STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

SPORTS

ROYAL CANADIAN HENLEY REGATTA

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, the decision made by the executive of the Canadian Amateur Rowing Association to take the Royal Canadian Henley Regatta from St. Catharines created consternation in rowing in Canada and abroad. I understand the decision was made by the executive of CARA alone. Despite the deep significance of such a drastic change in policy and tradition, and its obvious effect on rowing in Canada, it was not allowed to be voted on by the membership of CARA at the annual meeting. The Canadian Henley Rowing Corporation has consistently registered its deep concern, but so far it has not met with any great success.

We of the Welland riding, and of the city of St. Catharines specifically, have no quarrel with the city of Montreal or the sports people who make up the rowing fraternity in that great city. We wish them well in their planning to develop a major rowing regatta for their Olympic course, and I state quite clearly that CHRC stands ready to provide its expertise and work with them in the advancement of rowing in Montreal and in Canada.

The issue here is a simple one. The title to the Royal Canadian Henley Regatta is vested in St. Catharines. No one else has any rights to this title. So, Madam Speaker, at the usual time in the summers of 1983 and 1984, and thereafter, there will be rowed in the city of St. Catharines a regatta known as the Royal Canadian Henley Regatta. I believe—

Madam Speaker: Order.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CYPRUS—CASE OF MISSING GREEK CYPRIOTS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, since the 1974 Turkish invasion of Cyprus, a member of the Commonwealth, the invaders have consistently refused to provide information on the fate of missing persons as a result of the invasion. Indisputable evidence ascertains that 1,619 Greek Cypriots were detained by the invaders in 1974, and their whereabouts are unknown to this day. On December 9, 1982, the United Nations General Assembly approved a resolution on missing persons in Cyprus calling for a speedy solution to this humanitarian problem. On January 11 of this year the European Parliament adopted a resolution on the problem of missing persons in Cyprus, urging the committee to meet and proceed with all investigations required.

Canada's voice regarding this most tragic circumstance, Madam Speaker, has been conspicuous by its absence in its votes in the United Nations, and by refusing to add its aid to the more than 100 nations around the world in support of equitably resolving the Cypriot problem. This is not a time for fence sitting, it is a time to assert ourselves positively on the side of justice for all the people of Cyprus and their strife-torn country.

STATUS OF WOMEN

MANDATORY AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, mandatory affirmative action is absolutely essential if women are to achieve equality in the work place. As a major employer, the federal Government should be a role model for private employers. Instead, it has failed abysmally. Government pilot projects have no teeth, they are just window dressing. Only 4.8 per cent of management personnel in the Public Service are women. Yet in the low paying service jobs 81.6 per cent are women, many of whom earn under $10,000 a year. And this is the record of which the Minister responsible for the status of women says she is so proud.

The Government's record on voluntary affirmative action in the private sector is also an abysmall failure. Fewer than 5 per cent of all employers approached agreed to consider affirmative action, and none have actually taken action yet. Last year the Minister talked tough about requiring mandatory affirmative action, and then she backed down. We have obtained confidential information that the Cabinet is currently considering more discussion and consultation only. The recession is no excuse for this reprehensible lack of action. Mandatory affirmative action must be approved immediately so that programs can be implemented over the next few years. Women of Canada demand action now. They are tired of lip service, empty promises, and platitudes. They will not be condemned to low-paying job ghettos forever.

LABOUR RELATIONS

EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS DISPUTE

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, I bring the attention of the House to the serious transportation problem in the Atlantic Provinces. I know from discussions with my colleagues that they share my concern about the continuing dispute involving the machinists' union as well as the pilots, with Eastern Provincial Airways. I take this opportunity to invite the Department of Transport as well as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) to join together to see if their officials cannot develop ways and means to assist the officials of this airline company and the pilots' union in determining if they cannot come to some amicable settlement.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that this strike, which has gone on since January of this year, is causing a very severe hardship for Canadians living in the four Atlantic Provinces. It is having an adverse effect on the economy there, and I implore the House to invite the Minister of Labour to see if there is not some way that he can have the president of that Company get a little closer to the union to bring about a settlement at the earliest possible date.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, the word is out that the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) agents are taking legal action because a new highrise luxury apartment building is diminishing the value of his home and spoiling his view over Montreal. Could the Prime Minister tell this House whether or not he has stopped lately and counted the number of views he has spoiled for Canadians, the 1.5 million jobless, the ruined and bankrupt businesses, and for all those who have lost confidence in the Government? Can he explain why he is deserving of any consideration whatsoever at the same time that he is casting a shadow over the lives of millions of Canadians, thereby denying them their day in the sun?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PAYMENT OF CHILD SUPPORT BY PRISON INMATES

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Madam Speaker, a matter of concern has recently been brought to my attention and stems from what amounts to an injustice to Canadian taxpayers and to those families which rely on, or are dependent upon, child support payments by an ex-spouse.

Presently, persons who are required to pay child support by reason of a court order are not required by law to continue this child support when they enter prison, even though they may have earnings as an inmate. While it is recognized that the living allowance or wage earned in prison is minimal, the basic requirement to uphold their responsibility of helping to provide for their children, should not be forgone.

I would ask that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) review this situation and require inmates, who were paying child support before they entered the penitentiary system, to continue to fulfil their court ordered and social responsibilities, and pay a portion of the support, no matter how small this amount may be. Such action would remove an injustice from the system and could serve to enhance the rehabilitation process by reinforcing the concept that citizens of a society cannot participate in society by avoiding their responsibilities at the expense of the general taxpayer.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DENIAL OF BENEFITS DURING TRAINING COURSES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) recently announced that persons receiving unemployment insurance benefits will be allowed to take full-time language training if the training is required to obtain employment. This change of heart by the Government is commendable, but my purpose in rising today is to suggest a natural extension of that policy. Thousands of unemployed Canadians receiving benefits would willingly take retraining courses to improve their chances of getting a job. Many will pay their own tuition. But, as soon as they do, the Unemployment Insurance Commission cancels their right to benefits on the basis that they are not available to take a job.

I have had constituents in my riding of Simcoe North complain that these rules are illogical and unfair. The rules and regulations should be changed to encourage all unemployed Canadians to take retraining courses. While they are in full-time attendance at those courses their Unemployment Insurance benefits should not be cancelled.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, we are aware of the intention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to sue those involved in the construction of a high rise apartment which obscures the view from the house in Montreal in which so many Canadians hope he will soon permanently reside. These same Canadians still dare to hope that this social and environmental injustice done to the Prime Minister by the invisible hand of the real estate market, in Montreal, will move him to action on much larger issues of a comparable nature in which the so-called virtues of free enterprise have a far greater impact on the lives of average Canadians, most of whom do not have a privileged view to defend, or the money with which to defend it.

When will we see some action on the way the marketplace has left many Canadians jobless and homeless, never mind without a view? When are we going to see action on the way free enterprise developers, in their unmitigated search for profits, have damaged the water, air, forest, and wildlife which constitute the common heritage of all Canadians and not just the private property of one person? Maybe for example, if the Norman Wells pipeline were going through the Prime Minister's background, it would be a different story.

When Canadians see the Prime Minister as concerned about these and other issues, they will be more inclined to sympathize with the plight of poor Pierre, who is having his overview of the Liberal kingdom of Montreal obscured. Until then, we can only see the fact that the Prime Minister is reported to have hired as his lawyer, Peter Blaikie, the past president of the Tories and prospective leadership contender, as the latest manifestation of the Liberal-Tory coalition in Canada, an alliance of names which I personally find unfortunate.

Madam Speaker: Order.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DECISION ON CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS

Mrs. Eva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, yesterday, the United States Department of Commerce published a preliminary decision according to which the subsidies provided under certain programs to Canadian producers of lumber, shingles and fencing are judged to be negligible. As a result, no countervailing duty will be levied on Canadian exports to the United States. Madam Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to offer our congratulations and sincere thanks to the industry and the federal and provincial agencies concerned for their joint efforts to convince the United States Department of Commerce that stumpage rights should not be considered a form of subsidy.

As you know, I represent a riding that has over ten sawmills, and a large part of their production is sold to our American neighbours. I would urge the Minister responsible for External Trade to continue his excellent work for the next round on May 23, when industrial assistance programs such as DREE projects and certain subsidy and loan programs will be examined by the United States Department of Commerce. In my riding of Rimouski-Témiscouata, Madam Speaker, the lumber industry alone provides thousands of jobs in the mills and in the bush.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday, when the Prime Minister confirmed that he was considering a review of the conflict of interest guidelines, he made it clear that he was distressed about the way in which they were interpreted. In view of the fact that the Government's concern seems to be more about the public relations aspects of the guidelines than about their substance or the behaviour of Government officials, how can Canadians be expected to have any confidence in this review?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member's premise to the question is correct. I do not see how he could conclude that the Government is not concerned about these guidelines. After all, the guidelines have been produced as a result of the initiative of the Prime Minister. They have been circulated, and the Prime Minister said yesterday that he was presently reflecting upon whether there is any possibility of improving these guidelines.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, the Liberals' idea of improving these guidelines is to water them down so that, if the Gillespie affair were to happen again, there would be no sanctions against officials; it would simply be a matter that no allegations could be made that the guidelines were breached.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REVIEW

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, why will the Acting Prime Minister not agree that the only way to deal with an instance like this is to agree to have a parliamentary review by a parliamentary Committee of the guidelines, to ensure that they are meaningful and that they have some teeth to them?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think we have seen the political atmosphere which has developed around these guidelines, and I doubt whether sending the guidelines to a parliamentary Committee would change or improve that political atmosphere. I doubt whether they would be considered with the objectivity which is required at the present time.

Mr. Beatty: If a Liberal were caught trying to burn down the Parliament Buildings, the Government would legalize arson.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF MONITORING OFFICER

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, will the Acting Prime Minister please give us the assurance that, in order to ensure the highest standards of probity are followed in the future, an independent officer of Parliament will be appointed who can report to Parliament, not to the Government of the day, on whether or not a breach of the guidelines has taken place?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked for a parliamentary Committee. How he asks for an independent individual. I do not know what his third suggestion might be.

Mr. Beatty: Resign.

Mr. MacEachen: He seems to have a number of proposals. The Prime Minister stated yesterday that he was giving consideration to or reflecting upon the possibility of improving the guidelines, particularly to remove the possibility of the unjustified interpretations which have been placed upon these guidelines by members of the Opposition. I would be personally in favour of any process which might induce Hon. Members to read the guidelines, to understand them, and to interpret them in a just and fair way. That has not been done up to the present time.

OBSERVANCE OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that the ordinary effect of the guidelines imposed by the Prime Minister would be that they be observed to the letter of those guidelines and, if they are not, an offending Minister must resign?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we have been over that ground a thousand times in the last two weeks. I have nothing further to add to the subject, or indeed to the question which has been raised so frequently on the other side.

Mr. Nielsen: I simply put that question to the Deputy Prime Minister because I am sure Hon. Members of the House would have been interested in what he considers to be a fair and just interpretation of the guidelines. Indeed, that is our interpretation; if the guidelines imposed by the Prime Minister are not observed, the offender should resign.

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES TO MINISTERS SERVING IN SENATE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me ask the Deputy Prime Minister a question concerning a press release mentioning the Andras and Gillespie cases as well as comments made by Senators Olson and Perrault. Since this question, exposed by the media, involves two sitting Ministers in the Government, and some that we cannot question in this House because they are in the other place, does the Deputy Prime Minister not feel that the House is owed an explanation as to that case, since those two Members of the Government have themselves drawn a distinction between the Andras Case and the Gillespie case?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as I understand it, the Ministers have drawn a distinction with respect to the facts, and the facts differ in different cases.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: They are not the same because of the difference in the type of applicants for assistance, for example. There were a variety, as I understand it, in the case which the Hon. Member raised today. To that extent the facts differ, and obviously facts will differ with each different case.

An Hon. Member: That is a pretty weak answer.

AIR TRANSPORT

WINNIPEG AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL CENTRE—EFFECT ON FAMILIES OF PROPOSED TRANSFER

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. He was asked a question last week with regard to the Liberal Government's plans to move the Winnipeg air traffic control centre from Winnipeg to Edmonton and Toronto. The Minister said:

All that is being considered is a temporary relocation of controllers—

Can the Minister tell us whether he is going to move these 250 men and their families, and is the Minister going to be finding accommodation for them in Edmonton and Toronto? What are they to do with their Winnipeg homes? How long will they be away from Winnipeg, in Edmonton and Toronto? I would like a clear explanation of what is to happen to their families because that is of particular interest to the 250 controllers.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have asked for that information but I have not yet been given it. This rumour is one based on a project only, not on an actual plan. If my memory serves me well, that change would take place in 1988. Obviously we have a bit of time to think about how it will be done. May I emphasize that this is not going to happen tomorrow, next month, or the month after that.

FUTURE OF PRESENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I would like the Minister to make sure about that by asking his officials, because we have been through this sort of thing in Winnipeg so many times, for instance, with the Air Canada overhaul base. We were told that was not going to be moved. We were told that we were going to get an aerospace training centre. That never materialized.

Are these 250 individuals going to be moved, are they going to be laid off, or is the Minister going to be hiring new individuals in Toronto and Edmonton?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have already said that this was a temporary action in order to remedy the asbestos danger which exists at the airport. The action being taken is for the very good health of the employees at that airport. The motivation is, of course, an excellent one. As soon as I get the information on how many people will be involved, how long the move will last and when it will take place, I will rush and communicate it to my hon. friend. I will make it a point of honour to do that as soon as I get the information.

TRADE

RESTRICTIONS ON FOREIGN OWNED BRANCH PLANTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of International Trade. It concerns the tens of thousands of jobs that have been lost over the last few years. I have here with me copies of previously unreleased confidential documents which quote Government officials in the Departments of Industry and Trade, and also Canadian trade commissioners back in the 1950s and 1960s. From these documents we read that a majority of foreign-owned firms have prohibited their Canadian branch plants from exporting from this country, meaning the loss of tens of thousands of jobs. The documents quote recommendations from officials, and also recommendations from Canadian trade commissioners.

Why did the Government throughout the 1950s, 1960s, 1970s and into the 1980s, ignore the advice of its own officials and trade commissioners?

• (1425)

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, one of the real problems that I will have is answering for the Government in the 1950s and 1960s. I was in provincial government in the 1970s. However, I can say to the Hon. Member that it is certainly our desire to encourage any foreign subsidiaries that are located in Canada to participate fully in export markets. Indeed, in the few months that I have been in this portfolio, I personally have had occasion to discuss that question with some people in the private sector so that that encouragement may be made quite plain.

I think there are many foreign-owned companies that are located in Canada which play a very important part in our export statistics. There may be some that do not fully take advantage for one reason or another. If the Hon. Member has any specific instances that he wants to talk about, I would be happy to investigate them for him.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister is now the Minister who is responsible. I remind him that, because of the lack of adequate freedom of information laws, it is difficult to get our hands on all the documents we want. I will send him the file numbers of several documents from which I am quoting today.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I think we want straight answers from the Minister because, in the documents I have, there is a quote, for example, from a trade commissioner who said, "Probably 75 per cent of the subsidiary companies have their exports strictly controlled by the parent." I also have a document which quotes a senior officer in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce who concluded that, "Foreign capital was the biggest problem facing the Department in its endeavours to expand Canada's exports."

Since that kind of advice came from Government officials and since the present Minister in charge of Treasury Board, who was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in 1980, failed to have Cabinet look at this again, why has the Government not acted to force branch plants of foreign firms to create jobs in this country and export from Canada to the world market?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is dealing in simplifications. First, I think he would recognize that there are many companies that have invested in this country from exterior sources that are deeply involved in the export business. The Hon. Member could consider the Province that I come from, for instance. In Nova Scotia, most of the exports which we have been able to achieve in the manufacturing field have been as a consequence of companies locating in Nova Scotia and exporting into other markets, thus creating jobs in our country that otherwise would not have been there.

The situation varies according to the nature of the economy in the different parts of the country. I think it would not be wise, and in the best interests of Canada for achieving development and investment, to have absolute and over-all rule of the type the Hon. Member is suggesting. I think a better policy, and one that I would want to follow, would be to encourage most actively all companies that locate in Canada, to utilize export markets to the very highest degree possible. Again, if the Hon. Member or anyone else wants to talk to me about a specific company that is missing opportunities because of foreign ownership, I would be happy to investigate.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER FORCE BRANCH PLANTS TO EXPORT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, the situation does not vary. I will be happy to send some information to the Minister after Question Period so he can read for himself what the trade commissioners and government officials have been saying over the years.

Next week, McClelland & Stewart will be publishing a book by Professor Glen Williams, entitled "Not for Export". It will deal with many more of these memos and documents that have been obtained over the years which point out the restriction on the creation of jobs in this country by branch plants.

I noticed on the news last night that the Minister is now a movie critic. Perhaps he can become a book critic and tell the House, after he finishes the book, what action he plans to take to force the branch plants of the foreign multinationals to export from Canada and thus create thousands of jobs for Canadians, and not for Americans, Europeans or Japanese?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I will be quite happy to review the book for the Hon. Member and give him my best impressions of it. I do not think that he should form his final conclusions based upon the view of one author. There should be great respect for the written word, but it has its limitations.

I say again to the Hon. Member that there are some foreign companies that have better records than others in that regard. But the fact remains that Canada, as a whole, is exporting a larger proportion of our Gross National Product—over 30 per cent—than almost any other highly industrialized country.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PENALTY IMPOSED ON SMALL BUSINESSES FOR NOT USING POSTAL CODES

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post, but possibly, in his absence, the Parliamentary Secretary could address himself to the matter. Canada Post has exceeded itself. It has now brought in a five cent penalty for small-businesses who do not send their mail out with the proper postal code or size of envelopes. Apparently the reason is that such mail cannot be sorted in the automatic equipment and must be handsorted, which is more expensive. Canada Post has referred to this as being a disincentive to small-businessmen.

I assure you, Madam Speaker, that the small-businessmen of Canada do not need any further disincentives from the Government.

Madam Speaker: Is there a question coming?

Mr. Bradley: Yes, Madam Speaker. Because of the confusion following this foolish announcement, could the Parliamentary Secretary advise us whether the penalty will be charged to the senders such as the Medicine Hat, Alberta, Chamber of Commerce, or to the receivers, as in Grande Prairie, Alberta, and whether the penalty charge will be double the rate, as in Medicine Hat, or the single rate, as in Grande Prairie?

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that the Canada Post Corporation is an independent corporation. I have noted his question and I shall try to get an answer for the Hon. Member as soon as possible.

[English]

REQUEST THAT PENALTY SCHEME BE HALTED

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the Parliamentary Secretary's honesty. I hope Canada Post will not ask the letter carriers to collect the penalty. They take enough abuse for the errors of senior bureaucrats.

I suppose the businessmen in Kingston, now that they have lost their automatic equipment, will be required to pay the total penalty.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. First of all, the Parliamentary Secretary noted the question. However, concerning the second question, I do not know what supplementary question can arise from a question of which notice has been taken. The Hon. Member must be brief.

Mr. MacEachen: Good point.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bradley: I guess, Madam Speaker, that it is Wednesday.

I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary would also give notice to his Minister concerning a question as to whether he would be willing to ask Canada Post to drop this foolish decision, and to advise and direct it to carry out the instructions of Parliament, namely, to deliver the mail in this country.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I know that the President of the Post Office Corporation is holding a meeting with Members of our Party. I believe it was also in an effort to explain the Corporations policies to Hon. Members of this House that the President of the Corporation met with the Members of other Parties as well.

I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of the many steps which the Post Office Corporation has taken to improve productivity, to improve its labour relations, and basically to improve the service that it gives to the Canadian public. Once in a while it would be nice to hear him admitting some of the good things that Canada Post is doing—

Some Hon. Members: What?

Mr. Berger: —rather than always emphasizing the deficiencies.

INCREASE IN COST OF MAILING CATALOGUES

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post, but in his absence I hope the Parliamentary Secretary can answer my question. Last year in Malpeque, a small business operator in the garden seed business could send his catalogues to his customers as third class mail at a cost of fourteen and a half cents per catalogue. This year the cost is 64 cents per catalogue. The result is a whopping increase in cost of over 400 per cent. Could the Parliamentary Secretary explain how the Government justifies this increase in light of its six and five guidelines?

Miss MacDonald: What guidelines?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member is undoubtedly aware, the Post Office has also taken steps to reduce its rates in some cases, where significant economy can be achieved by working with small business operators. As far as his particular question is concerned, I will again take notice and bring it to the attention of the independent Crown corporation, that is, the Canada Post Corporation.

Mr. Gass: Madam Speaker, it might be a sleazy way of breaching the six and five guidelines.

IMPACT ON BUSINESSMAN

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, the businessman in question already printed his costs in his catalogue before he sent them out. What does the Parliamentary Secretary propose that I should advise the businessman on how he is to recover his $65,000 extra in mailing costs when he does not have an accordion-type pricing policy?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am sure that what the Hon. Member could do would be to ask this small business operator—

An Hon. Member: To get an accordion.

Mr. Berger: —to get in touch with the officials of the Canada Post Corporation. I am sure that they would be willing to work with him to find out—

Mr. Clark: He could call Alastair Gillespie.

Mr. Berger: —ways to deliver his mail efficiently and at a reasonable cost.

LOTTERIES

PASSAGE OF SPORTS POOL LEGISLATION

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of State for International Trade.

Some Hon. Members: Aha!

Mr. Bockstael: About two weeks ago we read that the 1988 Winter Olympic Games were given a $5 million advance loan from the Government until the sports lottery could be set up. We did hear representation in the western caucus from the Mayor of Calgary who inquired if the sports pool legislation could be passed. I want to know whether the sports pool legislation could be passed very shortly because, while the Games are in 1988, preparations must be completed by 1986, and the money is badly needed. We are wondering if the Government is prepared to pass legislation in a one-day period.

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you ask Pinard?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, with regard to the sports pool legislation, it has received second reading and has had lengthy and careful examination in committee. It is now at the report stage. What is normal concerning legislation of this type is for agreement to be achieved and for it to be completed in one day because of the limited amount of House time available.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: It is my information that, while the New Democratic Party is prepared to go along with that arrangement if the Conservatives do, the—

Mr. Nielsen: Be careful!

Mr. Regan: —Official Opposition is not prepared to allow the legislation to pass in one day.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Regan: It is not prepared to say how much time it would require for the legislation to pass. The result is that Calgary is very hard pressed in relation to money required to finance the beginning of the facilities for the 1988 Olympics.

An Hon. Member: That's Alberta, Joe!

Mr. Regan: It is therefore very doubtful that the legislation can be passed in this session unless the Conservative Opposition changes its position and agrees to a reasonable time limit to complete this simple Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

USE OF LOTTERY FUNDS

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): My question is directed to the same Minister, Madam Speaker. I would like to ask him what the Government has done with the $98 million which it has received from the Provinces in all the lottery funds.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: —the Hon. Member, the former Minister, has a very short memory, because I have answered that question for him here over the course of the last three years, back in the days when I was responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sports, a dozen times. What the hon. Minister—what the Hon. Member did, was to trade away Loto Canada, which was giving a profit of $75 million to $80 million a year, for $24 million a year from the Provinces. That money is divided between the Departments of Fitness and Amateur Sport and culture and is used for the general support of these programs as, indeed, the money from Loto Canada would have been used after the obligations to the Montreal Olympics were met.

The sports pool—

Mr. Paproski: Answer my question!

Mr. Regan: —is something else entirely. It involves the necessity of meeting—

Mr. Paproski: What have you done with the $98 million?

Mr. Regan: —the needs of up to $200 million, in 1982-83 dollars, to make it possible for western Canada to host the Winter Olympics, just the same as eastern Canada hosted the Summer Olympics.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: There he goes! Bye-bye, Gerry!

Mr. Nielsen: Get back here!

Mr. Beatty: He's going out to review a movie.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hees: Blew himself out of the House.

SHIPBUILDING

CLOSURE OF NOVA SCOTIA BOATBUILDING FIRMS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Nova Scotia is rapidly losing most of its boatbuilding firms. Some 35 companies closed their doors last year and 20 more are expected to shut down next month, bringing the direct unemployment to approximately 700 people and an indirect loss of jobs to at least another 200 people.

Since the boatbuilders charge that they are being put out of business by restrictive policies regarding fishing vessel replacement, will the Deputy Prime Minister undertake to review Government policy in this field with his colleagues, in the hope that changes will be made which will be beneficial to the fishermen and to the boatbuilding industry.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will draw this question to the attention of the Minister, and I assure my hon. friend that the matter will be considered by the Minister and myself.

INCENTIVES SOUGHT FOR FISHERMEN ORDERING NEW BOATS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance, if I can get his attention for a moment.

An Hon. Member: That is you, Marc, still.

Mr. Crouse: At present fishermen in Altantic Canada are using 42 foot boats in waters where, for safety's sake, they should be using boats measuring 60 feet or more in length. Will the Minister of Finance, when preparing his next budget, give consideration to including five-year investment allowances or special income tax concessions to fishermen who are desirous of building new, larger boats, thereby not only helping the fishermen to fish safely instead or risking their lives, but also assisting in reactivating the boatbuilding industry?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government at the present time is reviewing completely the fisheries policy on the East Coast of Canada. Obviously the fiscal aspects are important. I will take the views of my hon. friend as a representation, and give them serious consideration.

THE ECONOMY

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON ROLE OF PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and follows the question from the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville concerning who has the ability to create jobs. I want to ask the Minister what I think may be the key economic question, namely, whether the Government is going to rely on private sector spending or rely on Government spending. I want to ask the Minister whether he was quoted correctly in saying, when he left the closed-door meeting in Toronto the other day, that we might see a surge in the private sector that will sharply reduce the need for Government stimulus. Was he quoted correctly, and is it the Government's policy to rely on the private sector?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I stated in my October statement that we firmly believe that the engine of growth in the Canadian economy is and has to be the private sector.

Mr. Stevens: When did you get that idea?

Mr. Lalonde: One cannot expect Governments, federal or provincial, to be the main instrument of growth in an economy like ours which is at best a mixed economy and which includes a very large private sector. This being said, government policy obviously and government spending have a significant role to play and they should not be ignored. It is not a matter of either/or, that is, leave it to the private sector or, on the other hand, as the socialists tend to think, it is all to be done by the Governments. Both have roles to play and the Government has to provide leadership in that respect, which we have provided and which we will continue to provide. So far as the specific measures are concerned, I invite my hon. friend to wait for the budget.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, socialists want jobs, and we do not see much leadership from the Government in creating jobs.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I want to direct this supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. After he made that statement in Toronto, a journalist interviewed some of the big employers. In an article in The Toronto Star under the headline, "Don't look to us for jobs most big employers say", it was reported that the President of The Bay saw no immediate plans for private hiring; the President of Alcan said the same thing, as did the President of Imperial Oil. The President of Canadian Pacific said that he was not expecting any major hiring before the end of the year.

In view of the fact that all of these major corporate presidents of some of the leading private companies in Canada have said, in effect, "Don't look to us in the immediate future to create jobs," why is the Government still sticking to the line that the main engine for creating jobs will be the private sector?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as a good socialist my hon. friend believes that the main way of creating jobs is probably to increase the number of bureaucrats.

Mr. Waddell: I am not the Government.

Mr. Lalonde: The Government does not happen to believe that adding to the number of bureaucrats is the correct solution to the unemployment problem.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I remind my hon. friend that General Motors has just recalled 3,500 workers in Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: That is in Oshawa, in his own Leader's riding. At least he should phone his leader and ask him what is happening in Oshawa; it might be helpful.

As far as the general question that my hon. friend raises is concerned, I want to remind him that, as a good socialist, he should also know and understand that there is a small and medium-sized business sector in this country.

An Hon. Member: What are you doing?

Mr. Lalonde: The small and medium-sized business sector has been the main employer and the main source of job creation. This has been taking place under policies initiated by this Government, and I hope that it will continue over the next while and that my budget will contain measures that will indeed help medium and small businesses to play their full role in this country.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—REFUSAL OF COMMITTEE STUDY

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister who earlier in the Question Period refused a reference to an appropriate Committee of the House to study the ministerial conflict of interest guidelines on the basis of, to use his words, the political atmosphere.

By what right, convention or tradition is the Government now sitting in judgment on whether a committee should have a reference based on ministerial decision as to whether the political atmosphere is conducive to that Committee's study or not?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I assumed that the Hon. Member was interested in having an objective examination of a very important situation.

An Hon. Member: Absolutely.

Miss MacDonald: It will not be in the House.

Mr. MacEachen: All I am saying is that there has not been very much objectivity shown by the Opposition in this matter in the discussions we have had in the House; quite the contrary.

ROLE OF COMMITTEES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is part of a Government that ostensibly is interested in parliamentary reform, one of the tenets of which is the improvement of the committee system. We all hope to improve Committees in terms of their efficiency and usefulness. Should we now interpret the Government's position to mean that they may fulfil or attempt to fulfil that objective of improvement only so long as Cabinet Ministers decide what the political atmosphere is before they commence their work?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, because the new rules provide that a large number of reports will be sent to Committees automatically, and Committees will have a new opportunity to examine matters on their own, without waiting for a reference from the Government. So my comments do not in any way detract from the important reforms that have been made.

An Hon. Member: As long as you can stonewall them.

Mr. MacEachen: The point that I have made is a simple one, although the Hon. Member may disagree. It is that the atmosphere on this particular question has been, in my view, very heated and very extreme, and it is unlikely that at the present time an objective examination could be undertaken by a parliamentary Committee—

Mr. Nielsen: Better to get Mitchell Sharp to do it.

Mr. MacEachen: —of the guidelines. That is not in any way meant to undermine the importance of the parliamentary Committees. It is to acknowledge a fact that has been very obvious in this House for the past few weeks.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister would tell us if there are other subjects which the Government will not refer to parliamentary Committees because there might be a political atmosphere in those Committees?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member can think of a subject he wants to ask about, I will give him an answer.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, I am interested in knowing what the policy of the Government is. It is saying that it is not going to refer to a Committee of the whole Parliament a question of morality which affects the reputation of this whole House of Commons, because there might be a political atmosphere in a committee of politicians. That is what he is saying.

Will he tell us whether it is the Government's intention to hold back other questions from parliamentary Committees because there might be a political atmosphere, or is this special treatment only for a question which has to do with the dreadful, immoral conduct of Ministers of the Liberal Government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that this matter has been dealt with by the House of Commons itself, and the House of Commons itself has rendered a judgment on the matter. I believe the Hon. Member is straining at a very obvious point, trying to make a point where one does not exist.

• (1450)

It is obvious that the Hon. Members of the Opposition are not really interested in examining these guidelines to determine whether they serve the public interest. That is not their concern. Their concern is to do the very opposite, that is, where possible to undermine and destroy reputations, which they have been systematically doing in the House of Commons, and they would not stop if the matter went to a Committee.

TEST OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister with respect to the issue of the appearance of privilege and the answer given a few weeks earlier by the Deputy Prime Minister that it was up to the individual conscience of Ministers as to whether or not there was the appearance of a breach of guidelines. Is there no other test, other than the Ministers' consciences? If there is some other test, what is that test by which we can judge the guidelines?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think that point was covered last week in the discussions which were held. In the very conception of the guidelines it was the obligation placed upon individuals to live up to these guidelines. The onus was on the individual Minister and the former office holder in the first instance, and that obligation still exists. That responsibility still exists and it cannot be shifted. I believe that is a very important principle to be maintained, not only for Ministers but for Hon. Members of the House of Commons, that the responsibility in the first instance rests on them individually.

In addition to that, in the case of a Minister it is obvious that the Prime Minister on any occasion can decide that the Minister has stepped out of line. He can discipline that Minister or he can ask him to resign. The final sanction for Ministers rests with the Prime Minister. I wish there was a sanction on the other side which could be exercised by the Leader of the Opposition so he could discipline his Members.

EFFECTIVENESS OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, if the onus is on the individual, then what is the purpose of a guideline, if the line to which the Ministers are to be guided is simply their own judgment? Why would there be conflict of interest guidelines if the judgment were to be reflected back only to individuals? That is simply to say the Government has no guidelines. To what line do the guidelines guide the Ministers, and by what force are they to be held to those guidelines?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should read the guidelines—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —and he will know that these guidelines with respect to personal assets and business activities, and the handling of personal resources, have been complied with by all Ministers and all office holders. If the Hon. Member wants to make an inquiry—

Mr. Clark: Except MacEachen, Lalonde, and Erola.

Mr. MacEachen: —with the Registrar General, he will find out that they have been fully observed. If any particular Minister refuses to observe these guidelines, he must face the court of public opinion. If I recall, in the former Government of the former Leader of the Opposition there were a number of Ministers who balked very vigorously at observing the guidelines with respect to their own personal assets. At least that is what the press told us at the time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCOME TAX

TREATMENT OF INCOME DERIVED THROUGH SERVICE TIPS

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and it concerns a very serious problem, a double standard by the Government. As the Minister will be aware, waitresses and waiters across the country, a couple of hundred thousand of them, mostly women, are taxed on their tips. When it comes to taxation, their tips are viewed as income. On the other hand, with respect to their benefits, their tips are not put into their income amount. This causes a very serious situation in unemployment insurance and the Canada Pension Plan for these waiters and waitresses. Would the Minister tell us what the Minister and his Department are doing to correct this injustice to the waiters and waitresses across Canada? What steps is he taking to rectify that situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the matter raised by the Hon. Member is very interesting and also very, very complex. I would like to point out that as far as tax returns are concerned, the Income Tax Act is based on the principle that individuals and taxpayers are making a voluntary statement of income, so that a person receiving income other than that declared by his employer has to declare that income himself.

As far as the case mentioned by the Hon. Member is concerned, namely, people who receive tips in the course of their employment, it is up to the individual to declare both the income received from the employer and the additional income received in the form of tips.

In addition, there is a far more complex problem, namely, the deductions for pension plans whether it is the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan, and also deductions for unemployment insurance. Such deductions will require regular statements of income by these people. Following a substantial number of representations on this matter, I asked my departmental officials to make an in-depth study of this very complex problem which, in addition to the Department of National Revenue, also involves the Departments of Employment and Immigration and National Health and Welfare.

[English]

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the Minister is agreeing that there is a double standard set by the Government, and I appreciate the fact that he has taken it upon himself to be in contact with the other Ministers concerned with the benefits side of this package. I would like to know when this committee will start and will the Minister make personal representations to the other two Ministers involved, namely, the Minister of National Health and Welfare for the Canada Pension Plan, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration with respect to the unemployment insurance situation? Will the Minister take action on this problem in the very near future so that it will not be covered by a review within only one Department when there are other Departments affected? Will the Minister personally take some responsibility in this area to clear up this dual standard within the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am not quite sure I understand the Hon. Member's conclusions. I did say the problem was complex, and I wish the Hon. Member would realize this. I also pointed out that it was up to the individual to declare his income and ensure he is paying taxes on his entire income. I am prepared to look into the possibility of making things easier for taxpayers and enabling people to draw any benefits to which they are entitled on the basis of their income statements. However, I would like to draw the Hon. Member's attention to the fact that the matter is a complex one and that it also requires the co-operation of these taxpayers in stating their entire income.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REGULATION AFFECTING PART-TIME AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and is prompted because of the difficulty which certain Order in Council changes, or regulatory changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, have caused part-time workers, particularly agricultural workers. Would the Minister tell us what consultation, if any, took place between his Department and agricultural producers prior to the regulatory change being made and prior to its inception date of January 1 of this year? What consultation, if any, took place?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in this particular situation, as I pointed out to the House, I believe, two days ago, we were faced with the problem of a number of workers in the agricultural field not receiving the proper income security which other occupations would receive for comparable work. We brought forward these regulations, having had some discussions over the years about that particular implementation.

It has been brought to our attention since then that certain agricultural associations had difficulty implementing the program to the fullest extent, so we have undertaken some very serious negotiations, very ably aided by members of my caucus who represent agricultural areas. The Hon. Member for Essex-Kent and others have been meeting over the past two weeks with the Horticultural Society. I think we now have the problem well in hand and we will be making amendments to that order which will be satisfactory to the agricultural groups.

REQUEST THAT REGULATION BE SUSPENDED

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I know consultations have gone on in the last few days. I also appreciate the fact that seven days are certainly better than 15 hours. But in view of the fact that certain agricultural producers have as many as 400, 500, sometimes 600 people working in the field at one time, and in view of the complications this causes for the producer, would the Minister give serious consideration to suspending this regulation for at least a 12-month period and begin serious negotiations and consultation with the people in the agricultural industry? Would he give serious consideration to that in view of the problems being caused?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Madam Speaker. I believe it is important to maintain the protection afforded agricultural workers, and I think that is a commitment we have made particularly because those workers are on the lower end of the income scale and therefore need that security we can provide. I do believe that the resolution to the problems which have been worked out in the consultations, providing a leeway of seven days, will be satisfactory and eliminate the paper work for the temporary workers. I think under those circumstances we can relieve the producers of further headaches. I also believe that is satisfactory to them.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) and the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) has been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E(2), R.S.C. 1970 to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Manitoba.

If the House agrees, I would suggest that we follow past practices and print the text of the objection as an appendix to today's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DESTRUCTION OF FILES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I would like to supplement an answer I gave to a question in the House on February 17, 1983.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister may correct an answer but he may not supplement an answer. I do not know exactly what he wants to do but he may not supplement an answer.

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, on that basis I think I am entitled to continue because the supplement I want to add is in effect a correction.

Mr. Nielsen: Order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Kaplan: I have the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: He is not entitled to do that. It is obvious what he is doing.

Madam Speaker: Well, if the Hon. Minister tells me that his point of order is a correction, I have to take his word for it until such time as I realize that it is or is not a correction. So I simply have to give the floor to the Hon. Minister and hope that he is really making a correction.

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, the answer I gave appears at page 22941 of Hansard. In my answer I referred to the moratorium established against the destruction of any personal files of the Security Service. That moratorium was established by the commissioner of the day and was continued by me in June, 1981.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, this cannot be allowed. He should be making a statement on motions. He has been allowed to abuse the rules of the House deliberately.

Madam Speaker: Well, I am just going to let the Minister go on for another sentence and see whether he is simply elaborating on an answer or whether he is—

Mr. Nielsen: Certainly he is; that is obvious.

Madam Speaker: —really correcting something that was published in Hansard. That is the purpose of a point of order.

Mr. Kaplan: Subsequent to making the answer in the House I was informed by the Security Service that in fact, contrary to what I said, on two occasions the destruction of personal files was authorized and did take place. On each occasion the Security Service approached the McDonald Commission—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister may not go into these detailed explanations. If he wants to tell the House briefly "I said such a thing and it should read something else", because he made a mistake in the wording or something—and I do not know what the mistake might be—that is all I can allow the Hon. Minister to do. He cannot elaborate on his answer or change some of the full sentences. He may correct a word or two.

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, to conclude in one sentence: On each occasion a submission was made to the McDonald Commission—

Mr. Nielsen: That is an abuse of the rules.

Mr. Kaplan: —and complete approval was obtained for the destruction that occurred.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, on a question of privilege, the Hon. Minister was replying to a fairly pointed question of mine in Question Period.

Mr. Nielsen: Asked for weeks ago.

Mr. Lawrence: Twenty days ago, I may say, Madam Speaker. My question related to some files of the Security Service relating to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I note that 20 days later, on an occasion when the Prime Minister himself is not in the House, only then is an elaboration coming forward. I must point out to you, Madam Speaker, the very words of the Minister. If he had made the answer then that he is giving now, I suggest to you the conduct of the rest of Question Period on that day might have been far different.

Madam Speaker: Order. I cannot allow Members to enter into debate. Now, I think both Members have added—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I note that the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) is not pleased with the way the Hon. Minister is handling this matter. That is right, he has just said so, and the House will note that. The Hon. Member may ask questions in the course of Question Period on subsequent days.

Mr. Lawrence: On a point of order, then. Surely if a Minister is given the opportunity of making some far-reaching changes to a very definite assurance, and he used the word "assurance" in the House, then it should have been—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lawrence: —done on a ministerial statement so we can get into it.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Minister was given no opportunity. The Speaker was trying to understand what the Minister was coming to and this often happens when Members rise on questions of privilege or points of order; it takes some time to get there. I interrupted the Minister several times because I felt he was not being direct enough for the purpose of my understanding his point of order. In the end I simply said that the Hon. Minister—well, he made his point but I—

Mr. Lawrence: Precisely, he made his point.

Madam Speaker: He made his point in the end, in the last sentence. I do not think it was really a correction but there is nothing I can do. Those words were spoken. I tried to get him to be more precise but it did not come forward. That happens often in the House. However, I tried all I could to keep the Minister to a simple correction in Hansard. That does not mean that a debate may ensue.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, let us clear out the technical verbiage here. The practical effect of the Chair really not stepping into the Minister when objection was first made—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, the Chair stepped in two or three times; so let us be fair.

Mr. Lawrence: All right, but the Minister has now been able to elaborate on his point, and instead of anyone else being able to elaborate we have in effect been gagged when we would want to question that elaboration. Surely the practical way out of the dilemma we are all faced with would be, in fairness, to accept the Minister's elaboration as a ministerial statement so that then there is a chance for the rest of us to make some points in relation to it.

Madam Speaker: The Minister may do that if he wants to, but the Chair may not force him.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. LACHANCE—USE OF STANDING ORDER 21

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I wish to draw your attention to my concern about the dangerous trend which seems to prevail during the 15-minute period set aside for statements by Hon. Members under the provisions of Standing Order 21. If I may, I would refer Your Honour to page 7:19 of the Third Report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure where it says:

[English]

The Chair would have the discretion to call to order any Member who sought to use this opportunity to convey congratulatory messages or for frivolous purposes.

In this case, Madam Speaker, the Members for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) and Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) referred in the House to the legal action taken by a Member of Parliament, namely the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), a matter which does not have anything to do with the political or institutional responsibilities of the Member of Parliament concerned. Madam Speaker, I would suggest that that was a flagrant abuse of a procedure designed to enable Hon. Members to raise issues related to the discharge of their duties. The Chair could certainly use its discretion, which is indeed explicitely acknowledged in Standing Order 21, to put a stop to such improper use of the rules.

Madam Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for raising this point of order. I must confess that, during the time reserved for statements by Members under the provisions of Standing Order 21, I was concerned about the fact that certain Members were referring to a private action. To what extent could that private legal action justify remarks such as those that were made this afternoon? As those Members were making their statements, I was telling myself that I should take a closer look at this question.

As for congratulations, I have tried to avoid them as much as possible. I would therefore remind Hon. Members that during this period they are not allowed to attempt to congratulate someone or refer to the presence of an individual in the gallery, even in the first two or three sentences of their remarks. Such comments do not really pertain to the business of the House. I am aware that Hon. Members would like to congratulate many people, and they can do so at other times, but certainly not when they make statements under the provisions of Standing Order 21.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I believe my colleague referred to me in that statement. My statement was about Unemployment Insurance benefits and had nothing to do with a congratulatory statement.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member says that he has made a mistake and it was not the statement of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North.

PETITIONS

MR. DUPRAS—U.S. MILITARY AID TO CENTRAL AMERICA DICTATORSHIPS AND ITS CONSEQUENCES

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of some 50,000 Canadians who are outraged by the fact that the United States is giving military aid to dictatorships in Central America, and, as members of the Development and Peace Movement, are demanding the liberation of these peoples. Although I am not entirely in agreement with some of the terms contained in this petition, I believe it is my duty, as a Member of this House, to make known the opinion of the Canadian people in this assembly, the highest court in the land.

MR. SHIELDS—RECONSIDERATION OF BILL C-85

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents in the riding of Athabasca. The purpose of the petition, signed by 585 residents of various villages and towns such as Bonnyville, High Prairie, Athabasca, Flatbush, Smith, Hondo, Newbrook, Ardmore, Grand Centre, Cold Lake, Colinton, Boyle, Iron River, La Corey, St. Lina, Grassland, Caslan, Hylo, Lac La Biche, Fort Kent, Glendon, Perryvale, Atmore, Kinuso, Faust, Slave Lake, Joussard, Driftpile, Rochester, Fawcett, Breynat, Wandering River, Plamondon, St. Vincent Mallaig, Goodridge, Thérien, Rich Lake and Enilda , all of which are in my riding, is to register their protest against Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex.

The nature of this petition is to request that Clause 14 be removed from Bill C-85, the Clause which provides the potential for the Government of Canada to do buying and selling of all agricultural products within Canada.

The petitioners hope that in Madam Speaker's examination of this petition, you will find the petition is in order, sense the urgency of their plea and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral of this petition to the Standing Committee on Agriculture at the earliest possible moment.

MR. FULTON—OPERATIONS OF AMAX LTD.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I again have the honour to table a petition calling for a full public inquiry into the Amax permit issued in the Amax operation in my riding. The petitioners this time ask that the Order in Council SOR/79345, the Alice Arm Tailings Deposit Regulations of April 10, 1979, be withdrawn, and further that a full public inquiry be held before commencement of the operation of the Amax molybdenum mine at Kitsault, British Columbia. The petitioners are from all across Canada. Some of the petitions were forwarded to me from the office of the Primate of the Anglican Church of Canada. I trust that they are properly filed and that your office will take whatever steps are possible to ensure that the request of these petitioners is upheld.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROHIBIT DISCRIMINATION ON GROUND OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-676, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to implement the repeated recommendations of the Canadian Human Rights Commission to add as a prohibited ground of discrimination at the federal Government level sexual orientation. This legislative change is long overdue and would put an end to discrimination against homosexuals and lesbians throughout federal jurisdiction, including in the Canadian Armed Forces.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

APPOINTMENT OF SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have two motions which I believe will receive unanimous consent as discussions have taken place between the Parties. The first motion reads as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be empowered to appoint nine Members of the House to act as a subcommittee to investigate, monitor and report on all aspects of acid rain;

That the Subcommittee and members of the Subcommittee have the power to adjourn and travel from place to place in Canada and the United States of America and that the necessary staff accompany the Subcommittee and members of the Subcommittee;

That the Subcommittee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary; and

That Subcommittee shall report to the Committee from time to time.

I might add, Madam Speaker, that there is an understanding that the split on that Committee as between the Parties would be five Liberal Members, three Conservative Members and one NDP Member.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PENSION REFORM

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I also move:

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,545 and 4,622.

[Text]

OUTSTANDING ACHIEVEMENT AWARD

Question No. 4,545—Mr. Hawkes:

1. Did Mr. Edmund Clark, Assistant Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, receive the Outstanding Achievement Award and, if so, is the Prime Minister aware of this fact?

2. (a) What are the qualifications required of a person to receive such an award (b) how are such individuals chosen (c) if the selection is done by a group of persons, what are the names and job designations of each person involved?

3. Along with the award, did Mr. Clark receive a work of art by a Canadian artist and, if so (a) what was the cost of the work of art (b) who was authorized to make the selection of the work of art and what were the names and job designations of each person involved (c) what was the name of the artist chosen and for what reason was he/she chosen?

4. Is the award and work of art being held in Canada for Mr. Clark's return?

5. Will it be or has it been shipped to him in Paris, where he is on a one-year sabbatical, and, if so (a) what will be or has been the cost to the taxpayers (b) how has it been or will it be shipped (c) who authorized the shipment?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): 1. On October 13, 1982 at Government House the Governor General in the presence of the Prime Minister, presented the 1981 Outstanding Achievement Award to Dr. W. Edmund Clark, in absentia.

2. (a) Candidates for the Outstanding Achievement Award will be those public servants who have, over a period of three or more years, performed their duties in a most outstanding manner. This sustained performance should be measurable in some way, possibly in some form of extraordinary accomplishment or sustained contribution to improved efficiency and government performance.

(b) Each year the heads of departments, corporations, boards commissions and agencies are invited to nominate eligible executives who are worthy of recognition. Documentation in support of each candidate is provided by the nominator and is presented to a Selection Committee of eminent Canadians from outside the Public Service.

(c) The Selection Committee in 1981 was comprised of the following Canadians who served without recompense:

John Bulloch, President, Canadian Federation of Independent Business

Dr. John Godfrey, President, University of Kings College

Professeur Vianney Décarie, University of Montreal

Ms. Kathryn Robinson, lawyer, Goodman and Goodman

Mr. Colin Kenny, Corporate Manager, Dome Petroleum

3. No. See part 4. (a), (b) and (c) Not applicable.

4. Mr. Clark will be entitled to select a work of Canadian art to a value of $2,500 on his return to Canada. See also reply to question No. 4,622, part 2 answered this day.

5. No. See part 4. (a), (b) and (c) Not applicable.

Question No. 4,622—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Were Messrs. Klaus Goldschlag, Gordon Osbaldeston, Gaétan Lussier, Douglas Parkhill and Ed Clark the recipients of the award for "top civil servants in Canada for 1982" and did they receive a work of art as an award?

2. Will they be required to pay income tax on the value of the work of art and (a) if so, what was the value of the work of art for tax purposes awarded to Mr. Clark (b) if not, for what reason would such an award, if given in the private sector, be taxable, but would not when given to a public servant, especially one who is on sabbatical in France?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. The Outstanding Achievement Awards for 1982 were granted to Messrs. Klaus Goldschlag, Gordon Osbaldeston, Gaétan Lussier, Douglas Parkhill and Edmund Clark. All except Mr. Clark received a Canadian work of art. Mr. Clark will receive a work of art on his return to Canada.

2. The Outstanding Achievement Award is taxable and consists of an original Canadian work of art valued at $2,500 or less and a matching grant in cash. The matching grant is not paid to the recipient but to the Receiver General to the credit of the recipient as tax deducted from source. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

AN ACT TO REVIVE POLYVENTREPRISE LTÉE TO PROVIDE FOR ITS CONTINUANCE UNDER THE CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

ADOPTION OF BILL AT ALL STAGES

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert) moved that Bill S-34, an Act to revive Polyventreprise Ltée and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

He said: Madam Speaker, with the agreement of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, and since this Bill has been considered in the Senate and in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Duquet), that the House adopt all stages of Bill S-34 this afternoon, without debate. I believe there is unanimous consent for doing so.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson) will have noticed that I have just come into the chair and was sorting out my papers. I will simply put his proposition; apparently he seeks unanimous consent for some reason.

Mr. Dawson: I will repeat it, Mr. Speaker. After negotiations with the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, I think we have unanimous consent, since Bill S-34 has been studied in the Senate and witnesses have appeared before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, that the House immediately adopt this motion at all stages.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Hon. Members will understand the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert, which indicates that there may be unanimous consent to put the Bill through all stages.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, for the record I would point out that those negotiations have been held, and we are in agreement with the Bill passing today.

An Hon. Member: Without debate.

Mr. Lewis: Without debate.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, we are in agreement with its passage today, and quickly.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee of the Whole, reported, read the third time and passed.

Boyd, on the subject of the Amax-US Borax meeting with Alaskans, dated April 1, 1981.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this certainly is not the first time I have spoken on the Amax matter in the House. I have reviewed my file and noticed that there are about 50,000 pages of material on this matter. However, I am sure that all Hon. Members of the House, when we finally bring the matter to a vote, will want to vote that these papers be released.

The reason I say this is that any reasonable, thinking Member of the House or any reasonable Canadian, on looking at these documents, will realize that they were all prepared at public expense and that they are documents which in fact have been subjected to what the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) has publicly described as a public review process. All these documents were provided to what is known as the McInerney panel in British Columbia and were used as substance for the decision to which they came over the past year regarding the safety and propriety of the Amax operation, although in its most recent report it has distinguished that somewhat, in that some parts of the Amax Kitsault operation are not operating according to the special Order in Council granted during the federal election in 1979.

I urge all Hon. Members who are here today and those who are doing any research on this matter to obtain Motions Nos. 109, 110 and 111 and to look at the documents which are listed so as to assure themselves that they are not what the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) referred to them as when this motion was referred for debate. He said that they were internal Cabinet memoranda of some kind or that they were some kind of special inter-ministerial documents which could not be released for some special reasons—for the security of the country or something. They are technical documents. They are primarily biological and oceanographic in nature and are very important documents to be released to those members of the scientific community, to the Nishga people and to many of the other groups which have been interested in this matter for some time.

I would like to put on the record some of the groups that called for a full public inquiry and are interested in seeing these documents released. I am sure many Members are now aware that there are several hundred recognized groups in Canada that called for a full public inquiry. Earlier today I tabled another 1,300 signatures of petitioners, bringing the number of names which I have tabled to somewhere in the region of 20,000. I understand that some 80,000 have been directed to the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), bringing us to probably the level of 100,000.

The number of individuals represented by these groups is very rapidly approaching half the population of Canada. Here is just a sample: Canadian Union of Public Employees; Native Brotherhood of British Columbia; Prince Rupert NDP; Victoria Labour Council; Anglican Church of Canada, Ottawa Diocese; British Columbia New Democratic Party Caucus; Project North; B.C. & Yukon Territory Building and Construction Trades Council; National Indian Brotherhood in Ottawa; North Coast Tribal Council; United Church of Canada; Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops; Anglican Church of Canada, in particular the Most Reverend Edward W. Scott, Primate; Anglican Church of Canada, Bishop Douglas Hambidge; NDP Federal Caucus; Anglican Church of Canada; Port Simpson Band Council; Nishga Tribal Council; Telecommunications Workers' Union; West Coast Environmental Law Association; Canadian Environmental Law Association; Greenpeace Foundation; United Fishermen & Allied Workers' Union; Dr. Peter McCart, a biologist; Reverend Peter Hamel of the Anglican Church of Canada; SPEC from British Columbia or the Society for Pollution and Environmental Control; British Columbia Federation of Labour, representing all workers in British Columbia; the Council of the North; Lutheran Church in America; B. C. Conference of United Churches; Kitimat-Terrace and District Labour Council; Vancouver Island Building & Construction Trades Council; Canadian Coalition for Nuclear Responsibility; Gitksan-Carrier Tribal Council; the Edmonton Diocese of the Anglican Church; the Huron Diocese; the British Columbia Medical Association; and petitions from every Province and both Territories.

This is just a sample of the groups which are not amused with the footdragging on the Government side at every attempt I have made to obtain legitimate documentation. Most recently I obtained under Motion No. 106 a highly sanitized group of documents; there were parts of documents missing, whole areas of documents missing, entire documents missing. Those were simply in relation to the draft copies of the regulations circulated between Amax and Government lawyers as they were going behind the scenes drafting the regulations ahead of time.

Here are a couple of samples of what has been said in some publications. In December, 1980 the Canadian Churchman had this to say:

Archbishop Scott has written Prime Minister Trudeau expressing "deep frustration" at the lack of response to a letter informing the government of the General Synod's resolution on Amax: "Our concern over the development of this project is even stronger today, and actions that have taken place since then have impressed upon us the need for urgent action to address this matter. Even though Amax and government officials continue to say the Kitsault mining project does not impose any major threat to the environment, a significant and growing body of individual scientists and groups are contradicting that position", he said.

Statements by doctors on behalf of the British Columbia Medical Association appeared in The Globe and Mail on July 18, 1981. One reads:

The entire General Assembly of the British Columbia Medical Association, representing 4,000 doctors, moved and passed a motion on the need for such an inquiry as a basic requirement and passed it almost unanimously at their annual meeting in May.

Again from the British Columbia Medical Association we have another statement. This group, I suppose, the Liberals here in eastern Canada consider to be a bunch of quacks and quirks. This statement reads:

> We as doctors demand closure of the Amax project and the unsafe, untested and unhealthy disposal of heavy metal tailings into the waters of Canada until a full and open public inquiry is implemented and reports to the citizens of Canada. As doctors we can do no less.

That is what doctors have to say. But what do the Liberals do about that? They continue to hide. The Globe and Mail for May 8, 1981 carried this report:

> Alice Richards, daughter of Max Schott, who is a founder and former president of the company that later became Amax, made an impassioned plea to the stockholders at the annual meeting of Amax to save the Nishga from mine tailings that they fear threaten their food chain, livelihoods and their very lives. "In all honesty and justice, if we are so right and there is no danger from dropping tailings into the ocean, then why have we refused to allow public hearings?" Alice Richards asked.

There is the daughter of the founder of the company making a plea for a full public inquiry. Again, no move from the Liberals because everyone in this country knows they are hiding something, and I intend to allude to some of the things they are hiding today.

In the Canadian Churchman for June, 1981 we find this:

> The Nishga have said loudly, clearly and repeatedly "We are not against development, we are against the permanent destruction of the marine environment for short term gain. We want to have control of the planning for development, have a share in the profits and have our people employed. We do not want our homeland exploited without our permission and with no benefits to us."

The February 7, 1981 edition of The Financial Post reported:

> Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Limited spent several hundred million dollars on its fruitless quest for the MacKenzie Valley Pipeline. Amax of Canada Limited president, C. Allen Born, might well ask himself if he is about to walk into the same buzzsaw. There are parallels, even if the projects differ vastly. The company suddenly finds itself at the center of a growing storm, involving two governments, the Nishga Tribal Council and a group of leading Canadian clerics, including Archbishop Edward Scott, the Anglican primate of Canada.

In The Globe and Mail for July 8, 1981 we find:

> The United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union, which support the Nishga, has called the government's actions "a massive cover-up".

That is a very mild statement, I must say. Added to that the Ombudsman for British Columbia this past week has come on board. I suppose the Liberals would consider an Ombudsman to be someone who just gets in the way; he should not have access to information. He should be muzzled and shut up as quickly as possible and certainly not given any access to documents which might embarrass the Liberals. However, in The Globe and Mail an article headed "B.C. Government made error on Amax permit, report says" reads:

> Vancouver—The B.C. Government erred in granting a pollution control permit allowing Amax of Canada Ltd. to dump mine tailings into Alice Arm without first consulting the Nishga Indians, the provincial Ombudsman has found.

Then there is mention of the documents which the provincial Government had. Of course, we have a Liberal Member who is always standing up for his Party, never standing up for common sense or justice, to make sure that he keeps his mouth in the pork barrel as long as he can. He thinks doctors are quacks. He does not think the churches have anything to stand for and that independent scientists do not have anything to say. He thinks that public servants can write documents at our cost, the public's cost, but they are only available to a certain chosen Liberal few. Conservatives are not allowed to see them; New Democrats are not allowed to see them; the churches and the scientists cannot see them. Only the Liberal machinery behind the scenes is allowed to see them.

It has been revealed as a result of research done by my office and by certain other people in British Columbia that the mine permit itself was actually drafted by Amax and its own lawyers behind the scenes in collusion with a Government lawyer by the name of MacLatchy, of course all at the direction of certain Members of the Liberal Cabinet.

As we all know, the permit was drafted by Amax lawyers. All the way up to the Privy Council Office Amax had its own lawyers sitting there drafting the permit, with Government lawyers behind the scenes taking out what Amax did not want in there, and Government lawyers who knew nothing about the science of the project saying: "Well, at my own discretion", says MacLatchy, "I will jerk this section and that section out."

Mr. Blaikie: Did they not have Gillespie in there?

Mr. Fulton: My colleague points out that maybe Gillespie was in there. I do not really know, Mr. Speaker. I do know that lawyers working for Amax—and I will be outlining the history of Amax shortly—were there. Obviously the Prime Minister's office was very much in favour of getting this project off the ground so he could keep his buddies south of the border happy.

The permit, as we know, gave Amax the right to dump 8,000 times above the level set by this Parliament, set by scientists in the Metal Mining Liquid Effluent Regulations, and allows the dumping of 100 million metric tonnes of material into the Alice Arm fishing grounds. There are scientists who no longer dispute the fact that that material is poisoning Alice Arm, killing the fish and killing much of the life in the Inlet. Amax is allowed to dump 12,000 tonnes a day for 25 years, all to save the company $23 million. Effectively this is what the Liberals are giving away in this case.

A Montreal Gazette for March 1, 1983 headline reads: "Tonnes of mining waste dumped in B.C. inlet" and "Firm helped draft its own permit". In part the article is as follows:

> The documents, written by MacLatchy in May 1981, show Amax persuaded the government to allow the discharge outlet for the sludge to be 50 metres in length, even though federal officials wanted it to be 100 metres.
> Amax lawyer Robert Granger even attended a final drafting session by the Privy Council Office, the documents say.

Let us go to the issue itself and point out why these documents that I am asking for should not be held under this shroud of security. What it is hiding from the public is which Members of Cabinet are culpable in this case and what kind of graft they obtained in order to let this permit go through.

Next I will quote from a document provided to me by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) who has been a very honourable participant in all of this. While he was Minister of the Environment he provided me with documents. I did not have to go to him and cower. I simply went to his office and he gave me access to documents. It is too bad he is not still the Minister of the Environment because he has some honour, something which Members on the other side know very little about. I quote from a document provided to me dated March, 1979, headed "Position of the Department of the Environment and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans on the disposal of tailings into Alice Arm". It reads:

> Consultants on behalf of Climax Molybdenum have indicated that a tailings pond system with a supernatant overflow can be constructed, operated and maintained based on engineering considerations alone.

It goes on to state:

> In considering tailings and impoundment possibilities for the Kitsault Project, three potential sites were examined. The initial estimated cost for an adequate impoundment facility is approximately $25 million.

B.C. Hydro has estimated this cost for power transmission lines for pumping at another $4 million. On-land disposal would require reclamation at the end of the mine life which would result in some further costs. In contrast, marine disposal of tailings is estimated at $6 million for capital costs with low operating costs.

There you have it. A private deal was made with Amax. I think we all know that the present Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, Mr. John Aird, a leading bag person for the Liberal Party in Ontario and Canada for many years until just three days before he became Lieutenant-Governor of this Province, was on the Board of Directors of Amax. He was the only Canadian on the Board of Directors of Amax International. When he stepped down on September 12, he was promptly replaced by none other than the previous President of the United States, Gerald Ford. I will be alluding to the direct relationship between Senator Aird, who was appointed to the Senate by the Liberal Party, his present position, his former position on Amax, as well as the involvement of his law firm, Aird & Berlis.

The Amax Corporation hired Aird & Berlis as their company lawyers. Mr. Granger, who works for Aird & Berlis, was involved in the drafting of the regulations from the beginning right up to the Privy Council Office, before a decision was made by the scientific team in British Columbia as to whether or not to go for on land or marine tailings. I, and I believe hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have written about this matter, consider it to be extremely corrupt.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker I rise on a point of order. I want to ask the Chair if it is correct for the Hon. Member to cast aspersions on the Queen's representative of the Province of Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I take it that the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) is intervening to ask whether or not it is appropriate. It is my recollection that this matter has come before the House previously. I believe the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) raised the same subject matter.

At that time, I believe I had to review the precedents in order to determine if this type of debate was in order. I am aware of a Standing Order which does call for respect for a certain stated list of individuals in Canada. I would want to review that again.

I believe that the proper procedure at the moment is for the Hon. Member for Skeena to continue his speech and the Chair will take into consideration the point raised by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys. On the last occasion, I believe the Hon. Member for Skeena was permitted to continue his speech under similar circumstances. I will review the matter immediately and the Chair will continue to recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will read my speech. He will see that everything I have said is factual. Far be it for me to cast aspersions since Mr. Aird became the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. I am simply reiterating his history.

Some other interesting documents have come to light in this matter. They involve about 200 documents that the Government is hiding. In almost any other democracy in the world, these documents would have been immediately released. However, the fact that we have a Liberal Government that practices authoritarianism with respect to the release of documents in the House speaks for itself.

In order to give some background, I will quote from a document which I obtained entitled "Chronology of the Drafting of the Alice Arm Tailings Deposit Regulations":

> On February 24, 1977, the Metal Mining Liquid Effluent Regulations were passed. In effect, they prohibited the unconfined disposal of solid tailings into waters frequented by fish. On June 22, 1977, Amax first met with EPS Pacific to discuss the MMLER and Amax's desire to have marine disposal of tailings in Alice Arm.

What is interesting about the document from which I just quoted of, March, 1979 is that the consultants working for Amax had already decided that it was possible to do safe on-land tailings disposal. The costs had been itemized to reveal that there was only a 2 per cent difference on return on investment to have safe on-land tailings.

There is the technical side to the argument as to which is safer. I suggest that the case has now been proven to most Canadians that it would make more sense, provide more jobs and be more environmentally sound to go on-land.

I am now concerned with the technical matter which the House will have to vote on quite soon. We have an hour and 40 minutes of debate remaining on this matter. When it comes time for all Members of the House to vote, I hope that Members of all Parties will return to their caucuses and determine whether democracy is being served as a result of their vote on Motion 109, Motion 110 and Motion 111. It is not a question of whether the Member for Skeena, the Anglican Church, the Nishga's or anyone else would be served, but whether democracy is served by voting on whether documents written by public servants about this matter should or should not be released. I am confident that there may even be a couple of seals on the Liberal side of the House who will recognize the views of their constituents. I am presently in touch with most constituencies in the country about this matter. I am sure Canadians will be interested to know how their Members vote on this issue.

Mr. Tobin: Dream on.

Mr. Fulton: The Member across the floor always has smart remarks about Members on this side. We hear a lot of talk from that particular Member from Newfoundland. I will be in his riding during the next election and we will see whether he comes back here. Liberals do not even like to have facts put on the record, particularly the little one over there.

On September 18, 1978 Amax officials met with the Hon. Len Marchand who was Minister of State for the Environment. The Amax officials wanted to determine the procedure to obtain an authorization under the Fisheries Act to deposit tailings into Alice Arm. There was no discussion on the legal mechanics of drafting a regulation to authorize marine deposit of tailings. That view was expressed by Mr. Seaborn, who was then the Deputy Minister of the Environment and is now the Government's appointment to the International Joint Commission at approximately $80,000 a year. In the drafting carried out by Mr. MacLatchy, almost all of the wording is the same. However, it is interesting to note that section 4 of the MacLatchy document states that Iona Campagnolo was present. She was the Member for Skeena at the time. She was present along with Mr. Marchand and they wanted to determine the procedure to obtain an authorization under the Fisheries Act to deposit tailings into Alice Arm.

I do not believe that any Member of the House can stand in good conscience and vote to continue hiding those 200 documents, knowing that this kind of activity was occurring at the same time as the scientists in British Columbia were trying to determine what the impact would be between marine tailings disposal and on-land disposal.

Of course, this matter was taken before the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House on Regulations and Statutory Instruments.

Mr. Tobin: It was controlled by the Conservatives.

Mr. Fulton: I hear the little mind saying that the committee was manipulated. He never bothered to show up. We know where his credibility lies. On page 2 of the document dated May 28, 1981, which was sent to the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the committee had this to say to the Minister:

It is apparent to the Committee that the prohibition imposed by Parliament in Section 33(2) of the Act—

Referring to the Fisheries Act.

—and the general rules set out in the metal Mining Liquid Effluent Regulations will be of little value if special regimes come to be established to allow particular mining operations to dump tailings and effluents in enormous quantities. That such a situation might arise would seem to be altogether at odds with Parliament's purpose as expressed in Section 33 of the Act. Consequently, the Committee must assess the Alice Arm tailings deposit regulations carefully. It is clearly not the case that any or every exercise of power to set special standards or dumping limits is an unusual or unexpected use of power. What the Committee must address itself to is whether or not the deposits allowed in this case go beyond or are inconsistent with what reasonable men would consider to be anticipated under section 33.

That is very key.

The general limits set out in the Metal Mining Liquid Effluent Regulations have clearly been drastically exceeded. There has been no mere accommodation of a minor problem, or even of an existing mine. Rather, there has been an accommodation of a mining venture which it appears to the Committee might have been deliberately planned so that a special regime inconsistent with the general prohibition of section 33(2) of the Act and with the standards and concentrations set out in the Metal Mining Liquid Effluent Regulations would be essential.

Subsequent to this letter being written, we now have proof that the former Minister of the Environment, Mr. Marchand, and the former Minister of Amateur Sports, Mrs. Campagnolo, were present at a meeting with Amax either at the same time or at different times. The purpose of their meetings was to design marine tailing deposit regulations before the scientists had an opportunity to oppose the marine tailings disposal. I continue with the letter:

This might be thought to come dangerously close to treating Section 33(4) of the Act as a carte blanche to allow unlimited, unconfined and unrestricted dumping of toxic materials.

The Committee is also troubled by the effect that the latitude being allowed the Amax Kitsault Mine may have on the sentencing of those convicted of breach of section 33 of the Act or of exceeding the limits set out in the Metal Mining Liquid Effluent Regulations. Courts may be reluctant to impose sentences of any real deterrent value when defence counsel can point to dumping limits of the dimensions sanctioned in the case of the Kitsault Mine.

The vote taken by that committee, which was four to three, censuring the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for unusual and unexpected use of power still stands despite the real manipulations of the Liberal Party across the way. I hope they can stand in their place and list the 200 or 300 groups in this country that support the hiding of these documents. I doubt there would be the Anglican, Lutheran or United Church, the B.C. Medical Association or the B.C. Teachers' Federation in that list. I challenge any Liberal to rise in the House and list the groups. The groups would be various Liberal riding associations and corporations trying to hide the facts from the Canadian public.

In fact, I have in my hand today one of the documents which I am pursuing. One of the reasons that the Liberals are hiding these documents so carefully will be proven in a moment as I read a few facts into the record. This document is dated December 11, 1978. It is addressed to Mr. R. Hoos from Mr. D.E.C. Trethewey of the Canadian Wildlife Service, and it is with regard to the Amax operation and the recommendation which Mr. Hoos had made. It states:

I find the procedure employed in the presentation of this report to the JDCC to be highly irregular and completely unacceptable. As Chairman, you have unilaterally prepared and submitted to the JDCC on behalf of the Task Force, but without its approval a report containing a recommendation to proceed with the project. This recommendation did not reflect the opinion of the majority of the Task Force and apparently was based on your own particular biases.

Amax Limited

It continues:

I am unaware of any attempt by you to contact Task Force members to determine if in fact such a review would be inconvenient. In its present format, it appears to be nothing more than an information memorandum or progress report to your director.

I have just one more quote, Mr. Speaker. It continues:

In the present situation, the records will show that the JDCC approved a Task Force recommendation. This, of course, is false. The Task Force should not have to bear the responsibility of a decision which in reality was only that of one person.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to seek unanimous consent to continue his remarks, if he wishes. However, I have taken into consideration the point of order raised, which took away some moments of his time. I must now draw to his attention the fact that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Fulton: I would certainly be prepared to seek unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent that the Hon. Member for Skeena continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to explain that we have a very important Veterans Affairs motion coming on third, and since we will not have the full hour at our disposal, we would appreciate having as much time as possible for the veterans.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I do not mean to enter the debate, but I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) can be assured that there will be a full hour available to him.

Mr. McKenzie: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, let me say, without any apology, that I said "no" to a request for unanimous consent that the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) continue. I have been here in the House on half a dozen occasions listening to him making these allegations, speaking in the kind of tone which creates this kind of spurious debate. I am not one who would voluntarily spend any more time walking through the mud than I must. However, the remarks of the Hon. Member have once again taken a very predictable line for many in the debate. He has offered no evidence. He has offered a great many distorted truths and equally as great a number of total untruths today.

The only thing I can say to the Hon. Member is that there is no question but that this kind of decision is always controversial. One can always find those who are either side of the issue. Having said that, and having been honest enough to admit that certainly, in this kind of environmental question, there are always two sides, it would serve the Hon. Member and, indeed, the House well if, as much as is possible in this kind of debate, we try to stick to the facts, to behave as rational men and women in this Chamber and not seek to drag the reputations of many people through the mud. The Hon. Member has made unsubstantiated allegations, because of the immunity afforded to him—

Mr. Blaikie: Keep talking. We will send it out to the groups concerned.

Mr. Tobin: —which he would not dare make outside the House.

Mr. Fulton: Name one.

Mr. Tobin: The Hon. Member spoke of credibility and accountability. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member has never raised the issue before the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry or before the Committee on the Environment. They are one and the same with respect to either matter, fisheries concerns or environmental concerns.

Mr. Fulton: A point of order!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, he has not come before the Committee.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would be well advised to check the record. He said this previously in the debate but I did not bother to object. I raised this many times before both parts of the Committee, and I would urge him to check it out rather than put falsehoods on the record.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member stands in his place and repeats a statement as was pointed out in the last debate by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), who rose to the Hon. Member's point of order. Yes, three years ago, once—

Mr. Fulton: A point of order!

Mr. Tobin: —the Hon. Member came before the Committee. If I were to have stood every time the Hon. Member issued another untruth between his teeth in the last hour, I would not have had a chance to speak today.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not come to the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, so he does not really know what is going on. As a matter of fact, I raised this issue with the Deputy Minister just last week. He can check the record.

Mr. Tobin: I am the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and I am always there. The fact that the Hon. Member can rise and make this kind of statement shows how easily he finds it to grab little threads of whatever it is that works in his mind and make all kinds of statements which are to him, the truth. With so many important issues facing the country today, I find it almost unbelievable that the Hon. Member for Skeena continues to waste the time of this House on this particular matter.

The simple facts are that, in response to the Hon. Member's earlier request, correspondence relating to the granting of the Amax licence has been tabled in this Chamber. Other correspondence which the Hon. Member asked to be tabled are classified as internal departmental memoranda and, as is generally accepted, are not made public. This position was stated quite clearly at the time by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The situation has not changed and the Department's position has not changed.

The Hon. Member, who is so interested in acquiring new information, has left his seat and gone from the House. Having had his little 30-second news clip for the day, having milked the issue, he has gone off into another chamber outside the House. However, for reasons—oh, he is back. For reasons best known to himself, the Hon. Member for Skeena intends to—

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a point of order. An Hon. Member wished to speak to me, Mr. Speaker. I just went to the door and spoke to him. I think the Hon. Member might be well advised to put some of his facts on the record. I think that is why we are here, to find out why his Government will not table the documents.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it is best known to the Hon. Member for Skeena.

Mr. Blaikie: Why don't you quit this juvenile debate and say something?

Mr. Tobin: That was about as intelligent as anything else he has said in the last little while. He seems intent on chasing shadows, insinuating all kinds of collusion and underhanded deals in the granting of the Amax licence.

Some Hon. Members: Table the papers!

Mr. Tobin: When this matter was debated back in October of 1981, the House was given a full account of the manner in which Amax was permitted to dispose of tailings from the Kitsault mine beneath the surface waters of Alice Arm. The House knows there was a very detailed examination of the environmental risks made by the Department of the Environment and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. If the Hon. Member came to committee, he would know that.

The House also knows that there was a special review of all the data on which the decision was based. The Minister held a review within the Department and he then went to the University of British Columbia and to the University of Victoria. Three very esteemed scientists from each of those educational institutions in British Columbia reviewed all the data and they concurred with the Minister's decision. The results of the panel's review were clear. There would be no significant impact on the fishery at Alice Arm.

One must wonder what the Hon. Member for Skeena wants. Even a cursory look at the record would tell him that the approval was straightforward and proper. It was not that different from a great many other decisions. Obviously, the Hon. Member does not want to look at the record. He has obtained for himself a lot of ink, and lot of earplay out of this issue. He was really elected as a man of no imagination. He cannot find another issue in order to let this one go, because it has worked for him so long. He is prepared to waste the time of this House on an issue which should have been laid to rest a long time ago on the basis of the facts of the case and on the basis of simple logic, something the Hon. Member has obviously demonstrated again today that he does not understand.

Mr. Althouse: Table the documents.

Mr. Tobin: The Hon. Member was quoting newspaper editorials. Let me quote one as well. Some time ago the Vancouver Province described the Amax decision as "a storm in a teacup". After listening to the rhetoric of the Hon. Member for Skeena and then considering the work and report of the review panel, the Province, and I am quoting directly from the editorial, stated:

> We now learn that the Amax tailings are less poisonous than our tap water.

That is the editorial of the Vancouver Province after his first round of sensationalizing this issue in this House of Commons.

One thing that critics of the marine disposal decision have consistently forgotten is that Alice Arm is far from being a pristine, untouched inlet. The Kitsault mine was operated from 1968 to 1972 by a previous owner, the B.C. Molybdenum Corporation. During that period, 10 million tonnes of raw tailings were deposited directly into Lime Creek near the head of Alice Arm. These tailings spread five miles down the bottom of the arm. In addition, rivers flowing into that arm deposit hundreds of thousands of tonnes of silt every year.

There was at that time no attempt to restrict where the tailings were deposited. While we do not, of course, today regard this practice as environmentally sound, it is interesting to note that there was no public outcry at that time. Not a single letter was received which objected to the dumping of crude tailings in this manner.

More important, during those five years of operation there was no significant change in the numbers of salmon migrating through Alice Arm up into the Kitsault and Illiance Rivers. In other words, the completely uncontrolled discharge of tailings had no apparent impact on the major fishery in that body of water. Certainly there was a detrimental effect on the life forms on the bottom of Alice Arm, but the salmon suffered no apparent harm.

Economic problems forced the closure of the B.C. Molybdenum operation in 1972. In 1973, the property was purchased by Amax. What did Amax have to do in order to reopen the mine? In September, 1975 Amax made an application to the provincial Pollution Control Branch for a permit to reopen the mine at double the previous capacity and to deposit tailings effluent in Alice Arm at the rate of 12,000 tonnes a day. Notices to this effect were formally published in the B.C. Gazette and the Prince Rupert newspapers. This notice was published twice and a copy was provided to the local community of Kitimat-Stikine. No objection to the application was received. All of this was done strictly by the book, by very regular procedure.

As this House may be aware, there is good communication between the Province of British Columbia and Environment Canada in the environmental review process. There is a referral arrangement between the Pollution Control Branch and the regional office of Environment Canada's Environmental Protection Service. Thus, a copy of the Amax permit application was referred at an early stage to the federal Government.

Why was Amax not allowed to continue dumping raw tailings into Lime Creek? The reason, basically, was that Metal Mining Liquid Effluent Regulations under the Fisheries Act were passed in February, 1977. The Regulations, which are applied throughout the country, prescribed limits for total suspended matter and were intended to prohibit the disposal of tailings into lakes and rivers.

It was recognized in drafting those regulations that the marine disposal of tailings may be the best environmental option in certain situations and would be considered on a case by case basis. The Environmental Code of Practice, which was published by the Government at the same time, states on page 23, and I quote directly from the Code:

> 6.2 (2) When it can be shown that the unconfined disposal alternative is the most practical method, and that it is environmentally preferable to confined disposal a separate regulation for each specific site must be obtained to allow its use.

So it was clearly spelled out in 1977 that the Government would consider site specific regulations in cases where it was appropriate.

Was it appropriate in this case? The clear answer is yes, it was, but it was not on the basis of sinister political pressure or on the basis of some special favour to Amax, as the Hon. Member for Skeena would have us believe. No, it was an appropriate measure for sound environmental protection reasons, based on hard facts and scientific judgment.

I will return to this in a moment but the House should know that the marine disposal of tailings has been a common practice on the coast of British Columbia. While it may not be the ideal way to dispose of tailings from a fish habitat viewpoint, in the past this was considered the only practical method of tailings disposal in any mining operation in rugged terrain on the coast of B.C.

Anaconda at Britannia Beach, only 20 miles north of Vancouver, dumped its tailings into Howe Sound for more than 50 years, until 1974. Texada Mines dumped its tailings into the Strait of Georgia for almost 25 years, until 1976. Utah Mines on Vancouver Island and Wesfrob Mines on the Queen Charlotte Islands, also in the riding of the Hon. Member for Skeena, are currently, this day, dumping tailings into the ocean. It is not all that unusual.

I do not mean to suggest that because marine disposal of tailings has been practised in the past it is necessarily acceptable. It is not ideal, and Environment Canada has disallowed it on many occasions. The point I would like to make is that the Government's environmental experts considered it and came to the conclusion that it was not the preferable way to handle things.

In the case of Amax it was the preferable way. It may not have been in other circumstances. I can give examples: at Nanisivik Mines on Baffin Island and at Cominco's Polaris Mine on Little Cornwallis Island, both in the high Arctic, the Government rejected that method. In the case of Amax at Alice Arm, we said yes. We do not automatically give a rubber stamp in every case.

Mr. Fulton: You do. You are a rubber stamp.

Mr. Tobin: Let me move on to another point that probably led the Hon. Member to take up this issue. It is well known that at the time of the Amax decision there was disagreement among Government scientists about whether to permit the marine disposal of tailings in Alice Arm. Biologists concerned with the preservation of fish habitat do not view in the same way the fact that these tailings will bury the bottom of part of Alice Arm.

What is offensive to me is the suggestion that this difference among Government scientists was settled by pressure of any kind from any quarter. Senior officials in Environment Canada and in Fisheries and Oceans weighed the risks and made a decision to recommend marine disposal. That was the result of a proper administrative review and it was vindicated by a review by three highly esteemed experts in this field from the University of British Columbia and from the University of Victoria. Would the Members opposite question their judgment?

Mr. Fulton: We have.

Mr. Tobin: I ask the Hon. Member for Skeena, is it his opinion that these experts are somehow part of a conspiracy? The Hon. Member practises what is almost a Joseph McCarthy mentality in reverse. In his mind, everybody is at the end of a string. Frankly, I find it disappointing.

There was a time in this House, and in this country, when this Party opposite, although its political philosphy is slightly left of mine, earned a great deal of respect for standing up on issues, and standing up with integrity.

Mr. Fulton: We will not be lectured by Liberals about integrity, thank you very much.

Mr. Tobin: Many men who filled those chairs opposite stood up on issues with great integrity. It is now sad, and it is disappointing.

Mr. Fulton: You guys are pathetic.

Mr. Tobin: Perhaps if the Members who sat on the benches opposite years ago were here today, they would be somewhat shocked. It is a little sad to see the kind of spurious raving that emanates from the minds of those opposite these days.

The evidence shows that the permanent on-land impoundment of tailings in perpetuity in the rugged terrain in areas such as Alice Arm cannot be assured at any cost. And the failure to make such an impoundment due to heavy rains or earthquakes could lead to severe environmental consequences. It could destroy the fisheries and the wildlife habitat near the mouth of the Illiance River.

Members from British Columbia know that there is a high potential for mudslides and snowslides in that Province. Many will recall the severe flooding at Terrace, B.C., a few years ago.

Mr. Fulton: The sky is falling.

Mr. Tobin: The damage was estimated at $20 million. If there was a tailings pond failure at the Kitsault mine, nobody knows what the cost would be in environmental damage, but it would be high.

I would like to turn now to another part of the Amax debate and that is the toxicity of the tailings and the impact that they will have on the waters of Alice Arm. The Hon. Member for Skeena is fond of referring to uranium and radium-226, among other things, in the Kitsault tailings, and to the terrible danger these two, sinister-sounding materials represent. This is a complete distortion, like other distortions that have been thrown into the Amax debate.

Uranium and radium-226 are naturally occurring elements found everywhere in the rocks and soils across Canada. These elements are present right now in the very stones and other materials that were used to construct the Parliament Buildings and this very Chamber I stand in. They are all around us right now.

Mr. Fulton: Why do you not go eat some?

Mr. Tobin: Let me assure the Hon. Member for Skeena that he is in no danger, or at least he is in no more danger than he would be anywhere else. I think the greatest thing he has to fear is not fear itself, but this capacity he has to behave as an unguided missile every time he opens his mouth.

• (1610)

The average uranium concentration of ordinary rock in the crust of the earth is around three or four parts per million. The uranium content of the rock in Amax tailings runs somewhere around two parts per million—less than the average found in the stones used to construct this building, Mr. Speaker. What has the Hon. Member done? He talked about uranium-226. Of course, citizens not aware that this is a common substance found anywhere in this land would react with great fear. It is a very perverted mind which would play on that fear and continue espousing these words in hopes of scoring cheap political points.

An Hon. Member: You are a wimp.

Mr. Tobin: A wimp? Yes, you are a wimp. I regret to say it. I believe I would much rather be a wimp than be somebody who would deliberately play on the fears of the public, who would deliberately use buzz words and frighten the population in order to score political points.

I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by making two simple statements. I believe the Hon. Member for Skeena in his heart, if he has one, knows the truth. There was no political interference in the scientific examination of the Amax issue. If he infers that in fact there was, then he calls into question the reputation of the University of British Columbia, the University of Victoria, and the very fine men who acted on an independent review panel.

Second, there was no favour extended to Amax.

An Hon. Member: You are ignorant of—

Mr. Tobin: No, I am not ignorant. I am just not hallucinating most of my life. The decision to permit underwater disposal at Alice Arm was made on the basis of scientific evidence, and it was a very sound decision. A controversial decision, yes. When we talk about the environment, I hope there is always good cut and thrust in debate. I hope there is always a requirement to ask for a second, third and fourth opinion. that is important, Mr. Speaker. But having asked for those second, third and fourth opinions, and having received them from independent, qualified sources, let us not have an hon. gentleman—and we give him that title—stand in this House and insinuate and smear the reputations of people who cannot come here to defend themselves. Let us not have an hon. gentleman use the immunity of this House to make statements he dare not make outside the confines of this building, Mr. Speaker. That is perhaps the real test of the courage of the Hon. Member opposite.

Mr. Fulton: You say that outside the House with me, little boy!

Mr. Tobin: It is only my maturity, Mr. Speaker, and my wisdom which prevents me from responding to that kind of childlike challenge.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), I too am perplexed as to why the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) continues to flog this issue. I would like to reiterate the fact that all scientific documents upon which the design to authorize marine tailings deposits in Alice Arm was based have always been freely available. They have been provided to the Hon. Member for Skeena and to other interested groups. All technical reports on monitoring the discharge and other special studies have also been made available to the public.

In addition, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) has tabled all requested external correspondence on the Amax matter. Only internal memoranda providing advice to the Minister and the Department have not been released, as is the usual practice.

Amax Limited

It would be useful, I believe, if I were to re-emphasize the factors which were taken into account in approving the Alice Arm Tailings Deposit Regulations. This was not a decision that was taken flippantly or in great haste but one that was made only after a detailed technical examination of data on various tailings disposal alternatives carried out by the staff of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of the Environment.

By way of example of the thoroughness with which this task was carried out, I might mention that more than 40 technical reports on the biology and oceanography of Alice Arm were reviewed to assess the immediate and long-term risks associated with maintenance of a conventional on-land tailings impoundment, as compared with the underwater disposal system which is in contention today. Following this extensive study, the conclusion drawn was that a properly designed marine tailings disposal system would not adversely affect the fisheries resources and, on balance, would be preferable in this particular case to a containment pond on land.

The Minister in making his decision based his approval of the Tailings Deposit Regulations on the following factors: first, the conclusion that Pacific salmon and other important fishery resources would not be adversely affected; second, that tailings deposited from the mine would not extend outside of Alice Arm; third, that the tailings would keep to the bottom of Alice Arm at a minimum depth of 100 metres; and fourth, that an alternative method of tailings storage—that is on-land impoundment—would represent a threat in perpetuity to salmon resources entering Alice Arm. This conclusion was arrived at in view of the high rainfall and the steep topography of the area, which meant, in effect, that the permanent stability of an on-land storage basin could not be assured. I feel this is a very important point, Mr. Speaker, one which has been frequently overlooked by those critical of the underwater disposal system.

Having satisfied himself as to the technical aspects of this disposal system, the Minister has freely admitted that there still remained a nagging thought that perhaps the experts might have miscalculated or slipped up somewhere along the line. It was for that reason that he was not unsympathetic or unresponsive to the concerns expressed by the Nishga Tribal Council, on behalf of the native people who live in the vicinity of Alice Arm, that some damage might be caused to the fishery resource as a result of the mining operation.

Because of this, and to make doubly sure that we were doing the right thing, the Minister asked for the establishment of a review panel of independent and highly respected scientists to go over all the data and reports on which the decision was based, and to publicly report their findings. He opted for a scientific review panel rather than the public inquiry which was advocated by the Nishga Indians because the evidence on which the panel would have to base its findings was almost exclusively scientific or, at best, very technical. However, it was made very clear to the Nishgas, and to any other groups or individuals interested in the issue, that the panel would be prepared to meet with them and hear their views or evidence, and that all reports of the panel would be readily available to the public.

The Minister, and most others involved in this matter, were disappointed that the Nishgas, for reasons best known to themselves, decided to boycott the review panel. In view of the concerns they had raised and their repeated demands for a public inquiry, it was somewhat difficult to understand their position. However, that was their decision.

In the recruitment of members to the review panel, considerable care was taken to ensure that competent and independent scientists were appointed. Its Chairman was Dr. J. E. McInerney, who is Chairman of the Department of Biology at the University of Victoria and a specialist in the physiology and behaviour of fish. The other two members were Dr. R. W. Burling, Professor of Oceanography at the Department of Oceanography, University of British Columbia, and Dr. W. K. Oldham, a member of the Faculty of Civil Engineering at the University of B.C.

The panel's terms of reference were as follows:

1. To examine and advise on the adequacy of the Alice Arm Tailings Deposit Regulations for protecting economically important fisheries resources and Indian food fisheries of Alice Arm and environs.
2. To examine and advise on whether planned tailings deposit practices are likely to meet the terms and conditions of the regulations.
3. To assess the planned monitoring to determine whether it will be adequate to detect violations of the terms of the regulations or impacts upon fish and fish habitat, and to recommend necessary improvements.
4. To consult with interested agencies and parties knowledgeable about the issue.
5. To examine and recommend any alternative tailings disposal methods which could significantly reduce or preclude hazards to the fisheries resources.
6. To recommend further courses of action in the future which in the opinion of the Panel, may be necessary to address the issue.
7. To prepare two reports: as soon as possible an interim report recommending any action deemed important for protecting the public interest, and a final report by July 1, 1981.

It was believed by the then Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that these terms of reference would look after any possible questions which could arise on this very important issue. The scientific review panel went about its work with much dedication and diligence, and starting around the end of March, 1981 consulted with knowledgeable people in various parts of British Columbia and held open public meetings at Prince Rupert and Vancouver. Between meetings they studied an immense amount of correspondence and reports which had a bearing on the subject.

In the early part of May the scientific review panel introduced its interim report, which commenced with the statement, and I quote:

> It is the panel's considered opinion that, in the short term, the public interest will not be jeopardized by the continued discharge of Amax mine tailings to Alice Arm. Accordingly, no major restrictive actions are deemed necessary at this time.

The panel's report was issued on July 24, 1981 and consisted of a document of some 154 pages, in itself a somewhat remarkable feat considering the fact that the three scientists involved started their task only four months previously. These were the panel's conclusions, and I quote directly from the report:

(a) With the possible exceptions of cadmium, lead and zinc in the solid form, no deleterious effects are expected to result from the daily deposit of 12,000 metric tons of Amax/Kitsault tailings into Alice Arm in accordance with the Alice Arm Tailings Deposit Regulations.

(b) The following substances, in both solid and dissolved forms, all occur in concentrations which are the same or less than local background conditions: arsenic, copper, iron, mercury, manganese, nickel, uranium-235 and its daughter products, radium-226, thorium-230 and lead-210. Moreover their dissolved concentrations in the tailings all meet or are less than Canadian surface and drinking water guidelines and objectives except manganese which slightly exceeds an aesthetic drinking water guideline.

(c) In the dissolved form, cadmium, lead and zinc all occur at concentrations in the tailings equal to or less than local freshwater background conditions and all three meet or are less than Canadian surface and drinking water guidelines and objectives.

(d) Molybdenum in the Amax/Kitsault tailings is expected to somewhat exceed ambient levels in Alice Arm but not result in adverse environmental changes.

(e) A "cloud" of fine tailings containing approximately 4% of the total daily solids from the Amax/Kitsault discharge is not expected to result in increased loads of dissolved substances in the Alice Arm water column.

(f) Most tailings (approximately 96%) either quickly fall out of the discharge plume or are carried as a turbidity current into the deep central trench of mid-Alice Arm. Resuspension and redistribution is expected to be infrequent, of small magnitude and without deleterious effects.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), to interrupt the proceedings.

INCOME TAX

INTEREST INCOME DEDUCTIONS FOR VETERANS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of increasing veterans' income tax deductions for interest income from $100 to $1,000 annually, so that veterans would not suffer depletion of their War Veterans Allowance after earning more than $100 in interest income and so that they would be taxed on an equitable basis with other investors.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the seconding of the motion by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). It comes as a bit of a surprise, Mr. Speaker, that we are called upon to debate this motion this afternoon, a motion placed on the Order Paper in November, 1981, and which had considerable support both before and after that date. Any responsible Government would have moved a long time ago to correct this injustice, this unfairness with respect to Canada's veterans. The fact that we are in the position today of having to debate the motion speaks unfavourably and loudly with respect to this Government's attitude and whether or not it really does care when it comes to Canada's veterans.

The motion is straightforward in itself, Mr. Speaker. Look at your income tax return. Look at the form. It gives Canadians an opportunity to deduct $1,000 of eligible interest income in calculating their taxable income—except veterans. The veteran receiving the War Veterans Allowance is only entitled to claim $100 per year in interest income. Any excess will be deducted from the veterans' allowance. That is not only patently unjust, Mr. Speaker, it is unfair and an insult to veterans. The veteran receives an allowance because he has served his country. He is now either too old to work or he suffers from some disability. He has an insufficient financial base to carry him through the future years. In most cases the disability is a direct result of wartime service.

Years ago, Mr. Speaker, there may have been some justification for limiting the amount of interest deductibility, but now interest rates have changed. They have reached exorbitant and unimaginable rates as high as 20 per cent. In addition, we have been faced with inflation unknown in years gone by. The world which existed when this deduction was established no longer exists and has not for several years. Interest is charged and paid for on every transaction. You can even earn interest on your chequing account. Over the last two or three years a veteran could have less than $1,000 on deposit for a rainy day, or even for burial purposes, and still exceed his allotted exemption. Self-evidently, a veteran receiving a War Veterans Allowance is not amassing a fortune in savings or investment. What most veterans are trying to do with their limited income is to set aside some little nest egg for their future, be that for a funeral or a legacy for their survivors, and a modest one at that. They are not trying to beat the system and amass a fortune for themselves. They gave service to the country. The savings go into an account and are left there to accumulate whatever interest they can while the veteran lives.

As a consequence of this, the interest income should not be regarded as being supplementary to the War Veterans Allowance. The veteran is not investing to earn interest to increase his income. Therefore, why should the Government point to any interest income he might receive from his modest investment and say that $100 is having a bearing on the amount of the allowance he should receive? Any time his investment return or interest return exceeds $100 in a single year, that excess comes off his war allowance.

I began by saying that I was surprised that the Government had not acted long before now. I had reason for making that comment. In the summer of 1981 the Senate Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Science issued a report entitled "They Served—We Care". Recommendation No. 6 in that report urged the Government to increase the interest exemption from $100 to at least $500, and cited many of the reasons that I have given this afternoon for the recommendation. The report was given substantial attention by Canada's veterans and the Veterans Committee, and it was said to have received favourable consideration by the Government.

Various motions were made in the House on the heels of that report, such as motions under Standing Order 43. Questions were also asked in the House. But what has the Government done to implement an increase in the amount of the exemption? It has done nothing. The months dragged by, and still nothing happened. Almost a full year later my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) questioned the Minister about his failure to act on that Senate Committee recommendation. The present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) responded by saying that the recommendation was "under active consideration right at the moment". That was in June, 1982, eight months ago, Mr. Speaker. It is too late now to assist these veterans for the 1982 tax year. That has gone by when the Minister was saying it was under consideration, eight months ago.

The Government's failure to act left the veterans vulnerable during those years when interest rates were at the astronomical height of 20 per cent or stretching thereto. Hon. Members will recall that the Government used the same approach to respond to the mortgage rate crisis in the country. Once the worst was over, the Government took some action and proclaimed that it cared. We see the same scenario developing here.

I am not going to prolong the debate, Mr. Speaker. It is important that this issue be brought before the House so that it can be concluded in some form and that we can attack it in a reasonable manner. It should be evident to all Members, as it is to the veterans, that an increase in the interest income deduction is long overdue.

If the Government truly cares and is willing at this late date to correct that long-standing injustice, then this motion should meet with the approval of the House today.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) is proposing that the Government consider increasing veterans' income tax deductions for interest income from $100 to $1,000.

Such a suggestion is superfluous as far as the Income Tax Act is concerned because all veterans, just like every other Canadian who files an income tax return, can claim up to $1,000 in deductible interest income. Strictly speaking, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines is asking for something that is already in existence.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member also makes the worthy suggestion that War Veterans Allowance recipients should be allowed to earn a larger amount of forgiveable interest income than is presently permitted. I should like to address that point.

The Hon. Member is not the first person to put forward such a suggestion. He is echoing resolutions passed by members of a number of veterans organizations.

The last change to the amount of interest exemption was in July 1980, when this House passed Bill C-40. The ceiling was raised from $50 to $100.

You will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that interest rates reached extremely high levels in the months following the passage of Bill C-40, and it has been argued, logically, that a War Veterans Allowance recipient would not need to have had all that much in savings before topping the $100 exemption level.

True, the savings rates now available at banks and trust companies have come down substantially in recent times, but the Minister of Veterans Affairs appreciates the arguments advanced by veterans organizations and now by the Member for St. Catharines.

In fact, the question of interest income is already under scrutiny, but it is only one part of a total, comprehensive study being undertaken of the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members should be aware that at the moment the Act is being examined in its entirety. No aspect is being overlooked. Not only are the levels of benefits being examined but also the way the benefits are delivered. In other words, the Department launched an in-depth study into the effectiveness of the War Veterans Allowance Act in 1983—more than 50 years after WVA was introduced by Parliament.

Hon. Members should understand the background against which this study is being undertaken. Within a few years the large majority of Canadian veterans will be over the age of 65. New programs will have to be developed to assist this aging veteran population.

Many Members will be familiar with the aging veterans program launched by the Department of Veterans Affairs last year. This program has been widely praised as it offers a number of services designed to keep a veteran out of hospital and comfortable in his own home. However, this program at present is only available to those who receive war disability pensions. From this initial experience, it is hoped that War Veterans Allowance recipients will also be embraced by this valuable program, and this is one of the matters now under study.

I should tell Hon. Members that the whole War Veterans Allowance review is being undertaken not only by members of the Department of Veterans Affairs but in consultation with representatives of the Department of National Health and Welfare. These officials want to see if War Veterans Allowance, Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement can be rationalized in terms of service delivery.

In addition, the opinion and advice of veterans' groups have been sought and are being received. The Minister can inform the House at this time that the review should be finished in the fall. I repeat that it is a wide-ranging review, concentrating on every aspect of the War Veterans Allowance Act, interest income included, of course. Admittedly, some changes to the legislation can be made by amending regulations. The Minister is hopeful that he will be able to announce some positive changes in the near future, however any change to interest income exemptions cannot be accomplished through regulations. The Minister appreciates the attention the Hon. Member for St. Catharines is giving to this subject, but the Government cannot support his motion because of its limited nature.

I ask the Hon. Member to have patience and await the conclusions of the War Veterans Allowance review. I am sure he would agree that it would be wiser and more efficient to await broad, long-range recommendations to ensure that when the Government makes changes to the Act they will be consistent, comprehensive and fair.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, this motion is being brought before the House at an appropriate time. It is one that we in the New Democratic Party fully support. The Government has introduced numerous amendments to the Income Tax Act which are being considered by the House. Unfortunately the proposed motion of the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) is not one of those amendments. I hope the Government will include it at the conclusion of this debate. Since hearing the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. de Corneille), I doubt very much that that will happen today, if indeed it ever happens.

As the Parliamentary Secretary pointed out quite correctly, a number of representations by interested individuals have been made to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) over the years in support of such an amendment to the Income Tax Act. I think it would be supported by all Canadians. Why the Government would be reluctant to introduce it escapes me. Why should veterans, who have given of themselves in the service of our country, be treated differently from other Canadians with respect to income tax deductions?

The Parliamentary Secretary also said in effect that because all Canadians can take advantage of the income tax deduction on interest income, veterans are not in fact being discriminated against. However, what he failed to point out was that while the Government on one hand allows veterans to take advantage of that Section of the Income Tax Act, it takes it back with the other hand because it is taken off the top of the War Veterans Allowance.

The motion of the Hon. Member for St. Catharines is really a rather simple one. It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of increasing veterans' income tax deductions for interest income from $100 to $1,000 annually, so that veterans would not suffer depletion of their War Veterans Allowance after earning more than $100 in interest income and so that they would be taxed on an equitable basis with other investors.

If the House does not give the motion the serious consideration which is requested and indeed fails to adopt it, we would be agreeing to continuing an obvious discriminatory practice against the veterans of our country.

As the Hon. Member for St. Catharines pointed out, the Government has been promising to review this particularly offensive Section for some time. The Parliamentary Secretary has told the House that the whole War Veterans Allowance including income interest is under review again this year. I found this rather curious because, on the one hand, he pointed out to the House at great length that there was no problem, and on the other hand he said that there was a problem and that the Department was reviewing it. We recognize that.

For many years veterans, at least the ones with whom I have spoken, have pointed out on numerous occasions that one of their major problems with that particular Department was the processing of claims. Since becoming a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs at practically all the meetings I have attended it was indicated that the major problem of veterans with the Department was in the area of processing and adjudication of claims. The delays, as a result of either that Department's tardiness, lack of staffing or physical movement of buildings around the country, have created tremendous problems for many veterans. The Department has assured Hon. Members of the House time and time again that this would be rectified and that it was not as bad as it was one, two or three years ago. Yet the bulk of correspondence I receive from veterans who still complain about undue delays in processing claims has not decreased in volume. The volume seems to be about the same, if not on occasion larger.

It is a question of how the Department views veterans. For example, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) brought to my attention a problem of one of his constituents who was married to a veteran who unfortunately because of his war experience came out of active service as an acute alcoholic. This individual had attempted to obtain a war veterans pension as a result of that illness. The Department's position, which totally escapes me, gave the following rationale for denying War Veterans Allowance:

> —alcohol dependency . . . without associated organic disease is not a disease within the meaning of the Pension Act. However, should alcohol dependency lead to organic, physical and/or mental changes, the resulting organic disorders would constitute diseases . . . and, as such, would be considered by the Commission for pension purposes.

I have spoken with numerous doctors and professionals in the field who work with alcoholics. These people have told me that alcoholism is in fact a disease. For the Department of Veterans Affairs to be relying on a very out-dated notion of what alcoholism as an illness constitutes is really beyond belief. I see the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) looking at me. Both of us served on the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. We heard many professionals tell us that alcoholism was a disease and not, as it used to be considered, a character flaw in the individual which caused him to consume too much alcohol.

My suggestion to the Department of Veterans Affairs is that it had better come into the twentieth century when it takes a look at the problems individuals who have been in the Armed Forces and have served in armed conflict are faced with in today's society.

I would like to refer to another issue which indicates the attitude of that particular Department. The committee heard from native veterans associations. They have a multitude of problems in attempting to establish the very fact that they should be entitled to the same veterans' benefits as other Canadians who are not natives. For example, Indian associations across the country told us that the Indian war veterans experienced difficulty in receiving the benefits due to them for having served in the wars. Those difficulties continue today. According to the complaints, those difficulties take one of two forms. Either the veteran has been required to give up benefits as a status Indian in order to receive veterans' benefits, or he has been forced to relinquish veterans' benefits in order to continue receiving benefits as a status Indian. The native veteran is placed in a Catch-22 situation. Either the native veteran gives up the natural right as a status Indian in order to receive benefits, or he does not receive the benefits in order to keep the native status. This is totally unacceptable. This was certainly unacceptable to our committee. We made strong recommendations to the Department of Veterans Affairs about what they should be doing in those instances. Do you know what the response of the Department of Veterans Affairs was? The Department said to the leader of those groups "If you want to go around the country and identify those natives who served in the war years, then we are prepared to take a look at any grievances they may have." The response from the leaders of those native groups was, "We do not have the financial resources or means to talk to every native person in the country to determine whether, in fact, he served in the Armed Forces during the war years and whether he may have grievances against the Department of Veterans Affairs." This is a serious problem. This Department must address that problem in a very reasonable manner.

I have another letter from an individual who tells me that the major economic problems that face War Veterans Allowance recipients is the need for assistance in the care of their wives who are also advancing in years and who have not reached the age of 65 when they will qualify for senior citizens' benefits. There is no allowance provided for dental care and dentures, optical assistance—glasses, etc.—prescription drugs, or prosthesis needs following mastectomy operations. The letter goes on to state that the cost of these services has risen at a phenomenal rate and the payment of these necessary benefits has greatly depreciated the purchasing power of the present allowance in the necessary areas of rent, tax, heat, light, clothing, food, etc. This veteran says that they require this aid in order to enable them to share each other's company and happiness during the twilight years of their lives.

I do not want to assist any attempt to talk out this motion so that it would not be adopted by the House. Therefore, having said that, I conclude.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) for introducing this simple, straightforward motion. He placed it on the Order Paper in November, 1981. Unfortunately, the Government should have taken some action at least two years ago and sent a letter to the Hon. Member for St. Catharines that the Government was going to introduce his recommendation to increase the allowance from $100 to $1,000 as a result of economic conditions. We should not even be debating this issue today.

What the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. de Corneille) and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) are overlooking is the fact that veterans are aging. Veterans are not getting younger and healthier. They cannot wait for all these long, detailed studies and reviews, nor listen anymore to these things "being under active consideration". This is a simple, straightforward matter that should have been dealt with two years ago. We do not have to wait for some long-ranging comprehensive view of veterans affairs before a simple motion such as this is carried through and changes made to the Income Tax Act, or whatever has to be done.

The Parliamentary Secretary mentioned that they are consulting with the Department of Health and Welfare. I hope the Government is not looking at phasing out the Department of Veterans Affairs and bringing it under the umbrella of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I will give the Government warning right now that it will hear the loudest protest it has ever heard. We want the Department of Veterans Affairs to remain as it is. This is a special interest group and we want them treated in that manner. We do not want the veterans lumped in with the Department of National Health and Welfare. I hope you are not entertaining any ideas along those lines.

At the last meeting of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs we had last year I tried to have a motion passed in the Committee that the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs deal on a continuous basis with veterans' problems and call for progress reports from the Minister. This would have made sense. Our veterans are aging and their health is not improving. We need fast, fast action, not years and years of studies and delays.

I am in my eleventh year in this place. When I first came here I heard about these studies. We have had enough studies into veterans affairs. We have an excellent report which came from another place. The veterans organizations present excellent documentation year after year. It is not necessary to have any more studies. A study is just a stalling tactic. The simple things being requested will not cost millions and millions of dollars. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to convey this message. Veterans are aging. They will not live to the age of 100 or 150. We have to do something now, not years from now.

We have asked the Minister repeatedly in the House to make statements on motions as to what progress was being made in the Department. We never hear a word from him. Every time we ask a question in the House, it does not matter whether it is myself or the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) or anybody else, we hear there is a study or a review going on. This keeps going on and on and on. The Minister should be making statements on motions to give us progress reports on what is to happen.

I hope that this motion will not be talked out. It is very simple. It does not have to be locked into another study. That is not necessary at all. It is unfortunate that arrangements were not made so that veterans could have been considered for the 1982 tax year.

I would like to impress upon the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs to go to the Minister and ask him to take a second look at this particular motion. It is not involved. Perhaps he could come up with a recommendation for his officials, the Income Tax Department, or whoever he has to speak to, to have this introduced.

We cannot accept his argument on long-ranging reviews and studies. Again, let me say to the Minister that our veterans are aging. We have to act now.

I hope that we will receive a commitment from you this afternoon. I hope some Liberal is not in here this afternoon with another prepared statement from some bureaucrat as to why this simple motion cannot be accepted. I hope that some Liberal over there has such a statement in his hand. I hope he will not rise today, but that this motion can be passed and this simple recommendation be put in place for Canada's veterans.

• (1700)

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I preface my remarks by saying that it was only a few years ago that I was the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. As a compliment to my colleague and next-door neighbour, the Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), I hope that you do not think that the only reason that Members on this side stand is to oppose what you are saying. I think what he is asking in his motion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, and I possibly should have addressed this comment to the previous speaker as well, but while the Chair is more lenient during Private Members' Business, remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, thank you for your correction. I have had enough experience in the House to remember that common courtesy which we should extend to Your Honour.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the Hon. Member for St. Catharines that I believe his proposal does indeed have great merit. The previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) set up a paper tiger when he said that he hoped the Department of Veterans Affairs would not be lumped in with the Department of National Health and Welfare. I personally, and I am sure many of my colleagues, would be very much opposed to any lumping of Departments at all.

However, it caused me to reflect upon who was the Minister of Veterans Affairs during the short period when the Members opposite were in power. For all of my thinking, all I could come up with is that they never had one.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, we did.

Mr. Parent: If I am permitted to continue, the Minister of National Defence was in charge of Veterans Affairs. Those Members did not see fit to have a separate Minister, as the Liberal Government has had for a number of years. Yet, they set up paper tigers. We think enough of our veterans that we indeed do set them aside and treat them as Canadians who have performed a great service for the country.

Mr. de Corneille: It is in the dirty minds of the Tories.

Mr. Parent: I would not use those terms, I say to my colleague. I am sure that when we are talking about the veterans, that type of remark is a little bit beneath us.

It is my opinion that there is more to be said on the subject being debated here today than can be expressed in one simple answer. The whole question of the War Veterans Allowance Act should be considered in light of just what it offers to those Canadians who are our friends, neighbours and relatives. More than 50 years after the legislation was passed in the House of Commons, Canadian men and women continue to benefit from most generous legislation. This is sometimes not understood not only by their Canadian friends but by those new Canadians who have arrived from countries that are not as far-sighted or as generous.

I can recall the time when legislation came up to extend the benefits to Hong Kong veterans. The Hon. Daniel MacDonald was the Minister of Veterans Affairs then and I was his Parliamentary Secretary. This legislation was brought to the House and passed by a Liberal Government. As Parliamentary Secretary at the time, I can recall that a request was made to extend these allowances to the veterans of Dieppe. We were the ones who brought that in. In fairness, I must say that there were amicable discussions on both sides. At the time there were Members from both Parties who were indeed interested first and foremost in the welfare of our veterans. I notice that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is in the House. He is a veteran of Dieppe and a decorated soldier who should be acknowledged in the House as being an outstanding soldier in his time, a Rhodes scholar and a very great participant in all of the debates on veterans affairs. We should continue to listen to him as we have over the years. I compliment him for the work he has done for the veterans.

The War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act provide an allowance for persons who meet service eligibility requirements and who, because of age or incapacity are unable to work and have insufficient income for maintenance as determined by a modified income test. This allowance is available to veterans of the Canadian, Commonwealth and Allied Forces and to certain other civilians who served in close support of the Armed Forces during wartime. It is not only those, but, equally important, widows, widowers and orphans who may qualify under the same Act, and an additional allowance may be paid on behalf of dependent children.

Again I come back to the theme of the fairness and the generosity of the Allowances Acts as they were set up. The War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act are a form of financial assistance intended to ensure that a qualified recipient's income does not fall below a certain level specified under the legislation. As an income-support program, it forms part of Canada's social assistance legislation. In common with other such programs, all other income must be taken into consideration in determining eligibility for the allowance and the amount at which it may be paid.

In order to make this whole picture of War Veterans Allowance a little clearer, I think it would be wise to review the circumstances under which this whole package of legislation evolved so that we can put this particular proposal from the Hon. Member for St. Catharines into its proper perspective.

During the First World War, and during 1917 more specifically, just before the Battle of Vimy Ridge, Prime Minister Borden spoke to the Canadian troops. He is quoted as saying:

> The Government and the country will consider it their duty to see that a proper appreciation of your efforts and of your courage is brought to the notice of your people at home, and that no man, whether he goes back or whether he remains in Flanders, will have just cause to reproach the Government for having broken faith with the men who won and the men who died.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, four or five years ago I went to Vimy to represent Canada on November 11. I had the great honour of speaking on behalf of our country about the soldiers who were wounded in battle and those who died on the battlefield. We must never forget the tremendous sacrifice made by these men so many years ago. I also would like the House to know, Mr. Speaker, that my father was one of the soldiers who fought over there, and today, in the House.

[English]

We have in the galleries another veteran of the Second World War who followed my father's footsteps. He is my brother, Gerald Parent, who was an Air Force pilot. I am happy that he is here today to listen to us discuss these matters about the veterans. Both he and my father are veterans. Like all veterans, I believe they performed their duty well in adverse circumstances, and it is to them that we owe many thanks.

The next 23 years after 1917 was an extremely significant time with respect to the establishment of administrative and adjudicary bodies with responsibility to veterans and their dependants. The War Veterans Allowance Act was approved in 1930 and was administered by the War Veterans Allowance Committee. In 1936, the War Veterans Allowance Board, as we know it today, was established. Ever since that year we have witnessed countless amendments which improved the War Veterans Allowance Act. They were amendments which lived up to the expectations of what this Act was all about and what was referred to by the then Prime Minister, Mackenzie King, when he said:

> This legislation represents an attempt to recognize a service upon which no price can ever be placed. Those whose services are involved have not thought of their duty as being something which would entail a monetary reward, but it is an acknowledgement of the burdens borne and sacrifices endured.

The most recent major adjustment to veterans legislation was enacted in this House on July 17, 1980. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West will remember when Bill C-40, the statute law called the Military and Civilian War Pensions Compensation and Allowances Amendments Act, received Royal Assent. He was present on that day.

Amendments to the Pension Act and the compensation for former prisoners of war extended benefits to widows and surviving dependent children of disabled pensioners or former prisoners of war not eligible under the existing Act. Amendments to the War Veterans Allowance and Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act included a revised benefit structure. Other changes in pension and allowance legislation were aimed at removing specific inequities, disparities or anomalies. In short, major revision of the War Veterans Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act were contemplated and put into place.

Clearly, the philosophy and policy of successive Governments has been to recognize the sacrifices made by Canadian men and women in the defence of Canada by establishing separate legislation which would recognize this group of Canadians as being special among the total population. There is no one in the House who could possibly question the fact that these men and women are indeed special to all of us.

From its inception, a hallmark of veterans' legislation has been its responsiveness to changing circumstances. That is why the suggestion which is being brought forth today is one which should surely be considered by all Hon. Members in the House.

Veterans' legislation has also served to pioneer new ideas respecting income support, compensation and social rehabilitation and support programs for Canada. The Hon. Member speaking for the New Democratic Party mentioned a little earlier that one of the rehabilitation programs being considered, as a matter of fact, concerned alcoholism. This was studied by the committee which was set up to consider the disabilities of Canadians and bring about legislation to deal with them. I would venture to say that alcoholism per se is no greater a problem among veterans than it is among any other groups. Yet if we were to consider some of the causes of alcoholism, we might find that they could indeed be traced to the fact that these men were in combat or under adverse conditions during the war. As a result, in some circumstances they have taken to drink. I think that we as Parliamentarians, as Canadians, would want to say that we in turn should now be our brother's keeper in trying to help veterans to cope with this disease, this illness, which is recognized as such. I accept the recommendation of the Hon. Member that we should possibly consider a redefinition of alcoholism as a sickness and the treatment of certain people who are afflicted in this way.

Once again, returning to the idea involving income support, it continues to set this country above all others in terms of the quality of benefits extended to veterans and to their dependants. However, circumstances and times change. The legislation which we thought was letter perfect a couple of years ago requires further review today. I agree with the Hon. Members who have already spoken. The War Veterans Allowance has retained its basic compensation features as opposed to a strict welfare orientation, and has done so visibly in becoming a leading income-tested, as opposed to means-tested, program.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the Hon. Member would entertain a very brief question. If he is so supportive of veterans and the motion, why does he not sit down and let it pass?

Mr. Parent: If the Minister or the Hon. Member—God forbid that he should ever become a Minister—means that I should give my place so that someone else can speak, I suggest—

Mr. McCain: Let it pass.

Mr. Mitges: You are not sincere.

Mr. Parent: —that I indeed have something to say, which I want to share, and I thought we were all alike in being afforded an opportunity to express our opinions. However, to go along with his suggestion, if he will bear with me for another 60 seconds, I will indeed give my place to the Hon. Member if he would like to stand and speak in his place.

I conclude by saying that the War Veterans Allowance has retained its basic compensation features as opposed to a strict welfare orientation and has done so visibly in becoming a leading income-tested, as opposed to a means-tested program. Circumstances are changing and, for those reasons, the whole of the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act is under yet another review. I think that this augurs well for us because in so doing we are keeping ourselves abreast of changes and hopefully we will be able to bring about legislation which will be beneficial to our veterans.

Mr. Lambert: Other than indicating my support for the motion, I will abide by the suggestion of our colleague, the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) and sit down. I wish to support the motion. I thank Hon. Members who have spoken, inasmuch as Hon. Members have served in World War II. Many changes could be brought about and we could discuss them at length, but as I have stated my support for the motion, I will now sit down.

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite hear what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) said, but I hope he is not accusing me of having ulterior motives as far as veterans are concerned.

Mr. Speaker, during the debate this afternoon, Hon. Members all showed an interest in the cause of our veterans—those who went overseas during the two World Wars and the Korean War to fight for democracy—and I for one have always done so. During the twenty years I have been a Member of this House, I have always been a Member of this Committee. I was Chairman when the Committee considered the Woods Report and changed the interpretation of the benefit of the doubt to favour veterans. I was still Chairman when we made specific recommendations regarding the Hong Kong prisoners of war, which paved the way for another decision which, I agree, may not have been sufficiently generous to other ex-prisoners of war, including those who were at Dieppe and others who were taken prisoner in Europe. I want to say that I am speaking not only as a veteran who has not forgotten his former comrades in arms but also as a Member of this House who for twenty years has shown a special interest in veterans affairs and has done everything in his power to make Government legislation concerning the Pension Commission or the War Veterans Allowance Board more generous to those who sacrificed several years of their lives and came back marked by those years.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should seriously consider—the subject has not yet been mentioned in the House this afternoon—what the veterans allowance actually is. The veterans allowance was established to help those who were affected by the war, either psychologically or physically, without being able to prove this was a direct consequence of battle or their participation in armed conflict, either in the air, on sea or on land, in other words, without being able to prove that they were wounded or had to be taken to hospital and receive treatment, which entitles them to a pension several years later. The veterans allowance, which has been and is still called the burnt out pension, was established for those who were affected, psychologically more than anything else, by the war, and who have required special help from the Government to continue to lead a normal life, raise children, live happily with their wives and without the embarrassment of, for instance, having to pick up welfare payments.

Mr. Speaker, the veterans allowance is not for the rich. It was meant to help those who are in financial need. There are certain requirements as to military service for receiving the allowance. A veteran must at least have served long enough that his psychological or financial difficulties in future years may be directly or indirectly related to his military service. However, this allowance is a substitute for the income that he cannot earn to raise his family and support his children and his wife. We have been told that it is shameful to set a $100 ceiling on the interests that a veteran can receive without affecting his allowance. It may be true that a ceiling of $100 is not high enough, and I personally agree. On the other hand, can there be that many veterans receiving the allowance who have enough savings that they need a much larger exemption?

Third, Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that this restriction which prevents veterans from receiving over $100 in interests without any reduction in their allowance is terrible, but there are other exempt sources of income for these veterans. It would perhaps be appropriate to list the other sources of income which can be exempted. As Hon. Members are aware, any war disability pension paid by the Canadian Forces or the Allied Forces is exempt. The disability care allowance is exempt; so are welfare benefits; so are certain amounts paid to dependent children or on their behalf and occasional earnings of up to $2,100 for single recipients and $3,100 for married recipients, interest income up to an amount of $100, which the Hon. Member wants increased, part of the guaranteed income supplement, the exempt portion of the veterans allowance, any pension or allowance received for a military medal, compensation for war services, as well as capital gains.

Mr. Speaker, a veterans allowance recipient is an individual who has served his country with honour and whose financial future we want to protect. But we cannot at the same time offer similar protection to someone who has enough savings and earns a fair amount of annual interest to be able to do without that allowance. Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of looking into the question of whether an increase might be warranted, say to $200, perhaps to $500 or even to $1,000, but the Hon. Member ought to understand that the whole issue must be reviewed in the wide context of the veterans' allowance legislation. As the Parliamentary Secretary pointed out earlier, the Department is now making an in-depth review of that legislation. The Hon. Member knows that we cannot—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I would have a lot more to say and, with all due respect, I am sure I could enlighten the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT—AMENDMENT RESPECTING AGE OF RETIREMENT

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe) moved that Bill C-425, respecting the age of retirement, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to have this opportunity to speak on a subject which I have always espoused and supported, not only in this House but in many other places and other areas as well. I am referring to voluntary retirement and the right of every worker or individual, if he or she so chooses, and if he or she is physically able to do so, to work beyond the mandatory retirement age set down by legislation.

I am fully aware of the fact that the issue of mandatory retirement has been discussed previously in this House and that many important points have been brought out. However, I should like to add to the debate by expressing my deep concern over the tremendous waste of human resources resulting from a policy of compulsory retirement, a waste both in terms of the work force and of the Canadian society as a whole.

I am distressed more particularly by the debilitating effect that mandatory retirement can have upon the physical and mental health of individuals. I agree wholeheartedly with U.S. Congressman, Claude Pepper, who said:

> Mandatory retirement is an extravagant waste of people. It severs productive men and women from their livelihoods, lowers their sense of self worth, and squanders their talents.

In the past, it has been largely assumed that most people wish to retire at the age 65, and further, that for reasons of physical and mental health, people should retire at that age, and perhaps even before they reach that age. The view that people should normally retire at the age of 65 has been so widespread in our society that it has been embodied in various Government acts and legislation. For instance, the Public Service Superannuation Act sets the retirement age at 65. Then there is the Canadian Human Rights Act which prohibits discrimination on the basis of age, except in the case of the individual who is 65 or over. Apparently the Canadian Human Rights Act does not consider compulsory retirement to be a form of discrimination.

I realize that in our society, with its accent on youth, there is a tendency to underestimate the capabilities of people beyond middle life. However, as far as I know, there is no sound scientific basis for setting retirement age at 65, or even at 70, because most people at 65 are at the peak of their mental powers. They have more experience, they have more a balanced judgment and generally are more persistent, more loyal, more tolerant and patient than their younger co-workers. If they have good health, they are more likely to have a steady work record. Considerable evidence has been amassed indicating that older workers are not necessarily the incompetent, deteriorating deadwood which personnel managers sometimes imply. Two studies referred to by the United States Senate Committee on Human Resources made this point: a New York survey compared workers over and under the age of 65 with regard to absenteeism, punctuality, on-the-job accidents, and over-all job performance. It concluded that older workers were about equal to, and sometimes noticeably better than, younger workers.

The University of Illinois came to a similar conclusion in its study, which reported that there was no specific age at which employees became unproductive. Also this report expressed the view that satisfactory work performance may continue even into the eighth decade. The director of a creativity program in the United States found that fully 80 per cent of the most workable and worthwhile new ideas were produced by employees who were over 60. Younger employees had a tendency, as he put it, to "re-invent the wheel".

There is no question that these studies should cause us to pause and re-examine the discriminatory practices prevalent in the whole area of mandatory retirement. We must begin to judge people on the basis of competence and not judge them just on the basis of age.

If we continue to subscribe to the policy of retirement at age 65, we will find that an increasingly larger share of our population will be considered, and will consider themselves, as second class citizens; the unproductive old. It seems to me our present focus on age 65 as the age of retirement is based more and more on tradition rather than on any rational motives.

Let me briefly examine the history of the 65 retirement age policy. The modern history of mandatory retirement and the use of the figure 65 as the magic number are both traced back to Germany's famous Chancellor, Otto Von Bismarck. Hoping to stave off socialism in his country, the Chancellor initiated the social security pension system in 1889 at which time he proclaimed 65 as the appropriate age for retirement.

Bismarck's model has been followed ever since in much of the western world. Over the years it has become ingrained in our society to the point where age 65 is considered the line of demarcation between middle age and old age. Ironically, Bismarck himself was 74 years of age when he introduced his pension scheme and was at the height of his spectacular career as the "Iron Chancellor". Perhaps Bismarck's choice of 65 was quite appropriate for his time and may even have been stretching things a bit, because in Bismarck's day only a small percentage of the population lived to be 65. Life expectancy at that time was 37. Our average life expectancy today is over 74, and many more of us make it to the age of 65 in a state of better physical and sounder mental health than they did in Bismarck's time. Therefore, we must ask ourselves whether it still makes sense in this day and age to retire a person automatically at 65. Is it fair to do so?

For those Hon. Members who still have doubts, I would recommend that they recall that several of our colleagues in the House are well past the traditional retirement age. Personally, I am grateful for the expertise which they continue to offer in our day-to-day proceedings. However, in this House we are fortunate in that we do not have to face the threat of forced retirement simply because we have reached some arbitrary age limit. It is only right and proper that this privilege be extended to the rest of Canadian society. Ability and not age should be the determining factor in deciding whether a person should look forward to their retirement at 65, or even earlier, but the important point is that there should be a freedom of choice.

Now let us assess some of the supposed benefits of the current retirement policy. One of the arguments for pro-mandatory retirement is that the 65 retirement age policy frees up scarce positions for unemployed youth. However, it has been found in studies done in the United States that the number of jobs freed by mandatory retirement appears small compared to the physical, psychological and social benefits gained by permitting the older worker, who is willing and able, to remain in the work force. Also there is the argument that after 30 odd years of productive labour, society owes its older workers a number of years of blissful retirement. This may be so, Mr. Speaker, but we do have a responsibility as well to those who have no desire to stop work and to the many who are able to work, who need to work, and who want to work.

In our society where so much emphasis is placed on the work ethic, work gives form, dimension and meaning to the life of the average citizen. The American Medical Association has indicated that there was considerable medical evidence that the sudden cessation of productive work and earning power of an individual, caused by compulsory retirement at the chronological age of 65, often leads to physical and emotional deterioration and premature death. It was indicated further that few physicians deny that a direct relationship exists between forced idleness and poor health, and that chronic complaints develop more frenquently when a person is inactive and without basic interests. These disturbing statements alone should compel us to re-think the whole issue of mandatory retirement.

Of course, there are familiar arguments in favour of retaining a compulsory retirement policy in industry and Government. One is the contention by large companies that retirement pension plans would be greatly disrupted by eliminating the retirement at age 65 tradition. This suggests to me, Mr. Speaker, that actuarial computations are somehow more important than the fulfilment of human lives. I totally reject such a proposition. Such a contention also overlooks the fact that where optional retirement is available and pension plans are adequate, many workers elect to retire before they reach 65. But to postulate from this that all should leave productive employment at a given age is illogical, wasteful and immoral. If, as some authorities maintain, we are resigned to a shrinking national economy, then the economy itself must be economical, particularly of talent and experience.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker. I certainly welcome input from other Hon. Members. Hopefully, my Bill will come to a vote.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to say a few words this afternoon on Bill C-425, which concerns the compulsory retirement age of 65. I have been especially interested in this question during the past couple of years. Since the Charter of Rights was adopted on April 17 of last year, a number of federal Government employees have expressed to me their concern and interest in continuing to work beyond the age of 65. I must say that so far as the two or three cases which I have been involved in are concerned, the Government has recognized at least the spirit of the Charter of Rights and has not required these people to retire at age 65, thus moving in the direction in which the Hon. Member's Bill would have us move. Of course, the Charter of Rights itself does not come into effect for three years, but in the interim, at least in the two or three cases in which I have been involved—one was an employee of the Department of National Health and Welfare and another was a postal employee, which is a Crown Corporation—leniency has been shown.

The effect of the amendments which are proposed in Bill C-425 this afternoon would end the practice of mandatory retirement at age 65 in the federal Public Service and in the federal institutions, which practices are subject to the regulations of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. I want to indicate my support for the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) in putting this motion before the House today.

Mandatory retirement has been the subject of a number of reports in recent years. In 1979 the special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies issued a report entitled "Retirement without Tears". In January, 1980, the Compensation Research Centre of the Conference Board of Canada published a report entitled "A Mandatory Retirement Policy: A Human Rights Dilemma". A year ago last February the Manitoba Commission on Compulsory Retirement submitted a long and detailed report. Each of these reports, Mr. Speaker, supports the concept of abolishing mandatory retirement. But each study acknowledges that the issue is a complex one and it will bring problems which must be addressed. That is why the relevant provision in the Charter of Rights will not be fully implemented for three years.

There are many arguments for and against mandatory retirement. Those in favour would argue that its abolition will cause serious social and economic problems, particularly at a time of high unemployment. They also argue that mandatory retirement means younger and ambitious employees have greater opportunities for promotion. Mandatory retirement simplifies the work of personnel managers. When retirement is automatic at 65, employers can set up systems for assisting employees approaching retirement. If age is not the basis for retirement, employers will have to set up some system of review to ensure that employees remain fully competent to carry out their duties. Under the present system, employers are usually lenient in assessing employees approaching retirement age. If it becomes flexible, employers may become tougher and there may be more employees retiring earlier than at 65. With a mandatory retirement age, employees have no excuse for putting off retirement planning. In addition, elimination of mandatory retirement would have an effect on group disability and health schemes, and so on. If you remove mandatory retirement, are the human rights of young people denied?

However, Mr. Speaker, those opposed to a mandatory retirement age, as the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe has argued—and I would want to be associated with his arguments—argue that there is no arbitrary and predetermined age which corresponds to changes in mental and physicial powers. Mandatory retirement ignores the diversity in people. Some should perhaps be retiring well before 65. Mandatory retirement may damage the standard of living of people and force them into poverty. It may put some stress on people who are really functioning at the peak of their ability and want to continue on past age 65. Mandatory retirement results in a waste of manpower, and is contrary to the national and international emphasis on human rights, especially the prohibition of discrimination on the basis of age. While some may argue that it is impossible to consider human rights in isolation from economic issues, I propose to leave to others the economic arguments both for and against the issue and to concentrate on the legal and human rights implications of mandatory retirement.

The proclamation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms on April 17, 1982 has renewed interest in the question of mandatory retirement. Section 15 of the Charter, which comes into force on April 17, 1985, provides that every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to equal protection and equal benefits under the law. That Section also prohibits discrimination based on age. While it must be read in conjunction with Section 1 of the Charter which permits reasonable limits on rights, there are many who see in Section 15 a bar to any law which establishes a mandatory retirement age. Others, however, are of the view that provision for mandatory retirement at a certain age might be found, in a free and democratic society, to be a reasonable limit on the right not to be discriminated against on the basis of age. This question has been addressed for some time now by human rights legislation in Canada.

Most Provinces have prohibited discrimination on the basis of age. However, in the Human Rights codes of a number of Provinces, age is a defined term, meaning that discrimination is prohibited on the basis of age for those between age 18 and 65. Legislation in Manitoba and New Brunswick does not establish an upper age limit for discrimination. In the case of Newport versus the Government of Manitoba, the Manitoba Court of Appeal held that the Government of Manitoba was bound by the anti-age discrimination provision of the Manitoba Human Rights Act, and the compulsory retirement of Mr. Newport at age 65 violated that Act. Some Provinces, such as Ontario, permit discrimination on the basis of age if the mandatory retirement relates to a bona fide occupational requirement. This issue has come before the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of the Ontario Human Rights Commission et al v. the Borough of Etobicoke in 1982. The Supreme Court upheld a complaint of discrimination by a fireman who was compelled to retire at age 60. The court held that the assertion that firefighting was a young man's game was not sufficient to show that the mandatory retirement age of 60 was a bona fide occupational requirement. The court suggested that such a requirement could only be established with medical and statistical evidence on the subject of aging.

I mentioned the human rights legislation and two court cases to show that the question of the age at which a person should retire is not an easy one, Mr. Speaker, and the abolition of mandatory retirement will create a new and perhaps equally serious human rights problem. How do we determine when employers can require employees to retire? There is a very good reason why Section 15 of the Charter does not come into effect for some three years. The reason is to allow time for the provincial and federal statutes to be adjusted to the changing situation.

In addition to other factors, there are some very unique problems resulting from prohibiting discrimination based on age. Professor London, Dean of Law at the University of Manitoba, in an address at a 1982 conference listed five reasons why prohibiting discrimination on the basis of age was different from other forms of discrimination in Section 15 of the Charter. The term "discrimination on the basis of age" contains many different categories. The problems of discrimination against the young are very different from discrimination against the elderly. Prohibiting discrimination on the basis of age is a new concept, and in some places there is little public perception on the issues involved. It is something all people are capable of experiencing, unlike discrimination on the basis of race or religion. The issues involved in this kind of discrimination, the age to drive, to vote, to drink and to retire, have traditionally been dealt with by legislative means and not as a matter of fundamental rights.

Those are some of the considerations, Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the Bill before us this afternoon. As a matter of common sense, we all know that at some point, and to some extent, age might affect our mental and physical capabilities. There is no question of race or religion ever affecting our ability to work. I should emphasize that Professor London does not think that the unique problems of age discrimination should prevent the abolition of mandatory retirement. However, I do think that Professor London's analysis shows us that we must make sure that we have considered all the ramifications before abolishing compulsory retirement.

It may well be that we will want to bring forward legislation abolishing mandatory retirement before Section 15 of the Charter comes into effect in 1985. Mr. Speaker, I remind Members of this House that the coming into force of Section 15 was delayed for three years so that the federal and provincial Governments would have time to review and change laws that do not conform to the Charter.

The Department of Justice is engaged in a comprehensive review of all federal Statutes to ensure compliance with the Charter. That is essentially the information I received when I made representations on behalf of two constituents to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray)—that this matter was being reviewed so that there could be a comprehensive policy established between Government departments.

I am sure that all Members will understand that this is a time consuming and complex process. Legislation cannot be changed without considering the effect of changes on other statutes, regulations and administrative practices. There is also an attempt to co-ordinate certain changes contemplated at the federal level with changes which might be brought about in certain provincial legislation.

In the area of mandatory retirement, it is interesting to note that at least five Provinces are conducting or have conducted inquiries, namely, British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Quebec has passed legislation abolishing compulsory retirement.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I am prepared to await the recommendation of the Department of Justice before determining what, if any, steps should be taken with respect to legislation providing for compulsory retirement.

It is only fair to mention, Mr. Speaker, that there are those who do not believe that the Charter is an absolute bar to laws providing for compulsory retirement. These people believe, and in fact, this point was raised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) when he appeared before the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada, that the courts will determine if compulsory retirement offends the Charter guarantee against discrimination based on age.

In conclusion, I do not think that it is the time to pass legislation abolishing compulsory retirement in federal institutions. If we are to move in this direction, it must be only after careful consideration of all the ramifications and after consulting with the Provinces. The process of studying the legal, social and economic effects of ending compulsory retirement is going on now, and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we await the results of this process.

In the meantime, I am pleased to note that the Government is dealing with individual cases where Members have made recommendations that people who are physically and mentally capable and who have the enthusiasm to continue to work past 65 be recognized. Many of them are continuing to make a valuable contribution to society, to the Government of Canada and to the Crown corporations involved.

I am pleased that the Hon. Member brought forward this Private Members' Bill today. It requires the serious consideration of the House in the months and years ahead so that a fair and just policy can be established which recognizes that those people who want to work after age 65 can do so in an organized way that is of benefit to all.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I do not have more time to go into this matter. It is not my intention to talk the Bill out. I hope it will have the opportunity to go to committee as I think more Private Members' Bills ought to. Even though I may not agree with the detail of this Bill, at least in committee there would be an opportunity for the questions it raises to be considered. I wanted to make that clear at the outset. I will make my remarks brief so that the Government will have the opportunity to talk out the Bill.

The Bill raises a lot of questions. I think the Hon. Member who just spoke raised an important concern, if I understood him to say that we ought not to throw out mandatory retirement lightly. The abolition of mandatory retirement would create a lot of problems that have not been considered in detail by its critics. In the days when people had to work beyond the age of 65, the advent of mandatory requirement was regarded as an achievement. I think we should remember that point.

I believe that the answer to the problem lies in greater flexibility of retirement age with more opportunity for voluntary retirement without penalty earlier than at age 65—and I stress, without penalty. Because if we decide that early retirement ought to be more of an option, people have to be able to choose this in such a way that they are guaranteed economic security. Thus we should strive for more voluntary retirement without penalty, from age 55 onwards and for more flexibility about mandatory retirement. The objective should be an improved lifestyle, pursued for social and health reasons, and not because more and more people feel the economic necessity of working beyond 65 either because they cannot trust the Government to leave their Old Age Security payments alone—perhaps the only element of their pension future which may be indexed against inflation—or because they cannot afford to quit working because they do not have a private pension plan.

Thus, if we should move in the direction of less mandatory retirement, it should be but for positive reasons, rather than responding to problems arising from the absence of adequate pension schemes or adequate economic policies. This we must keep in mind, Mr. Speaker.

It is certainly appropriate for us to reflect on the age of retirement and on the need for society to overcome the perception that people become unproductive at age 65. We must consider the whole concept of work and the meaning it gives to life and the other ways in which people may feel that they contribute to society. We must take all these things into consideration.

I am sorry that I did not have more time this afternoon to go into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have made some comments on the Bill, but time is running out. One of the provisions of the Bill, if enacted, would result in the removal of the mandatory retirement age of 65 for the Public Service now specified in the regulations made pursuant to the Public Service Superannuation Act. Mandatory retirement at age 65 within the federal Public Service is a subject which has been and continues to come under very careful examination within the Treasury Board Secretariat. While the Bill has merit, we must recognize that it is complicated and deserves further study. I hope that when we have more information on the subject we may see some changes coming in this direction.

I see that it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, so I shall continue my remarks at another time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being six o'clock, the House adjourns until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 8, 1983, consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Blaker in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: I apologize to Hon. Members for the delay. There was under consideration a ruling on a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North which may be ready later in the day.

On Clause 4—Amounts receivable in respect of services, etc., rendered

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, on Tuesday afternoon when the sitting came to a close, I was on my feet asking the Minister for clarification on certain points. I gave the example of the farmer who sells his farm and, with the capital, expects to retire in comfort or at least be able to look after himself. In the past he could purchase an immediate life annuity which would guarantee him so much a month as long as he lived. Of course, this is no longer available under the new revised regulations.

Then I cited the case of someone who probably did not have any assets whatsoever but was fortunate enough to win one of the $1 million lotteries. That windfall is not subject to capital tax, but of course the revenue and interest derived therefrom is subject to income tax.

Would the Minister explain the difference between the two? Why is the person with the windfall profit home free, whereas persons who purchase other investments are able to have substantial lump sum gains but are not able to look after their future in their retirement years?

I could cite many other examples of people in modest circumstances who might have a bit of cash when they reach retirement. They know they will receive the old age pension and Canada Pension, at least the great majority of them. If they have a lump sum with which they want to purchase a life annuity, why are they not able to do it out of profit from some sort of a deal, whether the sale of a house or whatever?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I would be very pleased to attempt to answer the Hon. Member's questions, which really deal with IAACs, when Clause 30 is under consideration. Part of the difficulty in responding to the points and issues raised which are not before the Committee for deliberation is that unless we deal with the Clause in front of us, it would be a hopeless chore to deal with 139 Clauses in any kind of order. I would be happy to focus my attention on the items raised by the Hon. Member when we reach that point.

In the same vein I would like to inquire of the Hon. Member, or possibly the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, whether Hon. Members opposite have agreed that we would deal with Clauses in addition to the Clause which gave rise to this discussion, that is Clause 4, the first one dealing with the whole issue of insurance and annuities. It was agreed that the House would deal with related Clauses. I provided Hon. Members opposite with a list of the related ones and hoped that we could deal with the related items. Unfortunately Clause 30, upon which the Hon. Member has now touched, does not fall within those items. Are they now proposing that Clause 30 be dealt with?

Mr. Darling: No.

Mr. Cosgrove: The answer is no. Therefore, I would prefer to deal with that item when we come to it. Also I would be interested in knowing if it is possible for Hon. Members opposite to indicate whether the proposal we made and the Clauses we listed were acceptable, to put some form to the discussion. Have they reached that conclusion at this time?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, certainly I will be more than willing to defer that particular item until it is reached.

If I could move on to another item, on Tuesday the Minister indicated that he had received some letters. In fact, he quoted from letters from officials of both the Life Underwriters Association of Canada and the Canadian Health and Life Insurance Association. I have been in touch with both of those organizations recently, in fact, with one of them today. They can see that great strides have been made in the revision of the regulations. Of course, they are much happier now than they were with the original budget of November, 1981. They hope the Bill will get through before too long, as we do on this side of the House.

I questioned these people on the amount of revenue which the Department of Revenue hopes to recover, and I received the figure from the Minister's officials of $75 million. I took that as being an average of $75 million a year. I assume that is not a total of $75 million. I see one of your two wise men nodding his head in the affirmative, so I assume that is correct.

In the first year, 1983, I would assume that figure would be closer to 75 cents than $75 million. Of course, it would go up a bit. I checked again with the president of one of the major life insurance companies and told him that I wondered how the Minister's Department could come up with any figure that would hold water. I am of the opinion that the $75 million amount was drawn out of a hat, or someone used a Ouija board or spun a wheel of chance to get it. I do not think the Minister could produce anything to verify that amount.

I want to re-emphasize that policies taken out prior to December 2, 1982, or whenever it is, are not affected by the new legislation. Seventy-five per cent of the new policies which are being sold now and in the future I am told are term policies which have no cash value, and therefore do not enter the picture.

There is another 30 per cent of policies which are whole life policies, limited life policies and investment policies. Of that 30 per cent, only 5 per cent will qualify, or in other words be subject to tax. I just want to point out here that the Minister and his departmental officials are going to all this trouble on the basis that they will only be able to collect from 5 per cent of the policyholders. Only 5 per cent, give or take a few, will even be subject to tax. Again, let me repeat what I said. It is in the years to come that the tax will be collected. I say you will get 75 cents this year—and I may be on the high side—but in subsequent years some of these policies will be subject to tax. But with all the problems of collecting the tax, I am curious whether the Minister thinks it will be worth it.

I would like verification of the $75 million. I presume the Minister's officials must have some idea as to the percentage of policies on which the Department feels it will be able to collect. Am I very far out in my calculation?

We certainly want to see this legislation get through. I am aware also that the insurance companies have great reservations about annuities, pensions and so on; but that is another story. I think the Minister's Department has told them that down the pike that question will be discussed along with the White Paper on Pensions, perhaps through the Department of National Health and Welfare or the Department of Finance. I would appreciate the Minister's comments on that as well.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, when I made reference to the $75 million which would be forgone revenue to the Government, the Hon. Member may recall that I made reference to a Financial Post article dated July 4, 1981, which was headed "Big Sums Go Into Deferred Annuities". I made reference to some of the features in that article, for example: "The smart money is moving into deferred annuities. Investments that earn today's high interest rates and let income accumulate compound and tax defer to 10 or 20 years or more." I was addressing the issue of annuities. If it was not clear, my reference to the $75 million was directed to the use of deferred annuities. The $75 million referred to the amount of forgone revenue with respect to annuities.

It arose as a result of our dealing with Clause 4. We then had to bring in all of the other Clauses because the principle applies equally to annuities and life insurance policies that have an income or investment build-up where there is money left over after buying protection. In short, with respect to the figures used by the Hon. Member as far as life insurance policies are concerned, I would not quarrel with him. I would not quarrel with the 75 per cent of term policies. The fact that only 5 per cent of life policies sold in the future might be subject to the three-year accumulation amendment in the Clause before us is correct. But it was not that provision that gave rise to the tax saving.

Second, the Hon. Member is correct that there is no intended income recovery, not only for 1983 but for 1984. It is a three-year accumulation provision. That three years gives a grandfathering break-in period to people purchasing those contracts now. Therefore, the realization of revenue to the Government would not occur until the third year.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, the Minister is now saying that the Government will recover absolutely nothing for two years. I am wondering why they are going through the birth pangs and criticism for two years when they know that in two years they will be sitting on this side of the Speaker's chair.

On Tuesday, I also brought up the question of the single-premium life insurance contract. This is a contract that is no longer eligible. Naturally, it can be sold but it will be subject to tax. As I mentioned previously, there are certain circumstances under which this contract is ideal. I will admit that a single-premium contract is not sold to the average blue collar or office worker, but to someone who wants that particular insurance for a specific purpose.

One of the things that I pointed out was that an individual who has a substantial estate and knows that it will be subject to succession duties will try to plan. He will realize that the Government will take a good deal of his estate because it is worth so much. That is the tax system. He realizes its merits. The Government must get its money where it can. The Hon. Minister is a lawyer but is probably too busy now to be advising too many clients. However, a good many of them would be coming to him and asking, "What do I do when I die?" A will is arranged and the value of the estate is known. However, it is very well known that the family will not get it all, that Her Majesty in right of Canada and the Department of National Revenue will come tapping gently at the door.

I suggest that a single-premium insurance policy be purchased for $200,000. That would be liquid cash which could go immediately to the Department of National Revenue, and would not tamper with other assets, such as a home, perhaps real estate investments or even stocks or bonds. I ask the Minister, is there not some merit to that proposal? I ask him why he should be going after that particular one, because the cash value or the immediate premium which was paid would not be even close to the face amount of the policy. That is one example.

Another example concerns people with some means who say that when they die they will leave some money to the Red Cross Society, to their church or to this or to that body. But instead of leaving such organizations $5,000, they will buy $5,000 single-premium insurance policies, perhaps totalling $30,000 worth, and the church or organization could wait for it. Is there not some merit to such a policy? Yet the Minister will not consider any of those suggestions, as I understand it now. Would you let me have your comments on that, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I will not comment on the introductory comments of the Hon. Member, which I think were wishful thinking, as to where people will be sitting or standing two years hence. There is one thing that is certain: no matter where Hon. Members sit in the House, whoever occupies the Government benches will be pressed by the public for strategic investments and the use of Government resources to address the economy.

Second, the Hon. Member made reference to my profession and said that a few clients were receiving advice on this matter. As a matter of fact, I have no clients. Under the guidelines, a Minister does not continue his profession.

Mr. Darling: No, I meant before, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Cosgrove: Of course, I have not practised my profession while being engaged in the Government.

Mr. Crosby: One of a few.

Mr. Cosgrove: With regard to the first example concerning which the Hon. Member has asked for some assistance, a person with a large amount of money considering the purchase of a single-premium policy which would not qualify as an exemption, the answer is that he should look for another type of policy which is exempt so as to take him outside of the problem. He could do that by purchasing a 20-pay policy and keeping his money in the bank account or in whatever other instrument he thinks is more beneficial. It is possible that he might even be able to earn more interest on the money from some other instrument while he is making the purchase down the line.

In so far as a charity is concerned, and the Hon. Member's example was the Red Cross, the officials have advised that there should not be any concern because a charity is exempt. Therefore, transfer the annuity to the charity. The charity, being in an exempt category, would therefore not attract this provision of accrual either.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the comments of the Minister. I am well aware, as the Minister points out, that an insurance policy with a 20-year payment or more or a whole life policy is not subject. In other words, the single premium will still be the best buy for an insurance purchaser in particular cases like that. It is true that the Minister can suggest that that is still not eligible, but it will certainly not fill the same bill. A single-premium insurance policy may show a charitable institution, a church or the Red Cross as beneficiary. Even if it had a substantial cash value, the cash value would, of course, rise as the policy remained in force, even though only one premium would be paid. At that particular time, in those cases the policy would not be subject to this tax on accrued interest. Would the Minister not consider the Department of Revenue to be another charitable organization? I understand that one can make a grant or a bequest to Her Majesty which can be considered a charitable donation. Why would "donations" to the Government not be considered in the same way?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the first question, in the situation referred to by the Hon. Member, provided that the ownership or control of the policy was transferred to the exempt organization, they would be taken without the accrual rules.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The House will be aware that last week the Hon. Member for Simcoe North and others raised a point of order. Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary West, the Chair will deal with the point of order raised.

On Thursday, March 3, 1983, at the start of the proceedings in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2), the Hon. Member for Simcoe North raised an interesting point of order on the procedural acceptability of Clauses 1 and 109 as they relate to paragraphs 1 and 151 of the Ways and Means motion adopted by the House on December 3, 1982, and upon which provisions Bill C-139 must be based. The Hon. Member then raised the question of the propriety to proceed with the consideration of Clauses 1 and 109 without a further Ways and Means motion.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, who has many years of experience on the subject, and all the others who contributed arguments will appreciate the necessity for the Chair to attach the greatest importance to its consideration of this matter and to give it the researched study it requires.

During the discussions on the point of order, many commented upon the fact that such a Bill must be based on the provisions of a Ways and Means resolution, although it does not have to be identical, and that if such a Bill is found not to be in compliance with the resolution, a further Ways and Means motion would be necessary or the Bill would have to be amended so as to conform to the resolution. Citations 518 and 519 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition and previous rulings given by Mr. Speaker Jerome were quoted to substantiate the arguments. The Chair agrees with and supports without hesitation the views expressed on the subject.

But that is not the gist of the point of order now before us. The Chair has to determine if Clauses 1 and 109 of Bill C-139 are in accordance with, or go beyond the provisions of, paragraphs 1 and 151 of the Ways and Means resolution of December 3, 1982.

After a careful examination of Clauses 1 and 109 and the precedents, the Chair is convinced that, in both cases, the Bill is in conformity with the Ways and Means resolution and that the regular practice has been followed. There is no imposition of a tax not already covered by the resolution that would require the tabling and adoption of a new Ways and Means motion.

Many interpretations could be given, were in fact given and will undoubtedly be given in the future, on the consequences of Clause 1 of the Bill as it relates to the expression "automobile standby charge" and on the consequences of Clause 109 as it relates to the special tax of 12.5 per cent on certain corporations and the expression "preferred-earnings amount". But the Chair cannot be asked, nor can it be expected, to get involved in the interpretation game. It is sufficient for the Chair—and this is its only role—to be satisfied that the proper procedure has been followed and that Bill C-139 does not try to bring in the imposition of an additional tax not based on the provisions of the Ways and Means resolution.

The Chair has determined that the proper procedure was followed in accordance with the rules and practice of this House. I must therefore, with regret, rule that the Hon. Member for Simcoe North does not have a point of order and that the Committee of the Whole can proceed, in due course, with the consideration of Clauses 1 and 109 of Bill C-139.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, on the issue just raised, I thank the Chair for the time and the research. Obviously, this is a precedent that will be useful to Members in future.

The ruling invites us now to consider how we should proceed, having had this initial question with Clause 1 dealt with. I would propose, if it is agreeable to Hon. Members, that we continue deliberation of Clause 5, the insurance provision, which we are now dealing with. Having concluded that, we could then return to Clause 1 and any agreed associated Clauses.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the Chair should indicate to the House that there is a proceeding under way which is such that the Committee of the Whole is now considering a number of Clauses and Subclauses. That debate seems to have been agreed upon by the Committee but the impression I have is that the specific Subclauses have not yet been listed. Before I come to the point raised by the Minister of State for Finance, perhaps it would be more convenient to Hon. Members if the Chair could be informed as to precisely which Clauses and Subclauses of this Bill are not under debate, and which I will put to the House for its consideration on a question, in due course. For that purpose the Chair will recognize the Hon Member for Mississauga South.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, we have agreed with the Government to proceed with a listed series of Clauses. I could read these into the record. I think it might be just as easy for Hansard to take a list because there is a whole series of Clauses. A number of Clauses on the list that I would ask to be given to you, Mr. Chairman, have the letter "A" beside them. It is my understanding that the Minister intends to introduce amendments to the Clauses with the "A" beside them.

We would be happy to accept those amendments as moved and seconded by the Government and consider them at this point. When the vote takes place on the grouping of the Clauses, which we hope will be later today, the adoption or rejection of all of these Clauses including the amendments that have been proposed by the Government will be voted on.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, that is agreeable to the Government.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South did not read the list of Clauses and Subclauses to which he made reference. The Chair has a copy, if the House wishes to proceed in that fashion. The list presently in the possession of the Chair includes a number of Clauses and Subclauses and also includes, as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South pointed out, provisions for amendments to be deemed to have been moved and seconded, those being designated by the letter "A" beside the particular Clause or Subclause. It is now proposed that that motion be made an order of the Committee. Is that unanimously agreed?

Mr. Cosgrove: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, we have had discussions and we are agreeable to that.

The Deputy Chairman: It is so ordered. It is understood that it is the Committee's intention to debate all of those Clauses and Subclauses together. I think it is appropriate to go back to the Minister of State for Finance, who has suggested that in view of the ruling made earlier, when this set of Clauses and Subclauses have been disposed of, the House would then wish to revert to Clause 1. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, obviously we will have to come back to Clause 1. I think it might be appropriate for use to see how we go today and whether it might be expeditious to get some other small matters cleaned up throughout this day, because I can assure this House that there will be very extensive debate on Clause 1. Clause 1 is a matter which affects a great number of Canadians. We could commence discussion today. However, we might finish the Clauses we are presently debating, and in the course of discussions during the day we might agree what Clauses could be expeditiously carried. It may be Clause 1, but I do not think we should make any procedural arrangements as to where we go after that Clause until later today.

• (1140)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, that would be agreeable, but I would reserve for the time being until I have had an opportunity to discuss this matter with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. For the time being the Government would argue that procedure requires us to go back to Clause 1 unless we have the agreement of the Committee to do otherwise. I am willing to discuss this matter with Members opposite. For the time being, in the absence of the agreement of Members, the normal course of events is to revert to Clause 1 when we conclude the matter before the Committee.

As a further convenience, we are attempting to look at other Clauses that might be related to Clause 1 and produce those to Members opposite with explanatory notes, and thereby expedite business by putting up related Clauses for discussion at the same time.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, that is the ideal type of arrangement. When we group Clauses that are related to each other, we can properly debate and dispose of them, much the same as we are disposing of a very large group of Clauses now with respect to the insurance industry, the annuity industry and so on. That moves the Bill ahead. It shows co-operation on all sides and makes it possible for proper representation to be made without undue delay.

The Deputy Chairman: Accordingly, debate is now proceeding on the group of Clauses which were brought forward for joint debate a few moments ago by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and which were made an order of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back to my first question of the other day. I indicated that I felt the Government was embarked on a course that would make it more difficult for people to build up assets in anticipation of their retirement. In the context of that discussion, the Parliamentary Secretary indicated, and I quote from Hansard:

> I suggest to him, as a general answer in reply to his general question, that from our point of view accrual is the fairest way of measuring income and, thereby, measuring tax liability.

I would like to examine that as my starting point for today. From our point of view, the Government is embarked on a determination which we find in many places in recent Government legislation to tax people on assets that may lie on the books but have not yet been acquired or begun to be used. Therefore, I put forward the perspective that I see this as a very unfair way of taxing. I will begin with a very short question.

A number of Canadians take their after-tax dollars and purchase such things as gold or silver, a commodity which in time rises in value. Over the last decade it has risen enormously in value. Does the Government have any intention of taxing it every three years on its presumed accrual value as an asset?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the accrual method is a generally accepted accounting method, and certainly by and large it treats assets similarly. For example, people with Canada Savings Bonds or people with savings accounts are both treated in the same fashion by using this method, even though one person has cash on hand and the other person only has the financial instrument. In both cases people are treated in the same fashion and are given equal and fair treatment by doing this.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I come back to my question. Assume that I buy gold, silver, coins or stamps and hang on to them for a period of time. Will the tax Department require me to value them periodically and, if the value has gone up, is it the intention of the Government to tax me on that accrued value?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, in addition to Clause 5 there are approximately a dozen other Clauses in the Bill before us dealing with insurance and annuities. We are talking about accrual of tax on income. We are really strained when we get into examples and questions dealing with capital gains. The discussion could become confused. We could stray too far from the matter before us.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I would simply repeat my question. We are engaged in a debate. It is a chance to ask questions and find out where the Government principle is. They have taken certain assets of Canadians and decided to tax them. On the previous day the Minister indicated that the fairest way to measure income was on an accrual basis to make it available for taxation. I simply ask what other commodities do they intend to apply this principle to. Will it be applied to stamps, coins, gold and silver?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the intention in this Bill is not to do that. It is not mentioned at all. The Hon. Member will know that capital assets such as coins, stamps, property or gold are treated differently and are taxed differently from other investments and savings.

Mr. Hawkes: In other words, the Minister is saying there are different kinds of property. Physical property will be taxed differently from paper property.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is correct. There are capital gains, corporate income and personal income. They are all treated differently for tax purposes. The Hon. Member is absolutely correct in that. He is being somewhat hypothetical in his description of treating capital gains on an accrual basis.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, is there any intention to apply the same kind of taxation principle to paper property, such as common or preferred stocks?

Mr. Fisher: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, can I go one step further. Maybe I could use as an example school teachers who work for Government, in this case provincial, and belong to a pension plan. They make a contribution to that pension plan on a regular basis. Their contribution is allowed to grow. Once a year they get a statement regarding the increased value of their holding inside that plan. That seems to be analogous to the increase that might be found in a whole-life policy. Is it the intention of the Government to tax the accrual inside a pension plan?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I am told that the case which the Hon. Member raised is really designed and recognized as a tax-exempt shelter.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, we have in one case a plan that has collective elements to it. In other words, there may be 10,000 teachers who belong to it. It is a registered retirement plan of some kind for 10,000 people. Why do we allow 10,000 people to shelter that income from tax but we deny that opportunity to a single individual who wants to do it through some kind of life insurance policy or annuity plan?

• (1150)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the single individual has that opportunity by getting an RRSP. It may be helpful to point out to the Hon. Member that he is mixing apples and oranges a little bit here. We have made specific policy decisions about things like pension plans which make them distinct and different funds for tax purposes. Tax is allowed to be deferred on such funds, as the Minister just pointed out, for specific policy reasons. We believe tax deferral is a useful way to help people prepare for their retirement. The line of questioning the Hon. Member is following is interesting, but he is mixing apples and oranges in his questions.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Hon. Member give me the characteristics of the kinds of plans on which the Government will allow deferral of income for retirement purposes? Must it be done the way the Government tells us to do it rather than the way we might choose to do it? Is that one of the characteristics, that we will follow Government orders rather than our own common sense?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the characteristics of these plans are that they are debated in Parliament and included in the law. They are a public decision, not the result of an accident or a hidden decision. They are the result of openly debated social and tax policy. That is what makes them exceptions to the rule.

Mr. Hawkes: But is the Government considering, for instance in a self-administered RRSP, that I could put any kind of assets in that plan that I want to and therefore keep them sheltered, or do I just have to put in those things that the Government tells me to?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, in line with the last answer, these would be stipulated in the legislation and debated by Parliament as a matter of law.

Mr. Hawkes: Can I ask the Minister or the Parliament Secretary, if I get into one of these tax sheltered opportunity systems which the Government will provide me with, a 20-year whole life policy for example, and then I want to convert somewhere in that middle period, how do I go about converting it to a different kind of asset without incurring tax? I do not want to take it into income but keep it sheltered, so what regulations will I have to follow?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, it is quite clear that if you want to convert a 20-year policy into something defined as exempt under the law, then you will continue to be exempt. The taxpayer is simply required to research those instruments that continue the exemption. If, on the other hand, the taxpayer chooses, contrary to the example given, to go into a non-exempt instrument, then the investment will become taxable.

Mr. Hawkes: Will I be able to change my whole life policy, say, at the midway point from one company to another and avoid tax?

Mr. Fisher: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the taxpayer in that case would become liable to tax. It would be deemed a surrender. This is something that was decided upon in 1969.

Mr. Hawkes: So if I stayed with the same company and changed policies I could avoid tax, but if I feel there is a different company which better meets my needs, I am going to have to pay tax?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Why?

Mr. Cosgrove: Because of the provisions of the law of 1969.

Mr. Hawkes: Has the Government given any consideration to changing the law in 1983?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Government tell us why it has not considered changing the law?

Mr. Cosgrove: The amount of money recovered on surrender, Mr. Chairman, is income.

Mr. Hawkes: The amount of money recovered on surrender is income; is that what the Minister said?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: What is the definition of surrender? If I in fact change my policy within the same company, I do not surrender it; but if I change to a different company, I surrender it. Can the Minister tell me why there is logic in the word "surrender" in one case but it is absent in the other?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman. It was not my definition.

Mr. Hawkes: Is the Minister telling us that he in fact agrees with the current definition as it exists in law? It is one that he personally supports?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Minister tell us why he personally supports it? The only reason given at this point is that it is a 1969 law. Tell me where the logic is in the fact that if I stay with the same company, I do not surrender; if I switch companies, if I go to a more efficient company, I have to pay tax because there is a definition which says I surrendered. What did I surrender?

Mr. Cosgrove: The difficulty is, Mr. Chairman, that the Government has no control over what the person does upon receipt of the money surrendered.

Mr. Hawkes: If it stays in the same company, the Government controls it? Is that the implication?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Provisions of the Act before us require that records be kept, that a person who holds a policy which falls within the provisions of the Act and the amendments before us would have to declare that as income if surrendered.

Mr. Hawkes: Let me go back to an issue raised the other day. To refresh the Minister's memory, matrimonial law in Canada is changing in the direction of a split of assets. On divorce, the courts will order a split of assets. Forty per cent of Canadian marriages are at risk, according to the most recent statistics. In other words, 40 per cent of the families in Canada are going to have to go through a court process in which assets have to be split.

Now, what we are doing here in law, as I understand it—

Mr. Fisher: We are not changing the practices.

Mr. Hawkes: —would be to require of Canadians in the middle of a divorce, when expenses are high, when emotional costs are high, that assets of this kind have to be split. The Government of Canada is then going to say they were surrendered, tax has to be paid, and there will be smaller amounts left for investment. In other words, the assets of a married couple will be reduced as a consequence of this law. Is that correct?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, there have been some media reports about studies which presently show the incidence of success in marriage is deteriorating. My personal hope would be that this will not be a long-term experience, and therefore I do not accept the assumption that this is what will happen in the future, as the Hon. Member has done.

Secondly, as I indicated, the law governing how assets are split or whether they are to be split on dissolution of a marriage is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. The operation of the courts in that area is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, and for anyone in this House to comment on it would be pure hypothesis.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I am not asking the Minister to comment on what the courts are likely to do. It is a known fact that the courts are ordering asset splits. I am asking the Minister, where a court orders a whole life policy asset to be split, one which has been in place for ten years, and those people get the money from the policy split, first of all will that be viewed as a surrender? Let us go back to his term. Will that be a surrender? If I have to cancel the policy in order to split it, will it immediately be the case that I have surrendered it and therefore incurred a tax liability?

Mr. Cosgrove: The Hon. Member prefaces his remarks with "if", so it is truly hypothetical. I do not think it is terribly useful to try to prejudge or guess what any provincial judge is going to rule anywhere in the country.

Mr. Hawkes: At the ten-year stage of a 20-year policy, if I choose to cash it in and give half to my wife or to my ex-wife, will I have to pay tax?

Mr. Cosgrove: In that circumstance the amount taxable would be to the extent that the surrender value exceeds premiums. I would remind the Hon. Member that in that circumstance the parties would have available the $1,000 investment income exclusion.

Mr. Hawkes: Did the Minister just say yes, I would have to pay tax?

Mr. Cosgrove: I will repeat my answer. The tax would be to the extent that the surrender value exceeds the premiums. I would remind the Hon. Member that in the case he cites, the $1,000 investment income exclusion would be available.

Mr. Hawkes: In other words, the Minister is saying that if I have some other assets or income of that kind, the answer is yes. If my income does not exceed my deductions I do not have to pay tax, which is the basic principle of the tax system. I do not understand the reluctance to say yes.

Would the Minister consider an amendment to this Clause to give some relief to those people who are unfortunate enough to encounter court-ordered asset splitting in this area?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman. We believe that the provisions of the Act that deal generally with the disposition of assets, however ruled by whatever provincial jurisdiction, are sufficient.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The time allotted to the Hon. Member for Calgary West has expired. I understand that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance has a point of order.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I understand that in order to clarify matters you would like the list of Clauses and Subclauses that we are dealing with read into the record.

I understand that we are dealing with Clause 4 and an amendment to it; Clause 5 and an amendment; Clause 10; Clause 12(1), (5), (8), (9), and that there is an amendment to Subclause (9); Clause 18(1); Clause 22(2), (4), (10), (11) and (13) and that there are amendments to Clause 22, Subclauses (11) and (13); Clause 26(4) with an amendment; Clause

28(1); Clause 39(1), (2) and (3); Clause 47; Clause 52(6); Clause 53(2); Clause 54(2), (3), and (5) and that Subclauses (3) and (5) have amendments; Clause 66; Clause 67(2); Clause 73(1); Clause 96 with an amendment; Clause 102 with an amendment; Clause 110; Clause 118(8) and (9); Clause 128(2) and (7) and Clause 133(4).

Further, I would ask that those motions deemed to be moved and seconded by the Minister of State for Finance be printed in today's Hansard. There is a list in your possession, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is normal for the particular Minister to move motions of that kind. I think someone else on the Government side should move them.

The Deputy Chairman: There is no problem with that. The motions have already been accepted. The motion now being put is that the amendments be printed in today's Hansard. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Agreed and so ordered.

That Subclause 4(8) of Bill C-139 be amended by striking out lines 19 to 22 on page 12 and substituting the following:

"terest in a prescribed debt obligation, an amount determined in prescribed manner shall be deemed to accrue to the taxpayer as interest on the obligation in each taxation year during which he held the interest in the obligation."

That Subclause 4(12) of Bill C-139 be amended by striking out lines 37 and 38 on page 13 and substituting the following:

That Subclause 5(1) of Bill C-139 be amended

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I have a number of questions for the Minister. In his interpretation of Clause 10, will the Government now be able to collect income taxes from those individuals who are presently buying Treasury bills from the Government that are purchased at a discount and have no interest on the face of them? Will the Government send out T-5 slips in those cases?

Mr. Cosgrove: I am advised that the answer is yes, that they go on the accrual system.

Mr. Blenkarn: Will the Government send every individual who purchases Treasury bills, directly or indirectly, T-5 slips and has the Government organized a method of keeping track of that type of investment?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, the regulations will provide for that. I qualify my answer by saying that there is a general obligation on persons earning income to declare it.

Mr. Blenkarn: Will the Government be able to prorate income and discount and will the T-5 slip specify what is income and what is capital? How will the Government do that with Treasury bills which vary in face value and worth by the minute, by the hour, by the month, by the day, and which are sold for periods of up to 364 days?

Will the Minister explain to the House how the Government proposes to collect that tax and how it proposes to determine who owns Treasury bills? How does it propose to keep detailed records of those Treasury bill transactions so that people who invest with the Government will finally pay some tax?

Mr. Cosgrove: Perhaps that question is best answered by repeating my last answer in reverse order. First, there is an onus on the taxpayer to declare income; second, the method by which he will be assisted in doing that will be covered by the regulations which will follow.

Mr. Blenkarn: For many years the Government has successfully been selling Canada Savings Bonds on a cumulative basis with the promise that if people buy the bonds, in six or seven years they will have doubled their money. This Act now requires people to pay income tax on the accumulating interest either annually or every three years. Will the Minister advise how the Government proposes to follow this form of taxation and why, in November, 1982, the Government proceeded to sell cumulative bonds without telling the purchasers that this would be a provision of the Income Tax Act which it then introduced on December 7?

Mr. Cosgrove: The accrual for those bonds would not come into place until 1985. I am told that the Bill before us was widely understood and, of course, the specifics of the regulations follow on the actions of the House.

Mr. Blenkarn: Will the Minister explain how the Government expects ordinary people to understand complicated Ways and Means motions which were changed and changed and changed again? Will the Government advise the House as to why, in making representations on the sale of Canada Savings Bonds, it did not specifically set out that the bonds would be taxable on an annual or tri-annual basis? Any Government offering anything to any person must in the normal course of events explain clearly and properly. Do we have a Government which proceeds to sell something without giving clear, open and complete explanations of what it sells in terms of its financing?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Government will attempt to explain it to Canadians as best it can in a form which is understandable. I hope the Hon. Member for Mississauga South will not criticize the Government for using funds in an attempt to explain things to people.

Mr. Blenkarn: On the Canada Savings Bond matter, has the Government set up the machinery to advise people, who presently hold cumulative Canada Savings Bonds purchased in November, on how to receive advise as to what in fact is the interest on the accumulating bonds? Bearing in mind that under Subclause (8) of Clause 4 it is the obligation of the taxpayer to notify the issuer of such a bond if he wants to receive advise as to what is the accruing interest. It is the obligation of the taxpayer. Does the Government have a system of keeping track of people who hold Canada Savings Bonds to bring to their attention that they must in fact advise the issuer of the bond, that is the Minister, whether they want advice concerning the accruing interest?

Mr. Cosgrove: My officials advise me that the example used by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South pertains only to the case of annual accruals. In the other cases, as I have indicated, the tax does not fall in until April, 1986. Of course, it is a matter which is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Revenue. Also it is a matter which would follow only upon passage of legislation by Parliament and the drafting and promulgation of regulations, bearing in mind the need to attempt to bring provisions in a simplified manner to the attention of Canadians generally so that they could be understood.

Mr. Blenkarn: In view of the relatively small amounts of money which people are allowed to invest in Canada Savings Bonds, why has the Government decided to use this complicated accrual demand of payment of tax on interest every three years, with provision for it to be, at the taxpayers' option, taxable every year? Why has it not left the law the way it is and collected the tax on the income which investors in Canada Savings Bonds will have to pay in the normal course? That is the way the law is now. Why has the Government decided on relatively small amounts, such as the Canada Savings Bonds that it sells to people on a restricted basis, to insist upon this rather cumbersome, complicated and indeed unfair method of collecting taxes on those bonds?

Mr. Cosgrove: I am advised by my officials that we are doing what many people are presently doing administratively in order to take advantage of the $1,000 deductible. We are doing it because of the revenues which will be gained. Finally, as I indicated at the outset, deferral unlimited becomes unlimited non-payment of tax, and to be fair to all taxpayers there should not be one segment of taxpayers using a particular method which can put off tax and therefore avoid tax over a long period.

Mr. Blenkarn: If that is the case, why does the Government sell cumulative bonds? Knowing that people could buy these bonds and defer tax over a long period of time—indeed, the Minister said forever—why would the Government have ever sold that type of security in the first place? Is it not true that the Government sold this security to raise money? Is it not also true that the Government encouraged people to save money? Why is the Government now encouraging people not to save?

Mr. Cosgrove: My officials advise that it is a better instrument for people. The proof of the pudding is that Canadians are buying them. In so far as people saving or not saving, we know it is a mixed issue. Canadians are saving at a record rate. Is that good or is that bad? Does it help spur the economy? Is the use of savings productive? Of course, that is not a matter for the Clause which is presently before us.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister said that people are escaping vast amounts of taxation. We have talked about Canada Savings Bonds. Now I would like to direct the Minister's attention to guaranteed investment certificates. He may know that one way to handle small inheritances to children, situations where a grandmother, for instance, wants to look after her grandchildren in her will and leaves them $500 or $1,000, is for a trustee to buy a cumulative guaranteed investment certificate, maturing on the child's eighteenth or twenty-first birthday, as the case may be. Why does the Government insist upon complicated taxation of such a GIC? What is the point of it? What is the Government trying to accomplish? Is it fairness by some mythical concept of fairness determined on the twenty-fifth floor of the Place Bell Canada?

Mr. Cosgrove: If a taxpayer wants to pay the tax, he can choose to buy an instrument which pays interest annually. It is really a choice of the trustee in each individual case.

Mr. Blenkarn: Does the Minister not appreciate in the instance I have given him that in order to turn the funds over to the infant, if there is not a provision for someone to give a receipt as a trustee, one must go to court to obtain a court order? When the amount of money is $500, $1,000, or $1,500, to burden the estate with obtaining a court order for a receipt in that amount would be unconscionable. The way these matters are handled is by the purchase of relatively small cumulative GICs running until the birthday of the beneficiary, so that the beneficiary can give the receipt when he or she reaches legal age. Why is the Minister being so stubborn?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of things we should consider in the example. First, the child conceivably would not have any taxable income. Second, if that were the case and we are talking about the very small amounts the Hon. Member used in his example, the child would be able to take advantage of the $1,000 exemption. Finally, if the difficulties are additional costs because they are required to go through probate or estate procedures governed by provincial jurisdiction, of course the answer is to ask the provincial jurisdiction to try to streamline its operation of court procedures so as to do away with this unnecessary and unproductive cost.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister knows better than that. That is, without a doubt, the dumbest answer I have ever received. The Minister is a lawyer. He knows that when a trustee pays money he has to have a receipt and that an infant cannot give a receipt either for income or for capital. To say that the trustee can turn the income over to the child and obtain a receipt from the child, the Minister knows is not the case in law. The only way the trustee can do that is by obtaining a clearance from the court. The Minister knows that the cost of going to court on a matter of $500, $1,000 or $1,500 is ridiculous. The Minister knows better than that, and to give us the dumb answer that he gave insults this Parliament. To ask a provincial Government to change the estate laws of a Province to accommodate the stupidity of this Income Tax Act is also a dumb answer. Let us get on to something more.

Mr. Cullen: More stupidity.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, can the Minister tell us what is to prevent people who have large amounts of money and want to buy annuities from going to every other jurisdiction in the world prepared to sell annuities without having the tax on the income of those annuities paid out on an accrual basis? The Minister knows that in the United Kingdom, the United States and in every other country annuities are not taxed on an accrual basis; they are taxed when the annuity is paid. What really prevents people from buying their annuities elsewhere? I really do not want the Minister to tell me that because they are Canadians they have to declare their foreign annuities, because he knows, I know, and we all know that they will not do it and the Government will never collect the taxes.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has admonished me not to say that they are foreign annuities subject to the tax provisions wherever they are held and in whatever country, and I must say that because I would be tolerating or condoning the breach of obligation of some people whom he said do not declare income. Therefore, there is no income realized.

I am told by officials that indeed if you check the records and speak to the Minister of National Revenue you will find income in such cases is declared, as it is, of course, by many Canadians. I would respectfully suggest that if the Hon. Member knows people—I do not know whether they would be clients—not doing that, then he should bring to their attention the provisions of the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the Minister knows that people will pay tax when they receive the income. What we are talking about is imputed income that cannot be received, that is not received and will not be received. When people have money which the Minister defines as income but which no one else in the world defines as income, they will not pay tax until they receive that income. If the money is coming from a foreign source, they will pay the tax when they receive it from the foreign source. Will the Minister tell me how he expects to collect this? Is not the effect of what we are doing with respect to annuities driving capital out of Canada, forcing people who want this type of investment to go offshore, away from Canada? When they get used to going away from Canada to invest their money, I can assure the Minister they will have lots of other opportunities to do that. Why is this provision in the Act when the Minister knows that it is not in any other income tax provision in any other jurisdiction? Why only in Canada do we try to drive capital out of the country?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, if the Parliament of Canada in its amendments to the Income Tax Act defines the capture of income in accordance with the accrual method as set out in the amendments here, that will be the law of Canada. The Hon. Member, although he disagrees with it and has given some philosophical reasons why he does not agree with this method of identifying income for revenue purposes, still, I am sure, as a professional would have to draw this law to the attention of anyone who asks for his professional advice. It is not the whim of the Minister that is the law but the Income Tax Act of Canada, under which people are expected to conduct their business affairs.

In so far as what attracts people to make choices as to where they invest, I respectfully submit that the method under which income tax is identified and paid is only one element in a decision a person would make. The rates themselves are probably the predominant factor, but there could be many others and it would be conjecture and an individual decision for a person making that choice.

Mr. Darling: Accrual interest is cruel.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I want to advise the Minister that legally people can set up an offshore, non-resident trust to buy an annuity. They can buy an annuity from New York Life in New York, Occidental Life in California, or by just driving to Buffalo and seeing a friendly agent. They can set up the non-resident trust in which case the income goes to the trust, and it is perfectly legal. They are not required to pay the accrual on the income from that annuity. That can be done with insurance companies who operate in this country through their foreign subsidiaries or with a foreign company. The arrangements can be organized, I am sure, through any lawyer. Any investment adviser will advise them how to do it.

The Minister is not at all preventing people from buying accrual annuities; he is allowing people to buy accrual annuities in other countries without any tax problem in Canada whatsover. Indeed, there is nothing he can do in Canada to catch the tax accruing on those annuities. All the Minister has done in the amendments is to drive investment funds out of the country. There is absolutely no purpose to it. It is a grasping, foolish idea conceived on the twenty-fifth floor or thereabouts of Place Bell Canada. The Minister has not thought about it, he has not worked it through. He has also been told by insurance companies and those who sell annuities everywhere. What he is doing to deprive companies operating exclusively in Canada from selling those annuities and investing the proceeds in long-term investments in Canada. The Minister has not done anything for Canada. He has not done anything for the income collection system. All he will do through these provisions is to drive money out of the country.

If this Section passes, his officials might be very happy, but I will tell him and his officials right now while they are listening that these provisions will be changed by the next Conservative Government. We want investment in Canada. We want people to invest in Canada. These provisions do not allow this. All they do is drive money out of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the flowery language used by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South does not at all accord with actual experience in the sale of annuities by major Canadian insurance companies. I invite the Hon. Member to look at the experience of sales of major Canadian companies, and I think he will agree that perhaps his flowery interpretation of the implication of this law is, indeed, just that, a flowery interpretation.

The Hon. Member raises a point where he feels—I do not know on whose legal advice—that there may be high-priced lawyers or high-paid tax accountants who, upon payment of these fees, can attempt to assist otherwise well-heeled taxpayers find some way around the provisions of the Act. Of course, each individual case would have to be analyzed by Government lawyers to find out under what category that kind of advice and those kinds of schemes would fall. I cannot pretend to offer any kind of judgment on the scheme that the Hon. Member has just put forward. Obviously, officials and lawyers employed by the Government would have to know whether those are evasion methods, avoidance or fraudulent methods. One thing we can all be assured of is that it will be costly to the taxpayer who is employing those types of high-paid accountants.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, could the Government share with us their estimate of the impact of this legislation on the formation of capital pools?

Mr. Cosgrove: As I indicated earlier, we have some 12 or 18 complicated Clauses before the House dealing with the implication of income tax and the philosophy in the area that the Hon. Member wishes to investigate. I think that it is so far removed from the work that the House has before it that I am reluctant to get into these kinds of philosophical discussions.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Minister tell me whether or not the Government has an estimate of the impact of these changes on the formation of capital in this country?

Mr. Cosgrove: I repeat my last answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: I will repeat my question. Does the Government have an estimate? Have the Government's officials looked at the possibility that these tax changes will affect the formation of capital pools in this country? Do they have an estimate?

Mr. Cosgrove: I will have to repeat my last answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I guess we have to assume no. I find that to be very disturbing. I think it is crystal clear that one of the difficulties is that $18 billion worth of capital has been chased out of the country simply because of one change in federal policy.

I think it is important that all Members of Parliament understand whether or not the Government has looked at the potential impact of this policy on the formation of capital. Without capital, it is not possible to modernize, increase productivity and get new export businesses started. Certainly, the life insurance industry and the annuity businesses have been prime sources of capital to the private sector for expansion, development and productivity.

Has the Government looked at the probable effects that this tax legislation will have on the formation of capital that will help get the economy going again? If it has not looked at it, will it?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, we are willing to consider that in another forum and in a more appropriate exchange.

Mr. Hawkes: May I examine the implication of the word "appropriate" with the Minister. To this point, we have a current law which has resulted in particular types of businesses. What the Minister is asking us to do in Committee of the Whole at some point in the next few weeks is to pass a change in the law. How can Members of Parliament be expected to decide how to vote on those changes if the Government has not shared with us the implication of those changes for Canadian society?

My colleague from Mississauga South has raised the issue of the potential impact of this legal change on the formation of capital. The formation of capital lies at the heart of our economy. How can the Minister indicate that there is a more appropriate time or forum for information of that kind than right here today, before we have to vote on whether these changes would be good for the country?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary has already expressed an opinion on it. How can the Hon. Member say that we have not made the opinion of the Government known to the Opposition? It is obvious that the Hon. Member disagrees with it. Why does he not say that? The opinion of the Parliamentary Secretary is known to the Hon. Member.

Second, it would seem to me that the more appropriate forum by far would be, for example, in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs dealing with the borrowing authority Bill, C-147, which deals with capital formation and the like. That matter will be before the Committee either this week or early next week. The Minister of Finance will be available. I suggest that the detailed analysis of movement of capital is more germane to that kind of exercise.

Mr. Hawkes: May I ask the Minister how much capital has been formed in the last year to four years through the industries that are being attacked by this tax law?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I have to repeat my last answer.

Mr. Hawkes: It is a totally different question. How much money has been raised for capital purposes through these industries which are under attack from this tax law?

Mr. Cosgrove: I have to repeat my last answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: The last answer was that the Parliamentary Secretary gave us an opinion. I am simply asking the Department of Finance officials to tell us how much money has been raised over the past five years, or in the period for which they have statistics. Do they have that information?

Mr. Cosgrove: I have to repeat my last answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: A stonewall makes me stubborn, Mr. Chairman. I can get up and down for seven days.

Perhaps the Minister can take those questions under advisement. We will be back at three o'clock and perhaps the Minister can be more forthcoming about capital formation at that time. I will switch topics for now, but I will come back to it after three o'clock so that he will have a couple of hours to do some research and put the twenty-fifth floor to work.

One of the aspects that we have not yet dealt with is the case of small businesses. Quite often, they are entered into on a partnership basis when two people form a small business. As part of that small business arrangement, they frequently take out a life insurance policy so that, in the event of the death of one of the two partners, the business can be taken over by the surviving partner. The survivors of the person who dies are compensated.

As the law exists now, the tax liability which would accrue in those situations can be determined in two ways. The tax liability can lie on behalf of the surviving partner or it could be the deceased partner's family who accrues whatever tax liability there is. If we pass the law as the Minister presently proposes, that choice will be taken away. The tax liability will accrue to the survivor's family.

Could the Minister share with us his reasons why he wants to take the choice away from people in that situation and put it on the heads of the surviving family to pay the tax?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the reason would be to prevent deferral. Once the estate becomes, for time immemorial, the beneficiary of the proceeds, then the money would fall in. The provision did present some difficulty to the industry at the outset. I know now that it has been accepted, for example, by the Life Underwriters Association of Canada. I suppose it includes the underlying philosophy behind the Section.

I refer the Hon. Member to a letter dated February 2, 1983, written by the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the LUAC which concludes that "the presentation of the agreed upon amendment resolves to our satisfaction the concern of the Life Underwriters Association of Canada relating to corporate-owned life insurance and the capital dividend account issue". I would be pleased to make a copy of this letter available to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hawkes: I thank the Minister for a copy of the letter and for his assertion that the salesmen of life insurance are satisfied with the provision. The issue which I bring to the Minister's attention concerns whether or not the owners of small businesses who buy this kind of life insurance are happy with this change in the law. Up to this point, and including those who are grandfathers, two partners can make a decision on where the tax liability should lie, on the survivor or on the family of the deceased. This change in the law takes the option away and states that the tax liability will be borne by the family of the deceased. These people would pay it as compared to the survivor who has income earning opportunities. It is nice that the life insurance industry is happy. However, what about the partners who actually end up paying the tax? Have you considered them and are they happy?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, of course, the life insurance salesmen do not act in a vacuum. They act on behalf of their clients, on behalf of the very people to whom the Hon. Member is referring. The life insurance salesmen do not act for the life insurance companies; they act for their policy-holders, for the people who are affected. I must put great store by and stock in the fact that the underwriters have indicated that they are satisfied. Therefore, their appreciation of the market and of their clients is that it serves that situation adequately as well.

Mr. Hawkes: Is the Minister indicating that the life insurance industry approached him and asked him to change the law? Was it inadequate before?

Mr. Cosgrove: I would merely draw the Hon. Member's attention to the letter which I have just produced to him, which states exactly that, that the underwriters are in agreement with the amendments which are before us on this issue.

Mr. Hawkes: Let us not confuse questions. Did the life insurance industry approach the Minister and ask him to change the law in any way? As I read this letter, they are saying that it was a very bad law which the Minister proposed in the first instance, that he is now ready to modify it and it will be less bad and will be satisfactory.

Mr. Darling: That's more like it.

Mr. Hawkes: My question is, did they come to the Minister a year or two ago and ask him to change the law because the law, as it now exists, is unsatisfactory? The letter does not say anything about the current law being unsatisfactory. Did they tell the Minister that verbally?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: They told the Minister verbally, some time ago, and asked him to make a change in the law affecting corporate-owned life insurance?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman. They agreed in principle that the issue of deferral was not intended by the provisions of the original Act, and they agreed with the movement of the Government to attempt to overcome that potential abuse.

Mr. Hawkes: In other words, the life insurance industry has been lobbying the Minister to do something about tax deferral. Is that the implication?

Mr. Cosgrove: I am hesitant at this point to get into definitions with the hon. gentleman as to what he considers to be lobbying.

Mr. Fisher: Carrying it to absurdity.

Mr. Hawkes: Those in the industry have been speaking to the Minister and offering their support for changing tax law to get rid of some of the deferral principles. The Minister has the support of that industry. Its members want you to get rid of those deferral principles. Is that what the Minister is saying?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Well, they have not lobbied me or sent me information.

Mr. Fisher: That's because you were not over here.

Mr. Hawkes: Let me return to an issue which we barely got into in my previous round. It concerns the issue of policy conversion. The Minister has acknowledged that if one stays with the same company and converts from one kind of policy to another, it is possible to avoid surrendering the policy and therefore incurring tax liability. However, if one changes companies, it is not possible to avoid the concept of surrender and therefore the tax liability. It strikes me that this has implications of considerable magnitude for any new company which would like to enter this field, which would like to provide Canadians with a better and more efficient policy, with a better bang for their buck. In effect, what the Minister is asking Hon. Members of the House to do later this day is to approve a change in tax law which would really guarantee existing companies something approaching a monopoly, and certainly an advantageous position in terms of future business. Is the Minister anxious to reduce the competition in this field? Is that one of the purposes of the change in tax laws?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, of course, in proposing to the House the amendments to the various Sections which we have before us now in a cluster group, we have many opportunities for consultation with the industry, both with the CHLIA and LUAC. Many Hon. Members have been canvassed by their constituents, individual life insurance salesmen, officers of companies and the like. I have met with representatives of CHLIA and LUAC on numerous occasions in the last four months. The Minister of Finance has met with the representatives of the industry. We have not been requested to make the change or to find some difficulty with the proposals which have been flagged by the Hon. Member.

Quite frankly, I do not know why the industry would not come forward with the case which has been presented by the Hon. Member. I would only reason that since the changes have been before the industry since November of 1981, they have surely not overlooked this provision. If they have had some difficulty with it, they would have let Hon. Members know of their problem with it.

There could be many reasons why the industry is not interested in this subject. One might be self-interest, I do not know. Maybe companies feel that without adopting the approach of the Hon. Member, it would tend to secure policyholders with each individual company and thereby would avoid cross-company movement. However, I do not know. Maybe they have decided it is a good feature in the industry.

This much I do know, and that is that the principle which the Government is applying here, and that is that we treat of whatever income we calculate is derived flows upon surrender, that that income is treated as receipt of any other income. Therefore, perhaps the industry recognizes that in that case we should not really be trying to differentiate between income in this industry and income which falls into a person's use through various financial instruments.

The Deputy Chairman: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary West on a brief and last question.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I may take a little more time this afternoon to follow up this subject, but I think it is fair to say that it is the business of Government and certainly the business of Parliament and the Parties to protect the consumers' interest. It is a legitimate purpose of any trade association or any gathering of that kind to protect the interests of those in their membership.

In the context of our current discussion, I would be quite surprised if the life insurance industry had indicated to the Minister that it wanted a change in the law which would encourage more competition for a market which may already be saturated. In those cases, enlightened self-interest would indicate that one protects one's share of the market.

I am just wondering whether or not the Minister will consider the issues I have raised between now and three o'clock, and think through whether or not he would like to move some other amendments in relationship to them.

I point out a wider issue of principle and practice which is coming at us down the road, hopefully in the not too distant future. One of the problems with pensions in Canada is portability. We are going to have to find societal mechanisms that enable people to transfer their pension credits from one location to another and from one kind of plan to another. This issue I am raising in relation to this specific law is perhaps the tip of the iceberg. When people want to change from one company to another, the Government is saying that they cannot do that without incurring tax liability. That is making an individual a captive for life of a single company which may have a poor performance over time.

I am simply asking the Minister, now that the issue has been brought to his attention, hopefully in a forceful way, whether or not he can use the creativity of the twenty-fifth floor to find a mechanism that would allow Canadians freedom of choice, without penalizing them in the tax system simply because they want to change companies. Would the natural instincts of the Minister be in that direction, if he could find such a mechanism?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I think that when the industry representatives, LUAC and CHLIA, have an opportunity of reading the blues and the introductory statement by the Hon. Member, they will be scandalized by his statement that they do not act in the best interests of the clients they serve or that they do not exercise a trust on behalf of the policyholders they serve, in an industry that has served this country and has been a leader in the world. To make that kind of statement, that the industry acts in its own interest, is in my view nothing short of scandalous.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I would encourage the Minister to read the blues. He has asserted that I said certain things which I did not say, and I would like to draw that to the attention of the House. I find his behaviour and his assertions scandalous.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, I would like to return to the earlier comments made by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South with regard to annuities and the ability to shelter annuity moneys. Perhaps I could ask the Minister some straight questions of fact.

It is true, as I understand it—and I would like the Minister's comments—that if someone of my age had inherited a sum of money and chose to buy an annuity for my retirement, under the provisions of this Act, if I buy that as an annuity investment to look after me when I am elderly, this Act says that the Government requires that I pay tax on the investment effect of that annuity every three years or every year. But it is also legal for me to invest that money in this same form, an annuity instrument, offshore in a trust, and not pay Canadian tax, quite legally; in effect, defer the tax until the whole investment vehicle pays me money and then pay tax when the annuity pays me. Is that correct?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bosley: How is it not correct?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, it is not correct because of the inaccuracies of the assumption of the Hon. Member. I do not know whether he was present when I answered the question by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South dealing with the offshore trusts. We do not believe that the example he used is one that will be found to be supported as a valid method of avoiding the provisions of the Act.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, this is an important point. I would like to ask the Minister if he can tell me, since the vehicle is to appoint a trustee in an offshore country and for that trustee to acquire the annuity on behalf of the trust, how that is illegal under Canadian law?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member and I as Minister would have to have legal advice on that matter.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, has the Minister had legal advice to confirm that what he is saying is correct, that it is not legal?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the matter is being explored by the Department.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, this is specifically important because, as the Minister may know, there is a company in the Bahamas, Casuarina, which has since the budget of November, 1981—or certainly since 1981—attracted $80 million of Canadian investment money to that jurisdiction precisely to avoid—avoid is an unfair word, Mr. Chairman—but precisely because of the treatment proposed in this legislation.

My question to the Minister is, is the Minister saying that Canadians who have shipped money to the Bahamas to be invested in that trust vehicle, in that company, to avoid the accrual effect that this Bill proposes on annuities, have broken the law of Canada?

Mr. Cosgrove: The Department is looking into it, Mr. Chairman, and it is possible.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, my final question is this. Will the Minister make sure that the House sees that information as to whether or not it is illegal. If it is not illegal, as many Canadians and Canadian experts believe it is not, if it finally turns out to be the case that this method of sheltering annuity investment is legal, bona fide and proper, which will mean that this method will be used increasingly by Canadians to ship money out of this country, will the Minister undertake to reverse the provision in this Clause?

Mr. Cosgrove: The question is entirely hypothetical, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, if I could follow the question which I put earlier this morning regarding the single-premium insurance policies which would be taken out by an individual and made payable to a recognized charity, the Minister informed me that in this case there would be no tax collected on this premium. Since that statement was made, I have been informed that even though the original policyholder would not have to pay tax, the beneficiary, the charitable institution, would have to declare the income each year, beginning from the year that the policy was issued, even although no money was, obviously, received. Is this correct?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman. I would like to reassure the Hon. Member that the information that he has received is inaccurate. I can only repeat that the charity is exempt under Section 149.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, do I understand then that there will be no money paid by the policyholder nor will the recognized charity have to declare part of the premium as income each year?

Mr. Cosgrove: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. That is again providing, as I have indicated, that there is a transfer in ownership to the charity.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the Minister mentioned, in reply to the Hon. Member for Don Valley West, that the Government was looking into the legality of certain trusts that had already been set up to avoid the accrual rules in this Bill. The Member for Don Valley West mentioned a trust called Casnarina that is deliberately advertising and collecting Canadian savings and has since November, 1981 collected at least $80 million of Canadian savings to avoid the very rules we are now discussing. The Minister has said that the Department is looking into the matter and has an opinion, or is in the process of having an opinion. Will the Minister undertake, prior to three o'clock, to deliver to this side and to the House the details of that opinion?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the difficulty in answering the question is that I am advised that the company referred to has been doing this kind of advertising regarding trusts for the last six years. It does not spring from this budget at all.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being one o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the Bill later this day.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

DRUGS

CONSUMPTION OF DRUGS BY CANADIANS

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of my colleagues in the House to the contents of a report by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police according to which in 1981, Canadians spent more than $8 billion on drugs. Some three million consumers, one third of whom are teenagers, spent $5 billion on soft drugs, while $2.5 billion was spent by 20,000 heroin users, and 225,000 children thirteen years and over spent $475 million on cocaine.

Madam Speaker, I wish to inform Hon. Members that to help children avoid drugs, there is a brochure available called "Les drogues ... parlons-en!", prepared by young people belonging to a non-profit organization called ACCES. This brochure which contains topics for discussion received the approval of famous hockey player Michel Bossy, who allowed his name to be used free of charge to help warn young Canadians against the use of drugs.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I am greatly disappointed by the attitude that the Government has adopted toward Canada's aboriginal peoples. Throughout a year during which the Government should have been negotiating with the aboriginal peoples to arrive at a mutually acceptable position that could be presented to the Provinces for ratification at the impending constitutional conference, it has neglected its responsibility.

Instead of coming forth as the advocate of aboriginal rights, a position that would have been a source of pride to all Canadians, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has adopted the role of moderator between vying interests, those of the Provinces and those of the aboriginal peoples. Attention due to the identification and definition of the rights of Canada's aboriginal peoples has been deflected to lesser issues.

To ensure that due consideration is given to safeguarding the rights of these people, a process to continue the constitutional discussions with the full participation of the aboriginal people must be entrenched in the Constitution by amendment, at the constitutional talks next week. Only in this way is it possible to ensure that a satisfactory definition of aboriginal rights will be entrenched in the Constitution within a reasonable time.

QUEBEC—CONSEQUENCES OF NEW HYDRO-QUEBEC PROJECT ALONG LACHINE RAPIDS

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun-Saint Paul): Madam Speaker, recently, Hydro-Quebec announced that a new 500 megawatt power station would be located along the Lachine Rapids on the side of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Madam Speaker, since we now have a power surplus and since the location in question happens to be the most beautiful spot on the St. Lawrence in my riding, I think it would be a disaster to carry out this project. We must consider the fact that the Lachine Rapids are in a recreational area where thousands of people go fishing and where fish, especially various kinds of trout, have always spawned, and that this project would therefore eliminate a natural resource and therefore would be environmentally unsound. Diverting the Rapids would do away with the streams bordering the riding of Verdun-Saint Paul, and this would also be environmentally damaging. The ridings of Verdun-Saint Paul and LaSalle have a number of plans for developing the river, and we think it would be a disaster to divert the Lachine Rapids to carry out a project which will not be needed for the next twenty years.

INCOME TAX ACT

ALLEGED OMISSION OF NOTARIES IN IDENTIFICATION OF PROFESSIONS IN CLAUSE 16(2)

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, on December 14 of last year, I put a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) about what I imagine was an oversight in Bill C-139, where it identifies professions in Clause 16(2). On behalf of the 2,000 notaries in the Province of Quebec, I pointed out that notaries had not been included, and at the time I asked the Minister of Finance to ensure that this profession would be listed in the legislation. We are now in Committee of the Whole and there has still been no amendment to that effect. Yesterday, I mentioned the fact to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Cosgrove), and I was given the assurance that an amendment would be tabled. I therefore hope, on behalf of those 2,000 notaries, that at last there will be a very clear indication that notaries constitute a profession in Quebec.

AIR TRANSPORT

STATUS OF QUEBECAIR

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, since Quebecair's financial statements have been brought to the attention of Air Canada and the Minister of Transport, and the Quebec Parliamentary Commission on the future of Quebecair will finish its proceedings on March 24, I wonder, Madam Speaker, whether the Minister of Transport would not consider meeting the press or the people of Quebec, either in Quebec City or Montreal, very soon, to give them a progress report on the Quebecair dossier and on what has been done to date by the Federal Government and what its intentions are with respect to Quebecair, Nordair and Air Canada. Madam Speaker, I believe it is very important at this stage that the Minister of Transport should be concerned about the issue of Quebecair's staff, and generally about Regionair, Quebecair, Propair and all air services on the Middle and Lower North Shore and especially in Eastern Quebec.

I think that full clarification is necessary now and that the companies and users concerned ought to know what is happening. Therefore, the Minister of Transport should take charge of this dossier and as soon as the Quebec Parliamentary Commission has finished its work, direct action can then be taken for the benefit of all concerned.

PENSIONS

PLIGHT OF SINGLE WOMEN BETWEEN AGES 60 AND 65

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: —my point is one that I have made several times over a number of years. I make it again today, in the hope that one of these times the Government will do something about it.

I refer to the provision with regard to the Old Age Pension under which it is possible for people between the ages of 60 and 65 who are in financial trouble to get a portion of their pension, provided a person between 60 and 65 is related to an older person who is receiving the pension. Still the law denies any such pension to any women between 60 and 65 who is single. It also denies it to a woman between 60 and 65 whose husband may have died before she reached age 60. It is most unfair. We feel these women should be covered, and I hope the Goverment will soon change the law in this direction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, our basic democratic freedom is rapidly being stifled, and I view the situation with alarm. The Government is so obssessed with secrecy it goes to unprecedented lengths to establish its right to conceal. Canadians have no alternative but a free press in the hope of obtaining information.

Lately the concept of freedom of the press has become more illusion than reality. An example is the refusal by the CBC to sell air time to the Ontario Medical Association for an advertisement outlining the danger of more state control in medicine. Is this agency of Government unwilling to carry a message stating the dangers of socialism simply because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is so deeply committed to socialism? Is this freedom of the press?

Do Canadians have access to information when the Prime Minister refuses to hold press conferences? Do Canadians have access to information when the Prime Minister appears here for less than an hour each day and replies to questions by refusing to answer? Will Canadians have access to information when the Prime Minister appoints a commission on newspapers which recommends further Government control? Shades of Tass.

Alarming as the position of the Government has become, it is equally distressing to witness the lack of response from those whose duty it is to present the information. Are the media not yet sufficiently outraged at this manipulation? Are they not yet prepared to refute such control? The Prime Minister said:

> In the last analysis, any given political authority exists only because men consent to obey it. In this sense, what exists is not so much the authority, as the obedience.

I would suggest to the media that obedience and freedom of the press are two entirely different things.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DECISION NOT TO IMPOSE SURTAX ON CANADIAN LUMBER

Mr. Michel Veillette (Champlain): Madam Speaker, I was very pleased Tuesday when the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) announced the outcome of the negotiations between the Canadian and American Governments concerning exports of Canadian lumber, as reported in the media yesterday. The United States have decided not to levy a 65 per cent countervailing duty on the $2.1 billion shipments of Canadian lumber, thus saving at least 70,000 jobs in Canada, including 15,000 in Quebec. This duty was a direct threat to the 8,500 workers of Quebec, because 25 per cent of the industry which exports 56 per cent of its output to the United States would have been forced to shut down. A duty of 65 per cent would have signalled the end of the forest industry.

It was good news indeed for several Members, particularly those of the Lower St. Lawrence, Lac-Saint-Jean and Abitibi regions, as well as myself as Member for the riding of Champlain. There are three major sawmills in my riding, and I am sure that this news does give hope to the workers of that industry in Quebec who will now play an active role in boosting the construction industry in the United States. The Canadian Government did spend $2 million on those negotiations, but I can say that never has so little money been so profitable to workers of the forest industry in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

COMMUNICATIONS

CLOSURE OF CNCP TELEGRAPH OFFICES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the recent decision by CNCP Telecommunications to close a number of its local telegraph offices across Canada, including one in my riding of Kingston and the Islands, has caused grave concern and apprehension. It will mean the end of over the counter personalized service in many towns and cities throughout the country. The most serious impact of this short-sighted decision will be felt in the business sector in each community. Tenders, contracts, notices of change to specifications, and many other instruments of business, are communicated by telegram and telex, where the date and time of receipt are, in most cases, a matter of legal significance. Delays on these transactions can be both time consuming and costly, and may even result in the forfeiture of a contract.

As a publicly owned federal agency, CNCP Telecommunications has a responsibility to ensure that Canadians have convenient and immediate access to a national communications service, for both personal and commercial transactions. I therefore urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to take immediate steps to reverse the decision of CNCP Telecommunications with regard to the closure of so many of its local offices.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSAL TO ABOLISH CHILD TAX EXEMPTIONS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, we congratulate the National Council on Welfare for again proposing reform of the child tax system to benefit those families with greatest needs. Their proposal to abolish the regressive child tax exemption in favour of universal family allowances and child tax credits makes practical economic sense. Many organizations support this position. The present child tax exemption provides greatest benefits to high income families and no benefits at all for the poorest families. One billion dollars in tax revenues is lost each year which could be used for a more equitable system of family benefits. We support the recommendation to abolish the regressive child tax exemption, and favour an increased universal family allowance which is taxed back progressively as family incomes increase.

The report, called "Family Allowances for All", recognizes the universal family allowance as a foundation of Canada's social security system. Family allowances provide independent income for mothers and stimulate consumer spending. They recognize all Canada's children. We call on the Government once again for a review of both income support programs and the income tax system in order to provide maximum benefits for families and particularly for those who are suffering from increased unemployment and poverty.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

RELATIVE STRENGTHS OF AMERICAN AND RUSSIAN ARSENALS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, on Monday President Reagan indicated that groups like those who support a nuclear freeze "would place the United States in a position of military and moral inferiority". Members of this House will remember the President, in front of a bar chart, showing American nuclear missiles in blue and Russian missiles in red, and over the years the blue bars becoming shorter and the red bars longer. The President concluded that this showed Russian superiority.

What the President did not say was that, while the bars showed Russian superiority in missiles, the American Government has been consciously reducing its numbers in favour of new Mirv'd missiles, that is to say, missiles containing multiple independent re-entry vehicles or warheads, each capable of landing on separate targets over a wide area. For example, one Trident submarine missile has 24 warheads. In fact, in round numbers, the American forces possess about 30,000 warheads versus 20,000 Russian warheads, including 9,000 to 8,000 ICBMs respectively. Only 300 of these warheads on each side would destroy both nations.

The 1982 U.S. Department of Defence Annual Report states, "While the era of U.S. superiority has long since passed, parity, not U.S. inferiority, has replaced it". Therefore, Madam Speaker, this is the time for our Government to join with the United States House of Representatives whose Foreign Affairs Committee on Monday voted 27 to 9 in favour of a bilateral nuclear freeze, the same motion found in the so called minority report prepared by six Members of this House from all three political Parties.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

REPRESENTATION OF METIS PEOPLE AT CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. According to the terms of the Constitution the Prime Minister has a clear responsibility to invite representatives of the aboriginal people, the Indian, Inuit, and Metis, to the conference table to discuss area of aboriginal definition which affect them. The Metis people feel this has not been done. As a result, the Metis People from the Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba have joined together and now represent 80 per cent of the Metis people. They want the right to represent the Metis people at the Conference table.

Is the Minister prepared to deal with the difficulty which has arisen regarding seats at the conference and the problems which result from the injuction application being filed in the courts this afternoon which, if successful, could stop the conference from being held? Will he deal with this matter before that happens in order that the conference can start in a mood of harmony?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat limited in what I can say on this matter because it is in court today and I will have to be very careful in my comments. However, I think I can tell the House what is already to some extent generally appreciated, that at the first of the preliminary conferences which I chaired, where provincial Ministers met with aboriginal leaders—

Mr. Nielsen: And the leader of the Territories.

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes, and the leaders of the Territories were also present as my hon. friend suggests. The native Council of Canada allowed the western Metis representatives to hold one of their two seats. It was, I think, everyone's understanding at that point that that arrangement would continue. On the eve of the second such conference which I chaired, the NCC changed its point of view and excluded the various Metis representatives from the table. This precipitated a crisis which began at that conference itself.

Our role, Madam Speaker, is primarily that of mediator between the various groups involved. We have been trying to use our good offices in that role to facilitate some form of agreement.

ROLE OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, the problem we see, as a result, is that the federal Government is becoming a mediator instead of dealing with this problem well in advance of the last couple of weeks. Will the Minister of Justice shoulder his responsibility now, because the Government has not shouldered its responsibility in the last year, and guarantee the two seats to the Metis people? This is all they are asking for in order to represent themselves, as declared in the Constitution. In that way we can start this conference, which is so important to these people, in harmony.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the way in which my hon. friend phrased the question was quite unfair, perhaps because of facts of which he is not aware. In fact some of the spokesmen for native people have been taking the position that this group of prairie Metis should not be represented at the constitutional conference. That is the reason why we have had to take on this role of mediation. It is true that the invitations to the constitutional conference next week are extended by the Prime Minister, and he acted on that responsibility some time ago when he invited representatives of the Native Council of Canada to have two representatives at the table, but on the general understanding at that time that one of those seats would be held by representatives of the prairie Metis.

That is the situation in which we now find ourselves, which we have been trying to mediate, and I can assure the House we will certainly assume the responsibilities we have in this matter.

HUNGER STRIKE BY PRESIDENT OF CANADIAN FARM SURVIVAL ASSOCIATION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Justice. He will be aware that the President of the Canadian Farm Survival Association has been arrested and in fact is in jail now and on a hunger strike. This is in response to the situation which occurred in southwestern Ontario which resulted in a penny auction being conducted similar to what we saw in the 1930s. The Minister will know that this situation exists as a result of farm foreclosures, increasing farm bankruptcies, and lack of Government action.

• (1420)

Does the Minister agree with the action taken by the bank and by the law in arresting this farmer? If he does agree, does he feel that the other 400 farmers involved in the penny auction should also be arrested? Would he make a commitment, with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture, to deal with this matter so that we will not have to face the same problem in future?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, if I understand the matter that my hon. friend is referring to, charges have been laid and are before the courts. The provincial authorities are responsible for enforcing the law, so I do not think it would be appropriate for me to make any comment on this situation at this time.

EMPLOYMENT

DURATION OF JOB-CREATION PROJECTS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The job creation program set up by Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act has been of great assistance, but I am told that although these projects have a maximum of 52-weeks duration they will all terminate on March 31.

Could the Minister tell me why this is so and how many individual agreements were originally scheduled to extend beyond that date? Also, would the Minister consider extending those projects which have not completed their mandate? If not, would he consider an automatic referral of existing projects for approval for a further 52 weeks?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member has found the Section 38 job creation program to be helpful in his region. Over 15,000 jobs have been created under that program.

I am not sure where the Hon. Member's information comes from concerning the termination of the program. There is no plan to terminate it. In fact we are continuing to sign new agreements. The program will continue according to whatever terms are arrived at with the individual employers sponsoring the projects. I should like to correct the Hon. Member's impression; we are not planning to terminate the program.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

LEVEL OF EDUCATION PAYMENTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I should like to return to a matter that was raised in the House on Tuesday. Apparently the Government is contemplating imposing the six and five formula on post-secondary education. However two different messages seem to be coming from the Government. In the House on Tuesday the Minister of Finance maintained that there would be no cutbacks in the health portion of the established programs financing. Later the Secretary of State indicated to the press that, whatever cutbacks there might be, the Provinces would continue to receive EPF funds in a lump sum and it would therefore be up to the Provinces to decide whether universities or hospitals would be affected.

We hope that the Government will not go ahead with this but, if it does, could the Minister tell us how it will be achieved? I would like some clarification on the mechanics of what the Government has in mind. In terms of provincial discretion, it will be crucial how they go about it.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to clarify this for the Hon. Member. As I indicated, no change is considered to the health financing formula and the payments under the existing formula. If a change is made under post-secondary education, it would be a change increasing post-secondary education payments to the Provinces by six and five per cent in the next two years. This is paid to the Provinces under the bloc funding arrangement. There would be a cheque for the health contribution and a cheque for the post-secondary education contribution, but, as the Hon. Member knows, the Provinces take that money and put it in their Consolidated Revenue Funds. They can then allocate it in any way they want. No particular stamp is put on the cheque saying "This is an education dollar, this is a health dollar". The Provinces—and sometimes people say that this is unfortunate—can use it to build roads, to pay civil servants—

Mr. Nielsen: Or for coal liquefaction.

Mr. Lalonde: —rather than allocate it to education. We have seen this in many instances. At the present time the federal contribution to post-secondary education is well in excess of 50 per cent.

The Provinces will remain free to allocate funds they receive from the federal Government to education, highways, publicity, or whatever way they want. There is no way that we can control exactly where our funds are used. We are trying to get a better accounting in that regard and to make sure that at least the Provinces are spending the equivalent of the moneys that we are sending to them. As I say, we are paying well over 50 per cent of the total cost of post-secondary education while the share of the Provinces is between 30 and 40 per cent.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Blaikie: That is precisely the point, Madam Speaker. We want more accountability. This Party has always been in favour of stricter earmarking of federal transfer payments to the Provinces. It seems that the Minister of Finance and the Government are backing down on this by adopting a penal attitude toward the Provinces as opposed to a positive one.

POSITION OF PROVINCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Has the Minister considered more positive, creative ways in which the federal Government could have some leverage over the Provinces that are not spending up to expectations on post-secondary education while the Provinces that are spending what is expected of them will not be penalized by this across-the-board measure? Has the Minister considered any alternatives other than this big stick approach?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if this is a big stick approach it is a rather small stick. In effect, for 1983-84, the federal payments to the Provinces per full-time student will go up from $4,520 for 1982-83 to $4,753. The federal Government is going to increase its post-secondary education contribution very significantly. It is up to the Provinces to decide if they really want to use that money for post-secondary education. Some Provinces are doing better than others in that regard.

I agree with the Hon. Member that most Provinces are contributing a lot less to post-secondary education than the federal Government. Discussions are taking place between the Secretary of State and the Ministers of Education concerning a better accounting of the federal contribution in that regard. The discussions have been progressing reasonably well and I hope there will be a satisfactory resolution of this issue.

On the other hand, I have to tell the Hon. Member that the federal Government does not have the authority and is not looking for the authority to dictate to the Provinces how they should spend their own money.

Madam Speaker: I ask the Hon. Minister to be more brief in his answers. I think he is taking a little too much time with them.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, basically what the Minister of Finance is saying is that somehow this Liberal Government hopes that two wrongs can make a right—that the Liberal Government, imitating Progressive Conservative provincial Governments, will somehow arrive at a solution—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member must ask a question.

STATUS OF ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, does the Government no longer regard these programs as established? The legislation is called the Established Programs Financing. Does it no longer regard these programs as established? Why is it going ahead with a move that will hurt everyone involved in post-secondary education, particularly those Provinces which, regardless of the double talk of the Minister, will receive a decrease in funding compared to what they might otherwise receive, if the Government does not go ahead with the six and five program in this year. Do not kid us about increases.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member can be assured that the programs will remain established. Any change that would require legislation would have to be made through a change approved in the House.

I can tell my hon. friend, for instance, that I have had meetings with the authorities heading the Canadian Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada last fall when I discussed this matter with them. They indicated that they would be ready to accept, in the spirit of restraint that we all have to apply in Canada, a limitation on increases to six and five per cent over the next two years.

I think the attitude taken by the Canadian Association of Universities and Colleges is a very responsible one, and I would invite my hon. friend to act as responsibly.

BROADCASTING

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON PROVISION OF SERVICES TO NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Madam Speaker, last week the Minister of Communications tabled a broadcasting strategy paper. One of the thrusts of the paper dealt with broadcasting for native people or native organizations in the Far North. Can the Minister tell us what he has in mind for this area?

• (1430)

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: I know that the Hon. Member and other Members, at least on this side of the House, are interested in listening to the answer. I have always indicated a very real interest in broadcasting going to northern residents, particularly broadcasting for native organizations in the North. I am delighted to announce that today the Government is making $40 million available to various native communications societies across the country for the purpose of native broadcasting.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fox: Knowing the Hon. Leader of the Opposition's very real interest in broadcasting for northern residents in general, I would like to say that we also made public today the five principles with respect to northern broadcasting. This is along the lines of the extension of services to northern remote communities about which the Hon. Member knows a great deal, and it is very much in line with the announcement made yesterday by the CRTC concerning CANCOM, allowing CANCOM in the future to make available an additional four channels of television to northern residents.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT TAX ON UNLEADED GASOLINE BE REDUCED

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It has both employment and consumer price implications. Yesterday the Minister of the Environment announced in Toronto plans to restrict, and possibly eliminate altogether, the consumption of leaded gasoline. Since such a policy would force Canadian consumers to buy exclusively the much more expensive unleaded gasoline, would the Minister of Finance consider doing two things—first, reducing all federal taxes on unleaded gasoline and, second, instructing Petro-Canada to take the lead in reducing the base cost of unleaded gasoline, which Environment Canada officials say is grossly over-priced relative to the price of leaded gasoline, given the comparative costs of production of the two fuels?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister of the Environment made a proposal and said that there would be a public debate on the subject during the next two months. He invited representations from the general public and those concerned. It is obvious that the Minister and the Government will consider all views that will be expressed on the project announced by the Minister of the Environment yesterday. As to whether further measures should be taken, I shall assume the Hon. Member's remarks are suggestions he would like me to take into consideration.

TOURISM

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism whose Department, in my view, should be one of the very high profile ministries in the Government. Further to what the Hon. Member for Hillsborough said regarding the high cost of gasoline, the Minister is aware of the recent news that Canada had a $1 billion deficit in the tourist industry. I believe the total was $2.5 billion of U.S. spending Canada and $3.5 billion of Canadian spending in the United States, for a minus of $1 billion.

Could the Minister tap the Minister of Finance on the shoulder, and the other Members of Cabinet, to see if something can be done? I know he is a hard-nosed nut, and I can see him shaking his head. I am wondering whether Cabinet would give consideration to doing something to help the tourist industry, which is the second biggest industry in the country, as the Minister knows. In my own Province of Ontario it is a $7 billion industry—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, what I have just done is pat the Minister of Finance on the back rather than tap him on the shoulder because, in his recent statements in the House, he has clearly given an indication of his support for small business. I remind the Hon. Member that, by far, the majority of businesses involved in tourism are small businesses. I thoroughly agree with him that indeed we should give this industry an increasing profile and priority. I would remind him that, although energy costs are high, the Canadian dollar gives us a particular advantage.

Also I would remind the Hon. Member that, according to press reports today, many of the disincentives are related to taxes within the Provinces. If he had read the press reports I read today, he would know that Tourism Ontario Inc., for example, has approached its Government to get it to lower its taxes on accommodations, meals, alcohol and so on. There is a large mix of factors, but I assure him of our support on this side for the tourist industry.

PUBLIC WORKS

CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. It concerns the closure of CFB Chatham in New Brunswick, which is placing in jeopardy hundreds of jobs in that region. Everyone knows that the Minister is the man who cans the ham in New Brunswick. The other day I put a question to him in which I asked when he would be prepared to meet with the CFB Chatham Steering Committee to resolve the problems. They have asked repeatedly to meet with the Minister. He did not answer or even address himself to that portion of the question. Again I ask him when he will go to New Brunswick and meet with the CFB Chatham Steering Committee to resolve the impending tragedy.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I really have to ask the Chair for some clarification as to whether a Minister is responsible for his Department or his region, not because I do not want to try to answer questions fully but because I really must have guidance. The headlines in my own Province were rather derogatory—

Madam Speaker: Obviously Ministers may not answer questions regarding their so-called regional responsibilities.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

HEAVY WATER PLANTS IN CAPE BRETON, N.S.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. No doubt the Minister is aware that the official unemployment rate in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, is over 18 per cent, and that thousands of other workers have given up their job search. He must also know that closure of the heavy water plants in Cape Breton will add 3,000 Nova Scotians to the jobless ranks. Does the Government intend to allow closure of the heavy water plants at Glace Bay and Strait of Canso and, if so, what alternative employment can the Minister offer to the 3,000 Nova Scotians who will lose their jobs? I do not mean Alastair Gillespie and his Scotia Coal Synfuels Project.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we are well aware of the problem and we have been working on it. At this time AECL is working very hard to find some new markets. There is some potential for the development of a second Lepreau in New Brunswick and so on, so we have decided for the time being that we can keep these two plants in operation. If we are successful in looking for new markets or new sales of Candu reactors, we might be able to keep those plants in operation for a longer period of time. The Government is doing its utmost to ensure that we save these jobs, but of course it is all within the normal possibilities of selling that heavy water.

TRADE

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Michel Veillette (Champlain): Madam Speaker, first of all, I want to congratulate the Minister of State (International Trade) on his excellent work during negotiations with the United States Department of Commerce on lumber exports.

In a press release received in our offices, it was mentioned that the U.S. Department of Commerce would continue its enquiry and that a final decision would be made on May 23. Could the Minister inform the House what points are still at issue and what he intends to do until May 23?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I am satisfied with the preliminary decision given by the U.S. Department of Commerce. Factual documentation required for the final decision has been provided by the federal and provincial agencies concerned to the Department of Commerce. We are continuing our representations to the United States and await the final decision with confidence.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR ACCELERATION OF VESSEL REPLACEMENT ORDERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services. It stems from the very serious plight of Canadian shipyard workers in which they find themselves today. Would the Minister not agree acceleration of the Navy's fleet replacement program, the much needed fleet replacement program for the Coast Guard and oceanographic vessels, and a reinstitution of boatbuilding subsidies might not only save those dwindling jobs still in place but at the same time bring back into the work place the many thousands of Canadians who have been displaced by lack of activity? If the Minister agrees with that, does the Government intend any particular action now before we lose our pool of skilled workers from our major shipyards?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question. This is the second time in the little while that I have been asked about our shipyards. I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on asking a question of general interest. I agree this is one of the most important industries in Canada because it involves underdeveloped areas throughout the country. I can assure the Hon. Member that we are doing our best to accelerate the Canadian Government's fleet replacement program and maintain adequate levels of employment in Canada and in our shipyards.

I would like to advise the hon. gentleman that I would be pleased to provide him with a copy of my speech to the Canadian Ship Repair and Shipbuilding Association in which I covered the very points he mentioned.

BANKS AND BANKING

INCREASE IN PROFITS OF CHARTERED BANKS—PENALTIES FOR MORTGAGE RENEWALS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Bank profits in the first quarter of 1983 will total $484 million, an increase of 41 per cent and an all-time first-quarter high. At the same time home owners, who were locked into mortgages arranged in 1981 and 1982 at rates of 18 per cent to 21 per cent and who are now trying to renegotiate them because the mortgage interest rate has been reduced by a third or more, are being told by the banks that the three-month penalty, which they had to pay, until recently, to renegotiate their mortgages has been changed. They are now being asked for a cash penalty of $5,000 to $6,000. This is a completely unacceptable amount. Would the Minister discuss these exorbitant penalties with the senior officials of the banks and urge the banks to deal with their customers who have mortgages, in a more equitable way?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will be very pleased to pass on the representations made by the Hon. Member to the Inspector General of Banks.

Mr. Deans: That is what you said two months ago.

Mr. Lalonde: I am not surprised at the Hon. Member's comments because I indicated the corporate sector last year had one of its worst years in history. Obviously, if there is to be any recovery there will have to be increased profits. Knowing the losses incurred by companies last year, one should not be surprised that there would have been some increase in profits this year. In percentage terms this will appear considerable. As a matter of fact I forecast in this House that we would receive this kind of comment from the New Democratic Party.

EFFECT OF MORTGAGE RENEWAL PENALTIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, the Minister surely knows the one corporate sector that did not suffer losses was the banks. The figures announced yesterday and today indicate that the banks' profits are at an all-time high. Does not the Minister realize that, to the extent mortgage holders have to pay these very high monthly rates, they are not able to buy consumer goods and that the purchasing power of those consumers is reduced? If the banks would allow people to renegotiate their mortgages, people could begin to buy the products produced by Canadian manufacturers, the sector that is really suffering, while the banks are not.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have already said that I would transfer the representations made by the Hon. Member to the Inspector General of Banks. I would like to remind him that the return on assets of the banks, which is the best measure of the profitability of banks, has gone up from .47 per cent last year to .56 per cent, around a half a percentage point. This is still below historical averages. My hon. friend should look at the situation. I invite him to read the report of the parliamentary committee which had hearings last year on this subject. The committee came to the conclusion that bank profits in the circumstances were not considered to be excessive.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB CREATION UNDER NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Rolland Dion (Portneuf): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, if I can get his attention. In view of the fact that the Valcartier Canadian Forces Base is in my riding and, as the Minister is no doubt aware, the Quebec City area and the riding of Portneuf have been severely affected by unemployment, perhaps the Minister could inform the House what progress has been made by his Department and the Department of National Defence with respect to job creation under the NEED program?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, we have signed a job creation agreement with the Minister of National Defence which provides for 3,000 jobs under the terms of the NEED program.

ENERGY

OIL SANDS DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The Alberta Chamber of Mines, the Canadian oil industry, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce submitted briefs to the federal Government urging an accelerated program for oil sands development, because it is essential to Canada's goal of oil self-sufficiency by 1990 or even by 1995. At a time when 2 million Canadians are unemployed, who want jobs and who want to work, when is the Minister going to design a program that will assist in the development of Canada's resources and allow those people to go back to work? When is the Minister going to do something in the Department that he took over from the other disastrous Minister of Energy?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we are continually reviewing different propositions. Right now we are in communication with the Government of Alberta and with the Government of Saskatchewan concerning heavy oil projects and so on. There are some projects going on at this time.

Of course the megaprojects of the past, when everyone was forecasting the price of oil would go to $50, $60, or $70 a barrel, are not realistic with today's prices. We have some propositions to the industry in conjunction with the Provinces. These are being studied by the companies and the Governments. Some projects might go ahead, but with the decline in world oil prices it will make these projects much more difficult to materialize economically. However, we are working in close co-operation with the Governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta. In fact yesterday I was discussing two projects with the Saskatchewan Minister of Finance. We both recognized that first we have to look at the economic viability of the projects.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

INTERNATIONAL BIOTECHNOLOGY CENTRE—POSSIBLE CANADIAN LOCATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology. About three weeks ago, an article in one of the newspapers quoted the Hon. Minister as having said that Canada would certainly not ask to be considered as one of the possible locations for the International Biotechnology Centre sponsored by the United Nations. In view of this statement, could the Minister inform the House today whether this means that Canada will definitely have to drop a project that was being eagerly sought after, not only by Montreal but also by two or three other provinces?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question, because biotechnology is a subject that is of tremendous interest to the whole country. We are very keen on setting up biotechnology centres in Canada, and especially in the Province of Quebec, because the Government of that province is also very interested. The project in question, the UNIDO project, was not very attractive to us because of the terms and conditions set by this organization. However, that does not mean we are not interested. On the contrary, we are eager to act in this area across the country, and as I said at the beginning of my comments, especially in the Province of Quebec.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROJECTION OF UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Is he aware of the data released recently by Data Resources of Canada which show that unemployment will continue at 1982 levels through 1983, 1984, and into 1985? If he is aware of that unfortunate level of unemployment, would he indicate what concrete steps we may anticipate to relieve that situation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have not seen the particular figures which have been put out by Data Resources. I am aware of a number of forecasts, some of which are mort optimistic than others and some more pessimistic than others.

I have indicated that, when I address issues in my budget, the issue of unemployment would be very high on the list of top priorities. I would invite my hon. friend to wait for the budget.

TRADE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE DOCUMENTS DEALING WITH FOREIGN-OWNED BRANCH PLANTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. Yesterday I referred to some confidential documents that quoted senior Government officials and trade commissioners as saying that up to 75 per cent of the branch plants operating in Canada were prohibited from exporting by their foreign parents, thus losing a lot of jobs.

This morning I sent a note to the Minister's office asking that he make six specific documents public. I will send that note to him again now. I have enclosed the titles of the documents, their dates, and the file numbers. Those documents include ones such as the Special Study on Export by Canadian Subsidiaries, which names companies that prohibit their branch plants from exports. There is also the main report on Exports by Canadian Subsidiaries—

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a question? This is Question Period.

Mr. Nystrom: The documents include the two to which I have referred. My question is very straightforward. Will the Minister table these documents so that the Canadian people will know what advice the Government has been receiving from its senior officials since the 1950s about the lack of export opportunities for branch plants of foreign multinational companies?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for sending me a copy of his note just now. I did not receive his note this morning because I was away from my office at meetings.

I note that he is asking for documents that are dated in four cases, April, 1963; in another case, 1961, and the other in 1958. I do not know if he is studying ancient history. These hardly seem current. I have to say to the Hon. Member, not having had notice of the nature of the documents until I came to the House, that I will make inquiries as to their status and whether they are eligible for release. If the Hon. Member already has them from some illicit source, I cannot see why he wants them released.

Mr. Nystrom: It is because the public deserves to know. Because of the mania for secrecy by the Government across the way, I am not allowed to release these documents without putting someone in jeopardy. That is why I asked the question.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF STUDIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I will ask once again. Will the Minister make a commitment to make these documents public? Will he also make a commitment to make any studies that have been done since the 1960s, regarding the activities of foreign companies in this country, public as well? I suspect that the exact same practice is going on today that went on throughout the 1940s, 1950s, and 1960s and cost this country tens of thousands of jobs.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I know that there are many thousands of jobs in this country as a consequence of the exports of Canadian companies, including many that are foreign owned. I suggest that the Hon. Member is cognizant of the fact that the proper way for him to proceed for the production of papers is to seek an order for return. I suggest that he do so.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MANUFACTURE OF ROLLING STOCK

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I would like to attempt to get some information from the Minister of State for Regional Economic Expansion who, I am sure, has conferred with his colleague, the Minister of Transport, on this problem. What are the future intentions of the CNR with respect to the manufacture of its own railway rolling stock? It is of great concern to the Hawker Siddeley works in Trenton, Nova Scotia, to a plant in Montreal, and to a plant in Hamilton as well. There are many thousands of workers who are wondering about the policy.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that Canadian National Railways are not the responsibility of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or DREE. I would suggest that he pose the question to my colleague, the Minister of Transport, who is responsible.

Mr. MacKay: I thought, because there were so many jobs involved, the Minister would know.

NOVA SCOTIA STEEL PLANTS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister is about another situation in Nova Scotia that is causing concern. The Deputy Prime Minister recently announced the possibility of a steel fabricating plant in his constituency that is going to have the possibility of creating 1,000 jobs. As the Minister knows, a short distance away there is another plant that has closed down. It is the same Hawker Siddeley plant that can duplicate the very jobs that the Deputy Prime Minister is hoping to create in his constituency. Is this Government policy, departmental policy, or more political puffery from the Deputy Prime Minister?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Deputy Prime Minister has devoted the majority of his adult life to the people of that particular area in terms of creating jobs. There are several substantial projects which are on-going at the present time to create jobs in that area.

FISHERIES

REPORTED THREAT TO RAM SEALING SHIPS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He will know that this is not a hypothetical question because an organization known as the Sea Shepherd Conservation Society, which owns a converted trawler called the Sea Shepherd, is currently hove to off St. John's, Newfoundland, and threatening to ram the three sealing ships that are planning to go to the ice within the next few days.

What action does the Minister intend to take under the Fisheries Act to protect these three ships which have Canadians on board? Does he intend to call in the assistance of the Coast Guard and/or the navy to ensure that this vessel will not ram the Canadian sealing ships? As he knows, this vessel has already boasted of having sunk three whalers.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, obviously no Canadian should be allowed to prevent other Canadians from practising a lawful activity, whether fishing, seal hunting, or whatever. If a small group like the one on the Sea Shepherd tries to prevent other Canadians from undertaking such an activity, that of course will have to be looked at by my colleague, the Minister of Justice.

If any group wants to impose its will on other Canadians, I would call it tyranny and totally unacceptable.

REQUEST THAT SEALING SHIPS BE PROVIDED WITH ESCORTS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, does the Minister intend to provide these three ships with escorts from either his own fleet or the Armed Forces, so that they can leave port and head for the ice without fear of harassment or being rammed?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, with respect to movement on the sea, it involves regulations of the Department of Transport and my own Department. There is also the responsibility and assistance that we can have from the Department of National Defence. At this moment an interdepartmental group is monitoring the situation. I am very pleased to have the support of the Hon. Member that that group should not be allowed to prevent other Canadians from practising their lawful activities.

INCOME TAX

APPLICATION TO WAGES EARNED ON INDIAN RESERVES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Mohawks of the Bay of Quinte had plans to put men to work clearing and preparing land for the planting of 28,000 trees. The work is to be done on the reserve and the whole project will come under the Canadian Forestry Service reforestation program under which unemployment insurance benefits are supplemented and paid to those workers involved.

At the present time the whole project is on hold awaiting a formal ruling on the question of whether or not wages paid to the workers will be taxed. Would the Minister tell us if the wages paid to those natives working on reserve land are subject to tax, and when can we expect a ruling on this particular matter?

• (1500)

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, if I remember correctly, unemployment insurance benefits paid to Indians who live on the reserve are taxable. Consequently, funds used to pay for the kind of projects the Hon. Member has just mentioned, funds that are paid out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund, would be taxable, while the additional amount to supplement the amount paid to a person as wages would not be taxable. In other words, there are two wage components, one from the Unemployment Insurance Fund, which would be taxable, and the wage supplement paid by another agency through the band council or another organization on the reserve, which would not be taxable.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, March 9, 1983, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CORBETT—QUESTION ASKED OF MR. LEBLANC DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I have a point of order which deals with the effort of the Minister responsible for Public Works to sleaze out of his responsibilities to answer a question with reference to a matter pertaining to his Department in New Brunswick by asking the Speaker for clarification as to whether or not in his capacity he is responsible for answering a political question with regard to the Province of New Brunswick. The record will clearly show that the question as I asked it was directed to the Minister responsible for Public Works. He knew that, and I suggest that it is time he started taking his responsibilities seriously.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has made a point, but I do not consider it to be a point of order. I ruled on that matter. I was asked for guidance. The Minister felt that that particular question referred to wider responsibilities than those of his Department and, of course, that is the rule.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, today being Thursday, I would like to ask the Government House Leader whether he can advise us as to the business for next week.

I hope that in his explanation the Government House Leader will correct an impression which the Minister of State for International Trade tried to create in the country when he suggested there was a connection between the Government's commitment to fund the Calgary Olympics and the sports pool legislation. The Government House Leader knows that there is no connection. I would ask him to straighten that out for his colleague. At the same time, perhaps he could tell the House when the Government, which controls the sports pool legislation, intends to bring forward that legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as far as the business of the House for today and tomorrow is concerned, we shall continue debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-139. Next week on Monday, we shall complete second reading of Bill C-143 to authorize the Government to borrow certain sums of moneys. The House is aware that if necessary, debate will be interrupted at 5:45 p.m. Monday evening, for the vote. Next Tuesday and Thursday, we shall resume debate in Committee of the Whole on the important and urgent Bill concerning income tax. Next Wednesday will be Private Members' Day, as usual.

As far as the legislation on sports pools is concerned, I can confirm to the Hon. Member that it is very high on the Government's list of priorities, and, since he raised the issue, the Hon. Member will have to admit that on numerous occasions I have suggested completing debate on this Bill in one day it is now at the report stage and his answer was always negative. If the Hon. Member changes his mind, he should say so, since I am willing to reserve time tomorrow for completing debate on the report stage and second reading of the sports pools Bill.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, the Government House Leader finds it easy to gag his colleagues, and that is the way the Government operates. Over on this side of the House, we feel it should have full and honest debate, and we are prepared to debate at any time.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, concerning the matter of the sports pool Bill, we are opposed to it and are prepared to deal with it the moment it is called.

I want to raise another matter, however, with regard to House business. The President of the Privy Council no doubt heard, in a question today posed by one Conservative Member, although I cannot recall which one, of the dilemma confronting Allan Wilford, the President of the Farm Survival Association. Mr. Wilford is quite rightly demonstrating against the banks' usurious actions.

I wonder if the President of the Privy Council would indicate to the House whether he would be considering calling either Bill C-653, which is an amendment to the Farm Credit Arrangements Act, for debate in the House of Commons in committee, or whether he would consider sending it to a standing committee for consideration. Given the fact that it is a Private Members' Bill, would he perhaps consider bringing forward a Government Bill which would accommodate the same desires?

If he were to do any one of those three things, I want to assure him, at least on behalf of the Hon. Members of this Party, that we would be prepared to deal with the matter expeditiously.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am told that a friend of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has been charged with theft before the courts in Ontario, and my learned friend will understand that I do not intend to comment on matters that are sub judice.

[English]

Mr. Deans: I am not interested in whether the President of the Privy Council can answer whether he is stealing or not. That is not the issue. The contents of the Private Members' Bill would resolve a very difficult problem for a large number of farmers, particularly in Ontario but in other parts of the country as well. Is the Government prepared to have that Bill called or is it prepared to duplicate it with a Government Bill? I want to assure him, and I think I am speaking on behalf of all Hon. Members, that if the Government were to proceed with this Bill or with another similar Bill, we would guarantee dealing with it as expeditiously as humanly possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if only I could say that past experience has shown the Hon. Member is indeed able to deliver the goods when he guarantees support for a Bill. Unfortunately, we have had some negative experiences in the past involving both the Progressive Conservatives and the New Democratic Party. In the circumstances, if the Hon. Member has any proposals to make regarding legislation on sports pools, agriculture, income tax which bill is very urgent or on the Borrowing Authority Bill which is also very important and very urgent, if the Hon. Member has any definite proposals to make with respect to these bills, I feel that the appropriate place to discuss the issue is at our meetings of Parliamentary House Leaders, and I am very receptive to any suggestions aimed at accelerating the legislative process in this country.

[English]

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order directed to the comments made by the President of the Privy Council with reference to House business. I would ask a question supplementary to those raised earlier during the Question Period by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey and also by the House Leader for the NDP.

I simply want to be clear on the Government's position with regard to the Private Members' Bill, the bankruptcy Bill or a new piece of legislation dealing with the specific subject. It is my understanding, after listening to the explanations, that the Government House Leader indeed has no intention whatsoever of moving in this area, either through separate legislation on behalf of the Government, the Government's own Private Member's Bill, or through similar amendments to the Bankruptcy Act through Bill C-12. Am I right or am I wrong?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I rise on the same point of order, Madam Speaker. The House and the Government House Leader will know, and certainly the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) will know, that when this matter came before the House before I gave an assurance that if the Government were to allow the introduction of the Bill of the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex, I would be very pleased to second it. So the ball is very much in the Government House Leader's court with respect to bringing forth that legislation. It would be of great assistance to Canadian farmers.

Mr. Nielsen: As well as Bill C-95.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I do not want to belabour the point, but I do want to make one other suggestion, if I may, for consideration. The Government House Leader quite correctly said that this is a matter which we should perhaps negotiate. I am, of course, prepared to negotiate on any matter at any time. However, this matter is serious inasmuch as it will directly affect an individual who has chosen the only course which apparently, in his mind, is open to him to try to get the Government to move. Would the Government House Leader be prepared to meet this afternoon to discuss some way of resolving this particular matter?

• (1510)

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, an Hon. Member asked me whether he had understood correctly. I think what I said was quite clear. He can check in Hansard. If he does not understand, there are others who will. My answer was very simple, clear and complete. As far as the offer made by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is concerned, it is only a partial one in that it only indicates his intention of seconding the Bill, and we have no guarantee that the Bill will be concurred in without debate. I would like further explanations from the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) regarding amendments he would like to make for the same purpose.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have the offer. Talk to the House Leader.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I just want to give a proper answer to the colleague of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton. I was interested in his suggestion of considering an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act. I would like to see the wording of such an amendment to make sure that it responds to the concern expressed. If the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton is against such a move, then there is no way that this will be discussed further in the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I do not think that the hon. gentleman ought to misrepresent my position. My position has been quite consistent. I said at the beginning that if the Bill brought forward in the name of the Member for Lambton-Middlesex, which would help farmers, was allowed to be brought forward by the Government House Leader, I would second it, if that became necessary. I repeat that assurance. That was the reason for the intervention. It was not to suggest in any way that I was against the provisions in the Bankruptcy Act, as he has tried to misrepresent.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the fact that the Hon. Member would second the Bill does not help in any way. We do not need him to support any Bill moved by the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Bring it on, then.

Mr. Pinard: The question is, if the Bill is put, will it be adopted right away without debate? That is the commitment I have been asking for. The Hon. Members know very well that we have to deal with the Income Tax Act, with the borrowing authority Bill and now they are asking that we give more time to other pieces of legislation. For this reason I am saying that I doubt very much that the Tory Party is in a position to deliver, when some of their individual Members pretend that this Bill could be dealt with efficiently in the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am trying to help you.

Mr. Beatty: He wants the Soviet Union type of efficiency.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, on a separate topic, I wonder if the Government House Leader could either affirm or deny—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I believe I have a point of order on this topic.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am trying to assist the Government House Leader, as always, in the course of Government activity, and it is in that spirit that I rise. In order for us to make an assessment with respect to the amount of debating time that may be necessary on any piece of legislation, it seems to us in the Opposition that the common courtesy would be for the Government House Leader to get up and give us an indication as to whether or not a decision has been made as to when the Speech from the Throne for the next session will be brought down.

Mr. Nielsen: The one they said is ready.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Maybe the one that is ready now, and has been for some months, if not years. I wonder if the Government House Leader might give us a little hint, so that we on this side could give proper attention to the idea of transacting Government business forthwith and without delay, as to when this session will end.

This has been the longest session in the history of Canada. We would like to know when we will have a new Speech from the Throne so that we can assess what we can do with Bills now on the Government timetable.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That would be very helpful.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that if this session has been the longest in history it also has been, and is, the most important and the most productive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Producing two million unemployed.

Mr. Pinard: In almost three years we have succeeded in adopting over 150 Bills. That is well above average as compared to any normal session which, when there is not an election, adopts less than 50 Bills a year. We have not completed three years yet but already we have adopted over 150 Bills. We have patriated the Constitution; we have a new Charter of Rights; we have a National Energy Policy—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: —we have had two economic statements. This is and has been the most important and the most productive session ever.

Mr. Kempling: The country is bankrupt.

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member wants to know when is the next Speech from the Throne or when shall we stop dealing with the economy and start an eight-day debate, generally speaking. It has been made very clear under the parliamentary reform with which we are experimenting. I had to make a statement at the beginning of this semester, in January. The letter was made public, was sent to the House Leaders of both opposite Parties. This contained a list of all the Bills that have to be completed before we consider proroguing. With good will we could complete all the remaining stages of the important Bills. All this could be completed easily, with good will, within the next 15 days or so.

However, if there is no good will it could take longer, if the Opposition keeps forcing the Government to limit debate. We are under negotiation. If we do not achieve the results that we would like at this time, at least we on this side are trying to allow this session to come to an end, even though it has been very, very productive. The Hon. Member knows that the Income Tax Act is urgent and important. He knows that the borrowing authority is needed by the Government at this time and it is also important to get the money for the sports pool in Calgary as soon as possible.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Bring on the Bill.

Mr. Pinard: I would welcome the consent of the Hon. Member's Party to conclude debate on the sports pool tomorrow. That was the offer that was rejected a few moments ago by his House Leader.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, although this session is about to end, we have to conclude debate on the Bills I have just indicated, and it is most likely that with good will this could be achieved within the next few days.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, on the point the President of the Privy Council just raised, if it is true, and I agree that it is, that this has been the most productive session in parliamentary history and we have covered more ground than any other Parliament, why are we always being accused of stalling and not co-operating?

SCOTIA COAL SYNFUELS PROJECT

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS OBTAINED FROM CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, in response to requests put forth by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) and the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), and in the spirit of the Access to Information Act, I wish to table, under Standing Order 46(2), documents pertaining to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project. These documents were obtained from the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, the Hon. Member has indicated that he is tabling these documents in response to our request. Can the Minister give us assurance that all relevant documents from Devco's files are being tabled and none is being withheld, including documents of an intergovernmental nature?

Mr. Lumley: Madam Speaker, I said that in the spirit of the Access to Information Act the documents I indicated are tabled.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, is the Minister then implying that there are some documents in Devco's files which are relevant to this case which are not being tabled today? For example, would he claim an exemption under the Access to Information Act for some documents that were not tabled today, or can he give the House the assurance that all relevant documents are being tabled?

Mr. Lumley: Madam Speaker, I would first of all suggest to the Hon. Member that he take a look at the documents. Obviously there are some documents and minutes of the consortia that involve commercial confidentiality which would not be included, but in each case there is a note with respect to those particular minutes or documents which are not included in detail.

Mr. Smith: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last week I asked the Parliamentary Secretary to make inquiries with regard to question No. 4,175 which was placed on the Order Paper on March 24, 1982. It is with regard to the Government's hiring teams that are hiring in universities in Ontario and Quebec. It is a detailed question asking which Department has these hiring teams, whether they are going right across Canada, in what areas they will be hiring and what nationalities will be hired.

A number of complaints have been filed with the Canadian Human Rights Commission with regard to the discriminatory hiring and promotional policies of the Liberal Government. It is causing the Canadian Human Rights Commission great difficulty in reaching a decision on these complaints because the Government is not providing them with the proper documentation.

The information requested in my detailed question on hiring teams is the type of information that the Canadian Human Rights Commission requires. Will the Parliamentary Secretary inform me what the problem is? Is there any particular Minister who is not co-operating or any Government Department that is not co-operating? What answer does he have for me after having made this inquiry last week?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite correct, he did raise this last week. I want to assure him that I did initiate inquiries as a result of the point he raised last week, but to date I have not received a response. I will again follow up on it.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 58, I do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Blaker in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Committee of the Whole was considering Clause 4 and a series of associated Clauses and Subclauses. If my recollection serves me correctly, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South had the floor.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, prior to lunch we got into the question of certain money funds that were organized and have been organized principally since the budget of November 12, 1981, making it possible for Canadians to invest in Canadian Government bonds and other Canadian Government securities in such a fashion that the funds can accumulate, accumulate and accumulate and there will be no accrual of tax. The various offerings in these funds were being peddled in the Toronto area and indeed across Canada. For reference this afternoon, I want to put on the record the detail of a company called "The Money Fund Limited".

The Money Fund is organized as a fund to invest in the medium-term debt obligations issued or guaranteed by Canada or a Province of Canada or an agent thereof in any financial institutions having a Standard and Poors rating of AAA. The question is asked in their prospectus which has been approved, issued by Bache Halsey Stuart Canada Ltd, 170 Laurier Avenue in Ottawa: "Why is an investment in a Money Fund tax-sheltered?" The answer is: "A Canadian resident investor will not be taxed on an accrual basis or have taxes payable in Canada or Nassau until such time as the B shares are redeemed".

The next question is: "Will an investor be liable for any taxes on the redemption of First Series A shares". The answer is: "No, there are no taxes payable by an investor upon redemption of the shares".

On the question of their B shares, they say: "All of the investment growth will be attributable to B series shares. The value of the shares will be subject to tax on the capital gain realized on any redemption of the series B shares".

The next question is: "Can this investment be used as bank collateral?" Here is the answer: "Yes. Bank of America Trust and Banking Corporation Bahamas Limited will normally provide excellent collateral loan facilities with shares of the Money Fund as collateral. The interest on the loan may be tax deductible as an expense to the investor."

That particular fund is open to any investor who wants to put $100,000 into it. In effect, the investor puts up $100,000. The fund issues him Series A shares, annually the interest which is payable and collectible in the Bahamas on Government of Canada securities, which by the way have no withholding tax on them, if received by the trust company in Bahamas. In place of giving the Canadian shareholder his interest on his share of the income received on the bond, the Canadian receives a Series B share. That Series B share can be redeemed at any time. It is totally open. Indeed, the Series A share in the fund is totally open and redeemable at any time.

The Series A share redeemable without cost because that is the original capital. The Series B share comes back to the Canadian subject to Canadian capital gains tax only because, after all, it is a share. In other words, there is no tax on the accumulation principle for money taken out of Canada and invested with these people. These people are able to and have cleared their share issue with the Securities Commission of Ontario. The opinions with respect to the legality and the tax position on these securities has been cleared by the top solicitors in the country, indeed with the tax Department, if my memory serves me correctly.

This morning there was mention of the Casuarina Corporation. The Minister says that was six years ago. May I point out to him that the confidential offering memorandum for Casuarina is dated May 3, 1982. I pointed out this morning that Casuarina has already pulled out of Canada $80 million of investment funds that would have gone to mutual insurance companies in Canada. They would have been used in Canada for long-term mortgage investment in this country. The money was pulled out of Canada because of the nature of the income tax amendment now before us. There can be no justification whatsoever for this kind of activity that is allowed to take place, yet the very nature of the amendments before us initiate this activity and force money out of the country.

The Minister said privately before lunch that he had a legal opinion that people who went into these kind of schemes and invested in annuities or in these money funds outside of Canada may be avoiding Canadian income tax. I challenge him to present to this Committee that opinion. If he cannot produce that opinion, then he should withdraw all of these Clauses because these Clauses deliberately cause headaches and problems for Canadians. They take away the investment potential of Canada. They take money out of Canada and put it in foreign countries. That is what this income tax amendment and this part of the Section does. This Government does not realize what is happening.

This morning the Minister talked about the history of the annuity business in Canada. He was quite right. We were developing a very good deferred annuity business in this country where trust and insurance companies would take money in on long-term deposits and the interest would accumulate. That money was available for long-term mortgages and industrial bonds. What this Clause does is to force money invested in Canada by Canadians into short-term investment. It shortens the length of debt securities. It destabilizes the investment climate of the country. This particular series of Clauses is doing more harm to the investment climate of this country than any other series of Clauses in this horrendous set of amendments.

Has the Minister any current figures on the current attitude of Canadians toward buying deferred annuities since December 1, 1982? Have any Canadians bought them?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I indicated before the one o'clock break that the issue the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has just characterized is generally known, I am told, as offshore mutual funds. It is likely that there are not a large number of Canadians knowledgeable of, or who have come in contact with, this provision. As the Hon. Member indicates, they require the services of the highest price lawyers in Canada to set up the trust and give opinions on the matter. I for one have not had a reason to call upon such highpriced opinions or help. Obviously the majority of Canadians have not done so as well. It is probable, Mr. Chairman, that these Canadians who, because of their financial resources are able to call upon the best and most expensive advice on the conduct of their financial affairs must be first, the envy of some other Canadians, and second, I would think that some Canadians must feel a little frustrated, even a little angered, at the fact that there are some high rollers who have the resources necessary to take special advantage of the tax system.

However, getting back to the offshore mutual funds issue, it is not an offshore mutual annuity question; it is an offshore mutual fund tax technique.

Mr. Blenkarn: So what?

Mr. Cosgrove: The Hon. Member says, "so what?". The answer is that this special tax treatment has been in place for a number of years. It has nothing to do with this budget or specifically with annuities. It is only that annuities may be one of the riders under the trust, the mutual fund vehicle, that the issue now comes up. So I contest his protestation that this vehicle is the result of any of the Clauses which are before Parliament today on this issue.

Mr. Thacker: That is some answer.

Mr. Blenkarn: Some answer, as my friend says. The Minister says it is only the high rollers. Let me tell him that in the Casuarina prospectus the per unit cost is $10,000, not a great deal of money bearing in mind that the maximum amount of Canada Savings Bonds purchased by one individual is $35,000. If the Minister wants to buy the Money Fund, he can go down to Bache here in Ottawa and buy it. No problem, he does not have to be a high roller there. The Casuarina fund is financed and organized by the Royal Bank of Canada, not exactly an unknown institution in Canada. I am sure that if he really wanted to get involved he would just have to see his local Royal Bank manager, and that could be organized for him. The Minister says that is not an annuity, that is a money fund. Well, I want to point out that these Clauses deal with any investment situation where the money is invested and interest accumulates. The normal tax treatment in every jurisdiction in the world, other than this one if this Bill passes, is that interest is not taxable until it is received by the lender. Whether it is an annuity, an insurance policy, a guaranteed investment certificate or Canada Savings Bond with a cumulative feature, does not matter one iota.

The principle, Mr. Chairman, is that this Government wants to tax interest which has not been received. If people are going to save money in this fashion, they are going to earn a lot of money, and the Government says it is not going to get its tax fast enough. So the Government says, "Let us wring the neck of the golden goose; we will get the eggs out faster that way". I want to tell the Minister that he has wrung the neck of the golden goose. He has not answered my question about the experience on the sale of deferred annuities since the beginning of December, 1982.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member urges the Government not to take any leadership in drafting a tax system which we promote on the basis of equitable treatment of all Canadians. Yet scarcely a day goes by in the House that we are not urged by Hon. Members opposite that we do need specifically Canadian designed policies in, you name it, energy, housing, or interest rates. Then, because the Government of Canada takes leadership in proposing an equitable system for the vast majority of Canadian taxpayers, he complains that we are taking leadership. I do not know where the consistency is in that.

To make the observation that investment in annuities is down, as I indicated this morning, what does that add to our understanding of what has happened in the economy? Can you name six sectors of the economy which have shown improvement, or where financial investments have not suffered as a result of the downturn in the economy in the last 24 months? I doubt it.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister still refuses to tell the House how much the sale of deferred annuities has decreased in the country since the Minister decided to bring in Subclauses 4(6) to (11). The money funds that I spoke of were deliberately set up to avoid the problems created for investors in those Clauses, the ones we are now dealing with.

The Minister said that the annuity business was great in Canada. That is what he said before lunch. I asked him what has happened to the sale of deferred annuities since December 1, 1982? He weaseled, he did not answer. I am going to sit down and expect an answer from him because he should have an answer and he should have it now.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I am going to repeat the answer that I gave before the break, and the one which I just gave a few moments ago, that the sale of annuities is down.

• (1540)

If the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is so familiar with this fantastic tax scheme that permits people to have a tax advantage by getting high priced assistance—he has mentioned the name of McLeod, Young and Weir—I suspect he could get specific information on that question from the people who are offering those schemes. I have not been into the offices of McLeod, Young and Weir recently, but the Hon. Member has. I am sure they could give him that information.

The Deputy Chairman: The time allotted to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has expired. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a plea to Members of the Official Opposition to let the House get on with its business. Millions of Canadians whose only income comes from wages or salaries, do not have money to squirrel away in an annuity or RRSP or any of the hundreds of loopholes which the tax laws provide so that people with money can avoid paying taxes. I wish we could get off these pleas which we have heard all day for more concessions and more loopholes for people who already have more than enough.

I should like to discuss the problems of the people who cannot save money and those who can save a little but cannot afford the high-priced lawyers and accountants who give advice to people with money on how to avoid paying taxes.

Organizations such as the National Council on Welfare have documented evidence that large numbers of people in this country get away with paying little or no tax because of the loopholes in the tax laws. In 1978, approximately 2,316 people with assessed incomes of more than $50,000 did not pay any tax at all and 96 of them had incomes exceeding $200,000. In 1979 the Government lost more than $30 billion in revenue as a result of tax loopholes.

I wish we were not spending our time discussing ways to find more tax loopholes, which is what my friends from the Conservative Party are trying to do, but instead discussed ways to plug loopholes. People with money should pay their fair share of taxes and thus lighten the burden on people on low and middle incomes who do not have the money to invest or hide and who pay more tax than they should because they do not know how to avoid it.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the NDP has joined the debate. I think that Members of that Party are missing the point. What we are concerned about is the small Canadian who is being hurt by particular parts of this tax Bill. If the Hon. Member listens carefully perhaps we can identify some of those areas for him.

May I ask the Minister to reconsider the issue of court ordered asset splitting in relation to matrimonial matters. He knows that quite often in the process of a divorce, the courts order the splitting of assets. The Minister indicated that if the law remained as it is, then at the moment of divorce those people will be liable for increased taxation. This comes at a time when they can least afford it, financially or emotionally.

Has the Minister reconsidered my request for an amendment that would exempt people involved in that kind of forced-family splitting of assets from an increase in taxes? Has that matter been reconsidered, and can we expect an amendment that will remove that negative part of the Bill?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I will repeat an answer that I gave this morning and on a previous day when we considered that question. I have to remind the Hon. Member that the law with respect to what a judge may do, as it pertains to property rights between spouses at termination of marriage, lies explicitly within the jurisdiction of the Provinces. The Hon. Member is obviously interested in the question because he has quoted statistics on marriage breakup. I suggest that he should address himself to the provincial jurisdiction in his efforts to obtain more humane treatment of people faced with this situation.

Life insurance, annuities, etc., is only one area that is affected by a court looking at a household. A consideration of the whole issue of matrimonial relations and how they are governed upon termination, has presumably to be done in a co-ordinated way so that it addresses not only life insurance but such things as real estate, family car, etc.

While the Hon. Member's interest is legitimate, I think it is directed to the wrong jurisdiction.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I am not talking about the federal Government taking over provincial jurisdiction but about a federal tax law. I would point out to the Minister that people in the middle of a divorce will have to surrender assets, to use his own term, and will thus be liable for extra taxes.

If we proceed without the amendment which I suggest, then people in the midst of the most difficult time of their lives will be forced to incur an additional tax liability that they cannot afford. I am simply asking whether the Minister will bring forward an amendment in relation to the kinds of assets we are discussing that fall under federal jurisdiction so that the tax liabilities of the parties will not be increased. People do not want to surrender the assets but simply to split them. The technical part of the Bill requires them to surrender before the split, however, and this involves a tax liability which they do not need, do not want and which I do not think is humane. Would the Minister consider an amendment along the lines I have suggested?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, once again, the issue of how assets are dealt with by a court—whether they should be split, apportioned to one or the other, whether to set off one asset againt another, falls strictly within the provincial jurisdiction. In designing the rules for settlement, I think they have to take into account not only this law which deals with insurance but the law as it pertains to real property and other assets.

To be consistent, the question should be put to the Government that sets the rules about what happens upon dissolution of marriage.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, "consistency" is the operative word. Earlier we were talking about fairness. Does the Minister think it is fair to leave the law the way it is now?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes.

Mr. Hawkes: Another issue that I brought out was that of giving people the flexibility to change companies. We have regional insurance companies in Canada, but not all companies operate in all regions, yet we have a very mobile population. If this law passes in the way it is written, and I move, for example, from one region of Canada to another and I wish to change my insurance company, I will be required to surrender my first policy, pay tax on the accrued income, and have less money to invest in the subsequent policy. I will be at a disadvantage as compared to those people who do not move and choose to stay with the same company. Will the Minister consider this matter once again and consider allowing me to change insurance companies without having to pay tax?

• (1550)

Mr. Cosgrove: The Hon. Member's concern is laudable. It is interesting to note that not a single insurance company in Canada, nor any consumer group, thought that the matter should be the subject of representation; there has been none. It reflects the reality of the improvement of the way in which not only the insurance business but financial services are offered across the country. There may be regional offices, but companies have the ability, inexpensively and quickly, to deal with Canadians moving from one coast to the other.

Mr. Hawkes: Earlier today I asked the Minister and his officials if they could use the lunch hour to enable them to indicate to us how much money historically had been accumulated through annuities and life insurance and thus was available as a pool of capital to lend out to business and industry to modernize and make our country more efficient and effective. Does the Minister have those figures at this point?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I took advantage of the hour between one and two o'clock, in addition to answering telephone calls, signing letters, receiving other representations by officials and having lunch, to spend some time on the question raised by the Hon. Member. After reflection, I would again ask him to consider the area in which he is now inviting the Committee to enter. It is an area of capital markets and capital market formations, and it would be better addressed in another forum. I suggested this morning, for example, that when the Minister of Finance was before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs later this week or next week there would be an opportunity to ask him and his officials questions in that regard.

Capital formation is not restricted to insurance or annuity policies. The subject matter before the Committee at this time is not restricted or confined to the Income Tax Act. There are many other pressures or economic forces which come to bear on the larger issue. The Minister of Finance periodically reports on long-term, larger financial and economic projections and performance. I would recommend that this question be put before another forum so that, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North recommended, we could spend our time more profitably on the material which is actually before us.

Mr. Hawkes: I find it incredible that we can be considering such an important piece of tax legislation without any information or data on what it will do to capital formation in the country. This industry has been a significant part of how we have put together pools of capital to enable us to build plants, develop mines and drill for oil and gas. If we are destroying or hurting that market in any significant way, it simply means that there will be fewer jobs in the future. I draw to the attention of the New Democratic Party that without the formation of capital we cannot be productive and efficient and there will be no jobs. This is part of what has gone wrong in the country.

I remember standing in the House in October, 1980 and saying that if Members supported the National Energy Program, we would drive significant billions of dollars of capital out of the country and that if we did that, we would also drive out jobs and tax revenue. I stand here some two and a half years later, and all of that has come to pass. Capital was driven out of the country and jobs disappeared; we have 1.6 million unemployed. I am afraid that these few Clauses in the tax Bill may have similar implications in the future.

Also I am very disturbed that the Minister of Finance clearly indicated to the House that they have not done their homework, that they do not have data a projection or a guess about the degree to which capital markets will be hurt by this particular piece of legislation. This hurts job creation, this hurts the productivity of the nation, and it increases deficits. I think this matter is critically important, and I hope the Government will reconsider its position.

I would like to ask the Minister a few more questions. What happens if I have a life insurance policy which matures on my sixty-fifth birthday and I want to change it into an annuity to last through my retirement? Do I have to pay tax at that point?

Mr. Cosgrove: The only exception to that case would be the one I indicated to the House in the case of disability, which obviously is not the case raised by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hawkes: My question was: do I have to pay tax at that point? If my policy matures at age 65 and I want to change it at that point into an annuity, have I surrendered it at that stage and am I therefore eligible for tax before I move it into an annuity?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: What happens if I die one day before that comes about? Do I have any tax liability at that point?

Mr. Cosgrove: I assume not. If death occurs before the surrender is applied for or committed, the Hon. Member's estate merely receives the benefits from the policy without tax.

Mr. Hawkes: Is there a sense of fairness or a sense of justice in the fact that I can save a large tax bill by dying one day sooner?

Mr. Cosgrove: I do not think the Hon. Member would be concerned at that point about whether or not he has saved anything. Probably in the back of his mind was his concern for his estate, his business partners and his family, which obviously was the reason he took out the policy in the first place. The benefits from the policy would be available to the estate in that case, and it would be a very commendable action on his part.

Mr. Hawkes: Why would the Government not just let me roll it into an annuity and, as I took it out on a monthly or yearly basis, let me pay the tax at the point at which I wanted to use the money I had saved all my life? Why could the Government not let me do it that way? Why does it have to take some money before I can invest it in an annuity thus reducing the size of my annuity and my monthly payments for the rest of my life? The Government is really borrowing or taking my money before I have a chance to use it. Why could the Minister not consider an amendment of that kind?

Mr. Cosgrove: In the Hon. Member's example he has received income. The principle of the Income Tax Act is to tax income. The Government uses the resources it gains through the taxation of income to meet some of its bills, presumably offering some of the services of the federal Government to the Hon. Member or to people associated with him. That is one of the major ways in which the Government of Canada finances public services.

• (1600)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, can the Minister see that if I have my assets in the form of grain in the granary which is there for my retirement, I will not be taxed on that unless I sell it? If I happen to live in a city and have been a salaried worker all my life, my life insurance policy is like the granary, but, all of a sudden, the day I turn 65, I will be taxed on the whole thing. Yet the other chap who has his money in a different form of asset, such as grain, will only be taxed when he delivers the grain to the station and sells it. Why do we have this kind of inequitable principle? A great many Canadians live on salary all their life. They do not have a whole lot of money. They would like to keep whatever they have been able to acquire to see them through their retirement years. Why is the Government stepping in and telling me that I am taking this into income when I am not? All I am trying to do is to invest it on a long term so it pays back a little every month rather than all at once. That is what I really want to do with it. Why will the tax man not allow me to do that?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I would have to repeat my last answer. One of the major tax areas available to the Government is income tax. We do not have a grain tax or a grain collection system. Obviously, as the Hon. Member indicates, not everybody is into grain. We have an income tax system. It is a universal system. It is one where assets can be assessed on the basis of income easily identifiable in connection with financial institutions. It is a much more convenient way of assessing a plan against resources to be transferred into resources of the Government in order to finance Government services. We are being consistent, whether it is income which the Hon. Member earns through wages, through his occupation or through the sale of assets. The build-up in the life insurance policy that accrues over and above the cost of protection is viewed as income, and when received by people it is taxable under the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, earlier this day we talked about those Canadians who have a pension plan or an RRSP. If I were a small-businessman and I wanted to put something away for my retirement, I could put money in an RRSP, which is before-tax money. In other words, the taxpayer is making a partial contribution to my retirement by letting me defer tax on that amount until retirement. What is the maximum amount of that deferral?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, if I understood the Hon. Member's question, for the RRSP it is $5,500 and for the RPP it is $3,500.

The Deputy Chairman: May I advise the Hon. Member for Calgary West that his time on this point has expired.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, before my time expired last time, I was discussing with the Minister deferral of income. The Minister seems to indicate, in the way the Government is approaching these Sections, that people buy annuities, put money into guaranteed investment certificates, guaranteed investments, insurance policies that are single-premium pay insurance policies or accumulating funds only if they want to avoid income tax. The Minister knows that taxation is only one of the things that motivates people. Indeed, the Minister said that himself.

The Minister indicated earlier that there was a fair tax impact on the Government when the tax is not paid, it is deferred, taxes deferred are to some extent avoided. What studies does the Minister have in his Department with respect to what changing attitudes Canadians will have toward long-term savings as a result of the imposition of taxes on an accrual basis? What changing forms of investment are likely to take place? Does he not foresee that Canadians will, generally speaking, invest their money for shorter and shorter periods of time? On that basis, they will receive their income within the year and, therefore, have the income with which to pay the tax. Does he not foresee that indeed we will have shorter investment certificates—one year, no more than that. That is the kind of thing that is likely to develop? Will the Minister tell us what studies are available on how that will affect the long-term capital market?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, we know that Canadians are saving and probably investing at rates unparalleled in the history of Canada. Obviously there is room for debate as to whether investments should be locked up for 20 years, whether, as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South says, a move toward shorter investment is good or bad, or whether a move toward shorter investment permits people flexibility in being able to direct funds toward new opportunities in a fast paced technological world. It is almost impossible to guess or to generalize whether one is better than the other. I suppose a mixture is what will occur. Some people will go for short investments for their particular reasons while others will look for long-term investment for their particular reasons. That really is the choice of the individual. Surely, the Government should not be conducting in depth psychological analyses to try to mind-bend people as to what is the best investment for them.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the Minister has already admitted that there has been a tremendous drop in the sale of deferred annuities. I suggest to the Minister that deferred annuities as sold in Canada by Canadian life insurance companies to Canadians is a dead issue. No longer will they be sold. Nobody will buy them because they become taxable on an accrual basis. The only way an annuity earns is by accruing income and adding income to capital and capitalizing it, and so on. It is quite true you pay the tax on the income portion accumulated in the annuity as you draw out the money in the normal course. But now the system is that you pay the tax every three years at least, and there would be no way a person could invest in that type of certificate.

I suggest also to the Minister that cumulative GICs with trust companies are no longer a viable investment unit unless the cumulative period was less than three years.

I suggest to the Minister that single-pay premium life insurance policies that might, for one reason or another, be purchased by someone who had a block of cash and wants to protect an interest for a long period of time is no longer a viable method of protection because the single-pay policy causes the owner of the policy to be subject to tax every year or every three years on the imputed earnings behind the policy without receipt of income with which to pay the tax. I suggest to him that that form of long-term investment has been forced out. In other words, while these methods of investment may have been available as tax deferrals, at least the Government was getting taxes from the people who held these investments as the interest or other amount was paid out on the investments. Now that the Government has become so greedy as to collect its taxes on an annual accrual basis, it has, in effect, squeezed the neck of the golden goose so hard that there is no life in the goose at all. For all practical purposes it has wiped out accumulating GICs, accumulating bonds, accumulating deferred annuities and single-pay and accumulating investment type insurance policies. It has wiped out that source of investment opportunity for Canadians in Canada.

The Minister will know that we have pointed out that if Canadians want to invest in those type of instruments, there is no problem. They can go offshore to the United States or Great Britain. They can do this with a type of trust agreement, money fund or any number of ways. They are only prevented from doing it in Canada.

What studies has the Government done to determine what it really expects to accomplish with these Clause? What additional revenue does it really expect to receive? Having squeezed off the revenue source, is it not likely that the Government will receive no revenue? All it has done is to drive capital out of the country. Will the Minister tell us what revenue source the Government hopes to have as a result of these changes, bearing in mind that it has squeezed the neck of the golden goose so that there is no possibility of its even breathing, let alone laying eggs?

Mr. Cosgrove: I believe that the Hon. Member's analysis is too narrow. His question is not as broadly focused as that of his colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West, who pointed out that one of the objectives of the tax policy certainly is a legitimate concern for job creation.

While the Hon. Member for Mississauga South may have a hang-up about interest-bearing securities and giving a preference to that kind of long-term investment, I would invite him to consider the same question that his colleague from Calgary West asked us to consider. Is that good for the mix that we would want in the economy, those investments in which we are trying to interest people who have funds available? Is a long-term debt security instrument, which has a preference over other types of investment opportunities such as shares and stocks necessarily the best thing that we should do at this time in the country? Is it the best thing to do when investment is down, production is down and the interest of small businessmen is at a low point? For example, they are not able to draw the same kind of investor interest in share or stock support for their projects.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am glad that the Minister now realizes that what we are really talking about is jobs. We are really talking about the growth of the country and investment in the country.

What we are concerned about is the way these Clauses in particular and this Bill drive out long-term capital to other countries. The people who want to invest in this way are not prevented from doing so. They will not pay tax on their accumulating income. They will go somewhere else and do so without any problem.

Incidentally, the Minister said earlier that they would have to pay high-priced lawyers. Let me advise the Minister that the new round of accumulating money funds for investment offshore will now be sold in units of $1,000. They are not large units so that the ordinary Canadian will be able to buy them offshore in competition with Canada Savings Bonds and not have to worry about paying tax on the accumulating money as he will be required to do under this Bill.

Again, in terms of real revenue, what does the Minister really believe he will get by virtue of these Clauses? Does he think, for example, that by passing this kind of punitive measure he will somehow persuade Canadians who want to invest in instruments that are banned by this punitive measure to invest in something else in the country? Does he not think, though, that they will take their money somewhere else in the world where they can invest it as they please? What kind of revenue does the Minister hope to receive in the future by a tax on these kinds of investment vehicles?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated earlier, the objective is to eliminate the drain which is a result of the deferral that otherwise would be available in these instruments, which is estimated to be some $75 million because of the high interest rates in the last two years. That is revenue that is not available to the Government in order to meet its obligations.

I point out as well that the Bill lowers the top marginal rate, which is a policy decision by the Government to induce those in the higher income brackets to be able to use the difference between the former rate and the lower rate for investment purposes. What this Clause does specifically is to take away the privileged or preferred spot that annuities held over such other instruments in the economy which are the vehicles for the direct creation of jobs. I am talking about stock and bond opportunities for investment.

The Financial Post article which I drew to the Hon. Member's attention calls the buyers of this annuity instrument sophisticated, well-healed investors, perhaps a little wary of the stock market, who can afford to tie up income for a long time in order to avoid paying tax on it at current high marginal rates. We are trying to provide some direction through the marginal rate reduction, which I have discussed, and through increases in the small business limits to show that there is a need for investment in other areas. Certainly, the Government ought not to continue to provide such a nonproductive preference to non-job generating areas of return to investors.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is unfortunate that we have a Minister of State for Finance who does not realize that a cumulative bond such as a Canada Savings Bond is precisely the same debt instrument as a bond that does not accumulate. The only difference between a cumulative certificate and an annual or semi-annual pay certificate is the date on which the payor is required to pay interest out to the payee. The money that goes into these certificates is precisely the same money that goes into any other certificate. Through these Clauses, the Minister is forcing those people who wish to have an accumulating type of investment, either a GIC, Canada Savings Bond or insurance policy or annuity, to go to some other country with their money where they will be treated honestly and fairly as they were by Governments in the past in this country.

We are talking about investment money being driven out of Canada because that money is invested where investors wish to place it. It is the absolute and supreme arrogance of the Minister and the Government for them to suggest that their tax laws can force investors to invest in modes in which they do not want to invest. Do they not realize that the 49th parallel is a pretty imaginary line and that investors can take their funds and invest them wherever they want in this big, wide world, and in the kinds of investment instruments that they want? They are not forced by the Minister or by the Income Tax Act in Canada to do something that they do not want to do. Therefore, we are really discussing jobs and investment, the creation of new opportunity, which the Government wants to drive out of the country.

Blindly, the Minister has decided that this is the way he should go. The philosophy was developed from the top floor of the Place Bell tower by people who have no understanding of the way the world works. They are hidebound in this city of Ottawa. Their vision of Canada is limited on the south by the airport and on the north by the Ottawa River. That is their vision. They do not know what is happening or where they are going.

I want to say that we will not carry on with these Sections much longer. As far as I am concerned, I will suggest that we vote on these Sections right now.

Mr. Hawkes: Eight minutes.

Mr. Blenkarn: Here they are. They are all going to roar in now. The ducks are coming in, guys.

Mr. Cosgrove: Powerful man.

Mr. Chrétien: Back in power.

Mr. Fisher: He's better than our Whip.

Mr. Blenkarn: However, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West, says that he wants to speak for a while.

Mr. Hawkes: It is nice to have an audience for a change.

Mr. Prud'homme: We will be here until six. We will be here today and tomorrow and Monday and Tuesday. Do not worry. We might as well pass it now. We will be here. No, no, the numbers game, we will not fail on that.

Mr. Hawkes: Just before my allotted time expired, I was asking the Minister how much money a small-businessman could shelter for retirement purposes, and the Minister said, $5,500 or $3,500. How much money can a Cabinet Minister shelter in his pension plan?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, all Members of Parliament, of course, follow the same sheltering rules as all Canadians follow. I understand that in after-tax dollars, we contribute more. However, we as a group are paying twice on those funds because we are taxed when we take them out again, too. Therefore, we pay for a good portion of our pension plans with after-tax dollars, and we pay again.

Mr. Hawkes: I was hoping I would hear the response that it is the same for all Canadians. I would bring to the Minister's attention the case involving corporate executives. Is it not true that an executive, himself, can put money in, but then the company can put in an almost unlimited amount to provide a pension of $60,000 a year, inflated, and that that money which the company puts in is not taken into income and is not taxed?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has raised interesting subjects. However, again, with 150 clauses before us, I think we should really try to deal with items which are before us. I understand that it is not germane to the Act before the House.

Mr. Hawkes: The Minister stands and speaks of fairness time after time. I simply want information as to whether the system is fair. It is our conviction that life insurance and life insurance annuities are really the poor man's vehicle in preparation for retirement. They are in somewhat the same category as the family home. If one considers the assets of an average Canadian preparing for retirement, one finds that there may or may not be a pension plan. There is usually a family home involved, and there is quite often a life insurance policy or some kind of annuity which is bought in later life.

We on this side are suggesting that by becoming involved in the notion of accrual as it affects these Clauses, an additional tax is really being placed on average Canadians. Those who are rich enough to afford gold, silver or stamps, or who have a granary full of grain, do not have to pay on the basis of accrual. They pay only at the moment they begin to use incomes. In this tax Bill there is a provision to tax when a court directs that assets of those involved in a divorce must be split. There is a provision by which tax accrues the minute people become age 65 and want to turn their savings into annuities. If this comes into the system, it will cause average Canadians to face an extra tax. That is the problem concerning this particular piece of legislation.

I want to deal with one last issue and lay it out on the table. Does the Department have an estimate of the cost to Canadian society of the additional paperwork which this change in law will require? Just think about it for a moment. Every policyholder in the country will have to be notified, and each letter will require a 32 to 35-cent stamp. Material setting out the calculations and so forth will be required, meaning additional cost to the industry to notify policy holders to their tax position. Does the Minister have an estimate of the cost to Canadian society?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, as the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka indicated this morning, from his own investigation he found that only 5 per cent of life insurance policies, a very small amount, would be affected by the three year accrual route.

Further, we all know that insurance companies are leaders in terms of information management, of taking advantage of the new technological gains to assist them in very economic handling of all types of information recording, including the small 5 per cent of their policies which would be subject to the rules in the Bill before us. The information of the Hon. Member concerns the profile of persons taking advantage of annuities. His description of annuities as being the poor man's vehicle certainly does not coincide with that of the impartial writers and analysts of the situation. I would again refer the Hon. Member to The Financial Post of July 4, 1981. It states:

> Annuity brokers say most contracts are for more than $10,000. Many exceed $100,000 and, occasionally, million-dollar contracts are sold.

I would be interested in the Hon. Member's definition of a poor man.

Mr. Hawkes: I think the words I used were "average Canadian". Certainly, at the age of 65, having a $10,000 cash surrender value which one desires to turn into an annuity is not a rich man's game. If one reads the article carefully, one finds that, yes, there are some policies sold for $1 million, and tax laws can be written specifically for those kinds of cases. However, in reality, I would certainly not describe the number of people who will get caught in this as being wealthy.

• (1630)

The question which I asked was whether the Department has an estimate of the increased cost through the paper burden. The Minister indicates that in his opinion this cost is going to be slight, but there does not seem to be any data available.

Has the Department considered the increased cost to every partnership in the country which will have to re-write partnership agreements as their business expands, as dollar volumes change and the previous insurance policy that they had becomes inadequate and therefore has to be redone? I am speaking of survival-type corporate insurance. Has the Department considered those kinds of costs, and what that will do to the small business sector?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the officials remind me that obviously it is the insurance companies through their agents who offer the kind of service and advice that would be required by persons in partnership referred to by the Hon. Member. Increased costs would be negligible.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair has before it a package of Clauses, Subclauses and amendments. Earlier today the Committee made it an order of the Committee that certain amendments proposed by the Minister were deemed to have been proposed and seconded and that a certain list of Clauses and Subclauses were to be grouped, along with the amendments, for the purpose of a vote. I think the House perhaps will accept my reference to that as Clause 4 and the Clauses and Subclauses grouped with it.

Accordingly, I would now put the vote on what I would refer to as Clause 4, but the Committee will understand that it consists of all those Clauses and Subclauses and amendments referred to.

Shall Clause 4 carry?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion, the yeas have it. Clause 4 and the others grouped with it are carried on division.

Clauses agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Because of the grouping of Clauses, that would mean that Clause 5, and the amendment thereto proposed and seconded, has now been dealt with as well.

In the ordinary course of events, the Chair would look to returning to Clause 1 because that Clause was stood earlier on the grounds of a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. Earlier in the Chamber there was some discussion as to how we might proceed. Perhaps I could hear those Hon. Members who wish to rise on this point.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, we have had several discussions with respect to the grouping of Clauses. It would be our view that Clause 1 should be discussed next, and should be discussed separately. We would then go on to Clause 6 which deals with terminal losses. We would then go on to Clauses 8, 9 and 128(12) which deal with small business bonds. We suggest then that we go on to Clauses 7, 12(2), 44 and 45 which deal with loans to shareholders and employees, or employee benefits of that nature. We then suggest we go on to Clauses 54(1), 86, 90 and 109 which deal with small business taxation.

The Deputy Chairman: I understand that Clause 1 is to be debated separately, but I wonder if the Hon. Member for Mississauga South would indicate to me whether or not it is the case that the remaining Clauses or Subclauses which he has mentioned—

Mr. Blenkarn: That would be the next five separate groupings. If we could go to Clause 1 now we could carry on with that until we had a reasonable discussion on Clause 1. Then I suggest we have a discussion on Clause 6, followed by Clauses 8 and 9, which deal with the small business bond, but that would be a separate discussion.

The Deputy Chairman: I will hear the Minister of State for Finance, if he wishes to make a contribution on the point, but the Chair is not clear as to how the remaining Clauses after Clause 1 are to be grouped. Are they all in one group or are they in several groups? As I understand it, there may be agreement to proceeding to Clause 1.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with the proposal that we go to Clause 1. I am not proposing that we proceed to Clause 1 at this time.

In considering Clauses 3 and 16 we had a request from the Member for Mississauga South that the issue of notaries from the Province of Quebec be included in the exempt category under work in progress. I indicated that there were no amendments put forward to those Clauses because that exception would have to be dealt with by way of definition, under the definition section included in Clause 128 of the Act, and that because it was urged that the section be expanded so as to include notaries from the Province of Quebec, I indicated that we were in agreement to put forward Clause 128, which in effect was an expansion of the exemption under Clause 3.

I know that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South wondered why we had to go to the definition section instead of amending Clause 3. I provided him with an explanation. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, before we do proceed with Clause 1, whether the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and other Hon. Members would indicate whether they are now agreeable to having that Clause amended by the amendment to Clause 128.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, it was indeed unfortunate that the Government, in its effort to smash professional groups and tax professionals unconscionably on their work in progress, insisted on refusing—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. My understanding is that at the moment there is some negotiation taking place in Committee as to whether or not the Committee will consider Clause 1 and Clause 128(1) together. Am I correct?

Mr. Blenkarn: That cannot be done.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South proposed that we proceed with Clause 1. I inquired whether the Hon. Member for Mississauga South would prefer that we deal quickly with the amendment to include notaries, which was requested by the Hon. Member early in the proceedings. That was my question.

The Deputy Chairman: That is my understanding. In view of the fact that we are in Committee of the Whole, I presume that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South would like to address himself to the question put by the Minister.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is what I was doing, Mr. Chairman. The problem is that we should have amended Clause 3 and Clause 16 when they were before the Committee. The Minister has now tried to correct his stomping through this Act by fooling around with Clause 128. Unfortunately, when he changes Clause 128 he increases the burden in the taxation of notaries beyond that contemplated in the Ways and Means motion. Because by amending Paragraph 125(6)(f)(i) of the Income Tax Act he makes it so that if a notary were to incorporate by some method, that notary would then have to pay a corporate tax rate at the level of 33 per cent. At the present time if a notary or a group of notaries are entitled to incorporate, they only have to pay at the small business rate of 15 per cent, or 25 per cent in total when the provincial tax is included. The effect then is that by amending Clause 128 the way the Minister wants to do it, he potentially increases the burden of tax on that group of professionals.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair has a difficulty. There is not before the Committee at this moment a Clause for consideration. As I understood the exchange between the Minister of State for Finance and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the issue is whether or not the Committee would now review Clause 1 or whether it would review Clause 1 provided that the Minister were permitted to put forth his amendment to Clause 128(1). That is my understanding. This is not the time for debate on Clauses or amendments which have not been put. The Chair has to know which Clause is going to be discussed or debated.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the question to our colleagues and friends opposite is very direct. One word, yes or no, will help us out. Is the Hon. Member willing to consider the amendment to Clause 128 prior to our deliberations on Clause 1? If so, we would then go to Clause 128. If not, we will go to Clause 1. The Hon. Member can help us with his reactions.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, very simply the proposal by the Government is out of order. It does not comply with the Ways and Means motion. The Government cannot do it that way. The proposal by the Government is out of order.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not want to dispute with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. However, in my view he has not raised a point of order as to the admissibility of the proposed amendment by the Minister. What he has indicated is quite correct, that it would require unanimous consent of the House to consider these two Clauses together. There is not unanimous consent. That is evident. The Chair would normally revert to Clause 1 in standard practice, having dealt with other Clauses subsequent to Clause 1. The Committee will recall that a point of order was raised on Clause 1. That has been disposed of. I would put to the Committee that we now begin debate on Clause 1.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: There is agreement.

On Clause 1—Value of benefits

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I have a few comments to make about automobile standby charges, and I have a couple of questions for the Minister. The auto standby charge is a tax levied on the personal use of company cars. The Bill proposes that the tax be raised from 1 per cent per month of the value of the car to 2 per cent per month, and in the case of lease cars the tax would be two-thirds of the lease cost. The 2.5 per cent figure in the November 12 budget has been revised downward to satisfy the initial burst of opposition. In cases where personal use does not exceed 1,000 kilometres per month, 12,000 per year, the standby charge would be reduced proportionately. The impact on the individual taxpayer is that the change will effectively double the tax payable by persons using company automobiles. It can be expected that this will reduce the desirability of company cars dramatically.

The over-all impact is that industry reaction focuses on the effect of the change on the purchase and operation of company cars. The initial result will be reduced orders for company fleets and reduced inventories for leasing agencies. Further opposition centers on the process of implementation of the changes. Confusion surrounding the calculation of the taxable benefit, the timing of the changes coming into force and the effect of terminal charges serves to perpetuate the general uncertainty of this proposal.

The Progressive Conservative Party position is as follows: While the principle of taxing this benefit is not unacceptable, the rate of taxation and the method of calculation is suspect. The negative impact of the tax increase overshadows the benefits of increased revenues. It should be amended downward. The sections of the Act dealing with calculation of benefits should be clarified along with the regulations.

I am sure all Members have received complaints from the Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada. They have sent us detailed letters on the adverse effects of this change. They point out that clearly the standby charge, based on an employer's cost, does not accurately reflect the real value to the employee. We have an example of how it is going to affect one firm in Ontario, Globe Modern Curriculum Press. They give the following example of how they will be affected by this tax change. I quote from their letter:

> We are book publishers and supply our representatives with station wagons because of the large number of samples they must carry. This heavy load requires us to equip these wagons with heavy-duty shocks and load-levellers as well. For each of us to empty our cars, and provide space for family is a real chore. Personal use is at an absolute minimum.
> Therefore, I consider your plans to tax personal use onerous, unnecessary and unethical and urge you to reconsider your planned legislation.

This letter was sent to the Minister of Finance in January of this year. I hope the Minister will give an indication of changes he will be making to this automobile standby charge.

A recent court case dealt with car expenses. There was a revesal in court of the Government's proposal. For years the Government has based its decisions on whether or not the salesmen can claim automobile expenses on their personal definition of "ordinarily". In a recent federal court trial decision where the Government disallowed a relatively small claim for automobile expenses because of their definition of "ordinarily", the Court found the meaning of the word "ordinarily" as equivalent to "normally" as opposed to "rarely or exceptionally". In view of this recent federal court decision, I would ask what corrective measures the Government plans to take and if the Government will remove this Clause from the Government's regulations.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I was encouraged to hear that the position of the Official Opposition is that they do not in principle object to the taxation of this item as a benefit. What they are concerned about is the rate of tax and, as indicated by the specific question of the Hon. Member, the way in which the calculation of that tax is arrived at.

To begin with, I should point out that, if it was not clear as we began consideration of Clause 1, the agreement was, I believe, that we would consider Clause 1 as amended. As we dealt with the various Clauses in the last vote, there were a number of amendments that were identified with "A" on the list that was left with the Chair.

I point out that there are two technical amendments to Clause 1. I presume that in saying they agreed to debating Clause 1, Hon. Members included as well those technical amendments which we have made available to Members opposite. I see the Conservative House Leader is checking on that point. That should be clear. We should not lose sight of it as we begin debating this Clause. For the assistance of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, I am referring to a document which refers to Bill C-139, items dealing with small business corporations. I think the Hon. Member for Mississauga South would agree with me, Mr. Chairman, that the reference to Clause 1 is in effect reference to Clause 1(a), which is the same way in which we proceeded with the previous vote and which is repeated again with Clause 44, Clause

45, Clause 86, et cetera. We have made copies of these technical amendments available.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I will have an answer on this matter with respect to the acceptability, but obviously these motions are with respect to Clause 1 and this is the appropriate time to move them and the Minister, I presume, has now done so. I would not say that the amendments are entirely technical, but that is another matter for debate.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Hon. Member has made reference to those amendments having been moved. They have not yet been formally presented or proposed to the House.

Mr. Cosgrove: I was seeking the consent, Mr. Chairman, of Members opposite to deal with these amendments in the same way we dealt with the amendments on the last vote. That is, we have made them available to Hon. Members opposite, and we would ask that they be considered and agreed to as moved. If the Hon. Member wants some time to look at them, would he please advise us as soon as he can, in fairness to other Members who may feel there is something in the amendments to which they wish to address some questions.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am quite prepared to have the Minister move those amendments now and we will treat the Bill, as amended, as being the subject of what we are debating in the very same fashion as we treated the amendments in connection with Clause 4, Clause 5, and so on.

I think the way to handle this whole matter is for the Minister, at the beginning of discussion on a Clause, to move his amendments with respect to that Clause. The Clause is then presented to the House in the amended form. The debate will then be on the Clause in the amended form, so that when a vote is required at the termination of debate on the Clause, it will be on the Clause as amended.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance:

That Subclause 1(3) of Bill C-139 be amended by striking out line 43 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"employer or to the person related to the employer equal to the percentage there-"

I also move, seconded by the Parliamentary Secretary:

That Subclause 1(4) of Bill C-139 be amended

(a) by striking out line 12 on page 4 and substituting the following:

"the said Act preceding subparagraph (b)(i) thereof"

(b) by striking out line 24 on page 4 and substituting the following:

"read as a reference to "1½%"; and

(b) the cost to the employer of the automobile were the quotient obtained by dividing"

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Is it the pleasure of the Committee to adopt the amendment? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, we will have to study these amendments. We are not going to pass them at this particular time. I would like to carry on and get some more information with regard to these automobile standby charges.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine finished his first comment by asking for an opinion or some comment regarding what he referred to as a federal court decision. I do not know if that is a federal court decision of Canada or the United States. If the Hon. Member could provide us with the citation, I will have our solicitors obtain a copy, and I will attempt to give him an answer once we have had an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, there is a complete write-up in the January 10, 1983 issue of the Financial Times with regard to this case. Perhaps the Minister could give us an opinion at a later date as to whether he is going to change anything regarding the standby charges due to this court case.

Now I would like to ask the Minister to calculate the standby charge on a fair value basis to the employee, not the cost to the employer. Right now the Government has raised this charge from 1 per cent of the original capital cost per month to 2 per cent. For example, when a car is four years old, the employee standby charge is still 2 per cent per month of the original capital cost, which cost never diminishes as the car depreciates. I ask the Minister if he will retain the present rules for a supplied automobile which is principally used for business. The proposed maximum of 12,000 kilometres for personal use is actually unfair. For example, even though the personal use is only 30 per cent and the business use is 70 per cent, the employee still incurs the maximum standby charge. It has been understood that with these proposed unfair tax changes, salesmen will use their second vehicle for personal use, thus eliminating any tax revenue for the Government. Perhaps the amendments the Minister has tabled will counter that. If not, perhaps he can give me his opinion on the question I have just asked.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Member has asked a question which was raised in the Committee as well. His argument is that we should allow the standby charge to reduce as the car ages. Somehow the standby charge should reflect the lower value of the vehicle. He forgets that what we are trying to do here is to ensure that all taxpayers use after-tax dollars for their personal use of a vehicle. If the vehicle is the taxpayer's personal vehicle, then he has bought that car with after-tax dollars. In this case, it is an employer's vehicle which is being, in effect, lent to the taxpayer for personal use, and the standby charge has to reflect the original cost of the car and the fact that the taxpayer is going to be using after-tax dollars for personal use.

Mr. Blenkarn: No, he is not, the cars are written down.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Perhaps the Hon. Member will allow the Chair to proceed with another formality.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Corbin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have some general remarks to make with respect to Clause 1. I want to bring to the attention of the Government the concern of car dealers with respect to the doubling of tax which the Government is inflicting on people who have company cars. I received a letter from Bourgeois Motors in Midland, Ontario, in which the General Manager indicates he is concerned about the effect the budget is going to have on car sales. I have another letter from Thor Motors in Orillia which indicates the same concern. The Government is doubling the tax paid by employees on company cars. On what basis does it feel it is necessary to do that or to increase it, whether the car be owned or leased by the company?

• (1700)

Mr. Cosgrove: I indicate that what we were doing was updating the provision that has been in the Act since 1972 to reflect the change in the economy and the value to the employee of the benefit bestowed by an employer through the provision of a motor vehicle.

I have also pointed out that the 2 per cent rate has been in force in the Province of Quebec since 1979. The move reflects an update of the calculation of the benefit to people who work with a company which offers it.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister referred to what has happened to the economy under the Liberal regime. I think all Canadians know what has happened to the economy and to employees, especially those in the automobile industry.

Is it the view of the Government that the legislation will increase or decrease car sales?

Mr. Cosgrove: It is certainly a better deal for the employee who is taking advantage of this provision to continue to pay the tax on a vehicle provided by the employer rather than to provide the same kind of transportation for himself. The increased revenues received from the tax will assist the Government generally as it responds to the demands made on the economy which has experienced a downturn. For example, it would assist in an oblique way to provide the guarantee to the Chrysler Corporation, which the Government believes it was instrumental in assisting that company to maintain jobs and production of new lines in this country and in the United States. It is part of a larger scene where the Government is called upon to provide resources to help the auto industry at this time.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister's reply is going to make interesting reading for salespeople all across the country who have less take-home pay as a result of the downturn in the economy. What the Government is doing is doubling the taxation on company cars. That does not make any sense.

It seems to me that by suggesting that two-thirds of the leased cost should be charged to an employee for a company-owned car, the Minister is suggesting that the employee uses it eight months of the year for himself and four months of the year for the company. Does the Government subscribe to that theory?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has hit on the key problem. I would remind him that people who do not drive these vehicles for fewer than 12,000 kilometers per annum can prorate the tax downward. The figures the Hon. Member quotes, which he says are charges against the employee, are not quite correct. The employee is asked to pay tax on those charges, not the charges themselves.

I hope it will put the argument into perspective for the Hon. Member to realize that we are talking only about uses applied to personal benefit and not business benefit. If someone drives the car for personal benefit two-thirds of the time and for business use one-third of the time, the car is surely a personal benefit which can be taxed. It would not be something that adds to the employer's benefit, but to the employee's benefit.

Mr. Lewis: Could the representatives of the Government define operating costs?

Mr. Fisher: As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, this includes gasoline, repairs, insurance and other charges that would be applied against the vehicle to keep it on the road.

Mr. Lewis: Has the Government considered that there is a difference between insurance for business use and insurance for personal use? How would it expect the employers of this nation to do the fantastic calculations that would be necessary for each employee who drives a company car?

Mr. Fisher: As I understand it, the regulations on this are forthcoming. The employee will prorate these charges in the same way he does every other part of the operation of the vehicle.

Mr. Lewis: When will the tax be imposed? On what date?

Mr. Fisher: The tax is applicable for the 1982 tax year.

Mr. Lewis: I think we have come to the point, Mr. Chairman. The tax is imposed for the 1982 year, but the regulations will be forthcoming sometime. When does the tax on this employee benefit come into effect?

Mr. Cosgrove: I indicated earlier that the tax is in effect at the moment. The prorate is a practice which is reviewed by the Department of National Revenue on the filing of the individual tax return. There is nothing different about the way in which returns will be handled. The way in which the prorate is done is the way in which it has always been done.

Mr. Lewis: I respect the Chair's ruling on standby charges and on whether operating costs were included as a standby charge. When did the Government issue form S82-5?

• (1710)

Mr. Cosgrove: If the Hon. Member would provide us with a copy of the form, we would be happy to identify it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, this is unbelievable. It is the Revenue Canada taxation form that refers to benefits from employer-provided automobiles. It has an interesting last Clause which I would like to read while they scurry through their briefcases to find one. It reads, "The form will be available from your local District Taxation Office after November 15, 1982 and will be applicable to 1982 only. A revised form designed so that declarations can be made at the beginning of a taxation year will be issued at a later date for 1983 and subsequent years". Are we to understand that employees driving employer-owner automobiles will be taxed on the benefits portion of the driving they did in January, February and March, 1982, through to December 31, 1982? The Government does not have the form ready yet, but it will assess them and go back and collect the tax.

Mr. Cosgrove: I refer the Opposition House Leader to the Revenue Canada publication supplement to the 1981 employer's and trustee's guide for tax practitioners in the special released interpretation bulletin, IT-470, which indicates that all employers should maintain records and information necessary to establish mileage or kilometreage for business and personal use, as well as costs and expenses thereon.

Mr. Lewis: What that made available to employees and employers? The Government is trying to tax in 1983 what was paid or incurred in January 1982, but it still does not have the forms out. Where are the forms? Where will employers find out about this retroactive tax? When will the Government start coming clean with employees who have been driving such cars? Does it actually think that all employers across Canada have kept those records? This form, for the Minister's edification, only went out with the standard remittance form of the Department of National Revenue. When will they get their act together for the people of the country they want to tax?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I have been a salesman since 1968, and since 1971 I have been keeping these records. The only thing that is different in this tax year is the amount, not the record-keeping. The Hon. Member is misleading people by assuming that new records have been required. They have not been required. Since 1971 people have been asked to keep records of the personal use of their vehicles which they have enjoyed, as distinct from the business use of their vehicles.

The keeping of these records has been common practice by sales people from coast to coast. It is not, as the Hon. Member tried to indicate, a new practice being imposed upon sales people. I know this personally because I have kept such records and have paid the standby charges since 1971. The only thing different this year is an increase in the amount, not an increase or a change in the record-keeping.

Mr. Lewis: The Parliamentary Secretary has bared his personal affairs to the House. He is taxpayer No. 1; did he base the standby charge on all his operating costs? Did he operate as an individual or as a company? If he operated as an individual, it is easy because everyone knows that an individual professional or commissioned salesman has expenses and income within his grasp. We are talking about the employee who does not have access to all information on the costs, but simply has been paying a standby charge which until now the Government based upon lease costs. Is he suggesting that every company in Canada has kept such records for every sales person, that every company has kept individual records for every sales person?

Mr. Fisher: Again I can assure the Hon. Member that I have acted in both capacities. The answer to his question is that a well-run company can identify those costs beyond a doubt. A well-run company knows what it paid to obtain the vehicle and to operate it. In addition, such companies probably ask their salesmen to keep records of personal use because they do not want salesmen using the car excessively for personal use or, if salesmen are doing so, they definitely want to allot it as a substitute for salary, which in that case would make it, by our definition, a taxable benefit.

Mr. Lewis: What type of forms does the Government distribute to companies across Canada so that they can delineate the operating costs of each vehicle in a fleet, the insurance costs applicable to each vehicle, whether or not sales people have interchanged vehicles and the costs of gasoline and car washes? Is the Parliamentary Secretary suggesting that these kinds of records are being kept for every company-owned car in Canada?

Mr. Fisher: Every year the employer's guide instructs employers and companies to keep such records. Any operating salesman knows and has known for ten years that this is a very delicate area for Revenue Canada and, as a result, has kept very careful records. Any salesman operating and using his car for a mix of personal and corporate purposes has always kept careful records. These are not big surprises for people. They are big surprises for people who have used the very low, very affordable standby charge, the 1 per cent standby charge. Those people are now discovering that it may well be to their benefit to keep records because standby charges were unrealistically low.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, concerning the issue of record-keeping, what is the Government changing, aside from the rate? It is going from 1 per cent to 2 per cent, but what else is being changed?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, we had this discussion when we talked about the Ways and Means motion a few days ago. We have maintained the same ratios for automobile salesmen. They continue to pay a prorated amount; they do not have to pay the full amount. The charges for operating costs are the new ones.

Mr. Hawkes: Is that all the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary think is being changed? The rate is being changed and the operating costs are being added in. Are there any other significant changes?

Mr. Fisher: I am not familiar with any extra changes. I have just checked with our officials and they do not think there are any extra changes. There may be some form or another which the Hon. Member has to fill in for the first time in his life that he might feel is a big change, but for those of us who have been doing it for a while, there is nothing new here.

Mr. Hawkes: Perhaps the bureaucrats have changed something and not told the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary. Has the definition of an automobile changed?

Mr. Fisher: Again we are not aware of any change in definitions. The bureaucrats assure us that they are not aware of any and that they are not trying to sneak anything through on us.

Mr. Hawkes: I will just test that a little. Is a pickup truck an automobile under this provision?

Mr. Fisher: This may be a question of interpretation by National Revenue in a particular individual's case, but it is not involved in this law.

Mr. Hawkes: Is a four-wheel drive an automobile under this tax law?

Mr. Fisher: The same answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Is the answer that the bureaucrats will decide and the Minister will not? Is that what I am hearing?

Mr. Fisher: I think the principle here is that we are looking for people who want to use vehicles for personal use rather than defining a vehicle. I would assume, if somebody could show that he was getting excessive personal use out of his cement truck, National Revenue would want to take a look at that question.

Mr. Stevens: That would be an automobile?

Mr. Hawkes: Up to this point, has it always been the same, or has there been a recent change?

Mr. Fisher: I understand from our officials that the word used in the Act is "automobile", but that its interpretation has always been up to the courts.

• (1720)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, each time we look at a Clause, we sort of invite people to go to court. It is probably as good for lawyers as the Constitution has been and will be.

People are inventive. They tend to do things that operate in their own self interest. If I use my automobile on behalf of my company and they give me money back for the mileage, is that taxable?

Mr. Fisher: No, Mr. Chairman, that has not been changed. Over the years that continues to be a tax-free repayment to the taxpayers in recognition of the business use of the vehicle.

Mr. Hawkes: Is there an upper limit on that amount, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I believe the upper limit is what can be shown to be a reasonable use for business practice. It would have to be backed up by appropriate receipts and mileage records, just as it does for the standby charge.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, what is the current rate paid by the Government of Canada to its employees for the use of their cars on behalf of the Government?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, we will check that for the Hon. Member. None of the four of us here have that information.

Mr. Hawkes: Let us assume it is 20 cents a kilometre, Mr. Chairman. If I were to use my car 10,000 kilometres a month on behalf of the Government, that would be $2,000 worth of tax-free income, some of which would have to go toward the cost of gasoline, maintenance and so on. Do you think I might be able to pay for my car in a relatively short period of time with tax-free dollars under that system?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, if it is strictly for business use or, as in his example, Government use, if it is not for the personal benefit of the taxpayer, that is fine. I would imagine equally that if the Hon. Member used a vehicle for that number of kilometres per month he would wear it out in a hurry.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, if it is true that I am using my personal car on behalf of my employer and taking mileage in, there is no tax on the portion of personal use, in other words, I can, by doing that, get my car paid for with tax-free dollars.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has the principle under control, and I congratulate him. For business use it is tax-free. For personal use it is after-tax dollars. If a taxpayer buys his own car and he gets a portion of his own car paid for because of business use, that portion will be tax exempt. If, on the other hand, the employer supplies the car, and the employee uses the car a portion of the time for his own use, that portion will be added on as a taxable benefit to the taxpayer's income. The Hon. Member has the principle under control. If the vehicle is used for personal use, then it is taxed. If it is used for business use, then it is not taxed.

Mr. Hawkes: We are beginning to learn, Mr. Chairman. In Western Canada there are a number of one-man RCMP detachments in the small communities and rural areas. Those RCMP officers must be on duty 24 hours a day. Generally, many of them are single. The RCMP squad car has a radio for contact purposes. If an RCMP constable uses the car to go down the road to a dance on Friday evening for pleasure, is that a taxable use of the Government of Canada automobile? Has that directive gone out to the RCMP?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would assume that is a personal use of the vehicle, and, therefore, is a taxable use. If the Hon. Member is making a representation to us, then we will bring it to the attention of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, does the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary have certain knowledge that such a directive has gone out to the RCMP, that if they use the squad car to go to the corner grocery store they will be taxed on it? How do we decide whether it is business or not when a human being is on 24-hour call and the radio by which they are called is in the vehicle? The radio is in the vehicle. They are on call 24 hours a day. They also have to live, they have to go to the grocery store, they have to have entertainment, and yet they have to have radio contact at the same time. How do they separate business from pleasure?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, on this side we have confidence that the RCMP act in all they do honestly, accurately, and efficiently. Whatever directives they receive from their superiors are ones they follow honestly.

However, the Hon. Member does hit upon a policy that is adopted by some police forces in some cities across the country. They request police officers to take police vehicles to their homes when they are not "on duty". The point is that the presence of the police vehicle with its markings acts throughout the community as a deterrent and a security source. Therefore, I would think that on looking at what is the definition of the use of the vehicle at that time, it would be concluded in some circumstances that the vehicle was being used at all times, whether at home or in the business community, for purposes of security and, therefore, is business.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, if you accept that principle, then suppose I have a company and a number of company vehicles. I put my logo on the car door. Now I can encourage my employees to drive to and from work. That will be considered business rather than personal use simply because I want my logo advertised throughout the community. Is that a ruling from the Minister with which people can live?

Mr. Cosgrove: I do not think the two examples are at all parallel, Mr. Chairman.

An Hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Hawkes: I cannot recall precisely the Minister's words, but the particular form of the police vehicle, the colour, the presence of an aerial perhaps, acts as a deterrent throughout the community. Certainly it is good for my business if my logo is seen throughout the community. In fact, many businesses spend lots of money on advertising by painting their logos on car doors. Why can I not argue with Revenue Canada that it is good for my business for my employees to take those vehicles and drive them throughout the community on all occasions, for example, drive to the store, drive to a social event, and so on? Why would it not be all business if my car had a logo on it?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I think the Hon. Member could argue his case. Go ahead. I would suggest that if he looks at the debate on this whole issue, he would find that we followed his line of thought with automobile salesmen who were successful in telling us that by driving their product home, they were, in fact, advertising. It is for that reason that automobile salesmen pay a lower standby charge than other salesmen do for personal use. They do, indeed, follow the practice described by the Hon. Member. There was considerable debate on this, and other groups were not able to present their cases successfully. I would suggest, on a case by case basis, that the Hon. Member might be successful in demonstrating that such advertising or such behaviour would not constitute personal use but would constitute business use. Perhaps if he can think of examples, he could pursue them.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, can we pursue a couple more? Let us assume I own a fair sized farm which I have incorporated. The vehicles belong to the corporation, which is in reality my farm. If I use the automobile on the farm, the pickup truck or the four-wheel drive to go 15 miles to the local town or village to buy supplies and then drive back to the farm, is that business use or personal use?

• (1730)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I think the Hon. Member is in an area of interpretation where it might be useful to raise this issue with Revenue Canada instead of in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Hawkes: I think it is our responsibility as Parliamentarians to provide sufficient definitions to legislation so that Canadians can understand their tax liabilities as a consequence of the definitions. Does the Minister not believe that it is the responsibility of Parliament to define the terms? We are trying to separate business from personal use. We either do it in a clear-cut from in legislation or we turn it over to the bureaucrats or the courts. If we are to tax people on the difference between business and personal use, it is our job as Parliamentarians to try to define it. Is it not our job to define those terms?

Mr. Fisher: I would remind the Hon. Member that we are not operating in a vacuum with this measure. We have had this measure since 1971. The questions he raises about people driving from their farm to the city or people who drive with their logos on the side of their cars have all been asked. There is a body of experience on those questions now. The questions that he is raising are hypothetical. He would probably be well advised to refer to that body of experience and to the debates in places such as the parliamentary committee in order to familiarize himself with the background on this. We are not dealing with a new measure. We are dealing with hypothetical views on a body of experience.

Mr. Hawkes: The Minister indicated earlier in this discussion that there was a new part ot this provision, which is the one dealing with operating costs. Maintenance is part of operating costs. Is maintenance to be valued at market value or at some other value which I choose to put on it?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, whatever the employer uses as an expense would be the value that would be put on for the employee.

Mr. Hawkes: If I live in a high-class area where we use a commercial garage to fix something, and I drive the vehicle 1,000 kilometers a month so that I am eligible for 24 per cent, I will pay more in taxes than someone who works for a compay which has a mechanic who fixes the automobile and there is no direct charge to that automobile. Will we have this type of difference, or would I have to keep track of the commercial value of every automobile that I fix in the fleet?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, it is expenses. Bear in mind that we are talking about expenses for personal use. If it was someone's personal car, the same principle would hold true. In higher cost areas one would pay higher cost after tax, and in lower cost areas one pays lower cost after tax. It is a simple principle of paying tax on personal use.

Mr. Hawkes: Perhaps I was not very clear. Suppose that I work for a small company and I cannot afford a mechanic. I drive the company's automobile 1,000 kilometres a month. Therefore I have to take into income 24 per cent of the maintenance costs of that particular automobile. Suppose my friend seated next to me works for a large company with many automobiles and that company has its own garage and staff. It does not charge for maintenance or repairs, it simply absorbs it. Therefore, working for a small company, I pay more tax than my friend. Is that the kind of tax system we are putting in place?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to be able to clear this up. I am sorry I did not do so in the last round. The cost of the mechanics would be prorated over the cars because those are the expenses that the employer is writing off for the fleet.

Mr. Hawkes: Could the Hon. Member point out to me where, in the legislation, I am allowed to average repair costs over a fleet?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, that is a practice for Revenue Canada to determine.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, we have been having a long but interesting discussion dealing with the various kinds of expenses which employers can charge off because the cars are used for business purposes. There are also provisions in the Income Tax Act to allow self-employed people such as salesmen, doctors and lawyers to charge off the expenses of their cars for gas, oil, maintenance, insurance and, I presume, depreciation to the extent that those cars are used for business.

Is the Government giving consideration to the problems of thousands of Canadians who are not self-employed doctors, lawyers or salesmen but must use their cars because of the vast distances they must drive to work? There are Canadians who have no choice but to drive up to 50 miles to work because in most cities the public transit system does not get them to work on time. Is the Government giving any consideration to those hundreds of thousands of people who are spending large amounts of money each year to go to and from work? They do not have the same ability, because our tax laws do not permit it, to charge off part of the expenses of their automobile transportation. It is a necessary expense for them in order to keep their job and earn their money.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, there is a general employment deduction or expense allowance. Of course, the result of the increase in the tax from 1 per cent to 2 per cent to those people, such as in the example of doctors and lawyers used by the Hon. Member, whose occupation is in fact their business, brings in more revenue to assist in the provision of services to people generally.

Finally, I do not take such a pessimistic view of the role of public transit as that which the Hon. Member seems to have adopted in his preamble. I think that the opportunities for the improvement and enhancement of public transit in Canada are great. For example, the federal Government has supported both the research and technology for the improvement of public transit facilities. For example, we have supported the trial system in the City of Vancouver which will indirectly result in the mass production of these types of systems that will be available to Canadians in larger numbers and large urban areas in particular.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not think the Minister understood my point. If he were to visit the Oakville automobile plant and talk to the people who work there and who come there by car, he would find that many of them live as far as 40 miles from Oakville. If he were to go to Thunder Bay and talk to the people who work in the grain elevators, he would find that there are people who live 20 miles, 30 miles, and 40 miles from the grain elevator. If he visited the people who work in the rolling mills in Selkirk, Manitoba, he would find that they drive from Gimli or other places that are miles away.

I am asking if the Government is giving consideration to applying the same principle to people who work for a company and have to drive long distances to get there. Is the Government giving the same kind of consideration to tax concessions to workers as are now given to self-employed people or those who work in the categories we have been discussing, such as those who use their own cars?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has hit upon a very important point. His point, in effect, is what the current provisions are doing. The Hon. Member has described, for example, the great distances that people drive to work. I would remind him that under this legislation, personal use of a vehicle and expenses for that kind of driving, along with some of the other employment expenses involved, are covered under the employment deduction which the Minister mentioned. I would also remind the Hon. Member that the self-employed person, the professional or the salesman who only uses a vehicle to go from the place of work to the home, is using that car for personal use, and it is precisely for that reason that we are hearing some of the complaints from the Conservative benches.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I did not understand the explanation that the Parliamentary Secretary gave me. Is he saying that it is considered personal use for a person to drive a car from home to work? That is precisely the point I am trying to make. One can hardly call using one's car to get to work personal driving when it is the only way one can get to work. If one did not get to work, one would not earn a living and one would not be in a position to pay income tax or anything else.

Mr. Anguish: It's an employment expense.

Mr. Orlikow: It's an expense of employment, Mr. Chairman. What I am saying to the Government is that I know nothing has been done until now. In my view, people who must use their cars to get to work, who must drive substantial distances, should be treated no differently from the salesman who travels from Winnipeg to Regina, stopping on the way to make calls and, hopefully, to make sales. He is using the car to make sales, to earn his commission, to earn a living, in the same way a person driving his car from Winnipeg to Selkirk to work in the rolling mills is using his car to earn a living. Therefore, what I am saying is that I would like the Government to give serious consideration to making some provisions to benefit these people in the same spirit as is now evident with regard to self-employed people or others who work in the way we have been discussing this afternoon. They should be given the same kind of consideration and same ability to deduct expenses incurred travelling to and from work, as self-employed and other people have been afforded for a number of years in this country.

Mr. Fisher: It is an interesting perspective to the problem which the Hon. Member has put forth. I would simply urge him to consider equally the fact that the employment expense deduction is designed to do exactly what he is describing. How, for example, would he calculate the benefit of someone travelling by public transit versus someone travelling by automobile? Should we assume that people travelling by public transit should simply be allowed a great big deduction to make them equal to the people who travel by automobile? I think that if he begins to draw those parallels, he should take them right through all the logical steps instead of stopping where he did. I would urge him to realize that the Government proposed the employment expense deduction precisely to avoid that kind of detailed calculation involving streetcar or automobile expenses.

The Hon. Member is quite correct in the way that he has described these employment related expenses. However, I would suggest to him that these are already covered under the deductions which every taxpayer is entitled to enjoy at this point. Concerning automobile expenses, we are trying to ensure that automobile usage by professionals, self-employed people and salesmen is treated in the same way as usage by the employees he has described, and that there is no special advantage for them in the way that he fears.

Mr. Orlikow: I raise problems of a different category of workers, the problems which have been brought to the attention of the Government on a number of occasions in recent years by the building trade unions. Construction workers very frequently must travel very long distances from home in order to get to work. Until about a year ago, the economy in Alberta and Saskatchewan was very active. There were a large number of big, ongoing construction projects. Construction in Manitoba was slow. A large number of construction and skilled workers from Manitoba went to Alberta and Saskatchewan. They have spoken to me, to the Minister of Finance and to the Minister of National Revenue of their problems. As they explained in their annual submissions, they travel 500 to 600 miles away from home. They leave their families at home. Family expenses continue, as always. They work on construction sites.

A recent example was that of a Winnipeg worker on a power project in Saskatchewan. He had to travel from home to the power project and stay there for two or three weeks. Because he wanted to see his family and, in fact, keep his family together, he would make the 500 or 600 mile journey from the construction site to his home and then go back at the end of the weekend. Therefore, he made a round trip of 1,000 or 1,200 miles. I wonder why that worker should not be able to deduct the expenses involved in that kind of trip which was necessary, not only for his job but also if he was to keep his family together. I wonder why he should not be able to deduct part of his automobile expenses in the same manner as self employed people.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has waxed eloquent on many worker-related topics. I would suggest that he might want to raise some of these questions when we consider some of the other provisions in the Act. For example, for workers who are at temporary work sites, there are now some special considerations as to the benefits they receive there. I would hope that he would examine those and take into consideration the fact that we have relieved those people of some of the previous tax burdens that they faced.

I would hope, as well, that he would consider the increases which we have brought about this year, for instance, in Child Tax Credits, or the $200 spousal transfers and the decreases in the general tax rates which we have introduced. If the Hon. Member wants to speak in general terms of workers and the way they are affected by the Act, he should consider some of those questions as well. Above all, I think he wants to return to his main point which concerns the question of equity.

In his case, he has raised his concern about salesmen, doctors or other professionals and self employed people who somehow derive a benefit for which every one else pays but which is denied to everyone else. I want to set the record straight. I want him to know that what we are trying to do is the very thing that he is urging us to do. We are trying to create equity involving employee benefits. We are trying to ensure that workers who do not enjoy certain benefits can see that the benefit is, nevertheless, deserved. In other words, workers will see that if they are not allowed a car write-off themselves, their company benefits from the activity of a salesman who goes out in his car and brings in new orders. They will see equally that when the salesman uses his car for personal use, he does so in the same way as they do. He pays for that car in after-tax dollars. He makes use of the car in after-tax dollars.

That is the intention of this Clause. We are not trying to set up yet one more benefit for another group. We are in fact trying to remove unjustified benefits and we are trying define more clearly the benefit that is business-related and productive, which keeps other people employed. When a benefit does that, we are prepared to say that it should be a tax-exempt activity, that the individual who takes his car and goes out and gets orders or generates new sales for a business is doing something on behalf of that business which he should not have to pay tax on. It does not matter whether the individual is doing that in his own car and getting mileage payments, or whether he is using the company car and getting it tax-free. As long as it is business-related, the individual should not be paying tax on the use of that vehicle. If it is personal, if it is something that aids the individual's personal life, then he should be enjoying that benefit with after-tax dollars. That is all we are asking here.

We have heard from the Conservative benches that the application of this rule is harsh, but in fact it is not. All we are saying is that the salesman who drives the car on a holiday to Florida or a lawyer who drives his car back and forth to the office every day, and that is the extent of it, or some self-employed man who enjoys the car 50 per cent of the time for his own use and 50 per cent for business, should pay tax because everyone else in the same circumstances is using a car purchased with after-tax dollars.

The Hon. Member has asked about individuals driving to and from work. I have tried to clear up with him the principle that such driving is a general employment expense and that we have given all taxpayers a general employment deduction. It is much simpler for us to use one deduction of that nature than it is to create a whole bunch of categories, so much for shoes, so much for bus fare, so much for cars, so much for uniforms and so on. That is not a reasonable kind of categorization of employment expenses. Instead of getting into that sort of very detailed consideration, we have given a general flat deduction.

If the Hon. Member would like to raise that deduction and discuss with us the size of the deduction, we would be happy to hear his comments. We would like to know if he feels that that deduction is too low. Let us bear in mind that such a deduction would apply not only to the individual working on the assembly line but would also apply to the salesman driving a company car. It is the principal equity that we are concerned with here.

We want the Hon. Member to understand that we are not trying to single out and give a benefit to a salesman or to a worker or to someone who drives a short distance or a long distance. We are not trying to create special categories. What we are trying to do is to remove those special categories and get back to simple, basic principles, namely, if a vehicle or any other benefit is employment-related then it is tax-free because it is productive. It adds to the economy; it creates jobs; but if a vehicle or any other benefit is used for personal use then it should be paid for in after-tax dollars.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that that is all we are doing, asking for after-tax dollars for personal use of the vehicle. The salesman, the self-employed person, the professional, can avoid this problem altogether simply by not using the car for any kind of personal use. That seems to be a heresy for some people, but I find it quite a simple, direct proposition. If one feels that the car is too expensive, then one should not use it for personal use but only for business use. But if it is felt to be reasonable to pay a bit of tax for a bit of personal use, then there is a fairly inexpensive car. Treated fairly, every other taxpayer can look on that vehicle and see that it is paid for on an after-tax basis and that it is not a special perk for a special individual.

I hope the Hon. Member takes some of these principles to mind. He has waxed eloquent on the problems of people who live a long way away from their business, and who have to drive there. Equally, I would ask him to reflect on the complexities of bringing in all these special considerations for every worker. Should we ask that worker, for example, to keep mileage charts? Should we ask the worker to keep receipts for boots that he has to buy for his work? Should we ask the worker to keep receipts for uniforms? Instead of getting into that complexity, we have just suggested a flat deduction which the individual can enjoy, whether he has an expense or not, and we think that is a fair and straightforward procedure and it applies to self-employed people and to workers, to professionals and to men and women on assembly lines.

I hope the Hon. Member will take that into account and try to give us his reaction about the more general category of the employment deduction, rather than to try to split that deduction into specific categories that would add incredible headaches and complexity to every working man and woman in this country. We have heard from people all over the country that the tax form is already too complicated. We have heard that it is difficult to understand the Income Tax Act, and I urge the Hon. Member to realize that the Income Tax Act would be made worse by the kind of proposal that he is making. I think we would hear very fruitfully from him about the size of the deduction, but I would urge him not to get into special categories beyond that deduction, because it would make the situation even worse.

An Hon. Member: Great filibuster speech!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be very helpful in this type of discussion if we could perhaps get down to more specifics, and I would like to address my question to the Minister. I take it that the Minister is supplied with a Government car. Is that correct?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the vehicle that I originally used was one that came to me when I was Minister of Public Works responsible for CMHC and the NCC. When I had the opportunity of changing Ministries and accepting responsibility for the Ministry of State for Finance, because it was the first time I had had the opportunity of changing portfolios and the second opportunity I had had of accepting a portfolio in this Government, it was new to me, but the system then provided that, with changes in those responsibilities, the vehicle that was assigned to the Minister in the original portfolio remained with that Minister in that portfolio. As a result, the vehicle that I was using in Public Works was no longer available to me and another vehicle was made available from Finance.

Unfortunately, that vehicle was on its last legs, and after letting me down on a number of occasions when I had to hail cabs or look for help from garages and the like, I had to look for yet another vehicle. That vehicle has only been of use and provided to me while on Departmental or Government business in the City of Ottawa. When I travel to my own constituency, and I do that each weekend, or on Government business in other Provinces, of course I would look for transportation—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. There can only be one Member speaking at the one time. The Minister has the floor.

Mr. Stevens: He is just talking out the time.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the question was, was I provided with a vehicle. I had to explain under what circumstances and what conditions. I thought it would be useful to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Fisher: It is six o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock, I will interrupt the proceedings.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

THE ADMINISTRATION—CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES. (B) REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REVIEW. (C) REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF MONITORING OFFICER

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, over the course of the last couple of days I have been directing a series of questions to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) about the Government's attitude toward the conflict of interest guidelines which appear to so clearly have been breached in the Alastair Gillespie Affair.

What is clear from the attitude of the Government to date is that the Government is not concerned about the whole issue of conflict of interest. It is concerned about the public relations aspect of the issue, whether or not the reputation of the Government has been injured by the way it has performed. It is not concerned about ensuring that there are comprehensive guidelines, which are tough, which are strict, which are enforced and which ensure the highest standards of probity on the part of Government officials.

On reading the guidelines any reasonable person would see that the guidelines have been breached. They have been breached with complicity of the Government. Mr. Gillespie was not alone in this affair. He had to do what he did with the co-operation of the Government. The Government's response has been to deny that lobbying is lobbying. It decided to reinvent and redefine the word in its own way to ensure that what Mr. Gillespie did in asking for the support and guidance of his former Deputy Minister, did not constitute lobbying in the opinion of the Government.

Secondly, the guidelines refer to undue influence or the appearance of undue influence. When Mr. Gillespie was able to get immediate access to his former Deputy Minister and able to get the rules changed for his particular proposal, the Government simply said that in its opinion this did not constitute undue influence on the part of Mr. Gillespie. What it has done is to render the guidelines absolutely meaningless. Any reasonable person examining the guidelines, if the guidelines were at all meaningful, would have concluded that the guidelines had been breached.

The second question Parliament must ask is, if the guidelines are breached, what teeth is there in them, what sanction is there and what ability is there to help people to account for breaches of the guidelines? Any Government with integrity would have required that Ministers who were responsible for breaches of guidelines must resign. If they were not prepared to go themselves, the Prime Minister had the obligation to fire them.

However, we find that the Prime Minister tells me, in answer to questions I put to him in the House, confirmed by the Deputy Prime Minister, that what they are toying with, in a review of the conflict of interest guidelines is a watering down. If the Gillespie affair was to happen again, they would not do anything to change the guidelines to ensure that proper conduct was to be followed by the Government. They would rewrite the guidelines to ensure that no one could claim that guidelines had been breached.

I said yesterday in the House that that sort of procedure was tantamount to the Liberal's discovering that a Liberal was caught trying to burn down the Parliament Buildings and the Government then legalized arson. It is very easy to ensure that the guidelines are never breached if the guidelines are rendered meaningless. If the Government were serious about putting an end to the concern that exist in this affair, it would have been candid with Parliament. Parliament would not have been misled in the first place. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) have conceded that Parliament was misled. When the Government tabled documents in the House, it would have made an effort to ensure that all relevant documents were tabled.

Following Question Period, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) tabled documents relating to the Cape Breton Development Corporation. He indicated when he spoke in the House that if one looked at the documents, he would find that in each case there was a note there with respect to particular minutes about documents which were not included in detail. When I ask him about it, he made it very clear that some of the documents had been laundered or deleted in his review of the files. Yet when you look at the material produced by the Minister, there are no notes indicating which documents have been deleted from the file. Again, the Government has not been candid with Parliament.

What should the Government be doing? First, Mr. Speaker, if the Government were serious about making the conflict of interest guidelines meaningful, it would strike a parliamentary committee, not have the in-house whitewash review, designed to water down the guidelines, contemplated by the Prime Minister. Instead, we should have a parliamentary committee charged with the responsibility of writing a meaningful set of guidelines and enforcement procedures.

I think one of the key elements of such a study would be a finding that it is time to have an officer of Parliament charged with the responsibility of investigating alleged breaches of the guidelines, and making a report to Parliament which could then be acted upon by a parliamentary committee. That is what is being done in the United States in many jurisdictions where they have ethics committees. In our case, that would be tantamount to having the Chief Electoral Commissioner given the responsibility of enforcing guidelines on ethics, not just during election campaigns, but also with regard to conflict of interest by officials and former officials. A report to Parliament could be made by this independent officer of Parliament and, if it appeared that the evidence warranted further study, a parliamentary committee could be called in.

It is essential that the Government act now, Mr. Speaker, to cut out the cancer which is growing here; the cancer of cover up and patronage which is rampant in this Government; the cancer of decline in public trust in the behaviour of public officials. It could do that by plugging Parliament back into the process, by striking that parliamentary committee and ensuring the sort of independent review of conflict of interest which I have suggested. Anything less than that can only damage the reputation of Parliament, and can only weaken the regard in which public life is held by ordinary Canadians.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) has been suggesting that the conflict of interest guidelines should be referred to a parliamentary committee for review, and further, that a parliamentary auditor be appointed to monitor and report to Parliament on the application of these guidelines. It is hard to believe the Hon. Member is serious. In view of the totally irresponsible and outrageous way in which this Member and his colleagues in both Opposition Parties have comported themselves on this issue in the House, I do not see any benefit at all in the Government referring this question to a committee. In fact, this would probably be the worst thing we could do to Parliament. It would reopen the vicious unfounded attacks on Hon. Ministers, unnecessarily ruin reputable careers, and further tarnish the image of the House of Commons in the minds of all Canadians.

The value of the present and any future guidelines rests with the integrity of Members of Parliament. It is indeed unfortunate that this fundamental principle has been put to such unfair tests in the last few weeks. I for one believe in the basic principles of democracy. One of these principles is the integrity and good faith of public officials. Without this trust our system cannot operate. This trust cannot be engendered by the creation of yet another bureaucratic watchdog. I would hope after the bitter debate of the last two weeks, Parliamentarians would now unite and reinforce the will of Parliament to deal with the major issues facing the country.

Perhaps the Hon. Member should reflect upon the proposal he has recently advanced to create another officer of Parliament. In a time of severe economic restraint, the Opposition is recommending the establishment of a new bureaucratic organization. Not only would this be a waste of taxpayers' money, but it is also not at all related to the prime objective of this Government, to rebuild the economic well-being of our country. Surely the Opposition does not wish to dilute the impact of this Government's economic recovery program by spending more money to increase the Parliamentary bureaucracy.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would again ask that Members of the Opposition read the present conflict of interest guidelines. Now more than ever it is important that Members forget their partisan role, fully understand the guidelines, interpret them in a just and fair way, and start acting like Parliamentarians.

• (1810)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair would like to draw Standing Order 15(3) to the attention of Hon. Members. It provides as follows:

When a Member is speaking, no Member shall pass between that Member and the Chair, nor interrupt him or her, except to raise a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: I am happy that you reprimanded my good friend, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley).

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY—REQUEST THAT CANADIAN CONTENT LEGISLATION BE ENACTED. (B) CANADA-JAPAN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue this issue in relation to a question I put to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) on March 1, about the failure of the Canadian Government to negotiate for Canadian content in Japanese cars sold in this country.

A short time ago, General Motors and Toyota in California were able to come to an agreement whereby Toyota, in partnership with General Motors, would establish a plant there which would give jobs to about 12,000 Americans.

[Translation]

There are many other examples of countries throughout the world where a national corporation has an agreement with a Japanese company. I am thinking about Peru, Brazil, Australia and France, all of which have negotiated an agreement with Japan to have a national content in the manufacture of Japanese vehicles. I believe that we could have the same type of agreement in Canada if our ministers negotiated more earnestly than they have done in the past.

[English]

I suggest that we should give the Minister more bargaining power. I think the Government should introduce for first reading in this House a Canadian content bill which would provide that 85 per cent of the content of Japanese cars in this country should be Canadian. In other words, if $1 million worth of Japanese cars were sold in Canada, $850,000 worth of the construction cost should be Canadian. This would create more jobs. I make this suggestion because I want to give the Minister some more clout. I do not suggest that we should pass the bill at all stages at this time, but just that it should be introduced for first reading. That would enable the Minister to go to Tokyo to meet his counterpart there and point out how worried we are about the situation.

At the moment, 25 per cent of our automobile market goes to Japanese cars. We recognize that they have some of the most efficient and beautiful cars in the world, and Canadians want to drive them, but we also want to make them in Canada. Our people want the jobs. They do not like the idea of buying a Japanese car, or any other foreign product, thus creating jobs elsewhere. More manufacturing in Canada would create more jobs and put the country back to work, making it more productive and wealthy.

When the Parliamentary Secretary responds I hope he will not reject my idea out of hand. I hope he will lend support to the proposition that we must be tough negotiators, no matter with whom we deal. I have heard many trade commissioners and others involved in foreign trade describe us as the "Boy Scouts" of international trade. In many ways we are really the pussycats of international trade and, Mr. Speaker, our claws are being pulled. It is time for us to be tough. We can learn from the Americans, from the French, the Germans and the Japanese how to drive a tough bargain. I do not think anyone respects a country that bows to a threat, and that is what we have been doing. We have been much too meek and mild.

We are the sixth largest consumer of cars in the world and the third largest consumer of Japanese cars, after the United States and West Germany. That gives us clout with the Japanese. We are their third largest market and they want to keep that market and expand it. We sell valuable raw resources to Japan that are fabricated over there, giving jobs to the Japanese. I commend the Japanese for their tough bargaining. In return, I am just asking the Japanese that we do the same thing. We can purchase their cars but we could construct at least 85 per cent of them in this country as well, so that we could give jobs to Canadian workers in the manufacturing of cars. It also seems that this would be an excellent idea for western Canada. The car plants could be located there, very close to Japan compared with Central and Eastern Canada, and many Japanese cars are purchased by western Canadians. I think it makes sense all around.

The Australians, Mexicans, Peruvians and Brazilians with smaller markets are purchasing fewer Japanese cars than we are. If they can negotiate a deal with the Japanese, I wonder why we cannot, since we have the third largest Japanese car market in the world. We are a much bigger country and should have a lot more clout. If they can do it, we can do it. If the Americans can do, we can do it. We are no worse off than the Americans. We are no less imaginative than the Americans. We are no worse bargainers or traders than the Americans. If they can have Japanese car plants in their country, we can have them as well. If we do not, the time will come, in ten or 15 years, when we will still be importing Japanese cars, but instead of importing them all from Japan, we will be importing them from California, Ohio and other places in the United States. This would even compound the problem we have today.

I appeal to the Government to use a little foresight, be tough, use some imagination and insist that Japanese negotiators treat us as fairly as they treat the Australians, Mexicans, Americans, and many other people around the world. If they do that with us, I will be pleased because we will have Canadian jobs.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I would like to point out that, in my opinion, if the Government had such a simplistic approach to our exchanges with Japan, nearly 93,000 jobs would be threatened in Canada. If we looked strictly at the automobile market, there would obviously be cause for concern. However, I would ask the Hon. Member to look at this in perspective and to realize that Canada, contrary to other countries which envy its position, such as the United States, Europe, and so on, has a positive balance of trade with Japan, which is certainly not the case of some of its other commercial partners whose balance of trade is negative. Mr. Speaker, it is easy to say: Let us become protectionists and threaten to adopt protectionist measures to strengthen our negotiating position. However, we are well aware that 600,000 jobs in Canada are directly dependent on a healthy export market. We are also well aware that 30 per cent of our economy operates under the rules of the open market. In my opinion, we would be worse off if the open market were to be ruled by tariffs, which would reduce our exchanges with markets such as Japan. The Hon. Member was also over-simplifying when he said that we sold only raw materials to the Japanese. I would like to point out to him that in 1981, 34.6 per cent of Canadian products sold to Japan were food products and that 24.5 per cent were semi-processed and processed products. However, Mr. Speaker, because of his own bill, I understand of course the frustration which the Hon. Member feels towards Japanese car manufacturers. On the other hand, I would ask him to have confidence in the outcome of our negotiations this spring, where we shall once again be able to bring pressure to bear on our Japanese partners.

I would also ask him not to jump to conclusions regarding the outcome of the automobile task force created by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley). I believe that the Hon. Member is panicking while, considering his concern for the commercial relations of Canada, he should develop a global approach and realize that Canadians have an advantage over Americans and Europeans and should certainly not feel inferior. On the contrary, other countries have much to learn from us.

As for the California project mentioned by the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, I must tell him that, according to my information, the agreement between GM and Toyota is a private one. It is not part of any negotiation between the American government and Japan. This is strictly a private company, and for our part, we shall stress the need for an increased Japanese contribution to the Canadian economy. We shall certainly do so. However, this will be done in the context of our negotiations. I do not believe that it is wise to make threats without reason, especially when we announce them in advance, as the Hon. Member has suggested.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

YOUTH

REQUEST FOR EMPHASIS IN FORTHCOMING SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Madam Speaker, there is no question that young people are suffering most under the impact of these difficult economic times. Family problems are aggravated by the recession, they are faced with financial problems if they wish to continue their studies, jobs are scarce and when they do manage to get a job, young people are first to be laid off when companies cut back on personnel. At a time when traditional models are being questioned, a time of enormous technological change, a time when serious doubts are being voiced as to the effectiveness of our academic, religious and political institutions, young people are being asked to become part of a society that feels insecure about the future, that jealously guards its past and its vested interests and fails to measure up to the hopes and aspirations of this new generation.

Madam Speaker, I demand that a direct and frank approach be taken to the problems of this new generation. Unfortunately, pressure exercised in a haphazard sort of way has not achieved the expected results, and I would urge the Government to use the throne speech to give the youth issue the emphasis it deserves.

I am very pleased with the step taken by the Government of Quebec this week. It is perhaps not much more than a gesture for the time being, but it is a step in the right direction. I hope that young people in other provinces will also urge their governments to increase their awareness of their concerns, and that our Government will realize at last that the present situation needs more than band-aid solutions and window dressing.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSAL TO ABOLISH CHILD TAX EXEMPTIONS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, a couple of weeks ago we had the spectacle of the Minister responsible for the status of women proposing an end to the spousal income tax exemption, and today we are told that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has approved a report recommending that child tax exemptions be abolished.

The Canadian income tax system has always treated the family as a basic unit, and contained the important fundamental concept that a family be able to retain a proportion of its income safe from the tax gatherer's greedy grasp, a proportion needed to sustain the basic necessities of life.

This fair and equitable concept is now under attack by the Liberal Government. There is no telling how far it might go. Presumably the next in line to go will be the exemption for the elderly and pensioners.

Parliament must insist that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) retain the family unit concept within the Income Tax Act and reject out of hand the harebrained schemes of the Minister responsible for the status of women and of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—KILLING OF INDIAN POPULATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, this past week Pope John Paul II's tour of Central America drew world attention to the violence and poverty which afflict that part of the world. Of particular concern to Canadians must be the genocidal war being waged against Indian people by the Guatemalan Government of President Rios Montt.

In the past year thousands of Indian civilians have been killed by the Guatemalan army. Entire villages have been destroyed and hundreds of thousands of Indian people have become refugees, either in their own country or in Mexico. All Canadians must join in condemning this brutality, but we must move beyond condemnation.

In addition to an international program of refugee aid, Canada should negotiate with Mexico for international inspection of the deplorable conditions of Guatemalan Indian refugee camps in Mexico.

Finally, I call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to investigate reports that Israeli military personnel have been involved with the Guatemalan army as advisers. Canada can no longer condone in silence this eradication of the Indian people of Guatemala.

DECLARATION OF QUEBEC MINISTER—ACHIEVEMENTS OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Madam Speaker, I was very pleased to see that the Quebec Government is now taking a more realistic view, according to a statement by a Quebec Minister that was reported in the press. After five years of ignoring the Canadian Government, the Government of Quebec has now realized, and it has said so, that since the Liberals came to power in Ottawa, Quebec had never had so many economic spinoffs, and in his very positive statement, the Minister acknowledged that the federal Members from Quebec were constantly fighting for their province, and he also acknowledged that Bill 101 must be amended to respect the rights of the anglophone community in Quebec and the various ethnic communities that have their own place in our belle province.

Madam Speaker, I earnestly hope that the Minister's statement will go beyond mere words and that the Province of Quebec will take action to further the interests of all Quebecers and consequently of all Canadians in this country.

SCOTIA COAL SYNFUELS PROJECT

CONTENTS OF TABLED DEVCO DOCUMENTS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation tabled in this House a one and a half inch thick pile of documents which he said related to Devco's involvement in the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project. And what has this shower of paper, that includes 101 pages of academic papers and magazine articles, and 111 pages of requests for proposals and draft legal documents, been meant to accomplish? Obfuscation of the highest order, that is what. A classic cover up is now under way and the Table of this Chamber is being used as a stage for the performance.

How else can one explain the actions of the Devco Minister who, on the pretence of tabling accurate documentation of the Corporation's involvement in the Scotia Coal project, provides not one single piece of correspondence written to its developer? Can you imagine that, Madam Speaker? Devco enters into an industrial consortium with Alastair Gillespie, agrees to invest up to $300,000 of public money, and never wrote him a single letter. As well, Devco never corresponded once with the Department of Energy, without whose funding the whole scheme would not have materialized in the first place.

It is also hard to believe that since legal counsel for the Energy Department saw fit to write Devco in August, 1981, to request signatures on various documents, no one else ever saw fit to communicate with Devco on the matter previously. Maybe it was Mr. Gillespie who set this pattern of non-letter writing, for of the 315 pages of documents tabled yesterday there is only one piece of correspondence from him to Devco. And this pattern of doing things orally seems to have been picked up within the Corporation as well, for only five internal memoranda are present, four of which are to the president.

AGRICULTURE

HUNGER STRIKER'S DEMAND FOR PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, on Wednesday, Allan Wilford, the Director of the Canadian Farm Survival Association, was arrested and jailed on a charge related to a penny auction. This penny auction was held to help a young farmer who was losing his equipment to a bailiff, a scene which is becoming all too frequent.

There is a crisis in farm finance spreading across the country that will see many, many more young farmers and their families out on the road. This House must act, and act now, to protect and help these people. We need the food they produce. We need the communities they sustain. We owe them a second chance. We owe them a break until markets turn around or until we can get some decent legislation on the books to improve their incomes.

Allan Wilford is on a hunger strike until this House deals with Bill C-653, an Act to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, or an acceptable substitute. This is a dramatic gesture by a determined young farmer who is leading a group of producers facing the ugly possibility of being refused credit which would enable them to buy and plant their crops this spring.

I urge the Government to relent and give this Bill a chance for speedy passage in the House. We owe it to the farmers of Canada. We owe it to our future.

TRANSPORT

STUDY OF POINTE-NOIRE PROJECT IN SEPT-ÎLES, P.Q.

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, yesterday, a newspaper in Quebec City headlined a story that the Iron Ore Company of Canada was opposed to the Pointe-

Noire project at Sept-Îles. Considering the problems being experienced on the North Shore at the present time, needless to say there is grave concern in this area, regarding a project that is very important to its development and diversification. Considering the fact that the information was given by management of Iron Ore and that up to now—and I checked this—Iron Ore had never expressed any negative views regarding the development of the Pointe-Noire project, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport who is here in the House (Mr. Pepin) to get in touch with the President of Iron Ore in order to shed some light on the issue, because it is important that the Government be able to take major economic measures so that the North Shore will no longer depend solely on the large multinationals.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF NATIVE CHILDREN

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, Patrick Johnston's newly released report entitled "Native Children and The Child Welfare System" demands that renewed attention be given to the plight of native children in our country's child welfare system. It has been clear for some time that, due to a jurisdictional dispute between the Provinces and the federal Government, native children in need of care are left in a legal limbo. Although Indians are the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal Government, child welfare falls within the jurisdiction of the Provinces. Thus, the quality of social services provided to native children varies from Province to Province. The only similarity between the various systems is that everyone agrees that all systems are inadequate and that services provided are well below the level of services provided to non-native children.

Currently the direction being taken by the federal Government seems to be that of encouraging tripartite agreements signed by the federal Government, the Provinces, and Indian organizations in the Provinces involved. Although this serves as a good example to improve the quality of services provided to native children, it avoids resolution of the jurisdictional problem as it pertains to Indian children.

Witnesses appearing before the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government have repeatedly expressed their concern about the inadequacy of the Indian child welfare system. Particularly alarming is the knowledge that Indian children taken into care are rarely placed in Indian homes, thus their cultural ties are irreparably severed. The first step toward rectifying the situation that now exists would be the creation of a federal Indian child welfare act.

Madam Speaker: Order.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration who, I might add, is absent for the second month when unemployment figures have come out, which to me is a most eloquent expression of his contempt for the problems of the unemployed, I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance.

Given the unemployment figures today which show an increase in the seasonally adjusted rate to 1.5 million, the greatest human tragedy to hit this country since the Great Depression, and given the human dimension of these figures and the potential for tragedy, what does he intend to do on behalf of the Government to address this problem which is now of an urgent and critical nature?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as a matter of fact I addressed that question yesterday. The Hon. Member will have noticed that, in spite of an increase in the adjusted figure from 12.4 per cent to 12.5 per cent, there has been a slight decline in the total number of unemployed. For the third month in a row there has been a stabilization and an increase in employment creation. After having seen a decline in employment for many consecutive months, these figures have gone up for the last three months and tend to indicate that there is, indeed, a recovery taking place in the economy.

As Hon. Members know, we have up to $2 billion of job creation programs in operation. I am addressing this whole issue in preparation of my budget. I indicated that unemployment is indeed a top priority for me in the budget. I would hope the budgetary measures that I will announce will stimulate and support recovery and help decrease the number of unemployed.

LOSS OF JOBS IN MANUFACTURING SECTOR

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, last month, while the real rate was up considerably and the adjusted rate was down slightly, the Minister drew some satisfaction from that when he replied to this question. Now, he cannot have it both ways, but that is what the Minister is attempting to do.

Where is this economic recovery that he keeps talking about? For example, when we look at the manufacturing sector, since this recession started we have lost 305,000 jobs. We are down 181,000 jobs in a year, and down 14,000 jobs in a month. Where is the recovery that he keeps talking about?

When one considers that the long-term unemployed have increased by 98.6 per cent in a year, that means a 98.6 per cent increase in the rate of those who are unemployed for three months or more. That is disgraceful. Where is the recovery? Where is the Minister's response to this tragedy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, indeed, I would invite the Hon. Member to look at events that are taking place in the economy at the present time. He knows, for instance, that General Motors has called back 8,500 workers recently. He knows that in Sudbury the mines are recalling several thousand people back to work. He knows that prices have been firming up in the lumber industry and the orders have been increasing. He knows that in the housing industry the units on an annual basis have increased to 165,000, which is a very large increase compared to last year. He knows that the price of nickel, for instance, has firmed up quite considerably over the last short while. So, there are encouraging signs.

We must recognize that the recovery will take place only gradually, not only in Canada but in the rest of the world as well. We cannot pull up the whole world by our own bootstraps. This is a recovery which must take place in all the industrialized countries.

We are encouraged by signs of what is happening in the United States, too. We indeed hope that the recovery will be faster than the one we had anticipated before. I hope, as I said, that my budget will contain measures which will stimulate the recovery further.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, all I know is that there are two million people unemployed today. All I know is that there are 100,000 exhaustees of unemployment insurance benefits every month. All I know is that the rate of unemployment among heads of families has risen 52 per cent over the year. That is what I know.

What I want to ask the Minister, who really must take some responsibility for this situation, is whether he will at least bring in measures he has planned for his budget which we probably will not receive until later this spring? Will he at least bring in some of those measures now which would at least indicate to the House and to the country that the Government recognizes that there is a sense of urgency and tragedy here?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, one method of helping the Canadian unemployed in a very fast way would be to pass the Income Tax Act amendments which are now before the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The delay which is being created by the Conservative Opposition will delay $6 billion worth of refunds to Canadian citizens, to taxpayers who, with that injection of funds, could spend money and create jobs in the manufacturing sector and in all areas. Therefore, I hope we will receive more co-operation from the Opposition concerning the Income Tax Act and we will not face a situation where we will not be able to mail refunds as early as we—

Mr. Kempling: How many jobs will that create, Marc?

Mr. Lalonde: —would have liked, because the Opposition will have delayed the passing of the Income Tax Act. I would also invite the Opposition to support the Government with regard to the western rail transportation reorganization—

Mr. McGrath: That's disgraceful!

Mr. Lalonde: —which will mean $800 million of additional investment by the railways this fiscal year in the West, and which will provide benefits all across the country, including the Maritimes. These are a few steps which the Opposition could take immediately to help things along.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, the Minister's response indicates a disgraceful lack of concern for the ongoing human tragedy which these unemployment figures represent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: You said that last week.

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG WOMEN HEADS OF FAMILIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I want to bring a fact to the attention of the Minister of Finance. Among single parent families headed by women, unemployment rates have risen 61 per cent in the past year. This is the very group, comprising families headed by single parents who are mothers, where poverty is hitting hardest. Their children are suffering.

Has the Minister designed any job creation programs, either for the immediate situation or even for his budget, which are specially targeted toward this particular group of families in the same way as the NEED Program was targeted toward a special group?

An Hon. Member: We thought you wanted the private sector to look after everything.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the problem just raised by the Member for Kingston and the Islands is indeed a very serious one, and action has been taken by the Department of Employment and Immigration.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the Occupational Training Act contains specific criteria according to which women who are the family's main support will receive priority for training. Furthermore, existing job creation programs include special programs for women, such as the Community Development Program and the Community Services programs, which are submitted by women. We also have extension programs for women across the country.

Madam Speaker, I must say that at the Department of Employment and Immigration, we are very much aware of the problems affecting this group. We have programs that are tailored to their needs, and we are doing everything in our power to respond to these needs.

• (1125)

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PLANS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I ask about a group that are hard hit in this society. The Minister of Finance refuses to answer; the Minister of Employment and Immigration does not even show up.

I want to ask about a group who last year had jobs and this year do not have jobs and the result is that some of them are paying 60 per cent of their income for housing. That means there is very little left for food.

Does the Minister know that hospitals are reporting a dramatic increase in the number of cases of infants who are being referred to them as a result of the use of watered-down baby formula? That is what is happening out there with people who do not have jobs. That is what is happening when a group of unemployed—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member really think it is reasonable to go on that way before asking a question?

Mr. Nielsen: She did ask a question.

Miss MacDonald: Indeed it is, Madam Speaker. When these people are—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, order. I can understand the Hon. Member's indignation, but this is Question Period. It is meant to have a very brisk exchange between Members of the Opposition and the Government, and it must remain that way.

Miss MacDonald: What I want to find out, Madam Speaker, is, given the particular needs of this particular group, does the Government have any job plans whatsoever to assist them?

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out that through various job creation programs, in 1982-83 more than 120,000 women were able to find work as a result of measures taken by the Government. Furthermore, as a result of programs initiated in 1982-83 and which now exist throughout the country, nearly 60,000 women are now employed.

This means, Madam Speaker, that through its various programs, the Department of Employment and Immigration is helping Canadians to cope with the severe economic conditions existing at the present time, within the limits of its budget. We therefore urge all parties concerned, including the Opposition, women's groups throughout the country and all those who are interested in these programs, to co-operate with us in finding ways to improve them and maximize their effectiveness in assisting people in need.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Band-aid.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance on the same subject. It is clear from the answer we have heard today that the Government has no new program in terms of providing jobs for the unemployed.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It does not even care.

Mr. Broadbent: My question concerns another form of assistance where perhaps the Government might show some sensitivity. There are now, as of today's figures, more than 305,000 men and women in Canada who have been unemployed for more than a year. What that means is that their Unemployment Insurance benefits have run out. What that also means is that the dignity that they have had from having a job and having an income is progressively fading away from their existence, with all the human impact that means for their families.

Given the needs of these 305,000 people who would like to have a job, but the Government is not going to provide that, will the Government at least show some social compassion as well as economic sense and agree to extend Unemployment Insurance benefits for these people?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party said that there were no new job creation programs. I would remind him that this year, the Government has already allocated over $2 billion for job creation, and the programs are already on stream. The point is not whether we should create new programs and add more and more, but to make sure that the funds allocated by the Federal Government are there and that Canadians can have access to and benefit from these programs as soon as possible. The Minister of Employment and Immigration is consulting regularly with his provincial counterparts to make sure the programs will be available to Canadians.

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question!

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party wants me to answer his question. It would be easier if he stopped providing erroneous preambles to his questions. He should therefore not be surprised if I take the time to respond to the erroneous claims his preambles contain.

As far as his question is concerned, I can inform the Hon. Member that this year, the Canadian Government is funding half of the increase in unemployment insurance benefits to assist those who are working at the present time, and that it has made substantial contributions to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. There are therefore no plans for a program to extend unemployment insurance benefits.

• (1130)

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I did not get the last few words of what the Minister had to say. If I heard him correctly, he did not deal with the question at all, which was a call for an extension of the benefits for people who are unemployed and would at least like to have the dignity that can come from some money to spend, when they have an unemployment situation which is not their fault.

I ask the Minister this question quite seriously. He referred to a finance Bill that is before the House. He knows this Bill contains within it loopholes that will enable Canadians earning $100,000 a year not to pay one penny in income tax. He knows that the Government has looked after Mr. Gillespie, Mr. Pitfield, and a whole series of its friends.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Broadbent: When will it do something about extending the benefits for the unemployed?

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, until now, I felt the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party had a certain sense of dignity and respect for the truth and the individual. I am sorry that he should resort to the gutter tactics commonly displayed by the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in this House.

I can inform the Hon. Member that the additional funds we shall be able to release will be allocated for the purpose of creating jobs, either directly or through the private sector, and I believe that our first priority should not be to extend unemployment insurance benefits but to use the funds we have to create the jobs Canadians need. Extending unemployment insurance benefits is not going to help us solve the unemployment problem in this country, but creating jobs will. In the forthcoming budget, the first priority I see would be to create activities that will provide jobs for Canadians instead of just increasing social benefits.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGE ON PORT OF MONTREAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I do not think the Minister is the proper person to give others a lecture on honour, and I will leave it at that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I have a question concerning the Minister's home Province of Quebec. As he knows, this Province has had a great increase in unemployment, according to today's figures. In fact the largest increase is in the Province of Quebec. He also knows that the situation is bad in the City of Montreal.

Is the Minister aware that one of the results of the proposal brought in by his colleague, the Minister of Transport, to change the Crow rate, will be that grain farmers on the Prairies within a few years will be able to export their grain through New Orleans at a lower rate than out of the Port of Montreal? Today the Port of Montreal relies very heavily on the grain trade. If this disastrous proposal is followed up, we will have more unemployment instead of more jobs in the City of Montreal. If the Minister is aware of this, will he take steps to ensure that the Minister of Transport gets that terrible proposal away from the House of Commons?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, on this particular point I was shocked by what I read this morning, that my hon. friend has found a way to agree with both the protests against the initiatives in the West and the East, for completely different reasons. I know that a certain category of people walk on the street. However, they usually walk on only one side of the street. My hon. friend has managed to walk on both sides of the street at the same time.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He also wants to walk on water.

Mr. Pepin: The concept of a movement away from the Canadian ports to United States ports is one at which my officials are looking. Up to now they have said that it is a creation of unsophisticated minds. We are looking at it. At the moment there is no possibility of it. Should there be a possibility of that ever happening, the Government will obviously intervene to prevent it.

LABOUR CONDITIONS UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Statistics Canada figures today reveal that over 600,000 Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24 are without jobs. That is a 21 per cent unemployment rate among our youth, a whopping 9 per cent above the national average. In view of the human tragedy that those statistics document, is the Minister contemplating for his upcoming budget a major program targeted at youth unemployment so as to lift a whole generation of Canadians out of abject poverty?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will take the question of the Hon. Member as a representation. I have indicated that the question of youth unemployment is indeed very serious and critical. It is difficult to envisage a situation where our young people are unemployed, and not able to enter into the job market for an extended period of time. Personally, I find this a tragic situation. It is certainly uppermost in my mind.

As to specific measures, the Hon. Member will have noticed, for example, that I have already announced $50 million of additional money for student employment this summer, up from $120 million to $170 million. These are measures I have taken even before the budget is announced so that students will at least benefit from these additional sums during the course of the summer. As to whether additional steps are going to be taken, I invite my friend to wait for the budget.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF WAGE SUBSIDY PROGRAM

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also to the Minister of Finance. The programs to which the Minister has made reference are merely band-aids. What the young people want are permanent jobs, not make-shift jobs to carry them over for a few days. In light of that, I would ask the Minister this. In the upcoming budget will the Minister give serious consideration to introducing either a wage subsidy program, such as that which has proven so successful in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick or, as an alternative, a refundable employment tax credit program, both of which would be designed to create permanent, lasting jobs, rather than make-shift jobs of the kind the Government has relied on to date?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if we are talking about the student summer employment program, it is of course aimed at students and part-time jobs. It is aimed at helping students find work during the course of the summer. Obviously my friend is also addressing the other major issue of permanent employment for young people. I have received representations from Members on this side of the House, and outside, concerning the suggestion he is making. I will consider them.

REQUEST FOR INVESTMENT IN YOUTH

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of Finance. As my colleague pointed out, there are three-quarters of a million young people unemployed. Many of them have invested 15 to 20 years of their lives to educate themselves so that they can enter the workforce and pursue the careers they worked so hard to attain. Recently three cases came to my attention of educated young people who are ready to proceed with their careers. They became so depressed and despondent, they took their own lives.

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a question? If not, I will not allow him to continue. He must ask a question.

Mr. Shields: Does the Minister plan to allocate another $1.5 billion to Dome and Gulf to proceed with the development of natural resources in the North, or is he prepared to invest $1.5 billion in our young people and thereby avoid tragedy for those families of young people who commit suicide because they cannot face the reality of not having a job?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am surprised to hear this kind of intervention from the Hon. Member who is usually complaining that we do not allocate enough funds to the energy area. It is especially surprising coming from an Hon. Member who represents an area which has benefited from significant Government support for large energy projects. I want to tell him that any investment which is taking place by the private sector, whether it is in the Beaufort Sea, the Arctic, the Prairies, or the eastern Provinces, is work which is creating jobs for Canadians.

I would like also to remind him, as I have indicated before, that the Government has allocated around $2 billion for job creation programs during this year. That is a very substantial amount of money indeed which the Government is spending directly to create jobs. At the same time there are numerous programs and activities which help the private sector to create jobs for Canadians, because the private sector is going to be the main employer and we want it to remain so.

Mr. Nielsen: That is why the kids are committing suicide.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, comparing the price of energy to the price of life will not be of much consolation to the families who have lost bright young people because they could not face the reality of not having a job.

REQUEST THAT YOUTH ENTREPRENEURSHIP FUND BE CREATED

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he would consider allocating $1.5 billion in his upcoming budget to create a situation where a fund would be available for young people in order that they could borrow from that fund to go into private entrepreneurship or to create a business which would employ young people who are energetic and ready to work, and who need this kind of impetus. This would be a real investment in young people—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will take the question of the Hon. Member as a representation and as a suggestion which I will examine, but I would also invite the Conservatives to stop talking out of both sides of their mouths, suggesting large programs of additional expenditures and, at the same time, taking the time of this House in attacking the deficit of the Government. So make up your minds, fellows, please.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—POSITION OF CANADA ON RESOLUTION AT GENEVA CONFERENCE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I had intended to ask my question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He is not here, so I will direct my question to the Minister of State for External Relations. Last week, as the Minister is aware, at the Human Rights Commission in Geneva a resolution prepared by Canada was put forth about human rights violations in El Salvador. It began with a weak resolution, but then became stronger. Would the Minister tell the House why Canada did not get that resolution into debate and why Canada did not vote on the Mexican resolution, which was a strong, clear resolution?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member should ask this question, because I share his frustration and disappointment at not having been able to express, in the form of a consensus resolution which Canada had submitted, our grave concern with respect to the human rights situation in El Salvador. To provide some background, Madam Speaker—and I may add that the Hon. Member has followed this issue very closely—three weeks ago, we submitted a draft resolution to the Human Rights Commission, a resolution that we were able to improve thanks to the advice of the Hon. Member and other Canadians who are concerned about the human rights issue. We established a broad consensus among other delegations to the Human Rights Commission in Geneva, but unfortunately, when the time came to vote on the resolution—the Hon. Member is probably aware of this—certain tactical procedures prevented a vote being taken on the Canadian resolution, and we were then faced with the Mexican resolution.

As for the Hon. Member's question, namely, why we did not vote on the Mexican resolution Madam Speaker, it was because we felt that the human rights issue is so important that the United Nations Human Rights Commission was not the appropriate forum for taking position with a political impact. In our view it was preferable to make an appeal on humanitarian grounds to condemn the obstruction of full protection of human rights. That is why we abstained from voting on this resolution.

UNITED STATES MILITARY AID TO EL SALVADOR

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I am sorry to say that I feel the Government did not move because of an almost emotional problem. The matter is serious, and I do believe it is extremely political.

The President of the United States this past week indicated he is planning to ask for another $120 million for military aid to El Salvador. This is a place where war has gone on for three years. The Holy Father, the Pope, has asked for negotiations and for dialogue to stop the fighting. What is the Government of Canada going to do in relation to the United States, and its President, in terms of protest?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, the Canadian position on military aid to El Salvador is quite clear. The Hon. Member is aware that in one paragraph of the consensus resolution we submitted to the Human Rights Commission in Geneva, we clearly indicated that we were recommending non-intervention in the internal affairs of El Salvador and immediate suspension of all arms supplies and any other kind of military aid. That is the official position of the Canadian Government, and, Madam Speaker, I should be happy to repeat that position to the American Government, through the usual diplomatic channels.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON LEGISLATION TO AMEND FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and it relates to the desire of the Farm Survival Association, the agricultural community generally in the country, and Members of Parliament on both sides of this House, to deal with Bill C-653, which is an amendment to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex. Has the Government taken a position with respect to that Bill? If it has, would the Minister inform us whether or not the Government favours the principle of the Bill? If it does favour the principle of the Bill, would the Minister inform us when it will be introduced, on the understanding that there is a willingness on both sides for that Bill to be introduced and dealt with?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we have already indicated that, indeed, we are very proud that an Hon. Member on this side of the House has brought forward a Bill of this nature. We, indeed, support the principle of the Bill. We are discussing with the Hon. Member at the present time the implications of the various aspects of this Bill and, when these discussions are concluded, the House Leader will be very pleased to inform the House what steps will be taken.

STATUS OF LEGISLATION IN GOVERNMENT PLANS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, may I assume from the answer given to me by the Minister of Finance that the Government has now dropped the proposal put yesterday by the Government House Leader that this Bill was somehow linked to passage of other legislation which is in the mind of the Government, or as put by the Minister of Agriculture, that approval of this Bill depends on the House agreeing to approve Canagrex? Is the Government now saying that this Bill stands on its own, that the Government is going to be dealing with this Bill and with respect to the principles of this Bill, and that the Minister will be informing the House within a very few days about its decision on the Bill?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, I have nothing to add to what the House Leader said yesterday. What the House Leader said yesterday stands.

Mr. Nielsen: You just did a moment ago.

Mr. Lalonde: What I had indicated is that Goverment Members were having discussions with the Hon. Member who put forward the Bill, and once the discussions were concluded the House Leader would come to the House and indicate what conclusions we have reached. That is all there is.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who answers for the Wheat Board. The previous Minister of Transport, the Hon. Otto Lang, initiated a practice whereby prices for grains were announced prior to the start of seeding operations. Since farmers are now planning their seeding operations, does the Wheat Board intend to indicate the price at which the grain will be sold in the following year, or will the farmers have to take a chance and find out later?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have been in the House for a number of years and I know that there is no set pattern for these announcements. They vary from year to year. I have seen Ministers coming out in favour of one approach at one time, and then changing their approach later. I will consult with the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board and I will inform the Hon. Member and the House as soon as possible as to what he intends to do this year.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ON PRICES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Canadian Wheat Board has indicated no final payment can be expected for this year's crop, since world market prices are depressed again, since the Minister's plan for western transportation is dependent upon the money that farmers will be receiving, and if he has any hope of passing that proposal the farmers must know where their money is going to come from, will he assure farmers that the initial prices they receive will be at least the same as they are getting presently for their grain, even though they do not expect a final payment next year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not intend to instruct my hon. friend on the meaning of initial payments. They vary from year to year depending on the grain situation at any particular time. However, I must say that I welcome his approach to reassuring western farmers. I welcome the implication, at least, in what he says, that the Bill on the western rail initiative should be introduced in this House as soon as we can. I am trying to convince my critics on the other side that it would be a very good idea to do so soon in order to bring about as much certainty as we can in this area of the Canadian economy.

HUNGER STRIKE BY LEADER OF FARM SURVIVAL ASSOCIATION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and is supplementary to the question posed by my colleague from Nepean-Carleton. The Minister will know that farm bankruptcies are continuing at record rates and that, over the last year, there have been a number of representations on this issue to the Government. Is the Minister aware that a young Canadian farmer is now in jail and on a hunger strike, and will stay on that hunger strike until there is a Government response which deals with this crisis in family farms?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker.

PLANNED DEMONSTRATION ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I would like to indicate to the Minister of Finance that on Monday, March 14, there will be several hundred people here demonstrating in support of that farmer because they know full well that they have been led on, for the last year at least, by broken Liberal promises of legislation and other assistance to farmers. Is the Minister aware that this demonstration will occur, and is he prepared to respond so that not only will these demonstrators not create additional problems for themselves and the Government, but so that this young farmer will not be forced to continue on a hunger strike which may in fact affect his health?

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, it will be a pleasure to answer the Hon. Member's question. Actually, I am rather surprised at the ignorance of some Members of the Opposition with respect to what the Department of Agriculture has done in assisting producers who are in serious financial difficulty. When the budget was brought down on June 28, it was announced that producers in financial difficulty would have access to $100 million per year. This year, since the program has been very popular, the Minister announced that an additional $30 million would be earmarked for this purpose, and more recently, a further $20 million was made available, which means that producers who are in serious financial difficulty will have access to another $150 million which will be used in providing relief from high interest rates. This year, the Farm Credit Corporation's rate was changed three times. Those who are in financial difficulty will be borrowing at 9¼ per cent. I think people should know these facts.

Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to another program. Through the Farm Credit Corporation, it will be possible to refinance loans every ten years instead of every thirty years. Furthermore, I think we should realize that in this country, there are tens of thousands of egg, milk, poultry and grain producers who are very satisfied with their present financial situation.

TRADE

BRANCH PLANT EXPORT CONTROLS—REQUEST THAT STUDIES BE TABLED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of International Trade. During the last two days I have asked questions about confidential documents from the 1960s in which senior Government officials said that up to 75 per cent of our branch plants were prohibited from exporting around the world. In response the Minister of Trade said that I am studying ancient history.

Well, Madam Speaker, this morning I have a Cabinet document from July 3, 1980, where the sponsoring Minister is the Hon. Herb Gray, Minister of Indusry, Trade and Commerce. The thrust of this document is the same, that many of our branch plants are still operating under export controls and inhibitions. They are saying the same thing here as they said in the documents in the 1960s. Many other studies are also referred to in this document regarding controls on export performance of branch plants. Will the Acting Prime Minister make a commitment to table all the studies referred to in this document concerning export controls which are placed on our branch plants?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not know about all the documents referred to, but I have a bit of experience having been Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce for the best part of four years. That experience taught me that, indeed, some branch plants of American firms and others in Canada were not exporting as much as they should have. Indeed, there were instances where they were not exporting at all. The name of the game throughout the years has been to try to convince, cajole at times, these companies and sometimes help them financially—sure, there is nothing wrong with that. There has been a process of great accentuation of exports from American branch plants in Canada. That is part of the progress we have seen in Canada over the years.

Mr. Chrétien: That is why they are in Oshawa.

Mr. Pepin: That is why they are all over the place now. That situation in Canada, particularly the development of the product mandate approach, has been one of the main features of the evolution of the Canadian economy in recent years. So why rehash the past?

Mr. Broadbent: 1980 is not exactly ancient history.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I am not exactly rehashing the past. This Cabinet document is dated July 3, 1980.

Mr. Lalonde: What are you doing with stolen documents?

Mr. Nystrom: They say on page 47 of the document "the Foreign Investment Review Act as it now stands is seen as an inadequate tool".

Mr. Chrétien: Where is the honour? That is a stolen document.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, these are the major problems facing our branch plants, and FIRA as it stands today is not adequate, so why did the Cabinet turn down the recommendations made by Herb Gray in 1980? Why has the Cabinet not acted on the 1980 campaign promise and the commitment in the Throne Speech of 1980 to strengthen FIRA? Why has the Government not acted over all these years, in light of all this evidence from the 1960s, 1970s, and now the 1980s?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have given a couple of indications of the progress which has been made. Now we have FIRA which can decide in each particular case if a certain project is in the Canadian interest. One of the features, one of the criteria of the Act is the intent of a particular applicant to export.

Mr. Deans: Do we ever enforce the requirements? No.

Mr. Pepin: I am quite sure that occasionally you have cases—life is never as simple as the NDP sees it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: You have cases where—

Mr. Broadbent: It is as miserable as the Liberals make it.

Mr. Pepin: —FIRA and the Ministers have to decide if it is in the Canadian interest to accept a foreign-owned company in Canada which has no particular export program.

Mr. Nystrom: Answer the question.

Mr. Pepin: Then the FIRA people and the Minister responsible may say on balance it is better to have it in Canada, because it will give employment, than not to have it at all. "To govern is to choose".

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's.

FISHERIES

STATIONING OF CBC FILM CREW ON ANTI-SEAL HUNT VESSEL

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, my question is for my good friend, the Minister of Fisheries, and it relates to the latest CBC outrage in putting a film crew abroad the Sea Shepherd. They have done some outrageous things in their day, but this has to take the cake. I ask the Minister what his or his Department's view is on this issue, and what action he has taken to have this crew taken off the Sea Shepherd and get them doing something productive? Perhaps he can get them a fishing licence or something, anything, that would get them away from spending taxpayers' money on this useless and completely insulting exercise.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: Shame.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I hear that the sentiments of outrage expressed by the Hon. Member are also shared on all sides of the House. The House has expressed its unanimous support for our sealers through two resolutions. Then to have the CBC today play into the hands of those people, who just want to attract the media, by having one of their reporters and camera crews on one of those boats, the sole purpose of which is to attract the media as the Hon. Member says, is really totally insensitive.

Mr. McGrath: Outrageous.

• (1200)

Mr. De Bané: And outrageous, as the Hon. Member for St. John's East says. I hope the CBC will listen to the unanimous point of view of the House and stop giving publicity to a group of people who collect money from the general public to wine and dine, and then threaten to ram into the boats of the sealers, while actually they manage to collide on the first ice and then spend their money on booze or drinks to attract the media. It is totally outrageous.

MR. SHIELDS—RECONSIDERATION OF BILL C-10

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents in the riding of Athabasca. The purpose of the petition, signed by 35 residents of Glendon, Alberta, is to register their opposition to any interference in the affairs of churches or voluntary organizations by the Government. In particular, they oppose any action or legislation that might empower the courts or any governmental body to force churches or voluntary organizations to retain in their employ or membership those whose homosexual, heterosexual or other moral or ethical activities, characters or lifestyles are contrary to the beliefs held by the said churches or organizations.

The nature of this petition is to request that Parliament not approve Bill C-10 or any successor or like Bill and, if approving it in spite of this petition, to make first the necessary amendments to determine that no such interference in the affairs of churches or voluntary organizations be permitted.

The petitioners hope that in Madam Speaker's examination of this petition you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency of their plea, and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral of this petition to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs at the earliest possible moment.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Thursday, March 10, 1983, consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Francis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the Committee rose on Thursday, March 10, 1983, Clause 1 was under consideration and the Minister of State for Finance had the floor.

On Clause 1—Value of Benefits

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order concerning the very complex nature of Bill C-139. Researchers have brought to my attention—and I concur with them—that in a legal sense there is incorrect nomenclature in the Bill. It is confusing to begin with, but if the references made therein are wrong, the people who have to translate the passage of the Bill into the Act will not know whether the references are made to the Act or to the Bill. They will have a very difficult time deciphering what has gone on when the Bill passes through the House of Commons.

For example, I refer Hon. Members to page 52, about two-thirds of the way down the page, where Subclause (17) of Clause 12 reads:

Subsection (8) is applicable with respect to transfers occurring after November 12, 1981.

Is that reference to Subsection (8) a Subsection of the Act, which would be the correct nomenclature, or does it really mean Subclause (8) which would refer to the Bill? I would submit that it should actually read Subclause (8), but it does not; it reads "Subsection (8)", which is actually a reference to the Act itself. Am I correct in that understanding? If so, I would point out that there is an inconsistency throughout the Bill.

Next I draw the attention of Hon. Members to page 47 of Bill C-139, again about two-thirds of the way down the page, where adjacent to "(6)" there is a reference made to Subsection 20(8) of the said Act. Then on page 48 there is a reference under Subclause (8) to Subsection 20(14) of the said Act.

Returning to the item on page 52 to which I drew Hon. Members' attention, it either refers to Subclause (8) of Clause 12 of the Bill or Subsection (8) of Section 20 of the Income Tax Act. Therefore, it becomes very unclear what the Bill refers to when it uses the word "Subsection". The Bill seems to be littered with a number of apparent inconsistencies.

If Hon. Members will direct their attention to page 52a, the bottom line thereof, they will see a reference wherein the Subsection and Subclause are clearly distinguished, as substantiated by the reference to Subclause (4) of Clause 11 of the Bill. This would refer us back to page 37 where we find Clause 11(4), which reads:

• (1210)

Section 18 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (3) thereof, the following subsections:

The Bill goes on from there. I am concerned with the word "Subclause." It should be used consistently with reference to a Bill of this House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are right.

Mr. Anguish: The word "Subsection" should refer explicitly to the Income Tax Act. There are many inconsistencies throughout Bill C-139 which make it very confusing whether the reference is to the Bill or to the Income Tax Act, not only for Members of the House, but also for those who have to translate the information once the Bill passes through the House.

If I am correct in the observations I have made, what are we going to do to clear up this very apparent inconsistency in Bill C-139?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I understand that we are continuing consideration of Clause 1 of the Bill before us. We have dealt with a number of Sections, none of which it seems to me were referenced by the Hon. Member who has just spoken. He did begin by making reference to Clause 17. My submission to the Chair and to Hon. Members is that we really cannot, under the pretext of one Hon. Member's interpretation of the Section, move from one Section to another. For example, the Hon. Member indicated the problem was interpersed throughout the Bill. The only way in which we can deal with this item is to deal with it in the context of the matter before Hon. Members. If the matter affects Clause 1, which we are in the middle of considering, that is the only reasonable way we can attempt to come to grips with the objections, suggestions or interpretations of Hon. Members on any aspect of the Bill. Otherwise, it would become hopeless to cope with.

On the thrust of the argument made by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, I would appreciate having the observations in writing. I am told the Department of Justice has recommended a different way of numbering and a different way to describe. It is new, but that is recent advice from the Department. I would like the opportunity of giving the Hon. Member the Department's view on that. However, I think it ought not to interfere with the regular business of this Committee.

The Chairman: I wonder if the Chair could observe that the Bill is drafted with reference to legislation, in which case the references are in terms of Sections. For purposes of consideration in the House, we refer to Clauses. Is this the source of confusion for the Hon. Member?

Mr. Anguish: No, Mr. Chairman, that is not the source of confusion. I disagree with the Minister, with all due respect, but I believe we should get this problem clarified and cleared up before we proceed with this Bill because it could very well be wasted time. In some cases within Bill C-139, references are made in the Bill to delete or go back to a Subsection. Since the word "Subsection" is used throughout Bill C-139 instead of "Subclause", it is very confusing whether or not the references are to the Bill itself.

The Chairman: I would draw the Hon. Member's attention to the fact that the draft before us relates to existing Statutes. It is a practice of the House to refer to Statutes by Section, whereas with consideration by the House, the practice is to refer to Clauses. It appears that is the point which the Hon. Member has not fundamentally grasped.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I think the Hon. Member may well have a point but it is a very confusing one. He has gone through a number of pages and mentioned a number of Sections. The ones he has mentioned I cannot find any quick fault with, but he may well be right. In any event, what he has said by way of representation today has undoubtedly been taken down in Hansard and we will be able to go over the matter in precise detail.

We are presently dealing with Clause 1 of the Bill with respect to automobile standby charges and two or three other matters. I do not believe there are any of the types of things of which the Hon. Member is speaking in Clause 1. Therefore, we could proceed with Clause 1. I think, though, that what the Hon. Member has raised is important, and if in fact what he has raised is the case, then it could be that a good many parts of this Bill are incomprehensible to everyone, including people in the legal drafting business, and obviously the House cannot deal with it.

Mr. Anguish: That is why it should be cleared up now.

Mr. Blenkarn: We all know that the Income Tax Act is incomprehensible anyway, but if it is so incomprehensible that it cannot be put together in an Act that some persons can read, then the incomprehensibility goes beyond the ability of the House to deal with it. However, that matter can be dealt with at the next sitting after other Members have had a chance to understand what the Hon. Member has been saying. Therefore, I suggest we follow the Minister's advice and proceed with Clause 1 regarding the automobile standby charges. I cannot see that any of the concerns which the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake raises as concerns are within the ambit of Clause 1.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, I could agree to that and will not unduly delay the business of the House any longer if you can provide me with the assurance that at the next sitting of the Committee of the Whole dealing with Bill C-139 we will, in fact, deal with this problem that I have brought up today. If I can have the assurance of the House and the Chairman that we will do that, I will not delay the discussions any longer.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I thought I had indicated it would be my intention to try to understand the objection more fully, which I think is the Chair's interpretation of the objection, have the officials look at it and prepare a response for the Hon. Member. When we come to the first Section in which it would be pertinent, if we are still not in agreement I think that would be the appropriate time to deal with it.

The Chairman: Is that agreeable to the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake?

Mr. Anguish: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, are we on Clause 1 now?

The Chairman: Yes, we are on Clause 1.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, after our discussion yesterday, is the Minister prepared to delete the Clause?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: The view on this side of the House is that it is a bad Clause because it is unfair, Mr. Chairman. People in similar circumstances are treated very differently under this Clause. It is basically unfair. Does the Minister share the view that the Clause is unfair?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, we had a considerable amount of debate on this yesterday and under no circumstance was the Hon. Member able to show that this Clause is unfair. In fact, I would challenge the Hon. Member now to spend a little time and show us where his claim is justified. We stressed yesterday that this Clause in the Bill is based on principles of fairness and should be promoted because of those principles. I challenge him to show otherwise.

Mr. Hawkes: We will be happy to. It may take the rest of the day to give about 1,002 examples, but we will do that.

Our other view is that the Clause is unenforceable and thus brings the whole tax system into disrepute. Does the Minister share the view that it is, in reality, an unenforceable Clause and therefore likely to bring the whole tax system into disrepute?

Mr. Fisher: I do not think this Clause is unenforceable. The Hon. Member knows, or should know after yesterday's debate, that we have had over 12 years' experience with this particular tax measure. If the Hon. Member does not know that, he should not be wasting the time of the House.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Minister indicate to the House whether or not it is the responsibility of the employer or the employee to report the presumed benefit to income?

Mr. Fisher: It is both. Again, the Hon. Member should know that because the practice has not changed from the one established over the last 12 years. The Hon. Member should check with his accountants and his constituents. He will find that they know how to do this because they have had plenty of experience with it.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Minister indicate to the House what the penalties are to the employer and what the penalties are to the employee in the tax law for failing to report?

Mr. Fisher: There are normal penalties and interest payments that are made by all taxpayers when it is found that they have done things improperly or have done things with malice.

Mr. Hawkes: Normal penalties? Failure to report this benefit as income is failure to report income under the tax Act? If someone fails to report that income, are they potentially liable to a jail sentence?

Mr. Fisher: The requirements here are the same as they are for all measures. The penalties will range from small financial penalties and small amounts of financial interest, all the way up to severe penalties and jail sentences if there is a gross abuse of the law.

However, I suggest again to the Hon. Member that is picking a very extreme example here. It would be much better for him to check any specific cases either with his accountant or National Revenue.

Mr. Hawkes: According to the Income Tax Act of Canada, if I use a company-owned vehicle to drive from my home to my place of work, is that personal use or business use?

Mr. Fisher: It is personal use.

Mr. Hawkes: If I stop and see a customer on the way, is that personal use or business use?

Mr. Fisher: I suggest that the taxpayer would have to review his circumstances. We seem to feel here that it would probably be business use, but it would be something where the taxpayer would be well advised to consider reviewing the circumstances in the specific instance.

Mr. Hawkes: Suppose that I work for an employer who has no garage facilities and I happen to have garage facilities at my home, given the nature of Canadian winters. If I provide my garage facilities to my employer in wintertime free of charge and therefore have to drive the vehicle from the garage to work in the morning so it is available for work, is that personal use or business use?

Mr. Fisher: The practice has not changed over the past 12 years. Let us establish that. The Hon. Member is asking questions, the answers to which he should already know. He should be able to advise his constituents on these events because none of this has been changed by the current Bill. There is no change. If the Hon. Member cannot do that, then he does not understand the Act as it previously existed.

Mr. Hawkes: I suggest to the Hon. Member that there is anywhere between a 300 per cent and a 1,000 per cent increase in this tax. It makes it much more important with respect to revenue and it makes it much more important to the taxpayer. That 2 per cent rate is a 100 per cent increase in the time of six and five, but the addition of operating costs makes that potential increase enormous, depending upon whether one has a lemon.

Is it presently the common practice of the Government of Canada for Cabinet Ministers to be picked up at their home and driven to the office?

Mr. Fisher: I can quote for the Hon. Member a policy document which is circular No. 1978-16, dated April 16, 1978, which indicates that if any Cabinet Minister uses his vehicle for personal use, he pays the standby charge. Such personal use includes being picked up at his home and driven to his office. Therefore, the individual Cabinet Minister is liable for payment of the standby charge in the same way that any business person would be.

Mr. Hawkes: If the Prime Minister of Canada has an automobile which is worth approximately $100,000, I presume that because he is picked up at home and brought to work, the 2 per cent standby charge would be based on that $100,000 automobile?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I assume that the same rules would apply to the vehicle and the situation for the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, as well as to others who have vehicles provided by an employer who happens to be a Government, whether federal, provincial or municipal.

Mr. Hawkes: If the chauffeur keeps that automobile at home and brings it to the Prime Minister's residence, he is going from home to the place of business. The chauffeur then has to use the 2 per cent standby charge on the value of that $100,000 automobile, is that correct?

Mr. Cosgrove: My last answer would apply as well. The same thing would apply to the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, possibly with some modification of the role of the Prime Minister under some circumstances where, for example, he would be accompanied by security and police personnel, and it is viewed that his travelling at any time and at any place would be public business.

Mr. Hawkes: The question concerns the tax liability of the chauffeurs who serve Cabinet Ministers. When they bring the vehicle from their home to the Cabinet Minister's place of residence, that must be construed, according to what we have heard earlier today, as personal use for travelling from home to the place of business. Are the chauffeurs who serve the Cabinet of Canada required to take that into income?

Mr. Fisher: Again, this is a case for a specific interpretation and examination by Revenue Canada. For example, if the chauffeur is required to drive from his home to pick up the Minister or any other passenger in the line of business and the car is only used in that capacity, then it would obviously be defined as business use, just as it would be defined as business use if a salesman went from his home to a customer's premises as his first stop of the day.

Let us bear in mind that the Hon. Member is again picking very extreme examples. He is picking examples that are best handled by specific examinations by Revenue Canada. The chauffeur or the salesman, or any other business person, is well advised simply to check with Revenue Canada to determine whether the activity is acceptable or not in a specific instance. If there is no personal benefit, then there will be no tax liability. If it is business use or employment-related use, there will be no tax liability.

Mr. Hawkes: I came to the House with the mistaken impression that it was the business of Parliamentarians to decide how people should be taxed. Repeatedly, the Government is telling us that it is the business of bureaucrats to decide how people should be taxed. I suggest to Government Members that it is a violation of the basic principle for the existence of the House.

I will come back to a very simple question. Are all the chauffer-driven limousines serving the Cabinet of Canada worth the same amount of money, or does the value of those chauffeur-driven limousines vary? Are some more expensive than others?

• (1230)

Mr. Fisher: I must apologize, Mr. Chairman, but I missed the last part of the Hon. Member's question. If he would be good enough to repeat it, I will try to answer it.

Mr. Hawkes: It is a simple question. Are all the chauffeur-driven limousines serving the Cabinet of Canada of the same value or are some more expensive than others?

Mr. Cosgrove: I suppose that question is the same as asking whether all the chauffeur-driven limousines of the Government of Alberta are worth the same amount, or whether all the chauffeur-driven limousines of the Government of British Columbia are worth the same amount, or whether all of the chauffeur-driven limousines of the Government of New Brunswick are treated the same, or whether all of the chauffeur-driven limousines of the Government of the Greater Montreal district are treated the same, or whether the chauffeur-driven limousines of all of the Government of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto are the same, or whether the chauffeur-driven limousines of all the—

Mr. Hawkes: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think I have a "yes". That is all I need. I would like to ask another question.

Mr. Fisher: I rise on a point of order. I believe it is standard practice in Committee that only one person has the floor at one time, and it is not up to the Hon. Member to determine when the Minister has finished.

The Chairman: The Minister of State for Finance has the floor. As far as I know, he has not completed his answer.

Some Hon. Members: Filibuster!

Mr. Cosgrove: No, I have not, Mr. Chairman. Quite frankly, it would take me a month to go into the specific cases involving approximately 10,000 situations calling for chauffeur-retained limousines across the country. Quite frankly, I do not think that that is a useful exercise for the House to pursue, whether this happens to be a situation involving the Government of Canada or any other Government or organization which employs chauffeur-driven limousines in the country.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I was first challenged to give a concrete example of unfairness.

Mr. Fisher: You haven't done it yet.

Mr. Hawkes: "You haven't done it yet", he says.

Mr. Fisher: That's right.

Mr. Hawkes: Consider this example. We have, say, 100 chauffeurs in the world. Let us assume for one minute that their take-home pay is exactly the same, $15,000 a year. Let us also assume that all of them use their limousines for personal use over a distance of 12,000 kilometres a year. Do they all pay the same amount of tax? The answer is clearly "no".

Mr. Fisher: You're missing the point.

Mr. Hawkes: The tax they pay is based on the value of the limousines which their employers require them to drive. If someone gets stuck with the job of driving the Prime Minister of Canada in a limousine worth $120,000, the tax bill is a great deal different from that of someone whose employer requires him to drive a Toyota.

Mr. Fisher: This is ludicrous.

Mr. Hawkes: This is not ludicrous. This the first example of fairness or the lack of it. To return to the answer started by the Minister the other day, he was telling us about his car troubles as a Minister of the Crown and the fact that he had a lemon. One of the characteristics of a lemon is that it requires a great deal of money to be spent on maintenance. The poor chauffeur who must drive a car which is frequently in a garage must pay 24 per cent of those maintenance charges because someone bought him a lemon and makes him drive it. Someone who bought a good car which requires no maintenance pays no tax. That is the first example of unfairness. I challenge the Minister to tell me that that is not unfair.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, it is obviously the choice of the individual whether he wants to drive the car for personal use at all. That is all. There is no unfairness in that. I would assume that even the Hon. Member opposite could make that decision for himself. He either wants to or does not want to drive it for personal use. If he decides to drive it for personal use, of his own free will, then he does so knowing the tax consequences. Therefore, if he has a Cadillac and his neighbour, another chauffeur, has a Toyota, in both cases they decide for themselves, as reasonable adults, whether they will take advantage of their cars for personal use. From that point on they do so knowing the cost, because they are reasonable adults and can figure it out for themselves. The Government has made it very clear: in both cases, it is 2 per cent per month. That is the line. The choice is the taxpayer's choice. There is no one forcing that taxpayer to drive that car for personal use. The examples chosen by the Hon. Member avoid that fact.

As a footnote, I would add that I doubt anyone is tooling around town on personal business in a $120,000 limousine of the kind which belongs to the Prime Minister. I simply do not think that is reasonable.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, can the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary explain to the House how, on January 1 of any given year, I am to know exactly what the maintenance costs will be on my vehicle over the 12 months ahead in order to make this intelligent decision?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, one obviously cannot make that decision because one does not know whether the car will break down or operate smoothly for the year. There can be estimates based on experience with any vehicle. But again, the individual taxpayer makes the choice concerning personal use, whether he can calculate the operating costs in advance or not. Just as the Hon. Member has paid for the personal use of his car in after-tax dollars, so we are asking people with company-supplied cars to pay for personal use in after-tax dollars. That is all.

The Hon. Member opposite takes his after-tax dollars and uses them to buy insurance and gasoline, to carry out repairs and for maintenance of all sorts. Equally, if a salesman wants to use a company-owned car for personal use, then that salesman pays for the personal use in after-tax dollars. There is nothing more uncomplicated or fair than that. The Hon. Member can make it complicated, but he is the only one who believes his own examples.

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh?

Mr. Hawkes: I find it incredible that the Government consistently fails to recognize the difference between the goal and the reality of a piece of legislation. The first issue I raised with the Government today was whether or not this is a fair tax, whether it affects all Canadians in similar circumstances in similar ways.

Let me give two further examples. Let us assume that over a year 10 per cent or 12,000 kilometres of 120,000 kilometres driven by a chauffeur in a company car are for personal use. Someone else working for a company drives a car 24,000 kilometres and 12,000 of those are for personal use. With regard to the 120,000 kilometres driven in one company car, 108,000 are driven on company business. The operating costs of that car will be enormously more than the one which is driven 24,000 kilometres. The chauffeur who drives an automobile which is in worse shape and breaks down faster pays more tax than the one with the better automobile, although they both drive the same 12,000 kilometres. Tell me how that is fair.

Mr. Fisher: It is the same answer. It is the taxpayer's personal choice to drive those 12,000 kilometres. If the taxpayer chooses to do so, then the taxpayer derives a personal benefit and pays tax on it. He does so as a reasonable adult with the full knowledge of the likely liabilities which will be involved at the tax end.

Mr. Hawkes: Suppose that a Minister of the Crown says to his chauffeur: "There is no parking at my house; therefore, I want you to take the car home every evening and bring it back every morning". Does that chauffeur have any choice other than to give up the job? Are you not making them liable for tax the minute the employer tells them they have to do that?

• (1240)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, again that is a very extreme, hypothetical example but in my opinion that would be an employment-related activity and the Hon. Member's favoured chauffeur would not be liable for tax because it would be a condition of his job that he do this. Again, it is not a matter of personal benefit because the individual involved is, number one, enhancing his business-related activities rather than his personal activities and, number two, does not have that element of choice. I would think that if those two conditions prevail, then the taxpayer is not liable.

The Chairman: The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member for Calgary West but he has had a period of 20 minutes. In Committee of the Whole, he can rise again after another speaker has spoken.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, carrying on that same line of questioning, I would like to broaden it out from just Ministers and Government officials and talk about executives. Concerning this question of the assumption of a chauffeur having to pay for the cost to go home and back, in the old days the chauffeur used to live in the residence of his employer. That was the traditional way. That does not occur now because people want to live in their own homes. Let me give an example. If a chauffeur drives a Minister to the airport and then drives home, does the Parliamentary Secretary consider that personal expenditure?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry but I am not going to get into the business of advising chauffeurs, whether their bosses be Ministers or business people or whoever. I think we are carrying the thing to an extreme here.

I would remind the Hon. Member of the simple principle that, if there is a personal benefit rather than an employment-related benefit, then we will ask the taxpayer to pay tax on that personal benefit. It is plain and simple.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, this is going to work out that it will be a personal benefit for Ministers and senior executives but it is going to hit the little salesmen. He is the one who is really being hurt. The Hon. Member talks about the 2 per cent on the car. What about the cost of that chauffeur who drives people around for their personal business? What about that cost, because that is about twice the price of the cost of the car. Is that being taken into consideration?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, under the guidelines directing Ministers' use of their cars, I can tell the Hon. Member exactly that the guidelines say that a Minister to whom a car is made available for his personal as well as his official use shall pay to his Department the minimum monthly standby charge provided under Section 6(2) of the Income Tax Act. That is plain and simple. The Ministers are doing exactly what every business person does.

In reply to the Hon. Member's question, if there is an operating expense that is attributable to the vehicle by the employer, then that operating expense is prorated over the personal use of the vehicle.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, could the Parliamentary Secretary tell me exactly what that standby expense is for a chauffeur of a Minister or a corporation, I do not care which?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it the cost is simply prorated in. If the operating costs can be assigned to a vehicle and prorated out over the personal use as well as the business use, then that is what is considered to be the benefit here.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, I have another question. Executives today build in a work function within their cars. They have computers, telephones and so on, so that as they travel from home to work they are always on call. Does the Parliamentary Secretary consider that personal or business use?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, again the principle is that if there is an employment-related benefit, if the employer or the business involved benefit from the use of the vehicle, then it is not personal use. The case that the Hon. Member has raised would probably be subject to interpretation. If the computer were there and the telephones were there and the reading lamps were there but never used, or there was no demonstrable benefit for the company, then the taxpayer might have to consider that to be personal use even though all the equipment appears to point in the other direction.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to tell me how this is going to be checked out. How will the Department know what the executive or the Minister is doing in his car? How is it going to come up with a reasoning on this one?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, there is no mystery to this whatsoever because, as I explained to the Hon. Member previously, the Department has had 12 years' experience deciding these questions. There is nothing new in the regulations; there are no new wrinkles and no new interpretations included in this Act that will affect those rulings. So the Hon. Member simply has to look at the existing body of experience and that will give him a reasonable guide on these interpretations.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, really what I am trying to get to is the difference between the way they are treating executives and Ministers and the way they are treating the average salesman who has to hustle his butt around this country to sell our products. That is what I am talking about.

I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary, if a salesman puts in an Osborne computer and does all his sales reports within his car, and if he puts a telephone in his car so that he can be reached by his office at all times, and he is reached between his home and his office, would that be considered a personal expense?

Mr. Cosgrove: In English or in French?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, again those are things that have been worked out over the years. I would like to indicate to the Hon. Member that the exception made for automobile salesmen is the one clear-cut case where people take their vehicles home and benefit their businesses by doing so. Because it is the one clear-cut case, it is given a clear status in the Act. All the other cases have developed over the years as matters of interpretation and discussion between the taxpayer and Revenue Canada, and if the taxpayer can show that the business is benefiting, that productive activity is resulting from his use of the vehicle, then that will be tax exempt. If the taxpayer cannot demonstrate that, if he finds, because of his record-keeping or because of inadequate proof, that the car is considered personal, then he will pay tax.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, I am going to recommend to all the salesmen in my riding, and I was not talking about automobile salesmen, to turn their car into a work station and that would solve their problem, although it may be a bit expensive. Does the Parliamentary Secretary appreciate the damage he is doing to leasing companies in this country?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the Hon. Member that if salesmen in his area turn their cars into work stations, then they will possibly become much more productive, the Hon. Member will have done a real service to the wealth and productivity of his riding, and all of us will be grateful and thank him for it. On the other hand, if he is urging people simply to find phony ways to get around the law, then they may not come back and thank him for that later on. I would urge him to be a little careful in the emphasis that he places on all of these matters.

I received a letter from a book publishing salesman who indicated that, because of the weight of books and samples that he had to carry around, he could not really be expected to use the vehile for personal use. He said that every time he wanted to put his family into the car he had to unload all of these heavy books, so he never used the car for personal use. I was happy to write back to him and tell him that if he did not use the car for personal use he did not have to pay tax—a very straightforward equation.

The Hon. Member has also asked whether I am aware of the damage being done to leasing companies. I would be happy to hear more specifically from him on that.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, every leasing company in the leasing association has written to the Minister, and I have copies. It has been proven that their revenue has decreased. Furthermore, the damage which has been done to the automobile industry is that where a salesman normally turned his car in every two years because of the number of miles that he puts on it, he is now extending that to three or four years. That is having a direct impact. In fact, last month retail sales were down 8 per cent because of this law. Does he realize the impact that will have on the industry?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the exact figures. I presume this argument was raised 12 years ago when the standby charges were first introduced. I will look at those figures, if it is useful for the Hon. Member. I do recall that the question of extended leases was raised in my presence during discussions with car dealers. They indicated to me the extensions of those leases were happening prior to November, 1981, that in recent experience leases were being extended from 24 to 30 or 36-month periods. They said to me at that time that that phenomenon was not one that first appeared in November, 1981, but was one that developed over a period of time.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary did not answer my question on the automobile sector. That is what concerns me most. I want to ask one further question. Does he realize that currently salesmen who work on commission have commissions far less this year than they have had for many years previously? They are getting a double jolt from reduced income and increased taxes.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, now we are getting to the core of the problem. The Hon. Member should recognize that the salesmen he is describing will solve their problems simply by not using their cars for personal benefit. If they look at the cost involved, they will find that it is probably still the cheapest way they can conceivably obtain a car. It is a fair way. It is done with after-tax dollars. Presumably it is an acceptable way between the employer and the employee for the employee to use the car for personal benefit.

Everybody gets a fair shake because other taxpayers can look at such an arrangement and be confident that theirs is fair as well. I suggest that the salesman he has described has the choice of using the car personally or not; and, second, if he chooses to use the car for personal benefit, it is still probably the cheapest way to get such a vehicle.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, obviously the Parliamentary Secretary and his colleagues have never been in sales. They do not have to sell, only create Government expenditures. They do not know what selling is. Otherwise, we would be in a lot better position than we are today.

I believe this Bill will hurt salesmen. The bank executive has a car at his disposal to drive back and forth any time he wants. Is the Government going to set up a special federal police force to check on these people, to follow them and find out where they are going in order to find out how the car is being used?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, in 1968 I started a career in sales. I own a sales-oriented company. I continue to be a salesman today, although not quite so actively or persuasively here as I have been in other cases. I understand what salesmen have to go through, which is one reason why I am not particularly enamoured of the line of thought that the Hon. Member has put forward.

Salesmen are not stupid people. They understand the requirements they are supposed to go through, requirements which they have faced since 1971. They are very manageable requirements; I know that. When I make comments about personal use of a vehicle and the expense involved, I speak from personal experience. That is the way I purchased my car or enjoyed the use of my car. I urge the Hon. Member not to get too extreme, at least in my case, because I might be able to offer him some contrary examples based on my own experience.

I do not think we need a great, big federal police force because we ask the taxpayers to report on their own. These taxpayers know, as they have found over the past 12 years, that there are established ways to keep receipts and records and to do their own accounting which will satisfy Revenue Canada.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary another question. He tells me he was a salesman.

Mr. Fisher: I still am.

Mr. Fennell: He is trying to sell himself. This is obviously totally different from what he did before. We need to have quality in the profession. As a Member of that profession, can the Parliamentary Secretary advise this Committee whether it would be better for a salesman to buy his own car and receive a mileage allowance from his employer, or to accept a car from the employer?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is quite right; the success of a sales campaign depends on the quality of the product. In my particular case it has been going downhill a little and it worries me greatly!

The Hon. Member asked me whether it would be better to get a car and take mileage or get a company car and pay the tax on the personal benefit. That is obviously the choice of the individual. In either case, if he gets a mileage payment from his company that is tax-free because it is a reimbursement for business-related use. If he gets a company car and uses it in business, that is tax-free because it is business-related. He buys his own vehicle with after-tax dollars. He paid tax for the personal use. With the company car, the benefit is assigned to his income and he pays tax, so again he has personal use of the car with after-tax dollars. It is up to the individual salesman. It is not up to Parliament to advise people on that kind of decision.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, this is an important point. There are salesmen who will be interested in this. Is there a limit put in by the Government on the amount per kilometre that they receive?

Mr. Fisher: No, Mr. Chairman, but it must be backed with proper record-keeping and receipts and be seen as a reasonable exercise, not as some inventive exercise which Revenue Canada may view as simply a way of circumventing the measure.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary and his Government seem to know a lot more about the cost of running a car than the average citizen.

Mr. Cosgrove: Or you.

Mr. Fennell: Yes, I acknowledge that. Would it not be wise to put a limit on the price per kilometre for city and highway driving? I can see a scenario where they could use a price per city mile and the car be driven in the country all the time. In effect, the salesman would pay for his own personal use out of the excessive amount allowed per kilometre. Let me add something else. I feel that even the amount the House of Commons permits us is excessive.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I would agree with what the Hon. Member has suggested, although it is presented in a constructive way. It would lead us into the kind of trap which the Hon. Member for Calgary West suggested where you get gross unfairness because somebody is in the country, somebody is in the city, somebody is out West, somebody is in the East, somebody is in a high-cost area and somebody else in a low-cost area. The Government would have to work out all kinds of zones, complex mileage allowances and so on. We cannot get into that. It would add horribly to the complexity of the problem.

I want the Hon. Member to bear in mind that we are dealing here with a system that is well established. People know what to expect. People have an idea of the reasonable limits within which they can operate and be accepted without trouble by the tax Department. I ask him to bear that in mind rather than coming to grips with a lot of complexities.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Order, please. It being one o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the Bill later this day.

Progress reported.

The Deputy Chairman: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2.)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Blaker in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the Committee adjourned at 1 p.m., the Hon. Member for Ontario had the floor. In his absence the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

On Clause 1—Value of Benefits

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister two or three questions and then move an amendment. Does the Minister not agree that if a person was to buy an automobile four years ago for $10,000, under the provisions of these rules, assuming he used the car the maximum amount for personal use, the personal use cost to him would be $2,400 a year and would remain $2,400 a year, no matter how old the car got or how little value the car really had?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, assuming that he is using it to the optimum, yes, the Hon. Member has accurately and I believe fairly interpreted the provision.

Mr. Blenkarn: So that the effect is that as the car gets older and is worth less and less, the standby charge, which forms part of the taxable income of the employee, remains the same. If a car was bought four years ago and was worth $10,000, it would be worth about $2,200 or $2,400 on the market today, yet the standby charge could conceivably be in excess of the value of the car. Is that correct?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is using a general principle and making the assumption that cars four or five years old are not as good as a new car. It is well known, of course, that some vehicles are not as reliable for the first while as a car which is broken in for a period of time. That is well known, Mr. Chairman, by Hon. Members because we know that the maintenance and repair deals which are offered by vendors of new vehicles are all designed to serve the first 12-month period. It also assumes, Mr. Chairman, that the vehicle four or five years old is not as reliable as when it comes off the assembly line. I would think that some cars, like some Hon. Members opposite, improve with age.

Mr. Blenkarn: I would agree that the Hon. Members opposite the Minister have improved with age much more than he has. However, he has also pointed out the fact that as cars become older, they probably have greater maintenance costs. I remind him that the maintenance cost is also a taxable benefit to the employee. As the car gets older and becomes worth less money, the standby cost in relation to the value of the car becomes greater and greater and the maintenance cost becomes greater and greater and the taxable benefit becomes greater and greater, despite the fact that the fair value gets less and less. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ontario:

That Subclause 1(3) of Bill C-139 be amended by striking out line 41 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"amount in respect of its cost amount to the"

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member will know, as I indicated when we began the proceedings, that the Hon. Minister has already put an amendment to the House. We cannot have two amendments on the floor at the same time.

Mr. Pinard: Resign.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is not a bad idea either. Mr. Chairman, we have with the consent of the Committee dealt with numerous Clauses and amendments on one vote. With the consent of all Members, Mr. Chairman, and for the purpose of discussion, which appears to be the only reason for the amendment thus far, I would be prepared to accept the proposal that it be considered on the floor for discussion.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order that you raised, I think you must appreciate that we have passed the Minister's amendments by agreement. We are now dealing with the Clause as amended. The effect of what we did earlier was to agree to the passage of the Minister's amendments because we agreed that the Bill would then be debated on the basis that the Minister's amendments were incorporated and agreed by all sides as being valid amendments, accepted by all sides. So we are now dealing with the Clause as amended by the Minister.

The Deputy Chairman: Let the Chair review momentarily where we are, at this point, procedurally. I will not go back to the original motion or point of order made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North; the House is familiar with those.

Yesterday Hon. Members agreed to discuss together a number of Clauses and Subclauses. On several occasions I indicated to the House that we would refer to that group of Clauses and Subclauses by simply mentioning Clause 4. That has been dealt with and those Clauses and Subclauses and the Minister's amendments have been carried. Late yesterday afternoon the Committee reverted to Clause 1. I understand that this morning, or perhaps late yesterday afternoon, but in either event not at a time when I was in the chair, the Hon. Minister proposed an amendment to Clause 1(3). My understanding is that that is the current status and that the amendment to Clause 1(3) is now before the Committee for debate.

Mr. Blenkarn: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Apparently I am misinformed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the effect of what we have been doing is this. When we commence debate on a Clause the Minister produces his amendment, which he moves and we agree to. But when we start the debate, we are debating the amended Clauses instead of the amendments to the Clauses, because we have agreed to accept the Minister's amendments on the basis they are technical amendments. So far that has been the case. If the Minister had produced a substantive amendment, we would not have accepted it, but he has cleared those amendments with our side so we have accepted them as technical amendments. The House has accepted the amendments. So what we are doing is debating Clause 1 as amended by the Minister and accepted by this House. The amendment that I now propose is a further amendment, so the House will then be dealing with an amendment to Clause 1.

The Deputy Chairman: That is fine. For the sake of the record, may I indicate to the Hon. Member that the Table has not been informed of that in the usual manner. Apparently this is an agreement which has perhaps been referred to in debate, but in any event I think I would have to put before the Committee now the proposal that the amendment proposed by the Minister of State for Finance to Clause 1(3) has been deemed to be accepted and accordingly Clause 1 stands amended. Is that the situation? Is that agreed?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, with respect, you used the singular—the "amendment" by the Minister. In fact, there were two amendments.

The Deputy Chairman: I have a second one which I understood had not been moved. We will now take it that both amendments put forth by the Minister of State for Finance are deemed to have been accepted and adopted by the Committee. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Agreed. Accordingly, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is in good order and the Chair finds his proposed amendment to be acceptable procedurally; so we can carry on debate in that regard.

• (1420)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment is to adopt the same type of attitude which was taken in the Senate Committee studying the proposed provisions of the Income Tax Act. The Senate in its wisdom felt that when the standby charge related to the value of an automobile, it should not relate to the original cost but to the cost as it goes down, is altered or changed over the life of the vehicle. The effect of our amendment would be to provide, if the car was worth only $2,500, a standby charge of 2 per cent of that amount per month. If it was worth $5,000, it would be 2 per cent of that amount per month, and so on.

There is no reason, in the concept of fairness, why the standby charge should remain constant through the life of the vehicle when the value of the vehicle to the owner, the value to the employer and indeed the value of the vehicle on the market, has gone down and down and down. We could have the terrible situation that if a company was not doing too well and could not afford to replace its salesman's car, the salesman would be driving around in an older, progressively rustier, beat-up car but would be stuck paying the same standby charge as was paid when the car was brand-new. That is a disgraceful situation in terms of fairness. If the whole question of the taxation of standby charges is to be fair to the people of Canada, then surely it should be fair in relation to the progressively lesser value of the car as it gets older.

Why does the Minister think that the proposal in the Bill at present is fair and the amendment should not be carried? In any sense of fairness the amendment makes sense.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated, the question of valuation is a difficult one especially when dealing with motor vehicles. I submit in seriousness to all Members that motor vehicles are of different value, work better at different times and follow no average or common pattern in so far as performance is concerned, even when two vehicles come off the assembly line one after another.

For that reason the proposal of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South was not adopted by the Government. I say this notwithstanding the fact that we have submissions from the Senate Committee. Mind you, that recommendation was not paralleled in the recommendation of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We think that in fairness to Canadian motorists and those people who are affected by, and want to take advantage of, the use of vehicles for personal reasons while in the employment of companies offering these benefits, rather than a year-by-year valuation we should take the average valuation for the vehicle over its life.

What the Hon. Member is doing in this amendment, as he has done in every amendment he placed before us, is to invite greater complexity and paper work. This offends the very thing for which they criticize the Government, that is, for not properly administering the application of this Section.

Could we imagine the situation if every taxpayer, every driver of automobiles, had in addition to keeping track of their mileage to put a year-by-year valuation on their vehicles, taking into account all of the matters affecting it?

Mr. Blenkarn: No problem.

Mr. Cosgrove: I hear the Hon. Member saying "no problem".

Mr. Blenkarn: The Blue Book tells us the value every year.

Mr. Cosgrove: He is blowing hot and cold. On the one hand he tells us that the Section as it is now is too complicated and too difficult for taxpayers to understand or manage. Yet he invites us to go through what is the most complicated and variable process of all valuation processes, that is, to put a valuation on a used motor vehicle.

I know the Hon. Member is a practising solicitor and that he has had experience in the settlement of motor vehicle claims. He knows the difficulties surrounding the valuation of motor vehicles in such suits. He knows that it is virtually impossible on a unit-by-unit or vehicle-by-vehicle basis to arrive at a valuation which is agreeable to any two people.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is just absolute nonsense.

Mr. Cosgrove: The Section as it is takes the average value and breaks it down over the life of the vehicle.

Mr. Blenkarn: No, it does not.

Mr. Cosgrove: It is not taken year by year. If the Hon. Member were really serious in his proposal and expected to achieve the same revenues under the Section, I presume he would have no quarrel with the amount of revenue expected from the first year the standby charge would be in effect. We would probably have to increase the charge from 2 per cent to something higher, because 2 per cent is based upon the value of the vehicle, not the average value. As he indicated, in the first year there may not be the expenses which there may be in the fifth year.

Therefore, he would not only have to amend the Clauses which he referred to in order to achieve the desirable revenues, which his Party has indicated is acceptable in principle, but he would have to make further amendments to the Clause. In effect, what he is proposing is an administrative monstrosity. It would be an imposition upon the owner of a vehicle who would have to come up with that valuation, demonstrate it and prove it to the officials of National Revenue as he prepared his returns each year.

Mr. Blenkarn: The amendment as filed does not refer to fair market value. It refers to the undepreciated capital cost of the vehicle. If the Minister knows anything about the way people carry automobiles on their books, he should realize that the cost is the undepreciated capital cost. What we want is to have the depreciation, as it goes on on a capital cost basis every year, be the cost on which the standby charge is calculated. It is very simple because the capital cost of the vehicle must be determined by every employer every year in the normal course of business. We are not putting the employer through any additional work. We are not complicating the matter. All we are doing is bringing some fairness into the situation.

With respect to the Minister's statement concerning the complications of this Act, he is quite right. If we had our way, we would throw most of it out for that reason. But unfortunately, the House and the people of Canada will be stuck with this Act. If you have to be stuck with it, you might as well have a little fairness brought into it. The way it is now it is totally unfair.

This whole proposal was brought to the people of Canada on the basis of increasing fairness, yet the Minister wants to be unfair. He even wants to be so unfair as to say there are revenue considerations and, therefore, he would have to increase the standby charge because he has to get all the revenue he can. He is not interested in fairness. He is interested in taxing people, employers and employees who happen to have company cars. That is what he wants to do.

What we want to do is to bring some fairness to this Section. We are saying to the Minister that the standby charge should be calculated on the basis of the capital cost of the vehicle on an annual basis to the employer. That is all. In other words, you should not pay a standby charge higher than the cost of the vehicle to the employer. That strikes me as eminently fair. But the Minister goes on to say that you cannot figure out the cost and the value of the vehicles. Presumably people could cheat. Is it not very easy to do that?

In Toronto the Minister knows that there are Blue Book values of almost every car produced anywhere in the world. The Minister knows that car values are determined all the time. He knows that provincial Governments collect the sales taxes and if someone tries to claim a car at less than fair market value originally, or less than its value as it depreciates, and it is sold as a used car to try to avoid payment of tax based on value, then it is not very long before a revenue officer is around to collect the correct amount of tax. Therefore, the arguments put by the Minister are nonsense.

The Minister then referred to the standing committee that examined the matter. Let us talk about that and let me read from the standing committee's report. On page 8 of this report, we find:

> Some have suggested that the proposed imputed benefit seemed high considering that almost the full value of the company-owned car is imputed to the user over four years. This observation overlooks the higher repair and maintenance costs that are covered by the standby charge and which generally increase with the age of the car.

That statement is in the committee report because when the committee went over the previous Ways and Means motion, the use benefit—in other words, the cost of operating the vehicle—was not to be included as a cost to the employee. But the Department in its desire to up taxes decided not to charge the employee the standby charge. The Department decided to do one thing further and add in the maintenance cost of the car attributable to personal use. In other words, the Department dramatically increased the burden on employees using company-owned vehicles. The standing committee looked at the matter. That is the reason the standing committee did not come up with the firm direction to have some sort of amortization of capital cost in determining standby charges.

The very purpose of that objection to Clause 1, when the standing committee considered this matter of maintenance costs, repair costs, licence fees, insurance costs, was that these costs were not to be attributed to employees. Now they are to be attributed to employees. That is why the standby charge should be organized in relation to the value of the vehicle and not to the original invoice purchase price.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I can only assume that when the Hon. Member referred to capital cost as being the basis for the calculation of the charge, he really meant undepreciated capital cost. That is the basis of the unamended Section. I think he meant undepreciated capital cost.

I make reference to that because the minority view of the Hon. Member, as a member of the standing committee, was not reflected in a recommendation to the Government, no doubt in part because his amendment and his view was not well thought out. The basis for his argument is that the value should be on undepreciated capital cost. That provision in the Act is a concept which applies only in certain circumstances. It would not apply as a general rule across the whole spectrum of people who conceivably would be subject to the tax, as has been the case since 1971 and is being amended.

The Hon. Member, who is attempting to assist the Government with his amendment to come up with what he perceives to be a fair method for taxation, really has proposed a way that will not work and is defective. What about the fleet situation? Firms, even though they have fleets, conceivably may not be taking capital cost allowance. It is an interesting idea but it is one that is only a partial formula and is grossly unfair to those people who cannot take advantage of fleets. The small-businessman, for instance.

We know that the majority of people who are affected by this provision do not take advantage—

Mr. Fennell: They do.

Mr. Cosgrove: The Hon. Member, with respect, has an interesting thought. It was rejected by the committee, and the Government, of course, for the reasons I have given, could not accept it. It is a defective formula. It is an unjust formula. It is a most unfair and inequitable proposal for a formula.

The Deputy Chairman: Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Burlington, may I point out to the Committee that from time to time Hon. Members appear to be coming to some agreements among themselves as to how they want to proceed. I now have an amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. It regrettably proposes to amend a Clause prior to one already accepted by the House. In the normal course it is out of order. I am assuming there is unanimous consent to go back in order to amend Clause 1(3). I think perhaps Hon. Members, either while they are on their feet or passing by the Table, could advise the Chair about some of these agreements that have been reached. It would certainly make life easier for your obedient servant!

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions for the Minister on which I need some clarification. I think what has annoyed most of the people involved with a leased vehicle is that the lease is already in effect and they have no way of backdating it or making an adjustment to it. In effect, what the Government is doing with this provision in Bill C-139 is reaching back to 1982 and placing an additional tax on the individual who is using the vehicle.

I think that is the key point of the whole debate. The Minister is reaching back a year into 1982's income and saying that the Government will impose an extra tax on an individual by reason of this provision in Bill C-139. That is the nub of the whole issue.

A number of people who have corresponded with me have proposed that the implementation of this tax be delayed until the 1983 taxation year in order to allow those who have committed themselves to a lease to make an adjustment. That is one of the matters that I would like to comment on. Why can this not be done with some more reason, and in this particular case dealing with personal use of vehicles, make the change effective in the taxation year 1983?

I think that would cause the whole matter to move more expeditiously. It would then appear to those involved that there is some justice. People can then make the adjustment to their income with their employer or make whatever other adjustments they wish in the handling of the automobile if this was implemented for the taxation year 1983. Has the Minister considered that? If we move an amendment to that effect, would he look upon it favourably?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, indeed, we have considered that request because it is one that has been made by a number of individuals and representatives of various trade organizations that have been interested in this Clause.

I would have to remind the Hon. Member for Burlington that this provision in the Act is one that has been in place since 1971. It does not come as a surprise to fleet owners or anyone else who has been affected by the charge. Indeed, business people have been conducting their affairs under this tax provision for a number of years; it does not come out of the blue. The proposed amendment is to change the rate of tax that is levied.

I gave the rationale for the Government moving to change that rate in 1981, bearing in mind the costs and other changes in the economy since 1971.

I would further point out that this is not a retroactive proposal by the Government. This was a proposal introduced in November of 1981 which was to be effective in 1982. Therefore, rather than retroactive, it is prospective.

With respect to a delay until 1983, I do understand the representations that have been made about forgetting 1982 and beginning to talk about this measure for 1983. I am told by officials, however, that two separate publications were made available by Revenue Canada in their supplement to the 1981 employers and trustees guide as well as a special release through an interpretation bulletin IT-470 which was issued early in 1982 and which brought these changes to the attention of the business community in the normal course that has been followed for the last 10 years.

Although we are sympathetic to those people who would obviously like some time to rearrange their business decisions and their budgets—of course, they would like another year to prepare for that—the Government, however, has adopted the position that the announcement of the intention to change two months before it was to happen, which was in late 1981, was adequate notice for people to conduct their affairs in 1982. I have been told by a number of chartered accountant firms that most people have in fact done that. It was not particularly complicated. It was merely a matter of changing the amounts in a practice that they had already been carrying out under the 1971 law.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Chairman, the Minister does not really answer the question at all. We are used to that, from him at any rate.

I want to read to the Minister a portion of a letter that I received. It is from the sales manager of a company who, besides supervising a number of salesmen, must arrange for the leasing of about 40 cars. In his letter he says: "The Bill does not seem to take into account the individuals who do not use the company car for private use or, as in my own case, use it infrequently". This man has his tax form now. He said: "I have been taxed on a taxable income under this new Bill of $2,834. I have an income tax rate of 27 per cent. This is costing me $765." He went on to say that upon checking the mileage of his car, the total mileage in kilometres was 24,752, of which he has calculated his private mileage to be 1,660 kilometres. He said: "Based on this calculation, it is costing me 46 cents a kilometre for the private use of this car".

His point was to ask why he would incur that sort of expense because he could drive a taxi cheaper than that. He goes on to say that he is responsible for leasing these cars and the lease is based on a two-year term based on 80,000 kilometres, 40,000 kilometres a year or 24,000 miles, which is about average. Most companies do not encourage the employee to use the car for personal use because it attracts an overcharge from the leasing company if they go beyond the agreed mileage.

What am I to answer to this constituent whose taxable income under the new Bill is an additional $2,834? It will personally cost him $765 on his return. That comes down to 46 cents a kilometre. Where is the equity and rationale behind that?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I thought I had a quick answer for the Hon. Member. Although I do not have the letter in hand, if the Hon. Member for Burlington reviews the first sentence that he read, the writer began by saying that he did not use the car for personal use.

Mr. Kempling: Or used it infrequently.

Mr. Cosgrove: If he does not use the car for personal use, he is not subject to the tax.

Mr. Kempling: He said 1,660 kilometres is what he used it for.

Mr. Cosgrove: That gets down to the question, again, of definition. "No" to me means zero. I do not know how I would qualify 16,000 kilometres. Certainly there is the exemption for personal use up to 12,000 kilometres. That provides a proportionate deduction. If the writer is unaware, I would be curious to know whether he is knowledgeable that the prorated reduction up to 12,000 kilometres has been taken in previous filings with the Department.

Mr. Kempling: I have talked to the gentleman. It is my understanding that he is in charge of leasing 40 vehicles. I am sure that he would be knowledgeable as to whether this has been checked through with his company's administration and auditors. Perhaps the difficulty is with the lack of information coming from the Department to explain this. At any rate, I will pass the Minister's comments on to him and, in fact, I will send him a transcript of this discussion so that he will have an understanding of it.

This business of personal use of cars seems to revolve around whether or not the employee is using a company car for personal use when he drives it back and forth from his home to his office or from his home to his business sales territory. Let me ask the Minister this question: If an employee is supplied a company car to conduct his business and he has a private car of his own and says that he does not use the company car for private business, what sort of document or statement would the taxpayer have to present to satisfy the Department of National Revenue that the car supplied to him by his company is not being used for personal use? What sort of a document would be acceptable?

Mr. Cosgrove: It would appear, from the preamble to the Hon. Member's question, that he intends to make a transcript of these proceedings available to individuals who have written to him. In effect, he is asking for advice to give to his constituents as to how they should file or conduct their tax returns.

First, because the Minister of State for Finance, of course, is not the Minister responsible for the administration of returns, I would be reluctant to give a definitive answer. I also suspect that the Minister of National Revenue, bearing in mind the fact that the Hon. Member for Burlington has asked for specific, individual advice, would probably invite a person asking that kind of specific and detailed question to attempt first to gain assistance through the local office of Revenue Canada. Finally, if that is not to his satisfaction, then I assume the Minister would probably consider individual cases and attempt to be helpful. However, I do not think that I should really give my advice this afternoon concerning such a situation.

Mr. Kempling: The Minister is saying that he would give an answer in the House, but does not explain how to apply the advice to a practical situation. He went into this mumbo-jumbo about being the Minister of State for Finance, saying that the Minister of National Revenue must rule on it and that the local office must become involved. Therefore, one cannot rely on any answer which the Minister gives.

Let me ask the Minister another question. Let us consider a situation where an employee is supplied with a company automobile. He drives his own car to the company premises, picks up a company automobile and drives it for a day or longer, comes back and picks up his own private automobile and drives it home. He has been using a company automobile but has not been driving it for personal purposes. The Minister would, I think, agree that that would entirely be company use of the automobile with no personal use involved. Would I be right in assuming that?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to be argumentative or unresponsive, but I am sure Hon. Members fully appreciate the years of experience which the Hon. Member for Burlington has had in this House. He has enjoyed responsibility as Whip for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. He is well aware that the practice of the House concerning the area of ministerial responsibility, particularly in Committee of the Whole when various Ministers are before the House, is that questions germane to a particular Minister are asked. Those which are the responsibility of some other Minister are not really germane to the discussion.

I think he is being very unfair when he raises a question which is obviously the responsibility of some other Ministry and directs it to myself or to my officials, who could only guess or try to be helpful. First, it is improper and I think the Hon. Member knows that. He is being very unfair. I do not think he is really advancing the legislation before us, especially at a time when the legislation is so important. Many Canadians are waiting for this Bill to be passed and looking for refunds.

Mr. Blenkarn: You're not going to pay them, anyway.

Mr. Cosgrove: I do not think he should take the time of the House dealing with questions which should be directed to some other Minister.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Chairman, I find this to be incredible. Here we have a Minister who is responsible for seeing the passage of the Bill through the House. We have stacks of letters from people asking us to interpret the Act that we are passing. We ask the Minister a question and he sloughs it off on to another Minister and says that I am being unfair.

What I am trying to establish is this. If an employee is supplied with a company car, he drives his own car to the company premises, picks up the company car and then drives it around on the business of the company, and then drives his own car back home, that is not personal use of the automobile.

The next obvious question is: If he takes the company car and drives it home on the weekend after doing company business all week, and he drives his own car on the weekend, what sort of documentation will the Minister or the Government require? Surely the Minister can give us some indication of what sort of documentation he must have in order to say that the employee did not use the car for personal use even though he drove it home after his business that week. That is what I am trying to establish. That is done, I might say, by thousands of people around the country, salesmen who work out of their homes for companies which may be based in Vancouver, Halifax or Montreal.

I received one letter from a fellow who asked: "Why should I drive that company car at 46 cents a kilometre when I have two other cars at home?" However, on this T-4 slip, additional taxable income of $2,834 was shown. That is what I am trying to establish. I am not playing games or anything else; I am just trying to get some straight answers from the Minister so that I can answer some questions which have been asked of me in letters.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I have already answered the last question of the Hon. Member and, I thought, to his satisfaction. I stated something to the effect that I do not believe the person who wrote the specific letter would accurately understand the Act and was probably entitled to a rebate. I thought the Hon. Member had acknowledged that that was the problem of the person who had written to him and indicated that it might be useful in his response.

The second question dealt with the practice concerning required documentation. Obviously, if the person who feels that he has been unjustly treated by the Department has been filing for a number of years, the answer to that person would be that there is nothing under the Act or in the Bill before us, which we have spent the last half hour discussing, which bears any relation at all to the questions raised by the Hon. Member. How many times does the Government have to state that the impact of the Section before us does not relate to administration but, rather, to increasing the amount of the levy?

Mr. Kempling: The Minister, if I may say so, has a Teflon mind; nothing sticks to it.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to turn to page 5 of Bill C-139. Line 7 states: "Subsection (6) is applicable after 1981". Is Subsection (6) found in Bill C-139 or in the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Cosgrove: Officials indicate, Mr. Chairman, that it does refer to Bill C-139. I believe that may be an example similar to the difficulty raised by the Hon. Member earlier today on a point of order. It states: "Subsection 6(9) of the Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor". I believe that the explanation of the Chair with regard to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member earlier today is the Government's response to his point of order.

Mr. Anguish: No, Mr. Chairman, I would disagree. There are inconsistencies throughout the Bill. I was asking for clarification, in particular with respect to Clause 1 of the Bill before the House. However, it certainly does not deal with the objections I made this morning. I am quite anxious that those be dealt with when we come to consideration of the Clauses of the Bill and once the Minister's officials have had a chance to study the objections I raised earlier this morning in Committee of the Whole.

I asked a similar question of the Minister with regard to page 5. At line 3 it reads, "Subsections 1 to 4 are applicable to . . . ". Could he tell me whether those Subsections apply to the Bill or to the Income Tax Act?

• (1500)

Mr. Cosgrove: That is Bill C-139 as well.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions that I would like to put to the Minister with respect to the Act, and what the Government is trying to do. I just wanted to make sure that we are certain what we are driving at.

I understood earlier that the Minister said that if an employee drives from home to office, that is personal use. If the employee makes a business call on the way, that is business. I would like to ask the Minister whether, if an employee drives a company car and leaves it at the office, in an effort to make sure that the company vehicle is used only for his or her business driving and not for personal use, then receives a call before leaving in the morning and has to go on a business call, that would be business or personal use of one's own car.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I would have to repeat my earlier observation that the administration of the Act and the questions dealing with this application are matters that fall under the administering Revenue Canada officials. There is nothing in this section before us that has anything to do with the administration. We have changed the percentage of the formula for the standby charge. If the questions raised by the House Leader of the Opposition had been genuine questions, or questions that troubled him when the Act was introduced in December of last year, he might easily have inquired of Revenue Canada what the answer was to this particular problem that is posed today.

I doubt, Mr. Chairman, whether it really is a problem because, as I have indicated, Revenue Canada has been administering this Act since 1971. There is a body of decisions by Revenue Canada, they are available and it is the Department that should be consulted. The Hon. Member's questions have nothing to do with the legislation before us. I would urge Hon. Members once again, because there are some six million Canadian families looking for passage of this Bill for refunds of money that would assist them in a very difficult economic time—

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South rises on a point of order.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the Minister keeps raising the fact that people are looking for refunds. The fact is that the Government has no intention of paying the refunds until April 30, because it does not have to pay interest until after April 30.

Secondly, the fact is that we are proceeding with this Bill as quickly as we can, and those kinds of nonsense claims by the Minister—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, we have seen this two or three times, where Members on the other side have used these sorts of false points of order in order to take the floor away from the Minister. I must object to that. That was a point of debate, it was not a point of order, and it was done to cut off the Minister's answer. I object to this procedure that they are so rude to follow.

The Deputy Chairman: The Parliamentary Secretary will realize that the Chair cannot really determine whether a point of order qualifies as such until it has at least heard some part of it.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I ask the Minister, since he seems to feel that it should be the Department of National Revenue people who are here—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Hon. Member rose on a point of order. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: No, it is a question. I thought you had dismissed that point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: I now have to recognize the Parliamentary Secretary on a fresh point of order.

Mr. Fisher: Again I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. In my earlier comments I was reflecting on the behaviour of the Opposition, and I realize your difficulty.

The Deputy Chairman: I should indicate, after that flurry, that I believe the Minister of State for Finance did not complete his remarks. I recognize the Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I was trying to appeal to the civility and compassion of all Members in the House. If the position of the Progressive Conservative Party is as reflected by the statement of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine yesterday that the Party is in agreement with the principle of taxing this benefit and they have some difficulties with some aspects of it, please let us deal with that—

Mr. Hawkes: That would help.

Mr. Cosgrove: —but do not deal with items that have nothing at all to do with the Bill in front of us. This Bill is so important to so many Canadians; let us not fool around.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, since the Minister has introduced this in debate, I wonder if he will tell us whether, under Section 151(2) of the Act, the Government is not required to assess returns submitted and, if there is a finding that there is a refund due, to send that refund back to the taxpayer forthwith.

While the Minister is on his feet, would he point out to us what would happen if this Act is not passed by, let us say, June, July or August? Is the Minister saying to all Canadians that if the Act is not passed there will not be any refunds whatsoever? Is that the position of the Government, no Act no refunds? I point out that this may not be all that relevant under this Clause, but he introduced it.

Mr. Cosgrove: On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, I did not introduce it. I was commenting on the filibustering and fooling around and the capriciousness of the questions of the Hon. Members opposite for the last three hours in Committee. That is what I was commenting on.

In answer to the last question by the House Leader for the Official Opposition, the Government is following the same practice that Governments have followed, in the processing of income tax legislation before this House and the handling of income tax returns and refunds, for the last 12 years in Canada. This includes the Government of the Conservative Party in 1979.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, my next question obviously flows from the Minister's answer, too. We are dealing with the budget of the lately departed Finance Minister which was brought down in November, 1981. Since we are dealing with the November, 1981 budget which is now being brought into law, could the Minister explain how any refunds at all could have been issued in 1982 for 1981 taxes?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member had been in the House when I answered the question of the Hon. Member for Burlington, the provisions of the budget introduced in 1981 were prospective to 1982. The refunds for 1981 were under the existing law.

Mr. Lewis: I see. Mr. Chairman, the Minister has alluded to the length of time that this is taking. He will know that in 1979 when the Liberals were on this side of the House they spent four days in the Committee of the Whole on their own tax Bill.

I would like to go back to that question, if I may. Is the Minister saying that none of the provisions in the November, 1981 budget which was brought forward by the lately departed dear Finance Minister had anything to do with 1981? How were the refunds issued last year? Were they issued in error or were they not issued in accordance with Section 151(2) of the Act which requires the Government to assess the returns and to mail out the refunds in accordance with the law?

Mr. Cosgrove: They were issued, Mr. Chairman, in accordance with the practice of the law and with the practice of Government, including the Conservative Government, which was in the middle of a budgetary process when an election was called in the fall of 1979.

• (1510)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I take it that the Minister has now admitted to the Committee that it is practice to assess returns and issue refunds. Any comment by the Minister or anybody in Government that refunds have to wait for the passage of this Bill is absolutely specious and false. Is the silence of the Government an admission of guilt? We are at a loss. We have just suggested to the Government—

Mr. Fisher: Let us vote. We do not have to hold it up anymore. If you are at a loss, let us vote.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, is the Minister not admitting that it is the practice of every Government, Conservative and Liberal, to assess the returns, deliver the refunds, and we do not have to wait for the passage of this Bill?

Mr. Cosgrove: The assessment referred to is the assessment under the Act. The Act in question is the one before us.

Mr. Blenkarn: No, it is not.

Mr. Cosgrove: I will not fall into the trap not only of not talking about the Act or anything related to the Act, but now of countering the spacious arguments of the Hon. Member—

An Hon. Member: Specious.

Mr. Cosgrove: —specious, and spacious as well, by the House Leader of the Conservative Opposition.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, may I just inquire of the Government if this is perhaps a printing error where it says "Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Statute Law Relating to Income Tax."

Mr. Cosgrove: No.

Mr. Lewis: In fact, there is an Act in place already and we are just amending it.

Mr. Cosgrove: The Act is before the House.

Mr. Lewis: No, I would submit the Bill is before the House. The Act is already passed. Is that correct?

Mr. Cosgrove: The Bill is before the House which, when passed, will be the Act, and I hope they get their act together so that we can get refunds out to Canadians and stop fooling around.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the Bill is before the House. I would ask the Minister whether it is true that the Bill is before the House and when it is passed, the Act, as amended by the Bill, will be the law.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Act here, with respect, is the poor act by the House Leader of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Lewis: I will let that go. I would ask the Minister if all Cabinet Ministers pay the same standby charge for personal use of an automobile provided by the Crown. For example, would a Cabinet Minister driving a blue Lincoln Continental, license No. TWE-275, pay the same as any other ordinary Cabinet Minister?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, let us be quite clear here. We answered all these questions this morning. Whether it be Conservative Cabinet Ministers and their Lincolns or us, more modest Liberals in our little economy cars, everybody pays the standby charge, the 2 per cent standby charge on personal use. I read that out this morning for the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, is that standby charge deducted from Cabinet Minister's cheques?

Mr. Fisher: In our system, as I understand it, the deduction is made at source. I think it might be quite interesting to see how Bill Davis or Peter Lougheed handle it with their people.

Mr. Hawkes: Do we have the Minister's assurance that those amounts vary from Minister to Minister, that it is not a common amount?

Mr. Fisher: The standby charge is as defined in Section 6(2) of the Act, so it will be based on the exact experience of the particular individual and the vehicle that he is driving. It would not matter whether it was a Cabinet Minister, a businessman, a salesman—

Mr. Cosgrove: Or Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Fisher: That's right, the Leader of the Opposition has the same experience. The personal use of the vehicle is taxed according to the definitions in Section 6(2) of the Act.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, is that amount deducted monthly?

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

Mr. Hawkes: How can you know how much it is in advance?

Mr. Fisher: The amount that is deducted is done according to the established procedures that we have lived with for 12 years. If the Member does not know that, he will never know.

Mr. Hawkes: Is it deducted according to the mileage travelled for personal use each month?

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

Mr. Hawkes: It is mileage travelled for personal use each month, not a set amount.

Mr. Fisher: As I understand it, that is how you determine that there is personal use. You keep records. You know how far the car has gone, and a standby charge is applied. If at the end of the year there is an adjustment, that would show up on the individual's tax return.

Mr. Hawkes: It is deducted monthly on the basis of the mileage or the kilometres used each month. Can I just get that clear?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would have to refer back to the document to answer that as precisely as asked for by the Hon. Member. However, it would be like all taxable charges or exemptions. It would be rounded out at the end of the year. The Member for Burlington raised a case of concern on his part. Obviously there is time when the return is made by the taxpayer to make any adjustments necessary.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, are operating costs included in the amount deducted?

Mr. Fisher: They will be, once this Act is passed.

Mr. Hawkes: Was that done in 1982?

Mr. Fisher: I would have to double check that. If they were not deducted at source at that time, they would have to be applied retroactively, because this measure applies to 1982.

Mr. Hawkes: Is that done in proportion to what is deducted, the 2 per cent value of the car, or 2 per cent per month of the value of the car plus 2 per cent per month of the combined operating costs in a situation where a car is driven 12,000 kilometres or more?

Mr. Fisher: It does not matter who it is. Let me remind the Hon. Member that for all Canadians who are in these circumstances, the operating costs are totalled and then prorated for personal use and applied to income as a benefit. The standby charge is separate from that.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, the standby charge is based solely on the value of the vehicle then.

Mr. Fisher: The cost of the vehicle, not the value of the vehicle.

Mr. Hawkes: The cost of the vehicle when it was purchased new?

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

Mr. Hawkes: Then we can assume that with the Prime Minister of Canada using a $120,000 a year vehicle, that portion for personal use would be deducted at 2 per cent per month?

Mr. Fisher: There is a specific set of circumstances involving the use of a vehicle for personal use. If the Hon. Member wants to have us read those off, one of the things that affects the definition of personal use in the presence of security for the individual, whether it be the Hon. Member, some Minister, the Prime Minister or a private citizen—I am sorry, not a private citizen, but any Member of the House. Under the policy, if the Prime Minister has with him his security people, that would not be considered personal use of the vehicle.

Mr. Hawkes: Where in the law do we find the exclusion because you are accompanied by a security person?

Mr. Fisher: I would refer the Hon. Member to Revenue Interpretation Bulletin IT 63R. By the way, Mr. Chairman, the fact that I can quote it so readily merely underlines the fact that this is established practice. Our comments are no longer relevant to the Bill because we are dealing with something that was established 12 years ago, not something that is set out in the Bill. As the Minister said a few minutes ago, maybe it is about time that the Hon. Member started exploring new frontiers instead of going back over well-worn paths.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, did the Parliamentary Secretary just indicate that it is not part of the law but it is part of an interpretation bulletin? Is that what I heard him say?

Mr. Fisher: In fact, as I was just reminded by my colleagues, the Hon. Member could probably get a very accurate description of this by asking the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead who had the same benefit. He would be able to explain all the deductions to him in great detail. The former Prime Minister would know all about this because it is the same policy.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, may I just review that we have been told again. This applies to Members of the House of Commons, not to other Canadians, Premiers, etc?

• (1520)

Mr. Fisher: It is a policy of the Government of Canada which applies to Members of the Cabinet. It is our own policy and it defines the personal use of Government vehicles by Cabinet Ministers. I would presume that Hon. Members of other Governments would have similar policies, which they would apply to themselves, to define what is official use and what is personal use. We would not presume to dictate our own international policies to other Governments.

Mr. Hawkes: I thought we were talking about a Revenue Canada interpretation bulletin which is available to all Canadians as a piece of information and as a ruling. Are we not talking about a document which lays out the situation for all Canadians? Are we talking about an internal memorandum or something of that kind? Which is it?

Mr. Fisher: As I understand it—and again I am amazed that we can give these instant answers, and the only way we can give these instant answers, Mr. Chairman, is because they are there in the law and they are there in practice—they are not something new and not something coming out of this Bill. They are something which has come from past practice. The Hon. Member has asked how we build the policy which affects Ministers of the Crown federally. The answer to that is, our revenue interpretation bulletin IT 63R sets out the general rules which apply to all Canadians. The policy which I am referring to takes those rules one step further and ensures that Ministers of the Crown do, indeed, pay when they use their vehicles for private benefits. The Ministers are no different from any other Canadian. They pay standby charges for personal benefits derived from the use of their cars. That bulletin sets out the policy for their use. Bulletin IT 63R is the basis for the internal memo.

Mr. Hawkes: Have you not also told us, with respect to any Cabinet Minister who travels with security personnel, regardless of purpose, that there is no way that can be considered personal use? Is that the internal policy? Are you teling us it is not part of a Revenue Canada interpretation bulletin? There is an interpretation bulletin. Have you now a policy which you have decided on?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is only reasonable that the Government of Canada would have guidelines, like any other large employer, whether it be Bell Canada or a hydro corporation, or any other company which has large numbers of vehicles and large numbers of people who drive those vehicles. The Hon. Member will find, if he chooses to explore around, that these companies have guidelines for their employees which dictate what is and what is not acceptable business use of cars. I am quite confident that those internal memoranda of all those other organizations will be acceptable to Revenue Canada because the internal memoranda would not be drafted without some knowledge of the intentions of Revenue Canada. There has been 12 years of experience. The rough edges have been smoothed. The Government of Canada, just like all these other organizations, has guidelines for its employees and its Ministers which dictate the business versus the private use of vehicles.

Mr. Hawkes: Is it, therefore, Government policy that any rich businessman in the country who chooses to travel with security personnel is deemed to be on business and there is no personal use involved for tax purposes?

Mr. Fisher: I never made any such claim. I would not like the Hon. Member to distort it in this way. Again, I refer him to established practice. The Minister has pointed out that we are wasting a lot of time now with the invented fantasies of the Hon. Member for Calgary West. I do not believe anyone is going to thank him for doing this. If the rich businessman, whom he has invented or imagined, is busily engaged in business practices, then that is tax exempt. That is the principle and always has been the principle.

Mr. Hawkes: That is the principle for businessmen but not for Cabinet, is that what I just heard?

Mr. Fisher: Pardon?

Mr. Hawkes: Is that the principle for businessmen but not the principle for Cabinet? Is that what I just heard?

Mr. Fisher: It is the same answer. It is a distortion from the Hon. Member's imagination.

Mr. Hawkes: Can you explain to me where the distortion is? I believe you have told Hon. Members of the House that when a Cabinet Minister travels with security personnel, that cannot be construed as personal use. You have also stated that when a businessman travels with security personnel, he must defend his case as to whether or not it is business. It may in fact be personal. It may in fact be business. Are the facts as I have explained them incorrect in some particular?

Mr. Fisher: You are exactly right. The Hon. Member has described the situation accurately, Mr. Chairman, but he left out a couple of things. First of all, both the Cabinet Minister and the businessman must be engaged in business activities in order to be tax exempt. Over and over again we keep coming back to this fact. Whether it is the Hon. Member for Yellowhead or the current Prime Minister, there have been guidelines set out to indicate a Prime Minister's use of a limousine or a vehicle. Equally, whether it be the Hon. Member for St. John's West, who is a former Cabinet Minister, or the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough, who is a current Cabinet Minister, there are guidelines involving their use of their car for business versus private use. The Government of Canada laid out these guidelines to ensure there was proper payment for personal use and to guide the Ministers in making that definition.

Mr. Hawkes: Could we have the name of the individual who set out these guidelines and his position? Who set out these guidelines?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, it certainly was endorsed and subscribed to by the politically responsible Minister of the former Government, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, who, if he were here today, I believe would be sitting in the seat next to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hawkes: Are you saying that the Joe Clark Government made up these guidelines?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman, I am saying that it operated under the guidelines under the appropriate Minister in charge, who would be the Minister responsible for the Treasury Board, the Hon. Member who would be the seatmate of the Hon. Member asking the question.

Mr. Hawkes: May I again ask, who made up the guidelines in the first place?

Mr. Fisher: As I recall, Mr. Chairman, the document which I looked at, and referred to this morning, was a 1978 document from the Treasury Board.

Mr. Hawkes: Has Revenue Canada ever reviewed that document?

Mr. Fisher: I do not know. We would have to double-check that, but I would presume that Revenue Canada is aware of it, since the Minister would be paying a standby charge under its guidelines.

Mr. Hawkes: If a Minister requires security personnel at all times, and certainly the Prime Minister does in the present context, how can the Prime Minister be paying a standby charge?

Mr. Fisher: I am sorry, I missed the last part of your question.

Mr. Hawkes: If the Government's definition of "business" hinges on the presence of security personnel, how can the Prime Minister, who is surrounded by security 24 hours a day, ever incur a personal-use standby charge?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would assume that is the Prime Minister's business and not mine.

Mr. Hawkes: In theory, perhaps; if the Prime Minister is accompanied 24 hours a day by security personnel, and if the definition of "business" hinges on being accompanied by security personnel, then how is it possible, even in theory, for the Prime Minister to incur a stanby charge like all other taxpayers?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I believe one of the reasons might be that it is very difficult to determine in all of the cases of all taxpayers when a person is on "business", but I believe we might reason that if a Minister of the Crown, or the Prime Minister, is being advised by security officials that he must conduct his personal affairs in ways which are designed to avoid security risks—in some ways the Prime Minister's time and decisions are not his own, in fact—under those circumstances he would have no choice. He is being directed by the Government for security purposes and, therefore, in that sense he is at the disposition of service to the Government at all of those times. It is, I suppose, a very regrettable kind of circumstance which happens to Ministers and public officials from time to time in all countries, but I would think that might be the philosophy. The Government has to act to protect its public officials, and in doing that, regrettably, the Prime Minister has no time of his own under those very difficult circumstances.

Mr. Hawkes: The first time I was on my feet I mentioned the case of an RCMP constable who works 24 hours a day, is tied to a radio in a small town, and I was told there is some personal use of that automobile. Why the difference in the two cases?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I remember that example clearly, and I think it is only appropriate that the Minister correct me. Not only did he do so as a Minister but he drew on his experience in municipal politics. He pointed out very clearly the importance of the car in the policeman's presence around town. He talked about the attitude that municipal Governments have towards their police and the way they encourage their police to do precisely that which the Member has described. He pointed out that the municipality would regard such behaviour as business, that a 24-hour standby car driving around town and the calming, peaceful presence of the policeman in the neighbourhood would be viewed as business rather than personal use. So the Minister, quite rightly, corrected me, and my view should not stand on the record; we should listen to the Minister on this.

I would like to go back a little bit here to basic principles. The Hon. Member, by his opposition to this measure, is not promoting the fairness he thinks he is promoting. He is asking all other Canadians to chip in a little bit of money for the personal use of automobiles by individuals whom he pretends to favour. He wants all other taxpayers to pay for that personal use. We on this side at least have a sense of stewardship. We believe that the tax money put in our hands has to be spent responsibly, and we believe as well that exemptions which are the same as expenses have to be treated responsibly. So the Hon. Member, both explicitly and implicitly, is opposing that fairness.

We did not ask that people stop driving company cars. In fact, we have made it quite clear over and over again that if the use of a vehicle creates economic activity, then that use is a justifiable and legitimate deduction for the company and tax exempt for the individual. We accept that. I think most right thinking people see the logic in that. It is not a perk, it is a productive activity. When the Hon. Member asks us to push the boundaries on that, he is asking us to take other people's money and spend it on some individuals who happen to be fortunate enough to have a company car at their command. I do not understand how he justifies that. How can he justify that his neighbour should purchase a vehicle for personal use out of after-tax dollars but he himself, or some other hypothetical Canadian, should be able to drive a vehicle for personal use without paying tax? We are not asking for detailed, complicated new procedures or paper work. I assure the Hon. Member that we are dealing in an area where people know how to keep records. They keep their gas receipts, they have a general idea every day of the mileage they drive for business reasons, and that is usually reinforced by records such as day books, diaries or whatever else. All of those records are acceptable to Revenue Canada. We are not asking for a minute-by-minute accounting or 100 per cent perfection. However, we are indicating to people that responsible records should be kept and a responsible line drawn between productive business activity and private personal benefit. That is all we are asking.

When the Hon. Member stands up here and tries to create an exception for all his friends, then he is really standing up here and suggesting that a whole bunch of Canadians should chip in some money to pay for his friends. I reject that, as I think most Canadians do. I want the Member to know one other thing: the more he drags out all these exceptions, the less he adds to the debate, because he knows they are hypothetical and extreme exceptions. What he is doing is to cast considerable disrepute and doubt over the tax system. I would ask him to be a little bit more careful. If he has concerns, do not invent them, do not come up with imaginary or hypothetical examples. Rather, let him come up with cases from his riding which we will be happy to handle for him. Let him come up with new problems relating to new legislation, not go back 12 years and give us examples of things he thinks happened 12 years ago but do not happen today.

Mr. Smith: Living in the past.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, indeed, living in the past. Not only that, he is dragging Parliament down into that history in an unproductive way. So I would ask him to stop doing that and at least come forward with some genuine behaviour and realize that the people who are watching us from the outside world and drawing on this transcript for some guidance about our intentions are finding from his examples encouragement to go off into wild extremes which are only going to get them in trouble. They are not going to be extremes which are going to be useful guidance for sincere Canadians in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: A point of order, not debate?

Mr. Hawkes: A point of order, not debate. I think if you look in the history of the House, you will find it is common practice to give a Member 20 minutes worth of House time during Committee of the Whole. The Minister has taken 20 minutes, and I think the record will show I have had three or four. It has been a filibuster on the part of the Minister, and I think the only way procedurally—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. This has been referred to, I think on Wednesday of this week, and the then occupant of the chair reminded Hon. Members in Committee that since 1975 the practice has been for each Member to be recognized in debate for a period of 20 minutes, and that answers given during that time to questions put by the Hon. Member who has the floor are taken from the 20 minutes. That has been the practice. I understand that it is feasible, as the Hon. Member for Edmonton West put the issue a couple of days ago, that a Member might take one minute to ask a question and another Member or Minister might take 19 minutes to give an answer. If there were such a situation, I think the Chair would have to take some responsibility for examining that. I did so, incidentally, on Tuesday of this week, although not in the same circumstances present here.

Therefore, in accordance with current practice, the Hon. Member has had 20 minutes and, as he well knows, he has been using that opportunity and he is able to come back for a further 20 minutes immediately following the next Hon. Member who wishes to put questions.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, by way of interpretation, do I understand that you have ruled that the Minister answered my question as opposed to having made a speech or discourse? Is that the sense of your ruling?

The Deputy Chairman: It is not my responsibility to indicate whether or not the Hon. Member has received what he regards as an answer, whether it is satisfactory or unsatisfactory, a comment, or anything else. As long as it is relevant to the Bill and the debate, the Chair is satisfied with the procedure. The Hon. Member for Ontario.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary talked about sales problems earlier. I would say that the little dialogue he just went through creates a sales problem. I would like to refer back to the amendment or the motion we are talking about. The Parliamentary Secretary used some other terminology. He said: "A little bit of money", and he said "fairness". This is what we are talking about, and I believe that we are being totally unfair. Let me give you one example of unfairness. His Government cars are self-insured so there is no cost for insurance—well, if you can prove it, then I will withdraw it.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fennell: I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to look at it, and then I will ask my question.

Mr. Fisher: They are commercially insured.

Mr. Fennell: Thank you, I did not know that.

Mr. Fisher: You are welcome.

Mr. Fennell: It used to be the other way at one time. They are taken into consideration, but I am talking about fairness. If a person pays $10,000 for a car, as soon as he or she drives it out of the showroom, the Parliamentary Secretary and I both know that it is worth $6,666; that is all the person could get for it on the market.

As a car gets older, it is worth less, but the repair bills get larger. Hon. Members opposite and I have had cars. We are fully aware that as cars get older they are worth less.

Mr. Fisher: It is happening to my body.

Mr. Fennell: I can understand that; perhaps it is self-imposed, but I am talking about the poor car. After four years, salt eats into a car and it has to be repainted. That goes on to these standby costs; that does not go on to a new car. After a period of time the transmission goes. This is why there are so many transmission plants and repair shops. Older transmissions wear out after so many miles. I am appealing to the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary to consider this amendment and take it on the undepreciated value at the end of each year. I know the Minister's argument. I know he will say that this has been in force for seven years and that I am not talking about this Act. I am talking about this Act which is doubling the amount, and I feel it is totally unfair.

If we take the example of a $9,000 Chevrolet, by the end of four years it is worth about $1,000, according to the Blue Book. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary knows what the Blue Book is. Usually that amount is about the depreciated value, taking off a third on the reducing balance. I believe this idea is equitable and that the Government would make many friends with a lot of people who are hurting.

I would like to turn the discussion around for a minute and say that there is a positive side to what is being done. From the point of view of my riding, we would produce more cars because people will not keep their cars as long, because after four years the cost of repairs is greater. There could be a benefit there, but also there is a disadvantage to the Government. By selling a car at the end of two years, taking about 50 per cent of the price back and then buying it back, the Government can only charge 2 per cent on the price paid for the car.

I feel this amendment should be approved. I think it is equitable. It is balanced. It is not a big bookkeeping operation. Hon. Members opposite know as well as I do that corporations do it throughout the country; every corporation takes depreciation off their cars. I see the Minister shaking his head. I am talking about any corporation in the fortunate position of making money, any small business or any individual. If a salesman owns his own car, he can depreciate it against his income. I think Government Members are treating it incorrectly and inaccurately. If their goal is to get rid of company cars and have salesmen purchase their own cars, they will accomplish it. I can guarantee that, and it will free up capital for companies to do what they should be doing rather than providing cars to salesmen.

I still do not have a grasp of why the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary are against fairness. I am asking for fairness, for a 2 per cent charge on a fair value. It is not charged on fair value if it is on the original value. That is really my question. I would like to hear their answer.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, on the question of one standard of fairness, that the same formula for the calculation or imposition of a tax should be applied to everyone and that it should not differ for different people, we believe that one formula has been in effect since 1971. We are merely increasing that from 1 per cent to 2 per cent. In fairness, because it applies to everyone who takes advantage of personal use beyond the mileage allowed, everyone is dealt with in the same manner. The issue is how we arrived at that formula.

If we adopted the amendment of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, and using my own standard as well as the standard which the Hon. Member for Ontario is urging, that is the same rule for everyone affected by the law, we would be grossly unfair because the amendment, as I have indicated, only applies to firms which can take advantage of undepreciated capital cost. This is not the case for all small businesses.

Also I think it is grossly unfair because, although some large firms are able to take advantage of the systems in place now to record a complicated depreciated allowance for every vehicle, taking into account every change in the operation of the vehicle, the same advantage is not available to small-businessmen who do not have hired help available to assist them.

Finally, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary indicated, it is not fair to the rest of Canadians. We are told that the effect of the amendment of the Hon. Member would result in a $20 million revenue loss in the first year because the formula would be averaged over the life of the vehicle rather than on a year-by-year basis with graduated depreciation. If he is not prepared to give this group of people an additional $20 million, which the rest of us would have to pay as taxpayers, he would have to increase the rate from 2 per cent to 3.5 per cent. I cannot fathom why the Opposition is moving an amendment which in effect would increase the charge from 2 per cent to 3.5 per cent when the Government has already reduced it from 2.5 per cent to 2 per cent.

Mr. Blenkarn: You increased it from 1 per cent.

Mr. Fennell: The Hon. Minister should look at the large cars in golf club parking lots in Scarborough. The greatest number of them—and I ask him not to smile at this—are owned by small-businessmen. I will not argue that there is an inequity there, but large corporations are getting away from such tremendous perks because they have been required to cut back. I maintain that the 1 per cent, the way in which the Government did it in the first place, was unfair. That is the point. It was unfair because it was not based on the undepreciated value. Possibly we did not raise it at that time. We probably did but no one listened, as is usually the case. I maintain that the person pays $2,400 in the fourth year but he still has $1,000 or perhaps $3,000 worth of repairs, whereas in the first year he pays $2,400 and has maybe $200 in repairs. This is inequitable.

If the Government wants corporations to get rid of their cars, that is fine. The Minister made another statement, that small businesses do not benefit. If they do not benefit by the second tax year, they are in financial trouble, but they have not paid taxes because they can write it off. Many of them, as a result of the lower tax rate for small business, benefit greatly by bringing a 50 per cent rate down to a 20 per cent rate because of these write-offs.

I think the Government has to deal with this, not just pass over it. The constituency out there is somewhat annoyed. People are hurting. How much does the Government want to hurt Canadians? Does it want to remove itself from power forever? Surely it should look to the future and do something to help the people who supported it in the past.

There are options available. There is the Blue Book value or the depreciated value; the Government must take one or the other, not a straight line. Another alternative would be to take the average cost of repairs in the first year, and anything in excess of that amount could be deducted from the capital cost after the first year. That would be another way of getting around it. I am just saying that it is inequitable and, if the Government made some adjustment in this regard, it would be fair. I would like to know what the Government is considering because I know it is stonewalling us on it.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that no one who purchases a car for personal use can apply the calculations he is talking about. Therefore, when we ask about personal use company-owned cars, we simply ask that people have the same rules and the same treatment. That is all we are saying. If the Hon. Member wants to come up with a sliding scale of values that reflect the resale value of the car, perhaps the Hon. Member could explain how he would apply that same sliding scale to private purchases so that people could get equal benefit on private automobiles rather than company automobiles. All we are asking for is the same treatment for the same use.

Mr. Blenkarn: How about putting it together again?

Mr. Fisher: If we take an example of a car with a lease value of $300 a month and add perhaps another $100 a month for operating costs, then we are probably looking at $3,600 added on to an individual's taxable income in a year. If that individual is at the 50 per cent tax bracket, then he would pay $1,800 tax to get a car, pay for his gas, insurance, repairs and everything else. I do not know how many people have a personal car that only costs them $1,800 a year. There are not very many. Under the existing law, which we are amending, that same car would only be worth $1,200 in a taxable benefit which, at a 50 per cent rate, would result in a $600 bill. Even at $1,800 the car is the cheapest car on the block. You cannot get a cheaper car than that.

Mr. Blenkarn: How about year four?

Mr. Fisher: We are talking about a $300 a month leased car that is operated and worth only $1,800 to the individual in the highest tax bracket.

What about a person with a 33 per cent tax rate? Let us add on this $3,600 benefit. It costs the individual $1,200 a year to drive a car, pay for his gas, insurance, and maintenance. That is a pretty cheap car. I think the Hon. Member should put the numbers down in black and white before talking about inequity. It is not inequitable. The very proposal he is recommending is inequitable because of the complexity and the paper work involved, which would be enormous. I would remind the Hon. Member that a spokesman for his Party in the House of Commons yesterday, as reported in Hansard at page 23668, said:

> The Progressive Conservative Party position is as follows: While the principle of taxing this benefit is not unacceptable, the rate of taxation and the method of calculation is suspect. The negative impact of the tax increase overshadows the benefits of increased revenues. It should be amended downward. The sections of the Act dealing with calculation of benefits should be clarified along with the regulations.

An Hon. Member: That is exactly what we are talking about.

Mr. Fisher: I want to contrast that lofty sentiment with the figures. The figures I just gave indicate that a taxpayer in the highest tax bracket, after the passage of this measure would pay $1,800 a year for gas, insurance, maintenance and the vehicle. That is pretty cheap. If Hon. Members want that geared down, Mr. Chairman, maybe they would like us to give a free car to everyone instead of taxing them.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, I would rather not hear that. That may be another one of the Liberals' give-away programs. We cannot afford what the Liberals have done already.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is what you are recommending.

Mr. Fennell: No, I am not. I am recommending fairness and equity. Your explanation in the first year is fair. But as a private individual driving a car, which I am now, because I do not get an allowance for using a car around here, I am much better off to own my car rather than take 2 per cent on the capital cost. To me, the price is unfair. If it were on a graduated scale, it would be equitable, but the Government's formula is inequitable. It is unfair. Let me give one other argument.

We do not have enough salesmen in this country. We do not have enough people pushing Canadian products. As a result, we are dependent upon imported products. We should give salesmen encouragement, rather than discouragement. I think salesmen are a very important segment of our society. I say they are being unfairly treated.

I believe in equity and fairness. I do not disagree with the Minister for the first year. I heard the Minister say the Government was going to put it up to 3.5 per cent.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is your amendment.

Mr. Fennell: The Liberals are always finding new ways to grab new bucks. That is the name of their game. You look everywhere for bucks. That is the game it plays. The National Energy Program is a prime example. It did not work. It is going to blow your brains out. With respect to the subject under discussion, I say to the Minister, do not let this come back to haunt you the way the National Energy Program will.

I hear the Minister's comments. While the Liberals are in power, they can say whatever they want. But I am talking about constituents, those people who elected you who may think twice the next time.

Mr. Cosgrove: Two per cent is better than 3.5 per cent.

Mr. Fennell: I am talking about equity. I am saying that in the first year it is fair. I hear the Minister again. You are skimming funds right off the top. You have a way of skimming money from the public. You will take it any way you can, and then you pay off people to the tune of $1 million like Gillespie did to set up a plant that was not going to be worthwhile in the first place.

Let us be realistic. If the Government looks after its expenditures, it can look after its income. Because expenditures are out of control, the Government cannot look after its income. I say, be equitable. The first year, fair ball. I agree. The second year, a depreciated value, including repairs. I agree with that totally. The third year, another one-third off and the repairs. I agree with that.

Mr. Cosgrove: There goes $20 million.

Mr. Fennell: It is not $20 million. If you can show me the figures that show it kisses $20 million goodbye, I will accept them, but I will analyze them very carefully. The Government is cutting its own throat by putting this Bill through. Salesmen have written to the Minister. I hope he has read their letters. I have answered all of their letters even though they were not addressed to me, because I am concerned about them. The Government almost put the life insurance people out of business. They lobbied so hard the Government had to retract much of the law. You have not listened to the salesmen of this country, and I think you should.

I plead with the Minister to consider allowing a fair amount in depreciation each year so that the salesman is not paying the same amount for capital costs in the fourth year as he is in the third year. I am delighted to see one of the Minister's own colleagues agreeing with me on this point. Even the Minister's own people agree with me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: It is fair. These people need that help. They are not selling as many products. They are not producing as much income, and now the Government is going to tax retroactively that much harder. I ask the Minister to consider this.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief comment on the statement just made which was so eloquently and passionately expressed. If I ever go back into sales, I will certainly be looking up the Hon. Member. He is a real spokesman.

On the other hand, I would like him to follow the example I gave him. I indicated to him that a car with a leased value of $300 a month which costs $100 more for gas, oil and all the rest, would total $3,600 in the first year. At a 50 per cent bracket, the individual would pay $1,800. He said that was fair. I would like him to follow that example through. Over four years there is an expense to the taxpayer in after-tax dollars of $7,200. That is a four-year expense for leasing and operating that vehicle. A vehicle held on a $300 a month lease is a $10,000 vehicle.

• (1600)

If his neighbour were to purchase the same vehicle, he would have a $10,000 vehicle.

Mr. Fennell: He is better off.

Mr. Fisher: The Hon. Member says that he is better off, but he is not. He is $10,000 in the hole, whereas the taxpayer we are talking about is only $7,200 in the hole. Of course, the difference is that when the vehicle is traded in, he will hopefully be given a $3,000 trade-in after four years.

I would ask the Hon. Member again to go back to the data and not just make impassioned speeches, because his speeches are really hiding the fact that the standby charge that we have here reflects current values. It does not, as he says, distort the values over the years.

Mr. Fennell: Just one point, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: I appreciate the Hon. Member's desire to speak but I must indicate to him that his time has expired and I should move on to another Hon. Member. He may wish to seek unanimous consent of the House to make his comment. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fennell: There is just one thing to keep in mind. When a salesman drives a car, the car is driven more miles and receives far greater wear and tear. The Hon. Member knows that as well as I that the cost of maintaining the car in the fourth year is much higher.

Perhaps the way for the salesman to get around this is to lease a car for one year, lease it at a lower rate at the end of the first year and lease it again in the third year at a lower rate. Perhaps there is a way around the law, but that still does not acomplish what he is dealing with. I hope the Government does not change the law because I brought this up.

Whenever a law is made, people will think of ways to get around it. I would recommend to my constituents that that is what they do. I would tell my local dealer to lease the car for one year, lease it the second year at a reduced amount and again in the third year at a reduced amount. Avis and Tilden do it that way, and perhaps they will get all the business and leave the other leasing companies with none.

I wanted to raise that point, particularly about the fact the amount of miles that a salesman puts on his car is much harder on a car than family use.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the obvious corollary to that, in the case of a salesman using his vehicle, is that he should not use it for personal use.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, I want to pursue that with the Parliamentary Secretary. I want to ask him about the question of equity between owning and leasing, because that is clearly a business decision. I think the Parliamentary Secretary would accept that.

Let us use the example given by the Hon. Member for considering the value of buying and operating a car versus leasing a car. Suppose that a person owns and operates a car for six years for which the standby charge will be the same every year. Suppose a person leased the same kind of car, with the same operating costs, the same mileage and personal usage factors, for the normal period of three years, and then leased it again at a lower rate. The result will be that the salesman who drives the company-owned car is charged, based on the ownership standby, the same amount for every year for six years, whereas in the alternative, the company that leases the car which has the same mileage and operating costs will have its tax effect fall in the last three years on a renewed lease.

In other words, leasing will allow people to benefit from the amendment. This can be extended to the previous Member's comments, because leasing can be done annually or semi-annually. Why is it wrong to allow people who choose to own the car to benefit from the amendment?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, as our official indicates, it is an interesting example, particularly because most leases are for two years, not six years. However, there are such things as six-year leases.

I think it bears some examination. The equal principle here, which I appreciate the chance to state now, is that such arrangements are the private matter of the taxpayer. They are not matters into which we want to intrude. If a taxpayer decides to lease instead of purchase, or decides to own an expensive car instead of a cheap one, that is the taxpayer's concern and not ours.

I urge the Hon. Member to read some of the debate on the issue in 1971. I remember very clearly that all of these types of issues were raised at that time. People said over and over again, as did the Hon. Member for Ontario a few minutes ago, that salesmen would stop using company cars and that we would see exotic dodges on the tax law and we would see different methods used. That did not happen.

All that has happened is that the standby charge has become dated as the automobiles have increased in value. In effect, we are updating the standby charges to reflect the market value of the vehicles.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, that is mythical. That is the theory which says that as values rise, tax rates should rise. That has to be one of the greater nonsenses expressed in the House.

The Parliamentary Secretary is saying that there should be a bias in the tax system. The Minister is now making the same assertion that there should be a bias in the system in order to save tax by leasing. The effect of that bias in the tax system means that those who finance vehicles should make more money than those who buy them. That is the effect of allowing an individual to achieve a reduction in the taxable benefit through leasing annually. I find it unbelievable that the Government does not realize that.

My question is with respect to leases themselves. It is a question asked by a constituent for which I do not have the answer. If I trade in an automobile worth $4,000 and take a new car on a lease, as opposed to buying it, let us say that it would cost $350 a month to lease the car. Therefore, I presumably would owe the charge on $350. If I trade in my old car and its credited value reduces the lease cost to $250 per month, will I be charged tax on $350 or $250?

Mr. Fisher: This is indeed a technical question and one that we can verify for the Hon. Member. I take it that it is a question from his constituent, and I will ask our officials to give him an answer as quickly as possible.

I would remind him, however, that whatever answer is forthcoming it is based on 12 years of experience. It is not one that will come as a result of this law. This law does nothing but change the rate, and the Member is asking us about an established tax practice. We will give him the technical answer to that question. I understand the intention of what he is asking, and we will make sure that he gets a reply.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, it relates specifically to this amendment. I suspect that the answer to the question in my example is $250. Therefore, I suspect that there continues to be a bias toward leasing. If I am in a situation where my $10,000 automobile, which is now worth $4,000, will cost me as though it were worth $10,000 for tax purposes, it is worthwhile for me to trade it in with its $4,000 value and lease either a new or a used car and lower the cost on which tax is charged. Therefore, it is important to the amendment and goes back to my belief, from what I have read, that the Government's practice is to push people toward leasing as opposed to owning. That is a principle to which I do not subscribe.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I take it that the Hon. Member feels that the law, as it exists now, is biased toward people who lease. He believes that the increase in the rate will increase that bias. Our officials have not found that to be the case.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue the matter, because I was interested in the debate between the Hon. Member for Calgary West and the Parliamentary Secretary with regard to this issue. I do not want to be taken the wrong way, because I know the Parliamentary Secretary did not like the range of questions. However, this is the question: if I, as an ordinary Canadian, take my children to a movie on Saturday night in a company automobile, that is considered to be personal use of the automobile. Is that correct? The Parliamentary Secretary is shaking his head. If the Prime Minister of Canada takes his children to a movie on Saturday night and is required, for the safety of the office and the person of the Prime Minister—

Mr. Cosgrove: Or the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Bosley: —to have this security—it is a very simple question, Mr. Minister. There is no reason to interject. It could be the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cosgrove: Then stop fooling around and stop using the Prime Minister as an example.

Mr. Bosley: I would not use the Prime Minister as an example of anything for any Canadian.

Mr. Cosgrove: Then what are you doing, and why are you asking the question?

Mr. Bosley: I am asking a question about the law.

Mr. Cosgrove: You are being political and wasting the time of the House.

Mr. Bosley: Some Liberals might pay attention to questions about the law. I know Liberals do not like the law. It interferes with their habits.

My question is this simple one: if a Cabinet Minister takes his children, or if the Leader of the Opposition takes his children—

Mr. Blais: His child.

Mr. Bosley: —to a movie on Saturday night and security is required, is it any less a personal use of the automobile? If it is no less a personal use of the automobile, will personages in that situation, whether they be the Leader of the Opposition, a Cabinet Minister, a Premier of a Province or the Prime Minister of Canada, be required to pay personal tax on the use of that car for that evening?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I will certainly investigate to determine the basis for this one standard concerning security personnel, and will try to answer the question for the Hon. Member. I do believe, as he said himself, that the issue is a bit distorted. I only ask him to remember that this is one of several guidelines in the Treasury Board bulletin to Ministers which indicates the difference between personal and public or business use of a vehicle. Bell Canada, Ontario Hydro, General Motors and all other large organizations have similar manuals for their employees. I am sure that there are also standards in those manuals which give rise to questions of equity like this one.

I would think that after some scrutiny, with the reasonable amount of experience we have had over the past 12 years, we will find that these guidelines are explainable and acceptable. We are dealing with a body of experience, and every large organization will try to give to its employees the benefit of such experience in the form of guidelines. The guidelines will then dictate the dividing line within that organization between personal and public use or personal and business use. I think it is reasonable to have guidelines. That is all we are reflecting upon here. If the Hon. Member wants a technical answer on the use of one guideline out of many to define the difference between public and private, then we will provide him with that explanation. That is a reasonable question and we will provide it to him.

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The Hon. Member for Don Valley West, just before the Parliamentary Secretary commenced his reply, commented to the effect that Hon. Members on this side did not respect the law or found the law to be inconvenient. I am sure that, upon reflection, he will want to withdraw those remarks. Even though it is 4.15 p.m. on a Friday, it is surely not in keeping with the character of this House to trade personal abuse across the floor, especially the allegation of illegalities or illegal conduct. I take very strong personal exception to those comments. If the Hon. Member wants to stick around this particular institution for a long period of time, he will surely respect the institution and the Hon. Members within it.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, I hope that you, the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary will carefully listen to my remarks. Much time has been spent on interventions with regard to Clause 1. I know that the questions which have been raised are very pressing to a certain group of people. I think they have been more than adequately covered with regard to Clause 1. In my own situation, I suspect that less than 1 per cent of the people in my entire constituency would be affected by the Clause. The concerns of any who would be affected have already been covered in the interventions I have heard.

The questions which I pose to the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary are connected to Clause 1 in that if the Bill does not soon pass, there will be many people who will be inconvenienced because income tax returns will have been filed and duly processed by the Revenue Canada taxation branch as best it can, but I understand it does not have the authority to issue cheques to these people. Some two million income tax forms have been processed by Revenue Canada and placed in the computer. Once Bill C-139 is passed, it will only be necessary to punch a button and the cheques will be issued through the computer system—

Mr. Blenkarn: Do it right now. It will do it.

Mr. Anguish: —to people who are eligible for income tax refunds. The people of Revenue Canada do not feel they have the authority to do that. They have done a very good job in processing the applications they have received. However, if there were some change to the parliamentary and democratic process of the House as a result of Bill C-139, it could cause some horrendous problems for them in terms of recalling payments or making adjustments to some of the cheques which had been sent out to people. That could cause very serious concern to the Department of National Revenue, unless it did not issue the cheques.

There are other Clauses which concern me more than Clause 1. My colleagues and I will be speaking to them as they would affect our constituents. The Committee of the Whole in the House of Commons is a very good forum in which to discuss legislation, presenting both sides of the argument. Once both sides of an argument have been presented on a certain Clause, I wish that we would move on. I am concerned about those two million people who have had their income tax returns processed and are waiting to receive their cheques. There will be millions more by the end of this month.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister tell us what will happen if, by some chance—

Mr. Blenkarn: The Bill doesn't pass.

Mr. Anguish: —it does not pass? At which point will those taxpayers receive the refunds for which they are eligible? Is it completely contingent on the passing of Bill C-139? Will refunds be made to some two million people whose forms have already been processed and many millions more whose forms will be coming within the next couple of weeks?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance has indicated that he is desirous of having this income tax Bill passed by the House, first, because it includes provisions which were first made public in 1981 and, second, because it includes subsequent amendments to the 1981 Bill or new initiatives of the Minister of Finance in the budget of June, 1982, or some of the resulting amendments introduced in the statement of the new Minister of Finance on October 27, 1982. He has urged this on the House in recognition of the fact that any income tax bill will have mixed effects, that it will affect different people differently. I assume the majority of Canadians represented by the Hon. Member for the Battlefords-Meadow Lake who has just spoken would benefit by the advantageous Clauses of this Bill. For example, they would benefit by the increase in the Child Tax Credit of $50 per child; by the reduction of the general rate to those in lower income levels, and by the new introduction of the $200 spousal allowance which, generally speaking, is of benefit to those of lower income levels. All of these would be available to those people when the Bill is passed.

Quite frankly, that is my personal motivation in seeing the House conclude consideration of this Bill as quickly as it can. Without having done a scientific analysis, I am convinced that of the many thousands of unemployed people in this country, many are the very people who will receive tax refunds. They are people who have paid taxes earlier in the year, who have then become unemployed, who are looking for some cash to assist them in a difficult time and who will be assisted by their refunds. That is why I support the Minister of Finance in doing as we have always done, having this legislation concluded before he introduces the next budget. That is my major motivation in urging the consideration and conclusion of this Bill as quickly as possible.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that and I would observe that if things continue as they have on Clause 1, it could be past the end of April by the time we have Bill C-139 passed. I find it very disheartening that this amount of time would be taken, that the Chair, or whoever is responsible, allows the continuous and sometimes irrelevant interventions by some Members of this House on points that have already been covered in many instances.

If in fact those Members wish to continue to do that, what are the options that are open to the Government to see that the constituents of Canada get their income tax returns much sooner than would normally be the case if this kind of activity continues through the other Clauses of Bill C-139?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, since this is in relation to House business and the Hon. Member asked for an opinion regarding how it can be made possible for this Bill to be adopted as early as possible in order to allow the refunds to be made, there is one simple Standing Order, namely No. 81, which would allow the Hon. Member's Party to agree with the Government to allocating a reasonable length of time, but a fixed length of time, to complete the debate.

If his Party is speaking in good faith, and I never doubted it, all he has to do is to ask his House Leader to come to an agreement on a reasonable period of time to conclude debate on the Bill. If the Hon. Member reads Standing Order 81, he will see that that option is available to him even if, as he deplores it, another Party in the House seems to be dragging its feet and filibustering this Bill at this time.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, following on that comment my question is that I would have trouble agreeing to that suggestion regarding the entire Bill because some sections could take up the whole amount of time that has been agreed to, and therefore some of the sections that we want to deal with would never in fact be dealt with in Committee of the Whole. My question would be, can this procedure that the Hon. Member has just outlined be used on a Clause by Clause basis?

Mr. Pinard: Sorry, Mr. Chairman, I missed the last part of the question.

Mr. Anguish: My question was, can this procedure that has been outlined be used on a Clause by Clause basis?

Mr. Pinard: No, Mr. Chairman, unfortunately it cannot be done on a Clause by Clause basis because Standing Order 81 deals with stages of a Bill and not Clauses of a Bill. Standing Order 37 would be available to limit debate on specific Clauses, but I do not think that this would be appropriate.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I just want to wrap up the debate on this particular amendment we have before the Committee. In my view the amendment has been explained pretty well. I just want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary one question. He will appreciate that in his example of the person who had a car which was rented for $300 a month and there was $100 in repairs, he came up with a 50 per cent tax cost and said that that would cost the employee $1,800 a year and that would be a pretty modest cost for a car. He will of course appreciate that this is a standby cost. It is not the employee's car. It is a car that is owned by someone else for business purposes, because if the car was not a business car the company employing the employee could not deduct the car at all for business purposes. It has to be used in the business.

What we are talking about here, so the Parliamentary Secretary will understand, is that portion of the value in the vehicle and its repairs and so on that is attributable to the personal use of the car that can only be owned by the company if the car is a company car for business purposes, not for personal purposes.

I want to point out to him that if the employee has paid $7,200 for an automobile that he does not even own, it is probably not worth any more than a couple of thousand dollars at the end of a four-year period, that his own example has pointed out how horrendously unfair the 2 per cent standby charge is, and how horrendously unfair the percentage of maintenance cost is. If he would only look at it that way, let him take a look at the amendment we have proposed because our amendment is proposed on the basis of fairness.

I want to make it very clear that as far as we are concerned, employees should pay tax on the personal use of their cars owned by their employers, but that tax should be fair and should be fairly calculated. Two per cent is probably not bad, provided you calculate it on the value of the car. As the car gets older, the benefit gets smaller on the value of the car. That is probably fair that way. The Parliamentary Secretary will remember that we discussed this matter in the Standing Committee, and he will recall that the 2 per cent standby charge was before the Standing Committee, but the matter of charges for repairs or maintenance was not debated in the Standing Committee. He will know that it was only on the basis that the maintenance charges were not included and that the 2 per cent included the maintenance that the Standing Committee, of which he was a member, came to the conclusion that perhaps it was not all that bad. But you have added in the maintenance. So if you took the maintenance out, we could accept it the way it is. The problem is that the maintenance has been added in and the 2 per cent has been left in. In other words, the burden has been increased. That is what the objection to Clause 1 was all about in the first place.

Does the Parliamentary Secretary not realize that what we are looking for here is fairness? We are not trying to give anyone an advantage. We are trying to impress upon a Government, that will not think and will not move, what fairness is all about.

Before the Parliamentary Secretary gets up, he might also reflect on the fact that the Minister in his statement said that he saw $20 million in lost revenue because of this. He saw $80 million in lost revenue because of the annuity provision. He has lost all of the revenue there. He is not going to get any revenue, because of what he did yesterday. He got himself into employee benefits. He figured he would pick up some revenue because of employee benefits. I want to tell him that he probably lost revenue there with respect to professionals. What we want is an Income Tax Act that is fair, reasonable, honest and makes sense. The proposal here is to do that, to follow the concepts that we discussed in the Standing Committee so that we can get a Bill before and out of this House, one that makes sense. That is the reason for the amendment. I would like the Minister's comment on that at this point. Then let us put that amendment because we would like to put another amendment with respect to maintenance costs.

• (1630)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member should be reminded about a second question that arose in the Finance Committee, the question of complexity and the law. I would urge the Hon. Member to think about that principle before he begins to argue that the value of the car be a declining amount. Can he imagine the calculation that would be involved in such a process for an operation like Bell Canada? There would be an enormous amount of calculating that would have to go on long before the reporting of the individual could be made. I urge him to look at that.

Second, our officials tell me that reimbursable operating costs are already in the law and that the current section clarifies it because we have had some serious problems with reporting.

Third, I would suggest that he is probably right about my comments on repairs and $100 a month. I suspect that is overstated. I did it to round the figures out to a nice, even $3,600 a year. It looked like an easy calculation for me, but I think that is overstated. That is not what people will be smacked with in the early days of a car's operation. It may work out that, later on, the amount that is assigned would go up somewhat higher, but in the beginning of a car's life, I doubt that that would be the case. I also wonder whether an employer would keep a car around that would have heavy repair costs later in its life.

Finally, I would point out that the big question here is the question of whether it is fair or not fair to ask people to pay for personal use in after-tax dollars, and do we have an accurate amount. I would say yes in both cases. I would say that the amount here generally reflects the value of the car and reflects the replacement value of the car for the individual if he were to buy it personally. I think that is fair.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary raised the question of complexity. He will of course know that Form TD-5 must be taken by an employee to an employer and completed by the employer. It sets out the year and model of the car, the period available, the day and month, the number of 30-day periods available and calculated to the kilometres driven in that period. He will know that is one of the forms that is presently around under this statute as it is now. He will know the very complicated nature of the calculations set out on the reverse side of that form. He will know that these complications are there because of the way this statute is now worded. To say that you only charge it on the depreciated value of the vehicle and say that that adds complication is absolute, complete and total drivel, and he knows that.

We have made a suggestion to him to try to achieve some fairness. We have tried to come along with the position which was similar to the position taken by the Standing Committee with respect to automobiles. We said that if he wants to treat 2 per cent or two-thirds of the lease and get rid of all the maintenance and repair nonsense that is there, we could perhaps go along with that Clause completely. Otherwise, if they want to vote down this amendment, we have a further amendment with respect to maintenance and repair costs.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the Committee ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Deputy Chairman: Accordingly the motion is negatived.

Motion (Mr. Blenkarn) negatived.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, with respect to Subclause 1(4) of the Bill, the effect is that the employee is required to pay tax on the maintenance cost of the vehicle. That maintenance cost, by all possible definitions, includes insurance that the employer would have to pay anyway. You cannot own a company car and not have it insured. The employee has to pay his share of the insurance just because he uses it personally.

The same applies to licences. If a company is going to own a car, it has to licence it. It could not be used for company business unless it was licensed. Therefore, there is no reason why an employee, directed by his employer to drive a company car, should have to pay a portion of the licence cost as a personal use item.

Indeed, there is no reason why the maintenance of the car in terms of grease, oil, tires and paint should be paid by the employee at all. After all, it is not his car. He cannot be given the car that he has used principally for enjoyment and only secondarily for business. It has to be a business car in order to be deductible. Therefore, what we are talking about is a business car.

The question really is whether it is fair that he should pay tax because the company decided to insure the car for $1 million or $2 million. Is it fair that he should pay insurance on the basis that it was a business car and therefore subject to all sorts of additional insurance costs? He has to bear that in his personal tax because he may use it on the weekend part-time. Is it fair? I say it is not fair. If we are going to charge maintenance, we should do this. Therefore I move:

That Subclause 1(4) of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2) be amended by adding the following, immediately after line 24 on page 4;

"(2.2) For the purposes of subparagraph 6(1)(e)(iii) a benefit relating to the operation of an automobile shall only be the cost of motor fuel paid for by the employer but utilized by the employee in personal use of the automobile"

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, we have considered the philosophy behind the amendment placed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. There is nothing new or dramatically different in the position that he has put from the position that has been argued in many interventions on behalf of Members opposite. We believe that the grease, oil, wheels, etc., are part of the vehicle. There is an equitable formula in place in the legislation before us which prorates those expenditures, that is the insurance and licence expenditures, etc. and charges only the portion attributable to the time in which the vehicle is used for personal use. That is eminently fair. The Government has considered this. We believe that the provision is equitable. The provision in the Hon. Member's motion is inequitable, costly and produces complications. It has further complicated the Act. Therefore, we cannot support it and we are prepared to vote on the matter now.

Mr. Hawkes: I guess the most onerous part of this Bill to the Opposition is the Government's method of defining expenses. Will the Minister indicate to us the difference, for instance, in the insurance costs of a taxicab versus a car which is used by a salesman?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the officials advised that the Section is one which has been administered by Revenue Canada since the introduction of the charge in 1971 and, again, I do not think it is very fruitful talking about an area which has been in force for these number of years and has been the practice of the Department. That, as the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake has indicated, is really an area not germane to the Bill which is before us. I am most reluctant that we would even employ a further 20 minutes going into administrative practices which have been the policy of the Government and in place since 1971.

Mr. Hawkes: Is the Minister indicating to the House that operating costs have been part of this Bill since 1971?

Mr. Cosgrove: What I am saying is that that has been a basic part of the interpretation of the existing law since it was introduced in 1971.

Mr. Hawkes: The Minister is saying that people who have used company cars partly for their business and partly for their personal use since 1971, have had to pick up a portion of the insurance costs?

Mr. Cosgrove: I refer the Hon. Member, Mr. Chairman, to Subsection 6(1).

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Minister give me an example of anywhere else in the Income Tax Act where an individual's tax liability goes up as their expenses go up?

Mr. Cosgrove: Hotels. Mr. Chairman, again, I would rather restrict our efforts to the legislation which is before the House.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, we are trying to look to the Act for some equity and fairness. I would like a ruling from you as to whether or not this question is germane to the Bill. Is there anywhere else in the tax Act where as your expenses go up, your tax liability goes up?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I really cannot adopt the practice of the Opposition of taking the time of the House on matters which are not before it. I really do not want to do that.

Mr. Hawkes: Is the tax Act before the House, does Clause 1, contain in it the principle that as your expenses go up, your tax liability goes up? That is a basic principle of Clause 1 which is before us. I am simply asking if this is the only place in the tax Act where we have that principle? To put the question differently: is this the only place in the tax Act where we have the principle that as your expenses go up, your tax liability goes up?

Mr. Cosgrove: I refer the Hon. Member to Subsection 6(1) Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: What is the impact of Subsection 6(1)?

Mr. Cosgrove: I would have to repeat my answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Minister indicate to us the intent of this amendment? Why do we have an amendment which mentions operating costs? What are we changing in the law?

Mr. Cosgrove: Nothing, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Why do we have, then, an amendment mentioning operating costs if we are not changing anything in the law?

Mr. Cosgrove: For greater clarification, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Minister give us the thrust of the greater clarification?

Mr. Cosgrove: I refer the Hon. Member, Mr. Chairman, to the explanatory notes to a Bill amending the Income Tax Act issued by the present Minister of Finance in December, 1982. If he has not had the time to look at it since the month of December, 1982, I find it tragic that he is taking the time of Parliament on that matter now when there are people looking for refunds.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Minister, who is so busy pounding the table, took objection to the comments of the Hon. Member for Don Valley West when he indicated that sometimes the law interferes with habit. Could the Minister indicate to us whether or not the law requires the Government to give refunds?

Mr. Cosgrove: That would be a repetition of what has been said three times in that debate, Mr. Chairman, and I am very reluctant to go around that wheel the fourth time.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, the Minister just indicated to the House that the law did not require them to give refunds. My understanding of the law is that it does. Is my understanding correct or is the Minister's understanding correct?

Mr. Cosgrove: I really would not want to comment in public on the Hon. Member's understanding or lack thereof.

Mr. Hawkes: Can I put the question simply to the Minister again? Does the present tax law of Canada require the Government to give refunds, yes or no?

Mr. Cosgrove: We are ready for the question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: I will repeat the question, Mr. Chairman. Does the present law of Canada require the Government to give refunds, yes or no?

The Deputy Chairman: I believe the Chair should intervene at some stage to indicate to Hon. Members—I would have to look seriously at the precedents and authorities on the subject, but it is my impression that after a question has been repeated three or four times and an identical answer has been given, it would seem to be a matter of order in the House that the Chair might have to intervene to prevent nothing more than a recording of the same question and the same answer persistently. I do not have at my fingertips a reference to a Standing Order or to a Citation of Beauchesne to back that up, but I am sure the Hon. Members would understand that it would be disreputable for the House to be seen to be repeating in identical phrases the same question and the same answer for hours on end. I would ask both the Hon. Member and the Minister to take that into consideration.

Mr. Blenkarn: On that point of order, Mr. Chairman, I have a difficult time in following this question and answer with the Minister. I was wondering if the Minister really would explain the Clause which is set out in the Act. The Clause which we would like him to explain on page 2 of the Act, Subclause (iii). That is what is being amended by the amendment before the House. It has solid lines on it, so it is new in the Act. I believe it is imperative and fair to us and to the House that the Minister give us that explanation. I believe that is what the Hon. Member for Calgary West is asking. Rather than taking some sort of high-handed attitude toward it, I really do think that the Minister has an obligation to explain the statute.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, against my better judgment I will refer the Hon. Member again to the explanatory notes to a Bill amending the Income Tax Act, a document issued by the Minister of Finance, in December, 1982, which presumably has been in the hands of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South since December, 1982. Possibly he missed the first Clause in the document headed, "Inclusions in Income From Employment", Clause 1(1), Income Tax Act, Section 6(1)(a)(iii).

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, the Minister may remember that there was a Summit meeting held in Ottawa not too long ago, and in anticipation of that, the Government of Canada designed cars to have special features, including some bullet-proofing. At the conclusion of the Summit those cars were shipped to various embassies abroad where it is felt that the Canadian diplomats are at some risk because of the nature of those countries. It is obvious, I think, that the value of those cars is considerable. If an ordinary car in this country costs between $10,000 and $15,000, I think the value of these specially equipped cars would certainly be in excess of something of the order of $50,000. It is also, I think, a fact in Canadian tax law that Canadian diplomats, wherever they are in the world, are deemed resident in Canada. Can the Minister enlighten us on the repercussions on the standby charge on Canadian diplomats serving abroad where they have to use these specially equipped automobiles?

• (1650)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate that diplomats serving Canada abroad in a very difficult world climate right now are probably, in most cases, offering service beyond the call of duty, something that should be encouraged as an example to most Canadians. We have had a number of recent examples of leadership by our diplomatic personnel abroad. However, I must admit that my major concern with this legislation before us is the internal impact, the effect it has, on ordinary Canadians, but probably more so the effect on lower income Canadians. I think I would be doing a disservice to those people who are looking, for example, for an income tax refund when this Bill is concluded, to really go down the esoteric route of the Hon. Member as he hast just invited me to do. In good conscience I could not waste the time of the House doing that.

Mr. Blais: I have a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I have been sitting here all day listening to the questions raised by Members opposite. I also listened to a very good intervention by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake. I think Members of the Official Opposition are really disrupting the proceedings of this House. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, their whole attitude has been to engage not in a filibuster but simply in advancing spurious amendments. As a matter of interest, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South introduced an amendment this afternoon knowing full well that he did not have the Members to give it a proper showing. He accepted defeat on division knowing that he did not have the troops in order to have that particular motion introduced.

The point, Mr. Chairman, is that people are waiting for refunds, and all Members of the House are getting telephone calls in their constituency offices on a regular basis concerning this, but the returns cannot be processed until this Bill is passed. Now, the Tory Opposition, for their own partisan purposes—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I have to ask the Hon. Minister to come to the point of order.

Mr. Blais: I think the point is made.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South rises on a point of order?

Mr. Blenkarn: My point of order is, Mr. Chairman, that I was hoping we would clear up this section this afternoon. We have had suggestions that somewhere along the line we got off the topic on to whether the Government is required to pay rebates. When you come to the question of rebates, that is not the Clause we are dealing with. The question of rebates in income tax is dealt with in Section 152(1) of the Income Tax Act. The Minister will know that that Section says that the Minister shall, with due dispatch, examine a taxpayer's return and assess his tax.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member come to his point of order?

Mr. Blenkarn: That is my point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I guess this afternoon is turning into an incredible experience. I was a new Member of this House in May of 1979, and Parliament met that fall. I guess when you are a newcomer you remember the initial legislation with which you were faced better than you may remember subsequent pieces, because they go by very rapidly sometimes. One of the first pieces of legislation the Clark Government had to bring before the House was the budget brought down in the fall of 1977 by the then Minister of Finance. If you follow the Minister's logic, you would have to conclude that there were no refund cheques sent out on the basis of the 1977 or 1978 tax years. We all know that is simply not true. The Clark Government was the Government which obeyed the law of Canada, and the law of Canada requires income tax refunds to be sent. There is a law, and if one is a Cabinet Minister and respects the law, one sends out refund cheques. If one chooses not to respect the law, there are many ways in which Parliament or Members of the Opposition can force Government Ministers to respect the law. We can implore them to do it. We can suggest they do it, but there is something particularly dishonourable and discredible when you have Ministers of the Crown standing in the House and telling Canadians that a law exists when in fact it does not exist.

I challenge the Cabinet Minister who spoke on the point of order or the Cabinet Minister responsible for this Bill to stand up in this House and tell us where in the law of Canada the Government is required not to send out refund cheques. Tell us. If they want to say the law says they cannot send them out, let them quote us the law, give us the paragraph. I challenge the Minister to do that.

Mr. Cosgrove: Question, Mr. Chairman. We would like the question.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question? It is not. The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I guess I can take that as affirmation, that there is no law which currently exists and says to the Minister, the Government or Revenue Canada, that they cannot send out refund cheques. If no such law exists, then where in our system can they be held accountable when they stand in the House and tell us that they cannot do something because of the law? Surely, Mr. Speaker, if they have full knowledge that there is no such law and continue to assert in the House that there is such a law but do not provide proof, then we get very close to the necessity of the Opposition standing up and using unparliamentary words. It gets to be deliberate and we begin to wonder whether Canadians are being misled or just the House. If they continue to move in that direction, then I do not think we have much choice but to do that.

Can I repeat a question I asked earlier?

Mr. Anguish: No.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, there was a question asked concerning legality relating to refunds. The question has been canvassed and recanvassed. The fact is that for the assessments to be completed this law has to be passed. You cannot send a refund unless you have assessed the returns. The returns cannot be assessed until the law has been passed. You cannot assess a return in expectation of a law being passed.

Mr. Blenkarn: You have been assessing taxes that way.

Mr. Blais: You would have to go back to the existing law and provide a refund under the old law. That is clear, and the hon. gentleman knows that. All this pussyfooting around is indicating that they are not serious. They do not want to pass this Bill. What they want to do is to go through with their leadership campaign, and they do not care who suffers as a result.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Blais: They want to interfere with the process of this House.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock, I will interrupt the proceedings.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Friday, March 4, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Skelly (p. 22957).

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, this morning I rise in what seems to be the usual Monday morning situation for this chamber, that of having closure imposed later on today. In this instance, closure is on a measure authorizing the Government to borrow some additional $19 billion. Our concern throughout the debate up to this point has been, in essence, the question of what the Government will do with the funds, specifically how and where they will employ them. From our point of view, where will the Government employ these funds to create jobs? Jobs are the single most important item facing the economy and our nation.

What will the Government do with this borrowing authority it is seeking? We know with some degree of certainty that with closure being imposed later on today we will probably never know where these funds will be used until we see the programs later on this year or next year. It is clear to many of us, not only on this side of the chamber but throughout this country, that whatever the Government does with this money, if in fact it does intend to use substantial portions to provide or to stimulate employment, it had better be used at least for mid-term employment, if not, for long-term employment.

Many people in Canada are very concerned with the amount of money this Government has poured into winter make-work projects. These projects are of short-term duration and do little, if anything, to enhance permanent jobs for Canadians. That is our basic concern.

For Members such as myself I might be a little more willing to grant with an open mind the funds being sought by this Government if the funds were to be used in a way that left a legacy, be that legacy permanent job creation or the protection of our shipyards. Thousands are laid off in that industry. Many thousands are still working in our shipyards but their future is bleak. If the Government were to direct some of that funding into that hard pressed industry, not only would it save the remaining jobs, but it would put many thousands now unemployed back to work.

The Government can restore these jobs by accelerating the Department of National Defence naval fleet replacement program, providing funds for the Canadian Coast Guard which requires fleet replacement as well as for the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, which also requires fleet replacement. Government accounts alone could restore 25 per cent to 30 per cent of the jobs that have been lost in the last two to three years in our Canadian shipyards. If the Government were to opt for that course, many of us on this side would perhaps be more willing to listen.

If it would use some of the funds to rid the transportation industry of the iniquitous fuel compensation charge, such as now applied to the marine and air industry, we might look upon this Bill more favourably. We read again in the press over the weekend about the dissatisfaction of the national air carriers with the Government's intention in the income tax Bill to press on through the back door with the collection of that tax. Hon. Members are aware of the marine industry's opinion of that tax. While this tax does not apply to road transportation, it is applied to shipping.

The Hon. C. D. Howe said in this Chamber: "What's a million?". We are talking about $1.5 million, but it may be just enough money to keep 2,000 to 3,000 Canadian seamen, marine engineers, mates and captains on the shore this shipping season. If some of the funds were directed toward the elimination of those two fuel taxes, then we might be more willing to grant the borrowing authority that the Government is seeking.

Another worth-while project for which these funds could be used is to provide the much-needed bridge pier fendering protection system for the seven bridges in this country that span navigable waters and are listed by the Government itself as posing a hazard to shipping and to the lives of those who use those bridges. I wonder if any of the funds will go into that project.

I doubt that anything will go into the expansion of the Canadian Armed Forces. We have heard much about bringing some of our young people into the Canadian Armed Forces for basic trade training purposes. That may go a long way, on a voluntary basis, and be very useful, but I doubt we will hear anything about that here today. It is, however, another project of which we might approve.

What about search and rescue in Canada? Over the last ten years, very few topics have been as consistently brought before the House as that of search and rescue capacity and capability in Canada. The provision of some funds for the upgrading of this area would provide extra permanent jobs and expenditure in that area might encourage us to look somewhat more favourably on the Government's request for this money.

There are many other areas to be dealt with. We have only to cast our minds back to the disparaging and somewhat infuriating debate that has been perpetrated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) with respect to offshore oil drilling rigs. For those men to be left out there for three weeks when there was, in fact, a danger to them is unacceptable to Canadians. There is no search and rescue capability present to take those men off those rigs in the event of danger. It is only in the last two or three days that we have seen the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, reluctantly or otherwise, order Mobil and others to bring their rigs ashore. That was an unacceptable situation. Indeed, it is the responsibility of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to make that type of decision, not the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, theoretically, knows absolutely nothing about wheather conditions, ship safety or ice movement. Where does he obtain his information? If we had better search and rescue facilities and better reporting capability, and if some of the $19 billion was to be used to provide that, thousands of Canadians would feel much better. However, we do not have that indication.

In looking to the future, unemployed Canadians do not yet have a hope of returning to permanment jobs in their trades. All they can look forward to is make-work programs, such as cutting out a hiking trail or painting the wicket fence around the ballpark or building another softball diamond. There is no money in the community, mind you, to sustain those facilities once they are built. If that is all they have to look forward to, and I am certain that to a large measure that is all they have to look forward to, then where can their hope be? Where is the hope for them? We hear grand talk about these people coming back into the labour force. They will come back into the labour force when the Government starts to spend the money available to it in the sustainment of the very few jobs which continue to exist in the traditional areas of commerce, industry and natural resources. They will not come back into industry for minimum wage, part-time work.

These are our concerns. Will some of the money go into industrial Cape Breton, where perhaps $1 billion is needed, or will there be just little piddling amounts for Mr. Gillespie and others of his ilk? We in Atlantic Canada need an ice-breaking capability for shallow draught harbours. We need it for safety and for the convenience of our fishermen. Is there any indication that it will be provided? Not a bit.

We regret that the Government has not taken the time to tell us, with some specific idea in mind, just how it will spend the money. As a result, it is our intention to vote against this measure later on this afternoon.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I understand that at this stage we have only ten minutes in which to speak on the amendment to Bill C-143. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) should be congratulated. He has established a new record. Never before in the history of this country has anyone ever requested interim borrowing authority of $14 billion. It takes a lot of cheek to do that, especially when we do not even know what the money is for. That is what everyone on this side has been complaining about. We know we are in trouble, we know that revenues are down, and we know that the big tax grab on the petroleum industry has not paid off because people cannot afford gasoline to run their cars since they are not working. Due to the combination of the oil glut and the price drop, the Government is not deriving the revenue which it needs, and no one will deny that.

The point is that the Government is asking Parliament to agree to signing some kind of a blank cheque, and we on this side do not accept that. We do not know what the money is to be used for. I think there are very worthy purposes to which money could be allocated. However, the problem is that we have seen money being squandered for years. When I first came to this place, the budget was about $12 billion in total and was considered large then. Look at it now. The budget has increased tremendously over the years. So the Minister of Finance has established a record. It seems to me that we should not quickly accept that sort of thing. When it comes time to vote later today, I will be voting against this Bill.

There are all kinds of examples of squandering of money. The Government has squandered money on the PIP grants, with 93-cent dollars. We hear about the ocean oil rigs, ice-breakers and all the rest; they are owned by private companies but financed with public dollars. We think that is a bad way to spend money. At the same time the Government is cutting back on the CHIP Program, the insulation program which would help people; it is squandering more and more money in furtherance of the mythical concept of petroleum self-sufficiency. It seems to me that self-sufficiency could be gained a lot more rapidly through a substitution program rather than poking more holes in the Beaufort Sea. We on this side are not happy with situations in which we have squandered piles of money.

For the next fiscal year we are going to spend $364 million on the nuclear program. Since 1974 we have been spending between $300 million and $600 million a year on the nuclear program. We do not feel that that was sensible in light of the fact that we have not sold one of those monsters since 1978. We did try to give them away to Mexico, to Korea and to Romania, for example. I think the Koreans were the only ones who got one. The grand total of what we have pumped into the nuclear program is $6 billion since its inception. In the riding of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), just keeping open two heavy water plants costs about $125 million a year. There is no doubt that we need employment programs in Cape Breton. If some of this money was for reasonable kinds of employment programs in Cape Breton, or any other riding, including my own, I think we could support it, but that is not what is happening.

We do not know what is going to happen with $14 billion we have no idea. We know that we would not need massive borrowing if we had an equitable tax system. Along with this monstrous borrowing authority Bill we are debating an income tax Bill that is as fat as a phone book, and we are being threatened that unless we pass that income tax Bill immediately, people will not get their refunds and will have to turn to the tax discounters.

We have a tax system that unfairly loads the bulk of the payments on the poor. This new tax Bill is going to put taxes up 27 per cent for a family of four, $125 a month. Taxes on MPs' salaries are going to be increased by 13 per cent. But for people like Ian Sinclair or Samuel Bronfman earning over $500,000 a year, taxes will drop by 17 per cent. Is that fair? If we were collecting taxes as we should in an equitable way, I do not think it would be necessary to borrow as much.

We are following the example of the United States. People with incomes under $10,000 a year in the United States pay 36 per cent of the total taxes. That is terrible. People under the poverty line pay the bulk of the taxes in the United States. I thought taxation should have been based on the ability to pay. Obviously it is not in the United States, nor is it in Canada. This new tax Bill makes the situation in Canada more inequitable, and this is not acceptable.

If we had a stimulative kind of budget, if this Bill had come forward in a package with a budget, then we could have examined it, we would know what we were getting and what we are going to spend our money on. I think it is very important to look at how we are spending our money. I would like to quote from the lead editorial of the Toronto Star of March 4, 1983. The Toronto Star is hardly a socialist rag. It might have some political leaning but I do not think it is to the NDP, or to the Conservatives either. The Conservatives have The Globe and Mail. I do not know what paper supports our Party unless it is the Toronto Sun.

Mr. Fisher: That is it, and Peter Pocklington; they are yours.

Mr. Rose: They can have Peter. I have a whole list of Tories. We have red Tories and blue Tories and retaliatories, territories like Brian Peckford, and dormitories, some of those who sleep in the House. I have a whole list of them.

In this lead editorial the Toronto Star is quoting a study of a Winnipeg economics professor, Ruben Bellan. I do not know Mr. Bellan's political coloration; maybe he does not have any. Academics are seldom biased or prejudiced in any way. For the fifteenth time it has just been announced that there is going to be a new CBC building in Toronto. I wonder if there is going to be an election, because before every election the Minister announces a new CBC building for Toronto. When I heard the announcement last week, I thought my gosh, we are going to have an election soon. I do not think it is a very good time for the Liberals to have an election. It would be very dangerous.

Mr. Cosgrove: It would be bad for the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: It would be difficult for all of us. However, they thought Mitterrand was dead too, but he was revived.

An Hon. Member: What about Australia?

Mr. Rose: Yes, don't forget Hawkes—not Jim, but Prime Minister Hawkes of Australia.

Getting back to the point I was attempting to make before I was heckled and rudely interrupted by catcalls, mainly from my friends, I would like to make this point. The study of Professor Bellan indicates that if the City of Winnipeg, or any other city which has all the facilities to put people to work, was given $1 million for public works, immediately the Government would get back $140,000 in revenue from taxes on materials used, etc., and save $380,000 on Unemployment Insurance and welfare. Therefore, of the $1 million, the net spending would be half a million. At $25,000 a job, $1 million would create 40 jobs. A billion dollars would create 40,000 jobs. If you take this borrowing authority of $19 billion, in fact take it up to $20 billion across Canada, 20 times 40,000 would be 800,000 at $25,000 per job. The borrowing authority of $14 billion and $5 billion could be used to create almost a million jobs in Canada.

If we knew that we were borrowing the money for those 20 communities across Canada, I would be happy because the choice is between spending money on welfare and Unemployment Insurance and public works. It is eminently sensible to do this when municipalities are all set up to do that kind of work. The unemployed are all ready to go. Parks, sewers, sidewalks and roads could be built immediately. If you pump that kind of dough into that rather than pumping it into losers like Candu reactors, we would have a much better chance of coming out of this recession.

People are scared. They are not buying. That is what is wrong. There is all kinds of money in the banks, but there is no confidence. If there were this opportunity of that kind of spin-off for jobs, my Party would support this Bill; but we will not support a blank cheque.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to follow my friend from Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) on this Bill. I especially appreciate the flattery he showed the Tory Party by spending so much time discussing us and the various kinds of Tories there are. I know the people in British Columbia are aware that he also is a Tory, but he is a "transitory" and will not be around after the next election!

It is with some difficulty that I speak on this Bill because it is easy for us to be against borrowing. I think everybody in Canada is opposed to borrowing of any kind, even though at times it is necessary to do so. We recognize that we are in extreme economic difficulties, so there is a call to do some borrowing.

One of the things that is in the Government's favour at this point is that the numbers we are talking about are so astronomical that the public has lost all sense of context of the situation we are in. To speak of borrowing $19 billion is a context which is foreign to any of us, so what we are really dealing wth escapes us.

There are some very indigenous problems with this Bill. The first is that the Government wants to borrow more than it really needs at the present time. That, I believe, is wrong in principle. I believe it is wrong for us to do it at home. It is wrong for business to do it. Most businesses understand that when times are tough, you have to hunker down, and you cut back on all of the overhead you can. One of the greatest places for overhead to exist is in interest payments, so to borrow more than you really need in a business seems to me to be counter-productive. Yet the Government is setting this example to business &rf655;-1 across Canada, saying: "We need $5 billion but we want permission to borrow $19 billion, $14 billion more than we need". That, Mr. Speaker, is wrong in principle.

I believe it is also wrong politically. Convention and the law of the land require the Government to come back to Parliament for authorization every time it wants to borrow money. The Government really wants to play fast and loose with the whole process. Since the Government would need to borrow money again a few months down the road, it would like to avoid that kind of exposure in the public forum, the confrontation and the publicity of that extra borrowing. It wants to skirt around the parliamentary process by borrowing a lump sum now far in excess of what it really needs, and that, I believe, is wrong politically and wrong in term of the whole parliamentary process.

Second, this borrowing authority flies in the face of any kind of known or demonstrated ability on the part of the Government to forecast its own expenditures. My colleague, the Member for Mission-Port Moody has already indicated that the Government wants to be able to borrow this money without telling us exactly how it is going to spend it, and that is wrong. But it has not been able to forecast its own expenditures either, or its own indebtedness.

I believe all Hon. Members here realize—and the public has caught on to the fact—that in the last four presentations of either economic statements or disclosures, the size of the public debt has already doubled. The expected public debt has doubled and is now around $27.2 billion, whereas earlier it was supposed to be no more than $10 billion or 12 billion. If the Government has no more administrative ability than that, it seems to me we are compounding the problem by giving the Government authority to borrow $14 billion more than it needs at the present time. If it is going to borrow money, that money has to be accounted for.

The third reason that this Bill is wrong, Mr. Speaker, is the reason I have already alluded to, and that is that the Government is introducing this Bill without disclosing how it wishes to spend the money. In the Blue Book Estimates we have seen some indications of what the Government's plans are, and it is startling to see what the Government is beginning to do.

I would like to dovetail this with my next point, which is that the Government is introducing a double standard regarding what it requires of the country and what it wants to demonstrate for itself. The Government says the country ought to be guided by the six-and-five principle, but when it comes to itself, that principle should not apply.

I would like to put on record exactly what the Government is doing in terms of its own Departments. When it comes to managerial expansion, the management boom, take note of the percentage increase over the previous year for management levels, that is the number of management personnel and the increase in salaries. In the Depatment of National Revenue the percentage increase in management costs is 209 per cent for 1983-84, whereas in 1982-83 it was only 5 per cent. In the Department of Communications the percentage increase is 157 per cent, whereas in the previous year there was a drop of 6 per cent. In Supply and Services the percentage increase is 134 per cent and in the previous year it was 20 per cent. In Transport the percentage increase is 127 per cent, whereas last year it was 1 per cent. In CEIC the percentage was 124 per cent, whereas last year it was 1 per cent. In Public Works the percentage increase is 102 per cent and last year it was 5 per cent.

Just to illustrate more specifically, Mr. Speaker, in the Solicitor General's Department the Regional Directors for the Correctional Services have historically been called just that, "Regional Directors", and they were in charge of the regional offices. Just before the six and five program was introduced, all of a sudden they were no longer "Regional Directors". Now they are Deputy Commissioners. That change of title, Mr. Speaker, means a new salary scale. So whereas the country is asked to stay with six and five, the upper levels of the bureaucracy find all kinds of ways of getting around it so they can get the kind of increases they want.

As the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody indicated, at the lower levels they have to hunker down, but at the upper levels the spending carries on. These are conditions, Mr. Speaker, which the Government would condemn in private industry. When a client who is strapped for money and needs some operating cash, comes to the Government's own bank, the Federal Business Development Bank, that bank has the client come back and back and back again to give it further documentation on how the money is planned to be spent, for further justification for the need to borrow that money. The poor client who is strapped for cash and wondering how he is going to exist has to set another appointment to justify to the bank why he needs the money. The adage holds true: if you can prove you do not need the money, you can get it.

The Government has not proven that it is going to spend the money wisely, yet it is coming to us, Mr. Speaker, for authority to borrow $19 billion. It seems to me, if we have a situation where 25 per cent to 28 per cent of all Government revenues are being spent to pay the interest on its indebtedness, we have bad Government and we have had management. Therefore, I cannot see how the Government can justify borrowing $14 billion more, which is over $1 billion a month more than it really has need for at this present time. I come back to the point I raised several times in the House, and that is when the Government floated a bond to the Canadian public just over a year ago, it paid excessive interest rates. Six months later it was proved that it was paying far too much. The Government itself paid over $2 billion more in interest charges than it needed to. In the process, it deprived private enterprise of doing the job it wanted to do in order to get the kind of cash it needed to do its job.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue on with the point which was raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen). I believe he gave a very good example to point out why we are opposed to this kind of legislation. The Government is essentially asking to borrow $19 billion with two very simple pieces of paper. It is not giving us any idea how it intends to spend that money, and we are concerned. We are concerned for precisely the reason stated by my colleague in his concluding remarks.

The Government set interest rates for the Canadian Savings Bond issue at over 19 per cent in the fall of 1981. Subsequently, it was shown that that interest rate was way, way too high. It has been estimated it cost the Government somewhere in the neighbourhood of $2 billion, and that is only part of it. The other part of it is that it forced the whole interest rate structure to go higher than it should have. We in the Opposition are not irresponsible. We realize that the Government has to borrow money because it has to meet its commitments. But we believe that in a parliamentary system, if there is to be any proper accountability, the Government should come before us with a budget so we can have both sides of the story. We realize that the Government has to borrow money, there is no question about that, but at the same time we believe there should be a budget so we can see how it intends to spend that money.

When Governments become as large as they are, and if we essentially combine the spending of different levels of Government, whether it be federal, provincial, municipal or civic, and take it as a percentage of the total disposable income of Canadians, we find that very close to 50 per cent of all money earned by average Canadians is taken away in the form of taxation and is spent by one level of Government or another. That is a tremendous amount of money. When we agree to essentially a form of taxation—and this Bill is a taxation Bill as much as it is a borrowing Bill because the Government will have to tax to come up with the money to repay this loan—at least we should have some say in, or some indication of, what the Government intends to do with the money.

To put the matter in perspective, every time the Government talks about $1 billion, it is talking about roughly $40 per capita. If we take $19 billion, do the arithmetic and relate it to a family of four in the country, it means that this Bill will account for something like $3,000 in borrowing for each family of four. This is a tremendous amount of money.

As I said, we are not opposed to this Bill because we are irresponsible; we are opposed because we are responsible. It would be a much happier day if we could stand in the House and pass a Bill authorizing the Government to borrow $1 billion or $2 billion, which would indicate that it is running its financial affairs properly. It would be no problem. It would be a much happier day for all of us in Opposition if we could say something kind about how the Government is managing its affairs.

As I said, $19 billion amounts to over $3,000 for the average family of four, and we are given no indication of what the Government intends to do with it. We have seen the Estimates but they do not really mean a lot in terms of the direction in which the Government intends to take the country as far as fiscal and monetary management is concerned. We are expected to rise and blanketly approve that amount of expenditure on behalf of our constituents. I submit it would be totally irresponsible of us to give the Government that kind of blank cheque. This is why we are opposed to this kind of spending.

Also we are opposed to it because when we have Government spending of this magnitude it becomes very, very inflationary. I could give all kinds of statistics on that, but generally it is agreed that beyond a certain level Government deficits—and the reason the figure is so high is because the Government is running a large deficit—get to be very inflationary. Those are some of the problems we have with this kind of Bill.

There is another problem about which I would like to talk. I noticed that in the speech of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) two or three weeks ago he spent some time talking about the definition of inflation. The classical definition of inflation is simply too much money chasing too few goods. The Government has chosen to attack inflation from the money side, from the spending side, by trying to cut down on the number of dollars which are supposedly chasing the too few goods. It has chosen to go with the accepted or classical definition of inflation.

I submit that we need to attack the other side and do something about increasing production. When we get to the level of the very high interest rates which the Government has used to control the amount of spending, it simply hurts people who are trying to be productive. In my mind it hurts one of the most important sectors of the country, and that is the farming community. We are seeing the results of this today. I understand there are people here from the Farm Survival Association and that there will be a demonstration on the Hill this afternoon. This is a result of some of the foolish policies the Government has pursued for the last two or three years.

An Hon. Member: Stupid policies.

Mr. Mayer: Yes, stupid. I could call them worse, but certainly the policies of the Government are misguided. This is why we are again into a situation where the Government has to borrow a ridiculous amount of money and tells us nothing about how it will be spent. We should have a budget and be able to see that the Government is pursuing some productive policies.

Some people are concerned about a Private Member's Bill, Bill C-653 in the name of the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson), concerning the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. This House will not approve something which will cause more problems for the banks and force the banks to cut back on lending. We are responsible people, we will not do anything like that. In lieu of the Government doing anything, we should be sitting down and talking about the situation. Let us get the Bill before us, remove the obviously objectionable parts of it and get it to Committee so that we can have a discussion on it. In many ways it is almost irresponsible of the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex to put forward a Bill for political purposes which contains some measures that in the banks' mind will cause additional problems for farmers.

I have met with some of the people from the Farm Survival Association. I have talked with people in my own constituency. In fact, that is the major thing I do when I go home. I have not talked to one of them who has asked for a hand-out. There may be some who are doing that, but the majority are asking for some time to put their financial houses and farms in order. Over a period of two or three years, if they can have some time and add the additional interest which they are forgoing now on to the length of their mortgage, they may be able to survive and be productive. We are talking about 10 per cent of the farmers in Canada. Perhaps that does not sound like a lot, but if you were one of the 10 per cent, Mr. Speaker, it would be very, very important to you. Even with the 10 per cent figure we are looking at approximately 25,000 farmers. This is a lot of people facing financial problems.

For us to do nothing in the House, to say simply that there is no problem and that it will go away if we ignore it, is totally irresponsible. We require a budget so that we could see, for instance, that the Government was addressing some of the excess taxation—at least I feel it is excess taxation—on farm fuels, or that it was addressing some of the problems of farmers who will be attempting to obtain a line of credit this spring. If we could see some relief, say a minimum $20,000 line of credit, it would give farmers some hope that the Government cared about them or was at least willing to listen to their problems. For us to do nothing is totally irresponsible.

I want to put to rest any of the fears of the banking institutions if we agree to put Bill C-653 into committee and, by implication, will pass something which will cause more problems. We will not do that. We will try to do something to help farmers in conjunction with all the financial institutions to get ourselves out of the mess which the stupid Government has helped get us into. If we are to do something in the House, that is the kind of attitude that we on this side will bring to that kind of legislation.

I have a few suggestions for the Government concerning what it could include in a budget if it were really serious about helping farmers. As I said, it could include a relief from the approximately 60 cents of gasoline tax which the federal Government takes from every gallon of fuel used to produce food. Presently there is a 7-cent per gallon tax refund. I think it is stupid to collect it and then refund it. The first step would be simply not to collect it. That would help immediately as far as cash flow is concerned, and it would presumably cut down on some of the Government bureaucracy needed to administer it. That is a very straightforward, common-sense idea. Unfortunately, the more common sense one shows the Government, the less inclined it is to listen.

Second, the Government could simply lower the level of taxation it collects. I do not think there would be anything wrong with that. What sense does it make to try to set the level of taxation so high that everyone is driven out of business? If we do that, there is no tax to collect in the first instance. If the Government lowered the level of taxation and helped people in business, it seems to me that would be good business practice.

I see Mr. Speaker sitting on the edge of his chair, ready to shut me down. I suggest, in conclusion, that the Government take a serious look at the Western Grain Stabilization Fund and adjust the formula so that there could be a payout this year as quickly as possible. There is about $600 million in that Fund. I see nothing wrong with adjusting the formula so that at least a portion of that money is paid out to farmers to give them some money to help them get their crops in the ground, to continue to be productive citizens and to pay taxes.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to spend a few minutes talking about how the Government goes about planning its financial affairs. Individuals and businesses usually plan their economic affairs on an annual basis according to a rational and proper procedure. This may involve estimating the anticipated income, then calculating the fixed expenditures. The difference between the two figures, if a surplus, is available for discretionary spending. If there is not a surplus, however, then the business or family must borrow the additional funds that are necessary to meet their needs, bearing in mind that the debt will have to be paid off in the future. That kind of procedure is used by individuals, families and businesses because it makes sense. It is logical to anyone who thinks about it.

• (1150)

What does the Liberal Government of Canada do? It asks us for authority to borrow $19 billion. That is more that was spent by Government at the time the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first came into office. It does not think that we need to know why the funds are required or what the estimate of spending and revenues is. We are not permitted to know these things but are just asked to give authority to the Government to borrow the money. And we know that the sheep behind the Treasury benches will say "Aye, sir, aye" and give that authority.

Then we are told it is an estimate of now much the Government is going to spend. But we are not told the truth, Mr. Speaker. What a ridiculous situation that is. At the end of February we are given an estimate of spending for the year in the Main Estimates. That spending will commence about the end of March and by the end of June the House will have the opportunity to pronounce on whether the Government is authorized to spend that money. But by that time, Mr. Speaker, it will have spent one third of the amount—before the House has given permission. That kind of absurdity arises because it can count on the sheep behind the Treasury benches to say. "I will not think about it—aye, sir, aye".

Finally, we might get a so-called budget, which is the revenue side of the whole budgetary picture. It was promised for early this year, then before April 1 and now we are told it will be some time in April—who knows, it may come in May or it may come in June. Indeed, we may never get one because we are still dealing with the taxation Bill of a budget presented a year and a half ago.

Let me contrast this with the situation in the United States. On February 1 the legislators in the United States are presented with the Government's estimate of spending and taxes—both sides of the equation. They have an opportunity to study it, to recommend changes and to make changes. They have until the end of October to deal with the legislation and pass it for the commencement of the fiscal year. They would not dream of allowing the Government to spend money before the legislators authorize it.

We have a different system in Canada. We have responsible Ministries. Is it true that our Ministers and our Government have more discretionary authority than the United States Cabinet Ministers. Our Ministers are always responsible to this House and therefore that extra discretion is justified.

How does this House hold Ministers responsible for what they do? What mechanism do we have to give truth to what I consider to be a lie—the suggestion that there is ministerial responsibility in this House? No such thing exists, Mr. Speaker. The "Coalgate" affair really demonstrates that the responsibilities of the Ministers will extend only as far as they allow them. When the sheep on the backbenches are ready to say "Aye, sir, aye", no matter how atrocious the behaviour of a Minister, how can the House hold a Minister responsible?

Apologists, such as the Michael Pitfields of the world, will say that there is at least disclosure, and ultimately at the ballot box the people can decide. Perhaps there is not ongoing ministerial responsibility but at least every four or five years we have a chance to re-elect or defeat the dictatorship.

But how much disclosure is there really? How much do we know about Government spending and taxing plans? I humbly suggest we know very little. I should like to deal with two examples of how the Government is flim-flamming this House on the spending Estimates this year.

First of all, there is the usual lock-up where the media is secluded with high-priced officials from Treasury Board who brief them. Members of Parliament are not allowed in that lock-up lest we get to them and give the lie to many of the statements made by the high-priced Treasury Board people.

We are told that this year's spending is 9.6 per cent higher than last year's. That is flim-flam, Mr. Speaker, because it compared the Main Estimates to the total Estimates of last year. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) claimed that there is a reserve for any Supplementary Estimates that come in this year. They also claimed there was a reserve last year but that turned out to be false. So why should we believe the Government now, when it compares apples and oranges? Anyone in the media who published that 9.6 per cent figure should be chastened by their superiors for publishing falsehoods.

The other thing the Government has done this year is to reduce the PIP grants by $642 million. The Government is using practices that are contrary to accepted accounting principles and it should be chastened for this. Indeed, it should be taken to court and punished for this flim-flamming and for publishing false accounts. A private company most certainly would be punished for the same sort of thing.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has put before us a Bill asking for authority to borrow another $19 billion without giving us any reason other than to say that the Government is faced with higher than expected expenditures and lower than anticipated revenues.

A more detailed explanation of the "why" behind these expenditures and revenue figures has had to come from this side of the House, since the Government, for obvious reasons, is loth to draw attention to its legacy of wasteful and inefficient programs, profligate spending, wildly miscalculated estimates and projections, blatant mismanagement and staggering federal debt—the interest alone on which now eats up 20 per cent of our total revenues.

Attention hardly need be drawn to the unemployment crisis which accounts for an ever greater proportion both of expenditures and lost revenues—because there is scarcely a family in the country in which one or more members have not faced the spectre of prolonged unemployment. But we are dealing with a Government that is evidently bankrupt not only of resources but of ideas and, it seems, of the very will to govern, which is a very different thing from the will to retain power. It will print and borrow money in prodigious quantities, but it seems unable to make that money work for Canadians by creating jobs, enhancing productivity and generating prosperity.

As a result, the discouragement of the unemployed, the underemployed, the disadvantaged, the aged, the poor, and yes, even those who are more fortunate, is turning into cynicism and despair. And this, surely, is the most devastating consequence of all in the present malaise—the erosion of a sense of hope and the loss of belief in the future of this great nation.

It is partly for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that I would like my remarks today to be particularly positive and constructive. I would like, briefly, to make suggestions and pose imaginative possibilities. I would like to go beyond the "why" of our present economic woes to consider some "what ifs" with respect to our economic future.

I would like to suggest at the outset that what we need most in this country is not merely more money but a new imagination. We need to concern ourselves primarily not with the astronomical abstraction of $5 billion, $19 billion or $26 billion, but with the 23 million Canadians whom we represent and who are not abstractions at all but individuals with faces, names, families, talents, needs and aspirations.

I wonder what would happen in this country if the potential of every individual was being challenged, not by sermons about restraint but by genuine incentives to productive and creative contributions to our economy?

What if internship and on-the-job training programs were extended and fortified, job retraining projects were enhanced and adult education enriched? What if our most promising graduates and research professionals were assured of finding employment in their own fields? What if the innovation and initiative of the entrepreneur were being rewarded rather than stifled by regulations and restrictions? What if it were profitable for individuals to develop new products and new companies, to establish new businesses and initiate new projects?

At the corporate level, what if businesses starting up in slow growth areas were provided with a 150 per cent tax credit to cover capital and labour costs for the first three years of operation? I am not talking here about an outright grant; I am speaking rather of allowing a newly-established or expanding firm to apply these expenses against future income tax payable. This would provide the investor with an opportunity to recover his investment plus 50 per cent and his labour costs for the first three years plus 50 per cent. At the same time it would create a new corporate taxpayer and ensure the creation of badly needed jobs, all without taking a cent from the federal treasury.

With respect to our most venerable and well established firms, what could we be doing to enhance productivity and prevent obsolescence in an age of rapidly changing technology? If we allow ourselves to be passed by in the rapid march of technology, our competitive edge in even our most traditionally successful fields will be lost. If, on the other hand, Canadian firms are enabled, with Government incentives, to improve technology and undertake appropriate research and development, they can begin to make the necessary long-term adjustments that will ensure us of both success in tomorrow's world marketplace and a more stable and productive domestic economy.

At the regional level, research and development is a particularly critical factor. Problems of regional disparity can never be dealt with effectively if we fail to maximize the particular strengths and potential of each region. Atlantic Canada, for example, has one of the largest fisheries in the world and an extraordinary potential for development in fishing related industries. Yet participation is modest in the manufacture of deck hardware, propulsion machinery, fishing gear, processing equipment and navigational devices. Our own shipbuilding industry cannot at present compete effectively with subsidized foreign suppliers. What if this unrealized potential began to be tapped? Could "One of the largest fisheries" become also "one of the most productive fisheries" in the world?

As we have been reminded in recent weeks, regional initiatives can be particularly vulnerable to political patronage and otherwise inappropriate interventions. If our regional potential is continually subverted by such interference, by oversights, delays or failures of imagination, the effects will be enormously consequential for all Canadians. If, on the other hand, regional disparities can be largely overcome and regional economies rejuvenated, the need for transfer payments will diminish and ultimately vanish altogether, alleviating a great federal financial burden.

At the national level in terms of both domestic and foreign trade, we desperately need new policies and new strategies. What if, for example, Canada established a series of free trade zones in port cities? Such zones have been created and operate successfully in selected American ports under the U.S. DISC program. Imported components are assembled in American assembly plants using American technology, according to American specifications, providing good American jobs, and then exported world-wide. I would like to suggest that we consider pilot projects of this kind in Saint John, Halifax and Vancouver.

On other fronts, are our strengths in high technology and communications being used to their greatest advantage? Are our innovations in computer assisted-design and computer assisted-manufacturing being sufficiently utilized? Are the possible civilian uses of the Canadair pilotless reconnaissance aircraft for ice patrols, forest protection and research, etc., being explored?

More efficient trading nations have reached the apex of their success not by accident but by planning. We need, as Canadians, so by planning effectively, assessing the priority import needs of emerging nations and bending every effort to making Canadian projects available at competitive prices both at home and abroad. We need a Government that will be hospitable to business, industry and investment, that will provide incentives for efficient management and operations, that will, above all, restore a climate of confidence, trust and optimism in this country.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit that the "what ifs" I have posed here today represent not mere wishful thinking but common-sense alternatives and possible roads out of the never-never-land into which the present Government has led us.

It has been estimated that if only half the unused capacity of Canada and the United States were put to work—15 per cent of the available plants and equipment, 6 per cent of the officially unemployed and 5 per cent of the unofficially unemployed—an additional $900 billion worth of output would be forthcoming. That would not only wipe out budgetary debts in Canada and the U.S., but eliminate also the cumulative international debts of the developing nations.

Having considered some of the "what ifs" the obvious next question is why not? I believe the Government owes the Canadian people an answer to that question before it receives authority to add another penny, let alone $19 billion, to the gaping maw of the federal Treasury.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that you have been tilting for a minute. Thank you for just tilting and allowing me to finish my speech.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate, if only to bring a little balance to some of the comments made by Members opposite.

It is very difficult to understand just where the New Democratic Party stands. We were castigated for the deficit. First we were told that it was all right, that we needed a bigger deficit which would give us more stimulus in the country. Overnight there was a reversal of that position and the Leader of the NDP said that the deficit was big enough, to leave it and to work within these particular guidelines. Then Mr. McDermott got to the Leader of the NDP. He had to rechew the cabbage, reinstituting the original position of the NDP that it does not care about the precise size of the deficit as long as everyone is back to work. It is a very easy position for them to sell but it does make one wonder just where the New Democratic Party stands on this particular issue.

When the Official Opposition talk about our asking for a blank cheque, I must question whether they have done their homework. The Estimates were tabled only recently. We saw page after page of Ways and Means detailing how the Government proposes to spend its money in the upcoming year. All of the figures are there in considerable detail. As well, specific descriptions are given of how the various Departments will use their increases, why they are taking a particular action or where particular cutbacks are taking place. If the Opposition were really doing their homework, they would be more specific about where cuts should take place and give us some indication what they are talking about. They simply nit-pick about the budget, which anyone can do on a budget in the billions of dollars. Individuals can do that with their own budget. Even when an individual has a budget in the thousands of dollars, it is still easy to nit-pick and indicate areas where too much is being spent.

The Official Opposition have not narrowed their criticism to say, for example, that the expenditure for National Defence should be cut by $2 billion or $4 billion, or even that it should be enhanced. They have not said that we should cut down on the amount being paid to Provinces with respect to health and welfare, for instance. Instead, they take the popular position and say that the federal Government is arbitrarily telling the Provinces that, while they will receive transfer payments, they will be made according to a regimen. However, this is done so that we may plan our particular budget.

We hear the Opposition tell us to cut down on expenses but not to cut down on transfers to the Provinces. The fact that the federal Government spends significantly more than the Province of Ontario for post-secondary education in that Province does not seem to worry the Official Opposition. They are quite content to have that procedure continue, but I think there should be more accountability for the money the federal Government gives to the Provinces in the area of education which is under provincial jurisdiction. The federal Government is paying significantly more than the Province on the post-secondary level.

No one is asking for a blank cheque. One does not have to be an economist to realize that we are going through a recession. There are 12,000 unemployed workers in Sudbury. Those people were paying taxes when they were employed. Thanks to Unemployment Insurance, they are collecting benefits. They are collecting those benefits because far-sighted Liberals in earlier Governments saw fit to put an Unemployment Insurance Program in place that would be beneficial to those people who are unemployed. However, they are not paying income tax at the present time and, of course, that significant revenue is lost to the federal Government. This same situation is true for several industries in the country.

It may be simple to blame the federal Government for the fact that these people are unemployed, but it is not the Government that sets the price for nickel in the international market. We do not set the price for many of the items that our basic industries must sell, obviously at a profit. If the prices set in the international market are such that the industries cannot operate at a profit, significant changes must be made. This cannot be blamed on the federal Government. It is the responsibility of the federal Government, however, to devise forms of assistance that will be in place so that those people facing that dilemma can be helped while riding the wave of recession.

Unemployment Insurance is not a welfare program. It is a program for which our people have paid a significant premium. Many pay that premium in the hope that they will never have to collect it. But now that they do have to collect Unemployment Insurance, they are grateful that that program is in place. The money for that program is not simply placed into a bank account. It is used immediately for the people who need it.

A community such as Sudbury very heavily depends on the pay cheques of the Sudbury miner. Therefore, it is very dependent on the Unemployment Insurance money that is going into that city on a weekly basis. It is helping the small businessman in that community through a very difficult time. While many Sudbury miners will be called back to work on April 1, it is the Government's responsibility to help those workers through the difficult times they are experiencing.

I was interested to hear the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) singing the praises of the American system of government. He seemed to be very much in accord with the idea that a budget had to be passed by a certain date. There is a time allocation procedure in the U.S. Congress for the passing of fiscal legislation.

If the Hon. Member has visited Britain, he will know that in the Mother of Parliaments at Westminster there is an understanding with the Official Opposition that once a party is elected and becomes the government, it has the right to have its legislation passed through the House. The Opposition has the right to give legislation some ventilation—the word I heard most often—to bills and spend as much time dealing with particular bills as it deems necessary. The Opposition sets its own priorities as to which bills they will attack and those for which they will allow speedy passage.

Mr. Mazankowski: Their government has integrity.

Mr. Cosgrove: And intelligent opposition.

Mr. Cullen: I see that my hon. friend for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) is speaking from his best position—sitting down. I am sorry I cannot hear his interjections. We are close friends but quite far apart in the House, certainly a fair distance apart over policies.

I mentioned that example simply because I believe in the idea of time allocation. We should have a legislative framework under which we operate. The Opposition should know what the Government wishes to have passed in a particular session or timeframe. I believe it behooves the Opposition to allow quick passage of legislation with which it does not find much fault and then it can focus on those bills of greater concern. This would allow for legitimate debate in the House on subjects of some presence. It would give the House of Commons more relevance in the view of the Canadian public, a relevance which sadly seems to be lacking because we spend so much time arguing, for example, for four days on second reading of a bill about whether there should be three or five members on a commission. The fact that we spend so many days trying to make a simple decision has caused us to lose the respect of the people who watch and listen to our debates.

The money we plan to spend is being channelled very carefully. If Hon. Members opposite were intellectually honest instead of politically motivated, they would recognize that there is a whole series of funds in place to help provide training, for example. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) stated that there is approximately $1 billion going into training programs for young people who are primarily in need in Canada. One only needs to read the headline in yesterday's paper which says "Ottawa Aims to Boost Jobs in High-Tech Industries". We have the message. We know that the high-tech industry is where the jobs of the future lie and it is where the training should take place. Notwithstanding the fact that education is a provincial responsibility under the Constitution, I believe the federal Government has an obligation to induce the Provinces to provide training in areas such as high technology so that our young people will have some hope for the future.

I have noted that Hon. Members opposite do not single out small expenditures such as the $40 million which is allocated to aid native broadcasting. There is a whole myriad of programs in place to help Canadians during this time of recession. If Hon. Members opposite would only take the time to study the issue, they would see how this money would be spent.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise with my colleagues on this side of the House and speak in opposition to Bill C-143. While it may sound repetitious to mention $19 billion, let Canadians know that this Bill breaks a record. This Bill will result in a debt that will be the largest in our history. It is the largest borrowing Bill in Canadian history.

Bill C-143 has been introduced with little justification in relation to its expenditures. It will mortgage the future of our children and their children's future as well. More importantly, the headlines of today's paper say that the graduates of this year are asking "What future?" Who can blame them?

• (1220)

I heard the comments of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) dealing with the Estimates. We all know that very shortly those Estimates will be deemed to have been passed. As we consider the big spenders on the other side of the House, we must remember that just four months or so ago, in October, the Government stated that the deficit of $22.2 billion would be sufficient to see it through this fiscal year. Now, just over four months later, it wants an additional $5 billion to continue through the fiscal year which is in front of us. An additional $14 billion is requested for the fiscal year 1983-84.

The Minister, with the endorsement of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton, says "Trust us". When have we heard this phrase before? The people of Canada simply turn their backs. Where is the credibility? Where is the honesty? Where is the confidence?

I would like to quote the words of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). Just a few months ago, he emphatically said:

> I would not expect the House to act upon an additional request for borrowing authority without providing it with detailed information on the economic situation and the implications of that situation on the Government's fiscal situation. I do not think it would be appropriate to ask the House for additional borrowing authority until I have laid out in some detail an update on both the economic situation and the fiscal situation, and I certainly will be doing that before I would come back to the House for additional borrowing authority.

Those words of the Deputy Prime Minister could not be clearer, yet we hear the Minister's successor asking for an additional $19 billion for borrowing purposes. Where are the explanations? How can the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) so freely ignore the words of the Deputy Prime Minister? Is it because the Deputy Prime Minister no longer has credibility?

Can he defy those words because he, too, has lost the confidence and trust of the people of Canada?

Not only do we in the Opposition want to know why the Bill is being introduced, but we also feel that Parliament has a right and a duty to question how and where the money will be spent. It is our parliamentary responsibility to the people of Canada to prevent a majority Government, the backbench Members of which simply sit on their hands, from continuing to borrow and borrow and spend as no other Government has spent before. This Parliament must be more than a rubber stamp.

I ask on behalf of my constituents of St. Catharines, will the Bill provide jobs for our automobile industry workers or our shipbuilders when those in the manufacturing industry of the Province of Ontario look for job incentives and opportunities?

What is at issue here does not particularly concern the request for $5 billion for the current fiscal year; we at least have some idea why that request is being made. It involves two totally disastrous budgets and a catastrophic energy program. The $5 billion is part and parcel of the Government's inept management of the economy of the country.

However, what is the forecast for the future? The $14 billion for the fiscal year 1983-84 is another matter altogether. Canadians do not want to see a repeat of last year's performance. They want some direction, leadership, and common sense, and to start the year off by borrowing $14 billion to spend on who knows what is simply an indication of following the forecasts of years gone by, the era of the big spenders.

According to the most up-to-date information available from Revenue Canada, the average taxpayer in the City of St. Catharines earns $20,000 a year. That same taxpayer pays over $3,000 in federal taxes. The Government has already borrowed $2,100 against the name of every taxpayer of that city. Now, through this borrowing measure, it proposes to add another debt of $500 to each and every one of them. Having borrowed $2,100 per taxpayer, it will follow that up with increased carrying charges. Assuming interest of 10 per cent, it would amount to a further $210 per taxpayer in the riding of St. Catharines. The passage of this legislation will add a still further $50, increasing the tax payable by each one of those by $2,100 plus $260. My constituents cannot afford that amount, nor can the people of Canada.

As I pointed out, the average taxpayer in St. Catharines now pays $3,000 a year in federal taxes. An increase of $260 would represent a hike of almost 9 per cent in extra carrying charges only. It does not take into account the Estimates to which reference was made earlier. It does not take into account additional federal spending which might be indicated in this fiscal year, nor a budget, the contents of which we know not. I point out that we in St. Catharines pay, as a whole, $165 million a year in federal taxes. A 9 per cent hike on that sum would almost amount to an additional $15 million.

Last month St. Catharines and Niagara had the highest urban unemployment rate in the land. How can we stimulate the local economy and set people to work again by increasing tax measures, by increasing the burden on the present populace and future generations who will live therein? I suggest to Your Honour that it is not necessary to bankrupt the Treasury and mortgage those future generations of taxpayers. It is not necessary to build Windsor on the back of St. Catharines. Difficult times require decisions and the Government must make decisions.

The only sector of our economy which is not practising restraint and setting priorities of spending is the federal Government. Day in and day out, we are treated to new examples of Government spending by Governments which are oblivious to the strains being placed on the shoulders and backs of the taxpayers. Over $1 million has been spent on newspaper ads to tell us just how close we are to energy self-sufficiency.

In the last 15 years, Government spending has risen at an unprecedented rate and much of it has been since the present Government was elected in February of 1980. Relating those years to fiscal 1979-80, spending has increased by 59 per cent, a sad commentary on those who say that the Government is practising restaint. For every $4 it spends, it must borrow $1, and borrowed money must still be paid for. The cost of interest on the debt of the last fiscal year was forecast at $16.7 billion, the equivalent of one revenue dollar in three. It is no wonder that our young Canadians look with concern to their future. It is no wonder that we Canadians, the people of this country, are concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I see you are signalling that my allotted time has almost expired. I will conclude in just a moment.

The taxpayers of St. Catharines cannot afford to pay more. An examination, as the amendment before us proposes, is the only reasonable approach to fiscal control and expenditure. Alternatively, it leads those of us on this side of the House with no alternative but to oppose this astronomical borrowing Bill, Bill C-143, and that is what we intend to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to follow the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). In completing his remarks, he said that his Party has no alternative but to oppose the present measure before us, the measure to increase the borrowing authority. Of course, that is the role of the Opposition in the House of Commons. However, I think what we are increasingly seeing in this Parliament is that the Opposition is going beyond its role of opposing and criticizing and is trying to impede the orderly flow of legislation through Parliament.

• (1230)

My colleague from Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) touched on this a moment ago when he mentioned that in other jurisdictions, in the United States Congress and in the Westminster Parliament, there is an inherent recognition of the right of the Opposition to criticize, to vote against particular measures and draw public attention to the weaknesses in proposed legislation; but that in the final analysis the majority of members in a legislative body, in this case the Canadian House of Commons, must carry the day.

We have seen in this Parliament, for example on the Constitution resolution and the energy legislation of last year, a continual thrust on the part of the Official Opposition to try to frustrate the will of the majority of Members in this House after legitimate and full debate has taken place. That is perhaps one of the greatest weaknesses of this Parliament, and I would hope when the Conservative Party resolves its leadership question that the first item of business for its new leader, or the present one if he is confirmed, is to take a more responsible approach to Parliament. If the Official Opposition ever hopes to form a Government in this country, I think that Canadians will expect them to behave in a responsible manner. Certainly their conduct throughout this Parliament has given very little reason for Canadians to believe that the Conservative Party truly does respect the workings of Parliament.

I want to talk about the substance of the matter for a few minutes because I believe that the Government is fully justified, after nearly 80 Hon. Members have spoken on this measure, in bringing in time allocation to get this Bill through. The borrowing requirement of the Government of Canada covers an urgent need. A lot of rhetoric has flown from the other side about why the Government requires this money. There is no doubt that the present Government deficit is fully defensible.

I sometimes wonder, when I hear Hon. Members, especially from the Official Opposition, criticize the deficit, if they really have been talking to some of their constituents when they make these criticisms. I represent what could be described as an inner-city constituency in Metropolitan Toronto and I know as much of the full effects of the recession as any Member in this House. I am sure that the Hon. Member for St. Catharines must go home every weekend and talk to his constituents because he represents an area where there is a lot of heavy manufacturing industry which has been hard hit by unemployment. I am sure his constituents are not telling him to come to Ottawa and oppose to ridiculous lengths the requirement for borrowing these funds, because the deficit has performed a great service to Canadians in the past year.

When we look at the projected deficit for this year, the high twenties of billions of dollars, we have to recognize the central factor that most of it is cyclical in nature. In other words, the deficit has increased due to the demand placed upon the Government Treasury by the recession. People have not been working; therefore Unemployment Insurance payments have been higher. People have not been paying taxes because they are not working; therefore Government revenues have declined. It is a matter of pure and simple economics.

The Government is faced with two choices. One is to continue to provide for those generous social welfare programs that the Opposition embraced in the good times—and here I think is the real crux of a commitment of a Member of Parliament in this House to social reform—ten or fifteen years ago when many of the measures that are now in place were passed. I am thinking in particular of the Unemployment Insurance Act revisions in 1971. I am not sure where the Official Opposition stood on the actual amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, but I am sure that although many Hon. Members on that side spoke of their concerns, they voted for the changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, given the fact that no one really could argue about the Government providing a generous flow of benefits to people who had been thrown out of work. It is fine to say that one is for social reform and social expenditures in the best of times, but when we get to the worst of times, for instance in the last year and a half, the true commitment of an individual Member of Parliament and politician is really exposed.

What we are seeing on the part of the Conservative Party in this and other debates on the economy is a blatant show of cynicism because Hon. Members on the Official Opposition side really cannot be caring about those people who are unemployed in my constituency or in the constituency of St. Catharines. The people in my constituency who are unemployed are not coming to me and saying that they want me to get the deficit down, that they do not want the generous unemployment benefits, that they do not want their Family Allowances to be continued to be paid in this difficult time, that they do not want veterans' benefits to be paid—

Mr. Mayer: We are not saying that.

Mr. Collenette: —or that they do not want the generous national medicare scheme to continue because our deficit is too high.

Hon. Members on the other side say that they are not saying that, but surely the true logic is that if they are objecting to the high amount of the deficit they must be objecting to the very programs that are being paid for which have created that high deficit. Therefore, they really are coming down foursquare against, in these very difficult times, the very generous social programs that we have —

Mr. Mayer: You are being very deceitful.

Mr. Collenette: —of national medicare, Unemployment Insurance, family benefits—

Mr. Mayer: Why did you not listen to what we said? We gave you some sensible suggestions.

Mr. Collenette: —veterans' benefits and old age pensions. I think it is truly disgraceful for any politician to come to this House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: The truth hurts.

Mr. Collenette: —and bring forward those arguments. I can understand why the Members across the way are quite exercised at the moment because I think in my short speech so far I have exposed the hypocrisy that they have been espousing in this House.

Mr. Lewis: Your hypocrisy, not ours.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about one of those social programs. A large amount of our expenditures today goes to the national medicare scheme. The other night I was watching "The Journal" on the CBC.

Mr. Mayer: We are saying do something besides borrow money.

Mr. Collenette: It was a comparative study of the effects of the recession on industrial centres in the United States and Canada. One of the number of communities looked at in the United States was Lackawanna, New York, a heavily industrialized area, and Hamilton, Ontario, with its heavy industry, steel-making and other manufacturing industries. In all of the major industrial centres, especially in the northeastern United States where the level of unemployment insurance benefits is not nearly as high as in Canada and where there is no national medicare scheme, there is a high increase in the level of malnutrition among children. Mothers cannot afford to feed their children. They are cutting back. They are cutting back on their own food but they are also cutting back on food for their children. The same is true for pregnant women.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are nodding for me to sit down, but I just want to say that in Hamilton, Ontario that is not the case. That goes to show that the social programs that we have in place today are fully justified, and that is what this deficit is covering. When people start going back to work as the recession ends, the deficit will decline.

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it comes as no surprise to my colleagues on both sides of the House when I say that in rising to speak on this Bill I make no pretence of being either a political historian or a political scientist. However, without any trepidation I am going to attempt to put into perspective what I believe to be the attitudes of Canadians generally, because those attitudes, in my view, have a very direct bearing on Bill C-143 wherein the Government seeks authority to borrow another $19 billion.

Historically in my view, Canadians have had an attitude which, if expressed, would be something like this: "We may disagree with what you, our Government, are doing but at least we believe that you know what you are doing". There was a residual confidence built up over 100 years in the federal Government, particularly in its economic program. It was built up despite from time to time anger, even outrage, strong opposition to some measures, particularly budgetary measures, and despite from time to time the adverse effect that these measures would have on certain groups or sectors of Canadian society. Despite all of this, Canadians continued to say: "We may be very mad or angry at you, we oppose this particular Bill or budget, but you should know what you are doing".

In my view, this contributed to our stability. Stability, progress and expansion flowed from this residual confidence. Given this history, attitude and confidence, where do we find ourselves as we wait for the Government's 1983 budget? Firstly and obviously, we are in a severe recession. This is partly because of international, world-wide conditions and partly because of domestic conditions in which our record compared to those of other industrialized countries is dismal, to say the least.

Canadians cannot blame outsiders, foreign governments and international conditions for our problems, because that simply is not true. Because of both the international scene and Government incompetence, we are suffering from tragic unemployment and its resultant loss of productivity and human misery. We continue to suffer interest rates that are much higher than any economist believes they should be. We continue to suffer the erosion of our lifestyle because of inflation, particularly those least able to protect themselves. We continue to suffer the results of Government spending, as emphasized in this Bill. All of these, except the human misery factor, are measureable.

Second, and in addition to these hard economic facts, we have a situation that is not measureable in absolute terms but which may be equally as serious. For lack of a better term, I call it the psychological factor because, unhappily, Canadians have lost confidence in their Government. Despite our tradition and history, Canadians are now saying that for the first time they not only disagree with what people in Ottawa are doing, but are convinced these people do not know what they are doing.

Evidence of this is everywhere, in my riding as in all ridings across the country, particularly in small business and farming where those able to expand and progress, those not at the mercy of high interest rates, turn to Government bonds at 19½ per cent instead of expanding their small business or increasing their productivity as farmers. That was the test of lack of confidence. If I were to agree, as I do, with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who says that the private sector is the engine of recovery, I say to the Government that if you believe that, why are you trying to spend your way into prosperity? It will not work. Increased Government spending has not reduced unemployment.

What happened to the traditional residual confidence of Canadians in their Government and, following that, in themselves and their communities? I do not think there was any one incident; it was gradual. Government spending and borrowing increases in 1968 caused a deficit of $497 million. That has increased to likely $30 billion in 1983, an increase of 5,936 per cent in the Government deficit. That has contributed to the erosion of confidence.

Government spending out of control, the Turner budgets of the early seventies, when I first came to this House, contributed to the erosion of confidence. The lack of Government accountability, as indicated in Auditor General report after report, the National Energy Program, conceived in stubbornness, born in ignorance and implemented with disastrous results, contributed to the erosion of confidence. Certainly the MacEachen budgets were the straws that broke the camel's back.

All of these combined to achieve a destruction of the traditional confidence of Canadians. In this situation, incidents which Hon. Members opposite think are relatively minor become major irritants. The $800 to Donald Macdonald does not have a substantial effect on the budget, but imagine the salt it poured into the open wounds of Canadians from coast to coast. Not so minor in nature was the Coalgate or Gillespie affair, a million dollar payment for a very dubious project.

We wonder why Canadians are outraged, why they have no confidence and why they are saying those in Canada do not know what they are doing. In our current atmosphere, Canadians will seize on these issues. They will do things that are completely out of character, such as a penny auction in my riding and a person arrested on a hunger strike—completely out of character in the Canadian context.

Do not be surprised because desperate measures will be taken in desperate circumstances. None of these, however, destroys confidence as much as Bill C-143, a request to borrow $19 billion without any indication as to Government financial forecasts. No control, no accountability, no disclosure and the Government leaps into the money market to compete with small-businessmen and farmers for loans. The Government presents the largest borrowing bill in Canadian history without telling the country where we are headed.

We are to wait for a budget before we find out the Government's economic forecast and strategy. The Government says: "Trust us, have confidence in us". That flies in the face of every economic and psychological factor that exists in this country in March, 1983.

It is natural that I should oppose. That is not my sole function as a Member of the Opposition, but it is part of my function. It is natural that I should oppose Government measures, particularly one that I take so seriously. That is not important. The fact that Opposition Members rise in opposition to a $19 billion borrowing Bill not the significant factor. Rather, it is what my constituents and Canadians everywhere think. Those constituents are saying that rather than expanding their small business, rather than becoming more productive on their farms, rather than hiring additional help or building up inventories in order to produce more, should they leave their money invested in Canada Bonds? Not one job is created thereby. That is what Canadians are thinking in the face of the $19 billion borrowing Bill. Until those Canadians have a change in attitude and the only factor in that change is an increase, not a decrease and erosion, of confidence, all the Government spending in the world will not turn that situation around.

In summary, and I see my time is almost up, in addition to trying to survive the hard economic facts, Canadians are being smothered by a psychological barrier which has resulted from a lack of confidence in their Government, a lack of confidence in themselves, their future and that of their families, and even a lack of confidence in the community in which historically they have thrived and prospered. The Government's response to that psychological situation is to come to this House and say: "Trust us, have confidence in us and give us the authority to borrow $19 billion". On behalf of my constituents and on behalf of Canadians, to that request I say no.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, naturally I join with my colleagues on this side in speaking in opposition to this Bill, which requests authority to borrow $19 billion and places an unprecedented burden on Canadian taxpayers in terms of repayment.

As my colleagues have pointed out, this Bill is unique in character. It is based completely on our trust and confidence in the Government to manage our economy. It is unprecedented in the sense that the Government has not come before us with a budget or spending program to indicate how this money will be spent. As I said when I spoke on this Bill last week, the crime of taxation is not so much in the taking as it is in the way the money is being spent. This Government will take most of this money to continue its insidious drive toward total control of our economy.

I do not think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was kidding last week when he said that for a Minister to leave his Cabinet and not be working with Government in some way would pretty well deprive him of his livelihood. He would have to stand on Sparks Street with a tin can and beg for money. I do not think he was kidding because it would be very difficult today for anyone to go into business without being a partner of Government.

That really is the root of the problem which this Government has gotten itself into. It would not matter very much what kind of forecasts the Government would lay before us because its forecasting has been totally out of whack, completely wrong. Government does not have a very good track record. We are still dealing with three prior budgets during which spending has gone from $11 billion to $24 billion. Therefore, it really does not matter much what kind of a forecast the Government would lay before the House. But the question arises, and it is a simple one: If you go to your bank to borrow a large amount of money, surely the banker would first want to know what you need the money for, and second, what you have got to offer as collateral.

Incidentally, to put $1 billion into proper perspective, it has been said it is a stack of brand-new $1 bills 85 miles high. The average person cannot comprehend $19 billion. I know it would take $2 billion to put in place an income security system which would be totally financed and sound actuarially. To take away any anxiety of our senior citizens in terms of retirement income would take $2 billion, and this Government wants $19 billion.

I do not know whether there are some retired Liberals out there who need another $1 million each. I do not know if it is the Government's intention to buy more service stations. I do not know what the Government wants to do with this money. I know there is nothing in any of the programs or legislation before the House right now which would even give me the least bit of confidence that this Government knows what it should do in terms of turning around the economy and creating jobs. It has a new commission now, the Macdonald Commission. A retired Minister, who receives $800 a day, is now out around the country trying to figure out what the Government should do with the economy. We in the Opposition are being criticized for being critical. That is our role as the Official Opposition, but we have nothing to criticize. All we know is the Government's insatiable appetite for power. Karl Marx always said that the cultural and economic theories of a society are merely the reflection of the vested interests of the ruling class. In his time, of course, taxes were low, profits were high and the capitalists were the ruling class. Today profits are low and taxes are high, and since taxes are the income of bureaucrats in Government, it can only be reasoned that the Government and its bureaucrats are the new ruling class. They are the new oppressors, the bureaucrats and the Government. They are the new capitalists, and it is not so much capitalism in the material sense but capitalism in the sense of the raw exercise of power, the uncontrolled exercise of power. They are the new capitalists.

How is the economy reacting to this unrestrained appetite, this kind of unrestrained Government spending? The corporations are reacting in strange ways. The corporations over the last 10 years have not done what corporations normally do in terms of expanding their business. They have indulged themselves in this exercise which is now known as "paper entrepreneurship". Instead of building a new plant, developing a new product and making a contribution to the economy in terms of creating new jobs, they find companies on the stock market whose assets are undervalued and they gobble them up. That is what I call corporate cannibalism. They do that because they are nervous about Government. They have to compete with Government. The banks are competing with Government. All of this does not create one new job or do anything to ease unemployment or inflation. All it does is put a demand on the money market, putting all the capital pools into one big bowl, splashing them around and handing them out to those in the privileged position of raw power as it is exercised by this Government.

The tragedy of this unbridled borrowing as well, Mr. Speaker, is that there is not enough capital in our own country. Federal, provincial and municipal Governments are borrowing much of that money abroad. In other words, the 25 cents of every dollar which every Canadian taxpayer gives to the Government is spent on interest, which is in turn spent abroad somewhere else.

One can turn on the television set every night and hear this criticism of the American economy: "Reaganomics has failed. Massive deficits will create new pressures on the money supply and interest rates." Well, if we look at the American deficit we see it is $80 billion, but that is two and a half times less than what the Canadian deficit is in real terms, and the Americans, of course, borrow from their own people, from their own institutions. We go abroad, however, to America and borrow the money there. Twenty-five cents of every dollar is paid to some institution in the United States, in Switzerland or in the Arab States. That is the tragedy; the money does not even stay in our own economy. Our own banks cannot even build up any capital pools to lend money to small business. And what have the banks done in reaction to this kind of raw power? Have they made an effort to build pools in order to lend to small business, to medium-sized business, and in doing so create new jobs? Of course not. They have lent money to Dome Petroleum, to Chrysler, to Mexico and to Guatemala, because it is just as easy for them, Mr. Speaker, to service a billion dollar loan to a foreign country, which is guaranteed by the Government, as it is to service a $30,000 loan to a small business. That is the tragedy. The trend is set right there and, sir, we must stop it if we want to save our economic freedom in this country and, in so doing, our personal freedom.

Mr. Thacker: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if I might call it one o'clock and I will carry on when we reconvene after three o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed.

TRANSPORT

ACCOUNTABILITY OF CN—REQUEST THAT MONTREAL WORKERS NOT BE TRANSFERRED TO TORONTO

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, on March 8, 1983, the newspaper Le Devoir reported that according to a reliable source, Canadian National was considering a transfer of all personnel from its express division in Montreal to Toronto, a move that would affect over eighty people. We enquired at CNX, and it seems it is true a decision will be forthcoming in a matter of days or weeks.

Of course, the present political stance and fiscal policies of the Government of Quebec tend to discourage private companies from moving to or staying in Quebec. However, the Canadian Government and this includes Crown corporations, should not be put off by the climate of uncertainty in this Province. On the contrary, it should set an example and show its partners in the business world that the situation may well become more normal and more attractive after the next provincial elections, when the so-called nationalists will have breathed their last. I therefore urge CN, considering its obligation to report on its activities, not to transfer those activities, and also to make public the consequence such a decision might have.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT MAJOR CONCERN OF POPULATION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, when asked to identify the major problem in the country today, Canadians placed the jobless rate far ahead of inflation, or any other issue, as their major concern. Sixty-five per cent of those surveyed by Gallup said the Government should be giving much greater attention to trying to reduce unemployment.

Compare that clearly stated concern of the Canadian people with the response of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when questioned about the latest unemployment figures last Friday. With 1.6 million Canadians unemployed, he dismissed their concern with an attitude of "All is well, a recovery is under way, " or "All will be well, just pass the Income Tax Act," or "No need to worry, just wait for my budget."

This is not the first time the Liberal Government has shown its contempt for the views of Canadians, nor the first time that it has been out of step with what Canadians consider to be the number one priority. But in the face of such massive evidence that Canadians believe unemployment must be dealt with immediately, that joblessness is hitting hard, not only at the unemployed but at their dependants as well, surely the Government has an obligation to bring in job creation measures now, and not wait until some will-of-the-wisp budget to do so.

COMMUNICATIONS

VIEWERS' PREFERENCE FOR AMERICAN TELEVISION—NECESSITY TO STUDY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION IN BROADCASTING

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, when I was watching the American PBS channel from Vermont this weekend, I could not help comparing their system to ours. The American Government is spending $85 million for a population of 230 million. We pay ten times that amount, namely, $850 million for ten times fewer people. This comparison is particularly apt when we read the comments of a popular Quebec columnist who this week was discussing a crucial development. He said that 52 per cent of Quebecers watch television in English, mostly on American channels, and that among young people the proportion is 75 per cent. Since we are now considering the Applebaum-Hébert Report in committee, perhaps we should ask ourselves whether we should go on investing nearly $1 billion of the taxpayers' money when even Quebecers prefer U.S. channels and many make voluntary contributions towards financing the American Public Broadcasting System.

THE MONARCHY

QUEEN'S VISIT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, Hansard should carry a record of the visit to British Columbia last week of Canada's Queen, Her Majesty Elizabeth II. It should also note the enthusiastic welcome extended to Her Majesty by the thousands of British Columbians who stood for hours to greet their Queen, as well as the deep impression made upon her by the children who lined the road sides, many of them offering flowers.

That visit should remind us that today, March 14, is Commonwealth Day, and it should bring to mind the role Her Majesty and the Crown play as the symbols about which the countries of that Commonwealth cluster to exercise their influence for peace, stability, and harmony, and on the development of democratic institutions throughout the world.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN ASSOCIATION OF MUNICIPALITIES—OPPOSITION TO CROWSNEST PASS RATE CHANGES

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, last week in Saskatoon I attended the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities, which is made up of all the councillors of rural municipalities in Saskatchewan. The people who attend that annual meeting are the cream of the crop, Madam Speaker. They are the men and women of the soil of Saskatchewan.

They had two very outstanding resolutions. First, they went on record as being strictly opposed to any change in the Crow rate statutes. This was a unanimous opinion. Second, they went on record as saying that the Crow rate is still non-negotiable. That was also unanimous.

When I speak about the farmers of Saskatchewan who were at that particular meeting, I am referring to the land owners, the people who produce the food for this country, and they should be listened to by us all. Unfortunately, the Government is not listening to them and so it is going to make a grave mistake.

I suggest that the Government should reconsider what it has done. The farmers of Canada are literally in dire straits today and are losing their farms. The Canadian Farm Survival Association is in Ottawa today, protesting the fact that a Canadian farmer is in jail. I would say that it takes a lot more than wearing a green hat to become someone who is really in touch with what is going on with the farmers.

COMMONWEALTH DAY

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO IMPROVEMENT OF LIVING CONDITIONS IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Madam Speaker, since 1976, the second Monday in March has been designated Commonwealth Day following a proposal by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at a meeting of heads of State in Kingston, Jamaica. While many of its members, including Canada, have evolved in the constitutional sense, the Commonwealth has remained a privileged forum for forty-seven countries, nearly one quarter of the world's population. Colonialism has gradually given way to political consultation and co-operation among peoples.

[English]

Commonwealth Day should be used primarily for educational purposes, so that developed and developing member nations could learn about the Commonwealth and life in other countries.

On this day Commonwealth countries around the world are marking the occasion with enthusiasm in a wide range of activities. We in Canada should value the many forms of association with the Governments and people of the 47 countries of this world-wide association representing one-quarter of the world's population.

[Translation]

Canadians have made a tremendous contribution towards improving living conditions in many developing countries that are fellow members of the Commonwealth, through common institutions or bilateral aid programs.

[English]

On this day, then, it behooves us to commemorate our longest continuous multilateral association with other countries, to remind ourselves of the value of that association and the contribution Canada can make politically and economically to its further evolution and well-being.

ENERGY

DANGERS TO OFFSHORE OIL DRILLING RIGS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, on February 16 the Government of Newfoundland observed a severe storm in the East Coast offshore area of the Hibernia well. It raged for two and a half days. Helicopters could not go to the oil rig West Venture which could not pull her anchors to be towed in such weather. This rig is not self-propelled. There were ten icebergs and bergy bits around endangering the oil rig and her crew of 84.

On February 24 the Newfoundland Government ordered that Mobil Oil should bring its rigs ashore because of danger. No drilling was done after that time. On February 25 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) countermanded the order and so put at risk the lives of the 84 people on the West Venture and the other rigs in the area. Mobil Oil said that it was responsible only to the federal Government as a result of the court decision on jurisdiction over the offshore.

On March 11 the Minister discovered his mistake when Mobil Oil had to order both its oil rigs in due to the perilous ice conditions. The company will not say where the rigs are going. I understand they are anchored some distance from Hibernia.

The Minister should resign his seat. He has shown his unfitness by his swaggering and bullying lack of sensitivity, his lack of concern for the people whose lives are at risk. He is unfit to be given such responsibilities. He has the jackboots of a petty dictator, exercising his constitutional muscles over the Province of Newfoundland because of that Supreme Court decision. He is unfit for the great responsibilities he has—

HEALTH

STUDY OF HOSPITAL WORKERS USING VIDEO DISPLAY TERMINALS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, recently a study was completed by H. D. Sharma, a professor from the University of Waterloo, based on 75 video display terminal operators working in British Columbia hospitals. Sharma found an abnormally low rate of pregnancies among the women of child-bearing age and, of the 14 VDT operators who became pregnant over the past year, ten had miscarriages or gave birth to babies with defects. This is only one of many studies with similar results.

A Government task force report on microelectronics made recommendations which could reduce the number of birth complications and other physical problems that are associated with VDTs. At first the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) endorsed these recommendations, and said that they conveyed a sense of urgency. Now he is backing away from the need to legislate health and safety protection for VDT operators, in response to the lobbying of employer groups. The Minister of Labour must find the courage to act immediately on behalf of the workers and their children who need the protection of Canadian law.

SOCIAL SECURITY

APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM TO OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I want to use this opportunity to put on the record some comments about the Government's six and five efforts to reduce inflation and, particularly, the impact these efforts have had on senior citizens. These comments are based upon a statement given last Friday afternoon in Ottawa by Bert Hamner of the Ottawa and District Council on Aging to a conference sponsored by Ottawa and Ontario labour groups.

I put these comments on the record here, first because they bear out what we on this side have been saying about six and five and, second, because the CBC, which was filming last Friday's conference, turned off its mikes and cameras during most of Mr. Hamner's presentation. In Mr. Hamner's own words, the application of the six and five program to Old Age Security was "not worth getting excited about".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: Listen and learn. According to Mr. Hamner, senior citizens are quite prepared to do their bit to fight inflation and, indeed, will turn out to be the chief beneficiaries if efforts succeed in bringing down the Consumer Price Index. This, Mr. Hamner says, is exactly what has happened, and the "sacrifice" on the part of Canadian pensioners has been exactly $1 each so far—50 cents off their February cheque and 50 cents off their March cheque.

This is exactly what we have been saying on this side of the House during the debate on the Government's restraint measures, that if we all work together and succeed in reversing the inflationary spiral, we will all be better off in the long run.

Madam Speaker: Order.

TOURISM

IMPORTANCE TO ECONOMY—CALL FOR GASOLINE TAX REDUCTION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House and of the Minister responsible the fact that there is a very simple, practical and inexpensive way in which the Government can move to assist the revival of the economy, by directing its support to the industry which ranks, at least in Ontario, as the second largest generator of jobs. Furthermore, it is geographically so dispersed that, more than any other employer, it can generate a widespread positive leverage throughout the economy. Of course I am speaking of the tourist industry.

In Ontario alone last year it generated $7.4 billion in revenues and created a ripple effect generating $12.6 billion. That represents big money in a country which is trying to encourage an economic recovery. Yet, on a bilateral basis with the United States alone, in 1981 Canada ran a deficit on tourist account of $1 billion. Surely that is due in large measure to the fact that gasoline, which ultimately fuels all tourism, is 10 cents a litre or, in terms that our would-be tourists can understand, 45 cents a gallon more expensive here than across the border where the world price is in effect. Eighty cents a gallon, or 17 cents a litre of that, is due to federal taxes. A simple cut in this federal grab would cause a beneficial effect to ripple all the way through the domestic Canadian economy, and I recommend this course to the Minister.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Following the release last Friday by Statistics Canada of the unemployment figures, showing an increase in the seasonally-adjusted rate and virtually no change in the real rate, Gallup this morning released a poll showing that 65 per cent of Canadians in a national poll feel that unemployment is the main problem facing the country today as opposed to 28 per cent who see inflation as the main problem.

Given the policy of the Government, and given these findings by Statistics Canada and by Gallup, does the Government intend to bring in measures immediately, especially since we have been told not to expect a budget for at least a month? Will the Government change its priorities and bring in budgetary measures now which will address themselves to this critical problem?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member must know that the Government attaches very high priority to the question of unemployment. The Minister of Finance, in his statement last fall and in the earlier budget, indicated that the Government had allocated very large sums of money in order to create jobs and to support activities which would result in the creation of jobs. At the present time the Minister of Finance and the Government are considering what further steps might be taken to bring about economic recovery, including the creation of more jobs. That will be made known when the Minister brings down his budget.

Mr. McGrath: An examination of the statistics released on last Friday indicate a very alarming increase in the rate of long-term unemployed—up 98 per cent over a year. Of the 1.6 million Canadians officially listed as unemployed, over half of them are long-term unemployed. These are people who have been unemployed for longer than three months. In many instances they have seen unemployment insurance benefits exhausted.

REQUEST FOR TAX CREDIT SYSTEM TO ASSIST LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Given the concern expressed by a majority of Canadians, is the Government prepared to bring in at least a measure to address the problem of the long-term unemployed? I would suggest as a start that the Government accept the recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada to bring in an employment tax credit system which could be targeted to the long-term unemployed or the unemployment insurance exhaustees. That would get people to work right away. It would provide long-term employment in the private sector as opposed to the band aids we keep getting from the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the programs which have been introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration have been absolutely indispensable in assisting the unemployed. They have made a very real contribution to that objective. I am surprised that the Hon. Member does not know that. He must be aware of the very large programs which exist in his own Province of Newfoundland that have been sponsored by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. McGrath: That is the kind of band-aid treatment about which I am concerned. According to the Minister's own figures, $500 million has been spent to create 60,000 jobs under the NEED Program. According to the Economic Council of Canada the Government could, for an expenditure of $100 million by way of tax credits, provide 50,000 jobs in the private sector right away. That is the kind of response we expect from the Government, instead of it sitting by, applying band-aids while the patient bleeds to death.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Minister, if he has any compassion left in him at all, whether he will recommend to his colleagues in Cabinet, at least to the Minister of Finance, that we have action now and not one or two months down the road when the Minister is ready to bring down a budget.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the number of jobs which would be created by a particular tax credit. I would think that any of these estimates are related to the prospects for growth in the economy and the prospects for recovery. The Hon. Member must know that there is no specific program which can really solve the problem of unemployment, in Canada or in any other country, until general recovery takes place throughout the industrialized world. There are some signs that at the present time recovery is beginning, but it would be very misleading to suggest that the adoption of this particular suggestion of the Economic Council of Canada would make any deep impression on the unemployment situation.

• (1420)

REQUEST FOR CREATION OF LONG-TERM EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I would like to draw to his attention that last year Canada lost an average of 1,400 jobs per day. The Deputy Prime Minister addressed the situation in an answer to a previous question. In Newfoundland unemployment is raging at 18.8 per cent, in New Brunswick unemployment is at 15.3 per cent, and in his own home area of Cape Breton unemployment is out of control. Farm bankruptcies are up. The forest industry is in a shambles. The Government has addressed itself to the fishing problems through the Kirby Report, yet no action is being taken. The shipbuilding policy has been announced, but where is it?

What concrete steps is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to take now? What recommendations is he prepared to make to this colleagues, specifically to create meaningful jobs that will be long lasting and will provide a future for Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have already answered that question, as the Hon. Member will know if he had been listening to the question put by his colleague from St. John's.

FUTURE OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, perhaps I might do a little better if I put another question to another Minister, although I doubt it. Nevertheless, I will try, and I direct my question to the Minister responsible for public works from Bonavista to Vancouver Island and all points in between, including the Province of New Brunswick. It has been stated by his colleague from Northumberland-Miramichi that his biggest priority is dealing with the closure of CFB Chatham. As the Minister of Public Works, what does he intend to do to demonstrate that priority to the people of New Brunswick in the Chatham region, and will he now react in a positive way to the request of the people in that region to go there, put on his dancing slippers and be prepared to meet the piper?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have said in this House before that the base is not closed, that it will be open until the end of 1984. In spite of this fact, unemployment in the Miramichi area is very high. Officials of the provincial Government, which the Hon. Member supported in the last election, went around last fall talking about the problems of the future, not the problems of today or yesterday. The provincial Government has done very little to solve the problems of Miramichi. If the Hon. Member wants to help the situation he will stop making speeches and try to do something in co-operation with his provincial colleagues.

Mr. Corbett: What are you doing besides hiding in Ottawa?

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SUPPORT ENTRENCHMENT IN CONSTITUTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice in the absence of the Prime Minister. On the eve of the historic First Minister's Conference on Aboriginal Rights, the Government of Canada has left its position unclear on a basic question. I refer to the need to entrench within the Constitution itself a requirement that a certain number of First Ministers' meetings take place over a prescribed and limited period of time to deal with the important question of defining aboriginal rights. Will the Minister take this opportunity to commit the Government to fighting for such an entrenchment, a desire that is requested by virtually every native group in the country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I think it is fair to say that the commitment of the kind my hon. friend seeks should probably come at the conference itself. I can tell him in the House that indeed it is the wish of the Government of Canada that an ongoing constitutional process should be provided for in a constitutional amendment so that the native peoples will have a guarantee that this first meeting, which is the only meeting now provided for by the Constitution, will be the beginning of a process and not the end.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, it sounds risky, but I am tempted to say that the Minister made what one might call an unequivocal commitment on behalf of the Government to pursue that proposal at the First Ministers' Conference. He is nodding his head, so I assume that is the case.

CONSENT OF NATIVE PEOPLES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my second question concerns the rights of the native peoples themselves in their own communities to pass judgment on whatever negotiated changes might take place in the future concerning aboriginal rights.

The Minister will recall that two years ago the Government turned down a New Democratic Party proposed amendment for a so-called consent clause. Has the Government reconsidered this? Will the Government guarantee to the native people of Canada that any negotiated changes in aboriginal rights will go back to the native people themselves in some form for consent, before such changes are entrenched?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the whole process of setting up an entrenched constitution process of an ongoing nature is to provide for continuing discussions with the native peoples and, of course, with the Provinces as well. As to the further development of aboriginal rights, we firmly believe that no such changes should be made without full consultation with the aboriginal people.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice, as a lawyer, will know that consultation is not the same as consent. I would like the Minister to deal with the question again and to be explicit. Is the Government willing or not willing to commit itself to a process of constitutional change so that when changes are made by the federal Government and the Provinces, which alone have the right now in terms of votes at constitutional meetings, such changes in aboriginal rights will not have the force of constitutional law unless they go back to the native people themselves for a final vote of some kind to obtain their agreement?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I think that to answer my hon. friend's question fully it is necessary to make a distinction. If what he has in mind is a constitutional amendment formula which would replace the one existing in the Charter now, it is not indeed our purpose to change that provision at the present time.

I would say, and I think the important point is, that it is the purpose of the ongoing process precisely to reach agreement with the native groups in this country as to a fuller expansion of their rights. The Government of Canada is not coming to this conference to insist on its legal right, but to try to reach agreement with the Provinces and with the aboriginal groups on an expanded version of these rights for the future.

Mr. Nielsen: And the Territories.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SUPPORT LEGISLATION AMENDING FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and of the Minister of Finance, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister will know that today marks the sixth day of a fast by a young Canadian farmer who is in jail and who will not eat until the Government brings forward appropriate legislation to deal with the critical financial situation that is being faced by many Canadian farmers. The Minister will know that the Opposition Parties support in principle the suggested legislation. When will the Government bring in legislation to deal with this situation? Will it be today, or will there be more promises? What commitment will the Deputy Prime Minister make now to the farmers who are being affected by this situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will acknowledge that Parliament, at the insistance of the farmers themselves and as a result of this Government's action, has adopted many measures that have proved to be very useful to farmers and agriculture in Canada. Last Friday, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture mentioned a number of these very beneficial measures. In addition, one of the Hon. Member's own colleagues, the Hon. Member for Elgin, made a suggestion last Thursday and at the time I said the Government was prepared to give it serious consideration. This morning, however, I was very disappointed to hear one of the Hon. Member's colleagues, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette, declare that he was not prepared to allow passage of Bill C-653, a Bill presented by a Liberal Member, the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex, and that he preferred to refer the Bill to a committee.

In the circumstances, I do not think the suggestion by the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette is very constructive. On the other hand, the proposal of the Hon. Member for Elgin has considerable merits, and we are prepared to give it further consideration.

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Government House Leader. I think that the farmers who are in the galleries now will take little solace from the answer given by the House Leader. I think he will know that this is a critical situation. This critical financial situation faced by the farmer is paralleled by the situation and the risk to the life of the farmer who is in jail. We are not playing politics with this issue. We have a commitment to the principle of the Bill from this side of the House. We are prepared to see it go forward, and it is important that today or in the near future some measure is adopted.

If the House Leader is not able to bring forward this legislation, will he at least bring forward legislation that would impose a moratorium on further farm foreclosures until the House can consider appropriate legislation? This is supported by all Members on this side of the House and would receive quick and unanimous passage, I am sure, if the House Leader would bring forward legislation to solve the problem, instead of playing politics.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is warning against playing politics at the expense of the farmers. Perhaps he will recall that a few weeks ago his own progressive conservative colleagues were hiding behind the curtains to prevent Parliament from functioning, when the Government wanted to have a very important measure passed that would promote exports of Canadian agricultural products. The Progressive Conservative Party has systematically prevented Parliament from functioning and from adopting certain measures, especially those aimed directly at providing relief for the farmers he just mentioned and who are here today in the gallery. The Hon. Member may be sincere, and I do not really doubt his sincerity, but I think he is misinformed because he certainly does not have the support of his colleagues with respect to the measure he mentioned. I will make him a definite offer and we shall see whether his colleagues are prepared to support him. His own colleague, the Member for Elgin, suggested an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act that would provide the means for helping the farmers concerned. I suggest that this Bill, which has reached the second reading stage, should be referred immediately to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Furthermore, we shall ensure—I discussed this with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—that the amendment in question will be debated and considered very seriously in committee, not on Wednesday, which is normally the day for considering Private Members' Business, since it would then be much too late to help my colleague's friend, but tomorrow, when the agriculture committee could consider a serious amendment relating to this subject, that would be attached to the Bankruptcy Act which itself has been awaited so long by all Canadians. Therefore, if the Hon. Member is acting in good faith, he will accept my—

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

[English]

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT ON LEGISLATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to that just asked. I would also ask the Government House Leader that we not engage in trade-offs or saw-offs on a matter of such importance.

Given the nature of the problem that confronts so many farmers all across the country, and the fact that more of them are going into bankruptcy and losing both their property and farm machinery every single day, will the Government House Leader make a commitment to bring forward a bill dealing with the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act to ease the terrible difficulties that confront so many and continue to grow daily?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have just indicated to the Member who asked me the previous question all the good measures that were brought in by this Government in support of agriculture since the beginning of this Parliament. He cannot deny that. The farmers themselves recognize those good policies.

Second, he will recognize that we have a Bill on the table which is proposed to facilitate the exportation of farm products from this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: This Bill cannot be passed because of the systematical obstruction coming from the Official Opposition. I had indicated to the Hon. Conservative Member that we were willing to consider a proposal made by one of his colleagues last Thursday, the Hon. Member for Elgin, when he suggested that we might consider making an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act that could achieve the goal which all Members in the House are seeking. I have suggested that this afternoon we all agree to send that Bill immediately without further debate, since debate has begun on second reading of that Bill, to the Agriculture Committee. Tomorrow, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is willing to consider very seriously the appropriate amendments to deal with this problem.

Mr. Deans: Table the amendment and we will deal with it now.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF BILL BASED ON FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton-West): Madam Speaker, since the Bills proposed by the Government are all lame ducks—Bill C-12 has not been debated in the House since 1981 and the Canagrex Bill is in a morass of problems—would it not be feasible to suggest that a Bill based on the former Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act be referred to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for consideration, which could then consider the problems and receive representations from both creditors and debtors, and determine what the best solution would be for the industry today?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, my learned colleague must admit that a Bill does not become a lame duck just because a political party decides to indulge in systematic obstruction. Bill C-12 is very important. It is favoured by all the Provinces and by all those who are in financial difficulty in Canada, including farmers, and I wonder on what grounds the Hon. Member decided that Bill C-12 was a lame duck? Once again, the offer I made just now still stands. If the Official Opposition is serious about this, it will allow the Bill to be referred to committee right away, where all appropriate amendments will be considered in order to find a solution to the problem.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT OFFER

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton-West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I repeat that Bill C-12 is a lame duck because the Government has not bothered to bring this Bill up for debate since 1981. So it is a lame duck. What I want to say is this: Make us a good offer through the House Leaders, and then perhaps we could settle the consultation issue.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking for a good offer. Since October 27, we have had a list of urgent Bills on the Table which in itself constitutes an excellent offer to end a session that has been going on for nearly three years. The legislation on that list concerns not only agriculture but the entire economy of this country, and it is because of systematic and irresponsible obstruction by the Hon. Member's party that we have not yet been able to finish debate on these measures, including the solution favoured by the Hon. Member for farmers. I would therefore ask the Hon. Member to have the courtesy to speak to his own Parliamentary House Leader. We on this side are prepared to enter into reasonable agreements that will provide for proroguing this session and starting a new one with the throne speech as soon as possible.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Government House Leader. Does he have an amendment that he can table in the House today for us to consider?

[English]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead asks that question.

Mr. Nielsen: Do you have it or not?

Mr. Pinard: He pretends to try to help the farmers. We should have at hand the kinds of amendments he is talking about, and the solutions for farmers he is talking about. We are saying on this side that we are willing to consider any serious proposals based on the bill from the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex, the Liberal Member who has come forward with a suggestion that looks very interesting to us. We are saying that an amendment based on that bill could go to the appropriate committee to deal with Bill C-12.

Mr. Nielsen: Where is it?

Mr. Pinard: Then we might achieve the result that we all want in place. For the Hon. Member for Yellowknife to pretend that I should go to him—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

Mr. Pinard: I apologize, as I do not mean to offend the Hon. Member. But I was looking at his back, not at his head.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: I just want to confirm, for the Hon. Member, that the Government has done much for agriculture in this country, that we intend to do much more, and that all good proposals will be very seriously considered. May I once again reiterate the offer I just made, which is a very practical one. Let us agree to send one Bill, which is Bill C-12, to the Committee on Agriculture today.

Mr. Huntington: It's already been sent to another committee.

Mr. Pinard: Tomorrow we will be dealing with the appropriate amendment, which we hope will satisfy the farmers, if not the Opposition.

REQUEST THAT HOUSE LEADERS MEET

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): I point out, for the Minister, that I always look ahead——and I may point out that his party has no Members from the Province where Yellowhead happens to be or from the Territory where Yellowknife is located. However, that is not what we are discussing here today.

I would like to get things straight, because Canadian farmers are pressing for action and cannot afford the time being wasted by the Liberal Party which does not want to give Canadian farmers the help they need. The Minister mentioned a specific amendment. Does he have an amendment? Is that amendment available now for consideration by the House, and I also have another question for the president of the Privy Council—

[English]

Since he has spoken of good will—

—he mentioned goodwill. Is he willing to have a meeting right away this afternoon with the House Leaders of our party and the New Democratic Party, in order to determine effective ways of resolving this problem so as to help Canadian farmers?

[English]

Will he do that now? Will he immediately call a meeting of House Leaders and show us an amendment at that time, if he has one? And if he does not have an amendment, will he at least sit down with the House Leaders to find a way by which Parliament can come to the aid of the farmers of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Certainly, Madam Speaker, I welcome that constructive suggestion very much, provided—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: —the House Leader of the Conservative Party comes with the text of the amendment which was given—

Mr. Nielsen: Your suggestion.

Mr. Pinard: —to his colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, dealing with the Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. Andre: We are talking about farmers, not that piece of trash.

Mr. Pinard: I have just learned that the amendment, which the former Leader of the Tory Party has been discussing, was given to one of his own colleagues about one week ago. Therefore, if he speaks to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, then he might know about the amendment. If the Opposition does not agree with it or wants to improve it, we are open-minded, and I will then speak with his House Leader. However, I would suggest that the Hon. Member—

Mr. Nielsen: Right Hon.

Mr. Pinard: —first speak with his own colleague rather than campaigning.

The Hon. Member for Elgin made a proposal to amend Bill C-12, and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has had the amendment we are discussing in his hands for a week.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Just so that we are absolutely clear, the only action the Government is prepared to contemplate with regard to the Private Member's Bill introduced by its own Member is an amendment which is now in the hands of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. Is that the proposal, or is the Minister prepared to consider other ways by which this Parliament can immediately act to help farmers who are on the verge of losing their operations, or who may not be able to seed this spring? That is what we are interested in: we are not here to play politics.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Boo!

Mr. Ouellet: Even Nielsen's smiling.

Mr. Clark: It may be that my Party plays politics elsewhere—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Clark: —but we do not play politics with the lives—

Madam Speaker: Order. I guess the question has been posed, so we might have an answer.

Mr. Clark: All right.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asked me whether we were willing to consider other options besides the single amendment we handed to his colleague from Mississauga-South. In fact, the Liberal Party has a reputation for being open-minded and flexible, and the former Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party will admit that it would be very short-sighted to refuse out of hand any consideration of constructive proposals.

In fact, if he had talked to his agriculture critic, the Hon. Member for Elgin, he would have realized that what the Member for Elgin proposed last Thursday was not only an amendment to Bill C-12 but also a formula for considering the Bill tabled by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex. When I informed the Member for Elgin that I was willing to consider his proposals, I was referring not only to an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act but also to a formula for considering a Liberal Bill presented by a Member of Parliament who is concerned about his constituents and Canadian farmers. In the circumstances, the answer to his question is quite simple. Of course, we have an open mind, we want to find solutions, we have already done so in the past for the benefit of farmers, and we intend to maintain our reputation as the party that has shown the greatest concern for developing agriculture in this country and defending the interests of our farmers.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT HALF OF NEED PROGRAM FUNDS BE ALLOCATED TO MONTREAL METROPOLITAN REGION

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Considering that the latest Statistics Canada figures reveal that 209,000 of the 450,000 unemployed Quebecers are in the Greater Montreal region, and that in all likelihood many of those idle workers are about to exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits, will the Minister try to convince his Cabinet colleagues to ensure that half of the projects within the federal scope of the NEED Program will go to the Greater Montreal region?

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in response to the question I want to point out that one of the particular attractions of the NEED Program is its ability to target in on those areas where the demand and concern with regard to unemployment are at their highest level. Contrary to the somewhat callous approach taken by the Hon. Member for St. John's East, who would totally deny any assistance to the people in his own Province, as evidenced by the kind of proposal he was making, our ability through the NEED Program is to allocate the money where benefits have been exhausted and where the unemployment rate is highest. On that basis, we are working to ensure that the Montreal region in the Province of Quebec is particularly served by our programs.

I think it would be important for the House to know that we do not wish to follow the precedent set by the previous Government, which cancelled all job creation programs. Nothing would be done for any Canadians, at any time, anywhere, if the Conservatives were in power.

REQUEST THAT TWO BILLS BE SENT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader, who will know that there have been extensive negotiations between the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and myself with respect to Bill C-12. That Bill could be passed in this House with less than one Hon. Member speaking for each Party, or directed immediately to the Committee. However, the Government House Leader will also know that the farmers and, in particular, the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex, are not happy with the proposals concerning farmers—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Blenkarn: —in that Bill.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We have heard enough speeches on this particular question. It is simply getting out of hand. The Hon. Member could ask a question without making a speech.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, it is about time the Government House Leader knew where we were going here. Therefore, let me ask the Government House Leader a question.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Blenkarn: Let me ask him a question, then.

Madam Speaker: An admonition is an admonition. The Hon. Member is the one who caught it, but he must ask his question immediately.

Mr. Blenkarn: I would be delighted to ask my question. Will the Government House Leader, then, allow Bill C-653 and Bill C-12 to go immediately to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for study, if they pass the House at this point, or allow them to go straight to the Committee for study with respect to details concerning farm problems which are here today and becoming worse and worse, and bankruptcy problems which are here today and becoming worse and worse?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member is making an offer to refer without debate the two Bills he has mentioned, and if he has the unanimous support of all his colleagues in the Official Opposition and of the other Members, we are quite prepared to consider that suggestion very seriously.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Is the Government House Leader saying, so we can get it clear—

Mr. Smith: It takes a while for you to get it clear.

Mr. Blenkarn: —that he will allow Bill C-653 and Bill C-12 to go immediately to the Standing Committee? Is that his position? Because we will.

• (1450)

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I just do not like to repeat my answers. My answer was very simple. I said that if that is the offer made by the Hon. Member and he has the unanimous support of all the Members in this place, certainly we are willing to consider that suggestion very seriously.

Mr. Blenkarn: Will you come clean? Yes or no?

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED U.S. USER FEES ON CROSS-BORDER TRAFFIC

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In July of last year the Minister of Transport learned that the U.S. Treasury mandated the U.S. Customs to prepare implementation of a user fee on persons and vehicles crossing the border into the United States. Today the Minister's officials are in Washington, paving the way for him to have a meeting with his counterparts in Washington next month. Since the user fee is designed to benefit the U.S. Treasury and not to alleviate any specific costs, would the Minister tell this House what steps he has taken in the last eight months to deal with the U.S. administration, Congress and Senate, on this matter.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am not sure I understand the question. I can confirm that I am talking with the Americans to have a discussion with the Secretary of Transportion on all kinds of subjects related to Canada/U.S. relations in transportation. I will add the subject, when I get a better definition of it, to my list that has already been prepared.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, the tariffs being discussed by the U.S. Customs will run into hundreds of millions of dollars in terms of commercial vessels, rail traffic, car traffic, air traffic, passengers on trains, and people on foot. It will be $1.80 per passenger car; 40 cents a head for passengers; $1.40 on all railway cars; $296 on commercial freighter traffic, and so on. Those are just some examples.

Would the Minister tell this House what he, his officials or anyone in his Government have done since they learned of this secret decision by the U.S. eight months ago, and what steps he plans to take in the coming days or weeks to make sure that the United States does not impose these kinds of taxes on Canadian travellers and businesses?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if it was a secret decision that is a good reason why I would not have known about it.

Mr. Fulton: Your officials would know about it.

Mr. Pepin: The subject of cost recovery, of user pay is not one that is new either in Canada or in the United States.

I understand that the Americans are looking for recovery of expenditures, for example, on transportation on the Mississippi River, which would put a bit of a question mark on the suggestion made on Friday by the NDP relative to the possibility of transportation of Canadian western grain through the United States. So, user pay is not a new principle, either in the United States or in Canada, and one must expect that Governments both in the United States and Canada, will try to recover as much as possible of the amount that they spend on transportation.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NAKINA RUN-THROUGH PROPOSAL

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I would like to know whether the Minister of Transport is aware that the report of the 1965 Industrial Inquiry into CNR Run-throughs, which is known as the Freedman Report, made this observation, and I quote:

—there is a Government obligation towards communities whose existence or stability is threatened by a run-through or its consequences.

The CNR is proposing once again to run through the community of Nakina, that is, not have any crew changes there. It says that $1.2 million will be saved per year. The community, at the same time, is going to lose $1.5 million in a reduced tax base. I ask the Minister of Transport what will this big federal Government do to help a small northern Ontario community whose stability is threatened at the very moment in its history when it is starting to get on its feet and enjoy some of the services that most other Canadian communities have?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Canadian National has followed the practice in these matters, in this instance and in the past, and the run-through has been negotiated by the railway and agreed to by the workers, or their union. In other words, the workers are entitled to the benefits of relocation, early retirement, retraining, and so on.

There is another aspect that I recognize which has to do with the town itself. In this instance I will associate myself with the Member in representations that he will want to make to other Departments in order to find out if there are ways and means to help the community.

REPORTED LOSSES BY MAISLIN INDUSTRIES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a related question for the Deputy Prime Minister. It was published in the Financial Post's Corporation Service that the net losses listed in the nine months ending September 30, 1982, for Maislin Industries Limited, was almost $14 million, with revenue declines of some 36 per cent. Is the Government contemplating the possibility of additional financial aid to Maislin on top of the original $34 million guarantee of last July?

While the Deputy Prime Minister is answering that question, would he also inform the House whether there has been a committee of cabinet set up to watchdog the performance of Maislin, and, if so, perhaps he could inform the House of the membership of that cabinet committee and when it intends to meet next?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not aware that any contemplation, to use the Hon. Member's words, is being undertaken with respect to further assistance for Maislin Industries. Further to that, there is no special cabinet committee that has been set up to deal with Maislin, to my knowledge. Matters of that kind would normally be considered by a regular committee of cabinet.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE APPLICATION FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Deputy Prime Minister perhaps be a little more specific and inform the House whether the Government has received any application whatsoever from Maislin for additional financial assistance, and whether that has been made by way of Maislin itself or by way of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, if an application has been made, the cabinet has certainly not been made aware of it. Some applications might have been made to a Department. I will check on that point. Certainly I am not aware of any applications.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DISCONTINUANCE OF CHILD ALLOWANCE TO PARENTS OF MISSING GIRL

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister responsible for the status of women, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The mother of Tania Murrell, a nine-year-old girl who has been missing from Edmonton since January, has received a letter from the Department of National Health and Welfare indicating that the family will no longer receive Family Allowances for Tania. Will the Minister confirm that this is a departmental decision, and will she also confirm that this would appear to indicate that her Government feels that Tania will not be found alive?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, surely the Hon. Member will be able to address that question more directly to the Minister responsible. In the meantime I shall take the question under notice and bring it to her attention.

REQUEST THAT AWARD BE POSTED FOR INFORMATION ON MISSING CHILD

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, you will appreciate the absolute insensitivity that has been displayed by the Department of National Health and Welfare in doing this. Will the Minister agree to have the decision reversed? Will she also agree to post a reward for anyone who will provide information leading to the safe return of this nine-year-old Edmonton girl?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, obviously I am in no position to make those decisions, but I will assure the Hon. Member that I will bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS—DEADLINE FOR APPLICATIONS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, on March 4 I directed a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I asked, would he consider adding two weeks to the deadline then set for applications to the various elements of the Canada Works Program for the summer, this year.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the answer to the question is "of course" and I made that clear. When we added the additional $50 million to the program to make it a $170 million program I indicated that we would be very flexible on the timing of the applications. The original date was March 4 and we have been accepting applications up until today's date, March 14, ten days later. At that point in time we had to make a cut-off so we could start processing the applications. I can assure the Hon. Member that anything received with a post date of up to March 14 will be accepted.

REQUEST THAT DEADLINE BE EXTENDED

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada allocated $239 million, known dollars, in last year's budget to advertising. Will the Minister explain why, out of $239 million, the Department of Employment and Immigration could not find enough money to advertise the closing date for those applications in the weekly papers of Canada? I am still receiving objections that people did not know of the extension and they did not know of the closing date. Will the Minister consider adding one additional week, making it March 21 for the closing date for applications, so that students and young people can in fact apply and take advantage of the program?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in the past many of the Hon. Member's colleagues spent a great deal of time during Question Period belabouring various Ministers for their expenditures on advertising. Now he turns around and says we should be spending more. What we try to do is rely upon the good offices and hard effort of Members of Parliament to contact people in their own riding. I can assure him that, at least, Members on this side of the House have done their job.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask the Government House Leader if he will immediately convene a meeting to deal with what this House might do with Bill C-653.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I have received that kind of request from the NDP as well. I think this is a good idea, provided we also consider the way to deal with Bill C-12 following the proposition made by the Tory Member for Elgin. Later today, probably around five o'clock, we could have a meeting; I will let my colleague know exactly when. If it is not this afternoon, then tomorrow morning early.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I certainly appreciate receiving the answer to the question I asked on Thursday last, I believe. However, since the position of, I think, everyone in the House of Commons is now well known with regard to Bill C-653, or at least the content of it is, would it not expedite matters by simply calling that piece of legislation? We can guarantee passage of it by six o'clock this afternoon and have the vote.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, all Members know that we are dealing with legislation that is under time limitation because of its great urgency. It has to be dealt with. Providing we get the Income Tax Act and the borrowing authority Bill by six o'clock tonight, we would certainly be willing to consider this Bill on the floor of the House. The Hon. Member will recognize that under former Standing Order 18, it is up to the Government to decide House business. The business for this week was announced last week. It is difficult to change it at the last minute.

Time Allocation

In any event, the legislation the Hon. Member is referring to is Private Members' Business, which comes up on Wednesday. I have just indicated to the Tory House Leader that we will probably meet this afternoon or tomorrow morning. It may be that we can have our meeting earlier than five o'clock. It could be tomorrow afternoon, but definitely it will be before Wednesday when we deal with Private Members' Business.

PETITION

MR. OGLE—CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I have a petition to the Honourable House of Commons and Parliament assembled. The petition is basically this: Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to adopt the provisions of the alternate plan, the proposal of the NDP, instead of the Pépin-Gilson proposal, and that the statutory Crowsnest Pass freight rate may be maintained and that the railroads of all of Canada may be upgraded and developed into a modern, efficient transport system.

This particular petition has been sent to me by senior citizens living at the Cosmo Court in Saskatoon. Many of them are or were farmers. They are people who understand agriculture in the West. They understand that the prosperity of Saskatchewan depends upon the agricultural proceeds of that Province. I hope that the House of Commons will seriously consider this petition.

NOTICE OF ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER COMMITTEE STAGE OF BILL C-139

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform the House that there have been consultations between representatives of the Parties but it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 80 or 81 with regard to the allocation of time for the Committee of the Whole stage of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2). Therefore, at the next sitting of the House I shall propose a motion pursuant to Standing Order 82 to allocate one sitting day for the said stage of the said Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

1. How many contracts from CIDA or loans through the Export Development Corporation has the SNC Enterprises Ltd. Group of Montreal received in the past five years?

2. Has Camille A. Dagenais of SNC Enterprises Ltd. done contract or consultant work for CIDA?

2. No.

In so far as the Export Development Corporation is concerned:

1. EDC has not made loans directly to the SNC Enterprises Ltd. Group in the sense of the question but it has provided financing to foreign customers in respect of export transactions where a company of the SNC Enterprises Ltd. Group was the exporter of record. In the past five years, EDC has financed four such export transactions.

4 and 5. Disciplinary action was taken against those involved, including Len Lauk. However, the nature and severity of disciplinary measures are a matter of CBC internal administration, and it has not been customary for Parliament to require the Corporation to provide such details of its internal management and administration. *WATER QUALITY OF INDIAN BAY AND SHOAL LAKE

Question No. 4,641 (revised answer)—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Will the Government be launching a comprehensive environmental study to determine the effects on the water quality of Indian Bay and Shoal Lake in the event that the proposed 350 cottage lots on the northwest corner of Shoal Lake in Manitoba are developed and, if so (a) what will be the starting date (b) on what date will it be completed (c) will it determine the degree of risk of increased algae production, oil spills or other major forms of pollution (d) will it include an examination of the effects of using the sewage lagoon located across from Winnipeg's drinking water intake on the shore of Indian Bay?

2. Will the Government permit the use of motorboats for recreational purposes on Indian Bay?

[Translation]

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, this being a revised answer to question No. 4,641, I shall deal only with the second part of the question.

The federal Government has responsibility for navigation and shipping on all navigable waters in Canada. This would include the use of recreational vessels on Indian Bay and in Shoal Lake. The control of small vessels may be exercised through the use of the Boating Restriction Regulations, made pursuant to the Canada Shipping Act. Although these are federal regulations, specified bodies of water are only included in, or deleted from, any of the restricted schedules upon receipt of a formal request from a designated provincial agency. This procedure was established, with provincial concurrence, to ensure that all local and provincial interests are taken into account before regulatory action is taken.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Skelly (p. 22957).

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, we are entering the final hours of another closure motion, this one on a $19 billion borrowing Bill. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) has just risen in his place to advise us of time allocation on the income tax Bill, a Bill two and one half inches thick, containing hundreds of Clauses which will adversely affect the lives of every man, woman and child in this country. He has announced closure on that Bill. That is an insult to this House, an insult to the very purpose of Parliament, which is for the people of this nation to be able to control executive authority. It is an insult to all ordinary Canadians.

Every Canadian should be as outraged as I am that this Government can run this nation into such huge debt and then, in a device to get out of it, say we need more Government, more Liberal Government. We are not going to put up with that. Anyone who voted Liberal in the last election has had a knife driven into his back, and it is being twisted more every day. Canadians will not make that mistake again, I can assure you of that.

This is the seventeenth or eighteenth time the Government has announced closure. Where are we as a nation? We are in deep trouble. Unemployment is high. Farmers have been put in jail. A young farmer is now starving himself to death. There are tens of thousands of farmers on the verge of tipping under. As history has taught us so many times before, when you let agriculture go down you destroy the family farm. We have not yet seen the tip of the iceberg as to the problem that the people in the cities and the 1.6 million unemployed are going to have as a result of destroying our farmers. Just as sure as the sun will come up tomorrow morning, people in the cities will rue the day they voted Liberal and put in a gang which for 15 years has been causing this country to hemorrhage and bleed as if we were some Third World country.

Let us not forget where we were in 1968. We had balanced budgets. We had a national debt which was just a drop in the bucket. Yet we had a post-secondary education system which was superb. We had five or six jobs being generated for every graduate who came out of university. We had a medicare system which was the best in the world. We had Old Age Security, hospital insurance and Family Allowances. This country was strong and we were racing up the mountain as a real power to be in the future. Then we put in a Liberal Government under a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who is still running this country, and, Mr. Speaker, things have gone downhill ever since.

Where do we find ourselves today? We have a budget deficit which is $30 billion a year. We find a national debt which is $200 billion-plus when you add in all the Crown corporations, and that is just simply a way of doing indirectly what the Government knows it cannot do directly. The post-secondary education system is in a shambles. Hospital insurance is breaking down. The medicare system is in a shambles, and people are feeling insecure. The Old Age Security system for our senior citizens has been destroyed so that our senior citizens know that if they are forced to retire today, within five years their money will be worth only half what it was, as compared to 1968 when a person could retire and with a rate of inflation of 1 per cent, 2 per cent or 3 per cent it would be 25 years before their money would be half the value, and by that time they would probably be gone. In short, Mr. Speaker, we could cope with a couple of per cent inflation but we cannot cope with 20 per cent and we cannot cope with 20 per cent interest rates.

That is what is destroying our country. We not only have our hospital insurance in difficulty but we have our post-secondary education system in difficulty as well, so that our university graduates do not have any jobs. How can that possibly be, Mr. Speaker? We have 24 million people, one half of 1 per cent of the world's population, a drop in the bucket. We are sitting on the resources of half a continent yet our university graduates cannot get jobs. Our high school graduates cannot get jobs. How can that be, Mr. Speaker?

I can tell the House how it can be. When you put too much power into the hands of too few people, you are heading for trouble. The Liberal Cabinet, 36 men and women, with a small bureaucracy around them at the senior levels, believe they can run this country better than the millions of ordinary Canadians and, Mr. Speaker, they are driving us into the ground.

We are not going to tolerate this because the lesson we learned in our western democracy is that when the king made decisions affecting the capital of the nation, the nation never got ahead. When that capital was broken up into millions and millions of individual pieces, and an individual would give their whole life, effort and energy making decisions about that capital, it created wealth in the western world and raised the poor of our world to a much higher level than even the kings and queens in the old days. That is what economic capitalism will do, Mr. Speaker. But this Liberal Government does not believe it because it wants to make the decisions.

It goes beyond economics, Mr. Speaker. They will soon want to control our political life. They will then want to control our social life. In Western Canada we have millions and millions of square miles and acres of land all divided off into one-mile squares which fit together perfectly. Every mile you go west you hit a road. Every two miles North you hit a road. Millions of acres were surveyed that way. This Government is now going to convert this land into metric measurement so that 160 acres has now become 64.75 hectares. Every mile becomes 1.6 kilometres. That is the illogical outflow of a socialist Government which wants to control everything. It wants to remake mankind in its own image, its great socialist image.

I believe we are in this jam today simply because the Government wants us to be here. It believes if it can bring everyone to their knees then people are going to call for more Government, and it is going to be there to say: "We'll save you. Forget the fact that we caused the problem, ladies and gentlemen, but we will save you." That is not going to work, Mr. Speaker, because Canadians en masse are going to see that it is a circular argument; that if you call upon that same Government to create more Government, we are going to be in even deeper trouble. I believe that is what the polls are showing today. Canadians recognize that there are a group of men and women over there who really believe they can run this whole country, while practical experience shows they cannot. In the next election they will be wiped off the map and no one will be happier than myself, and perhaps even you, Mr. Speaker, because I know you are a wise man.

How is it that the youth of this country does not have a future? As I said earlier, we have all the resources. Surely it is because of the so-called "Canadianization program", which you and I know, Mr. Speaker, having looked at the fine print, is not Canadianization at all. It is nationalization. Again, we have under nationalization this concentration of decision-making by this group of men and women who are not practical businessmen and women, who are not practical farmers or people out on the steet who really know what it is like. These men and women have had great education and often ended up at the London School of Economics as their finishing school, but it does not mean a tinker's damn because they do not know what it is like to meet a payroll. That is the difference between someone who is a good Government politician as compared to those guys today.

Look at the great leaders we have had before. Even C. D. Howe understood how to make wealth, Mr. Speaker, and that was by taking the strength of our resources and putting them into the hands of people who would devote their full time and effort to it. You then get good decision-making, and if you have enough competitive systems going, then there is a constant thinning out at the bottom, but it is only of smaller corporations so that the released workers can be reabsorbed.

This gang opposite want to concentrate things into massive dimensions, and if they then fail, the result is tens and tens of thousands of people unemployed. That is not the way we should do things in this country. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that every day I am receiving more and more letters from ordinary Canadians who see the ruse, and it is a pleasure now to go out and talk to these people because they are beginning to take their sovereignty back. What Canadians must do is call each of us out as politicians and find out where we stand as individuals and what we believe their rights are economically, politically and socially. We will then have them electing the best person from each riding, Mr. Speaker, and it will not be Liberals.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, before us in the House today is yet another borrowing authority Bill. It is the fourth of its kind in eight months. The others were Bill C-111 in June of 1982 which asked for $6.6 billion, Bill C-125 in July of 1982 which asked for $7 billion, and Bill C-128 in November of 1982 which asked for $4 billion. Now we are being asked for $19 billion, $5 billion of which is to be used to get through this fiscal year, the remaining $14 billion to be used as interim money for the period ending October, 1983.

Asking for this money, Mr. Speaker, without a financial statement is tantamount to writing a blank cheque for Government policy. It is hardly an approach which we could possibly endorse. While this amount of money is high relative to other requests for borrowing authority, it is not unprecedented. However, the manner in which the Government is doing it is noteworthy. Thomas Walkom of The Globe and Mail said, and I quote:

> While it is not unheard of for a Government to ask for some interim borrowing authority, a $14 billion request without a budget is unprecedented.

As all members know, the borrowing authority offers Hon. Members a chance to complain about Government policies and generally the way in which the Government chooses to spend its revenues. I am sure that most members have enough information at hand to criticize how this Government spends money in the fields in which they are interested without any additional information from the Government.

I want to talk about some of the things the Government has done. We have seen it put the clamps on important social programs. We have seen it bring in the six and five program. It started by applying it to the salaries of federal public servants and those working for Crown corporations, but then it applied it to Family Allowances and old age pensions. The pensioners, the women and children of this country are being asked to bear the brunt of the present economic difficulties. These are being brought on to a large extent by the mistake in economic policies of the Government.

Now we hear that funding to universities will be cut by the application of the six and five guidelines to the Government's contribution to university education. For the first time in a number of years enrolment in the universities has increased. That is because many young people cannot find jobs and are going back to the universities and community colleges. This is happening at a time when those institutions need more financial assistance in order to give people the kind of training that Government spokesmen say they will need in the job market in the next 10 or 20 years. There will be an increase in the emphasis on technical knowledge, computerization and microtechnology. Yet the Government has put a 6 per cent and 5 per cent limit on the increase of funding for universities.

Let me give another illustration of the stupidity of the Government, Mr. Speaker. It has abandoned the Crow rate which for years has protected Canadian farmers. It is doing this at a time when bankruptcies are at an all-time high. In February they increased 32 per cent over the same time last year. Yet the Government abandons the Crow rate and tells Canadians farmers that there will be an increase of up 500 per cent in the cost of shipping grain in the next few years. This tremendous increase will have to be absorbed by the farmers as they cannot add it to the price of the grain on the international market and expect to compete. While this is going on the Government is subsidizing the CPR, one of the largest and most profitable Canadian corporations, so that it can improve its track. As well, VIA Rail, which is supposed to move passengers, is permitted to continue in its weak state.

This Party is not opposed to a Government deficit, Mr. Speaker. We recognize that it is inevitable, particularly in a time of recession when the private sector is not expanding and investing in new facilities and techniques because it is operating at less than 70 per cent capacity. This is the time when the Government should be increasing expenditures to improve the transportation system, the environment and housing stock. We are not opposed to the Government running a deficit or borrowing, but we see no evidence of a plan or a strategy to meet the country's needs.

We are opposed to the Bill because it is obvious that the Government has abdicated its responsibility for putting an economic policy before the people. It has given responsibility for dealing with the problems of the country to the Bank of Canada to a degree that we find unacceptable. It is supposed to settle our economic policies by bringing down the rate of inflation. It has managed to do that but at the expense of everything else, particularly unemployment. There are now 1,600,000 people unemployed, the largest number ever, and the rate of unemployment is higher than at any time since the great Depression of the 1930s.

The recent Gallup poll indicates that the people of Canada believe that unemployment is the major problem facing the country today, yet the Government continues to concentrate on the supposed threat of inflation. The Government's single-minded attack on inflation has only been marginally successful but it has been a disaster for the economy. It has resulted in the largest number of people unemployed ever, 11,000 business bankruptcies in the last year and a record number of farm bankruptcies. The economy is running at less than 70 per cent capacity.

While the Government is putting the clamp on social and economic programs, there are many examples of waste around. We see $100 million poured down the drain with Consolidated Computer, poorly thought out DREE programs, the Mirabel white elephant, incredibly lucrative grants to the supposedly suffering oil companies, and then there is the spectacle of deserving Liberals appointed to position after position.

The Government is continuing to clobber Canadians by raising taxes for low-income earners through deindexation and raising Unemployment Insurance premiums. Taxes are decreased for investors and upper-income earners. This is supposed to provide the engines of growth but these tactics have failed to produce any results whatsoever. The "trickle down effect" is simply not working.

While we see higher taxes for those who can least afford them, the Royal Bank, which made several hundred million dollars of profit last year, pays an effective tax rate of less than 1 per cent. It sounds strange but in fact the Royal Bank had a negative tax figure last year because it received a tax credit for over $125 million this year.

We cannot support this borrowing Bill brought forward by a Government which has no economic policy, no strategy and which is going from one disaster to another.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the speeches this morning and this afternoon given by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis), the Hon. Member the Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) and now the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

There is a recurring theme in the speeches and a recurring question asked by all Hon. Members. They seem to say; "We do not know what the money is for. We do not know how the Government will spend it. How can you ask us for more money when you have not shown us how you are going to spend it?" I suggest that one requirement for becoming a Member of Parliament in this Chamber should be the ability to read. Had all speakers who preceded me learned how to read and read through the Estimates, they would have learned exactly how every penny will be spent. I refer Hon. Members who spoke before me and who will speak after me to the Estimates wherein it is spelled out very clearly and exactly how every dollar or every penny will be spent.

The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) at least admitted that there is a call to do some borrowing. He complimented the Government on that, but he said that the figures were so astronomical that the public could not comprehend them. I think the public can comprehend them; I think it is the Hon. Member who cannot. The figures seem to be too large for his comprehension. He went on to say that this move was wrong politically. I do not know why that should worry the Official Opposition. If it is politically wrong for the Government side, then it should be politically good for the Official Oppositon. Opposition Members should be urging us to go further on this route which they claim is politically wrong. I think they are worried that it is politically sound, good and on the right track. The Hon. Member went on to say that the Government wanted to borrow this large amount without telling the public what it needed the money for. We heard this over and over again. Again I refer that gentleman to the Estimates.

The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) said that some of the money the Government wanted should be spent on search and rescue, that if it were used toward putting youth to work for the Canadian Armed Forces, perhaps he would vote for the Bill. He went on to say that he wanted money spent on bridge pier fendering around his constituency, which are clearly a provincial jurisdiction. He wanted the federal Government to pay for them, and he wanted more money for icebreaking facilities and vessels. Also he wanted more money for fleet replacement of the Canadian Coast Guard. This is great, but he did not say where that money would come from. It is fine to say, "Give me this, give me that", but tell the public, Canadian taxpayers and the House, where the money will come from. The very things he mentioned that he wanted are listed in the Estimates. That is where the majority of the money will be going.

I invite Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party and of the Official Opposition to come to the Standing Committee on Transport tomorrow morning at 9.30 a.m. when the Minister will appear before it. Then they could question him on how these funds will be spent in the Department for which the Minister and I are responsible, the Department of Transport. I think this is a great democratic process, where every Department is held accountable to the public or the country at large through elected representatives.

Opposition speakers this morning and this afternoon were almost unanimous in asking what the Government would do with these additional funds. They suggested that perhaps some of them could be used for job creation, and then they would support the Bill. Let me remind Hon. Members opposite that we have had a great debate over the last year on the western transportation initiative. Professor Gilson was out West listening to the grassroots people, listening to all sectors of the economy so as to come up with recommendations on how we could improve the entire western transportation system. If the House were to implement his recommendations soon, they would create 375,000 person-years of work over the next decade. If Hon. Members opposite are serious about job creation, why are they not supporting the changes to the Crow rate and the western transportation initiative? If both Parties opposite are really serious about job creation, why are they not speaking out publicly and supporting the western transportation initiative, which will create 375,000 person-years in the next decade?

Also I make very clear the long-term objectives of the Government as far as job creation is concerned, as well as its short-term goals in job creation. In my home riding, last year over 50 students obtained jobs through the Summer Canada Program. Again this year organizations are submitting applications to provide jobs for high school and university students this summer. The intention of the Program is to provide jobs only for the summer months, so that these students can earn some money to help pay their tuition fees come the fall. It is not meant to provide these students with permanent jobs; that is not the purpose of the Program. We should make clear and distinguish the difference between long-term initiatives such as the western transportation initiative and something like the Summer Canada Program or the NEED Program which will get exhaustees, people who exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits, back to work. They do not want welfare; they want to work. Mr. Speaker, they tell you and me that.

Again using my own riding as an example, I point out that on the books there is a project to provide jobs for 15 workers to work in Ontario Place, a provincially-owned complex. Another 15 workers have been provided jobs in a community centre in my riding. There are other pending projects to provide jobs on the Canadian National Exhibition grounds, getting them ready for the summer. Again, these jobs are short-term ones. We agree with that. I think everyone would agree that these people would rather work and be paid than go on welfare. I could talk about the Canadian Community Development Program, but I do not think time would allow it.

The Government has demonstrated good management and how to spend taxpayers' dollars prudently. The Opposition mentioned that we should spend more money putting young people to work through DND. We have to look at that very carefully. I was one of the Members on this side who signed a petition containing 108 signatures and making this recommendation, but I did not sign it with the intention of putting all our eggs in one basket. If it costs $25,000 to train one young Canadian in certain skills over the next two years, but through some other program we could train two or three young Canadians to learn the same skills in the same amount of time, as good managers we should ensure that we steer more money to more efficient training for young Canadians.

Another example close to my riding is the Toronto International Airport. Projections showed that in the 1980s we would need a new Terminal 3. Because of the downturn in the economy and a drop in air traffic, the projections now indicate that we will not need a new terminal until the 1990s, and we have postponed it until then. Again I think this is good management and that this is prudent spending of taxpayers' dollars.

We heard charges that we were just throwing away taxpayers' dollars foolishly. I do not think we are doing that. We have demonstrated wise spending and good management. Speaker after speaker this morning and again this afternoon said, "How can the Government ask for more money and not tell the public how it will be spent?" This kept coming up over and over again. If Hon. Members opposite would look—and I know I am not supposed to display things while I am speaking, but some of them may not even know the colour of the Estimates; that is why I am holding up the Blue Book at page 29-2 of the Estimates, they would find a breakdown of how the Government will spend how much and in what mode. They should just look at the capital projects on that page. There is over $64 million which will be spent in ridings represented by Hon. Members opposite. If they are serious—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, when any Member on the Government side of the House can stand in support of what is in the Blue Book and what is in the borrowing Bill, he or she has not taken a look at the real world. For instance, we heard discussed today the unemployment rate in the Province of New Brunswick, which exceeds 15 per cent. We have a cabinet Minister representing the Province of New Brunswick who has stood idly by while a transfer of the DND operations is to take place from his Province. He has at no time indicated in any way that he stood behind the appeals of the Province of New Brunswick to keep that DND installation active and employing people in the Province of New Brunswick. Instead of that he has apparently acquiesced and recognizes that in 1984 the DND operation will be transferred out of perhaps one of the most highly unemployed areas of Canada. That is our Minister from New Brunswick in this Government's Cabinet.

• (1540)

The same Minister has taken a look at agriculture and decided that he will dilute the agricultural research by establishing a second branch in the Province of New Brunswick at the expense of personnel in other research stations in Atlantic Canada. Any knowledgeable individual not so politically biased as our present Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) would recognize that extension of the knowledge accumulated in research is very necessary in New Brunswick but that division of the research structure into a second unit would certainly give us diminution of real results of a concentrated effort taking place as it is in that Province. He has done precisely the same thing in research with respect to fisheries. We have one of the most renowned research stations in the world at St. Andrews, New Brunswick. Again, we are going to dilute that and put people in an establishment which is probably a two-hour drive from any meaningful salt water, the object of research. That is our Minister. He did not even locate that establishment in Chatham, New Brunswick. He cuddled it into his own constituency in his usual political way, not caring two hoots about what is good for New Brunswick but perhaps only considering what is good for him as a Cabinet Minister. That is the way we are represented. That, Sir, is why we oppose more borrowing for more stupid political behaviour by this Government.

Why did the Government not pick up the idea once promoted by the Province with respect to the development of the oil shale potential, either as a source of oil or as a source of fuel for electrical generation? Instead of that, the Member for Moncton (Mr. McCauley) pooh-poohed everything that might be practical, and he in turn was supported by our Minister of Public Works. The reason New Brunswick does not approve of the borrowing of $29 billion is that it has been ignored purely for political reasons.

In the field of agriculture we watched the impact of the change in the capital cost allowance and in the investment in capital goods allowance. In the constituency of Victoria-Madawaska it cost a farmer $12,000 more for the purchase of capital equipment in Victoria County than it cost a farmer in Madawaska County. That is within a constituency. The uneven handouts of allocation of privileges under this Government can be epitomized no better than by the division of a farming community within a particular constituency for the benefit of a particular group of people. This sort of thing cannot go on, Mr. Speaker.

During Question Period this afternoon it was mentioned that Maislin received $34 million, which money apparently was interest free and which apparently will be lost to Canadian taxpayers. We in New Brunswick in an agricultural community want to know why $34 million was poured into one firm in Montreal and $45 million had to do for all Canadian farmers under the administration of the Farm Credit Corporation. Things are pretty badly out of balance when that kind of political patronage is practised by the Government of Canada. Yes, it is a political decision and, yes, it is a bad decision for Canada.

On March 4 I raised a question about the advertising being carried out by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). I raised the question again today. I believe the notice of the closing date of the summer employment programs arrived on my desk on March 1. There was no way, as the Minister suggested today, that I could disseminate that information to a rural constituency through Canada's present postal system. There was absolutely no way. I could not reach the weekly papers in my constituency. There was no media coverage. Yet the Government could spend $239 million for other advertising. My students, the young people in my riding of Carleton-Charlotte, will not have an opportunity in many instances to apply for the benefits which will come from this program.

There is more money to be made and more employment to be created by making a change in the fuel tax for agriculture, fisheries and forestry. There is more money to be made that way than in any other way in this country, particularly if this change were combined with a change in the capital cost allowance which these industries need and need very badly. Instead of that, we have unemployment almost as if by intention in the fisheries, forestry and farming sectors. We have unemployed people by the tens of thousands.

Farm income is reputed to have declined 10 per cent one year and 15 per cent the next year, and as we looked at the future of agriculture in Canada in December we saw that in the last two years we have given farmers year after year less and less incentive and burdened them with more and more costs.

What is the consequence of all of this? I will be very repetitive because I have already stated this about three time in the House but it is worthy of statement once more. When interest rates were running wild in this country the increase in the cost of money to farmers in the potato industry exceeded the total cost of production of an acre of potatoes ten years prior to the time of the 22 per cent and 24 per cent interest rates for farmers. Yes, we are critical of this Government, Mr. Speaker. We certainly are. I had conversation last night with a couple of my grandchildren. Nothing impressed me more after I had hung up the phone than the fact that today, when I would be speaking on this Bill, what would be foremost in my mind was that I had inherited a sane, sound, sensible financial management from Government. However, after some 30 years of elected office under an irresponsible Government such as we have now, I am passing on for my grandchildren to pay, my hospital bills, my old age pension and my Canada Pension Plan. Justify that, gentlemen of the Government. I did not inherit that. My first public meeting was a school meeting in what was my school district then. The object of those taxpayers when they voted the money to rebuild a bigger and better school, was that within 20 years we must have it paid for the children of the next generation.

The object of this borrowing Bill and the Blue Book which was mentioned earlier is to live high off the hog today and let the next generation pay. The next generation will grovel in the mess left behind for them in the hog pen of this Liberal Government.

I do not know how to condemn this Government further. If I did, I think I would. We are subsidizing and subsidizing. We are subsidizing everybody but the man in the moon. We are giving no consideration and expressing no concern as to how this nation will share its social, its industrial or its economic responsibilities ten years down the road with this type of administration.

It has been pointed out what the increment will be on an annual basis as a result of borrowing today. That is what we are passing on to the next generation. Why do we not give incentives for people to invest, for people to farm, for people to fish and for people to go to work in the forests? Why are we not spending some of these moneys to rejuvenate our assets. Why are we throwing money down the gutter by way of $239 million in advertising and maybe a total of $1 billion of Crown Corporation and Government advertising? These are astounding figures to ask our grandchildren to pay.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, according to my calculation, this is the nineteenth time in this session that the Government has used this device to cut off debate on an important piece of legislation. Today, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) rose in his place and announced that time allocation was going to be imposed again on another matter of importance, namely a tax Bill. That will be the twentieth time in this session of Parliament that closure, or some form of it, has been evoked. This is a device that is supposed to be used very sparingly and with a great deal of discretion.

When one looks at the issues upon which time allocation was invoked, they generally dealt with financial measures such as amendments to the Income Tax Act. They are the very fundamental issues which make this institution necessary. We have seen closure invoked on 17 occasions when we were dealing with measures pertaining to the financial administration of the country. The other two occasions involving closure dealt with the question of the Constitution and the adjournment of the House.

When we review the legislative matters upon which closure was imposed, we suddenly realize that this institution is no longer functioning as a parliamentary democracy. It is more like a parliamentary dictatorship. This Parliament is functioning under one Party rule and by a Government which really only represents one-half of the country.

Closure has become the rule rather than the exception. When this fact is coupled with the excessive use of Orders in Council and the implementation of such things as forced metric and the emergency planning order, the result has been a severe undermining of the institution of Parliament. It severely undermines the purpose for which the parliamentary institution was devised; to authorize the collection and expenditure of public funds on behalf of the people of Canada. In other words, the Government is to act as a trustee on the advice of the collective wisdom of this House. However, under this Government this Parliament has become nothing more than a rubberstamp. Parliament has become impotent and powerless, with no mechanism to deny the Government's frivolous, wasteful and extravagant expenditures. Parliament can only take such dramatic steps as ringing the bells or engaging in a long-term filibuster. The power of Parliament has been subverted and transferred to the hands of those who occupy the Treasury benches, supported by a group over there who follow their Party mainly for partisan purposes rather than putting the interests of the country ahead of their Party.

The views of the former Auditor General, who said in 1976 that Parliament has lost or is close to losing effective control of the public purse, effectively represent today an accurate reflection of where we are. It is interesting to note that the latest report of the present Auditor General highlights a similar concern. It is the fact that we have a Crown corporation proliferation in this country which really serves as a subgovernment. In effect, these Crown corporations are not accountable to the shareholders through the Parliament of Canada. Since they cannot be controlled, they continue to build empires frivolously and spend the taxpayer's money on questionable practices.

I was interested to hear the views of the Auditor General on the matter of VIA Rail when he appeared before the Public Accounts Committee. He observed that a corporation like VIA, which has extracted over $2 billion of taxpayers' dollars, is calling this year for some $755 million. He complained about the fact that he is unable to tell Parliament and the people of Canada whether this expenditure is made on a sound basis or with due regard to economy and efficiency because he is denied access to the documents containing information about the costs or the bills that the railways submit to VIA Rail. That is fundamentally wrong and detracts from the purpose of this institution. As a result of that lack of control and accountability, we see the expenditures in this country soaring and the demands upon the taxpayers having a crippling effect.

I submit that it is that lack of control and accountability, combined with the attitude of the Government to try to spend its way out of problems, that has put the country in the financial crisis in which it is today.

That same philosophy is inherent in this Bill. Through this Bill the Government is asking to borrow $19 billion without telling Parliament and the people of Canada what the money will be used for. It simply perpetuates the catastrophic financial mess that this Government has created.

Let us look at the deficits that have been created since this Government was returned to power in 1980. It has chalked up some $90 billion in deficits since it returned to office. Another interesting statistic with respect to federal Government spending can be expressed as a percentage of Gross National Product. In 1979-80, that figure was 20.8 per cent. In the 1982-83 public accounts, it was 26 per cent. We see a continuing proliferation of Government spending which demonstrates the continued lunacy of the 1970s. It is probably the reason why our country has slipped to being twenty-fourth of the industrialized nations with respect to its economic growth. That is why it has the highest misery rate of any nation in the world and the highest unemployment rate of any nation in the world.

I would like to refer to the Alberta Report of February 14, which I believe summarized this very well. It says:

> The great jolt of the 80s has, of course, been the return of economic reality. We look back on 20 years of senseless government. Billions upon billions have been poured into the slop, swill and waste of ruinous irresponsibility—into welfare programs that accomplished little more than to corrupt the necessity and eagerness of people to work, into bilingual 'advancement' programs that were impossible of fulfilment, into economic aid programs that crumbled on the hard rock of immovable economic fact. We have lavished millions on the metric converter who was not necessary while dismaying and discouraging the investor who was. We have drained hundreds of millions from private industry in plans for gigantic projects—the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, Alsands, Cold Lake—only to flush it all away in the toilet of governmental procrastination, indecision and spaced-out philosophizing.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, we sometimes use terms lightly in the House. One phrase that has been expressed from time to time is the reference to the Government turning us into a banana republic. I submit that when we use the phrase "banana republic" to refer to the Government, there is perhaps more realism than analogy in the expression. The truth of the matter is that the per capita debt in Canada today is so large that it is now seven times the per capita debt of Latin America. The accumulated debt of the 360 million persons in those more than 20 nations is nearly double that of Canada. This means that the debt for all the people of this country is seven-fold that of the foreign debt of Latin America.

We are on a very dangerous course in this country, bearing in mind the fact that we are into that period of the year when it is tax time. People across the country will be cognizant of the fact that they are now paying their Government. What they must underline, in each of their tax considerations, is that for every amount they pay to the Government, 25 per cent will pay for interest on the accumulated federal debt.

Mr. Speaker, if you have a tax owing this year of $100, $25 would be payable simply on interest on the accumulated debt. Likewise, that means that all across the country, one-quarter of the wealth given to the Government of Canada is to pay for nothing else than interest on the accumulated debt. We are not, then, with one-quarter of our tax, building structures or ports, providing for shipbuilding industries or for the infrastructure of pipelines or assistance thereto which would create both wealth and jobs in the country. We are paying for money already borrowed. At that stage of money already borrowed, the Government is back again at the trough to ask for another $19 billion.

I submit that somewhere there must be some sanity which will come to the Canadian people, because if it does not come by reason of logic that we must run the country somewhat more along a business principle, it will come to us in the same way the banana republics are learning that neither can they foster economies which are weak, based on debt and borrowing, based on the fact that their resources are insufficient. Canada today would be as bankrupt as Mexico. Our debt per capita is higher than Mexico's. The only reason we are not bankrupt is that because this land is resource-rich. We are rich in forests, in minerals hardrock, in fisheries, both salt water and fresh water, and rich in agriculture.

We are a wealthy land blessed with resources. It is on that back that we have mortgage tomorrow based on the confidence of other nations. Our next generation will be in debt because the other nations know that the resources are there, in other words, the wealth is there, but the truth is that on the basis of pure economy, we are in worse economic shape than the Latin American countries. That is a despicable record for a nation which should have been doing precisely the opposite.

The truth of the matter is that if the Japanese, with their 110 million persons, took hold of these advantages of resources and talented people, they would no doubt have the wealthiest economy in the whole world today. Here we are, wanting nothing, but dropping to fortieth position according to the OECD. Japan, an island of rock with a minimum of agriculture, and the only extended list of resources being that of fish and tin, has the second highest economy in the world today. It imports all of its uranium, coal, gas and oil. In short, it imports everything. We are energy-rich. Energy being the basis of our production today, it seems to me folly that we should be in a situation where the Japanese are able to outstrip and outproduce us. They are doing that because our Government is borrowing upon borrowing mainly for political reasons, not for reasons of industrialization.

I would like to consider the frequency with which the Government has gone back to the trough. This is the second time this year, 1983, that the Government has sought to increase its borrowing authority. In the June budget, it outlined the projected financial requirements to be $17 billion. Then, through Bill C-125 introduced in July, it sought to increase the borrowing authority from $10.2 billion to $21.2 billion, an increase of some $11 billion. The frequency with which the Government has been coming back is exemplified in Bill C-30, which received Royal Assent on July 17, through which it borrowed $12 billion and then through Bill C-59, which was given Royal Assent on April 8, 1981, allowing borrowing of another $14 billion. Then Bill C-111 was given Royal Assent on June 17, 1982, allowing the Government to borrow another $6.6 billion. Bill C-125 was given Royal Assent on August 4, 1982, allowing the Government to borrow another $11 billion. Then Bill C-128, given Royal Assent on November 8 of 1982, allowed borrowing of an additional $4 billion. Today we are debating Bill C-143, requesting that the Government borrow yet an additional $19 billion.

From 1980 to 1983, a three year period, the Government has come to Parliament to borrow some $66.6 billion. That list of borrowing upon borrowing, with the insult of this latest request without a budget in front of us, simply demonstrates, as clearly as could ever be demonstrated, the absolute incapacity of the Government to manage.

Any Canadian citizen who went to the bank to request a loan of some significant amount, be it $1,000 or $10,000, must state the purpose of the loan. A banker would ask, "What is the purpose of the loan?" If the citizen were to respond by saying, "I have no stated intentions for the money, and I just want the money", the chance of obtaining a loan would be basically nil, irrespective of the capacity of the person to pay back the loan.

The Government has asked the people of Canada to give $19 billion without a plan. What folly! What a false, mismanaged Government it is which would think for one moment that the people of the country should willingly give it $19 billion without any stated intentions or purpose. The Hon. Member who—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's allotted time has expired.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, of course, we on this side of the House agree with many of the comments of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), particularly concerning the inadequacy of the Government coming before us for money once again without having an economic plan of any kind. However, one comment of the Hon. Member exemplified the tendency of Canadian politicians to use scare tactics concerning the deficit. I believe he said that Canada has a higher per capita debt than the countries of South America. Of course, what he did not mention was the fact that the population of the countries in South America is much larger than ours. Perhaps, if we took that into account—

Mr. Fisher: And they have less money.

Mr. Blaikie: —we would have a more adequate analysis. I think that the truth ought to be served, even it does go against the Hon. Member of the Opposition from time to time.

This afternoon I wanted to make some comments concerning over-all economic policy on something which has caught the attention of the Canadian public, the Canadian media and also the House in recent weeks. I am referring to the statement by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops entitled "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis." It was a statement made to the Government of Canada on the economic crisis which we face as a country.

• (1610)

In that context I would like to put on the record my own view of the theological context in which we ought to reflect on economic matters.

The God of the Bible is a God who wants to redeem the whole of human existence, our social as well as our individual life, in the end by bringing to fulfilment and completion something called the Kingdom of God. And living in harmony with this desire of God involves His followers in the world, and in the world of politics and policital choices, as an inescapable fact of being individual in the world.

What kind of world is it? Well, the original will and intention of God is for a world and for the world. Genesis tells us that God created the world and called it good. Thus, whether we find it in the form of a garden at the beginning of history or as a city at the end of history, the intention of God is for a world, a created reality which is more than the sum of its parts, an organic creation.

This is reinforced by the story of the creation of human existance per se. God creates human beings plural, male and female, in His own image. Like God, humans are personal and free to enter into relationship with each other. This is the intention of God for human life, that we enter into fellowship with Him and with each other, that we enjoy each other's company. Relation is the primary intention of human existence, relation in love, that is, but relation is also the primary structure of our existence. That is why all economic systems which ask us to perceive ourselves as rugged individuals, acting apart from the needs of the community and acting apart from the needs of others, are so much falsehood. Human beings are never without God and they are never without each other. They can only pretend that they are. The law of our being is the law of love, represented and demonstrated in the life, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, the man for others. Christ, being a unique and special event in the life of the world and the life of God, is the means through which God has revealed what it means to be fully human and through which He has revealed Himself, that is to say His own solidarity with human suffering and the pain of the world and the power of His love over the power of death.

Sin has its origins in human will and responsibility, the misuse of our God-given freedom by which we rebel against relation as the law of our being and try to set ourselves up as God, wanting to live a self-created and independent life, denying our relationship with God, denying our relationship with neighbours and denying our relationship with the rest of creation. I am speaking now of the way we treat our environment.

The incarnation is not the incarnation of something radically other, but the coming of God into the life and history of a world in which He is already Creator, already indwelling principle, already ultimate reality. Thus the truth of the Gospel conforms to the deepest truth of our existence. Thus we are encountered by Christ not only in His life, death and victory over death, but in the ongoing life of our sisters and brothers in human history and, more particularly, in the life and needs of the hungry, the poor and the oppressed, the least of them, as Jesus put it.

So if we follow this view which sees the primary religious axis as that between God and the world, then the Church is not a sacred island in the profane ocean of humanity gathering the select few for the heavenly dispensation. The Church is different from the rest of the world only in so far as, and when, it lives human existence more fully as a result of hearing the Gospel. Its task, like that of Israel before it, is to bear witness to the truth of our relationship to each other and to God, to tell the world the truth about itself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair is having some difficulty relating his remarks to the borrowing authority Bill before us. The Hon. Member might just bear in mind the particular measure before the House.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking about the context in which we make economic decisions, the context in which this Government ought to plan the way the Canadian economy is run, and I think my remarks are relevant. If they are irrelevant, then we are in a sorry state indeed. If we cannot, in the context of the most general kind of economic motion that we have before us, make these kinds of over-all reflections, then where indeed could we do this kind of reflecting?

It is the responsibility of the Church to tell the world the truth about itself. The Church exists for the sake of the world. The Lordship of Jesus is lordship over the world. The life of the Church is acknowledging and living from this lordship and being instrumental to God's purposes for the world. So the Church is not an end in itself. It exists to continue the work of its Lord to help save the world, not to save individuals only, but to save the world. Not to condemn it or to help men out of it, like the Gnostics, but to save the world.

Once we have concluded that the world and its redemption is the proper focus of faithful Christian activity, we must look to the prophetic tradition in the Bible for guidance. It is here that we find a long record of protests against religion that exalted the eternal at the expense of the temporal, the transcendent at the expense of the imminent, the vertical at the expense of the horizontal, individual piety at the expense of justice and the life of God at the expense of the life of the world. Christians must realize that we can only be in the world, even if we are not of it, if we are actually willing to be participants in history, to make choices. Standing back from the fray is not an option, no matter how much piety accompanies the standing back.

The Bishops are to be commended for speaking out, for speaking out that way is part and parcel of the Christian life collectively as the Church and individually as Christians.

If we want to act in and for the world, as God would have his image-bearers act, then we must ask ourselves what kind of choices, what kind of sides is God reported to have taken in the Biblical record. The inescapable answer to such a question is that God did take sides and that the choices he made, the sides he took, were invariably on the side of the poor, the needy, the vulnerable, and the oppressed. The continuity with and fulfilment of this bias on the part of God, because God does have a bias, in and by Christ is stated most eloquently and clearly in the Magnificat of Mary (Luke 1:46-55) where the arrival of the Lord of History is praised and welcomed as the scattering of the proud, the putting down of the mighty, the exalting of those of low degree, the filling of the hungry, and the sending of rich away empty.

God is creator, judge and redeemer. He is the judge of the oppressor, and deliverer of the oppressed. Judgment and deliverance are in a sense interchangeable in the Biblical tradition, both semantically and conceptually, depending on what is needed and by whom at any particular point in history. Both have their origins in the steadfast, loving rule of God, who wills to humanize and redeem the oppressor by breaking the prideful domination of others and to humanize the oppressed by liberating them from bondage.

The Church cannot just say that war is bad but some wars are necessary. Rather, it must say: participate in this particular war or do not participate in it. The Church cannot just say that it is wrong for people to starve, but then say nothing definite about what form a solution might take. What I am saying is that it is the responsibility of all those who would act out of a particular religious point of view to be concrete. There is absolutely nothing wrong with being concrete. In fact, it is only by being concrete that we have a hope of being right, that we have a hope of saying the word which is needed in any particular point in history.

So I repudiate the criticisms of all those who have criticized the Bishops on the basis that they were too concrete. It is only by being concrete that they have lived up to their responsibilities.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to join in this discussion today. I had an opportunity last week to talk about the various points of view put forward by the Opposition.

• (1620)

I would like to put forward today in a more positive way my views about Government borrowing. I recall very clearly being asked my views during the last election campaign. In particular, I remember a discussion I had with the Mississauga newspaper. Each candidate in that campaign was asked his or her view about the deficit and Government borrowing. I replied that I felt Government borrowing to be a legitimate financial tool for the federal Government, that I am not afraid of using this tool. I do not see taxes and spending cuts as the only alternatives to financial crises. I see Government borrowing as an equally important tool for Governments to use.

I was reminded of this point of view today in an article in The Toronto Star by Professor Ruben Bellan, who is at St. John's College at the University of Manitoba, the economics department. Professor Bellan says that when we look at attempts to cut the deficit to get rid of Government borrowing, we get a paradox. I quote as follows from Professor Bellan's article in today's paper:

> A corresponding paradox may attach to attempts by a federal government to reduce its budget deficit. To achieve such a reduction the government reduces its spending, raises the rates of taxes already being levied, introduces new forms of taxation.
> The effect of its spending reductions is to put people out of work: Government employees lose their jobs, as do persons employed by firms from whom the government now buys less. Increase in rates of taxation and the imposition of new taxes have the same effect.

In short, Professor Bellan has pointed out that severe tax increases and severe cuts in Government spending tend to accelerate a recession rather than answer the recession. I agree with his point of view. I believe that Government borrowing is a way that Government can use to cushion ordinary Canadians against the blows of a recession like the one we are currently experiencing.

We heard some interesting comments in the House in the last couple of speeches. I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) spoke from the heart when he said we had to aim our economic policies at human misery, the most vulnerable and most needy in society. That was a laudable comment. Equally, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) discussed the extremes in the other direction, cautioning us against too much borrowing and too much spending. There is a traditional middle of the road between those two positions. It is possible for a Government to borrow responsibly and cushion its people against a recession. That is what we are doing now. I would like to point out that our borrowing is as a result of transfers to ordinary people, businesses and other levels of Government. That is the major part of our spending, the major source of financial requirements.

I would like to point out some very interesting testimony in the Finance Committee last week. One of our officials noted that if we add up all the deficits and all the surpluses of all the Provinces in this country, we actually have a $300 million surplus, not a deficit. The Provinces are in a surplus position. The federal Government carries the weight of borrowing, not the municipalities and the Provinces. It is our borrowing that is being transferred to the Provinces and other Governments, which enables them to run their schools, hospitals, medical care, transfers to people, welfare, and social programs. That is the kind of action we have to take. We have to recognize that there are people in need who must have this cushion underneath them during tough times.

The Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) accused the Government of encouraging people to live high off the hog. Despite my affection for the Hon. Member, I regret that I must reject that point of view. I do not think our children would thank us if we passed along to them a devastated economy, and that is what would occur if the federal Government did not take the kind of affirmative action it has taken.

Our children will not necessarily appreciate the borrowing we are going through, but they will see it as far more preferable to a devastated economy. They will recognize, as I recognize now about previous people who have borrowed, that the borrowing spread out difficulties over the years, that we are able to offer the economy a little less of a blow now because we are borrowing against our future. That is acceptable. It is fine as long as it is done in a responsible fashion and we demonstrate that we can repay this borrowing at some future date.

As well, I reject the argument that we are comparable in this regard to poorer countries. Poorer countries by definition have a smaller capacity to repay such a loan. Therefore, it is a political red herring to drag in countries in Latin America and around the world that have lower standards of living and lower resources at their command.

I remind Hon. Members that in the June budget the Government emphasized the policy of a reallocation. We did not bring in huge new spending programs. Instead, we trimmed our sails in one area in order to finance expansion in other areas. We did that with purpose. We felt that the federal Government should be responsible. Therefore, we priorized our spending areas more carefully, trimmed a bit off and spent the saving. As a result, we have had $3,000 home grants that have gone right to the heart of the industry and revitalized that industry. We have railroad rehabilitation programs that are not only building up a vital infrastructure, but stimulating otherwise depressed industries. We were able to spend money to help out on unemployment insurance. We did not simply go to already depressed employers or distressed workers and ask them to bear the whole load.

We put a bit extra in. The upshot has been a higher deficit, but it has been a deficit that is affordable. We need only look at the recent experience in the money markets to show that interest rates are coming down, that we are not crowding out the private sector, others who want to borrow.

In summary, I believe that our deficit is an important cushion for all Canadians. I believe we are the major stimulus in the economy at the present time. Without us, our economy would be flat and very desperate. Finally, I believe that our policy of reallocation and careful priorizing of our spending is paying off.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that whenever the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) speaks, rather than offering positive proposals as to what this Government is doing, he simply comments on what other Members of this House are saying. That exemplifies exactly what this Government is doing. Rather than act, it simply talks.

We listened today to the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who spoke about this Government's irresponsible approach to financing expenditures. In the short time since the last election, this Government has increased the Canadian debt by some $90 billion. We now have before us Bill C-143. The Government wishes to have the authority to borrow an additional $19 billion without giving this House any type of commitment as to whether this money is going, without showing any economic restraints or any concrete economic policy, and we in this Party are in opposition to the irresponsible approach of our Liberal friends opposite.

I believe it is important that all of us, as Members of Parliament, reflect upon what our thoughts were when we first came to this Chamber and what prompted our involvement in politics. My reason was quite straightforward when I decided to involve myself in the political process in that I totally disagreed with the economic management of my Liberal friends opposite. In the close to nine years that I have been a Member of the House of Commons, that irresponsibility has grown. When we look at what they have offered to the Canadian people we see a depressed economy, one of the more depressed economies since the Depression itself.

During my short participation in this debate, I would like to review, on a very personal basis, what we in this Party are going to do about it, and why I as an individual also sought the presidency of our national association. I want to do everything within my power, Mr. Speaker, to return to the Canadian people the hope and opportunity which this country once had and no longer has under the Liberal Government opposite. I ask Hon. Members of this Chamber, and all Canadians, where did those bright hopes of the early 1980s go? When we went into this new decade, our hopes were great for this country of ours. There were a number of megaprojects which were to come on stream, but because of the inaction of our friends opposite some 10,000 jobs were lost in just the energy sector itself. I remember at one time, Mr. Speaker, that to live dangerously was at one's choosing rather than because of a Liberal Government policy.

Even though there is much that we as an Opposition can criticize as to what this Government is doing, I have found in my travels throughout this country that the Canadian people are tired of what I call "old time politics". These are politics whereby the Opposition criticized what our friends in the Liberal Government were doing. Canadians are now looking to us, the Conservative Party, to offer constructive proposals to cure the economic malaise which this Government has brought us into.

I would like to review with you a brief five-point program which we would implement in the event that we were the Government, and which we will implement after the next general election. We will reduce the Government budgetary deficit, Mr. Speaker, and we will redirect and limit Government spending. We will simplify not only the income tax forms, but also the Income Tax Act under which we function, to encourage again risk-taking investment especially as it relates to the small business sector. We will amend the National Energy Program to reduce Government red tape and eliminate Government confiscation as it relates to the 25 per cent backing Clause. We will reduce the burden of Government and unnecessary regulations, again as it relates specifically to the small business sector. We will assist Canadians to reach the forefront of new technology with aggressive research and development policies. We did this in our budget in 1979 in which we increased our funding to research and development. Those are just basic principles, Mr. Speaker, and we are in the process of putting meat to the bone so that we can once again restore economic activity in this great nation of ours.

When I indicate to people in my part of the country that we plan to simplify the Income Tax Act, they say, "Well, the Liberal Government has already done that". These individuals indicated that the Income Tax Act was already simplified, and this is the way the Liberal Government's tax forms reads now, "Item Number 1: How much money did you make last year? Item Number 2: What are your expenses? Item Number 3: How much do you have left? Item Number 4: Please send the Liberal Government the amount listed in Item Number 3." That is how this Government has destroyed the economic activity in this nation.

One might ask, Mr. Speaker, what we as a Party are going to do to restore a climate of confidence in this nation of ours. I would like to refer to the budget that we introduced in 1979. We can point to that with pride, and we have something substantial which we can point to by way of the record. That budget, Mr. Speaker, squarely confronted the economic difficulties with which this nation was faced, and it proposed solutions based on sound economic management. There were policies which offered encouragement to the private investment community and yet provided protection for those who were disadvantaged in this society. Our budget contained measures which placed women in a position of equality with men so far as family enterprises are concerned. We introduced an energy tax credit to assist lower and middle income earners in Canada to meet the higher energy costs. We had our mortgage and property tax credit scheme. We had measures to help specifically the small business sector as it related to the high interest rate, which would have effectively cut interest rates in half. We also offered substantial capital gains relief with relation to the farming sector. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we were reducing the Government's budgetary deficit and we were reducing Government spending. To top it all off, that budget was labelled as the most socially progressive budget which had been introduced in Canada in the past 10 years.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to compare that to what is taking place now. We have a Government which has destroyed the energy sector. We have a Government which wishes to do the same thing to the agricultural sector. We have legislation before this House called Canagrex which wants to give full and total control to the Government over the agricultural sector. We on this side of the House have a responsibility to the Canadian people to offer hope and faith in this nation of ours once again.

Whenever I have occasion to speak in regard to Government policy, I am reminded of the time when the President of the United States addressed the two Chambers two years ago. He likened Government to a baby. He indicated it is like an alimentary canal with an appetite at one end and no sense of responsibility at the other. We, the Progressive Conservative Party, have to return that sense of responsibility to Government, and I can assure you as an individual Member of Parliament and as a Member of this Party that we are going to return responsibility and we are going to return faith and hope to this great nation of ours.

My parents immigrated a good many years ago to this country from Holland because they saw this country as the country which would hold hope not only for themselves but for their children. Mr. Speaker, Canadians are looking to us, as a Party, to restore that hope.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, once again I want to rise to speak to this appalling Bill C-143, which is the Government's edict demanding $19 billion. This Bill which is in itself—

• (1640)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has already spoken on this amendment on February 28 and therefore cannot be recognized again under the rules. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, there seems to be a question. On Monday, February 28 when the House was debating the amendment which it is currently debating, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) was recognized and spoke.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. As I read Hansard for that particular day and subsequent days, the debate is on "Resuming consideration on the motion and the Amendment—"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is quite clear that a debate took place on the amendment which is exactly the same subject as the amendment before the House at that time.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad we have that matter cleared up.

The Government is asking the House to give it authority to borrow some $19 billion to meet projected expenditures in the coming fiscal year, without giving the House the opportunity to examine what it intends to spend the money on.

I have two concerns about how the Government proposes to spend this money. One in particular is the recent announcement that over the next fiscal year the Government intends to reduce the amount of money available for social housing. That is being done in face of the housing crisis in Metropolitan Toronto and Ontario today. It is irrational that this should be the case when we have the highest unemployment on reocord in the country today. It is well known that for every job created in housing construction, 3.5 jobs are created in spin-off industries. Housing is not only a social need, it is also a tool for major job creation.

Nearly 18,000 families are on the Ontario Housing Corporation waiting list. Cityhome in the city of Toronto requires 16,000 new units to handle its waiting list. Emergency hostels provided for transients have become permanent homes for hundreds of people who cannot find affordable accommodation. At the same time, thousands of units of affordable housing are waiting to be built in Metropolitan Toronto, but the federal and provincial Governments are forcing their delay or cancellation.

Today the Oak Street site is a vacant lot. If Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation would approve the housing subsidy under its non-profit co-operative housing program, the site would contain 149 units of housing, a small park and a daycare centre.

Non-profit co-operatives are developed by a board of directors and then run on a democratic basis by the tenants. By removing the profit component and by making units available to low income people assisted by federal and provincial rent subsidies, this development would provide affordable housing to those who need it most.

Metro Toronto has been allocated a 1983 budget of 815 co-op housing units. This is a substantial drop, since the 1981 allocation was 1,300 units and the 1982 allocation was 1,100 units. Besides the Oak Street site, there are 14 sites in Metro where construction could begin if CMHC gave a financing commitment. These sites include Windward, Harbourside and Arcadia Co-op on the Harbour front, Lambton Co-op in York Borough, three Scarborough locations with over 300 units, three downtown locations, Toronto Women's Co-op in Parkdale and the North of Metro Co-op. With this many projects on hold, co-op housing developers must turn down all new proposals.

CMHC is a federal body and is the main provider of subsidies for non-profit co-operative housing. Given the enormous need for social housing and the high unemployment in our construction industry, the NDP has urged the Province to take direct action in the development of co-operative housing. Over 2,000 person years of employment could be created by Government investment in the co-op housing that is ready to be developed this year in the Metro Toronto area.

Cityhome is the City of Toronto's non-profit housing development corporation. Right now it requires 16,000 new housing units to meet its waiting list.

The Ontario Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing allocates CMHC funding for municipal non-profit programs. In December the Province transferred 172 units from the 1982 allocation to the 1983 allocation, and indicated that no allocation would be available for additional new units in 1983.

Cityhome wanted to develop 964 units in 1983. The Commissioner of Housing believed the Province would support the building of over 600 units. These units would be located at 27 Elm Street, Elizabeth and Chestnut, Bathurst Quay, Greenwood and Walpole, Coxwell Stables, Jones and Curzon, Jarvis and Homewood and Queen and Vanauley. Construction of those 964 units would result in over 2,000 person years of employment.

We in this Party believe the Province of Ontario should be expanding the municipal non-profit housing sector, not cutting it back. We will continue to argue for a major infusion of new funds into the co-operative and non-profit sector to create jobs and meet our housing needs. When we take a look at the actual cost savings, apart from the social benefits to society, we find that to keep an individual in an institution costs upwards of $30,000 per year. To allow that person to live within the mainstream of Canadian life in the community, the cost to the taxpayer is something around $8,000 per year. This is a substantial saving to the taxpayer and provides the disabled person or the psychiatric patient upon his discharge from an institution with an opportunity to become a fully participating member of society again.

It is not so long ago that we in Canada observed the International Year of Disabled Persons. In fact, the House recognized the importance of that international year by establishing a Task Force comprised of Members of all political parties in the House to conduct an investigation into the needs of the disabled in this country.

One of the major findings of that Task Force was the crying need for deinstitutionalized programs for disabled people in the country. I am not talking about the kind of deinstitutionalization that has taken place in Ontario, where literally thousands of mental patients are being discharged from care centres into the community without adequate community support bases being provided. There is a particular need for adequate housing for those phychiatric patients who have been discharged. I am now talking about the kind of deinstitutionalized program that is taking place in the Province of Ontario where there is an intention to close homes for the mentally retarded. I am sure that the inadequate housing that will be provided for these patients will be of less benefit to them than the existing accommodation.

If the Government were to ask the House for authority to borrow funds for these socially useful purposes, I am sure that Members on this side would not be as reluctant as we are to give the Government the authority to borrow that sizeable amount of money. We hear talk about deinstitutionalization and the cost of keeping people in institutions as opposed to allowing them to live in the community.

If the Government were to say that it wanted to use these moneys for job-creation projects, housing construction and socially-useful purposes, I may feel an awful lot easier about giving that authority. Today I do not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) for the purpose of debate, may I say that there is an indication that a certain "Mr. Crosby" has spoken. There is no indication whether it was the Hon. Member for Halifax West or the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I think the easiest way to clear it up would be to ask the Hon. Member for Halifax West whether or not he has already spoken on this Bill. If not, he may proceed to participate in the debate.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, that happens to be an embarrassing question because I cannot answer without reservation, except to say that I was under the impression that at no time had I spoken on any aspect of the borrowing Bill, that is to say, Bill C-143. I am virtually certain that I did not, but at the same time I can just as easily assure the Chair that the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) probably spoke on the Bill. With that situation and in the absence of any objection from Hon. Members, I will proceed.

In ten minutes it is very difficult to express with any satisfactory result one's view of the provision in Bill C-143 which authorizes a further borrowing that in total amounts to $19 billion. It is one of the simplest provisions before the House of Commons, but at the same time it is one that has the greatest possible ramifications for the people of Canada. To try to put into real terms the effect of a massive legislative measure such as an authority to borrow $19 billion, let me point out that this borrowing and other anticipated borrowings will bring the total debt load of the Government of Canada into the area of $200 billion. If we divide that among the people of Canada, we will see immediately that every man, woman and child will owe, as a result of all this borrowing, some $8,000; that is $8,000 for every Canadian person.

When we attribute that borrowing to the work force in Canada—the people who actually have to pay the bills and provide the wealth and resources to the Government which enables it to carry on its services and pay for its debt—we realize that the debt more than doubles. Every working Canadian can look forward to carrying on behalf of the Government of Canada a debt load of some $18,000 and to paying and providing the resources to pay the interest on that amount of debt.

When we look back a year or so ago when the interest rate was at 19 per cent, we realize the enormity of that burden on the people of Canada. Unfortunately it does not end there because each of us lives in one of the Provinces of Canada, in the Northwest Territories or in Yukon. In respect of that residence we have, as wage earners and supporters of the economy of the country, a liability to support our Provinces. That carries with it an additional burden. For example, in the case of the Province of Nova Scotia, my obligation as a resident apparently is to pay $5,224 in addition to the $18,000 that I owe as a wage earner of Canada. If we increase that number proportionately, we find that my debt load is not only the $18,000 with which I have to support Canada, but the $10,000 or more which I have to supply in respect of my obligations to the Province of Nova Scotia.

I could almost sit down now because the thought of owing $26,000 on top of every other responsibility of a wage earner in Canada is of such magnitude and so horrendous that it dispels and dissipates every ambition for economic success in the future. This is exactly what has happened in Canada. We have become victims of our own extravagance. But it is not our extravagance as individual Canadians; it is the extravagance of the Government of Canada. It did not learn the lesson which was learned by Canadians in the post-war period after 1945 and in the early 1950s. I remember as a university student in that period reading a reproduction of an editorial which appeared in the New York Times, in which the Government of Canada was praised for not only balancing the budget, that is to say equating the expenditures of the Government of Canada to its income and revenues, but providing a tidy surplus. It was not a great amount, but it was enough to put aside for the proverbial rainy day. Since the heydays of the early 1950s, the attitude of the Government of Canada changed very drastically and it got completely away from the idea and concept of a balanced budget.

I just want to take a minute or two to address myself to the concept of a balanced budget. Many people say that that is a right-wing view, that it is the view of arch-capitalists that we have to balance our expenditures against our income. It is a rule of economics that we cannot deny regardless of our other views. It is a fact of economic life that if one allows one's expenditures to exceed one's income and revenues, one will get in difficulty somewhere along the line. It is not only those who want to be economic purists who respect the concept of a balanced budget. It is also those who want to provide a future for all Canadians and to provide the services which all Canadians need right now. The only method to ensure the provision of social services is to have the kind of economic purity which results from a balanced budget.

We in the House of Commons have to remind the Government of Canada constantly that having abandoned this essential and necessary economic concept, it now has to recognize and realize the error of its ways and return to that concept. Until we bring back into the economic and governmental affairs of Canada the concept of a balanced budget, we will remain in the economic no man's land in which we have been drifting for the past decade and in which, of necessity, we will have to drift for another decade.

Just as I favour the concept of a balanced budget, I recognize that we cannot return to that concept overnight because we have made a social contract and have guaranteed to the people of Canada that we will provide necessary medical services, hospital care, and education, in some circumstances at no cost and in other circumstances at a tuition fee. We have to continue these kinds of services, but at the same time our challenge and task is to bring all this into line, that is to say, the concept of a balanced budget and the necessity for continuing social services, including health care, education and all the services to which Canadians have become accustomed.

The other side of the coin is that in falling into the horror of continual deficit budgeting we have built up an economic burden that we can no longer carry. I have heard from time to time that the Government of Canada has said to provincial leaders that they must take up more of the economic burden. As I have already indicated, it would appear to me that practically every Province of Canada has reached the limit of its financial capacity as well. For instance, every resident of New Brunswick carries a debt of $6,200. In Newfoundland, the per capita debt is $6,300. Even in rich Ontario the per capita debt is $4,060, and in Quebec it is $4,500. I could go on with these statistics, but they merely point out the facts that Canadians, who are not only residents of Canada but residents of the Provinces and Territories of Canada, have reached the limit of their debt capacity and that this spending spree has to stop.

When the former Minister of Finance introduced his budget he gave the indication that the spending spree was going to stop, that he was bringing forward a program of restraint in Government spending which he called the six and five program. He immediately took the dollar bills that were saved as a result of the six and five program and assigned them to other areas of Government expenditure. The net result was even greater Government spending and an increase in the deficit.

The deficit has risen over the past two years from $11 billion to $19 billion, to $23.6 billion to $26 billion, and now it is nearing $29 billion. As long as we attempt to carry a deficit of that size, every social service and every educational service is in danger. But the spending goes on and on.

Last week we learned that the Canadian National Railway has piled up a deficit of $225 million. That was after spinning off all the loss operations, such as CN Marine and VIA Rail. When will it all stop? When will the Michael Pitfields stop feeding at the public trough? When will all this spending stop? What we are doing here is dealing with this Bill and with this amendment and trying to convince the Government that it has to stop its spending, that it deals with the realities of Government expenditure and service, and get Canada back on the road to a balanced budget.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

I see the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) rising, but again I have to ask the Hon. Member whether he has already spoken. Perhaps the Hon. Member will give me a moment to check the list. There are so many Members who have spoken on the Bill that I think it is important to check the list.

The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been checking the record. The Bill was introduced on February 17, 1983 by the Minister. There were five speakers on the main motion at second reading. The fifth speaker proposed an amendment. Following that it is my understanding that speakers could speak to the main motion or to the amendment. But the amendment has not been brought to a vote. Why is it that those of us who have spoken on the amendment—I admit frankly that I did—are not permitted to speak to the main motion? We had only ten minutes allotted to us. In ten minutes you can say very little about a proposal as substantial as this one. Nineteen billion dollars is a great deal of money. I think it is most important the Canadian people have an opportunity to find out just how much it is. Therefore, I feel the amendment ought to be put, if you like, with the vote deferred so that those of us who have spoken on the amendment can speak now on the main motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) raises the point at issue exactly. First, let me deal with the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). I see that he spoke on Monday, February 28 as reported in Hansard at page 23300. I cannot recognize the Hon. Member for Red Deer to speak on the amendment again. However, as indicated by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich, if the House sees fit, I will put the question on the amendment. Once the amendment is disposed of then Hon. Members may proceed to debate the main motion. Members will also recognize that we have a House order that calls for a vote at 4.45 p.m. on the amendment and on the main motion. We could, of course, defer the vote. I am in the hands of Hon. Members. The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling).

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, There have been discussions among the Parties. We have agreed that, if we had no further speakers on the amendment, we would allow the motion to be put, and the vote would be defered until 5.45 p.m. If no one rises to speak, we will proceed in that fashion, provided there is unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I can confirm the agreement as indicated by the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling). Inasmuch as some of the comments made by the Opposition have been constructive, we have no objection to constructive criticism continuing.

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I want to clarify whether I am on your list. I spoke to the main motion on March 4, I believe. I would like some clarification on that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Again, I must ask the House to be patient. There have been so many speakers that I have to check the list. I know the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) is on the list of speakers. I want to determine whether his name was on the list of speakers on the main motion or on the amendment.

The Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen spoke to the amendment on Friday, March 4, 1983. He cannot speak again to the amendment.

The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) has put forward a suggestion which I think is appropriate for me to put to the House. Very simply, let me put the question on the amendment, and having done so, defer the vote to 5.45 p.m. This will require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The vote on this matter will be deferred until 5.45 p.m. today. Debate will now be on the main motion.

The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: Finally. We have been waiting to hear you all afternoon.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear that my colleague from Nipissing, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) will be listening attentively.

Once again, I want to rise to speak to this appalling Bill. Bill C-143 is in itself such an outright admission of fiscal and administrative failure that in our parliamentary system as practised anywhere but in Ottawa under the Liberal Party of Canada it would only be presented if accompanied by the resignation of the Government responsible.

We all know now that because Liberals feel no guilt they, therefore, have no guilt. Out of the goodness of my heart, let me present them with a slogan that might or might not serve them well in the next election. It is: "Being a Liberal means never having to say you're guilty."

Therefore, before the beginning of the new fiscal year, before we have so much as seen a budget—and I would remind you that when this Bill was introduced we had not even seen the Estimates—and before we are given any idea what the money is wanted for, we are being forced to authorize a blank cheque for $19 billion.

Let me use what I think is a very graphic illustration to give some idea of just what we are talking about when we glibly toss around phrases like "$19 billion." If your ancestors and mine had started a company in the year Jesus was born, capitalizing it with $1 billion but, running it so badly that it lost $1,000 a day, we would today still have a quarter of our capital left. That is $1 billion.

This Bill tells us that the Government wants us to give it a blank cheque for $19 billion, $5 billion of which is to paper over its various sins of omissions of this fiscal year and another $14 billion to get it well under way to its undisclosed and uncertain destination in fiscal year 1983-84.

Let us look at what little we do know about Government spending plans for the coming year. Let us see if they are the stuff that gives us any spine stiffening confidence that our moneys are being well husbanded and sparingly spent. Bear in mind that this is the Government which has just forced its six and five regime on its pensioners and the senior citizens of the nation. Yet, it has allowed the salary and wage costs in the Ministry of Economic Development, for example, to rise by 52.3 per cent. This cannot be due merely to new recruiting because the manpower of the Department has gone up by only 3 per cent. It is hard to see how it can be due to a reorganization of functions in the economic area because at the same time the salaries of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion have risen by 9.1 per cent and those of Industry, Trade and Commerce, by 8.4 per cent. Indeed, wages and salaries in the Government as a whole have gone up by 7.6 per cent which, by comparison with the Government's past standards, is pretty good. However, in comparison with what could and should be achieved by an administration for which fiscal responsibility is something more than a slogan and in comparison with the Government's own six and five guidelines, it is an affront.

If a Government comes to this House and asks for a blank cheque for $19 billion, at least we should be assured that its estimating and forecasting is accurate. Let us look at what its estimates tell us about the coming year's construction costs. We must presume that some of this money will go to pay construction costs, but we do not know that.

The Ministry of Transport is building a firehall and garage at St. John's National Airport and is making some modifications on the air terminal at the Regina National Airport. The previous Estimates for these came to $40.4 million. This year's Estimates come to $78.2 million, which is an increase of 93.6 per cent.

What about our new embassy in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia? Last year its cost was estimated at $1.7 million. The latest guess is $32.8 million, which is an increase of 1,829 per cent. So it goes. The costs of Canadian police services facilities at Rockliffe, St. John's and Fredericton are up by 59.6 per cent.

Let us turn to the classic place for hiding sins of omission, standard item No. 12 which is "other expenditures". This item is up by 88.4 per cent this year. What does that mean? I guess we will have to wait for the debate on the Estimates and hope for an explanation then. In the meanwhile, we are expected to pass a blank cheque Bill for $19 billion, part of which moneys will presumably be spent on this item, whatever it may represent. In any event, we are told that none of that is any of our business and that we should just shut up and pass the legislation. It goes without saying that this kind of legislative conduct is bad for the political system. It goes without saying that this sort of catch-up financial fumble ball is the mark of an exhausted Government which is out of control of the public purse, out of touch with the public mood, and out of sync with economic realities. Yet, as long as its tame sheep will bleat on demand, the Government remains in control of the House and this Bill will pass.

When I look across the aisle, I think of the line in "HMS Pinafore", sung by Sir Joseph Porter, KCB, which is:

I always voted at my party's call and never thought of thinking for myself at all—

And the next line, which you will remember:

I thought so little they rewarded me—

And so on. How little times seem to have changed, in Liberal Ottawa anyway.

There is a line spoken by Sir Winston Churchill in "Churchill; the Wilderness Years" which was shown in recent weeks on the PBS System. Mr. Churchill had at least been offered a Cabinet post by Neville Chamberlain after being resolutely ignored for a decade because of his independent views. Mr. Chamberlain expressed regret for this, and Sir Winston replied that as long as Party discipline is not so tight as to stifle honest dissent, democracy is safe. I am wondering if we will see that here in Ottawa.

Of course, this Bill will pass because it must. It will be passed because the Government, which has lost control of the country and the public purse, retains control of the legislature. As a result, democracy is ill served.

It is clear that while it may technically retain the confidence of this House, it has forfeited the confidence of mainstreet Canada, and this Bill and what it represents is why.

It is wrong in principle to force through a draft for any sum to pay for God knows what and move the country further along God knows what undisclosed path. It is wrong by every standard of measurement to purloin $19 billion from the taxpaying public.

I want to say to those who heretofore have been very acquiescent on the other side of the House and who are willing to give the Bill the stamp of endorsement that the great public, their electorate and mine, whose money they are taking, are watching them now. They must now pass judgment on this, their Government's Bill. Of course, I know that the people of Canada will make their decision later.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to take part in this debate and speak against a Bill which would allow the Government to borrow $19 billion. Many speakers have tried to explain what $19 billion is. I believe, when speaking to the amendment approximately a week ago, I indicated that, at least by my arithmetic, it would take a husband and wife 53,000 years to spend $19 billion at the rate of $1,000 a day, seven days a week.

I would like to make a couple of points in the ten minutes that I have. They deal primarily with the question of waste in proportions which I think would make any democracy in the history of the world blush. Let me give a few examples, for which I am indebted to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Clarke) since these examples come from one of his recent householders. My first example, remember, comes from the Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). It is a plane ticket for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), which cost the ordinary taxpayer $2,611, so that he could fly by Concord Jet on June 14, 1982, from Kennedy Airport to Heath row in London. I did not have time to check what the regular airfare is but I am prepared to wager that it would be much less than the $2,611 that is required of those who have the taste to fly by Concord.

My second example involves photocopying. The Auditor General tells us that the federal Government spends in excess of $50 million each year currently for photocopying, for approximately $900 million photocopies per year.

The third example of absolute, total waste is the $674,000 spent to buy briefcases for public servants between April of 1980 and June of 1981.

The fourth example relates to land banking. The Government spent $775 million in land banking for future Canadian housing needs. According to the 1978 Greenspan Report on land prices, instead of controlling land prices, the program created a shortage of land, providing spectacular profits for land speculators as prices skyrocketed.

• (1720)

The next example is the promotion of the six and five. That is the restraint program, as Hon. Members will remember. How there is a connection between six and five and the Canada Unity Information office is beyond me. The Government spent $1 million to set up exhibits at the Canadian National Exhibition, the Pacific National Exhibition and Expo Quebec. I might add, since I am dealing with the Unity Information office, that I am advised that the Government spent $4,500 last month to advertise "the Crow goes without a flap" in the Montreal Gazette. That was the ad which told us that westerners would not benefit from the abolition of the Crow rate.

The sixth example of unparalleled waste is the fact that the Auditor General told us not long ago that the net debt of the Government of Canada is understated by $14.5 billion as of March 31, 1982. Oh, the list becomes very long.

The 1981 Canada Savings Bond issue had a $1 billion blunder in it. As Hon. Members will recall, these geniuses of finance opposite decided to offer the bond issue at 19.5 per cent interest, and the economist, Donald McGillivray, has estimated that, based on the interest rates prevailing at the time, the cost to the taxpayer was a mere extra $1 billion more than was necessary.

I cannot resist the example of the Jet Stars flying in formation to Winnipeg. That was when Messrs. Munro, Gray and Blais used three separate Jet Stars to fly to the same Liberal fund raising dinner in Winnipeg. Indeed, the cost of fuel alone would have been $27,000, and first class commercial airline tickets would have cost $1,770, return.

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Oh, did we miss you?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, yes, I will say that I was on an aircraft to Winnipeg, but it was not for a fund raising dinner. It was for the inauguration of a new plant which we were creating in Winnipeg as a result of the F-18 offset, a plant which, I might indicate, is highly profitable and has a very long future to consider. I would have hoped that the hon. gentleman would have checked his facts before he started making allegations.

Mr. Daudlin: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, ten minutes is a very short amount of time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Essex-Kent rises on the same point of order.

Mr. Daudlin: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take any time from the Hon. Member, and I know that the Minister did not want to raise this matter because his name was perhaps mentioned. However, it seems to me that unless the rules change, and the changes we are getting into right now have gone beyond where I believe they have gone, the practice of the House remains that Hon. Members and Ministers are to be called by their responsible Ministry or by their riding. I think that the Hon. Member would want to do that.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I know, as I was saying it, that I was making a mistake. I hope that Your Honour will forgive me. I notice that the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) did not tell us whether or not he went to the fund raising dinner.

The next item which I would mention concerns the question of the $200,000, I believe, which is being paid in salaries, benefits, travel allowances or expenses, to keep Mr. Edwin Clark in Paris for a year with his family in the style to which he has become accustomed. I do not believe that there are very many people opposite who will stand and defend that particular use of the taxpayer's money.

I suppose that my favourite example, because everyone in Canada can relate to it, concerns the $11,000 which the Government spent to send Miss Janet Smith from the Privy Council office to study French on the Riviera in France. Do you know how the Government defended it, Mr. Speaker? It stated that paying to send this young lady to take French lessons in Quebec, New Brunswick, Ottawa or anywhere else would require a cash outlay of $13,000, I believe. In other words, Canadian taxpayers were being saved, by some perverted bit of logic, the sum of $2,000. If one ignores our balance of payments problems, it just might make sense, but not otherwise.

[Translation]

I should like to switch to French now to mention a few points raised by University of Montreal Professor Maurice Marchon about current problems related to inflation and unemployment. Here is what he said about our situation over the past ten years:

> The Canadian experience at the beginning of this decade has some similarities with the Swiss and Japanese experiences. The Bank of Canada intervention on the money market in 1971-72 and the fact that interest rates were kept too low resulted in a money supply expansion rate which was not conducive to price stability. The national product growth rate was very high in 1971-72, but inflation reached 11 per cent in 1974. The rapid increase in the inflation rate cannot therefore be due mainly to rising energy prices controlled by the Government, but above all to an overly expansionary monetary policy.

[English]

He continues and basically says, as I understand his writing, that the Government does not understand monetarism or the proper use of the theories of John Maynard Keynes.

Concerning the problem we have now, I refer to some points made by Professor Antonio Martino, Professor of Monetary History at the University of Rome, in an excellent book entitled "Constraining Inflationary Government". One of his points, which is totally germane to what we are discussing now, is that Government deficits reach a very high level and they inevitably lead to "refinancing of the deficit through money creation". That is happening now and will continue to happen.

Professor Martino quotes Richard Wagner and Robert Tollis on the same point as saying, "While some Government borrowing is for investment, most of it is for consumption. This means that budget deficits replace the creation of capital goods with a subsidization of consumption". Further down, he quotes Walter Eltis as saying, "It must be particularly disturbing to Keynesian policy-makers that the countries where the influence has been greatest are those which have suffered most from inflation". Further down, in his concluding paragraph, he discusses inflation. In effect, he says that Keynes' obsession with the short-run was also doomed to result in both destabilizing macroeconomic policies and in an inflationary bias. He discussed how Keynes' policies have destroyed the most effective constraint in Government growth. At one point it was considered undesirable to have a deficit. Now it has become a desirable feature.

I must tell Hon. Members that our deficit this year is on the order of $26 billion. It is rather like a pyramid. It becomes larger every year. The point that Hon. Members opposite cannot comprehend is that the more they create deficits, the more they create additional problems for taxpayers in servicing the debt, and we will have even more unemployment. As evident in today's Gallup poll, unemployment is now, by far the largest problem for Canadians.

It is like talking to the trees. They do not listen. Like the Bourbon kings, they neither listen, learn nor forget. I suppose it is obvious that I wish they would bring on an election so that we could change to a Government which believed in people instead of larger and larger deficits.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in this debate we have heard a number of definitions of the quantity of money which is being requested in this legislation, the $5 billion for current expenditures and the $14 billion for future expenditures, unspecified, and for purposes which are not clear. Regarding the $19 billion that are contained in this Bill, it is worth recalling that in the Estimates that were tabled about 10 days ago a table, Chart B at page 9, indicated the various envelopes under which the expenditures for the year are foreseen. With respect to the public debt, we are talking about indebtedness and future indebtedness, and I am thinking of the pages that are sitting in front of you, Mr. Speaker, and the debt that is going to be on their heads. We are borrowing; they are going to pay. Let us remember that. That applies to the children of every person in this room, in this Chamber, and across this country. Their children are going to be faced with repaying the debt that we are being asked to authorize here.

That $19 billion, to come back to the table, Chart B on page 9 of the Estimates, indicates that the debt servicing this year is going to amount to $18.57 billion. In other words, what the Government is trying to borrow now would just about meet the servicing of the current debt. We are being asked to increase that debt so that next year that amount of money would not service the debt, that is, the settlement of outstanding loans, the rescheduling and also paying the interest.

Furthermore, it is worth remembering that over the past six years the percentage of the degree of servicing the public debt has actually doubled. In 1977-78, the amount required for servicing the public debt was $5.5 billion. Today it is $18.57 billion. It has more than trebled. On the average over those six years, that is a 12 per cent inflation factor. Our indebtedness has been increasing at the rate of 12 per cent per year. We hear the Government boasting, puffing out their chests and saying, "What great boys we are because we have brought down the inflation rate." They are increasing the inflation rate because the average increase in indebtedness over these six years is 12 per cent.

A number of Members have been trying to provide a means of comprehending the size of the borrowing authority that we are dealing with today, the $19 billion. I have tried to reduce it to actual physical scale, and I do not know whether you, Mr. Speaker, have ever seen a stack of $1,000 bills all gathered up together with a piece of paper around them. A thousand of those $1,000 bills would make a million dollars, and that would be only four inches thick. Three million dollars, if they were stacked on top of one another would make a stack one foot high, and that is only three million dollars. The Peace Tower is about 300 feet high and if they were stacked up in front of the Peace Tower, by the time the look-out point was reached with stacks of $1,000 bills a total of $1 billion would not have been reached. And we are talking about $19 billion. If we wanted to have all of those $1,000 bills stacked in front of the House of Commons it would make quite a sight, would it not? Nineteen columns of $1 billion each sitting side by side. The main entrance to the House of Commons would be blocked by the $1,000 bills that we are being asked to authorize in this Bill. It is preposterous.

If we put it another way, if we stacked them all the way up, they would reach to over 6,000 feet, 6,333 feet is the exact figure, and that is, as close as I can make it, about two kilometres, for those who prefer to speak in kilometres. We have a column two kilometres high of $1,000 bills, and that is the scale of this particular operation.

Put in another way, where could one find such funds? Let us say they were spread equally amongst all of the constituencies of this country. There are 282 constituencies. That would mean that each constituency would be responsible for raising $67.3 million. To make it even more impressive, $67.3 million in some constituencies perhaps would be no great problem, but let us look at it in terms of Prince Edward Island. Those four constituencies in Prince Edward Island—and I am sorry that the Minister is not here to realize what his Government is asking this Parliament to do—would be required to raise $269.5 million. I do not think the banks on Prince Edward Island could raise that unless they were given some notice, and therefore that gives us a notion of the magnitude in terms of constituencies.

In terms of population, what does it mean? Here again I refer to the pages. They, and everyone in this country, are under an obligation, if that amount of money is to be raised, $19 billion, to find $750 and put it out on the table there and say: "Okay, Government, there is your $19 billion." That is preposterous. In terms of families, it means about $750 for every man, woman and child, and if you deal with that on the basis of, let us say, a family of four, that means $3,000 for a family of four. Every family of four in this country would be required to find $3,000 to make up this sum.

Because of the nature of Clauses 2 and 3, one being the requirement for $5 billion for current expenditures and the other one for $14 billion, I do hope that when this goes to committee we will be able to introduce an amendment which will split the Bill so that we will leave the $14 billion to one side until the year in which it is to be spent appears and until we have some notion from the Government as to the manner in which it proposes to spend those funds.

That is my case. It is a lot of money. It could block the doorway to the Peace Tower. It would require Prince Edward Island to raise almost $270 million. It puts at the door of every Canadian the requirement to raise $750. That is a preposterous notion when you consider that $14 billion of that is for purposes of which we have no notion whatsoever.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, those persons who have lost their jobs, their homes or their businesses and those who are now unemployed and those trying to enter the labour market for the first time have awakened to the size and magnitude of Government financial operations. In other words they are more conscious of taxes and spending than ever before. What concerns most people I talk to about Bill C-143 is the process by which it is being handled. We have this situation. The Government wants to borrow $19 billion, $5 billion for use between now and March 31 and $14 billion for future requirements.

What we want to see is a projection of revenue and expenditures before we approve the borrowing of the $14 billion. It does not seem to be an unusual request. Anyone with any sense of responsibility for financial matters would want to know revenue and expenditure levels before loans of the magnitude of $19 billion were undertaken.

There is no doubt that the people of Canada just do not trust the Government and the process it uses. The raising of taxes, the approval of spending Estimates and the lack of forecasting for future expenditures is very much in question in the minds of the people of Canada today. The people of this country want some assurance that the pipeline has a valve that will meter the flow.

The feeling is that if we do not watch the process closely, those who sacrifice to bring down inflation will have done so for nothing. In other words, we are on a narrow path. If we walk carefully, we can make it safely out of the inflation and recession that we are enduring. If not, we are in difficulty. Part of the walking carefully is knowing where we are going.

We and people generally would be happy and would view it as being more acceptable if we saw a new budget and then the borrowing authority brought in later. In other words, let us see what our revenue will be to cover the $89 billion proposed in the spending Estimates. Let us see the estimated shortfall, and then we will look at the borrowing requirements.

Three Auditors General in a row have said that Government spending is out of control. Numerous boards and commissions have said the same. Just contemplate the magnitude of the Estimates, $88.9 billion, a 17 per cent increase over the Main Estimates of last year. That is not the end of it. We will have Supplementary Estimates A, B, C, D, E and F. We do not know what it will come to. We do not know how much more spending will be done and how high the amount will go before we are asked to approve another borrowing authority beyond the $19 billion.

If we look at the budgetary deficits, we see a picture of deficits which began at $5 billion in 1975-76. It went to $6.2 billion, then to $10.3 billion, onwards and onwards until we have approximately $30 billion by March 31 of this year. With that record, no wonder there is a lack of trust between the people of Canada and their Government. Since 1980, the Government has run up $90 billion in deficits. Those who are trying to rearrange their lives from the effects of the recession—and there is no one who has not been hurt by the recession—those who have been ravaged by high interest rates and are carrying a heavy debt load live in fear that inflation will return and they will have another round of the same.

We have an opportunity to put back into our national affairs a measure of confidence, no matter how small it may be. We should have a forecast of revenues and expenditures together with an anticipated borrowing for five years ahead. Other Governments do it. Large corporations forecast long and short-range. There is no reason in the world why it cannot be done here. We should begin here now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Hon. Members will recall that a few minutes earlier the House unanimously consented to defer the vote on the amendment until now. Accordingly, it being 5.45 o'clock, pursuant to order made Tuesday, March 8, 1983, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings. The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment. Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Skelly) which was negatived on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Friday, March 11, 1983, consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Corbin in the Chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger) has the floor.

On Clause 1—Value of benefits

Mr. Deniger: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take advantage of this opportunity, in the debate on the Income Tax Bill, to make a few comments on automobile standby charges. For many hours the House has been debating this Bill and particularly the policy on automobile standby charges. Like most Members, I have received a host of recommendations and advice regarding this new tax. Of course, the easy way out would be to remove the tax altogether. However, I do not think that would be wise, in view of the extent of the Government's deficit and its financial requirements.

I feel that as responsible legislators, we should not be considering the nature of this tax but its methodology and application. When I discuss the matter with my constituents who include some of those 140,000 Canadians who are driving cars or vehicles provided by their employers, they all agree, Mr. Chairman, that there is a certain time during which they drive the car or vehicles for personal use, and they fully understand that this is a benefit that constitutes income, and that like any income it should be taxed, and I think it is irresponsible to try and argue against this principle.

What I would like to suggest to the Minister—whether he does it in this Bill or in the next budget—is a new method for collecting this tax.

At the present time, car users, car dealers and travelling salesmen are responsible for these charges, which means they themselves must keep track of what is personal use and what is not. There is a proposal before the House to set the monthly standby charge at 2 per cent of the cost of a car belonging to the employer, and so forth.

I think that if I were to draft this legislation, I would do it quite differently. I would put the onus on the employer, and I shall explain. Instead of taxing the user, I would tax the company, which would be done as follows. A company that provides a car to an employee has thereby incurred an expense that is tax-deductible, and I would like the company to charge the employee, that is, the user, an amount for the personal value of this service. For instance, if the car has a four-cylinder engine, the employer could charge $40 a month, $60 for six cylinders and $80 for eight cylinders, for personal use by the employee. What does the employee have to do? The employee who, let us say, has a nice car, a V-8, for instance, would have to pay $80 a month, after paying taxes. This is what is called after-tax dollars, and the amount would be paid to the company, which would then be taxed on this additional income.

This way, the Government's main goal, to tax personal use, has been achieved, because we are taxing the employer. Instead of taxing 140,000 users, we would then be taxing perhaps 1,000 employers who are providing cars to these users. From the accounting point of view, it would seem to be a far simpler, more practical and more effective procedure. I also feel that the employee, who would have a monthly premium to pay, would realize what his car is worth daily and monthly. That is quite clear, and as far as the company is concerned, it would be very happy to use that method.

Mr. Chairman, this is not an original proposal, because as you probably know, the same method is being used in various States in the US. It is a foolproof method and a very satisfactory one as far as the Government's objectives are concerned. That being said—and I agree with the Government that personal use should be taxed since it is a benefit or income and as such should be taxed—it seems to me that we should ensure that not employees but employers are responsible for the tax on this benefit. While I am on the subject of cars, I shall, if I may, say a few words about capital cost allowance and how it affects the automobile industry.

Earlier, before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Cosgrove) was asking for a borrowing authority of several billion dollars. The increase in the Government's borrowing requirements and the deficit is of course due to the fact that this year, the Government had to spend about $8 billion, if I am not mistaken, on additional unemployment insurance benefits. It seems the additional amount is needed as a result of the disastrous situation in the automobile industry, which is mainly concentrated in Central Canada—in Ontario and at Sainte-Thérèse. What should be understood when discussing the automobile industry is that the industry has a very broad impact in Canada. As a result, there are workers who have lost their jobs, in every riding in the country.

I feel that if we are to make a positive contribution towards helping the automobile industry, which is the largest employer in Canada, perhaps, in addition to reconsidering automobile standby charges as I mentioned earlier, we could also take another look at the rules for capital cost allowance for cars that are leased or purchased by companies.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday a delegation of dealers in Japanese cars met with the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Regan). They complained about the fact that the measures we have adopted have resulted in the loss of 2,300 jobs. I for one would prefer to use tax measures to help the automobile industry, and I think the best way to do that would be to increase the capital cost allowance on North American cars.

We used to have 30 per cent for the first year. Our budget has restricted this to 30 per cent for the first six months and 15 per cent for the last six months. However, the 15 per cent for the last six months constitutes a real danger to the automobile leasing industry and is in fact jeopardizing the very survival of Canadian car dealers. I realize that the Government urgently requires substantial amounts of money. In fact, I share its views on the aims of the Income Tax Act. However, I do have some problems with respect to the application of this legislation to the automobiles. Furthermore, I would like the Minister to consider the amendment we proposed a few months ago, by which a capital cost allowance of up to 40 per cent would be allowed companies such as Tilden, Hertz, Avis and others, on cars rented on the daily basis.

I wish the Government would consider this amendment for the benefit of thousands of car dealers and thousands of companies engaging in automobile leasing, for the benefit of hundreds of companies which buy fleets of cars which are of course of North American origin, often built in Canada. If they were not built in Detroit or Toledo, these cars are from Windsor or Oshawa or Sainte-Thérèse. These are cars that were built here. What is happening now is that the new tax system discourages companies from purchasing North American cars and is in fact an incentive to purchase imported cars which may be made in Japan or in Germany.

In concluding, Mr. Chairman, I would like the Minister to give some thought to the comments I have just made. I am anxious to hear his reply. I would also like to make a few comments subsequent to the Minister's reply. However, if the Minister is unable to respond—and I am aware that it is important to complete consideration of this Bill as soon as possible so that taxpayers can receive their tax refunds—if the Minister is unable to give the House a satisfactory answer right away, I would like him to consider my comments as representations in connection with the budget we all hope will be brought down within the next few weeks.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Hon. Member for his thoughtful presentation and his recommendations to myself and the Minister of Finance. There is no question that the Hon. Member put his observations in the context of total Government responsibility. For example, he indicated that any benefit offered to one segment of the community under our tax domain is quantifiable and no doubt can be equated to income. If there is no tax on such benefit, it means that other Canadians have to carry that charge through paying taxes in some other area. Therefore, I appreciate that the Hon. Member thought about that in his question.

The Hon. Member prefaced his question by saying that any feature of the tax system that gives a preference or permits a deduction or exemption is a charge on the over-all Government operation and finally becomes part of the deficit and the borrowing Bill which was before the Finance Committee.

Similarly, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has drawn our attention to the competition between the North American product and the imported product. He used the example of Japanese vehicles. There was one point he did not comment on either in his preface or his larger presentation. That is an alternate way of assisting the North American industry in selling its product and thereby either maintaining present employment levels or, optimistically, looking at prospects for potential growth of the North American industry.

With the greatest respect to the Hon. Member, I do not think the answer to the health of that industry is through Government action in giving exemptions, either by way of depreciation or waiving of income benefits that some people receive. In effect, the economy would then be carrying one sector that is not competing. The difficulty is that the sector is not competing.

The problem with the North American product is that other countries, including Japan and Europe, are offering products such as vehicles which the Canadian public wants to buy. They express their preference with their pocketbook. The only answer is for the industry to compete better. We cannot expect the Government to set the standards and be the final arbiter as to what products Canadians are going to purchase. One of the reasons the industry is not doing well is that Canadians in large numbers are buying other products. I think there is a message there for the industry.

I believe I have dealt with capital depreciation in a general way. On the specifics of the method imposing the tax which the Hon. Member referred to, I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to comment on that. There have been previous submissions on that point and the Parliamentary Secretary might expand on the specifics of that proposal, which is an interesting one.

• (1125)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the Chair should inform the House that on Friday, March 11, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South moved a motion which the Chair has not put to the House. I believe at this point I should read the motion to the House. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rises on a point of order?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, Mr. Chairman, just a small point of order. I was going to provide some additional information to supplement the Minister's answer in reply to the Hon. Member for La Prairie.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: That is quite in order.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the comments of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, as usual, but I would like to clear one important matter up.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that the Hon. Member for La Prairie has consistently given us outstanding advice on these matters over the past year. I have filled my office as Parliamentary Secretary for almost a year now and throughout that period the Hon. Member has discussed with us the problems associated with the standby charges and with capital cost allowances. His advice has been vital in making up the final version of this Bill. I believe he would like us to go a little further and to be even more understanding, and I compliment him on his vigour and enthusiasm in raising these issues. We saw a good deal of his understanding of the matter in his discussion earlier.

He went right to the core of the question in saying that "personal use" is the key issue. He then suggested to us an interesting method whereby the employer would collect a rebate from an employee for personal use of an automobile.

I would point out to the Hon. Member that under Revenue Canada's interpretation bulletin IT-63R, we find under Section 6, and I quote:

> A payment by an employee to his employer for his personal use of the automobile reduces the benefit added to income under paragraph 6(1)(a).

He will find if he goes to the existing Act and to this Bill that the same provision is carried on. It is a question of degree after that. He has pursued an opportunity which is already in the law. He is suggesting to us that for a simplification we should use this everywhere. I believe it is a very good idea, one that warrants the consideration of the Minister of Finance, and I will personally ensure that he takes a good look at it. I would also ask the Hon. Member to point out to employers and to his own contacts that this opportunity exists already and they should take advantage of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Hawkes: A point of order, Mr. Chairman. Did the Parliamentary Secretary say that the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger) is responsible for that regulation? Is that what he said?

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: That sounds more like a question than a point of order.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I must confess that the ability of the Hon. Member in Her Majesty's second official language is better than mine. I apologize for that. I view it as a personal handicap on my part and nothing of which I am proud. I missed the question. Could the Hon. Member repeat it, please?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, did the Parliamentary Secretary say that the Hon. Member for La Prairie was responsible for this regulation? Is that the sum total of what that was all about?

Mr. Fisher: Is that a point of order, Mr. Chairman, or in the course of normal debate?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I am afraid not. Order. The Chair will now proceed with the reading of the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South on Friday. It is moved:

> That Subclause 1(4) of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2) be amended by adding the following, immediately after line 24 on page 4;
> "(2.2) For the purposes of subparagraph 6(1)(e)(iii) a benefit relating to the operation of an automobile shall only be the cost of motor fuel paid for by the employer but utilized by the employee in personal use of the automobile"

• (1130)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I believe we have had a rather long discussion with respect to Clause 1. I just wanted to make two or three points with respect to the amendment, and unless other Members really want to say more with respect to automobiles, I propose we move on to other sections of the Act.

As you know, sir, it has been our position that this Act should have full and complete discussion as far as possible. Frankly, we spent rather longer than I had hoped on Clause 1 on Friday, and it is unfortunate that the Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary refused to answer questions appropriately, particularly those of the Hon. Member for Calgary West. Had they done that, we would have moved out of Clause 1 earlier.

Speaking to the amendment, sir, at the top of page 2 Members will note Clause 1(a)(iii) reads:

> —that was a benefit in relation to the use of an automobile, except to the extent that it related to the operation of the automobile;

When you read that it does not make any sense at all, so you go to the explanatory notes which the Minister said were so clear and everyone could understand. We have asked the Minister to explain those explanatory notes but he cannot. The explanatory notes say that this amendment adds that Subclause to provide an exception for any benefit relating to the availability of an automobile for personal use, but clarifies that operating costs of an automobile used for personal purposes which are paid for by the employer must be included in income.

Well, Mr. Chairman, what we are saying is that the operating costs to be included in income should be restricted to the actual operating costs of the automobile, essentially the fuel. Remember, this is the employer's car and the employee is using it part-time for personal use. As to the licence, obviously the owner has to license the car and there is no reason why that charge should be borne in part by the employee. When you get to the question of insurance, in the case of a salesman's automobile it is usually much higher than that which the individual himself might pay, particularly in view of the fact that corporations often insure for much higher limits than individuals would necessarily insure themselves. Therefore, because of the wording of the Clause, the employee is being asked to pay a disproportionately high charge for maintenance.

This has never been the law in the past which is why this amendment is here. It is a further burden on the employee. You will recall, sir, that we objected to the inclusion of this particular part because it was not within the Ways and Means motion, but the Chair ruled it was. Nonetheless, this is a further burden on the employee. We say that burden should be restricted to the actual cost of operating the vehicle, the gasoline in the tank. If the employer pays the gas bill, then the employee should pick up his share of the gas bill with reference to his mileage.

If we could have a reply from the Minister on that, and perhaps some other views, I think we could get on with the Bill at this point.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Government does not support the amendment and we would be prepared to express our view in a vote very quickly. The difficulty in the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is that we do not share with him whatever rationale he has for drawing the distinction between fuel and other expenses. For example, what is the rationale for exempting the cost of tires, grease or oil and not that of fuel? Similarly, the cost of insurance or a licence. The car will not go without fuel, and it certainly should not be on the road without insurance or a licence. We find no rationale for the amendment and cannot accept it for that reason.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, on the same subject I would like to read into the record a letter to the Minister of Finance, a copy of which I received. I will not read the whole thing, but I would like some clarification on it for my constituents. The constituent writes:

> It grieves me considerably to have to write to you on a situation you have inherited with your position. However, my grievance is costing me considerably, all a result of the increased tax portion of my company automobile.
> It is costing me $3,158.16 taxable benefits portion annually, for an automobile worth $10,049.48 annually (all costs included). That represents 31 per cent. My personal mileage, 10,000 km versus 45,600 km business mileage represents only 21.9 per cent "Real Value" or to rephrase the statement I'm taxed 1/3 on 1/5 value, net.

He then goes on to talk about some other personal problems and ends with this paragraph:

> With these excessive tax rates and nasty twists being annually developed, how is one expected to get ahead? Why is the incentive to perform and exceed being taken away, especially from the young who will one day be expected to take over the management and operation of our businesses, provinces and country.

Now, I would like to inquire of the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary what kind of answer I should give my constituent. Whether or not you want to include tires, gasoline or insurance, or whatever, what do I say to him about the proportion of personal use involved, roughly one-fifth, and is there any chance that there could be a proportionate write-off in some way to assist him?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the Hon. Member's representation. I think there are many taxpayers with similar specific questions so I am sure that more than just that one person will find this question useful. I hope I will be able to answer to his satisfaction.

We have set the 12,000 kilometre minimum standby charge because we believe that is roughly what everyone else would pay for personal use of the car. We have used 12,000 kilometres as a reasonable cut-off point. Many people will use business cars for smaller portions of personal use, but by the time you get to 12,000 kilometres you are using your car for roughly the same amount of personal use as most other citizens would be. So the Government has, perhaps arbitrarily, drawn a line and said that at 12,000 kilometres everyone is being treated equally. It is what everybody would drive personally and it is also what other people would pay in after tax charges.

However, I ask the Hon. Member to remember two or three qualifiers. First of all, it is the personal choice of the taxpayer to drive the company car for personal use. The taxpayer can easily decide not to do so, to use either other methods of transportation or to buy a different vehicle altogether. It is the taxpayer's choice. I suspect, and this is what I have found in my dealings with my own constituents, that people drive the company car under these circumstances because it is still fairly cheap to do so. In fact, using the Hon. Member's example of, I believe he said, $3,100 taxable benefit, if the taxpayer is in a one-third tax bracket, which is a fairly rich one, he is paying $1,000 tax on the $3,100 benefit and at that price the taxpayer is getting a car with all the luxuries and operating expenses that go with it. A $1,000 car today, per annum, is quite cheap. After the individual has finished driving it, the insurance and everything else is included.

Third, the Hon. Member asked about prorating and he is quite right that 12,000 kilometres is a dividing line. The standby charge comes into full force after 12,000 kilometres and the taxpayer prorates his liability under 12,000 kilometres. I think he indicated that his constituent has 10,000 kilometres of use, so he would pay five-sixths of his standby liabilities.

I would ask the Hon. Member to take into consideration that 12,000 kilometres is a dividing line that we think is fair to everyone, that personal use is the choice of the taxpayer and that, even so, it is quite an inexpensive way to get a car; and finally, it is prorated below 12,000 kilometres.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I also want to move on to other Clauses. We moved an amendment that has the impact of reducing the number of items taken into expenses for the calculation of what is, in effect, about a 300 per cent tax increase. I suggest that it is reasonable for the Government to give more consideration to that idea than it has up to this point.

I have three short questions. We have suggested to the Government during our discussions that it is unfair for the value of the original price of a car to remain the same year after year, because when an automobile is used for one year or two years, or for 100,000 kilometres, its value declines. Yet the Government wants to tax the user as if it were still a brand-new automobile. Has the Minister reconsidered that principle of cutting down on the valuation?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, there was an amendment which I believe was put by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I cannot recall whether we have actually disposed of that amendment as yet. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South indicates that we have disposed of that motion. If the Hon. Member for Calgary West really wants to move along to a new Section, as he has indicated, I respectfully suggest that we really should not be discussing items which we have not only dealt with but voted on.

Mr. Hawkes: May I repeat the question? Will the Government consider changing the value of that automobile each year? As its value declines the taxpayer must pay for personal use based on the value of the automobile. Why should the taxpayer have to pay the same amount in the third year as he would have to pay in the first year when, in fact, the value of the automobile has declined?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I want to go on record as saying that I do not think it is useful for this Committee to entertain discussion of matters that have been dealt with and voted on by the Committee.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Calgary West could clarify the matter which he is raising now for the benefit of the Chair and the House. The Hon. Minister of State for Finance contends that the Hon. Member for Calgary West is debating an issue which is contained in a Clause which the House has already disposed of. It would be useful for the Chair if the Hon. Member for Calgary West would clarify that point.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, it shows some confusion that exists in the Minister's mind from time to time. We are on Clause 1 which deals with the method of calculation of the benefit to a taxpayer. Part of that method of calculation is the value of the automobile, the value of the expenses and so on. The Committee has disposed of a specific amendment which we presented and which would have changed part of that calculation. To that extent the Minister is correct.

However, the subject matter is Clause 1 and the amendment thereto. The amendment which we are currently debating deals with the calculation on the expense side. The strong feeling that we have that that calculation should be changed could, in fact, be modified somewhat if the Government indicated a willingness to change the calculation on the value side. However, the Government clearly does not even want to talk about it. It does not want Canadian taxpayers to know about it or even its backbenchers to know about it.

We will leave the question of the value of the automobile because the Minister will not answer it. Let us proceed to the expense calculation. The impact of our amendment would be to reduce the expenses simply to the fuel used. There are some parts to that expense method that simply run against the grain because they are wrong.

Why does the Minister insist on charging a private taxpayer a portion of an expense amount for private use which is calculated on an insurance benefit that is based on commercial rates? Every taxpayer in this country knows that a taxi driver pays enormous amounts of money for personal insurance on that automobile. Premiums of $3,000 and $4,000 are not unusual. Private individuals who use an automobile for personal use can purchase insurance for $500 to $700. Simply because my company must pay a high insurance rate, why should I have to receive a taxable benefit based on that commercial insurance payment rather than something related to what I would have to pay to insure my vehicle privately? Why does the Government insist on inflating my tax liability based on that expense item called insurance?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I suppose that the question raised by the Hon. Member is one of degree. It seems to me that when we evaluate these individual costs, we can probably go through the operation of an automobile and find some costs that are more expensive, as I am sure he will find, and some that are less expensive because an employer is supplying them instead of the private individual.

The Government is trying to take a simple course of action for the calculation of these costs. I suggest that the most straightforward answer to his question is simplicity. If the individual calculates these costs and then prorates for personal use, he has a very simple calculation to make and that ends it. On the other hand, I would again want to come back to the principle which is the most important principle of all. It is up to the private individual to decide whether he wants to use the car or find some other method of transportation. If the individual finds that an extra few dollars on an insurance policy is onerous, then perhaps the individual could calculate the alternatives available. As well, the individual could calculate what other taxpayers pay in particular circumstances. For example, there are those taxpayers who use private vehicles for company business and who charge kilometrage to their employer rather than using the company car. The same example would apply there.

Mr. Hawkes: It becomes more and more frustrating. We have moved from principles of equity and fairness and all of a sudden there is simplicity. The principles of Canadian tax law change before our very eyes day after day. It is simple to say that every taxpayer in the country who uses a company automobile for personal purposes will deem the insurance costs to be $600, and they will have to calculate in that portion that the Government decides they should. That is simple, Mr. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Fisher: Right.

Mr. Hawkes: It is totally unfair that a person on my left who works for a company whose insurance fleet coverage is so bad that they are paying $5,000 for each vehicle will have to pay more tax than somebody on my right who drives the same car, the same everything, but whose fleet coverage is very good with a $3,000 insurance premium per vehicle.

Mr. Fisher: That is not true.

Mr. Hawkes: That is unfair.

Mr. Fisher: Use your head and start thinking.

Mr. Hawkes: Why does the Government have the following formula built into this Bill? The value of the automobile is fixed on the date of purchase and lasts for five years. If the car costs $10,000 at the outset, the Government says that car is still worth $10,000 five years from now. We all know that is nonsense but that is simplicity in the Government's terms. We also know one other thing about that five-year period of time. Repair costs go up. As the vehicle is used more and more and gets older, repair costs increase. A taxpayer with a five-year-old vehicle will be paying more tax dollars to the Government of Canada because of that repair side of this equation than the person on my left who has a brand-new vehicle which is worth more, gives better service and has less problems. That is the Government's idea of simplicity, Mr. Chairman.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell me why he wants it both ways? The only logical explanation that I can conceive of is that this is a money grab. It has nothing to do with simplicity, fairness or anything else except a money grab. It is unfair to Canadian taxpayers. Will the Government consider taking the repair part of this taxation liability out of the equation? If the Government is going to keep that automobile value as if it were brand-new, why does the Government not also assume the car needs no repairs? Brand-new vehicles do not need repairs; they are under warranty. If that is the value the Government is putting on one side of the equation, why does the Government not drop the repair side?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has a fascinating theory.

Mr. Hawkes: Fascinating?

Mr. Fisher: It is a theory that I think ordinary practice will not bear out. He is concerned about questions of equity. Bear in mind the simple principle that we are asking people who use their cars for personal use to pay for that use in after-tax dollars. That is the principle. Can the ordinary taxpayer who does not have a company car but has his own car work out some complicated depreciation plan the way the Hon. Member is suggesting? Can this ordinary taxpayer come to the Government and say: "Government, my car is three years old this year; therefore, I want to write some of it off and get a benefit?" The ordinary taxpayer cannot do that. What we are asking is that the personal use of a vehicle be paid for in after-tax dollars and that business-related use be paid for in pre-tax dollars.

Let me carry the Hon. Members' example one step further. He said that there are questions of equity on maintenance. Let us explore that to its logical extreme. If the Hon. Member is counting angels on top of a pin, I will too.

Let us take an individual who has a personal car and drives it on an authorized basis for company use. The longer he hangs on to that car, the more his repair bills will be. Should we allow that individual a complicated set of calculations? No. All we do is say to him that he can collect a kilometrage charge from his employer on a tax-free basis. We do not want to make his life more complicated. We do not come to him and say: "This is the first year of the life of the vehicle, therefore, it can only be so much but the second year will be so much plus some and the third year will be even more". We do not do those kinds of silly calculations. We just say to the individual taxpayer that when his car is for personal use, pay for it with after-tax dollars. When his car is for business use, the car is treated on a tax-exempt basis. It is very simple and very straightforward.

I would like to tell the Hon. Member that I have received a letter which I will show to him. It concerns his behaviour here. This letter is from a chartered accountant, not a constituent of mine. He says that we should be charging the Hon. Member for elementary accounting lessons, and I think that is right. We cannot charge him for the time he has wasted in the House with these silly examples, but at least the Hon. Member should have the decency to pay us for his basic education.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert: You are so arrogant you should be in the Cabinet.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, the Government intends to throttle this House later this day. This is amazing. First, the Government moves closure on the Bill. We have time allocation. Suddenly we see Liberal Members standing up and taking the time of the House. Not only do they cut the Opposition's debating time to a day, but the Government cuts that day in half through that kind of behaviour and no doubt we shall get filibustering from the Minister too.

Let me come back to the issue, Mr. Chairman. I, as an individual taxpayer, can decide whether to buy an automobile that is five years old. I pay less for it and I understand that I will probably have larger repair bills. I can make the opposite economic decision and buy a new automobile with full knowledge that I will pay less in repair bills. The Government is saying that if I work for a company, and for whatever set of reasons it is more convenient to use that company automobile part of the time for personal use, I will not have the choice. If I own the automobile I can decide to repair it. If I get a fender bumped a little bit and there is a dent and I do not have the money for the repair, I do not have to repair it. If the company decides to repair it, then under this provision I have to pay tax. That is the basic unfairness.

We are being charged as though we owned a new automobile when, in fact, it is not a new automobile. Then we are being charged for all the repairs which the company decides to make on it. The individual's choice has disappeared. This is totally unfair and I urge Members opposite to vote for the amendment which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has moved because his amendment at least puts some sense of fairness back into the system.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Blenkarn) negatived: Yeas, 11; Nays, 22.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. It is always very constructive to see that while Members on this side are being counted seats are filling on the other side of the House. Four Members came into the chamber while the vote was being taken.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, my learned colleague is fully cognizant of the Standing Orders and our parliamentary practice, and he knows that when a vote is taken in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Members may enter the House, they are not necessarily expected to be in their seat, and they may be counted as long as the Clerk has not reached their row. The three Members involved were in the last row and they were here at the appropriate time to be counted. Besides, you have ruled that the amendment was negatived, so it seems to me this is not a point of order.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

On Clause 6—

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, we do not intend to debate Clause 6. We want to point out that we cannot agree to this Clause because it is very unfair and adds an enormous burden on those who are selling property that is available for redevelopment. It does not allow people to make an appropriate capital gain on the sale of real estate.

Rather than hold up the Bill, we would like to proceed with a number of other sections. We feel that the Government should allow full consideration of the Act, and in order to do that we are prepared to allow Clause 6 to pass on division.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 6 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

On Clause 7—Shareholder debt

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, we believe that Clause 7 should carry on division. It deals in part with loans to shareholders. We have some real concern about Subclause (1). Subclauses (2) and (3) deal with automobiles and we have some concerns with them as well. We are prepared to allow Clause 7 to carry on division, however.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 7 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The House will now consider Clause 8.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, Clauses 8 and 9 and Clause 128(12) should be grouped together. They deal with small business bonds and that is a separate issue.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, we agree with that. I take it there will be one vote on all three Clauses.

Mr. Blenkarn: On Clauses 8, 9 and 128(12) there should be one vote.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clauses 8, 9 and 128(12)—

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Chairman, this give us an opportunity to look at some of the background of the Small Business Bond. I have a number of questions about it because of the way the situation has evolved. Since the concept of the bond was introduced in the Crosbie budget in 1979 it has proved to be an interesting and in some cases a very good and reasonable measure for businesses to expand initially or in cases of financial distress, to refinance.

I should like to express some concern that it is available only in cases of bail-out for those who are in financial distress now and that we do not have the opportunity to use the mechanism for people who want to expand.

I wonder what the rationale of the Government was in changing the concept from one of assisting expansion to one of assisting those in financial distress. I understand the difference between the Small Business Development Bond and the Small Business Bond, but what financial parameters were used to decide that it was no longer in the best interest of businesses to allow them to use this to expand and instead use it only as a bail-out mechanism?

Does the Government know the cost compared to the benefit to the Government through taxation, increased employment opportunities, business expansions and so on? I know the Government can relate to a lost-tax position, but can it compare that to the expansion that took place and the additional economic activity that took place?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I will begin by adopting the comments of the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey that the section was of help to many small businesses. The amount of take-up by small businesses and banks has been very encouraging, not only under the original section, but as well subsequent to the amendments which are in this section. Advantage has been taken of them since the announcement was made.

One of the complaints about this provision initially was that it applied only to unincorporated business entities. One of the amendments before us is to expand that to unincorporated sole proprietorships, thereby opening the provision to a larger number of Canadian businessmen.

In response to the question raised by the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey, I should point out that we felt that, as well as applying this to the unincorporated person, we should include those in financial difficulty.

Realizing that this section was limited in scope, the Government was relying upon the participation of the banking institutions to assist business. Considering the amount of funds available to assist in this area, and bearing in mind that there was no take-up under the provision, it was felt that the Government had to target on those businesses in more serious difficulty and those which, without funding under this provision, would otherwise fail. The provision for expansion seemed to address the most needy of small businesses, those close to using this provision as a last resort. Under the circumstances we felt that that was a group that really should be addressed first.

As I say, with the limited resources that the banks would use in this vehicle, we thought that the money should go first of all to those who, without the money, would not be able to continue.

Mr. Gurbin: Basically, I do not disagree with the idea that there needed to be an extension of this to those who are unincorporated, and that if there are limited resources they should be made available to those most in need.

• (1210)

However, the Minister, probably because I was not clear enough, has not responded to the basic question as to why the expansion orientation of this whole mechanism, which was implicit in the original suggestion, was changed so that it is now only useful to those who are in financial distress. That is irrespective of the amount of available resources. What parameters were used or what was the basis for the Government stating "This is costing us too much", or "It will not work this way", or whatever the rationale was, so that now we need to change it only for those in financial distress, in contrast to allowing it to be used for expansion and letting enterprise develop with the use of it?

I would also make one final and quick point. From time to time we on this side argued very strongly and, in the end, achieved the effect of making it available to unincorporated as well as incorporated farms. However, at the time that it was useful for expansion, only those who were incorporated were able to use it. The program initially had the effect of forcing people, if they were to expand, to become incorporated. The argument used at that time by the tax Department in stating that it really could not handle this very well unless people were incorporated is really denied by the fact that it is now used for unincorporated businesses. What was the real basis for saying that it could not use this for expansion any more?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the officials advised me that it was the recognition of the fact that the scheme was limited in terms of the amount of money available to any business, whether it was business to be used for investment or to be used in the case of failure—those businesses which were not concerned about expanding, but were concerned about continuing on because of the state of their balance sheets.

We recognized the fact that there was only limited future funding available because of the remarkable take-up in the first year or so. The Government therefore recognized that we had to make some choices and that with those limited resources available we should attempt to direct assistance to the businesses which, without this help, would have failed.

That was our first concern. I admit, in so doing, that we therefore precluded the initial use by businessmen which had been for investment purposes. However, it was assistance to those most in need, bearing in mind our information from the banks that the amount of funds had been, by and large, remarkably taken down. The access of the banks to this vehicle had, by and large, been exhausted.

Mr. Gurbin: We are coming very close to the question now. What is the practical limitation on the ability of the banks to use this? Obviously, bank profits are healthy. My understanding of the basic mechanism is that for tax purposes they are able to transfer their profits into a dividend pay-out. Therefore, what is the limitation? In addition, what would be the judgment of the Government as to whether it is really costing the Government money in terms of tax revenue as compared to additional economic activity generated by those businesses which would expand?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I believe the Hon. Member asked the question in a form which really pinpoints the issue. This vehicle would be available to banks only if they were in a taxable position.

Hon. Members will recall that last year the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs began an analysis of bank profits. Six months after the study was under way, with the downturn in the economy, rather than concern over bank profits there was concern over the ability of banks to make profits in the very weakened economic climate. As a result the Committee, instead of returning with recommendations as to how the banks should divvy up their excess profits, stated its concerns over the ability of banks to continue to serve their purpose under the original legislation in the country. It recommended that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, for example, be enhanced and that the original security of $20,000 for depositors under the legislation be increased to $60,000, which reflected some concern over the ability of the banks and financial community to serve Canadians in a depressed economy. Again, that was reflected in the banks' taxable position. Toward the end of 1982, it was very apparent that their taxable position was deteriorating because their profits were deteriorating.

The first quarter of 1983 has shown another bounce and the ball is going the other way, we hope. However, it is too soon, in this quarter, for us to judge whether that is a trend which will accelerate and, in fact, what the taxable position will be. If that trend continues through the rest of the year, it is conceivable that the Government may in the future decide that the restriction to serving only those businesses in financial difficulty should be rethought. However, on our best projections, considering the picture for 1982 and projections into the first quarter of this year, that is not what we perceived would be the case. For the time being, therefore, we think that we should maintain the section and this program which is directed, first, to those who would end up on the bankruptcy casualty list without it.

Mr. Gurbin: Would the Chair help me? How much time do I have left in which to speak?

Mr. Rose: Infinite.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member began speaking at 12.05 p.m. He is allowed 20 minutes.

Mr. Gurbin: I would direct a further question to the Minister. If there are figures, I think it would be useful to place them on the record in relation to the Government's position as to cost of lost revenue compared with additional economic activity created. Again, various figures from different sources have been stated for the record, and I think it would be helpful to get an idea of the Government's position.

The second question which I would like to pose for the Minister relates to the way in which the tax Department will treat these cases, whether it will involve the original situation or the current type of situation of distress. There is real concern that these matters be considered by the tax Department, not so much in the case of expansion, but, more particularly, in situations of distress.

As time goes on and, hopefully, businesses are in sounder shape and things are going better for them, the tax Department might say: "All right, you obtained the bond, but you really did not qualify for it because you were not that badly off". I think a number of applications have been tested or considered by the corporate sector in an attempt to find out whether some kind of pre-judgment could be given. What sense of confidence is there that there will not, in fact, be a number of those cases which will not be accepted by the tax Department on the basis that there was really no justification at the time?

• (1220)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member really asks two questions. He reverted to the question he asked previously. The Department does not have a precise answer to the amount of economic activity that was generated by the plan. They believe there is no way they could give that figure with precision. I can, though, confirm that the take-down of the plan was over $2 billion worth of support for small businesses.

On the second question, if implicit in the question is the consideration of whether this Section should be reopened so as to make it available to those companies which are looking for expansion as they did previously, or to avoid the funds being used now for financial difficulty situations where there will be a remarkable turn around in short order, I think all I can say is that the Department will continue to monitor the take-down of the funding. No doubt the general economic indicators of the Department will also signal to the Department whether the Section should be reconsidered.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Chairman, when the tax Department is looking at a particular case, or at the involvement of different shareholders in a particular company, for instance, there are a whole range of things that could happen that would bring into question the legitimacy of their original application. I can see a lot of opportunity for confusion, dispute and difficulty in a particular situation where there may be ten different people on a board of directors. In a small community, or even in a large community, I think this is likely to happen. Someone who is intimately involved with a particular application may also be involved either in the same way or in a peripheral way with some other application. I wonder if there are any general guidelines that the Minister could indicate right now, or could he tell us how rigidly and how strictly is that kind of arm's length approach going to be applied when it comes time for tax consideration?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I guess that really gets down to the decision of officials in the Department of Revenue who would be administering the law and the rulings under this Section as to whether businesses comply or not. I am advised by the officials that there is some procedure for obtaining a preliminary opinion whether a company in a particular situation did meet all of the criteria. Presumably information on all of the peripheral things that the Hon. Member has talked about would be made available to the officials in the Department and, having that in mind, if they make an initial ruling based on all of the available information at that time, the Department would not change its mind later on. The question of whether the Section should be changed later on or not is something different.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, if I could follow up the remarks and questions from my colleague from Bruce-Grey, I believe the Minister stated that a total amount of $2 billion had been approved in loans, and I would assume this would mean the Government had guaranteed that amount, which was loaned, of course, by the chartered banks. Is that right? There was no guarantee?

Mr. Cosgrove: That is not a provision of the Section, Mr. Chairman, and it is not a practice of the Government.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister if there are any figures as to how much of that $2 billion was loaned by the chartered banks before the new restriction came in that only to those in need would the money be available. I am curious about that amount.

Also, when the original small Business Development Bond was brought in by, I believe, the Crosbie budget—and I commend this present Government for carrying on with it—at that particular time it was restricted to small limited companies. I am just wondering if it would not be better to go back to the original plan where there would be more money available, because now, as I understand it, it is only for those in need. I have had several of my constituents come to me and say that they were in dire circumstances and needed money and they asked if they could avail themselves of this Small Business Development Bond. Of course, I would point out to them that they would have to go to the chartered banks and present their financial statements. In the great majority of cases, they were turned down. The banks said that they knew that they were in need of money but that they were in such serious need of money that the banks would not lend it to them. This to me is far from fair. I will admit that money cannot be loaned to a bankruptcy but there are a great many people who could have got this money but were turned down.

My question to the Minister, first of all, is how much was loaned before and how much after?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, under the original provision I am told there was over $2 billion used by small businesses through the banking system. Since the provision was expanded on the one hand and also directed toward financial difficulty or dire straits situations, there has been somewhat over a $200 million taken down. In the example given by the Hon. Member, I do not follow the Hon. Member's logic. If indeed the person who has asked for help is a person described by the Hon. Member as being in dire straits, presumably he is the very person whom the amended Section helping people in difficulty is directed toward. He is the person who would now qualify. It is only a person who wants to expand, who is looking to grow, who does not have that present urgency and dire situation that the Hon. Member refers to, who would now not qualify.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, what I was pointing out was that there are certain businesses which are on the verge of bankruptcy. There are a great many firms that are hanging in and are able to keep their heads above water, even in this economic climate, and I will go back six months ago when the economic situation was even gloomier than it looks at the present time. There were certain strong businesses then which wanted to expand, wanted to consolidate, yet were not eligible.

It is an old military axiom that success and not weakness should be reinforced. I understand that the banks have put up $200 million. I would be interested in knowing how many of those loans went sour; in other words, where they were trying to prop up weakness.

• (1230)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member's question is really supplementary to that of the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey. We looked at what the choices were, and since the provision was designed to be administered through the chartered banks, we knew it was dependent upon their profit and tax situation. We knew the provision had been widely used and very successfully, but the available funding was drying up.

Faced with that circumstance, the Government proposed that assistance should go to those the Hon. Member described as being in dire straits. He used a figure of speech in military operations—that you support your strengths. In the military sense, you must also assist the wounded. The military does not abandon the wounded.

Obviously we have to be concerned about those who, without this help, would have been clients for bankruptcy court. We felt that under the circumstances we had to assist those who, without this kind of help, would have been in real difficulty. We are hopeful that with the upturn in the economy those who are strong will be assisted by it and will not require assistance from the Government.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, I again come back to the percentages. The banks have only loaned one-tenth as much to those in a serious financial position compared to the old basis. It was loaned to those with an okay credit rating, those who could very well repay the loan.

I agree with the Minister that we must assist those small businesses that are in a very serious situation. I emphasize again that many small businesses could have been saved if the Government had gone to the banks and tried to work something out for those businesses that were close to the wall. I do not have to remind the Minister of the great number of bankruptcies that have been announced; it is common knowledge. Many could have been prevented if the Small Business Development Bond was available to them. However, they reached the stage where they were just hanging on while the banks were giving them consideration. When the final line was drawn, they were turned down and went into bankruptcy.

With the upturn in the economy, is the Minister going to recommend to his colleagues that the Small Business Development Bond be available to individuals and companies so that they can enlarge and modernize? That would result in more people being taken off the unemployment rolls. It would be a good deal for the Government as well as the individual businessman or small limited company. There would not only be savings with regard to payment of unemployment benefits, but the Government would start collecting income tax and other taxes as well. I hope the Minister has some good news for us on this. Is there anything in the offing to the effect that this money will be available through the Small Business Development Bond to other than those in dire straits?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the best news would be that the economy was performing so well that the Government would not be required to provide assistance to any businessman. It would be perking without this drain against Government resources.

There is something Hon. Members should consider when comparing situations. First, with regard to the planned program for expansion assistance—assisting those in dire straits as described by the Hon. Member—the expansionary use of the bond was for a period exceeding two years. That is in comparison to the new provision which has only been in place for six months. He has to keep that in mind.

Second, I responded to the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey that the Government will monitor the results of this program. I cannot say what the Government will do except to say that it was as a result of an analysis of the use of the program, the fact that the taxable income was not there for the banks and there was a limited use of this Section. Therefore, we had to make some changes. The Government will continue to monitor it. Whether changes in the Section are warranted will depend on the performance of the economy.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister or his officials make a guesstimate that with the more favourable financial outlook for the banks, which had a better year this year, they will be more sympathetic to loans under the Small Business Development Bond, or will it not make any difference? I believe it was half prime plus 1 or 2 per cent at which the bonds were negotiated and the money loaned. The bank would not have to declare this in its profits because of the greatly reduced interest rate it provided to these special customers. Does the Minister have an optimistic view of more use of the Small Business Development Bond in the new climate?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I could give many qualifiers as to why my answer could not be optimistic, but I am by nature optimistic. I am optimistic that the banks will be able to offer the program, but I cannot speak for the banks. The Hon. Member referred to their having a better year. They have had a better first quarter this year over last. The banks will obviously watch their own performance in making their decision.

Mr. Darling: I appreciate that it is the first quarter, but at least it is looking better. Do either the Minister or his officials have a breakdown of the money loaned under the new plan, whether to partnerships or individuals as against limited companies, as was the case originally? I am curious to know whether a lot of individuals have been able to take advantage of it, or is it still by and large mostly small, private companies that have it?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, that is a very good question. I do not have the answer available this morning. I will undertake to see if this information is available and make it known to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, the amount of $2 billion was mentioned. I am not clear on this. Was the legislation under the old set-up amended where individual entrepreneurs could qualify on the expansion basis, not on the need basis? If so, how much of the $2 billion went to incorporated companies and how much was available to sole proprietors or individual businessmen, such as farmers, etc.?

• (1240)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the provision which was in place for expansion, which is the $2 billion plus I referred to, was available only to incorporated entities and, therefore, the total amount was used under those circumstances.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, I have one further question. It is actually not a question but, shall we say, a plea. In other words, the ordinary individual businessman or small proprietors, such as partners who are not incorporated, have not been able to take advantage of the Small Business Development Bond as it was originally planned by this Government as well as the previous Conservative Government. The only individuals who have been able to take advantage of that have been those with their backs to the wall, who were in really serious financial trouble, and no reasonably successful proprietorships have been able to qualify or have been able to have an application granted.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I will consider the Hon. Member's plea as a representation. As I have indicated, the bond was originally only available to incorporated entities. The law has now been changed to include sole proprietorships. In any further amendments or alterations to the program we will seriously consider the representations of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I find it interesting and puzzling that the Minister uses as his explanation for the change in the Act, which means that money will not be available to borrow for expansion or development, the argument that the Government wanted to use the relatively limited amount of money which was available for those companies which were in danger of going bankrupt. I find it puzzling, Mr. Chairman, because of the billions of dollars in loans and grants which the Government has been able to give to some very large corporations, such as Dome Petroleum, Chrysler and Maislin Industries, the Government's argument that it has a limited amount of money for small business.

I find interesting the Minister's explanation that the banks were limited because they did not have such a good year last year. Well, we know that in the first quarter of this year bank profits were up by 41 per cent, and we know that because of the tax system which this Government has implemented over the years bank taxes are down, if the banks pay any taxes at all—and there are one or two which last year paid no taxes. The rate of tax is down to about the same rate as individual taxpayers in the lowest tax bracket.

The program before it was changed was very successful. It was lauded by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which has expressed some very serious objections to and criticisms of the change in the Small Business Development Bond to the new system. The Ministry has said that the new system provides for the Small Business Bonds and permits loans to be made to unincorporated businesses, but according to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business it has been used almost exclusively by farmers. Small, unincorporated businesses have not availed themselves of this to any extent. Indeed, the loans made are well down in number.

Given the fact, Mr. Chairman, according to some figures released yesterday and today, that last month we had the second highest number of business bankruptcies ever in this country, it seems to me pretty obvious that the program is not working. I would like to ask the Minister to explain, not just to me but to the people who belong to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, why the ability to loan money for expansion was removed from the new program.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member used the example of Government assistance to firms such as Chrysler through the guarantee program to that firm, saying that if we can do it for Chrysler, why can we not offer some assistance to small-businessmen. In my experience, Mr. Chairman, although Chrysler Corporation has large plants and employs large numbers of people in the manufacturing plants, they are served right across this country by hundreds of smaller firms, including sole proprietorships, smaller partnerships and small-businessmen. The automobile industry is not just a large plant in operation. It was for that reason that the Government decided to offer the guarantees to Chrysler, because there were representations made at the time when Chrysler was in serious difficulty for support, as I say, not only for the larger plants but for people right across the country who saw their livelihood going down the tube if Chrysler folded. I personally received dozens of representations from people not only in my constituency but in many other constituencies when that was a hot issue two and a half years ago.

I believe it is simplistic to say that the assistance which has been provided to some of the larger firms has been designed to assist just the large corporations. It helps the small people, the small businesses and single proprietors. It is also simplistic to say that this provision is the only way in which, conversely, the Government provides direct assistance to small businesses or to the smaller players in the economy. For example, the preferred rate of 25 per cent to small businesses is a benefit to the small business sector which, taken cumulatively, is worth over a billion dollars to that sector of the economy. Therefore, we are providing assistance in many ways other than the particular Section before us.

I cannot comment on the accuracy of the figures which have been given by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North because, as I have indicated, our Department does not have that breakdown. The Hon. Member indicated he has figures which show that the take-up was by farmers almost exclusively. I do not have the figures to weigh that comment, but certainly it was available to all other sectors. The provision was available to other people who wanted to use it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I was not suggesting for a moment that the Government should not have made loans to Chrysler, to Massey-Ferguson or to other companies which are involved in the production of goods, some of which are exported. What I am saying is that it seems obvious to me there is a vast difference in the way in which the Government approaches requests for assistance from large corporations and the way in which it approaches requests for assistance from small businesses.

It has been pointed out frequently that 65 per cent of the jobs in this country are provided by small businesses. When we see the record rate of bankruptcies which have occurred for the last two years, every month more bankruptcies than in the same month a year earlier, we have to be concerned.

• (1250)

I point out to the Minister that while there may have been some justification for loan guarantees to productive companies like Chrysler, according to The Financial Times Canadian banks made loans of $4.2 billion to a few large corporations for takeovers. Many of these takeovers added nothing to the productive capacity of this country and most of the loans have now been classed as non-productive loans, which means that the companies are not even paying the interest let alone the principal. So I say to the Minister that there is a vast difference between the way this Government and the banks look at the problems of large coporations and those of small corporations.

As far as the point I have made that the new bonds are being used mainly by farmers is concerned, that information came to me, as I am sure it did to the Minister's office, as a result of a survey by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which showed conclusively that the new bond was not being used to the same extent as the Small Business Development Bond.

The Minister has not answered my question, and that of other Members, which was simply this. There are small businesses which are not going bankrupt, which have survived this recession. They are in a position to expand and modernize. They want to be able to use the bond as they previously did, to buy new equipment, to modernize and expand. Yet just at this time when, hopefully—and I am not as hopeful as some Members—we have turned the corner and the recession is over—because there are some signs of improvement—the Government cuts these small-businessmen off by saying it will no longer permit them to borrow money as they did under the Small Business Development Bond program.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I would have to repeat the gist of my last answer to the Hon. Member when he says that the Government has dealt with the two sectors in a different manner. The support of firms such as Chrysler was not just because the Government was directing assistance to so-called large firms. It was because we recognize that the large firm is just one part of a large industry and that many small-businessmen right across this country are involved in the manufacture of parts for those vehicles. That in itself is an industry. Many of these people are sales people, small firms, small operators, small garages and outlets, and they were all in jeopardy. It was not just the so-called big Chrysler operation, there were many small-businessmen who stood to lose if the Government had not moved to provide that guarantee. If the Hon. Member uses the example of Chrysler to support the contention that the Government has dealt with the two sectors in a different way, then I disagree with him most emphatically.

As to the other point, Mr. Chairman, it was raised by two Members earlier in the proceedings. We have indicated that the Government was faced with a choice. There were limited resources available under the program and we decided we should direct the assistance to those who need it the most. The Hon. Member tells me that surveys show that farmers took advantage of it to a greater extent than did other small-businessmen. All I can say is that I hope other sectors in the small business category do not need the program or will not have to call on it in the future. I hope that is the case.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, we are discussing Clause 8 and Clause 9 which deal with the Small Business Bonds. I am wondering if the Hon. Minister can tell us in short order how many loans have been granted under each of these two categories and the amount of money involved. Earlier he referred to a figure of $2 billion which, since the most recent changes, has dropped down to $200 million.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, my officials advise that the $200 million I referred to earlier was used under both Clause 8 and Clause 9. I do not have a breakdown of how much is attributable to each. My officials indicate that we can get that information and I will make it available to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, I am sure everyone here would be interested in that. Will the Minister give us his view as to why there was $2 billion lent under the original Section and only $200 million since the changes? What does the Minister feel occurred in the economy to result in such a dramatic change?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, if we look at the performance of the economy since the introduction of the initial Section in 1979 and the performance of the economy in the last 24 or 30 months, obviously the economy was performing very strongly immediately following the original program. More recently the economy has deteriorated, as have all the economies of the industrialized world. So while businessmen were looking at expansion at one time, in the last little while they were looking at survival.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, from a political perspective, we note that the original Section was brought forward under the Conservative Government and the new one was brought forward under the Liberal Government, along with a dramatic downturn in the economy.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to call it one o'clock.

CANAGREX—NECESSITY FOR EARLY ADOPTION OF BILL C-85

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, it was reported in the press recently that a resolution of the National Council had risen from the ashes of the Parti Québécois to warn the farmers of Quebec against the danger of Bill C-85 to establish a corporation called Canagrex. Nevertheless, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Agricultural Producers' Union and the majority of groups interested in the growth of the agri-food sector are in favour of the Bill, and it should have been adopted long ago.

Just as an example, I would like to quote from a document titled "Canagrex meets a need" where it is stated that, in 1982, Agriculture Canada had tentatively identified potential sales of up to $5 million worth of maple syrup products on the very promising markets of Japan and the Federal Republic of Germany. Canagrex would be the ideal intermediary to secure those markets.

I therefore urge all farmers affected by this problem and other interested parties to put pressure on our Progressive Conservative colleagues so that they will let the Bill through immediately. As to the wooly theories of the separatist National Council, I would suggest that they are the best indication that the Bill should be adopted as soon as possible.

OLYMPIC GAMES

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR CALGARY WINTER OLYMPICS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the Minister responsible for Sport in Canada stated on October 22, 1982, that the federal Government had committed $200 million to the Calgary Olympic Games and that $500,000 had then been advanced to Calgary on its commitment.

Despite the fact that the Quebec provincial game "Hockey Select" was already under way, he vowed that Calgary would receive its $200 million one way or another.

At Committee stage on Bill C-95, the Provinces indicated a willingness to negotiate a sharing of that commitment. It has always been open to the Canadian Olympic Association or other appropriate sports organizations to make a proposal under which that body would operate a sports pool or lottery.

I want to assure the Canadian Olympic Association and Calgary that, if this Party were writing the cheques, an instalment form of payment out of general revenues would be already in place so as to ensure the success of the Calgary Games. Why does the Government not live up to its commitment and worry about the sports pool later?

SPORTS

REFUSAL OF AID TO HIGH SCHOOL BASKETBALL TEAM

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I find it disturbing and depressing that the Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport finds itself regulated to the point that it cannot give some financial support to an amateur high school basketball team competing in an international tournament in the United States.

In my riding of Hamilton West the Cathedral High School boys' senior basketball team finished off a remarkable season with an invitation to the prestigious Catholic Invitational Tournament held annually in Cumberland, Maryland, in the vicinity of Washington, D.C. This is an annual event to which the eight most outstanding Catholic high school basketball teams in the United States are invited. This year, for the first time in the history of the tournament, a Canadian team has been accorded the honour of being invited to participate.

This school has won all tournaments in which it has participated during the year. On the basis of this performance, it has been selected as a worthy representative in the tournament in the United States on March 17.

Being a Catholic high school in the Province of Ontario, there are no provincial funds to support the school, either academically or in the field of athletics. Any trips involving teams from this school are largely funded privately, and a trip to Washington is a costly event.

The Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport should show some flexibility in handling money in its budget. It should not be restricted by rigid regulations administered by bureaucrats. A deserving team representing this country in international events could be encouraged, and amateur sport promoted, by a grant from the federal Government. I wish Cathedral High School every success in this prestigious tournament.

ENERGY

IMPACT OF TAXES ON PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, the Government has decided to participate in the marketplace in the petroleum industry. It does so in a twofold way by direct profit on sales of petroleum products to Petro-Canada, and by direct profits through taxation of petroleum products. I might add that it is a very heavy taxation. The public is probably not properly aware of how high that taxation is. Over 60 per cent of the price paid for a litre of gasoline at the pump goes to federal and provincial sales taxes. If we pay 46 cents per litre, 25 or 30 cents go in federal and provincial taxes. It seems to me that this is unconscionable.

If the Government wants to participate in the marketplace it should do so when prices are going down as well as when they are going up. In the United States the price of gasoline is going down.

I should like to let Hon. Members know the effect this has on gas stations situated along the 49th parallel, on the Canada-U.S. border, which are in danger of going bankrupt. Canadian consumers are smart enough to go to the United States to buy gas, thus saving $5 or $10 per tank.

There is a fisherman in my constituency and on his last trip he paid $6,500 for fuel. Had he gone two miles south to tank up he would have saved $1,500.

Madam Speaker: Order.

EDUCATION

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, the federal Government is tightening the noose on post secondary education in Canada by limiting future spending to six and five.

It is another illustration of the Government's shortsightedness—cutting funds to the very institutions most vital to our economic recovery, to research and development, and to the training of a highly skilled Canadian work force.

Canadian colleges and universities have been subjected to severe financial cutbacks for the past ten years, while student enrolment, due to severe unemployment, has increased. Canadian youth, unemployed at a rate of 22.5 per cent, are not only denied jobs but are now denied access to a decent education.

The federal Government has abdicated its responsibility to foster educational goals, as outlined two years ago by the then Secretary of State, now the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox). The federal Government cries for greater accountability in funding education, but offers no concrete proposals to achieve this. Indeed, in dropping its fiscal transfers to the six and five formula, it robs the universities and colleges of $102 million for the coming year, and has given no indication of how this money will be spent.

The New Democratic Party calls on the Government to engage in urgent negotiations with the Provinces, universities and colleges, to restructure the current system of funding of post-secondary education before irreparable damage is done to the universities and colleges of Canada.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CUT IN POLISH PROGRAMS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, reports from Poland of arrests and the continuing military suppression of Solidarity, a union which embodies the hopes and aspirations of the Polish people, seem to be never ending.

Recently the detention of journalists Alexander Malachowski and Anna Walentynowicz was carried out as reports reached Warsaw of action against other union figures in different parts of the country. It seems clear, by these and numerous other incidents, that the situation in Poland has not improved significantly from December, 1981. That is why, Madam Speaker, I am very surprised at the move by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to cut Polish language broadcasts from Canada to Poland from 45 to 30 minutes.

I wrote the CBC on behalf of my constituents, asking for an explanation of this action. They informed me as follows:

> The scarcity of both time and money, along with the fact that the immediate crisis in Poland had eased somewhat and there was, consequently less Canadian reaction to report, all combined to make the decision necessary.

• (1410)

I am not satisfied with this response. The scarcity of both time and money is not a viable reason for the CBC's cut. It is just as important now as it was in December, 1981, for the Polish people to hear these reports and be reassured that Canadians fully support their aspirations. The broadcasts are a symbol for the Polish people. They are a symbol that Canadians support their struggle for national reconciliation without outside intervention.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz).

CANADA POST CORPORATION

GRASSIE POST OFFICE CENTENNIAL

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, many times I have stood in this House to point out the inefficiencies of the Canadian postal system. Delays in delivery and unjustified increases in postage rates have many times been dealt with from this seat. Today I intend to deal with yet another aspect of the Canada Post story.

In my riding there is a small community called Grassie, in the Township of West Lincoln. The Postmaster in this community, Mr. Carl Thomas, operates a general store in addition to his postal duties. Herein lies the problem.

Mr. Thomas and his family have operated this store and post office for the past half century. Here we have a faithful public servant whose ancestors were the people who built this country. He has gone quietly about his daily work without thanks or recognition, for many, many years. Yet, as Mr. Thomas's elected representative, I have no opportunity to offer my congratulations in the House of Commons when he is about to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of his post office on March 31, 1983. Instead, I shall be compelled to send him a letter outlining my sincere best wishes and hopes for a happy and prosperous future. Is this fair? I think not. But I shall do the right thing and refrain from making any such remarks in the House of Commons, and send the aforementioned letter. Let us hope it gets there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—APPLICATION TO FORMER MINISTER, NORMAN CAFIK

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I want to return to the issue of the conflict of guidelines for Ministers and former Ministers, specifically guidelines A and B. This matter is not settled because the guidelines are not clear and there are further examples that raise serious questions.

Take the case of Norman Cafik. He was defeated in the May, 1979, election. He resigned from the cabinet on June 3, 1979. By September, 1979, press stories had him joining Ebco Industries Ltd. in Vancouver. By December, 1979, according to the British Columbia Companies Office, he was a director of Ebco Industries Ltd. He, as Vice-President, and the President, Mr. Eppich, approached the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for a grant. Meetings were held with officials and submissions were made. Perhaps it appeared there was lobbying.

The then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Hon. Herb Gray, was briefed. On April 27, 1981, in Richmond, British Columbia, the Minister announced a $6.7 million grant. The pattern is very similar to the Gillespie affair.

Surely the guidelines and the conduct of former Ministers must now be examined by a parliamentary committee.

TRANSPORT

NEW CEREAL GRAINS TRANSPORTATION POLICY

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, I had the opportunity to rise under Standing Order 21 on March 3 concerning the new grain transport policy of the government. I informed the House at that time that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) had accepted a request by the Quebec coalition to meet with the federal authorities to discuss the grain transport situation. In his reply, the Minister of Transport asked the group which is most concerned by the situation and which has met regularly with federal members of Parliament to meet him to discuss the problem. Since then, Mr. Speaker, I have seen in the newspapers that all the other members of the coalition—and there are 12, 13, 14 or 15 of them, nobody knows exactly—who have regularly been absent from the various meetings also want to be represented.

I am concerned with this attitude, Madam Speaker, because I cannot believe that those five organizations could not manage to meet the ministers involved. If they had, they would be able to represent Quebec farmers, and report to other groups which are associated with them or have spoken to them on the new transport policy. I find it quite unfortunate that Quebec farmers should be victimized and that these people are not willing for whatever reason to come and meet the Minister of Transport under the conditions he has set.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AGRICULTURE

INCREASE IN FARM BANKRUPTCIES

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Government House Leader. It is supplementary to a subject that occupied a fair amount of time during yesterday's Question Period. The subject matter, of course, refers to the economic crisis facing the agricultural industry today.

When we look at the bankruptcy increases in 1982 over 1981, we find that bankruptcies have increased in the agricultural community by some 60 per cent. If we look at the latest figures released by Consumer and Corporate Affairs today, we find, when we compare January and February this year with January and February last year, those bankruptcy figures have increased by another 14 per cent. What commitment is the Government House Leader prepared to give today to take immediate steps to deal with this specific problem, this crisis within the industry, of which each and every Member in this House is aware?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the question raised by the Hon. Member was in fact debated at length yesterday during the oral question period. He has probably read Hansard and realized that there are various options available to the parties to deal with this issue. I wish to assure the Hon. Member that I discussed this matter a few minutes ago with the House leaders of his own party and the New Democratic party, that I made a suggestion and that I am expecting a reply from his House leader after he has had an opportunity to discuss the matter with his caucus. He might be able to give me a reply later this afternoon, but from what he has told me, it is also possible that he might do so only tomorrow after the weekly caucus of his party. In any case, I wish to assure the Hon. Member that I often referred to one of his own suggestions yesterday in my replies and that my proposal to his House leader takes the options he has mentioned into account.

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES—QUERY RESPECTING BILL C-653

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Government House Leader. The position taken by my colleagues on this side of the House is that it is a very acute problem. I know certain positions have been made public in the House and elsewhere. I just challenge the Government House Leader to accept the long standing position taken by my colleagues and I that, to resolve this difficulty first the Government House Leader should move immediately to impose a short-term moratorium; second, to refer Private Members' Bill C-653 immediately without debate to a Committee. This could be the Standing Committee on Agriculture or the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Actually, the Standing Committee on Agriculture would be more appropriate because it can accommodate a larger number of Members. To my understanding this will not interfere with the discussions that have taken place between House Leaders.

Is the Government House Leader in a position today to give us a firm commitment that he will meet these two requirements? If he is, I can assure him that this will go a long way to resolving the difficulties faced by the people in the agricultural industry. Also the fasting exercises, in which the President of the Canadian Farm Survival Association is now involved in the Stratford jail may be resolved.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is difficult to be very specific in my answer to the Hon. Member's question without rendering public the substance of the discussions I had with his House leader. If I had permission I could make public the offer I made to him. I have nothing to hide. I see the Hon. Member is shaking his head negatively. If he had said yes, I think the Hon. Member for Elgin would be very happy.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I think it is very obvious why my colleague, the Opposition House Leader, is shaking his head.

Mr. Nielsen: We can't believe you.

Mr. Wise: Those discussions need not take place to deal with the specific offer? I have put to the Government House Leader a very reasonable proposal. Is he in a position today to accept that proposal? Yes, or no, Madam Speaker? The proposal could resolve the situation.

I think everyone in this House knows that study of Private Members' Bill C-653, or the subject matter of it, cannot be dealt with overnight. I think everyone in the House and everyone in the industry realizes that for anything meaningful to come out of those committee discussions we must have the full support of our traditional lending agencies. They must continue to co-operate with the whole of the agricultural industry because Canadian farmers will then have access to required capital to produce the food for Canadians and, indeed, for many hundreds of thousands of people around the world. Can the House Leader give that commitment?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is obvious to those who attended Question Period yesterday that we had a very specific request to have a House Leaders' meeting to deal with this matter. The question was asked specifically by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead. Very clearly, we were ready yesterday to send the Bankruptcy Act to the Committee, and move the proper amendments. That was one of the options that was suggested last Thursday by the Hon. Member himself. At least it was part of his question when he raised it in the House last Thursday.

We are ready today to go even further and refer something else to the proper committee, but we are not in a position to do so because we have to wait for the answer from the Hon. Member's House Leader. Therefore, if there is a delay it is not the fault of the Government. We were ready to move yesterday, and we are ready to move now. We have to wait until we have an answer from the Hon. Member's Party.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF TAX ON FARM FUELS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Given that one of the most crippling factors that faces farmers who are trying to survive is the high cost of energy, and now that OPEC has slashed the price of oil on the world market, will the Minister of Finance immediately bring in measures to reduce the federal tax on farm fuels in order to help alleviate the farmers' high operating costs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, may I remind the Hon. Member that if the price of oil comes down in Canada it will come down generally. As well, most taxes on oil are generally provincial taxes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Indeed, look at the figures Province by Province, and Hon. Members will find that the Provinces have the largest share of taxes.

As far as the federal Government is concerned, all issues of taxation are related to the budget, and my hon. friend will have to wait for the budget to see whether there are any such measures in it.

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF FEDERAL TAXES ON GASOLINE AND HEATING OIL

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can he assure the House and the Canadian consumers that the Government will bring down the federal taxes on gasoline and heating oil to reduce the burden on consumers following the agreement between OPEC members?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for having asked his question in French. However, he should have directed it to my colleague, the Minister of Finance.

ENERGY

ENFORCEMENT OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL OIL PRICING AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I have a copy of the agreement dated September 1, 1981, which was signed by the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta. That agreement says, with reference to prices, that, "The overall average field price of conventional old oil . . . will not exceed 75 per cent of the actual international price of oil."

The Prime Minister agrees that this means that Canadian prices should track the international price. When the international price goes up, the Canadian price should go up, but it also means that if the international price goes down, the Canadian price should go down.

As of yesterday, the drop in world prices has meant that the Canadian price is now at 84 per cent of the world price level. Will the Minister take steps to enforce this agreement and ensure that it is lived up to, by bringing about a $3 a barrel drop in the price of conventional Canadian oil?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member reads the whole agreement I think he will know that we have an agreement which changes the price every six months. The next change in price will only be in July.

Of course, as he knows, the Premier of Alberta is of the view that the agreement only meant when the price increased. This means a ceiling when the price decreased.

We take a different point of view and we are discussing that with the Government of Alberta at this time. In fact I will be meeting with the Minister of Energy of Alberta, Mr. Zaozirny, on Friday, in Edmonton.

OBSERVANCE OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows very well that there is a time lag between the wellhead price and the price that the consumer pays. He also knows that, as of today, Canadians are paying prices beyond what this agreement stipulates.

Considering the fact that a $3 a barrel drop in the price of conventional oil would mean a $1.6 billion stimulus to the Canadian economy and 33,000 additional Canadian jobs, according to the federal Government's own calculations, will the Minister take steps today to ensure that that agreement is lived up to and that the needed stimulus for the Canadian economy is provided so that Canadians who are out of work will be able to find jobs?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member does not want me to change the agreement unilaterally at this time. The agreement calls for a change in the price every six months. The last change occurred on January 1. The next one will be in July. In the meantime we will enter into negotiations with the Government of Alberta. Of course, we have an honest disagreement over that.

I now know the position of the New Democratic Party. The fact of the matter is that we must respect the view of Premier Lougheed who said that he made this agreement in good faith at that time because everyone predicted that the price would go up. There were not very many people who expected the price to go down. We have a disagreement with Alberta, and it is only fair at this time, before making a final decision, to discuss the matter with Alberta.

Mr. Broadbent: I did not ask the Minister to change the agreement. I asked the Government of Canada to live up to an existing agreement that it has signed. That is what we on this side of the House are asking.

POSSIBLE IMPACT OF REDUCED ENERGY COSTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Is the Minister aware that, if Canadians were now paying prices in accordance with that agreement, they would be saving some 10 cents a gallon at the pump, and our manufacturers, who have to meet international competition, would have a net savings in terms of their energy costs? At this time particularly, when all of competitor industrialized nations are undergoing price reductions in energy costs, it is profoundly important for the Canadian economy to be experiencing the same drop in energy costs which this agreement calls for.

If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is aware of those facts, why does he not take action to make sure that the agreement is lived up to?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I cannot take action now because I have to respect the agreement. The agreement calls for changing the price every six months. I cannot change the agreement. The Hon. Member asks me to respect the agreement. Part of that agreement says that there is a change in the price every six months.

Of course there is another factor which the Hon. Member did not include in his question, which is that we have a very important oil and gas industry in Canada. That industry creates jobs as well. We have to balance that fact with the other possible benefit because, if we affect the energy industry too negatively, we might lose jobs.

It is a very complex problem. We will take the time necessary to discuss it with the producers, the Provinces which produce the oil and, of course, we will take the interests of the consumers to heart. That is why we said that, in our view, the agreement is quite clear that 75 per cent is a ceiling that applies upwards as well as downwards.

IMPOSITION OF DUTY ON ITALIAN TOMATOES

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister will be aware that the tomato industry, particularly the tomato processing industry, has been desperately concerned since last June about imports coming into this country from Italy and other countries. He will also be aware that the producers themselves are concerned about the planting season and their transplants for this year. In fact his Department has been responsible for countervail investigations up to this point.

Could he advise the House whether or not that countervail investigation has concluded, and whether or not the producers and processors can look for some relief from this particular problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member has indicated in his question, Canadian processors have effectively asked us to investigate the possibility of imposing countervailing duties on certain types of tomatoes, namely canned round peeled tomatoes imported from certain countries. Our investigation has now been completed and we have concluded that those tomatoes are in fact subsidized by certain countries. In addition, since this has harmful effects on the Canadian industry, following this investigation, the Government has recommended and approved compensation charges of 10 cents a pound for canned round peeled tomatoes imported from Italy.

PENITENTIARIES

STONEY MOUNTAIN, MAN.—GARBAGE REMOVAL PRACTICES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It is with regard to a garbage scandal at the Stoney Mountain Penitentiary in Manitoba as reported yesterday on Radio Station CJOB in Winnipeg. As the garbage truck hauls out the garbage daily, it hauls out dishes, flatware, edible food, blankets, boots and quantities of meat along with the garbage, and local citizens wait daily at the Stonewall dump to retrieve these goods. I would like to ask the Minister will he launch an immediate inquiry and bring this to a halt. Will he also see if the same practice is in place in all federal penitentiaries across Canada?

An Hon. Member: It's called "make work".

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I will certainly inquire whether there is any truth at all to the allegations, and report to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nielsen: The Great Garbage Caper.

HARBOURS

NECESSITY FOR DREDGING AT LIVERPOOL, N.S.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. On March 24, 1982; on May 12, 1982, and on June 4, 1982, I wrote to the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Transport concerning the inadequate depth of water in Liverpool harbour in Queen's County, Nova Scotia, and the obvious need for immediate dredging in that area. All I have received to date has been acknowledgments of my letters from the Minister's special assistant.

Since ship refits for Government and private industry have been lost by Steel and Engine Products Limited due to inadequate water depths, while the operations of Bowater's Mersey Paper Company, Mersey Seafoods, and the Liverpool Queens Industrial Commission have been severely curtailed, with a resultant loss of employment opportunities for the town, when can we expect an announcement from the Government that dredging will be carried out in Liverpool harbour?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have found there is usually a good reason why my Department is experiencing a delay. I will find out why we are delaying in this particular instance and answer as soon as I can, most certainly today.

CHANGE OF DEPARTMENTAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. At a meeting which was held in the Board Room of Bowater's Mersey Paper Company Limited on April 16, 1982, almost a year ago, attended by officials from Bowater's Mersey Paper Company, Steel and Engine Products Limited, Mersey Seafoods Limited, Federal Public Works, the Canadian Coast Guard, and Ports and Harbours, Mr. Fioratos of Ports and Harbours stated that responsibility for harbour dredging in Liverpool harbour had been transferred from Public Works Canada to Transport Canada.

I therefore ask the Minister if he is aware of this change of responsibility and, if so, why no action has been taken by his Department in response to urgent requests for dredging in this harbour, as made over a year ago by the responsible management of a number of important Nova Scotian companies.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am very much aware of the transfer of jurisdiction from Public Works to my Department. However, I am not aware of this particular incident. I will very soon become aware of the reasons we or somebody has delayed.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—DISTRIBUTION OF CIRCULAR

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, through you, I would like to address my question to the Minister who is responsible for the UFFI program. A circular was developed, containing directions for those who have used UFFI to receive the help available from the Government. Would the Minister explain why this circular, a copy of which I have in my hand, was not distributed to Members of the House of Commons? I have checked among several Hon. Members and they have not in fact received the circular.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I will certainly find out, Madam Speaker. I know that several weeks ago, the UFFI Information and Coordination Center sent an information circular to all the Hon. Members of the House of Commons and the Senate. If that new circular was not sent to the Hon. Member, it will be my pleasure to make one available to him this very afternoon.

[English]

DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, the only way those who need assistance from the UFFI program can possibly know the regulations is if they receive copies of this circular. Not only did I not receive it, but I was not able to receive additional copies from the Minister's office to mail out to those of my constituents who did not receive it and therefore do not know the most recent regulations pertaining to the Program.

Would the Minister commit his Department to determining who is eligible for UFFI benefits but who may not have applied and may seriously need help under this Program? Would he undertake to inform all those people in Canada who have taken advantage of the UFFI Program of what regulations prevail and how they can receive help?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, Canadians are well aware of the Canadian Government's UFFI Program, thanks to the paid announcements in the news media and also to the information campaign carried out by various provincial organizations on behalf of UFFI home-owners. I know that several members have also sent information on that subject to some of their constituents. Should there be UFFI home-owners among the Hon. Member's constituents who have not yet been advised of the federal program, I will gladly provide the Hon. Member with enough copies of this information circular for him to advise his constituents.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO MAISLIN INDUSTRIES—OBSERVANCE OF LOAN AGREEMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last summer the Government bailed out Maislin Transport with an unprecedented $34 million loan guarantee. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether all the terms of the loan agreement have been met to the satisfaction of the Government's supervisory committee? Specifically, have the shareholders of Maislin provided the additional $2.5 million worth of capital which they promised, or have they simply sold off the Gateway pension fund and transferred the proceeds?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Minister responsible is not in the House today. I do not have in my hand the details necessary to answer this question, but I will attempt to obtain them and draw the matter to the attention of the Minister.

COMPANY LOSSES—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister will know that in the three-month period ending September 30, 1982, Maislin reported losses of $1 million per month. Media reports indicate that those losses are continuing. What steps are being taken by the Government to protect the taxpayer's $34 million guarantee? Specifically, is the Government planning that CN will buy out Maislin and thus complete the bail-out of the Liberal Government's friends?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, there is no intention on the part of the CN to buy out Maislin. We are attempting to protect our interests on the Board by having officials of the Government of Canada on that Board in an effort to ensure that the public interest is protected. The Hon. Member will realize that when we did make this decision we knew that the firm was in financial difficulty. We made the decision because of the large number of Canadian jobs which were involved. Certainly it would be our hope that this particular firm would succeed and maintain those jobs which were placed in jeopardy by the economic circumstances which prevailed.

May I add, to clarify an answer which I gave yesterday, that up to the present time no request for additional assistance has been made by Maislin to the Government.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT COAL PRICING POLICY

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, if he will resume his seat, Madam Speaker. I tried to raise this question in the Transport Committee meeting this morning, but was advised that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was the one who should answer the question. We now have an indication that legislation dealing with the Crow rate will give the Government the right to change the price of coal within the Dominion coal blocks in my riding and even to dispose of the coal blocks by Order in Council without coming to Parliament. Could the Minister tell the House just what his Government wants to do with these 50,000 acres in coal blocks which are estimated to contain approximately $450 billion worth of coal?

• (1440)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I gave the information this morning in the Committee looking at my Estimates. The reason why this item will be in the legislation on the Western Rail Initiative is simply to eliminate an abnormality which exists now which would limit the selling price of that coal to $2 a ton. We thought that this was not acceptable any more, and we have made provisions in the Bill to eliminate that abnormality.

What will happen to the coal mine and to the coal in the area is something to be decided in the future. At the moment, as my hon. friend knows, there is a major development taking place in the northern area of his Province and consequently now may not be the best time to develop the Dominion coal area. In due course the impediments which existed in the legislation will have been removed.

REQUEST THAT COAL ACREAGE BE RETURNED TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, it seems funny that the Minister of Transport wants to interject now, when I could not get this information out of him at the Committee. I would like to ask the Minister of Energy again, since the fact of the matter is that the Province of British Columbia turned that 50,000 acres over to the federal Government at the time the agreements were reached on the Crowsnest, and the fact of the matter is that the railway systems want to get out of the Crowsnest agreement, will he give both the House and the people of British Columbia his guarantee that these 50,000 acres of land will be returned to the Province and to the people of British Columbia, if the Crowsnest agreement is broken.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I must advise the Hon. Member that I cannot give that guarantee. The minister of Transport has just replied to this question; we are indeed the rightful owner of this property; we will look into this situation if and when a problem arises.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS AGREEMENT—IMPACT OF PROPOSED CHANGES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. With respect to the proposal to abolish the Crowsnest Pass rate, in view of the fact that ten years ago the average price of grain stood at $4.50 per bushel and the current forecast for 1982-1983 is $5.17 per bushel, which is an increase of a mere 13 per cent, and in view of the fact that over the past nine years the inflationary increase has been 135 per cent, how can the Minister justify imposing an increase of some 550 per cent on freight rates on the western farmer, under his proposal?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is a relationship which should be made here between the cost of transporting grain and the selling price of that grain. During the war years the cost of transportation represented 17 per cent of the price of the grain. It went down to 10 per cent, then it went down to 8 per cent. It is now down to 2½ per cent. So 2½ per cent is the percentage of the transportation represented in the total price of grain. Consequently, transportation cannot be held guilty for the difficulties in the price of selling grain at this time. My hon. friend should realize that the contribution of transportation to the cost of grain is really minimal, and that is why the question that he raised is not a relevant one.

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE REQUEST FOR AID BY MAISLIN INDUSTRIES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is supplementary to that put by the Opposition House Leader with respect to Maislin Industries, to clarify an answer given to me yesterday that the Government has received no application from Maislin for additional financial assistance. May I ask him to inform the House whether there have been any requests from Maislin, either formally or informally, for additional financial assistance to Maislin?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I made it a point before coming into the House to inquire about that matter and I was advised that no requests for additional assistance had been made. That is my information. I have every confidence that the information is correct but, if the Hon. Member has further information, I would like to have him help me.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it is not only the Deputy Prime Minister who needs help; it is the entire Government over there that needs help at this time.

OFFICIALS' DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether any officials of the Government have met recently, let us say within the last two to four weeks, with officials of Maislin for the purpose of discussing the company's financial circumstances and, if any such meetings did take place, was there any conclusion drawn that the economic liability of Maislin would likely cease around June of this year?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would assume that the officials are on their toes. They would have had discussions with Maislin in the normal course of their duties, but beyond that I have no information that there have been meetings that would lead to the conclusion that the viability of the operation is now to end at the end of June. That is not information which I have received.

F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT—SEARCH FOR TEST SITE AT ASCENSION, P.Q.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, I was informed yesterday by Mr. Adrien Tremblay, the mayor of the municipality of l'Ascension in my constituency, that the Canadian Armed Forces were looking for a firing range to be used for their F-18 training program in my constituency.

My question is for the Minister of National Defence. First, did the Canadian Forces actually ask the Quebec government for a specific area in the vicinity of l'Ascension to develop a firing range? Second, what is the status of those negotiations, if any? And, third, would the Minister object to the authorities at the Bagotville base making available to the municipal council and regional leaders information on this matter especially on the way these ranges are normally operated?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean and his colleagues from the area are very much aware, the deployment of the F-18 fighter at Bagotville will of course require tens of millions of investments at the Bagotville Armed Forces base and in the area.

Concerning the negotiations on the exchange of property for the proposed firing range, they are now being conducted with the Province of Quebec which, hopefully, will understand the value of this project for the entire Lac-Saint-Jean and Saguenay community, considering this is indeed part of Canada's strategic defence because of the Bagotville base.

I myself will be going to Lac-Saint-Jean and Bagotville, at the end of April, and in the meantime I can say that the base commander has been instructed to consult with civilian authorities in the area in order to fully explain the situation.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

USURIOUS PRACTICES OF INCOME TAX REFUND DISCOUNTERS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As a result of the Government's callous delay in the processing of tax refunds, thousands of Canadians have been driven into the hands of loan sharks who buy the tax rebates and child tax credits of, among other people, single parents, the poor, the unemployed, and students.

In view of the fact that the effective annual interest rate charged by these social vultures is well over 150 per cent, what action is the Minister prepared to take to amend federal legislation immediately to put an end to this usury that affects over 200,000 low income Canadians this year?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should have a talk with his House Leader and get him to co-operate with the Government in order that the Bill be disposed of as soon as possible and taxpayers get their refunds. In the circumstances, this would probably be the most effective and the fastest course of action.

• (1450)

[English]

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, that kind of attitude will continue to drive Canadians to the so-called tax discounters. The Quebec Government put an end outright to the practices of these tax discounters. The federal Government should do the same. Will the minister at the very least agree to refer these predatory practices, 150 to 200 per cent interest rates, to a House Committee to determine how the federal Government can directly assist the individuals involved, possibly with the co-operation of the credit union movement? Will he urge his colleagues to stop their stalling and finally start sending out long overdue tax refunds? This will stop driving desperate Canadians into the hands of these loan sharks.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think that Canadians should be made aware of that kind of tactic and should find other methods to solve their yearly income tax problems. That kind of attitude is not new. A bill has already been passed in this House to provide for specific settlements. Of course, this is not any ordinary loan and, consequently, the Act does not apply in the same way as on ordinary loans, but I suggest the question put by the Hon. Member illustrates an attitude and a behaviour on the part of some businesses that is wrong, and it is my hope that Canadian taxpayers will no longer patronize those agencies whose fees I consider altogether indecent.

FINANCE

REBATE OF EXCISE TAX ON FARM FUELS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is really supplementary to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I was under the impression that we had an excise tax program that rebated to the farmers the amount of the federal excise tax. Has that program been discontinued, or do the farmers still receive the federal tax rebate and, for that matter, all commercial users of gasoline as well?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil is quite right. Indeed there is a program of federal excise tax rebates available to farmers and commercial operators. That program has been in existence for several years, at least since 1975, and has been used extensively. To give an example, in 1981 refunds were made to Ontario farmers in the amount of $3 million, $2 million in Manitoba, $4 million in Saskatchewan, and $4 million in Alberta. This is available to all farmers in Canada. What they have to do is keep their receipts and ask for a refund of the federal excise tax. That is used extensively by commercial enterprises which use it to the tune of several tens of millions of dollars. I want to make it quite clear that the federal Government has a program for the purpose of rebating excise tax to farmers.

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader. It is supplementary to questions posed earlier by the Hon. Member for Elgin. After nearly a year of discussion and delay, as a measure of the sincerity and interest that the Government has in this legislation to help those farmers who are in financial distress, will he accept the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Elgin, a position put forward by the Conservative Party, that there be a short-term moratorium on further farm foreclosures and bankruptcies? Will he do this until this House, the banks, and the farm community have had an opportunity to deal with whatever legislation is appropriate?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I said earlier to the Hon. Member for Elgin that following a specific request by his party yesterday, I had a meeting with the Opposition House Leaders to discuss the quickest way of finding a remedy for the present situation. Yesterday, on the floor of the House, I made a proposal that was rejected by the Official Opposition. Today, at a meeting, I went even further, but since I may not reveal the contents of the discussion without the consent of my colleague who refused to give it, I cannot give further details on the suggestion I made. All I can say is that the proposal made by the Government would be far more effective than the one the Hon. Member has just made.

[English]

CASE OF HUNGER STRIKER

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also for the House Leader. I am not sure what discussions took place, but the conditional response that the Government has had to date gives us little confidence that we can expect to see measures like this, or any other measures, that will deal with the problem's resolution. If the Government House Leader is serious about what he is saying, and if he really intends to do something, will he accept an invitation from the Member for Elgin and myself to visit the young farmer in jail in Stratford and make the kind of commitment to him that is necessary so that he will stop his fast, and so deal with the problem? Will he make a commitment that the Government will act and take the necessary steps that will bring forward legislation so that this farmer will end his fast and the situation will be resolved?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to his friend who has been charged before the courts in Ontario, and I have already indicated quite clearly that I did not intend to comment on this case because of the sub judice rule. Therefore, I have nothing to say regarding the Hon. Member's friend, except that as far as the property of Canadian farmers is concerned, several days ago I made proposals in agreement with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with a view to finding a remedy. If we have not yet been able to amend either the Bankruptcy Act or the Bill presented by the Member for Lambton-Middlesex, it is not because we have been careless but because the Hon. Member's party has been too slow in giving its agreement.

Yesterday, we made a concrete proposal, and the problem could have been resolved today if the Progressive Conservative Party had agreed to adopt an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act. Today, I repeated my proposal, adding another even more attractive component, and I have yet to get a reply. Therefore, my hands are tied. However, if the Hon. Member has any influence and if he is really sincere and serious about the issue, he should speak to his Parliamentary House Leader and urge him to act. To us, the main thing is the well-being of our farmers, and we want to safeguard that well-being through the proposals I have made. We are also concerned about the well-being of fishermen and small businessmen and all this could be covered by an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act. Proposals are on the Table, and if there is any delay, it is not the Government, but the Hon. Member's own party that is at fault.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EVALUATION OF FRIGATE PATROL PROPOSALS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. He will recall that last August he said that the evaluation of the Canadian patrol frigate proposals would be presented to the Government for a decision in the Spring of 1983. Will he tell the House whether he has as yet presented those proposals to Cabinet?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the frigate program, which is one of the last major capital investments in the Defence Department and a major re-equipment program, is going according to schedule. The evaluation by my Department is in the final phase. I expect to be able to present these evaluations to the Committee on National Defence and External Affairs of Cabinet. After that it will be up to full Cabinet to decide exactly what to do in this regard. I hope everything will go well and that we can go forward with the program as soon as possible.

DATE OF DECISION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I would prefer to have something a little more definite than "as soon as possible". When does the Minister expect the Cabinet to make a decision, when will he announce the winning consortium, and when will the shipyards start working?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I could give a very short answer to that: as soon as possible, as soon as the evaluation is finished, and as soon as Cabinet takes a decision. I hope to have a decision from Cabinet before we recess in June.

MEDICAL CARE

PROVISION OF FUNDING

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question was for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Perhaps I can direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has informed the CMA that funding for health care will depend upon the moving average of the Gross National Product. If the Gross National Product goes down, will health care funding go down?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the legislation now in place, the EPF, which is being continued by this Government, provides for an arithmetic formula taking into account three factors—redistribution, population growth, and GNP growth.

MR. OGLE—CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES

PRIVILEGE

MR. ALLMAND—PARLIAMENTARIANS FOR WORLD ORDER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave you notice at the earliest possible opportunity.

• (1500)

Yesterday in examining my mail I was shocked to read that the parliamentarians for World Order, a group of Parliamentarians of all Parties dedicated to peace, disarmament and development, had been delisted and excommunicated as a parliamentary association by a small Committee of Members of Parliament of this House which to my knowledge never had any mandate from this Parliament or this House to decide which groups of Parliamentarians should be accepted or not—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. I believe the Hon. Member has himself indicated that this matter is not dealt with in Parliament but has to do with problems of administration of the House of Commons. These questions are not decided by Parliament, as the Hon. Member himself stated at the beginning of his presentation. Grants to the Interparliamentary Association are a matter which are dealt with by the Members themselves in committees decided by Members themselves. It is not a question of privilege, of course, and does not answer any of the criteria for a question of privilege.

Therefore, I would ask the Hon. Member to use the channels which are open to him, namely, the Advisory Committee on the Interparliamentary Association, or to discuss it directly with me so I would be informed on these problems and, perhaps, I myself could discuss it with the members of the Advisory Committee. But certainly it is not a question of privilege

Mr. Allmand: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. If a question of privilege is not the correct procedure, there must be some procedure by which an Hon. Member can address his question on the floor of the House. I would like you to direct me—

Point of Order—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member might find some occasion to deal with this question in the House on the occasion of a speech, or whatever procedure he might find helpful to him. Certainly he has avenues open to him to discuss this question. I repeat again, the Hon. Member could take it up with myself or he could discuss it with the members of the Advisory Committee on the Interparliamentary Association. The Hon. Member tried to raise this on a question of privilege. I told him he did not have a question of privilege. He then rose on a point of order which has nothing to do with order in the House and again deals with the same question. I must urge the Hon. Member to use the channels which are open to him in order to discuss this question.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I say to you, with the greatest of respect, that you did not hear the Hon. Member before you ruled. I believe you should at least hear him before you rule whether or not he has a question of privilege. I submit, in my respectful submission, that my privileges are affected by the subject matter of the Hon. Member's question of privilege. He feels he has a question of privilege. I believe that before the Chair rules the Chair at least has an obligation to hear the argument.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has given me notice of his question of privilege, and in his statement has given me an idea of the subject matter with which he wanted to deal in his question of privilege and where he felt that his privilege was affected. It is very obvious to me that this question has nothing to do with the privileges of the House, and that was made quite clear to me in the first few sentences of the Hon. Member's presentation. He does not have a question of privilege and I must stand firm on that. He has other avenues open to him to discuss these questions, as does the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I understand the Hon. Member's preoccupation and frustration with this question, but this is not the forum in which to address it.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—S.O. 21 STATEMENT OF MR. HUDECKI

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During Statements under Standing Order 21 this afternoon, I thought I heard the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) introduce a congratulatory message which caused you, on March 1, to shoot me down and ask me if I would take my place.

I would like to reserve my views on this until I have had a chance to examine the "blues" and Hansard, and I could raise it tomorrow if my impression of that particular message is correct.

Madam Speaker: In that case, the Hon. Member should wait until he sees the "blues" and let me know. It seems to me that the Hon. Member might have said something to the effect that he did want to congratulate someone, but then he did have some substance to his statement, that it was not made entirely to congratulate someone on a special occasion. I might be mistaken, but I thought that the statement made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) was quite in order. I also will look at Hansard and if I find I did let the Hon. Member go along with a congratulatory message, I should not have done so; but it did not seem to me that he had.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I had a Saint and a Canadian in mind on March 1 when I was making my statement, and I got as far as the "Saint" but I did not get to the "Canadian". I should, therefore, like to reserve my position and raise the point of order tomorrow once I have examined Hansard.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has already said that.

PETITIONS

MR. KILGOUR—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I have a petition and would ask your leave to file it. The petition quite simply states that there is a crisis of confidence in Canada which can only be solved by a general election. It is signed by 2,045 residents of Edmonton, mostly from Edmonton-Strathcona. This petition should have been filed some time ago.

MR. DOMM—BROADCASTING OF PORNOGRAPHIC FILMS ON PAY TV

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I have a petition to present to the House addressed to the attention of the Hon. Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox). It is from a large group of petitioners in the City of Peterborough who oppose the proposed First Choice Pay TV broadcast of pornographic films for the following reasons. They believe much of the material to be shown will be morally objectionable and degrading and will portray women in accordance with degrading and demeaning sexual stereotypes. They also believe that in practice children and young people in large numbers will view these pornographic films regardless of the time they are shown.

I bring this petition to the attention of the House in the sincere hope that action will be taken by the Minister with respect to the intention of Pay TV to broadcast this type of material.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER COMMITTEE STAGE OF BILL C-139

Hon. Paul. J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2), one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration in Committee of the Whole stage of the said Bill;

That, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business in that sitting, any proceeding before the Committee shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the Committee of the Whole stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a motion for time allocation on Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, which has a background of 18 months and goes back to the period of time of the November, 1981 budget when most of the measures contained in the legislation were first announced. During this long period there have been frequent debates in this House, extensive consultations right across the country with affected segments of the private sector and detailed studies by members not only of the Standing Committee of this House but as well a parallel Committee in the Senate.

The various stages of House debate have consumed 25 sitting days, the equivalent of six full weeks of debate under the new rules, Mr. Speaker, and involving no less than 200 speakers. It became more and more obvious as time went on that the Opposition Parties were deliberately delaying passage of this very important legislation. They have ignored the obvious urgency of having these important measures passed in order to achieve three things: an end to the uncertainty in the business community; provide a legal basis for the payment of millions of dollars in tax refunds; and to clear the way for the introduction of the 1983 budget. For months the Opposition has been following a strategy of forcing the Government to resort to time allocation on very important Bills. We saw this tactic in the operation of the six and five capping legislation, and more recently on the borrowing authority legislation. The Government's request for co-operation and pleas for a reasonable solution have met with continued obstruction.

• (1510)

Let me review the record of the past 16 months, Mr. Speaker. Following the introduction of the 1981 budget, we had a full six-day budget debate with 47 speakers. Over the ensuing six months the Government entered into a series of consultations with private sector groups which led to several important modifications in the budget proposal. Various announcements were issued setting out the scope of these modifications.

In April of 1982 an explanatory paper concerning the proposed shift of the sales tax to the wholesale level was issued. A paper on the budget process was tabled. Revised rules on the taxation of charities were made public after consultation with charitable organizations.

In May a document was issued on draft regulations relating to capital cost allowances.

The budget of June, 1982 contained a detailed package of draft income tax legislation which was distributed nationwide for comment by tax law practitioners and interested taxpayers. That budget also announced revised rules on the taxation of life insurance income, including the exempt policy concept which reflected many weeks of consultation with representative groups of the life insurance industry as well as individual companies and many individual agents right across the whole of Canada. Other modifications were announced at the same time affecting such things as the interest expense deduction, the automobile standby charge and the provision for forward averaging of the incomes of athletes and artists. This budget was debated for six days with 51 speakers taking part.

Many comments were received on the draft legislation and in early August the draft was referred to a Special Committee of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. That Committee met through August and September while Parliament was in recess and prepared a detailed study of the legislation after hearing numerous witnesses. A lengthy report was prepared by that Subcommittee and many of the suggestions were subsequently adopted. The proposed legislation was reviewed once more.

An economic statement was delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on October 27. Among other things, the proposal to tax certain employee benefits, including health and dental plans, was dropped. Exemptions were introduced in the taxation of work in progress. The date for implementing the shift in the sales tax was deferred, and the application of new rules for the taxation of charitable organizations was delayed for further study.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, the tax proposals had been under active study, as I indicated, in all those forums for a full 12 months, not to mention the opportunities which the Official Opposition and the NDP took to conduct their own hearings right across the country on the budget legislation.

Finally, on December 7, 1982 Bill C-139 was introduced to encompass all the modifications which had been made. It was accompanied by explanatory notes setting out the intent of the legal language. That was the first time, Mr. Speaker, in the history of our tax legislation that such a step had been taken to assist Canadians generally in their understanding of this complicated legislation.

Since the introduction of Bill C-139 we have heard a parade of Opposition speeches, most of them repetitious. On second reading alone we had 99—I repeat, 99—speakers, 74 of them Conservative and 17 from the New Democratic Party. It had been the hope of the Government after all these studies had taken place that the matter could have been dealt with expeditiously by this Parliament. Now, more than three months after its introduction, after all that consultation and opportunity for discussion by Canadians generally, we are still a very long way from obtaining passage in the normal course which we had hoped this Parliament would follow.

At this point I might recall a remark made in the House by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) on November 10 when he exercised his responsibility as financial critic and demanded to know when the Government was going to bring in tax legislation for the 1981 budget in order to ease the uncertainty of the business community. In retrospect, Mr. Speaker, those were hollow words judging from the performance of the Official Opposition since that time.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Government indeed is as anxious as was the Conservative Party at one time to end the tax uncertainty. It is anxious indeed to permit the processing and distribution of millions of tax refunds worth over $6 billion which will go to Canadians, some of whom are unemployed. That is the intent of the motion before the House today, Mr. Speaker. That is what we seek to accomplish by this motion.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this is the most disgraceful closure of a Bill we have had before this Parliament. This Party has done its level best to move this Bill forward in Committee of the Whole House. It is a horrendously complicated Bill. It involves nearly 300 pages of the worst kind of draftsmanship one could ever imagine.

So far we have completed nearly one third of the Bill. We have dealt with automobiles, standby charges and the cost of maintenance. We have dealt with professional work in progress. The Government has not dealt with it, we have. We asked the Government to do something for the notaries and the Government refused. The Government has amendments in that respect but it does not want to allow the Bill to stay in the House so those amendments can be presented in the normal course. We have dealt in detail with insurance companies and policy taxation, with annuities and guaranteed investment certificates. We have dealt with capital costs on the demolition of buildings. We are presently dealing with Small Business Development Bonds. However, there is a host of other things which should be dealt with where people in Canada have presented logical arguments as to why there should be change—minor change in many cases—in the Bill. Yet the Government does not want to listen, does not want to proceed, does not want to be honest, but it does want to ram this Bill through without discussion.

It is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker, to the democratic process that the Minister should stand in this House this afternoon and attempt to ram a Bill through by saying it has had ample discussion. He knows it has not. Let us talk about the ample discussion that income tax legislation should have. The Government knows that, in an incarnation with another Minister of Finance, it passed a budget in both 1977 and 1978. When this Party had the opportunity to form the Government for a limited period of time during 1979, we presented to this House an income tax Bill of not quite 100 pages. That Bill was brought to a Committee of the Whole House. There was really only one difficulty with it and that was the provision for a special rate of tax of 33 per cent for service corporations. The budgets of 1977 and 1978 were approved by a Liberal Government but the tax Bills that resulted from those budgets were presented by a Conservative Government. Closure was not imposed by that Conservative Government. The Bill was debated in Committee of the Whole House for five days. Both sides considered that to be reasonable.

In the case of the Bill before the House, there have been four days and two hours of debate on a horrendously complicated piece of legislation which deals with the most changes to the Income Tax Act since 1971. The Government claims that the House has spent too much time on the Bill and is not moving ahead. We have made arrangements to group Clauses, Mr. Speaker; we have presented reasoned amendments; we have presented matters that have been brought to our attention by constituents who want answers from the Government; Member after Member has read into the record letters received from constituents, but the Government cannot tell them how to reply. In many cases the Minister cannot offer any help because even he cannot read the Bill.

The Minister and the Government want to eliminate democracy, to eliminate discussion and debate. They have some idea that they are the fount of all wisdom. From the Place Bell Canada tower in the City of Ottawa it seems they are going to try to control Canada, to control the business of Canada and, indeed, destroy the business of Canada.

The Minister mentioned that this Party toured Canada and held public hearings. In January, 1982, Mr. Speaker, 65 Members of this Party gave up part of their recess to hear public evidence on this issue and, as a result of that evidence, some changes were made. With other Members I came back to Ottawa in August and September to listen to witnesses give evidence on a Ways and Means motion. As a result of that evidence some other changes were made. There have also been other changes that deliberately went against the decision of the Finance Committee but the Government does not want to explain why it took this action.

There are matters in the Bill that still have to be dealt with, such as soft cost, RRSP interest deductibility, work in progress, capital gains reserves, IAACs and so on. Representatives of the airlines have written to point out that the iniquitous tax imposed on Canadian airlines is responsible for some massive deficits.

The Government does not want to deal with the fact that the world price of petroleum has dropped dramatically but wants to ram through the provision of the Bill that deals with that matter. The Government does not believe that the people have the right to be heard. It believes that because it elected more Members to the House of Commons on February 18, 1980 than any other Party, it has the right to do what it damn well pleases. It believes that Members of Parliament are here for one purpose only, and that is to stand and bow to you, sir, when it decides to call a vote.

We have an obligation to represent our constituents and to represent all parts of the country, and some of them, Mr. Speaker, have no use for this Government. But they want to be represented and they demand to be represented.

The Government has brought in a motion for closure on this Bill. There is no justification for that, Mr. Speaker. It smacks of dictatorship and the House should not put up with it. There is a time when Governments have the right to move things along, when they can claim that there has been ample discussion, but that is not the case here. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) has a series of amendments to the Bill which he wants to present, but apparently he has now decided he does not care whether they are presented or not. All he wants to do is ram the Bill through, even though it contains errors in drafting and even though there are people like notaries who have not been covered in the exemption provisions. He does not care because his people in the Place Bell Canada tower know everything. They know how small business operates and how to crush it. They know how people want to protect their families with insurance and they know how to wreck that. They want to make sure that people do not save for their old age. They have an interest in grabbing as much money as they can.

The Government talks about fairness in the House, but when we point out that the provisions are not fair, it claims that it needs the money. In the last analysis it says: "If you do not pass the Bill we cannot pay the income tax rebates". Mr. Speaker, Section 152 of the Income Tax Act demands that the Government pay those rebates, so it is breaking the law if it does not. Anyone who has to borrow money because Government will not pay the rebate is borrowing because it has breached the Statutes of Canada.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a comment about the Government of Canada which, perhaps, is the lowest blow of all. The behaviour of the Liberal Government reminds me of the Social Credit Government of British Columbia.

Mr. Lang: That is the lowest blow!

Mr. Riis: The Government does not care about Parliament. It does not care that we are living in a participatory democracy; it just goes ahead with the actions it feels are in the best interests of its Members and its friends as politicians, not of the people of Canada.

The Government of the Province of British Columbia thought it was going to be so short of money that it had to grab from the renters of British Columbia, so it arbitrarily changed the law. Without introducing a bill in the legislature it said that there was no longer an opportunity for people to claim the rental tax credit on this year's tax return. It informed the federal Government and, in the usual Liberal-Socred alliance, the Government agreed to co-operate.

That is the kind of mindless arrogance that has resulted in countless letters, telegrams, phone calls, night letters and briefs to Members of the Opposition Parties. People are saying that the tax Bill must be changed and that we must do what we can to stop this madness.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) has said on a number of occasions, as has the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), that because a certain number of days have been spent debating this Bill, it must pass. It is as if there is a secret formula whereby after so many days of debate a Bill must pass. It is as if it is not necessary to listen to the Opposition bringing forward their concerns and those of their constituents. It is as if the Government may just ignore reality, spend x number of days on the Bill and then it must pass.

I would remind the Minister of State for Finance that we have spent 12 days only at second reading and Committee stage considering 139 Clauses contained in 295 pages, designed to impose additional taxes at a time when the Canadian economy is on its knees. If those taxes could be considered fair and just and treated Canadians equally, I would co-operate fully with the Goverment. What we are dealing with is a tax Bill that is unfair, which treats one set of Canadians one way and another set of Canadians quite the contrary. It is a money grab of the most wicked kind. I will outline three of these four obvious concerns.

Let us consider first that last year thousands of Canadians who earned in excess of $50,000 did not pay one penny in income tax. Nothing has changed in this Bill to change that situation. As a matter of fact, the situation will be worse this year. The Bill before Parliament will have middle and low-income earners in Canada paying more taxes. Their taxes will be increased.

Mr. Young: That is nothing new.

Mr. Riis: Upper income earners will have their taxes decreased. If you are making the taxable income in excess of $24,645, even the tax rate will be reduced three percentage points. In other words, the effective tax rate will be reduced from 28 per cent to 25 per cent if you have a tax rate in excess of $24,465.

However, if you are a real high income earner, earning in the area of $133,000, then your tax rate will be decreased from 43 per cent to 34 per cent. However, if you are a regular normal Canadian citizen, probably having your taxes deducted at source, you will maintain the same tax rate, but because of the deindexing proposition you will have increased taxes to pay. Liberals say that is fair, that it is in the best interests of all Canadians, Mr. Speaker.

We can look at another section. I hesitate to go into it because it becomes so incredibly obscene. It shows the difference between the taxes paid by individuals and the taxes paid by the corporate sector. I looked back to the year 1952. I found then that of all the federal tax revenues, 46 per cent were paid by individuals and 54 per cent were paid by corporations. In 1962 that situation changed. Of all federal tax revenues, 60 per cent came from individuals and 40 per cent came from the corporate sector. In 1980, of all federal tax revenues, 30 per cent came from corporations and 70 per cent came from individual taxpayers in Canada. Over the years, the situation has completely reversed. As the years go by more and more of the federal burden is being placed on the individual taxpayer while the corporate citizens pay less and less. As Members of the Government are bound to do, they rise in their seats and say, "But the corporate sector does pay income tax. It pays its fair share."

I want to identify two of our favourite corporate citizens, namely, the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Montreal. Are people aware of how much these two corporate citizens, who did not do badly last year—the Royal Bank of Canada made $330 million before tax and the Bank of Montreal made $239 million before tax—paid in tax last year? How much income tax actually occurred in terms of their payment? These two corporate citizens paid no income tax, not a single penny. No income tax was paid, despite the hundreds of millions of dollars earned in profits. That is no fault of the Royal Bank of Canada or the Bank of Montreal. It is the fault of the Government of Canada which has allowed the banks to get away with this kind of financial skullduggery.

If you look at the big five banks in Canada—and last year was a difficult year for the banks—you will find they earned $1.6 billion. The five major banks paid in taxes a total of $132 million, or an effective tax rate of 8.1 per cent. That rate of 8.1 per cent is the tax rate of an individual who has a taxable income between $7,500 and $8,000 per year. I suspect that when you put the Royal Bank of Canada, the Bank of Montreal, and the other big banks alongside an individual whose taxable income is $7,500, there is something drastically wrong if they are sharing the same effective tax rate.

We see today a Bill which will influence the lives of every Canadian. We have seen the Government introduce a $6 billion blackmail charge against the Opposition by saying that we, in the Opposition, are holding $6 billion from going out to those people who ought to be receiving their tax refunds. That is absolutely not the case. If we had had a little co-operation from the Government benches and if the Government had shown us an indication that it was prepared to analyze seriously the tax Bill and to listen seriously to the concerns raised by individuals and groups across the country, we would have been very co-operative. But there has not been a single example on the part of the Government to indicate its interest in approaching this situation in a co-operative way.

Mr. Lang: How about health insurance?

Mr. Riis: I believe this is a very, very dark day for most Canadians when the Government, in which Canadians have put their faith over the last number of years and during one of the deepest depressions our country has experienced since 1930, is now going to impose 125 pages of new taxes on Canadians. This Government is going to tax everything that moves in this country. If that is the Liberal's idea of assisting us during difficult times and if the Liberals are going to permit tax legislation to go through that still has such incredible injustices built into the system, we will continue to do everything we can to oppose this hideous piece of legislation.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) should really stop misleading the Canadian people. I listened to him a few moments ago. There is just no truth in what he said. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South should at least get his facts straight. I can respect a difference of opinion, but I have no respect for a tactic which allows a man to stand in the House and give out information about tax returns which is blatantly false. It is shameful that he should have done that here this afternoon.

My good friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) needs a little friendly advice. He is the latest armchair socialist to take over the finance portfolio for the New Democratic Party. He has got it up here, Mr. Speaker, but he does not have it down here in the gut. He has no fire in the belly. He thinks socialism well but he does not act it well. He does not live it very well. But as a mental exercise, it is fascinating to listen to my good friend from Kamloops-Shuswap. Nevertheless, I will give him just a sentence of friendly advice. Before he gets to use particular examples about tax implications, he should really know what he is talking about. I say to him that before going public he should check his points because he will find he is wanting in some respects.

I listened with interest earlier to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), who is out on the election circuit this afternoon, I would think, trying to get himself elected. It seems everyone on the other side these days is a leader looking for a Party. They are all looking for a Party. Among them is the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre who stood in his place and called for even more tax changes. He is not satisfied with the 125 pages, or whatever there are; he wants still more. I wish Hon.Members would get their heads together over there. Maybe they want 126 pages, maybe they want 124.5 pages. Could they make up their minds, Mr. Speaker? Could they all get together? I know they fight among themselves, but certainly on this important tax Bill they should be able to bury their hatchets and their knives and get their act together. They should decide whether they want more changes, fewer changes, the same number of changes on more pages or more changes on fewer pages. We are hearing it all, Mr. Speaker. How does the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre square his call for more changes with his oft-repeated plea to end the uncertainty? Let us end the uncertainty, he says. Let us tell the taxpayers of Canada where we stand, he says in one mouthful, and in the next mouthful he says, "I have a few more changes I would like to have accommodated before we end the uncertainty."

• (1540)

Of course, he goes on to talk about how the Tories would reduce the deficit. Yet, while he makes those pledges, every additional tax change that he advocates would mean less Government revenue. How does he balance that with his call for decreasing the deficit? How can he decrease the deficit on one hand and advocate tax changes that would even further reduce the amounts accruing to the public Treasury on the other hand? How does he propose to reduce the deficit? He should be more specific on that particular point. Perhaps he will choose to be more specific about how he would reduce the deficit when he speaks during the leadership campaign.

Mr. Crosby: What about the CNR?

Mr. Simmons: I see that my friend, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has briefly come awake. I welcome him. We meet here every afternoon. You should come by more often.

How would his friend from Etobicoke Centre reduce the deficit? Would it be by reducing social programs such as the Family Allowance and the old age pension? Would he cut out the Child Tax Credit? Would he reduce Unemployment Insurance benefits?

I have just listed four beneficial programs which cost the Treasury of this country a lot of money. If the Hon. Member for Etibocike Centre wishes to talk seriously either in the leadership campaign or in the House about reducing the deficit, he should give specific examples of how this will be done. I say to him, with respect, that the public is sick and tired of the generalities uttered by him and his colleagues in the Opposition. The public wants to hear in specific terms how these often talked about reductions will in fact take place.

Does he advocate high unemployment? Is he in bed with the Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) who, at one time, advocated the Tory Government reducing the Public Service by 60,000 people? Would they do that?

Mr. Kempling: Which election are we fighting now?

Mr. Simmons: There are only so many ways to reduce the deficit. I take it from that outburst that my good friend, the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) is backing the Member for Etobicoke Centre. That makes three people already this week for whom he has pledged his support.

I have mentioned higher unemployment, higher taxes and the reduction in social programs. If those Members on that side of the House advocate reducing the deficit, they will have to indicate how they will do it. To relate further the advice that the Member for Etobicoke Centre gave to the House, he said that Revenue Canada ought to go ahead and process the tax returns. On what assumptions? Is it on the assumption that everything in the Bill will become law? He would then be the first one to scream that it is an affront to Parliament and that we are taking Parliament for granted again. He will say that we are assuming that this Bill will be passed without changing a letter of it. Does he stand on both sides of the issue?

Mr. Thacker: Try the old law until it is changed.

Mr. Simmons: My friend, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) says to use the old law. I remind him that that is not what the Tories did when they were briefly in office. I will remind him that the Tories—

Mr. Thacker: That was your Bill.

Mr. Simmons: The mortgage tax credit Bill was your Government's bill. The Government House Leader of the day, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), proceeded to have the income tax form printed to accommodate the changes that were in that Bill. His explanation for doing that was that he advocated punctuality. Are we not all for punctuality? I say to him and to my friend from Lethbridge-Foothills, who finds himself wrong again on particular information because you did not do it on the basis of the old information which you are now asking us to do, you based it on that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I apologize to the Hon. Member for interrupting him, but he should address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, when my hon. friend from Lethbridge-Foothills gets me so involved in a matter of precise information, the temptation is so great to educate him on those matters that I forget the formalities involved. I apologize.

Before I leave the speech made by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, let me say that the more I listen to him in the House, particularly in recent days, the more I realize that I have heard those ideas before. After some thinking, I realized where I had heard it all before. I occasionally read bedtime stories to my three-year-old and six-year-old boys. The story they enjoy the most is Chicken Little. Chicken Little kept saying, "The sky is falling". The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre continually says that the sky is falling. Chicken Little Wilson.

We have also heard from the Member for York Peel during this debate. I always listen to his remarks with care because he says too many different and contradictory things. What he says one day may bear no relation at all to what he said the day before or what he may say the day after. He complained that there is too much paper and too many changes. Once again I say to him that he is out of sync with his colleagues. The Member for Etobicoke Centre wants more changes and more paper. Poor old Sinc is out of sync once again.

Let us get on with this legislation. Let us pass this Bill and remove the uncertainty for millions of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), I should again remind the Hon. Member who just spoke that Hon. Members should refer to colleagues in the House by constituencies or portfolios.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to look at you while referring to the Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) for fear that you might get the impression that I am talking about you when I am not. I am talking about the kinds of statements made by the Member for Burin-St. George's when he refers to the tax Bill. I find it somewhat unbelievable that a Member of the Government would resort to the kind of tactics that he is using.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have the honour of representing 75,000 people who live in a riding called Burin-St. George's. I would appeal to the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), since I always try to pronounce the name of his riding correctly, to do justice to my people by pronouncing the name of their riding correctly. It is Burin-St. George's.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The point is well taken. The Hon. Member for Peterborough.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Member for Burin-St. George's for using the name of his riding in vain. I would point out, however, that he so seldom speaks in the House of Commons and I have not heard the name of his constituency pronounced often enough to be familiar with it.

With all due respect, I would also request that the time taken away from me, a Member of the Opposition, be taken into consideration when I reach my time limit.

The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's stated that he would like the House to consider how many changes the Opposition really wants. It would appear obvious, even to those not quite as astute and reportedly as smart as the Hon. Member who just spoke, that we will probably need as many changes as the Government has made to the budget. That is why it has taken so long to get through this matter which is before the House today. There are so many amendments needed to the changes proposed by the Government that it is indeed regrettable that the Government has again resorted, as it so often does, to limiting debate on such an important subject during these very difficult economic times. It is difficult not only for the business community but for the agricultural community and the other citizens who have to pay taxes as well.

The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's asks how the Opposition would reduce the deficit. We have been addressing that very question. I wish the Government would take into consideration some of the expenses that it incurs as a result of lack of judgment and poor judgment on priorities as perceived by Canadians. I do not think there are too many people in western or eastern Canada who would not like to see the end to the waste at Mirabel. I find it to be inexcusable that a Government would tolerate a loss of some millions of dollars a week in operating costs at an airport. It is totally unjustifiable. For days on end, the Liberals debate the cutting of 50 cents from the benefits of senior citizens and from Family Allowance or baby bonus cheques while they waste inexcusable amounts of money.

• (1550)

Mr. Lang: We're bringing in closure because you are filibustering.

Mr. Domm: In one year, the Government wasted $1 billion propping up Petro-Canada and providing money to a Crown corporation, some $400 million being the cost of interest to the taxpayers of Canada, in order to keep it afloat. Over the past couple of days we have heard the nightmare story taking place in Montreal concerning Maislin Trucking. We have reason to be suspicious that the Government might continue with its policy of propping up a friend through the corporation known as Maislin Trucking.

We are also concerned about the expenses borne by commissions to determine, because the Government is incapable of determining it, why we are in such a heck of a mess in Canada. We are in such financial difficulty because the Government is incapable of dealing with the problem. Therefore, it also appoints failures from former Governments to sit on commissions at $800 a day to try to determine not only how we came to be in this mess, but also how we will get out of it. The reason they are out of it is because when they, as Ministers, were in it, they could not solve the problem themselves. That is the kind of waste of taxpayers' dollars about which we are concerned.

Further, we must sit here for an afternoon, realizing that at the end of the day's session the curtain has been brought down on discussions affecting industry, agriculture, and consumers in Canada. What about the payoffs in salaries and bonuses and the rip-offs involving former Cabinet Ministers, matters which we have been debating for some two months? Do the people of Canada realize that a former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, while he was in office, put himself in a position whereby he could influence existing Cabinet Ministers in order to turn a $25,000 investment into hundreds of thousands of dollars, if not close to three-quarters of a million dollars in taxpayers money, that giant rip-off being known as the "Coalgate Affair"?

How much will the people take? How much does the Government expect them to take? How can the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) tell Members of the Official Opposition how the Liberals would reduce the deficit when they have been sitting there—

Mr. Simmons: Take you off the payroll.

Mr. Domm: —for the past two months, trying to justify those kind of horrendous nightmare stories? There is no excuse for it. We are dealing with an incapable Government. Hon. Members opposite take the opportunity to come into the House of Commons and spout off about what our Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) says or what our Hon. Members from Toronto say, yet do not say anything specific.

I say, with all due respect, that the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's who just spoke in the House of Commons, made accusations against Members of the Official Opposition and spoke in innuendoes. Never once, in the preamble to his remarks on the Bill, did he give an example. He made the kind of statements which have caused the people of Canada to be concerned about the morality, integrity and honesty of Members of the Government, not only those on the front bench but also those on the backbenches.

I will close my remarks by saying that there is one area which simply cannot go without some comment. According to the current proposed legislation in the Bill, which is being subjected to closure, any change of ownership in life insurance policies would result in a disposition which would cause pre-budget contracts to be deemed to be post-budget contracts. When have we heard that before from the Government? When, after a budget, has the Government stripped away contracts with civil servants which were signed prior to a budget? Through the six and five program, under the guise of bringing down inflation, it will take away 50 cents from a child allowance payment while we are spending $800 a day to feed a former Cabinet Minister's well-being.

Perhaps two situations merit exemptions from these rules, and we hope that in the third reading stage and in committee this will be accepted. First, under life insurance, I am referring to juvenile policies owned by a parent and, second, to policies owned by one spouse on the life of the other spouse. How can the Government justify its proposed changes which would remove those benefits and make them taxable?

In the second case, if, for example, a wife owned an insurance policy on the life of her husband but pre-deceased him, he could be expected to become the owner of the policy on his own life through the successor ownership clause. In this particular case again, an old pre-budget policy could become a post-budget policy and subject to new tax rules.

The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's sits over there and asks why I read it. I read it because it is fact, and I want it recorded in Hansard. It is not fair. It is against all principles in the contracts signed in life insurance policies, which the Government is stripping away from the beneficiaries. Once again, the individual's efforts to become financially independent at the time of the death of a loved one or, in many cases, the passing on of a policy to a beneficiary, are thwarted by a Government. Some of these people have entered into contracts decades ago.

Also, the scheme for raising revenue becomes a source of immediate and ongoing liability. If a retiring policy holder does not have enough income, the Government will have to supplement it. Is it not better to let him use all policy funds in a life insurance policy before tax to buy the annuity and pay the tax on it?

Each crisis, be it the death of a parent or a spouse, the loss of a job, or old age, will result in further financial hardships as a result of the proposed changes to taxation of life insurance contracts. Does the Government really wish to make those already suffering suffer more?

Mr. Thacker: The answer is, yes.

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, before I begin addressing some of the relevant points concerning the Bill, I would like to comment on some of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), because they exemplify remarks to which we on this side of the House have become very accustomed, one Conservative Member saying one thing and then another standing to say exactly the opposite.

Earlier this afternoon we listened to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) indicate that the Government was not being responsive and co-operative in listening to the concerns of people and various groups affected by the Bill and making the appropriate changes where it could. Then, 20 minutes later, we heard the Hon. Member for Peterborough indicating that the Government is making too many changes. It is the same old story. This is one particular instance. But, more generally, we consistently hear the Conservative Party opposing the Government and its program of restraining Government expenditures. They have opposed reducing transfer payments to the Provinces to six and five. They have opposed reducing transfer payments to individuals to six and five. They have opposed cuts to VIA Rail. They have opposed limiting Government operating expenditures. Those are the four major areas of Government expenditure, and the Opposition has opposed reducing and controlling expenditure in all those areas.

Then Members like the Hon. Member for Peterborough stand to list off a few old chestnuts which amount to less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of Government expenditures in an attempt to tell the people of Canada that they are willing to deal, in a major way, with cutting Government expenditures to reduce the deficit. It is just hogwash.

Mr. Domm: Current chestnuts.

Mr. Lang: I have given the Hon. Member a number, a statistic. I challenge him to debate that statistic and to come up with some facts.

Mr. Thacker: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lang: At the same time, they say that they are—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary would not want to mislead the House. He indicated that this Party had opposed restraint. This Party voted for the general principle of restraint in Bill C-124, and the Parliamentary Secretary, I am sure, would want to acknowledge that fact.

Some Hon. Members: Debate.

Mr. Thacker: We object to the manner of the cutback, not the general principle of restraint.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Opposition Members support restraint in principle, but when they come down to the particulars, to the though decision involving the actual application of restraint, then they stand and cry that they have a tremendous social conscience and that they cannot go along with that kind of restraint. That does not wash.

Mr. Thacker: Cut out the $800 a day to Donald Macdonald.

Mr. Lang: The Conservative Opposition has opposed Government restraint in every major area. Then the Conservatives have come along and said, "Do not increase taxes. In fact, if we were in power, we would reduce taxes". At the same time they are saying that they would not hold down Government expenditures, by their actions, not by their rhetoric. At the same time that they are saying they would not raise taxes, they say they would reduce the deficit. The people do not buy it. We do not buy it.

Mr. Thacker: We would create jobs.

Mr. Cosgrove: They have no credibility.

Mr. Lang: Returning to the purpose of this debate, which is to limit time on the Bill—

Mr. Domm: Closure.

Mr. Kempling: The guillotine, the axe.

Mr. Lang: —this issue involving tax reform has been before Parliament for over 16 months.

Mr. Domm: Twelve days.

Mr. Lang: As other Members on this side of the House have indicated, there has been plenty of time in which to debate the Bill. Many constituents of mine who are involved in the life insurance industry have come to Ottawa and made representations to the former Minister of Finance, to the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), to the Parliamentary Secretaries and to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove). We have been able to obtain a number of very positive changes to the original legislation. I would like to indicate some of them.

Concerning whole life policies, all policies taken out before December 2, 1982, even though issued after the November 1981 budget, will be treated under the old tax rules. That is a major change.

Mr. Cosgrove: It is very fair.

Mr. Lang: Post-December 2 policies will be exempt from the new tax measures if their premium payments are spaced over at least 20 years and if their annual build-up of cash values does not exceed a specified portion of their face values. A third change is that non-exempt policies, those policies which do not meet the above test for protection to savings ratio, will be periodically taxed under accumulating funds on an accrual basis. A tax will be calculated and applied every three years. However, the tax can be paid annually by policy holders who want to make the most use of their $1,000 annual investment income deduction.

There have been a number of other changes. Single premium policies, such as those with new money, that is, fluctuating interest rates, will not be exempt. However, universal policies may go either way. The industry spokesmen have indicated that these are very positive changes enabling them to continue on with the important roles and purposes of the whole life insurance industry.

• (1600)

The second point, Mr. Speaker, is that during this time we want to come out of a long recession and achieve economic recovery. We know the importance of consumer demand. We know we are not heading for an export-led recovery, Mr. Speaker. We know we are not heading toward an investment-led recovery because investment was down last year and again down this year. We are heading for a consumer-led recovery, and we can hasten that by putting $6 billion back into the economy with the return of tax refunds, but not by delaying it by filibustering tactics in the House.

That is the second very important reason why we must get this legislation through.

The third are the humanitarian reasons. There are many people, as all Hon. Members know, who are feeling the pinch of a tight financial squeeze. They need the money. Hon. Members opposite have suggested that people have had to go to loan sharks. If the Hon. Members opposite are really sincere, really concerned, then they should pass this Bill that has been before the House in one form or another for over 16 months.

Mr. Kempling: How dumb can you be? Sixteen months. You are out of your mind.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, our purpose today is to consider the motion that was brought before the House with respect to the termination of the debate on Bill C-139 which amends the Income Tax Act of Canada. I do not know any piece of legislation on the statute books of the Parliament of Canada that affects more Canadians in a more important way than the income tax law. In the last reported taxation year, there were 15,100,000 Canadians who filed income tax returns, and of that number over 10 million paid income tax.

When we stand here in the House of Commons and look to our Leaders in the Government who tell us that we must end the debate on this taxation measure, I hope they realize that they are talking to 15 million fellow Canadian citizens and 10 million taxpayers who might not want this debate ended, if they knew the manner in which they were affected by those tax measures.

We have heard speeches in this House of Commons made by Government Members that contain the worst kind of public deception. We just heard a speaker on the Government side talk about the months and months of delay in processing these tax measures. I have before me Bill C-139 which states on its front page, "First reading, December 7, 1982". One does not need a calendar to tell them that is a very few months ago. The Members on the Government side will say: "Yes, but the measures were there, they were there in another form and we had a chance to look at them in another form." Mr. Speaker, the form in which these tax measures came into the House of Commons was in the budget of the former Minister of Finance in November of 1981, and those tax measures were presented to the House of Commons at that time by the Minister of Finance who is no longer the Minister of Finance. Because of the stupidity and the gross deception of that November 1981 budget, he is no longer with us as Minister of Finance. He has gone off to destroy the rest of the world's economies, having destroyed the Canadian economy with his foolish, stupid and ill-conceived measures. It is those measures that are now presented to us in the form of Bill C-139.

Let me tell you something about those tax measures that were presented to the House of Commons by the Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) when he was Minister of Finance for Canada. Those measures included a provision under which seven million working Canadians would have been taxed in respect of their health benefit plan. I am sorry that we in the Progressive Conservative Party stood in the House day after day after day and warned the Minister of Finance about the bad effects of that tax measure for all Canadians, because he withdrew that tax measure. If he had kept it in force, if he had taxed seven million working Canadians in respect of their health benefit plans, he would have been thrown out of office at the next election along with practically everyone on the other side of the House, because Canadians are not going to stand for the stupidity and the crass results of that kind of tax measure.

Over 45 of those original tax measures have been changed or abandoned or diluted in some other way. Unfortunately, one that was watered down when it should have been completely eliminated was the proposal of the then Minister of Finance in November of 1981 to remove from taxation exemption the $1,000 of pension income received by our senior citizens, if they were also involved in a Registered Retirement Pension Plan program.

What that meant was that thousands of members of the Canadian Armed Forces, of the municipal police forces and public servants across this land who retired early in their careers on small pensions and who had to provide for their later senior years when they could not work at all, were going to be deprived of that very small benefit that meant a great deal to them. There again the former Minister of Finance, when he realized the effect of the tax measure, was shocked into action. He modified it. He did not withdraw it, which he should have done. He was afraid to admit to the people of Canada that he made such a terrible mistake. He listened to his advisers in the Department of Finance when they said this benefit ought to be taken away from our senior citizens, and thereby prevent them from providing for their later years in which they could not work or earn an income.

It is unfortunate for the Progressive Conservative Party politically that it prevented the Government from making these terrible mistakes because the Government and Government Members would have been punished in the polls at the next election. Instead, we stood here, as is our public duty, and performed our function as the representatives of the people and begged and cajoled the Government into making these changes. As a result, they will not suffer politically from the errors of the past. They had an opportunity to correct them.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) and other Members supporting the Government say in the House of Commons that we should allow these measures to pass immediately. It is unfortunate, as I said, that we did not allow them to pass originally because then they would have paid for their errors. As it is now, they managed to come out without those measures that will wreak havoc among Canadian taxpayers.

They still expect us to act on their advice, which is to pass their Bill. We cannot do that. We are the people who stand between the Government and the taxpayers of Canada. We are the ones who have to stop the Government of Canada when it brings forward tax measures that are harmful to the people of Canada. We have done that job, and we have done it well. We must continue to do it, we must continue to protect Canadians against their Government. That is the most unfortunate thing that I have ever said in this House of Commons, that we have to stand here and protect Canadian taxpayers, the citizens of Canada, against their Government, the Government that would have taxed their health benefit plan, that would have seen thousands of health benefit plans across Canada collapse because the workers were not willing to pay tax in respect of those benefits.

We had to stop that measure. We did stop the measure. What do those people on the other side of the House of Commons, the Members of the Liberal Party, condemn us for? They stand up and say we are delaying the refunds of taxes to the Canadian people; those Canadians who have overpaid their taxes will not get their refunds because of the delaying tactics. What kind of proposition is that for a responsible Member of Parliament, never mind a Cabinet minister, to take? He knows the reason why we are debating this Bill in the House of Commons. He knows the reasons why we have been all over the budget resolutions six ways to Sunday, studying them, trying to improve them.

Then they try to get the message across to the Canadian taxpayers that we are hurting them, we the people who stood in the House of Commons and stopped the taxation of health benefit plans and pension benefits granted to senior citizens, as well as 40 or 50 other measures which the Government was forced to withdraw. I do not think the people of Canada are that stupid, that they will fall for that kind of a line from any Cabinet Minister or any Liberal Member of Parliament. The people of Canada know what we are doing in the House of Commons. They know that we are the ones who are trying to protect them against the insidious tax measures proposed by the Government of Canada.

The people of Canada know why they need all that revenue in the form of taxation. They need it to carry out their lustful expenditure programs. One of the Members from Newfoundland challenged us to list some of the programs of the Government that resulted in excessive expenditures. I can do that very simply. If you will give me one minute, Mr. Speaker, I will rattle a few of them off.

Canadian National Railways this year recorded a deficit of $220 million. That is after they sloughed off all their losing propositions such as VIA Rail and CN Marine. They still lost $62 million in an investment in an offshore company, the Cast Shipping Group. They threw away $62 million, enough to get Sydney Steel back on the road and employing 2,000 Cape Bretoners in the constituency of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). Instead, they threw it away on an offshore company. They said there would be no deficit for Canada Post after three years. Wrong. The deficit after three years is $500 million. Air Canada has a deficit. The National Harbours Board had $400 million written off its past expenditures, $250 million for the Port of Montreal. The Petro-Canada budget is $2.7 billion, more than the whole of the Atlantic area. That Crown corporation is spending $2.7 billion. Do you think there is some waste there? They have 200 engineers with nothing to do. That is only the beginning. I could go on and on. Mirabel, $50 million a year, Dome Petroleum, Davie Shipbuilding $200 million on the Gulf Span Ferry which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) said would never be built.

Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. I have at least another $2 billions' worth. I beg the chance to respond to the Member from Newfoundland.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER COMMITTEE STAGE OF BILL C-139

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove:

That, in relation to Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration in Committee of the Whole Stage of the said Bill;

That, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business in that sitting, any proceeding before the Committee shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the Committee of the Whole stage of the said Bill, shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate of amendment.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kitchener, (Mr. Lang) talked earlier about how amusing it is to see Members of the same Party contradict themselves. If they listened to the previous speaker, it was many times more amusing, one person contradicting himself, not once, not twice, but many times in his speech.

The Hon. Member talked about the lustful expenditure prorams of the Government. He mentioned a number of programs such as VIA Rail. As my colleague from Kitchener was saying, this Government tried to make an honest attempt to reduce the expenditures of that service and increase its efficiency by according more dollars to capital spending and reducing its operating deficit so that it would be in a better position to be competitive and perhaps make a profit in the 1980s. That Member was against it. In one speech he talked about the lustful expenditure program, and then cited all kinds of examples where the Government tried to cut expenditures which he and his Party opposed.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate the difficulty in cutting through the incompetent presentation of my colleague. I do not know whether he is talking about me or some other speaker but, for the record, I should have the opportunity to point out that I said nothing of VIA Rail other than to say that it was cut from the operations of Canadian National.

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member talked about the taxation of health benefits. Some brilliant minds addressed themselves to the problem of the income tax system, how it can be simplified and made more equitable for all taxpayers. I ask the Hon. Member to address himself to that question. Many Canadians do not receive health benefits from their employer. The employer has the alternative of paying an employee a salary or a health benefit. The employee will be taxed on the salary, but not on the health benefit. There is a certain injustice in the system in that you can reward an employee in a certain manner in which he will be taxed and in another manner for which he will not be taxed. Not all persons in our society, obviously, can have the same benefits. So there are, certainly, inequities in our tax system which the previous Minister of Finance tried to correct, and it is a question which many academics and tax experts have addressed themselves to, but it is obviously too complicated a question for the Hon. Member to understand, so I will not ask him to try to figure it out.

• (1620)

Mr. Crosby: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You can appreciate my difficulty. The Hon. Member has challenged me to explain a tax measure. I will be very happy to explain it.

Mr. Cosgrove: No one interrupted your speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest, but he has already spoken in debate. We must now hear the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Berger: Just to conclude this part of my comments, Mr. Speaker, let me say that it would be really something if the Hon. Member could sometimes suggest some answers to this House rather than always griping about so-called problems. He is a great expert at complaining, but he is pretty short on answers, and the answers he does have are quite lacking if one wants to take a look at them.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, when the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Cosgrove) gave notice of allocation of time to consider the committee stage of Bill C-139 dealing with income tax legislation, another Member who was in the House just now, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) reproached him for restricting debate on a Bill he described as being two and one half inches thick and containing hundreds of clauses. There again, the Hon. Member would have the Canadian public believe that we did not spend enough time considering this Bill. He forgot to mention that the Bill is a compilation of tax measures arising from three budgets that were brought down, respectively, in November 1981 and in June and October 1982. He also forgot to mention that a number of amendments were added, following consultations after the November 1981 budget was brought down, that thousands of speeches were made and questions asked in the House and elsewhere in this country, and that articles appeared in the press and hundreds of news reports were filed.

Furthermore, that same Bill is being considered today, sixteen months later. It is therefore entirely false to tell the Canadian people that today we are considering a Bill, containing hundreds of clauses, that was not examined either by the House or by the Canadian people.

As my colleague from Kitchener (Mr. Lang) said earlier, many public interest groups, including the life insurance sector, have said that they were satisfied with the latest changes made by the Government. Furthermore, I think this is a typical example of the Opposition's attempts to obstruct the proceedings of the House, day after day. We had another taste of this with the National Energy Program announced in October 1980. It subsequently took one year and seven months—until June 1982—to pass the various Bills that were part of this Program. The same applies to the 6 and 5 policy, which is a popular policy that has been very well received by the Canadian public. It was announced in June 1982, but it was not until January 1983 that the various Bills relating to the policy were passed in the House. I would like to give an example of the support this policy or program has been receiving from the Canadian public. In January, I sent out a questionnaire to 42,000 householders in my riding. I received more than 2,000 replies, and in their response to one of the questions, most people thought the 6 and 5 program would bring down inflation. This was in fact the case, not long ago, when the inflation rate finally dropped to 6 per cent on an annual basis. This is one more example where the Canadian public was made aware of the advantages of a government program, where the majority supported the program and where it took the Opposition months and months to debate before it was prepared to let us pass the legislation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to repeat the point made by my colleague for Kitchener, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board, when he said that $6 billion in refunds would be paid to taxpayers as soon as this Bill was adopted. After all the debate in the House and in view of these facts, I think it is vital that this Bill be passed as soon as possible and referred to committee, so that we can at last proceed with the next item on the agenda regarding questions of national importance.

[English]

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, this is an important debate this afternoon. To my mind, at least, it points out the problems which the Government has run into in terms of managing House time. I would like to speak about some of the specifics as far as the problems of managing House time are concerned.

It is evident that this Government does not know what it is doing when you consider that this is by far the longest session on record. We are getting very close now to three years of being in one session. Presumably, under normal conditions we would expect to have a Throne Speech and a budget debate and disposition of the Estimates on an annual basis, and that would be considered as one session of Parliament.

One cannot help but wonder why we have not encountered more of these problems sooner as far as this Government is concerned because effectively, as the Hon. Member who spoke previously pointed out, we are dealing with several budgets. We are dealing with the budget which came down in October of 1981 which was amended in April of 1982. We had what amounted to a mini-budget in June of 1982, and we had a financial statement or financial update from the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) last fall when we came back after the summer break. When you jam all of those things into one extremely large and complex Bill, it must amount to many technical amendments to the Income Tax Act. It is no wonder that the Government is pressed for time. For those of us in the Opposition who have concerns about some of the measures in the Bill which are going to affect our constituents adversely, it would be irresponsible of us to pass this Bill without having some kind of adequate discussion in the House. That is one of the issues which has to be addressed when we talk about closure.

I am a relatively new Member in the House, but I know this is the fourth time that we have had closure since this House returned on January 17. That clearly is an indication that the Government is not able to manage House time. I can give you an indication of where they could have saved one day's time. I am part of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures, and one of the recommendations of the Committee was that the size of committees should be smaller. We recommended that the size of Committees move down from 20 to 30 Members to a range of 10 to 15 Members. There is a problem in terms of redistributing or allocating the memberships on the various committees so that it is in accordance, on a percentage basis, with the number of Members which each Party has in the House. What would be fair, I believe, as far as the smaller committees are concerned, is a figure of 11 Members. That would allocate six Members to the Government, four to the Official Opposition and one to the NDP. That would have been acceptable to our House Leader, and I think we would have been able to live with that. Instead, the Government chose to pick a figure of ten Members and divide it up so there were six Liberals, three Conservatives and one NDP. The reason the Government did that, we are told, is that the chairmen of the committees would be neutral and never have to vote. If you take the neutral chairmen, that leaves five Government Members to four Opposition Members. To my mind that is totally ludicrous. Under Standing Order 13, Mr. Speaker, you do not vote except in the case of a tie where the Speaker casts the tie-breaking vote. I do not know whether there has been a situation in this House where the Speaker has had to vote, but the provision is there in case of a tie.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I have been listening very intently to the Hon. Member, trying to relate his remarks to the motion now before the House concerning time allocation on Bill C-139. Perhaps the Hon. Member would enlighten the Chair as to the relevancy of his comments in relation to the matter now before the House.

Mr. Mayer: I would be very happy to, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to point out that the Government has wasted House time by creating this foolish situation. If the Government cannot allocate time properly and has to bring in closure, that relates to time allocation. I am pointing out that if committees are an extension of the House where the greatest speaker of all, yourself, Sir, has instructions to vote in the case of a tie, then that should be the case in committee. Had the Government chosen to accept that principle, there would not have been a one day's debate on a striking committee report. I do not feel that has ever happened before, and it came about simply because this Government chose to misinterpret the rules drafted for it by the special committee. If the Government was serious about properly managing its affairs, not only in the House but in the country, it could create good will in this place by making use of some common sense provisions. The Government could have saved a whole day's time in this House if it had taken a different attitude towards the makeup of the Members on various committees.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) gets up and talks about the Opposition not making any concrete or proper suggestions for alternative policies on Government spending. Let me give him one. In the fall of 1981 the Minister of Finance set the rate for Canada Savings Bonds at 19 per cent plus. At the time some of us thought that was a ridiculously high interest rate. Looking at it now, that rate cost the Canadian taxpayer something like $2 billion, a horrendous amount of money. We have suggested to the Government that it could have a better system of deciding on the appropriate rate for Canada Savings Bonds. Now, the $2 billion is an estimate, but it is a visible estimate. In addition to that, by setting the rate as high as it did, the Government tended to keep interest rates at a high level, which caused unknown additional problems for small-businessmen trying to survive.

I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) is here, and I make that suggestion to him. Surely we have to have a system which sets the CSB interest rate at a realistic level. When you look at the boondoggle that went on in 1981 and the effect it will have on interest rates for probably another three or four years, you wonder why we cannot have a system which would function better.

There is a provision in this Bill, Mr. Speaker, which removes the income averaging annuity contract system and replaces it with forward averaging. I have heard that described as the most complicated system ever devised by man. One of the problems I have with all of these regulations concerning taxes is that they have become so complicated that the average person cannot understand them. Just look at the average income tax form. It is incredible; you almost need a Philadelphia lawyer to be able to understand it, let alone fill it out properly. Surely we can devise something which is a lot simpler than the present form. Not only would it be simpler to fill out, it would cost less to administer. Now, there are some suggestions which will not cost the Government any money. Presumably they could even save money by reducing the number of bureaucrats required. So we do make some sensible and worthwhile suggestions on this side of the House. I would point out that I get a little upset when I hear people on the other side stand up and not defend their own Government's program—which presumably they should be doing as part of the Government—but try to turn it around and say that all the Opposition does is to criticize. In the brief time I have had I have made two or three points which the Government could consider, so let them not accuse us of speaking out of both sides of our mouth. Too often we hear people say that the only time we suggest something is when it will increase the deficit. That is not the case in these suggestions I have made.

Let me close, Mr. Speaker, by making one final suggestion. I understand from the questions and answers during the Question Period today that there is a possibility that Maislin Transport might be losing something like $1 million a month. If that is the case and the Government is involved, I would suggest that the money could be much better used to bring down interest rates on farm improvement loans where farmers are locked in at 16.75 per cent, because from the figures I have seen that would be much more useful to the economy than simply pouring $1 million down the hole every month for a money losing trucking outfit.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is time for us to wrap up debate on this Bill. Let me give you a summary of the discussion we have had so far.

This debate started on November 12, 1981. There was a full budget debate. Then we had announcements from the Minister of Finance on December 18. I was in the House then so I know there were extended questions at that time. Then there was another budget brought in on June 28, 1982. There was a big, long discussion then. For a few Members of Parliament who chose to take advantage of it, the committee sat through the months of August and September and had carried on detailed discussions. Then we had a financial statement on October 27.

Then this Bill was brought in. On this Bill alone, Mr. Speaker, we have had seven days' debate on second reading, and so far more than four days' debate in Committee of the Whole. We have had over 75 Tory speakers participating on second reading, and 18 NDP Members, more than half their caucus in each case, Mr. Speaker. And what do we hear today? "We have not had a chance to say enough". Well, Mr. Speaker, if they have not had enough time after two budget debates, a financial statement, a special debate in the House and 11 days in Parliament then you are windbags and you do not deserve any more time.

Let us look at some of what we have accomplished, Mr. Speaker, because, quite frankly, this discussion really was fruitful and we should be honest about that. Some of the Members on the other side made contributions, just as did Members on our side.

• (1640)

From last April until February of this year there was extended debate with associations and business groups in the country about the federal sales tax. A budget paper was prepared and published. The business groups advised the Government, and the result was a new process for analysing a special new tax. The same thing happened with the Lortie Commission. We also have a new set of rules for charities. When the Finance Committee studies tax measures, new ground was broken.

A new technique of pre-budget consultation was practised by the former Minister of Finance last spring, and has been carried on by the present Minister through December and January. People from outside Government have been giving advice. A whole new set of rules on interest expense deductions has been drawn up and has been examined by them. Health and dental plans have been debated and, on the advice of outsiders, those provisions were dropped from the Bill. The advice the Government received from outside has been invaluable. Changes were made to the provisions governing work in progress, soft costs for construction and insurance regulations after over a year of negotiation with the industry, and there has been a change in the automobile standby charge provision. Anyone who claims that the Bill has not had adequate debate is debasing the advice received from outside groups who have made a real contribution to the process.

Mr. Kempling: What a windbag!

Mr. Fisher: When Hon. Members opposite claim that they have not had enough time to debate the Bill, I do not know what they mean. Let us compare the contributions of the outsiders with the contributions made by the Hon. Members opposite. The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) has just made a thoughtful presentation, but he has exhausted his ideas, and so he branched off into a new discourse on Canada Savings Bonds.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. If the Hon Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) would be prepared to yield the rest of his time—

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order. I object to that kind of interruption. I listened to the Hon. Member because he is an interesting man—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I object to that interruption. I listened to the Hon. Member because he is a fascinating man and usually has concrete ideas to offer. Unfortunately, he has exhausted his ideas. He did not speak about the Income Tax Act at all, and indeed you had to interrupt him, Mr. Speaker. He was going on about committee rules and Canada Savings Bonds. That is the behaviour for someone looking for an idea. It is a filibuster. Last Friday the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) went over the same gound time and time again—

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps there is trouble with the microphones, but I am having trouble hearing the Hon. Member. I wonder if he could speak a little louder.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the Hon. Member for Calgary West who asked all kinds of questions but hardly engaged in searching, intellectual debate.

There are 140,000 Canadians who are affected by the standby charge on automobile usage. As reported at p. 23721 of Hansard the Hon. Member for Calgary West asked how standby charges would affect diplomats in Africa, not people in Canada. Someone should tell him that he represents Canadians and he is supposed to talk about taxes here, and not waste the time of the House with that kind of frivolous detail. He did the same thing today. In serious debate, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) spoke about the new ideas we have on the standby charges. The Hon. Member for Calgary West wanted to talk about the motions that were defeated last Friday and insisted on his right to do so. That is because he does not have a new idea. This is a filibuster.

We heard Members of the New Democratic Party say that this Bill helps the rich. That just shows that they have absolutely no understanding of it. When they speak about the rate reduction, you would think they would listen to their bed mates in the Tory Party and understand that when we reduced the rates we also closed the shelters. But the shelters are only closed for people who pay high rates of tax.

I made an inquiry about how many people with a $25,000 income borrow money to invest in an RRSP. I was told that the average deduction for these retirement plans for people at that income level is $500. It is only when people have much higher incomes that they borrow for this purpose, and we have ended that deduction.

The NDP claims that this Bill favours the rich. They should also realize that we not only changed the rate but that we changed the deductions. It would be well for them to present that honestly, rather than presenting slogans which show that they do not understand the matter.

There has been a great deal of debate, Mr. Speaker, but it is time to move on with this Bill to clean up the tax system. The next step is to simplify the system. There has been lots of advice from Hon. Members opposite on that subject. I do not think we should do away with tax but I think we should simplify the Bill, and that is the next step.

At this stage we will get rid of some of the antiquated and unnecessary deductions and some of the shelters that were unfair. Let us get on with the job and recognize that we have cleaned up the budgetary process. We have already opened up the budget so that groups from outside can consult with the Government. We have opened up the process so that groups from outside can study the tax measures. We must give the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the former Minister credit for this. It brings in some fresh air from the outside world.

Time Allocation

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of the opportunity to speak against the Government's decision to choke off debate on this Bill. The Hon. Member who just spoke bragged about the months that have been spent in delaying the Bill. It is 13 months since the 1981 budget, and during that time the Government carried on discussions with those people it wished to consult and suffocated public debate on the Bill. When it did introduce the Bill it made sure it was debated a day here and a day there, often on short notice. This was to make it as difficult as possible for the Opposition to comment wisely. The Government even played games with the use of time allocation in order to make things more difficult for the Opposition.

I have spoken on many occasions about one of the most unjust clauses in the Bill. Clause 64 removes the exemption for immigrants who send money to relatives overseas, except for a spouse, child or grandchild. I hope Hon. Members will vote against this Clause. Most immigrants earn low incomes. Although the Government says that some immigrants were claiming exemptions to which they were not entitled, the total amount of money that it would have been impossible for them to take improperly would be far less than one major corporation, such as Shell, could take by means of the loopholes provided by the Government. It is unjust for the Government to crack down on immigrants when it does not crack down on the 4,000 individuals who earn over $100,000 but pay no tax whatsoever. The Government does not crack down on Shell Oil which sometimes pays no tax whatever on a quarter of a billion dollars. Those immigrants are not among those who had an opportunity to be consulted in the consultation process bragged about by the Parliamentary Secretary. They were excluded from consultation by the simple process of not publicizing the occasions.

Another interesting fact that has not been brought out concerns the injustice of the present tax system. In no way has it been addressed by all the consultations and private discussions this Government has had with wealthy corporations and with the promoters of wealthy corporations. Government officials have not talked with working people nor have they talked to representatives of the garment industry. I mention this because Spadina is one of the areas in Canada where the garment industry is important. It employs about 10,000 people in Spadina. The garment industry has been compelled to subsidize industries like the oil industry, the banking industry and the mining industry. From 1976 to 1979 the taxation rate on the garment industry, clothing and textiles, was about 87 per cent higher than the average taxation rate on the oil, the mining and the banking industries. In fact, if the oil, the mining and the banking industries had been effectively taxed at the same rate as the textile and garment industry, this Government would have $1.7 billion more in its coffers and it would have no excuse for the cutbacks it has made in health, education and social housing. Instead, this Government preferred to give the tax break, not to an industry where wages are low and modernization is urgently needed, but to an industry that has more money than it knows what to do with and exports money out of Canada. Another way of putting the point is that in Government benefits to industry, the garment and textile industry has had about $27 per employee per year, according to a 1978 Government study. Compare this $27 per employee per year in the garment industry with an average of $179 for industry as a whole. We know which industries pull that average up. Again it is the oil, the banking and the mining industries. Not only does the Government not take tax at the same rate from those wealthy industries but it gives assistance to the already wealthy industries at a rate several times higher than the rate at which it assists the garment industry.

I want to point out some of the long-standing injustices that have been noted, but noting them has made no difference to the Government's interest in correcting them. It has been pointed out that the statutory rate of taxation that is imposed on corporations generally is more than 46 per cent. In 1978, what corporations actually paid was around 30 per cent. Already a deception has occurred because the average taxpayer is not able to cut his personal tax bill by two-thirds as corporations have generally done. Again, the smaller corporations in the more hard pressed industries get less of this tax break than the richer ones.

Consider some of the tax rates paid. Cadillac-Fairview, according to a Government study, has been making $100 per month surplus on every one of its 15,000 apartments in Toronto. Every one of those 15,000 units nets Cadillac-Fairview on average $100 a month surplus. What sort of taxation does Cadillac-Fairview pay? The rate is 6 per cent. The Steel Company of Canada pays 7 per cent. Big deal! Union Gas pays a little under 6 per cent. The Toronto Dominion Bank, my goodness, it paid 18 per cent one year. Let us take a look at what happens to ordinary people and immigrants. Immigrants try to send money to relatives overseas, a family obligation which they recognize. This is a family obligation we value and claim to respect in this country. But those working people who are trying to send money to relatives overseas are generally taxed at a far higher rate than are corporations. If we pass this Government Bill, through Section 64 we will penalize people for acknowledging and acting on family obligations.

We are continuing to allow massive multi-billion dollar gifts to the wealthiest people, either individuals or corporations in this country, while we chisel working people who may earn $10,000, $15,000 or $20,000 a year in order to support their families. We chisel them by whittling money off and causing the lowest income people of this country to pay a far higher proportion of their earnings in tax than is paid by the people earning the highest incomes.

This whole tax Bill which the Government has put forth is a disgrace. When we come to Section 64 I would ask that Members of this House have the decency to vote against it.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to tell the House why I believe that the Government is quite justified in putting an end to this debate. I shall not deal with the substance of this bill. During the last few months, the Opposition parties have had ample time to explain why they believe that some of the provisions of this bill should be amended. They may be right in certain cases, but obviously, they may also be wrong.

However, I would like to appeal to the sense of responsibility of the Opposition Members and ask them to show more understanding of the role of Parliament in a democratic society such as ours. Once members of a party have been elected democratically and allowed to air their views on behalf of the interests they represent, I do not think that they are entitled to obstruct systematically the operation of our democratic institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I find this bill satisfactory. It might not be perfect, but I believe that it is a good bill because it is prompted by a desire to be fair to Canadian taxpayers as a whole. I am well aware that most of the spokesmen for the Official Opposition have risen on behalf of special, not to say privileged, groups in our society, who are literally haunted by the prospect of having to share some of their wealth with the most disadvantaged members of our society, while the members of the leftist party have made speeches aimed mostly at placing an even heavier fiscal burden on the shoulders of the private sector, which remains the motor of development, progress and economic growth in a society such as ours.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the Opposition Members to show at least some sense of their responsibilities and remember that, by delaying this bill, they are penalizing underprivileged people in our society. For instance, they are penalizing those who, after working a few months early in 1982, now receive unemployment insurance and expect a rather substantial income tax refund. As long as this bill has not been passed by Parliament, the Department of National Revenue does not have the right or the authority to mail out the tax refunds to these people who are impatiently waiting for amounts which can be rather substantial. The Members opposite should also think about low income mothers who are waiting for this bill to be passed to receive their child tax credit, which can amount to over $1,000 in the case of a family with three children. These people are penalized by the filibustering which we have been witnessing in this House for too many weeks already.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) said earlier that, since the budget was brought down in November 1981, Opposition Members have had a total of 25 days of debate in this House to express their views. Moreover, in many cases, we have accepted suggestions by the Opposition as well as by Government Members. First, there was the debate on the budget of November 1981; then, there was another debate on the budget of June 1982; later on, in September 1982, the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs spent about a month examining all amendments to the Income Tax Act resulting from these two budgets. These amendments were examined one at a time and recommendations made to the Minister of Finance who accepted many.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there has of course been the present debate during which, as mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher), 75 Members of the Official Opposition, or about three quarters of them, have had the opportunity to voice their concerns or points of disagreement about this legislation. I also believe that nearly 20 Members of the New Democratic Party have risen during this debate to express their views about this Bill.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Government is acting responsibly, or perhaps that we are trying to make up for the lack of responsibility which seems to exist on the other side of the House, in deciding that what is at stake is so important that we must act now so that Canadians who are waiting for and are entitled to government refunds can receive them.

● (1700)

[English]

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, in the remaining time that I have I would like to point out once again, for the record, the annoyance that we on this side feel at the Government's having introduced this motion under Standing Order 82 to terminate debate on this very important measure during the Committee of the Whole stage of Bill C-139. If one listens to the intensity of the speeches made earlier by the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) and the Member who just resumed his seat, I think it is obvious to Members on this side that the Government Members feel very uncomfortable about many of the initiatives which remain in this mammoth Bill C-139 which is some 295 pages and contains 134 separate Clauses dealing with matters of tax reform that affect virtually every Canadian citizen in several ways.

The anxiety felt by Members opposite stems from that day back on November 12, 1981, when the former Minister of Finance introduced his first budget. It was the basis for these reforms which the Government is now trying to implement retroactively. Even after it has been collecting taxes for over a year based on certain of these initiatives, it is trying to create a mood of desperation in the country. The Government is suggesting that it is the Opposition who is holding up these very important tax reforms. In fact, those of us who have travelled the country and have listened to our constituents know that there are still many serious and fundamental flaws with this legislation that will haunt Canadians and hinder the development of our economy for many years to come.

It strikes us as being strange that in this session, which is the longest in Canadian parliamentary history, the government has had to use time allocation and closure 20 times, beginning with the famous Friday in October of 1980 when closure was used to limit and suppress the rights of Opposition Members to debate the resolution on the Constitution of Canada that was introduced in the House. The outrage that Members of Parliament and Canadians from every part of this land felt as a consequence of that initiative still prevails in this country today, as any poll would quickly reveal to Government Members. That outrage arose not only because closure was used in a most inappropriate way on that occasion when we all wanted to have a say on the future Constitution of this nation, but because closure was used on several subsequent important occasions.

There was an attempt by the Government to try to frustrate the right of Canadian citizens to watch the committee hearings on the Canadian Constitution during the winter of 1981. Closure was brought in on other important measures, such as the reform of the Canada Lands Act, Bill C-48.

In the spring of 1981 we saw closure used to limit debate on the final disposition of the Constitutional resolution. Had it not been for a stand-off in the House, we might well have had an entirely different Constitution enacted from the one we have today. It was only because of the resistance shown by Members on this side at that time that some very serious and divisive measures were not imposed upon Canadians by the will of the Liberal majority opposite.

I, and I know the majority of Canadians, will consent to the attempt by the Opposition in the House to ensure that the Government does not hastily pass some 134 separate items of tax reforms through the House, in a Bill which is 295 pages thick, with only four days' debate at committee stage and only seven days' debate at second reading stage. There are items in this legislation which cover all sectors of the Canadian economy and affect farmers, the forest industry, the manufacturing industry, small-businessmen, fishermen, those who are employed in trade unions and those who are employed in the north.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have heard the Hon. Member make several references to the use of closure in the House. I think he is misleading the House and the public because, to the best of my recollection, closure has only been used once during this session.

• (1710)

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the comment I made was that in the present session of this House, closure or time allocation has been used 20 times. For those who are watching and do not know what time allocation means, it means that the Parliament of Canada is garrotted. It is given one or two more days at the most to complete debate on important legislation. We are now faced with a very important piece of legislation because it affects every Canadian in one way or another.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the following question will be answered today: 4,431.

Madam Speaker, I suggest that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

AID TO COUNTRIES FOR OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION

Question No. 4,431—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. For the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 (c) 1982-83 (d) 1983-84 (e) 1984-85, did the Government commit itself to provide assistance to foreign countries, through either Petro-Canada International or CIDA, to aid in the exploration for and development of potential oil and gas reserves and, if so, for each country, what amount of aid was committed?

2. What increases in proven reserves, if any, have been achieved so far?

3. What commercial development of these new reserves is under way or currently being planned?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): I am informed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Canadian International Development Agency as follows: In so far as Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation is concerned:

1. (a)—(e) Petro-Canada International became operational in January, 1982 and has committed assistance for pre-exploration and exploration activities to the following three countries: Jamaica—commitments of $6.8 million for 1982 and 1983; Tanzania—commitments of $29.4 million for 1982 and 1983; Senegal—commitments of $16.2 million for 1982, 1983 and 1984.

2. No increases in proven reserves has been achieved so far. Exploration activities are only in the preliminary stage at this time.

3. Not applicable.

In so far as the Canadian International Development Agency is concerned:

Pakistan

1. Since 1973, Canada has financially supported the Oil and Gas Development Corporation in Pakistan by approximately $31 million committed to date for the Corporation's activities in drilling, production and technical assistance in the oil and gas sector. At the present time the Government of Canada anticipates possible cash disbursements during the next two fiscal years of most of the balance of the line of credit.

2. There is no reliable information on the increases in proven reserves since the Government of Pakistan and the World Bank data are different. The seismic equipment in use has identified typical structures but volume estimates of the reserve are not possible to determine. However, because of the joint efforts of the three principal donors, the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank and CIDA, significant discoveries have resulted over the last six years.

3. In the case of oil, prospects are mixed for increasing production from existing oil fields in Pakistan. The Fifth Five-Year Plan called for production to increase from .49 million tons per annum in fiscal year 1978 to 1.7 million tons per annum in fiscal year 1983 (10,000 barrels per day to 35,000 barrels per day). In fact, as a result of overly optimistic estimates of production per well, pricing problems, drilling problems and management problems, production remained virtually constant at 10,000 barrels per day until 1980-81, improving in 1982 mainly as a result of increased production from the Toot oil field and new production at 2,200 barrels per day from the Khaskeli oil field.

Production from Khaskeli could increase to some 5,000 barrels per day and production from the Meyal field is expected to increase to 13,000 barrels per day by 1987. If these targets are met, total production from known fields could reach 20,000 barrels per day by 1990.

The Directorate General, Energy and Resources, is projecting 20,000 barrels per day by 1985-86 and 27,000 barrels per day by 1989-90. In light of the recent World Bank unofficial reserves estimates such production figures are unlikely to be met unless upcoming tests on Toot and Dhodak prove to be very positive. Even with positive results on the assessment of these known fields it is likely that one additional field of Meyal proportions would have to be found and developed before 1990 to ensure that the 27,000 barrels per day figure is met for that year.

India

1. In the case of CIDA, two lines of credit have been extended to India:

A loan agreement for up to $15 million line of credit was signed on June 24, 1980 with the objective of increasing the proportion of Indian self-sufficiency in petroleum by contributing to the exploration and development of Indian oil and gas reserves. This line of credit was virtually fully committed by October 31, 1982. A second line of credit for up to $45 million was signed on November 21, 1981 with the same objectives. It is expected to be fully committed by November of 1984.

Disbursements under the $15 million line of credit should be completed by March of 1983. Disbursements under the $45 million line of credit are expected to be completed by fiscal year 1987-88.

2. Accurate information on the increases in proven reserves is virtually impossible to determine since the Oil and Natural Gas Committee's (ONGC) program spans both offshore and onshore sites all over India. Announcements are made on a regular basis of the Government of India's intention to undertake major new drilling contracts and the ONGC has recently announced its intention to buy or lease a large number of new rigs in the next year or two. The line of credit, however, is designed in part to develop markets for Canadian industries and has, as such, no direct impact on the identification and exploration of oil and gas reserves.

3. India's precarious energy situation is such that every discovery is being exploited as quickly as possible to reduce the costly import of oil. The Government of India has identified oil exploration and development as an essential component in meeting many of the other objectives in their Sixth Five-Year Plan. Shortages of oil impact in the power sector, in manufacturing, etc. to such a large extent that commercial development of new reserves is proceeding with all possible speed.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about question No. 4,175. I have raised this matter on six occasions. This question was placed on the Order Paper on March 24, 1982. It is a question regarding correspondence between R. W. B. Bailey, Chairman of the SGPE Sub-Group, and Mr. R. Gagnon, Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, dated February 17 and February 19, 1982 respectively, on the subject of a hiring team to recruit Francophone employees. I have listed the number of Departments which have these hiring teams, and what schools and universities they are going to be going to. I want to know if there are any in Manitoba. I also want to know what nationalities they are going to be hiring. I met with the Human Rights Commission yesterday. They have a number of complaints listed with regard to the discriminatory hiring and promotional practices of the Government. They are saying that the delay in having these questions answered is holding up their deliberations.

This is the sixth time I have raised this question. Will the Parliamentary Secretary give me some kind of answer as to why this question is not being answered by the Government?

[Translation]

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I shall ask the Minister for an answer, but I would like to inform the House that we have already answered 3,973 questions, in other words, 83.9 per cent of all questions. Hon. Members are no doubt aware that it costs a great deal to answer all these questions, and we must also consider the taxpayer. However, I shall get the answer for the Hon. Member as soon as possible.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McCAIN—STATEMENT OF MR. OUELLET DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I raised the question yesterday, and on March 4, in respect of the notification for the UFFI installation program. I would like to correct a remark which was made by the Minister yesterday when he said that the advertising had been done and the Hon. Member should disseminate the information to his constituents. The Minister misled the House, I believe, not intentionally, because as an Hon. Member I did not receive his notification of the deadline in my office until—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. The Hon. Member knows that he may not correct the statements of another Member. If that other Hon. Member finds that he has made a statement which he believes he should correct, he may do that himself, but the Hon. Member may not correct a statement of another Member.

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, my point of privilege is that it was impossible for me, as a Member, to disseminate the necessary information to my constituency. To substantiate my impossibility—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. The Hon. Member is debating the fact that he was not able to disseminate some kind of information because—

Mr. McCain: I did not have it.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member did pose a question, I believe, during the Question Period concerning that, or was it yesterday? In any event, it is not a question of privilege. That is quite obvious. I am not quite sure now at this point if the Hon. Member is rising on a question of privilege or on a point of order.

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, my point of privilege is that I was told as a Member that I should have disseminated the information. As a Member, I did not see the information because it arrived in my office on a Friday after I had left my office late in the afternoon. I did not see it until the following Tuesday.

Madam Speaker: Order. That is not a question of privilege. The Hon. Member is arguing a question which he has brought up in the House before. This is not the time to argue it. It is not a question of privilege, and I do so rule it is not a question of privilege.

[Translation]

The Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), on a question of privilege.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, on a question of privilege, the Hon. Member who spoke just now implied that I misled the House.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. There is no privilege involved, niether the Minister's nor that of the Hon. Member. Both Hon. Members are engaged in debate on a question that was raised during the day. However, no debate can be allowed on this question at this time. Neither the Minister nor the Hon. Member has a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister is correct. I acknowledge that. I said "UFFI". I should have said the Summer Works Program. My apologies to the Minister.

Madam Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 58, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Francis in the chair.

On Clauses 8, 9 and 128(12)—

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, when we rose earlier, I was asking the Minister about the Income Tax Act, Section 15.1, Subsection 11, which is Subclause 8(6). The penalty section has been changed. It originally stated that a penalty is imposed where a false declaration is made in a joint election in respect of a qualifying debt obligation. I am wondering if the Minister would explain to the House what the original problems were, their extent, and what is being corrected with this new provision?

• (1750)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the difficulty in responding immediately in detail to the question is, of course, that the administration of the Act is under another Ministry, that of Revenue Canada. I can indicate that my officials point out that it was because of some experience with fraudulent declarations under the section that the amendment was brought forward. I do not have at my fingertips the experience of the Revenue Department, but it is something I can obtain for the Hon. Member, and I will provide those details once I have had an opportunity to consult with the officials from the other Ministry.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister make that undertaking to the House? It is rather important to us to know whether the fraudulent acts were the acts of individuals or through lending institutions. Does the Minister have any general information on that point?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, again because it involves another Ministry, I do not have the particulars. I hasten to assure the Hon. Member that when I have those particulars I will undertake to provide them on the next occasion we consider this matter in Committee of the Whole. My officials have brought to my attention that it would be a fairly recent experience inasmuch as the original Section was introduced in the 1979 Income Tax Act. I am referring to Section 15.1(6) under the heading "False Declaration". This is now expanded to include not only corporations but individuals. So there may not be a lot of expenrience but I will attempt to get the information and I do not undertake to make it available to all Hon. Members who are interested in these proceedings.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, I would like the Minister to consider Clause 9 which relates to Section 15.2 of the Income Tax Act. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that the explanatory notes to the Bill are tremendously beneficial to those of us who are not skilled in reading those very complicated Sections. This is a very valuable addition in trying to figure out exactly where these Clauses are and what they really mean. In the explanatory notes, referring to Clause 9(a), it says the issuer cannot deduct the interest on the bond but the recipient of the interest is deemed to have received a taxable dividend from a taxable Canadian corporation. That raises the question, Mr. Chairman, as to what has been the cost to the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the bonds issued to date and what is the anticipated loss in the future.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, my officials are attempting to find that figure. I might say that I am very pleased some Members have found the innovation of explanatory notes useful because some other Members of this House have been very unkind to the Government in this respect and used it as an example of yet another complication and more paper work required by Government. I am very pleased some Members have found it useful because that was the intent of providing the explanatory notes. I know some members of the public have indicated it has been helpful.

On an annual basis the projection of the amendments which are before us would be that the cost to the CRF would be $25 million. Under the Section as it stood previously, that is the expansionary interpretation for use of the bond, the cost thus far, which is a bit harder, is calculated to be $125 million.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the same Clause states that the bond must be issued after November 12, 1981, and before 1984. Does the Minister anticipate this provision going beyond 1984? As he well knows, we are almost into 1984 now, and he has actual experience to this point. Why would the Minister not consider an amendment which would take it, say, to 1985, which would then give people still more certainty as to whether or not they can get a bond?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I indicated this morning in response to another line of questioning, I think it was from the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, that, number one, we have targeted the aid under the amendments toward, for example, people in very difficult circumstances who will use the bond where otherwise they might go into bankruptcy. The question was raised: well, if the economy improves, would the Government consider going back to the original use of the bond which was to be available to people who are looking to expand their business rather than to preserve or maintain their business or prevent bankruptcy? My response would have to be the same to the question raised now by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills. The Government will have to keep an eye on the take-up under this Clause. We will have to see how the economy is going. Of course, I suppose the hope of all Hon. Members would be that the economy would be so strong that we could reach a decision that no special attention was required for businessmen, either for expansion purposes or survival or protection purposes.

• (1800)

The Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the Bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

THE ADMINISTRATION—RESPONSIBILITY FOR ACTIONS BY MINISTERS AND OFFICIALS. (B) GOVERNMENT MANDATE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, for many years Canadians have been concerned about the changing standard of morality under the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). There was a time, for example, when election promises were related to the Government's legislative program, but that is no longer the case. For many months, even years, Canadians have been trying to decipher the standard of morality of the Government. It has been coming to light in bits and pieces but has become more clear in what we now know as the "Gillespie affair". That is why on March 2 I put the following question to the Prime Minister:

> On February 17, in answer to a question from the Hon. Member for Provencher, the Prime Minister said, as reported at page 22938 of Hansard:
> Yes, Madam Speaker, we are collectively responsible for the policies of this Government—
> The Government as a whole is not collectively responsible for some individual agreement—

That is the nub of the problem in the country, Mr. Speaker. The Government wants to be accountable for concepts but not for administration. Putting it another way, the Government wants to be accountable for discussing an issue but not to be responsible when it makes a blatant error, as was the case in the Gillespie affair. That is why the Prime Minister replied to my question as reported at p. 23366 of Hansard as follows:

> If the Hon. Member is talking about the meaning of responsible Government, literally, it means that the Government of the day is responsible to Parliament and can only continue exercising its powers with the authority of Parliament, that is, with the support of the majority of the Members of Parliament. That is what responsible Government means.

I think you will agree that that is a new definition of responsible Government.

We are now faced with a choice between the old concept of honour and the new concept of legality. The Prime Minister now seems to be defining responsible Government in terms of legality—if it is within the law, then it is all right. For many centuries women were not legally protected against wife beating but, just because there was no law prohibiting wife beating, that did not make it morally right to do so. It would appear that with the new standards of morality recognized by the Government, there will have to be a limitless agenda of laws to define what the Government can or cannot do. I do not dispute the fact that the law is an important protection, but if the law is the only protection, then conviction of an offence is the only way we can make the Government accountable.

The second part of the Prime Minister's definition is that if Parliament or a majority of Government Members validate any wrongdoing, that constitutes responsible Government. That raises all kinds of possibilities. If the Government can pistolwhip its backbenchers into voting for anything it says, then that will validate anything it does. That, by the Prime Minister's definition, is responsible Government.

• (1805)

I say again, and the Hon. Member can talk any time he wants to, that leaves out any kind of place for honour. It seems to me that we can trust anyone who knows nothing about law as long as they know a lot about honour. But you cannot trust someone who knows all about law but has no sense of honour. That is the choice we have in this country.

This Prime Minister is misdirecting and redirecting the cause of the whole Parliamentary system by redefining responsible Government to mean anything the Government will validate by a majority of Members—meaning if Government Members fall into line with anything the Prime Minister says—is responsible Government.

It was old Falstaff, the drunkard in the battle described by Shakespeare in Henry IV Part I who said, "What is honour? It is a mere scutcheon." It is kind of a coat of arms that you can toss aside. You can change loyalty, depending upon who your leader is because all you do is follow the standard. What did Falstaff do? He ran away in the heat of battle. He became a deserter because honour meant nothing. That becomes the shifting sand of the kind of morality which the Prime Minister is introducing. It means that morality is relative. There is no fixed standard and the Government can get away with anything as long as all of its lackies do anything it wants them to do.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), it would appear to me that the concept of responsible Government, and that is the issue, he is advocating is that which is determined by the Opposition to be responsible.

When this question was first raised, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated the constitutional position on the relationship between the individual and the collective responsibility of Ministers. In referring to "agreements which are made by individual Ministers or sometimes by officials under the authorities they have by statute or delegation", the Prime Minister said:

> If someone acts improperly in such circumstances, it is not the whole Government that is acting. If a Minister is acting improperly or illegally, he has to be taken to task. However, one could not condemn the whole Government for some act by an individual, unless the whole Government itself had been part of the decision.

Commenting on the meaning of responsible Government, which is the issue here, the Prime Minister noted:

> —literally, it means that the Government of the day is responsible to Parliament and can only continue exercising its powers with the authority of Parliament—

Do they want to substitute something else other than the authority of Parliament for this? I continue with what the Prime Minister said:

> —that is, with the support of the majority of the Members of Parliament. That is what responsible Government means.

This position is backed up squarely by Sir Ivor Jennings, the leading authority on responsible Government in the twentieth century. He said:

> The Government does not accept responsibility for an error of judgment or bad administration by one of its members. The process of Government compels a delegation of authority. The Cabinet must leave to each Minister a substantial discretion as to what matters he will bring before it. If he makes a mistake, then he must accept the personal responsibility.

The constitutional position is clear. The real question is whether there was any mistake or wrongdoing in this case. That issue has been discussed at great length in this chamber, and the House has cast its opinion and exercised its responsibility by way of a vote on this particular issue.

AIR TRANSPORT—WINNIPEG AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL CENTRE—EFFECT ON FAMILIES OF PROPOSED TRANSFER. (B) FUTURE OF PRESENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, on March 9, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) a number of questions concerning the Winnipeg air traffic control centre. Tonight I am requesting that the Minister of Transport provide a response to the following points at issue affecting employees at the Winnipeg Airport terminal building.

First, the Department of Transport has identified the need to remove asbestos from the Winnipeg airport terminal building. Circular CRA 5/80 dated July 29, 1980 addresses the high level of asbestos in that building. The question is, is the Transport Minister, going to continue to allow workers to enter the building knowing full well the potential health threat? What about the public's access to this health hazard?

Second, does the Government have in place medical testing of the airport workers? If so, is it monitoring the health of the workers until such time as they are removed from the hazard?

• (1810)

Third, transport management in the Winnipeg region and at Ottawa headquarters have prepared and supported a detailed proposal to build a new Winnipeg air control centre. Project manager, Ron McFarlane from Winnipeg gave, as an alternative, the division of the work load of Winnipeg controllers to Edmonton and to Toronto, and the relocation of Winnipeg controllers to those areas. What is the cost differential of constructing a new building versus relocating the Winnipeg controllers and associated equipment? What is Treasury Board's position today?

Fourth, does Transport Canada not have a proposed building site on Crown land and immediate access to detailed building plans from Edmonton, Montreal or Moncton? If funds were made available today, what is the earliest date of construction?

Fifth, since Friday, March 11, over 60 grievances have been filed with MOT relating to the asbestos problem, and more are being filed daily. What is the Minister's response to these health related complaints?

The Government has been aware of this potential health hazard at Winnipeg International Airport for some time. The threat is due to vast amounts of the decaying asbestos insulation falling from the ceiling, and contributing to air suspension of asbestos fibres. Scientific research has identified asbestos fibres as a serious health hazard and, in combination with cigarette smoke, the degree of hazard is increased approximately 55 times.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) said that the prime concern is the health of the Winnipeg based employees. If the prime concern is, in fact, the safety of these individuals, then why will they have to work in these very unsafe conditions until 1988? I urgently request the Government to undertake immediate construction of a new air terminal administration complex.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) angrily denied on March 4 that the employees would be moved permanently. He cut short a speech at the St. Boniface Hospital in order to clear the air. He said, "Any suggestion that the move of the air traffic controllers is permanent is an irresponsible fantasy." He went on to say, "Robertson doesn't know what he is talking about. Treasury Board doesn't make decisions, Cabinet does."

Let the Minister of Employment and Immigration convince Cabinet to build a new Winnipeg air control centre to clear the air.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) did not expect me to answer all of the questions he posed tonight in two minutes. I think the most important question to his constituents is the health related complaints and the 60 grievances which he has mentioned.

I would like to draw to his attention that, according to samples taken by the Department of National Health and Welfare, asbestos fibre levels are well within the acceptable limits in areas used by employees. It is recognized that employees have taken their own samples which appear to indicate higher levels. These discrepancies are being addressed. In one particular instance where it was felt that levels were particularly high, the room in question was given a thorough cleaning and new samples will be taken in consultation with the employees.

As a long term measure, Transport Canada has decided to remove the asbestos in the administration building, which is where the concerns have been raised. The present plan is for this work to be done in the fiscal year 1987-88. Had the Hon. Member been at the Standing Committee on Transport this morning, he would have heard the air administrator, in response to constructive questions and suggestions by the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael), undertake to see if the work could be advanced.

During the work, employees may have to be temporarily relocated. If they are, they of course will be eligible for all expenses allowed under the relevant Treasury Board directive. As the removal was not planned for the immediate future, the need to relocate and the details associated with it have not been fully established. When they are, I am sure they can be made available to the Hon. Member on his request.

I would like to emphasize that there is no intention of jeopardizing the health or safety of employees. All reasonable precautions to protect them have and will continue to be taken.

• (1815)

MEDICAL CARE—CONTRACT TO MANAGE HAWKESBURY HOSPITAL. (B) QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on January 26 I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) a question concerning the approval which the Ontario Government had just given to a contract signed between the District General Hospital in Hawkesbury and the Canadian subsidiary of American Medical International, the contract under which the corporation would manage the hospital according to profit criteria and, of course, in return would receive a share of whatever profits it could generate.

At that time I asked the Minister whether or not she considered the contract to be in violation of one of the five basic principles of Medicare, the non-profit administration principle. She answered that it was her understanding that it was only the over-all health insurance plan which had to be run on a non-profit basis, but that institutions related to the plan could run on a profit basis. Of course, practitioners within the system have traditionally operated on a profit basis, and we are not quarreling with that at this point in time. The question is whether or not hospitals ought to be run on a profit basis, and whether or not that contradicts the principles of Medicare.

Today I hope I receive a longer and more elaborate response from the Ministry to my contention that this does violate the spirit of Medicare and sets a very dangerous precedent for health care in this country. One of the justifications for Medicare and one of the reasons so many people fought over the years for Medicare, was that we would have health care provided according to health care criteria and not according to the dictates of the marketplace.

With the operation of a hospital by a corporation in the expectation that it will receive a share of whatever profits it can generate from the operation of that hospital, the profit motive is being reintroduced into our health care system in a manner which my NDP colleagues in the House and I find to be totally unacceptable. It is on that basis that we encourage the Minister not only to do something about this particular instance, but also, perhaps, to do something about any potential instances, by coming forward with a proposal for Canada Health legislation, about which there is so much mystery right now.

No one knows exactly the latest proposal in the minds of those in the Cabinet, or in the mind of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have asked the Minister before to come forward with an actual proposal for a Canada Health Act. I hope she will do so, and that in such Act we will find clarification of the non-profit principle which would outlaw this kind of contracting on a profit basis for the provision of hospital care. I would hope also that in that Act, among other provisions, we might find clarification of the portability principle.

Just the other day, someone called my office concerning a move from B.C. to Manitoba. Having been hospitalized in Manitoba, after the patient moved from B.C., coverage was nevertheless provided under B.C. medical insurance until the end of the year. It turned out that the per diem rates in B.C. were different than those in Manitoba. The upshot of the whole problem was that the particular patient involved was sent a bill for $1,436 for 23 days in hospital in December. The fact is that this can happen under our system, when everyone believes that such a thing should not happen. This situation must be addressed by the Government and the Provinces so that this kind of burden will never be placed on the sick in Canada. They must meet to arrive at an agreement whereby this kind of penalty will not be imposed on people. In this case, it simply involved the misfortune of bad timing, through no personal fault; a bill of $1,436 was the result.

A Canada Health Act, if it is a good Act, could go a long way toward preventing such situations, among others. As I say, it must follow all five basic principles of Medicare. It must have regard to nonprofit, to portability and, I hope, and we will be demanding so, also have regard to universality and equal access. This brings in the whole matter of extra billing. However, it is not my intent to discuss that today.

• (1820)

I would like to hear what the Hon. Member has to say on behalf of the Ministry of National Health and Welfare concerning the status of the Canada Health Act. At this point, it is mysterious. People are writing letters about it and wondering about its contents. All we have is the draft the Canadian Medical Association is sending around to various Members of Parliament and to the public. It has no official status. We would like to know what the status of those negotiations is, and what the Government intends to do in the meantime, through legislation such as a Canada Health Act, to deal with this very dangerous precedent set by the Ontario Progressive Conservative Government. This is a precedent for the further privatization and commercialization of medicare in Ontario, a province where, I must say with a great deal of regret, medicare is severely under attack by a Government that obviously is not philosophically committed to the principle, and continues to charge premiums and so on. What does the Government intend to do about this?

[Translation]

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is understandable that the Hon. Member should talk and behave like this, for far from his interests and concerns are the hospital care and services for the people in the Hawkesbury area. Surely the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) would not object to better hospital care or the construction of a new hospital in his region; why, then, does he persist in his opposition concerning the Hawkesbury situation?

[English]

In January, 1983, the Board of the Hawkesbury and District General Hospital entered into a 12-year contract with a private firm, American Medical International (Canada) Limited to manage the hospital's operations. This arrangement has been the focus of concern of some Canadians.

I must point out that the establishment, maintenance and management of hospitals is an exclusive provincial responsibility under Section 92(7) of the Constitution Act, 1867.

It has been alleged that the contract between AMI (Canada) Limited and the Board of the Hawkesbury and District General Hospital violates the principle of public administration of the national Medical Care Program. I wish to point out that the principle of "public administration," which appears in the Medical Care Act (Canada) refers to "a medical care insurance plan of a province." It requires the plan to be administered and operated on a non-profit basis by a public authority appointed or designated by the Government of the Province.

In any event, there is no comparable provision under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act (Canada), although, in fact all provincial hospital insurance plans are publicly administered. The Medical Care and the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Acts cannot be interpreted as meaning that medical practitioners cannot make a profit or that hospitals providing publicly-insured services must be publicly owned and operated on a non-profit basis in order for a Province to qualify for federal contributions.

It is reported in the media that Mr. Grossman, the Ontario provincial Minister of Health, said that the Hawkesbury and District General Hospital will be closely monitored to ensure that health care does not suffer under a private management firm. Also, the hiring of AMI is seen as an experiment, and the hospital will be told to break its contract with the firm if it attempts to cut services as a money-saving measure. The hospital will not be permitted to charge for any insured services or to extra-bill patients, and it will be dealt with in exactly the same way as every other hospital in Ontario. All measures taken by AMI must be approved by the hospital board.

Hospital officials and the Ontario Ministry of Health officials are reported to feel that the contract will not result in a deterioration of patient care. In fact, it is hoped and believed that the quality of care will improve under increased management efficiency.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.24 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AGRICULTURE

RE-EVALUATION SOUGHT OF FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOAN POLICY

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Madam Speaker, Canada's agricultural industry is one of the major sectors of our economy, in which many billions of dollars are invested. Today, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), with the co-operation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), to the fact that during 1981-82, over a thousand farmers had to take out farm loans at 16.75 per cent for periods of from 25 to 29 years.

Since the economic situation seems to have stabilized as far as interest rates are concerned—a fortunate result of the Government's 6 and 5 policy—I would like to see a re-assessment by the Farm Credit Corporation of a procedure that would enable these farmers to continue their farming operations on financial terms that would provide for more equitable interest rates. For instance, in the case of mortgages for a single-family dwelling, at a time when interest rates were rising, loans were contracted for a period not exceeding three years. I would like to see the same conditions apply to loans contracted by farmers with the Farm Credit Corporation.

FINANCE

CALL FOR REMOVAL OF TAX ON FARM FUELS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise on a serious matter facing the Canadian people, that being the high cost of fuel in Canada. Concerning the price of a gallon of gasoline, 66 per cent goes toward government tax, leaving 34 per cent to the industry.

Some Hon. Members: Provincial!

Mr. Gustafson: Let us make no mistake about who is the culprit in causing the high cost of fuel in Canada. The cost of fuel in the United States is 30 per cent less, operating at world price. The comparison is very plain. The total government tax in the United States is 12 per cent of the cost of the fuel, while the total percentage of tax in Canada is 66 per cent of the cost of a gallon of gasoline.

In the case of the farmers' fuel, the federal tax is 60 cents a gallon. This heavy handed Government tax is having a counterproductive impact on the farming industry in Canada at a time when farmers can least afford it. I call on the Government to remove immediately the federal sales tax on farm fuel, before farmers begin spring seeding.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Wunderbar!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PAYMENT OF BENEFITS TO SHORT-TERM FARM WORKERS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my statement concerns unemployment insurance and short-term farm work. January 1, 1983, was a very important day for thousands of short-term farm workers in Canada. It was on that day that these workers officially ceased being second class citizens in the eyes of the Government and were given the same wage insurance rights as other workers in Canada. According to statements made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) in the House last week, that equity might be short lived.

On March 7 and March 9 the Minister said that he would be drafting new UI regulations which would again force short-term farm workers to work for the same employer for much longer periods of time than other Canadians before their earnings could be insured. My colleagues and I condemn this latest flip-flop on UI which will deprive short-term workers, who are among the poorest paid workers in all Canada, of decent insurance protection.

As everyone knows, farm workers do backbreaking, insecure, and often very dangerous work. We therefore call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration to shelve any proposals to create new UI loopholes until he has met with and studied the proposals of the representatives and associations of the farm workers who would be disadvantaged by regressive amendments.

OLYMPIC GAMES

DEMAND FOR PASSAGE OF LOTTERY FUNDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Madam Speaker, yesterday it was reported in the Ottawa Citizen that the President of the Canadian Olympic Association, Mr. Roger Jackson, is "fed up" with the Progressive Conservative MPs—

Mr. Lewis: He got hit by an oar.

Mr. Dingwall: —whom he blames for delaying passage of the Athletic Contests and Events Pools Act. As Hon. Members are aware, particularly the 20 Conservative MPs from the Province of Alberta, the Calgary Olympics Games are five short years away. With the announcement of the Sports Pool in 1981, we saw the federal Government making a substantial commitment involving upwards of $200 million. As all Hon. Members are also aware, revenues from this Pool would replace funds previously available from Loto Canada, which the short-lived Conservative Government handed over to the Provinces in 1979.

It is now time to reach an agreement that the legislation be completed in one day.

Mr. Lewis: Call it.

Mr. Dingwall: It is deplorable that the Conservatives are trying to make political gain at the expense of amateur athletics and, in particular, at the expense of the Province of Alberta. I therefore urge that all Conservatives—

Mr. Lewis: Call it.

Mr. Dingwall: —particularly those from the Province of Alberta, halt their political gamesmanship and allow the legislation to be completed in one day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT ON RATINGS AND REVENUES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I could not believe my eyes this morning when I read in The Globe and Mail the remarks attributed to the President of the CBC, Pierre Juneau. The news story stated that Mr. Juneau shrugged his shoulders and dismissed complaints that the public network is losing viewers, and millions of dollars. Mr. Juneau had an excellent teacher, and he is an apt pupil in the art of shrugging. That is no excuse for his actions.

This year the CBC will receive $820 million from the public purse, an increase of $82.6 million from last year. The dollars go up and the viewers go down. If he is not deterred by this jarring prospect, I am, as are millions of Canadians.

If Mr. Juneau is not interested in ratings and revenues, why not vacate the competitive TV and radio coverage areas altogether, leaving them to the private operators, and concentrate on expanding or improving service in the remote and forgotten areas in this vast country and, in the process, cut drastically the tax dollars required to keep the Corporation afloat.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

ANXIETY ABOUT CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, the extensive revulsion against the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada is an act of great symbolism. It is symbolic of the apprehension and fear of nuclear annihilation.

This anxiety, this fear, this danger, come not from delivery systems such as trucks, ships, submarines, airplanes, rockets, space ships, short and long-range missiles, or even Cruise missiles, most of which were developed through joint international co-operation. Canada has enjoyed virtually unlimited access to American technology. This fear and anxiety result from nuclear warheads, fission and fusion, which have now multiplied unchecked in an almost crazy, insane, mad progression. This progression must be checked and reversed. Summit level meetings are vital and mandatory.

The Cruise missile is a highly sophisticated delivery system. It represents the dawn of a new age of robotics which will eventually be used in space exploration. This new technology is so vast, and potentially so rewarding, that Canada should not hesitate to join in partnership with the U.S. in its development and testing, and at the same time fulfil our NATO commitments.

The Cruise missile is a means of destruction when it carries a nuclear warhead. The task is to do away with nuclear warheads and their deployment.

All technological development can be used for good or evil, for construction or destruction. The choice is always man's.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

PARLIAMENT

PARLIAMENTARIANS FOR WORLD ORDER—CONDEMNATION OF EXPULSION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, during December, 1982, the Inter-Parliamentary Advisory Council met and expelled the Parliamentarians for World Order as a parliamentary association. They met on that occasion without notice or invitation to the Parliamentarians for World Order, and did not advise them of their decision until February of this year. On that occasion that Advisory Council was made up of eight Members of Parliament and two Senators, none of whom are appointed directly by this House, or mandated by this House, to accept or expel parliamentary associations, or to establish criteria.

The Parliamentarians for World Order is a parliamentary association composed of 85 Members of Parliament and 20 Senators, and exists in several countries around the world. It is dedicated to development issues, disarmament and other peace issues, and has had a very active role here in Parliament for several years. If there is to be a committee to accept and expel parliamentary associations and to set criteria for them, then that committee must be appointed by this House, and report to this House.

EDUCATION

LEVEL OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, Canadians are justifiably proud of their education system. While the Provinces have jurisdiction over education, the Government of Canada long ago recognized that financial support for education was in the national interest. Federal responsibility for education was not only voluntarily assumed, the formula for contribution was enshrined in a Statute of the Parliament of Canada. Now the Government of Canada is abdicating responsibility for education.

The Minister of Finance has announced cutbacks in financial assistance for post secondary education that will cause havoc for Canadian universities. More important, the cutbacks will cause severe hardships for the thousands of students whose hope for the future is the realization of their educational goals. In most cases neither the students nor their families can assume the financial burden that will result from drastic increases in tuition fees.

Specifically, the Minister of Finance has cut the required assistance from the statutory increase of 11.9 per cent to an arbitrary level of less than 7 per cent to comply with the so-called six and five program. This arbitrary cutback will leave a shortfall of at least $100 million in the financial assistance required for post-secondary institutions. No wonder 26,000 university teachers and the 450,000 members of the Canadian Federation of Students are upset. The former Secretary of State promised to apply the six and five formula to limit increases in tuition fees. Instead, the Liberal Government's action will escalate tuition fees beyond the reach of many young Canadians.

THE ECONOMY

FIRST MINISTERS' DISCUSSIONS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime MInister, of the Deputy Prime Minister and of the Minister of Finance, I will direct my questions to the Acting Prime Minister. Last night the Prime Minister dined with the provincial Premiers to discuss the economic problems faced by Canadians who have experienced their worst winter in 50 years. Canadians increasingly have the feeling that their Governments cannot or will not help them, or cope with their problems. Can the Acting Prime Minister report to the House the results of these discussions, to allay the fear of Canadians that nothing will be done to help them at this time?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Yes, Madam Speaker. I received a phone call from the Prime Minister a few moments ago. He told me that the meeting with the Premiers on the economic situation had taken place. I have a list of the subjects that were discussed. He also told me that no agreement had been reached on a meeting on a federal-provincial basis on the economy, but instructions had been given to prepare such a meeting. In the coming weeks, should it be assessed by the Prime Minister that such a meeting would be beneficial, such a meeting would be held.

REQUEST FOR SPRING MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I will address my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. The Acting Prime Minister has just told the House that the Government is thinking of holding a meeting with the Premiers. Since the Minister of Finance has not yet set the date for his budget, and since he has emphasized the need to consult with Canadians, is he willing to support a Spring economic summit as the Premiers suggest?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I first want to join the Hon. Member for Mississauga South in wishing the new finance critic well. I hope we will have a long, lasting, and happy experience together—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —and the same kind of relationship too. I remind the Hon. Member that I met with the provincial Ministers of Finance twice already in relation to the budget, once in December and again a couple of weeks ago in Toronto. As she knows, I have had extensive consultations with a number of groups, associations, and economic agents in the country. My counterparts, the Provincial Ministers of Finance, speak for their Governments just as I am entitled to speak for the Government of Canada on matters having to do with our responsibilities in the economic field.

At these two meetings with the Finance Ministers there were excellent opportunities for exchanges on the proposals, suggestions, and plans of the provincial Governments concerned, just as much as if the meetings had taken place between First Ministers, I would suggest. If the First Ministers decide to have a meeting on economic matters, obviously it is up to them to decide. I am sure the Finance Ministers will be very happy to support their efforts in that regard.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I accept the proposal of the Minister of Finance for a long life. I hope it does not involve the late nights such as we had last night when our committee met until 2 a.m.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

REQUEST THAT ECONOMIC SUMMIT MEETING BE HELD IMMEDIATELY

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance may feel that his discussions with his provincial colleagues satisfy his own requirements. Clearly the Premiers of the Provinces feel the need for an economic summit.

• (1420)

There are a half million Canadians who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits. The unemployment rate for young Canadians is about 21 per cent, and more than half a million students will be looking for summer jobs. Why wait for this kind of economic summit? Why not have it now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): For a very good reason, Madam Speaker. It seems that the First Ministers themselves have concluded that, if such a meeting were to take place, it should take place only in the context of a well prepared meeting. They may need a few weeks or maybe a few months to prepare for that particular kind of meeting. But, again, one should not be under any particular illusion that a First Ministers' meeting by itself is going to change an economic situation which is dependent on many factors, both domestic and international, and the Hon. Member knows that very well.

As to our late experience last night, I did not find it that unpleasant.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance who has been in his present portfolio for six months. During that period we have witnessed unemployment rising to its present level, which is 42 per cent higher than a year ago. A Gallup poll shows that 50 per cent of Canadians believe they are going to be affected by unemployment at some level through their family connections.

Would the Minister indicate why he continues to delay giving an economic over-view to Parliament similar to the over-view of November, 1981? That is the last one we had. Also, why can he not produce a budget to try to relieve the economic malaise which we have in this country? The Conference Board is now predicting unemployment is not going to go down this year, that it is going to go up still higher. If he cannot do the job, why does he not get out?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member could have concluded his question by adding that, since my appointment we have seen a very large decline in interest rates, a very large decline in the inflation rate, housing starts have increased quite significantly, and we have seen the largest trade surplus in Canada's history taking place. We also have a very substantial increase in consumer and business confidence as shown by all surveys.

These are encouraging signs which are with us and my purpose is, indeed, to try to continue those trends and even to speed them up.

I believe one way of speeding up those trends would be for the Opposition to pass the Income Tax Act amendments which are before the House. That would lead to refunds of about $6 billion to Canadians, thereby encouraging those Canadians either to pay those debts they may have at the present time or spend more on consumer goods, which would help the recovery. That is one way whereby the Opposition could help Canadians in contributing to recovery quite quickly.

As far as I am concerned, once these measures have been passed in the House, I will be very happy to bring forward the budget.

INQUIRY RESPECTING MINISTER'S INTENTIONS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance must know by this time that the Canadian public do not want any more rhetoric. They want some action. The farmers who are fighting for survival, the fishermen and the small businessmen, want some type of action which would indicate that the slump, which The Economist of England says is a self-inflicted slump by the federal Government of Canada, might end. Would the Minister answer my question? Why can he not bring in a suitable budget to relieve this malaise into which his Government has got us?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe that the greatest source of malaise is probably the rhetoric of the Hon. Member. I would remind him that, since June last year, much has been done to improve the situation of small businesses, fishermen, farmers as well as all Canadians generally, thanks to the sharp decline in interest rates which have gone down by more than 8 per cent during that time, 800 points all told. In other words, each Canadian in business, be he a farmer or a mortgage, has benefited from a significant decrease in interest rates in recent months, thanks to the policy of the Canadian Government and that of other industrialized countries, including the United States.

Madam Speaker, those measures have been a factor in the rising number of housing starts in Canada, they have given renewed confidence to businessmen and consumers alike, and they have contributed to the steep decrease in the inflation rate in Canada, as evidenced by the fact that the cost of living went up by only 6 per cent since last June as compared with about 12 per cent in previous months. Such are the concrete measures which we have taken and which have given tangible results for consumers and all Canadians. In any case, the rhetoric of the Hon. Member can hardly be a substitute for those measures we have taken since then.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT PRICES BE ROLLED BACK

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy. I know he was talking about oil prices over lunch, and I would just like to put the following proposition to him. The Canada-Alberta Energy Agreement provides that the price of Canadian oil will not exceed 75 per cent of the world price. In a press release on September 18, 1981, the Ministers of Energy for Canada and Alberta agreed to roll back the price of oil should it exceed 75 per cent of the world price. In the National Energy Program Update, consumers were promised that they would receive the benefit of any rollback in energy prices. We are not asking the Minister to change the agreement unilaterally, we simply want him to live up to it.

Would the Minister agree to give Canadians the rollback in energy prices they are entitled to, $3 a barrel, which will provide the stimulus that the Canadian economy needs now?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the view held by the Hon. Member about the agreement is the same as mine, but Premier Lougheed of Alberta does not think the same. He says the agreement he signed two years ago was at a time when the pressure on prices was upward and he never intended, in signing the agreement, to have a decline in prices. We are having an honest disagreement with Mr. Lougheed and we have decided to debate it. The Hon. Member says we should not unilaterally break the agreement. I agree with him, and that is why I will be discussing this problem with Mr. Zaozirny on Friday.

REQUEST THAT TERMS OF OIL PRICING AGREEMENT BE OBSERVED

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, the Minister's response seems to indicate that there are going to be meetings on this matter for a period of time. But if the Government cuts the price of oil by $3 a barrel, it would immediately stimulate the Canadian economy by a non-inflationary $1.5 billion. B.C. would benefit by $190 million; the Prairies, $340 million; Ontario and Quebec, $930 million; and Atlantic Canada, $200 million.

Would the Minister give this House some assurance that he knows what is going on, and that he will live up to a commitment which says that, in the event of a price decrease, Canadians get a rollback?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I think the Hon. Member can make that statement, but I have to live by his words when he says not to break the agreement unilaterally. There is a disagreement between Alberta and this Government and the Hon. Member would not want me to act unilaterally. He will want me to discuss this matter with the Government of Alberta before reaching a definitive conclusion. That is exactly what I am doing, and I am very pleased to see that the Hon. Member does not want me to break the agreement unilaterally.

REQUEST FOR NEW NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, we are not asking the Minister to break the agreement unilaterally. The agreement is very clear. The press release is very clear. The National Energy Update is very clear. Canadians are entitled to a rollback, and the Minister cannot deny that. But even beyond that is the chaos in our national energy policy. Would the Minister undertake in this House that he will try to give us a third attempt at a national energy policy, something that we can all live by in this country?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): That is exactly what I want to do, Madam Speaker, and that is why I think we have to discuss with the provinces if we want to find a rational solution to that problem. In my opinion, the Province of Alberta is not the only one which is arguing that we should not roll back the price of old oil in Canada despite the lower international price, there is also the Premier of Saskatchewan who shares similar views. Strangely enough, even though there is a new Government in Saskatchewan, the position of that province remains the same. However, the Members of the New Democratic Party have changed their position now that they are no longer in Government in Saskatchewan.

THE ECONOMY

REPORTED STATEMENT BY NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. He will know that the Premier of Newfoundland is reported as having said that the Prime Minister and the Premiers agreed that the recovery would be short-lived, 18 to 24 months at best, after which the country would slide back into a prolonged bout of high unemployment and low productivity.

Does the Minister of Finance subscribe to the consensus which has apparently developed among First Ministers and, if so, notwithstanding the position he has taken earlier in the House, is it his intention to try to achieve some kind of consensus with the Provinces on a common strategy to cope with this mounting crisis?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, out of experience I would like to check with the Prime Minister about the consensus arrived at at the meeting rather than rely on the words of Premier Peckford.

Mr. Nielsen: Write him a letter.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, that kind of attitude on the part of the Minister of Finance of Canada is hardly helpful in this sort of situation.

PLIGHT OF PEOPLE ON WELFARE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Press reports say that 1.8 million Canadians are now on the welfare rolls of the country. That is 1.8 million men, women and children are on welfare, and last year alone 640,000 Canadians were added to the ranks of the poverty stricken of this country. In a survey conducted in January 50 per cent of those surveyed by Gallup said they would be touched directly or indirectly by unemployment. That is the state of this nation today. I want to ask the Minister of Finance, who surely has some responsibility here, what hope he can offer to those on welfare, to the unemployed, and to those forced on to the poverty rolls?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will surely recall what Premier Peckford used to say about him during the last election campaign. Surely he would not want me to believe a press report on what Premier Peckford said about a possible consensus, after knowing what the Premier had said about the Hon. Member when he was Minister of Fisheries in the former Government.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I believe that the House and the country are entitled to a reply from the Minister of Finance to this most serious question. What is left of his reputation is on the line here.

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF FINANCE MINISTERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I am going to ask the Minister of Finance if he intends to meet with his provincial counterparts at least to address the problem of the two million Canadians who are on the welfare rolls, for which the Provinces have to pick up half the tab.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member has been lately. I met with my provincial colleagues last December and again two weeks ago, to address those very questions.

TRANSPORT

CN—POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF PERSONNEL FROM MONTREAL TO TORONTO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister is no doubt aware of the fact that employees of the CN Express Department in Montreal are very concerned about the possibility of this department being transferred to Toronto. In the interest of these employees who are seriously worried about the future, could the Minister inform the House whether he is aware of CN's plans and what he intends to do about it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Yes, Madam Speaker, I am aware of CN's intentions. We must look at the facts. Last year, CN Express lost $30 million, and one of the reasons was that they were unable to compete with entrepreneurs in the private sector. That led to a plan to merge CN Express and CN trucking services. A study revealed that the centre of operations, and therefore, what might become CN Headquarters for this sector, should be located in the Toronto area. I was told about this, and I said that it was a subject of considerable concern to the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister. No decision has been made as yet. I have also asked CN to see whether it would not be possible to achieve a compromise.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker—and this also concerns the Minister of Transport—not long ago, the Member for La Prairie, in a paper he drafted, deplored the fact that for ten years Air Canada had been toying with the idea of transferring some of its activities from Montreal or Quebec to Ontario. He also urged the Minister of Transport to force Air Canada to make a statement on this subject. Has the Minister of Transport asked Air Canada to make public, or to comment on, the paper presented by the Member for La Prairie?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, the Member for La Prairie and myself have been having a very friendly discussion about this for some weeks now. I maintain that the percentage of Air Canada employees working in Montreal has not changed in ten years, and that Air Canada has invested more in Montreal than it has in Toronto, and there are other examples. However, I seem to be unable to convince my friend, the Member for La Prairie and perhaps others as well. Furthermore, I have suggested several times that the President of Air Canada be invited to appear before the Transport Committee and provide a detailed explanation, so that we would all have a better basis on which to judge this question.

HOUSING

CUT IN FUNDING FOR SOCIAL HOUSING IN ONTARIO

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for housing. Parliament is in the process of finalizing the adoption of a Bill which will allow the Government to borrow another $19 billion. Under present economic conditions which have created an increase in the number of people who require social housing, why has CMHC slashed funding by 2,500 units? For example, in Ontario 23 per cent of the budget was slashed. What criteria did the Government use for this, and does the Government have to go deeper in the red in order to meet our social requirements?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have explained in the House before that the budget was set at 25,000 units some years ago. We were in the position of borrowing from future years. In fact some years we reached the 30,000 level. The Department of Finance, with which we had agreed that these units would eventually be paid back, is now looking at a request I have put forward to delay repayment. I hope that I will soon be able to announce some improvement.

The reality is that we have not cut back; we have adjusted, as we indicated all along. We may decide, in consultation with the Minister of Finance, to delay the repayment of these units.

The Provinces that have been complaining about this issue get off rather lightly from their responsibility for social housing. Some have complained rather bitterly that we have adjusted our expenditures. I have seen very little evidence that many of them have improved on their offers.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, is the Minister suggesting to the Provinces that they should remove the ceiling on rental housing so that the contractors can go to work and start constructing houses? This would have the effect of doubling the rental rates for these units. Is that what he is suggesting?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I suggest that the Provinces should also play a leading role in this area of social housing. We have been doing our share, and even more.

SHORTAGE OF SOCIAL HOUSING IN MONTREAL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Public Works and deals with social housing. In the City of Montreal 16,000 persons are waiting to get into low-cost units. Last year the City of Montreal was only able to build 400 units, and this year the number has been increased to approximately 450 units. It is anticipated that within the next two or three years 200,000 people in the greater Montreal area will need decent housing. How can the Minister justify cutbacks in social housing at this critical time?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the difficulty with the Hon. Member's rhetoric is that he insists on using a word which I have explained very carefully, that in the last three years we have gone over the budget which was allocated and, in fact, we may decide to put off for another year or two the restoration of the level we had been assigned.

• (1440)

The reality is that the present social housing program we are reviewing is to some extent akin to a lottery. Those who are lucky enough to be in have done very well, but there are many who are waiting. This is why I am reviewing it. I would like to know what will be the Hon. Member's position when in fact we review the program and perhaps try to distribute more fairly the rather large amounts we have assigned to it at present.

Mr. Blackburn: The Minister seems to forget the fact that investment in housing is an investment. For every one job in the housing industry, three other jobs are created. This is not just a humanitarian approach; it makes good business sense.

NON-PROFIT CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, with a demand in any given year for 10,000 non-profit co-op units in the country, why does the Minister steadfastly refuse, as did his predecessor, to promote low-cost, co-op public housing when it fulfils a very, very important need from coast to coast?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will really have to make up his mind. If he wants to create jobs, he cannot look only or mainly to the social housing budget. In reality it is a very expensive program for every unit which is constructed. In that sense he will have to decide whether he wants to create jobs and invest in that part of the economy, or whether he wants to multiply the number of co-operative units.

I might say that we have led the way in social housing, and I hope that other partners, including the municipalities, will join us.

Oral Questions

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONVENE FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Some time ago, in recognition of the problem which exists with respect to social and co-operative housing, and low vacancy rates in the National Capital area and across the country, I asked the Minister whether he intended to convene a federal-provincial conference with respect to housing, and facing these problems. He told me that he would look into the matter. Has he done so? What is his intention with respect to calling together all the partners in providing housing for Canadians?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I had a meeting with a number of my colleagues at the HUDAC conference in Vancouver. We discussed whether it would be wise for us to get together before, during, or after the budget period. It was agreed that many provincial housing Ministers would want to know what would be the positions of their Ministers of Finance vis-à-vis housing and that in fact we should let the situation develop normally.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S INTENTIONS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, is the Minister telling the House that, in effect, the provincial Ministers have said they will await the budget, that the Minister himself feels that we should await the budget, that the question with respect to a federal-provincial conference on housing is still an open one in terms of the Government, and that that matter is still something which will be considered by the Minister responsible for housing?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the provincial Ministers of housing have done what I have done. They have had close consultations with their Ministers of Finance. I hope out of that will come progress in the area we are discussing.

I might say to the Hon. Member that his question may mislead the House. The reality is that housing starts have improved quite dramatically. In fact it is one of the positive areas of the economy at this time.

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT OF MAISLIN INDUSTRIES

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As part of the $34 million loan guarantee made by the Government to Maislin Trucking, one condition was that there would be a president appointed acceptable to the company and to the Government of Canada. Could the Minister inform the House whether the appointment of Dick, or R. T. Skillinger, from New Bedford, Massachusetts, formerly of Hemingway Trucking, was acceptable to the Government?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Madam Speaker.

APPOINTEE'S EXPERIENCE

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, it may be because of the need for experience, but could the Minister explain to the House why it was Mr. Skillinger from Hemingway Trucking, a company which has been operating in bankruptcy under Section 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Act since July 28, 1982? Is this person the man they thought they should have, because of his experience in bankruptcy, to continue to lead Maislin?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, obviously Maislin wanted to hire as competent an individual as it could possibly find on the market because it wants the company to survive. We also want the company to survive because that job preservation is very important to the country. Consequently, after a serious search for a president of the corporation, Mr. Skillinger was the individual thought to be the best person available. We also had some of our people interview him and we felt that he had the qualifications based on the applicants available for the job.

PETRO-CANADA

REPORTED PURCHASE OF ROMANIAN MANUFACTURED PIPE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I ask him to respond to a rather disturbing report which I have received from my constituency indicating that Petro-Canada has literally bought miles and miles, truckloads and truckloads of casing pipe and surface pipe from Romania, and that this pipe is even hauled up to northern British Columbia from Texas, I think, by an American trucking company? Would the Minister comment on that? Would he undertake to investigate the matter and to tell the House whether there is any kind of procurement policy to which the people's oil company is required to adhere?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, of course I am not aware of this problem. Certainly I will inquire about it and report to the Hon. Member. I am glad the Hon. Member sees a role in Canadian society for Petro-Canada. Some of the Members of his own Party did not want Petro-Canada at all.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

AUDIT OF MORTGAGE PORTFOLIO MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. No doubt the Minister knows that I have some questions on the Order Paper relating to the mortgage portfolio management system. Could he tell the House whether the audit of that program has been completed, what are the costs in ball-park figures, and whether he is satisfied with the program as to its efficiency and general cost effectiveness.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will permit me to take this question as notice. I will look into it.

THE ADMINISTRATION

EBCO INDUSTRIES LTD.—STATEMENT BY FORMER MINISTER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I have given him short notice of it. It refers to the statement which I made on Mr. Norman Cafik yesterday. Two hours ago Mr. Cafik said on television in British Columbia that he was called in to help his company get the $6.7 million DIPP grant. He said, "My job had nothing to do with this sort of thing. I was called in. I used my knowledge of Government to tell them", that is the company, "what to do and how to do it".

Would the Minister agree that that is a clear example of lobbying? Will he also agree to table all correspondence and minutes of any meetings held between Mr. Cafik and the then responsible Minister, the President of the Treasury Board?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, this morning I had a chance to read the allegations of the Hon. Member in the press and I had a preliminary investigation undertaken. I am advised that our Department dealt with this company long before Mr. Cafik was ever employed by the firm. As a matter of fact it received financial assistance from the Government of Canada through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce long before Mr. Cafik was employed by the company. I want to also indicate to the Hon. Member that our relations with the company have not changed since Mr. Cafik's employment.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister was not listening to what Mr. Cafik said. He said that he was called in especially to use his knowledge.

ROLE OF FORMER MINISTER OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Given the fact that Mr. Cafik also said that he met personally with the present President of Treasury Board before the two-year period was over, that the contract was dated exactly two years after he quit Government, and that in fact he saw the Minister and made representations, would the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce not agree that the previous Minister—I am not referring to Mr. Cafik, but to the previous Minister responsible, who is now the President of Treasury Board—breached the guidelines by giving privileged access in this matter? Will he now agree that the Government should in fact refer this matter, the Gillespie matter, and the matter of the conflict of interest guidelines, to a House of Commons Committee for examination?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, with the greatest respect to the Hon. Member, as I understood his preamble, he was getting his information third-hand from the media who allegedly heard it from Mr. Cafik. I will check that out with Mr. Cafik. I want to also remind the Hon. Member that Mr. Cafik was, as I recall, the Minister of Multiculturalism and not the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion. However, I will have a discussion with Mr. Cafik and get back to the Hon. Member.

ENERGY

FUNDING FOR BEAUFORT SEA RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. How does the Minister justify allocating $1.5 billion to the development of resources in the Beaufort Sea while only allocating $40 million for the development of human resources, our greatest human resource being the unemployed youth of our country?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, quite frankly, I wonder where the Hon. Member got those figures. We now have a general program of incentives for the oil industry which benefits all companies in Canada, especially Canadian companies. The money spent by oil companies in Canada is beneficial to Canadian workers. As the Hon. Member himself has regularly spoken in this House over the last few years about the problems of the oil industry and the resulting unemployment, I am surprised at his rising today to express his concerns over a possible resumption of activity in the oil industry.

Regarding assistance to the unemployed in Canada, Madam Speaker, I remind him that the Canadian government has allocated over $2 billion in its budget to help those who are looking for work through direct job creation programs, not to mention the $8.6 billion paid to the unemployed last year.

[English]

Mr. Shields: I am complaining about the insensitivity of the Government to the plight of the young people across the country who are facing unemployment. That is what I am complaining about.

DEVELOPMENT OF ALBERTA OIL SANDS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. At a small Liberal meeting held on the weekend in southern Alberta, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce announced that there would be two projects going ahead in northeastern Alberta for the development of the oil sands. Does the Minister know of this new development in his Department and, if so, would he elaborate and tell us where these projects would be developed?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as I said, there are some negotiations taking place at this time between the industry and the Alberta Government on some projects in Alberta. When we are ready to give more specific information, we will do so. Some announcements might be made quite soon, and others might take some time. Of course the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce knows that the federal Government will do everything possible to make sure that these programs go ahead.

REPORT OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He was reported as saying in Lethbridge, "New life could be breathed into Alberta heavy oil projects within the year." Can that statement be taken seriously, or was the Minister more inclined to be attempting to breath new life into the Liberal Party of Alberta?

If it is the former case, would he indicate where and what number of jobs will be created, as well as indicating what changes are contemplated in the National Energy Program, since that would give some hope to the many industries associated with the oil industry which clearly have their backs against the wall?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the question that I was responding to when I was in Alberta was about the two megaprojects, Alsands and Cold Lake. We on this side of the House happen to have more confidence in the future of the economy than hon. colleagues on the other side. I indicated that in major capital projects—and I did not mention only megaprojects specifically—which we categorized as over $100 million, there has been a heightened interest from the principals of many of these projects during the past three or four months.

I and my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, have had several meetings with the principals of some of these projects who are now rethinking their possibilities. Thus we are very confident that in the future some of these projects which have been postponed because of the international economic situation will be undertaken.

REQUEST FOR FORECAST OF POSSIBLE EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, surely it is time to separate the fluff from fact. If the Minister has something positive to say about future development, can he tell us how many jobs will be created, where they will be created, and what kind of changes will be made to the National Energy Program so that these projects can go ahead?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I was just trying to provide a little bright light out there in Alberta because I know some of the MPs from Alberta who sit here in the House are obviously very negative about the economic future of the country. I was just trying to provide some optimism based on the discussions that my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I have had.

I am surprised that the Member for Vegreville, who is a former businessman, would want me to indicate in public confidential commercial information discussed between business people and the Government of Canada. I am a little amazed at the Hon. Member's request.

HOUSING

ASSISTANCE PROGRAM TERMINATION DATE—EFFECT ON NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for housing. Bearing in mind that a number of new Canadian homebuilders would like to receive the $3,000 grant for homes, and that the Government's policy is that the footings have to be in the ground before April 30, and since there is still frost in the ground in much of Canada by April 30, how much longer will the Minister continue Southern Canadian policies whereby northern Canadians cannot live with those policies? Is he intending to send the Minister of Agriculture out to speak Chinook on the building sites, or have the Prime Minister wrestle the foundations into the ground?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have undertaken to examine this definition of demarkation lines and we are doing so. I hope to come up with a solution. I might say to the Hon. Member that I will not do anything to prevent people from putting in foundations and getting a fair chance, if I can avoid it.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister, bearing in mind that it costs almost as much as the $3,000 to get those footings into the ground, when will the Liberals stop adopting the policy that they will give to those who should get, on the basis that those who have got have to give back that which they got in order to get that which they got, such that that what they got was for nought?

[Translation]

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I shall check the exact translation of what the Hon. Member has just said. However, I must tell him that this program was designed to promote the construction of residential buildings and that we intend to maintain this policy.

INDUSTRY AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

APPLICATION TO FIRESTONE TIRE AND RUBBER COMPANY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Minister will recall that approximately one year ago the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development announced with great fanfare an ILAP grant for the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company. We have seen no results from that as yet, even though there was supposed to be money forthcoming. I understand that some problems are now developing. Can the Minister tell us how long it will be before the rationalization process that is to be undertaken can begin? How long will it be before the money will be made available?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I understand it, the Firestone Company has already undertaken some of the modernization program that we agreed to when my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, made the announcement.

We have extended the ILAP application because some of the wording of the agreement is still to be worked out with the company. We expect to resolve this within the next couple of weeks.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT IN ALBERTA

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary to an earlier question asked by my colleague from Vegreville regarding the two so-called mega-projects in Alberta. As I read the report in the newspaper, the Minister was quoted as saying that these two projects in excess of $100 million would be on stream before the end of the year. Is that what he said, that they would be on stream before the end of the year?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to provide the Hon. Member with a copy of the tape of that interview. No, I did not even mention those two specific projects at all.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Late last year he told us what his plans were for the taxation of certain northern benefits that had not been taxed before. This created quite a furor. He has received many representations in opposition to those proposals. Could he tell us now whether he has reconsidered these plans and whether he might change them in light of the representations, or preferably get rid of them altogether?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I did in fact announce last year measures concerning the taxation of northern benefits. This was done after consultations and meetings with many organizations and concerned groups. Obviously everyone would rather not pay taxes. However, if we want the country to work and if we want to have some equity in the sharing of responsibilities in Canada, there has to be a distribution of taxes. I announced a decision which will gradually eliminate the inequity of the present system and give some time to the workers involved to negotiate better working conditions with their employers taking into account the adjustment required by the announced tax changes.

I hope that the manner in which this program was announced will allow the workers involved to negotiate better working conditions with their employers and that Canadian taxpayers will no longer be required to finance these benefits to the advantage of employers.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACKASEY—PAID LOBBYIST ALLEGATION IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE"

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Madam Speaker, in a series of articles beginning last Thursday in the Montreal Gazette, it was repeatedly stated that I owned a numbered company, 109609 Canada Limited, and that I was a paid lobbyist. A Member who is a paid lobbyist, soliciting the Government, is breaking the law and has no right to be sitting in the House of Commons.

I have, of course, and I say this with great satisfaction, spent most of my 20 years in public life lobbying. I have lobbied for the elderly, for the underprivileged and for the unemployed. I have lobbied for businessmen, for companies and for industries from one end of Canada to the other, and so has every Member of the House of Commons. Lobbying for constituents and for other Canadians is very certainly not against the law. It is, in fact, a vital part of the responsibility we have as Members.

But, of course, that is not the issue before the House. That is not the accusation. That, of course, is not why I am standing here at this moment. I am standing here because I have been accused of being a paid lobbyist. If I were a paid lobbyist, I would be in violation of the Senate and House of Commons Act. In short, Madam Speaker, I would be a lawbreaker who has no right to be sitting in this House. That is the accusation, and I wish to deal with it right here and now.

Madam Speaker, do I own or have I ever owned this famous numbered company, 109609? My answer is categorical, and my answer is no.

Did I ever directly or indirectly own any share of 109609? My answer is categorical, and my answer is no.

Madam Speaker, was I ever paid or promised payment to lobby for 109609 or for any other company or companies associated with it? My answer is categorical, and my answer is no.

Finally, did I promise, in exchange for payment, direct or indirect, to lobby at some future time for 109609, for Les Ateliers d'usinage Hall Ltée., or for any other company or companies associated with it? My answer is categorical, and my answer is no.

[Translation]

Did I ever agree to be financially rewarded, directly or indirectly, for lobbying on behalf of a numbered company, 109609 Canada Limited, namely, Les Ateliers d'usinage Hall Ltée, or any company associated with it? The answer is no, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Madam Speaker, these false and slanderous accusations in the Montreal Gazette, Quebec's only English daily, have humiliated my family, tarnished my reputation and, if left unchallenged, could even blemish the reputation of this institution and those who serve in it; for as I noted just two weeks ago in debate, the reputation of the House reflects the individual and collective integrity of its Members.

The privileges of this House, of its Members, are privileges which have been accumulated through the centuries, privileges which we guard jealously in this House. One of those privileges which is mine as a Member is to ask the House, my fellow colleagues from all Parties, to accept my word as an honourable gentleman. That is a privilege which is mine, but it is a privilege which I do not intend to abuse or hide behind. I have too much respect for this institution to abuse its privileges.

To remove the blemish on myself and on my family, and any possible reflection on this institution which I respect so much, which dishonesty on my part could cause, I wish to move the following motion:

That the allegations in the Montreal Gazette on March 10, March 11 and March 12 of 1983 that the Hon. Member for Lincoln owned 109609 Company Canada Limited and, through that company, while being a Member of the House of Commons, was a paid lobbyist, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections as soon as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) has been a Member of this House for a good many years—and I was here when he first became a Member—during which time he has established a reputation for fairmindedness and decency, a reputation which all of us can appreciate he would want to preserve.

We have received no notice of his actions today. While we all expected that on the first occasion of his return to the House he would be doing just what he did, we have not had time to consider the terms of reference which he has proposed and which we have heard for the first time today.

I think that he would be the first to agree that it is not only our responsibility but also that of the Chair to consider whether, in the exercise of that responsibility, we can follow our immediate inclination, which would be to accept immediately his motion of reference. However, he has used the word "slanderous", which gives rise to the possibility of court proceedings. That is a question which I believe deserves examination. I am not certain whether or not the bankruptcy proceedings giving rise to the allegations to which he has referred are still ongoing or whether they have been concluded. There may be other investigations, we do not know.

Proceeding with that prudence and in the light of our practices and precedents, there may be an obligation on the part of the Chair to examine that motion and its acceptability. My suggestion to the House would be that we set over until tomorrow the consideration of this motion and, in the meantime, perhaps the Hon. Member would be good enough to provide us with a copy. Perhaps he would also be good enough to speak with me about the circumstances surrounding the areas of concern that I have and that we have with respect to the exercise of the proper responsibilities of Members in dealing, hopefully favourably, with his motion.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that we in the New Democratic Party have respected the Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) in terms of his service in this House over the years. We have differed seriously from time to time but there has never been on our part any questioning of his integrity or of his practice being anything but in complete accordance with the rules of this House.

Therefore, we were very pleased indeed to hear what the Member had to say, to hear his proposal that he rejects categorically the allegations, which are serious and which, as he points out, reflect on all Members of the House, and that they are not only misleading but totally false, in the Hon. Member's words.

On the surface, we like his proposal that the matter be referred, and having noted what the Leader of the Official Opposition has said and that the Hon. Member for Lincoln himself agrees that we should let this motion stand until tomorrow, I would like to support that proposal so that more informal discussions can take place. This would mean that the intent of what the Hon. Member for Lincoln obviously wants is observed, namely, that there should be a complete airing of this matter, which is serious, here in the one body of this country of ours where this matter should be aired, in the House of Commons.

I want to conclude by saying once again for my colleagues that not only did we listen with care to what the Hon. Member had to say, but we deeply and genuinely believe that everything he has had to say will turn out to be completely true.

Madam Speaker: I suppose it is clear to the House that the Hon. Member for Lincoln has simply advised of his intention to move the motion. Technically speaking, there is not before the House a motion to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. There would only be a possibility of moving that motion if the Chair finds a prima facie case of privilege which, upon the advice of all those who have intervened, and indeed because the Chair does need some time to consider this matter, I will take under advisement. I am not promising that by tomorrow I will be in a position to rule on it, but I will certainly do it as expeditiously as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he is able to enlighten me as to when I might expect an answer to starred question No. 4,336 which I put on the Order Paper on May 19. It concerns a case of what appears to be discrimination against a former Lieutenant, Geoffrey Wright, who was in the regular army and has been released and denied admission to the Reserve.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, quite frankly I have absolutely no idea where that question and response thereto stand, but I shall certainly endeavour to find out for the Hon. Member and get back to him as quickly as possible.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As we have a new Acting Parliamentary Secretary I was wondering if I could direct his attention to the fact that question No. 2,042 of January 29, 1981—that is over two years ago—asking the simple question what was the total cost of the Prime Minister's world tour of late 1980-1981, has not been answered. As the Acting Parliamentary Secretary knows, only last evening the Minister of Finance at a committee which he chaired assured us that if we put a question on the Order Paper we would get an answer promptly. I know the Government must be very anxious to answer these questions. Why has this one not been answered?

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I regret very much that we are not 100 per cent perfect in answering every question that has been put to us by all Hon. Members opposite. I guess we have to ask ourselves, can we be expected in all circumstances to respond with alacrity, speed and truth to all questions that are posed to us.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peterson: I would like to come back to the fact that to date we have responded to 3,974 questions. This is 83.9 per cent of all questions that have been asked of this Government and is not a bad record. All of us realize that responding to these questions requires a great deal of research, study and departmental time. The fact is that 3,974 questions have been answered to date and we all know what an expense that is to the taxpayers.

Having said that, I will certainly endeavour to get back to the Hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Acting Parliamentary Secretary says they are perhaps not batting 1,000, but they are batting zero as far as my questions are concerned. There are five other questions, Nos. 3,216, 3,217, 3,218, 3,219 and 3,220, all asking similar questions about the escapades of our Prime Minister in some far away part of the world. When can we get public record information as to what these escapades cost and, in fact, how much of that cost will the public be required to cover?

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, if the question involves the major premise that these trips are merely escapades, I can understand why he does not even deserve an answer to them. My goodness, is there any Head of State who is not called upon to travel around the world in order to keep in touch with their trading partners, allies, those who are committed to defending the free world, along with Canada? These are important trips and I resent very much the fact that the Hon. Member for York-Peel is calling the trips escapades.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING REGISTRATION OF POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull) moved that Bill C-661, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (Registration of Political Parties), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege of presenting Bill C-661, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act and more specifically as it deals with registration of political parties. My explanations will be brief, Mr. Speaker, because I shall also be highlighting a number of facts to demonstrate that eventually, it will be necessary to change the Canada Elections Act, and perhaps also the Income Tax Act, regarding the deductibility of donations to registered political parties.

In order to preserve the national character of federal political parties, this Bill would limit registration to parties that have the required number of candidates distributed in a majority of the provinces.

I shall now refer to the present text of Sub-sections 13(2) and 13(3) of the Canada Elections Act, which reads as follows:

"(2) Upon receipt of an application for registration of a political party pursuant to subsection (1), the Chief Electoral Officer shall examine the application and determine whether the party can be registered under this section and

(a) where he determines that, on the nomination by the party of fifty candidates in accordance with paragraph (3)(a) or (b), whichever is applicable, the party could be registered, so inform the leader of the party—

I shall stop here, since at this point I would like to see a condition that goes further than the requirement of fifty candidates in order to register a political party.

Paragraph (2)(a) of the amended text, that is, the one I am proposing in my Bill, Mr. Speaker, reads, and I quote:

(a) where he determines that, on the nomination by the party of fifty candidates distributed in a majority of the provinces in accordance with paragraph (3)(a) or (b), whichever is applicable, the party could be registered, so inform the leader of the party;—

That is the whole point, Mr. Speaker. It is easy to understand why a political party, if it wants to operate at the national level, should be obliged to field candidates in a majority of the provinces, that is, in five out of six. These are candidates who will be working on the federal scene—if they are elected, of course. Without this obligation, regional or provincial groups, which I would prefer to qualify as local, will use Parliament as a platform for their own specific interests by disrupting or simply paralyzing the proceedings of the House of Commons. Considering the vulnerability of our Standing Orders, I am sure that if a provincial group representing one or more provinces were to be elected and were to operate on the federal scene, this might cause many problems since these parties would bring the normal activities of this House to a complete standstill.

Mr. Speaker, a number of questions were raised by some observers when I presented this Bill. They said the Bill was aimed at preventing the Parti Québécois from going federal.

However, when I read Part III of the new Canada Elections Act on the registration of political parties and also the provision regarding election expenses, I wondered, Mr. Speaker, whether the Parti Québécois was not trying, in a roundabout way, to collect funds from sources other than the voters of the Province of Quebec. Actually, the purpose of registering a national party is simply to be able to collect funds and provide receipts for income tax purposes. Mr. Speaker, when the Parti Québécois applied for registration to the Chief Electoral Officer, it was because it wanted to operate on the federal scene. This means that the application made by Mr. Lévesque, the Leader of the Parti Québécois, will be approved, provided the conditions for registration as a national political party are met. It means that in the next election, to all intents and purposes, Mr. Lévesque will be able to stand for election or field candidates on the federal scene. This also means, Mr. Speaker, that if anyone gives a donation of $100 to the Parti Québécois it would then have the same status nationally or federally as the Progressive Conservative or Liberal or NDP parties that the donor would get a receipt for $100, with which he could then obtain a federal tax rebate of $75. A copy of the receipt would also entitle him to a 50 per cent or $50 rebate on Quebec provincial income tax, under the Quebec Elections Act.

In other words, to all intents and purposes, a supporter who contributes $100 to the Parti Québécois once it has been duly registered as a national party will receive from both levels of Government an income tax deduction of $125. That is why something has to be done about the Income Tax Act to change a situation which will indeed create a serious injustice for all Canadians.

Is the Parti Québécois so hard-pressed that it has to circumvent its own legislation—everybody knows that in the Province of Quebec contributions to political parties are allowed only when made by voters or residents of the Province—and find roundabout ways to go outside the Province of Quebec and raise the funds it needs for its electoral campaigns? Or is it simply trying to take advantage of loopholes in our Income Tax Act once again to fill its election coffers?

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that it is imperative that we plug that loophole in the Canada Elections Act with regard to the representativeness of candidates throughout all of Canada, and the Income Tax Act will have to be amended as well. Otherwise, all Canadians would be financing the elections of the Parti Québécois! I might add that I am talking about the Parti Québécois which is seeking national registration because, as far as I know, it is the only provincial party that is doing so. None of the other provincial political parties, whether they are Liberals or NDP, are registered. That would be unfair to the other parties and a flagrant injustice done to all Canadian taxpayers.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I have referred to the Parti Québécois because it is the only group which is doing this. It may or may not have planned it that way, I do not know, but the fact is that I did notice and I think that others are now aware of that anomaly in the Canada Elections Act. Besides, Mr. Speaker, what is the challenge on the federal scene for those new crusaders who are already breathless as a result of their costly and fratricidal battles for the independence they had promised but were unable to deliver? What would they be accomplishing here other than dying needlessly in a suicidal assault, those supporters of a party whose only legacy to what was once la belle province will be an ephemeral and deceiving pseudo-victory which in fact will become nothing more than a passing illusion? Fortunately, I hope that the passage of time will make people soon forget that they even lived through those years. I urge my colleagues to give serious consideration to this huge loophole in the Canada Elections Act and to defend the national interest which must always be the priority of the House of Commons of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky). I believe it is appropriate that the House be informed that there may be a suggested amendment—I say there may be; it is not before the House at the moment—which would withdraw the Bill and refer the subject matter to a committee. I believe the Hon. Member for Dauphin is entitled to know that that kind of consideration is going on in the Chamber at the moment. I can say nothing further in that regard.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad of the information which you have provided, but I would like to put on the record some of the concerns which we have with respect to Bill C-661. I will perhaps begin there, so that whatever does happen to this Bill, whatever is decided, perhaps some of the concerns we have regarding this Bill will be considered.

I would like to divide my remarks on form and content of this particular Bill. There are some concerns we have with regard to the drafting of the amendment in that there is not necessarily a very clear definition of what is meant by "the majority of the Provinces". I realize a simple majority would be six Provinces, and if that is what we are talking of here, I do have a few questions because there seems to be an omission of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. For our part, we view Canada as including the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, which represents about two-thirds of Canada geographically. This might be one consideration which Hon. Members might want to note when we speak of this amendment in terms of the whole question of "a majority".

In the wording "of a majority of the Provinces", there does not seem to be any amplification. I know that the Hon. Member's intention is to preserve the national character of the federal political Parties, but if we refer to things like the Constitution, there is a requirement that these Provinces would constitute, let us say, 50 per cent of the population. Therefore, if we are talking about a simple majority of the Provinces, one of the considerations would be the population.

If a Party, for example, had candidates in Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, that constitutes six Provinces, but it would represent only 12 per cent to 14 per cent of the population.

So if the intention of the Hon. Member is that the national character of the country be represented, there is some question whether this amendment, as worded, actually does deal with that issue. For example, could we have one candidate in five Provinces and 45 candidates in one Province? Under the strict technical guidelines, would this not constitute a majority of Provinces? Is it still dealing with the intentions of the Hon. Member? We have some questions with regard to the form of this Bill because the complex question of how one divides up the country and how one legitimately apportions these candidates in the country is not covered by this amendment. So we do have several questions, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the form of this amendment, but if, as you suggested, there might be some disposition of the House to refer the matter to committee, I am sure the committee will take into consideration my remarks. I happen to serve on the committee and I would make sure that these matters would be raised.

In addition to the question of form, Mr. Speaker, I would also like, for the benefit of the House, to raise some questions with regard to the content or key elements which are being brought into play here. Now, I know we would probably want to avoid undue extremes in legislation. By that I mean we want to make sure that we do not present any sort of artificial impediments to legitimate Parties which may have regional origins. History shows that Parties like the CCF began on the Prairies, a regional origin, and at the outset may not necessarily have had quite the same sort of national scope envisioned in this Bill. The Progressive Party began in the West. We have various parties with regional beginnings, and I do not know whether this proposed legislation necessarily excludes that; so we would have some questions on the content. On the other hand, I think we are aware that this legislation would permit almost all regionally-based Parties to be registered. I think we appreciate in one sense the intent of the Hon. Member in looking at the question of nationhood, federal Parties and Canada's federal character, but I do want to point out these reservations as to content.

On a sociological basis, Mr. Speaker, we would also want to look at what is done in other countries with regard to registering Parties. For example, I note that the handbook of the House of Commons in Great Britain lists Parties such as the Scottish Nationalist Party, the Official Unionist Party, the United Ulster Unionists and the Ulster Unionist Party. What exactly their status is concerning registration is, of course, something which would require a little bit more research, but if the Mother of Parliament allows, as it were, regional Parties the opportunity to express their concerns and opinions, I am wondering whether we should not be as open-minded.

I know the Hon. Member has expressed some concern about the Pequiste Party in Quebec, but if some of their members were elected to this House, I wonder if rubbing shoulders with people from Manitoba, Saskatchewan or B.C. this would not give them some additional perspective. Before long they might see that some of the perceptions held by other Canadians are valid and some of them might have a change of heart or opinion.

I would like to examine on a philosophical basis whether we want these types of restrictions at this time, Mr. Speaker. We have just come through a very trying period with regard to our Constitution. Included in that Constitution is a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Everyone has the freedom of conscience and religion, the freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media communications, the freedom of peaceful assembly and association. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we could include in freedom of association the question of political association. Would we be placing an unnecessary impediment in the way of people who wish to register a Party?

The third section of the Bill of Rights includes the provision that every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of Members of the house of Commons or legislative assemblies and to be qualified for membership therein. If I were to dovetail the freedom of association with those democratic rights, I wonder whether we would be in violation of those freedoms if we were to place these kinds of restrictions in legislation. I mentioned before that one of the most important positions in this land is that of a private citizen with the right to vote. So on a philosophical basis, Mr. Speaker, I do have some questions as to the content of this particular Bill.

In addition to that, I would point out that in some ways Canada is a democratic model for other countries. I think if that is true we ought to be an ideal model, one that no one is afraid to copy, one which gives the greatest expression to democracy through our political Parties. Keeping that in mind, I wonder whether this particular amendment might not be somewhat restrictive. I know that last night, Mr. Speaker, at the Canada-Europe Association we talked about this whole question of having a conference on democracy and Canada's participation. If we want to use our own Elections Act as a model for democracy, then perhaps this amendment is too restrictive at this time. We may want to reconsider it at some other time, but I am just wondering about it at this time.

The Hon. Member who spoke earlier talked about the problem of certain political Parties being able to receive donations provincially and federally. I am sure that if I talk to him more specifically on this, I would appreciate a bit more the particular problem he is raising. However, we do have provincial Elections Acts which allow us to contribute to the provincial Party as well as the federal Party, so that I can and do contribute to the NDP both federally and provincially. We issued tax credit receipts for both political Parties. However, I cannot claim that twice. I think there are ways of dealing with this to make sure that the taxpayer is not penalized and I am sure other Provinces have similar provisions in their Elections Acts.

I have mentioned our concerns about the form of the Bill and the fact that there is no recognition of the Yukon and Northwest Territories which is especially relevant in light of what is happening today at the conference dealing with aboriginal rights. I think that is a serious omission.

We also have questions about the content of the Bill and the difficulty of trying to relate it to the history of the country and to what is happening in other parliaments. We have been trying to understand our democratic role as citizens of Canada. I wonder if the Bill might not be a little too restrictive. I may not be aware of all the problems at this time but we feel that this may not necessarily be the wisest thing to do.

Should Hon. Members choose to have this matter referred to committee, I would be delighted to raise these concerns at that time. I am sure answers will be forthcoming to the questions that I have raised. Perhaps we would all be satisfied to have the matter dealt with expeditiously in that way.

Thank you for the opportunity to share some thoughts on the Bill this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the discussion on Bill C-661 this afternoon. I want to begin by congratulating the distinguished Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) for bringing before the House Bill C-661, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act in regard to the registration of political Parties. In my view, this is the very essence of the Private Members' hour being used in a productive way.

One observes that there is the possibility of a conflict of interest between the provisions of the Bill and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, particularly Section 2 which guarantees the freedom of association and expression, and Section 15, which prescribes equality of treatment for all. Even if the Bill were compatible with the Charter, and assuming it was adopted by the House, there is no guarantee that it would achieve its purpose because it would be relatively easy to comply with the new requirements.

On the other hand, Party registration is a problem which should be considered at this time, especially as we are faced with a proliferation of political Parties in the country. There are ten official federal political Parties, some of which are not interested in having candidates elected. The cost and administrative difficulties which they may engender force us to reconsider the whole question of registration of political Parties.

I want to recognize the contribution to the debate this afternoon by the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) and express appreciation for the indication that there is a disposition to have the subject matter of the Bill referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I had a conversation earlier with the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy) and he pointed out that the Parti Québécois is only interested in matters within the boundaries of the Province of Quebec, yet it is registered across the country and can take advantage of the provisions of the Income Tax Act. One might even say it is an unfair advantage. That is a classic example of why it is important to try to stop that type of thing from happening.

In form and substance the Bill is very important. In order that the proceedings of the House may not be delayed any longer, I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-661, and Act to amend the Canada Elections Act in respect of registration of political parties, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I hope there is a disposition to have this matter referred to the Committee with dispatch so that it can discuss the subject matter of the Bill and not the Bill itself as presented this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion, as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill is withdrawn and the subject matter thereof is referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings at this point and to ask for the consent of the House that all orders listed on today's Order Paper under Private Members' Public Bills preceding Order No. 155 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE AMOUNT OF CANDIDATES' DEPOSIT

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi) moved that Bill C-355, to amend the Canada Elections Act (deposit), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is relatively rare that one has the opportunity to debate his own Bill in the House unless one is a Minister of the Crown. I am therefore pleased to have the opportunity to at least debate this Bill this afternoon.

The purpose of the Bill is to increase the deposit of candidates in general elections or by-elections from $200 to $2,000. I suppose many people will ask why this should be done. To my knowledge, the $200 deposit has been in effect since Confederation.

• (1600)

I am sure all of us have noticed that in recent times there has been a vast proliferation of candidates particularly in general elections. In fact, in the last several general elections we have seen the phenomenon of more than one candidate representing the same Party in the same constituency. This is an indication that people are trying to make a farce of free elections.

I do not think, whatever one may think of a Government or a Party, one should have the inexpensive opportunity to poke fun at elections, because free elections are the very basis of democracy. Therefore, candidates should be prepared, if they wish to stand for election to the House of Commons, to demonstrate their sincerity by putting a substantial sum of money on the line. Today $200 is not really a substantial sum of money when it comes to an election deposit. It is not very difficult for any individual, unless he is a complete loony, to find ten people who will put up $20 each so that he can put his name on the ballot. It should be made much more difficult for people whose only purpose in an election campaign is to obtain some publicity to achieve that rather spurious purpose.

There are other reasons as well. It has become noticeable of late that many fringe candidates—in fact, I would go so far as to call them lunatic candidates—indeed do disrupt election campaigns.

Mr. Blaikie: You should not talk about Members of your Party that way.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I might say that this has not happened in the riding I have represented in all three election campaigns in which I participated as a candidate. There were not any of the so-called nuisance candidates. If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is not careful, I might describe a certain Party candidate that way.

I believe as well that this causes a considerable amount of confusion to the public. Certainly it would seem to me that under no circumstances should we allow two candidates to use the same Party label. That game is being played in some constituencies by the Rhinoceros Party. In at least one New Brunswick constituency in the last election there were two so-called candidates representing that so-called Party.

Also the proliferation of candidates has a tendency to add to the cost of elections. I am not one of those people who would argue that elections cost the country too much. In fact, I do not believe they do. If we cannot afford elections, certainly we cannot afford democracy; but I do not see any reason for unnecessarily adding to the cost of elections.

Other people will say that every individual has the right to protest the system, protest policy or protest whatever he wishes by seeking election to the House of Commons. I would agree with that, provided the individual were serious enough to show his sincerity by being willing to place at risk a substantial sum of money, which is not required under the present Canada Elections Act.

If a candidate is only looking for an opportunity to protest, there is a simple way of doing it. The simple device would be for the individual to spoil his ballot, and he would not have to go through the rigours of a campaign. Of course, some people will argue that if he spoils his ballot, or particularly if he expresses a personal complaint by writing his name on his ballot, his vote will no longer be secret. This is true, but many of us give up our right, in a sense, to the secrecy of our ballots in election campaigns. It would seem to me that everyone who stands for election indicates how he or she will vote by so doing. Also it would seem to me that those people who participate actively in campaigns and have officials with campaign positions indicate publicly how they will vote. While the ballot is still secret, it is really not any secret how such people will vote.

There are others who will argue that this is the wrong way of going about it. I do not want to start mounting a series of arguments that this is the only way to do it because there are other ways. Two things are required today of a candidate in an election. First, the candidate must deposit in legal tender or by certified cheque $200 with the returning officer. Second, he or she must have the signatures of 25 electors on his or her nomination papers. Perhaps an alternative to my proposal would be to increase substantially the number of electors, say from 25 to 500. This would make it somewhat more difficult for the frivolous nuisance candidates to become involved. They would have to think twice if they required 500 signatures.

Therefore, if the House is disposed I would be prepared to have the same thing happen to this Bill as happened to the last one, namely to have the Bill itself withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I am not moving this as a motion at the moment because I am aware that other Members of the House want to speak on the Bill and it requires unanimous consent of the House. I am not sure whether that unanimous consent would be forthcoming, but I would not want to deprive other Members who have views on the matter of the opportunity to express themselves.

This is one of the reasons for Private Members' Bills, so that the sponsors and other Members will have the opportunity to express themselves on various subjects. I would like to be able to say that the Government supports this Bill, but I am afraid it would be incorrect. At least, I hope the subject matter of the Bill will be discussed and given thought. If the Bill does not receive second reading today, or if the subject matter is not referred to Committee, at least the Chief Electoral Officer in his report, which I understand will be tabled at the beginning of the next session of Parliament, will, I hope, deal with the matter in a way that may find acceptance with the majority of the Members of the House.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I listened to what the Hon. Member had to say about a significant change he wishes to make in our electoral system, and although his comments were excellent, I could not resist giving some comments of my own that are very relevant to the foregoing.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that to represent the wishes of the people in Parliament is a noble profession. I believe it should be taken very seriously, and that this Bill reflects that attitude and deserves very serious consideration in view of the proliferation of fringe candidates running in every election. I would be the last person to prevent anyone from running for whatever political group he might choose. And I think that even for candidates who want to run as independants, as I have done, Mr. Speaker—and successfully, I may add—the proposal to raise the deposit from $250 to $2,000 is not excessive.

Some people will claim that we are thereby excluding some candidates who are not as well off financially, but I think that any serious candidate who takes himself, and is taken, seriously, will have no trouble finding the initial support he needs to obtain those $2,000, which could be raised through donations from friends or supporters. We take politics seriously, and I think all candidates should do the same. In this connection, I would like to point out that there have been a great deal of comments on our democracy, and I think the proposal made this afternoon constitutes an improvement to our democratic system.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would rather not waste too much time, and I shall simply say, in support of this kind of amendment, that I think it is an improvement to our present system. Such a measure would possibly discourage candidates whose attitude is not serious at all and who often make people believe, and they are a minority, I hope, that politics should not be taken seriously. The result is that some people think that politics is not worth the attention we think it deserves. I believe that any measure aimed at giving our parliamentary institutions a more positive character should not be ignored, and that we owe it to ourselves to support changes that will enhance the credibility of our political system.

It is therefore clear that as far as prospective Members of a Parliament or party are concerned, we have a responsibility to ensure that these people are acting in good faith and are prepared to represent their constituents with all due seriousness. I repeat that a deposit of $2,000 is not going to prevent a serious candidate who is taken seriously from running for office. It is also extremely important for a person to be able to run under the colours of his choice, and the deposit would not prevent anyone from running as an independent candidate. However, I believe that too often, things have happened that made people laugh and endangered the credibility that is so necessary in an election campaign. We want serious representatives and the majority of voters would like to see candidates with a sense of duty that will make them deserving of the voters' trust.

As we said before, if people want to protest against certain candidates, they can spoil their ballots, and since this is made public, it is easy to see whether there is a serious protest on the part of a number of individuals who no longer trust the candidate running in a given riding. I believe that this measure which provides for a $2,000 deposit might usefully be adopted in order to prevent people from indulging in these charades for the sake of political history, during an election campaign.

The number of voters who would have to sign the ballot is set at twenty-five. That, of course, is a very low figure. A candidate who canvasses two or three families and some of his neighbours can easily get twenty-five signatures. I think we should seriously consider raising this figure. Five hundred has been suggested, and I must admit that this figure does not worry me, because I would have no trouble finding 500 people to sign my ballot, although it is still a lot of work. However, there will not necessarily be a consensus on this figure. However, if the deposit increases from $200 to $2,000, the number of persons should also be increased up accordingly from 25, if we want to make as serious a comparison as is included in the Hon. Member's motion. Because of this, Mr. Speaker, I hasten to say that I wholeheartedly support the motion now before the House. I believe that its purpose is to improve our political system and give us better and more serious candidates. No one could blame us for committing ourselves to this objective and for wishing, on both sides of this House, to offer our voters more serious and better qualified candidates who would be better equipped to serve our society.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) indicated that he was not making a proposal to amend his own Bill, which he cannot do, but that he would be open and agreeable to any such amendment which would refer the subject matter to Committee.

The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has now said that he approves of that proposal. The Chair is in some difficulty. I believe that what should be done, if it is the intention of the House to move in that direction, is to have the Bill amended that way. I think it would help Hon. Members to know that there is such an amendment. I leave it to the Hon. Member for Joliette to decide whether he wants to propose such an amendment.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has already indicated his support for the motion of the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) by saying that he would be in favour of referring the subject matter to the committee. If he wants to propose an amendment, he can of course do so.

[English]

I have to know whether or not such an amendment is on the floor because Hon. Members perhaps are not certain of where it is going. Of course, it has to be seconded as well.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is distinctly my impression from listening to this debate that both Members expressed a preference for what should happen. To my understanding, it was never couched in terms of an actual amendment—it was a wish. Therefore, I believe that it would be appropriate simply to continue the debate as it exists.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) is quite correct. This preference has come up and it is sometimes the duty of the Chair to attempt to understand whether an Hon. Member intends to take the proposal and turn it into a procedural matter. I must indicate to the Hon. Member for Willowdale that no distinction will take place as to the procedures, time allotment or anything else. I simply indicate that when I hear Hon. Members referring to what they call a proposal, I believe that I have to serve them by indicating that proposals should either be converted to amendments or not, as they see fit.

[Translation]

Should I recognize the Hon. Member for Joliette?

Mr. La Salle: I want to add, Mr. Speaker, that I have indicated my support for the Hon. Member's suggestion because I had also understood that this subject could be referred to the committee for consideration. It was not my intention to move an amendment. I simply said that I fully agreed with the Hon. Member that this matter could be referred to a committee for further discussion. If such is the wish of this House, I have no objection.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I should explain that everything is quite clear and that there is no amendment. If an Hon. Member wants to move an amendment, he may do so. For the moment, there is only the bill itself.

[English]

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I very much appreciate your attempts to bring more order out of a slight amount of misunderstanding. Perhaps it would be advisable to let at least the next speaker proceed. We can then see if there are any more negotiations going on in the Chamber.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak in opposition to this Bill. However well intentioned the Bill is, I believe that it would not, in fact, be likely to work in the interest of democracy.

The purpose of the Bill is to restrict the right of a candidate by a financial qualification. An appeal had been made in a previous Bill of this sort in the year 1882, when the deposit was $200. Of course, that was a much greater sum of money then than it is now, relative to an individual's earning power. It is interesting that in 1882, the year which was chosen as the model in the previous debate, at least half of the adults in Canada were disenfranchised.

• (1620)

Leaving aside questions involving Indians and non-European immigrants or northern European settlers, no women of Canada were allowed to vote in those days. I am not saying that they were excluded on property grounds or on the basis of wealth. I am not quite certain what would have been the rationale given by Sir John A. MacDonald and others for excluding all married women, for example. We know that for many years in at least one Province of Canada the laws had restricted the right of women to act in their own names, as adults. It may be that that kind of thinking helped to prevent Canada, in the first decades of its history, from allowing slightly more than half of our population to have the vote.

The idea of restricting the vote according to property or wealth did not die with the nineteenth century. I remember that when I first settled in Toronto with my family in 1954, the municipal vote in Toronto was restricted according to property. If one owned property, real estate, if one was a business tenant, or if one was a residential tenant renting two or more rooms in which one ate and slept, one could vote. If one lived in a rooming house, one was nothing and had no vote.

As well, people in those days could vote as many times as they held separate pieces of property, and this was not only the case in Ontario. In other words, votes went partly with humanity and partly with wealth. They still do in the City of Toronto, but not to such a great degree. People with money and wealth still have more votes than ordinary working people in Ontario's municipal elections, both because there are certain privileges, however limited, given to property owners and because the manner of determining the voters' list from the assessment role is inevitably biased in favour of property owners, business tenants and tenants of large dwellings and against the residents of rooming houses, bachelorette apartment buildings and so on, who are more mobile and who may very well be missed and, from my experience, often are missed in large numbers. Whole buildings have been missed so far as their residential tenants go. Therefore, we still have the hangover of a bias from the old Middle Ages, that the votes should go according to property and wealth; the more dollars, the more votes, and the less dollars the less votes or perhaps no votes.

I think this proposal is a hangover from the Middle Ages which we cannot afford. It certainly seems to infringe on the Charter of Rights. Section 2(b) declares the freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including the freedom of the press and other media of communication. We know that candidates of small Parties or independent candidates, particularly if they are not millionaires, have much less access to the media than candidates of the major Parties who are ordinarily millionaires. Therefore, freedom of the press is in fact limited within this country and is not by any means equally shared by all citizens.

To compound matters, this kind of restriction, if it did not go against the letter of the Charter, will at least go against the spirit of it. In Section 3 the Charter states that every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of Members to the House of Commons or to a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein. It does not say that every citizen of Canada who has $2,000 to spare on an election campaign is qualified for membership therein. It states "every citizen of Canada", and to lay on a requirement of money which might be $2,000 now or which, if the same people have their way later on, might be $20,000, would certainly go against the spirit of Section 3, to my reading of our Charter.

While we are dealing with Charters of Rights, I would simply quote as well the Charter of the United Nations, which states, on this same point, that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. I understand that to mean that a man or woman could be a candidate regardless whether he or she could scrape up a spare $2,000.

It has sometimes been argued that the person could recoup not only the deposit but also other election expenses if he or she received 15 per cent of the vote. That, nevertheless, is still a strong disincentive toward a person who may in all good faith, as an individual or as a Member of a Party, wish to set out upon the road which everyone here has followed. For instance, a young person who wishes to be a Member of Parliament knows that he or she may not win this election or the next election. I do not know how many people here have run several times before winning. However, it would be unfortunate if we were to now set a barrier in the way of young people who wish to do exactly what many of us have done.

Whatever we may say about this House when we are feeling disgruntled about what some other Party does in the House, I think that most of us are glad that we were able to get here. I might not be equally in favour of all the others who became Members, but I am glad I became one. I have a notion that each Member of the House would have to say as much, that he or she is glad that he or she became a Member. It would be quite unfair to set a barrier in front of other people, many of whom may be acting in full good faith, a barrier which was not placed in front of any of us when we ran and finally succeeded.

The money barrier is really a hangover from the Middle Ages. I want to show Hon. Members how it works in a biased way, because it would certainly bias the standard of choice of candidates. Let me pick the riding of Spadina as an example. I might have given the 1981 statistics for Spadina, but the Government has not seen fit to release them yet. It has been a year and a half since the election but, of course, a Government which cannot even issue its statistics from June of 1981, with reard to income and occupation, almost two years later is not likely to get around to publishing statistics from the 1981 by-elections within two years. I regret the Government's lack of respect when it withholds statistics which it has gathered.

However, let me give some of the figures from the 1980 election in Spadina. I will deal with public and private corporations together, not going into more extensive detail. Twenty-eight corporations gave $19,825 to the Conservative candidate in Spadina. To the Liberals, four corporations gave $325. To the NDP, zero corporations gave zero dollars.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What about the CLC?

Mr. Heap: Now someone has raised a question about the CLC unions, so let us go to the general—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair is in some difficulty. The Bill proposes a change of deposit for candidates from $200 to $2,000. It may be that I have missed the connecting points that the Hon. Member has made, but I think the Hon. Member may want to explain to the House how his current comments relate to the Bill.

• (1630)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that the Speaker is being irreverent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have difficulty resisting the impulse to indicate to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-

Saanich (Mr. Munro) that if the Hon. Member for Spadina wants to be irreverent, he is entirely free to do so. Irrelevance, however, is a matter that concerns the Chair.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, if that is the best that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich can do with either grammar, spelling or humour, I hope he will wait until another Hon. Member speaks before trying it again.

The point that I make is quite relevant to the point at issue. The point that I am making is that the ability of a candidate to spare $2,000, as one of the previous speakers said, in fact the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) said, is partly related to the wealth of his friends. If he has not got it, he can get it from his friends. These are the friends of the Conservative candidate.

I will come to the friends of the Liberal candidate. They can provide that $2,000 very readily, and when people donate as they do to the Liberal Party, not locally but nationally, in the range $15,000, $20,000, or $50,000, that provides no end of $2,000 deposits. It can provide $5,000 deposits.

An Hon. Member: What about the unions?

Mr. Heap: My point is that the ability of a few corporations to fund candidates goes against the principle of equality.

Somebody opposite asked about the unions. You can look through the NDP lists and you will not find such large contributions from any one union as you have from the Bank of Montreal, Canada Packers, Canadian Pacific, and so on, to the Liberal Party, which are the ones that I have just read.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that to make money qualification the basis for excluding certain candidates means that the candidates with rich friends get in and candidates without rich friends are severely hindered. If what had been proposed was an increase in the number of nominators, I would look at the matter much differently. As our ridings have grown, both urban and rural, the number of electors in each has grown, and if it were argued that a candidate, to validate his seriousness, should have more than 25 names, I think most Members of the House would be willing to give that serious consideration. However, it seems that even if this subject is referred to the committee, that will not be the subject matter of consideration. Only the money qualification, as I understand it, would be the subject matter of consideration.

Considering the seriousness and the gravity of the restriction that is being proposed here in this motion, I think it is quite out of proportion as a remedy to the problem that is alleged to exist. I have been in ridings where there were several small candidates, you can call them nuisance candidates, you could call them fun candidates. I think the Rhino has often saved an otherwise tiresome all-candidates meeting from being completely boring. I think it provides a little bit of fun and lightness. In the old days, the fun and lightness in an election campaign were carried on in different ways, the sort of thing that Stephen Leacock wrote about in "Sunshine Sketches of a Little Town". Right now it is done quite well sometimes by the fun candidates. There are other candidates who know that they will not be elected but they think they have something to say, not by spoiling a ballot but by speaking to interested electors. I think they should have a chance. I do not think they should be excluded on the grounds that neither they nor their friends have $2,000 to lose. Therefore, I and my colleagues will be voting against this Bill.

I was asked, prior to this debate, whether I would favour withdrawal, but that is not what has been put before us now. What has been put before us now is referral. That is a horse of a different colour, and I think it would be best simply to put the matter to a vote.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the Hon. Member's remarks, if he wishes to move an amendment to the Bill, taking out the deposit and substituting the number of signatories on the nomination papers instead, I will be glad to second his amendment.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I wish this suggestion had been made a little earlier. I am not prepared to say, just out of thin air, X number of voters. I think a matter as serious as this deserves more than 30 seconds' consideration. I would be interested to hear a discussion of this subject but I am not prepared at the present time to state a figure in a motion for amendment.

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity of speaking on this Private Members' Bill. I intend to speak for only a very few minutes.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) and I agree with the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), with one exception. I agree with the $2,000 fee, but I cannot agree with the figure of 500 that the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi threw out for the number of people to sign the nomination papers, because in my riding of Malpeque there are 32,000 people. In other ridings across the country there are as many as 130,000 people. It would be very difficult, in smaller ridings with smaller numbers of people, to come up with 500 names on the list for nomination. I would suggest possibly a percentage of the number of electors on the previous voters' list, let us say 10 per cent. Even that is too high for my riding, when I stop to think about it. But a percentage of the number of people on the electors' list should be required to sign nomination papers, rather than a specified figure of 500 people. As I said earlier, in a small riding 500 names are very difficult to obtain, but in a large riding of 130,000, 500 is a very insignificant number.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I understand that this matter has been up for debate on a number of occasions in the House. I guess the first Bill that I have knowledge of is the one put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), which is Bill C-583. Now we have Bill C-335, which is virtually the same Bill. I guess it is exactly the same Bill, it is couched in the same terms.

It is a question, as the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) has suggested, of increasing the deposit from $200 to $2,000. This might be considered as a very large sum of money by almost any standard. Even though $200 does not seem very much in this day and age, certainly $200 at the time it was first put into the Elections Act was a considerable sum of money. I do not know the reason for its being put into the Act at that time. Perhaps it was for no other reason than to limit the number of people who would be running in elections, because there would not be that many people who could afford to put up $200.

Why it has remained in the Elections Act all this period of time is something we will probably never know, but I think some changes should be made in the Elections Act. I am not so sure that what we have before us today, increasing it to $2,000, is really the answer. I think the last Member who spoke had a very good idea when he suggested that it should be a percentage of the number of voters. This might be the way to handle it.

The Elections Act provides that at least 15 per cent of the voters must vote for a candidate or he will lose his deposit. Maybe for a percentage of voters to sign nomination papers would be a good thing in order to indicate the seriousness of the candidate. Also, to be able to get that number of people, say 500 or 1,000, to sign nomination papers might deter a number of candidates who really were not serious about running from in fact running. In the last election I ran in, I believe there were six of us in the running. Frankly, there were only what I considered to be three serious parties, the Conservative, the New Democratic and the Liberal. The other three, the Rhinoceros Party, the Communist Party of Canada and the Marxist-Leninist Party of Canada, were really not serious. They received about 150 votes among the three of them. That is not very many and I would say they were not serious candidates. They tended to take a lot of time from the legitimate candidates on the platform and they did not deal with any issues which were really of concern to most of the people in the constituency. According to Section 23 of the present Canada Elections Act, a candidate to be officially nominated must file with the Returning Officer a nomination paper signed by at least 25 members of the electoral district, and this number, of course, should be increased, as the Hon. Member previously indicated. I do not know whether it should be 500, but certainly there should be more than 25 electors supporting you and signing your paper if you are going to run.

• (1640)

The Canada Elections Act also states that the deposit is $200, and you lose your deposit if you do not get 15 per cent of the votes. This is a very simply procedure, of course, and many, many candidates in the last election, and in the previous election also, did not get the required number of votes in order not to lose their deposits. According to the information I have in 1979 there were 1,427 candidates and of that number 757 lost their deposits. In the election of 1980, there were 1,504 candidates, and of that number 854 lost their deposits. You can see, therefore, that at least half the number who run in an election are really not serious contenders. In my view, if you get less than 15 per cent of the vote, I do not believe you are a serious candidate.

Another aspect of this which should be considered is that Section 3 of the Canada Charter of Rights and Freedoms declares:

Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote—

Mr. Blackburn: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would permit one brief question.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Sure.

Mr. Blackburn: With respect to the $200 deposit, and keeping in mind the Government's six and five program, would the Hon. Member agree that maybe we should increase that amount to $212?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): That is a very good question, Mr. Speaker, but we do not have to implement the six and five program in the next election since we are not going to have one for some time. I would imagine that the six and five program would be long gone by that time?

I was referring, Mr. Speaker, to Section 3 of the Canada Charter of Rights and Freedoms which declares:

Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Therefore, this right to be a candidate is now one of the fundamental democratic rights recognized by the supreme law of the land, and one may wonder if the present $200 deposit is even constitutional. There is nothing in the Act which says that there must be a deposit, and at some stage this matter might be taken to the courts to determine if in fact we can even ask for a $200 deposit from an individual so he can run in an election. As far as a $2,000 deposit is concerned, as I said before, this seems like quite a large amount, and it is a question of whether it is actually reasonable or not. If we could consider the $2,000 as a reasonable amount—and the courts might decide this—then that could be the amount or it could be somewhat greater or somewhat less. In any event, this whole question of reasonableness would have to be determined, and I would suggest that this certainly would not be included in the Charter of Rights.

There is an alternative which might be considered, and it might deter those candidates who are really not serious about actually running in an election. This, I suggest, is the whole question of bonding. We might ask that any candidate who wishes to run in an election must be bonded. I would suggest that the premium for the bond would be very small, only a few dollars. By the same token, it would not deter anyone from their fundamental democratic right to be able to run in an election. Therefore, my suggestion would be that, instead of setting a maximum amount of $2,000 as a deposit, we consider that a bond be obtained. The person who is putting up a deposit in that case would not lose his $2,000 as he would under the Bill before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) or, alternatively, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. Fisher: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would love to hear what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has to say, so I will wait for him.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I just have a few comments to make on the Bill in order that we could get through this hour and not have this matter go any further. I disagree with the whole tenor of the Bill, that somehow we should decide what are frivolous political candidacies and what are non-frivolous political candidacies by employing monetary forms of measurement. I certainly feel, and I think all my colleagues here would agree with me, that that is an inappropriate way to decide what political Parties and what political candidates are to be regarded as frivolous or non-frivolous. That, Mr. Speaker, I would presume, is for the voters to decide on election day.

I believe it is indicative of the way in which our perception of things is coloured by our history that we have this Bill coming forward from a Liberal Member. And if I understand the situation correctly, there is support from the Conservative caucus with respect to having the matter go to committee. These are Parties which have existed since the beginning of Confederation in one form or another, and have, therefore, never had the experience, as our Party has, of starting really from scratch. I am sure that in terms of the monetary requirements this Bill would put on people who wanted to run for office, and the signatures which might also be required, many of the early CCF candidates at the beginning of our Party's history in the 30s would not have met these qualifications.

It is not surprising that we would have this Bill come forward from the Liberal Party, but I must say that it is surprising to me that this Bill comes forward from the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), with whom I have had the privilege of working on the special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. I believe that this Bill goes in a direction away from the kind of openness to the House of Commons which many Members want to see, and it is surprising that an Hon. Member who represents a riding in a have-not Province, wants to see these kinds of monetary restrictions placed on candidacy for the House of Commons.

I would like to comment, Mr. Speaker, on the role of so-called frivolous candidates, for instance, the Rhinoceros Party. I must say I was of two minds about that Party. I found it irritating on many occasions because I felt it did detract from the kind of debate I would have liked to have about serious issues. When I would arrive at a town hall meeting, the Rhinoceros fellow would be there. He had a good set of lines. He was funny. It was often hard to keep up what I consider to be an appropriate tone for a political meeting. The candidate from my riding, Honest Don Bergen was his name, always wore a top hat to the meeting. He was good at what he did, which was to make fun of all of us. I think there is a place for humour in politics. There is a place for making fun of some of the stereotypes and caricatures that develop around political life. However, I must confess that at times I thought it was just nothing short of bothersome when this was done when I was there. I guess I am like everyone else, I appreciate humour about other politicians but I am not so wild about it when it disturbs a meeting at which I and others are trying to make a point. Perhaps I will just say that I will leave it to individual Members of the House to draw whatever conclusions might be drawn from the fact that the people who were bothered the most by the Rhinoceros candidate in my riding were the Marxists-Leninists and the Tories. They seemed to be driven to distraction by the comedy of Honest Don Bergen in my riding. I do not know whether there is some kind of internal psychological similarity between the two of these parties such that they are unable to see themselves critically or humorously, but I had a hard time staying bothered myself because I was so busy being amused by the reaction of the Marxist-Leninists and Tories.

• (1650)

In any case, Mr. Speaker, I think it was up to the people of the riding to decide who were the frivolous candidates. In my riding, they gave more votes to the Rhinoceros Party than they did to either the Marxists-Leninists or the Communist Party candidates. So the Rhinoceros Party was not last, it was second last, and I believe that even if these measures were to be implemented, we would still have Rhinoceros Party candidates. I think they could generate support to meet these conditions.

Mr. Peterson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if I could ask a question of the Hon. Member. I would like to ask him whether or not he intends—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. First of all let us find out if the Hon. Member accepts a question.

Mr. Blaikie: Certainly.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering if the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is talking out this Bill in order that we not be allowed, as Members, to exercise our democratic rights to vote on the measure.

Mr. Malone: Talk it out.

Mr. Blaikie: I will be very surprised if I personally were responsible for this Bill being talked out. In fact, I intended to say that I thought the Rhinoceros Party would meet the conditions that were laid down. What we are really talking about is preserving the possibility and potential of new political options which are as yet unknown. We are preserving the possibility that those kinds of political options might come forward, not because they are able to meet these conditions, but because they might indeed have something to contribute to debate in this country. That is what we want to preserve.

As far as the Rhinoceros Party is concerned, as long as we in this House continue to act in such a way as to deserve some of the humour they have brought to our political campaign, then they will continue to exist as well.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is the second opportunity I have had to speak on precisely this kind of a Bill. The last time was when the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) introduced the same motion. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that last night in a committee the Hon. Member for Mississauga South stood up and demanded an election. I said to him: "How can you have an election? Your Party has got to have a leader". He said: "Don't you worry about that, my Party has lots of leaders." Now my question to him is, if he is ready to tolerate some nuisance candidates—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I should inform the Hon. Member that it is not proper to refer in this House to proceedings in a committee until the report has been received in the House.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to my colleague that, even without a leader, the Gallup poll still rates us 11 points ahead of the Government.

[English]

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, the point of my little parable, out of order though it might have been, is that if the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is so willing to tolerate so many nuisance candidates in his own Party, why does he want to cut them off for the general public? I cannot understand. I can tell you that in my riding the people who were categorized as nuisance candidates were very often more impressive than some of the people currently running for the leadership over there.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I must say, to my regret, that I disapprove of this Bill. I do not think it is good enough to disqualify someone because he is considered to be a nuisance by someone else. I also think that openness should be a standard in our democratic process and not some kind of closure and discouragement of voters or candidates. Finally, I would like to say that appearance and reality are both important in the democratic system, and if we appear only to be reducing the number of candidates or favouring the big Parties, then we will just be eroding our own base and credibility as a democracy.

I am curious to know what it is that creates a barrier for someone to run as a candidate. I think the size, geography and population are as important as the system itself. It seems to me that the various regulations that we could have here, the number of dollars that you have to put up and so on, are not as important as the number of people or the quality of debate. I would like to emphasize that the quality of debate declines when the number of people in a riding goes up.

So, Mr. Speaker, I have just risen in my place to say that debate in my riding is harmed because my riding is too big, and we have to get redistribution if we want to improve the quality of debate and give every Canadian a full opportunity to be heard. That is all I want to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2) it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings. However, before passing to other items of business today, the Chair would once again draw the attention of Hon. Members to Standing Order No. 15(3), which reads:

When a Member is speaking, no Member shall pass between that Member and the Chair—

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Notices of Motions preceding No. 67 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARAB-ISRAELI CONFLICT

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, as a means to attaining a permanent solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict, the government should consider the advisability of promoting, in international forums, a global settlement which would contain the following proposals:

1. Creation of a sovereign strictly neutral Palestinian state comprising the West Bank and Gaza strip contingent upon

(a) P.L.O. recognition of Israel and renunciation of all further claims and approval by a majority vote of Palestinians living in the West Bank and Mid-East refugee camps;

(b) the legal right of Israel to investigate within the new state, in accordance with pre-established procedures, suspected breaches of neutrality and the legal right to intervene militarily if neutrality is found to be breached;

(c) a monetary settlement of all claims of displaced individuals resulting from the 1948 Arab-Israeli War to be paid out of a special Palestine Refugee Compensation Fund to which the industrialized world would contribute;

(d) pledges for sufficient aid from the industrialized world and OPEC to raise the standard of living in the new Palestine State to the level of that in Israel within 8 years, contingent upon commitment by the new state to adhere to development plans and programs established by the World Bank;

2. UN sovereignty over Jerusalem carried out by a permanent UN trusteeship comprising the United States, USSR, China, the United Kingdom, France, Saudi Arabia and Israel, the membership of which could not be changed even by the UN without the unanimous consent of trusteeship members where rules for administration would be pre-established and not thereafter changeable except by unanimous consent and policing decisions would be by majority vote of the trustees; and

3. UN sovereignty over the Golan Heights under the trusteeship of the United States, USSR, China, the United Kingdom, France, Syria and Israel with (a) a right to Israel to reoccupy temporarily for a breach of neutrality or military threat;

(b) a monetary settlement to Syria from a specially established international compensation fund.

• (1700)

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to explain briefly the background of the drafting of this proposal for a permanent peace solution. It was drafted in the aftermath of the previous Government's ill-fated attempt to move the Canadian Embassy to Jerusalem. This position was so totally against common sense and the even-handed approach which Canada has usually taken to international questions, that I decided to draw up a list of proposals which, if common sense and goodwill were to exist on both sides of the Middle East equation, could provide a reasonable basis for a permanent solution.

The proposals were drafted in the fall of 1979 and sent to the heads of Government of the various countries involved. Most responded with varying degrees of enthusiasm and the responses were generally positive. The response from Prime Minister Barre of France was enthusiastic; the responses from the United States and Great Britain were in the tenor of, "let's wait and see what happens as a result of the Camp David accords"; from the Near East countries, apart from Jordan which showed some interest, offered polite acknowledgements, including one from Israel.

I mention the background in order to explain how, in the light of comments I have received since it was drafted, I would amend my motion somewhat if I were to redraft it now. I might also remind Hon. Members that the basic elements of this proposals are, as far as I know, in accord with Canada's official position of support for a just, lasting and comprehensive peace settlement based on Security Council Resolution 242, as well as earlier UN resolutions relating to this issue which were supported by the Government of Canada and had the approval of all Parties in the House when the Government voted at the United Nations.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the main points and on the four minor changes which I now find necessary to make to the motion as it appears on today's Order Paper. At the outset, I refer to the creation of a sovereign strictly neutral Palestinian state. The idea was to create a state somewhat similar to the situation in Austria. The Russians decided to withdraw from their sector in Austria during the 1950s, but, according to the rules of international law, they still have the right to return to Austria if ever that country ceases to be neutral. I think that the Austrian experience might serve as an example for a final settlement of the conflict in the Middle East.

I should mention as well that I am suggesting in the motion that the UN should have sovereignty over the Golan Heights. I think that this position is unrealistic because I doubt that Syria will ever agree to that kind of settlement. Perhaps they would accept some sort of trusteeship for a number of years, long enough to restore a climate of confidence, but in the long term I believe we must eliminate for all times the possibility that Syrians might return to that territory.

Third, there is a rather significant omission in the second paragraph where I refer to UN sovereignty over Jerusalem. I failed to mention that the independent Palestinian state should, of course, be a member of that permanent trusteeship.

Mr. Speaker, I drafted the details of that motion in 1979 and it has been on the Order Paper since 1981. What did happen since I prepared my notes? There are many important events of which the public is not aware, I think.

[English]

There are a number of events which have occurred since I prepared this motion of which the public is not sufficiently aware. The question is raised as to whether there was a movement toward peace in the years following 1979. There was, and one of the most important moves toward peace came from the Palestinian side. In 1981 a truce was established along the border with Lebanon. While it did not hold perfectly, as the months wore on it progressively reduced the acts of terrorism. Toward the end of that truce there was a situation where, in the months prior to the invasion of Lebanon, the head of the Israeli Settlements Organization in the Galilee area petitioned the Israeli Government for a continuation of the cease-fire agreement because it was working so well.

• (1710)

We have found out that in the month of February or March 1982—I would not put a specific date on it, but it was at least two months before the Lebanese invasion—there was a communication from the PLO to the Israeli Cabinet which offered to the Israeli Government a non-aggression agreement all along the Lebanese frontier. This agreement was transmitted to Israel through unnamed persons in the United States, presumably the U. S. State Department. It was rejected immediately by the Begin Government, at least two months before the invasion.

This particular information was revealed by a source no less competent than Mr. Sharir, the Israeli Minister of Tourism. He tried to retract it the next day, but another Israeli Minister in the meantime confirmed what he said. The Member of Parliament in question was Mr. Beni Shalita. He confirmed that Sharir was correct and said that there was no secret, that the entire Israeli Commission on Foreign Affairs and Defence was told about the offer two months before the Lebanese war.

Then we have a further series of information coming forward which indicated that there were many other attempts to get the information through to the Begin Government and to the American Government that the PLO wanted to talk business about a full-fledged armistice, not just a ceasefire.

For example, the Prime Minister of Tunisia acted as a go-between, between the PLO and the United States Government with regard to these overtures in the few months immediately prior to the Lebanese invasion. I will not go into the Lebanese invasion because we know what happened.

Again we have revelations coming from the same Israeli Cabinet Minister, that the invasion was not for military purposes, that its principal objective was to crush the PLO for the political reason that hope would no longer be held out by the inhabitants of the occupied West Bank that somehow they could get help from the PLO. It was to crush the hopes for the future of the Arabs living in the occupied West Bank that this operation was carried out.

Yesterday, in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence of the House of Commons, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) said the following with regard to Israeli settlement policy, "We are deeply concerned over Israeli settlement policy. We regard the establishment of settlements and other actions Israel is taking to extend its control over the occupied territories as contrary to international law and extremely unhelpful to the peace process. We would like to see an end to this activity."

What exactly is happening on the West Bank? In terms of international law, the operative covenant with which we are dealing is the Fourth Geneva Convention, 1949. Article 47 of that Convention forbids the annexation of any lands that are occupied as a result of military action. Article 49 forbids the settlement of any citizen of the occupying country on occupied land and it forbids the deportation of the existing population out of the occupied territory.

The Israeli Government has consistently violated all these provisions since 1967. The settlement of Israeli Jews, and of course Jews coming into Israel from other countries, on West Bank lands is very clearly part of the Government's plan for creating what it calls established facts on the West Bank so that within a period of five years it will be impossible for any authority, no matter how sympathetic it might be to the Palestinians, to disentangle the two populations.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was wondering whether the Hon. Member would accept a question.

Mr. Watson: I would be delighted to do so at the end of my remarks.

Prime Minister Begin has gone on record several times—in an interview in the Wall Street Journal in April 1982, and in a speech to the Knesset in the first week in May 1982, he declared that the aim of the Israeli Government was to bring about the annexation of Judea and Samaria, that is to say the West Bank, along with the Gaza Strip within five years. He is on record as saying so. The Israeli Government has very clearly shown that it will not accept the interference of other Governments forcing it to stop settlement.

There are two current plans in operation for settlement on the West Bank. One is a long-range plan, which was originally accepted by the Labour Government. The second one, which is currently in force, is a medium-range plan drawn up by an official of the World Zionist Organization named Matityahu Drobles in 1978 and implemented by the Government of Israel.

The plan is to create in that period 46 new settlements, bringing into those settlements about 16,000 new households. The cost is in the neighbourhood of $2.5 billion. In addition, 38 existing settlements are to be enlarged. By the end of 1983, 27,000 new households are projected to be planted on the West Bank.

My time is running out. Unfortunately I cannot go into all the details concerning what is happening on the West Bank regarding the actions being taken. For example, Israel is now using a third of the water taken from wells on the West Bank. Arab citizens are seeing Israeli wells drilled around their springs. Their springs are drying up, their crops are perishing, and they are being forced to sell their land at firesale prices.

Finally, as I draw to the end of my remarks, I bring to the attention of the House the fact that we must take cognizance of what is taking place on the West Bank. How much land has been lost so far? It is extremely difficult to say. Like figures on terrorism, there are several conflicting ones. The main reason for this is that Israel is not keen on publishing statistics on how much land is being taken away from the Arab population on the West Bank and in Gaza.

The estimate which has been made on the basis of some Israeli statistics and on the basis of studies conducted by Palestinians is that a little more than 27 per cent of the total land surface of the West Bank has gone into Israeli hands, into the hands of Jewish settlers.

By April 1979 there were 91,000 Jewish settlers on the West Bank. The majority of those were of course in East Jerusalem, and that was only the beginning of their settlement in the countryside. The UN Special Commission on Palestine, along with Palestinian researchers, estimate that the amount of land which has been confiscated is somewhere between 33 per cent and 37 per cent, rather than 27 per cent. Taking the lower figure, the UN Special Commission estimates that 27 per cent of the total surface area represents almost three-quarters of the cultivated land area. We are seeing a fait accompli taking place, one that will be increasingly difficult to disentangle.

• (1720)

It seems to me that a country we could do ourselves justice by promoting the motion that is before the House in international forums. As well, we should be promoting Mr. Stanfield's suggestion, for example, that perhaps one good method of achieving an understanding who should represent the Palestinians on the West Bank would be to hold a referendum, follow a democratic course, and ask the Palestinians there whom they would like to have represent them in future negotiations. This is a proposal that our country should be promoting.

We should also be supporting the Franco-Egyptian proposal before the United Nations Security Council which urges mutual recognition by Israel and the PLO.

Finally, I believe that we must continue to ask Israel and her many friends in Canada why Israel continues to deny to the Palestinians the same right to a national identity and national homeland which are the very goals which Israel has fought to achieve for itself. This is taking place at a time in Israeli and world history when the Arab world has, for the first time, offered the olive branch to Israel. It is an offer which includes mutual recognition between the PLO and Israel, secure boundaries for Israel which are no more and no less than its pre-1967 boundaries, acceptance of guarantees for the security of all the states in the region, including Israel, by the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Russia and China. This is all documented in the Arab Fez Summit Declaration. A real and lasting peace—not the present militarily imposed lull—is possible if Israel grasps the opportunity and moves now to seize the one moment in her history when there is a real possibility that she can get almost everyone in the Middle East moving in the same direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

I see the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rising, presumably to put a question to the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson). However, the Hon. Member's time has expired and this could only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, my question is premised by the fact that we all want to see peace in the Middle East. We want to see security for all of those people. But, my goodness, I have never seen more unbalanced approach to going about this.

Is the Hon. Member aware of the fact that the covenant of the PLO, that group which he has been lauding so magnificently today without even looking at the other side of the issue, calls for the annihilation and wiping out of the State of Israel?

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member talks of unbalance, I am afraid that he has indicated where the unbalance lies. The covenant to which he refers is, without any argument, an albatross around the neck of the Palestinians from a public relations point of view. There is no question there.

The facts are that since 1975 the PLO has moved in its actions well beyond what that particular covenant says and means. In particular, the Fez Summit was held at the initiative of the PLO. They participated as a full partner in the Fez Summit. I do not know if the Hon. Member has taken the trouble to look at the details of the Fez Summit, but I think he should be reminded of some of the main points of the Fez Agreement.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would ask the Hon. Member not to abuse the House by going on at great length in answer to the question. The question has been asked. Answer the question and let us get on with the debate.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness, there has been an assertion before the House that I have somehow not been factual in my presentation. I am simply backing up what I am saying with facts. The PLO has moved well beyond this convenant that the Hon. Member has referred to and which, read by itself, is clearly unsettling to any Israeli who is interested in Israel's future.

The proof is shown by what has happened as far as PLO actions and positions are concerned. They have moved well beyond that covenant. As a result of this Fez Agreement, they have indicated that they are prepared to accept the pre-1967 boundaries in Israel. They have agreed to accept UN Security Council guarantees of Israel's boundaries. They have agreed, in effect, to recognize Israel.

If the Hon. Member needs further proof, the Speaker of the parliament-in-exile of the Palestinians, Mr. Fahoum, is quoted in the February 17 Globe and Mail as saying:

'We do not want to destroy any state in the region,'—

If this is not sufficient detail, then I frankly think that the Hon. Member should go back to his sources of information, that well known instrument of Israeli policy in Canada, that arm of the Israeli government in Canada, the Canada-Israel Committee, and ask it for further details on the facts concerning the real situation in the Middle East. However, I do not think he will get them.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I think that the discussion which we have just heard highlights the importance of the theme that I propose to adopt in speaking to this motion. I make a plea for even-handedness and fairness to all concerned. I am aware of the delicacy of the matter that is now before us. It is not my intention, and I am sure not the intention of the Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson), to be provocative in the comments that are made. His plea, as I understood it, is similarly for even-handedness and fairness to all concerned. Part of this even-handedness must inevitably rest on dissemination of the relevant and pertinent information on both sides of this matter.

I think you would agree, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a flood of information on one side and a lack of receptivity to much of the information on the other. I implore and plea for the cause of even-handedness in this issue.

For example, resolution 242 of November 22, 1967, had been referred to already. I wonder if the full significance of Resolution 242 is understood. This goes back to an earlier matter, but it is part of the Middle East mosaic. It is not directly related to the invasion of Lebanon by Israel, but the invasion of Lebanon was in defiance of this particular resolution. I would encourage all Hon. Members who have an interest in stability in the Middle East, in stability in the world for that matter, to listen.

• (1730)

The Middle East is a very key area in the world today.

Mr. Prud'homme: Absolutely.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We must have a settlement there. In the documentation that I have seen and in some of the evidence adduced by the Hon. Member for Châteauguay, there is clearly a willingness to meet the demands and requirements of Israel. As far as I can see, there is less evidence on the part of Israel to meet the requirements of those other elements in that area for a final settlement.

Therefore, I would appeal to all Hon. Members that we should not issue provocative statements or become one-sided in our approach to this matter, even if it begins with Resolution 242 of November 22, 1967. One of its paragraphs calls upon Israel to "withdraw the armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict". That has not happened even yet. Here we are, five and a half or six years later, but that provision of Resolution 242 has not been accepted by one of the parties to the conflict in the Middle East. It also calls for the achievement of a just settlement of the refugee problem. These are not provocative requirements. They are humanitarian requirements and, in the context of the present world situation, they are essential requirements for peace and settlement in the world.

The Hon. Member for Châteauguay mentioned the overtures which were made prior to the invasion of Lebanon, the offer of an armistice on the border of Lebanon in addition to ceasefire. This offer was made prior to the invasion of Lebanon. Recognition of Israel was a portion of this offer. As the Hon. Member for Châteauguay mentioned, it was revealed, perhaps inadvertently, in a speech by the Israeli Minister of Tourism in Paris, and it was rejected by the Israeli authorities. Unfortunately, we do not hear that side of the story, the offers which were made. Such offers are the first step in the direction of reconciliation and settlement. As well, with the consent of the PLO, a step was taken by the Tunisian Prime Minister, acting as an intermediary of the PLO with the State Department, to reach out and seek a peace settlement in the East.

These have been genuine and sincere offers from a people who have been without a home since 1948. These people are now prepared to recognize, however unwillingly, the existence of a state in part of its homeland because an international situation is involved. I cannot help but think that part of the area now in dispute is part of the tradition of most people in this country. Hon. Members know of the man who fell by the wayside on his way to Jerusalem. Who was it that stopped and helped him? The name has gone into the language and the lore of all peoples. It was the Samaritan. We are discussing Samaria, the area in which that act of gentleness, of assistance to someone in distress, was made. How can we today, remembering the story of the Samaritan, which I am sure, all of us heard when we were small children, stand aside and see the people who want to be living there being refused that permission? I therefore plead for a wider dissemination of information on both sides of this dispute.

Mr. Prud'homme: Excellent!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): There is one aspect which involves a great deal of controversy, although that is perhaps too strong a word, because we have heard only one side of the story. It concerns the alleged provocation which brought the Israeli forces into Lebanon. I want to state for the record the actual source of the documentation which I would urge Hon. Members to consider in light of what actually went on in the months before. I cannot possibly read these documents into the record in full. I disagree with the manner in which they are laid out in that they are heavy and stodgy, but the material is informative. I speak of the report of the Secretary General of the United Nations with respect to the interim force in Lebanon, covering the period June 16 to December 10, 1981. That document is known as S/14789 and is dated December 11, 1981. It is an important, vital document to the understanding of this particular issue.

We have heard so much of the harassment of the settlements on the south side of that border.

Mr. Prud'homme: And the harassment in occupied territory on the West Bank.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would just like to refer to one paragraph of this report submitted by the Secretary General to the Security Council. He was speaking of the period between June and December of 1981. He said there were violations of Lebanese air space by Israeli aircraft and of Lebanese territorial waters by Israeli naval vessels. UNIFIL observed 205 air violations and 53 sea violations in the second part of June, 1981. There were 200 air violations and 93 sea violations in August, 1981, and 103 air violations and 72 sea violations in September. There were 220 air violations and 56 sea violations in October. There were 209 air violations and 47 sea violations in November, and 80 air violations and 16 sea violations in early December. These were violations of Lebanese air space and sea space.

I think everyone should recognize the fact that across that delicate border, there was a period when there were harassing movements. There was shelling. But this report that I have mentioned, and another one that I must refer to before my time runs out, is document S/15194 dated June 10, 1982. In case I do not reach that, that is the number of the document covering that critical period when the invasion was in progress.

There were breaches of the ceasefire, but these reports will reveal that in October and November there was less harrasment to the south. That period of quiescence in the harassment of the settlement in Israel is reported in this document, and I plead with those who want to understand the tragic humanitarian problem of that area and the tragedy that could face the world if it is not settled, to read these documents.

I was encouraged yesterday in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) make remarks in his opening statement that indicate that there is a willingness on the part of the Canadian Government to assist in the process. I find that they are words only, Mr. Speaker, I would like some substance put into these words. I enjoin those of you who are interested in more documentation to read that. It was a good statement. I would like to read it all, but time does not permit. It is on page 9 of the statement and will be included in the proceedings of that particular Committee. It indicates that the present Canadian Government supports the existence, security and well-being of Israel, and that the Arabs should make clear their willingness to live in peace with Israel. That offer has been made and was rejected. One cannot make an open offer unless one gets something in return. The offer was made; it was rejected because there is enough evidence to suggest that the plans to deal with the PLO were already in hand and there was a determination to do so. That I cannot document, but the evidence here in the report of the Secretary General should be read, because it gives that history.

The Minister went on to say:

> We are deeply concerned over Israeli settlement policy. We regard the establishment of settlements, and other actions Israel has taken to extend its control over the occupied territories, as contrary to international law and extremely unhelpful to the peace process. We would like to see an end to this activity.
> We recognize that for there to be a just peace, the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people must be realized, including their right to play a full part in negotiations to determine their future and their right to a homeland within a clearly-defined territory, the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

That is the first time that I have seen as clear a proclamation of Canada's intention. But it should be backed up with more than words; there should be activity. I do not agree with every single word of this motion that stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Châteauguay, and neither does he at the moment because it was put forward in November, 1981. At lot has transpired since then. But I think that he is to be congratulated for having given us the groundwork on which we could have an open discussion on this important matter, a matter on which the peace of the world could all too easily depend.

It is a delicate matter there because there is an invading force refusing to leave Lebanon. I knew Lebanon in happier days. I lived there for three years. The people in Lebanon are most open and welcoming. They did not realize that they would have to be welcoming an invasion force, though. I have had word from those who lived there at that time. How they have lived through the holocaust that has descended upon them over these last few months I do not know, but they are still there. I am glad they are there, and they would welcome me, I am sure, as they welcomed me before. I would like to go back to see them but I would find it very difficult. I just could not go back and see the Lebanon that I knew torn into shreds, divided as it is and occupied by a foreign invader.

An Hon. Member: Including Syria.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Including Syria, I agree. There has to be a withdrawal of all non-Lebanese forces from Lebanon.

Mr. Prud'homme: Everybody should get out.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is right, of course they should. Lebanon is a peaceful country, a country of traders, a country from which we derive much of our inheritance. Let us not forget that Byblos which is not far from Beirut—

Mr. Prud'homme: Beautiful.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —is the origin of our word "Bible"; the Roman culture that is there in the Bekaa; the Crusaders who were there. Our history was written in those mountains and in those plains, as it was to the south in Sameria and Judea. That is part of our history too, let us not forget that. But I do not think that we can tolerate the situation any longer. We must take some action to ensure that Lebanon survives as Lebanon, free of the encroachments that have occurred from all sides, able to proceed with its mission of being. Let us remember this, too. It was a haven. It was a Switzerland, in more ways than one, in the Middle East. The Armenians who fled from Turkey, many hundreds and thousands of them settled in Lebanon. They were welcomed there, and here is something that a lot of people do not remember or do not know. There was a very active synagogue right in the centre of Beirut—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I was very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to be able to get that last portion in.

Mr. Prud'homme: And I was very pleased to listen to you.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this motion on behalf of my Party this afternoon I want to begin by reaffirming, as I understand my Leader did earlier today, the commitment of the New Democratic Party to the continued existence and prosperity of the State of Israel within secure borders.

As democratic socialists, our commitment to Israel of course goes beyond our belief in the right of every nation to maintain its already established existence to the natural affinity we feel for the internal democracy characteristic of Israel and for the many social democratic institutions which have been developed there over the years, some of which, like the Histradut, predate the State of Israel itself. Israel's kibbutzim of course have also served as an example to many over the years as to what is possible when human beings determine to live and to work together for the common good. Unfortunately, during recent years it is clear that the present Israeli Government both on the West Bank and in Lebanon have betrayed Israel's democratic traditions, and this is a source of much regret to us.

It is important, therefore, to do more than just reaffirm our traditional support for Israel, and so I would like to inform the House, and through the House all interested Canadians, of some of the internal deliberations which are currently taking place within the NDP, the results of which will be debated at our upcoming federal convention this July in Regina.

As you may be aware, NDP Members, and MPs in general, take convention debates very seriously, since it is our conventions which determine our policies and which guide our caucus in Parliament. As you are also aware, there has been a strong tradition within the New Democratic Party, unlike other Parties, I would suggest, to debate in an informed and reflective way controversial international issues. Whether the subject matter is Poland, Central America, or nuclear disarmament, we believe that a national political Party has a moral obligation to address internationally important questions and not to back away from issues, even when they involve criticism of popular perceptions. This we have done over our history as a Party, and we have been willing to pay the political price which doing so has sometimes cost us.

The importance of international issues was reinforced at a recent convention with the decision to establish a permanent international affairs committee of the Party whose priority for the past year, in preparing for this year's convention, is the development and expansion of our policy on the Middle East. As part of this process, draft background paper and policy resolution are now being prepared for circulation within the Party prior to the convention, with the intention of placing these before the convention. As well, it is anticipated that there will be an exceptional number of resolutions on the Middle East from other elements of the Party, including constituency associations.

Because the draft material from our committee is not yet complete, and because I am not myself on the committee, it is difficult for me today to deal in specifics about much of what it might contain. This, of course, is not only because the work is incomplete but also because Party policy, in the end, must be determined by convention. Keeping these points in mind, however, I will try to give some indication, in broad and incomplete strokes, of the kind of issues and concerns which I think the New Democrats will be addressing and some of the principles and perceptions which will likely guide our deliberations.

The NDP will certainly remain firmly committed to our long-standing support for the people of Israel and the right of Israel to exist, and to exist in secure borders. The NDP also remains firmly committed to our call for a permanent, just, negotiated peace in the Middle East, especially that part of the Middle East which includes Israel. The NDP will continue its opposition to both terrorism and to the use of military force as a means of solving political problems. Consistent with our belief in the politial integrity of all States, we will repeat our call for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon. We also believe that Canada has an important contribution to make to Middle East affairs because of this country's past role in diplomacy and peacekeeping, and because of the immediate interest of Canadians in peace.

Finally, it is long overdue for Israel's other Arab neighbours to do as Egypt has rightly done and officially recognize and accept Israel's right to exist. It is clear that they must do explictly, what they now seem to do implicitly, and that is, recognize Israel, and this must include explicit PLO recognition of Israel's right to exist. The relationship between the Palestinian people and Israel, obviously, is basic to any comprehensive settlement in the Middle East, and it must be realized by everyone that we are dealing here with more than a question of refugees. We are dealing with the question of the need for a homeland of a long dispersed and suffering people, the Palestinians.

There must be recognition of the legitimate rights and aspirations both of Israel and of the Palestinian people. Ultimately, Israel must be prepared to negotiate with any representatives of the Palestinian people who publicly recognize Israel's right to exist within secure borders. And also, ultimately, the Arab community as a whole must begin to see the Palestinians less as a political football in their grudge match with Israel, and more as a people whose collective and individual needs transcend the politics of any given situation.

As for the NDP, we will continue to recognize and defend the right of Israel to exist and to be secure. We will continue to call for dialogue and negotiations between the Parties. We will continue to condemn both terror and the use of military force as a means of resolving political issues. We will certainly reaffirm our belief in the important role that Canada can play in helping the parties resolve the conflict. And we will continue our tradition of not letting friendship stand in the way of honest and, if need be, vigorous criticism of what our friends sometimes do, whether it be the United States, Israel, Egypt or whoever it happens to be, for it is the constructive criticism which friendly peoples can provide to each other that is one of the mainstays of creative international dialogue.

In this respect I would like to bring up at least two concerns which I and my colleagues have with Israeli foreign policy. The first concern is Israel's relationship with South Africa. We are deeply offended by the collaboration of Israel with one of the world's most racist regimes. The technological, military and commercial links which Israel has with South Africa should be seen by Israelis not as an advantage to Israel, but as a powerful disincentive for Canadians and others to believe that in foreign policy Israel can lay claim to any moral superiority. If international opinion be as important to Israel as I think it should be, then let these links be broken. I believe that Israel's greatest weapon is its integrity. This is true of all nations, but it is an insight which I believe Israel has traditionally been guided by and must now re-emphasize.

A second concern is the recent reports of Israeli military advisers in Honduras, and the visit of Defence Minister Sharon. This, to me, is a profoundly disturbing report, and any aid which the Israeli Government is giving to American efforts to support regimes which terrorize its citizens in that region should be stopped immediately if Israel wants to have any credibility left with those who see American policy in Central America as one gigantic moral and political mistake. And there are many such people, as we all know. This is as disturbing, Mr. Speaker, to those who value the integrity of Israel, as was the bombing of Beirut. A nation whose roots, Mr. Speaker, are in the holocaust, whether it likes it or not, is expected to have higher than average standards.

In all of these cases, as in others, I know that there are many Israelis who share my concerns. Israel, to its credit, is not a single-minded community. It is a democratic community capable of open, internal self-criticism and, hopefully, always will be. Witness the immediate protests by thousands of Israelis which were instrumental in securing an inquiry into the massacres in Lebanon. It is to those many Israelis, who, living out of the prophetic tradition, want to combine justice for others with justice for Israel, that we must look for the enduring peace which the whole world must truly seek in the Middle East. Likewise, let us look to those Palestinians who seek justice for others as well as for the Palestinian people.

Mr. Prud'homme: Could I ask a question of the Hon. Member?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis rises to put a question to the Hon. Member. Will he accept the question?

Mr. Blaikie: I am not sure we have the time, Mr. Speaker, but if he can fit it in, yes.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to the Hon. Member because it is a subject which has been with me for the last 15 years. I would like to ask the Hon. Member, and I repeat again that I listened with absolutely great interest—it is one of the most remarkable speeches I have heard in my last 19 years in the House on a very difficult subject—I would like to know if the Hon. Member could enlighten us by giving me at long last a definition of "homeland". I would rather say "a country". I have a country. Everyone has a country. But it seems there we are afraid to use the real word, "A country. A passport." What is the definition of "homeland", because even in my own Government we do not agree on the definition of homeland.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, as I understand the word "homeland" it is a word that the Palestinian people themselves, use, and this is something they would want to define presumably, in negotiation with Israel and other people who are concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2) it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 15, 1983, consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Blaker in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When the Committee rose on Tuesday, March 15, Clauses 8, 9 and 128(12) of the Bill were under consideration. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) had the floor.

On Clauses 8, 9 and 128(12):

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, as I recall, we were in the midst of asking the Minister questions as to why the bond would not go beyond 1984. I wonder if he would pick it up there and inform the Committee why they would not make that provision open-ended or at least give them a couple of years beyond 1984?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I will direct my attention to the question of the Hon. Member. However, on two occasions previously in the proceedings, there had been some discussion about the question of work-in-progress which has been dealt with. The issue whether notaries in the Province of Quebec would be included as an exemption in that Section has been raised. I notice that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South raised that issue in a public forum by way of a press communique. It appears that he is of the opinion that the Government does not intend to move to have notaries in the exempt category.

To begin with this morning, I would like to advise the Committee that the Government has always been prepared to introduce amendments either to 124, the definition Section of a lawyer, to include or, as requested by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, to amend the provisions of Clause 16 so as specifically to designate notaries in the Province of Quebec in the exempt category. The Government is prepared to do that this morning. I make that suggestion before we begin with Clauses 8 and 9. I would be interested in hearing the views of Hon. Members on that subject.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills has the floor and is asking the Minister questions regarding Clauses 8 and 9 of the Bill in connection with the Small Business Bond and the Small Business Development Bond. This Committee has dealt with Clause 16. The Minister knows that if he wants to make certain arrangements with us concerning the Bill, he can do that. He also knows that we are not very agreeable in view of the fact that closure has been imposed on this Committee.

In any event, the Minister is totally out of order in dealing with questions respecting Clause 16 because that Clause has been dealt with. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills has the floor on Clauses 8 and 9. That is what we are dealing with. It is imperative that the Chair call the Minister to order for not staying with the issue.

• (1115)

The Deputy Chairman: The Table Officer seems to have the same information I have, to the effect that Clause 16 has not yet been carried. Are we incorrect?

Mr. Blenkarn: If you take a look at the records of the Committee, the vote on Clause 3 was grouped with a vote on Clause 16 as one vote, and that took place two or three days ago. That matter has been disposed of. The Committee has dealt in full with Clauses 3 and 16.

The Deputy Chairman: I believe the Hon. Member—

Mr. Blenkarn: It dealt with a number of other Clauses, too.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member may be satisfied if I indicate that I must do a little research and check whether or not that Clause has been carried. I will attend to the matter as debate continues, if we can handle it that way.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I might add that yes, my recollection is the same as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, that Clause 16 was dealt with together with Clause 3. The only reason I raised it this morning was in the context of seeking the unanimous consent of Hon. Members and, obviously, that is not forthcoming from the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I did it because I interpreted the news release as a request for the Government to introduce an amendment, but obviously the Hon. Member has indicated that he does not wish to deal with it at this time.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order as well. I would ask that you not apply the last five minutes of debate, which was on an entirely separate point raised by the Minister, toward my 20-minute time on Clauses 8 and 9.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry to interrupt, Mr. Chairman, but I do not want to pass without having pointed out that, although the Minister may have been considering the possibility of asking for unanimous consent, he did not do so. I would not want him to assume that it was not forthcoming without the question being asked. It may well be that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is not of a mind to grant unanimous consent, but I think he should be required to indicate that, rather than it just being assumed that is the case.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I would, for the record, formally request consent of all Hon. Members to reopen Clause 16 to deal with the amendment.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with Clauses 8 and 9. There have been a number of suggestions with respect to what the Minister may or may not do because the Minister, in his damnable effort to force this Bill through this House in an unrealistic time-frame, decided to force votes and then made fun of the fact that he won those votes. He then decided to force closure on this Bill. There is an opportunity, perhaps later in the discussion today, to talk about the matter, and there certainly is an opportunity in the other House of Parliament for the Government to bring in that amendment.

The Government has suggested that lawyers be defined as "notaries" or notaries be defined as "lawyers". I have had an opportunity to discuss that matter with the Canadian Bar Association, with my own Bar Association, and they are horrified that this Government would try to define lawyers as notaries. That was the first proposition.

With respect to the other propositions, we have a countervailing proposition for the Government. It knows that proposition. If it wants to deal realistically with this matter, it can do it; but I want to advise the Government at this time, through you, sir, that a Government which thinks it is a dictator can think it is a dictator, but somewhere along the line it will have to obey the rules of its Parliament.

The Deputy Chairman: I have a proposal put forward by the Minister of State for Finance to the Committee of the Whole for unanimous consent to permit the Committee of the Whole to consider Clause 16. I must take it that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South by his words has indicated he is refusing unanimous consent.

At this point, unless some other Hon. Member wishes to rise on a point of order, the Chair will recognize again the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills. I will give some thought to this matter of time taken out of the Hon. Member's allotment of time in view of the points of order raised.

• (1120)

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Minister would rise and answer the question why the Bill would have a time limitation now of 1984, which is just a few short months away. Up until now many individuals have not been able to get the applications in place and the financial institutions have not been able to agree because of the general state of uncertainty. Will the Minister indicate now that the Government's policy is to run that on at least, say, until 1985 or even 1986?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I could not, as Government policy, indicate that the Government's plan was to extend the program as requested by the Hon. Member. I reiterate that the plan has only been in place for a few years. In that time the Government has, after analysis of what has happened under the plan, come forward with the amendment before us to target aid to those most in need. As I indicated to the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, the Government will monitor the plan and, if warranted, we would conceivably come in with amendments or extensions. We feel we need some more experience. Although the Hon. Member feels the year is fast moving by, we do have nine months remaining and therefore we want that time for experience.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, with great respect I find that unacceptable because we know under the original provision that there was $2 billion advanced, and under the Government's amendment in 1981 there has only been $200 million advanced. We are only nine months from the end of the whole program and, as I indicated, many people have had problems applying because the proper election forms were not available to them in the financial institutions. As well, the Minister knows full well that the next budget is going to be perhaps in April. That will take months and months to be passed, the year will have expired and we will be into a new year and the chances of this being put into a new budget and being passed are small. So we are going to continue this incredible process of uncertainty. While it might be fine for us to sit here in this peculiar fairyland, this ivory tower, it is really totally unsatisfactory to the people who are living and working in this country and producing wealth that we sit here and so readily redistribute and waste what they have produced. So I urge the Minister to reconsider that.

I would like to take the Minister to Clause 9(e) where it points out that the bond must be issued in cases of financial difficulty. That is causing great difficulties as well at the grass roots, practical level for the small-businessman, rancher or farmer trying to take advantage of it. Would the Minister stand and make a definitive statement as to what the Government means by financial difficulties?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I am advised by my officials that, contrary to the opinion of the Hon. Member, the definition of that Section and its practical application are well known. Section 15.1(3)(b) of the Income Tax Act reads as follows:

• (1125)

(iv) the obligation is issued by the corporation

(A) as part of a proposal to, or an arrangement with, its creditors that has been approved by a court under the Bankruptcy Act

(B) at a time when all or substantially all of its assets are under the control of a receiver, receiver-manager, sequestrator or trustee in bankruptcy, or

(C) at a time when, by reason of financial difficulty, the corporation is in default, or could reasonably be expected to default, on a debt held by a person with whom the corporation was dealing at arm's length and it is issued, in whole or in part, directly or indirectly in exchange or substitution for that debt;

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, you can see how complicated the Bills are when the Minister has to refer to Section 15.1(3)(iv). It is just absurd. It is also clear that a person virtually has to have been petitioned into bankruptcy or to have voluntarily signed an assigment into bankruptcy before the Section can be used. That is why it has gone from $2 billion down to $200 million. We are not helping the genuine farmer who has been able to stave off this assignment but is virtually on the verge of tipping in. That is why I believe the Government has to look genuinely at this provision again. Why would we want to force people to have to take that incredible risk voluntarily to go into bankruptcy and then apply for relief under this Section? If they do not get it from the banks, they are into bankruptcy. Their assets can be sold off and they can be turned off their land. Surely that is not what a humane and caring Government would want to do.

I believe the Government should look at that again. Because a new budget speech will be coming shortly, it is possible that if the Minister of State for Finance can see how illogical the Section is as it stands, perhaps he could convince the Minister of Finance of this.

I believe those are all the questions I have on Clauses 8 and 9 Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has put his finger on a very difficult point. Irrespective of political philosophies, the Act has to respond to changing economic conditions. It has also to be interpreted and used by the business world. It was for that reason that the Government of the Party to which the Hon. Member belongs introduced Section 15.1(3)(b)(iv) which he has criticized as being too technical. Farmers, bankers and business need some guidance, but his Government introduced the Section he is now criticizing. Revenue Canada, which administers the Act, provides a lot of assistance on a case by case basis to people who inquire whether they qualify under the Section.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, under the Section introduced by the PC Government $2 billion was advanced, and after the changes made by the Liberal Government some $200 million has been advanced. That shows which Party genuinely cares for the man on the land.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few moments to direct a number of questions to the Minister regarding Clauses 8 and 9 of the Bill. In my estimation these are very critical Clauses.

One begins to appreciate more than ever the plight of small businesses in Canada. I want to focus on the most positive aspect of the small business community. It is the part of the community that is most interested in expansion and development at this time. Could the Minister explain why the term "development" is included in the title of the Small Business Development Bond? What is the point of that?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, it is probably historical. When originally introduced, the Clause was directed toward expansion. The amendment now directs funding toward, should I say, survival—those who are desperately in need of assistance. As I have indicated, the Section is fairly recent, it was amended recently. We are reluctant to remove from it the potential for offering the Section at some time in the future for development. Of course, we would all wish that no assistance would be required from the Government at all for the small business sector if the economy were stronger.

• (1130)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the point which the Minister made that at one time there was a real development component in the Small Business Development Bond. It became a familiar tool with a considerable number of small businesses in Canada using it to their advantage to expand and use the tax system in order to access lower than usual interest rates.

I want to direct a question to the Minister regarding the Small Business Development Bond and the Small Business Bond and ask him to give me some idea of the numbers involved, so that we have an idea of the usage of these two very important assistance programs for small business. Could he give me some idea of the numbers involved over the last 12 months, or whatever would be an appropriate period of time for which he would have statistics?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the only way in which I could respond at this time is, of course, to draw the attention of the Hon. Member to the amounts that have been taken down—over $2 billion under the Section as originally designed and a further $200 million under the Section proposed to be amended.

Mr. Riis: I seek a point of clarification. Is the Minister saying that $2 billion has been allocated under the Small Business Development Bond and $200 million under the Small Business Bond?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman. What I was pointing out was that historically, since the unamended Section has been in place, over $2 billion was drawn through the Small Business Bond by small businesses. Since the amendment directing and targeting toward those businesses in difficulty, the amount taken down in that period of six months has been, roughly, an additional $200 billion.

Mr. Riis: I thank the Minister for those figures. They certainly point out that the Development Bond was put to good use. I want to direct a specific question to the Minister regarding the Small Business Bond. Does he have any indication he could provide Hon. Members of the use to which the Small Business Bond has been put?

Mr. Cosgrove: A colleague of the Hon. Member made reference to a study conducted by one of the accounting firms, an analysis of the use, which I did not have at hand. The contention was that the majority of the funds had been used by farmers and fishermen. Our subsequent research would confirm that it breaks down to something like 60-40; that is, 60 per cent by the farming and fishing communities and 40 per cent by other categories.

Mr. Riis: Again I thank the Minister, because it gives an idea of the breakdown of category. Is it possible to obtain any idea of the number of Small Business Bonds which have been allocated or, if that is impossible, at least the amount of money attached to the Small Business Bond?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, we do not have the numbers. The numbers are not up to date; that is, the number of users or the number of people who have applied and actually been candidates for the bond. The figures I have just given the Hon. Member indicate that under the proposal, as amended, it has been over $200 million; we know that. Prior to that it was somewhere over $2 billion that was used under the Section before its amendment.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I have lost track of where we are in this, and I apologize for my inability to follow the Minister's description. I understood him to say that the Small Business Development Bond had issued $2 billion worth of funds before it was amended, before the development portion of it was taken out of it, and that since then it has been $200 million. That is one thing.

My question was: What amount of money has been allocated out into the small business community under the Small Business Bond? In a sense we have now moved to Clause 9, referring to the Small Business Bond only.

Mr. Cosgrove: I am advised by my officials that the significance of Clause 9 was really the introduction of the application of the Section to unincorporated businesses as opposed to incorporated businesses. Again we do not have a breakdown as to how many unincorporated businesses have taken it up as a percentage of the users of the $200 million since the amendment was introduced. But the import and significance of Clause 9 was really a result of representations from constituents of Hon. Members on both sides of the House that the bond be available to unincorporated businesses. Also I am advised that the Section has only been in place for six months and we do not have the figures broken down as yet.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that we do not have any figures in terms of the moneys allocated. Another question I want to put to the Minister concerns something about which I have been informed as a Member of Parliament on a variety of occasions. When a small-businessman in trouble has approached chartered banks and said: "I am on the verge of bankruptcy; I would like to obtain a loan under the Small Business Bond", the response of bankers has been essentially to laugh at the individual. For example, bankers have said that they are not in the business of lending out money to businesses in financial difficulty. Considering that the banks through their own admission—and I do not necessarily agree—have indicated that they are interested in supporting only viable small businesses as they define them, businessman after businessman has approached the bank only to be turned away. They have come to my offices and said: "You told me that there was something called a Small Business Bond in place to assist small businesses in financial difficulty", as the Minister himself has defined. Yet when these individuals went to the banks, they were rejected outright and told: "We are not interested in that program for a variety of reasons". Does the Minister believe that the banks of Canada are co-operating with the Government of Canada on the issuance of Small Business Bonds at this time?

Mr. Cosgrove: Part of the response would be to remind the Hon. Member that our figures indicate that over $200 million has been used under this bond provision since the amendment was proposed. We know it has been effective to assist people in the small business category to that extent during this period of time, which is the last six months. Some Hon. Members have said yes but the Section as unamended, that is, the development provision of the Section when it was first introduced a couple of years ago, had a takedown of over $2 billion. I pointed out on the six-month experience that it is difficult to compare those two figures because we do not have that much experience.

• (1140)

The Minister of Finance has reviewed representations such as the one made by the Hon. Member. My recollection is that it was a matter raised by him when he met with representatives of the Bankers' Association just recently in preparation for his budget. He raised the point, brought it to the attention of the senior executives of the Bankers' Association and asked if they would alert their officials to apply whatever discretion they are permitted under the bond so as to make it available whenever and wherever possible.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, could I ask you to give me some indication of how much time I have left?

The Deputy Chairman: I am advised the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I want to pursue one aspect. I thought the Minister told me in answer to my previous question that the Government had no figures on the amount of money loaned out under the Small Business Bond. Yet the Minister has now indicated $200 million was the amount loaned under the Small Business Bond.

I want to pursue this line of questioning for clarification because it is important to the small business community. I want to approach the question in three parts. Will the Minister tell me the amount of money loaned out under the Small Business Bond when the development component was a reality?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman. That was the original figure I mentioned of somewhat just over $2 billion. The $200 million figure I gave in response is a combination of Clauses 8 and 9. The amendment did two things. It made the bond available to unincorporated entities and also targeted it toward those small-businessmen who applied for it because of financial difficulty. On the basis of that six-month experience, with the kind of information we have, we have not been able to determine whether it was the unincorporated entities which used the $200 million of the corporations. But the $200 million figure indicates the amount of take-downs under the combination of Clauses 8 and 9 since the amendment was flagged some six months ago.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, is the Minister saying that for all intents and purposes the Small Business Bond and the Small Business Development Bond in its revised form are essentially the same thing?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Chairman, and available now to unincorporated small businesses as well as to incorporated small businesses.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister agree that one of the problems facing the small business community today is the difficulty of building up equity in a small business? If that is a problem the Minister recognizes, would it be in the Government's interest to assist the small corporation in building equity?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, one of the amendments with respect to that Section, in response to the difficulty identified by the Hon. Member, is to make the bond provisions available to small businesses but in greater scope, so that in effect the bond is available not only in the original amounts as set out in Clause 8 as introduced, but also permitting small businesses to take advantage of the small business rate and qualifying for a larger amount of business with a larger base.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, one of the ways the small business sector had of building equity was to use the taxable dividends to its shareholders as a way of putting off the time when accumulated earnings would be in excess of $1 million under the new definition of small business. This then allowed the small business, if you like, to use the taxable dividends to reinvest in the company. In other words, to build equity and at the same time enable the small business to hold off the date of being classified as a large business, and therefore entering a higher tax bracket.

My question is really two-fold. What is it that is so magical when accumulated earnings one day reach $1 million and the next day the tax rate essentially doubles for that small business? Could the Minister explain the logic behind that definition or it is totally arbitrary? Why has the Minister decided that he will not now allow the taxable dividends to be used as a reduction in the definition of a small business?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I would be happy to respond to the Hon. Member's question when the Clause pertinent to his question is before the Committee, which is Clause 86. It would be the intention of the Government to introduce some amendments to Clause 86 but we are not there yet. I do not think it would be proper for me to go into the item now unless we have consent of all Members, and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is indicating that he does not consent.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Minister to clarify whether he was referring me to Clause 86 regarding the definition of the taxable dividend that is being removed as an option for the small business?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I was referring to Clause 86 which deals with tax rates, and also Clause 109 which deals with dividends.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister a general question rather than refer specifically to the content of those two Clauses. We are talking about small business in Canada. We are talking about bonds and development bonds to assist that sector. That sector is defined in this particular Clause as a company that would end its definition of a small business after accumulated earnings had reached $1 million. What is the rationale for that definition? What is it that changes in the small manufacturing shop or the small business the day after the accumulated earnings reach $1 million?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, that relates to two Clauses, one of which is Clause 109, the definition section. The Hon. Member poses the difficulty I have in trying to respond to a Clause which involves a combination of two, which is part of the difficulty in introducing material. If we only discuss them in chronological order, it prevents us from logically dealing with this issue.

• (1150)

I see that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is chuckling as he recognizes that that is a difficulty.

Mr. Blenkarn: I rise on a point of order. The question is very relevant. This particular Clause deals, in fact, with the small business limit of $75,000 and amends it to increase it to $1 million. My friend the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap is absolutely right. To try to avoid answering the question on the basis that the Minister would like to play around with the Bill a bit is just wrong. The Minister is here to answer questions and that is a vital part of this Clause.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: The time allotted to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap has now expired. He will, of course, be able to speak after the intervention of another Hon. Member.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Chairman, I want to follow along the lines of the questioning of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap because, as a Member, I deal with issues in my constituency involving small businesses in financial trouble due to high interest rates. The Small Business Development Bond and then the Small Business Bond became very important to those people. They found that when their Member consulted with the Government as to what assistance was available to them when they did find themselves in some financial difficulty due to high interest rates, the Government continued to say: "We have the Small Business Bond, the Small Business Development Bond, and then the other bond to assist those businesses". However, they found that when they went to the banks to ask for the use of the bond, the banks would consider their financial statements and say: "Well, you are having difficulty; you are in financial trouble and we are the ones who must take the risk. Therefore, we do not feel that we can lend the money to you." It became a bit of a farce, because when the businesses were in trouble and looking for assistance, they went to the banks thinking they could use the bond but found that the banks said: "Sorry, you are a risk and we cannot provide that assistance to you".

I placed a question on the Order Paper as to how much money had been given out. The answer was provided in the millions of dollars. I believe the figure given by the Minister was correct, some $2 billion, and it was broken down into Provinces.

Mr. Blenkarn: That was the Development Bond, not the Small Business Bond.

Mr. Schellenberger: It was the Development Bond. However, there was nothing which indicated to the Member of Parliament whether or not the Development Bond was used to assist businesses which were in financial difficulty due to interest rates, or whether it was just given to the businesses which were in reasonable financial shape. With some assistance through the bond, the banks were really taking no risk at all; they were just putting the businesses in a little better financial position.

At that time I wondered whether the Government had any ability to monitor a program which it announced and was bragging about to the people across this country. I wanted to see whether the banks were in fact assisting businesses which were in some financial difficulty or whether they were in fact just lending to the businesses which were really good risks anyway and which, by using the bond, the banks could make even that much better risks. That question has never been answered.

I want to ask the Minister whether this was just another program thrown out for public relations purposes and to assist some businesses, but with really no mechanism in place to determine whether it was in fact doing some of the work that it was intended to do, concerning which Ministers have responded to me that this was to help businesses in trouble.

After I pursued that matter a little bit, I found that there was in fact an organization in a building here in Ottawa, on Metcalfe Street, called the corporate rulings division which was available to small businesses if they found they were turned away from banks and really had no other place to go but perhaps into bankruptcy. This organization was prepared to consider their financial picture and make some rulings as to whether the banks were in error and should provide the bond or whether it should not be given.

Therefore, I presented a typical case in my constituency before the organization and after about eight or ten weeks the response came back, and I was very interested in it. The response was: "It looks like you ought to be able to apply for the bond but we would like to know from you whether you have any relative from whom you could borrow money or any assets which you could sell off to come up with some money", and it went on and on. There was a long list of suggestions which I am sure any business in financial difficulty would have already pursued. Therefore, that was not of any assistance either.

I guess that what I am saying in my little address to the Minister is that when such programs are brought forth, there ought to be some ability to monitor them to see whether they are in fact doing the job. Ministers respond: "Look, you are in financial difficulty and you can use this bond". We, as Members, sit down and say: "Great". I can tell my constituents that a program is available to them. However, when we return to our ridings, we find that when these people go through the process it is not, in fact, of any assistance to them at all. If there is any monitoring ability, I would like to know about it. I do not suspect there is.

When a program is brought forth, why is the fact not announced that there is a division called the corporate rulings division which can assist businesses which have made applications but have been turned down and have thrown up their hands, not knowing where to go? Why is that information not also made available to assist them in these cases?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I have already indicated that the Section, as amended, has only been in force for a few months. I am advised that Revenue Canada is a Department which administers and reviews the elections. I cannot indicate whether there is a sophisticated system in place for monitoring applications under the Section in the way in which I believe the Hon. Member is asking that it be done. I would think that the experience under the bond is so new that it probably is not the case. However, we have heard representations. The Minister has heard representations such as those made by the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members and has raised that concern, as I recall it, with the Bankers' Association. Certainly it is something which we can continue to flag and bring to the attention of the banks.

However, I would also point out that there are other remedies and programs available as well to the very person I suspect the Hon. Member uses as an example. The Small Businesses Loans Act is another way in which the funding is made available at a reduced rate. Legislation concerning the program will shortly, I understand, be before Hon. Members. With the assistance of Hon. Members from both sides of the House, yet another program can be made available to people in the small business sector who are looking for assistance at this time.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Chairman, I know about the small business loans program. In most cases it is 1 per cent above prime.

Mr. Blenkarn: That's what it is.

Mr. Fisher: That's not true. Why do so many people use it?

Mr. Schellenberger: It does not assist businesses, particularly farms with large capital outlays, in order to purchase equipment, to place crops in the ground or whatever. When interest rates rise as they did in the last few years, the only way that most of these businesses which are capital-intensive can continue to exist, especially if they are at the mercy of the whims of nature, such as those in a farm position, is with assistance on the interest. That is why the Small Business Development Bond is so attractive. It did lower the interest rate and allowed those businesses in relatively short-term difficulty due to interest rates to use it as a good way of getting over the hump of a rapid rise in interest for a year or two.

That is why this was such an excellent program and why it was so important that it be monitored to see that the banks were in fact giving bonds to those businesses which really needed them in the short-term, rather than to businesses which perhaps could have made it through but which, by giving them the bond, just made them that much better of a risk.

• (1200)

I guess the other question which was not answered is the use of the corporate rulings branch. Why did we not get information provided to us about this branch which is an alternative for small businesses to go to when banks turn them down? It has been my experience that if one is turned down by one bank on a bond or a loan and one goes to another bank, the information is generally there. The banker says: "Well, you do not deal with us; why are you coming here?" Unless one is not going to tell the truth, the answer has to be: "Well, I have been turned down by my bank and I am looking for a bank that is more amenable to my terms". That generally does not work. Probably only one bank in a thousand would look at these types of things.

So the corporate rulings division, I think, is a very important aspect. I was not aware of it, as a Member, for a number of months until I got into two or three cases intensively.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the corporate rulings division should be the Section that does provide answers to small businesses, proprietorships or corporations. Its mandate is to assist this sector of the economy. I agree with the Hon. Member that ten weeks would be very frustrating to someone who is looking at problems of meeting weekly payrolls and the like. On the other hand, I wonder if because there are a number of requests the division has backed up. If it is backed up, of course, that is good and bad. It means it is serving its mandate, but it also means, unfortunately, that a large number of people are looking for assistance and signalling their need for assistance.

Mr. Schellenberger: I will just conclude my remarks by saying that I know the bond is something that we should build on. It has a lot of ability to assist small businesses, particularly the farm community, through difficult times. Due to a rapid high interest increase in the country or some pestilence of nature that hurts a farm, farmers may require a low interest rate for a few years to get over this difficulty. We ought to build upon it and set up a monitoring system so we can see that our financial lending institutions are providing the kind of requirements that we, as politicians, see these bonds offering, rather than just a tool to assist those businesses that are fairly viable and would be just that much more viable if they used the bond. The figure of $2 billion looks impressive. My concern is as to whether it really assisted those businesses that were in dire need or not.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to make some comments apropos of what the Hon. Member was saying about small business. I heard the last part of his speech. I understood that what he wanted was support and help for small businesses. I wanted to remind him that if he is serious, and I know that he is, about giving that help and support, he might want to consider talking to his House Leader and to his Leader about the passage in the House of three important items for small business.

The Small Businesses Loans Act is due to expire at the end of March and the Rural Development Incentives Act needs renewal. The small business investment grant is presently before the House. At the end of March—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Calgary West on a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I understand it is a requirement of the Chair that the Chair rule on relevancy. How on earth is this revelant to the Clause under discussion? In fact, it is an attempt to mislead the House. We have not seen that legislation brought before the House. It is the duty of the Government House Leader to bring legislation before the House so that we can debate it. It is not brought forward but Government Members stand up and talk about it while we are dealing with another Clause.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair is having some difficulty. I was noting the Minister's remarks and wondering where his comments were going. Perhaps he could point out where he is going, so we can ascertain if that is relevant at the moment.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, as I understood the main point—

Mr. Blenkarn: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: I want to tell the Hon. Member for Mississauga South that if he is going to raise a point of order he should be making a point of order and not enter into the debate. I have yet to hear the Hon. Minister of State for Small Business in order to determine whether the comments he is making are relevant to the Bill, and I have to hear him before I can make that decision.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South on a point of order.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, my point of order is exactly that. This is Committee of the Whole House. The Minister of State for Small Business is a Member of the Government. Is the Minister being recognized as a private Member, or is he being recognized as the Minister for the Government replying to questions? Because the question really is that we have before us the Minister of State, who is the witness before this Committee, answering the questions of the Committee. Now we have a situation where another Member of the Government stands up, without any jurisdiction to handle this piece of legislation, and proceeds to become involved in it.

My point of order is this. We have to know from where he comes. Does he come as an ordinary Member? My position is that he is not entitled to be recognized in the Committee as an ordinary Member unless he is allowed to cross-examine his Cabinet colleague on the floor of the House, and I do not think that is right. Or is he being recognized as the Minister responding to a question, in which case it is not his portfolio? In neither case has this Minister the right to interfere in this debate at this point.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I want to resolve one issue at a time, if I may. The Minister has every right to participate in debate of the Committee of the Whole. We may do so as any other other Hon. Member does.

That matter is settled, but I was having some difficulty as to the relationship of the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Rural Development Incentives Act to which the Minister was referring, so I simply point out to him that there remains in issue whether or not the Minister's comments are relevant to the Bill before us.

If he would now care to take the floor, obviously it would be helpful if he could point out how these matters are relevant to the Bill and to the Clause, and then we could all proceed.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for recognizing my rights as a Member of Parliament. I do not hold it against the Hon. Member because he happens to be a Member of the Opposition. I fully support his position as a Member of the Opposition and I hope he stays a Member of the Opposition for a long, long while. On the other hand, he should not discriminate against me because I happen to be a Member of the Government. I have a right to speak on behalf of farmers and fishermen who are going to be hurt at the end of March unless certain legislation is passed. These are small businessmen. They are helped by the Income Tax Act. They are also helped by complementary Acts such as the Rural Development Incentives Act and the Small Businesses Loans Act. These are tax measures too, in a way, and that is the relevance, Mr. Chairman.

We are talking about support across the board that this Government and this Parliament provides for small business. That is the point that he is making. I am saying to the Hon. Member and to the Opposition that, if they are serious about giving that help, they will pass without any debate the Small Businesses Loans Act which expires at the end of March; they will pass without debate the Rural Development Incentives Act; they will pass without debate the small business investment grant. If that legislation is not passed by the end of March, there will be no further help of that kind for small businessmen, including farmers and fishermen. That is the point.

The Deputy Chairman: Clause 8 in this Bill does have reference to the Small Business Development Bond, but I find that when I take the Minister's words at large, to me they do not seem to address themselves to Clauses 8, 9 or 128(12). However, we have arrived at the pont where in any event the Minister appears to have completed his remarks. If someone wants me to rule, in fact, my inclination would be to rule that that was not quite in order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, we will try to get back to Clause 8 and 9, but it would be nice to be able to ask the Minister of State for Small Business why, with three such important pieces of legislation on his personal plate as Minister, his House Leader is bringing in a betting Bill on Friday and a take-over-the-agricultural-industry Bill on Monday. Why is the Government priority in that direction when small businesses are hurting? It would be nice to ask him that question in light of his out of order intervention.

I come back to Clauses 8 and 9. Do we see this legislation and this particular Clause before us today because the Minister could not find assistance for the farm community, and could not get something passed through Cabinet? Are we bending this in the direction of farms because the Minister of Agriculture is falling down on the job?

• (1210)

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman. I am surprised that the Hon. Member, with his experience in the House, would not know that he will have an opportunity in a very few minutes to raise any question he wishes of either the Minister responsible for small business or the Minister of Agriculture. The Hon. Member really is blowing hot and cold. He is speaking out of both sides of his mouth at the same time. He criticizes the Minister for making a statement and then raises a question about another Minister, knowing full well that the time to do that is in Question Period, not now when I am looking Clauses 8 and 9 perforce.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, the Minister has gone out of his way to indicate that the change in the law is to allow unincorporated businesses to participate in the Small Business Bond. Can the Minister confirm that about 90 or 95 per cent of the take-out by unincorporated business is by farmers in trouble? Is that where the money is going?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I hope the Hon. Member will raise that question with the Minister of Agriculture so that he can use the hour in Question Period to deal with the numbers of different types of programs and assistance that the Government provides to the agriculture sector, including small farmers. It might be constructive.

In response to the Hon. Member's question, I am very pleased that this is yet another example of assistance by the Government of Canada available to the farming community. No, I do not confirm the figures used by the Hon. Member. Had he been here when that question was asked by one of his colleagues earlier in today's proceedings, he would realize that the best information we have is that his 90 per cent figure is way out of line.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I am just dealing with unincorporated businesses which take up the Small Business Bond. If that figure is way out of line, what is the figure? What proportion of this take-out by unincorporated businesses deals with farming?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, we indicated earlier that as far as the amended Clause is concerned, that is the $200 million that has been used under the amended Clause, which for the first time makes the bond available to unincorporated businesses and which targets aid to those in need, the breakdown is something like 60 per cent to the farm-fishing community—I do not know whether we have broken those two down—and 40 per cent to other categories.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, one of my colleagues the other day, at the beginning of this debate, tried to get an indication from the Government and was not very successful. We are moving from a development bond to, in the Minister's own words, a survival bond. Is it the Government's opinion that development is no longer needed in the country?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I have responded to that question posed in different ways not only by Members of the Conservative Party but the New Democratic Party. The Government, faced with objections by the Hon. Member and his colleagues that we should attempt to retain Government expenditures at reasonable levels and in our borrowing practices and deficit financing attempt to keep reasonable support measures in force, at the same time takes into account that we have automatic programs which have increased our deficit requirements. There are a limited number of dollars to be shared in various sectors in support programs. We estimate this particular program will cost an additional $25 million in foregone revenues to the Government. That is a significant amount of assistance toward the farming-small business sector. I suppose we wish we had the support of Hon. Members to increase the deficit and expand the programs to make them available to everyone who expresses a need; but surely the Hon. Member cannot criticize the Government on one hand for having too high a deficit and then make the representation he just made that we expand the deficit so as to help people in the small business sector.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, it is most annoying for the Minister to stand up—and the Parliamentary Secretary did this yesterday—and keep putting words in my mouth that I did not utter, and put ideas on the floor as if they were mine when I never made them. I have never in the several days of debate suggested that the Government expand its deficit.

I have a suggestion for the Government. The Government gives $1 billion each year to a corporation in this country called Petro-Canada. It could take that $1 billion and lend it to small businesses. That would do a lot more for the Canadian economy and our world-wide reputation. That is not an expansion of the deficit; it is a conscious public policy decision on how to spend funds. Our quarrel on this side of the Chamber is consistently with the Government's decision on how to spend funds.

To get back to the essence of the Clause and the shift from development to survival, is it the Government's opinion that a small Canadian business in trouble is more likely to survive with a low-cost loan as opposed to a guarantee? Are small businesses in trouble more likely to benefit from loan guarantees or low interest rates?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I suppose that is a decision for individual businesses, whether it be a sole proprietorship, a fisherman, small manufacturer, salesman, or someone providing personal services. Individuals will have to decide what Government programs or assistance are most suited to their needs. If the Government were pressed to make the hard choice that the Hon. Member puts to us, either Petro-Canada or small businesses, or small business having either a program of guarantees or an interest reduction, whether the Hon. Member agrees or not he is, in effect, placing the Government in the position of decision-maker when that should be the individual in the community.

That is one of the differences between the approach which the Government takes and that urged by the Members opposite. The situation is not black and white. We would not want to interfere in the economy to a greater extent than necessary. As a policy, we believe it is important to offer a choice to people whose situation, even in the same types of business, must be difficult. If we do not, Mr. Chairman, then I believe we are, philosophically, becoming big brothers. I am surprised that that would be a philosophical point which the Hon. Member would use in approaching problems in light of the many statements which come from his colleagues about Government getting out of the business sector. The Government's approach is to provide programs which offer choice and to leave the choice up to the individual operator, whether it be a corporation or a sole proprietorship, a person just starting out and doing his own thing.

• (1220)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, you would almost think the Minister would be embarrassed as we get into the issue of choice. Tomorrow his Government intends to bring forward to the House a new form of taxation of the poor. It is voluntary, but it is taxation of the poor, and this Government is moving that to a priority when in fact the Canadian economy is in deep trouble. I fail to see the logic of a Government policy to increase taxes on the poor of this country, even if it is voluntary.

Coming back to the Bill, these particular Clauses were developed by a previous Government which had a record of creating 30,000 to 35,000 jobs a month on average in the Canadian economy. That was what the Development Bond did. The theory was that small business would respond and expand and create jobs and activities if you had a "carrot" called lower interest rates. That is where this whole discussion of these clauses comes from. It is a carrot to expand and develop.

We have a piece of legislation now, however, which amends that original carrot and says: "We will give a low interest rate to a business which is bankrupt, which is functionally bankrupt". If you move around the business community and talk to the owners of small businesses which are in that kind of economic difficulty, or close to it, they will tell you that the secret to their survival, if survival is possible, is an infusion of cash. They are less worried about the cost of the cash, although it is a concern; their big problem is that they cannot get cash. The traditional lenders in Canadian society will not give them the money to stave off bankruptcy.

We have had a lot of answers from the Minister, Mr. Chairman, which indicate to us that the take-up rate is very slow. May I suggest to the Minister that the reason for the slow take-up rate is that the program is inappropriate to the problem. To step into a bankruptcy situation and provide an infusion of cash which will increase the probability of survival, what you need are loan guarantees. In order to get the money lent to those companies, you need loan guarantees. You could put the money in at lower interest rates, as was tried with the bonds, but it is the guarantee nature of it which is really critical.

If the Minister looks at the take-up rates for this program, he will find a common characteristic in the bulk of the businesses which receive this kind of money, and that is that they have tangible take-over assets such as land and vehicles. Lenders will only lend with the thought that they will be able to take those assets away from people if in fact the business goes belly up. Those businesses which have intangible assets, such as service, customers and so on, are not very successful, yet they are the high employers in this country. We have 1,600,000 unemployed people and the small business sector is our potential salvation. Some parts of that sector are much more employment-intensive than other parts, and it is the employment-intensive parts of that sector which are not helped at all by the survival program. It is the employment-intensive parts which were helped by the Small Business Development Bond. It was that kind of business which was encouraged to expand with the development aspect. May I suggest to the Minister that we have in these Clauses a distortion of a good idea to an inappropriate situation. Can the Minister stand up and indicate whether or not it is Government's opinion that my logic is faulty?

I own a small business, Mr. Chairman. I belong to those organizations. I am in contact on a daily basis with businesses which are in considerable trouble in my city of Calgary. In that city the economy has deteriorated so rapidly it is difficult to comprehend, from two-tenths of 1 per cent of a vacancy rate to over 12 per cent in less than 12 months. 9We have a city which people are leaving in droves and all the small businesses in that city are in trouble. Their markets have dropped by half in a 12-month period. The difficulty for them, Mr. Chairman, is not obtaining a bankruptcy loan at low interest rates; it is getting a loan in the first place. That is where the difficulty is, and the only way they are going to be able to hold on is by loan guarantees.

Will the Minister consider changes in the direction I propose?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has raised the whole question of developing small business and he has focused the debate on bailouts, on the one hand, versus growth, on the other hand. He has posed his question as if they were opposites rather than part of a smooth spectrum, and I would like to put the whole problem back into focus.

We talked about this situation at great length in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We talked about small business relief and small business taxation for almost a whole month through September, and we came to some very useful conclusions which I believe I should point out to the Hon. Member. If tradition follows, and if Hon. Members' behaviour follows through, then perhaps the Hon. Member from Kamloops might also find the comments I have to make about small business could help him. I look forward to any comments he might like to make in the future.

The Hon. Member opened the issue of development, and I would like to put that into perspective for him. I would like the Hon. Member to remember that the Small Business Bond which we are talking about now has been broadened to new groups of people, to unincorporated businessmen such as the professionals he was describing a few days ago, and to farmers. It has been focused more on helping those people in genuinely desperate situations. It was not intended from the time of that focusing onward that this measure should help everyone. It was intended as special targeting for those people who really needed that targeting the most. The Minister of State for Finance has very clearly pointed out that at a time when resources are scarce, when help is badly needed, you go first to those who need help the most. That is precisely the attempt which we are making here, to focus in on farmers, on unincorporated businessmen and on incorporated businessmen, who need help the most.

In this Bill there are other measures which the Hon. Member refuses to acknowledge. In fact, when the Minister of State for Small Business rose to ask about these measures and to comment on them, the Hon. Member said that he was talking irrelevancy. He wants to deny that these measures exist. He does not want debate on the broader issues. Well, I am going to raise them because he has asked about development and I want to answer him. He would not let the Minister of State for Small Business do it so I will, and let us see if he wants to interrupt me. If he does we will continue on with a bunch of silly procedural points instead of telling taxpayers where they can get some help.

First of all, the Hon. Member refuses to acknowledge that every small business in this country has the opportunity under this Bill to retain an extra $250,000 at the small business tax rate. The Hon. Member wants to know about equity and operating funds. The fact is that every small business in this country can keep another $250,000 at the small business rate instead of the big business rate. That money is taxed at a lower rate and the money stays in the hands of the business for its use. According to the testimony we received in Committee, that was a significant piece of help.

Secondly, every one of these businesses is eligible for a small business loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act. They are also eligible for a grant under another Act. These are not general assistance programs; they are targeted to develop exactly the results the Hon. Member is describing.

Finally, the Hon. Member asks again, as if there were a dichotomy, why do we help a large corporation instead of a small corporation? Why do we give money to PetroCan or Chrysler or some of these other large corporations? I turn the question back to him. I want to know from him why small-businessmen write in and tell us to do this. Does he think that there was only one large company which benefited when we helped Chrysler? If so, why did scores of dealers across the country write to us and tell us as independent businessmen that they did not want us to forget the help for Chrysler because they, as small-businessmen, depended on the help we were giving to big business. Suppliers, exploration companies and all kinds of small businesses all across the Hon. Member's Province of Alberta benefit whenever we help PetroCan or any other large company. Why does he not go to those people and tell them that he wants to cut off this help and cut off their lifeline through that larger corporation? Small-businessmen are not stupid, they understand the implications of what he is saying. They know that if we cut off aid to large business, that will in turn cut off their source of revenue and their livelihood. They know that and they do not endorse what he is saying.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member asked us about how do we help to develop small business? I agree that is a legitimate question but I do not think he should put it as though it were a dichotomy. He should not be saying that it is "either or". He should recognize that scarce resources should go to those who need it most in times of great despair, the way the Small Business Bond does it. I am astonished, Mr. Chairman, to hear the criticism considering that in the great Conservative tradition we have left tax dollars with the businessmen by lifting the small business tax rate ceiling from $150,000 to $200,000. Instead of $750,000 retained surplus, it is a full million. Those are measures of relief for small business. They help small business.

Then there are the other measures both I and the Minister of State for Small Business had mentioned, and I think that instead of getting into a lot of procedural stuff, the next time the Minister wants to stand up and exercise his rights as a Member and tell us what he is doing, we should listen so we can inform our constituents a little better the next time the opportunity arises.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the position we take on the Small Business Development Bond is that these amendments have effectively gutted it. In effect, it terminated at the end of December, 1981, and it is our feeling that the SBDB which made money available to small business for expansion and growth should be carried on. I remind you, sir, that the period of March to December 31, 1981 was the only period of time when the legislation was really in effect. Even though it was backdated to December 11, 1979, the Bill was not passed by the House until March of 1981. From then until the end of 1981 $2 billion was advanced to small business and a great deal of the prosperity that we enjoyed through that time was a result of the advantages of that bond. Our view is that the SBDB in its original form should be a permanent piece of the income tax legislation of this country, allowing small business the opportunity to continue to negotiate advances under that concept.

With respect to the Small Business Bonds, that is essentially a bailout concept. We see nothing wrong with that, but we have already made many points about it before this Committee. The bailout bond is cosmetically attractive, but as a practical matter it does not work. Indeed, many have described it as a "bailout the bank bond". That is really what it is because the only time a bank will lend money on a bailout bond is when the bank is really stuck on a loan to the customer in the first place. You owe your banker $200,000 and he has you tied in at two over prime and finds you cannot pay that. He then determines you are in financial difficulties and rewrites the loan as a bailout bond at one half of prime plus one. He has not done anything for you, he has done something for himself. That is the only time these bonds are ever used, but they do form a bailout system and make it possible for people to bail themselves out. Therefore, I move:

That Subclauses 8(3), (4), and (5), and 9(3) of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2), be amended as follows:

1(1)(a) by striking line 41 on page 26 and substituting the following "December 11, 1979",

(b) by striking line 2 on page 27 and substituting the following "issuance of"

(c) by striking line 6 on page 27 and substituting the following "1979"

(d) by striking lines 13 and 14 on page 27 and substituting the following "11, 1979 in respect of scientific research"

(e) by striking line 35 on page 27 and substituting the following "by a Canadian-controlled"

(f) by striking lines 39 and 40 on page 27, and substituting the following "after its issue date, or"

(2) and by striking line 12 on page 31 and substituting the following "1981"

● (1240)

Essentially, the amendments would make small business financing a permanent part of financing in Canada and available to small business. There has been a lot of argument to the effect that this is a tax expenditure that costs the Government money. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has done a lot of study on the subject of Small Business Development Bonds and has concluded that, in terms of additional tax revenue, the bonds more than paid for themselves. The effect is that the Small Business Development Bond program did not cost the Government anything in lost revenue and, therefore, should be a permanent part of our tax financing. What we are really doing is making sure that money flows into new investment. When there is new investment there are new jobs. The money is being made available in this fashion at a lower rate for new investment and new jobs.

The whole concept of income bonds, or whatever one wants to call them, made it possible for the Government originally to buy Pacific Petroleum for Petro-Canada. It was on the basis of allowing relatively cheap financing that that transaction could take place. That has been abandoned in the area of large business and perhaps that is quite proper. In the small business area, however, there is no reason to abandon it. Small businesses should be able to expand and borrow expansion money on an after-tax basis. This type of after-tax financing makes sense.

The Government has a number of programs for small business. When John Bulloch appeared before the Finance Committee to speak on the programs that Government offer for small business, he indicated that there are about 1,000 programs and most of them could be scrapped. He said that small business wants tax incentives. This is a tax incentive, Mr. Chairman. If the Government wanted to do something for small business it would get rid of a host of other programs. That is why we have introduced this amendment.

Small Business Development Bonds have proven to be a superb way to stimulate the economy and to give small business a break on financing. It is far better than the Small Businesses Loans Act ever was and is far better than small business grants are. A lot of money would be saved if we did things this way. Things would get moving and businesses could take advantage of the provisions and get people back to work.

I should like to ask the Minister why the Government does not take advantage of a scheme that has proved itself so that the economy can be stimulated. Why does the Government introduce all sorts of other bureaucratic schemes when the small business community has said it does not want any more programs but just some straightforward tax incentives such as that offered by the Small Business Development Bond?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, we are ready to vote on the Hon. Member's motion. We cannot support the amendment because we think the effect would be to increase the deficit, ignoring the scarce resources of the Government at this time. It would not help the people who are in need and it ignores the other programs that are available to the small business sector. We are ready to vote and to indicate that we cannot support the motion at this time.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment in principle. I do not believe the Minister was listening carefully when he said that it would result in an increased deficit. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South indicated that the revenue gained from the Small Business Development Bond in fact offsets the cost.

I should like to mention one of my concerns regarding the Small Business Development Bond in its past state as well as in its present state. In order to work, it has to be to the tax advantage of the banks before they are interested in welcoming small businesses that approach them for tax relief. When I read the financial statements of the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Montreal and see that in 1982 they paid no income tax, I do not think they are going to be at all interested in the Small Business Development Bond or in the Small Business Bond. There is no advantage to them in the programs.

I congratulate the Hon. Member for Mississauga South for his wise observations. As he said, one of the major beneficiaries is the banking system itself. Someone seeking a Small Business Bond is obviously in financial difficulty. If they go around from bank to bank asking for support at a time when the bank is not paying any income tax at all and is not interested in providing welfare assistance to the business community, I do not think they will get a good reception.

In principle I will support the Hon. Member's amendment. Because it requires the co-operation of the banks, knowing what their tax situation is at the moment, I cannot imagine that they would be interested in co-operating with either the Small Business Bond or the Small Business Development Bond.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the difficulty with the representation made by the Hon. Member is that it is not factual. If the amendment was so great that it would increase Government revenues, surely the Government could confirm that and say that the use of the $2 billion which has already gone into the fund has ballooned Government revenues, and so we do not need to ask Parliament for increased borrowing authority.

The only difficulty with his analysis is that it does not accord with the facts. Things do not happen that way in the real world. In the two years the program has been in place it has not increased Government revenue. The pressure for the bonds still continues and the ripple effect has not appeared in the economy over these two years. We are not optimistic that the proposal should be accepted on that basis.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I want to pursue that point. We understand that under the Small Business Development Bond $2 billion had been loaned out. What was the direct cost to the federal Government of that $2 billion loan?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, $125 million was foregone in revenue.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, that is the gross on the tax expenditure side as calculated by the Department of Finance. What was the net income derived from that?

Mr. Cosgrove: It is very difficult to put a handle on that because certain assumptions have to be made. The assumption might be that the $2 billion, the amount of the loans, for example, was generating new economic activity. We really cannot confirm that. We cannot confirm that new employees were hired, or that new demands or requests were stimulated from that source.

• (1250)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, if we make a couple of assumptions, that there was a $60 billion tax revenue in a $300 billion GNP and that revenue is about one-fifth of GNP, it would take us to $400 million on a $2 billion investment in the Canadian economy and would put us in a net positive position. Does the Minister find some flaw in that logic?

Mr. Cosgrove: I guess the analysis depends upon whether the person who took the loan was intending to move to expansion, to retain people or to bring new people on. We do not know that. It could be that the effect of the bond was just to assist the entrepreneur, or I suppose the corporation because we are talking about the $2 billion period. The corporation might have improved its balance sheet as a result of using the loan.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Before we continue, it is not clear whether the comments of the Hon. Member for Calgary West relate to the Clause at large or whether they are specifically related to the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I am not informed as to whether or not the House wishes me to put the question on the amendment. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Calgary West could indicate which way we are going.

Mr. Hawkes: Before backbenchers on the other side vote for or against the amendment simply on the orders of the Minister, I think it might be wise to explore whether or not it is a wise amendment and whether or not it is a wise Clause. Hopefully an informed voter population will reach a different decision than the Minister would like us to reach. There is no sense of confidence, but I have hope.

The Minister indicated that there was a cost to the Small Business Development Bond Program and that it took certain assumptions to obtain any sense of the income which came from that expansion and development. Could the Minister indicate whether or not it sort of misleads Canadian taxpayers to put out just the cost side without the income side?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman. I think I have attempted to answer the specifics which led up to that question.

Mr. Hawkes: Is it a matter of Government policy that we just look at the cost side of any program, that there is no attempt by the Government of Canada to stimulate tax revenue and that the stimulation of revenue is not a concern to taxpayers?

Mr. Cosgrove: I have already indicated that we are quite aware of how much money was taken down, how much of this bond was released into the economy. We know the period of time during which that occurred and that it was a significant amount of money. I would argue that $2 billion in this one sector alone, which the Government of Canada directed toward assisting economic activity in the area of small business, is significant. The result of that would be easily ascertained if it provided the kinds of results urged by the amendment of the Hon. Member.

I am sure that whoever is giving the Hon. Member assistance in preparing for questions in the House and his analysis of the amendment to the present legislation knows that those companies have had ample opportunity of analysis. I would be very surprised if the results of the performance in the small business sector over the last 18 to 24 months would comfort the Hon. Member for Calgary West in urging that we should increase it by a further $2 billion or even higher, apart from the fact, as I indicated, that it puts pressure on the deficit unless the Government can find some other sector in the economy from which it can withdraw or remove funds. It bears on the finding of the over-all balance sheet of the Government attempting to meet legitimate demands, not only in the small business sector but in many other areas of the economy.

I believe the answer to the question would be most apparent and that the experience in the small business sector probably follows the general experience in the economy. No doubt the Hon. Member through his resources has probably identified that that is the case. If it is not and he has information to the contrary, I am sure the Minister of Finance would be interested in those representations and submissions. After all, in the last month the Minister has met with organizations representing the small business sector. For example, he met with the Federation of Independent Business and with the Chamber of Commerce. He has asked for representations and suggestions as to how else he could be supportive of the small business sector. If the Hon. Member has, through his experience or through people advising him, some other suggestions or research to show the relationship to the $2 billion that has already gone into the bond, no doubt the Minister would be quite responsive to receiving them.

Mr. Hawkes: It would certainly give us a lot of comfort if we had a slight inkling that the Government did studies of this kind, that the Government looked not only at the foregone revenue but the revenue generated, that it looked at the tax expenditure side and the tax gain side of the equation.

The Parliamentary Secretary in an earlier intervention indicated that I should not draw a contrast between the Development Bond and the survival bond. If the House passes this Clause, the Development Bond disappears and we are left with a survival bond. It is an either/or situation. It is not our choice; it is the Government's choice. It wants to kill development and replace it with survival.

I ask the Minister to check with his Department of Finance officials and to tell us whether the tax revenue, the increase in revenue for the Government, is likely to be greater if the take-up is in Development Bonds. Let us take $2 billion in development versus $2 billion in survival versus $2 billion in subsidy to one company called Petro-Canada. Which expenditure of Government in which form generates the most tax revenue? The Minister has finance officials; they are supposed to model things for the economy. Which of those three produces the most tax revenue for the people of Canada?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, in the minute remaining before lunch, I just want to remind the Hon. Member that small businesses have had their tax rate extended in this Bill. Previously people got the big business rate at $150,000 profit and now it is $200,000. This is a big addition to their treasuries.

The retained surpluses have expanded from $750,000 to $1 million. Again that is a lot of elbow room in which these businesses can operate. We have targeted help through the Small Business Bond, but we have left healthy small businesses more money at a lower rate to develop and to grow with. The two go hand in hand.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being one o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the Bill later this day.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon. Have a good lunch.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INSTALLATION OF FIRING RANGE IN BAGOTVILLE-CHICOUTIMI-SAGUENAY-LAC-SAINT-JEAN REGION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, after consulting some military authorities here in Ottawa, I would like to reassure the people of Bagotville, Chicoutimi and the Saguenay-Lac-St-Jean area in general about the plans of the Department of National Defence for setting up a firing range in our area. First of all, a similar range has been in use in Alberta, at Primrose Lake, for a number of years. According to my information, every precaution is taken to prevent any risk to the general public and especially to people living near the site. I was given the assurance that Base Command in Bagotville will be in touch with municipal councils and other representatives of the public to provide all the necessary information on the activities that take place around such facilities.

I have been told that there will be a genuine information and consultation process, on a continuing basis. Actually, the Department of National Defence has always made a point of being part of and protecting, the communities living near its bases. The Department may be said to have been successful in discharging its responsibilities in this regard. We are therefore anxious to get an answer from the Province of Quebec.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ADVENT OF COMPUTERIZED PASSPORT SCANNERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in order to avoid unnecessary and aggravating lineups at ports of entry, as well as to utilize customs personnel more efficiently, it is reported that a number of countries plan to introduce computerized passport scanners at principal customs points. For the system to work effectively it will require that passports be machine readable and contain the requisite computer coded information.

The United States reportedly already issues passports readable in both the conventional manner and by computer scanners, and expects all its passports will be machine readable by 1985. Many other countries plan to follow suit. Therefore, in order to facilitate international travel, might it be possible for Canada to co-ordinate its efforts with those of other countries to adopt an internationally compatible system of computerized passport control and, as soon as possible, initiate the issuance of machine readable passports?

ENERGY

EFFECT OF HIGH RETAIL PRICE OF GASOLINE ON SAGUENAY-LAC-SAINT-JEAN REGION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, I wish to take advantage of the few seconds at my disposal to speak to an ever-worsening problem in my area, namely, the price of gas at the pump. During the last three years, the Canadian Government has established a policy of security of oil supplies for our country, and I think we can say this policy has been an unqualified success. Unfortunately, the Canadian Government has no jurisdiction over indirect taxes on gas. I want to appeal to the goodwill of my fellow Members, both on the Opposition and on the Government side, since it is clear that as far as gas retail sales are concerned in Canada, we have a real problem on our hands, because the Provinces are extremely uncooperative. After the latest tax increase ordered by the Quebec Government and Mr. Parizeau, people in my area are paying about $1.20 for a gallon of gas, which is absolutely exorbitant for people who have to buy gas to travel and to transport what they need, and the extra 40 per cent or 24 cents a litre in provincial tax is putting a very heavy burden on the entire economy in the Saguenay-Lac-St-Jean area.

I would therefore ask the Canadian Government, with the support of the parties in this House, to take the lead in the energy area, especially with respect to retail sales. I think that the Provinces generally do what the government of the country allows them to do, and if they are unable to make a satisfactory and democratic use of their taxation rights and—

HARBOURS

NECESSITY FOR DREDGING IN SHELBURNE COUNTY, N.S.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, the Government's policies and priorities as they relate to small craft harbours and their development in Nova Scotia are appalling. I say this because I have written repeatedly to the Minister responsible about the need for dredging and repairs to be carried out to a number of harbours in my constituency, all to no avail. This situation is true throughout my entire riding, and I mention today three areas in Shelburne County, namely, Ingomar, Gunning Cove, and Sandy Point, which have been referred to the Government for action on numerous occasions. To date no action is forthcoming.

At Sandy Point, in particular, deterioration of the wharf is so severe that it is now dangerous to fishermen and mariners who are required to use this harbour.

At Ingomar and Gunning Cove repairs are required to the wharves, and the fishermen in this area need additional space because of the general increase in the size and number of boats used by them. I, therefore, urge the Government to make a concerted effort on behalf of these Canadians, who desperately need recognition of their problems and some positive action taken to alleviate the present deplorable situation.

If a policy of annual inspections by Government officials of all facilities under its jurisdiction were carried out, with current repairs made as required, over-all costs would be lower and our harbours and wharves could be used at all times by our mariners.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—KILLING OF HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION PRESIDENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, today I would like to denounce the killers of Marianella Garcia Villas, President of the El Salvador Human Rights Commission and a Vice-President of the International Federation of Rights of Man.

Marianella Garcia Villas was a profound Christian, a worker for the poor, and a lawyer. She had been a Member of Congress in El Salvador in the early 1970s. She belonged to the Christian Democratic Party, and later belonged to the Social Christian Party.

She went into exile from El Salvador in 1980 as a result of a death threat. She recently returned to El Salvador with Sister Luz Maria Hernandes, also of the Human Rights Commission of El Salvador. They entered the country through the airport. Marianella Garcia Villas had returned to El Salvador to investigate charges that chemical warfare had been used against civilians there.

She was killed in the presence of 20 unarmed peasants, by the military. It was first announced by the Armed Forces that she was a foreign journalist and had been killed in crossfire. After finding out who she was, they denounced her as having fought with the FMLN. Her body is now lying at la Piedosa Funeral Home in San Salvador. Her body was identified by the church authorities of that city.

Once more I want to denounce the killing of this person, the killing of all other activists who plead for human rights in that country, and the previous killing of four women in religion. As yet no trial has been held to prove who killed them.

HOUSING

CANADA MORTGAGE STIMULATION PROGRAM

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, under the Canadian Homeownership stimulation Plan, the Federal Government is offering a $3,000 grant to Canadians purchasing their first home, provided the foundations are finished by the end of April, 1983. There is a very real possibility that a number of taxpayers in Quebec and in the riding of Lévis will be unable to take advantage of this program, because regional municipalities in the country, as a result of administrative procedures, may freeze new construction till the middle of April, leaving future owners only two weeks to get a building permit and find a contractor they can hire right away to do the excavation and build the foundations.

Madam Speaker, I want to ask the authorities at all decision-making levels, and especially the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs, to help taxpayers who are eligible for the grant to take advantage of this offer. I suggest that steps be taken immediately in order to facilitate access to the New Home Construction Plan. Since there has been no response from the municipal authorities, I ask the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Canadian Government to provide mechanisms to help the taxpayer get out of this administrative trap. Madam Speaker, we must have action now.

ENERGY

IMPACT OF GASOLINE TAX ON TOURISM

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has given us all a long song and dance about the made in Canada price of gas and how it is at 75 per cent of world price. Only the Liberal Party of Canada could, at a time like this, argue about how many angels can dance on the head of a pin, because that is what the Liberals are doing. The so-called world price could not matter less to the Canadian man on the street. What he is interested in is the price at the pump, not some hypothetical price which comes to far less than half that amount, and which does nothing but serve as a shelf upon which Governments can stack tax upon tax.

The fact is that at the present time, in many parts of the country, Canadians are paying twice as much for gas as are their American neighbours.

The fact is that when I put in just ten gallons—if Hon. Members will forgive the expression—of gas in my car, I am paying $8 directly to the federal Government in the form of one tax or another.

An Hon. Member: What are you driving?

Mr. Darling: The fact is that, because of the unconscionable tax load imposed upon all that it sells, the tourist industry, our second largest employer, is looking forward to a year of unparalleled disaster. The fact is that the Government could breathe new life into the tourist industry, and thus, millions and millions of dollars into the economy, just by cutting back on its unconscionable tax take.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

OUTCOME OF CONSTITUTIONAL TALKS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in the last few days Canadians have watched the historic meetings between the First Ministers and the leaders of aboriginal Canadians. Canadians are pleased that there was an agreement to continue the process with a guarantee of future discussions. Canadians were also happy to see the strong and forthright statements made by the native leaders. Canadians hope that, in future talks, Government representatives will be able to come to agreement upon issues which profoundly affect and concern native people.

As New Democrats our concern centres on the fact that the federal Government did not provide the leadership which should have been present at the Conference. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Cabinet deliberately downplayed these talks. The Liberal Government failed to use its position to work toward an acceptable agreement on aboriginal rights and self-government for native Canadians. In contrast, the New Democratic Party Government of Manitoba prepared and defended these concepts by presenting arguments for a statement of principles and a model framework agreement. These Manitoban documents not only discussed self-government, aboriginal rights, land claims, equality, and the need for consent by the natives for changes affecting them, but they also provided the direction for future talks.

By refusing the role of leadership, the federal Government has allowed the minority of Provinces, represented by the Governments of B.C., Saskatchewan, and Alberta, to derail a possible agreement.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

HEALTH

UNION REPORT ON HOSPITAL VIDEO DISPLAY TERMINAL OPERATORS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, earlier this week the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) presented a statement to the House with regard to the so-called harmful affects of VDTs on the employees using those machines. His statement was the following, in part:

> Sharma found an abnormally low rate of pregnancies among the women of child-bearing age and, of the 14 VDT operators who became pregnant over the past year, ten had miscarriages or gave birth to babies with defects.

The Hospital Employees Union used Surrey Memorial Hospital as the basis for its study. It submitted its report to the federal task force on July 5. I would like to say for the record that at no time did it consult with the medical staff of the hospital and, to this day, even though it has been requested by the medical staff of the hospital to provide evidence to substantiate its report, it has not submitted any findings to the medical staff.

Presumably, the medical staff has at least some kind of passing interest in the health of the people who work there. It seems to me that, as part of their profession, they would care about their employees. If the union is so interested in the health of its members, why does it not co-operate with the medical staff to provide that evidence so that the medical staff can provide help to its employees?

The union leader, although he has been requested to provide that evidence, refuses to give it because he says it is privileged information. Three independant studies have been done in that hospital on this matter, all have indicated there is no problem.

Madam Speaker: Order.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

PRICE OF OIL

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I had a question to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, or the Minister of Transport, or the Minister of Finance. Perhaps, in honour of the day, there may be an Irish wake somewhere, although it is a little early.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Here comes the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Nowlan: Here is the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I wish that I could welcome the Minister in Gaelic, but my question really was to be directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of his absence, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a very short simple question which will hopefully invoke a very short reply. As world prices come down, why do Canadian prices go up?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has not understood what has been happening in the past ten years. We have always had prices below world prices. World prices are tending to come down, but ours were so far below world prices that they could still continue to rise and still be below world prices. It is very simple, but the Hon. Member seems not to have understood.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I am very glad to have had an economic lesson from the Prime Minister, so I will now turn to the Minister of Finance.

GASOLINE TAXES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is apparently to negotiate the price of crude, which is one-eighth the cost of a gallon at the pump, is the Minister of Finance prepared to take care of the taxes which amount to two-thirds of the cost of a gallon at the pump, in his forthcoming budget?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, depending on the Province, a large share of that difference is under provincial control—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Lalonde: —either in the form of royalties for the Government of Alberta or provincial sales tax, such as in my own Province of Quebec, which is about 40 per cent; and it is quite substantial in the Province of Nova Scotia as well. Surely he knows that there is nothing I can do about that.

As far as the federal taxes are concerned, I will examine this issue in the context of the budget, and I would be very happy to hear the Hon. Member's views.

FUEL IMPORT COMPENSATION TAX

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, having set up the two preliminary questions, I now come to the crunch.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: This is completely within the control of the Minister of Finance. Has the Minister received representations from his colleague, the Minister of Transport, to eliminate the fuel compensation tax which was imposed to stop Americans from coming to Canada to top off here and going back to the States, because our gas was a little cheaper than it is now? Does he intend to do something about that fuel compensation tax, which is solely federal, in his forthcoming budget, or even in Bill C-139? I am sure that with discussion between House leaders we would agree to eliminate that facet of Bill C-139 so that those involved in the aviation industry and the marine industry would not be at an unfair disadvantage with regard to their competitors, who are basically American.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, considering the type of so-called co-operation by the Opposition on Bill C-139, I would not expect too much from any discussions with regard to that matter. However, I can tell the Hon. Member that I always listen very carefully to the representations of my colleague, the Minister of Transport. I can assure him that any representations he may have made, and even those coming from the Hon. Member, will be very carefully examined.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. During the 1980 election campaign the Government ridiculed a tax of 18 cents per gallon. Today the federal Government tax amounts to 67 cents per gallon. Tourism in Canada has suffered because of the high price of gasoline. Canadians were advised that, as the world price of gas went up, the price in Canada must go up. Now that the world price is coming down, why is the price in Canada not coming down?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we have an agreement with the producing Provinces and have fixed the price as of January 1. We will have another decision to make in July, a determination of the price for the second part of the year. I am glad to see that the Conservative Party does not agree with Premier Lougheed to the effect that we should not roll back the prices. I will take the opinion of the Official Opposition into consideration when I make my views known.

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN FEDERAL TAX

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister of Finance said that part of the tax on gasoline, and the reason for the high cost of gasoline, are because of provincial taxation. We all know that the provincial tax is an ad valorem tax which is based on the price of gasoline as determined by the federal Government. If the federal Government wants to reduce the provincial tax the first thing it should do is reduce its own tax, and the provincial tax will automatically go down.

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gass: When is the Government going to take the first step to reduce the price of gasoline in Canada to Canadians by reducing the tax it has on gasoline, so that the Provinces will automatically follow with a lower tax?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should know that these ad valorem taxes that were put in place were put in place after there was an agreement between the producing Provinces and the federal Government to make sure that Canadian consumers were to have prices lower than the international prices. The break that the agreement was providing for the consumers was not given to the consumer because the Provinces stepped in, put an ad valorem tax on, and did not give the break to the consumers provided for in the energy agreement.

THE ECONOMY

REPORTED REQUEST FOR STIMULATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister who met recently with the Premiers of the Provinces to discuss the economy. Data released just the other day from Statistics Canada indicated that investment intentions in Canada for the coming year are going to be down some $2.5 billion compared to last year. That means the loss of thousands of jobs.

My question concerns the expression of concern that came to the Prime Minister from the Premiers of at least three parts of Canada, Atlantic Canada, central Canada, and western Canada, which all had Premiers who urged the Prime Minister to bring in stimulus now to create some badly needed jobs in the Canadian economy.

I want to ask the Prime Minister, following urging of that kind from this Party on this side of the House in recent months, having just heard from Premiers from three parts of Canada, will he indicate that he is serious about job creation, and promise major stimulus?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is a victim of somebody's complete fabrication. Nothing of that nature was discussed.

DISCUSSIONS AT FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I want to say bluntly to the Prime Minister, either he is misinforming the House, or two Premiers in direct conversations with me in terms of positions they took—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —are misinforming. To be perfectly blunt, given what has taken place in recent days in this House, I will put my faith on the side of the Premiers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like the Prime Minister to clarify that. Is he telling the House that no Premiers at the meeting that he had with them recently urged the Government of Canada to bring forward some major stimulus in the economy to produce jobs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as usual, some of the Provinces were asking the federal Government to give them money so they could spend it. That is the extent of their urging for the federal Government to spend more money to create jobs.

I told them that since the last budget, and I tell the Hon. Member, that since the last June budget we have put more than $2 billion into programs to create jobs. We do not have to give it to the Provinces so that they can spend it. They can spend their own money. They have their own taxes. Even the two Premiers whom the Hon. Member talked to should know that, and the Hon. Member should have told them, if they do not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, we have seen that remarkable demonstration of the Prime Minister's sensitivity to the truth. In that last answer, no Premiers did it. In the second answer, he is now saying that some Premiers did it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Quiet over there on the backbench side.

Mr. Chrétien: All in your head.

Mr. Broadbent: I will put it quietly but clearly. I would like to ask the Prime Minister to make a vow this year that, for the rest of 1983, he will do his best to tell the truth in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The sooner the better for the—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order.

PLEA FOR STIMULUS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct another question to the Prime Minister. I repeat, Premiers from western Canada, from central Canada and from the Atlantic region are sensitive to the human cares of Canadians. For example, for the first time in its history, the city of Toronto is going to have to respond with an emergency food depot because of concern for unemployment. The Premiers are concerned. I want to ask the Prime Minister will he promise us there will be stimulus of the economy to give Canadians what they want, which is jobs, not welfare.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the Leader of the New Democratic Party is engaging in a political game of the nature in which he always engages. The Premiers were here; we spent about three hours talking about the economy. He is not quoting what the Premiers said publicly about the meeting or, indeed, what I said publicly about it. He is talking about some secret information that the Premiers gave to him—

Mr. Broadbent: It is not secret; they said it publicly.

Mr. Trudeau: —of matters that did not take place. If the Hon. Member wants to quote the Premiers, I would suggest that the Premiers can talk for themselves. If he has a case to make, he should be able to make it in the House without inventing things that did not happen at our economic discussion.

The Hon. Member suggests that I make vows to the end of 1983. Let him make a vow to stick a little closer to the truth, not to fabricate, not until the end of 1983—we do not ask that—but just until the end of Lent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINES AND MINING

CYPRUS ANVIL MINE IN YUKON

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development my question will be directed to the Minister of Finance. The people of Yukon have been waiting for almost six months for a decision by the Government which would salvage the economy of Yukon. Would the Minister tell this House and the people of Yukon whether the cabinet has made a decision on the detailed proposal for saving the Cyprus Anvil Mine, a proposal which was presented to him and his colleagues on March 2 by a widely representative group from the Yukon? Has a decision been reached, and what is it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, various meetings were held on this issue among representatives of the organizations concerned, the unions, the company and spokesmen for the Yukon authorities. There have been multilateral and bilateral meetings. However, no decision has been made yet, and the proposals are still being considered, and I am referring particularly to those that are the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, the delegation from Yukon presented a carefully prepared proposal and told the Minister that this proposal offered the final hope for the Cyprus Anvil Mine and the town of Faro. Is the Minister telling the House today that the Government is prepared to witness the death of this important northern mine, which contributes 40 per cent to the Yukon economy, and watch that town and that community close down permanently, with the railway to Skagway already being shut down at great cost? If not, what assistance plan does the Minister find acceptable? Will he at least consider assisting work on the restoration and the improvement of infra-structure, railway and power projects, so that the mine can be restored to economic viability and be able once again to compete on world markets?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I indicated that as soon as decisions were made by the Government in this respect, they would be duly announced, but in any case, I have pointed out to the parties concerned that both the company and the bank had responsibilities, that it was wrong to assume that the Federal Government was alone in having a role to play and that both the company and the bank had to do their share and discharge their responsibilities.

TRANSPORT

MAISLIN INDUSTRIES—OBSERVANCE OF LOAN GUARANTEE AGREEMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I am seeking clarification with respect to questions asked earlier this week. Last summer the Government bailed out Maislin Transport with an unprecedented $34 million loan guarantee. Can the Minister tell the House whether or not all the terms of the loan agreement have been met to the satisfaction of the Government and, specifically, the term in the agreement which stated that the shareholders would have to provide $2.5 million of fresh money? Was that fresh shareholder's equity actually provided, or did Maislin simply sell off the pension fund of Gateway Transport and use those funds as the supposed fresh money?

• (1430)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, if I am not mistaken, all but one of the conditions was undertaken by Maislin. The other condition was the requirement of the Government to find a suitable director to sit on the board. That is the only condition that has not been fulfilled to date, and, yes, the infusion of money came from the liquidation of Gateway's pension plan in the United States.

NATURE OF INVESTMENT MONEY

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, if Maislin owned Gateway Transport it would seem to make sense that they owned all the assets of Gateway Transport, including the right to sell off the pension fund. If they in fact sold off the pension fund, how can that be fresh money provided by shareholders of Maislin, rather than just simply the sale of an asset owned by a subsidiary of Maislin?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the undertaking was that they would provide an infusion of capital. How that infusion of equity was going to be obtained was a decision made by the company. That was a decision for them to take. I reiterate, it was a pension fund in the United States that liquidated, not one in Canada.

APPLICATION OF LOAN GUIDELINES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the same Minister. When the President of the Treasury Board held the portfolio now encompassing his responsibilities, he enlarged the guidelines for loans made to bail out industrial producers to include operations such as Maislin in order to accommodate the Government decision on that $34 million loan. Is the Minister still following those enlarged guidelines so as to accommodate other similar applications, such as that of Maislin?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Leader of the Opposition could be more explicit with regard to the enlargement of the guidelines. I am not aware of any enlarging of the guidelines that was to be undertaken with respect to that particular industry.

INQUIRY RESPECTING FUTURE FUNDING FOR MAISLIN

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister was sitting in the House at the same time I was, when the now President of the Treasury Board declared in this House that those guidelines would be enlarged to accommodate such loans. Since he is unprepared to be specific in his answer as to whether or not he is continuing to follow those enlarged guidelines, perhaps he will inform the House whether he has any information that Maislin will require any additional funds in order to continue to be viable up to and following June of this year?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the new president will be preparing a revised set of financial statements which I imagine will be ready by the end of March or the first of April. At the present time I have no indication from the Company whether additional capital will be required. Thus, at this point in time I have no recommendations for my colleagues in this regard.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster.

Mr. Forrestall: We know who has favour around here, don't we?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: It is the day, Madam Speaker.

REQUIREMENT THAT COMPANY SUBMIT FIVE-YEAR BUSINESS PLAN

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is supplementary to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. The Minister stated that all criteria for supporting the $34 million loan guarantee given by the Government had been met. Was the criterion that a five-year business plan be submitted by December 31, 1982, met, and in that plan was it indicated that Maislin would continue to lose in excess of $1 million a month in operating costs alone?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In response to the teacher's pet, as my colleague says, yes, there was a five-year plan presented by December 31, but upon taking office the new president of the company did not feel that that five-year plan was adequate. He is now in the process of preparing another one for the Government officials to have a look at.

COMPANY LOSSES

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): I will ask the question again, Madam Speaker. In the five-year plan presented by Maislin to the Government, if it was presented, did it indicate that Maislin would continue to lose in excess of $1 million a month in operating costs?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, that was three months ago. I am sorry, I cannot remember the specific details. I will look into it and get back to the Hon. Member.

RELATIONSHIP OF MAISLIN AND GATEWAY COMPANIES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the same Minster. What is, or was the relationship between Gateway and Maislin? Was Gateway in fact a subsidiary, an associate company and, if not, what if any relationship existed between the two companies?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): If I am not mistaken, Madam Speaker, I think that it was a subsidiary company, but I will check the details and get back to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nielsen: You had better brief yourself for tomorrow.

NATURE OF INVESTMENT OF CAPITAL

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, will the Minister explain how on earth anyone could consider the sale or disposal of a subsidiary's asset as an infusion of fresh capital into the parent company under any accounting or moral principle whatsoever?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member would like to address that question to the company. What we required from the company was an additional infusion of equity capital, which the company provided.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR OIL PRICE ROLLBACK

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated that he wanted to talk to the Premier of Alberta prior to considering an energy rollback. In fact he admitted that the energy policy was in a state of chaos and that he would like to talk to all the provincial Premiers. We would like to know when this hamburger Government is going to recognize that its energy policy is in complete chaos? Does the Minister realize that we deserve a break today, and that the Canadian economy needs the kind of stimulus that would come from a rollback in the price of energy?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am not impressed with the argument of the Hon. Member. When we have a problem with the Provinces, the thing to do is talk to the Provinces. If I were to act alone today, tomorrow the Hon. Member would be on his feet asking why I did not consult. I will do the right thing. I will consult. I will not bother too much with the Hon. Member.

BENEFICIARIES OF CURRENT PRICES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I guess we are going to leave it to Macdonald to fix up this beaten economy, and the hamburger helper will straighten it out later with Lougheed. Does the Minister recognize that if we do not roll back the price of oil in this country, the beneficiaries will be Imperial Oil and Texaco? Imperial controls one billion barrels of conventional crude and Texaco one half billion barrels. Will the Minister admit to this House that the only beneficiaries of not rolling back the price of oil will be the multinationals?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Madam Speaker, I do not accept that at all. When a barrel of oil is sold, about 40 per cent goes to the producers. The majority of the balance goes to the provincial Governments and the rest to the federal Government.

EMPLOYMENT

HIGH-TECHNOLOGY TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and relates to the National Training Act. For some time now negotiations have been going on between his Department and several high-technology firms in the Ottawa area. Can the Minister confirm that he recently approved a grant of $10,000 to a non-profit computer consortium to develop and implement an industrial training program within the high-technology industry?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I can verify that we have been working very closely with representatives of a number of hi-tech firms in the Ottawa area to undertake an innovative approach toward the development of new training programs in that very vital industry. We have now gone ahead and developed an agreement with them so that they could put forward a proposal under the Skills Growth Fund to establish an industry-sponsored training centre to allow their employees to develop unique and special skills in the hi-tech area. I believe that this really is a definition of a very good example of how we can change the whole training program in this country to respond to hi-tech needs.

TRANSPORT

NEW GRAIN TRANSPORTATION POLICY—GUARANTEES DEMANDED BY QUEBEC COALITION MOVEMENT

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister must be aware of the fierce opposition of the sectors concerned to the grain transportation policy announced recently by the Minister of Transport. The changes it contains are a major source of concern to the agricultural industry and some financial sectors in Quebec. Since the coalition movement is convinced that studies of the consequences of this new policy have been clearly inadequate, could the Minister, who is surely seeking a fair solution for all Provinces as far as agriculture is concerned, could the Minister inform the House that he will ask his colleague to put this project on hold, until such time as the guarantees demanded by the Quebec coalition movement are announced?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of what I said in the House before, that I support my colleague, the Minister of Transport, in the proposal which he has put forward to this country on the Crowsnest Pass rate, the recommendations and changes in an obsolete type of legislation. It is to be changed. We know there is going to be some resentment. We never said there would not be some rejection of what the Crowsnest Pass rates are going to do. I would ask the Hon. Member to read the documentation which we have prepared. If he would like any more information or any more studies, we can show him that, for instance, it is going to be for the betterment of agriculture in Canada, not for its detriment.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, it is clear from the Minister's answer that the agricultural industry in Quebec does not have much to expect from the Minister, and especially not his sympathy. Would the Minister perhaps care to explain why he decided to spend $350,000 to shove this plan down our throats before consideration by Parliament and before it is implemented, and does the Minister expect Quebecers to trust him if he has to spend $350,000 to explain a policy on which not enough information is available and not enough studies have been done?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, I will try with even more purpose, because it is such a great day, March 17, St. Patrick's Day, to be as nice as I can to the Hon. Member, through you, Madam Speaker. He knows very well why the ads were put in the papers. It was especially because of the ads which the Government of Quebec put in which we thought were misleading, wrong, and false. We put these ads in to state the facts as they should be stated. The Hon. Member only dreams that he, even as a native of Quebec, would have the respect of the farmers that I do in the Province of Quebec. He would love to have that kind of respect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I say to him, Madam Speaker, study the facts, study what we are doing, and study the past history of this Minister of Agriculture and of this Government, and if he finds it has not been beneficial for agriculture, I would be very surprised, because the agricultural industry in Canada is the healthiest agricultural industry probably in the whole world. And that is not because of what we have not done, Madam Speaker. It is because of what we have done.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL TO PHASE OUT LEADED GASOLINE

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister has recently given us the indication that he may phase out the use of lead in gasoline and that people who are objecting to this proposal have only 60 days to respond, and must respond to his particular Department. I wonder if the Minister would consider having an independent tribunal make this determination because, after all we are dealing here with one expert opinion on the one side, and expert opinions on the other. It would seem to me to be a little fairer to have someone other than environmental officials make this determination.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, while I appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member and would like to salute his concerns and the energy which he has displayed in relation to this question, I must say that we are acting on the basis of the recommendations which come from the medical experts in the Department of National Health and Welfare. I do not believe there is any reason to doubt their objectivity in the matter, nor do I have any reason to doubt that my own officials will bring an objective disposition to it. Therefore, I would not, unfortunately be able to accede to his suggestion that we proceed with some sort of inquiry or review outside of the presently envisaged arrangement.

MARINE TRANSPORT

FUEL COMPENSATION TAX—REQUEST FOR ABOLITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to a question asked earlier today by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants. Last year the Great Lakes Shipping Association was down about 30 per cent in its capacity. That involves some 300 to 400 men collecting benefits at current rates of unemployment insurance. The money which will be collected from that iniquitous fuel compensation tax will be used up within a month. Would the Minister not reconsider now, before the Seaway opens, and before he comes down with his budget, declare that iniquitous tax redundant and abolish it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to receive a representation from the Hon. Member in this regard. I said to his colleague that I would study whatever representations may be made by the Minister of Transport, whatever representations he may have made. As far as the substance of the question is concerned, however, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that this tax only brings the cost of fuel in line with the cost which the lakers have to pay for American fuel. Also, in effect, the Canadian lakers are operating under a substantial advantage as compared to the American lakers since their wage rates are in Canadian dollars and, right from the start, they have a 20 per cent advantage over American wage settlements. In terms of competition versus American lake companies, the decline in lake shipping has been the result of a general decline in the North American economy and the lack of trade, particularly with regard to iron ore, over the last year. Obviously these factors have nothing to do with any particular tax.

POSITION OF CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is a little less general than that. We have already lost 2,000 to 3,000 jobs in that industry because the Seaway is too expensive for our American neighbours to the south to use. The moneys which are paid out alone in unemployment insurance are used up within a week in terms of the amount of money which is recovered. Drop your fuel tax and you might very well put another 1,000 Canadian seamen back to work and recoup the loss. The Government is not going to make any money out of it, in any event, but it is putting them at a competitive disadvantage.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will have to explain why eliminating the tax will convince lake shipowners to travel without any cargo.

INCOME TAX

FILING OF RETURNS BY SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Senior citizens across the country are asking if they have to file income tax returns. Will the Minister please tell the House if the recipients of Old Age Security pensions, Guaranteed Income Supplement and Canada Pension Plan benefits must file an income tax return?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, all Canadian citizens who have an income must file an income tax return. Although in the case of Canadians who are sixty-five or over, deductions are much higher than for other workers, nevertheless, anyone who has an income, whatever the source, must report it and file an income tax return.

[English]

COMPLEXITY OF FORMS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Many senior citizens have been penalized for not paying income tax quarterly. When will the Minister put out an income tax form which is understandable to our senior citizens, and mail it to all of those who are in receipt of old age pensions, the Guaranteed Income Supplement and Canada Pension Plan benefits? Please, Mr. Minister, send them something which they can understand and have knowledge of!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member and many other Members of this House that there may be a problem in this respect for some senior citizens—first of all in connection with quarterly payments of income tax, that is, if their income is above the minimum amount, and second, the income tax form itself. It is a problem that must be given consideration, and I can assure the Hon. Member and other Members of the this House that I will be giving special attention to this point.

MEDICAL CARE

STATUS OF PROPOSED CANADA HEALTH ACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister will know that this month has been declared National Save Medicare Month by the Canadian Health Coalition. She will also know that many people are writing to their Members of Parliament concerning the Canada Health Act and their desire that any Act which might be forthcoming should reinforce, clarify, and strengthen the five basic principles of medicare.

• (1450)

Will the Minister bring the House up to date on the status of the Canada Health Act? Can we expect that she will soon be going back to the provincial Ministers of Health with a proposal regarding extra billing better than the one she went with the last time? Will she be tabling a proposal in the House of Commons? Will she be putting before the Canadian people something they can relate to other than the mystery document around which the Canadian Medical Association is conducting its campaign? I think it would be very helpful if we could have some update from the Minister on this matter.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Can I first say on this special day, Madam Speaker, that my counterpart in the NDP is obviously far more elegant than the CMA. I am talking, of course, about his appearance.

It is a fact that the CMA has launched quite a questionable campaign on medicare, and I really appreciate the work done by many groups in the country toward saving medicare. The Member wants to know if we are working on this. The Department of Justice is drafting a document, the purpose of which is to strengthen the medicare we have always known, which is so liked and has so well served Canadians. I cannot say as much as I would like in the few minutes I have to answer in the House, but I will present that draft first to the provincial Ministers, of course, and there will be, as usual, ample opportunity for discussion. The purpose of the Act is to strengthen medicare, not to change the basic rules of the game as we have always known them. In that respect, the fears being spread around are not founded at all.

DRAFTING OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the groups who are writing to Members of Parliament and the Minister are doing their job to save medicare. However, we have the continuing problem of extra billing. Because of unemployment we have people losing their health insurance, particularly in Ontario where they still charge premiums. We still have portability problems. Can the Minister give us some kind of deadline as to when she will be going to the provincial Ministers of Health? When does she expect that Canadians will be able to respond to an actual draft of the Canada Health Act? It is getting urgent because we have had this crisis in medicare on our hands for four or five years.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I said yesterday, and I will repeat it, that you do not lightly go about regulating $8.5 billion, which is the federal share of medicare paid to the Provinces. I think it is important to take the time needed to get an Act better than the one we have. The consensus around this House is that we want to strengthen the Act and clarify, once and for all, the problem of extra billing in particular. It is not true, however, that extra billing is increasing. We are monitoring that constantly and it is at a stable level right now.

I have never heard that people in Ontario were losing their medicare because they cannot afford their premiums. If a Member knows of even one case of that happening, they should report it to me and I will be immediately in contact with Larry Grossman, my Ontario counterpart.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

EPIDEMIC OF INFANT WALKER ACCIDENTS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, notice of which I gave him about two months ago. The Minister will know that pediatricians across the country are alarmed about an epidemic of serious accidents happening to children who wander around in little doughnut-shaped walkers. They are falling down stairs and being paralysed. Because of their new-found height, they eat plants, pull pots of scalding water down on themselves, and so on. It is hard to imagine finding your kid at the bottom of the stairs half paralysed, but that is what happened just recently in Ottawa.

What method can the Minister's hazardous products division use to make young parents aware that they cannot leave children unattended in these walkers, in effect using them as babysitters, and giving freedom to a child which he or she is incapable of handling?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me notice of his question well in advance, which means that I was able to make enquiries. In fact, my own Department, in collaboration with the American Consumer Product Safety Commission and the American Society for Testing of Materials, is now working on performance criteria for these walkers, in order to correct manufacturing defects and design problems that are a hazard to child safety. I believe that tests carried out by hospitals in recent months have clearly demonstrated that a hazard does exist for children, and the manufacturers, in consultation with the Canadian and American authorities, are prepared to correct the manufacturing defects of these walkers.

[English]

WARNING TO PARENTS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the very real value of getting the manufacturers, in particular, to co-operate, but I really wonder whether they are going to mess up a nicely coloured product by stamping on it some sort of ominous warning to parents. Will the Minister consider authorizing the funding of filmstrips or videotapes which could be distributed to pre-natal classes and hospitals to warn young mothers about safeguarding their children against these walkers and other hazards?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that my Department's advertising budget is very limited. However, I shall certainly find out what can be done. I am very pleased to hear a Member of the Official Opposition urging us to do some advertising. More often than not, Opposition Members complain when the Government uses television or newspaper ads to inform the public.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR GASOLINE TAX REDUCTION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy who should know, and he should tell the House and the people of Canada, that domestic crude oil is being provided to the refiner at a level of 75 per cent or less of the world price, while at the same time the retail price exceeds the world level. This is primarily because of the onerous federal tax of 14.4 cents per litre, or about 65 cents a gallon. The price of gasoline to the consumer could come down if the federal Government reduced its take. Why does the Minister not get in step with world reality and recommend to his Cabinet colleagues a reduction in the onerous federal taxes on the price of energy so that consumers in Canada will get a break?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I made that argument many times. In our agreement with the Government of Alberta in September, 1981, it was provided that Canadians were to have a price lower than the world price. That was the agreement, and the goal the Government was seeking at that time.

After we had an agreement with the Government of Alberta and the producing Provinces, the provincial Governments stepped in to add on a very big ad valorem tax which took away the advantage the energy program was to provide to Canadian consumers. I say publicly that I have a lot of sympathy for the argument of Premier Lougheed because, at that time, he made an agreement between the federal Government, the producing Provinces, and the provincial Governments on the take from a barrel of oil. But later on, the consuming Provinces added a very big ad valorem tax, so big in Quebec that the Quebec provincial Government is getting much more money from oil coming from Alberta than the Government of Alberta. There is a valid point there and I want to discuss that with Mr. Lougheed. But at the same time the agreement provided for increases and decreases in prices according to the world market price, and that is the point we are debating at this time with Alberta.

• (1500)

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is refusing to recognize that the federal Government is getting about 65 cents per gallon in the form of taxes and, therefore, the consumer of oil and gasoline in Canada is not receiving the benefit of the oil pricing arrangement with the Province of Alberta. Why does the Minister not come clean and explain to the Canadian people why the Government refuses to reduce the federal tax to be commensurate with the world market place?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, for every litre of gasoline sold in Ontario at the present time the federal Government receives about 21 per cent of the price; 30 per cent goes to the Government of Ontario; some goes to the Government of Alberta; some to the producer, and a good part of it goes to the distributor and refiner. So 21 per cent of the cost of a litre of gasoline in Ontario goes to the federal Government; that is 9 per cent less that goes to the provincial Government of Ontario which has nothing to do with this agreement.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, this being Thursday, I would ask the Government House Leader to give us some indication of the business of the House for the balance of the week and for next week.

Mr. Pinard: First of all, Madam Speaker, to deal with tomorrow, under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Section 20, we have to start debate within a certain period of time on objections to reports made by different commissions. Tomorrow we have no choice but to allow that to happen. The first item of business tomorrow will be to take up the consideration of the four objections that appear on the Order Paper, as I indicated to my colleagues yesterday, for a maximum of one hour. At the end of one hour, if debate has not been completed, we on this side will agree to continue debate at a further date which will be determined later.

You will recall that in 1976 there was agreement among the Parties to start debate for five minutes and then adjourn it until later, but failing such an accord this year we have no choice but to start debate. We want that debate to last one hour and then at the end of the hour debate will be adjourned until a later time that will be agreed between the Parties.

At the expiry of that hour we will call a Bill which is to be introduced today and which we hope to get through all stages, the Small Businesses Loans Act which will allow small business to get loans after March 30. If we approve that Bill before the end of the day, the back-up Bill will be Bill C-136 at report stage, which is a budget Bill.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, as far as the business of the House next week is concerned, I may point out that Monday will be an Opposition day—the last day in this supply period. This is in response to the wishes of the Parliamentary House Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party who did not want it to be next Friday. I am certainly willing to accommodate him, as a courtesy, and thus designate Monday as an Opposition day. In addition, there will be one or more votes at the end of the day on Monday. On Tuesday, we shall consider the report stage of Bill C-143, which is to be reported back to the House in a few moments, and which concerns the borrowing authority requested by the Government. Wednesday, as usual, will be reserved for Private Members' Business. Thursday, we shall resume debate on Bill C-139 concerning the Income Tax Act, to consider the third reading stage, and if we do not finish on Thursday, I hope we shall be able to do so on Friday of next week. All of this is of course subject to change on reasonable notice.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I should like to thank the Government House Leader for listening to our objections with respect to allotted days.

With respect to the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, has the Government sought legal advice on the suggestion that all three reports be considered at one time? On this side we feel that the Government may be in violation of the letter of the law, if not the spirit of the law, in not allowing full debate to take place under Section 20 of the Act.

We suggest the purpose of the deadline set out in the Act is that the House and Members may consider the report and the objection and then they may be dealt with by way of a motion and sent back to the Electoral Boundaries Commission. Then they can be dealt with in each Province finally, and at a time when views on the Electoral Boundaries Commission are current, and there can be a final disposition made of the boundaries in each Province. Has the Minister sought that legal advice?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, my understanding of Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act is that we have to start debate on the objections within 15 days following the 30 days in which notice of the objection must be given. There is nothing in Section 20 that says that debate has to be completed within 15 days, however; that is not clear at all. That is why in 1976 the House Leaders thought it wise to come to an agreement. We were not able to come to such an agreement this time and so we have at least to start debate during the 15 days. Tomorrow is the first day within the 15 days following the 30 days in which the four objections have been made. That is why tomorrow can be used to start debate on the four objections.

What I am saying is not that we will limit debate to one hour on four objections; I am saying we will start debate and we will want to resume debate, if necessary, at a later time that we will agree to together later on.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, on House business I would like to indicate to the Government House Leader that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in a press interview and in Question Period today, signalled the fact that the Government no longer intends to bring in a Canada Health Act in a big hurry. Does that indicate that the Governement is prepared to refer the subject matter to the standing committee so that we might call witnesses and engage Canadians in the dialogue about health care before the Act is actually written? If it has not yet been written and circulated, is it the Government's intention to use the parliamentary committee in that fashion?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will consider the request of the Hon. Member and most likely raise it with the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Government House Leader. Yesterday the Prime Minister, along with nine Premiers and the Leaders of the Aboriginal People, signed an Accord. Will the Government House Leader be setting aside time for the Prime Minister to make a statement in the House? It is my understanding that a number of Premiers will be returning to their provincial legislatures to explain what happened in the last two days and the positions of their provincial Governments. Will the Government of Canada make a statement in the House explaining its position and its future plans?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I intend to table in a few minutes the documents and the Accord to which the Hon. Member refers. Following that tabling and after he has read them, if there is something he does not understand, I am sure we will be pleased to try to explain it to him.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACKASEY—PAID LOBBYIST ALLEGATION IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE"

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) raised a question of privilege. At that time I said I wanted 24 hours to consider the matter and to respond.

We started from the basic premise that when a Member raises a question of privilege based upon what that Member considers to be an infringement of his personal privileges, he should be given every opportunity to obtain redress through the House or its Committees in a proper and normal fashion. I have considered this and obtained advice with respect to the three areas of concern that I expressed yesterday. I must say at the outset the Hon. Member for Lincoln has been kind enough to assist me in obtaining the facts and I have also received other advice.

I think the Chair has some problems here. In one area there are the civil proceedings that may be taken and there are certain limitations in the Province of Quebec that may affect the commencement of those proceedings, and consequently the life of any work that the Standing Committee may undertake, should the Chair find a question of privilege present and should the motion be accepted by the House, may be affected.

The second area of concern is the ongoing bankruptcy proceedings. My advice, which the Hon. Member for Lincoln has co-operated in obtaining for me, is that these proceedings are ongoing. I understand that they are proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act, that they are judicial proceedings and, in effect, court proceedings. That involves precedents with respect to the propriety of this House or any of its Committees taking proceedings parallel to any matter that is before the courts. That is a consideration that the Chair has to come to grips with.

The final area of concern is whether there are any other investigations which might be ongoing and which might be prejudiced by the work of the Standing Committee, should the matter reach that stage.

Those concerns are still outstanding. We not only still have them but they have become perhaps more emphasized. We believe this is a matter for the Chair to consider, and after obtaining advice, and quite apart from the decision on the question of privilege, determine whether at this point the House has the capacity at all to make the reference requested by the Hon. Member.

• (1510)

We would like to assist in his desire, but I think we would also have a primary responsibility with respect to the House and its committees operating within established traditions and practices and certainly within established precedents. There are those problems; we point them out now. We are certainly prepared to abide by the decision of the Chair after considering the matter.

We suggest that while our own inquiries and considerations have been confined to the time lapse between yesterday and now, it may well require more in-depth research and consideration, perhaps even to the extent of carrying the matter over the weekend until the Chair comes to a correct conclusion.

MR. BROADBENT—NOTICE OF POSSIBLE QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Our House Leader will deal with the matter that has just been discussed, but I am pressed by time and I hope the House will listen briefly to the matter of privilege to which I want to refer.

The "blues" have not yet been sent to Hon. Members, but I want to serve notice that in light of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in the House earlier today, and subject to checking the "blues", I will quite possibly be raising a question of privilege later.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF TWENTIETH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I have the honour of tabling the Twentieth Report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

[Editor's Note: For above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

Mr. Lambert: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If this is the report dealing with Bill C-143, I would ask whether it includes a transcript of all evidence taken by the Committee to date. There is no way that the House can accept a report which is deficient in the evidence that was taken. Otherwise the report is meaningless. Amendments in the House must be based upon evidence. Unless it is included in this package, it is out of order for the Vice-Chairman of the Committee to file that report.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I would humbly suggest to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), that there is ample precedent in the Chamber. I could refer to the matter at length should it be a matter of dispute. Therefore, I do not accept the premise he stated, but I would like to say that I have been informed that the entire evidence has been placed before the House. I must say that this has been at great expense to the people who have done the work. That Committee sat until two o'clock on Wednesday morning. It sat again this morning for an hour and a half. We all owe a great debt of thanks to those people who worked expeditiously to ensure that this evidence was before the House.

Madam Speaker: In answer to that point of order, I advise the House that we have had the statement of the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson). I may say that the House is simply receiving the report. Unless the Hon. Member for Willowdale presents the complete evidence that must accompany the report, the Chair has no way of knowing that the report is complete. I point out to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that the House is simply receiving the report. I believe the objection of the Hon. Member refers to proceeding with a Bill without all the evidence being produced so that Members may consult it. But certainly the House may receive the report; I see no objection to receiving it today.

Mr. Lambert: Madam Speaker, I have ascertained that in so far as obtaining printed copies of Committee hearings are concerned, they are taking anywhere from four or five days to seven days to reach Hon. Members. In this particular case, the report having been filed now, it would be within our power to start the business on Monday; but if the evidence is not within the hands of Hon. Members, I would say that the administration is delinquent in not providing it for Members—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert: —or the proceedings are meaningless. I say to the Chair that when these timetables were worked out, the clear indication was that Hon. Members would have all material available to them so that they could avail themselves of the 24 hours requirement to file any amendments at report stage.

I am dealing here with a report-back on a Bill which has been referred to Committee. If Hon. members do not have that evidence before them—other than having to go scurrying downstairs to the Journals branch to obtain photocopies and that sort of thing—it is not good enough. It is up to the administration either to ascertain that the evidence will be available almost immediately, whatever steps it may take, or for the Chair to assure itself that Members have the material. Otherwise it is a pure contempt of the rights of Members to proceed with legislation.

Madam Speaker: If the administration were delinquent, I would say that it was contempt. I want to tell the Hon. Member that the administration is good enough and that we have not been in neglect of producing the documents necessary to proceed with the Bill. If the Bill is proceeded with on Monday, I assure the Hon. Member that the documentation in question will be printed and ready for Hon. Members to consult. At the present time the Hon. Member may consult these documents since they have been tabled.

Documents have always been ready on time. In the time I have been here I have only heard of one occasion where the documents, although ready at the back of the chair, were not produced several hours ahead of time. The administration is not delinquent. I would be grateful if the Hon. Member would wait until the administration is delinquent before accusing it of being delinquent.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I take tremendous exception to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. The people on that Committee worked right through the night. They were working on a five-minute basis in order to have those documents here. I hope the Hon. Member will take home those pages and read every one of them; there are six inches of them. We owe a great debt of thanks for the work our Committee personnel have done.

TABLING OF 1983 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table copies in both official languages of the 1983 Constitutional Accord on Aboriginal Rights reached at the First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal constitutional matters in Ottawa, March 15 and 16, 1983.

PETITIONS

MR. NEIL—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the Honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled a petition pursuant to the provision of Standing Order 71, which in brief prays that this House reject the Pepin proposal and retain the present Crow rate. The petition attached bears the signatures of 141 electors and was sent to me in my capacity as Member of Parliament for Moose Jaw for transmittal to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. If the petition is found to be in order, Madam Speaker, I pray it will be referred to an appropriate committee of the House of Commons.

MR. MITGES—MAINTENANCE OF INSURANCE INDUSTRY COURIER SERVICE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have to present a petition from concerned insurance brokers from my riding who are very upset regarding the present definition of a "letter" and how this definition is detrimental to the welfare of their business and to the public which they serve. According to the brokers, the public interest requires the insurance industry to maintain fast and dependable service to their clients to deliver correspondence within the insurance industry, and the only way this can be maintained is to retain the use of couriers to deliver its internal mailings. This service provides speedy, reliable delivery of time-sensitive items at minimum cost. The insurance industry would like to maintain this system which has proved so efficient.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT (NO. 4)

Hon. William Rompkey (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-144, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (No. 4).

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,662 and 4,669.

[Text]

CIVILIAN SECURITY AGENCY

Question No. 4,652—Mr. MacKay:

1. Is the new civilian security agency now engaged in hiring staff?

2. Is it the policy of the agency to hire staff from among unsolicited applicants and, if so, what precautions are taken to protect the Agency from penetration by foreign agents?

3. Is it the policy of the agency to administer so-called lie detector tests to all employees of the agency?

4. On what date will the new agency become operational?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. Since the new agency does not yet exist, no action is being taken to hire staff. Applications for employment with the agency, once established, are being acknowledged by the Security Intelligence Transitional Group.

When in a position to hire, the agency will endeavour to seek qualified personnel from inside and outside of Government. It will, through exacting security screening and staffing procedures, ensure to the greatest degree possible, that the agency is staffed by individuals whose loyalty to Canada is beyond doubt.

3. There is no policy to administer lie detector tests to agency employees. However, the use of such tests is being studied so that decisions may be taken on whether to incorporate it as part of the over-all agency security screening process.

4. A date has yet to be fixed for the new agency to become operational.

EM & R—SURVEY OF ENERGY CONSUMPTION

Question No. 4,669—Mr. Mazankowski:

Was a survey to determine the energy consumption of various commercial, industrial and institutional buildings in Canada conducted for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and, if so (a) how many buildings were included in the survey (b) was a comparison done between government-owned or occupied buildings and privately-run buildings (c) what was the cost of the study and what were the major expense items (d) who performed the study?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: No. (a)—(d) Not applicable.

[English]

Mr. Peterson: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 58, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Blaker in the chair.

On Clauses 8, 9 and 128(12):

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order to request whether there is unanimous consent of Members to permit notaries in the Province of Quebec to be added as exempt professions from the requirement of reporting work in progress. I am advised that this will be met with agreement by the profession.

The Deputy Chairman: The Committee has heard the proposal made by the Minister of State (Finance) seeking unanimous consent for the suggestion to which he has referred. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, there will be ample time for this Parliament to deal with the amendment required. Therefore, at this time—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. There is only one issue and that is whether or not there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Blenkarn: At this point, Mr. Chairman, there is not unanimous consent. There will be ample time in this Parliament to deal with that matter.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Calgary West had the floor prior to the luncheon break.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Hon. Member for Mississauga South for trying to keep this Bill on track and Members on the subject.

Prior to lunch I had asked the Minister a question. Unfortunately, there was not enough time for a response, so I will repeat it. If we were to put $2 billion into Small Business Development Bonds, or put $2 billion into the survival type bonds with which we are dealing today, or put $2 billion into Petro-Canada, which of these three types of public expenditure would lead to the most tax revenue for the Government of Canada?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, if I accept the Hon. Member's admonishment, with which he began his remarks, that we should confine the business before this House to the Clauses which are before us, his question, of course, is not in order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to submit that question for your adjudication as to whether it is right on for the Bill. As I understand this piece of legislation, the Minister intends to get rid of the Development Bond and replace it with a survival bond. He tells us at the same time that it is because there is a limited amount of money. Right at the heart of this Bill lies the issue as to whether or not the money is better spent on development or on survival. One way of adjudicating that is whether or not the Development Bond produces increased revenue for the Government compared to the survival bond. Which way of spending this money, the old way or the new way which the Minister is proposing, produces maximum revenue for the Government of Canada? It is right central to this issue.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has not repeated his request for information about Petro-Canada. It is that aspect of his original question which I thought was somewhat incongruous in light of the legislation before the House.

I would remind the Hon. Member of the response of the Parliamentary Secretary before the break. The legislation before the House accomplishes two things. It expands the amount of income that is available to be treated under this Clause. On the one hand, it addresses the issue of economic expansion—increased economic activity—through the small business sector and at the same time it also addresses those most in need by targeting assistance under the amendment to those firms in serious financial difficulty.

Moreover, I would remind the Hon. Member that the description of the bond has not changed. The Government, in taking a look at the Small Business Development Bond, was quite impressed with its performance for the first few months of operation. The Government will continue to monitor the Section to see what impact it has on the small business sector and whether it is conceivable to have adjustments or alternatives in the operation of these two Sections in the future.

• (1530)

Mr. Hawkes: The Minister has not answered my question. Is that because the Government does not have that information?

Mr. Cosgrove: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I thought I had answered the question.

Mr. Hawkes: I think the "blues" will show that perhaps the Minister did not. In any case, if the Minister did, would he repeat the ansewr? Which way of spending the money, either on development bonds or on survival-type bonds, produces the most tax revenue for the Government of Canada?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I indicated that the provisions of Section 8 and 9 do both. I indicated before the break at lunch that it is not possible, without going into very hypothetical economic performance assumptions, to come up with a very meaningful analysis of the question raised by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hawkes: Can I take it then that the Government has not done such an analysis, and that that is why we do not receive the information?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman. The answer could, I suppose, be analyzed by considering the Government's studies in terms of economic performance over the last two years. Depending on what assumptions are made, I suppose, conclusions could be drawn from such analyses. The analyses are done. What I am saying is that one would have to make an awful lot of assumptions. They would be purely hypothetical studies. The information is there, but the officials advised that they would be strictly that, hypothetical analyses, and based on assumptions which would probably vary from economist to economist.

Mr. Hawkes: I believe the Minister is now saying that the studies have been done but that he will not share them with us. If they will not be before the House, will we as Members be able to receive written copies of those analyses which have been done?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman, what I am saying is that the information which is available to the Department of Finance and the Government is probably the same information that is being used by the firm of chartered accountants which is advising the Hon. Member in his preparation for questions. It is information on the economic performance of the Canadian economy which is available to all Canadians.

What I am saying is that the conclusions of the analyses are not too meaningful when one attempts to address the narrow issue which the Hon. Member has addressed.

Mr. Hawkes: The Minister will be aware that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business conducted such an analysis and indicated that money spent on Small Business Development Bonds produced more revenue than it cost. Could the Minister comment on the validity of that study? Is it accepted by his officials?

Mr. Cosgrove: It is one opinion, Mr. Chairman, which was made available to the Department, as I have indicated.

Mr. Hawkes: If the Government were to accept it, would that not indicate that it might be a wise expenditure of public funds? If it produces more than it costs, in private sector terms, it makes a profit. Does the Minister reject the notion of making a profit in this fashion, or does the Minister quarrel with the methodology or the conclusion of the study?

Mr. Cosgrove: What I am saying is that it is only one opinion and one study on the subject.

Mr. Hawkes: May I refer to the simpler part? Does the Minister believe in a tax policy which would produce more revenue than it costs? Is that a good idea for the taxpayer?

Mr. Cosgrove: That would be a major thesis, Mr. Chairman, for the Government providing any stimulus in the economy. Probably the best example of which I am aware, in terms of ministerial responsibility, concerned some of the housing programs which returned almost three to one, in terms of what was put into the economy and what we saw generated directly and indirectly as a result of the expenditures of funds. Government employs that theory in many of its programs.

Mr. Hawkes: If the Government employs that theory, and uses it, I must then conclude that the study done by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business is not being followed through as a piece of advice because the Minister has contrary advice. May I ask the Minister whether the contrary advice is coming from his Department of Finance officials?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I should probably add that the study done, for example, by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business did not assume that any of the activity which occurred would have occurred without the bonds. That is the point I raised before the break at lunch. I do not know how economists or even practical business people can make those kinds of assumptions or, conversely, how figures can be determined as to what percentage of economic activity did result from the bonds or from the initiative taken by the Government. We know that tax programs have leakages. We know from practical experience that some things which would have been done by small businessmen would have been done by people taking advantage of programs of the Government, but we cannot quantify it.

Mr. Hawkes: What is the data base on which the Minister is making the decision to transfer the money from development to survival? If it is not rational choice, if it is not based on data, does it amount to darts in a dartboard? Is it political judgment? On what basis is money being taken away from development and directed over to the side of survival? Do we have any idea as to whether it will help or hurt the Canadian economy, the one kind of expenditure versus the other?

The Deputy Chairman: This will be a final exchange, if I may indicate, because the time allotted to the Hon. Member for Calgary West has now expired.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, as I have indicated, it is not an "either or" proposition.

Mr. Hawkes: It is. The Bill is "either or".

Mr. Cosgrove: The effect of clause 9 is to expand the operation of the clause to unincorporated small business persons. In addition, it is to target it toward people who are in specific and very desperate need of this type of assistance. Therefore, the provision is, first, expansionary, second, it is sensitive, I thought, to the plight of small businessmen. Certainly Hon. Members on this side of the House have been alerted. We have received representtion that this type of assistance would be welcome to people in very difficult circumstances.

I think for example of the representations made by colleagues of the Hon. Member addressing the plight of farmers, for example. There has been a request for Government action to assist that community. We know that the bond, as amended, has been used by the farming community in the majority of cases. What we are attempting to do, not only as politicians but as people sensitive to the plight of other Canadians as well, is to help and direct that assistance to Canadians who need help.

I do not know why the Hon. Member would disagree with the Government when his own colleagues feel that the farming community is deserving of this type of help.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to raise a few last questions with regard to the Small Business Bond and Small Business Development Bond and then, hopefully, to move on to other Clauses shortly.

I want to clarify two or three points which have been made. One was raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance just before we broke for lunch, when he was speaking at some length about the great gift given by the federal Government to small business by increasing the maximum of accumulated earnings which would enable a small business to qualify for the small business tax rate, moving from $750,000 up to $1 million, as though this was some great gift. It must be stated that this was simply a recognition that the upward ceiling has not been altered over the last number of years and, with inflation carrying it, it was only sensible that this should be increased to recognize the realities of inflation in Canada in the last few years. On the other hand, he also went on at some length to try to say that the Government was trying to assist small businesses in their efforts by this bail-out bond, that was in the best interests of Canada, and that he did not understand why various Members opposite were going on about the money that the Government could find to assist Dome Petroleum, Chrysler, Maislin and Massey-Ferguson, and so on, when we could not find any money for small business. The Hon. Member went on to say that the Government has had a number of representations from the small business community saying that this was a good, progressive step that was going to assist Canadians. I would agree that a strong case can be made that way, but it need not be one or the other. What we are saying, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, is that if we are prepared to go out on a limb for hundreds of millions of dollars for some large corporations, why are we not prepared to do the same for small businesses across Canada, farms, small ranches and fishermen, that kind of entrepreneurial endeavour? There seems to be a bias in the choice of those whom we assist and those whom we do not.

• (1540)

If the Minister believes, as he sits here today and reacts to the questions that Hon. Members have put forth, that the Small Business Bond is in force and is being used by all kinds of small businesses across Canada, that is simply not true, in my estimation.

I want to address this question to the Minister. Is he aware of any particular regional breakdown of the use of the SBBs? The question I am putting is whether there is not a regional bias in the granting of the Small Business Bond. When I made an inquiry to a number of the smaller branches of Canada's chartered banks, I find bank managers who say that they are not prepared to consider the Small Business Bond at this time, that they are not using it and that it is not part of their operation. That is either because they do not know anything about it, or because it is simply bank policy not to pursue this.

I have read statements, in fact, where bankers have said that the Small Business Bond is not a program that they are actively supporting at this time. I am wondering whether the Small Business Bond Program has found its use perhaps in some of the larger metropolitan centres, whereas some of the smaller communities or the rural areas of Canada have been left out of this bond program. Could the Minister clarify whether there is any truth to that assumption?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am in an unusual spot; I was down here talking to the Chair when the question came along.

I would like to make a couple of comments to the Hon. Member about his preamble. I understand this morning that there were some facts given to the House about the split on the Small Business Bond between farms, unincorporated and incorporated businesses. I would hope that our officials could get these facts again for us so we can pass them along. That at least would indicate to the Hon. Member that not all of these bonds have been used in large metropolitan areas, as he says. A good portion of them have been used by farms. The Hon. Member will recall that the bonds themselves have been changed in this Bill in order to take into account the requests of people in agriculture who have wanted to have access to those bonds, and who have enjoyed considerable use of them since the measure was introduced.

I again object to the negative description of the bonds provided by the Hon. Member. He says that it is a bail-out bond. Let us remember that that negative description is his, not ours. It may be easy to scorn people who need help, who are in difficulty. Perhaps in his position, with all the resources of a wealthy Parliamentarian, he does not understand the needs of people who are trying to rescue their businesses and working hard trying to keep themselves afloat. Those people, I am sure, appreciate the help, whether he calls it a bail-out or some other negative name. I reject that.

I also point out to him that there is indeed a considerable amount of development money left in the hands of small businesses as a consequence of the increase in the ceilings of retained profit and of annual profit.

Finally, I would reiterate to him that assistance to companies like Chrysler is also assistance to hundreds and hundreds of small businesses in the form of suppliers, dealers and other small businesses involved with such a large organization. I think that we have no need to apologize to small business for having helped one large corporation. The collapse of a large corporation would inevitably drag down hundreds of people in smaller outfits who would not thank the Hon. Member for opposing this kind of help.

The Deputy Chairman: Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap again, I think it is a proper courtesy to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South to indicate to him that it is his amendment which is on the floor for debate. I think I would want to recognize the Hon. Member for Mississauga South at any time that he indicated that he would want to bring the matter to a vote. I think perhaps the Chair is well off in leaving that in the hands of the Hon. Member to indicate his preferences in that regard.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance indicated that he was speaking to you when I was making my delivery, it became very obvious, in his reaction, because he obviously did not hear a thing that I said.

I said that indeed I agreed with the support given to some of the major corporations. There was an obvious, positive ripple effect to the small business sector of Canada. I stated that. I cannot imagine how on earth else I could say it. I could try to simplify it for him, but I do not think that he needs that.

I also said that indeed it was a bail-out bond, and I am prepared to stick by that. I would say that I could provide a list of hundreds of small businesses in Canada that have been turned down by the chartered banks, because the chartered banks are simply not offering Small Business Bonds any longer. I stand by that. There might be the old isolated case, but by and large that is not the information I have.

As the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has indicated, the only time that the banks are enthusiastic about the Small Business Bond is when they have to save their own necks. They are not interested in the particular small business involved, but when a small business comes to them that is obviously going bankrupt, and perhaps the bank has not totally covered itself in terms of its security, they can then bring in the loan and renegotiate it under the Small Business Bond in an effort to save the bank's money, not so much to save the small business.

I think it has been a real oversight that the Government has put so much faith into the banks in terms of their willingness and enthusiasm to implement this program. As I stated at the beginning of today's session, the only reason that the banks will support this program is that there may be a tax incentive for them to do so, but we have given the banks so many tax incentives that now they are not interested in pursuing this Small Business Development Bond Program.

I want to direct a question to the Minister regarding the definition of the Small Business Bond Program. It is called the Small Business Development Bond or the Small Business Bond. I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance to respond to this. The question is why $1 million has been identified as the ceiling, after which the small business becomes a large business. It becomes a large business when its retained earnings are in excess of $1 million, and automatically it jumps from the small business tax bracket to the corporation tax bracket.

Will the Parliamentary Secretary explain why this particular figure was selected? Is it totally arbitrary or is there some rationale behind it?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I suppose anything in the Income Tax Act is discretionary, but that is the amount that is used throughout the Act in relation to a number of other provisions that apply to small business. An example is the low rate for small businesses and the amount that can be used for retained earnings. There can be many arguments, but that amount was used because it was thought to be reasonable and that it related to a good cross-section of small businesses. It was moved up to $1 million in this Clause as well.

• (1550)

Mr. Riis: I thank the Minister for that explanation. I now want to ask him a question regarding taxable dividends. Over the years they allowed a small business to develop an equity base so that the small-business person would not have to go to the banks or other financial institutions to borrow money at very high interest rates. That has now been removed from the small entrepreneur. Can the Minister explain why?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I believe the Hon. Member's question pertains to Clause 109. At this point we are not even addressing Clause 9. We are addressing amendments introduced by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I think the Hon. Member has strayed quite a bit.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I will direct a question that deals directly with the amendment introduced by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. It goes back essentially to the meaning of development of a Small Business Development Bond. I remind the Minister of what he said to the Committee earlier today. He said that it cost the Government of Canada $125 million to provide $2 billion of borrowing to the small business sector as a result of the bond program. As the Minister will know, these investments under the Small Business Development Bond were intended for new plant, equipment, buildings, expansion purposes. In other words, when a business was thriving and there was an opportunity to expand, the Government saw fit to enable that entrepreneur to borrow under the Small Business Development Bond program, which I applaud. It was a positive step. It was a good program until it was gutted. By definition, the small business person could expand his or her operation.

Surely when a business expands with a new plant, new facilities or a new line of product, that results in increased sales tax for the federal Government, increased personal taxes as a result of employees added to the operation, and as a result of increased salaries or returns to the federal Government in terms of revenues from corporate taxes resulting from the expansion.

Can the Minister provide the Committee with the net cost to the federal Government as a result of the $25 million paid out after the additional funds have found their way back into federal Government coffers? If these figures are not available, will the Minister hazard a ballpark guess, or will he simply indicate there is no way to determine the net return to the federal Government as a result of moneys invested in the bond program?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, that is a repetition of a question asked before the lunch break. I indicated that it is very difficult for the Government to give a hard and fast figure with regard to returns to Government coffers. I made the general observation that the $2 billion addressed to this sector of the economy would improve that sector. I said that if the Government was going to be assisted by that expenditure of $2 billion, it would have been assisted in managing its debt portfolio with that perceived income coming in, but the fact is that it did not. Government revenues did not increase. That is the major reason why the Minister of Finance indicated, when he introduced Bill C-143, that the Government had to seek further borrowing authority. The revenues were not there.

Another general way of testing that is the lack of performance as reflected in the poor numbers in terms of failures in this sector. That has not been very encouraging. I do not have a specific number, but the general activity in the economy, either in the health of the sector or the returns to Government, might have reflected all of those increased revenues coming to the Government. However, they have not materialized.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, just for clarification, is the Minister saying that that $2 billion of investment in the small business sector in terms of productive capacity resulted in absolutely no tax return to the federal Government in terms of sales, personal or corporate taxes?

Mr. Cosgrove: No, Mr. Chairman, I am saying it did not result in a remarkable bulge, that is, in economic activity. That would lead to the conclusion that it was a very successful way of stimulating the economy. My officials remind me that one of the reasons is that some people in the private small business sector who took advantage of the bond may have already been planning those kinds of expansion, purchases and economic activity. What we did was assist them in the financing of those operations. Those plans may have been on the shelf for that sector in any event.

Mr. Riis: I agree wholeheartedly with the Minister. I do not think that because of the Small Business Development Bond many small businesses decided at that point to expand. I suspect it was part of their corporate decision making. That comes as no surprise.

The logic that the Minister is using is open to some question. He is saying that because there was no appreciable corporate tax return increase, no significant increase in personal or sales tax return to the federal Government, that $2 billion stimulus to the small business sector was questionable in terms of value. Presumably the Minister has not been able to factor out the impact of this stimulus to the small business sector. Earlier today he said it cost the Government $125 million for this program. When the Hon. Member for Mississauga South introduced his amendment, he said that his information indicated there was a trade-off, that while the federal Government invested $125 million, the returns as a result of that investment offset it. In a sense the Minister was not providing us with the full picture. Will he agree that the $125 million for these two programs which it cost the taxpayers of Canada to implement resulted in some return as well, and that the $125 million cost would be reduced as a result of that net return?

Mr. Cosgrove: There would have been some improvement, some trade-off, that is revenues generated as a result of the plan. We are not as optimistic as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South that the trade-off is equal or, as he intimated, that the bond became an investment and there is, in a sense, a profit. We do not accept that. Nothing in our experience would lead us to be that optimistic.

The other point, and I am repeating it from this morning's session, is that for some period of time, at least two years, there have been extra claims on Government revenues, such as our automatic social programs and the Unemployment Insurance program. They require significant infusion by the Government of resources toward automatic social stabilizers. As a result of this pressure on the total Government financial position, the Government, for example, has come to Parliament and asked for increases in authority to borrow. The Government is under extreme pressure because of that very poor experience in the economy in the last two years. Faced with that prospect, and the prospect of searching for even additional funds to serve social programs which are necessary, we find that we cannot offer the same kind of funding to serve expansion. At the present time we feel that under the circumstances our first obligation should be to those people who need help the most. That is the rationale behind that part of the amendment which directs the funds, first of all, to those corporations which are on the brink of very difficult financial positions.

• (1600)

The Deputy Chairman: I should advise the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap that his time has expired. Of course, he can come back after a further intervention by another Hon. Member.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Chairman, I really have one question and I believe this is an appropriate Clause in which to raise the question to the Minister. In discussion of the Small Business Bonds, the matter of interest rates on these bonds and other Government-related issues comes into play. It is my understanding that the Small Business Bond, and the interest rate thereon, and other interest rates, are based on something which is known as a prescribed rate, and since January 1982, this prescribed rate has been calculated quarterly in order to keep people up to date with the fluctuations in the interest rate market. It seems to me, however, that with the wide fluctuations of interest rates, especially in the last year, a quarterly revision does not seem to be appropriate enough. Businessmen have come to me asking for my explanation of the Government's calculation of this prescribed interest rate for these bonds. Other constituents have also come to me similarly concerned about other calculations based on the prescribed rate. I will give you an example of this, Mr. Speaker. As you know, employees of chartered banks, who are given a preferential mortgage interest rate by the banks, are now liable, I understand, to have the difference between their subsidized mortgage interest rate and the prescribed Government of Canada rate taxable at their marginal income tax rate.

I certainly support this provision in the 1981 budget, but I am curious about the benchmark, because if we look at the last three months of 1982, the prescribed rate was 16 per cent while comparable mortgage rates were around 13.5 per cent. The prime rate, of course, was somewhat lower.

Mr. Riis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I have been listening very carefully to the Hon. Member make his presentation. I do not see how it relates to Clauses 8 or 9 of the Bill. Perhaps he could explain now.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member had been listening carefully he would heard my explanation. I was very carefuly not to stray too far from the Clause at hand. May I continue, Mr. Chairman, since you obviously were satisfied with my line of questioning? In this particular case, my constituent bought a house in November, 1982 and received a 3 per cent mortgage from a bank. He is now to be taxed on the difference between 3 per cent and the prescribed rate of 16 per cent. This in effect will mean he will be penalized more than if he had gone to any other chartered bank where he could have got, perhaps, a five-year mortgage at 13.5 per cent.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We are anxious to deal with this Bill and to move on to other Clauses. I realize that by not stopping the Hon. Member, you presumably have agreed that this has direct relevance, but I must register my concern, as one who wants to see this Bill proceeded with as quickly as possible, that I must listen to what I consider to be an irrelevant discussion on this particular Clause. I believe it is quite out of order.

The Deputy Chairman: It is rather difficult for the Chair because the complexity of the Bill is such that it is very demanding to attempt to determine relevance. This is the second time that the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap has raised the point of relevance, and it is the duty of the Chair to examine that issue. In the circumstances, I believe the best way to proceed is to ask the Hon. Member for York East to continue, and the Chair will pay the attention which is required in order to determine whether or not the Hon. Member's remarks are in fact relevant.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your generosity. I must say that the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap is dealing in tautologies in that he answered his own objection by saying that the Chair did not correct me earlier because obviously it was satisfied with my line of approach.

I have already made my point, Mr. Chairman, and it relates directly to the Clause at hand, in terms of the interest rates on the Small Business Bond and the prescribed Government of Canada rates. In any event, Mr. Chairman, I would not want to upset my friend from the New Democratic Party. I understand that he has been a participant in this debate and has himself used a lot of time, and I am sure he would not want to deny me, a humble backbencher on the Government side, a few minutes of redress to approach one of our Hon. Ministers. I thank the Hon. Member for not objecting even further after the Chair had supported me in my line of questioning. I have made my point and I welcome the Minister's answer.

Mr. Cosgrove: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I could respond by observing that the rate is not set. The rate is negotiated between the bank and the small businessman. It is really something which flows from the application by the small businessman to the bank. I am having difficulty, Mr. Chairman, concentrating on my recollection of the question before the Hon. Member was interrupted by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap. But in so far as the setting of the general bank rate is concerned, Mr. Chairman, as you know, since January, 1982 this rate is revised quarterly and takes into account fluctuations in interest rates on the capital markets. The rate used for a given quarter is obtained by taking the arithmetic mean of the accepted weekly three-month Treasury bill tender rates for the first month of the preceding quarter. Consequently, for example, the prescribed rate of 16 per cent, which applied in October to December, 1982, was based on July, 1982, data.

I will conclude by saying, on the other hand, in the case of dropping interest rates, the prescribed rate is slightly higher than it should be. The opposite occurs when these rates go up. The recent drop in interest rates has lowered the prescribed interest rate, which is 12 per cent for the present quarter of 1983.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Chairman, as you can see, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap has come over to me for further clarification and we are discussing this matter. I am very glad that he now understands my position fully. I would like to ask the Minister in conclusion, given his answer, would the Government, in view of these fluctuations, help small businessmen and bank employees such as I have described by perhaps being a bit more flexible on the compilation of this rate? The argument that it takes three months to gear up computers and inform people in the field as to changes in the rate, is certainly a hard one to accept, given the great efficiency of Government organization in general, and especially of Revenue Canada.

Mr. Cosgrove: In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the experience prior to the last six months was of interest rates climbing. I am advised by my officials that the quarterly averaging device has assisted small business and its customers in that situation. Now, since interest rates have been dropping—and of course they have gone down a lot faster than they went up—possibly the averaging may not have been quite so attractive. But it was a device which was of great help to people, such as in the small business sector, who were borrowing money during that period of time.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in what the Minister had to say about how the money from the Small Business Development Bond went directly to the banks rather than back to the Government, because that is a view I hold. If I have not paraphrased him properly, I apologize. But I think he did say, in response to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, that it was not offsetting, not reciprocal, and the fact is that the effective interest rates were larger for small companies than they were for large companies. I think what we need to do is not to look at the tax rates themselves but rather at the real, effective interest rates.

Has the Minister any current figures on the effective interest rates as applied to different classifications of people? If you have an inflation rate of, say, 12 per cent and an interest rate somewhere in excess of 20 per cent—I know we are not there now, but I wonder if he has any up-to-date figures. The real after-tax interest rates discriminate against small companies, which the Government, through its Small Business Bond, is attempting to help. Consequently, the people who get the help, the stimulus, are not in fact the small businesses, or the Government in terms of revenue, but the people who are lending the money and charging the interest rates.

I will just give you the figures I have from about a year ago. The effective after-tax interest rates for homeowners is 9.5 per cent; for small manufacturers, 4.7 per cent; and for large manufacturers, 3 per cent. I would like to know from the Minister whether or not this has changed. We have found that in the personal income tax system we are really loading the system against the poor and low income groups. Is the same thing true where we are loading the corporate tax system against small-businessmen instead of the large retailer and manufacturer? Does he have any up-to-date figures on the real after-tax cost, because the tax rate is frequently meaningless?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the tax system generally in the corporate sector is the exact opposite of what the Hon. Member has just said to the House. For example, I think the small business manfuacturer has a rate somewhere around 10 per cent as compared to the larger corporation which pays around 35 per cent, 36 per cent. So the Act is tilted or biased, as the Hon. Member says, in exactly the opposite way from what he has just indicated. Now, there may be some lending practices involving the rate that a bank charges different customers or different classifications in the business sector, but that has nothing to do with the Income Tax where we have biased our rates toward the small business sector. That has been traditional and I think well known. This section, I think, is just a further example of that. How can the Hon. Member say that we are not biased in favour of the small businesss person, incorporated or unincorporated, when the effective rate of a person taking advantage of this bond is half prime plus 2 per cent to 3 per cent? This is available to small business, not to the giant corporation.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, the point I was making is that while the tax system is biased in favour of the small-businessman, the real after-tax cost of borrowing, assuming a uniform interest rate, is biased in favour of the large retailer and manufacturer. It is asserted by some that we should index the interest income and expenses so that in fact the system would not be loaded against the homeowner and small manufacturer who do not have the same provisions to write off their debt charges.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I can do nothing further than repeat that the effect of the bond and the provision we are looking at, which I am reminded is the pertinent business before the House, is to provide a bias in favour of those people who would qualify for the bond. This is a remarkable advantage and, we think number one, an incentive, and number two, assistance to those small business people, incorporated or sole proprietorships, who want to take advantage of this preferred rate.

Mr. Rose: The point I was making is that your efforts will be ineffective if the real interest rate on debt charges is biased against the small borrower, the small-businessman, the homeowner. That is the assertion I make.

Mr. Cosgrove: I think I understand now the Hon. Member's point, but surely that bias is not offered in this legislation, which is one half prime. I agree there may be some difference in the way in which banks treat different categories of borrowers, but not to the extent of the interest rate reduction offered through this bond.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, reference was made by my colleague with respect to a study done for the Federation of Independent Business. That study indicates that there was a very positive effect on Government revenues because of the Small Business Development Bond. In fact, the figures indicate that Government revenues increased over the time of the bond by $120 million, and Government revenues will increase over expenditures in the period 1980 to 1984 by another $75 million. That study went over the net cost to the Government. I went over the incremental problem because obviously some people who would have borrowed anyway took advantage of the Small Business Development Bond and the tax break therein. There were studies done on the matter here in Ottawa, and I am wondering what studies the Minister did, bearing in mind that the report was tabled in February of 1981. Are those studies available? If so, why have they not been released to the public? Can the Minister explain what is wrong with this particular study? Why has the Small Business Development Bond been gutted, bearing in mind that, according to all of the information we have, it yielded a positive tax return to the Government?

● (1620)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I dealt with this question earlier. It is quite useful to have these economic models like Informetrica. It is quite useful to have set pieces theoretically gauge what has or has not happened in the economy. The difficulty lies in the interpretation of those studies. Our officials did not agree with the assumptions which are used to identify the surpluses that the Hon. Member has referred to, for example.

Mr. Blenkarn: If the people of Canada have paid for these studies, why are they not available? Will the Minister produce them now? The study was made at the expense of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. It was produced by Don R. Allen and Associates Consultants Limited and indicated that the Small Business Development Bond Program actually had a positive cash return in terms of tax. The Government has said that it studied the report but that it made false assumptions. If the Government has studied the report, where is its study? We have paid for it and would like to know where it is.

Mr. Cosgrove: The Hon. Member is asking me to produce a study that he is reading from. Of course we have copies of it, Mr. Chairman, but our interpretation is not the same as his. In his statement on September 27, 1982 the Minister indicated that he had looked at the same period and the same performance in the economy. Informetrica would have been just one of the things the Minister would have examined in coming to his conclusions about the performance of the economy and whether we could accept that the performance was as set out in the Informetrica report.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister has not understood this particular study at all. This is the first time reference has been made to the study in the House of Commons. It is brought up now because we are dealing with the Small Business Development Bond Program. The Government says it has looked at the Allen study and has concluded that Mr. Allen is wrong.

Let us see how the Government comes to that conclusion. Will the Government release its own finance studies to indicate where Don R. Allen and Associates is wrong? The business community believes that this was a first-class program and that the Government made a profit on it. If the study is not correct, we would like to see the data to indicate that.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the answer would be that it is in the many other studies the Government has looked at that cover the same period of time; the advice that officials in the Department have given to the Minister; the interpretation that the officials have made of that particular document, and finally, the performance of the Government's bank account. I am not sure what amount the Hon. Member for Mississauga South says the Government has benefited by, but we believe that the performance of the accounts receivable sections of the Government of Canada do not reflect the generation of that kind of economic activity.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the Government's economic performance has been abysmal. In the November, 1981 budget, the Government forecast for the current fiscal year that it would receive $80.3 billion in revenue. It will receive $66 billion, so revenues are off by 17 per cent. A good deal of that is due to the inept financial performance of the Government, and to tax laws that bleed the country dry and drive business out. One good program was the Small Business Development Bond, but it was thrown out because it did not comply with the Government concept of paternalism. It worked. It gave a positive tax return and economic growth, but it did not comply with socialism.

We are ready to vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Cosgrove: Apart from the rhetoric of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, Mr. Chairman, the figures he has used make the point that I have hit upon. The original projections were for revenue of $80.3 billion; the actual performance turned out to be $66 billion. That is my point. The performance in the economy does not reflect the receipt of increased revenues which the report that the Hon. Member is flashing around claims. He cannot see the logic of that because he is using rhetoric. We do not accept the amendments of the Hon. Member. They do not support the thesis. We are ready to vote on them.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question? Is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North rising to speak in the debate?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I should like to take a few moments to speak. In spite of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South saying that he was ready to vote, he did not speak for me.

I should like to raise again a matter which I raised in debate last week. I was in committee this morning and could not be here. The point has been raised before by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, that the change from the Small Business Development Bond to the Small Business Bond was a big mistake and has been a deterrent to small business. This view has not just cropped up after the change. The point was made when the Bill was brought to the House by the Minister. An article in the Financial Post on January 30, 1981 carries the heading "Small firms say new bond just won't do", and I should like to read a few paragraphs from that article as follows:

—the Small Business Bond, is drawing fire from small businessmen and lenders and may be short lived.

The consensus, in short, is that Ottawa's bond program has changed from a useful job-creation and business expansion tool in a period of high interest rates to one that offers only restricted stop-gap financial aid.

● (1630)

When the Small Business Development Bond . . . program began in 1980, a small-business corporation could get low-interest loans for new fixed-asset acquisition, research and development or in the case of financial hardship.

It continued by indicating that in the November 12, 1981 budget:

—the development aspect of the program was dropped and SBDBs became simply Small Business Bonds—

Then it went on to indicate:

—after January 31, when the SBDB program ends, the new SBBs become available only in narrowly defined cases of financial difficulty.

Also it indicated:

—potential borrowers with strong expansion plans will be barred from the program. In addition, the new financial-hardship guidelines may prove so restrictive that few ailing firms will qualify for the bonds.

I will not take the time of the House to quote a spokesman of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce or Philip Walton, regional vice-president of RoyNat, who said the same thing.

We attempted to obtain some figures from the Minister last week. He indicated that he did not have them and that the argument in any case was invalid. We have some figures which I would like to put on the record. They come from the Canadian Bankers' Association and indicate that as of December 31, 1982, measuring from the start of the program, $2,966 million had been authorized under both the Small Business Development Bond and the Small Business Bond. Also they indicate that in the last year since the development aspect was dropped, only $578 million was lent, in comparison with the $2,388 million lent in the previous year and a half. In other words, when the Government got rid of the Small Business Development Bond and switched to the Small Business Bond, loans dropped to a third or a quarter of what they had been previously.

What we were saying last week and what other Members have been saying today was not only true after the fact. The result was predicted a long time ago, when the Government first brought forward the proposal to take the development aspect out of the Small Business Development Bond and to restrict it to companies with extreme financial difficulties.

I could go on, but that is the situation as we see it. We know, following the lead of organizations such as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, that the Government made a very serious mistake making the change incorporated in these amendments.

Mr. Cosgrove: If there was anything new in the position of the Hon. Member, I would be motivated to try to add to the debate with the Government's response to his two points. The fact of the matter is that he has really repeated the submissions made by the House Leader of his Party earlier today on a couple of occasions. Also he repeated the position put by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. If the Government had buckets full of money and did not have the deficit it is managing now because of a general downturn in revenues and increased expenditures for committed social programs such as Unemployment Insurance, it would be wonderful to provide expansionary benefits to all sectors of the economy.

We cannot do that, especially when Hon. Members opposite criticize the Government when it comes to the House to indicate its present deficit position. We are subject to criticism by Hon. Members opposite that the deficit is too high, even with programs targeted toward people in need.

I am sure Canadian taxpayers who are looking for refunds of some $6 billion must be frustrated when this afternoon the Hon. Member's House Leader berated this side for taking the time of the House. We asked for a vote, and the Hon. Member rose and repeated a question which had been answered four times in the House. Is that ever frustrating! It must be frustrating for Canadians who are looking for refunds when they look at the nonsense which has been going on in the House this afternoon.

Mr. Riis: On that side.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not want to prolong the debate, but I do not appreciate a lecture from the Minister when I have probably taken in this entire debate 15 minutes last week and five or ten minutes today. First I say to the Minister that Hon. Members of my Party have not criticized and will not criticize the Government because the deficit is too large. If the deficit is used to improve production and to provide employment, we will not say that it is too large.

Second, just because the Minister answered the point put forward by us with an argument that we do not accept does not mean that if he repeats it once, twice, four times or 20 times we will accept it.

Finally, if the Minister says that he cannot do more because of the deficit, I find it a very strange argument. When the loans went to companies that wanted to expand their production or to develop new projects, these firms were succeeding and would pay back their loans. I do not think we have to worry about a larger deficit by lending money to such companies. When we lend money to companies which are in real financial difficulty—and I am not saying we should not—in all likelihood a substantial percentage of them will not succeed even with the loans. In that event there is a very good chance that the Government will lose money, that loans will not be repaid, and that indeed the deficit will be larger. I do not understand the Minister at all and I am sure that small-businessmen who need assistance by way of Development Bonds do not understand him either.

Mr. Cosgrove: Question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I have two quick questions. The Hon. Minister should be less prone to tirades about how terrible the Opposition criticism is. However, we do not find it surprising because if this Bill were brought in by anyone, it would receive the same criticism. What supportive correspondence did the Minister receive from tax accountants and tax lawyers indicating that the Bill was needed at this time and that it was a good Bill? I would be surprised if he received much mail of that nature. My question is really twofold. Has the Minister or his departmental officials conducted any analysis to indicate who are the major beneficiaries of the Small Business Development Bond Program in terms of who benefits most from the tax holiday and from assistance going directly to small business?

My understanding is that once interest rates reach a particular level, the main beneficiaries unquestionably are banks in terms of tax advantages accruing from the bond. Can the Minister confirm or deny that?

Mr. Cosgrove: Our analysis is different, Mr. Chairman. Our analysis is that it is the borrower under the new Clause or the amendment before us, by and large the take-up has been used 60 per cent by farmers and fishermen and the balance has been used by the small-business sector. Any interest rate projections done by the Department show that the borrower is the greater beneficiary.

Mr. Riis: My last question to the Minister is: of the $2 billion lent out under the Small Business Development Bond Program, what was the financial gain to the banks of Canada in terms of the taxes they were not required to pay as a result of the bond?

• (1640)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I am advised it is not a large amount.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, in closing I want to register a very strong concern about a program which obviously benefits the chartered banks of Canada, either to a greater or a lesser degree, depending on what one wants to admit or what one wants to calculate, and for the Minister to say there are no figures available with regard to a Government program subsidized by the taxpayers of Canada, that he has no idea to what extent the banks of Canada have benefited by this program, I think indicates some very, very loose fiscal practices. It is certainly the kind of question the taxpayers of Canada would want to know, that is, to what extent are they subsidizing the chartered banks?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I have indicated that I do not have those figures at hand. I would make them available to the Hon. Member, but who are we kidding? We know the Hon. Member is sore at banks. We know the Hon. Member's Party would not participate in an analysis of the banks and their profits last year, which was conducted by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Young: That is not correct.

Mr. Cosgrove: Representatives of the Hon. Member's Party left during the study. We know where the Hon. Member comes from. I can provide him with those figures. I can indicate to the Hon. Member that the main beneficiary under the analysis was the user. I will give him the figures as to what advantages the banks did enjoy. But it was only part of the larger study done by Hon. Members, except for those in his Party who left. I will make those figures available.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I want to make it perfectly clear to the Minister that he did not participate in any aspects of the inquiry into bank profits while Members of the New Democratic Party participated throughout the entire analysis. It was just when the final report was being drafted that it became perfectly clear that Members of the Progressive Conservative Party and Members of the Liberal Party, acting literally as spokespersons for the banks of Canada, were prepared to engage in a complete and total whitewash, and what we said was going to happen has now happened. The banks said their profits were an anomaly, they were an error, that the profits were a little blip on the progress screen of the banks. For the first quarter of 1983 when every single sector of our economy is being hammered, we notice that one sector's profits are up 41 per cent, that of the banks. In other words, the whitewash, the scam, that we could call that inquiry, turned out to be just that. If the Minister is to cast any aspersions on this side, maybe he should reflect on where he was when that inquiry was taking place and get his facts straight before he starts levying any criticisms.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on the amendment to Subclauses 8(3), (4), (5) and Subclause 9(3).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment negatived.

If no other Member seeks the floor I will put a group of Clauses, which the Committee decided to put together for purposes of debate, namely Clauses 8, 9 and 128(12).

Shall Clauses 8, 9 and 128(12) carry? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Clauses 8, 9 and 128(12) agreed to: Yeas, 27; Nays, 11.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the Clauses agreed to.

Clause 10 has already been carried. Unless Members want to group some Clauses together, I will proceed to put the question on Clause 11.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, we would be prepared to carry Clause 11(1), (2), (3). We have some difficulty with Subclause (4) which deals with soft costs.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. For our part we are willing to accept Subclauses (1), (2) and (3) as carried.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Agreed and so ordered.

Clause 11(1), (2) and (3) agreed to.

On Clause 11(4)—Costs relating to construction of building or ownership of land

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, Clause 11, Subclause (4), as has already been indicated, deals with the subject of soft costs, which has caused the construction industry many problems. Basically, it means that soft costs incurred in the construction, renovation or alteration of buildings and respective ownership of land will be capitalized rather than deducted on a current basis. This has proved to be very injurious to the construction industry. As a matter of fact, one of the first effects of the 1981 budget, if I could have the Minister's attention, in the original changes in soft costs was to close down construction on much on-site work in progress and caused the immediate lay-offs of many people. While some changes have been made in this area, there is still very clear concern about the effect of the soft costs. I have some questions for the Minister relating to specific parts of the Clause. First, the Bill does not make any differentiation between investor taxpayers and persons who construct buildings said to be used for their own personal operation. Since one of the original purposes of this measure was to encourage investor taxpayers in this area, can the Minister explain why there is no differentiation?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the officials advise me that the intention of the Section initially did not distinguish between people or the motivations of people or categorization of people who took advantage of this provision. No doubt it would be used by people for different reasons, perhaps investors. Some people would have taken very generous advantage of the Section for their own financial portfolio, presumably for retirement, assistance or estate purposes. But the Income Tax Act by itself does not distinguish between the reasons why people would use a Section in a particular way. For example, I do know, in connection with the housing industry, that the original provisions were of course part and parcel of the MURB Program.

The Government, for different reasons, that is reasons having to do with objectives addressed to the provision of housing of different types—to market such required affordable housing—decided to approach those kinds of needs. Admittedly, they were originally served by this provision. However, they should be approached using a different financing vehicle. For example, even though the Government removed the MURB provision and, as well, this general provision affecting soft costs, requiring the costs to be capitalized, it was done for a particular social reason, being the provision of certain kinds of housing directed toward a certain sector of the population looking for housing at a moderate cost. The Governement allocated up-front money. As I recall, in the 1981 budget, $300 million was directed toward serving that need.

• (1650)

What I am saying is that, yes, the original purposes of the Section did assist with the provision of housing, for example. The Government decided that there were other ways in which it could go about meeting those objectives. It felt, as a general rule, that it was more appropriate that the soft costs be capitalized and carried over a number of years.

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, I followed the rationale, without necessarily accepting it, with regard to the particular soft costs which affected the MURBs. I know that in many urban areas, and my own riding is an example, the result of that provision has been that there are still large holes in the ground. Projects were not completed and cannot be completed even with the changes which have been introduced. However, we are also concerned with the effect of this measure on large capital projects.

For instance, we have been advised that major construction projects, such as the construction of a large pulp and paper mill or a hydro dam, projects of that magnitude, the capitalization of soft costs will be a major cost item. Since there are other measures in the various budgets, such as the measures relating to the CCAs, which have adversely affected the construction industry, could he explain how this measure will impact on the cost structure of large capital projects?

Mr. Blenkarn: It increases the price by 25 per cent. That's how it will impact.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, some of the representations or examples given by the Hon. Member involve public projects. Hydro projects would not be private sector developments. Therefore, I would submit that the Section is really not pertinent insofar as—

Mr. Blenkarn: The tar sands plant might be an example.

Mr. Cosgrove: —they are concerned. The Hon. Member has made the statement that projects have been stopped because of this provision. We would be happy to hear any specific examples of which the Hon. Member is aware, because our information is that that is not the case, and that the drop, the remarkable reduction in interest rates over the last half year, has permitted construction to carry on in a number of areas.

We have been told by the Edmonton Construction Association, in reference to large firms, and the Hon. Member was referring to large projects, not very small ones, that they have the financial ability to move their accounting procedures to take into account the capitalization of the interest, rather than the reduction which was previously available under the designation of soft costs.

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, the Minister raises a number of points in that answer. I will try to deal with them one at a time. His suggestion that the provision relating to soft costs on the MURBs did not have adverse results and did not result in the cancellation of projects is truly absurd, since these holes in the ground and the impact of those measures were widely publicized. There were pictures in every newspaper of blocks of holes in the ground filled with water which had to be fenced off. There were cities which had to pass bylaws to force people to put up protective fences. For the Minister to suggest that this impact did not occur indicates that he and his officials are wildly out of touch with reality when they propose such measures.

However, specifically in relation to the construction of private projects, "private" meaning pulp and paper mills, mines, et cetera, which are not financed with public money, does the Minister agree that capitalizing the soft costs for these private projects is more expensive than expensing them out?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, of course the theory behind the capitalization of the interest is that it is interest on an investment which is an improvement to a capital project. The pulp mill example used by the Hon. Member is an enhancement of a capital asset, and the Government has taken the position that the reduction in interest rate—

Mr. Blenkarn: The interest isn't deductible.

Mr. Cosgrove: —is really a method of contributing toward the expansion, the enlargement, of the capital assets of the pulp company. Therefore, the whole transaction, the whole project, results in a capital feature which is enjoyed by the company over a period of years. For that reason, the Government felt that all of the cost, including interest charged on financing of that project, is properly set off against the asset resulting from the project development by a particular company.

Returning to the Hon. Member's first comments, I agree with her. Yes, there were some projects which were stopped within days of the initial announcement of the budget in November, but—

Mr. Blenkarn: Hours.

Mr. Cosgrove: —because of the amendments, that is, the provision that if the projects were commenced by the end of the year, which was extended to April, and finally, with the indication that there had to be evidence of intention, to proceed, the result was that people went back to work on projects. I believe that was the reference of the Hon. Member when she mentioned pictures in the paper. That probably would have occurred in November or December of 1981.

Yes, I know that there are some projects which have not proceeded, particularly in the residential construction area. Again, if the Hon. Member checks, I think she will find that, by and large, the complaints arose as a result of the introduction of this Section in relation to large residential projects. The Hon. Member must remember that vacancy rates for these large condominiums or rental projects in many of the major metropolitan areas have dramatically changed in the last nine months. As a matter of fact, I believe the Hon. Member for Calgary South indicated this morning that in his city the vacancy rates had changed in that period from less than 1 per cent to somewhere around 12 per cent.

Obviously, people are motivated to proceed with some of these projects based on whether they can market their product, whether they can put people in these projects and whether they will derive any income. Similarly I would say, insofar as mines or pulp mills are concerned, there are other factors of which I believe Hon. Members are all too painfully aware, and that is the lack of market for some of these major industries. That as well has an impact on finance decisions, not just the method under which companies contemplating expansion can finance those expansions.

• (1700)

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, I again would ask the Minister to address very simply the question I put to him. We have 1.5 million unemployed in this country. We have every investment survey being done indicating that investment intentions have plunged. We have companies all over the country whose biggest problem is cash flow and who are not in a position to finance necessary expansion or renovations which are required in order to create new job opportunities. We have the last few budget measures which have brought in measures related to the CCAs which have made it less attractive to invest in new capital equipment. I ask him, given all of these adverse factors, given the economic climate today, and given the need to promote new building, new construction, new expansion and renovation and new productivity measures, I ask him a very simple question: does this measure which forces companies to capitalize soft costs create a greater burden on those private companies than the previous measure whereby they could be deducted and expensed out? Is this measure going to create an added financial burden on the very companies to which we are looking to create new job opportunities by new investment?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the officials have brought to my attention that there is a grammatical error in Subclause 11(4) which is specifically the one that we are dealing with. I would like to move the following amendment to correct it. It is:

That subclause 11(4) of Bill C-139 be amended by striking out line 10 on page 38 and substituting the following:

"or a cost incurred during that period"

As regards the question put by the Hon. Member, in isolation, in a narrow sense, one would be tempted to be simplistic and to answer it by a yes or no. But we know that we are looking at a Bill that has 139 Clauses and that has relieving sections. For example, it has a section that reduces the general tax rate for certain people under the tax schedule. For example, for people who have children, it offers a tax benefit by increasing the $50 per child benefit.

There are many Clauses in this section, some of which would be more burdensome to some sectors in the economy and some which would lighten the financial problems faced by other sectors, and the Government has to balance those. If there is no balance the Government also has to take into account other programs that it has under other legislation such as programs under the Minister responsible for Regional Economic Expansion. There the Government is spending billions of dollars on grants toward, for example, some of the industries that the Hon. Member referred to, such as the pulp and paper industry.

The Government has to look at the question in terms of its total resources, what advantages it offers to these industries, what are the total advantages that it offers to the industry, and it has to weigh what is the impact of this section.

We are dealing with the Income Tax Act. We thought that logic and fairness indicated a rationale that is defendable. The rationale is that the interest costs, because they are in association with development or enhancement of a capital item, should be capitalized together with all of the costs for that enlargement.

Miss Carney: Mr. Chairman, I would like to address to the Minister something which he may have addressed in his amendment, but in the 1982 draft legislation it was proposed to deny a deduction for soft costs relating to construction, renovations or alteration of a building or to the ownership of land. This Bill proposes a different test and denies deductibility wherever a cost is incurred during the period of construction, renovation or alteration of a building, provided it relates thereto.

We do not understand what the reason for this change is. It may be that it is designed to permit minor repairs to a building to be continued to be fully deductible. It may be that the intent is to allow minor repairs to be fully deductible. Could the Minister explain the apparent discrepancy in the wording, or whether his proposed amendment clarifies that?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the officials advise me that it was an attempt to clarify rather than to change, that it related to costs in association with land only during the time of construction.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. Earlier in the debate the Minister moved an amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Cosgrove) agreed to.

Mr. King: Mr. Chairman, I have seen my hon. friend for Mississauga North stand up and fulminate and fumigate and really say nothing. Then we get the Minister from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador standing up and criticizing the Opposition for failure to pass legislation that has not yet been presented to the House.

An Hon. Member: Fisher's speech was brilliant.

Mr. King: That is right. Fisher's speech was brilliant—which Fisher was that? Anyway, I missed the brilliant speech he made but I note that a great deal of time of the House has been occupied that could have been spent in valued debate, so I thought I should add something of value to make up for the time that has been spent by the Hon. Member for Mississauga North.

I want to talk a little bit about soft costs because I am confused by the whole matter of this tax Bill. We have heard much said in the House about the incomprehensibility of the tax Act. It seems to me that this Clause 11 dealing with soft costs adds a degree of confusion that we could well do without.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, who just preceded me asked a number of questions that I thought should have been asked and that I would have liked to have asked myself, but as one who, 25 years ago, had trouble completing my income tax form when the Income Tax Act was reasonably prepared, by someone with sanity, I have a great deal of trouble with the new one, with some of these new inclusions.

• (1710)

We are told that Subclause 18(3)(1) requires soft costs incurred during the period of construction, renovation or alteration of a building to be capitalized rather than deducted on a current basis. We did not get a reasonable explanation as to why this was being done, at least not one that I could understand. I thought the most obvious answer would be that it would produce more revenue for the Government. That has been the reason for most changes in the tax law in the short time I have been here.

Interpretation Bulletin IT-3-41R stated that you can avoid most of the impact of this Clause if you plan your expenditures properly. What is the value of creating a concentrated confusion if at the same time you state that you can get around this if you plan properly? Will this not be an added burden for those we rely upon to help us get out of the present economic circumstance? We should not be adding burdens or creating burdens for them.

Why do we say on one hand that people should capitalize these soft costs, and then send out an interpretation bulletin stating that they can get around most of them if they plan properly?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, when the Hon. Member was referring to a crummy speech by the Hon. Member for Mississauga North, he was confused. It was the Hon. Member for Mississauga South who gave the crummy speech. When speeches come from the North, they are good; when they are crummy, they come from the South.

I must say that the Hon. Member was far too modest about his activities 25 years ago. I had occasion today to climb four fligths of stairs with him. It is obvious that 25 years ago he worked pretty hard because he is still fit after all that exercise. Therefore, we take his modesty about 25 years ago with a grain of salt. He is obviously a hard-working guy.

The Hon. Member asked why we created this confusion. I refer him to the working session in the Finance Committee over the September period when there was quite a bit of discussion about this. When the Hon. Member looks at that report, he will know that one of the concerns that developed there was the opening of a new and unjustifiable tax shelter for many people.

The amount of tax being avoided was getting rather high. It was not related to genuine activity. There was a real incentive to add on more and more costs and call them soft costs. Our officials were there and they can correct me, but we heard examples of people able to get up to 30 per cent of their project called soft costs. Obviously that was not the intention. If 30 per cent of a massive project can be called a soft cost and written off so quickly, it is a real benefit that is not construction-related but rather is tax-related. The rest of us must pay for them. We are asking whether these are activities that are genuinely construction-related. If they are construction-related, they should be treated like all the other construction-related costs. If they are not construction-related, if you plan ahead and you find that you have some unusual costs, then perhaps it should be a deduction rather than a capital cost. I ask the Hon. Member to bear in mind our concern that perhaps the soft-cost category can become more of a tax shelter than a construction activity. As such, we have to be alert and try to deal with it.

Our good friend from York East raised an important question, and I would like to take the opportunity to answer it very quickly. He indicated that if somebody has an employer mortgage at 3 per cent and the deemed rate is 16 per cent, is the individual taxpayer stuck with a permanent 13 per cent benefit or a floating benefit that is adjusted whenever the prescribed rate floats? I would answer him that the taxpayer is not stuck with a permanent benefit. Rather, when the prescribed rate drops, the amount of the benefit will drop as well.

I refer the Hon. Member to the Income Tax Act, particularly subsections 8(4)(1) and (6), which indicate that when the prescribed rate goes up, the benefit does not go up, but when the prescribed rate goes down, the benefit does come down. We relieve taxes, but do not add on. All of this is described in lurid detail on page 74 of the explanatory notes published by the Minister.

Mr. King: Mr. Chairman, I guess that is a good example of what I was talking about previously, a man using up half my time to answer someone else's question. I hope that will be charged to the time of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

I want to pursue this a little further. There is a definition of when construction is completed, but no guidance as to when construction commences. Can the Minister explain in simple terms when costs commence, such as in land preparation or soil testing? At what point does construction commence under the definition of soft cost capitalization? We know when it ends, but when does it start?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the soft costs start when the charges start. For example, one of the largest costs usually categorized as a soft cost is interest. When you incur interest, you obviously incur a cost. For example, interest charges on concrete are incurred when you buy the concrete and owe the bill. Most of these costs in construction are very clearly defined by the people involved.

Mr. King: Mr. Chairman, what about soil testing for construction purposes, and compaction tests? Do you take those into consideration? This might be done a year before the engineering, planning and when the architect begins his work.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Hon. Member could give me a list of such expenses. I would be happy to pass them on to Revenue Canada for an interpretation. I do not think it would be responsible for us to sit here now and try to define some of the activities of a construction project. We can assume that people on these projects know the difference and know when they incur soft costs. Revenue Canada will also be able to help out here.

• (1720)

Mr. King: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is important because defining that period is the all-important part of the Clause about which we are talking. I have been advised that soft cost capitalization can create an undepreciated capital cost in excess of the actual market value, or the actual value, of the asset. Thus it could, theoretically, at least, contribute to a terminal loss situation for which one-half of the loss only could be used in a tax calculation. In this instance, the taxpayer would have been penalized at the beginning and at the end in the terminal loss situation. Is this correct?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what kind of a businessman would deliberately set out to build a loser. What sort of an experience do we have here where someone incurs more expense than he can conceivably charge for? Can the Hon. Member give us some idea of where these builders live? I would like them to come and have a good time in my riding, too. We could cut the costs.

Mr. King: I do not believe that there was any attempt by any entrepreneur or enterprise to reach this situation, but there has certainly been many of them pushed into this situation by the policies of the Government the Hon. Member represents, and it has created an economic circumstance in which it is impossible for the industrious person to create something of value and something that can sustain itself. Maybe the Hon. Member would like to comment on that? I believe the Government itself has created the circumstances where this can become a possibility. Nevertheless, I could talk for several days on soft fruit, but I have a little difficulty on soft costs, and I will turn the floor over to someone else.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member will know that if a builder or a contractor has a couple of years where he can get his depreciation, then he will not really be in a terminal loss situation. I would like to point out, and remind the Hon. Member, that what we have done here is to slow down the rate at which people can write off these costs. We have not disallowed the costs altogether. We are simply asking them to be treated in a separate category. People have previously shown us that these fast write-offs have been a temptation, and too much has been loaded into that category because of the temptation. We are simply trying to balance that out a bit. To say that this category now must as a whole be treated in a slower write-off fashion, that is the principle of what we are doing here. I take seriously the Hon. Member's concern about creating more expense and having a building which costs more than you can sell it for.

I would urge the Hon. Member to look particularly in the rental housing area, at some of the other programs which the Government has introduced to alleviate such a situation. The Minister of State for Finance, when he was responsible for CMHC, introduced many of these programs in recognition of such difficulties, particularly the difficulties for people building apartments for rental use. The Hon. Minister could probably take a couple of hours quite legitimately to describe to us the beneficial programs which he introduced when he was Minister responsible for CHMC.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I do not know much about soft fruit, nor do I know an awful lot about soft costs, but I would like to ask the Minister about soft principles. I would like to know if the drafters of the legislation before us considered the generally acceptable accounting principles which would require that the interest which he is talking about disallowing as a write-off be capitalized, anyway, during construction by individuals who are constructing capital projects? Was consideration given to that principle?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the officials advise me that, yes, that was considered. Arguments were made on the point made by the Hon. Member, but I am told that the principle employed here, to relate the interest charges to the capital projects, is what is done in the majority of cases, even under established accounting practices.

Mr. Clarke: I agree with the Minister, Mr. Chairman, and that was the thrust of my question. In other words, previously, tax accounting and generally accepted accounting principles, had required the capitalization of interest during construction of the capital project. The MURB rules have changed that and allowed the interest to be written off so that the generally accepted principle was changed to accommodate the construction, or to encourage the construction of residential real estate. I believe that principle was applauded by most people. As far as I know it was a fairly successful program. Perhaps the Minister would like to comment on the success of the program. If so, I would like to hear it, but in the meantime that brings me to another soft principle, I call it: why then, in changing back to the proper accounting principles, that is forcing the investor to capitalize the interest incurred during construction, do they have one principle for individuals and some corporations, and yet exempt corporations whose principle business is the construction, development and leasing of real estate?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the last part of the question, in the example given by the Hon. Member, is that the asset is inventory rather than a capital asset. Therefore, the rules are different when you are looking at something that is retained for capital purposes or something that is rolled over. In so far as the application of soft costs is concerned as it pertains to the MURB program generally, I believe there is no question that the use of the Income Tax Act in conjunction with, or as a means of, assisting construction of multiple unit buildings, whether rental or condominium, was successful in generating construction of a lot of buildings. The difficulty was that the Government was not only concerned with the aspect of the generation of construction which carries with it employment for people, and also, obviously, living accommodation for certain types of people, but was under pressure at the same time to ensure that certain kinds of living accommodation was available to people. The Government is also under pressure, of course, to provide affordable accommodation.

The Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing in the last few days in Parliament has been under question by Hon. Members opposite about, for example, the non-profit program, which is a way of providing affordable accommodation to a certain income sector in the economy. That program is very expensive. It is a pay-down to 2 per cent. I do not believe there is a country in the world which can afford to provide living accommodation at the interest rate of 2 per cent for the general population. Therefore, the MURB program did generate construction, did generate housing, but it was by and large expensive, and there was a good part of it which was condominium, which did not address the rental sector and did not address those markets where the rental picture was very weak, where the vacancy rates were very low, and even though the MURB provision was in force, investors or builders were not taking advantage of it. For whatever their reasons, they did not want to build where there were demands. For that reason, of course, the Government supported the construction of modest rental accommodation by providing an up-front grant, which gave the Government the opportunity of selecting the location for these buildings and some control over the price, hence the rental charge. I must confess, Mr. Chairman, it was a trade-off.

• (1730)

As I have indicated, the MURB Program was really an adaptation of this portion of the Act by people involved in the construction of multiple units. A debate raged, and this Government was of two minds on some occasions. I submit that the Government of the Hon. Member, when it was in office, was also of two minds, because my recollection is that this provision was not continued for MURBs during the budget presentation of the Conservative Minister of Finance. It was a difficult issue. It depended on what the objectives were at the particular time and how the Government weighted those objectives.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I cannot help but smile when the Minister tells me that the Government was against the removal of the interest deduction in December, 1979, and now he is in favour of its removal.

Mr. Cosgrove: I could say the same thing about you.

Mr. Clarke: The Minister talked about inventory. I suggest that he look at page 39 of this Bill. Beside the word "Exceptions", it says:

(3.4) Subsection (3.1) does not apply to prohibit a deduction in a taxation year by

(a) a corporation whose principal business was throughout the year the leasing, rental or sale, or the development for lease, rental or sale, or any combination thereof, of real property owned by it to or for a person with whom the corporation was dealing at arm's length;

I do not think I need to go beyond that to illustrate my point. Any corporation, or individual for that matter, who is developing for lease any real estate does not enjoy an inventory position on the money he is investing or the property he is developing. It would be a depreciable asset in the hands of the corporation. I submit to the Minister and ask him to explain to the Committee how it would be that a corporation, whose principal business was such, should be differentiated from an individual whose principal business was such? Why do we have such contrary principles in a so-called tax Act?

Mr. Cosgrove: I think my response to that is that we are never quite sure, at the initiation of construction of a project, whether it is going to be used for condominium purposes or whether it is going to be rental. Some developers try to keep their options open as they go along. For example, in making submissions through the planning process developers will indicate that the project could be a free-hold project or it could be a rental project. I am not sure of all the factors that would go into that kind of decision, but obviously part of it depends on what market conditions are and whether the developer thinks he can sell or whether he should retain and rent. They do not make that decision right away. So they have a choice of retaining it for ownership purposes and sale at a later time, or maintaining it in a portfolio as an income-producing asset.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I would like to illustrate my problem and my complaint about this dual principle to the Minister. Let us take a corporation which has never sold any real estate. It has a long history, maybe ten or 20 years, of investing in real estate for rental or lease. Therefore, there can be no doubt under this Clause that its principal business throughout the year was the leasing of real property owned by it. Now, when it comes to a new project for leasing it will be allowed to deduct the interest cost incurred. However, if we take an identically situated individual in the same circumstances who comes along in 1983 to develop a property for lease, that individual will be denied the deduction of his interest costs during construction.

I would like to know how the tax Act can differentiate in that way between an individual and a corporation, both of whom are conducting exactly the same business?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, my officials advise me that an analysis of those who applied to take advantage of this Section will show that the person or corporation who would qualify under Subclause 3(4) will have real estate as a principal business. They are not using the provision as a tax shelter. There are legitimate firms who are not looking to this Section as a tax dodge or tax relief provision, but are legitimately in that business. It is their only business, they have no other economic activities against which this deduction can be offset.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I hear the Minister explaining it again, but I am still not satisfied. I do not think I will pursue it with any further benefit to myself or the Committee, but I hear the Minister saying that an individual is being discriminated against because he is not a corporation even though he might be doing exactly the same thing. I say again that this is an example of soft principles on the part of the Government.

It has been for many decades a principle that any expense incurred in order to produce revenue was tax deductible. In this case an individual is denied the deductibility of interest. Can the Minister tell the Committee what the statistics are on the deduction of soft costs? On average, what did the Government envisage as the deduction from the cost of development of residential rental housing? How did that percentage meet the Government's expectations?

• (1740)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the tables showing the different levels of different activities where developers used this soft cost provision. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance has indicated that in some cases it was as high as 33 per cent of the total cost of the project. That led officials and fair-minded people to the conclusion that the provision was being used as a tax haven. People using the Section were motivated to construct buildings or the like as a way to shelter other areas of their portfolio. They were marshalling all the costs they could possibly get, into that project. It really did not reflect the original intention of the Section, which was to be of some assistance to people legitimately engaged in real estate development.

Mr. Clarke: That would lead one to ask the Minister whether following the rules resulted in an undesirable tax shelter. Is the Minister going to change the capital cost allowance rules in the next round? Compared to the 33 per cent of actual development cost, what level did the Government deem to be an acceptable deduction under the MURB program?

Mr. Cosgrove: I cannot say that the officials started out with a hard number. I am advised that we are talking about a provision to provide relief in the area of 5 per cent, rather than a one-third write-off of the project.

Mr. Clarke: I presume the Minister is referring to a 5 per cent write-off of soft cost. I suggest that officials were indicating to taxpayers that 20 per cent would have been acceptable. I understand the Government is now conducting a MURB hunt and is seeking to disallow many soft costs which were granted under the provisions of the original MURB rules. Does the Minister have any knowledge of that?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I am told that the whole application of soft costs in the real estate area, that is a joinder of MURB with capital cost allowance, was not something that the officials who were familiar with the Act felt had been done specifically. It was a way that enterprising tax specialists found of supporting a tax haven in conjunction with capital cost allowance and—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m. pursuant to order made Tuesday, March 15, 1983, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith without further debate or amendment, every question to dispose of the Committee of the Whole stage of the Bill now before the Committee.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. It appears that we have covered a great number of Clauses in this Bill. Had we had an opportunity for reasonable time, we would probably have disposed of them all in proper fashion. The order of the House is that all Clauses now be put. I therefore suggest, in line with the suggestion we made earlier to the Minister, that all of the Clauses that have not yet been passed, be grouped in one vote for consideration at this point.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, that sounds reasonable, surprising though it is. I am certainly prepared to say, on behalf of my colleagues, that we would agree to that.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think we can agree with this procedure. In fact, it was suggested to me by the House Leader for the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Lewis), which is certainly to his credit. However, I would like to make it quite clear that the vote that will be taken on all clauses that have not yet been passed will serve as the basis for the vote on each clause, so that at the end of the debate it can be said that each clause was approved separately under an agreement, with the same division applying to both individual clauses and grouped clauses.

[English]

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, earlier this afternoon the Hon. Member for Mississauga South indicated that, in regard to the amendment I had proposed with respect to notaries in Quebec, it would be dealt with later in Parliament. I am anxious to know whether he is agreeable to including that amendment in the omnibus vote. He knows the Government's intention with respect to either Clause 16 or Clause 125.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am in your hands, Mr. Chairman. I should like to accept it but you appreciate that we are under a House order that was imposed by closure. We would be delighted if the Government would withdraw closure, and in that case we would be prepared to carry on. We do not want this iniquitous Bill that is being imposed on the people of Canada and forced down our throats—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member please resume his seat. This is no time for debate. There not being unanimous consent, we will not consider the Minister's proposal.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of consent, it is a question of the House order. I would point out to the Minister that Parliament does not exist entirely in the House of Commons; there is another House of Parliament, another branch of this Parliament, which is the Senate of Canada. The Government has ample opportunity to present the other amendments at the next reading of the Bill as it proceeds through Parliament.

ENERGY

HUGE COST OF GASOLINE IN QUEBEC

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, yesterday, my colleague from Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) indicated that he was very upset about the exorbitant price of gas per gallon in the Province of Quebec. Perhaps I may recall a few facts for the benefit of Canadians and Quebec residents. At the end of 1982, the price of gas per litre was a few cents higher in Canada than in the United States. It was, however, 22 cents less than in West Germany, 30 cents less than in the United Kingdom and France and 48 cents less than in Italy.

In Canada, in January 1983, Quebecers were paying 16.4 cents per litre in taxes to the Government of Quebec, in other words, 40 per cent of the total price. Quebec has the highest gas prices in Canada owing to Mr. Parizeau's sales tax, and this means Quebecers are paying at least 13 cents per litre over and above the average price in Canada. Today, people in Saskatchewan can buy a litre of regular gas for around 33 cents. That is certainly not the case in Quebec.

The Canadian Government has guaranteed security of supply for Canadians, and now stringent measures will have to be taken to guarantee oil prices, in order to prevent the Provinces, and especially Quebec, from taking the consumer hostage.

ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

COMPETITION FROM IMPORTED WINES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the Canadian wine industry is a growing, developing industry, satisfied that, based on fair competition, it can compete in terms of both price and quality. The Canadian wine industry is, however, experiencing other than fair competition from low-priced import wines, notably Italian products.

Canada continues to categorize its wine industry as part of the larger alcoholic beverage industry, while European producers benefit from a system of support subsidies and incentives. Documents and materials were filed with the Department of National Revenue in 1981 showing how Italian wineries have benefited very significantly from such subsidies, and the adverse effect that unrestricted imports of such products will have on the Canadian market.

Since 1981 the officials of the Canadian Wine Institute have been in constant touch with Revenue Canada, the Department of Finance, and the Department of Agriculture. The time has now come for more positive action. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) should move the application forward so that the allegations and submissions made might be heard by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—CALL FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I want to return to the Cafik affair and make it clear that what I was saying was not that Norman Cafik had breached the guidelines. He did not breach the guidelines. As a former Minister he was dealing with a different Department, unlike Alastair Gillespie. I acknowledge that a former Minister is entitled to full rights, including the right to deal with Government. Former Ministers should not be paupers, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) once said.

The fact is that Mr. Cafik did lobby. He used his expertise to get a Government grant that was stuck in the process. I quoted his own words as evidence; I did not get this second hand. I saw it via satellite, using a new satellite dish, as Mr. Cafik was on the Webster show in Vancouver. He said that. Cafik said that he met with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). It raises questions about the guidelines as they apply to the former Minister, the present Minister responsible for the Treasury Board and formerly Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Our problem in the House is that we cannot ask any questions of the former Minister, and we cannot get the matter before a Committee. In other words, there is no means of public scrutiny in these matters. That is the fault. The matter is still unresolved. The public is very cynical about former Ministers dealing with Cabinet. I plead with the Government to let us have an open system of Government in Canada. Let us have a Committee to examine these matters and examine the proper guidelines. That is in the interest of the governed and in the interest of the governors too.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FUNDING OF UNIVERSITY PROJECTS

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention the nature of direct federal support of research and development performed in Canada's universities. Earlier this month the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) released a summary of anticipated 1983-84 federal spending on science and technology. Among the highlights was an impressive 27 per cent increase in the amount of federal funding of industrial R and D. An increase in funding of that magnitude should be acknowledged and applauded, and I certainly do that. Regrettably, however, any delight I might feel has to be tempered by the recognition that federal funding of university R and D will increase by 6 to 7 per cent for the same period.

At a time when universities are strapped for funds, due primarily to provincial diversion of federal transfers, when the rate of inflation in research specifically is approximately 20 per cent, and at a time when economic recovery and growth hinge on innovation, I do not believe that increases for funding of university R and D, that barely allow research to remain at last year's levels, are enough.

Currently at the University of Western Ontario in London, two researchers are finalizing development of a pesticide sprayer that will use static electricity to spray crops more effectively. This important example of university level R and D will generate cost savings, which agriculture needs, and will substantially lessen environmental contamination. It is this important work, yielding tangible results, that the federal Government should be supporting to the maximum level.

FINANCE

FORECAST SIZE OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, the cavalier statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that the federal deficit may climb above $30 billion next year, on top of the $27 billion this year, is distressing news and unacceptable to those of us on this side of the House. The Government is bereft of ideas and policies to rejuvenate and stimulate the economy and, instead of attempting to build a bigger and better productivity pie, it is attempting merely to reassign the slices. This is not good enough. If the only policy this Government has is to push Canada further and further in the red with its reckless deficit spending, then it is time for Canadians to say, "Go. In the name of goodness, go!"

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, yesterday, in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, the Minister responsible for National Defence stated that the Cruise missile, which the Canadian Government is planning to test on behalf of the United States Government, " . . . is not a weapon, is not dangerous, . . . and is just a vehicle." The Minister also continues to tell Canadians, who are opposed to the testing of this weapons system over their territory, that they are either ignorant or they are misguided.

Since there appears to be some confusion, perhaps even profound ignorance, in the mind of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) as to what constitutes a weapon, I would like to propose on behalf of all Canadians that the Minister of National Defence resign and hand over his ministry to someone who will stop blaming Canadians for the ignorance which he himself displays.

NEWSPAPER COMMENT ON PROPOSAL TO BAN LEADED GASOLINE

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the House an article published in the Sarnia Observer, which reads:

> The federal government has taken a curious stance in its latest attempt to clean up the Canadian atmosphere.
>
> In an announcement last week, Environment Minister John Roberts said lead in gasoline will be restricted and possibly banned because of the health hazard associated with its use.
>
> The government plan would have met with much more support if it was designed to accomplish a reduction in an area of desperate need.
> But as it stands, the evidence used by Mr. Roberts to support the need for a ban has been questioned.
>
> There has been a steady and marked drop in the use of lead in fuels over the past decade in Canada.
>
> An official with Ethyl Canada says gasoline lead usage in Canada has dropped 51 per cent in the last decade. New autos have been increasingly tailored to run exclusively on unleaded gasoline.
>
> So why has the lead problem suddenly become so pressing.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CHEMICAL DUMP SITES BORDERING NIAGARA RIVER

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, in order to control pollution and to safeguard the lives of people in communities bordering the Niagara River and Lake Ontario, we must, as a country, make strong representations to the Government of the United States to ensure that a very serious attempt will be made to clean up the chemical dump sites along the Niagara River. These chemical dump sites are like a time bomb and could have dire consequences for the health and safety of Canadians, either through a massive chemical leak into the Niagara River and then into Lake Ontario, or through slow seepage into the water systems, which could reduce the quality of our drinking water and lead to long-term health effects.

The Government of Canada could help in the search for suitable toxic chemical controls. Presently, there is $2.5 million earmarked for toxic chemical control, which money has been frozen by the Treasury Board and which, therefore, might not be spent this year. Toxic chemical control and the need for additional, more frequent monitoring procedures, are crucial matters of concern, and these funds should therefore be made available.

I strongly urge the Government to recommend to the Treasury Board that these funds be released as soon as possible so that progress can be made toward the eventual resolution of chemical pollution into Lake Ontario and the Niagara River, especially in light of recent reports that the levels of possibly lethal chemicals in Lake Ontario are on the rise for the first time in several years.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR JOB-CREATION MEASURES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my first question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The figures released today by Statistics Canada indicate that Canada's inflation rate dropped in February below the rate of a year ago, but prices are still rising much faster than the incomes of Canadians. As a matter of fact, at the end of 1982 disposable income was down about 4 per cent, and prices have increased almost a full percentage point in the last two months, so that Canadians are still net losers. When is the Government going to introduce measures which will put Canadians back to work and give those who are working an even shot at keeping up with price increases?

• (1115)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to note, as the Hon. Member has, that the inflation rate has continued to decline. In effect Canada is experiencing its lowest rate of inflation in six years. This is the ninth consecutive month during which the inflation rate has moderated, so we are looking forward to a year in which the inflation rate in Canada will be still lower than what we have known in the past. Certainly the outlook for the cost of living in 1983 looks very encouraging today.

Obviously the unemployment and disposable income problems that the Hon. Member has raised are still very serious, and will remain serious for a while. I have indicated that the Government has already taken a number of measures in the statement I made last October, and I am considering additional measures in my budget. But in the meantime the best way of helping to increase the disposable income of Canadians would be to very quickly pass the income tax amendments, which would ensure that we could shift $6 billion worth of refunds to Canadians. Canadians are waiting for that money, and will be very happy to spend it.

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, the rate of inflation may be the lowest in six years, but the unemployment rate is the highest in 50 years. The underlying reasons for the moderation of the inflation rate are the plants which have closed, the people who are unemployed, the people who had to take salary cuts last year, and the people who had to take part-time work. If the Minister is so anxious to take credit for the moderation in the inflation rate, when is he going to accept responsibility for the two million unemployed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that a number of factors indeed have played a part in the reduction of the inflation rate. Government measures which have been taken have helped in that direction. I have also indicated to the hon. lady that I have announced a number of measures, including over $2 billion worth of direct employment funds, in order to try to alleviate the very serious unemployment problem we are facing. The hon. lady also knows that our competitors in other industrialized countries are experiencing a similar problem at the present time. As I indicated to her, let us pass the income tax amendments quickly, and that will ensure that Canadians receive $6 billion. That would be quite a significant stimulus to the economy in the next few months.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF EXCISE TAX AFFECTING AGRICULTURE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, if the Minister of Finance is honest he will recognize the reason the consumer price index is lower than it has been for some time is simply because of the fact that it has been done on the backs of agricultural producers. At the present time grain is selling in Canada at a dollar a bushel less than the cost of production, and the loss in hothouse products is running at about $7,000 an acre. All of these losses could be alleviated if the federal Government would remove the federal excise tax. That is my question to the Minister. Will he take away that tax which is creating this loss to agricultural producers in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I assume my hon. colleague is referring to the excise tax on oil products. I can inform him that this tax is already refundable to farmers in Canada and has been for some years. Farmers across Canada have benefited from this provision for some time. I may say that farmers in the Prairie Provinces in particular have been benefiting very substantially. Earlier this week, I gave the House the figures for these refunds, according to province. I think that in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, average refunds amounted to between three and four million dollars per year for the farmers concerned. Therefore, the excise tax is already refundable.

• (1120)

FERTILIZER TAX

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance is either misleading the House or does not understand the situation. Ninety dollars per ton on fertilizer, which is approximately one-third of the cost, is the result of the federal excise tax. If the Government would relieve the agricultural producers of that tax, then they could at least break even. At the present time they are losing money. What is the Minister of Finance going to do about it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it was interesting to hear the Progressive Conservatives who all want to cut taxes while at the same time complaining about the extent of the deficit. Not that I am very surprised at hearing Progressive Conservatives speak out of both sides of their mouths, but I do think they should co-ordinate their strategy in this respect.

The Hon. Member is aware that the Government levies taxes on all Canadians in order to finance Government programs that assist all Canadians. I think the Hon. Member is aware of the very substantial contributions made by the Canadian Government to agriculture, for the benefit of farmers in this country. If he looked at the figures, he would realize that the programs established by the Canadian Government have been very beneficial to farmers in this country, and I would ask him to look at the balance between the debit and credit side in this respect. He will see that the Government of Canada is giving very substantial assistance to farmers across Canada as it has done for years and will continue to do.

[English]

PETROLEUM COMPENSATION CHARGE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance and refers to today's Statistics Canada figures. The good news is that the inflation rate is down. The bad news is that prices are up. A big component of that is Government administered prices, especially in the field of energy. Given that the gasoline price wars are over and that an increase in the price of oil coming through at the pumps on March 1 will probably show an even more significant month-to-month increase in the rise of inflation in March over February, can the Minister assure us that he will remove the petroleum compensation charge and give consumers a break at the gas pumps?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, under the agreement that we have with the Government of Alberta, the petroleum compensation charge is the amount that is necessary to cover the price of our imports compared to the lower price that we charge Canadians for oil in this country. That amount is required in order to finance the lower price of oil that is charged to Canadians. Under the agreement with Alberta we are not supposed to run a surplus on that account. The tax will be only the amount that is required to pay for the difference between the Canadian price and the international price. That tax has been provided for under the agreement with Alberta. If for any reason that tax were to generate a surplus, obviously there would be a reduction in that amount.

As long as the Canadian price for oil is lower than the international price, obviously there will be the necessity to pay for that compensation, and the petroleum compensation charge is raised for that purpose. As well, it helps Canadians to buy that oil at a lower price than the international price.

THE ECONOMY

FEDERAL RESTRAINT PROGRAM—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN FIRST MINISTERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister on the very important subject of inflation. Did the Prime Minister discuss the long-term outlook for inflation with the Premiers when he met them this week? Given that if there is a recovery coming, it is going to be slow and steady but it has to be consumer-led recovery and that as people begin to feel better about inflation they may feel so good about it that they may slip back into the inflation soup again, did the Prime Minister discuss with the Premiers the termination date for the six and five program, or a more long-term possibility of price restraint?

• (1125)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We discussed the subject, Madam Speaker, but from the point of view of the particular question the Hon. Member is asking there was no discussion of what happens after the six and five federally. I made it quite clear that our six and five had been applied, that the legislation had been passed, and that in fact we were down below six if we looked on an annualized basis at what happened since July 1 last year. We have been successful to that extent.

The concern we all expressed—I would think every Premier and myself—was that inflation could return if Canadians do not understand the danger of assuming that inflationary psychology is gone forever in Canada. It is not. In that context I reminded the Premiers that our settlements within federal areas of jurisdiction were down at 8 per cent for 1982, that the private sector settlements were at 10.2 per cent for 1982, that provincial sector settlements were at 11 point something per cent, and that the municipal sector was almost 13 per cent. In other words, the federal Government had contributed more to bringing inflation down than the Provinces, the private sector, or the municipalities. For that reason I made it quite clear that it was not up to us to try to look at any measure beyond the six and five; that it was up to them to try to apply the six and five in their areas of jurisdiction.

BANKS AND BANKING

RATE OF TAX APPLIED TO CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is the time of year when Canadians have either filed their tax forms or are in the process of filling them out and questioning the whole matter of tax fairness. In response to the Hon. Member for Red Deer, the Minister of Finance said that all Canadians had taxes to pay. In the last few days we have just found out that the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Montreal combined made profits in 1982 of $569 million and did not pay a single penny in income tax, yet obtained tax credits for this year to the tune of nearly $50 million.

If we consider that the big five paid an effective tax rate of 8 per cent, which is the same as a Canadian earning $7,500 per year, how long does the Minister of Finance plan to allow this unfair tax system to continue? Large profitable corporations do not pay a single cent in income tax, whereas Canadians on an individual basis, most of whom have their tax deducted at source, continue to pay obviously an unfair percentage.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that this is not a new issue. Actually, it is very easy to take a company's figures for one year and claim these are profits on which no tax has been paid. However, what we must realize is that alongside profits, there are also expenses which are deductible. For instance, investments have been made that are eligible for capital cost allowance and tax credits.

We are trying to create an environment in which the private sector will continue to invest and do so even more actively than it has in the past. These investments create jobs for Canadians, and if we want to succeed in bringing down inflation in this country, the private sector must be able to invest actively and thus stimulate the Canadian economy. In my view, the fact that there are profits is not in itself an indication that there is a kind of free-for-all going on in the private sector, within the Canadian economy. What we must realize is that these profits are being used for investments in Canada and for creating jobs.

If my hon. colleague believes, according to the socialist gospel, that by eliminating profits we will stimulate the Canadian economy, I wish him good luck in the Opposition, because that is where he is going to stay as the third party for quite some time.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, that is a terrible reaction, quite frankly, when we consider they are trying to argue that it is quite legitimate for the banks to pay no tax at all and, in other words, look at that sector for stimulus, while the average working Canadian who is expecting to consume these days is unable to do so. I think it was a very inappropriate response.

• (1130)

LOBBY AGAINST BILL C-653

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): The Minister will have noticed the hallways of Parliament are blue-grey now that the bankers' lobby has brought out its biggest guns in an effort to shoot down Bill C-653. I notice in this morning's The Globe and Mail that the banks have their agricultural lackeys, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, on their side in terms of mobilizing opposition to Bill C-653.

Because of the incredible banking lobby which has been launched in the last two days, is the Government reconsidering pursuing Bill C-653 in its present form, or is the Government backing off because of this incredible lobby?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I notice the main person who is dressed in blue and grey today is the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I can tell the Hon. Member that the Government has encouraged the passage of the Bill in question. It has had second reading and has been referred to a Committee. The Committee will of course, want to examine this Bill and reach its own conclusions. It is a Private Member's Bill, and I am happy to see that it is a Liberal Member who is sponsoring and pushing the Bill very aggressively. I congratulate the Hon. Member and Members of the Liberal caucus for their persistence in that regard.

Mr. Nielsen: They were dragged, kicking and screaming.

BANK'S TREATMENT OF MANITOBA FAMILY FARM

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question also relates to the Royal Bank, and it is directed to the Prime Minister. Last October in his mini series on television, the Prime Minister asked the banks to reconsider their policy on foreclosure. To quote the Prime Minister, he said, "Take a chance on a Canadian." The Royal Bank must have taken the Prime Minister's advice to heart. The Royal Bank did not foreclose on the DeMings' family farm in Manitoba. The bank repossessed all their farm machinery. That did not work. The DeMings stayed on their farm. Last month the Royal Bank sent a letter to the DeMings asking them to transfer their farm voluntarily to the Royal Bank to avoid messy foreclosure proceedings. That did not work, the DeMings stayed. So this month the Royal Bank has foreclosed on the DeMings family.

Will the Prime Minister have his officials talk to officials at the Royal Bank and consider some of the many options the people in that area have suggested in order to keep those farmers in their homes?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I shall certainly take note of the specific case mentioned by the Hon. Member and bring it to the attention of the Inspector General of Banks, who, I am sure, will want to pursue the matter with the bank in question. However, I may remind the Hon. Member that the Royal Bank has announced a program aimed at allowing farmers to remain on their farms even if they are unable to meet their payments. Furthermore, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that spokesmen for the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have stated that the measure taken by the Royal Bank is a positive one in the present economic situation.

TRANSPORT

TRUCKING FIRMS' APPLICATIONS FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Last summer the trucking industry was led to believe, as a result of the Maislin bail-out, that other trucking firms could apply for special assistance and receive that special assistance from the federal Government. Have any requests been granted? When will the Minister's office deal with the large number of requests from the trucking industry that we understand are in his office, and so end the uncertainty within the industry respecting further loans and assistance?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asked a similar question yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: No, I didn't.

Mr. Lumley: My predecessor, after he announced assistance to the Maislin Corporation, indicated that we would take a very serious look at expanding the guidelines to include other industries in the service sector. While officials were looking at these possible changes, the Department was inundated with applications from the manufacturing and processing sector. As funds were limited at that time we made the decision not to proceed with service sector applications. Consequently, we are not looking at other applications of a similar nature.

An Hon. Member: This is really unreal.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I did not ask any questions yesterday about criteria. Yesterday, the Minister made accounting history with his terminology of shareholders assistance.

MAISLIN INDUSTRIES—DELAY IN APPOINTMENT OF GOVERNMENT-NOMINATED DIRECTOR

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I have a further question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Yesterday he told the House the only condition of the loan agreement with Maislin that had not been met was for the federal Government to appoint a director, a watchdog for taxpayers. Can the Minister explain to the House why, in view of the $34 million exposure Canadian taxpayers have, it has taken the Government over seven months to appoint this particular individual? Will it perhaps be a short-term appointment?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, being a chartered accountant, when a director sits on a board, that director under the Corporations Act is responsible to the shareholders of the company, of which we are only one, through Government guarantees. We have made attempts to find somebody knowledgeable in the transportation sector who obviously would have no potential conflict, and to this point in time we have not been able to find a suitable candidate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

QUERY RESPECTING NUMBER OF TRUCKING FIRMS RECEIVING ASSISTANCE

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? Are we to assume, therefore, that the only Canadian trucking company to be the beneficiary of government largesse is Maislin? Despite the fact that many other trucking companies, based on the suggestion by the minister's predecessor, have applied and would qualify under a particular program and its guidelines, are we now to assume that the only trucking company in Canada to benefit under this bail-out will be Maislin Trucking?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What a beautiful friendship.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I want to remind hon. colleagues that one of the reasons we had many trucking companies applying for assistance was as a result of action taken by the U.S. Government with respect to permits for the U.S. market. As a result of the very competent work accomplished by my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, in negotiations with the U.S. Trade Secretary, that problem was rectified during the sixty-day limit, and consequently many of the trucking companies did not need the assistance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: You are off your tree. That has nothing to do with the question.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Perth. Does he have one supplementary or two?

Mr. Jarvis: One, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I just want to remind Hon. Members that when they are recognized, because they rise rapidly and say they have a question supplementary to whatever is going on, they need not expect to ask two.

Some Hon. Members: Why not?

Mr. Jarvis: I will take three or four supplementary questions if you are in the mood, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—ELIGIBILITY OF TRUCKING COMPANIES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, again I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The promise to the trucking industry was on the basis of a question put by the Minister's colleague, the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi, at which time the Minister's predecessor said he was looking at the Enterprise Development Program for other truckers. I want to be very clear about this. Do any truckers in Canada, except Maislin, qualify under the Enterprise Development Program or any other program for government largesse, or has Maislin got an exclusive monopoly on these bail-out funds?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I indicated, the Enterprise Development Program at the present time, as well as six months ago, only applies to the manufacturing and processing sectors. Those guidelines have not changed.

Oral Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFITS PAYABLE TO SEASONAL FARM WORKERS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On January 1, 1983, we finally got the discriminatory section of the UI regulations removed from the Unemployment Insurance Act. We on this side of the House applaud this move because there are over 100,000 seasonal farm workers in Canada, many of whom are immigrants and do not speak English very well. They do back-breaking, arduous, seasonal, and sometimes extremely dangerous work. I think it was an injustice that Section 16 was there in the first place which either denied these people access to unemployment insurance benefits or forced them, often against their will, into the arms of labour contractors.

Because of some farm lobby, we hear that the Minister is drafting a new set of regulations. We are concerned about this. Will the Minister acknowledge that this is a serious matter by guaranteeing to this House that there will be no change in the current regulations, which are fair to everyone, including seasonal workers, until at least representatives of those farm workers have met with the Minister?

• (1140)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the NDP caucus has now recognized the problems facing the agricultural workers that this Government recognized almost a year ago when it changed the regulations.

I do want to give the assurance to the Hon. Member that what we are concerned about in discussing amendments is the paperwork and administration that have been encountered as a result of the change of those regulations, and that all we are simply doing is having discussions and negotiations that would allow us to reduce any extra paperwork that would be required. The basic intent, purpose, and objective of limiting Section 16 will be maintained.

Mr. Rose: I put that question forward in all seriousness. I resent a sleezebag reply like that.

REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS NOT BE CHANGED WITHOUT CONSULTATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, when I raised this issue in the House a year ago, the Minister did not even know what we were talking about. Then he gets up and makes a political type of crass remark like that. I want him to assure the House that he will not make any move whatsoever without first coming back to the House to discuss it, and to discuss it with those people who are affected as well. What we now hear will happen is that he will put the same kind of regulations on the backs of these people and take away their rights and opportunity for a decent kind of unemployment insurance protection, and put them in the same category as circus workers.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should not be quite so defensive about his position.

Mr. Young: Answer the question.

Mr. Axworthy: There were a number of representations made by many people, particularly Members of this caucus, concerning the plight of agricultural workers. It was this Government that made the change to extend the privileges of full coverage of unemployment insurance to that group.

I would remind the Members of the New Democratic Party who are bellowing in the corner that we were the ones who made the decision to make the change in the first place, and the kind of commitment which we made will be maintained.

We also believe that we have a responsibility to ensure that it works with some efficiency and with some productive ability of the farmers to administer the program. Those are the kinds of discussions that we are providing for all groups because we do have discussions before decisions.

LABOUR RELATIONS

APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR IN EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS DISPUTE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. It concerns the unfortunate work stoppage and strike between EPA and its pilots which is affecting all of Atlantic Canada and other parts of the country.

Does the Minister appreciate that in yesterday's appointment of a mediator he is appointing a mediator who, in effect, acted for CALPA in the last strike situation against EPA in 1980? Does he consider that this practice of appointing a mediator who represented one of the parties in the previous labour problem will ensure the necessary good faith of the parties to settle this matter now, and which should be settled now?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a mediator who was appointed by Labour Canada a week ago. He is the Chairman of the Newfoundland Labour Relations Board. He is a highly respected mediator who is knowledgeable in labour matters.

He has indicated to me in a cable that the participation in the previous labour matter was that of a member of his law firm. The credentials of Mr. Easton are the highest and are respected by the employers in the Newfoundland community. He had a preliminary meeting yesterday with both parties. We hope that he will be able to conclude his assignment successfully.

Mr. Nowlan: I am not casting any aspersions upon the integrity, character, or competency of the gentleman in question, Mr. Easton.

POSSIBLE REACTION OF COMPANY

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question concerned the principle of having a person appointed, no matter how competent, whose law firm as well as himself acted for CALPA, the pilots, against the very company in question today during the last labour problem in 1980.

Does the Minister really expect, while the recognition of his competence by the employees is obvious, that the employers will be able to come to that mediation with the necessary good faith that is fundamental to resolving this issue?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to the firm to which the mediator belongs. He is not referring to the mediator himself. As I said, the mediator himself has the highest credentials in labour relations in the industrial community. I would urge the Hon. Member to give Mr. Easton a chance to conclude his assignment.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—IMPOSITION OF SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the status of the conflict of interest guidelines which he established in 1980. The Prime Minister admitted that he has some concern about the effectiveness of the existing guidelines, and his Deputy Prime Minister said that the prohibitions are not enforceable. His Deputy also said that the final sanction rests with the Prime Minister.

Can the Prime Minister tell us in clear terms what sanctions he would impose upon a Cabinet colleague or Government official who violated a prohibition under the current guidelines? I remind him that he created these guidelines and that surely he has some obligation to explain them to us and the Canadian public.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it is the privilege of the Prime Minister to give certain guidelines to his Ministers. He is the one who can decide what sanctions to take when those guidelines are not implemented. It can be done in various ways in discussions with the Ministers.

As far as former Ministers are concerned, they are, of course, not within the reach of the Prime Minister. I doubt, if he attempted to reach them, whether he would be allowed to do so within the Canadian Bill of Rights.

ROLE OF FORMER OFFICIAL IN IMMIGRATION CASE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, let me put a case to the Prime Minister. Under the existing guidelines a Cabinet Minister must avoid any suspicion of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment respecting former public officials.

The Toronto Globe and Mail reported that James Coutts, who held the important office of Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister, regularly calls Cabinet Ministers, and received help from the Minister of Employment and Immigration in a specific immigration case. Surely the Prime Minister has seen this report and recognizes that it is a clear violation of several provisions of the conflict of interest guidelines. What does the Prime Minister intend to do? He knows that there is no court of public opinion to which he can refer Mr. Coutts and his Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would think that it is the duty of the Minister of Employment and Immigration to assist on any immigration case, no matter who refers the case to him. I would think that a referral from a former Minister or former adviser is just as valid as a referral from a member of the Opposition.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE—STATEMENT BY FORMER MINISTER IN APRIL, 1982

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Last month, when the Minister was absent, there was considerable debate in the House on whether he had misled the House and committee concerning an agreement to test the Cruise missile. He had said on April 29, 1982, that the request "has been accepted by the Canadian Cabinet." The current Secretary of State for External Affairs denied this on February 14, this year. As reported at page 22852 of Hansard on February 15, the Prime Minister said, in answer to a question from the Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam:

> If she believes MacGuigan, we will wait until he enters the House and the Hon. Member can ask him her question.

The Hon. Minister is now in the House. Did he or did he not mislead the House on this matter on April 29, 1982?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, due to the restrictions about answering questions related to my former portfolio, I think I should answer that question in this fashion: in my previous portfolio and in this one, I have always openly and forthrightly stated the policies of the Government exactly as I understood them. On one or two occasions when I found that I made an erroneous statement about government action or policy, as in one exchange with the Leader of the Opposition, I came into the House at the first opportunity to correct that.

Mr. Beatty: Translation please.

STATEMENTS ON CABINET DECISION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I would like to quote the Prime Minister when he was speaking on this matter. He said, as reported at page 22890 of Hansard:

> In that sense whether the former Secretary of State for External Affairs used exactly the right words or not, I am not prepared to say. I am anxious to hear his own explanation.

Having heard it, we are just as much in the dark as ever. Therefore my supplementary question is to the Prime Minister. On February 15 he said, as reported at page 22851 of Hansard:

> There has been no agreement to test the Cruise.

• (1150)

The Minister of Justice said on April 29, 1982, and I quote:

> —President Carter requested . . . that we allow . . . the Cruise missile system, to be tested in Canada. It is the Carter request, which . . . has been accepted by the Canadian cabinet.

I wonder if the Prime Minister would tell us which of these contradictory statements we should believe?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, things developed as I had said in the House. When the Minister returned I asked him about the quotes which had been put to me by a Member of one of the Opposition Parties. He referred me to the pages in Hansard where this matter was discussed by him. The Hon. Member will recall I had to deal with quotations just given verbally, in the same way as one has been given just now by the Hon. Member opposite. Therefore I was answering on the basis of these selective quotes, but having read the whole statement I am satisfied that the Minister was stating government policy and that government policy had been to consider testing the Cruise but that the actual decisions as they were eventually recorded in cabinet were to authorize the negotiation of an umbrella agreement under which the Cruise could or could not be tested, but that would be the subject of a different decision at a different time. I am satisfied, if the Hon. Member reads the entire statement of the Minister, that that is what he was saying.

TRADE

EXPORT RESTRICTIONS ON BRANCH PLANTS—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of International Trade. Last week I asked questions in the House about export restrictions on foreign-owned branch plants in Canada, and the Minister said he would be very happy to investigate some specific examples. Since then we have placed some classified ads and done some research, and this morning I have with me a licence agreement between a head office in the United States and a Canadian plant that was signed in the middle of 1982. In Section 3 of this particular agreement it says, and I paraphrase, that plant cannot export without the specific consent in writing of the parent company.

In light of that, and in light of the request I also made last week, that the Minister make public several documents that talk about limitations on branch plants in Canada, I wonder if he can explain to the House why he is stonewalling in releasing those documents? Why will he not release those documents to me? What is the Government trying to hide? It released some of those documents to a professor, but it will not release them to the House of Commons. Why?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville for a question on an important subject. I want to tell him that I do not intend to stonewall him; that is not my style. I intend to release those 20 year old documents to the Hon. Member. They were not released to a professor. A professor was given the opportunity to study them where they were but not to take them away, but I will release them to the Hon. Member and to anyone else who wants them.

I want to say that those studies showed that in the sixties there were practices by some American subsidiaries of not allowing exports from their branch plants in Canada.

While it is hard to tie down cause and effect, I suggest to the Hon. Member that those studies undertaken by the Government of that day may well have contributed very substantially to the development of FIRA. The Hon. Member will be aware that one of the criteria that FIRA looks at in allowing American investment in this country is the willingness of the new undertaking to participate fully in export markets. It also led to the establishment of such things as PEMD and the development of the Export Development Corporation and other facilities that have made Canada in the intervening years one of the great exporting countries of the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROLE OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT IN PROHIBITING EXPORTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, the Minister asked for examples. I have an example here of a licence agreement in 1982. I realize we are not the MacDonald Commission and we cannot pay our researchers $800 a day, but we do have examples that we are going to give to the Minister right after Question Period.

In this particular case there is a clause on the restriction of trade that says shipments may be prohibited by the United States Government. It says it is understood that the head office power to give consent to such sales is limited by the United States Government and in some cases the head office will be forbidden to give such consent. This is a 1982 agreement between a head office in the United States and a Canadian firm.

Madam Speaker, I thought this was a sovereign nation, a sovereign country. Would the Minister not agree that this is an attack on sovereignty and on our nationhood? Can he explain, if in 1980 the Government across the way campaigned to strengthen FIRA to prevent this type of situation, and it was good enough in 1980, why is it not good enough in 1983?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I will not reach conclusions on something that is quoted possibly out of context by the Hon. Member. I think he is contributing in a very solid and constructive way to the parliamentary process by bringing this information to my attention. I want to assure him that any examples he gives us, during or after the Question Period, I will investigate most thoroughly.

ECONOMIC SUMMIT

FORTHCOMING MEETING IN WILLIAMSBURG, U.S.A.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, if he has completed obtaining explanations from his Minister of Justice.

Is there to be a follow up of the Montebello Summit and, if so, when, where, and will the same Heads of State be participating as participated at Montebello?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker. There was a follow up, as the Hon. Member knows, in Versailles last June, and there will be a second follow up which will take place in Williamsburg in the last days of May. I think it is May 28 and May 29, but I would have to check the exact dates. I believe it is the last weekend in May of this year.

Mr. Nielsen: Heads of State?

Mr. Trudeau: Heads of State and a few Heads of Government.

Mr. Nielsen: The Prime Minister might make it to the end of May.

FORMULATION OF AGENDA

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the views of Secretary Shultz, as I understand them, will be carried out and that the personal viewpoints of the Heads of State who will be attending will be requested for the purposes of framing an agenda? If that is the case, no doubt Canada is in the process of preparing such an agenda. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to request the views of the Opposition here with respect to matters to be included on that agenda?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the dates of the Summit were of course set before the dates of the Tory Convention, but I understand that there was some relief when the other members of the Summit realized that I would certainly be here until the beginning of June.

As to the more serious part of the question, the agendas are being discussed these very days by the personal representatives of the various summiteers who have been meeting in San Diego, after having met in various—

Mr. Beatty: That is similar to Mouseketeers.

Mr. Trudeau: —the Musketeers? Well, if we want to get knowledgable about it, those representatives are called sherpas, a sherpa being a person who leads a person to the summit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: That is much more appropriate than Musketeer, or summiteer or whatever.

The agenda is being prepared. It is not in the hands of any one country, but naturally the host country is the decisive element in it. I would be happy to transfer to my sherpa for their next meeting any suggestions made by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition or members of his Party for adding to or subtracting from the agenda.

TRADE

LOW PRICE OF IMPORTED VEGETABLES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the potato growers in the Fraser Valley dropped the price of potatoes by $40 a ton to meet Washington competition. Three hours later the United States dropped their price by $5 or maybe $10 a ton. The price of B.C. onions has been dropped by $5 a hundredweight and they are selling below the cost of production.

It may be that the cost of living has gone down, but, if it has, it has gone down because the U.S. product can be dumped on the Canadian market below the cost of Canadian production.

The Minister refuses to put on a surtax in order to protect the Canadian farmer. Is it his intention that the Canadian farmer go out of business and that the Canadian consumer be abandoned to the corporate interests of the United States?

• (1200)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, of course that is not the intention of the Government. The intention of the Government is to provide whatever assistance the Minister of Agriculture, for example, thinks is appropriate to help that sector of the agricultural economy.

Second, in looking at that problem and that particular area of the agriculture sector and the relationship with the producers on both sides of the Canada-United States border, the Government of Canada wants to ensure that the relationship is one that is conducted in accordance with international conventions and rules. There is a remedy for any complaints that the producers may have. There is a procedure and an investigation which can be followed under the due process under those conventions.

We would be happy to have representations. We would follow the normal course in seeing whether any undue advantage was taken by the procedures in the United States.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-653 AND BILL C-43

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Government House Leader. On Wednesday last the House agreed to pass Bill C-653 and send it to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. It has become apparent, at least to me, that there are some problems in getting that Bill through. The Steering Committee of the Agriculture Committee has not yet met and will not meet until Tuesday next. The Bill is required to be dealt with in all stages here, go through the Senate and receive Royal Assent before we leave if we are to fulfil the obligation we have made to the farming community. Could the Government House Leader and the House Leader of the Official Opposition make it clear that it is the wish of the House of Commons that Bill C-653 be dealt with expeditiously, reported back as quickly as possible, at the very least in time for it to be dealt with here and to go through the various other stages necessary to make it law?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we have agreed to send the Bill to Committee. It is the intention of the Government to see that this Bill is proceeded with expeditiously, but we do not want to meddle with the business of the Committee. The committees are master of their own procedure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: I understand there are some Tory Members on the Committee. The minute the Bill is reported by the Committee, I can assure the Hon. Member that it will be considered very seriously. Yes, we want this Bill to be considered very seriously, efficiently and as early as possible.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, there are two additional matters I would raise. If it is apparent that the Committee to which the Bill is referred is not prepared to deal with it in time to allow it to pass through the House, the Senate and receive Royal Assent before we leave a week from next Wednesday, will the Government House Leader ask that that Bill be brought back and referred to another committee that has the time and the will to deal with it properly?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as I have just indicated, we have never meddled with committee business. We do not intend to start now.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board is in the House. As he knows, this House and the other place have approved Bill C-43 respecting freedom of information and privacy. He has indicated to the House that he intended to proclaim the Bill on April 1, 1983. This does bear on business because, as the hon. gentleman knows, this House will have to take a step in terms of the appointment of commissioners. I would ask the hon. gentleman if it is the intention of the Government still to proclaim that Bill on April 1.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I discussed this with the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), and I believe it would be preferable to appoint the Information Commissioner before royal assent is given. I also discussed the appointments, and the parties indicated that substantially, they agreed with the proposals but would still like to make representations and comment on this subject. Therefore, I would like to give the House the assurance that we shall proceed with the joint resolutions as our last item before the session is prorogued. As soon as the appointments are made, I believe the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) would prefer to delay royal assent for thirty days until the Information Commissioner has had a chance to become acquainted with his new duties before he is to implement the legislation in question. The situation is therefore that first of all, we must appoint an Information Commissioner. When? At the end of this session. Second, when will this session end? The answer is up to the Opposition. Third, when will the legislation take effect? As things stand now, it will probably be thirty days after the appointments are made.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I guess that the decision as to when the session ends is in the hands of all of us, including the Government House Leader.

I have another question that relates to the Business of the House. One of the issues is the fees to be charged on applications, for duplication, for searches and all other things that are necessary with respect to the matter. Between now and the time when that Act is proclaimed into force, is it the intention of the Government to table in the House of Commons a statement, by Order in Council or otherwise, of fees that will apply in each particular case? Are we now at that stage? Also, will there be standard fees throughout the Government, or will those fees vary from Department to Department?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, we are now working on the very issue that the Hon. Member has raised. We have not completed our consideration of it. I have been working with a view to being ready to proclaim the Act on April 1, but for the reasons the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) mentioned, it now seems sensible to wait for 30 days after the two commissioners are appointed. I will strive to get a decision on the schedule of fees so that I can make the information available before or at the time the Act is proclaimed.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Thank you.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have one final point with regard to Bill C-653. I do not know whether I am misreading or misunderstanding what the mood is, but I believe I heard the Government House Leader say it is the hope of the Government that we will have dealt with the Bill in all stages and it will become law prior to a week this coming Wednesday. In the interest of having this matter dealt with as expeditiously as possible, will the Opposition House Leader tell us what his Party's view is, since I get the sense that there may be some problems?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I am perfectly free to meet with the NDP House Leader and the Government House Leader at any time to discuss this matter, but I do not think we should do it on the floor of the House.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ANDRE—PROVISIONS IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATE (C) 1982-83

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order that is becoming kind of habitual. It has to do with the Estimates and whether in fact the Estimates are in order. As you are well aware, Madam Speaker, the issue of Estimates and the Appropriation Act flowing from the Estimates has been the subject of many points of order going back to 1971, I guess initiated as a result of the rule changes in 1969. I will not go over all the arguments. However, I want to quote from Your Honour's decision of June 12, 1981 wherein you quoted Mr. Speaker Jerome of March 1977 when he said:

> The Government receives from Parliament the authority to act through the passage of legislation and receives the money to finance such authorized action through the passage by Parliament of an Appropriation Act. A supply item in my opinion ought not, therefore, to be used to obtain authority which is the proper subject of legislation—

Madam Speaker then went on to say:

> In other words, the Government may not by the use of an Appropriation Act obtain authority that it does not have under existing legislation.

That is very clear, very precise. The Government is not to seek authority under an Appropriation Act which it does not have under existing legislation. In view of that very clear ruling by Madam Speaker on June 12, 1981, I would refer the Chair to Vote L11c under the Fisheries and Oceans in Supplementary Estimates (C), fiscal year ending March 31, 1983. That Vote states:

● (1210)

Vote L11c—To extend the purposes of Environment Vote L30b, Appropriation Act No. 1, 1974—To increase the aggregate outstanding at any time of the amounts which may be borrowed from any bank upon the credit of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation and the amounts loaned by the Minister of Finance under the authority of section 17 of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000

The Supplementary Estimate on that is for $1. Section 17(2) of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act states this:

The aggregate outstanding at any time of

(a) the amounts borrowed by the Corporation pursuant to paragraph 7(g), and

(b) the amounts loaned by the Minister of Finance under this section, shall not exceed five million dollars.

The legislation, therefore, the Act as passed by this Parliament in 1968-69, states that the amount outstanding shall never exceed $5 million. Vote L11c of Fisheries and Oceans seeks to raise that limit to $30 million. Now, granted, the limit had been raised from $5 million previously by other Appropriation Acts illegally and improperly, the last time being 1974, which was a period prior to the Speaker having made very clear, unequivocal decisions that this type of procedure of amending legislation through Appropriation Acts must stop. There must not be any attempts to amend legislation by Appropriation Acts, and this is clearly what this Vote attempts to do. This one dollar item attempts to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act to raise the loan limit to $30 million. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that, in view of Madam Speaker's ruling of June 12, 1981, Mr. Speaker Jerome's rulings of March, 1977 and of December, 1977, it is abundantly clear that this Vote is out of order. It is simply out of order. It is not permissible to attempt to amend the legislation, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, by an Appropriation Act.

The second Vote, Mr. Speaker, which is out of order, in my view, and I believe it is pretty clear once it is explained, is Vote 10c of Industry, Trade and Commerce. That Vote is also for $1. It reads as follows:

Trade-Industrial—The grant listed in the Estimates and contributions—

The description of that grant is under the sub-title "Industry Development". It reads:

Payments under the Small Business Investment Grants Act (Funds were provided from the Treasury Board Contingencies Vote to pay for this item) 1,000,000

In other words, Mr. Speaker, what has happened is that a grant of $1 million has been paid out of a contingency fund, and here is a Supplementary Estimate for $1 to authorize spending retroactively. The House is again put in this insulting position of being asked to rubber-stamp retroactively money which has already been spent. But the real issue, Mr. Speaker, is that that grant was granted, as the Estimates say, under the Small Business Investment Grants Act, and that Act has never been passed by this Parliament. It is in the Order Paper as Government Order No. 136, which reads as follows:

Point of Order—Mr. Andre

November 23, 1982—Consideration of report stage of Bill C-136, Small Business Investment Grants Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

It is at report stage. It has never been passed by this House, by the Senate, nor has it received Royal Assent. Therefore, we have this absolutely immoral, disgusting situation where a Bill which has not been passed by the House has been used for justification to dip into contingency funds to make a grant which the Government is now coming forward to ask the authority of this House to legalize, based on legislation which has not yet been passed by the House. Talk about putting things backwards! First the Government spends the money, then it asks for authority of Parliament to spend the money, and then it passes the legislation legalizing the program upon which it spent the money. Any six-year old grade one student knows that if you are being proper and decent, you do it the other way around. You pass the law, then you requisition the money, and then you spend it. You do not spend the money, then requisition it, then pass the legislation to make the program legal.

I humbly submit, Mr. Speaker, that this should be tossed out immediately, the persons who put it in should be chastised by this House for insulting us in that fashion, and the officials who put it in should be fired.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, about halfway through the Question Period, my hon. friend sent me a note informing me that he was going to raise these points, and I thank him for doing so. I endeavoured to get some detailed explanation about these points and while I have some information, it is not in the detail which I had with me when I appeared before the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, expecting, perhaps, that the question of the $1 Votes would be raised. However, I will attempt to assist the House and the Chair by making some comments aimed at reassuring my hon. friend and the Chair that these items are consistent with the rulings of successive Speakers.

First of all, with respect to the item listed as Vote L11c on page 66 of the final Supplementary Estimates (C) with respect to the borrowing authority of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, I am informed that what we are talking about here does not involve a request to Parliament to spend moneys. It is not a budgetary item which will have to be voted on specifically by the House because it requires the expenditure of money, and in fact it involves the amendment of a previous Appropriation Act. I am informed that there are many precedents setting out the acceptability of the procedure with respect to Vote L11c, involving as it does not a request to authorize the Government to spend money, but simply to increase the level of borrowing authority. My hon. friend has already pointed out that Parliament has previously voted to increase the borrowing authority of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation from the ceiling, I believe he said on a previous occasion, of $5 million, to $20 million, and now Parliament is simply being asked to follow the same procedure which, I submit, has been found acceptable by Speakers in the past, to extend the borrowing authority to a ceiling of $30 million.

With respect to my hon. friend's second point, the request to Parliament that it adopt Vote 10c, a one dollar item to authorize payments of $1 million for the purpose of the Small Business Investment Grants Program, I am advised that this is simply a transfer of funds from one category to another. Here also the House is not being asked to authorize an additional expenditure of funds, but simply, as I have said, the transfer of funds from one Vote to another. This is the accepted procedure for doing so, a procedure which has been accepted by Speakers in the past.

• (1220)

My hon. friend expresses some concern that the Small Business Investment Grants Act has not yet been passed by the House, but I would remind him that the proposal was contained either in the economic statement of last October, or—and I think this is the correct place—it was found in the budget of last June. Certainly the House has conveyed its approval in principle at the very least of the program when it voted an expression of support for the budget last June. Also, I would like to think that my hon. friend and his colleagues support the early and prompt expenditure of funds aimed at reducing interest costs for small business in their purchase of depreciable property to expand and modernize. I would like to think that he is simply raising a technical point—and I appreciate the seriousness with which he does so—and is not opposing this very worthy program.

We all know that the disposition of business in this House does not always proceed with the timeliness that many of us would like. There are others on our side of the House who have commented on the pace of disposition of House business and expressed their view as to the reasons for that pace. We have argued that the Opposition bears some responsibility for this. While I do not think we want to reopen that debate at this point, I do not think it is unusual for Supplementary Estimates to be presented for Parliament's approval of something which is already under way.

So I would like to conclude by again thanking my hon. friend for giving me some notice of this point of order. It is a serious one which has been raised in similar circumstances in the past. I do not claim a deep expertise in these matters, although obviously I am attempting to learn as quickly as possible. But I have provided the House the explanation I was able to obtain in the short period after the Hon. Member gave me notice. I would like to think that this explanation will reassure the House and above all the Chair that these items are perfectly consistent with the rulings of the Chair on previous occasions.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, first let me say to the Hon. Minister that the reason I gave only a half hour notice is that I did not know until early this morning that in fact this would be the only day I would have the opportunity to raise this matter.

Mr. Gray: I am not complaining.

Mr. Andre: No, I recognize you were not. Normally I would have given more notice.

The Minister indicated, concerning the Vote in Industry, Trade and Commerce, that the one dollar item merely represented a transfer between spending under one category to spending under another category. I humbly submit that that in fact is not true. What has happened is that money has been spent out of a contingency fund based on legislation which has not in fact been passed by the House. I do not even know if the legislation was introduced when the money was spent.

So you have a situation where we are being asked to legalize expenditures under an Act which has not been passed by the House. This is clearly in contravention of decisions reached by Madam Speaker and her predecessor, Mr. Speaker Jerome, and indeed by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux who said that supply items are to seek appropriations to spend on programs authorized by Parliament. They have to be authorized by Parliament. The fact they have had second reading is immaterial. They are not law. There is no law for that program, and therefore the Government has no right to ask us for authority to spend on a program which is not law.

As to the question of whether it ought to be law, there has never been any question on that on our side. The legislation proceeded very quickly through all processes and was stopped on November 23, 1982, and the Government House Leader has to deal with that.

With respect to Vote L11C, under Fisheries and Oceans, the Minister indicated that it was merely the changing of an Appropriation Act which had been done in the past and therefore it is okay. I might say that Madam Speaker, on June 12, 1981, perhaps anticipated that kind of argument when she stated this:

> Finally, it seems clear that it is in order to extend the purposes of an item in an Appropriation Act by means of an item in the Estimates—

That was the Minister's argument. She then said:

> —provided that it does not amend any other legislation.

Clearly Vote L11C, under Fisheries and Oceans, amends the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, Section 17(2). So in that instance the Minister's argument that it is merely changing an Appropriation Act has been anticipated by Madam Speaker's ruling of June 12, 1981, and I humbly submit that both Votes must be found out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair thanks Hon. Members for their contributions to the point of order. The matter will be taken under advisement and Madam Speaker will certainly want to rule on it at the next sitting of the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: No. 4,168.

[Text]

ESPIONAGE OFFENCES

Question No. 4,168—Mr. MacKay:

1. In the past 30 years, how many times was the Security Service of the RCMP penetrated by foreign powers, as mentioned in the August, 1981 McDonald Report, 2-2, p. 714 and, in each case (a) what was the (i) name of the foreign power (ii) date of apprehension (iii) rank of the RCMP officer or the classification of the RCMP civilian employee (b) what action was taken against employees of the RCMP who became agents of foreign powers?

2. Since World War II, how many persons were charged with espionage offences under the Official Secrets Act, as referred to in the October, 1979 McDonald Report, 1, p. 4 seq. and in the August, 1981 McDonald Report, 2-1, p. 65 and, in each case (a) on what date were the charges laid (b) what were the names of the persons charged (c) what was the disposition of the case?

3. Were any studies commissioned by the Planning and Transitional Group concerning Canada's Security Service, established in August, 1981 and, if so, in each case (a) what were the terms of reference (b) who were the contractual parties (c) what was the amount of money involved (d) what was the deadline for completion of the study?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Justice and the Solicitor General as follows:

1. It would not be in the public interest to elaborate on information provided in the McDonald Reports, concerning this matter, other than to confirm that the Government was advised in 1977 of a case involving foreign penetration of the RCMP Security Service. At the time, the Government was advised there was insufficient evidence to prosecute any person involved either under the provisions of the Official Secrets Act or the Criminal Code of Canada. In view of recent developments concerning this case, the original determination concerning prosecution is being reconsidered by officials of the Department of Justice.

2. Since World War II, 23 persons were charged with espionage offences under the Official Secrets Act.

(a) To provide information as to the dates of charges under the Official Secrets Act would require an inordinate amount of time and manpower.

Electoral Boundaries

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSIONS' REPORTS RESPECTING NEW BRUNSWICK, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND MANITOBA

On the Order: Orders of the Day:

No. 1.

February 28, 1983—Consideration of an objection relating to the Province of New Brunswick.

No. 2.

February 28, 1983—Consideration of an objection relating to the Province of New Brunswick.

No. 3.

March 8, 1983—Consideration of an objection relating to the Province of Prince Edward Island.

No. 4.

March 9, 1983—Consideration of an objection relating to the Province of Manitoba.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Concerning consideration of those four objections to the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions, I had discussions earlier today with my counterparts in the Opposition Parties and I would like to confirm that we have agreed to the following, and I stand to be corrected if it is not exact. First, that the maximum of one hour today will be devoted to the consideration of those objections. Second, at the conclusion of that one hour of debate, if there are still some Members who would like to participate and who are not here today, we have agreed to resume that debate at a later date, which will be chosen, as usual, by Government and, as usual, after consultation with the Opposition Parties. Third, if we do not debate this matter for one hour because of a lack of speakers, the agreement we have made to resume debate at a later date will still apply.

• (1230)

I think that is the essence of the agreement, Mr. Speaker. We would not like to see the Speaker send a report to the Commissions before the debate on the objections is completed. We do not think it will be possible to complete that debate today, whether we give it one hour or less. We have therefore agreed that when the debate expires today it will be resumed at a later date.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader has outlined the essence of the agreement between the House Leaders, which is that we will move from this motion on to Government orders at the end of one hour or a lesser time if we run out of speakers due to the fact that Members on all sides have other commitments. We would not want this to be a precedent. It is being done by agreement rather than by a formal motion.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Government House Leader for advising me of the agreement reached among House Leaders and the Acting House Leader for this Party. I take his word that that is what has been agreed to and it has been confirmed by the House Leader for the Official Opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The House has heard the proposal put forward by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed and so ordered.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSIONS' REPORTS RESPECTING NEW BRUNSWICK, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND MANITOBA

The House proceeded to the consideration of objections to Reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions for The Provinces of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, as one of New Brunswick's Members of Parliament, I join my colleagues today to express objections to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for my Province.

Among the guidelines the Commissioners had to follow in New Brunswick was the maintenance of an average of 69,540 voters per constituency. I realize that this was a difficult mandate to fulfil and I feel the Commissioners have done the best job they could within that mandate. However, in the process, almost inevitably community interest has suffered for the sake of population requirements.

For example, the northern portions of the Parishes of Douglas, St. Mary's Stanley and Maugerville in my constituency would be moved to the renamed constituency of Miramichi, creating a hardship for both the residents and their Member of Parliament. Residents of Maugerville must travel southwest to Fredericton to reach Route 8, which will take them northeast to their representative's constituency office in Newcastle.

Even residents of Taxis River which is located near Route 8 and on the existing boundary between York-Sunbury and Northumberland-Miramichi, have only about 80 kilometres to travel to my constituency office in Fredericton, but twice that distance to Newcastle. I consider that a disservice has been done to these citizens to effect a modest shift in population between the two constituencies.

I also feel that the community of interest provision was violated in the proposal to shift Southampton Parish to Carleton-Charlotte. While it is located, geographically, at an equal distance from the hubs of both constituencies, communities in Southampton have had longstanding social and economic ties with the Fredericton area.

A particularly striking example in New Brunswick of the population imperative taking precedence over both geographic and community considerations, is the proposed shift of Salisbury parish, from Moncton to Westmoreland-Kent. This idea completely ignores the parish's obvious ties to the City of Moncton, and its geographic link to Fundy-Royal.

I am not in favour of the recommendation that the name of my constituency be changed from York-Sunbury to simply Fredericton. The constituency of York-Sunbury was established under the Redistribution Act of 1914 and was an excellent choice of name since it reflected the amalgamation of the former constituencies of York, Sunbury and Queen's.

Organizations in the Fredericton area, such as the York-Sunbury Historical Society, have also taken this name to reflect the rich United Empire Loyalist tradition of the region.

Fredericton is, indeed, the largest population centre in the constituency, but to drop the name York-Sunbury is to ignore the importance of dozens of small communities surrounding the capital, which were established long before Confederation.

Perhaps the most wasteful provision of the Act is the amalgam method of determining the number of seats the House of Commons will have. It starts with a base of 75 seats for Quebec, adds four for each redistribution, then follows a most complicated formula to reach the allotment for the other Provinces.

The result will be the addition of 28 new constituencies in 1984. As a share of the tremendous Ottawa and constituencies administrative and logistic support structure, it will drain more than $14 million out of the public Treasury each year. I submit that we cannot afford to increase the number of seats, nor is it necessary to do so.

In the United States, Senators and Congressmen represent about 413,000 voters each, but their local and Washington offices are manned by much larger staffs. Since each of us represents an average of only 80,000 to 85,000 constituents, with no increase, or in some cases with a relatively modest increase, of staff and other support elements, we could serve our slowly increasing population as efficiently, and far less expensively than the alternative of a larger House.

We all know how difficult it is for middle and backbench MPs to be recognized during Question Period. Imagine the scene when 310 Members are competing for the Speaker's attention. Debates on major Bills will inevitably be slower, too, in order to give every Member who wishes to speak a chance to do so. We have a backlog of legislation to consider now, but the logjam can only grow if we must allow even more participants in each debate.

I would urge the Government and all Hon. Members to consider freezing the situation as it now is and referring the matter to a Parliamentary Committee for careful and thorough study before we proceed.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate today. This is one of those strange occasions when a Member on one side of the House finds himself in almost total agreement with what has been said by a Member on the other side of the House.

As you come from New Brunswick, Mr. Speaker, you will know that my constituency is adjacent to that of the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie). It is also adjacent to the constituencies of Gloucester, Westmorland, Kent, Fundy-Royal Restigouche, Madawaska-Victoria, and Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine, as well as a couple of constituencies in Prince Edward Island. It is rather centrally located.

I concede immediately that the population of my constituency is considerably below the mean population. However, it is above the minimum population for constituencies in New Brunswick. The changes proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commission, while adding many hundreds of square miles to the territory, would increase the population from 56,362 to 57,165. That means that for about 800 people, many square miles would be added to what is already the largest constituency, geographically, in New Brunswick and, I believe, the largest constituency, geographically, in the three Maritime Provinces.

Furthermore, the basic reason given by the Commission was to supplement the population of the electoral district of Northumberland-Miramichi, but only by about 800. Originally the Commission proposed that an additional parish from Kent County, the parish of St. Louis, be added to Northumberland-Miramichi. Because of representations made to the Commission by residents of the parish of St. Louis, the proposal has been dropped. This destroys the argument that they are making additions to increase the population.

As the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury said, the proposed additions to Northumberland-Miramichi include parts of the parishes of Douglas, Stanley and St. Mary's in York County and part of the parish of Maugerville in Sunbury County. That part of the parish of Maugerville which is proposed to be added is very sparsely populated. As the Hon. Member rightly pointed out, there is no direct access from Northumberland County to Sunbury County without first going to Fredericton and Oromocto. These people would have to travel very long distances to reach the constituency office in Northumberland-Miramichi. The representative, whoever he or she might be, would have to travel very long distances to reach what is now known as the riding of York-Sunbury. It makes no sense whatsoever. There can be no rationale for that kind of cosmetic change. In fact, it makes very poor cosmetics.

As far as those parts of the parishes of Douglas, Stanley and St. Mary's in York County are concerned, there can be no argument that they are not adjacent to the constituency of Northumberland-Miramichi, but I could make many arguments that the population of those parts of parishes does not in fact have a community of interest with the Miramichi. There is some community of interest, just as there is a community of interest between Edmundston and Nackawic or between Bathurst and Buctouche or between Saint John and St. Mary's.

Mr. Mazankowski: What about Ecum Secum?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): We will deal with Ecum Secum in another debate. The fact is that because we are all New Brunswickers we have a community of interest, but the fact also is that there is no commercial or professional community of interest between those areas of York County and Northumberland County.

The orientation of the people who live in that part of York County is toward Fredericton. It is not toward the Chatham-Newcastle area, which is the commercial centre of the riding of Northumberland-Miramichi. I have discussed this privately with the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury before the debate today. We both agreed that it would be a mistake to change the boundary in the way the Commission proposed. The distances which those people would have to travel to visit the constituency office located in Newcastle are extreme in terms of New Brunswick. I agree that it does not always have to be located there, but it is the centre of the riding and that part of the riding where the largest possible number of people can telephone the riding office without being required to make long distance telephone calls. As I said, the distances these people would have to travel are extreme in terms of New Brunswick. They may not be extreme in terms of Labrador, the Northwest Territories, northern Ontario, the northern prairie Provinces or British Columbia, but we are not debating those circumstances. We are debating electoral boundary changes in New Brunswick. It seems to me that that is what the focus should be on and that is how the commissioners should have proceeded to do their job.

I do not know where they got the idea from that there is a community of interest between the areas they are proposing to add to Northumberland-Miramichi and the Miramichi area. That community of interest just does not exist. Of course there are interests in common. The ancestry of the people is a common interest. The life style of the various communities would be very common from those areas of York County to the parishes of Ludlow, Blissfield and Blackville in Northumberland County, but The Fact remains that their orientation is toward Fredericton, not toward Chatham-Newcastle.

To add that much territory to the constituency of Northumberland-Miramichi without a significant change in population makes no sense electorally, geographically, socially or commercially. Therefore, it should not be pursued. However, I agree with one suggestion of the Commission. At least, I will not protest it, that is, the name change of the constituency which I now have the honour to represent. If it is changed to Miramichi, that is fine with me. Miramichi encompasses more than Northumberland County itself. The Miramichi River system is probably the most diverse river system in New Brunswick. Of course it is famous the world over for its production of Atlantic salmon. No river in the world compares with it in that respect. Because it already has two parishes of Kent County in it, I favour the change of name if that is how it comes out in the final analysis. I am not proposing that change myself, but I will not protest it.

For those reasons, I wanted the opportunity today to protest. When the Commission held hearings, as usually happens in New Brunswick the Miramichi region was not on its list of areas in which to hold hearings. As usual, we were lumped in with either the Bathurst region or the Moncton region. We are a region unto ourselves, encompassing about a tenth of New Brunswick. It is high time that was recognized by all Government institutions at both levels.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to make one observation, that is, that the electoral boundaries commissioners did what I think most Manitobans would consider to be a reasonably good job in terms of outlining the changes to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act in the Province of Manitoba, with the major exception of the constituency of Portage-Marquette. The concern which has developed in the Province of Manitoba over the constituency of Portage-Marquette has been for two reasons. The first is the name change, which most people in the area do not feel is warranted, and the other is a boundary change. Both are not large items. Both can certainly be accommodated when the Electoral Boundaries Commission meet again to review the report. If this were done, certainly it would meet with everyone's satisfaction.

The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) has spoken at length on the subject and has expressed his concern. I would also like to do so today, basically on behalf of many people in the province of Manitoba. In suggesting that the name of Portage-Marquette be changed to Portage-Minnedosa, the Commission is ignoring a proud tradition in that part of Manitoba. To give you just a little background, Marquette was one of the original ridings in Manitoba when Manitoba entered Confederation. There were approximately four or five original constituencies, Marquette being one, Provencher being another, Lisgar being another, and there were one or two others. History goes back to the days of Sir John A. Macdonald who represented Marquette very briefly. Arthur Meighan represented the constituency of Portage, which is encompassed in the total name change of this constituency. History goes back a long period of time for that part of what is considered south central or south western Manitoba.

• (1250)

The Commission proposed to change the name of the constituency from Portage-Marquette to Portage-Minnedosa, ignoring the cultural and historical ties that bind the two names together. Instead of taking into account the very important historical factors which originated the name Portage-Marquette—and I have described probably the most important of those factors—the Commission has decided to replace the name of Portage-Marquette with the names of two large communities in the riding, that of Portage La Prairie, or Portage, and Minnedosa.

First, this name change is unacceptable as far as the constituents of that area are concerned, and it is unacceptable generally to the Province and to the people in the Province of Manitoba. If we cannot follow our historical pattern in these changes, then perhaps one should not be making the changes that are contemplated at all.

Second, the Commission changed the northern boundary of the constituency, thus ignoring the geographic factors which tie the communities of Russell, Onanole, Rossburn, Vista, Wasagaming, Binscarth to the rest of the riding. These are all farm communities. By making this change, the Commission has ignored the natural boundary created by Riding Mountain National Park, which is a federal park in western Manitoba, and the Commission has created a new boundary which excludes these communities from the areas above and below Riding Mountain National Park, which will be foreign to the people in those communities.

The Hon. Member who preceded me talked about communities of interest and their importance. I suggest this same analogy apply to the riding of Portage-Marquette. People get used to dealing and trading as a particular known area. They receive literature from their Member of Parliament, whoever the person may be. Residents of areas are used to a particular name of an area, especially when there has not been a change before or for many years.

I would suggest the Commission has to take another look at the situation and it should redraw and probably reinstate the boundary to its original position. This can be done without any great problem. In proposing to shift the present boundary south of Riding Mountain National Park, the Boundaries Commission will make it very difficult for most of the communities along what is called the Turkey Trail to get in touch with their Member of Parliament. This is an area along the foot of Riding Mountain National Park. That area has been known for years and years as Turkey Trail and the people know that part of the constituency by that name. A change would cause a fairly substantial disruption to the whole trading area and the base of that constituency.

Electoral Commission hearings were held in Portage-LaPrairie on October 26, 1982. Because Portage LaPrairie is the largest town outside of the City of Winnipeg and, until one reaches Brandon, Portage LaPrairie is over 200 miles from the area to be affected, nobody attended the hearings to make objections. It was too far away. For the hearings to be held properly, they should have been held in Shoal Lake or in either Minnedosa or Rossburn, and the Commissioners would have heard basically what I am saying now in terms of the objections to the name change.

In my opinion, the Commissioners have shown insensitivy to the circumstances peculiar to this riding. What is most important is that the people in the riding are not happy about the name and the boundary change. Their Member of Parliament is not happy. The changes will not be substantial to reinstate the boundary lines, and they should be done because this is what everybody wants. We are here to try to assist constituencies in the different areas of Canada.

In reviewing the decision concerning the constituency of Portage-Marquette, I am sure the commissioners will see that what I have been saying and what the Member of Parliament for that constituency has said, as well as what the people in the area feel and want, is to return the constituency to its original state.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There being no other Member rising at this time to contribute to the debate, in accordance with the Order passed earlier this day, this debate stands adjourned until a later date.

The Chair senses there may be a disposition to call it one o'clock. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT (NO. 4)

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND TERMINATION DATE FOR LOANS

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)) moved that Bill C-144, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (No. 4), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to table in the House Bill C-144, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. The Act is a popular and useful feature of the Government's measures to help small businessmen and small business firms who, as the House will know, can obtain loans guaranteed by the Government from private lenders at interest rates set out at 1 per cent over the prime lending rates of the chartered banks.

The Act was passed by the House in 1961 and its impact since that time has indeed been substantial. One hundred thousand loans totalling approximately $2.5 billion have been authorized under the Act. In 1982, almost 17,000 small businesses from every region of the country borrowed some $427 million under the SBLA. During the course of the last four years, almost one out of ten small businesses in Canada have borrowed under this program. It is an effective program because it encourages lenders in the private sector to make term loans available to small business with a minimum of intervention by the Government in the financial markets. The revisions to the Act have broadened the eligibility for loans, increased the ceiling, and introduced a more flexible rate structure to increase the amount and availability of loans.

The Bill that I have tabled now will provide for extension of the Small Businesses Loans Act for another two years. I would urge Hon. Members to provide for speedy passage of this measure. I know that there is a disposition on both sides of the House to help small business, and I know that Hon. Members on both sides will co-operate in the speedy passage of this Bill. This measure, together with other efforts by the Government such as the Federal Business Development Bank, is helping small businesses to weather the current economic downturn and to position themselves to take part in impending economic recovery. It is important that support be provided to small firms. This measure ensures that this will be so.

There are a number of key areas of the Act that are considered for amendment and which, from time to time, are changed. These areas generally include the size of the eligible firm, the size of a loan, the interest rate and the purpose of the loan. I have examined each of these issues with the view to determining whether amendments are warranted at this time.

The eligibility under the Act is currently limited to firms with gross annual revenues not in excess of $1.5 million. A recent study showed that some 95 per cent of all firms in Canada have annual revenues of less than $1.5 million. Based on that information, there would appear to be little reason to increase the size of the firm eligible for assistance at this time.

The maximum amount of the loan that may be outstanding to any one firm is $100,000. This figure has been considered, too, but we have found over the years that the average loan is in the area of about $26,000. I see no need for extending the upper limit at this time.

In 1978, the maximum interest rate chargeable was changed from a fixed rate to a floating rate, based on prime plus 1 per cent. As all Hon. Members know, there has been a substantial and sustained growth in the number and total dollar volume of loans guaranteed since that interest rate change was made in 1978. The new rate provides the lender with a margin of profit necessary to make loans, and it provides the borrower with loan funds at 2 to 3 per cent below the rate that would be charged on similar non-guaranteed loans.

I would now like to talk briefly about a subject that has been raised with respect to the Small Businesses Loans Act, and that is, working capital. Possibly the most attractive feature of the SBLA is the absence of red tape associated with it and the lack of unnecessary intervention of the bureaucracy in the private lending area. These activities are totally in the hands of the borrower and of the lender. We believe that any change now might upset that up-to-now smooth relationship between the two.

This passive approach to administration that we have had is possible in large part because the purposes of SBLA loans are limited to the purchase of fixed or moveable equipment, improvement or modernization of plant equipment or premises, the construction of premises, or the purchase of land.

I am sure that all Hon. Members would agree that fixed-asset loans are relatively low risk and require less monitoring than receivable or inventory loans that are more volatile by nature.

A recent study by a major financial institution showed that its working capital loans were 2.5 times more risky than its next highest risk category. The higher risk level of such loans is also borne out by the loss rate of other Government programs supporting such loans. Should the SBLA be amended to accommodate these types of loans, I believe that the passive nature of the program would be jeopardized.

In asking this House to provide for continuation of the Small Businesses Loans Act, I am also taking into account my recent request to the Small Business Consultative Committee to examine the SBLA, its impacts and the means by which it might be improved in greater detail. As some Hon. Members may be aware, the Small Business Consultative Committee is my main source of advice from the small business community. It is made up of people from all across the country from British Columbia to Newfoundland. They meet, and I meet with them, regularly and I have asked them to look particularly at a number of areas with regard to the advancement of policy for small businesses including the Small Businesses Loans Act. There are 22 members. They include small business owners, representatives of financial institutions, association executives and indeed people from every region of the country, as I have said before.

It has appointed sub-committees on tax policy, the FBDB, and the future strategic thrusts of the Government in the small business field. It has approved its own work program and elected its own chairman. It has requested briefings from officials of the Small Business Financing Review, the FBDB, the Department's priorities and the Small Businesses Loans Act. These men and women on that committee have given of their time and their experience, and I want to thank them for it at this time. They have given their time and experience to a process which must be described, I believe, as the fullest dialogue which the Government has ever established with the private sector regarding opportunities and constraints facing small businesses in Canada.

The Consultative Committee has already raised a number of concerns, which I share, which must be explored further and which are relevant to the long-term future direction of programs such as the Small Businesses Loans Act. They include the current imbalance toward debt over equity in the financing of small firms as well as the role that Government can play in providing an environment for entrepreneurship and investment in small business, irrespective of the specific programs it makes available.

The Small Businesses Loans Act is just one measure, albeit very important, by the Government to help small firms in Canada. The SBLA complements other thrusts such as the Federal Business Development Bank. The FBDB, through its many offices across Canada, offers financing to small and medium-sized firms by means of loans, loan guarantees, equity financing, or a combination of these. The bank currently has $1.8 billion in outstanding loans with 32,000 customers. Some of these loans are for working capital. In addition to its extensive lending and management services activities, FBDB has over $64 million worth of equity investments with 123 customers.

The Government has taken other steps to help small firms. One is the Small Business Investment Grant which was announced by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, last year. This $400 million program provides interest grants by the federal Government to small businesses of up to 4 per cent per annum for two years. As Hon. Members know, that is now presently before the House, too. It has gone through the committee stage, and I would make an appeal at this time that, when we are dealing with the Small Businesses Loans Act, we also give speedy consideration to the Small Business Investment Grants Act, particularly for the sake of farmers and fishermen. Sixty-two per cent of all the business under the Small Businesses Investment Grants has been aimed at farmers and fishermen. They are using it extensively, and I would urge the House to give speedy passage to this Bill because if we cannot have that legislation by the end of March farmers and fishermen particularly will be in a disadvantaged position.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Bring on the Bill.

Mr. Rompkey: This initiative is exclusive of the lower corporate tax rate available to small firms, namely the fact that the tax rate, as Hon. Members know, on the first $200,000 of income of a Canadian-controlled private corporation is 20 per cent to 21 per cent less than on that of larger firms. This rate is available as long as retained earnings do not exceed one million dollars.

All of these initiatives are an expression of the Government's commitment to small business. They are also in recognition of the contribution of independent business to the Canadian economy. The 645,000 small businesses in this country account for 42 per cent of business employment, and 25 per cent of business GNP. They have been and they are going to continue to be a significant force in creating and preserving jobs in this country. They will play a key role in meeting the employment challenge facing Canada in the next little while. They provide an important vehicle for risk-taking and innovation. They provide a counterbalance in the economy that would be otherwise dominated by large firms.

The SBLA is a program that has widespread support. It is specifically geared to the needs of small business. It is widely used in all regions of the country. It is available for almost all industrial activities, but it is most widely used by the service sector.

I want to conclude by asking my hon. colleagues once again to recognize, as I know they do, the important contribution of small business to Canadian economic life, and to support very speedily the measure that I have brought forward today.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Small business is the lifeblood of a nation.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to say how very pleased I am to enter this debate in support of Bill C-144. I am pleased to note as well that the Minister, in his opening remarks, made reference to the fact that this Bill was originally passed in 1961. I think that is significant in that there was a Conservative Government in power at that time and I think it amply demonstrates this Party's commitment to the small business sector at that time, as it is today.

I certainly want to echo the comments that the Minister has made in respect of the important role that small business plays in our country. In debating this Bill we are really in essence dealing with one of the most important and dynamic sectors in the Canadian economy. As the Minister pointed out, some 42 per cent of all private sector employment and 25 per cent of the goods and services are produced in this country by small business.

• (1420)

The other important element of small business is that in many instances it is a family-owned enterprise which has played an important historic role in the development of the Canadian economy. It is part of the Canadian dream of many to own and run their own business and to have their family involved in it. In that connection, I want to put on record the kind of feeling that we witness in a community and within an enterprise, the kind of family enterprise I am talking about.

On March 3 I received a letter from the firm located in my constituency, Geo. C. Webb and Sons (1980) Limited. I am being invited to a fiftieth anniversary celebration. I want to quote in part from the letter. It exemplifies the significance of small business in a small community and the importance of the family connection. The letter reads:

> On June 23 we are . . . to mark an anniversary that we are very proud of as 50 years ago, George C. Webb, our father, signed a contract with the Massey-Harris Co. that started us in the farm machinery business in the Vermilion district.
> Over the 50-year period many changes have taken place, we have added a fertilizer business and an automotive business. The third generation of our family has assumed positions of responsibility, hopefully assuring continuation of this business for many years to come. With all these changes, one very significant fact has always existed and that is the warm and friendly association we have enjoyed with our customers, our suppliers and our staff.

This is why they are celebrating. That really puts the issue of small business in this country in perspective. It is important that we see the small business sector as being healthy and thriving, giving the opportunity for members of the family to participate and be engaged in providing very necessary services to our country.

It is important to note that, notwithstanding the recession and the downturn in the economy that we were experiencing, the spirit of small business is alive and well. It is noted in a recent submission of the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses that some 150,000 business start-ups occurred in 1982. I know that there have been a number of failures, and we regret that very much. Some blame could be laid at the doorstep of the Government in that connection. Nonetheless, the resilience and entrepreneurial spirit is alive and well in this country. It is important that we undertake to do all we can to encourage, motivate and facilitate the development and good health of that enterprise. That can be done in many respects, not only through legislation but by developing a positive environment and attitude among all levels of Government.

I cannot help but make this point. In the campaign of 1972, the NDP campaigned on a theme of the "corporate welfare bums". Because of that campaign they in essence attacked all business, whether it was small, large, foreign or domestic. They tarred all sectors of business with the same brush. Business enterprise throughout the country is still suffering from that harsh attack. We do not need that kind of attitude and environment.

Mr. Riis: That is sleazy politics.

Mr. Mazankowski: The truth hurts, but it has to be recognized.

Mr. Riis: The truth is you do not have anything to say other than sleazy two-bit politics.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will put my business credentials up against that gentleman who is speaking from his seat any day. I will compare my credentials with him any day. I will talk about small business. The reason I mentioned the NDP is that I as a businessman was tarred and feathered with the same devastating brush they used during that election campaign. It is unfortunate for small business and for the Canadian economy.

Mr. Riis: It is unfortunate we took over the Government of Manitoba. It is unfortunate that we are going to take over the Government of B.C. next month.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member and all Hon. Members are aware that heckling, if I may use that term, is normal practice.

Mr. Riis: Some can take it, some can't.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member who has been speaking from his seat may want to consider rising in his turn and perhaps having his remarks recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is important to develop the kind of attitude and environment that is conducive toward not only the promotion, but the encouragement and, indeed, the health of the small business sector because it is the leading edge of the economy. It is efficient, innovative and flexible. It involves a high amount of risk-taking and a great deal of work. When one is engaged in this high risk and the long hours of work it involves, there has to be some reward.

It is important as well to support the kind of enterprises that are stable, such as the firm of Geo. C. Webb and Sons (1980) Ltd., which has served the community for 50 years. There are always the fly-by-nighters, but when you look at an enterprise like this, you find that it has not only provided a good standard of living and welfare for the families, but an excellent service to that community.

Small business gives individuals the opportunity to be creative, innovative, productive and to generate new wealth for the Canadian economy. This was summed up very well by Jim Gray, Executive Vice-President, Canadian Hunter Exploration Ltd., on March 4, 1982 when speaking to the Calgary Women's Canadian Club. He had this to say:

> Let me repeat, we won't mend the economic health of this nation by building megaprojects. Little companies are the sinews of a nation. They are a medicine with which we should be treating the Canadian economy today. All that is needed is that we unshackle our entrepreneurs, free creative ideas, encourage individual initiative, constrain the political bureaucrats and limit the take of the national tax gatherer.

That summarizes it very well. If we look at our number one priority today, the generation of new jobs, we clearly see the small business sector as a very promising area in which to generate those new jobs. This is confirmed by someone who started out as a small business entrepreneur and still has a tremendous amount of respect for the small business sector. Over 60 per cent of the jobs created in North America today are created by the small business sector. In fact, David Birch, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology found that approximately two-thirds of all new jobs created in North America are in firms with fewer than 50 employees. Establishments with more than 100 employees accounted for less than 20 per cent of the new jobs. In addition, the firms which created jobs are dominantly young firms. Eighty per cent of the new jobs were created by establishments less than five years old. We have the initiative there and we have the spirit. What we need now is some kind of positive climate to allow that to happen.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that in large part, the policies of this Government have tended to frustrate the efforts of small business. In some areas they have held back vital development, which has resulted in lost opportunities. I believe that rather than facilitating the development, growth and health of the small business sector, in many cases Government has tended to frustrate them. The Government has destroyed the environment in which small businesses flourish. It has overwhelmed them with an excessive paper burden and regulations. We are now faced with a tax act that, in the words of the President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, " . . . is an unmitigated mess because it is incomprehensible". Many small businesses cannot afford the luxury of accountants, tax lawyers and experts, so it is important that we develop a tax system which is comprehensible and understandable by Canadians and Canadian entrepreneurs.

The budget of the former Minister of Finance of November, 1981 included two measures which really inflicted a desperate blow to the small business sector, the reduction in the capital cost allowance and the 12.5 per cent corporate distribution tax. What small business needs is some stability, some assurance that the rules of the game are not going to change in the middle of the night. They want to be sure that they live in a certain climate, and that has not been the case. Very closely associated with that is the lack of trust in the efforts of the Government in bringing in the kinds of budgetary provisions which were contained in the budget of the former Minister of Finance.

The other problem small business has is certainly the effects of inflation, which in large part are reflected in the state of the economy and the bad management of this Government. Another very crucial issue is interest rates. The small business sector has been hurt by the fact that interest rates have escalated way out of proportion. The exchange rate has also had an impact on the welfare of the small business sector. And I emphasize that uncertainty is really a very crucial element, uncertainty created by Government legislation, by excessive regulations and by the complex, counterproductive and regressive tax system which we have.

I believe it is fair to say as well that the banks have played a role in the success or failure of the small business. I do not know whether the banks can be absolutely proud of their record in terms of dealing with the small business sector in recent times. Those of us who go home to our constituency on the weekends will know that many small businessmen and farmers are having difficulty dealing with their bankers, particularly some banks who refuse to utilize the various Government programs that have been created for that specific purpose.

Many small businessmen feel they are discriminated against by the banks by virtue of the fact that there seems to be a double standard. If you are sufficiently deep in debt with the bank you will get treated one way, and if you are at all liquid, they use the hammer. I believe the banks must re-examine their policies and ensure that they do their part in sustaining the welfare and the health of the small business community.

We must do everything we can to create a positive environment. It does not necessarily mean more Government programs. In many respects it could very well mean fewer Government programs, fewer Government regulations and less frustration. What is really important is a genuine change in attitude by Government to encourage the expansion of the small business sector.

Of course, small business is looking for favourable tax treatment. Touche Ross and Partners made a survey of 124 companies across the country which indicated that businessmen would rather have tax incentives, as being the most beneficial form of Government assistance, than grants and a whole host of other programs. I hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), when he is writing his budget, will look at some of these recommendations. I would hope he would also look at ways and means of removing the regressive elements of the tax system, simplifying the tax laws, and bringing about some reform to our regulatory framework.

These are all suggestions which have been made by the representatives of all organizations associated with small business, including the Chamber of Commerce. As I said earlier, one of the biggest problems is the matter of interest rates. I believe the Government can show leadership and demonstrate that it is responsible in that regard by holding down the deficit and cutting back wasteful and extravagant expenditures. That is clearly an area in which the Government has room to work. Tax incentives are really the key and, as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business pointed out as well in its recent submission, there are ways in which the pools of capital can be expanded through investment under the Registered Retirement Savings Program. It has been suggested that more than $2 billion is presently held in self-administered RRSPs and that 50 per cent of that could be used for the private business sector. There is also another recommendation with respect to the need to encourage the utilization of the registered stock investment plan as another area. We must also have the withdrawal of the 12.5 per cent corporate tax on the distribution of profits. There are, therefore, many things which can be done, and I would urge that the Government consider these proposals in order to help the small business sector.

It is important most of all to re-establish a climate of confidence where small businesses will have the confidence to take risks, to make long-term investments, not expecting their windfall in the next year but somewhere further on down the road. I believe that is a very, very important aspect to consider because small business, if we give them the opportunity, will be in the forefront in putting Canada ahead technologically. I believe if we consider the flexibility of small businesses by virtue of their size and their creative spirit, they are in a better position to take advantage of every opportunity. I do not believe there is any question but that small business can adapt to the technological advances, and in many cases create the kind of new technology which we are looking for and which we need. If we are to survive in the international marketplace—and Canada must export in order to survive—we are simply going to have to produce a product at competitive prices. It is going to have to be a product which is the utmost in quality, and we must have the kind of skills and marketing teams and credit facilities to ensure that we can penetrate those international markets.

The area of computer-aid design and manufacture is clearly an example where small business has heretofore excelled, and it has tremendous opportunity and potential to grow even further. I believe we should be encouraging small business to invest more in research and development. That again can be done through tax incentives, or incentives of other kinds, to increase and enhance technological innovation. I believe we will find that every dollar we invest in research and development will reap us benefits, both in terms of generation of wealth and in generation of new jobs which we in this country badly need. We are going through some very major structural changes in this country today. The manufacturing sector is declining. The service sector is on the increase. There have been suggestions that the number of people employed in the manufacturing sector in North America is going to decline very rapidly. We have to take cognizance of that fact, and I think that here again the small business sector can move in to fill that gap.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that small family enterprises have the potential to utilize the skills and talents of those working in manufacturing today who may see their jobs become redundant in the future. I believe that, given the proper climate, the small business sector can play a leading role in the development of new products and the improvement of old products. We have excelled in technological advances in the resource and farming sectors. We have gone through a major revolution in the agricultural sector. It takes a lot fewer people today to produce the same amount of food that was produced years ago. Adjustments have been made and agriculture is healthy and survives. We are very skilled in energy development and the forestry sector. However, we have a very serious challenge to cope with in the restructuring of the manufacturing sector, and I submit that small business can indeed play a leading role. But we must encourage the risk taker. We must ensure that the entrepreneur is rewarded for his risk, his hard work, initiative and creativity. If we do, we can unleash the entrepreneurial spirit in this country.

I think we must recognize that fundamental changes are occurring, Mr. Speaker. We must also recognize that it presents us with a golden opportunity, indeed a major challenge. We must accept these challenges and build for the future rather than dwell on the past. A vital component of that effort is a stable, sound and positive climate. Therefore the Government of Canada, complemented by the provincial Governments, can do a lot to ensure that a positive climate is not only brought about, but indeed sustained in order to support the vibrance, dynamism, and spirit which is out there ready to be tapped.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise this afternoon to speak to the Bill to extend the Small Businesses Loans Act. There is no question that this Bill has been put to good use over the years. It has indeed assisted many small businesses in their attempts to expand into new plants, new equipment and new ventures. On behalf of the New Democratic Party I say that we want to do everything possible to ensure swift passage of this Bill.

These days small-businessmen have very little to cheer about, considering the economic climate in Canada. The fact that the small business community lacks many of the safety nets available to the large corporate sector really puts them at a disadvantage in their efforts to acquire capital, market their products, and compete in the national and international markets. When you consider the struggle a small entrepreneur has today in competing against the large corporations and national chains, particularly in the retail sector, along with the multinationals operating in Canada, you realize that the small-businessman has a real difficult time. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, they are able to succeed in spite of the odds against them.

It is interesting to note that of the host of federal, provincial and local Government programs available to business, both large and small, 95 per cent of them cater to the large business operation and ignore the small entrepreneur. Again I think that demonstrates very clearly the reason why we in this House have to spend more time addressing the needs, concerns and challenges facing the small entrepreneur.

I listened with interest today as we were told that small business represents 645,000 enterprises in Canada. They account for 42 per cent of all business employment these days and 25 percent of Canada's Gross National Product. I want to add a few things to that list. If one examines the record, one will find that almost all of the new jobs created in Canada in the last two years have been created by the small business sector. This was the growth sector in Canada. The introduction of new ventures and new techniques to the marketplace have come by and large from the small business sector. Most of the research and development that has taken place in Canada in the last few years has been initiated by the small business sector. That sector is virtually 100 per cent Canadian owned, which means that their first and last commitment is to Canada and their community. That is something we in this House have to address more boldly and more often. We know that so much of our economy has its future decided not in the towns and cities of Canada but in places such as London, New York, Tokyo and Bonn. Those people making decisions about the future of Canada's economy are not making them in the best interests of Canadian citizens and Canada. Their responsibility and priority is to the shareholders of their own corporations in foreign lands. It is the small business sector which is committed to Canada, to their Province, their region and their community. That is the kind of commitment we ought to be encouraging more boldly and more often.

I must say that one of the advantages of the small business sector in the recovery we all hope to witness in the months ahead is that this sector is the most flexible of our economy. The small-businessman is able to dodge, weave, twist and turn to take advantages of changes in the economy and economic technology. They can take advantage of new initiatives taken by the federal and provincial Governments. These are the people who are able to move quickly in this changing and dynamic economic world.

Again I would emphasize the need for the federal Government and its provincial colleagues to give more attention to encouraging the small business sector to get it out on the frontier, to be in the vanguard of this economic change. One could go on, Mr. Speaker, and list all the problems the Government has created for the small business sector, but I believe that would be fruitless because they are well known. I want to spend my time identifying what ought to be done to assist the small business sector which is difficult to overcome, and impossible for some. I would just read into the record a short paragraph from a letter I received from a constituent, a letter typical of what we receive these days. It says:

Dear Nelson:

We are all facing a very difficult economic environment, and survival, both personally and businesswise, is foremost in the minds of those involved in the private sector of our economy. Unfortunately, one of the main players involved in the private sector, and a supposed partner to many of us, has chosen to ensure protection of its own interest at the exclusion of the interest of small and medium sized business interests, and in the long term the interests of this country. This main player I mentioned is the Canadian banking establishment.

• (1450)

If there is one element of society that causes problems for the small business sector, it is the chartered banks. When seven chartered banks in Canada represent at least 90 per cent of all banking, the result is a monopoly and an infamous double standard. They are not prepared to do the same for the small entrepreneur as they are prepared to do for corporations such as Dome, Massey, Chrysler or Maislin. They are prepared to renegotiate loans for large corporations and will fall over backwards in order to assist them, but they have demonstrated an insensitivity toward the small businessman in financial difficulty. That is hard to understand when one considers the role that small business plays in the country. The banks call their loans prematurely and then the small business entrepreneur has difficulty in getting the banks to explain why this is done so that it can be avoided in future.

The small business entrepreneur is often asked to guarantee a loan that he applies for. A recent study conducted by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business stated that the typical small business loan is guaranteed to the extent of 295 per cent. What is the risk to the banks when the typical loan is guaranteed to the extent of 295 per cent, Mr. Speaker? Hon. Members are well aware that many loans to the small business sector require to be secured to 300 per cent, 400 per cent and even as high as 500 per cent of the value of the loan.

With that kind of security it is wrong for the banks to claim that they are involved in a risky business. Perhaps there is risk in their dealings with large corporations, but they are always anxious to lend hundreds of millions of dollars to the Dome Petroleums of the world, knowing that ultimately there is no risk because the Government will come to the rescue if they get into difficulty. If difficulty does arise, then the banks turn to the small business community and start pulling loans in prematurely in order to keep up their cash flow. That is the kind of double standard to which I referred earlier.

Overlapping guarantees are often required. Corporate guarantees are often required to double up with personal guarantees or mortgage guarantees or property guarantees or security guarantees or joint and several guarantees. A loan to a small partnership may be secured 100 per cent by one partner, 100 per cent by another partner and 100 per cent by yet another. It may be secured many times over so there is no risk to the lender.

The banks are famous for passing the buck. One may discuss a problem with a junior official with a bank who says he will take it to the senior partner. That partner says he will take it to the regional director. The regional director says that he will take it to head office. Head office sends back the message that it is standard banking practice. They pass the buck so that it is difficult for the small entrepreneur ever to get an answer or identify the reason for the difficulty with the loan.

I know that the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) is concerned about small business and has been anxiously waiting for the Small Business Development Bond or the Small Business Bond to get introduced by way of a tax measure. I give him credit for good and honourable intentions. But the Canadian chartered banks refuse to co-operate with the federal Government. They refuse to offer the Small Business Bond to those small businesses that are experiencing financial difficulty. It is virtually impossible to get a Small Business Development Bond these days. Despite the best intentions of the Government, the chartered banks toss the legislation out the window because they are not interested. I suspect it betrays their true interest in the small business community.

I should like to identify a few areas which I think the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) ought to consider when drafting the next budget. The Small Business Development Bank should be restructured. It could be made more efficient and more sensitive to the needs of the small businessman. I should like to see the CASE Program strengthened and the banks providing risk and venture capital with equity options to a greater degree. The SBDB could be used as a clearinghouse for all federal programs of interest to small business, and perhaps that service could even be provided to the Provinces in which it is operating as well. The grant application process and funding procedures could be streamlined to allow the small businessman to acquire capital more quickly and regularly.

I should like to see a revision to the Bank Act that would ensure that a certain proportion of funds is set aside for loans to small businesses at acceptable and reasonably interest rates. Other countries realize the value of the small business sector and recognize that funds must be set aside so that the small entrepreneur can acquire cash for various ventures at rates lower than the going rate. This would encourage the small business sector, and the Bank Act could be revised to achieve this.

I should like the budget to include a real commitment to "buy Canada". In the United States we see a "buy America" policy in both the private and public sectors. A "buy Canada" component in the public sector and private sector would give encouragement to the small entrepreneur. It would light the fire under the small business community and present it with opportunities that it does not have at the moment. I should like the next budget to make money available for research and development in the area of the small entrepreneur. I should like to see mechanisms in the next budget to unleash the billions of dollars lying in Canadian savings accounts and make those moneys available for investment in small Canadian corporations. This would develop Canadian resources and would allow Canadians to make decisions that are in the best interests of the country and the community.

The federal Government should provide assistance for marketing new products and existing products overseas. The small producers could thus become more viable.

I should like the federal Government to encourage co-operative business ventures with a concept that would focus on financing services as well as marketing services. Co-operative services could be useful at the start-up stage of small businesses and for the first year or two. They could benefit from new and up-to-date office equipment and technology without the need to purchase these outright.

I think it is necessary for the Government to seriously consider reducing the amount of red tape that binds small business. The small businessman quickly becomes discouraged when he sees the tax forms that have to be filled. When an individual sets up business for the first time and receives a flood of forms to be filled out weekly, monthly or quarterly, it is too much for him. For the small operator it is too much, particularly in the incipient stages of an enterprise.

• (1500)

I would like to see the budget include financial incentives for small businesses to maintain and to revitalize Canada's small communities. It is important that Government initiatives encourage the maintenance of small community businesses and work against the trend we see of moving people, facilities and businesses into larger metropolitan centres. It should take steps to encourage the small-business sector we find in Canada's small villages and towns to stay in place and remain as vital organs of their communities.

I would like to see the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) bring forward a Bill soon which would recognize the fact that Canada's small business is a federal tax-collecting agency. The federal Government should find ways and means of compensating small businesses for their collection of federal sales tax from which the federal Government benefits exclusively.

Most Provinces recognize that small businesses provide a tax collection service, and the federal Government should now follow suit. I believe that many steps could be taken which would provide incentives, encouragement and support for the small-business sector. A simplification of the existing tax laws as they apply to the small-business sector would be a step in that direction. As I indicated, the removal of the red tape required of small businesses would be another step in that direction. But, most important, one gets the impression that the small-business sector of our economy is not a priority with the Government.

I am not necessarily saying that it is not, but the perception in the land is that the Government is quite prepared to invest hundreds of millions—nay, many billions—of dollars to assist large corporations. When it comes time to expend money to provide assistance even to small businesses in dire straits, to money is slow in coming. Therefore, one gets the impression that the federal Government is not particularly interested in supporting small business.

While small businesses today have little to cheer about, they should and could have a great deal to cheer about. When we consider the natural resources which abound in virtually every region of Canada in one form or another, when we consider that Canada as a nation has more energy alternatives than probably any other country in the entire world, when we consider that we are a well educated, well trained population in terms of having a populace which is able to take advantage of the newest and most exciting technologies available, and when we consider that we have capital in this country—and I want to emphasize that point—to support new business ventures that in fact would result in a full employment option for Canada becoming a reality, we realize that all we lack is the will. When we add together the natural, human and capital resources, we realize that we lack leadership and the will to succeed. Perhaps this is a small step today. By seeing the Small Businesses Loans Act extended for small businesses in Canada for another period of time and with the pending budget, let us hope and pray that the federal Government will see this as the beginning of the process of supporting, nurturing and encouraging the most vital sector of our economy, the small-business sector.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak on Bill C-144, to extend the Small Businesses Loans Act which is part of the heritage of the Diefenbaker administration. Also it is a pleasure to see the marvellous conversion on the part of the New Democratic Party to the small-business community.

I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I believe he meant every word he said with respect to small business. It is a tragedy that he cannot bring Members of his Party along with him into that policy. On the one hand they want to see small business succeed. In fact they want it to succeed so well that it stays small, because if it ever grows, they want to nationalize it and punish success. It is a mystery to me how the Hon. Member could say in one of his closing sentences that the country lacks a will to succeed. Then when the business succeeds they want to punish it, as I heard this morning during Question Period—punishing profit, which is one of the dirty words in the lexicon of the New Democratic Party. If we look over their policies from their annual conventions, we find that they have such a profound commitment to no growth, whether it is energy, profit or whatever aspect of the economy, that their entire policy is really the cruise missile of the Canadian economy; they will search out and destroy whatever they can if it gets anywhere. The question they have never answered is: If a small business does what they want it to do—succeeds, makes a profit, grows and multiplies—at what point does it become a wicked, wicked enterprise?

Mr. Riis: Do you not have anything positive to say? At least we have something positive to say. All we hear from you is doom and gloom, whine and snivel.

Mr. Friesen: That is a question they will not answer. I know the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap wants to interrupt. He is entitled to do that because he has to speak on behalf of his entire caucus, but very few of his caucus share his point of view with respect to small business. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) rightly observed this morning, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap is wearing blue and grey today. That is appropriate.

The Bill we are debating now, while it was introduced originally by the Diefenbaker Government, has changed in its purpose. Originally it was geared to helping small business expand and prosper. Now I think it is necessary to rescue small business. That is a tragedy. I recognize that part of this is because of the general economic malaise around the world and that, therefore, small business has a peculiar problem and cannot compete as well as large corporations.

The Bill we are discussing today is exceptionally important in that it provides borrowing power at 1 per cent above prime. This is an important resource for the small-business community. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap is quite right; perhaps that is the main reason the banks try to keep it a secret. They do not want to lend money at 1 per cent above prime.

While borrowing capacity is one of the problems facing the small-business community, the more excruciating problem is the cost of capitalization or of buying. A dairy farm in the Fraser Valley costs about $1 million or a sizeable, good, efficient fishing boat on the Pacific Coast costs about $1 million. When money has been invested in a farm, a boat or some other merchandising business, the business is competing not only with other farmers, other fishermen or other merchants, it is competing with the Government. The competition is not necessarily in merchandising, it is also competition with Government regulations. We multiply the risk which the small-businessman takes when he invests his $1 million, and while it is good that we can provide this 1 per cent above prime opportunity to business, there are other problems. It is a tragedy that that businessman then faces the hurdles of all of the Government regulations and all of the hoops through which the businessman has to jump.

• (1510)

The real solution for the small-businessman is not so much borrowing capacity as it is profitability, to make sure that he can get an honest and sufficient return on investment. If you cannot get a profit on what you have invested, why borrow? What is the purpose of this Bill? There is no doubt that the general malaise in the market plays a very important part in the difficulties facing the small-businessman. The real problem is that the Government itself is antagonistic toward the small-businessman.

I have a few examples to show what some business people have faced. These I have encountered in the past year. A small business in my community specializes in the installation of sun decks. The name of the company is Ensurco. A number of months ago the head of the company wrote to me regarding a refund of duty and taxes. This company specializes in sun decking, and it has faced what many other small companies have faced, a downturn in the market. This downturn in the market is particularly evident in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia and it had a devastating impact on the housing industry and the saleability of homes. This company bought inventory on the expectation that it would be called upon to do a lot of work. But houses sat empty, lots were undeveloped and the company was stuck with its inventory.

Let me read into the record what this businessman faced as a result of the Government's attitude. He wrote:

> We import vinyl sundecking materials from General Tire and Rubber Co. This particular shipment in question was found to be exceptionally baggy and almost impossible to work with. Unfortunately, because of rather large inventories already on hand, and the fact that we move our old inventory out first, it took a number of months to discover the defects. Even then, it was only that our dealers to whom we sell the product, complained it was causing them undue hardships applying the product. We immediately applied for a credit from our supplier which eventually came through to the tune of about $7,000. We assumed that once the credit came through we could apply to Canada Customs for a refund on duties. By this time well over six months had elapsed. Because of the relatively large size of the claim, our manufacturer had to have someone verify the problem, causing some additional delays. By then, we had given credits to our dealers (who had already purchased the product) for approximately 50 per cent of its value, and had arranged to sell off the remainder of the inventory for approximately the same. When we finally applied for a refund, we were told there was a 90 day limit after the original import of the goods to register a claim. If we did not do so, we were simply out of luck. While we understand that ingnorance of these rules and regulations is no defence, we still feel we have a reasonable right to expect a refund. In a telephone call to the Dominion Customs Appraiser's office a number of months ago, I was informed that there was a special section (462B) of the Customs Act which gave some discretionary powers to the Appraiser to allow a refund if the 90 day time limit has passed, so long as the two year limit is not yet up. I have pursued this with Revenue Canada, but unfortunately been unsuccessful.

The answer of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) was: "You are absolutely right; there is a special discretionary power and we will send you the regulations". About 30 pages of regulations and application forms arrived. But unfortunately, under another Section of the Act, I think Hon. Members know that if officials of National Revenue are confronted with the regulation that seems to give the businessman a way out and he might be able to get the refund, National Revenue always manages to find another regulation which countervails the original one and the Government gets to keep its money. Here is a man trying to keep his company together, struggling to keep it afloat and his enemy is not only the economy but the Government. The Government is fighting him.

I have another letter from a company called Madison Sales Ltd., Burnaby, B.C. This gentleman writes, in part:

> The remarks in M. Bussières' third paragraph indicates to me that he is blissfully unaware of the struggle businesses of any type or size have in maintaining a position in the marketplace, or meeting their obligations—particularly in such times as these. His lines reading "The annual report will provide my department with the information necessary to recommend legislative changes, develop appropriate audit programs and assist in the development of tax policy" is a classic bureaucratic summation of where they consider priorities are standing. I also note that we are "Licensees".
> I agree that we legally have to complete this form. Whether we will remains to be seen, as under the present circumstances we will be fortunate indeed if we are even in business by this time next year. The threat of imprisonment is, of course, to be expected. This is, after all, the "Land of the Free". Perhaps we should start our National Anthem with the words "Oh—Canada" instead of "O Canada."

I have yet another example. I began dealing with this issue probably nine months ago. It deals with the Canadian West Coast Publishers Limited. Here is a small company providing about nine jobs. It went into business to publish information for the Chambers of Commerce throughout the Fraser Valley. They put out a brochure to help the chambers of commerce in each locality publicize and advertise the attractiveness of that community to future business. There would be a 10 per cent excise tax on that type of work. As soon as the Department of National Revenue saw what the Department thought was a tourist information bureau, it became taxable. That 10 per cent made the difference between making it or breaking it.

I started to negotiate and mediate between that business and the Minister of National Revenue. At first there seemed to be a glimmer of hope. As I said before, there was always another clause which countervailed the original one. Soon my constituent, the businessman, realized that there were several other publishing companies doing identically the same thing he was. In fact, he tailored his masthead on the publication to suit the conditions and terms laid down by Revenue Canada. As soon as he did that, National Revenue found another reason why he did not qualify under the terms and conditions. He found several other businesses doing the same thing. But Mr. Speaker, National Revenue replied: "Sorry, you still do not qualify. What we will have to do now is to punish the others you have discovered on our behalf." That shows the antagonistic attitude of this Government toward businessmen.

I have another example. I had a businessman call me a few weeks ago. He was operating a branch company in my community. He had a young man come to him begging for work. He kept coming back and asking whether there was something he could do. The businessman scrounged around the company and said: "I think I can find some work as long as there is no additional bookkeeping overhead for me so I can justify you to head office". The businessman called National Revenue downtown. It did not matter what kind of a formula he devised for National Revenue because it never was adequate to enable him to hire this extra person without creating extra expense for himself.

I finally told him that I believed one should adopt a different approach to National Revenue. One should not call National Revenue to ask if what one wants to do is acceptable; one should call them and say: "This is what I am going to do. What is the best way of going about it?" If National Revenue is given the opportunity to say no, they will do so. That is their style.

As I said at the outset, it is probably beneficial that we are passing this legislation and providing these additional borrowing opportunities for the small business community. The necessity for this legislation becomes evident when one reads headlines such as the one in the Ottawa Citizen of March 15 which says "Bankruptcies in Canada Rising"; or the headline in the Gazette of January 18 which says "Liabilities Double in Bankruptcies"; or the headline again in the Ottawa Citizen of January 18 which says "Bankruptcies Up 33 Per Cent in 1982". We must support this legislation but it is a tragedy that the Government does not realize that the real problem facing the businessman is not so much the ability to borrow but the ability to make a profit which, in turn, rewards him and enables him to stay in business.

Therefore, while we will pass this legislation and welcome it, we realize it is not the solution to the economic problems facing Canada today.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, while we are pleased to see this Bill come before the House, it was necessary in order to continue the life of the Small Businesses Loans Act in any event.

The small business portfolio could be one of the economic recovery engines for the months ahead. To be effective, however, it must go far beyond the present limits of the Act. Most small businessmen who could utilize this Act need operating funds. They have been ravaged by high interest rates and other increases in expenses that are beyond their control. Such expenses as insurance, telephone charges, Unemployment Insurance premiums, workmen's compensation, gasoline taxes, municipal taxes and so on have all contributed to the dilemma confronting a small-businessman. Therefore, this Act should be amended further to allow funds borrowed under this Act to be used for operating expenses. When one sees the dimension of the real crisis facing the small businesman, I am sure Hon. Members would agree with that amendment.

To a minor extent, the problem they are facing is aided by the Small Business Development Bond. This instrument is only used after a business is threatened with a cut-off of operating funds from a bank. It is last ditch or dire straits legislation—to coin a current phrase—that is utilized if time permits. That time is the period before the bank closes down a business.

One needs only to look at the bankruptcies in the 1980-82 period to appreciate the crisis. In 1982 there were 10,765 business bankruptcies, 410 farm bankruptcies and 30,463 personal bankruptcies. The amount of losses through business and farm bankruptcies in 1982 was $2.33 billion. Personal bankruptcy losses would be in addition to the business and farm losses.

Some of these people will make it back into business and some will not. Our concern should be to see that the survivors, those who are still conducting business, continue to survive. We should also see that those who have gone under or have become bankrupt and seek another chance are able to find a financial atmosphere to accommodate them and provide a lesson from their unfortunate experience.

The small businessman desperately needs the ability to restructure his balance sheet. The sooner this is accomplished, the sooner revenue in the form of taxes from profits will flow. We are all aware today that Government revenues are substantially down from what was anticipated. Regardless of the cause or the politics of revenue decline, the fact is that it must be replaced in some measure if economic recovery is to be sustained.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that I am not talking about massive Government grants or hand-outs to small business. Most would reject this approach in any event. What must happen instead is that the Government must recognize the position of small business in our economy, the contribution it makes to tax revenues and employment stability. It must recognize the importance of the ability with which small business can change direction and adjust to the market, to innovate and adapt in order to survive.

I suppose that aside from being able to conceive an idea and convert it into economic activity from which a profit may be realized, the constant challenge of a changing market is the major stimulation to the entrepreneur. Running small business is an art. It is every bit as creative as painting a picture. To conceive an idea of a product or service for the marketplace, to obtain the resources and funds that are required to take that first step and to see the venture take hold and grow, is very creative, exciting and satisfying.

In spite of all the gloom and doom that abounds, there are more opportunities today for small businesses than at any time in the last decade. One of the dynamics of a challenge is to turn adversity into advantage. Many businesses have been severely damaged by the recession and many are victims of the times. Most are in difficulty because of the lack of depth in equity investment. I will return to that issue later.

We have entered into another industrial revolution. The advent of computers, word processors and robotics, in addition to the information and communications explosion, have given us the opportunity to adapt this technology to the small business field. The next decade will produce outstanding products that will allow us to serve wider markets more rapidly and efficiently.

Many of the problems that occupied our time in the past decade will be solved by this new technology and we will be able to devote ourselves to producing more and better products. The exciting part of this new technology is that it is available to all sizes of businesses, either by direct purchase, through rental or lease, or through the purchase of a service.

Let us use the challenge for the advertising industry as an example. That industry must adapt to the new costs facing a businessman. More businesses will depend upon catalogues to present their products because the cost of transportation and accommodation will reduce the number of salesmen who will travel across the country selling products to various customers. Order desks of the future will have video phones which will be used to try to bridge the lack of personal contact in the flesh, so to speak. The mechanics of cash flow will be a computer program. The transfer of funds will aid cash flow and keep accounts receivable and payable more current.

In order fully to explore and exploit this revolution, we need some new financial instruments. It may come to pass that the insurance industry will respond to the needs of small business and begin to supply insurance or even funding if it is not available from the banks.

We must move away from the situation where a businessman is squeezed out by a nervous banker. Banks should treat all businesses equally. Collateral must be replaced with other guarantees, or at least downgraded in importance.

Here is an example of the average small-businessman. He has a limited liability company, a line of credit at the bank and a term loan at the same bank. As security, the bank takes his accounts receivable, the personal guarantee of the officers and directors, and then takes a floating charge debenture on all other assets, including inventory, machinery, lands and buildings. The bank usually values the inventory at 30 per cent of its value, regardless of market conditions. It would be sold on a distress basis and the balance of the assets would be sold to satisfy the bank loans. That is a deplorable way to operate, but those are the facts of life today.

• (1530)

This is just madness, so we must create another instrument for financing small business that would put some competition into the equity field. The program sponsored by the Province of Ontario, the Small Business Development Corporation, is excellent. We should have a variety of these programs to cover the small business base of this country. These programs should be initiated by Governments but should use private sector funding. They would inject some good, solid competition into equity financing at competitive rates, which is exactly what is needed in this country today.

The floating charge debenture favoured by most banks is an albatross around the neck of the small business community. Canadians are great savers. We have more money on deposit per capita than any other western nation. We must devise financial equity instruments to shake loose some of that money as a basis for financing small business.

We must take some action on other fronts. Research and development needs a real shot in the arm. Provincial research foundations co-operating with the National Research Council and the federal and provincial Departments of Industry are doing excellent work. But we must go further. The Small Businesses Loans Act should be amended to allow it to be used for the acquisition of a patent, or for the registering of a patent. We could set in place a registered research and development fund that would allow small businesses to accumulate funds for research and development. Most R and D projects die because of the lack of cash. There is no shortage of ideas, no lack of inventiveness, ingenuity, or entrepreneurship. But there is a lack of available funding for R and D in most small businesses. We are holding back the future by not exploiting this fantastic resource.

Mr. Speaker, we have developed a very sophisticated service industry that depends on imported products to a great extent. Much of that industry could be rapidly converted into small manufacturing operations that could generate new products from a combination of equity funds at a reasonable price and a broad thrust into R and D financing, as I have suggested.

How urgent is this, you may ask, Mr. Speaker. I believe it is on the scale of a crisis. Consider again these facts; that Government revenues are falling; that Industry, Trade and Commerce reports our largest firms will reduce capital spending by 8 per cent for 1983, and that follows a 6 per cent reduction for 1982; that manufacturing is only at 67 per cent of its capacity; that bankruptcies are 33 per cent higher than last year; that unemployment is at 1,600,000; that the net job loss last year was 355,000; that UIC benefits for the first 11 months of 1982 are $7.7 billion; that corporate profits are 51 per cent lower in the third quarter of 1982 than a year earlier; and that return on shareholders' equity is below 10 per cent. Last year's data and analysis of the current quarter shows that return on equity is at about 4.6 per cent. That is not a very attractive figure to potential investors.

This is the dimension of the dilemma that we face. If we are going to respond to these stark facts we must take some bold action, not by throwing wads of money at the problem, but by creating an atmosphere in which the business and industry of Canada can repair the wounds they have suffered over the past few years. This Bill is a small step in that direction. It is not the answer, it is part of a much larger solution. The question is, will the Government respond, or will it shove its head in the sand as it has done so often in the past?

Mr. Speaker, every time I speak on a Friday afternoon I always say that it is exciting to be in the House of Commons at 25 minutes to four, with the gallery vibrating and the people applauding the great speech one is making; but this is a very serious matter. I hope that the Minister will take note of the comments that I have made. I am a firm believer in the small business sector. I believe it is the engine that will enable us to turn a lot of the things around in this country. I do not believe that this is an area that needs an awful lot of money thrown at it. I think it needs an atmosphere that the Minister and the Government can help create. I think, given the proper atmosphere, that business will respond; and when you look at the stability that the small business sector gives to the labour force, you begin to realize how vital it is that it becomes stimulated and activated again.

The major thing, Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister, is the lack of operating funds and a competitive equity base for the small business sector. Given those two things, I am confident that small business will respond to it and will play a major part in the turn-around of our economy.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise after the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) who gave a great address on the Small Businesses Loans Act. This act has been in place for over 20 years now and it offers loan guarantees to small businesses which can meet various regulations that are put forward in the Act.

When we look at the statistics that have been put forward, we find there is a difficult problem in the country. We see that there are more and more bankruptcies and small businesses which are having difficulty meeting their payrolls. With the interest rates difficulties that we have just gone through, many businesses drew down a lot of the savings that they have been able to build up in the last number of years. That is still the sector that is capable of generating new jobs in the fastest way in our society. It is responsible for over 40 per cent of our business activity now and 25 per cent of our Gross National Product. It is the sector, as I said before, that is capable of quickly helping the over two million people who are unemployed or who have quit looking for a job, and is providing the opportunity for many of our young people to get into the work force.

When we talk about loan guarantees, we have to be a bit careful because, as I have watched this Government over the past two or three years, I find that more and more of those loan guarantees are going out in substantial amounts to one or two large companies who have found themselves in difficulty. We all recall the loan guarantees that have gone to Massey-Ferguson, to Chrysler, recently to Petrosar and Petromont, Maislin Trucking, and a very large one to Dome Petroleum. These loans have put a tremendous strain on the capital that is available in banks to other sectors, and I am afraid that because of this kind of strain on the banking system and the amount of capital available many small businesses which could have found themselves capable of getting loan guarantees under this Act are not getting those guarantees.

With regard to the other statistic showing how much our banks have out in loans to other countries as well, as was pointed out in a recent Time magazine article, the western world has some $706 billion out in loans to Third World countries and enterprises. Many of those countries are not capable of paying those loans back today, and they are in default of payment.

This does not bode well for small businesses. Many speakers previously have read letters from their constituents, and I could do the same. Businesses are having problems and are unable, despite all the Government programs, to get the kind of assistance that can get them through a brief period of difficulty.

In passing this Bill and putting in place an Act such as this, we should be providing an instrument specific to a small business or an individual. This obviously should allow Government to foster the policy of giving loans to those who truly need them. This points to the fact that the businesses that really require this type of assistance should be accurately identified in order to avoid missing a target that we put forward in this House of Commons and wasting the limited finances that we have, as a Government, to assist small businesses.

• (1540)

Yesterday we talked about the Small Business Development Bond and how we should monitor it. Yesterday I asked the Minister a question about it. He did not give a very satisfactory answer. I suspect the same will be true of this Act. It is being left entirely in the hands of the banks to make decisions on our behalf. Perhaps we can qualify that. Maybe that is the way we ought to do it. I would like to think that we would check from time to time to make sure that small-business persons going to those lending institutions to apply for a loan under the Act are not being turned away by some superfluous argument which they are not able to defend themselves against.

I have sat across the desk of a manager of a lending institution. I know how quickly they can state whether or not they will make a loan. It is very difficult to argue with them unless you study intensively the regulations they are using. Most small-businessmen applying for this type of loan are not familiar with the regulations under which they are applying. If the bank manager does not have the capital or is reluctant to lend money to that individual, he can easily pass him out the door.

I like to think when we have specific legislation such as this that we would target that incentive in the right direction. On the other hand, when speaking about the Small Business Development Bond yesterday, we pointed out that many of the banks and lending institutions use these instruments which are put at their disposal by Government to assist those businesses which are in the risk category, not in the category of defaulting, but in that area where, if given assistance, it will put them in a good risk category. That is happening to a large extent with the Small Business Development Bond. I would like to know whether that may be happening to those who apply under the Small Businesses Loans Act.

The guarantees that we are offering should not interfere that much in the marketplace unless they are given to very large companies where huge amounts of capital go into the hands of one individual. The cost to Government of this kind of loan is almost nothing, unless the loan is in arrears or is defaulted. In my opinion, it is better to go forward in this manner than with a direct loan from Government to business or in the direction of taking some equity position in a business.

This type of program is appealing. There is very little Government bureaucracy attached to it. If Government has some small monitoring mechanism to ensure the lending institutions are following the regulations that Parliament would like, this Bill can be a very effective instrument.

This Act was put in place over 20 years ago to assist small businesses to expand. That should be one of its functions today. We are also in the position today of assisting small businesses to survive. I hope we look at expanding some of the regulations of this Act to assist in that manner. One way that was discussed was to allow the banks and lending institutions to use this Act to assist businesses with operating capital.

What has happened often in recent months is that banks which have been carrying on business have been cutting off that operating capital. I can give the example of a sailboat company. Most sales are in the spring and summer; it has difficulty maintaining itself over the fall and winter. This company is having its capital cut off. As a result, it is being forced into insolvency. It cannot continue to operate and must go into bankruptcy, selling off the boats at a very small amount of their value. It is very sad. If that business had been allowed to exist for a few more months, it could have probably continued. If the economy is in an upturn pattern in the next number of months, it could have been a very viable business on into the future.

In the last year or so, many small businesses have been contacting their Member of Parliament asking what to do when dealing with companies, large or small, that are going bankrupt. I received a call just last week from one such company. It had done $50,000 worth of business with a fairly large company in the city of Edmonton. That company has gone bankrupt and is asking creditors to accept 25 cents on the dollar. That is very difficult for that small business. In fact, it may drive it into bankruptcy, as I suspect this kind of situation has driven other small business into bankruptcy in the last few years.

This small-businessman suggested that we develop a system to protect small businesses against going into bankruptcy and losing a large amount of capital. He suggested setting up a bond system. When they do business with the Government, they have to be bonded to ensure they are capable of paying the contractors working for them. You do that by taking out an adequate bond to cover the contract with the Government.

He suggested requiring small businesses to take out bonds to cover contracts with other small businesses. In that way, they would be secured. If they did not have a bond, they would recognize that they are taking a risk. It would then be up to that business as to whether or not it entered a contract. This is an interesting suggestion that might be explored. I discussed the difficulties with him. It is a suggestion that could be implemented in a very positive manner.

In difficult financial times companies have trouble expanding their business. The whole area of new venture capital and new equity capital causes many difficulties for small businesses. New businesses are very vulnerable for the first number of years. That has been pointed out in a very cruel fashion in my constituency in the last number of years.

In 1979 and 1980 the oil business was booming in Alberta. Many small businesses developed quickly to take up the jobs available. Industrial parks around the Edmonton area expanded very rapidly. Canadian entrepreneurs left large companies, Canadian and foreign, and used the expertise they had built up to start their own venture. They were very successful until the National Energy Program hit Parliament and this country, and the results have hurt those businesses tremendously. They were unable to survive and went out of business in large numbers.

There is a crucial stage when a new company starts up and that crucial stage can be very severely affected by such things as Government interference and Government budgets. In 1980, the Association of Canadian Venture Capital Companies took a survey of some 62 venture capital recipients. The survey showed that risk capital investments in young companies generated significant streams of benefits in the first number of years. With respect to companies founded between 1976 and 1979, each $100,000 of equity capital invested to 1979 produced an average of $310,000 of exports, $10,000 of expenditures on research and $44,000 in corporate, property and personal income tax. That is significant for an investment of that size.

Surveys which the United States has taken show that almost 80 per cent of all new jobs were created in the last number of years by young firms in the age group of zero to four years. Therefore, most of the new jobs in that country have been created by small businesses which have started up in the last few years. They have not been created by large companies and have not been created to any great extent, in the United States at least, by Government.

In Canada, ventures have chronically suffered from lack of risk equity capital. The more successful a company, it seems, the harder it is to raise additional venture capital or to finance its growth. That, certainly, has been the case during this recent recession because it seems like that type of capital has virtually dried up. One of the reasons must be the recent budgets which have come forward in this House of Commons.

We have just had forced upon us closure on Bill C-139 which may cause many difficulties. I will not speak again about the Small Businesses Development Bond because we went over that a number of times. If we look at interest deductibility, where interest on funds borrowed to acquire shares in taxable Canadian corporations is only deductible up to $10,000, we see that ceiling restricts the Canadianization of companies which need investment capital in this country.

On capital cost allowance, the deduction for depreciation is limited to half the normal write-off in the year in which the asset is acquired. That causes difficulties. The original budget banned all reserves for payment of taxes on sale of property. Now we have three-year reserves allowed, but it still makes it difficult for business to make large capital purchases because payments cannot be spread beyond that three-year period.

With respect to annuities, these, of course, bring me close to my constituency because many farmers have used these annuities to assist them in paying the tax, which rips them off for their pension funds which they have worked so hard for all of their lives. Capital gains tax, in my opinion, should be abolished, but since it is there the farmers were able to use the annuities. We now have those funds diverted from the private sector where they have been invested and put into Government coffers where they are gobbled up, and who knows how they will be used to benefit those farmers and business people. And I could mention the 12.5 per cent dividend tax position.

There are many, many examples in the last number of budgets which have caused great difficulty for small businesses, especially in these hard economic times. What my colleagues and I are saying here is that we approve of this Bill. We hope that it could be expanded, but we also want to impress upon the Government the things which should be done to assist small business, the capacity of small business to create jobs, and the ability of small business to get this country going again in the near future.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-144, as we have been told, really extends to 1985 the $1.5 billion borrowing limit which expires this coming March. We on this side agree with this extension. We all know that there is a limit in terms of the clients eligible for loans insured under the Small Businesses Loans Act, with $1.5 million in sales being the ceiling. Therefore, in fact we are dealing with a true and accurate definition of the small business community.

Some of the history of the Act is quite interesting. In 1977, which was before the banks had an incentive to make loans under this Act, there was a total of 4,800 to 4,900 loans authorized. The amount of loans authorized at that time was in the order of $96.5 billion. The average size of the loan was in the order of $19,700 and there had been 72 claims paid under the program at that time, for a cost to the Treasury of $632,000.

Then, in the wisdom of the House, we decided to make it 1 per cent above prime for the banks, and the banks finally had an incentive to use this insurance and to make available very important money to the innovative small business sector which wanted to take a chance in the marketplace. We then started to see a rapid escalation in the use of the loan. Loans moved from 4,900 to 7,300 in 1978, then to 10,700 loans in 1979, and in 1982 the last figures show that there are 16,500 loans authorized under this Act, for a total since its inception of 116,500.

History shows that the Act is of value and it is starting to be used extensively. From 1977 we have gone from $96 million to some $427 million of loans authorized. The average size of the loan has grown by only $5,000. We have escalated progressively through the years. The number of claims paid have increased from 72 in 1977 to 444 in 1982. Losses to the program in 1977 were $632,000 and these increased to $8,800,000 in 1982. Those are the preliminary figures to November 30.

It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, to look at the estimates for the program. In 1981-82 they were $2.5 million and the forecast halfway through the year was for $9,300,000. We can see, therefore, the effects of the high interest rate policy of the monetary system of this Government on the small business sector. We note in the Estimates for 1983-84 that it expects to spend $13 million on the program, so the Minister and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are certainly anticipating a continuation of the very troubling situation which exists out in the community.

One of my colleagues gave some figures on bankruptcies so I do not have to read those figures back into the record, but I must say that bankruptcies—and not just the formal bankruptcies—are at a very serious rate of escalation, with all of the human tragedy which they cause. Because of Section 178, which in our wisdom we put into the new Bank Act, we have now moved into an era of soft bankruptcies, where the bank, before one of the creditors of an organization triggers a bankruptcy, can move in with receiver, charge the cost of that receiver to the operation, and literally take over the cash flow of the business.

• (1600)

In spirit and intent this is a pretty good move. However, I guess like most Members I have spent hours each week involved in pretty tragic cases of businesses going down the tube when really what they need is some bridging time to get over the loss of working capital and retained earnings caused by a combination of two factors. One was the rapid escalation in interest rates, up over 24 per cent, which in turn began to slow down the world economy. Those organizations forced to pay that kind of an interest rate found themselves with inventories which were not turning over as fast and the financial liquidity of the business community was lost to the banks.

Now, I am an individual who has always respected the rule book of the banks. I do not expect the bank to lend me depositors' money without totally protecting themselves and reducing the risk to a minimum. That is why this Small Businesses Loans Act type of insurance is so important to the high-risk entrepreneur venturing into the marketplace. I think it is one of the healthier programs we have. Frankly, I think it should be available through, and administered by, the Federal Business Development Bank.

Perhaps the Minister in his wrap-up might tell us what has happened to the study his predecessor started on the financial requirements of the small business community. I can remember having delivered to my office about 22 packages of paper on the various studies. I think they were started even prior to my occupying that portfolio. All that paper was finally made available to us and then the Minister's predecessor started to examine the study to find out just what it was that the small business community needed. I am wondering if he would be good enough to report on the progress of that study, as long as he does not need another study to find out what the progress is. I have mentioned the changes in the nature of receivership and all of this should be part and parcel of the study they are dealing with in that ministry.

As you and most of my colleagues in the House probably know, Mr. Speaker, I am basically against Government intervention in the marketplace. I really believe that the free market system, the law of supply and demand, if respected and adhered to, provides one of the most effective filters for inefficiency, and for those who take a risk and lose, which is available without real cost to the community. You can take a chance. You can do your assessments and appraisals. Through the Federal Business Development Bank you can hire business advisers, and if you have any moxie at all in assessing your investment risks, then you should be able to get money from the chartered banks under this program or through the FBDB as a lender of last resort.

I would like to see us have a debate on the FBDB some day and remove the banks' lender of last resort status. I think they have a magnificent staff, expertise, and if given the chance I think they probably could come up with some very vital answers if the Government truly wants the small business sector, the entrepreneurial sector, of this country to work. If you are going to intervene in the marketplace, Mr. Speaker, you should do it in a constructive way. The Government should not intervene with financial guarantees and assistance unless it does a study to find out what the root of the problem is in the marketplace and the financial community.

It is not good enough for the Government to give a $34 million loan guarantee to a company like Maislin after the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) attends a ballgame sitting in a private box. If memory serves me right, Mr. Speaker, the problem was that Maislin wanted to buy and did buy a trucking firm in Wisconsin. They stripped themselves of working capital to make the purchase and then the trucking firm got caught in the deregulation policy of the U.S. Government. Their cash flow just went to ribbons and all of a sudden the Canadian parent company is in trouble. But then it has the ability, through its friends right to the highest offices of the Government of Canada, to have the people of Canada guarantee a $34 million loan.

As a result of questions this week in the House we found out that the Government has not had a capable observer on the Board of Directors, and that it is likely Maislin is going to become a terminal case unless they can get another loan guarantee. This kind of intervention, Mr. Speaker, is totally negative. Not only that, it is immoral and absolutely angers everyone in the marketplace. None of the people who are served by the Small Businesses Loans Act have this kind of access.

Small businesses have been built up into intermediate size businesses. They have very successfully generated large payrolls from which are deducted a lot of income tax. Some of them are in trouble today and in receivership and none of them is being given any kind of courtesy approaching this kind of insider trading, so to speak.

Look at the loan guarantee to Chrysler, Mr. Speaker. I was in Detroit in 1967 on a tour of the auto plants. At the end of the tour I had to rise to my feet and give my impressions. In 1967 my impression was that Chrysler would not survive the decade because it did not appear to be plowing its earnings back into plant modernization and product development. All the major automobile companies in the Detroit area refused to recognize that ten years down the road this world was going to become energy short and that we could no longer afford to drive around with the unnecessary weight of these great tin cans. All you had to do was look at Asia and Europe to know what we in North America were going to be facing in ten years. Yet what happens? We do not recognize the root of the problem.

These megacorporations worship the balance sheet. They do not think of the interest of the country and they did not realize the social and energy needs of the nation down the road. The industry was a loser ten years ago and it is obviously a loser today unless it is able to equip itself with robots and improve production and quality to match that which is coming out of Japan in the automobile sector.

Look at a company like Massey-Ferguson. It has been a pride and joy to this country. It was part and parcel of the farm community down through the years. Yet we see dividend distribution, weak management, lack of modernization and market forecasting, and then we watched that company get into so much trouble that we had to go and bail it out with a Government Loan guarantee. None of this courtesy is extended to the small and intermediate sector. I could give chapter, litany and verse on Dome, which got into trouble. In each case that I have mentioned, the banks had a too high percentage of their equity invested and so they were at risk if companies like Chrysler, Massey and Dome went under. Of course, the Government moved in to save the banks.

• (1610)

Why has the Inspector General of Banks allowed the banks to grab the big loans that yield the highest profits and the lowest administration costs, instead of ensuring that the risk is spread over a broader market? The big companies which have been guilty of all the sins of imperfection and bad management have been bridged. It is time that the House considered a bridge for the small businessman and for the intermediate sector.

If we are going to consider bridging, Mr. Speaker, we will have to take warning from the intervention and efficiency study of the Economic Council of Canada, 1982. It points out that the Government cannot bridge or intervene in the market financially unless it gets to the root of the problem.

Today we are talking about the small business community so let us see what problems are shown in the survey done in 1982 by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. It found that the number one problem bothering the business community was interest rates. This was identified as the number one problem by 65 per cent of respondents. Slower than normal business was identified by 52 per cent of respondents. Naturally this means that the turn-around on inventory does not generate the cash flow that is needed to cover the high burden of interest rates. Government tax burden was identified as the problem by 48.6 per cent of respondents. No one in the business community wants to escape taxes but they can pay more if they are assisted to earn profits. Inflation was identified as the main factor by 45.7 per cent of respondents. It now ranks fourth in importance in the eyes of the small business community. Government regulation and paper burden was identified by 43 per cent.

I ask the Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, what happened to the years and years of work done under four successive Ministers in the secretariat that deals with the paper burden problem? The incumbent Minister, who was formerly Minister of National Revenue, must know what the Department of National Revenue does to the business community. His predecessor, who now sits on this side of the House, was amazed at what he found. We were co-operating on studies of ways to clean up the Department of National Revenue and reduce its arbitrary interpretation of the Act. Small businessmen have been dealing with the Department for years and doing things in a certain way and then, all of a sudden it is zap, a new interpretation and they are frozen. A businessman may have an inventory on which he is paying high interest rates and then find that the Government has put a new interpretation on an existing regulation. That kind of instability with the normal flow of business interferes with the tax revenues that the Government needs to collect from business. The tax collector thinks he is grabbing when actually he is throwing water on the coals with this type of behaviour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rose): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Huntington: I thank Members sincerely. I thank my colleagues, through you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to continue for a few minutes.

The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey), with his background as Minister of National Revenue, has an opportunity to deal with a category of items that are a real aggravation to the generation of wealth and taxes in the business community. If he were to clean up that area he would make a real contribution to the system. First of all he should see if something cannot be done to accelerate the paper burden study. Then he could get together with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). In my opinion, the Minister of Finance is a very bright person. I have great respect for his brightness and his abilities although I do not have respect for the direction in which he is leading us.

There is a way to clean up the Income Tax Act and allow the business community to operate in a more stable environment. There were 47 amendments to Bill C-139 and I do not think we even debated them in Committee of the Whole because the Government brought in closure. I just cannot believe the damage that was done to the business community by the budget brought in when Mr. Chrétien was Minister of Finance. I spent many congenial hours with him and his Parliamentary Secretary, who was Mr. Lumley. I advised them that they were creating an absolute jungle of holding companies for shareholders and owners of small and intermediate business in the country.

That is exactly what happened. Everyone ran around creating holding companies with the dividend laws that were put in place at that time. Then the dividends were dammed up. Naturally, the corporate tax was paid for the dividends when declared. The holding companies dammed up the dividends so that the actual owner who had transferred his ownership to a holding company did not pay tax on the dividends he received. The lawyers and accountants across the country had a great time doing all the incorporations. But then Mr. MacEachen came along and undid all of that, after being warned that it would happen.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not a real conservative regarding the House rules, but I believe the Hon. Member is breaking the rules and I think you should rule on the matter. He has referred to the Deputy Prime Minister by name, to the Justice Minister by name, and to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce by name. I do not like to be a conservative in this, but it seems to me that he is breaking with tradition. I wonder if you would rule on that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rose): The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington).

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I am glad you ignored that trivial intervention. I was saying that one Minister creates a great haven to dam up dividends and the next Minister dismantles it and puts on a 12.5 per cent dividend tax. This forced the re-organization of every well planned tax balance sheet in Canada. Millions of dollars must have been spent on adjusting the balance sheets and share structures of Canadian companies as of December 31, 1982. They have had to strip down preferred shares and roll them over into a new class of preferred share. They have taken deferred bonuses and rolled profits out ahead. You could not believe what has happened to business community balance sheets, Mr. Speaker, since the MacEachen budget, the three subsequent budgets and the non-mini-budget of the Minister of Finance. It seems that the Government has implemented all this confusion by design to destroy absolutely the private sector. There is no one out there who can make a decision or who knows what to do. Personally I have had to pay $150 each for four rulings out of the Department of Finance, and I waited from five to seven months for them. I notice the Department has stopped that habit, but it was another $500 in fees to which it was not really entitled.

• (1620)

I do not want to abuse the extra time I have been given, but we must do something about this Act if we want the private sector to survive. I tell the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism that the continuing escalation and costs of this program and all other programs, even FBDB programs, will be more than the Treasury can handle. I think it is dealing with the life of the private sector now, and perhaps it is by design.

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-144, a Bill to continue providing necessary assistance to our small-business community. Five thousand small businesses received assistance in 1981 and 1982. I might add that it was necessary and welcome assistance provided through the legislation contained in the Small Businesses Loans Act. Had this assistance not been made available to them, I am sure they would have joined the many thousands of small entrepreneurs which have succumbed to bankruptcy.

I am particularly pleased with the urgency the Government has shown that this program be continued because there are currently few Government programs which offer any direct assistance or relief to small businesses. We must, at all costs, ensure that this community remains healthy and viable.

Since 1961 when this Act first came into effect and up until last September when the latest statistics wer tabulated, over 100,000 loans were made to small businesses, worth almost $2 billion. Yet this has obviously not been enough to enable a great number to survive. Despite the 12,000 loans made in the first nine months of last year, there was still a record number of bankruptcies recorded in 1982. In fact, there were 33 per cent more bankruptcies in 1982 than there were in 1981 and 63 per cent more bankruptcies than in 1980, just two years earlier.

It is with these statistics that I am very concerned. Indeed, all Hon. Members of the House should be very concerned. Every month I see one more store closed, one more notice of receivership in the newspaper in Leeds-Grenville, and all I can think of is: How many people will be joining the constantly growing number of unemployed; how long has this business been struggling to keep going; what little assistance would have been required to keep it in operation?

These businesses being forced into bankruptcy are not young, inexperienced businesses, but rather businesses which have been run by families for generations, businesses which have served the community for many decades. These are small entrepreneurs which we all expect to continue to prosper because they have been aroused for so long, they have many years of experience and knowledge behind them, and when they finally give up the fight to stay alive, we are brought to the appalling realization that the small family business is in very grave jeopardy.

My riding is comprised of people who have lived there generation after generation, with small businesses handed down through their families, and they have provided many useful services to their community. Yet I know of numerous family businesses that have had to close down and give up because they have been forced into a corner by present disastrous economic circumstances. Many are being faced with the decision of filing for bankruptcy or selling out to larger conglomerates, so that the business will stay alive and people will not lose their jobs.

The people in Leeds-Grenville do not give up easily. They fight to survive. I know when a firm in my riding has to call it quits that the company has tried everything possible to make a go of it. It has contacted every Government agency or anyone it feels can be of assistance. It has borrowed all that it can to pay bills and maintain operating costs. It has cut salaries and laid off employees, with the hope that these cost-saving measures will aid it to weather the economic storm so that it can return to normal and bring about a healthier operation. But after all the efforts, many are still faced with the same choice—sell if it is not too late or declare bankruptcy.

I know and have felt the anguish through which these firms have to go with the final decision they have to make because I have worked many long weeks on their behalf, suggesting possible alternatives and providing necessary liaison with Government Departments in the slim hope that there just might be something to save them and enable them to remain solvent. It is the most heart-rending experience to know that all one's efforts have failed and the company is forced to give up.

We have only three cheese factories left in Leeds-Grenville, one of which, the Forfar cheese factory, has been in existence since 1863. It has become quite a landmark in Leeds, being well known for the excellent cheese it produces. Some years ago it was faced with the need to close down, and 17 local dairy farmers got together and decided to keep it operating. As I said before, we in Leeds-Grenville fight to survive and have a great sense of community spirit. We do not give up easily. The Forfar cheese factory is still in production today and is visited by many tourists, as well as many Members of the Chamber who enjoy its products.

Unfortunately other businesses have not fared so well in my riding. The Johnson Shoe Company is a firm that was operating in Brockville for 30 years, but unfortunately it was left with no other alternative but to close its doors for the last time earlier this year. I could go on and on with other examples of family businesses which have been in existence for generations and have had to close down. It is when institutions like the Johnson Shoe Company which have been operating for decades are being forced to sell out or close up their doors that I become very concerned with the direction the country is headed.

It goes without saying that every Member of Parliament has received a great number of representations from small businesses in their constituencies. I certainly have in the few months I have been a Member of Parliament. All the concerns to which I have listened and the letters I have received carry the same theme—less Government interference and more tax incentives to provide a healthy environment for free enterprise to exist.

For the record I would like to read comments from a completed questionnaire distributed by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. All of us in the Chamber are familiar with these, but this particular one is from a small-business owner in my riding who wrote:

> The economy has gone from bad to worse. Who is really doing anything about anything? As a small-businessman, we are hanging by our fingernails while the federal Government keeps piling on.

A further quotation from the same individual:

> We, the small-businessman, cannot make the ends meet any more. Government is too demanding, taking so many of our dollars for everything it's ludicrous! They must be stopped at all costs!

As we are all aware, these questionnaires are distributed by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business at regular intervals. They provide Hon. Members with a great deal of information and interesting comments. I am sure the sentiments expressed by my constituents hold true across Canada. Whether it is a small business in Halifax or a small business in Kelowna, they all face the same problems and have the same concerns.

Ten years ago only 3,000 businesses went bankrupt. Today almost 11,000 have given up. This is an increase of almost 266 per cent in ten years, a situation which is completely out of control. We in the Opposition know only too well that this situation has to be brought under control and that Government action is needed now.

• (1630)

Let us look at what the Government is doing or not doing, as the case may be. What the Government is doing is trying to raise tax revenues to pay for its ever-increasing debt through measures that are, in effect, damaging to the small business community. For example, small-businessmen will no longer be able to participate in the new deferred profit-sharing plans which have been responsible for the continued healthy operation of many small firms. In effect, this will prohibit the owner of a company from providing for his or her own retirement out of the profits of the business, forcing them instead to turn to Registered Retirement Savings Plans as their only avenue. Unfortunately, these plans do nothing to stimulate the economy and, in effect, put money in a place where it cannot be used to increase investment in small business.

Other measures, such as the 12.5 per cent small business dividend distribution tax and the increased taxes on employee benefits, have also put unnecessary burdens on small businesses and have increased the phenomenal amount of paper work with which they are forced to deal. Quite often they simply hand it all over in sheer frustration to their accountants because they can neither decipher nor handle it all.

Instead of making things easier for small businesses, instead of eliminating the red tape of government regulations, instead of stimulating investor confidence in small businesses to maintain a positive climate to encourage the small entrepreneur, the Government is doing the exact opposite. It is making things more difficult, it is creating more red tape, and it is driving away potential investors who put their money into Registered Retirement Savings Plans instead of Canadian companies.

The Government has also taken away the thrust of the Small Business Development Bond which was introduced by a Conservative Government in 1979.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have never seen the Government look better! There is not one single Liberal Member in the House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Not one Liberal Member is to be seen.

Mrs. Cossitt: At that time, it provided incentive and much needed assistance to small businesses. The present Government has reduced this measure to a shadow of its former self and it will now provide assistance only to those firms in severe financial trouble. However, the bond has achieved little success because of these changes. What is happening is the banks are refusing to lend money to any company that is in enough financial difficulty to qualify for the bond.

What this Government is creating is an environment of uncertainty, an environment in which no small business can survive, an environment that does not encourage the small entrepreneur to expand. Yet despite this adverse climate, 150,000 new businesses started up last year. The spirit of small business is alive. There are still people out there willing to take a chance in the free enterprise system and try to make a go of their particular interests despite a continuing uncertain economy, despite high interest rates and despite tax laws that benefit no one but the public purse. The Government should be taking advantage of this entrepreneurial spirit instead of trying to squelch it through its own fiscal mismanagement and detrimental tax laws.

We should be encouraging this spirit and there are several ways that we can do this. We could revamp the Small Business Development Bond so that it will relieve the interest rate burden on small businesses. A 3 per cent reduction in interest costs would give many small businesses the extra boost needed to maintain a viable operation.

We could make it easier for small businesses to obtain debt financing through the Federal Business Development Bank so that they get the capital incentive they need now. Tax credits would also provide incentives for investors to put their money into Canadian business and provide those businesses with much needed capital funds.

We need to cut back on the load of paperwork with which the Government has burdened these businesses. Simplifying the regulations and the forms would make it easier for small businesses to handle their own affairs, to save on accounting costs, and it would provide them with more time to devote to research, thus increasing profits.

The Government should stop emphasizing its interest in big business and devote more of its attention to the concerns of the small business person. Small businesses create jobs and employ people, but unless new incentives are introduced, small businesses will continue to close their doors in frustration at a system that continually beats them down rather than builds them up.

Canada needs sound concrete policies to stimulate investor and consumer confidence, programs that encourage the purchase of Canadian manufactured goods, less Government control and tax laws. These do not have to be so complicated that they can only be interpreted through an accountant.

Free enterprise must be allowed to flourish. Small businesses provide a great constituency of job creation. The Government has time and time again initiated job creation programs. Yet I believe that if the Government were to concentrate its efforts into providing more incentive for small businesses, this would result in greater job creation and would provide a healthier atmosphere in which free enterprise could grow.

A self-employed person creates employment for himself and others and as a result we see a greater contribution to the public purse through income taxes. The small business community has to be provided with a means to stay viable and productive so it can continue to contribute to the health of this country. The more bankruptcies, the greater the federal deficit, because people begin to draw from the public purse. The Government loses the means to collect the revenues it would otherwise receive. What does it take before the Government realizes that Canadians today are getting away from being the pioneers they once were, that the initiative for Canadians to realize their dream of starting their own business is fast becoming a thing of the past?

There is an urgency in our country to stimulate growth of small businesses which are made up of people who are industrious self-starters, ambitious, full of energy and motivation. We should be very careful that we do not lose their ability to produce, and in fact we should help them to continue their high level of productivity. Everything possible should be done to stimulate and encourage the motivation of the small entrepreneur.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have an opportunity to address the House on the Small Businesses Loans Act. I have a great many small businesses in the riding of Simcoe North and I have spent all of my business life working for small business people.

Bill C-144 extends the life of the Small Businesses Loans Act to March 31, 1985. As the House is aware, the legislation was due to expire on March 31, 1983. This legislation increases the total guaranteed business improvement loans that may be outstanding to $1.5 billion from $850 million.

In acting for clients, one of the difficulties we found in dealing with banks and small business loans was that bankers were not too fond of processing these loans because of the vast amount of paperwork involved in obtaining them. This practice applied to all chartered banks and I do not single out any one particular bank with this criticism. Often I have been in a bank manager's office with a client asking about the Small Businesses Loans Act and about the other financial instruments available. The bank manager usually reaches under the desk and with both hands lifts up a thick set of regulations, and somewhere in the middle he finds the regulations with respect to the Small Businesses Loans Act. There will be an indication from the bank manager that he is not too keen to go through this red tape with the customer, and usually asks: "Why do you not have one of our conventional loans at the going interest rate plus 2 per cent?"

I say from a very practical standpoint that the Government would be well advised to consider very seriously the red tape which is involved in getting these loans in the bank branches to the small business people. They can afford to hire accounts and lawyers, but I am not sure that the essence of small business loans should be to employ accountants and lawyers, although both professions are very honourable. That should not be the purpose for which the Government of Canada becomes involved in the assistance to small business.

The small business sector is hurting today mainly because of the mismanagement of the economy by the Liberal Government. There is no question about that. Interest rates were kept at an artificially high level by the Liberal Government for the last three and one-half years. This has caused severe hardship in the small business community and has caused many to go broke. It has caused a reshaping of business practices which, in itself, is not totally wrong but has caused a great deal of hardship.

Small business people entered into the Government-created depression of 1981 with fixed bank loans. That practice was honourable and not unusual. At that time, business people knew where they stood when they had reasonable interest rates of 10 per cent and 11 per cent. When the recession that was induced by the Liberal Government began and interest rates were raised in an effort to cut down on inflation, the small business community started to hurt. Not only did the Government do nothing to assist the small business community, but the Government took steps in the November, 1981 budget which seemed to be designed to finally eliminate the small business community.

During those days, the popular joke which emerged was that if one wanted to run a small business, one simply bought a large business and waited. Many of these problems facing small business which I will elaborate on are familiar to the Government because it created them.

I have mentioned the budget. The budget created an element of uncertainty for small business. Small businesses could not plan because the budget that was brought in in November of 1981 was revised in December, 1981 in what is normally called by the business community "MacEachen's retreat".

The country then went through a winter of uncertainty and our Party crossed the country to listen to submissions from the interested parties who were concerned about the economy. We made our remarks in the House based on those concerns, and there subsequently was a retreat or adjustment in the form of one of the mini-economic statements which have replaced anything of tangible worth in the economic documentation of the Liberal Government.

There was another retreat in July of 1982. Of course, there was a change of Finance Ministers when we went from bad to worse, one might say, in order to give the present Minister of Finance who had decimated the energy industry a chance to do that to the entire economy. That is the situation we are presently faced with.

The Goverment finally brought the Income Tax Act before the House. It proceeded to cut off debate on that Bill, much to the dismay of those who wanted an Act that contained the proper amendments. I understand that the Government itself had some amendments but was unable to put them on the floor of the House due to time allocation. Once again, that has caused hardship to the small business community.

We introduced the Small Business Development Bond in an effort to create a method by which small businesses could capitalize their debts on a once in a lifetime basis so that they knew where they stood with their debt problems. They were to have reasonable interest rates with which the banks could participate. The Liberal Government gutted the Small Business Development Bond completely. It then became necessary for a business to be going broke in order to meet the criteria for receiving a Small Business Development Bond.

There is not much competition between banks and their branches for lending money to businesses that are going broke. It is not very good practice for an aspiring bank manager to call his or her head office and say that they have a new customer who is going broke and wants a Small Business Development Bond. People who adopt that practice would find themselves transferred out of the head office or to a much smaller branch.

Another measure in the Government's budget which hurt small business was the capital cost allowance write-off. It was cut in half in the first year of purchase and was a direct attack on the small business community.

I do not believe the Government realizes just what part small business plays in the country. A study conducted by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology reports that in the United States almost 80 per cent of all new jobs were created by young firms which have had from zero to four years of business participation. In any given region of the U.S., new job creation was almost entirely due to company births or expansion. Migration from other regions was relatively unimportant.

We found that in Ontario, for example, 75 per cent of business creation is usually internal small business. The Liberal Government put far too much emphasis on megaprojects, only to see them collapse. The Government protected and bailed out Dome Petroleum while other businesses in ridings such as mine and those of my colleagues went broke because they could not get small business loans or assistance.

At the same time you see examples such as Maislin Transport, which is a very well connected trucking firm. The darlings of the Liberal Government found that it had access to the only loan that would be given to the trucking industry by the Liberal Government. Last summer, the Government made an exception—since we have now learned that this action did not represent a precedent—for Maislin and said that Maislin would put in $2.5 million and the Government would lend Maislin $34 million on that basis. Maislin simply had its subsidiary sell off its pension fund and transfer the funds into the company—we hope—and that was termed an infusion of equity capital.

As I suggested to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley), the Government has rewritten the accounting terminology of "shareholders' equity". It now means selling off part of a subsidiary company. That is called an infusion of shareholders' equity.

At the same time that the Government was promising this money to Maislin and putting Canadian taxpayers out on a limb, Maislin was losing $1 million a month. The small businesses I represent do not want $1 million from the Government or $34 million in loan guarantees. They want a chance to grow, thrive and survive in these tough times. Any Members in the House who have trucking firms in their constituencies now find that the promises of the Government which it made in the heat of the summer of 1982 were empty and limited. When the Government promised that criteria would be developed for trucking firms, there was no such development. There were no criteria, and today in the House the Minister confirmed that there was no intention of lending any money to the great number of trucking firms that have applications in to the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If we had not brought that out today, the Government would have been content to have those applications sitting on the Minister's desk for a long, long time—another broken promise.

• (1650)

That is the point I want to make today. We generally are in favour of the Small Businesses Loans Act. I think once we have had an opportunity for debate in this House, when we have had some of our colleagues who are not here today and who want an opportunity to speak come forward, we will be in a position to say that this Bill has had the examination that it deserves from Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I recognize the Hon. Minister, who is the mover of the Bill, the Minister of State for Small Businesses, on a point of order.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the House Leader of the Official Opposition. I was very pleased to hear his remarks and his support for this Bill and indeed to hear the support from that side of the House for small businesses and for this Bill today. I was particularly pleased to hear the constructive comments made by the former Minister for Small Businesses, of which I have made some notes, and also of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and others.

I noticed that flowing through them, although some of the comments were constructive, was general support for this Bill and for small business. Knowing, then, that we had to have the legislation before the end of March, otherwise small business will indeed be handicapped, knowing their support for small business, knowing that there are no real changes in this Bill from past policy, and knowing that this is only one instrument for small business, I would ask him now if he would confirm early understandings that I thought we had that this Bill would pass all stages today.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, although that question is not directly on the content of my speech, I would like to suggest that I do not, to the best of my knowledge, remember any suggestion that this Bill would pass all stages today. Our critic for small business is not here and I know he wants an opportunity to comment on this Bill. In my remarks I said that I realized when the Act was going to expire, but we do think it is appropriate that our critic for small business has an opportunity to make a statement on this Bill. Unfortunately, we were only apprised of the fact that this Bill was coming up today—

Mr. Huntington: We did not get the Bill.

Mr. Lewis: The Bill was only introduced yesterday afternoon. We operate a little differently from the Government in that we plan what we are doing in advance so that we can have people here to speak. We would be glad to accommodate the Government if they would give us sufficient notice to allow us to bring in our speakers and to do a job on it.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I would simply have to say that we laid on the record a roll-over of a provision that is very important for small business and laid on the record our support for small business. I listened to what the Opposition had to say as closely as I could, but I have to say now that there is rhetoric on the other side but very little substance of real support for small business.

What I am hearing, really, is more of the same kind of phoniness that we have heard before. I think that the word should go out from here to the small business community across Canada that what we are seeing is further obstructionist tactics by the Opposition. They talk a good game for small business but they never put their money where their mouth is.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You never put the Bill in your mouth.

An Hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. There may have been a point of order to the Minister's statement at the beginning, but I subsequently lost track of where it might have gone. It is evident from statements in the House that there will be further speakers if necessary to take us to five o'clock.

Does the President of the Privy Council want the question put? I cannot do that if there is an Hon. Member rising to speak on the Bill.

Mr. Pinard: I want to ask a question of the previous speaker, Mr. Speaker. We have ten minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry, I misunderstood the President of the Privy Council. Could he rise and indicate what it is he is asking?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, are Hon. Members allowed to ask questions for ten minutes after speeches on second reading?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The President of the Privy Council was rising on a question?

Mr. Pinard: Yes. Mr. Speaker, my question is to the House Leader of the Official Opposition. He just indicated very clearly that he was denying, for his Party, the unanimous consent required to get the remaining stages of the Bill through this afternoon.

I would like to ask him this question. Is he aware that many times in the past before he was appointed House Leader of the Official Opposition there was agreement to get such a Bill, as a matter of fact a Bill like this one, through with one speaker per Party? How is it that today he is requiring that many speakers on his side to obstruct the passage of this urgent legislation? Could he explain why, under the pretext that his critic is not here, knowing that this Bill was to be called yesterday—

Mr. Huntington: You are wasting time.

Mr. Pinard: I am sorry, I thought the Hon. Member was interjecting, Mr. Speaker. There is still time; it is not yet five o'clock. If there is unanimous consent we could get the remaining stages of that Bill through now, like we used to do in the past.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What is the question?

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who is asking me what is the question knows very well what I am talking about, because when he was the Opposition House Leader we used to get more than one Bill through all stages on a Friday afternoon. I am asking the Hon. Member behind him why he is not following the good example of his predecessor.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Government House Leader that I am following all of the good examples of all of the outstanding House Leaders of the Conservastive Party and trying to avoid some of the examples of the Government. I cannot explain the great interest in speaking on this Bill. I indicated that we were in general support of the Bill, but

I think we have a right to have our critic speak on the Bill, as soon as we can get him back here. We received notice of a Bill that was printed yesterday. It would be a much different matter if this Bill was not numbered Bill C-144. If it was numbered C-28 and had been on the Order Paper, I could call my critic, who is off on other important parliamentary business, and say to him; "How about this Bill that has been printed for some time, can we go ahead with it?" It is the rush to judgment—

An Hon. Member: It was printed today.

Mr. Pinard: He is paid $60,000 a year and he should be here. He is overpaid.

An Hon. Member: The ink is hardly dry on this Bill.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I listened with great interest to what the Hon. Member just said.

Mr. Huntington: You just got here.

Mr. Ouellet: I just want to remind the Hon. Member that if in fact he has the disposition to send to committee stage a Bill that has been on the Order Paper for a long time, I am wondering why, in the spirit of co-operation, Bill C-12, the bankruptcy legislation that has been on the Order Paper for many, many months, that has been studied and discussed in the House on numerous occasions, is not allowed to go the Committee. One of his backbenchers earlier this week made that very suggestion, that the Bill be referred to the Committee. Maybe the Opposition House Leader would be ready to do this right now.

Mr. Mazankowski: You have run out the clock.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to reply to the Minister. He will know that this very important Bill, C-12, had two days' debate in May of 1981. That was not the biggie. The biggie was in November, 1982, when it was brought on for part of a speech. In fact, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) still has the floor for that part of the speech. It has not been brought on at all in 1983. Since the Government House Leader is in the House, maybe the two Ministers could get together and the Government House Leader might be prevailed upon to bring it forward since, as I understand it—and I have not been at this job all that long—the Government controls the business of the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): A question of privilege, at one minute after five?

• (1700)

Mr. Cousineau: I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is five o'clock. As a courtesy I will recognize the Hon. Member, but he should be brief.

Some Hon. Members: Five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I now have indications from Members that they wish me to see the clock. Since that request is made, I have to do so.

It being five o'clock, I do now leave the chair until Monday morning at eleven o'clock.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition), seconded by Mr. Broadbent, moved:

That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to consider and make recommendations upon the subject-matter of Ministers and conflict of interest; and public servants and conflict of interest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) on a point of order.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The motion which we have before the House is precisely the same as one which was passed by the House on December 10, 1974. At that time the motion was proposed by the Government.

On the assumption that the good will and seriousness of purpose which existed in 1974 on the Government's part prevails today—that is a big assumption, but I hope it would be the case—I would like to ask the House to consider giving unanimous approval to waiving the rule which would make today's vote a vote of confidence in the Government. In that way, Mr. Speaker, if the Government is prepared to think about this motion today the way it did in 1974—in other words, have the subject matter referred to a committee—Members on the Government side as well as this side would be in a position to be able to support this motion in good conscience without having it being interpreted as a vote of confidence in the Government.

• (1110)

As the House knows, Mr. Speaker, the normal rule for today's debate would mean that, if Government Members voted for the motion, they would be voting lack of confidence in their own Government. Now, some of us on this side might think that would be supremely wise, but we fully understand that they would not, particularly at this time, like to bring down the Government. Therefore, the suggestion I am making quite seriously is for the Government to join with us in waiving the rule which would make this a vote of confidence in the Government so they could join in this debate and support in principle today what they supported on December 10, 1974 when they themselves brought a motion couched in identical wording before the House.

Therefore I would like to hear the views of the Government side as well as the Official Opposition as to unanimously supporting the proposal I am now making.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has some difficulty accepting this as a point of order. If, however, there is a disposition to have a motion placed before the House to make it an order of the House that such be the situation, the Chair, of course, would be at the disposal of the House. But it is hardly a point of order as it is raised now.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I submit that the House is the master of its own destiny and can do by unanimous consent what the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) has suggested.

On behalf of the Official Opposition I am pleased to advise the House that we are in accordance with the suggestion of the Leader of the NDP. We feel that the subject matter of this motion is important enough that it should be considered fully by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and we would not want the Government to be hampered by the fact that, under Standing Order 62(9), it is in fact a non-confidence motion. We are prepared to give our consent to its going forward on the basis that it is not a non-confidence motion.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that at the very last minute, the Opposition should be bringing in a proposal that actually contradicts the one submitted last Friday. In my view, and the Chair has already said so, the motion before the House will be followed by a vote of non-confidence in the Government at the end of the day, and therefore we cannot take this debate lightly. We are prepared to debate the motion and to discuss it, and to have a vote in order to defeat this proposal presented by the Official Opposition. The situation is clear. In the course of the debate, the respective positions of each political party will be fully understood. We believe that a vote must be held, and we on the Government side have nothing to fear in voting on a non-confidence motion.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent at this point so I call on the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on that same point, I take it that the Government is emphatically refusing its consent to treat this motion not as one of no confidence. Is that the Government's position?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this point the Chair recognizes the Hon. Leader of the Opposition who is, I believe, going to introduce the debate for his side today.

Mr. Nielsen: It is shameful conduct, sir, on the part of the Government. Obviously it does not want this matter to go to Committee. The motion is framed in exactly the same words as the motion put on December 10, 1974 by the then Government House leader, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp. I find it unbelievable that the Government would take this position.

• (1115)

What we are dealing with today is the question of conflict of interest guidelines as they apply to Ministers of the Crown. It would be useful to survey the history of what was done. In July, 1973 the then President of the Privy Council, who is now the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), submitted a Green Paper on conflict of interest guidelines with respect to Members and Senators. That motion was brought forward when the Deputy Prime Minister, then the Government House leader, had his responsibilities transferred to Mr. Mitchell Sharp. Through negotiations between the Government of that day and the Opposition of that day, in addition to a reference to the Committee of the Green Paper with respect to Members and Senators, a motion was put forward. Our motion today is couched in precisely the same language as the motion put forward by the Government of that day.

An amendment was moved to that motion on December 10, 1974, which attempted to place the priority of the Committee's work in the sequence of dealing with conflict of interest of Ministers and public servants before it dealt with the conflict question as it applied to Members and Senators. That Opposition amendment was defeated. The main motion, which included the words of the motion put today, was passed. The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections reported to the House on June 10, 1975 in its fifth report. Certain action was then taken by the Government with respect to consequential legislation.

Notwithstanding that the Committee had met 59 times in four years subsequent to that report, it did not deal with the remainder of the motion. It is still outstanding, yet it was passed by the Government. Indeed, it had the unanimous support of all Parties in the House.

These are very important and critical areas of representative Government in any free democracy. As the Deputy Prime Minister said some ten years ago when he first presented his Green Paper, the prestige of Parliament relates directly to the manner in which this institution adheres to reasonable and responsible conflict of interest provisions.

There is nothing new and nothing unusual in that. It is a commonly held tradition in all civilized communities that those who hold public office should not be permitted to benefit personally from that fact. Those in public office should make use of that position, not in any way de facto or by appearance for personal enrichment. That is the great underlying principle in any question of public morality.

I point out that the terms in which the motion is couched are precisely the same as the second half of the motion moved by the Hon. Mitchell Sharp on December 10, 1974. I will read that motion because it should be on the record so that the words can be compared. It reads as follows:

> That the Green Paper entitled Members of Parliament and Conflict of Interest, tabled on November 27, 1974, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections; and
> That after the committee has concluded its deliberations and submitted its report on the aforementioned matter, it be authorized to consider and make recommendations upon the subject matter of ministers and conflict of interest and public servants and conflict of interest.

Anyone reading today's motion and the motion that was passed unanimously by the House on that date cannot fail to see the exactness of the comparison. In moving to refer the question of conflict of interest among various Government levels to the Committee, Mr. Sharp made several pointed references which are of interest to us today. He said:

• (1120)

> —in the present situation, what we must establish within the Public Service, within the Parliament is actually a set of values that would bring everyone to model his conduct after a service to the public which is not what we have witnessed in the past days.

These are important considerations when the public mind is made uneasy by revelations that neither the guidelines of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) nor scruples of conscience have succeeded in establishing that set of values of which Mr. Sharp spoke.

What are those values? They are a sense of probity, a regard for moral conduct, a refusal to take advantage of public office for personal advantage. These are the parameters within which the conduct of Ministers, Members and those in high places in the Public Service must operate.

Canadians have been aware of uneasiness in recent weeks at revelations that almost an incredible laxity has crept into relations among Members of the Government and former Members of Government. It is perfectly clear that it has become common practice for former Ministers to be accorded preferred treatment by their former colleagues and former employees. It is no longer a question of one or two episodes but so many that it appears to be a normal and commonplace practice. If the Coalgate affair were the only one, and if the Ministers involved had taken the proper and honourable course and had submitted their resignations, there would perhaps be no ground, no great ground in any event, for concern on the assumption that positive steps would be taken to prevent a recurrence. This assumption is no longer possible, given the attitude—and that is what it boils down to, an attitude—of the present Government.

Since the Coalgate affair came into the open due to an interview the former Minister gave to the media, there have been others. We have had a former Minister of Multiculturalism denying allegations of wrongdoing in connection with a $30 million grant for a company of which he was general manager. There is also the question of two Ministers in the other place admitting that they carried on negotiations over a $2 billion British Columbia coal project with a former colleague, now deceased.

The Deputy Prime Minister and the current Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) were involved, and also aware of the involvement of a former Minister, in the Cape Breton coal proposal. Both mentioned the project, but the Minister of Mines did not mention the involvement of the former Minister. Notwithstanding that she accurately and precisely described every other participant, she conveniently, selectively, forgot Gillespie.

We have heard every type of excuse and apology, except the simple admission that in fact the Prime Minister's 1980 guidelines are simply without effect on the Members of his own Government. None of these matters was raised by this side of the House until they appeared in the press. And when we dared to question the "untouchables" over there about preferential treatment and breach of the guidelines, the old Grit smear campaign went into high gear. Anyone who attempted to secure information about the activities of Ministers and former Ministers was accused of muck-raking, was accused of character assassination, and indeed worse.

If it is muck-raking to seek information about the extracurricular and surreptitious actions of Members of the Government, then they had better amend their ways or get ready for a lot more questions if they do not. Canadians are concerned about these matters. As long as the Government refuses to come clean, we will pursue the right of Canadians to have the fullest possible information.

• (1125)

This Government must realize that public money is not the money of the Grit Party, and that holding public office is not a licence to traffic in an "old boy network" or a mutual handout society.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The Deputy Prime Minister told the House that the guidelines have no effect and it is all a matter of individual conscience. Surely, sir, it is not safe in a Liberal Government to rely on conscience.

The Prime Minister brought in guidelines in 1980 after six or seven years of philosophizing by him, together with the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister went so far as to bring in a Green Paper on the subject which was tabled in July, 1973. That was ten years ago and the Green Paper has simply become a "how to" book for those who want to turn public office to their own advantage.

It is interesting to recall the Prime Minister's remarks when the Green Paper was tabled. At the time he conveyed the impression that he had every intention of enforcing a policy of moral rectitude. He said on that occasion:

> The Government believes that no higher standards should be demanded of anyone than of Ministers themselves. Because of their unique duties and responsibilities, Ministers should, however, be required to conform to a series of guidelines which impose added restraints, particularly in relation to pecuniary interests.

How the mighty have fallen! What a gap between the Prime Minister of 1973, when he was full of vim and vigour with a conscientious determination to see to it that the guidelines were enforced, and the Prime Minister the other day, jaded with power and the cares of office, shrugging off all responsibility. He snatched eagerly at the excuse offered when the Deputy Prime Minister said the guidelines were not law. They were only pious aphorisms, having all the force, effect and finality of Emily Post.

The Prime Minister shrugged aside his own responsibility as Leader of the Government and said boys will be boys. That is the new guideline replacing the pious set of guidelines which he brought in with such fanfare in 1980.

Prior to 1980, there were guidelines in October, 1976 when the Prime Minister wrote to the then President of the Privy Council, now Deputy Prime Minister. The letter went to all Ministers and asked compliance with the guidelines which reflected—> —the delicate balance that we have struck between our desire on the one hand to respect the right of the individual to use his or her knowledge and abilities for economic gain and personal development and, on the other hand, the requirement of protecting the right of the public to have reasonable assurance that the public interest will not suffer in the process.

Those were his words then. Somehow between 1973 and 1976, there was a marked decline in the Prime Minister's insistence on observance of the guidelines by office holders and former office holders. In 1973 he was insisting that Ministers should "be required to conform", but by 1976 the emphasis had switched to the "right of individuals to use their knowledge and abilities", even though the guidelines were attached as an appendix. Perhaps in the three intervening years the Prime Minister had learned something.

In 1980 the Prime Minister tried again. Once more he wrote to the Ministers:

> The precept of fulfilling one's official responsibilities in an objective and disinterested manner lies at the very heart of our system of Government.

• (1130)

That is precisely what we have been pointing out.

The 1980 guidelines have been quoted frequently in the past few weeks and I shall not read them again. Suffice it to say that they provide a sort of charter of rectitude which any Minister could follow with complete confidence. It is unfortunate that more Ministers of this Government have chosen not to do so. The guidelines deal in intricate detail with the conduct of Ministers one year after leaving office and two years after leaving office. They even discussed post-employment offers.

It appears that in 1980 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) still had hopes of persuading his recalcitrant colleagues to toe the line of moral awareness. Recently it seems that he has thrown up his hands in horror at the apparent impossibility of keeping the cattle out of the cornfield. Perhaps the Prime Minister feels that after so many glaring infractions it is a little late in the day to try to impose guidelines on Ministers who are acting as uncontrolled as March hares. Perhaps he believes the grandfather of the late Adlai Stevenson who said: "There's no use beating on the log after the coon's gone out".

Whatever the reason, the Prime Minister seems to have completely given up on his Ministers. However, that does not remove the onus, nor does it erase the right of Canadians to have the assurance that the highest standards will be followed by those in public life. If the Prime Minister feels that he cannot discipline his Ministers—we can certainly see that he might feel that way—there remains an alternative. It is to support this motion and turn the job over to a committee. What is needed is a set of clear and explicit guidelines which have clear penalties. We need guidelines with teeth. We must have guidelines which will be followed by Ministers, and failing that they must face the penalty of dismissal, because they are certainly not following the traditional course and submitting their resignation when they are caught, as any honourable Minister would do.

We hope that the Government would see its way clear to support this motion which has been devised in the public interest, and indeed devised by this Government and not by the Opposition.

At the present time, the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister have given the Cabinet carte blanche. There is nothing to stop any Minister or former Minister, on the very day he steps out of Government, from stepping into a lucrative job and acting as a negotiator with the very Department that he once headed. This is a situation which is repugnant to every single Canadian.

It is regrettable that the Prime Minister, the author of so many impeccable guidelines, does not seem to be able to grasp the elements of public morality. Perhaps this is natural for someone who makes use of official transportation when he goes on his holidays. Perhaps in a Cabinet in which there are Ministers who telephone judges and others who have a knack of penmanship, it is natural to expect a certain elasticity about rules of public behaviour. Perhaps this is also an explanation for the selective amnesia that occurs time after time when we attempt to question Ministers.

Canadians expect something more. They expect standards to be set and they expect standards will be followed. Since the Government seems incapable of dealing with the decay in official morality, then Parliament should take on the task. That is the purpose of this motion and it deserves support from all Members of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The rules of the House permit a period of ten minutes for questions and answers at this point. Are any Hon. Members rising to ask questions?

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Government would have wanted to respond to the comments of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen). However, while I can understand that the Government may want to wait and answer both statements, and I have no choice but to accept that, I do not agree with that method.

I believe it is unfortunate in many ways that the subject matter for today's discussion should have to come before the House. I think it is unfortunate that the question of suitable and adequate guidelines dealing with the behaviour of Cabinet Ministers and senior public servants of any Government have not been clearly established by now. Guidelines should have been established that are subject to one interpretation and easily understood by Members of the House of Commons and the public.

Some weeks ago it became apparent that it was possible, at least under the circumstances presented to the House, to make more than one interpretation of how the present guidelines should be enforced. I had no difficulty with interpreting those guidelines and I believe that many other Members had no difficulty with interpreting the guidelines as well. For some reason, Members of the Cabinet seem to have some difficulty with interpreting the guidelines in a way that we believe to be quite clear and easily understood language.

We must first consider who the guidelines are designed to protect. It is clear that the guidelines are intended, in the first instance, to protect Members of Parliament from either inadvertently or unwillingly acting in a way which would bring themselves, the Government and the House of Commons into disrepute. They are also intended to protect senior public servants so that they may clearly understand the parameters within which they are supposed to operate. They are meant to describe clearly what behaviour is acceptable and what actions might infringe upon being acceptable. The guidelines are intended to protect the public and give it some confidence in the way its Government, Members of Parliament and senior public servants conduct themselves under the day-to-day rules of business that must be carried out by the Government and its agencies. The guidelines should be sufficiently understood by the public so that they can be sure that the Government, those of us involved in Parliament and those responsible for making policy decisions, are not receiving or giving special consideration in any way.

Finally, and I believe most importantly, the guidelines are intended to protect the institution of Parliament. That is the sad consequence of raising incidents that have brought into question the judgment of Cabinet Ministers, senior public servants and perhaps even the integrity that those people have displayed or failed to display in making decisions in the public interest. The very fact that the actions of Ministers of the Crown and senior public servants have been brought into question in Parliament undermines the confidence that the Canadian public has in the institution of Parliament.

It is therefore important that whatever guidelines are implemented must be clear and subject to only one interpretation. They must be guidelines that have received the approval of the entire House of Commons and are made known to everyone in the Public Service. I suggest that we must write guidelines that apply to every Member of Parliament both today and in the future. The guidelines must clearly stipulate what is acceptable or unacceptable behaviour so that any person seeking a seat in Parliament can decide whether they wish to do so. They must be clear so that every person in the Public Service knows that their affairs must be arranged and their conduct conducted in such a way as never to allow what they have done to be drawn into question. Then any people who aspire to high, senior positions within the Public Service will know, as they work their way up the ladder, what will be expected of them in the way they conduct their business if, as and when they reach or achieve such high office.

Therefore, the guidelines cannot simply be guidelines of the Prime Minister of the day, applying only to that particular Government, but must surely be those which apply to every single Member of Parliament. No matter which Government it is, whether it be Liberal, Conservative or NDP, the same guidelines should continue to apply and should be constant, easily understood, unequivocal, and should set out what we, the Members of Parliament, on behalf of our constituents, believe should be the way Governments should be conducted.

The question then arises, should these guidelines be a matter of law, subject to the interpretation of the courts, or should they be an in-house operation of the Parliament of Canada? I suggest, in the first instance, that the guidelines should not be a matter of law—and this is a personal view—but, rather, should be ones determined by the Committee on Privileges and Elections and approved by the House of Commons, and should then become part of the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. They should be enforced by the House of Commons and made subject to the same provisions as are other Standing Orders.

I suggest that to put them into a court system would diffuse their value and would take the behaviour of Members, Cabinet Ministers and senior public servants out of the realm of Parliament itself. They would then become interpretated by courts across the land from time to time and would, in many ways, prove to be the undermining of Parliament.

I therefore suggest that the other course of action is the one which should be followed, and that we should accept the view that the guidelines which affect Members of Parliament who become Cabinet Ministers or members of the public who rise to high levels in the Public Service should be those established by the House of Commons, not guidelines established only by the Cabinet for its own purposes at the time, should be subject to change and interpretation by the House of Commons only, and therefore subject to enforcement by the House of Commons.

I suggest to Your Honour that if we were to accept the suggestion as it is contained in the motion today, and if we were to accept the proposal put forward by the Leader of this Party that this should not be a matter of confidence today, without passing any comment on things which have happened in the past, we could agree that the conflict which arose over the interpretation of the guidelines in weeks gone by, though it may have motivated the decision to seek this kind of parliamentary review, is not the reason, in itself, for going ahead with this parliamentary review.

It is in the best interests of everyone in the House of Commons that these guidelines be carefully considered as to their adequacy and written by the Members of this House who sit on the Committee on Privileges and Elections, referred back to the House of Commons for approval at some point as to their adequacy, and then made part of the Standing Orders of the House.

How would the guidelines be enforced? I suggest that the question of enforcement is one which is raised very frequently, yet I think it is a bit of a red herring. Someone said to me during the debate a couple of weeks ago on what has become known as the Coalgate affair that it would be very difficult to enforce guidelines on former Cabinet Ministers. That is not so. The enforcement of guidelines on former Cabinet Ministers rests with existing Cabinet Ministers and senior public servants.

Mr. Nielsen: With the Prime Minister.

Mr. Deans: If the guideline stipulates that a former member of Cabinet may not do something, whatever it is, that a person who has formerly sat in a Cabinet may not undertake to do a certain act, the enforcement of that guideline rests, in the first instance, with the individual himself or herself. However, in actual fact it rests with the current Cabinet Minister who would be required to pass judgment on the matter, or with the senior public servant who, having knowledge of the guidelines, would recognize that the former Cabinet Minister was in breach of the guidelines, perhaps inadvertently, and should bring to that former Cabinet Minister's attention the fact that whatever he or she is seeking cannot be sought at this time because he or she is in violation, or may appear to be in violation, of the guidelines.

As far as the question involving enforcement for members of the current Cabinet or for senior public servant, the answer is quite simple. If there is a clear breach, the responsibility then rests with the individual, in the first instance, to recognize the breach, having studied the guidelines to familiarize himself or herself with them, and to take the appropriate course of action, which has historically been to resign portfolio responsibility. That is in the case of the Cabinet. Failing the resignation of the Minister, if the question has been raised and proven to be true, it then becomes the responsibility of the Prime Minister to insist that that course of action be followed.

In the case of senior public servants, if they fail to abide by the guidelines, then their jobs are certainly in jeopardy. The responsibility rests with the Minister in charge of that particular Ministry, or with the Prime Minister, to replace such individuals whose actions have proven to be unacceptable to the House of Commons as set out in the guidelines.

I would like to suggest, rather than having the public continue to feel as it does, that there is, in fact, an old boy network and access to Government by those who are the old, trusted and true friends of the Government in office, and that the actions of the Government are not necessarily conducted within the principles established for the maintenance of the highest level of confidence possible in the Parliament of Canada; that the Government might reconsider the position it took earlier this morning, the position in which it finds itself with regard to today's vote.

I do not think anyone in the House believes that the current guidelines are adequate. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has indicated that he is considering a review. I do not think anyone in the public sector believes that even if they are adequate, they are being followed rigorously enough. I do not think anyone in the House or outside the House believes that the guidelines have sufficient teeth in them for enforcement purposes. I do not believe that anyone in the public, or in the House of Commons for that matter, believes that the final decision rests with the conscience of the person who happens to have had his or her actions questioned.

• (1150)

If we do not believe those things, and I think that fair-minded people all across the country will agree with me that it is not unreasonable to not believe those things, there can be no time like the present for a break with the past. In order to achieve that confidence that we all think is so absolutely necessary, in order to elevate the level of the House of Commons in the minds of the public of Canada and raise the public opinion of Parliament now and in the future, I suggest that the Government allow this matter to be sent to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, not to review and rehash old battles—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I find Cabinet Ministers and their supporters snickering. It is interesting how they can disregard all of the vital and genuine concerns because they are afraid to face the actions of the past. I can assure them on behalf of this Party that there will be no rehashing. We are talking about looking at guidelines that will prove to be sustaining, prove to be adequate, which will provide the protection so necessary for the people who work for the public of Canada, and at the same time provide for the protection of the public of Canada from actions taken by those in authority which may, and I suspect probably could be, interpreted to have been actions that may in the future be inappropriate actions.

It is not the preserve of this or any other Prime Minister to set guidelines. It is not the preserve of the Government of the day to set out guidelines that it happens to feel suits its particular mould or bent. It is to preserve of Parliament to establish guidelines that protect all of us from the actions of one or more of us. Every single Member of Parliament is drawn into disrepute when one Member is drawn into disrepute. The public attitude toward Parliament is diminished and undermined when a Member does something, or is perceived to have done something, that is considered to be an inappropriate act.

It is our collective responsibility to write and to institute guidelines for politicians and for senior public servants. It cannot be done in the House of Commons because it is too large and too difficult, it would be impossible. However, it can, should and must be done in a committee. For that reason we in this Party believe that this action taken by the Official Opposition is an action long overdue.

Mr. Nielsen: It is their motion.

Mr. Deans: As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) says, it is entirely consistent, word for word, with a motion put down by a Cabinet Minister in 1974 and approved by Parliament. It is an action that is consistent with elevating the status of Parliament to a level that it should enjoy but has not enjoyed for some time. It is an action that would relieve the Government of the responsibility of passing judgment upon itself and its colleagues. It is an action that would make it unnecessary for the Prime Minister of a Liberal, Conservative or NDP Government to rise to defend Cabinet Ministers on occasions when their actions are being questioned. It is an action that would make the House of Commons responsible to Members, to the public, and would give the public some confidence in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The rules of the House provide for a period of questions and answers at this point. Are there any Members rising to ask questions?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member who just finished speaking. What struck me in his comments was his obvious concern for preserving this parliamentary institution and his desire to find ways of increasing the confidence of Canadians in their elected representatives and their confidence in our parliamentary institutions. In this respect, I think he is entirely correct, and I wish to congratulate him on his remarks which were, in a way, quite different from the initial comments made by the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who made a number of gratuitous remarks without really getting to the bottom of the problem, which is the confidence of Canadians in people who are in public life.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member how he intends to increase the confidence of the public in our parliamentary institutions, when Members of this House so often abuse their parliamentary immunity. Should we not look for new ways of preventing members from taking such undue advantage? Very often, unwarranted and unfounded accusations are made in the House by Members who lack the mental courage to repeat them outside this House and use Parliament and their parliamentary immunity to tarnish reputations by spouting half-truths and falsehoods. I wonder whether the Hon. Member has any suggestions for rules that might be established to change that principle of absolute parliamentary immunity which is so convenient for some Members who are fond of tarnishing reputations.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to be drawn into a debate on this point, but I say to the Minister that it is a question that has not escaped my concern. The question of parliamentary immunity is one that I have been interested in for the better part of the last 16 years, on occasion having seen the immunity being used in what I personally felt was an improper way, I must confess not only by members of the Opposition. I sense that is also done by Members in Government from time to time. It is a misunderstanding in some ways of how immunity was intended to be used.

Immunity was necessary in the first instance and continues to be necessary in order to allow Members of Parliament freely to raise questions that are of public concern without having to go through the court system, Parliament, of course, being the highest court in the land. The immunity that is afforded Members of Parliament enables them to raise questions in this highest court, which is not at all like the immunity afforded in other courts.

There is a certain requirement on the part of everyone to exercise judgment and care, as I have always done and as most Members do. If the Minister is suggesting that perhaps the question of immunity ought to be considered, if the Government is prepared to refer the question of guidelines to the appropriate committee for consideration, and if the Government cares to make a motion that the question of immunity be considered in committee, I will be only too happy not only to second it but to guarantee the support of this caucus.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in disagreement with the two previous speakers and I have some difficulty understanding their position.

Mr. Deans: You have difficulty understanding my position?

Mr. Regan: Yes, and I will outline for the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) my concern in due course. First of all, it does appear to me to be unusual, or the threshing of old straw, for the Opposition to spend yet another day on this so-called issue at a time when there are many serious problems with our economy and there are many matters of substance with regard to public issues of the day which could well be discussed. I believe the Opposition are going to be hard-pressed to mount an interesting debate on the subject throughout the day in view of the amount of publicity which it has already been given.

The Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) in his opening remarks said that the Government's position was shameful and unbelievable, that this morning we did not immediately go through some sort of contortion in order to make a non-confidence vote into something else and to have this matter go, as he wishes, to committee. I would like to say that it is a very strange piece of thinking indeed, Mr. Speaker, when on Friday they move a non-confidence vote on this subject, place it properly, follow the procedure for a non-confidence vote which can bring down the Government if the Government is defeated and cause an election in the land, and then on Monday morning at eleven o'clock they suddenly say; "Well, we really did not mean what we did and we are now prepared to do something which would make this a different sort of debate, if the Government will agree". Then when the Government does not immediately do handsprings, it is criticized for its shameful and outrageous behaviour.

Mr. Nielsen: Squirm on it.

Mr. Regan: I do not find much squirming in that. As for the Leader of the Opposition, it has been said that all the gall has been divided into three parts, and I believe he has all three parts when he takes that sort of position.

I would like to say something about guidelines. I believe what we so often see is the problem in public life of the difference between the position which people take when they are the "outs" and when they are the "ins". Today we have that classic example of a split in points of view between those who are on the outside of Government at the moment and those who are on the inside. I believe it is noteworthy that during the time the Conservatives were the Government in Canada, they did not take such a matter to a committee or did not legislate on this particular subject.

Mr. Nielsen: There are stiffer guidelines, too.

Mr. Regan: I believe it is also of note that in democratic Governments in this country, in the Provinces as well as in the federal Government, guidelines where they exist vary greatly. Guidelines in national Governments usually provide for the disclosure of assets. They usually provide a ban on the buying and selling of stocks which are publicly traded, and they usually deal with the necessity of providing for the establishment by Ministers who have ongoing business investments of blind trusts which are beyond the arm's length of Ministers. Guidelines also usually provide for the declaration of receipt of gifts or benefits over a certain value.

If one asks why guidelines have traditionally existed, they will be told they are not only for protection against misuse of office, but also for the so-called "Caesar's wife" rule of virtue not only existing, but appearing to exist. When I listened to the words of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, I was not quite sure what he was suggesting when he said "all Members of this House". He may have been returning to another interesting question, that is, whether there should be something in the way of public disclosure guidelines for all Members of Parliament and not just for Cabinet Ministers. Every Member of Parliament in this country, whether a Cabinet Minister or not, is in a special position in relation to Government, and that includes Opposition Members as well as Government Members. I believe that is a subject for people to consider.

Aside from the question of the rules for Ministers of the day, Mr. Speaker, in various Governments, there are those rules for former Ministers. I believe there is an important point to be made in relation to the question of former Ministers. The system as it exists in any jurisdiction of which I am cognizant at the present time provides that a breach of any guidelines which exist, a breach of proper use of ministerial authority, can be remedied by the ultimate penalty, if you like, of banishment from Cabinet. That can be provided by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or, in the case of the Provinces, by the Premier. There is no way in which this sort of punishment, obviously, can be carried out against a former Minister because he is no longer in the Cabinet. I believe that guidelines for former Ministers, as a consequence, must be dealt with in a somewhat different way.
