place. We do not do a very good job of that. I think we would all agree that it is necessary for Government in this world, certainly today, to look after the sick and the weak in our society, to make sure that those who are incapable of really looking after their own affairs in terms of their financial health are able to get by, to have a reasonable standard of living, to be reasonably well cared for, to be reasonably well housed. I think we will agree that it is important that we educate our children so that they will be able to carry on in our place, build our country, make our country a progressive place and contribute to world society.

Beyond that, I think it is about time we started looking to what other things Government should be doing and to what extent is Government essential beyond that. Is it Government's function to interfere in the means of distribution and the manufacture of products? Is it Government's duty to be involved in the business community? Is it Government's obligation to make grants to transport companies owned by its friends? Is it Government's duty to look after those who could look after themselves but would rather have the taxpayer bail them out? Is it not time that we as a nation, that we as a Parliament, put some priorities on where we spend Government funds and how we allow money that is borrowed at exceedingly high rates, borrowed on the credit of our children and our children's children, to be spent? Is it not fair that we examine where our priorities are, where we should be going and what Government should be doing? What are the limits of Government?

Can we really expect to carry on when the proportion that we as a society allocate to the management of its affairs by Government has now crept up to very close to 50 per cent of the Gross National Product? Can we really justify situations where federally-owned Crown corporations alone control $34 billion worth of business in a year? That is not taking into account provincial Crown corporations such as hydro corporations and the like.

I think it is about time that we as a nation started looking at what our needs are. What are our needs? Some people say they need a holiday. My wife says we need a new dryer. My daughter thinks she needs a new car. Where are needs? We look around at what this Government spends; we go to certain Ministers' offices. I see the Minister of Transport is here; I had an opportunity when we were the Government to go to the top of his high flying office space. He has an office where you could bury your feet in the carpets.

Mr. Pepin: I never use it. I never go there.

Mr. Blenkarn: Is that the kind of needs that we should be financing?

Mr. Pepin: I never use it. It is now offices for my staff.

Mr. Blenkarn: Are those the kinds of needs that we should borrow for?

An Hon. Member: What about his train?

Mr. Blenkarn: Somewhere along the line we must priorize where we are going. What are we doing with this money that the Government wants to borrow? What has happened is that we have gone wrong in the way we manage of our country. We have gone to a situation where somehow Government determines that the needs of Departments are all of a sudden absolute needs that must be financed by taxes and borrowing. If you cannot tax enough you borrow, and it does not really matter because it is a need that must be financed. Therefore it must be borrowed. I suggest that the way we have been operating this country is to get each Department to produce an estimate, wrap those estimates in blue paper and call them the Blue Book, and say that they are the estimates of Government expenditure, they are our needs and they must somehow be financed, no matter what. That is no longer possible, if it ever was possible; but today it has gone beyond reason.

• (1210)

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) says that our GNP last year was an estimated $348 billion. There is really no indication of any huge increase in GNP for the 1983 year. Some indicators show we may have growth of 1 per cent, some 0.5 per cent. No one is saying that the economy will break forth and grow by any consequential amount.

What happens to Government estimates of spending? On a budgetary basis, the Blue Book estimates filed by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) indicates that we will spend close to $90 billion. We all know that budgetary expenditures are part of the tale. We should be looking at the national accounts expenditures, but we are not given those figures. If we compare national accounts with budgetary accounts in the past year, we note that budgetary accounts understate real expenditures by between 10 and 15 per cent. If budgetary accounts are in the neighbourhood of $90 billion, the real expenditure of Government will be in excess of $105 billion. One does not have to be very bright, grade six or seven, I suppose, to tell that if the Government is going to spend $105 billion and we only have a GNP of $348 billion, Government expenditures will likely be in excess of 30 per cent of the GNP.

What about the Provinces and municipalities? Where are we headed? The Government wraps its needs in blue paper, calls it a Blue Book, says it has done some estimates and budgetary control. The fact is that it has not. When anyone wants their office reupholstered, it is done. When the Government wants a new Challenger jet, it gets one. When Canadair is going South, it gets more money. When a Liberal friend who owns a trucking company gets in trouble, they bail him out. That is the kind of "control" this House can no longer tolerate.

Some say we have developed the British disease. The Brits have all of a sudden awakened. At one point in Great Britain the percentage of GNP devoted to deficit was very close to 10 per cent. Sir Geoffrey Howe's latest budget indicates that the British deficit will now be less than 2.5 per cent of the gross domestic product.

Where is ours going? Last year it was 7.8 per cent. What will it be next year? We do not know, yet we are being asked to finance it. If the trend line continues, it will be 10 or 11 per cent. The British have moved up their status in terms of credit worthiness. They have replaced us and are now fifth. The British have reduced their rate of inflation from 18 or 19 per cent to less than 5 per cent. What have we done? We have six and five, you know! But six and five does not apply to Government expenditures. That would not be possible. At a minimum, it is 9.8 per cent on a budgetary basis. If you look at it year over year, it is 17.8 per cent. We have six and five, but I think it is six time five in two years. That is the way the Government has increased its expenditures. It does not care and does not get down to things.

Some say we should borrow money to stimulate the economy. Let us look at what stimulation this borrowing has done. In 1968 when the Prime Minister took over, 358,000 Canadians were unemployed. In February, nearly 1.6 million Canadians were unemployed. All we did was borrow more, stimulate more and encourage more; more enterprise development programs, more hand-outs, more grant and loan programs, stimulating housing this way or that. The Government has tried to stimulate by its borrowing.

Do you know what happens when you borrow? When the Government borrows, it raises interest rates for ordinary commercial people because it bids up interest rates. What does the Government do when it bids it up? It squanders it. It does not create any new products, businesses or industries. It does not create anything new. What productivity, product or new creation can the Government show? The British can say that they have a productive Government, one that has reduced the civil service by 65,000 since 1979. This Government boasts of the fact that it has only increased its employment by 1 per cent this year.

This Government has no control over its appetite, its waste or spending. It has no priorizing of any activity it undertakes. Time and again we have asked the Government to form a special committee of this House of Commons with responsible parliamentarians, similar to the committee of the United States Congress which goes over proposed budgets, the proposed totality of spending, so as to priorize those expenditures, cross-examine officials about them, reduce them. In that way we could get our spending down to what we can afford. This Government has refused for the very simple reason that it does not believe in control. It has some idea that all will be well because it can still continue to borrow.

I see, Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that my time is up. Let me conclude by saying that the Bill before us cannot and should not be passed. A responsible Government would not even present it. Responsible Members of Parliament, regardless of Party affiliation, should vote against it. I call upon this House this afternoon to defeat this Bill.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on Bill C-143 on earlier occasions, I indicated that there are two aspects that Canadians find most disturbing. First, they believe that the financial management of this country is out of control. As a result, they firmly believe that as taxpayers they are not getting a fair deal. They are not getting fair value for the money that is spent for them by the Government of Canada. That view is shared not only by an increasing number of Canadians, but it is shared by the current Auditor General and the late former Auditor General.

• (1220)

Those of us in the House share that view because Parliament has lost effective control of the public purse. This is the 21st or 22nd time that closure has been invoked in this House this session, and on most of those occasions it was invoked on a measure having to do with taxation, amendments to the Income Tax Act or the principle of extracting revenue from the Canadian public.

Crown corporations, which the Auditor General described as a form of sub-government, are not accountable to their shareholders, namely the public of Canada. Even though we have modified the Committee structure and reformed parliamentary rules, there does not seem to be adequate provisions to ensure that Crown corporations are made accountable to Parliament and, thereby, to the people of Canada. The result is that there is a perception that the Government goes on its very merry way recklessly spending the hard-earned tax dollars which it collects from Canadian taxpayers. It does this without satisfying those taxpayers that the money it is spending on their behalf is being spent with some consideration and regard to economy and efficiency. Look at its acquisition of a string of service stations! I recall that the former Minister of Energy said in introducing the Bill on Petro-Canada that it would not be Government's intention to get involved in the retail gas business. That, to me, meant we would not be in the retail service station business. Today we probably have more than 3,000 bought and paid for by the taxpayers of Canada. Government has a very glamorous and expensive advertising budget. I am not suggesting that it is not important for the Government to advertise, but I believe there is a prevailing view among the taxpayers of Canada that it can be cut significantly.

There is concern about the double standard which is applied to industry with respect to bail-outs, there is one rule for the Maislins, the Massey-Fergusons and the Domes of the world, but there is another rule applied to the small family farm, the small family business and the other enterprises which have heretofore been productive in generating wealth and jobs.

What all this means, Mr. Speaker, in total, is that the excessive amount of Government spending on a national accounts basis has risen by 67 per cent since this Liberal Government was returned to office in February, 1980. That is why we are being asked to approve the borrowing of some $19 billion in this Bill. That is why today that for every three dollars we spend, one dollar of that expenditure is borrowed money; or 34 per cent of our expenditures by the Government of Canada is borrowed money. That is why as well, Mr. Speaker, that for every five dollars that the Government spends, one dollar goes to pay the interest on the debt. That national debt, on a gross basis, has now risen to somewhere in the vicinity of $160 billion to $165 billion. That compares with a figure of $31 billion when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) assumed office.

I would like to speak about the deficits which have been chalked up since this Government was returned to office. For the fiscal year 1980-81 there was a deficit of $12.6 billion. In the fiscal year 1981-82 there was a deficit of $13.6 billion. In fiscal year 1982-83 there was a deficit of $27.2 billion. In this current fiscal year there is a projected deficit of $30 billion. In total that amounts to some $83.5 billion.

My colleague the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) referred to the fact that one of the ways of comparing our performance, or our record of financial control, is by comparing ourselves to other industrialized nations, and one way of measuring the depth of our deficit is by measuring it against our gross domestic product. As my colleague pointed out, in 1981 our deficit was equal to something in the order of 3 per cent of the gross domestic product. As a matter of fact, it was 2.8 per cent. In 1982-83 that figure has risen to 8 per cent of the gross domestic product. When I say gross domestic product, I mean all the goods and services which are produced within the boundaries of Canada. So we are at 8 per cent now and with the projection of a $30 billion deficit it could rise to something in the order of 10 per cent. Ten per cent of our gross domestic product will comprise our deficit in this fiscal year.

The United States is seriously worried about its deficit and is making some very heavy expenditures on defence and a whole host of programs for economic recovery. The United States has projected its deficit to equal something in the order of 5 per cent to 6 per cent of its total gross domestic product. Britain, which has had its share of financial difficulties, just recently halved its deficit from 5.5 per cent in 1978-79 to 2.75 per cent of its gross domestic product. Therefore, that indicates, Mr. Speaker, that Canada is following a trend line which is out of step with its industrialized neighbours.

With this kind of a record it is no wonder that we in this country have the second highest rate of unemployment in the industrialized world. It is no wonder that we have the third highest rate of inflation in the industrialized world. It is no wonder that we have higher interest rates than most other industrialized nations of the world, and the highest misery rate of any industrialized nation in the world. We have the lowest generation of growth on a per capita basis. It is now something equal to less than the share which we achieved in 1976.

Another aspect, of course, Mr. Speaker, which disturbs Canadians is the fact that they do not believe that the impact of the recession we are currently expriencing is being shared fairly by all components of society. To Canadians there is little evidence that Government, its bureaucracies, its enterprises, its activities in those areas which are under the control or under the thumb of Government, are feeling the pain of recession which those people in the private sector are. We can take as an example wages and salaries. Notwithstanding the six and five program, we know that 40 per cent of those employed by Government received increases of well in excess of six and five and closer to 10 per cent. Statistics Canada recently reported that public sector wages rose by 15.9 per cent this year over last year versus a figure of 5.8 per cent in the private sector. Another recent study indicated that in the area of small business, one-third of small business managers had no increase in salary last year; one-third had a decrease; the others maintained the status quo. As far as their employees were concerned, two-thirds of them in small business had reductions in salary or their increases postponed. One in five had increases of less than 6 per cent.

When we consider the burden of unemployment and the pain associated with it, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South indicated, in the area of Government employment rose by 1 per cent. But we all know what has happened out there in the real world. Here again, there has been very little impact upon Government enterprises.

Recently the Canadian Federation of Independent Business pointed out that 50 per cent of the unemployed, somewhere in the vicinity of 700,000 to 800,000 people, have been laid off from the small business sector. Of course, I am sure there are many owner-managers who were laid off as a result of their business going down the tube, forced into bankruptcy and liquidation.

Speaking of bankruptcies, well in excess of 10,000 businesses, 91 per cent more than in 1979, were chalked up on the bankruptcy rolls last year in Canada. Over 400 farmers went bankrupt, and that does not tell the whole story because there are many who have gone out of business voluntarily. Look at the prices controlled by Government regulation, Mr. Speaker. They are not subject to the vagaries of the marketplace, so as a result they have increased by something in the order of 16 per cent to 17 per cent while the price component in the real marketplace increased by something in the order of 8 per cent.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the burden of the recession is being shared in a very lopsided fashion. The producers, the innovators, the generators of wealth in this country, are suffering while the spenders are being rewarded.

I say to you, sir, that if there was clear evidence coming from the Government that it was seriously attacking waste, extravagance and inefficiency, if it was serious about equalizing this burden, I think there could be some sympathy for this Bill. If there was a clear indication that this Government was moving to reduce the over-all burden of Government in Canada and its cost to the individual taxpayer, there might be some justification for this particular measure. If there was included in these programs, for which the Government wants this money, something to improve the fortunes of the small-business sector, the farmer, the innovator, the entrepreneur, the job creator, I think we could look at this bill in a more positive light.

The small business sector is hurting, Mr. Speaker. So is the agricultural sector, which up to this point is the only industry which could be a bright spot in Canada. When you look at the importance of agriculture, it is absolutely shameful that we make such a trivial effort to support and enhance the industry. While agriculture employs only 5 per cent of the population directly, the agri-food business accounts for 18 per cent of the total labour force in this country and 40 per cent of the total economic activity. The spin-off benefits are enormous. Yet we see the Government bringing in a measure to increase the freight rate for the movement of grain. We see a Government which has imposed a very heavy burden by way of energy taxes. I see my hon. friend across the way who has been championing the plight of those who are less fortunate. I refer specifically to his initiative with respect to Bill C-653, and I congratulate him for his efforts. Some may disagree with the content of the Bill, but no one can question the sincerity of the Hon. Member. He is clearly trying to do something to help the Canadian farmer, but it is kind of a last resort.

Mr. Ferguson: A first step.

Mr. Mazankowski: A first step. Well, the Member knows we share his view and we certainly are supporting his efforts in that regard. But we need something more to assist our young farmers and those who are facing financial difficulties, those who have been locked into high interest rates. There has to be a mechanism to assist them in extricating themselves from that unfortunate occurrence. There must be some federal Government initiative to provide some help in that regard.

We have also called for the establishment of an agri-bond program which would provide medium-term credit at a lower rate of interest. Time and time again we have called for a massive reduction if not a total elimination of taxes on farm fuels used in the production of food. When I talk about farm fuels, I am not merely talking about diesel fuel and gasoline; I am talking about natural gas which is used in the manufacture of fertilizer and in the operation of greenhouses. It is a crippling burden on the producers of Canada. The Government could provide relief in that area.

We are calling as well for the Government to maintain, in view of current difficulties, the current level of initial grain prices in this country so farmers can plan with some degree of confidence. We have also asked time and again for legislation—we agreed that we would pass a Bill with one day's debate—to double the farm cash advances for grain sold through the Canadian Wheat Board. That would provide some measure of confidence for the future. We have also maintained that the Government should move ahead with its beef stabilization program in conjunction with the Provinces. We believe that is something that could be done to provide some stability and confidence in that very important sector.

So there is much that could be done, Mr. Speaker. There is much that needs to be done. If some of these measures were incorporated into the Government's program, I think we could look at this Bill in a different light. But since the Government is wanting to borrow on the basis of a blank cheque, without telling us what it is going to do and how it is going to do it, and simply continue its wasteful, extravagant and irresponsible expenditures, there is no way that we can support this measure. Therefore, it is for that reason that I have risen today to speak out against this Bill and to speak out against this Government. It has completely lost touch with the reality out there.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I see they are starting to warm up a little on the other side. It seems to happen every time I rise in the House. My Progressive Conservative friends get all excited, and of course I do occasionally say things that upset them a little bit. I would not want to hurt the sensitive ears of these poor little Progressive Conservatives who are either against the metric system or for bilingualism but do not want to spend any money on it—they are a mass of inconsistencies. I have asked your permission, Mr. Speaker, to speak again this week because as a good Member of Parliament who represents his riding and who comes to the House to listen to the debate, I have a few comments to make on what is being said about the Government's borrowing authority request.

Mr. Speaker, up to now we have spent exactly fourteen days on this debate. The House has been sitting fourteen days to consider the Government's request for a borrowing authority of $19 billion. The previous speaker gave a typical example of the incoherence that is rife in the Progressive Conservative Party. But first of all, we had the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who told us that we had to fire 65,000 public servants, cut Government spending and stop everything. The next Member who spoke told the House that new policies had to be designed to spend even more money, to help farmers borrow money and to help beef and grain producers. The same incoherence is apparent every year. I just wonder because obviously, if the Government is asking for authority to borrow $19 billion, it is because it has made an undertaking, through its policies, to distribute money to Canadians, and we have been saying this all along. Every year, another debate forces the Government to impose closure, and every year we hear the same old speeches. This year, I heard some Hon. Members repeating the speeches they made the week before on the same subject, with basically the same rhetoric and a few variations here and there. It is incredible that the House of Commons should have to spend fourteen days on this question. As far as I am concerned, I would like to hear one Member of the Official Opposition and one Member of the New Democratic Party express clearly and simply the respective positions of their parties for the Canadian public. The Government would then give its position, a vote would be held and that would be the end of it, because in any case, the Members of the Opposition know perfectly well that the Canadian Government must act on the legislation passed by Parliament, no matter whether Parliament was right or wrong in passing the legislation. If legislation is passed requiring the Canadian Government to pay for medical services, the Government must do so.

Every year, they take advantage of the fact that the Government is obliged to ask Parliament for borrowing authority because there are deficits, and hold long drawn out debates for fourteen days, Mr. Speaker. Imagine! I am not going to dwell any longer on the subject, but it has been taking as long as the bells crisis. All this to vote on whether or not the Government will be given the requested borrowing authority, and when Opposition Members tell us that they were willing to have a quick debate, provided the Government spends more money on agriculture, provided it spends more here and more there—finally, it all ends with the Opposition saying that it does not make sense to let the Government borrow $19 billion, that is just too much money, it does not make sense and it is just giving them a blank cheque. The incoherence of it all is really incredible. It is like a yard full of turkeys who are running back and forth, trying to establish some kind of totally incongruous pecking order. From time to time, we do hear the occasional good speech, which helps to restore a modicum of logic to the debate. However, looking back on what has been achieved during the past four years—my first years in the House—and considering the number of days spent on discussing the issue of the Government's borrowing authority, I wish I could count the number of times a Member of the Official Opposition has said: I refuse to give the Federal Government a blank cheque.

Every time a Member opposite says those words, and they are repeated several times in the course of a single speech—they have been using the same words for four years, and it makes no sense at all, because as Members of Parliament they ought to know how our money is spent. They are supposed to know, unless they are not doing their job, because as Members of this House, we are close to the Canadian people and we are in the best position to know where every cent spent by the Government is going. If my hon. friends in the Official Opposition do not know where that money is going, either they are not doing their job in committee or they never go home to their job in their ridings. Mr. Speaker, it is always the same Members who are asking for more money. Just look at question period. At least half, if not all, of the questions are put by Members asking the Federal Government to spend more money or asking the Government why it did not spend more. The Members of the New Democratic Party are incredible in this respect. All they do is ask for money!

I was listening just now to one of their Members who was asking the Government to electrify all the railways in Canada. Not a bad idea, but, Mr. Speaker, I am taking the position of a Quebecer who has seen Mr. Parizeau making Quebec residents who are further away from the Ontario border pay more than $1 taxes on a gallon of gas, which is blackmail, because they have to go to the gas station. If tomorrow morning, all the railways in Quebec were to be electrified, it would mean that once again, the people of that Province would be liable to be blackmailed by Mr. Parizeau, because electric power is a provincial monopoly across Canada. The Provinces set the prices through their provincial transport commissions, and that is the kind of situation the Hon. Member wants to get us into. I am inclined to be a bit reticent. People have been talking about the Canadian Government's deficit and comparing our country to countries like Great Britain—which is hard-pressed to operate normally three days a week—and we are being compared to our neighbours to the south and to other countries with the same economic system, and people seem to be saying that Canada's performance has been very poor. But there are major differences which they forget to point out to the Canadian people. There is not a single country where the national Government gives a blank cheque to the provinces. Does anyone know that our Progressive Conservative friends never speak about their colleagues who are provincial Premiers? We never hear anything about them, and yet several of them now hold office. Several of those people are provincial Premiers, genuine Tories, including a few who even want to lead the national Party and who are now heading provincial Governments. They never tell the Canadian people that the provinces unilaterally decide what they will spend for health insurance or post-secondary, college and university education without even consulting Ottawa about it, and all we get here at the end are the bills. They forget to mention that all those cash transfers represent this year an expenditure of almost $18 billion for the Canadian Government. They forget to say that Canada is the only country which has shown enough respect for its provincial institutions to give them the power to spend and to implement provincial policies which, by their own admission, are tailored to their own personality and their own requirements. They forget to point out that the Federal Government accounts for nearly 80 per cent of the budget of a province such as Newfoundland. They forget to say that, Mr. Speaker. Why? Because those provinces are led by their own friends.

Let us try the American system since that is what the Progressive Conservative Members want. Let municipalities pay for schools as they do in the United States. Let spokesmen for a city similar to New York tell us: We are going to be near bankruptcy tomorrow, help us. That is the experiment those people want to try. What makes our country so great, Mr. Speaker, is indeed the fact that a Canadian owns a part of Canada, no matter where he lives. His origin, his religion, his culture, his tongue and his colour do not matter at all, as long as he is a resident of a great country called Canada where resources are plentiful. All that makes up a national Government which has the responsibility to support each and every Canadian as well as our Canadian institutions, be they provincial, municipal or otherwise.

As a resident of Quebec, I have a problem on my hands—perhaps my colleagues from the other provinces are in a similar predicament, but I am not sure—in that municipalities in Quebec no longer have the right to speak to the Canadian Government, because they are told that they fall under Quebec City's jurisdiction. We have just had another experience, this time related to the NEED Program under which the Canadian Government will spend $170 million in the province. We have tried to co-operate with the provincial authorities and explain to them that they would contribute $45 million and administer the whole program jointly with us in such fields as non-profit corporations. Normally, we would not need you, we could choose to act unilaterally, but we will administer the program in co-operation with you and live a common experience. The outcome of the common experience is that after three months of delays we are forced to answer: Very well, give your $45 million to the municipalities by yourselves and we shall invest our $170 million in non-profit-making corporations, private companies and Federal Departments. Why? Because we, in Quebec, also have people with closed minds.

The Progressive Conservatives are not the only people who oppose the metric system and have a closed mind. We also have such people. There are people in Quebec who say: The municipalities belong to Quebec. If a mayor is elected, he must deal with his MLA. He must not speak to the Federal Member of Parliament because he must not deal directly with the Government of Canada. He has no right to do so. This is the type of constraint which we have to deal with in Quebec, with the result that useful policies which normally could be applied in a spirit of co-operation in a well-structured manner by both levels of governments have to be applied unilaterally, that is by us on one side and them on the other. We have about the same experience. I would like to quote a comment by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he was wondering what would become of co-operative federalism which the Liberals under Mr. Pearson had so well promoted by giving the provinces certain taxation powers as well as health insurance and post-secondary education programs for which the Canadian Government guaranteed to pay at least 50 per cent of the cost. Where are we going and why? The provinces have administered these programs in such a way that their purpose is now completely distorted. Look at Quebec! Our hospitals are now completely run down. I shall not tell you what is going on in my own constituency, but it is almost catastrophic. Look at what is happening in education. Recently, all Quebec public servants have been blamed by the Quebec Government. Apparently, they are guilty, but of what? They are guilty of having accepted the wages imposed by their own provincial Government. Now they are guilty. They are being blamed by this same Government. Why? God knows! Why was all this accepted? What is wrong today was good yesterday. Mr. Parizeau himself said so when the last collective agreement was signed: "We signed for peanuts." He is now telling these people: "You are robbing the state; I shall take away 20 per cent of your wages."

Such things are clearly unacceptable and this raises a few questions for the central Government. I want to ask my hon. friends opposite, who have friends among the leaders of provincial parties, and friends who are heading some of our provincial governments, to ask their own parties to think about the kind of administrative powers the Federal Government has given them during the last 20 years and where those powers are taking them. What route do they want to take? Are they trying to prove that a country like Canada should not give more powers to the Provinces or are they perhaps trying to prove the opposite?

Personally, I am all for having the Provinces develop their own powers and preserving their charateristics, but when I see what is happening in Quebec, where the tax burden has become absolutely incredible, and the billions of dollars that are being taken from the Caisse de dépôt du Québec to buy companies, to bring in companies like Péchiney in Bécancour, to take over companies like Alcan in my area and to compete in Quebec with our own companies that are already being forced to lay off workers, I really cannot begin to express my feelings about this. I will never be able to agree with policies that are based solely on Government power, not on the welfare of the people. Coherent policies are absolutely necessary, if we are to run this country the way it should be run. The Provinces will have to discharge their responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, and the Opposition parties will have to stop their little cat-and-mouse game. They will have to stop telling the Federal Government it is spending too much, when the vast majority of federal expenditures goes directly to the Provinces, who are their own political friends, and who are spending the money. There will have to be more consistency, because the party opposite has spent the last four years between two leaders. They will have to choose a leader who will determine their party's political destiny. The Members opposite will have to stop telling us that the price of oil is too low in Canada, as they were saying three years ago, and now the price has gone up, we are killing the oil industry because we have set prices too high.

They will have to clarify their stand on a number of issues. If they want the oil industry to function properly, they will have to ask the Canadian Government to abolish the Provinces' authority to levy taxes on gas, because their own political friends who are heading their own Provincial Governments, as in Ontario, for instance, are levying gas taxes and adding to the taxpayers' burden, while they are also killing the oil industry. They know all this, but our friends opposite are not raising these issues in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not afraid to ask my Government to restrain provincial powers with respect to gas taxes. It is really incredible! And when I see the New Democratic Party come up with one of its pipe dreams that we should electrify the railways, when I know perfectly well that when Mr. Parizeau decides to sell power to the Canadian Government to run the trains, those kilowatts are going to be so expensive that not a single train will be running in Quebec, I fail to see any consistency in that. It is unbelievable! As if that were not enough, year in and year out we are forced to waste 10 or 15 days of debate on a borrowing Bill which is required to help needy Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I said last week and I say again today that I am proud to be a Liberal because the policies which we are now implementing and which cost a bundle to the Canadian Government are designed to help the population. I would be ashamed of myself if I had to return to my riding tomorrow and admit that some Canadians have to do without bread and butter. I would be ashamed.

A Member opposite said earlier today that 24 million Canadians live in the second largest country in the world where resources and wealth are plentiful. That is true, and that is precisely why we do not have the right to let a single Canadian citizen do without bread, butter, housing, education and health care. However, in case Members of the Opposition are not aware of this, I will point out that it costs money, and money does no grow on trees, it has to come from somewhere. Had the Progressive Conservative Party in particular understood three years ago, when Peter Lougheed cut down the flow of oil to Canadians, that higher oil prices would inevitably be followed by higher provincial levies on petroleum products, thus further damaging the Canadian economy, we would not be in the mess we are in now. They even imposed their will on Parliament, going as far as keeping the bells ringing for 15 days because they did not like a bill and wanted it split in to eight parts. They are the ones who force us to adopt this attitude and who suggested that the Provincial Premiers levy additional taxes and surtaxes on the poor Canadian taxpayer who lives in this large country of ours and who must stop regularly at the gas pump because he has to drive to earn his living.

We are in a predicament as a result of their policies, and today they blame the Canadian Government for wanting to protect the people and give the unemployed the money they need to put food on the table. Mr. Speaker, I cannot stand still before such inconsistencies and I must let my electors know about them. What I ask is that in future years they say unconditionally to the Government: Spend so many millions of dollars more than last year and when you seek authority to borrow there will be one speaker for the Progressive Conservatives, one for the New Democratic Party, and one for the Government, and then we will vote on the borrowing bill before finally talking about some of the other needs of Canadians.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that there would be consent to sit beyond one o'clock to consider all remaining stages of Bill C-141 and to conclude all stages of this Bill no later than two o'clock, with any divisions required being deferred until immediately after the divisions scheduled for 5.45 p.m. later today.

If this could be put to the House, I believe the House would be prepared to make it an order. I should say as well that I understand there is some disposition to proceed with all of these stages without further debate. If that is the case, the Government would certainly agree.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party, we are prepared to agree to that order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, we also agree to it. It is too bad the Government House Leader has not asked for it personally.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The House has heard the proposal put forward by the Minister of Justice. Does the House agree to the proposal as read?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ADJUDICATION OF FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT—ECONOMIC BENEFITS FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, within the next few months, Cabinet will decide on the final adjudication of a contract for the construction of six frigates for the Department of National Defence.

On behalf of the people of the Quebec City area and the riding of Lévis, I would like to point out to the Government that this $3 billion contract will have economic spinoffs that are of considerable interest to Quebecers who expect, and rightly so, to benefit quite substantially from the contract. The Quebec City area, which according to the last census has over one million people, has never been very lucky as far as large investment projects are concerned. For instance, not a single contract was or will be awarded for the construction of the latest patrol aircraft. That is understandable, since the area's infrastructure is not suited to aircraft construction. However, the situation is entirely different where shipbuilding is concerned. Davie Shipbuilding Limited in Lauzon is among the leaders in this field in Canada, and failure to acknowledge this fact would be most unfortunate. The people of the Quebec City area are anxious to have a substantial share of the 30,000 jobs involved in the construction of the frigates.

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF SECTION 16 OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGULATIONS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a question that is of very special interest to farmers and farm workers across Canada. More specifically, on behalf of the Fédération des producteurs maraîchers, the Syndicat des producteurs de fraises et de framboises du Québec, the Fédération des producteurs de pommes du Québec, the Fédération des producteurs de pommes de terre du Québec, the Syndicat des producteurs en serres du Québec, the Fédération des producteurs de bleuets du Québec, and also on behalf of the Fédération des producteurs de fruits et de légumes du Québec,

I want to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to act on a request sent by telegram, asking the Minister to reinstate Section 16 of the Unemployment Insurance Regulations, since the absence of this section seems to be seriously hurting both farmers and farm workers. In the circumstances, and in view of other representations made by Members of this House, I hope the Minister will realize the importance of this issue and will agree to this request, for the benefit of these workers and producers.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

SPONSORSHIP OF PREMARITAL COURSES URGED

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Madam Speaker, as reported in today's press, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario suggested that couples should take publicly sponsored premarital courses in an attempt to cut the social and economic cost of divorces. This suggestion, in my view, is something that should be supported by Parliamentarians. The suggestion no doubt emanates from the appalling statistics on the ever-increasing divorce rate in Canada. Recently, as reported by Statistics Canada, 40 per cent of Canadian marriages end up in divorce. These rates have been eroding away at the family as the foundation of our social framework and should be cause for grave concern on the part of this House.

Given this statement and the statistics, I would urge the Government, through the Department of Justice, to take very seriously the recommendation and any others that might be made that would have the effect of bolstering the family as a strong and stable social unit and, through that means, the Canadian social fabric.

In addition to facilitating the dissolution of marriages which are inretrievably damaged, the Government should be leaving no stone unturned to ensure that the strength of the basic building block of our society is supported and encouraged.

PENITENTIARIES

IMPLEMENTATION OF NEW DUTY ROSTER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, Canada's prison staff must, day in and day out, maintain a patient and understanding relationship with a shifting and sometimes dangerous population, and must take the brunt of unacceptable conditions such as double bunking and severe overcrowding, as well as suffer frustrations, aggravations, and anxieties beyond most occupations. In a recent meeting with some 90 officers and guards, I was told that 50 per cent of these worries are caused, created, and aggravated by regional and headquarters staff, many of whom have no idea of what actually goes on inside prison walls.

For example, the staff in the Drumheller Institution have, over the years, worked out an excellent duty roster, with which the staff and the administration are happy. Just recently the Commissioner of Penitentiaries decreed that all institutions must operate on a seven day on and three day off, seven day on and four day off rotation. This system, instead of reducing the abuse and solving problems, is creating aggravation and dissatisfaction among the staff.

The squad system used by the Drumheller Institution has many advantages over the proposed system which I cannot enumerate now because of the time restriction. Suffice it to say that it has worked well and is working well, and there is no need for blanket uniform procedures when this one is doing the job.

I urge the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) to overrule the Commissioner and permit the continued use of the squad system, which will help greatly in dealing with the severe problems this staff is already facing due to overcrowding, and a mixture of medium offenders with dangerous criminals.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GREECE—DISCUSSIONS WITH VISITING PRIME MINISTER

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, at the meeting of the Senate and Commons Standing Committees on External Affairs and National Defence with the Prime Minister of Greece, a number of concerns of this House were discussed which are of particular concern to many of my constituents who are of Greek origin.

Prime Minister Papandreou raised several problems of security in the eastern Mediterannean, first, Cyprus, where 34.6 per cent of the territory is still occupied by Turkish troops despite United Nations resolutions and bilateral talks. Canada's ongoing role as peacekeeper is crucial until a secure peace is achieved.

Canadians who want Canada to be recognized as a nuclear-free zone will be encouraged by Greece's efforts in the same direction and, indeed, for a broad Balkan-wide nuclear-free zone, which would desirably join up with a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe.

More negatively, there was also discussion of the possibility of a serious imbalance of forces in the Aegean, with increased American military aid to Turkey. And, although Mr. Papandreou did not say it, it is well known that the threat of increased military strength in Turkey is a means of pressuring Greece to keep its American bases, a decision that Greeks should be able to make on their own for their own reasons.

My Party welcomes the Prime Minister's visit, both as an opportunity to discuss important international questions, and Greek-Canada relations, and to see an old friend again. We are delighted also that Mrs. Margaret Papandreou, who is the President of the Women's Union of Greece is part of the visit.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier).

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION POLICY—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL STATUS FOR EASTERN PRODUCERS

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Madam Speaker, historically, the Crow rate has provided Western grain production with a special status. Now that this policy is being revised, we feel there is a case for demanding equivalent special status for Eastern producers. I am therefore asking the Government to include in its Bill on Western grain transportation a "special status" that would put the Livestock Feed Board of Canada and the Canadian Wheat Board on an equal footing. While I am on the subject of stability and permanence and equality between Eastern and Western producers, I feel these points should be entrenched by the Government in legislation for Canadian producers of industrial milk, at the same time as its new grain policy.

Madam Speaker, these measures must be accompanied by compensatory financial guarantees for Eastern producers if they suffer losses as a result of the new grain transportation policy. That is how we—and I believe I can speak for the seventy-four Liberal Members from Quebec—want to safeguard the growth of agri-food business in Quebec. Quebec farm producers ought to be told that the post-Gilson dossier is doing very well and that their Liberal Federal Members are not only keeping an eye on the grain policy but are also working daily to ensure that the agricultural industry in Canada and Quebec will prosper.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING FOR DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, in the November 1981, budget, a figure of $345 million was set aside for economic development in native programs. Since then the area to be covered has been expanded, the method of dispensing funds has been altered twice, but the hard cold fact is that not one cent of the money has been put to use.

Based on the promises given, the Ontario Indian Agriculture Association prepared plans, issued guidelines, and generally set out to improve agriculture on reserves by training and other forms of assistance. As a result of the complete lack of activity by the Government, they have been unable to deliver.

• (1410)

I have written letters, asked questions, and spoken to Ministers, as has the Chairman of the Association, the former Chief of the Tyendinaga Mohawks, all to no avail. The Government has just not kept its word in this matter.

Now we understand that the Liberal caucus has set up a committee to administer the funds. As objectionable and unethical as that is, I would hope that someone could make the Government keep its promise. Surely more than lip service is due to these people.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, the farmers from Saskatchewan brought a petition to Ottawa with over 15,000 names on plywood crows. I am not surprised that the Liberal Government found the petition objectionable, although the farmers found it in their best interests to try to impress upon this House of Commons their serious concern about the Crow rate. It is unbelievable, though, that the Conservatives would object to this kind of an action. The Conservative Leader, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), insinuated that the farmers were nothing more than a bunch of clowns.

Mr. Nielsen: No, you guys.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Anguish: This is the most important issue in the history of western Canadian farmers. What is the Conservative policy on the Crow rate? Do you put your finger up each morning to the wind to find out what the policy is going to be for that day? The Conservative Party spent 15 days of bell-ringing in the House of Commons to support the oil companies, and would not give 15 minutes to the farmers of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anguish: When it comes down to the crunch we can always tell that the Conservatives will be in bed with the Liberal Party, just as they were yesterday in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anguish: We would like a clear statement on the record of where the Conservative Party stands in relation to the statutory Crow rate, which is the only real benefit that western Canadian farmers have in getting their product to the ports. We want to know, when the crunch in this House comes again, will the Conservatives be in bed with the Liberals, or will they stand up and support the farmers of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: You are not clowns at all; you are turkeys.

AIRPORTS

IMPROVEMENTS NEEDED AT HAMILTON CIVIC AIRPORT

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, regional airports play a vital role in Canada's air transportation system, yet the performance of this important function is diminished considerably in some such airports for want of updated facilities. At the Hamilton Civic Airport, for example, inadequate runway and approach lighting often forces Nordair, the airport's only major airline, to cancel flights in and out of Hamilton and to divert flights to Toronto in bad weather, at a high cost to the airline and inconvenience to Nordair passengers. Given high intensity approach lights and sequential flashing strobes, I believe that many cancellations could be avoided, and possibly other airlines would look at Hamilton Civic Airport more favourably.

Since this type of infrastructural development is vital to the growth of the Hamilton community, I strongly urge the Department of Transport to investigate this situation and to install additional approach and runway lighting at the Airport as soon as possible.

SHIPBUILDING

DECLINE IN SHIPYARD EMPLOYMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, about 18 months ago the Canadian Shipbuilding & Ship Repairing Association conducted a domestic shipbuilding survey covering market requirements through the 1980s. The survey showed a requirement for over 400 new ships and floating equipment at a cost in 1981 dollars of $33 billion plus.

Of this amount, the Government's projected requirements accounted for $3 billion. On the surface this augured well for our future. However, instead of full order books and healthy employment levels, we see some 6,000 fewer men and women at work in our Canadian shipyards today than one year ago. Why? One reason can be found in the 80 per cent grants policy for exploration of gas and oil and its supporting equipment. We see PetroCan selling its offshore service boats, for example, in order to lease back and gain the advantage of the 80 per cent grant which is not available through private acquisition and ownership. Esso, as well, has seen the advantage of this, and is operating through Citibank. Husky Oil, as well, has equipment up for sale. It wants to sell it offshore and lease it back. What does this do? Who loses? I will tell you who loses. There are no orders in the Halifax shipyards.

Fergusson Industries is about ready to come to the end of their building program. St. John—

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INCOME TAX

CLASSIFICATION OF FARMERS—DEPARTMENT'S AUDITING PRACTICES

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue, and in his absence I will go to the Acting Minister who is Minister of Supply and Services. In the latter's absence, I would like to go to the Minister of Finance and, in his absence, I probably should go to the Minister of State for Finance—

An Hon. Member: He is here.

Mr. Greenaway: —or the Deputy Prime Minister, whomever wants to answer the question.

My question has to do with Section 31 of the Income Tax Act which breaks down farmers into three categories, full-time farmers, part-time farmers, and so-called hobby farmers.

Because of current economic conditions approximately 125,000 farmers across Canada have been forced to take jobs off the farm to supplement their incomes. As a result, Revenue Canada auditors have been reclassifying many of them from full-time to part-time, and part-time to hobby class, and then assessing up to four years in back taxes to these people, in many cases forcing them to sell out or else go bankrupt.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister of State for Finance ask his colleagues to review Section 31 of the Act, as has been urged by the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the Canadian Bar Association since 1976? Furthermore, in the interim will the Minister instruct his officials to stop harassing an already badly hit sector of the economy under this unjust Section of the Income Tax Act?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. There are so few Members of the Opposition in their seats this afternoon I wonder if we will have enough questions to fill out the Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: Be that as it may, the Hon. Member in his first question raises a very interesting matter. It is one that has been brought to the attention of Ministers previously. I have sought the support of the Minister of Finance and of the Minister of National Revenue on this issue, and we have asked officials in the Department of Revenue to review their practices in this matter. We certainly are sensitive to the questions that are raised by the Hon. Member.

AMOUNT OF BACK TAXES DEMANDED

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I will address my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Minister of Revenue. This problem was addressed in the House in 1972 when the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody extracted a commitment from the then Minister of National Revenue that, in a case where the tax auditors had assessed back taxes he would only charge people one year's back taxes. Now people are being charged with four years' back taxes. Will the Minister make the same commitment to people who are now being charged for four years, that he will reduce this to just a one year back tax?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has an advantage. I was not in the House at that time.

Mr. Nielsen: You are not here now.

Mr. Cosgrove: I, of course, would have to take a look at the record and what was the undertaking of the then Minister, specifically what he was referring to, but I certainly will take the question as a representation by the Hon. Member and discuss it, along with the representations in the first part of his question.

Mr. Greenaway: Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the other side of the House that a Liberal backbencher told me yesterday that no audits were being done in Quebec. I will guarantee that they will be whistling a different tune when they start auditing Quebec.

AMOUNT OF LOSS DEDUCTION

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, deductions of farm losses by part-time farmers is limited to $5,000 per year. This figure was set in the year 1952. According to Statistics Canada, this figure should now be approximately $20,000 to reflect current realities. Would the Minister, at the very least, see that this 30 year old figure is indexed to inflation?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I shall consider the question as a suggestion for the budget, and I intend to give it serious consideration.

[English]

REVIEW OF AUDITING PRACTICES

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question relates to the same issue and I would like to address it to the same Minister. The Minister should know that this is not only affecting present farmers but is having a very serious effect on future farmers. Young Canadians who consider going into farming would have a very difficult time with the high cost of going into that business, as well as the present situation.

The Minister earlier said that we can expect some kind of a review of what is going on at the moment. How soon can we expect some kind of a review, and when will we see the results of that?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that I have already made that request of the officials and I would expect in the not too distant future that we would have a response on the practice of the Department. If indeed there is a policy issue, as there have been some suggestions that the practice of the Department is not in accord with the policy as laid down by the Ministry, we will report that to the Hon. Members who have indicated an interest in the subject.

• (1420)

REQUEST THAT REVIEW RESULTS BE TABLED

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, the concern is when, because it is an immediate problem. We would like to know whether the Minister will table those in the House as soon as possible so that we can give an answer to our constituents right across the country.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I already indicated that I have requested that information from the Department. As soon as I receive it, I will make it available to Hon. Members. The question has been raised by Members on both sides of the House. I say to those Members who have indicated interest that we will get the information to them as quickly as possible.

SCOPE OF AUDIT IN PROVINCES AND RIDINGS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to any Minister who knows anything about this problem. I raised this ten years ago when National Revenue was harassing and threatening part-time farmers in my Province and in southern Ontario, and there were no similar audits going on in Quebec, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia. These were all ignored. I would like to ask whether they are now going on in these other Provinces. Will the Minister assure the House that, when sanity returns and reverts to the one-year or current back-taxes policy, the policy will apply, one, all across Canada and, two, not just to ridings held by Opposition Members but to ridings held by Liberals as well?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, as I have indicated, this question has been raised by Members on both sides of the House. The question has been raised by constituents in ridings that are held by Members of the Government. I am aware that the question has been raised in different Provinces. On the issue of whether it is applied in all Provinces, I will inquire of the Minister of National Revenue and take notice of the question.

RECLASSIFICATION OF FARMERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will the Minister agree that the problem being raised here this afternoon of full-time bona fide ranchers and farmers being forced into part-time categories having to go off their land to seek alternate employment, is the direct result of his Government's high interest rate policy? It has resulted in these people seeking alternate employment in some other form of occupation.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STATUS OF BILL S-32—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON GATING

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Senate has now trashed S-32 with its Government majority, and the courts across the country are trashing the gating procedure and are eliminating the power of the National Parole Board with respect to dangerous offenders. In the latest case in British Columbia Chief Justice Nemetz said, "No doubt this prisoner is a menace to society." What plans does the Government have to provide legislation that would put the security of society first and provide a review of dangerous criminals before release, with the possibility of an extension of incarceration?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, that is precisely what I am doing. Bill S-32 has not been trashed by the Senate. A few days ago I had a very productive meeting with that Committee, and some subsequent informal discussions, which lead me to believe that the Bill, with some amendments which will increase protection of the public, will be acceptable to the Senate. I certainly hope so. I will continue to work with them in the hope that the Bill can be approved and sent to the House of Commons.

As far as gating is concerned, I was the Minister who gave the green light to that practice, based on legal opinion. At the moment, in spite of what the Hon. Member has said, judicial opinion is divided on the subject, with Chief Justice Menetz being in favour of it, although the majority of his court were against it; a court in another Province being in favour, and a court in the third Province being against. Therefore, the responsible thing to do is to appeal further, which is exactly what we are doing. We expect an early hearing from the Supreme Court of Canada. If the National Parole Board is found by that body not to have the authority which it has been asserting, I will introduce an amendment right away and, hopefully, have the co-operation of Members here and in the other place to improve our legislation and the protection of the public very promptly.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF OFFENDERS BEFORE RELEASE FROM PRISON

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General obviously does not read his mail. He has received a letter from the Senate committee saying that that Bill will go nowhere.

Since gating is only a very temporary help, because ultimately dangerous offenders still have to be released at the end of their sentence with no review at all that will protect the public, will the Minister tell the House that he will provide legislation that will include a review and possible extension of incarceration for those prisoners deemed to be a danger to society?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, what the Hon. Member is asking for is something that I think is impossible in a democratic society, that is, that a person who has been given a punishment by a court and served that punishment should, at the order of an executive, without committing any additional offence, have his incarceration continued. That is a remarkable proposition. It is certainly not one that would be consistent with our Charter. When persons have served the time that the courts imposed on them, however dangerous the Hon. Member and others may think they are, they are entitled to be free. The only justification for re-incarcerating them would be if they committed some other offence and were convicted again.

EMPLOYMENT

NATIONAL TRAINING ACT—FUNDING FOR TRAINING NURSING ASSISTANTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Under the National Training Act certain jobs are designated as national in importance, and then the Minister's Department funds them. The occupation of nursing assistants is not designated as a job of national importance under the Act. As a result, funding for this course has been cut in Midland, Ontario. There are three hospitals in that area, one of which employs over 700 people. Will the Minister undertake to review the question of funding of the nursing assistants program and perhaps review the classification of this program as a "job classification of national importance", in view of the large number of Canadian men and women who are employed in this occupation?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the representation. I should point out to him that, under the National Training Act, we have established joint committees in each of the Provinces on which there are federal and provincial officials who make recommendations regarding the designations for those courses or occupations to be designated under the National Training Act. In this case it is up to the regional representatives of the provincial Government to bring forward representations if there is a shortage in that region. If that has not happened, I will be glad to take the representation of the Hon. Member, refer it to that committee, and see whether it is eligible for such a designation.

REGIONAL DEMANDS FOR TRAINING COURSES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the machinists' trade is designated as a national program where future shortages may occur. Despite that designation in the machinists' program at Georgian College in Orillia, it is being cut back 37 per cent with respect to the number of job trainees. What steps does the Minister's Department take to ensure that, where an occupation is of national importance, the Department is sensitive to the demands of each region in the country?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should point out that the determination of courses in the community colleges is a decision made by the provincial authorities. We purchase courses. We do not initiate their establishment. The level of funding that they receive is in large part determined by the Department of Community Colleges and Higher Education in the Province of Ontario and in other Provinces. I am prepared to undertake to look at the question raised by the Hon. Member concerning the shortage of machinists in that area and the matter of whether the courses could be adapted in that college.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

ANNOUNCED SALE OF ONTARIO PULP MILL

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On March 8 American Can of Canada announced the sale of its Marathon Ontario Pulp Mill to the James River Corporation of Richmond, Virginia, and Buchanan Forest Products of Thunder Bay. Such a sale requires the scrutiny and approval of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Is the Minister now in a position to tell the House what was the decision of FIRA and how soon will the Marathon Mill be allowed to proceed with full production under its new owners, James River-Marathon Ltd.?

• (1430)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, by law I cannot divulge the contents of any application. I can assure the Hon. Member, however, that we are doing everything possible to expedite the assessment of this proposal, assuming the conditions of significant benefits to Canadians are met.

INDUSTRY

INGLIS CORPORATION'S EMPLOYMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Industry. On March 12, 1982, the then Minister of Industry announced a $3 million assistance program for Inglis to purchase Admiral. At the same time Inglis received an additional $1 million from the Province of Ontario. The commitment it made was to re-establish existing levels of employment in the plants which it was taking over, and to create new employment. To this point in time, it has not yet met its commitment to re-establish existing levels of employment. What action does the Minister propose to take, given the fact there were four million taxpayers' dollars given to that company to ensure that the employment levels which existed prior to the takeover were in fact maintained?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the company in question did undertake certain commitments. I will assess the Hon. Member's allegations, and review the commitments made by the company to ensure they have fulfilled those commitments.

TRANSFER OF JOBS BETWEEN PLANTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, as a supplementary question I would ask the Minister, when he is discussing this matter with Inglis, to pay particular attention to a practice which it is now pursuing of taking jobs which now exist in the previous Inglis operations and transferring them to the new operations in order to attempt to meet the quota levels which were established and to which they themselves agreed at the time the money was made available by both the federal and provincial Governments? Will he also make clear to Inglis that the movement of a job from one plant to another plant is not to be considered by the federal Government, at least, as the creation of a new job?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member's concern in this regard and I will investigate his allegations.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INSIST ON COMMITMENT BEING MET

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a final question for the same Minister. I am sure from the tone of his answers the Minister realizes that this is a practice which has gone on for some long time with a number of companies. I put to him that in the last quarter of 1982 Inglis has enjoyed a net sales increase of something close to $4.6 million. That is the equivalent of the amount of money given to it by the federal and provincial Governments. Will the Minister meet with Inglis and insist that either it meet its jobs commitments or it repay the federal Treasury the money it got from the federal Treasury which has been turned into windfall profits for the company and its shareholders at the expense of the employees?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, while I do not agree with the preamble of the Hon. Member, I will investigate his allegations, as I indicated in my previous responses, and I will ensure that the job commitments which were made by the company will be followed.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT JAPANESE SYSTEM BE ADOPTED TO INCREASE PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On November 30 last I asked the Minister the following question, as reported at page 21117 of Hansard:

> As the Japanese system of having many small groups made up of equal numbers of management and labour working together in plants to improve productivity, quality and design, has proved far more successful than the Canadian system of confrontation between management and labour, will the Government give leadership by taking steps to encourage Canadian industry to adopt the far more successful Japanese method of industrial operation, and in that way make it possible for Canada to become a leader rather than continue to be a follower in today's very competitive world?

Did the Minister follow my suggestion and, if so, would he advise the House what the results have been to date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I nearly always follow the advice of the Hon. Member who was a very distinguished former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I agree wholeheartedly with the Hon. Member that nothing is more important to improving productivity in this country than better labour-management relations, and if I may I add one caveat, better labour-management as well as government relations should be included. If I recall, about six weeks after the Hon. Member asked his question I did follow up with respect to implementing a task force co-chaired by senior representatives of labour and management in the automotive sector, and I am hoping that before the end of the week we will be able to announce that two more task forces which have been structured along these same lines.

INDUSTRIAL REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, as the Minister knows, when he first took over the Export Trade Development Board I strongly supported him in this move and the work which he was doing. I would like to ask him now if he plans to follow this example on the industrial and regional development side by appointing a similar board reporting to his Department.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Export Trade Development Board, where business, labour, government and academic representatives have been working together for the last few years, I believe has proven to be very successful, as originally expected by the Hon. Member, and we are giving serious consideration to formulating a board on the industrial and regional development side with a similar structure.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT $3,000 GRANT PROGRAM BE EXTENDED

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Both the Minister and the House are of course aware that the $3,000 home construction grant plan expires on April 30. When the House came back from summer recess on October 27, the plan, which was due to expire on December 30, was extended until April 30. I should therefore like to know whether the Minister has received representations from the Provincial Homebuilders Association urging him to continue the plan, and whether the Minister intends to include the grant in his forthcoming budget, for the benefit of Canadians and Quebecers who intend to build new homes.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this particular program has been very successful. The Hon. Member is no doubt aware that we have allocated over $700 million to the program since it was announced last year. The results are clear if we consider the number of units that have been started in recent months. On an annual basis, it is expected that housing starts will total approximately 170,000 units per year, which represents a very substantial increase over last year.

As for continuing the program, I can inform the Hon. Member that I have received suggestions from various groups of builders, and that these suggestions will certainly be considered.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF NEW DIRECTOR OF U.S. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. As the Minister is aware, the EPA in the United States, the Environmental Protection Agency, now has a new director, Mr. William Ruckelshaus. Could the Minister tell us if he has been in touch with this new director, and have arrangements been made for a face to face meeting with him?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I have written to Mr. Ruckelshaus to congratulate him on his nomination, but until he is confirmed in office by the Senate, as I understand it, by the conventions of the American Government, it is unlikely he would wish to see me. I have written to him, however, to express my desire to get together as quickly as possible and I am confident of meeting him very quickly.

I hope, in this context, the Hon. Members of the House subcommittee on acid rain will find an occasion to meet with me soon, so that when they undertake their trip to Washington we will have the opportunity to discuss what information I might have from Mr. Ruckelshaus before that takes place. I expect to meet with him quite quickly. Clearly, it depends on his availability to meet with me. I understand that that should be taking place very soon after he has received confirmation by the Senate.

ACID RAIN POLLUTION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. As we are all aware, U.S. Vice-President George Bush was here last Wednesday, and I hope that the Cabinet, and possibly the Minister himself, had an opportunity to speak with him, and to bring up the very important topic of acid rain pollution. Could the Minister give us his comments on that?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Madam Speaker. This was not a matter of substantial discussion because it is on the agenda for discussion between my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and Mr. Schultz, early in April. However, it was a question which was discussed informally during the visit of Vice-President Bush, particularly with some people on his staff, so he is certainly aware of our views. It was not a very substantial discussion. That should be taking place early in April.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF EXTENSION OF COVERAGE TO FARM WORKERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In the rural parts of my constituency, many students, both high school and university, housewives and others, look forward to earning money through the summer from the various fruit and vegetable crops grown there. The growers welcome the availability of the part-time labour. A busy farmer can hand out between 300 and 400 cheques, amounting to $10,000, in any given week. The Department has now moved to stop this by the imposition of Regulation 16.

• (1440)

Will the Minister not reconsider this unfair burden on both growers and workers in both mine and other rural constituencies?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has phrased his question in a very unusual way, as if somehow it is a burden to have extended unemployment insurance coverage to agricultural workers who have been demanding it for literally decades.

Some Hon. Members: Where?

Mr. Axworthy: Well, if the Hon. Member does not know where, then I guess he does not know his riding very well. The fact of the matter is that agricultural workers, who put in a very hard day's labour, should have the same right to be covered under the Unemployment Insurance Act as other workers in this country. That is a very important principle of equity, one which this Party happens to believe in, even though the Hon. Member obviously does not.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW REGULATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, the "where" came from somewhere other than this corner. I do know my riding intimately, and every grower there. I know those growers do not like this plan being put before them. In fact you will be forcing teenage high schoolers to get social insurance numbers years before they will ever need them, and the paper burden placed on growers in the area is absolutely unreal. It will simply prevent their using much of this part-time labour. Will the Minister not accept that—never mind his easy paper work—and have another look at Regulation 16?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the fact of the matter is that we are addressing a very simple principle, which is that people who work should have some income protection. We have been meeting very closely with the agriculture organizations to find ways of developing administrative techniques or other ways to ease the burden they might face with large numbers of workers arriving in a very short period of time. I still go back to the basic principle that the unemployment insurance system is designed to protect workers and give them some income protection. As a result, we do not intend to revoke the stand we took last summer and cancel Regulation 16.

EFFECT ON STUDENTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary to the same Minister. Can he tell this House how a high school student is going to benefit by paying UIC premiums? How does that help the high school student or the person who wants to get a short-term job on a farm? Will he tell this House where that person benefits?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the fact of the matter is the beneficiaries of that particular program are the many agricultural workers across the country who are not in high school but who are trying to make a decent living for their families in the agricultural field. That is who we are trying to cover.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT CONSEQUENCES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, has the Minister done a study on how part-time agricultural workers, students who work on the weekend or through the summer only, are ever going to get any help here? Are they not going to find that the farmers will not hire them now? Are you not really putting those students out of work for the summer?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think I already pointed out to the Hon. Members opposite, who really show they are not interested in providing decent and fair coverage to agricultural workers, that we are sitting down with the agricultural organizations to work out any difficulties they might face in administering the program, including those which might apply to under-aged workers who are coming in for a day or two. We are working on those problems. But if the Hon. Member is suggesting that we somehow change the basic objective and principle of the system, then frankly we do not intend to do that because we on this side of the House happen to believe in fairness and equity.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ontario.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, because of the noise on my left I could not tell who was going to be recognized.

Mr. Deans: That noise is called "Blenkarn".

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

MAISLIN COMPANY LAY-OFFS IN TORONTO

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I had a phone call today from a driver with the company which received $34 million from the federal Government. He is one of ten drivers, 10 per cent of the driving staff in the Toronto yard, who are being laid off as of the end of the month. Madam Speaker, these funds provided for Maislin were to maintain the employment of those people and make sure the company survived. Now, I find this situation disgraceful. Would the Minister look into it and find out what Maislin Transport is doing about employment in its Toronto yard?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will investigate the Hon. Member's allegation with respect to the individual in his constituency. However, I would like to remind him that, contrary to the statement made by one of his colleagues in a question to me earlier today, rather than 800 Canadians working for Maislin in Canada there are approximately 1,400 Canadians still working for Maislin. Obviously the company is doing its very best to try to recover, and I would hope that all Hon. Members on both sides of the House want to ensure the survival of this particular company.

REPORTED TRANSFER OF EQUIPMENT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I have also found out that equipment in Maislin's Toronto yard was taken from Quinn Transport in Boston, which is older equipment, continually breaking down. I am also advised that all the modern new equipment happens to be in the Buffalo yard. Will the Minister do a complete review, even though it is a public company, of what is going on in Maislin Transport?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will look into the allegations of the Hon. Member.

MEDICAL CARE

SCHEDULED IMPOSITION OF USER FEES IN ALBERTA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, last night the Alberta Health Minister gave the kiss of death to medicare in that Province by imposing a variety of user fees for emergency, out-patient and in-patient services, on top of recent hikes in premiums and the toleration of a 35.5 per cent extra billing rate. The Alberta Tories are openly inviting the insurance companies to move back into the insuring of basic health care costs, setting the stage for the destruction of medicare. This complements the damage the Ontario Tories are doing to medicare in this Province. Indeed, Madam Speaker, if this is the way that Peter Lougheed and Bill Davis show how truly Conservative they are, then let us all be thankful that they appear to be uninterested in federal politics. My question, Madam Speaker, is coming.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Presumably—

Mr. Young: Today. Just today.

Mr. Blaikie: —Davis and Lougheed will leave the federal attack on medicare to other Tory hopefuls.

Madam Speaker: We are all very disappointed; we all thought the question was coming.

Mr. Nowlan: So is the Resurrection.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, the question is this: when will we see some action on the process by which Canadians can get the long-awaited Canada Health Act, and get it in a form which will prevent what we are seeing happening in Alberta? Are we going to see some real draft legislation this spring, or are we going to have to wait until the fall? What kind of timetable does the Minister have in mind for dealing with this serious problem?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am very surprised at the question of the Hon. Member because the situation in Alberta, as we heard on the news this morning, is extremely serious and of very serious concern to all Canadians. There is an act respecting medicare, in case the Hon. Member does not remember, and this situation in which it seems user fees will be created for October 1 for all sorts of categories of patients, including acute care, emergency, out-patient, et cetera, may well be in breach of the existing agreement signed between Edmonton and Ottawa. I have therefore sent a Telex to the Alberta Minister of Health telling him of the possible breach of agreement and requesting very detailed information, especially as to the uniform terms and conditions under which that new measure will be applied. We will then have to make an assessment vis-à-vis the covenants signed and the conditions of accessibility in the three pieces of legislation covering medicare, and then it will have to go to cabinet for a decision.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I do not think there is any further assessment required. I think what the Alberta Government has done is clearly an attack on medicare. The Minister should bring in draft legislation and seek the support of the Canadian people for that legislation, which I am sure will be forthcoming.

INQUIRY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question. When will we have a Canada Health Act before us? Will she be meeting with the Health Ministers promptly in order to deal with this problem? I am not referring just to the health minister of Alberta but to all the Tory health ministers who are secretly jeopardizing the future of medicare. There is nothing but silence over there—silence on the Crow, silence on medicine, but plenty of noise when the oil companies are at stake.

• (1450)

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I must say that I am even more surprised. I thought the Member was governing for the present, not only for the future. He does not seem to remember that in New Brunswick there is a Conservative Government which tried much smaller user fees, and which had to backtrack after a year because the seniors, the women and the high risk groups in terms of health in that Province, did not let it happen. Of course the Liberals helped.

I just want to remind the Hon. Member that right now the same situation, if not worse, can be the case in Alberta. We intend to apply the Act in the way it stands now.

GARRISON DIVERSION

EFFECT ON NEGOTIATIONS OF FLAG BURNING INCIDENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week in the City of Winnipeg, Manitoba, an incident took place in front of the United States Consulate. There was a demonstration in which two members of the cabinet of the Manitoba Government participated, one of them being the Deputy Premier who reportedly was there on instructions of the Premier. During the demonstration the United States flag was burned. May I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to this rather appalling display of bad manners on the part of a minister of the Crown?

Given the genuine concern of many Manitobans that this deplorable act could have a detrimental effect on rather sensitive bilateral issues which exist between the United States and Canada, can he assure the House of Commons that the on-going negotiations, for instance with regard to the Garrison diversion project, will not be negatively affected by this most insulting behaviour of two ministers of the Crown of the Government of Manitoba?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would tell the Hon. Member that we had some discussions with the minister from Manitoba responsible for the Garrison and we intend to continue those discussions in the United States shortly. I would hope that the United States authorities are mature enough to overlook the kind of incident the Hon. Member has mentioned.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROFFER EXPLANATION TO UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs could further assure Members of the House and Canadians generally, by undertaking to explain to his United States counterpart that this abnormal behaviour on the part of two Canadian ministers of the Crown is not representative of the normal behaviour of Canadian governments at any level. After he has so communicated with his United States counterpart, could he inform the House of the results of that exchange?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate for me to raise this matter with the United States authorities by explaining the conduct of Canadian citizens who, despite the views of the Hon. Member, are still entitled to the right of assembly and freedom of speech. It would be quite inappropriate for me to go to the United States authorities and begin to explain a particular incident in Canada. If that were my responsibility, I fear there would be a great many occasions when I would have to explain why a particular group in the country took an action that was opposed to American policy.

I do not think the Hon. Member is basically interested in the health of relations between Canada and the United States. I think that the Canadian people share that view. They believe we ought to maintain a sound relationship with the United States. I believe that the Canadian people can judge the conduct of other citizens, including ministers of the Crown in Manitoba. Surely the people of Manitoba will have the opportunity to judge that conduct themselves.

It is certainly not my intention to go to Washington to explain the conduct of any Canadian citizen on any particular matter.

LEADERSHIP OF MANITOBA DELEGATION TO WASHINGTON

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs or for the Minister of the Environment. Will either Minister tell the House whether the Government of Canada holds the view that Canada's position in relation to the Garrison project might be jeopardized by the fact that the Manitoba delegation en route to Washington to discuss it, will be led by a minister of the Crown who was present at a demonstration at which the flag of the United States of America was burned?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is not my responsibility to express an opinion on that particular matter. The Hon. Member for Yellowhead is quite capable of forming his own opinion.

Canada has very important interests insofar as the Garrison is concerned, and we share those interests with the Province of Manitoba. We intend to press those interests. I have stated already that I do not believe that the United States Congress will determine its attitude on the Garrison on the basis of the incident to which the Hon. Member for Yellowhead referred.

POTENTIAL NEGATIVE REACTION OF UNITED STATES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment. Could he tell the House whether his Department is considering any sort of contingency plan to take account of a potentially negative reaction in the United States to the fact that the Manitoba delegation going there to discuss the Garrison will be led by a minister who was enthusiastically present at the burning of the United States flag?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, we continue to consider all options at all times. I doubt whether the United States Government would be put off by the silliness of the minister in Manitoba any more than by the perpetual silliness of the former Leader of the Opposition.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED OFFER TO PURCHASE NORTHUMBERLAND FERRIES LIMITED

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport may I direct my question to the Acting Minister, or to the Parliamentary Secretary.

Northumberland Ferries Limited is a private company which operates a car ferry service between Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. It is the only alternative car ferry service to that operated by CN Marine between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. May I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport if the Government is aware that Canadian National is making concerted efforts to take over Northumberland Ferries Limited or, failing that, to seize the contract that Northumberland Ferries Limited has with Transport Canada when that contract comes up for renewal in May, 1984?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that Transport Canada has received no representation from CN Marine to purchase Northumberland Ferries Limited. I think this is a local rumour that started out in the Member's constituency. I can assure him there is no validity to the rumour. Transport Canada has received no such representation. He is correct that the Northumberland contract will expire in May 1984, not 1983. This may have prompted the rumour.

• (1500)

Mr. McMillan: The rumour did not emanate from within my own riding, but from within the boardrooms of Northumberland Ferries which received an offer to purchase from CN Marine, an agency of CN.

PROPOSAL TO BUILD TWO FERRIES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary. In view of the fact that the federal-provincial P.E.I. Mainland Transportation study recommended the construction of two vessels for Northumberland Ferries in order to lengthen the season, to increase capacity and to improve efficiency in the Prince Edward Island-Nova Scotia ferry service, what is the response of the Department of Transport to that concrete proposal of Northumberland Ferries? Has the Government studied the recommendations of the commission to which I made reference? Has it received and studied the proposals from Northumberland Ferries Limited for the two vessels? If so, is the Government favourably predisposed toward the excellent proposal of that company?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in response to the preamble of the Hon. Member, I do not feel the Minister is privy to what goes on between the directors of one boardroom and the directors of another boardroom. It becomes the Minister's responsibility only when an official representation is made to the Minister of Transport. I stand by my first answer.

As to his second question, Transport Canada is interested in any proposal which will provide more efficient and safer service to Canadians using such service. Transport Canada is interested in lengthening the sailing season. It is interested in increasing capacity, but it has to measure such proposed projects against whether they are affordable to the taxpayers of Canada. Keeping those objectives and affordability aspects in mind, the Minister and Transport Canada officials are studying the proposal mentioned by the Hon. Member, but they have not come to a decision whether or not to accept the proposal for the two new vessels.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Monday, March 28, 1983 meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Also I want to be very clear about the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), who mentioned in his presentation that he had photocopies of the names taken from an original petition. That would not have been in order, but upon examination it was found that 16 pages containing approximately 450 original signatures were presented to the Table, and of course that is in order.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, on February 9, 1982, which is more than a year ago, I put on the Order Paper some statistical questions regarding our diplomatic staff in communist countries and the diplomatic staff of these countries here in Canada. On June 8, 1982, as reported at page 18213 of Hansard, the Parliamentary Secretary, the same Hon. Member who responded today, assured me in the House that the Government's silence was not deliberate on this issue and that he would look into the matter. I have had nothing but silence in the meantime, and that is a long time to wait.

I have no option at this stage but to put on the record my conclusion that this is a conspiracy of silence and that the Government is simply trying to cover up a scandalous situation concerning our diplomatic relations with communist countries. The information which I am seeking and the Government is denying to me as a Member of the Parliament of Canada is readily available to the communist countries concerned. The only people who are kept ignorant about this state of affairs are the Canadian people.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I wish to assure the Hon. Member that there is no effort to suppress information on my part. Whenever I am asked to look into a question on the Order Paper by a Member, I do so. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that in fact I sent off an inquiry. Obviously I have not obtained the answer yet. I regret that and will send off another inquiry.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I should like to raise a similar matter with the Parliamentary Secretary. Question No. 4,336 has been standing in my name since May 19, 1982. It concerns a Lieutenant Geoff Wright of Victoria who was discharged from the regular army and is not being admitted into the reserves for some reason that the Department seems unwilling to divulge. He has been assured that if he could get permission from a reserve commanding officer they would re-enlist him. He has done so but they still refuse to re-enlist him. I want to know why. Also I would like to know why this interminable delay in answering questions of that easy a nature.

Mr. Smith: I will pursue that matter on behalf of the Hon. Member. I do not know the answer offhand, but I will look into it.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I know the Parliamentary Secretary is trying to do a very good job, but I want to point out to him a gross oversight on his part. Despite the fact that he has repeatedly told the House he would be answering question No. 2,042, asked by myself on January 29, 1981, to date the question is still unanswered.

• (1510)

As we all know, this session may be coming to an end. Surely the Government does not want this dreadful blot on its record because the question simply asks what the total cost was of the Prime Minister's December, 1980-January, 1981 world tour and what percentage of the total cost of the trip will be paid by the Canadian taxpayer.

We know that the Prime Minister is fond of going on these capers. Surely the Government owes it to the people of Canada to tell them what the tab is that we are picking up for this type of tripping around the world.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, to refer to a hard-working trip undertaken by the Prime Minister on behalf of the Canadian people as a caper is really going too far. I find it difficult to accept the good faith of the Hon. Member when he couches his question in such terms as that.

My day would not have been complete had he not raised this question with me. I will certainly be happy to look into it, as I have before. I am somewhat puzzled as to the unusual delay in answering this question. I can assure him that I expect to see this question as Question No. 1 on the Order Paper in the event that there is a new session. But we may get an answer before then and I will certainly do my best.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, Bill C-143, which we are now debating, seeks to give the federal Government authority to borrow $19 billion. This legislation represents the largest borrowing Bill in the history of Canada. Never before has the Government been required to come to Parliament, cap in hand, for the authority to borrow such a massive amount of money. The reason it must do this is that never before has the Government been so broke or the Canadian economy so badly mismanaged.

In the time I have available I want to focus on the area of Government waste and extravagance to which I made reference a few moments ago during Oral Question Period. That area concerns the operations of Transport Canada, and Canadian National in particular. I want to focus on this area of spending and waste because it, more so than any other that I can think of, threatens what little fiscal responsibility remains in the Government of Canada. I am referring more generally to that labyrinth of sub-government commonly known as Crown corporations.

The current Government has allowed Crown corporations to become so plentiful and so large and so unaccountable that it was utterly incapable of providing the Opposition with even a ballpark estimate of the number of such agencies that actually exist at the federal level. Nowhere is the problem more acute than in my own backyard, the Atlantic Provinces, vis-à-vis CN Marine.

CN Marine is an independent profit centre of its parent company, Canadian National. In the Atlantic Provinces its primary function is to operate ferry services from one Province to another. In my Province of Prince Edward Island, CN Marine operates a car ferry service across the 14-mile Northumberland Strait, which separates the Island from New Brunswick.

The most famous of the Corporation's several ferries is the icebreaker Abegweit. When it was built in 1947, it was the world's largest and most powerful icebreaker of its kind. Since then she has earned a special place in the hearts and minds of Islanders, for she has served us well. On the worst days of our sometimes brutal winters, the tenacious "Abby", as she is affectionately called, has kept us from being totally cut off from the rest of Canada.

I mention the Abegweit because now, after 35 years since her maiden crossing, the Abegweit is being replaced by the Abegweit II, a spanking new vessel out of the Saint John Shipbuilding and Drydock. As the Auditor General made only too clear in his celebrated 1982 Report, the new Abegweit has come to symbolize Government ineptitude, waste and extravagance every bit as much as the old Abby symbolized dependability and service.

The facts are as follows. The Department of Transport paid some $25 million, as a partial payment toward the total cost of the vessel, to CN Marine ostensibly as an upfront advance payment to the builder for the stated purpose of achieving savings of $2.9 million in anticipated cost escalations. However, instead of advancing the $25 million to the shipbuilder immediately, as CN Marine was committed to do, the corporation stashed the funds in a special interest-bearing bank account for a time. The interest earned on the money deposited accumulated to an amount in excess of $4.8 million. That most of the money was eventually applied to the capital cost of the vessel does not mitigate one iota the fact that CN Marine's actions were utterly irresponsible and self-serving.

In effect, CN Marine used public funds to amass hundreds of thousands of dollars to which it was not entitled through a sleight-of-hand that flew in the face of every accepted Government accounting practice, even by the lax standards of this incompetent Government. To boot, CN Marine paid the shipbuilder $163,000 to consent to the arrangement. Some may call that an inducement or moral suasion, but I call it an outright bribe.

As if the situation were not bad enough, which it clearly is, CN Marine and CN have stonewalled all efforts by the Government's Auditor General to obtain information about the funding of the Abegweit. The Auditor General has determined that CN Marine's handling of the cash advance from the Department of Transport, though done ostensibly in the name of frugality and of saving the Government money, realized not one cent of savings on the total cost of the vessel in question.

Moreover, the Auditor General has seriously questioned the ethics of an agency of the Crown paying $163,000 to a shipbuilder from a special trust account that it was not entitled to set up in the first place.

• (1520)

The point is that, while the Abegweit incident may have little effect in the context of the Government's $90 billion budget, such practices could cause the Government significant problems if all of the hundreds of other Crown corporations conducted their affairs in the same manner. And many of them do so. A former senior Government auditor, now retired, whom I trust implicitly, told me in confidence—in the sense that I cannot attribute his remarks to him personally—that this kind of practice is commonplace. According to him, cases of money being obtained in advance from Government Departments ostensibly to make an immediate payment toward the total cost of a project, and then stashing the funds in a special trust account to earn interest for God knows who, are not at all rare. In many cases, according to this auditor, interest of that kind has been allowed to accumulate in special trust funds, ending up in the pockets of people who have no entitlement whatever to that money. This money belongs to the taxpayers of Canada, so it should not be used in such a way. But when that kind of thing occurs, no one is the wiser. Certainly the Government does not know about it or, if it does, it does not care. The taxpayer is bilked millions of dollars each year through shoddy practices of that kind.

Crown corporations are, in effect, chunks of Government placed at arm's length from Parliament and Canada in a way that makes it virtually impossible for the elected representatives of the people to scrutinize their spending or operations. They have become empires unto themselves, controlling hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars with only the skimpiest of accountability to the Government and to the Parliament of Canada. As the CN Marine example demonstrates, the scope of Crown corporations for circumventing acceptable Government accounting procedures is almost boundless, as is their capacity to stonewall Government auditors once the corporations put their minds to it. And, ultimately, the taxpayers, whom those agencies are thereoretically supposed to serve, end up paying the price.

The irony is that, having demonstrated its inability to manage effectively the taxpayers' money in connection with current Crown assets, CN Marine has set its sights on buying Northumberland Ferries Limited, a privately-owned company on Prince Edward Island that provides the only alternative ferry service to CN Marine's between the Island and the Mainland. That company was established in 1939 and operates four car ferries between Wood Islands, Prince Edward Island, and Caribou, Nova Scotia. Experts in the field consider the quality of its management exemplary, especially when contrasted to that of CN Marine. Yet here we have a Crown agency, CN Marine, making concerted efforts to buy out its competitor or, failing that, to seize its contract with the federal Department of Transport to operate the Prince Edward Island-Nova Scotia ferry service when that contract comes up for renewal in May, 1984.

Such a monopoly of car ferry service for CN Marine on the Island would be nothing less than catastrophic. It would be a tragedy for the Government, for CN Marine itself, and certainly for the people served by the car ferries in question. It would give the Crown corporation a stranglehold on the Province of Prince Edward Island, placing the company in a position to hike rates, slash services and dictate other conditions of operation without fear of restraint by market forces that only healthy competition can provide.

Moreover, a monopoly of that kind would render our Province terribly vulnerable in the event of labour strife, within CN. If such a monopoly had prevailed for example in the summer of 1973, when a Canada-wide CN strike shut down the Prince Edward Island-New Brunswick car ferry service, the consequences would have been disastrous for the local economy. Even as it was, despite the alternative service available from the Northumberland Ferries Ltd. at the time, when the CN Marine strike crippled the car ferry service operated by it between P.E.I. and New Brunswick, the Island suffered great losses, especially in the area of tourism. Think, sir, what would have happened had we been totally cut off from the Mainland, as would have been the case had CN Marine operated the Northumberland ferries Ltd during the strike.

If I seem hard on CN, it is because I intend to be. I respect Crown corporations and especially the employees of CN. But what I do not respect is the fact that the corporate elite of Canadian National, operating from Montreal, have generally given Prince Edward Island and the Atlantic region as a whole a bad shake.

Prince Edward Island entered Confederation in 1873 largely to save its railway. P.E.I. came in because its railway was floundering and the Province thought that its joining Confederation would be the best avenue for saving the railway in perpetuity. Indeed, unlike any other Province that I know of, P.E.I. enjoys a constitutional commitment, written right into the Constitution of Canada, by the federal Government to provide a continuous link with the rest of the country by rail. Yet CN has chipped away at the Island railway with such persistence that in recent years we have found ourselves in the position of having practically nothing left worth saving. We have lost direct passenger service. We have lost important freight rail lines. We have lost any real on the spot capacity to maintain and repair rail cars and rail lines. We have lost the heart of the Carload Centre, the central operation for the administration of freight to, from and within the Province. We have lost CN Express services everywhere on the Island except Charlottetown. Finally, and most recently, the car ferry service has been drastically reduced, and we face the possibility of a monopoly which would altogether threaten the whole ferry system.

In Prince Edward Island, where highways cannot provide an alternative to rail for commercial purposes because the Island lacks the rockbed required to sustain heavy road traffic, we will soon be bereft of any transportation system worthy of the description. Clearly, CN has written us off and the federal Government is allowing Canadian National to do so. The federal Government is a ready accomplice in this scheme to strip the Island of what little remains of its railway system.

Established by the Government to forge a country out of a vast and thinly populated land, CN has long since, in my view, given up its public service mandate everywhere in the country—not just in P.E.I.—in favour of amassing huge profits, no matter what the cost to the public interest. In fact, in many parts of Canada, Canadian National is no longer interested in operating as a railway company, so preoccupied and obsessed is it with turning a fast buck in glamour industries such as gas and oil, in which it is investing heavily at the expense of traditional operations.

The recent formation of CN Exploration, Inc., an oil and gas subsidiary that has become an active participant in resource development out West, particularly in Saskatchewan, demonstrates where P.E.I. stands in the pecking order of Canadian National. My seatmate in the House of Commons, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), said it perfectly:

> Taxpayers' money funnelled into (CN) has made it one of the biggest transportation companies in Canada. Yet CN is forgetting its primary responsibility and is overspending and investing taxpayers' money in the oil industry.

Canadian National, like so many other Crown corporations, has become a monster virtually beyond the control of either the Government, of which it is nominally a part, or of Parliament, let alone the people of Canada which these corporations are supposed to serve. It is bad enough that those conglomerates are spending hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars without proper accountability, but many are now assuming what I can only describe as a life of their own, far removed from the purposes for which they were established in the first place.

Let me conclude by saying that, if someone in Parliament or someone in the public, or some accountant within the Government, wants to get a grip on uncontrolled Government spending, he need look no further than Canadian National's books for a place to begin. This is one Member of Parliament who would relish the opportunity to help him turn the first page.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-143, and I would like this afternoon to take a somewhat different perspective on this Bill. We all know that $19 billion is an almost incomprehensible amount of money for most of us, and certainly for most Canadians, to grasp. We certainly are most concerned that this money will be spent productively and for types of expenditure that are going to help with the recovery of Canada's economy.

We would like to know, as my colleagues have already said, how this money will be used. We do not feel that the Government has given us a clear statement on this question. We would like a more specific breakdown of how this tremendous amount of money, which is to be borrowed at very high interest rates, will be spent, and in what specific areas.

I would assume, in this time of very high unemployment, that a good proportion of this amount of money will be spent for job creation. It is therefore to this particular area of expenditure that I would like to address my remarks this afternoon.

Furthermore, on this whole question of unemployment and measures to counteract unemployment, to create jobs and to get our economy rolling again, we have been asked again and again by the Government—let us see if they are serious or not—to make positive suggestions rather than just to criticize. So this afternoon this is what I propose to do.

We have over two million unemployed. There are many hidden unemployed people who are not shown in our statistics, such as the women in the home who have not been able to get into the work force. There are many who have been laid off through attrition are not registered on Unemployment Insurance rolls. There are 600,000 young people coming out of school. Many people have been on welfare for some time and others have just given up looking for work. The Government's token effort to deal with this situation is to put money into short-term make-work projects. They are spending millions of dollars in this area. There are not enough jobs created. But also these are not the kinds of projects that are making some impact on the whole question of how to use human resources more productively. Nor do they create permanent kinds of community services and community enterprises.

Today I would like to talk about an alternative employment proposal for which we would like to see money requested by this borrowing Bill C-143. I would like to encourage unemployed people and many workers who are facing lay-offs also to consider worker co-operatives, enterprises which are owned and operated by workers themselves. Third sector co-operative enterprises have not been encouraged in Canada. We feel that they should be considered for job creation. Some of the $19 billion that the Government is asking us to authorize by this Bill could certainly be spent on permanent kind of job creation that is working very well in certain countries in Europe.

In European countries, workers' co-ops are flourishing. Some of them are community kinds of co-operatives and self-help services. Others are building co-operatives to help extend housing. Many workers' co-ops are very sophisticated high-tech industries which include a good deal of research and development into new technologies.

I propose that the Government allocate some of the funds to be borrowed under Bill C-143 for research and also initial development of workers' co-operatives, as an alternative third sector way of helping to create jobs and deal with unemployment.

During this period of high unemployment, people are searching for alternatives that will use their skills and experience. People who have worked all of their lives, who have so much experience and capability, are beginning to feel very depressed because they have been chronically unemployed now many months. These people are sitting at home doing nothing while they have tremendous experience and capabilities that should be put to work.

One alternative employment strategy which has been given little attention in Canada is the development of these workers' co-ops. Workers' co-operatives may be small, community-based services or large industrial enterprises. The common characteristic, however, is that workers own the enterprise collectively and they all invest their labour in the enterprise. They hire a manager or manage their effort collectively. They have a democratic say in all policy decisions.

This past fall, Mr. Speaker, I joined with over 20 co-operators from across Canada to study workers' co-operatives in Britain, France and Spain. I would like to take the time to put some of our findings on the record because I think it is very relevant to Canada. We visit small community co-ops, particularly in Britain, such as print shops, restaurants that were run co-operatively by the workers, bicycle repair shops, adult education centres and feminist co-ops, as well as toured older, larger industrial co-ops, some of which have been in existence for 30, or more years. They were producing shoes, chemicals, glassworks and even Triumph motorcycles. These were large enterprises that had been owned and operated by workers for many years. In most communities there also were building co-ops that use the skills of carpenters and tradespeople who were formerly unemployed to produce housing and also to undertake repairs and renovations, something which is very much needed in every community in Canada.

In England Co-operative Development Agencies in local municipalities receive Government grants to assist workers to form co-operatives, as well as to conduct feasibility studies and to learn successful business techniques. In Wales, a particularly interesting experiment was just beginning. Unemployment in that country, is very high since many of the major industries such as the coal mines have closed down. There was a desperate situation in which trade unions also were very much involved. The Wales Trade Union Council is assisting in promoting workers' co-ops, and these in turn become a trade union affiliate. So it is a co-operative effort between co-operators and trade unionists who are equally concerned with the plight of workers as well as developing a viable industry.

In France we found very modern, sophisticated, co-ops that were working successfully in the high technology field. But of major interest to co-operators was the co-operative developments in the Mondragon region of northern Spain, the Basque area of Spain. In that area there are 80 industrial workers' co-ops. They produce a very wide range of industrial products such as furniture, bicycles, auto parts, tools and computers, some of which are exported to Canada. These co-ops are supported by a major co-operative bank. Our credit unions in Canada should be helping in this way. They have a technical co-op college to train young people. The young people attend technical school for half a day and work in co-op factories the other half. Thus they are able to pay their own fees and expenses.

There is a very significant research and development component which helps to develop high technology products for export. To assist their network of co-operatives, they have co-op insurance programs, and welfare services are available to all co-op members. There are child care centres so that workers, women in particular, are able to have an equal chance of employment. There are producer and consumer co-ops which complement each other. These co-operatives form a network that provides jobs for almost 22,000 workers in the Mondragon community. They are worker owners.

That there have been no business failures in workers' co-operatives since 1956 at which time they were started by Catholic priests to encourage more self-help development in the Basque area. There have been no failures in over 100 industrial firms during that period.

During a time of very high unemployment in Spain, where the recession is as bad if not worse than in Canada, in the Mondragon area where the workers' co-operatives are the base of activity, there has been less than 1 per cent unemployment. Their last resort is unemployment insurance. They try to find jobs for their workers. If workers are unemployed in one co-op they transfer them to sister or brother co-ops.

Co-op workers who own their own businesses have a strong commitment to their job. Studies bear this out. They have a strong commitment to the total operation. They do not work for someone else. They work for themselves. They work together for a productive and successful operation. In successful worker co-ops, profits are re-invested in the business. Workers do not take their profits home in their pockets right away. However, when they retire many of them have a considerable equity in the business.

Workers often contribute sweat equity labour during the initial stages of business development. Modern marketing and business practices are essential components of successful worker co-ops. Union membership provides a wider affiliation and mutual help between different co-operative endeavours, as well as ensures good working conditions and a concern with national and international issues affecting working people.

Workers' co-operatives are not a solution for replacing obsolete or unsuccessful businesses. We were warned about this over and over again. Like any private business or state-operated business, co-ops have to be run efficiently with adequate initial capital, and sound management. Friendly Government legislation is needed to assist co-ops in the same way as it does other small businesses.

Research studies of workers' co-ops have concluded that industrial democracy results in higher productivity than in either private or public-owned enterprises. If they are established on a sound basis, co-operatives can be a most successful and fulfilling experience for the worker members. We found tremendous enthusiasm among workers. We found that an investment or labour effort far beyond usual working hours was common in most of these co-op developments.

We would not oppose Bill C-143 quite as strenuously if we were sure that the Government would put some of the billions of dollars which it intends to borrow into developments that would help to solve some of our industrial problems and put Canadians back to work. I am seriously presenting workers' co-operatives as one alternative that I hope the Government and Opposition Parties will look into.

What can the federal Government do to promote additional successful co-operative enterprises? First, it should look at the model developed in the co-operative housing field. The experience there is very relevant. It would not appear to require massive Government expenditures. A revolving fund of capital could be used for start-up funds which could be recycled as the enterprise becomes viable. That would be one consideration.

Unlike the make-work projects we now have in our communities, which are very debilitating, workers' co-ops would not be short-term job creation. At present people are not being trained, getting into permanent jobs and becoming productive. An investment in workers' co-ops would be much more productive. It would not be a handout or welfare program, but an investment in developing human resources and viable enterprises.

There would need to be regional co-op resource centres in Canada, such as there are in England. Housing co-ops in Canada also have them. Training resources would be available to provide advice, research and public education. That would be a first step. Help with feasibility studies also would be needed. Regional co-op resource centres should be developed in co-operation with the labour union movement as well as with Government. Otherwise there would be a competitive situation. As in Wales, mutual help between union members would be the ideal.

Start-up funds would be most important to assist co-operative enterprises. In England workers often used their redundancy pay as their initial investment in co-op ownership. A pool of capital should be available to provide start-up funds and help initiate feasibility studies.

In most new co-operative ventures there is a period of development when it is not yet a viable business with a product that brings in income for wages. It would make sense, at least during the initial period, if co-op workers could continue receiving Unemployment Insurance benefits, as is done now in some job-creation programs. This would build toward a permanent salary from a viable co-op enterprise.

There should be Government support for co-operative enterprises, just as there is for small business. We learned that it is important that there also be a co-operative banking system which would provide favourable loan arrangements. Co-ops could help each other through a credit union type of membership. Eventually networks of workers' co-ops would be developed. There would be national and regional support organizations such as have developed in the co-op housing field.

Through this Bill the Government is asking for blanket approval to borrow $19 billion. This is a typical Liberal tactic. We would like to know on what this money will be spent. Canadians would also like to know. We would like to see some of it spent on productive investment in workers' co-operatives in order to assist improvement in our economy and put workers back to work. Workers want to contribute as productive human beings. This would be a practical investment rather than a handout. Canadians have a right to know where the moneys borrowed under this Bill will be spent. Because of our huge debt load, they want every cent spent wisely and productively to rebuild our economy. During this time of very tragic high unemployment, I can think of no wiser investment, than to invest in the development of viable, self-reliant co-operative enterprises which are owned and operated by workers themselves, which will employ essential expertise, and which will produce Canadian goods and services both for domestic use and also for export.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I was fascinated by the remarks of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) representing the New Democratic Party, and her proposal that some of the $19 billion of increased indebtedness, the borrowing Bill which we are now debating, Bill C-143, be used to fund workers' co-operatives. It is a fascinating theory. It is amazing that the New Democratic Party can always import ideas which have been rejected somewhere else, and then try to make them work here. If the Hon. Member would like to see how well those workers' co-operatives work, she should go to those countries where it has taken its purest form, and that is, behind the Iron Curtain. If she would take a look at the East Bloc countries she would see how well those workers' co-operatives function. As a matter of fact, before those co-operatives were in place, the Soviet Union was a food-exporting nation, and it was not long after the co-operatives were instituted in that country that the Soviet Union became consistently a food-importing nation. It is always crop failure or it is always the weather that does it to them, but somehow the workers' co-operatives have never been at fault.

The Hon. Member should visit East Germany and see the lineups of citizens of that country waiting to get into a consumers' store, wanting to buy consumer goods. At a shoe store, for example, the lineups go out on to the street when a new shipment of shoes comes into that store because they know that a month later there will be none, because the co-operative system, you see, works so well, according to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East. There is an absolute paucity, a barrenness of consumer products in these countries, and the consumer products of the West are used as currency in the East Bloc countries where those workers' co-operatives work so well.

She should also take a look at the People's Republic of China where, for the past 25 years or 30 years, the workers' co-operatives have been functioning so well that they are now being rejected and they are turning to what was called in the Soviet Union in 1927, "The new economic policy". Because the whole concept of workers' co-operatives worked so well, Mr. Speaker, they were running into such consumer goods shortages that they had to give the small-businessman a break. So they introduced the new economic policy. They called those short-term business people "NEP-men". Now, Mr. Speaker, in Mainland China, they have to do the same thing because there is continual shortages of goods in that country. They have to introduce somewhat of a market system there. The Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party now wants to take an idea which has failed all over the world, has been rejected all over the world, and wants to impose it on the Canadian people. That is the kind of service the NDP wants to perform.

We are now in the last day of debate regarding the borrowing authority, Mr. Speaker. We are in the last hours of this debate. But while we may be completing debate on it, the effects of this Bill are going to go on literally for decades, because, as other Hon. Members and myself have said continuously throughout this debate, we will be paying for this literally for generations. We, sitting here in this House, are not going to pay this bill. It will be our children's children who will pay this bill. That is the inequity that this system is forcing on us.

I would like to mention the latest development, Mr. Speaker. The Government has known this is the last day of debate and that within hours this House will approve the further indebtedness of the Government to the tune of $19 billion. The Government knows it will be able to pay its bills after Thursday, or on Thursday. It knows that it is going to happen, yet the Government has sent out notices to the RCMP headquarters all over Canada saying that the RCMP officers are not going to be paid Thursday, obviously because the Government has no money, so it says. That, Mr. Speaker, is about as sleazy a trick as the Government can impose on the RCMP force. These are people who are working for us every day, doing their best to serve the Canadian people. The Government knows it will be able to pay them.

Mr. Thacker: It imposed time allocation on us.

Mr. Friesen: As the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) said, we are under time allocation because the Government has imposed that on us. It knows it is going to get this Bill passed today. Yet it has gone out with this ruse across Canada telling the RCMP that they are not going to be paid on Thursday. That is sleazy, Mr. Speaker. There is no other word for it but "sleazy".

What we are seeing here, as other Hon. Members have said, is the pattern of the Government. The pattern over the past 20 years has been to spend all of the cashflow which comes in during years of prosperity, to spend it as it comes in, and then, during years of hard times, to borrow. I suspect many of us have forgotten some of the spending programs which were carried on by this Government during times of prosperity. It occurs to me, first of all, how this runs counter to the pattern of behaviour of the citizens of Canada themselves. I believe you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that Canadian citizens, on a per capita basis, have more money in savings accounts than the citizens of any other industrialized nation. Canadians, by nature, by history and by tradition are savers. They put their money into accounts. They are not the kind of spenders which the Government itself is.

It seems to me it is because of the frontier pioneering education which Canadians over the years experienced that they have become a nation of savers. They realized out on the frontier, on the old homestead, that whereas there might be a good crop this year, even a bumper crop, next year there could be a famine, a drought, an early frost, late spring rains, a total crop failure, a grasshopper infestation, or rust. Just because there is a good crop this year does not mean that next year there will be that kind of surplus. So over the years the Canadian frontiersmen, the Canadian homesteaders, the farmers, learned to lay by during the years of prosperity so that when the years of famine came there would be something to tide them over. That is the Canadian experience which is just the opposite of that of the Government. Whereas the Government ought to lead the way and set the example, in Canada it is the people who set the example, which the Government refuses to follow. We have a Government which, in years of prosperity, when the tax dollars are flowing, spends money like a drunken sailor—and I should not impute that to sailors.

Ten or 15 years ago, the Government was encouraging the young people of Canada to tour Canada, "Forget about the cost. The Government will provide hostels. The Government will provide bus service. The Government will look after you. If you want to leave home, go to a local welfare centre wherever you happen to hit town. There will be a cheque waiting for you there." In terms of social costs, we must stop and wonder how many families the Government helped to break up because it was so easy for a kid of 12, 14, 16 years of age to leave home, strike out on the road, pick up easy money at the welfare office and forget about his relationship with his parents.

We must not forget also that great noble experiment in Toronto 15 years ago called Rochdale. That community college was a sump hole of Government funds through, I believe, CMHC. It became a byword, not only of Government financial failure but of social irresponsibility. Young people were making a garrison out of that place. It was so tough in there that the police were afraid to go in. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) must remember those days. Those young people were getting unlimited funds, and their major skill was not in attending classes and taking a disciplined course of study because that was a college where you just sat and grooved. Do your own thing. You are not going to have any stricture or structure imposed on you because that would be confining and you would warp the personalities of these young people. You have to do your own thing in order that the personality blossoms. Well, it blossomed so much that those poor young people became society's rejects. Their major skill was not passing courses; it was filling out application forms for more money. That is the way the Government was spending money in those days, instead of setting some of it aside so when hard times came we would have some money in reserve. That seems to me to run counter to our traditions and history.

It also seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that deficit spending in the guise of helping the unemployed has also been an abysmal failure. You would think that if deficit spending to help the unemployment problem worked, we would now be drunk with success because the deficit has certainly been going up. I just want to read some statistics on how it has been going up. The spending forecast of November, 1981 was for $75,450 million. The deficit would be $10,490 million. By June of 1982, seven months later, the spending estimate had gone up by almost $3 billion to $78,100 million, and the deficit was now estimated at $19,550 million. By October, five months later, the spending estimate was $79,210 million, and the expected deficit was $23,550 million. In February, 1983, four months later, the spending estimate was $80,400 million and the expected deficit was $27,200 million. So from November, 1981, to February, 1983, a matter of 15 months, the spending estimate rose from $75,450 million to $80,400 million, $5 million more, and the estimated deficit rose from $10,490 million to $27,200 million, almost three times as much in a matter of 15 months.

I have two points, Mr. Speaker. The Government has done a miserable job of planning and estimating. It is just out of control. Secondly, if deficit spending were to be the solution for unemployment, we would have had all of our problems solved in the last 15 months because of the ballooning deficits we have before us. But then I have before me a news release from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) dated March 28, 1980. He talks about the Employment Tax Credit Program and he says:

> "This will be a temporary measure designed to ensure that an effective job creation program continues while an employment strategy is being prepared for early announcement in the House of Commons," Mr. Axworthy said.

He went on to say:

> After a slow start the program developed quickly. It is estimated that, by the end of March, more than 46,000 agreements will have been signed with employers—agreements providing for the creation of more than 67,000 jobs.

The simple question, Mr. Speaker, is: where are they? Where is the massive success that the Minister predicted just two years ago to the day? He said this would be an interim measure, a temporary measure while employment strategy is being prepared for early announcement in the House of Commons. That was two years ago and the announcement has not been made yet. Was it the NEED program, which was announced last fall and which is another abysmal failure? I guess, Mr. Speaker, the truism is that there is nothing so sure about history but that we do not learn from history. It is time for the Government to reassess its approach. Spending simply is not going to do it. It had better get in tune with the business community of this country to make sure they have some confidence in the Government. Rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that when an announcement is made by this Government which the business community is waiting for, the second response of the business community is going to be: when are they going to change it? The over-riding attitude in the business community is that you cannot be sure any policies announced by this Government will be in place for any length of time. There is insecurity in the business community. They cannot plan, they cannot predict what is going to happen. They do not know whether the Government is a friend.

I trust that when the Government announces the date of the new budget, Mr. Speaker, and as they prepare this budget, they will not only bring some kind of financial relief but will begin to foster an air of stability and trust in the country so that the business community can do the kind of thing it needs to do if the Government expects it to invest the kinds of dollars it wants to. No businessman is going to invest dollars if he is afraid that he will lose them because of the insecure climate which has been promulgated by this Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway).

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, it is not appropriate at this juncture to either make comments or ask questions of the Member who has just spoken?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Yes, that is quite in order. The Hon. Member wants to put a question?

Mr. Kristiansen: Rather a comment, but if the Member chooses to take it as a question I would be quite agreeable to hearing his reflections on the comments I make.

I was interested in the Hon. Member's opening remarks in which he so obviously misunderstood the basic thrust of what the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) was saying. I find it difficult to believe that the Member who said, "We must learn the lessons of history", which were almost his concluding remarks, should somehow fail to understand the difference in the concept of workers' co-operatives outlined in some complexity and detail by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East in her remarks which immediately preceded his. He fails to understand that that is different from the state-operated approach, the history of which in many parts of the world she decried. She suggested that worker co-operatives were a better solution to harnessing both individual initiative and the willingness of people to work co-operatively together with Government and the private sector in order to achieve economic growth. That is what she was suggesting. Nothing that I heard in her remarks could conceivably be misconstrued and, I am sure unintentionally, misinterpreted in the manner in which the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) did a few moments ago.

• (1610)

If the Hon. Member did not deliberately misconstrue them—and I do not think that is what he did—then I can only say that his comments are a product of that peculiar kind of Conservative mind that seems to follow a single track. It does not open itself and its thinking to other ways of organizing economic structures that have been experimented with both in the East and the West, for almost 50 years.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it appears that the Hon. Member's mind is like a razor blade—sometimes sharp, sometimes dull, but inevitably narrow. That makes it a typically Conservative mind, but I hope the Hon. Member will learn to widen his.

Mr. Friesen: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that obviously the Hon. Member has been cut by it.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I hold a copy of Bill C-143 in my hand. I maintain that this is more than an innocuous piece of paper; it is actually a mortgage document. It mortgages the future of the young people of this country for years and years, and probably for their children as well. Clause 2(4) reads as follows:

> For greater certainty, any amount borrowed under this section may be borrowed in a currency other than that of Canada and may be repaid in the currency in which it was borrowed.

That adds insult to injury, Mr. Speaker. What is going to happen when the time comes to pay for this is that the Canadian dollar will probably have slipped. The money will be borrowed from countries which base their currency on the U.S. dollar, so we will be paying back the billions borrowed, plus interest, plus the exchange. It is even worse than it looks on the surface. Now, we all realize that income tax is the major method of extracting revenue from the Canadian people and that the squeeze is on.

My untimely departure from the House last week unfortunately prevented me from making several key points about the nature of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act and the profound effect it is having upon farmers in this country. I want to bring that up in this debate because one of the reasons we are borrowing money is that the Government's planning is so inept that not only has it had to squeeze farmers but it is going to have to mortgage their children's future as well.

As I recall, prior to exposing the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) for what he was—and in my opinion still is—I was about to note the legal ramifications of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. As I noted, it breaks farmers into three groups—full-time, part-time and hobby farmers. Revenue Canada has lately been reclassifying farmers for tax purposes from full-time to part-time and from part-time to the hobby classification. Our present definitions of these categories stem largely from the Muldowan v. The Queen case which reached the Supreme Court in 1977.

In Muldowan v. The Queen, the original Section of the Act was described by Mr. Justice Dickson as awkwardly worded and intractable. He pointed out some interesting anomalies in Section 31. The first question addressed by Justice Dickson was whether farming could constitute a source of income in a year in which a loss was suffered. He pointed out that the Section came into play only when the taxpayer had had a farming loss in the year. "That being so," he said, "it may seem strange that the Section should speak of farming as the taxpayer's chief source of income for the taxation year . . . " In other words, how can you talk about using income to determine whether a farmer is a full-time, part-time, or hobby farmer when all three, under this Section, would be claiming losses.

The March 8 edition of the "Canadian Taxpayer" deals with this case in a very lucid manner. In an article entitled, "Why Not Kill Section 31?", this publication notes that Mr. Justice Dickson ruled that farming could constitute a source of income in a year when there was a loss as long as there was a reasonable expectation of profit. This reasonable expectation of profit has become a very important point in the classification of farmers under Section 31.

The second issue considered by Mr. Justice Dickson was the legal meaning of the word "combination" in the phrase "combination of farming and some other source". According to Section 31, a full-time farmer can have a part-time job off the farm and still retain his full-time status, and similarly a part-time farmer can have an off-farm job without being reclassified as a hobby farmer. Justice Dickson clarified these classifications as best he could. In his ruling he introduced the following classifications.

First, a taxpayer for whom farming may reasonably be expected to provide the bulk of income for his livelihood is free of the limitation of Section 13(1)—this is now Section 31 of the Act—in those years in which he sustained a farming loss.

The second classification is that of the taxpayer who does not look to farming, or to farming and some subordinate source of income for his livelihood, but carries on farming as a sideline business. Such a taxpayer is entitled to the deductions spelled out in Section 13(1) in respect of farm losses, that is, $5,000 per year.

The third classification is that of the taxpayer who does not look to farming, or to farming and some subordinate source of income for his livelihood, and who carries on some farming activities as a hobby. This is the so-called hobby farmer. The losses sustained by such a taxpayer on his non-business are not deductible in any amount.

These classifications raise the question of whether we in fact need Section 31 at all. Once again, the "Canadian Taxpayer" deals with this matter in a very logical manner. The article says:

> The judgment, however, gives rise to the question of whether there is any need or justification for keeping the Section in the Act at all.
>
> It does not apply to the first or third of His Lordship's classes of farmers. Taxpayers in the first class can claim their total losses like any other business people, while those in the third class cannot claim any deduction at all, because the Act specifically prohibits deduction of personal or living expenses.
> That leaves the second class, but who is in it? Anyone who farms with a reasonable expectation of profit is 'farming', as the courts have confirmed. Where, then is the justification for restricting the loss such a person may claim as a deduction? In the Court of Appeal in the Muldowan case, Mr. Justice Pratte said that because of the Section "A limit is placed on the deductibility of commercial farming losses where farming is carried on as a subordinate activity, even though no such limit appears to have been placed on the deductibility of other types of subordinate commercial loss." Obviously the provision can be extremely unfair to some taxpayers.

As long ago as 1976 the Joint Committee of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the Canadian Bar Association recommended to the then Minister of Revenue and the then Minister of Finance that Section 31 be repealed. The Government has failed to act on that advice. Instead, it has continued to tax farmers on a basis that is patently unfair and discriminatory. We must question the motives of the Government for keeping this Section of the Income Tax Act in existence.

The only rational explanation for the retention of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act is that it is a money-maker for the Government. It is a tax grab by a Government that is desperately trying to cover a mounting debt. Never mind that farmers are being forced into bankruptcy by this unfair rule. Never mind that no other commercial venture is subject to similar regulations. The Government does not care. Section 31 brings in revenue, and that is all that matters to a Government which is both financially and morally bankrupt.

I should like to refer to an editorial which appeared on March 15 in the Cariboo Observer, a prominent paper in my riding. It commented upon Section 31 under the heading, "Greedy Attacks". It reads:

> Ranchers and farmers in the Cariboo are feeling the heat from relentless attacks by our provincial and federal Governments. The undisputed backbone of our nation, ranchers and farmers brought this wilderness out of the dark ages and into the twentieth century mainstream almost singlehandedly. It is tragic, under present economic conditions, that those ranchers and farmers trying to make ends meet, now find that that very activity which makes their operations viable is used against them by income tax investigators.
> These internal revenue "revenooers"—call them what you want—are not interested in illicit whiskey distillers. They are out after tamer game: respectable, responsible, hard-working people trying to build a future with sweat, sacrifice and scarce dollars.
>
> This is free enterprise? This is the land of endless opportunity?
>
> No way. This is pure greed, displayed for all to see by a grasping group of civil servants, punishing people for trying harder.
> There are choice words for this type of injustice. We can't print them.

One such person in my riding has been assessed four years of back taxes, amounting to $28,184.07, because he was classified as a part-time farmer. The man has put his heart and soul into his ranch since 1972 when he inherited it from his father. This individual is currently living with his wife and three young children on his land in the basement of an unfinished house. He cannot afford to finish the house. It currently does not even have running water. Yet the Department of National Revenue has determined that this man owes them $28,184. Where was the Minister of Agriculture, that great defender of the Canadian farmer, when my constituent was assessed these back taxes? The Minister of Agriculture wrote to me on this case when I referred to him for help. This is what he wrote:

> Yours is one of a number of representations I have received on this issue, and I thank you for bringing to my attention these examples of the impact of present tax law.

That is the help we received from the Minister of Agriculture. I should have been named and removed from the House of Commons last week. However, I should have been named for understating the case against the Minister of Agriculture; that is why I should have been thrown out. The Minister says that the world is one big roast beef; the Minister is one big ham.

Mr. Kempling: That is not unparliamentary.

Mr. Greenaway: That is not unparliamentary, but it is true. The $19 billion for which the Government is asking in Bill C-143 is just one more example of its desperate circumstances. The Government argues that it needs to borrow this money to make Unemployment Insurance benefits, for job creation and other such programs. This is only partially true. The Government is expected to spend $18.6 billion in interest in 1983-84 on past borrowings. I do not think it is fair that a family, living in the basement of a half-built home with no running water, should be expected to shoulder the burden of the Government's lack of financial responsibility. I do not think that his or anyone's children should be expected to pay interest on the billions of dollars which this incompetent Government has borrowed and is borrowing. Our children are being mortgaged into bankruptcy.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on third reading of Bill C-143. In effect, the Government has come before us and asked for approval to borrow $19 billion—$5 billion for this year and $14 billion for next year.

I should like to turn to the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on February 17, 1983, wherein he said that upon his appointment as Minister of Finance one of his basic tenets would be to inform the Canadian people fully of the economic situation as he saw it. He said that he had done this repeatedly and consistently since his appointment as Minister of Finance and that he would continue to do it in the future.

The Government's deficit in the coming year may be as high as $30 billion, yet we were told by officials in the Department of Finance—and this perhaps goes back one year—that they could judge six months ahead what would be the state of the economy and the borrowing requirements of the Government. Now we have a Government which comes before us almost weekly and tells us how much more it needs to borrow.

A couple of years back, in November 1981, the Government forecast a deficit of $10.4 billion. At that time we had real economic growth in the economy of 2.2 per cent. In June 1982, the deficit was $19.5 billion, with a real economic growth of minus 2 per cent. In October 1982, the Government projected a deficit of $23.5 billion, with a negative growth rate in the GNP of 4.4 per cent.

In the statement of the Minister of Finance of February 17, 1983, he suggested that the deficit would be approximately $27.2 billion, with a negative GNP growth of 4.8 per cent. One wonders how long we will have to put up with a Government that does not really know where it is going. Week after week it adjusts its figures on the deficit. Week after week it adjusts its figures on the borrowing requirements. In effect, it does not know which way it is going. Perhaps this reflects somewhat upon the business community because in reality businesses in Canada say that they cannot plan ahead. It is impossible to plan more than one year ahead in any business in Canada because one does not know what tax changes the Government will make.

The previous Minister of Finance, in the budget of June 1982, made what could be best described as a death-bed confession when he said:

> Some say it should print more money. Others say it should let the deficit rip. But that would fail miserably. Inflation and unemployment would get worse. Interest rates would rise even more. Canada would price itself out of world markets. Recovery would be postponed.

If a deficit has been incurred as a consequence of measures to promote economic growth, there may be some economic benefits. At the same time, irrespective of how the deficit occurred, there are economic and financial costs.

There are two ways to finance the deficit. One is by printing money. Over the past 12 years the Bank of Canada has financed $12 billion of the Government's cash requirements by monetizing its debts. Printing money leads to an expansion of the money supply, which may lead to an increase in the rate of inflation. The other method to finance the deficit is by borrowing money. In 1982, borrowing by the federal Government accounted for over 51 per cent of all new security issues placed in Canada. In 1983, the figure will be even higher. Borrowing of that magnitude clearly must have an effect on the supply and demand for money, and thus on interest rates which must be borne by the private sector. In effect, the Liberal Government has failed to exercise adequate cost controls. When one examines the use of tax dollars, one sees that one out of every four dollars in tax revenue is used to service the public debt. That is an unbelievable figure. The total tax dollars spent to service the public debt is $16.7 billion. This works out to approximately $1,800 per taxpayer.

It is a fact that the Liberal Government cannot balance its books. Surely, if all businesses in Canada conducted their affairs like the Government, they all would have gone bankrupt. If a business does not balance its books, it cannot remain in business, nor would the Government allow it to stay in business unless it was a company like Maislin Transport to which the Government pumps in money to keep it afloat.

It is interesting to compare the Government's spending with the growth in the Gross National Product. The Liberals have maintained that the rate of Government spending will be less than the rate of growth in the GNP. In the year 1980-81, spending grew by 15.2 per cent while the GNP grew by 10.8 per cent. In the fiscal year 1981-82, Government spending grew by 16.7 per cent while the GNP grew by 13.2 per cent. In 1982-83, Government spending grew by 18.8 per cent and GNP grew by 5.3 per cent. In the projected year 1983-84, Government spending will grow by approximately 17 per cent and the GNP will grow by 8 per cent. The fact that the Government continues to increase its spending is incredible. Yet the Government attempts to maintain that it will not increase its spending. When will it adhere to policies that it sets down? The Government is devoid of ideas and does not follow through with any of its policies. Its policies only exist day by day.

Let us consider this from another perspective. Between the 1968-69 fiscal year and the 1982-83 fiscal year, federal Government spending increased by 624 per cent as compared to a 192 per cent increase in the Consumer Price Index for the same period. Since 1980, Government spending has increased by 68 per cent, while the Consumer Price Index during that same period grew by 37 per cent and the GNP grew by 33 per cent.

We have undergone two recessions since the Liberals came to power in 1980. The second recession began in the third quarter of 1981 and was exacerbated by the massive tax grab in the MacEachen budget of November, 1981. This recession has been the longest and most severe since the "Dirty Thirties". Canada's real GNP fell by 4.8 per cent in 1982. Since the second quarter of 1981, Canada's GNP has fallen by 7.5 per cent.

Businesses have suffered because of this decrease. Business bankruptcies were up by 33 per cent in 1982 as compared to 1981 and were 63 per cent higher than in 1980. Since August, 1981, there has been a net loss of 551,000 jobs. The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in February of this year was 12.5 per cent, not including the hundreds of thousands who have given up hope and have dropped out of the labour force.

One must also pause and consider the plight of those helpless students who will be coming on to the job market this summer only to be faced with the evident lack of jobs for them.

Other evidence of Government ineffectiveness can be seen in housing starts in Canada. In 1982 there were 126,000 housing starts in Canada, which is down from 178,000 in 1981 and far below the 210,000 units that CMHC has stated is necessary to stave off a housing shortage. This was due to extremely high interest rates and the poor state of the economy, all caused by the Liberal Government.

While it is true that we are experiencing a world-wide recession, it is also true that Liberal policies have made the recession far worse in Canada than it need be. One needs to look no further than the National Energy Program. The only explanation for the implementation of the national energy policy was the potential revenue that would have accrued to Alberta. It was never put in place to obtain self-sufficiency for Canada. Canada will not be self-sufficient by 1990. The National Energy Program was a short-term appeasement of the NDP and the other socialists on the Liberal side. They knew that if they did not act quickly, too much revenue would accrue to Alberta and they would not be able to stop that influx of money. Therefore, this program was a method to delay the large revenues that were accruing to the Alberta Government, the British Columbia Government and also to the companies.

It is interesting to reflect upon why the Government was unable to help Canadian companies, if that was its intention, through slowing down the increase in revenue to the foreign-owned companies. It is well known that the only companies in the oil industry to be hurt were the Canadian-owned companies. The foreign-owned companies were never hurt, nor was it intended that they be hurt. However, through this policy the Government was able to buy some of these companies. It will be able to buy some of these companies at fire-sale prices.

Only the Canadian-owned companies have gone bankrupt or have lost massive amounts of revenue since only part of the revenue of foreign-owned companies is derived from Canada. Those companies do not have a problem. The other thing, of course, was that there was a massive amount of revenue from these companies leaving the country. Yet statistics have shown that 98 per cent of all the money that they received was retained and used back in the country. Therefore, the National Energy Program was only devised to appease the socialists who were in a hurry and those socialists who have lots of time.

Statistics Canada suggests that we will perhaps have an economic recovery in the next year. There has been some evidence to indicate that perhaps the recession is coming to an end. The major question now appears to be whether the positive evidence concerning consumer confidence and retail sales in the fourth quarter represents a beginning of the recovery in consumer demand.

Just as we need confidence in the business sector, so we need confidence in the consumer sector. If consumers are afraid to spend and do not do so, the retailer will not purchase goods. That is the present state of the economy. Until confidence is restored in the consumer, the economy will not pick up.

In order to restore that confidence Canada needs stable policies instead of hearing the Government say every week that its deficit will increase. The situation will not improve as a result of the Government's introducing new tax policies. The tax law is complicated enough now. People no longer know how to fill out their income tax forms. Businesses spend up to 20 per cent of their time filling out Government tax forms. We cannot continue to go on like this if we intend to turn this economy around. We need stability in our economy. We do not need abrupt changes like the National Energy Program. We do not need abrupt changes like higher deficits that scare people and investors off.

A month and a half ago, I was in England with one of our committees. I visited a number of investment people in the City of London. I asked about the economic climate in a number of countries. I was told that the worst place for investing capital is North Korea, and next to that is Canada.

Mr. Fisher: Wrong. Start paying attention to the facts of life. You are crazy.

Mr. Wright: I think the five Liberals over on the other side have woken up.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): How many?

Mr. Wright: Five of them. I think it is time that we settled FIRA and put it on the back burner. It is not all bad. But surely as a young country we must encourage foreign capital. I realize the NDP Members do not like foreign capital. They do not like any capital other than what the Government provides. If we want to see this country progress and come out of the recession, we have to provide stability. We must project this to the population, the business community, the consumer and the retailer, and unless we do that, we will barely come out of the recession before going back into another one.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon to add a few comments on third reading of the borrowing authority Bill. Like many other Members of Parliament this is the second time that I speak to this Bill. I found some of the comments made by the last speaker quite amusing. I never cease to be amused by the Tory allegations and the slurcast on socialism by calling this crowd across the aisle socialists. I take it as a personal insult. Some of the monetary systems and policies which they have followed in the last few years have put them to the right of the right rump over here. I would caution the Hon. Member not to use the word socialism so loosely around here. It is really quite a highly respected term. To associate the word socialist with Liberals is less than desirable for many of us.

Mr. Cousineau: Watch out now, Terry.

Mr. Sargeant: I was just being a little friendly here, René.

I was surprised at the Hon. Member's comments about London and how the London investors find Canada to be such a bad place to invest in. That may very well apply to the Government across the aisle, but I do know for a fact that probably the most responsible and best administered Government in this country is the Government of Manitoba. It had no problem at all borrowing money in London, and the London investors found the Manitoba economy to be one in which it was worthwhile to invest.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is referring to something I said. I was talking about equity capital, not debt capital. There is a tremendous difference.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I do not think you need point out that that was not a point of order.

Mr. Laniel: Let the Chair decide.

Mr. Sargeant: Speaking directly to the Bill, it is clear enough what the Government wants from Parliament with this Bill. It wants the authority to borrow $5 billion for the remainder of this fiscal year which, incidentally, ends in two days. There will be great amounts of spending in the last two days. As well, this Government wants another $14 billion for the next fiscal year. It is not clear, in spite of the best efforts of Members of the Opposition, on what the Government plans to spend this $14 billion.

We are being asked to approve this additional borrowing authority without even the benefit of a budget outlining the Government's spending priorities for next year. I understand this is the largest unbudgeted borrowing in Canadian history.

When I spoke on second reading of this Bill, I said my concern was with how the Government uses its deficit, not simply that one exists. Modern Governments have been using deficits as an instrument of economic policy for decades now. The Government should not be increasing the deficit in a reactive manner. It should not abandon its responsibility for guiding Canada's economic development, and resort only to deficit financing to cover its shortfall in tax revenues. No, the Government should be using the deficit to invest in economic recovery, to stimulate economic development that will increase Government tax revenues and, in the long run, reduce the need for deficit financing.

Instead the Government, in its last three budgets, has set its sights on cutting Government spending, hoping in turn to be able to reduce the deficit. But as we in the NDP warned the Government and the Tories with their new-found faith in the economic theories of the thirties, tightfisted fiscal and monetary policies brought on the recession that is now strangling the Canadian economy and causing the Government's deficit to skyrocket. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) himself has admitted that the increasing deficit is due in large part to the impact of the recession on Government revenues and expenditures.

It must be a bitter pill for the Government and its Conservative economic planners to swallow. In spite of their single-minded efforts to reduce Government spending and, hopefully, reduce the deficit, the deficit has done just the opposite. The cost has been almost two million people out of work in Canada.

Let us look at past Government budgets just for a minute. In November, 1981, the Minister of Finance tried to speed up the pace of deficit reduction, setting his sights on a reduction from $13 billion to $10 billion in 1982-1983. But that did not happen at all. By the time he brought in the June, 1982 budget, the deficit was expected to be $19.6 billion. Now we are talking about a deficit for 1982-1983 of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $30 billion. That is three times what the Government had set its sights on barely 18 months ago.

It would be much better, I would say, Mr. Speaker, if the Government had had the foresight to bring in the kind of economic stimulation that would have blunted the impact of this recession; if it had chosen to invest its deficit in November, 1981, to speed up economic recovery, instead of sitting on its hands while the economy went into a tailspin, with the Government subsequently being forced to borrow billions of dollars to make up the shortfall in Government revenues caused by the recession. What the Canadian economy needs is not more Conservative economic quick fixes, but the kind of controls on Government spending that will ensure the economy picks up so that Canadians can benefit from Government expenditures.

I want to speak briefly about some expenditures related to my area as critic, namely that of the National Defence. The Tories love to minimize the importance of defence spending on the federal budget. Their constant cry is for more and more defence spending. We in this Party do understand that the Government must spend significant amounts of money in order to maintain an effective and modern defence force. But we do not believe that the answer to improving Canada's defence capabilities lies in throwing more and more money at it. It would make more sense for the Government to re-assess its defence priorities and then systematically set out the means by which it intends to meet those priorities. Currently Canada's number one defence priority is the surveillance of Canadian territory, waters and air space. Yet it is clear that successive Ministers of National Defence having ignored that priority in favour of training and equipping troops for their role in NATO. I agree with the Government that Canadian sovereignty must be our first defence priority, but it must be our first priority in deed, not just on paper.

• (1650)

I think this is very important when considering this borrowing authority Bill because defence spending consumes a great deal of the Government's operating and capital costs. Government spending on operating and capital costs, and by that I mean sending which excludes transfer payments, public debt and payments to certain Crown corporations, is estimated at $20.7 billion for 1983-1984. Almost 38 per cent of that spending, $7.84 billion, is consumed by National Defence. That is a pretty healthy chunk, and I think the people of this country have good reason to be concerned about how it is used.

For example, what possible value could it be to the Department of National Defence to purchase two Challenger executive jets with a price tag of $27.5 million?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Two people can go to Winnipeg at the same time.

Mr. Sargeant: I am getting to that.

How could two executive jets help the Canadian Forces improve their ability to enforce Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic? Could it be that the Government is hiding in defence spending the purchase costs of additional jets for the fleet available to whisk Cabinet Ministers around the country? The reports that I have read say that the direction to buy these two air limousines came from Cabinet. The two Challenger aircraft are neither what the Department of National Defence needs nor what it wants.

Of course, while we are talking about defence spending and aircraft, there is always the F-18. The Department of National Defence goes to great lengths to tell the Canadian public what a lovely little fighter aircraft we have bought for some $37 million a copy.

Mr. Thacker: The greatest submarine we have ever had.

Mr. Sargeant: I might be inclined to agree with you. It leaks, like the rest of the submarines.

Last year the total cost of the F-18 program increased by 26 per cent to more than $5 billion. I think it is more than appropriate to ask if our new "Star Wars" fighter, the F-18, is a good buy. I do not think it is. Why do we need the most advanced and the most temperamental new fighter planes to act as interceptors in policing our air sovereignty? A few years ago it was suggested that we might buy 50 used F-4 Phantom jets, refurbish them in Canadian factories and task them solely for Canadian air sovereignty missions. It was argued that the money saved could be used for such things as developing an ice breaking capability for our navy to do coastal surveillance and fisheries patrol. But that suggestion obviously did not wash with the Department of National Defence nor with the Liberal Cabinet, for that matter.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is another area of Government spending which I think Canadians should be very concerned about, and I am speaking about the Defence Industry Productivity Program. Government assistance to Canadian defence companies is estimated to be $169 million in 1983-1984, an increase of more than 190 per cent since 1979-1980. That is a pretty healthy boost in spending. It works out to a yearly increase of about 47 per cent for the last four years, for a Government which is supposedly committed to six and five.

I would hope that if the Government is prepared to increase spending on a program that much, it would make sure that it is getting good value for its money, but that does not appear to be the case. In the contracts for DIPP assistance, provisions are generally made for a repayment of the Crown contribution, once a reasonable and fair profit has been derived. But the Auditor General, in his 1981-1982 Report, said that there is no documented rationale for what is a fair and reasonable profit. So we have a situation where the Government has given out some $400 million over a four-year period but was only able to recover 6 per cent of that amount from completed projects.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General also slammed this program for its lack of documented industry strategies, for its lack of cost benefit analysis, and for the inconsistent monitoring of the use made by companies of money they receive from DIPP.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me reiterate that the Government does not need the kind of tight-fisted spending controls inspired by conservative economic theories that squeeze the life out of the Canadian economy. Instead, what is needed is a rational approach to Government spending and to the deficit so that the most value is obtained from Government spending and so that the deficit is not used only to react to the effects of the recession, but is used to invest in economic recovery.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the Hon. Member from the Conservative Party rising in debate, or is he rising either to comment or to ask questions?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are Hon. Members seeking to ask questions, they will obviously have priority over debate. Is the Hon. Member for Kootenay West rising to ask a question?

Mr. Kristiansen: If there is no Member from another Party doing so, Mr. Speaker, I would like to.

Very briefly, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) talked at some length about the use of the deficits which this Government has enjoyed, for lack of a proper term, over the past several years and what he perceived as a need to use those deficits more constructively in structuring and re-investing in our economy.

Over the past 15 years, there has been a large increase in public debt in Canada, and the Government has increased its interventionist policies in certain areas. These interventionist policies were largely supported by the Party that is now the Official Opposition. They have been directed basically to what has been traditionally the area of equity investment, whether it was by investing directly through grants, subsidies or interest-free loans to industry, or indirectly through special tax write-offs, incentives and accelerated allowances. Considering these facts, I would ask the Hon. Member if he thinks that really what we have had is equity investment without the public sector getting equity? Would he agree with that analysis, Mr. Speaker, and is that not the major problem that he would see facing our economy?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I sat on that original Standing Committee that made recommendations on the orders of the House, and it was agreed unanimously by all Party Members, including the Member for the NDP who sat on it, that interjections during the ten-minute period should be short, succinct questions, leaving the response—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair was about to point out to the Hon. Member for Kootenay West that he appeared to be making a speech. Certainly it is his privilege to rise and to be recognized in debate, and I hope the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake will be brief in his response.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I assure you that I will be brief in my response. I think my colleague for Kootenay West put it very well, and I can only say that I agree completely with his analysis of the situation.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I too am rising in the last 45 minutes before the bells will ring and we will be called forth and the Government Members opposite will stand once again and put the Government demand for more money.

As you know, we are standing here today under time closure on third reading. You will recall that, on second reading of the Bill when we discussed the principles of Government and the executive authority for borrowing this amount of money, time allocation was applied. It was closure. We were limited in our rights as Members on behalf of our constituents to object to this massive $19 billion borrowing Bill. After closure it went to a committee. The committee was effectively closed out by marathon sessions, lasting until 2 a.m. Yesterday, we had one day at report stage when we could ask questions. That, too, was under time limitation. We now have 45 minutes left at third reading on a Bill that will extract $19 billion from the Canadian public, $5 billion to get us over the next couple of days and $14 billion to get us into the new fiscal year.

This Bill is an affront to Parliament, an affront to each Member of Parliament, whether we sit on this side or the Government side. Members opposite would not in any instance get authority from their constituents to treat a borrowing authority Bill so cavalierly, but they will stand. Why? If they do not, they will be punished, as has been shown when Members opposite dared to stand for the rights of their constituents as compared to those of the monarch or king who sits with his appointed group of advisers.

They do not want Canadians to understand this Bill. I can understand that. It is an affront to every Canadian. Let us not forget our history. When this Government came to power in 1968 it was just following the days of Expo 67. We were a positive country with a health insurance and medicare system second to none in the world. We had a post-secondary education system that was turning out graduates who were young, excited and keen to get on with making this country work. Our economic system created ten jobs at least for every university graduate and jobs for all of the high school and community college graduates.

We had an Old Age Security system, Family Allowances and balanced budgets. The Government would come in with an expenditure program, followed by a budget that would raise every cent with no borrowing domestically or in the international marketplace. In spite of the fact we had come through the Depression and a world war in which 40,000 of our citizens died, we had a minuscule national debt. In short, when this Government came to power, we were a powerful nation with the second highest standard of living in the world. We were charging up the mountain. It was an exciting place and we could hold our head high.

Then the Liberal Party went left. It made the mistake that so many absolute monarchs made so many times in history. We now have massive Government. The Government did it innocently. It offered all sorts of attractive programs. It agreed we should retain the small capitalist tax. The secret was, "Don't worry folks, we will borrow the difference". The Government said we were borrowing it from ourselves so there was nothing to worry about.

We had the benefit of the programs and a low income tax system. The Government was borrowing year after year. Government Members stood up and put the motions through, always on closure. Year after year Members on this side stood up and pointed out that while it may look good today, it will come back to haunt us. That is exactly what is happening today. It is true that chickens do come home to roost.

What are we faced with today? There is a lot of division among ourselves. There is an elected separatist Government in Quebec. A percentage of the voters in western Canada are committed to separation equal to the percentage that was in Quebec some 15 years ago. We have a national debt that is $200 billion, if you include the debt of the Crown corporations. We have a yearly deficit of $30 billion.

That means that over 30 per cent of all tax revenues go to pay the interest on the debt. We cannot create any programs with that money. It goes straight to those who already have wealth. As was discussed before, billions of dollars go to service that debt, concentrating wealth in the hands of people who already have wealth. That is leading to a class society, which is exactly what happened in Third World countries where there is a small percentage of people who have vast amounts of wealth and huge masses of people with no money at all.

That is what 15 years of Liberal Government is doing to this country, our mothers, fathers, sisters, brothers and children. It is something we would never do in our individual lives, yet somehow the Government has been able to convince us that it can do what we in our hearts know we cannot do at home.

Like every other country that has suffered massive Government intervention, we have had a devaluation of our dollar. It has gone down more than 20 per cent since these guys came into power. We all chuckled when France elected a socialist Government. Two years down the road now, it has massive debts. It has had three distinctive devaluations of its currency. I could have told you that the minute they were elected and tried to give people something for nothing, because it has happened time and time again. You simply cannot spend yourself to prosperity.

We are one half of 1 per cent of the world's population sitting on the resources of half a continent, and yet we are $200 billion in debt. It is absurd. Imagine what 24 million Japanese would do with this country. They are 114 million or 115 million people sitting on a rock in the middle of the ocean with not one barrel of oil, yet their standard of living is much higher than ours. It is absolute absurdity, but it is the logical outflow of 15 years of the Liberal-NDP philosophy that Government can do things rather than people.

Fortunately, we still have those resources. The solution is a change of Government and to put back into place a Government that will create wealth by freeing up individuals from the restraints of Government. The combination of concentrating power in Ottawa, creating more and more Crown corporations and more and more regulatory agencies puts roadblocks in front of our entrepreneurs. Small-businessmen, such as those who set up and operate a fertilizer distribution service, a gas distribution service, a farmer, a small-businessman on the corner who starts with five or six employees and then 10, 15 or 20, is where the real economic wealth is created in this country.

The combination of regulatory agencies, municipal regulatory zoning bylaws all create so much red tape that these people simply give up. You then lose that momentum of growth and building. That is what happens when you get too much Government. The solution is simply, we simply have to cut it back.

The difference between the Liberal-NDP philosophy and ours is that they want decisions to be made by a small group, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), his Cabinet and a small group of economic planners. They want to make all the decisions on the capital of the nation, as compared with our philosophy, the philosophy that built this country, and indeed the western world. It was to take that absolute power that only the kings and queens had prior to the 1700s, split the capital of the country into millions and millions of individual pieces and let the individuals make the decisions as to how the capital should be allocated, used and renewed. Under that system, with millions and millions of individual decisions, men and women spent their whole lives on the allocation and operation of their small farms or businesses. That led to the generation of wealth to the point where the poor people in our country were better off than the kings and queens were prior to that time.

With increasing Government control and regulation since the war, we are now getting back the same problems people had before the 1700s. The ordinary citizen, the small farmer or small-businessman is essentially becoming a serf. Within 10 or 15 years, if we keep on with this philosophy, our farmers will be nothing more than serfs. We will be back to a form of feudalism.

I do not have to point out how badly off are our hospital insurance and medicare system. Our post-secondary education system is still turning out graduates. Because we have interfered with our economic system, we do not have ten jobs for every graduate today. In fact, we have ten students unemployed for each one who has a job. We have essentially reversed the formula and that, too, is simply a logical outflow of a small group of 40 or 50 people sitting here in Ottawa thinking that they can run this whole vast country. It has never occurred before, Mr. Speaker, and it will not happen in the future.

We are experiencing the result of huge deficits which lead to inflation just as surely as the sun comes up after the night, which in turn leads to the high interest rates, which in turn leads to a collapse. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that it is a logical conclusion that this would happen because it has happened before. Is it an accident, Mr. Speaker, that even the Bible records that high interest rates are usurious? High interest rates became a sin because of the practical experience of the Jewish people who had been through this. It so affected them and so crushed the ordinary citizen, that the prophets picked it up, and it was put into their guiding book, the Bible, that it was wrong to have high interest rates. It is usury.

The Government seems surprised that we are in such trouble, Mr. Speaker. The New Democratic Party seems surprised. What is their solution? Their solution, Mr. Speaker, is more of the same, more Government. But we say, "Look. You have to break this cycle." They create the problems, and then their solution is more Government, which causes more problems, and what do they say? Let's have more Government. Why do they not try it the other way? If they looked at the United Kingdom today they would see that that country is truly starting to get its act together. For every year of a socialist Government, it will take at least two years of a Conservative Government to fix it up. Where would they rather live?

Something else which the NDP and the Liberals just cannot seem to get through their heads is again a lesson which comes to us from the Bible. All the great works from the past whether philosophic or economic, say that in the good years you put something aside for the bad years. Those Hon. Members deny the operation of the international marketplace, the invisible hand of Adam Smith. They simply wish to deny it exists, but it does exist. It exists whether you are a socialist country or a capitalist country. It is simply this: if you do not put something away in the good years, you will not have it for the bad years. Keynesian economics says that during bad times, such as a World War or the Depression of the 1930s, it is quite appropriate for us collectively to borrow money and to apply that to the creation of jobs. And it worked, Mr. Speaker, because the Government took only about 20 per cent or less of our GNP. Free enterprise was in trouble as a result of an adjustment phase which had to be made. Therefore, it worked. Then, during the good years, you must apply the other side of the coin, which is to pay the debt back, and the Liberals and NDP cannot escape from the criticism that during the 1970s, which were good years, instead of paying back the debt so we could be positioned in the 1980s to make the necessary adjustment to high technology, they took us further and further into debt.

We had balanced budgets in 1968. Now we have a $30-billion deficit. We had an absolutely minuscule national debt in 1968, during the good years, and we have taken that up to $200 billion. So that today, when collectively we in this House should be deciding that the Government needs to borrow $30 billion or $40 billion in order to take us into high technology, in order to restructure our farming community and transportation in the West so we can get our products out, so that this tremendous industrial infrastructure in Ontario can be updated to employ our young people, we cannot do it.

Even the Government admits, Mr. Speaker, that once you reach $200 billion you are in trouble. When we had the programs and the low tax and Government was borrowing, some 5 per cent of tax revenue would go to service the debt, we would say that we thought that was too high. The Government Members would say, "No, it is not too high." Then it became 10 per cent, then 20 per cent, then 25 per cent. Now over 30 per cent goes to servicing the debt. I ask this Government, why is it stopping at 30 per cent? If it was fine to go from 20 per cent to 25 per cent to 30 per cent, why is it not appropriate to go to 40 per cent, 50 per cent, 60 per cent or 70 per cent? We would cut if off at probably 5 per cent. Government is cutting it off at 30 per cent. But what is the principle, Mr. Speaker? The principle is that you should not have any at all because in the good years you should build up your surplus, reduce your tax loads, so that in the bad years you can pay it off.

The Liberalism of today is not the Liberalism to which many of our parents and grandparents were attracted as the philosophy of a genuine reformist Party which was concerned about the individual. We no longer have the classical Liberalism. This Party is the classical Liberal Party which starts with the individual, then goes to the family. So it is no surprise to me that 15 years of the current Liberalism has led to four out of ten marriages failing. I am surprised that the six are still together. It is no surprise to me to see drug abuse, opting out and the suicides that are occurring today because they are a logical and absolute certainty in terms of the policies we have had and the view which the Liberal philosophy has of the state and the individual.

What a shame that our senior citizens are having to suffer as they are today. They felt they were building a future for themselves by paying into Canada Pension and putting their savings into RRSPs. They felt that when they retired at 65 with 2 per cent or 3 per cent inflation per year, by the time they were 80, sure, their dollar might be worth 50 per cent, but they could cope with that. They were proud and could hold their heads high. But as a result of the Liberal and NDP philosophy we have had inflation of 10 per cent, 15 per cent, and now the dollar has decreased in value in five years to 50 per cent. They are uncertain now. They do not have the future they should have. Young people coming out of our universities should be looking forward to jobs galore, because we still have only one-half of 1 per cent of world population, yet we are sitting on the resources of half a continent. However, resources do not mean a thing, Mr. Speaker, unless you have the entrepreneurial spirit of people to go out and develop those resources and create jobs for our people. There is a solution, Mr. Speaker. The solution is to get rid of that Liberal Government and put in a Progressive Conservative Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Parliamentary Secretary have a question?

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, my Hon. friend, the Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), spoke at length about the deficit. It is of course the Official Opposition's role to criticize, but it is also its role to propose measures. The Hon. Member mentioned cutting the deficit. He said that people should vote for a Progressive Conservative Government. Does his party intend to cut federal contributions to hospital insurance and health insurance and the amounts transferred to Provincial Governments for post-secondary education? Where would he make his cuts?

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I remind my friend opposite that it is his Government that has made these cuts in post-secondary transfers to the Provinces. The seniors are taking 6 per cent. We in this Party have put forward all sorts of proposals. We recognize the tremendous difficulty caused by the Government's digging the hole so deep. When you have a $30 billion deficit, where do you make the necessary cuts? We could wipe out National Defence, Old Age Security, Family Allowances, wipe out all the interest on the national debt, and still be in debt. The Government has dug the hole that deep.

However, Mr. Speaker, here is an idea for the Member. I put this forward and it was rejected before. Why did we have 6 per cent settlements across the board when the Member opposite and myself this year put an extra $3,900 in our pockets and the senior citizens get something like $186? That is unfair, and I said it was unfair and that the solution was a flat across-the-board increase. Whether it was $1,000 or $1,200 does not matter, because in times of inflation percentage settlements make the rich incredibly rich and the poor never catch up. We need across-the-board settlements for very little money. That would tend to bring our society closer together. That is consistent with the Canadian pioneering spirit, particularly in western Canada where it did not matter where we came from, whether Hungary, Poland or the United Kingdom; when you were facing a western Canadian winter, 40 below and the wind raging, it did not matter where you were from, you huddled together to keep warm in order to survive.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), has suggested all sorts of ideas, not one of which the Government has picked up. Here is one that I suggested, and what does my friend think of that?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I listened with interest to the speech by our hon. friend opposite, and I am glad to see that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is in the House, because when we considered the 6 and 5 policy, it was understood that the purpose of the legislation was to help reduce the rate of inflation, so that if we managed to bring it down to 6 or 5 per cent, no one, neither senior citizens nor public servants would lose. On the contrary, everyone would stand to gain because the purchasing power of Canadians would remain intact.

However, I was surprised to hear my hon. colleague opposite talk about cuts in National Defence. I remember when the Parliamentary Committee held hearings in Schefferville three weeks ago, the then President of the Iron Ore Company, Mr. Mulroney, suggested making Schefferville a National Defence centre. Perhaps the Hon. Member would care to inform the House where he would cut National Defence agreements? Furthermore, would he be agreeable to establishing a defence centre in Schefferville in order to create jobs in this particular area in Quebec?

[English]

Mr. Thacker: I can only presume, Mr. Speaker, that my friend opposite sits on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. If he does, he knows I do not sit on that Committee. But in general, we agree that we as Canadians should be spending a fair percentage on defence. It should be spread around the country. For example, the Armed Forces stationed in Edmonton were moved to Ontario and Quebec. There were reasons for that, but it still caused real economic hardship in Edmonton. I presume that if I were to agree that National Defence should open up a base in Schefferville, the Hon. Member would agree that the Forces should be returned to Edmonton as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) has the floor, if he wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Gimaïel: Thank you Mr. Speaker, but my colleague has already commented on the issue I wanted to discuss.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and answers has not expired. Are there other Members seeking to ask questions?

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I was fascinated by the Hon. Member's fairytale lecture on the invisible hand of Adam Smith. Does the Member not recognize any difference at all between what is often referred to as free enterprise and corporate enterprise, that is, the kind of corporate enterprise which left us a legacy of unheard of industrial pollution, outdated plant capacity, failure to invest and modernize to keep our productivity up to date on this continent. I refer to a corporate enterprise which forced that Government, with the support of the Hon. Member's Party, to start pouring in public money without receiving any equity in return, which built up this huge debt we are all complaining about today. Does he not recognize that in fact is what happened, and how does he have the audacity to complain about the results of what he is as guilty of as those people across the way?

Mr. Taylor: Baloney.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, that is so easy. My friend denies that the principle of Adam Smith survives. Well, it does. Even the socialist states recognize that if you do not keep up your competitive edge you will simply lose out to somebody else. When we in this Party talk about free enterprise, we are not talking about the free enterprise of the 1700s. We never have. Society has an entrepreneurial group which competes. The weak and inefficient are thinned out, but these are small companies so that no one is really hurt because the people are reabsorbed into other companies. The problem arises from the Liberal and NDP philosophy of massive Crown corporations. When they fail, then you have hundreds of thousands of people out of work.

Mr. Kristiansen: Massive private corporations can fail.

Mr. Thacker: The Government cannot allow that to happen, so we end up putting more taxpayer's dollars into these corporations. We believe Government should set the economic climate, and it should also be the regulator—

Mr. Kristiansen: Then why do you vote for all the handouts?

Mr. Thacker: —so that the pollution problem would be solved if the Government did its job. But the Liberal-NDP philosophy is not to set the rules; it is to set up a Crown corporation. Then you have a situation such as Mexico where Pemex, the state oil corporation, had a well blowout in the Gulf of Mexico. That did more ecological damage than the entire private industry of the whole world. When you ask: were there any regulations for that state oil company? The answer is, well, heaven's no. Why would we have regulations? We are the state corporation, we do not need regulations. Then the Hon. Member got into the question of profit, that word they just hate, because he said capital was not being invested. The reason for that was that the NDP has for so many years turned people against the word "profit" that, as a result, entrepreneurs did not have the money to improve their equipment because it was all taxed away.

Mr. Kristiansen: Before 1968?

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed grateful for the chance to participate in this discussion this afternoon, especially after both an instructive and entertaining injection by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) who has given us his usual well thought out point of view. I did not agree with much of what he said but I always respect the fact that he puts a coherent set of ideas together and presents them persuasively.

Mr. Taylor: Flattery will get you nowhere.

Mr. Fisher: One thing I do find very disturbing about the debate we have heard from the other side of the House is the continued reference to our international reputation and standing. I would refer Members on the other side to the discussion which took place when Governor Bouey visited the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs last night. A very coherent presentation on our international status was made. Among other things, he was asked how it would be possible that our credit rating had declined. His reply was clear. Our credit rating has not declined, not at all. In fact, he pointed out that the people who make that argument have done so despite the strength of our currency, despite the continued good performance of our interest rates, especially the fact that they are now much closer to American interest rates than they were a few weeks or months ago, thereby indicating considerable strength within the economy itself. Finally, Mr. Speaker, he pointed out the marvellous trade surplus that our economy has developed over the past year—a record trade surplus.

• (1730)

These are the facts that international money lenders consider. They see an economy which, like all economies all around the world, is suffering greatly from the recession. We are not "Pollyannaish" about this. We are in a recession, as everyone is.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If our reputation around the world is so great, can the Hon. Member explain why our dollar is roughly 80 cents compared to the United States dollar?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, first of all I object to the Hon. Member's presenting that as a point of order. I think he should present it as a question during the proper question period.

I urge him to look at the performance of the Canadian currency against currencies all over the world. He will find that ours has done extremely well, especially against OECD currencies. We have a devalued dollar as against the U.S. dollar but this is the only place where it has a downward movement, as has the currency of all other industrialized countries.

I urge the Hon. Member to look at the facts and not the myths that have been presented. I ask him to look at a report which appeared in the Globe and Mail approximately a month and a half ago when Salomon Brothers, one of the important bond houses in the United States, indicated that the Canadian debt instruments are as valuable as the American ones. We are not, as described by our colleagues on the other side, some declining sunset country.

Our currency is the only currency in the world to hold its own against the American currency. Our debt instruments are ranked equally by one of the great American companies. I suggest that before my colleagues opposite run our country down they should find out the facts to back up their allegations.

I was very interested in what the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills had to say. He was able to recommend areas where we should spend millions and millions of dollars—on such things as youth employment, for example. He did not recognize that the Government has increased the allocation of funds for youth employment for this coming summer from $120 million to $170 million. He wants even more. And he wants even more money to be spent on health care, although millions and millions of dollars are already spent there. Of course, these are worthy areas for spending and I will return to them.

The Hon. Member was happy to raise these things and then to say that we must cut Government spending and Government borrowing. He wants us to do these worthwhile things with one hand tied behind our backs. He brought out a bunch of the old Tory boogeymen. He had great ideas about where we should spend, but he wanted it to be done without a tax increase and with diminished borrowing. That just does not work.

With this Bill we will engage in some of the biggest borrowing programs the country has ever seen. I think they are worthwhile. I think Government spending is helping to stimulate the economy in a time of great need. It is helping to maintain a vital safety net for thousands of Canadians who need it. It is replacing the vital private sector spending that will come about as recovery occurs.

As all of us admit, Mr. Speaker, borrowing is always a careful balancing act. If there was too little borrowing or too little Government spending, we would be plunged into new depths of recession. Let us be honest about that. If the Government were not involved in this spending program, if it were not practising an extra $25 billion worth of stimulation in the economy, we would sink even deeper into the depths of recession. That is a point that our critics have not conceded, however. They live in this "balancing the books" dreamland and forget that in tough times, debt and extra spending are legitimate tools for Government because they stimulate a sluggish economy.

We have said frankly and honestly to the Canadian people that too much debt and too much spending will re-inflate the economy and get in the way of the private sector recovery when it comes. We must constantly remind our friends in the NDP of that. I agree with the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills and the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) who want us to spend more money on human services. I cannot think of a politician who would want to see suffering or who would cut spending and ignore the results for individuals and their families. All of us feel that way, but the situation could be made worse for the people we are trying to help. We could stimulate inflation and high interest rates if we are not careful.

Borrowing is a balancing act. We cannot close our eyes to it completely the way some of the neanderthals and Reagan admirers want us to do. Equally, we cannot go hogwild and ignore our obligations and let the economy burn itself out.

We have tried to balance the act in two ways. We have watched the commonsense signals and not let the economy overheat. There are signs that our economy is recovering. In face of all the criticism that we are not doing things properly, that one fact stands out. The six and five program works; interest rates are coming down; inflation is coming down and jobs are being restored. These are the initial signs of recovery.

Mr. Fennell: Where?

Mr. Fisher: The Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) asks where. Apparently he has not gone back to his riding to see the numbers of people being rehired by General Motors in Oshawa. Despite his claims to be a friend of the auto industry he has not been to Oakville to see the rehiring there. The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) knows about it.

The economy is recovering despite the gloom and doom we hear from Hon. Members opposite. These are the common-sense signals I was talking about, and we have watched them to make sure that our behaviour was not creating gloom and doom.

The second thing we did is to reallocate money. We did that in June. We went through the six and five exercise to find honest ways to save hundreds of millions of dollars and reinvest it. We heard from our friends opposite when it was time to vote for that principle. The Tories voted in favour of the six and five program and the reallocation idea. They liked it, but when it came time for the specifics, to put it into practice, they voted against us. They voted against the reallocation which they say is so vital.

• (1740)

Mr. Kempling: Louder.

Mr. Fisher: None of us are kidding in the House. We know that the Hon. Member for Burlington is busy shovelling away over there. He voted against cost cuts which were justified and legitimate, but we did not. We cut costs under the six and five program and put the money back into the economy in places where it was more badly needed. For example, we put it into housing. Thousands of housing units across the nation have been started with grants which we initiated and put forward to Canadian people. We found the way to restore that industry by reallocating money, by saving it from a place where it was not needed and spending it in a place where it was more badly needed.

That is the balancing act about which I am talking, not only watching the vital signals in the economy and watching the recovery, but also going constantly through our expenses and kicking out those that are not needed, kicking out those which do not have as high a priority, and bringing in ideas that are more useful today. This is what we have been doing with our borrowing and spending.

Also we have heard criticism that somehow we are condemning our grandchildren to eternal bondage to pay off the debts which we supposedly irresponsibly encouraged. It is better, according to this line of thought, that we should leave a blasted economy. It is better, according to the Tories who stand up so gleefully and preach gloom and doom, that we should do nothing and let the situation get worse. Now, would our grandchildren thank us for that? Would they be grateful if we left them with a blasted health care system, with a ruined education system, with no welfare and no unemployment insurance? Would they thank us for that? Those are the programs on which we are spending our money. We make no apologies for that. Those programs are not destroying the future of our grandchildren. They are preserving the vital safety net system which we have worked so hard to put in place. Why bother helping to build that network? My generation needs it and uses it as a right. We are passing it on intact to our grandchildren. We do not worry about that. In my own family, my father has been crippled for two years now by arthritis. He has said very clearly to me, "Do nothing about medicare, do not ruin medicare, or I will be a bankrupt man". We borrow money to finance medicare to help people like my father. I do not make any apologies for that kind of borrowing. It is responsible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fisher: Let us put to rest this idea that we are destroying the country's future by the way we are spending today. We are not doing that. We are preserving the country in the face of enormous difficulty. The country wants us to do that. Let us go out into a public place—

Mr. Lewis: All right, let us go.

Mr. Fisher: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) is willing. Let us go to his riding or mine and find out how many older people want their pensions cut the way he would do it, how many people want medicare cut the way his Party would do it, or how many want social services cut. Those are the implications of the program they are suggesting.

In conclusion I want to say that our spending has stimulated—

Mr. Kempling: Your spending has stimulated unemployment.

Mr. Taylor: There are two million unemployed.

Mr. Fisher: —our economy in a time of great need. Our spending has gone to the needs of ordinary people. Our spending has been constantly examined and reallocated. New priorities and new needs have been identified. Those are responsible acts by a responsible and humane Government.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

EMPLOYMENT

MANPOWER MOBILITY—CONDEMNATION OF QUEBEC ATTITUDE

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montréal-Mercier): Madam Speaker, I want to ask my hon. colleagues to condemn the actions of the Quebec Government which are now causing another border dispute between New Brunswick and Quebec. Madam Speaker, we all know that the construction regulations prevent manpower mobility within Quebec and Canada. I would invite my hon. colleagues to vigorously censure this attitude which deprives Quebec workers of mobility within their own province and workers across Canada from having access to the labour market in Quebec.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INCLUDE EMPLOYMENT MEASURES IN BUDGET

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, instead of necessarily condemning the Government of Quebec, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to condemn the lack of adequate measures to create jobs across Canada, especially in my own province which is severely affected by the lack of such measures. Unfortunately, we are experiencing record unemployment and record bankruptcies, and since we will have time for some serious reflexion during the Easter holidays, I would urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to give some serious thought to proposals for effective job creation in his next budget. The Minister of Finance keeps saying to anyone who will listen that economic recovery is just around the corner, but we know perfectly well that in 1984, we will still have to support from 1,500,000 to two million unemployed workers. In the circumstances, I think the Minister of Finance should stop making promises which are almost never kept and start making some substantial proposals in his budget providing for genuine economic recovery and job creation, and take advantage of this opportunity to make a wise choice, all of which has been sadly lacking during the last fifteen years. That is my Easter message for the Minister of Finance, and I would ask him to give the situation some serious thought and to show some compassion for and an interest in what is happening to, our unemployed workers in Canada and especially in "la Belle province".

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

A REMEMBRANCE OF UNITED NATIONS DELEGATE, ANDREI GROMYKO

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to raise a matter that is argument or debate, but I hope it is of interest. It so happens that in 1945 and 1946 I was among those who represented Canada at the first meetings of the United Nations. The other person with me was Gordon Graydon, a Conservative Member who served in this House for about 19 years. In the process we were quite interested in certain people there, especially Andrei Gromyko. Both Mr. Graydon and I found that we could have an interesting discussion with Mr. Gromyko, and in view of this we dared to hope he might be useful to our country in the future. He wrote me a letter which was dated April 25, 1946. This was after Mr. Graydon and I had returned to Ottawa. The letter reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Knowles:

It was great pleasure for me to receive your kind letter of April 16th, congratulating me in connection with my appointment as the Permanent Representative of the USSR to the Security Council of the United Nations Organization.

I am pleased to learn that you have visited Moscow and enjoyed your stay there. I hope that we shall have frequent opportunities of meeting each other in the future. It was kind of you to remind me of Mr. Gordon Graydon. Please convey my greetings to him.

With best personal wishes and warm regards,

Sincerely yours,

Andrei A. Gromyko

I think it is of interest. I hope it might just be.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—DISAPPEARANCE OF GREEK CYPRIOTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): A few weeks ago, Madam Speaker, I attended a meeting of the Hellenic-Canadian Solidarity Committee for Cyprus which is made up of representatives of all Greek organizations in Montreal. The meeting dealt with questions concerning a recent United Nations vote on the "disappearance" of Greek Cypriots. It will be recalled that, during the 1974 war, at least 1619 people, combatants and non-combatants alike, disappeared. That was almost ten years ago and their families still do not know what happened to them. Members of the Greek community have expressed their anger because Canada abstained from voting recently at the United Nations, and I have agreed to convey their feelings to Parliament and to the Government of Canada.

I take this opportunity to explain as well the position of the Canadian Government. Canada abstained at the third committee because the committee refused to hear the Turkish-Cypriot member of the commission on the disappearance of Greek Cypriots. The third committee debate was highly partisan and vindictive. On the basic humanitarian issue, however, Canada did join the consensus which led to the adoption of the resolution in plenary session.

I should like to emphasize that Canada has the second largest peace-keeping force in Cyprus and that we contribute more than 20 per cent of the financial resources. Our financial contribution to peace-keeping in Cyprus exceeds all our other peace-keeping commitments throughout the world.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

CRIMINAL CODE

PLACEMENT OF COMBAT RIFLE ON RESTRICTED WEAPONS LIST

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, the Liberal Cabinet recently passed an Order in Council placing the FN-FAL combat rifle on the restricted weapons list.

The Firearms Control Research Group states that there is only one case on record of this type of firearm being used illegally. Few criminals would use a bulky, expensive weapon like the FN-FAL in the commission of an offence. By and large, criminals use pistols because they are cheaper, lightweight, and easy to conceal. Few gun collectors will follow the Government modification guidelines accompanying the Order in Council designed to prevent the rifle from being adapted to machine gun capability because these guidelines may, and could, result in the rifles blowing up in their faces when they attempt to fire them.

This Government can put anything on the restricted weapons list through Order in Council, with no review in Parliament. This totally irresponsible use of Orders in Council is just a means to bypass the House of Commons, which has become a serious irritant of this arrogant Government.

There is justifiable fear among gun owners and collectors that the eventual end to firearms registration will be the confiscation of all firearms in Canada. These are responsible Canadians who are bona fide collectors, not criminals.

The FN-FAL meets none of the criteria generally applying to restricted weapons. There is little reason to register the FN-FAL rifle when a police authorized firearms acquisition certificate is already required to purchase one. This Order in Council is wasteful, unnecessary, expensive and must be reversed.

I urge the Government to—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATION ON BEHALF OF DIEPPE VETERANS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, last year was the fortieth anniversary of the Dieppe raid and at that time many hopes were expressed that changes would be made in the rules pertaining to compensation for former prisoners of war, changes which would recognize the unique situation in which Dieppe veterans find themselves, but no action has been forthcoming from the Government.

At present the 20 per cent compensation for Dieppe veterans does not take into account the special suffering endured by those captured at Dieppe who were tied, then chained, and finally made to go on a three-month dead march. As the national President of the Dieppe Veterans said before a Senate committee just lask week, the Dieppe veterans are fed up and are wondering whether the Government wants to do the same to them as it did to First World War veterans when it waited until most of them were dead before making them eligible for the war veterans allowance.

It is about time that the Government recognized the special claim that Dieppe veterans have on the Canadian public, not just because of their suffering but because of the importance of their sacrifice to the eventual successful landing on D-Day in June, 1944. In this respect may I also suggest that a campaign medal be struck for the Dieppe force. This, combined with improvements in the pension benefits available to them, would go a long way to meeting the long overdue need for the Canadian Government to recognize properly those who came back from that terrible morning on the beaches of Dieppe.

MEDICAL CARE

SCHEDULED IMPOSITION OF USER FEES IN ALBERTA

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, Members on all sides of this House should indicate their solid support for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and her efforts to prevent Alberta from imposing hospital user fees. At the same time we should strongly condemn the Government of Alberta for this provocative move to place a financial burden on many Albertans who cannot afford these fees. It is clear that Mr. Lougheed's Government only represents the well-heeled of that Province. This Party, this Government and, I would hope, this entire House will demonstrate a commitment to maintain first-class hospital care for Canadians without regard to their ability to pay.

Alberta Hospitals' Minister, David Russell, who stated that "these user fees are going to be way less than one night at the Holiday Inn" needs to be reminded that the people these fees may deprive of hospital care cannot afford Holiday Inns. Perhaps the Government of Alberta, with billions in its Heritage Fund, should finally introduce a retail sales tax on booze and tobacco if it is unwilling to touch its Heritage Fund to prevent user fees. This Government will refuse to co-operate with such a callous move until the Government of Alberta gets its priorities straight and drops this outrageous proposal.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CHILD DELEGATES AT PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE LEADERSHIP MEETINGS

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, with recent developments in Quebec and Nova Scotia, I would like to call to the attention of the House a new force to be reckoned with in Canada, namely, children, or kiddie power. They have selected a biblical quotation, apparently, as their motto: "and a little child shall lead them".

Already nine-year olds have been selected as delegates to Conservative leadership meetings. They will be raising issues, no doubt, such as the size of the family allowance cheque, the misappropriation of these cheques for the parent's own use, the attack on universality of family allowances. They will have a new look at child labour laws, their share of assets when the family separates, damages arising from the trauma of separation by parents, girls wanting to play sports on an equal footing with boys, and is it safe to be a water baby and be requested to go swimming before turning one year old? Their main concern is lack of representation in Parliament, but it would seem that some nine-year old may soon lead the Progressive Conservative Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE TO GROWTH IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, in 1982 Canada had, on average, 1.3 million people officially unemployed. Today the official number of unemployed is 1.6 million. Unofficially, as every Canadian knows, the number of people who need jobs is well over two million. The Government's response to the growing crisis has been to make promises, stall, break promises, and wait for some evidence of recovery in the U.S., all the while warning Canadians that it is unable to do much to bring down unemployment.

Today the despair of construction workers, woodworkers and truckers over their inability to find work, has erupted into violence in New Brunswick. Workers in the steel industry in that Province find out that a mine closure will put another 550 people out of work. This Government, which came to office on a promise of revitalizing Canada's industrial capacity to be better able to create jobs, and which promised to be an active player rather than a passive referee in industrial development, has now killed the notion of an industrial strategy because it believes it cannot make it work.

• (1415)

The Government has abandoned another major plank in the campaign which brought it to office. It has acknowledged its total inability and unwillingness to deal with the most serious economic problem facing the country, which is the obscenely high level of unemployment.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that if we look at the February unemployment figures we will find 149,000 discouraged and hopeless unemployed people, and 409,000 people underemployed or part-time. If you add this to the 1.6 million unemployed, you have a true rate of unemployment of somewhere between 18 per cent and 19 per cent. We are told by the Minister that, apart from the band-aid treatment we get from his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, we have to wait for his budget. I would like to ask the Minister on behalf of the 824,000 long-term unemployed, those who have been unemployed for longer than three and a half months, when can we expect that budget?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, on the other side of the ledger I was happy to see today in a report of the Conference Board a survey of business confidence which indicated that the level of business confidence in the improvement in the economy has risen to the highest level in the five years since the survey began. Moreover, industrial inflation has had the slowest rate of increase since December, 1971. As a matter of fact there was zero per cent inflation in industrial production since January of this year. These are encouraging developments, and on the basis of those encouraging developments I would hope to be able to bring down a budget—I intend to bring down a budget—on Tuesday, April 19. I would hope that my budget is going to build upon that confidence and ensure further growth for the Canadian economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, while I can draw some encouragement from what the Minister has said, I can tell him, however, that business confidence will not put bread on the table of the unemployed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a further question to the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that after the 1974-75 recession it took three years to restore the 523,000 jobs which were lost, and given the fact that we have lost 551,000 jobs in the current recession, which means we have to wait until 1986 to get these jobs back on the basis of that experience, can the Minister tell us what he is doing, what can he say, or what hope can he give to the disadvantaged workers out there, the young people, the handicapped, the native people, women, who have no chance of getting a job until these jobs which have been lost as a result of the recession have been restored? We are looking at 1986. What is the Minister going to do for these people in the meantime?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would remind my hon. friend, first of all, that the Government has direct job programs in operation already which are worth $2 billion. Second, I invite him to wait for the measures contained in the budget. Third, I will tell him that I am flabbergasted that a Conservative takes the view that the private sector has no role to play in the growth of the economy. He said that business confidence will not put bread on the table of the unemployed. Surely, in the Canadian economy, the private sector is going to be the engine of growth in this country, and the private sector is going to create the jobs which we need for millions of Canadians at the present time. Those jobs are not going to be created by the Government. We are not trying to create more bureaucrats and more officials. We are trying to arrive at a situation where there would be more jobs for Canadians created predominantly by the private sector. The statement by the Hon. Member is a flabbergasting one.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, we now know what the problem is. The Minister of Finance is constantly flabbergasted. That is why he cannot address the real problems of which I am talking. I am talking about the problems of those who are unemployed now. He knows that, before he can get the economy restored to full level, it will take at least three years to restore the jobs which have been lost.

• (1420)

REQUEST FOR MORE JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, given the fact that all we get from the Minister of Employment's colleague, the Minister of Finance, is the band-aid treatment, I want to zero in on one of these band-aids, the NEED Program. That Program was brought in on October 25, five months ago, and was supposed to create 60,000 jobs. To date it has created less than 20,000 jobs. Even if it did create the 60,000 jobs, that, as he knows, would be a drop in the bucket considering the need out there.

Now that we know that we will not get a budget until April 19, has the Minister made representations to the Minister of Finance to bring in programs similar to the NEED Program now, given the experience of a cruel time lag between the promises and actual performance? The Minister knows it will take a considerable and cruel length of time after the budget before we get any real stimulation in terms of job creation. Therefore, has he made direct representations to his colleague to bring in programs now?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would like to clear up some of the misstatements the Hon. Member has just made. To begin with, as of today the NEED Program has approved over 27,000 jobs. We are creating jobs on an average of 2,000 per week right across the country. I would be more than happy to provide him with that information, particularly when one considers that much of the money is going into his own riding. Just a week ago we joined in partnership with ERCO Industries in his riding where they put up $4.5 million and we put up $500,000 and, as a result developed over 100 additional jobs through the NEED Program. It seems to me that, before he begins criticizing, he might want to go back and learn what is happening in his own area.

RATE OF JOB CREATION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the NEED Program was designed to help unemployment insurance exhaustees and those on welfare. It has taken five months to produce 27,000 jobs. As the Minister knows, we have 409,000 underemployed, 100,000 a month coming off unemployment insurance, and 149,000 who have given up looking for work. How can the Minister justify only 27,000 in five months from a program designed to create 60,000 jobs, which in and of itself would be merely a drop in the bucket?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I realize the Hon. Member is reasonably new to his critic's portfolio so it would be helpful if he went back and looked at the full range of job creation programs being offered. The NEED Program has been targeted for those who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits. The reason why we are scaling the Program over an 18-month period is so we can respond on a monthly basis to the areas of greatest pressure or demand. That was based on consultations we had with provincial Governments, including that of his own Province, which indicated that we wanted to have one program to allow us to maintain a constant flow of jobs to deal with the exhaustee problem.

In addition to that, Madam Speaker, there is something the Hon. Member for St. John's East does not seem to recognize, even though once again there is over $1 million going into his riding for the Community Development Project Program and other forms of employment programs. We have provided close to 200,000 employment places from this Department alone over the past year. That represents a full 50 per cent increase over the year before, an expenditure of well over $1.2 billion. It would seem to me, Madam Speaker, that indicates this Government is heavily committed to direct employment, especially when you consider that the previous Government, of which he was a member, cancelled all the programs.

ROLE OF VOLUNTARY SECTOR IN JOB CREATION

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and follows from the Minister's affirmation that he is seeking to expand employment, which we are all seeking. In terms of the cost effectiveness of the money invested in job creation, has the Minister taken into account the facts which were affirmed by his colleague, the Secretary of State, that statistics have shown that the voluntary sector is the efficient, cost effective, and well situated vehicle in our communities for the creation of jobs? Research has shown that one long-term, not short-term, job such as is funded by NEED, can be produced by that area for $35,000 against $120,000 by Government. Can the Minister tell the House what consultations he has had with the voluntary sector about its full involvement in job creation, and what plans he has for it to be involved in a massive employment effort?

• (1425)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am not quite sure where the Hon. Member's figures come from. I could indicate to him that, in terms of cost per job, the programs that we sponsor throughout the Government range from as low as $1,700 or $2,500 per job to an average of $15,000 per job, depending on the length of time involved. It all depends on whether we are providing a subsidy to the private sector, as we do through the PED Program where we provide a wage subsidy to hire disadvantaged chronically unemployed people, or whether we provide a full-time job as is done in other programs.

I agree with the Hon. Member that we rely very heavily on the efforts of the non-profit voluntary sector. Many of the jobs sponsored under the Canada Community Development Projects are put forward by various social organizations, charitable organizations, and community organizations. Their active participation and partnership with the Government in the creation of work is a great example of how we can co-operate to put people back to work.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET VOLUNTARY SECTOR LEADERS

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, in his response the Minister has indicated the Government's lack of sensitivity to the capacity of the voluntary sector. He must be aware that the YMCA has conducted a national study based on long-term job creation which shows a three to one cost effectiveness.

In terms of job creation and of training and retraining, over 100 major national voluntary agencies have a proven capacity. Will the Minister not meet with those leaders to see that they are engaged in this, and will he see that any wage subsidy program that he plans to introduce includes that sector? In preparation for the budget that is to come in on April 19, has the Minister asked the Minister of Finance to include the "give and take" tax proposals which will provide an incentive for that sector to do this important job creation?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am not sure why the Hon. Member is being so argumentative. We are working very closely, in a deep and abiding sense, with the voluntary community sector to create work. This morning I was looking at a project submitted by the YWCA in Halifax which has put forward a proposal, which I look upon favourably, to help train young women for new business computer skills that we will be able to fund in our Skills Growth Program. I have just written to all the voluntary national organizations encouraging them to come forward with job or training proposals that we can help fund.

We are not differing with the Hon. Member; in fact we are doing exactly what he recommends, and we have been doing it for a long time.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it pertains to the fact that in 1980 the Liberal Government made a commitment to Canadians to maintain the price of natural gas at 65 per cent of the equivalent price of oil.

Yesterday the Minister said that the Government was prepared to break that commitment to Canadians and see the price differential between gas and oil rise above the 65 per cent mark. Would the Minister confirm today that the Government intends to break that commitment and that the price of natural gas will rise above the committed ceiling? Would he be prepared to admit that the national energy policy on both oil pricing and gas pricing is in a complete shambles and that it is time we had a new statement on a relevant energy policy?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I explained the complexity of the problem yesterday. Because the price of gas was maintained at 65 per cent of the price of oil in Canada, through a mechanism that was a federal tax, above the price of natural gas and in order to maintain that level, we have reduced the tax. There is virtually no tax any more. The minute that the price of natural gas goes up and the price of international oil comes down, there will be no room for a tax any more. After that we will be governed by the memorandum of agreement with Alberta. In that document it is specifically mentioned that Alberta will raise the price of natural gas by 25 cents in July. It is a commitment of the Government to the Government of Alberta. I said in my comments that, if they increase the price and we cannot reduce the tax any more on natural gas, this ceiling of 65 per cent will not be kept.

• (1430)

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, that is an excellent admission that it is a tough problem, but it is time they resigned if they cannot come up with a solution. The problem is not just for the domestic pricing of gas; it is also for the export pricing of gas. The Minister will be meeting with his United States counterpart on April 6 and 7, and it is the suspicion of many people in this country that he will cave in to American demands to cut the price of natural gas going into the United States.

PRICE OF EXPORTED GAS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, would the Minister give us some assurance that his term "flexibility" in pricing of exports does not mean caving in to the Americans on a fire sale price, that it does not mean giving away Canadian natural gas, and ultimately that it does not mean Canadians paying at the Toronto citygate will wind up paying more for natural gas than we are trying to fire sale it across the border?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, again the Hon. Member shows that he is not very knowledgeable about the subject because the export price of natural gas is much higher than the Canadian price. It is more like double the price, and this is the price fixed through a formula. We will be looking at the formula and how it applies at this time. On top of this, the Government of British Columbia is making representation to us because it is virtually not selling gas any more. It would like to have an adjustment in the price to keep the volume of gas being sold in the United States. It is no use for anyone to keep a price which is unrealistic if the buyers do not buy. When one is in the business, one has to adjust price to market realities.

PENITENTIARIES

EDMONTON MAXIMUM SECURITY INSTITUTION—SAFETY PRECAUTIONS

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I share with him that the former chief supervisor of the electronic system at the Edmonton maximum security institution indicated that the fence surrounding that institution is a complete failure and is inadequate for public safety. This directly contravenes or contradicts what the Minister indicated to me in May, 1982, when he assured us that the fence was highly reliable. Would the Minister indicate to the Chamber what steps will be taken to ensure the safety of residents in the area surrounding the Edmonton maximum security institution, in view of the statement of the gentleman I just mentioned?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have not heard the statements of the individual to whom the Hon. Member just referred, but I have no information that would suggest there is danger around the Edmonton maximum security institution resulting from the fence being inadequate. I would certainly be prepared to look into it, but I assure the Hon. Member and the people of Edmonton that if they compare, for example, the level of security around that institution with what there was five years and ten years ago, it would be easy to see that it is far more secure now than it has been in the past.

If they compare the levels of security which we provide in Canada at our maximum and medium security institutions with those in the United States, for example, as well they will find that the inmate to staff ratio and the amount of security provided are far better here than in the United States and than they have been in the past. Rather than try to alarm the people of Edmonton with a kind of scare statement like that, I hope the Hon. Member will look into the facts and he will find that the level of protection is more than adequate.

Mr. Elzinga: I would suggest that the Hon. Minister should look into the facts because people within his own Department have indicated they are looking at the possibility of replacing the electronic equipment because it is not working. People within his own Department have indicated that, so I suggest that he should look into the facts.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, there have been concerns raised by the City of Edmonton which relate to this. The Minister has correspondence from Alderman June Cavanagh requesting additional funding so that they can properly control and patrol the area surrounding the prison, to ensure the safety of citizens. The reason I am raising this matter is that the Minister has not responded to the concern which I sent to him in correspondence some time ago. I ask him to give us the assurance that he will do everything within his power to ensure adequate safety for these residents.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have seen the correspondence from June Cavanagh. In fact I had a meeting with her when she was in Ottawa recently, to hear her concerns. I took them up with the Correctional Service of Canada. I do not believe that the concerns of the residents surrounding that institution are justified, but I will look into the matter again. I think the people who live around one of our maximum security institutions deserve protection. Providing protection to them is the top priority of the Correctional Service of Canada. I will ensure that the security there is adequate.

BANKS AND BANKING

TREATMENT OF HOME OWNERS RENEWING MORTGAGES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Several days ago, in response to a question from one of his colleagues, he made an undertaking to Canadians who were locked into mortgages with companies at high interest rates, some as high as 18 per cent over a period of five years, to represent them and in some way to ensure that the traditional three month penalty period would be respected. What guidelines does the Minister intend to use? What authority does he feel he may impose to ensure that these Canadians are treated fairly?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first, I would like to correct the previous statement I made about industrial inflation. I mentioned zero per cent. The figure should be 0.3 per cent since January. That was a slight misstatement.

As far as the question raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, obviously there is no legal authority to force or impose any particular solution upon financial institutions. I have indicated that if there were cases of abuse which Members of Parliament could not resolve on their own by contacting particular insitutions, I would certainly be willing to have these issues raised with the institutions through the Inspector General of Banks or another agency, to have the financial institution examine the situation in terms of equity and fairness.

But there is no legal authority which would authorize me to order any particular resolution of any particular situation at the present time. It is a matter of equity and fairness and ensuring that the citizens of the country who may find themselves in difficulty are treated fairly by financial institutions. I said I would do my best to help in those cases where there appeared to be blatant abuses.

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns a statement which he made last night to the effect that the Government's national industrial strategy promised in 1980 is now dead. One of the victims of that is White Farm Equipment in Brantford. We have a $1 billion net deficit in agricultural implements vis-à-vis the United States. That is one of the reasons there are 1,200 angry and confused workers who have been out of work in Brantford for almost a year and have seen their unemployment insurance benefits almost exhausted.

I sent the Minister a letter in which I asked him nine specific questions with respect to the future of White Farm Equipment. In view of the fact that the Government has poured millions of dollars into research and development, into developing one of the finest combines made, or that used to be made, in the world, what is the Government prepared to do to hold on to the technology and give the unemployed hope that they will have jobs in the not too distant future? If the company should go into receivership, will the Government hold on to it until a Canadian buyer can take it over? These are all very crucial questions to a couple of thousand people in Brantford.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first, there is not enough time left in Question Period to answer all the questions the Hon. Member raised. With respect to his preamble, I want to assure him that this is not what I said about an industrial strategy. If he wants to check the Canadian Press story, he will find that I said. I stated as I responded yesterday to the Hon. Member for Northumberland, who has been a very distinguished Member of the House for many years, that the best way to devise an industrial strategy was business and labour in through the co-operation of business, labour and Government on a sectoral basis, the collection of sectoral strategies thus forming the industrial strategy of this country. That is what I said, and the Hon. Member should check the record.

Second, I am a little surprised at the question of the Hon. Member who indicates that he wants to save jobs with respect to White Farm. He knows that there are very delicate negotiations going on at the present time. The Government of Canada already has a substantial investment in technology for White Farm. We are trying to ensure the viability of the company, and at the same time we are trying to protect our technology. I am surprised the Hon. Member would want me to divulge publicly details of the ongoing discussions.

Oral Questions

EMPLOYMENT

FUTURE OF OUTREACH PROGRAMS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He described Outreach Programs as an extremely effective employment counselling service for disadvantaged Canadians. Yet at this time, which is the end of the fiscal year, rather than renewing the contract for Outreach Programs across the country, the Minister has put them on hold for three months while he examines another report with regard to the efficacy of Outreach Programs. Is this delay a prelude to a policy of long-term funding for Outreach Programs, or is it just to be a continuation of the insecurity of funding for Outreach Programs? Is the Minister willing to make available the Blair report concerning Outreach Programs? It has been on his desk since January.

• (1440)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, to begin with, the report is already public. It was sent out to all those organizations and individuals with whom we consulted. The Hon. Member is about two months out of date, but that is normal.

What I would want to point out to him is that the consultation was requested by the users of the Outreach Programs. I would feel honour bound to follow through on the commitments being made to those organizations, that we complete the consultation program and derive from the reports those findings we have, and then present them to my cabinet colleagues in terms of improvement and long-term stability of the Outreach Programs.

By the way, close to some 300 organizations we are now supporting provide various forms of counselling and guidance to special needs groups across Canada. In this case, Madam Speaker, I would say that we are following on course on schedule. When Cabinet has made its decision, the Hon. Member will be one of the first to know.

INDUSTRY AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF AREAS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary and it is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. The Industry and Labour Adjustment Program Committee, which the Minister chairs, has before it a number of requests for designation under ILAP. Among them is a very well-documented formal submission from the Regional District of Central Kootenay. This request is within the program guidelines. There are several others from Kamloops, Salmon Arm, and northwestern B.C. While I trust these proposals will receive serious consideration, I understand that the Cabinet Committee will be meeting in mid-April, not only to review these applications but to determine whether further ILAP applications will even be considered.

Will the Minister confirm this information regarding the April meeting? If it is true, how can the Government think of terminating applications under this important program after only one designation has been granted west of Ontario, especially in view of the fact that the Government has self-admittedly based its recovery strategy on targeting economic assistance to specific areas as opposed to a policy of general stimulation?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I can certainly confirm that all applications for ILAP consideration are treated very seriously by the Cabinet Committee. I take the statement by the Hon. Member as a representation on behalf of the constituency for which he speaks.

COMMUNICATIONS

SATELLITE RECEPTION BY NORTHERN RESIDENTS OF TELEVISED PROGRAMS

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. It concerns his recent statement on satellites. As the Minister knows, there are a number of companies in northern Canada which take pictures off satellites belonging to the United States and broadcast them over their cable networks. The CRTC is beginning a crackdown and is ordering these companies to stop the broadcast of the American pictures. Yet in the policy announcement which the Minister made recently he indicated that these restrictions would be removed. There is enormous confusion now. Could the Minister clear up the situation so that Canadians in northern Canada would know whether or not they will be able to continue to receive the American programs as they have in the past?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I know this whole question of equalization of services right across the country is of great interest to many Members on both sides of the House. We are talking about cable companies that presently hold licences. Those licences have conditions of licence, and obviously those conditions can be enforced and probably will be enforced by the CRTC. In the meantime I would like to have the Hon. Member note that the CRTC is just licensing a new CanCom satellite. This will make available to communities right across the country, through satellite delivery, a new three plus one service and will ensure that communities in all parts of the country have access to approximately the same level of service that is available in other parts of the country. Basically, the purpose and objective of the broadcasting strategy are to ensure that there is, indeed, equality of service across the country.

FISHERIES

KIRBY REPORT—REVIEW BY CABINET

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans concerning the restructuring of the Atlantic fishing industry. Would the Minister state whether the Cabinet Committee reviewing the Kirby Report and other proposals has concluded its study and reached a decision? If not, when will the study be concluded and a decision reached by the Cabinet? I remind the Minister that a new budget will be delivered soon and the financial resources for the fishing industry should be included in its provisions. I would also remind him that jobs are being lost now in the Atlantic fishing industry because of the delay.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am happy to say to the Hon. Member that a Cabinet Committee has been meeting and working at an intense pace with all participants in that sector. Last week we even had the pleasure of having with us the Premier of Newfoundland. Two days ago other groups from Newfoundland forwarded other proposals to the Chairman of the Cabinet Committee, the Minister of State for Economic Development. I can tell the Hon. Member that we are giving the matter the highest priority because we know the plight of the people and the communities involved, as well as the importance of it. What we are looking for is not only the configuration of the companies but their long-term economic viability. That sector was bailed out early in the 1970s and again in the middle of the 1970s. What we want this time is a long-term solution, and economic viability will be the ultimate and paramount objective.

NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER'S PROPOSAL

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has mentioned the presence of Premier Peckford at a meeting. He must be aware that yesterday or today Premier Peckford announced a new plan to operate the Newfoundland based offshore vessels under a new company.

Mr. Blaikie: Socialism.

Mr. Crosby: This company would involve Government, the fishermen's union, and private interests.

Mr. Riis: Socialism.

Mr. Crosby: There are other proposals besides this to nationalize the fishing industry, and others to privatize the fishing industry and keep it under private control. Will the Minister tell the House what proposal he and his colleagues in the Cabinet Committee prefer? Can he tell us now which direction he intends to go? Is the Minister going to support the proposal put forward by Premier Peckford, or the proposal put forward by Mr. Kirby in his report?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend refers to a proposal put forward by Premier Peckford last week. I have just received a Telex signed by the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland, the Premier, and the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Andrews, telling me that they are supporting another proposal put to us. I was speaking to another Premier from the Atlantic Region this morning. All I can tell the Hon. Member is that the points of view of each Government, each participant, the workers, the communities, are all being listened to. We have spent several days listening to the viewpoints of communities. I can assure the Hon. Member that what we are looking for is to establish companies whereby they would have a fair and reasonable chance at economic viability over the long term.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

HAWKER-SIDDELEY PLANT AT TRENTON, N.S.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of State for Economic Development about which I wrote him last January concerning the critical situation of the almost 2,000 skilled workers at Hawker-Siddeley in Trenton, Nova Scotia. As the Minister knows, this is a one industry town. Can he give any indication today of what measures he or the Government has in mind to relieve the situation? I want to remind him that this is one of Nova Scotia's largest employers, and I hope the Minister will have some initiatives to announce.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I think that question would more properly be addressed to the Minister responsible for regional economic expansion who is charged with the specific industrial project. We are all aware of the concern of the Hon. Member and we are all aware of the problems at the Hawker Siddeley plant. We are all hopeful that the situation will be turned around. With your permission, Madam Speaker, I might ask my colleague to respond with more specifics.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's response and I will be happy to take up his suggestion.

I have in fact asked the Minister responsible for DREE before, but I will ask him again what immediate hope he can give to this very large skilled work force which is capable of producing such things as railway cars, offshore oil components, and so on. I would remind the Minister, without wanting to be unfair, that extraordinary measures have been taken by the Government to subsidize large industries like Canadair, Maislin, and Michelin, and I suggest, with great deference, that it is time that something was done to assist this particular company which has never, to my knowledge, received anything but occasional orders which were well merited.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): First, Madam Speaker, I do not think that the Hon. Member or anybody in that area of the Province of Nova Scotia can complain about the amount of money that the Government of Canada has spent over the years to create jobs.

With respect to the specific question about Hawker Siddeley, I did talk with the President of this division of Hawker Siddeley, Mr. Corey, on several occasions, in fact. One of the reasons we undertook the Crowsnest program was our desire to expand the transportation system which will give companies like Hawker Siddeley an opportunity to bid on the substantial number of freight cars that will be needed by the two railroads across Canada over the next ten years.

Second, I did make a trip to Nigeria, when I was Trade Minister, and while there, worked on a very specific contract for Hawker Siddeley. We did offer some financial assistance and hopefully Hawker Siddeley will be successful in obtaining that contract. We have also talked with Hawker Siddeley concerning the possibility of diversifying their product line in order to be able to take advantage of the development in the offshore market.

I suggest that the Government of Canada has done a great deal for the company and hopefully by being competitive it will obtain those benefits and job creation which the Hon. Member wants.

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE

APPLICATION OF CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE TO FILM INDUSTRY

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications who stated last year that a 100 per cent capital cost allowance was absolutely essential to the development of the Canadian film industry. The Minister of Finance, who is standing right there, has announced that his budget is to be brought down on April 19.

I ask the Minister of Communications to rise in his place and say again, in front of the Minister of Finance, that the 100 per cent capital cost allowance is absolutely essential to the development of the Canadian film industry.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has quoted from the discussion paper that was leaked, but was not the final version of that discussion paper which was submitted to my departmental colleagues.

Mr. Bosley: In fact I was referring to a quote made by the Minister in Hansard a year ago. It was in response to a question I asked previously. It is no secret. Hansard is still a public document.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUPPORT FOR AUTHORS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question for the Minister is on the same issue of public policies. Will he rise in his place today and say in front of the Minister of Finance that at long last the new budget should contain some form of public support for the public use of authors' materials from Canadian libraries as has been recommended by the Writers' Union, the Canada Council and many others, so that the authors' community who feel so hard done by in budgets of the last few years might finally feel some hope?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I would be pleased to rise in my place. The Hon. Member changes his question every time he rises. It is not really a supplementary question but a completely different one. With respect to the first part of the question, we did not wait for any budget announcements to increase the amount of funds available to the creative community. The Hon. Member knows that we have taken what is actually a quantum leap, when one looks at the budgets that were available in the past to the Canadian creative community in the area of films, with the announcement of a new Canadian program production fund which will amount to some $60 million.

Indeed, this Government has made a very real and strong commitment to the creative community. I can also refer to the fact that many other Government Departments have had cuts but that similar cuts have not been made in the cultural sector. For instance, the Canada Council has received an increase over the past year.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF NEWFOUNDLAND CONNE RIVER INDIAN BAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He will know that the Newfoundland Government has stopped payment on cheques that were sent to the Conne River Indian Band. These cheques were the first funds that the band has received since the Canada-Newfoundland agreement broke down a year ago.

The band is desperate for funds but cannot accept the outrageous conditions that are placed upon these cheques by the Newfoundland Government. In light of the Newfoundland Government's action, will the Minister fulfil his earlier promise to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and ensure that the Conne River Indian people receive funds by some other method before the end of the fiscal year? As well, will the Minister indicate when the Government will act on the Conne River people's request to be registered as Indians so that they can obtain their rights, as other Indian people in Canada have?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the situation which the Hon. Member has set out. There is no other way for the Government to get money to the Conne River—

Mr. Manly: Promise.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Can I answer the question, Madam Speaker? If he wants to ask a supplementary, he can do so.

There is no other way to get money to the Conne River people other than through a federal-provincial agreement, which is namely the one we have with them. The only other way is for the Government to consider registering these people as status Indians and creating a reserve. We could make direct payments in that fashion. That matter is under consideration by the Government at this time. I cannot indicate what the decision will be because the Government has not made a decision.

In the meantime, this being the situation with only a day or two left in the fiscal year, the only answer is to get the money through the agreement, and my colleagues and I are negotiating with the Newfoundland Government with respect to ameliorating these conditions that the Conne River people found so objectionable that they indicated to the Newfoundland Government that they would cash their cheques but not obey the conditions. It was at that time that the Newfoundland Government stopped payment on the cheques. I would hope to change that situation in the next day or two.

TRADE

LEVEL OF CLOTHING IMPORTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As he knows, the advisory board representing industry and labour in textiles and clothing met with the Minister of State for International Trade and himself on March 10 to review the failure of Canada's attempts to negotiate bilateral agreements with South Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong, and China for the restriction of clothing imports into Canada.

He will recall that the Canadian clothing manufacturing industry is urging the Government to take immediate unilateral action to defend a fair share of Canada's market for Canadian workers and producers, with global import restrictions. Will the Minister confirm the recent report received from the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute that the imports of clothing units for January and February of 1983 were 18.8 per cent higher than in the same months last year, and that this rate of increase would hand over 45 per cent of the Canadian market by the end of 1983 to imports mainly from low wage countries?

Will the Minister tell the House when the Cabinet will announce a decision to act on the request of the industry to impose global import restrictions in order to defend the jobs of the remaining 150,000 Canadian workers in the industry?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I always thought it was the New Democratic Party that advocated more support for Third World countries. I am surprised that the Hon. Member would raise that particular question, however. Knowing his constituency and the requests from his constituency, I can understand why he requests the information. I will raise the matter with my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, who is responsible for the negotiations.

ENERGY

QUEBEC TAX ON GAS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Since the price of gas in my riding is terribly high because of Mr. Parizeau's gaz tax, I want to ask the Prime Minister if he would be willing, as he did on the 6 and 5 policy to call the Provincial First Ministers to order, especially the Premiers of Quebec and Ontario, who are abusing their authority to tax gas and thus putting undue financial pressure on people on low incomes and on the economy in our area.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member's line of reasoning, and I share his indignation concerning a measure that does not seem logical from the point of view of economic development. However, I would rather not make direct representations to the Government of the Province of Quebec on a matter that falls under its jurisdiction. I am therefore depending on the Hon. Member to bring to bear whatever political arguments he may wish, but I shall not join him in that endeavour.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DELAY IN ISSUANCE OF PAY CHEQUES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. What excuse has the Government to offer for its failure to issue pay cheques to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police? In his response let him not say it was a delay in passing the borrowing authority Bill since there is the provision of Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act which the Government has exercised four times to date, and which could have been exercised for paying the cheques of the members of the Force.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I will not use that excuse because there really is no problem. The cheques are payable on April 1. As I understand it, Royal Assent will be given today to Bill C-146, the interim supply Bill. On the date of those cheques, members of the RCMP, like all other public servants, will be able to cash them. There is absolutely no problem of backing being available for those cheques to be cashed.

Mr. Nielsen: We passed that legislation, the appropriations Bill, through the House. It passed through the other place on March 24 last. There is simply no excuse whatsoever for those cheques not having gone out as they traditionally have in the past so that Members of the Force would have them by now.

MR. TAYLOR—CONSIDERATION OF BILL C-671

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on Tuesday, March 29, 1983, meets the requirements of the Standing Order as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he could give us some indication of the business for the week of April 11.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker, but first, now that we know the date of the budget, I would like, after consultation with the House Leaders of the Opposition Parties, to move:

That notwithstanding any Standing Order on the day designated by the Minister of Finance for his budget presentation, the House shall spend its sitting at 6:00 p.m. until 8:00 p.m., and at that time the business considered shall be the budget presentation of the Minister of Finance and the reply thereto by the Members of the Opposition, provided that when that Member's motion to adjourn the debate is adopted, the House shall adjourn.

I have raised this question with my colleagues and it seems that if the question is now put you will get the consent that is required.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: As far as the business of the House is concerned when the House resumed after the Easter recess, I can inform my hon. colleagues that on Monday, April 11, we shall resume debate on the report stage—and I hope the third reading stage will follow as soon as possible—of Bill C-136 which concerns the Small Business Investment Grants Act. Hon. Members are aware that the Bill arises from a previous budget and must be passed as soon as possible. That will be the order of business for Monday, April 11, and if we do not finish on Monday, we shall resume debate on the 12th on the same Bill. The next Bill will be Bill C-95 concerning sports pools, and we would like to complete the report and third reading stages of this Bill as well. Wednesday, April 13, will be set aside for Private Members' Business, according to the Standing Orders, and I would like to officially designate Thursday and Friday, April 14 and 15, as Opposition days in connection with the business of supply. It is customary that the Government occasionally allots two consecutive days, to give the Opposition an opportunity to debate the subject of its choice, as usual. We have had so many questions about the possibility of having a debate on cruise missiles that on April 14 and 15, the Opposition, if it chooses to do so, will be free to use either both days or one day for that purpose.

Madam Speaker, that will be the business of the House for the week following the Easter recess, at least for the time being.

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS RELATING TO COAL LIQUEFACTION PROJECT IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 46(2) and in the spirit of the Access to Information Act, additional documents relating to the Coal Liquefaction Project in Nova Scotia will be tabled on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The Minister has obtained the agreement of a third party to proceed, without violating the confidentiality of commercial aspects of this enterprise. This last set of documents, Madam Speaker, should fulfil the Minister's obligations to the House in this respect.

MR. TAYLOR—CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the sad story of Kelly Cook is known to thousands of Canadians. On April 22, 1981, this beautiful fifteen-year-old girl was abducted from her home in Standard, where she lived with her parents, Marion and Walter Cook, and her sister and brother; two and one half months later she was found murdered, bound with ropes and weighted down with cinder blocks in Chin Lake, in southern Alberta. The murderer is still on the loose.

The broken-hearted parents, two excellent Canadian citizens, in an endeavour to make sure such a terrible tragedy would not happen to any other child, undertook to secure the names of people across western Canada asking that capital punishment be reinstated.

I present this petition today containing 1,418 signatures all wanting the Olsons, the Browns and the Peters and the murderer of Kelly to have the ultimate punishment, so that they will never again commit such dastardly crimes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC OFFICERS STANDARDS OF CONDUCT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-679, an Act respecting standards of conduct for public officers.

He said: Madam Speaker, this Private Member's Bill arises out of the so-called Gillespie affair which cast a dark shadow over the public life of Canada. The Bill would formalize into law those standards of conduct for public officials which are presently set out only as guidelines, guidelines which the Government has chosen to ignore. It would cover Ministers, ex-Ministers, Parliamentary Secretaries and, I would hope, if adopted, could do something to wipe away that long, dark shadow.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PURCHASE OF WINE FOR NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

Question No. 4,060—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 3,085 which stated in part that purchases of white wine by the National Arts Centre were made from Almaden Wines of California in the amounts of $2,434 on September 11, 1980; $9,576 on December 5, 1980; $9,576 on April 16, 1981; and $23,673 on July 28, 1981 (a) is the wine being used as a house wine (b) were those the largest purchases made by the Centre in the past three years (c) for what reason was a Canadian house wine not used?

2. Are there plans to use a Canadian house wine and, if so, what are they?

3. Is it government policy to be prejudiced against Canadian wine producers and, if so, for what reason?

4. (a) Does the Government have a "Buy Canadian" program (b) will the program apply to the purchasing of wine at the Centre and, if so, on what date?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the National Arts Centre Corporation and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows:

1. (a) Yes.

(b) No. Three of those were the largest single purchases in the period referred to but not the largest in volume or amount.

(c) Canadian wines are always available in the restaurants and for banquets. In the opinion of the Director of Restaurants, however, Almaden provided the best quality at a reasonable price for use as house wine. Surveys of patrons' opinion indicated their preference for this wine, also.

2. It is the responsibility of the Director of Restaurants to periodically check quality of wines and public acceptance. When the combined quality and relative price of Canadian wines lead to greater acceptance they will be introduced as house wine. See reply to question No. 3,085 tabled February 22, 1982.

3. No.

4. (a) No, the Government does not have a legislated "Buy Canadian" program. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, however, administers a "Shop Canadian" program which encourages Canadians to purchase Canadian made products where price and quality are competitive with imported counterparts. This program is purely voluntary. (b) Not applicable.

FILM "FOUR CENTURIES: FIREARMS IN CANADA"

Question No. 4,540—Mr. Beatty:

3. To whom is the film being made available?

4. Will there be any charge to individuals or organizations who view the film?

5. For what reason has the film been produced?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of the Solicitor General and the National Film Board as follows:

1. Yes, the film entitled "Four Centuries: The Firearm in Canada" was co-produced by the Ministry of the Solicitor General and the National Film Board. Production costs were approximately $118,535 for the Ministry of the Solicitor General and $84,633 for the National Film Board for a total cost of $203,168. Running time: 26 minutes 52 seconds in both official languages (two films).

2. The estimated amounts to be spent by the Ministry of the Solicitor General are as follows: (a) $32,000 on promotion which includes production and distribution of a poster/brochure and special regional showings of the film; and (b) $31,850 on distribution costs which include copies of the film for regional National Film Board libraries.

In so far as the National Film Board is concerned: (a) $12,330. (b) An amount of $26,557 has been allocated for the distribution of this film of which $6,000 will be spent in the first year.

3. The film is being made available to: the general public through N.F.B. film libraries across Canada, television and cable stations, chief provincial territorial firearms officers, provincial hunter safety co-ordinators, Canadian Wildlife Federation, Dominion of Canada Rifle Association, Shooting Federation of Canada, Royal Canadian Mounted Police film library.

4. No.

5. The film has been produced to assist provincial and local authorities involved in firearms safety to reduce the number of accidents and fatalities caused by carelessness and the misuse of firearms. With the emphasis on responsibility and safety, the film demonstrates the correct care and handling of firearms, explains Canada's history of firearms use and how today's controls were designed to deter criminal and irresponsible use.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CAMPAIGNING BY NON-RESIDENTS

On the Order: Public Bills.

May 2, 1980—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of Bill C-412, An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (campaigning by non-residents).

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask for unanimous consent of the House—and we have given various Parties some notice of this—to allow Bill C-412 to stand in favour of Bill C-678 of my colleague, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish).

Madam Speaker: Of course, this can only happen if the House gives its unanimous consent. Does the House give its unanimous consent to the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody that his Bill stand and that the Bill in the name of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake be considered instead? Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Herbert: No.

Madam Speaker: There obviously is not unanimous consent.

● (1510)

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, the Member who said no did so, as I understand it, because he did not believe that he had been consulted. I would like to point out in order that it be clear that we did in fact consult all Members in the House a week ago and indicated that we would be seeking unanimous consent. That is clearly on the record. Recognizing that, I wonder whether the Hon. Member would reconsider his negating of the question that we asked.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I feel very strongly about the right of Members to decide for themselves. I did hear the discussion at that time and I heard the response to that discussion. I think maybe I made the point that we, the Members present at the particular moment when the point is brought up, which is right now, should have the right to say yes or no. I made my point. I will reverse my decision. The matter can proceed.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, some Members are aware of the exchange that did occur the other day wherein the Government House Leader indicated his great displeasure at the demonstration which the New Democratic Party brought about, and at that time he indicated he would not give consent. He is not here today. I think he made his point. We do have a long-standing tradition where Members agree to swap positions that we on this side as a rule do not interfere. Therefore, I do not believe there will be any objection from this side, as the Hon. Member has so indicated.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): My understanding is that the House had achieved unanimous consent. Accordingly, it is moved by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the motion moved by Mr. Rose be withdrawn and be replaced by the motion moved by Mr. Anguish.

Accordingly, since there is unanimous consent—

Mr. Lambert: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is faced with a difficulty in that a moment ago there was unanimous consent. However, another Hon. Member indicates there may not be unanimous consent. The Chair will determine whether or not once again there is unanimous consent. Accordingly, I will hear the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I did just come to the House. I have heard of these propositions where Bills get tacked on at the end of the list, then there is some fancy footwork and it is announced at the beginning of this Private Members' session that this swap has gone on. It happened last year with regard to Canada Day and Dominion Day. I refuse to go through that sort of thing again.

I have three Bills that are spread throughout the list and I would welcome the opportunity of debating any one of them. We could go through the list and pick one of my Bills. I forget their order. One is on income tax, one on redistribution and one on whatever it may be, I will soon find out.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, clearly had the Hon. Member been here when the question was put, he could have denied unanimous consent; but I submit that when the question was put, he did not object at that point. I do not believe he can turn back the clock. I may not agree with the Hon. Member on this issue, but it is an important issue and we do not want to stand in the way of there being some debate on it.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think you have shown some leniency, Mr. Speaker, in calling a second time for unanimous consent after we had in fact achieved that. I point out to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who rose just a few moments ago, that this is a very different situation from that to which he was referring. If he can find a Member in his Party to defer his position on the Order Paper with regard to Private Members' Bills, he can do that.

We have not asked to tamper with the order other than the fact that the New Democratic Party, in the name of the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), has a Private Members' Bill on for today. However, he feels that the Bill I have put forward, seconded by the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky), is of paramount importance to be discussed before this House recesses for the Easter break.

The Members of the Conservative Party should take this into consideration. We are not asking that their Bills be put lower on the Order Paper, only that a Bill put forward by one NDP Member be changed to a position held by another NDP Member. In light of that, Mr. Speaker, possibly you could seek unanimous consent again. Maybe the Hon. Member will reconsider.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I wonder if I might just address myself to the House, and in particular to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) is quite correct. I sought unanimous consent and the House gave its unanimous consent.

Mr. Lambert: I beg your pardon. I called "no", but I was not in my seat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As a courtesy to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, after in my opinion the House had given its unanimous consent, I then noticed and heard the Hon. Member for Edmonton West indicate that he would not be agreeable to unanimous consent.

The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) put the point very well. What has happened, and I will review the matter very briefly, is that the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) had a Private Members' Bill to amend the Canada Elections Act before the House. There seems to have been some discussion. As a matter of fact, as I understand it, the House was agreeable to exchanging that Hon. Member's Private Members' Bill for another standing in the name of another Member of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake. I am hopeful that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West will accept the understanding that has arisen, particularly because I declared that there had been unanimous consent given.

After an explanation of what happened, perhaps the Hon. Member for Edmonton West might want to reconsider. If I am put in the position of having to rule whether unanimous consent was given, it will in a sense be difficult. It may consist of trying to make a judgment based on a split second of timing, and I would rather not do that. Obviously it is the preference of the House and of the Chair that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West consider the proposal that has been put forward and allow the House to ascertain whether in those circumstances he agrees to give his consent as well in order to provide unanimous consent. I have to hear the Hon. Member for Edmonton West in that regard and then I will hear the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the position you are in, but I want to tell you that as I came into the House the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) was on his feet saying that there had been some agreement to exchange Bills and that there would be no objection from the point of view of the Government, notwithstanding what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) said yesterday or the day before.

I came into the Chamber in the centre, saw precisely what was happening and I shouted "no". Then I had to go behind the curtain and again come forward. By that time the Speaker was on his feet and putting the motion. I still called "no". If it is a judgment call and you feel that you have called a strike as against a ball, and you are not going to change it, so be it.

• (1520)

I want to put on record my objection in principle to some of these deals of swapping Bills at the bottom of the list for those at the top. That is the wrong way to proceed. As a matter of fact, I object to the way the Parliamentary Secretary proceeds with Private Members' Bills. They are supposed to be proceeded with in the order in which they have been filed; then after that, in the order in which they appear. Then the Member in question whose Bill appears shall be canvassed as to whether he wishes to go forward. There seems to be a tight little old boys' club of some sort, or whatever it may be, to get certain Bills forward for discussion and then there is some further playing under the table, some meetings going on, with regard to others.

There is no reason why a Bill which has just appeared on the Order Paper, or relatively recently, should be called when there have been Bills which have been on this Order Paper for nigh on three years, such as mine, and I object to that. Within that context, Mr. Speaker, you can make up your own mind.

Mr. Smith: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): No, I believe I will use the privilege which is given to the Chair in these circumstances. I appreciate the offer and the courtesy indicted by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. He has indicated that he will live with the decision that is made. My problem is that I believe the Chair has, as its first duty, to consider the individual rights of every Hon. Member of this House. I must say that the Hon. Member has made his own argument. He indicated that on his entry into the House he did not consent to unanimous agreement. If he is not willing to change his view in that regard, then I am sorry, I believe, despite the feeling of the House and despite my initial reaction that there was unanimous consent, it is the Chair's responsibility to defend an individual Member's right. He has indicated, and obviously the Chair and the House must take his word, that at the moment unanimous consent was requested he said no. Once an Hon. Member stands on his feet and tells this House and the Chair that he had indicated that he would not give unanimous consent, I believe it is the duty of the Chair to accept that Hon. Member's word.

Because the Hon. Member for Edmonton West was so courteous in his willingness to abide by the ruling of the Chair, I feel I have no further choice but to put to him a request that he consider the will of the House and indicate whether or not he will give his consent to the exchange of two Private Members' Bills. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West?

Mr. Lambert: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, who said he had made his point, had indicated to you that while he objected to the procedure, he was willing to go along with the decision which you had made and called a little earlier. That is my view. He did not say it perhaps explicitly, but he is a distinguished Hon. Member and fair minded. He is a former Speaker and is sensitive to these matters.

I appeal to him to let this matter proceed, if you need further word from him, on the ground that we have no intention in this Party of making any deals which would interfere with the order of his Bills at all. It was a matter that I voluntarily gave up my place to my colleague. I will certainly lose my place because I have given it up. That does not interfere with the place of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West's Bills at all. I am interested in his argument. I respect his decision. However, I believe he indicated to you that while he felt another way when he was walking in here, he respected your decision that there was unanimous consent. That is where I will leave it.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, this is a rather unfortunate exchange. I would like to point out what I understand of the rules under which we are operating since the beginning of the year. First, this is not a Party matter, it is a matter for individual Members. Therefore, there is no question that one New Democratic Party Member can exchange Bills with another Member of his Party because Party affiliation has nothing to do with the selection.
